According to the Washington Times (12/8, Miller), by signing the legislation, Trump has given "lawmakers breathing room to pass tax cuts and smooth out budget snags." The Times states that "topping the list is resolving a standoff with Democrats over the fate of 'Dreamers,' illegal immigrants brought to the U.S. as children who were given a temporary reprieve by the Obama administration but who could be deported beginning in March." The Times adds another obstacle to the budget negotiations is that GOP lawmakers are also "hurrying to finish a major tax cut bill that is the centerpiece of Mr. Trump's economic agenda and the last chance to score a legislative victory before the end of the year."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (12/8, A1, Casselman) says on its front page that "the latest evidence" of the US economy's revival "came Friday, when the Labor Department reported that American employers added 228,000 jobs in November" while the unemployment rate "held steady at 4.1 percent, the lowest since 2000." The Times adds "job growth has slowed since its peak in 2014 but remains remarkably steady: For the first time on record, employers have added jobs every month for more than seven years – 86 months, to be precise." Sanders "said on Friday that the jobs report was evidence that 'President Trump's bold economic vision continues to pay off.'" CNN Money (12/8, Isidore) reports she added, "We're especially pleased to see the manufacturing sector roaring back to life, adding a total of 159,000 jobs since President Trump took office after averaging a loss of more than 1,000 jobs per month during the last year of the previous administration." Sanders continued, "As we continue to unleash the American economy from unnecessary regulation and taxes, we look forward to seeing more reports like this, showing a healthy and thriving jobs market for the American people."

A front-page Wall Street Journal (12/8, A1, Morath) article touts the November jobs report, as do brief ABC World News Tonight (12/8, story 8, 0:15, Muir), CBS Evening News (12/8, story 10, 0:20, Glor), and NBC Nightly News (12/8, story 9, 0:20, Holt) broadcasts. Breitbart (12/8, Carney) says hiring "exceed[ed] economist expectations of 200,000 jobs," as well as Business Insider (12/8), which said the data "crush[ed] expectations."

In particular, USA Today (12/8, Davidson) reports "businesses added 221,000 jobs, lifted by hiring in professional and business services, health care and manufacturing. Federal, state and local governments added 7,000." Bloomberg News (12/8) reports the jobs report showed "factory payrolls over the last four months have increased 27,000 on average, the most since April 2012," even as "employees at producers of non-durable goods, such as chemicals, fuels and foods, worked longer hours in November and saw their weekly pay advance 3.2 percent from a year ago." The Wall Street Journal (12/8, Smith) also reports logistics companies were responsible for 8,100 new jobs, which was the sector's largest amount since December 2015 and its eighth straight month of growth.

However, Reuters (12/8, Mutikani) reports analysts charge that as the data "paint[s] a portrait of a healthy economy," the US "does not require the kind of fiscal stimulus that...Trump is proposing, even though wage gains remain moderate." According to Reuters, "the fairly upbeat report underscored the economy's strength and could fuel criticism of efforts by Trump and his fellow Republicans in the U.S. Congress to slash the corporate income tax rate to 20 percent from 35 percent." The AP (12/8, Rugaber) credits the global economy with having benefited the US job market and says the jobs report "coincided with other signs that the U.S. economy remains on firm footing. In the past six months, economic growth has exceeded an annual rate of 3 percent, the first time that's happened since 2014. Consumer confidence has reached its highest level since 2000."

Acosta Touts Jobs Report, Cohn Says Tax Reform Will Raise Wages. Labor Secretary Acosta said the jobs report "shows steady growth fueled by optimism about the [Administration's] pro-growth, pro-jobs policies" and hailed the manufacturing sector for its "lowest ever" unemployment rate of 2.7 percent, but the Washington Post (12/8, Paquette) reports wages in the sector "appear especially stagnant, growing only 1.9 percent since last November." The Post says the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed "workers' average hourly earnings grew by 5 cents in November to $26.55 – part of an overall increase of 2.5 percent since the same period last year," but this growth rate "lags significantly behind pre-recession levels, when year-over-year wage increases exceeded 4 percent." The Post concedes the President and Congressional Republicans believe tax reform "will create more well-paying jobs and supercharge economic growth." The Post adds National Economic Council Director Cohn, during a Friday interview with Fox Business, asserted, "People are going to be very excited when they see their paycheck bigger."

Cohn Downplays Risks As Bitcoin Continues "Meteoric Rise." Bloomberg News (12/8, Condon) reports Cohn, in a Friday interview on Bloomberg Television, "said he and other administration officials are monitoring the meteoric rise in cryptocurrency bitcoin, while adding that he didn't see any serious threat in the phenomenon." Cohn stated, "We're watching it, of course we're watching it. ... Right now we don't think it's a serious risk, but right now we're watching it." Bloomberg says that when "asked if any new regulation might be required, Cohn noted that the Commodity Futures Trading Commission had recently approved bitcoin futures contracts, giving some investors the ability to short the currency." Cohn added, "We'll see what goes on here. ... It's an evolving market. We've watched this happen before as markets have evolved." Bloomberg highlights that "the digital currency surged in recent days, trading above $17,000, up from $9,654 on Nov. 30 and from below $1,000 at the end of 2016. It was around $15,500 as of 10:32 a.m. New York time."

Jobs Report Boosts Dow And S&P 500 To New Weekly Records, As Nasdaq Declines. The Wall Street Journal (12/8, Gold, Driebusch) reports that following the release of the November jobs report on Friday led the Dow Jones Industrial Average rose by 0.5 percent to 24329.16, the S&P 500 rose by 0.6 percent to 2651.50, and the Nasdaq Composite rose by 0.4 percent to 6840.08; however, the Nasdaq nonetheless ended the week down by 0.1 percent, extending its losses by a second week.

Consumer Sentiment Index Posts December Declines. The Wall Street Journal (12/8, Leubsdorf) reports the University of Michigan on Friday said its consumer-sentiment index had fallen to 96.8 in early December, which was also less than economist estimates of 99.9. The Journal adds the reading was down from 98.5 in November and 100.7 in October, which had marked its highest level since January 2004.

WSJournal Hails Latest Jobs Report. A Wall Street Journal (12/8) editorial hails the latest jobs report and celebrates the health of the US economy. The Journal lauds the Administration's policies for fostering business confidence, but advises President Trump and Commerce Secretary Ross to remember that manufacturing is doing well due to the improving global economy and increased exports. While the Journal suggests tax reform will likely benefit the economy, the editorial warns Trump not to succumb to protectionism by withdrawing from Nafta and says he should not exacerbate the labor shortage by further curtailing legal immigration.

White House Plans To Roll Out Infrastructure Plan In January.

The Wall Street Journal (12/10, Mann) reports that the White House plans to unveil an infrastructure rebuilding plan in January, wagering that while some lawmakers oppose a road-and-bridge-building, it will be well-received by voters. According to the Journal, Trump's advisers are finalizing a plan to spend some $200 billion in order to leverage billions in spending from local governments and the private sector for infrastructure projects.

Trump Administration Energy Policy Includes Alarming Challenges For Wind, Solar.

TIME (12/8, Worland) reports that "Republicans in Washington have launched a campaign against renewable energy that includes market interventions that alarm other industries, including oil and gas." These efforts to "preserve the coal industry at the expense of wind and solar" include "aggressive attempts at regulatory rollback," a tax bill that hurts the financing of clean-energy projects, and particularly the Energy Department's proposal to prop up coal and nuclear power plants. The article says that the slew of threats to renewable energy "could slow the industry's growth in ways unimaginable just a year ago."

Haley: International Community United On Isolating North Korea.

UN Ambassador Haley said on CNN's State Of The Union (12/10, Tapper), "Every ounce of revenue that North Korea receives, they put it toward the nuclear program so the fact that the sanctions have completely squeezed them is less money they can put towards this program." She added that the "international community is with us in isolating North Korea."

Haley also appeared on Fox News Sunday (12/10, Wallace) where she was asked about Chinese pressure on Pyongyang. Said Haley, "I think what we are saying that China is actually following through with the sanctions." She said, however, "China can do more. ... I think President Xi has his reasons to have red lines, but President Trump and President Xi have a very good relationship and for that I think that's why we've gotten as far as we have in getting what we got done."

On CBS' Face The Nation (12/10, Dickerson), Haley said, "We're watching North Korea very carefully. If you look at the last ballistic missile launch, it had advanced quite a bit compared to the missile before and it's a concern."

US Officials Warn North Korea Making Gains Toward Biological Weapon. According to a front-page story in the Washington Post (12/10, A1, Warrick), "Five months before North Korea's first nuclear test in 2006, US intelligence officials sent a report to Congress warning that secret work also was underway on a biological weapon." A decade later, North Korea is "moving steadily to acquire the essential machinery that could potentially be used for an advanced bioweapons program," according to "US and Asian intelligence officials and weapons experts." The gains have "alarmed US analysts, who say North Korea...could quickly surge into industrial-scale production of biological pathogens if it chooses to do so."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Wisconsin's Fire Sale For Big Business." In an editorial, the New York Times (12/10) calls the decision of Gov. Scott Walker to offer $3 billion in state subsidies to draw Taiwanese electronics manufacturer Foxconn to Wisconsin "a low-road scheme to advance big business by scapegoating environmental laws." The Times observes that "the contract grew out of a high-bidding competition with other states, encouraged by the Trump White House with the blessing of the House speaker, Paul Ryan, whose district includes Foxconn's planned site." Under the deal, Foxconn was released from state environmental restrictions that are normally enforced against Wisconsin companies.

"Hate Smears India's Symbol Of Love, The Taj Mahal." In an editorial, the New York Times (12/10) reaffirms the importance of preserving the Taj Mahal "as a pledge to an inclusive future" in India, particularly amid increasing "anti-Muslim rhetoric and unprovoked physical attacks on Muslims...under the government of Prime Minister Narendra Modi." The Times says that the Taj Mahal, which was built as an Islamic mausoleum, has been criticized as of late by Hindu nationalists as "a blot on Indian culture" that was constructed by "traitors."

"Opening Up New York's Public Records." In an editorial, the New York Times (12/10) calls for Gov. Andrew Cuomo to sign legislation that would "remove one of the biggest obstacles facing those who are wrongly denied documents they have requested under New York's open-records law – the cost of hiring a lawyer to fight that denial in court." Under the proposed legislation, plaintiffs would not be liable for their legal fees if they prevailed in any lawsuit concerning the release of information that was wrongly denied by the state of New York. The Times says, "the statewide culture of noncompliance needs to be addressed immediately, and the bill on Mr. Cuomo's desk, which sailed through the Legislature last spring, is one small and simple fix."

Washington Post.

"Virginia Should Stick With Its I-66 Express Lanes – Tolls And All." A Washington Post (12/10) editorial.

“The Supreme Court’s Privacy Case Shows Congress Needs To Draw New Lines.” The Washington Post (12/10) editorializes that regardless of the outcome of recent arguments at the Supreme Court over a Fourth Amendment case involving the warrantless retrieval of location data from a man’s cellphone, “it’s past time for Congress to raise the standard for longer-term, larger-scale location record requests.” In this effort, the Post encourages Congress to look toward state legislatures for examples on how to legislate such restrictions and also to be mindful “not to overburden law enforcement in emergency situations.”

“Trump’s Deportation Tough Talk Hurts Law-Abiding Immigrants.” The Washington Post (12/10) editorializes that President Trump’s “hard-line posture” on immigration fails to address “the broader dysfunction in America’s immigration system” and fundamentally will not “change the scale of illegal immigrants living in this country.” So far, the Post says, the increased number of deportations of illegal immigrants has failed “to make a big dent in the 11 million who remain in the United States,” of which, “the overwhelming majority...have no criminal record.” Moreover, US immigration courts face “an epic logjam,” to which “only an overhaul of America’s broken immigration system offers the prospect of a more lasting fix.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Christopher Wray’s FBI Stonewall.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/10) criticizes FBI Director Wray’s testimony last week before the House Judiciary Committee, saying he stonewalled the panel and seems to have joined an effort by the Justice Department to keep from the public the FBI’s role in the 2016 election.

“Killing The Electric Car Credit.” The Wall Street Journal (12/10) in an editorial calls the electric car tax credit an indulgence for the wealthy and urges the US Senate and House to remove it as they work to reconcile their respective tax bills. The Journal says the credit is a prime example of a government policy that subsidizes business, wastes money and also creates additional complications in the tax code.

“The Apple ‘Windfall’ That Isn’t.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/8) criticizes claims that the Republican tax plan’s one-time deemed repatriation rate will generate a $47 billion tax windfall for Apple if the company brings back around $252 billion it has stored abroad. Though the tax is lower than the standard corporate rate, the Journal explains that Apple would pay no tax if it elected to keep the funds overseas. The true windfall, the Journal argues, is the $30 billion in taxes Apple would pay to the US government.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Hospital Giants In Talks To Create US’s Largest Operator
Alabama Hears Final Pitch Ahead Of Tuesday Vote For Senate Seat
US Bitcoin Futures Climb In First Day Of Trade
In One Corner Of Afghanistan, America Is Beating Islamic State

New York Times:

Under Trump, EPA Has Slowed Actions Against Polluters, And Put Limits On Enforcement Officers
How ISIS Produced Its Cruel Arsenal On An Industrial Scale
Ahead Of Brexit, Paris Tries A Business Makeover
Liberal Outsiders Pour Into Alabama Senate Race, Treading Lightly
Nikki Haley Says Women Who Accuse Trump Of Misconduct “Should Be Heard”
Lives At Risk Inside A Senior Complex In Puerto Rico With No Power
After Fall Of ISIS, Iraq’s Second-Largest City Picks Up The Pieces

Washington Post:

Trump Hurries To Boost Moore
Speed, Not Precision, Steers GOP Tax Plan
N. Korean Bioweapons Threat Seen As Growing
Journalist Risked His Life To Cover Fight For Civil Rights
In Greece, Trump Aide Rose Fast, Relished Limelight
After Newtown, A New Normal For Students

Financial Times:

Macron Reiterates Disapproval Of Trump's Jerusalem Move
Wall Street Lobbies Against Measure Hitting High-Tax States
Bitcoin Feeding Frenzy Being Fuelled By 15x Leverage, Says Exchange

Washington Times:

Fusion GPS Tried To Tie Trump To Clinton's Pedophile Pal Epstein As Part Of Smear Campaign
Putin Supporters In Russia Welcome Another Term For Hard Line Against 'Cruel' West
Tax Bill Negotiators Try To Keep 20% Corporate Rate, Consider Offering Choice Of Deductions
Trump May Get Tax Cut Bill With More Generous Credits For Illegal Immigrants
Democrats Forgive Rep. Studds For Preying On Teen Boys, Hailed As Gay Rights Pioneer

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Severe Weather; California Wildfires; Roy Moore Campaign; Detroit-Highway Shootings; Trump Jerusalem Announcement-Responses; California-Plane Crash; Serial Killer Trial; TV Show Scam Alert; Airline-Breastfeeding; College Football News; Rope Walker; Christmas Charity.

CBS: Roy Moore Campaign; Air Force Academy-Sexual Misconduct Cases; California Wildfires; Severe Weather; Tax Reform Plan; Trump Jerusalem Announcement-Responses; FCC Net Neutrality; San Diego Plane Crash; Egypt-Ancient Tombs Opening; Star Wars Premier; Honda-Takata Air Bag Recall; Las Vegas Shooting-Recovery.

NBC: California Wildfires; Roy Moore Campaign; Florida Police Violence; Tax Reform Plan; China-Public Protest; Children-Mental Health Report; FCC Net Neutrality; College Football News; Tiny Book Art.

Network TV At A Glance:

Roy Moore Campaign – 7 minutes, 40 seconds

California Wildfires – 6 minutes, 30 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Roy Moore Campaign; California Wildfires; Detroit-Highway Shootings; Whale Endangered Species.

CBS: California Wildfires; Severe Weather; Roy Moore Campaign; Bitcoin Surge; Wall Street News.

FOX: California Wildfires; Roy Moore Campaign.

NPR: California Wildfires; Al Franken Resignation; Trump Jerusalem Announcement-Responses; North Korea Sanctions.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue; participates in a presentation of the Friends of Zion award with Faith Leaders; meets with Congressman Bill Shuster; participates in a signing ceremony for Space Policy Directive; participates in a swearing-in Ceremony for Jamie McCourt as the US Ambassador to France and the US Ambassador to Monaco.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Has lunch with the President and Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue; joins the President to participate in a signing ceremony for Space Policy Directive; joins the President to participate in a swearing-in ceremony for Jamie McCourt as the US Ambassador to France and Monaco; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for Peter Hoekstra as the US Ambassador to the Netherlands; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for Duke Buchan as the US Ambassador to Spain and Andorra.

US Senate: 4:00 PM Senate aims to end debate on circuit judge nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of Leonard Steven Graszo to be U.S. Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit, including a vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the nomination
Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 9:30 AM House Small Business subcommittee field hearing on addressing barriers to business formation and growth – Agriculture, Energy, and Trade Subcommittee field hearing on 'Bridging the Entrepreneurial Gap: Addressing Barriers to Small Business Formation and Growth', with testimony from LifeWorking Enterprise founder and CEO Steven Whittington; The Zen of

Slow Cooking founder Meg Barnhart; Hel's Kitchen Catering owner David Borris; and Grow Well Farms partner Cheryl Besenjak Location: Village of Deerfield Hall, 850 Waukegan Rd, Deerfield, IL <http://smallbusiness.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SmallBizGOP>

12:00 PM House Floor meets – The House will meet at 12 noon for morning hour debate and 2 pm for legislative business. There are no news events scheduled at this time. Location: House Floor, U.S. Capitol Hill

2:00 PM House of Representatives meets for legislative business Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

Other: 8:00 AM Axios event on 'Energy Under Trump' – Axios conversation on 'Energy Under Trump', with Democratic Rep. Paul Tonko, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Commissioner Neil Chatterjee, and Heritage Foundation Energy and Environment Research Fellow Nick Loris Location: Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC www.axios.com #Axios360

9:30 AM MDAA Congressional Roundtable on defending against North Korea – Missile Defense Advocacy Alliance Congressional Roundtable Discussion Series event on 'Layered Missile Defense Against North Korea', featuring Joint Integrated Air and Missile Defense Organization Director Brig. Gen. Clement Coward Jr., and Missile Defense Agency Deputy Director Rear Adm. Jon Hill Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 902, Washington, DC www.missiledefenseadvocacy.org <https://twitter.com/missiledefadv>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Colin Jost: "With all the complex issues facing America right now, President Trump decided to relax and solve a much simpler problem...the Middle East."

Michael Che: "Democrats hope by forcing Al Franken to step down, they will paint themselves as the party of the moral high ground. Calm down, Democrats. You are still politicians. ... Nobody is at a party like, 'Do you know who I wish was here? Nancy Pelosi.'"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, December 18, 2017
Date: Monday, December 18, 2017 6:11:26 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, DECEMBER 18, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- CBS: While Most Of D.C. Slept, Sec. Zinke Wandered A Frozen Arlington Cemetery With A Christmas Wreath.
- The Hill: Zinke Fires Four Senior Officials Over Harassment.
- The Hill: Zinke Reprimanded Park Head After Climate Tweets.
- Washington Post: Utah Republican To Patagonia Founder: Come Testify Before Congress.
- Washington Post: Trump Environmental Officials Are Keeping Tight Rein Over Stampede Of FOIA Requests.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Trump, Congress Praised For Authorizing Palau Compact Deal.

- FEDweek: Interior May Lead Way In Spreading Out Jobs.
- Willits (CA) News: Lawmakers Ask Interior Department To Recover 'Misspent' Funds.
- Missoulian (MT): North Cascades Grizzly Bear Recovery Work Halted By Interior Department.
- Sioux Falls (SD) Argus Leader: Gear Up Probe Ends With No Charges.
- Cape Cod (MA) News: NOAA Officials Meet With Local Tribal Representatives.
- NBC: California Wildfire Spreads Rapidly Toward Santa Barbara.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Justice Audit: Tribal Law Enforcement Flawed.
- Jail In Lame Deer Holds More Than Twice Its Capacity, Report Finds.
- Council Bluffs Sues Over Tribe's Plan For Carter Lake Casino.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Investigator Alleges Misconduct In Armed Nevada Standoff.
- Alaska Public Radio Network: Conoco Hopes To Crack Open Off-Limits North Slope Land.
- Associated Press: Once-Popular Swim Hole Still Closed As Agency Mulls Its Fate.
- Montrose (CO) Press: Agencies Approve Coal Lease Modifications.
- Mountain Mail: Proposal To Sample Parkdale Area Hard Rock Minerals Prompts Public Comment Query.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- KID Board Supports 'Takings' Appeal, Preps For Drought.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- 31 Million Barrels Of Oil Later, New Life For Old Rig.
- Workers Injured In Shell Platform Fire In Gulf Of Mexico File Suit.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Times: Drilling In Section Of ANWR Included In Final GOP Tax-reform Package.
- Washington Post: Permits For Elephant Hunting Trophies From Zimbabwe Are Still Being Issued.
- Missoula Current (MT): Grizzly Bears The Focus Of Forest Plan Amendments.
- Arizona Daily Star: Endangered Topminnow's Return To Santa Cruz River In Tucson Is A Big Step To Recovery.
- Courthouse News: Enviro Groups Lose Bid To Stop Florida Phosphate Mine.

National Park Service

- Los Angeles Times: Third Attack By Marine Mammal In San Francisco's Aquatic Park Prompts Swimming Ban.
- Dickinson (ND) Press: Proposed Refinery Near Western North Dakota National Park Spurs Debate Over Economic, Conservation Concerns.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Park Rangers Take Over Law Enforcement Duties At Hoover Dam.
- Harrison (AR) Daily Times: PG&S Granted $5,000 From Park Service.
- Elko (NV) Daily Free Press: Fees To Rise At Great Basin National Park.
- Morristown (NJ) Green: Park Service Eliminating Fees For Washington's Museum In Morristown For 2018.
- Fresno (CA) Bee: Yosemite's Last Native American Village Being Rebuilt.
- Associated Press: Dunes Learning Center Has Educated Youngsters For 20 Years.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Hawaii Free Press: Defense Department To Investigate Chinese Aid To Micronesia.

US Geological Survey

- GISuser: USGS And NASA Select New Landsat Science Team.
- Additional Reading.

Opinion Pieces

- Frank Miele: Editor's 2 Cents, Swamp Critters Target Ryan Zinke, But I'm Betting On The SEAL.
- Our Public Lands Need Balanced — Not Extremist — Leadership.
- The Endangered Species Act Is An Ineffective Regulatory Burden.
- Commentary: Couldn't Hatch Think Of Something Better Than This Monument Nonsense To Ask Trump

For?

- 'The Case Of The Missing Frog'.
- Tribune Editorial: Bureaucratic Kinks May Block The Lake Powell Pipeline. Good.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- The Hill: Trump Denies Plans To Fire Mueller In Wake Of Controversy Over Transition Emails.
- ABC: Putin Thanks Trump For Intel That Foiled Terror Attack.
- Politico: Trump: Tax Reform Bill Will Be "A Great Christmas Gift" For Middle Class.
- New York Times: Republicans Release Consensus Tax Reform Legislation As Rubio, Corker Agree To Back Bill.
- New York Times: Trump Vows To "Rebuild" FBI, Defend Law Enforcement In Speech To Training Academy Grads.
- The Hill: Trump Administration Halts EPA Climate Science Debate Plan.
- Bloomberg News: Sources: U.S. Opposes Climate Change Mention In New NAFTA Deal.
- Washington Examiner: Environmental Groups Threaten Legal Action To Stop EPA Reorganization.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Tax Bill That Inequality Created."
- Washington Post.
 - "Republicans Keep On Telling Voter-Fraud Fairy Tales."
 - "Journalists Around The World Sit Behind Bars For Telling The Truth."
 - "The Unchecked Threat From Russia."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

While Most Of D.C. Slept, Sec. Zinke Wandered A Frozen Arlington Cemetery With A Christmas Wreath.

In a brief broadcast, the CBS Weekend News (12/16, story 8, 0:20, Ninan) reported the nonprofit Wreaths Across America organized "more than 50,000 volunteers" on Saturday to lay wreaths at Arlington National Cemetery "at the grave sites of more than 245,000 service members." The Daily Caller (12/16, Johnson) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who served as a Navy SEAL, also participated to honor one of his fallen friends. Zinke said, "The first thing I saw Trump do as president was attend the funeral of a Navy SEAL. ... That's the moment I saw him go from being a president to becoming a Commander-in-Chief. Look around. There's no politics here."

The Washington Examiner (12/16, Chaitin) reports that Zinke also tweeted: "You can feel the love for country and those who serve."

Zinke Fires Four Senior Officials Over Harassment.

The Hill (12/15, Thomsen) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "fired four senior officials in his department over inappropriate conduct, including sexual harassment, he announced in a video Thursday night." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said that the officials who were fired "abused their authority to intimidate or harass fellow employees. This includes but is not limited to sexual harassment." Zinke "made the announcement in a video about a survey about harassment and discrimination in the department, in which 35 percent of Interior employees said they were harassed or discriminated against in the last year." Zinke said, "I've already removed four senior leaders that were guilty of inappropriate behavior and I will remove 400 more if necessary."

Also reporting are the Washington Post (12/15), USA Today (12/15), the Washington Times (12/15, Persons), the Washington Free Beacon (12/15, Beck), CBS News (12/15), the Huffington Post (12/15, Frej), the Independent Sentinel \(NY\) (12/15), Independent Journal Review (12/15, Charters), and E&F Publishing (12/15, Doyle).

Zinke Reprimanded Park Head After Climate Tweets.

The Hill (12/15, Cama) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke summoned David Smith, superintendent of Joshua Tree National Park, to Washington “last month to reprimand him for climate change-related tweets the park had sent via Twitter, two sources close to the situation said.” Zinke “did not take any formal disciplinary action against” Smith, and “the tweets at issue weren’t deleted, because they didn’t violate National Park Service or Interior Department policies.” However, “Zinke made it clear to Smith that the Trump administration doesn’t want national parks to put out official communications on climate change.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Hi-Desert \(CA\) Star (12/15, Moore).

Utah Republican To Patagonia Founder: Come Testify Before Congress.

The Washington Post (12/15, Grandoni) reports House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Rep. Rob Bishop on Friday sent a letter to Yvon Chouinard, founder of Patagonia, to testify before his committee about President Trump’s decision to reduce the size of two national monuments in Utah. Bishop said, “There is much public interest in this matter. ... It is apparent through multiple media accounts and appearances that you have strong feelings on the topic as well.” He continued: “As part of this continuing process, I wish to invite you to testify before the committee about your views on federal land management.” According to the Post, the letter “is an amicable turn in what had become an acrimonious public feud between Republicans and Patagonia.”

Also reporting are the AP (12/15), the Washington Times (12/15, Wolfgang), Reuters (12/15, Volcovici), and Outside (12/15, Phippen).

Trump Environmental Officials Are Keeping Tight Rein Over Stampede Of FOIA Requests.

The Washington Post (12/15, Grandoni, Eilperin) reports “the Trump administration’s top environmental policymakers are engaged in a new war with their adversaries – over how much information to release to the media and outside groups, who are often perceived as enemies, as part of a heavy stream of Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests.” The Post says “the Environmental Protection Agency and Interior Department are at ground zero in this growing feud,” as “some high-level officials at both EPA and Interior” are now “keeping closer tabs on these FOIA requests, while at least at the EPA – according to those who have filed such requests – bureaus drag their feet in responding.”

Trump, Congress Praised For Authorizing Palau Compact Deal.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (12/18) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “last week thanked President Trump and commended the U.S. Congress for including authorization for the Palau Compact Review Agreement in the FY 2018 National Defense Authorization Act.” Zinke said, “The U.S. Insular Areas are on the front lines of North Korean aggression and are an important part of the strategic defense for our nation. Authorizing full funding for the agreement is an important element of the Pacific national security strategy to maintain stability in the Western Pacific Region and we look forward to continuing our work with Congress to get this job done. President Trump’s strong support for the agreement, the Department’s budget request, and Congress’ support for it all point to the strategic importance of our U.S. Territories and the Freely Associated States. I have served with a number of warriors from the islands and I look forward to visiting the people of Palau in my role as Secretary.”

Interior May Lead Way In Spreading Out Jobs.

FEDweek (12/15) reports that “a long-running idea to shift more federal jobs from the national capital area to other parts of the country is showing signs of gaining traction in Congress, with the Interior Department potentially serving as a model.” A House subcommittee has “held a hearing in support of the department’s interest in moving headquarters of three of its components—the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Reclamation and the Fish and Wildlife Service—to Western states on grounds that employees would be closer to those most impacted by their decisions.” According to the article, “the most likely vehicle for making a formal proposal would be the budget plan the administration plans to send to Congress early in 2018 for the 2019 fiscal year.”

Lawmakers Ask Interior Department To Recover 'Misspent' Funds.

The Willits \(CA\) News (12/16) reports that Rep. Jared Huffman has sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "urging him to recover $84.8 million in taxpayer money that was identified in a recent inspector general report detailing how the funds were misspent, according to information released Friday by Huffman's office." The article says that "the funds were to benefit a select few California water districts participating in the 'WaterFix' planning process, according to a report titled 'The Bureau of Reclamation Was Not Transparent in Its Participation in the [San Francisco] Bay Delta Conservation Plan.'" The letter "asks that Zinke recover the missing funds and for the department to shed more light on the matter, including whether similar undisclosed subsidies were provided to any other parties, or if the water districts that benefited from this arrangement might still be reimbursed by taxpayers."

North Cascades Grizzly Bear Recovery Work Halted By Interior Department.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (12/16, Chaney) reports that "work on grizzly bear recovery in the North Cascades Ecosystem has been halted even as the continental United States' two largest grizzly populations near removal from Endangered Species Act protection." North Cascades National Park Superintendent Karen Taylor-Goodrich told the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee last Wednesday "that her staff had been asked to stop work on its environmental impact statement by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's office." The order also stops "discussions with Canadian wildlife managers who oversee a similar grizzly recovery process in British Columbia, she said."

Additional coverage was provided by the Yakima \(WA\) Herald-Republic (12/18, Thompson).

Gear Up Probe Ends With No Charges.

The Sioux Falls \(SD\) Argus Leader (12/15, Ellis) reports that "a federal investigation into the embezzlement of money from South Dakota's Gear Up program has concluded with no charges being filed in the case, the U.S. Interior Department's Office of Inspector General has announced." The OIG investigation "concluded that Scott and Nicole Westerhuis were responsible for the embezzlement of funds that were meant to prepare Native American students for post-secondary education." According to authorities, "Scott Westerhuis killed Nicole and their four children before setting fire to their Platte, S.D. home and committing suicide in September 2015." Spokeswoman Nancy DiPaolo said, "The OIG ended our investigation because the responsible subjects are deceased and we did not identify additional subjects."

NOAA Officials Meet With Local Tribal Representatives.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) News (12/17) reports that NOAA's North Atlantic Regional Team visited Martha's Vineyard "last month to keep local Native American tribes up to date on the agency's work and mission." According to the article, "more than 120 participants representing eight New England tribes met at the Aquinnah Wampanoag Tribal Community Center to discuss preserving cultural practice through environmental protection." The article says that "representatives from the Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the American Indian Environmental Office discussed a variety of topics relevant to the tribes, from programs and budgets to federal regulations."

California Wildfire Spreads Rapidly Toward Santa Barbara.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (12/16, lead story, 2:10, Diaz-Balart) broadcast, Steve Patterson reported the Thomas Fire on Saturday "forced thousands of new evacuations...in Santa Barbara and Ventura counties," as the wildfire, which "has been raging since Dec. 4, killing two and burning down more than 1,000 homes and buildings," continued to spread. The New York Times (12/16, Jordan, Fuller) reports that the fire "burn[ed] through the outskirts of the wealthy enclave of Montecito, home to many Hollywood stars" and was expected to continue to spread because of "strong winds that were forecast to continue through Saturday."

According to the Washington Post (12/16, Ufberg, Paquette), as of Saturday afternoon, "the mandatory evacuation zone...stretched 17 miles long and about 5 miles wide, running from the mountains northwest of Los Angeles to the Pacific Ocean." The Post notes that "rain isn't expected to quench the area for another 10 days." In addition, the Post states that "the cost of battling the blaze has exceeded $104 million, officials said, as more than 8,000 firefighters work to suppress it." In a brief report, the CBS Weekend News (12/16, story 2, 0:30, Ninan) said the fire is the third largest "in California's modern history."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Justice Audit: Tribal Law Enforcement Flawed.

The Arizona Republic (12/15, Wagner) reports that “an audit issued Thursday by Justice Department inspectors says Indian nations are being short-changed on crime fighting because federal agents, prosecutors and tribal police have failed to develop a coordinated system mandated by Congress.” The DOJ Office of Inspector General review “says the failure to establish an overall plan or controlling agency for law enforcement has created a ‘lack of DOJ-level accountability.’” The report has “14 recommendations, including policy and organizational changes, a uniform crime-tracking method and improved training.”

Jail In Lame Deer Holds More Than Twice Its Capacity, Report Finds.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (12/17, Tollefson) reports that “the Lame Deer jail has been operating above capacity since 1999, a year after the BJS began collecting data on Indian Country jails.” When asked about the crowding, BIA spokeswoman Nedra Darling “said inmate populations fluctuate daily and the agency’s Office of Justice Services relocates inmates to other facilities ‘as warranted.’” However, “the crowding could soon come to an end.” In November, the BIA “announced it would reopen the privately-owned Two Rivers Detention Facility in Hardin by January.”

Council Bluffs Sues Over Tribe’s Plan For Carter Lake Casino.

The AP (12/15) reports that “the city of Council Bluffs is suing the federal government to stop a Native American tribe from building a casino just seven miles away in Carter Lake.” City attorney Richard Wade asserts in U.S. District Court documents “that a Ponca Tribe of Nebraska casino would compete with state-licensed casinos in Council Bluffs and cut into millions of dollars in fees, taxes and charitable contributions that benefit the city’s residents.” The National Indian Gaming Commission and the Interior Department “cleared the way for the tribe’s casino plan in November.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Investigator Alleges Misconduct In Armed Nevada Standoff.

The AP (12/15) reports that “a lead investigator with the U.S. Bureau of Land Management who looked into how his agency handled an armed standoff with ranchers in Nevada is alleging misconduct in a whistleblower memo, a newspaper that obtained the document reported Friday.” Last month, Larry Wooten, lead case agent and investigator for the BLM, sent a whistleblower email to the U.S. Department of Justice, alleging a “widespread pattern of bad judgment, lack of discipline, incredible bias, unprofessionalism and misconduct, as well as likely policy, ethical and legal violations among senior and supervisory staff” at the Bureau of Land Management’s Office of Law Enforcement and Security. The document “obtained by The Oregonian/OregonLive prompted the attorney for lead defendant Cliven Bundy to file a motion to dismiss the case.”

Also reporting are the Arizona Republic (12/15, Anglen), the Oregonian (12/17, Bernstein), the High Country \(CO\) News (12/15, Wiles), and KTVB-TV Boise \(ID\) Boise, ID (12/16).

Conoco Hopes To Crack Open Off-Limits North Slope Land.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (12/15, Harball) reported that as ConocoPhillips dominates oil development in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska and controls more than 1,000 square miles in the reserve, it is looking to explore more locations in the reserve. Conoco has located more opportunities to the west of its current developments and has asked “the federal government to re-draw the map,” which includes the Teshekpuk Lake Special Area that is off-limits. Currently, “the Interior Department is re-evaluating the Obama-era decision that more than doubled the size of the protected area around Teshekpuk Lake.” The Department of the Interior has not indicated when a decision will be made.

Once-Popular Swim Hole Still Closed As Agency Mulls Its Fate.

The AP (12/18) reports that “four years after the U.S. Bureau of Land Management shut down the Ash Springs Recreation Site due to safety and environmental concerns, agency officials still haven’t decided what to do with the once-popular swimming hole 100 miles (160 kilometers) north of Las Vegas." Public meetings have "been held to brainstorm a plan for the site's future, but nobody has swam in the spring-fed swimming hole since July 2013." Assistant Field Manager Shirley Johnson "says the bureau is nearly finished with an environmental assessment draft for the site, but she declined to say when the document might be ready for public viewing."

Agencies Approve Coal Lease Modifications.

The Montrose \(CO\) Press (12/16, Heidelberg) reports that the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management "in separate decisions this week approved Arch Coal's request to modify two of its leased parcels in the North Fork Valley." Scott Armentrout, forest supervisor for the Paonia Ranger District, "on Dec. 11 signed a final record of decision and by so doing, consented to the BLM allowing one lease to increase by 786 acres and the other, by 915." On Dec. 15, the Interior Department "issued a record of decision concurring, and also authorized on-lease exploration under a host of terms." Katharine MacGregor, a deputy assistant secretary for the U.S. Department of the Interior, wrote in the Friday record of decision, "I have determined that modifying the leases serve the interests of the United States; there is no competitive interest in the lands or deposits and the additional lands or deposits cannot be developed as part of another potential or existing independent operation."

Proposal To Sample Parkdale Area Hard Rock Minerals Prompts Public Comment Query.

The Mountain Mail (12/15) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "seeking public comments until Jan. 12 on its draft environmental assessment on a proposal to sample hard rock minerals in the Parkdale area in Fremont County."

Bureau Of Reclamation

KID Board Supports 'Takings' Appeal, Preps For Drought.

The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (12/17, Dillemath) reports that "Klamath Irrigation District board of directors unanimously voted Thursday to support an appeal of the so-called 'takings case' ruling, joining Tululake and Klamath Basin Irrigation Districts." The move "commits the board to financially support an appeal to the ruling, collectively with other districts." According to the article, "the total costs spread out between affected districts is at least $75,000, which includes funding already gathered by the districts."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

31 Million Barrels Of Oil Later, New Life For Old Rig.

The Houston Chronicle (12/15, Eaton) reported Shell's retired Cougar platform is being left on the floor of the Gulf of Mexico to serve as an artificial reef for a variety of aquatic invertebrates and migratory fish. Ruth Perry, a marine scientist and regulatory affairs specialist at Shell, said, "These platforms are essentially the gas stations or rest stops in the Gulf. ... The artificial reefs allow ecosystems to grow. We've seen growth within hours or days or weeks." The platform was used as part of the federal Rigs to Reefs program that has recycled more than 450 offshore rigs into artificial reefs in US waters.

Workers Injured In Shell Platform Fire In Gulf Of Mexico File Suit.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (12/15, Larino) reported that the three workers injured during a fire on Shell's Enchilada platform are suing the company, alleging the oil major, its Gulf of Mexico subsidiary and a pipeline operator disregarded the health and safety of the workers prior to the incident. The lawsuit seeks more than $1 million in damages through a jury trial.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Drilling In Section Of ANWR Included In Final GOP Tax-reform Package.

The Washington Times (12/17, Wolfgang) reports that the final tax reform package includes a "controversial provision" to allow a section of ANWR "to be opened to oil exploration," and environmentalists "over the weekend launched a last-ditch effort to halt the initiative, though their efforts almost surely will be in vain." According to the article, "green groups are well aware that drilling in ANWR would represent a major blow to their agenda, and they're pressuring lawmakers publicly and behind the scenes in the hopes of getting a last-minute change to the tax bill."

The Hill (12/15, Henry) reported that most of the House Republicans that are against ANWR drilling say the inclusion of the provision in the tax bill is not a deal-breaker. Environmentalists are planning a series of advertisements and awareness campaigns to pressure lawmakers to vote against the provision. The Wilderness Society's senior managing director for government relations Drew McConville said, "Our message is pretty consistent and clear: a vote for this bill is a vote to drill in the ANWR. ... I know there are other issues in this bill, but we fully expect that this is a big part of the calculation: You can't be for preserving the refuge and vote of this bill."

The AP (12/15) also provided coverage.

Permits For Elephant Hunting Trophies From Zimbabwe Are Still Being Issued.

The Washington Post (12/15, Fears) reports that "the U.S. government continues to grant permits to hunters seeking to import the remains of elephants shot in Zimbabwe as trophies, federal documents show." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "awarded permits to 16 people in 11 states who requested them between January 2016 and as recently as October, according to Friends of Animals, a nonprofit environmental group that obtained documents through a Freedom of Information Act request." In a statement, the FWS said, "We did not issue new permits for elephant trophies from Zimbabwe in violation of our import. They were only for animals legally hunted during the Obama administration and prior to the 2014 suspension."

Grizzly Bears The Focus Of Forest Plan Amendments.

The Missoula Current \(MT\) (12/16, Devlin) reports that "with the preservation of grizzly bear populations in mind, four national forests in western Montana released the final version of proposed management plan changes this week." The Missoulian \(MT\) (12/16, Chaney) reports that the Flathead National Forest Plan final draft, "released Thursday, includes the proposed rules for managing grizzlies in four national forests that share management responsibility for the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem. Public comments are due in mid-February."

Additional coverage was provided by The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (12/16, Scott)

Endangered Topminnow's Return To Santa Cruz River In Tucson Is A Big Step To Recovery.

The Arizona Daily Star (12/15, Davis) reports that "the discovery of endangered Gila topminnows in the Santa Cruz River near Tucson puts the tiny native fish a step closer to recovery, a federal biologist said Friday." According to Doug Duncan, a fish biologist for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "'dozens' of the imperiled minnows were captured as part of a fish survey on the Lower Santa Cruz in early November." The article notes that "it was the first time the endangered minnow has been seen in the Santa Cruz near Tucson since 1943."

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Independent (12/17, DuHamel).

Enviro Groups Lose Bid To Stop Florida Phosphate Mine.

Courthouse News (12/15, Pickett) reports that Mosaic Fertilizer "can proceed with plans to greatly expand mining operations in Florida, a federal judge ruled." In his decision, U.S. District Judge Steven Merryday "dismissed claims brought by four environmental groups who alleged the expansion of an existing mine and creation of three others would significantly damage 57,000 acres wetlands and woodlands in Southwest and Central Florida."

National Park Service

Third Attack By Marine Mammal In San Francisco's Aquatic Park Prompts Swimming Ban.

The Los Angeles Times (12/15, Lin, Mejia) reports that "a third attack by a sea mammal in San Francisco in a week has prompted officials to ban swimming in the Aquatic Park Cove on the northern edge of the city's waterfront." On Friday, the San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park tweeted, "The Aquatic Park Cove has been closed to swimming due to reports of an aggressive marine mammal biting swimmers in the area." The closure is scheduled at least through Monday.

Also reporting are the Washington Post (12/16, Wang), the Daily Mail (12/16), Newsweek (12/15, Perez), and KNTV-TV San Jose \(CA\) San Jose, CA (12/15).

Proposed Refinery Near Western North Dakota National Park Spurs Debate Over Economic, Conservation Concerns.

The Dickinson \(ND\) Press (12/15, Hageman) reports that conservationists are fighting a proposed oil refinery near Theodore Roosevelt National Park. The project, proposed by Meridian Energy Group, "hit a major milestone this month when the North Dakota Department of Health released its draft air permit." The National Parks Conservation Association has "already rallied people to urge Meridian to relocate the facility, citing potential threats to air quality, views, night skies and 'natural soundscape.'"

Park Rangers Take Over Law Enforcement Duties At Hoover Dam.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/17, Goodyear) reports that "changes have come to security at Hoover Dam, with National Park Service rangers taking over law enforcement duties from the now-defunct Bureau of Reclamation police department." According to the article, "one factor contributing to the decision was construction of the Mike O'Callahan-Pat Tillman Memorial Bridge, allowing traffic to bypass the dam." The Bureau of Reclamation's security force "continues to handle security needs for the Hoover Dam facility, and when it encounters a situation where law enforcement is needed, the park rangers will come in."

PG&S Granted $5,000 From Park Service.

The Harrison \(AR\) Daily Times (12/15) reports that "the Pindall, Gilbert and St. Joe (PG&S) Volunteer Fire Department has been awarded a $5,000 National Park Service Rural Fire Assistance Program grant from Buffalo National River." Buffalo National River Deputy Superintendent Laura Miller said, "This grant will be used to purchase much needed firefighting equipment and personal protective gear. We appreciate the hard work and dedication of all volunteer firefighters, and we are fortunate to have such a great working relationship with PG&S Volunteer Fire Department."

Fees To Rise At Great Basin National Park.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (12/16) reports that the National Park Service has "approved fee changes for cave tours and campgrounds within Great Basin National Park." The fee change will be implemented on Jan. 1. The article notes that "a public comment period was held in 2016, and most comments came back in support of the proposed fee changes."

Park Service Eliminating Fees For Washington's Museum In Morristown For 2018.

The Morristown \(NJ\) Green (12/15) reports that starting next year, Morristown National Historical Park will "no longer charge an entrance fee to visit the park's Washington's Headquarters Museum." After conducting a cost-benefit analysis of the recreational fee program, "park leadership determined that it is in the best interest of both Morristown National Historical Park and the public to eliminate the entrance charge at the museum (which also includes a guided tour of the Ford Mansion)." Park Superintendent, Tom Ross noted that, "This decision is the right thing to do for both visitors and our staff members, who now can focus their time and talents on the core missions of the National Park Service."

Yosemite's Last Native American Village Being Rebuilt.

The Fresno \(CA\) Bee (12/16, George) reports that "the last Native American village in Yosemite Valley, destroyed by the National Park Service by 1969," is being rebuilt. The project is led by a committee of the American Indian Council of Mariposa County/Southern Sierra Miwuk Nation. Yosemite spokesman Scott Gediman says, "It's our job as the National Park Service to preserve and protect the park and the resources, but telling the cultural history and telling the story about the Native Americans is equally as important to our mission, not just for us as the National Park Service to tell the story, but to have the tribes and the tribal members tell the story. It's unique and it's exciting and it's great for everybody."

Dunes Learning Center Has Educated Youngsters For 20 Years.

The AP (12/17, Russell) reports that since opening in 1998, Dunes Learning Center has "taught more than 100,000 youngsters, in grades four through high school, about the uniqueness of the Indiana Dunes." According to Executive Director Geof Benson, "students from the Region, Chicago and as far as central Indiana and southwest Michigan have come to hike the dunes, spend the night in cabins and leave with a greater appreciation of their environment."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Defense Department To Investigate Chinese Aid To Micronesia.

The Hawaii Free Press (12/17) reports that “the $700 billion 2018 National Defense Authorization Act, signed by President Trump in mid December, calls on the Department of Defense (DOD) to investigate the growing role of China in former US territories in the Pacific.” According to the article, “that is a recognition both of the islands’ importance to US global strategy, as well as the latest indicator that America’s decades long relationship with its former dependencies is a partnership under stress.” Neil Mellen, founder of Habele, a US educational nonprofit operating across Micronesia, said, “Congress and the Administration are to be commended. America is best served when her allies’ support comes from a position of strength, sovereignty, and real partnership, rather than mere dependency. Careful examination of our nation’s track record in the post-war Pacific, as well as the increasingly caustic role played by others, is long overdue.”

US Geological Survey

USGS And NASA Select New Landsat Science Team.

GISuser (12/15) reports that a new Landsat Science Team has been selected by the US Geological Survey and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Thomas Loveland, chief scientist at the USGS Earth Resources Observation and Science Center and co-chair for the Landsat Science Team, said, “This oncoming team is really in a pivot-to-the-future mode, as previous team contributions led to significant advancements that give the Landsat program a stronger long-term foundation.”

Additional Reading.

- Giant Volcano Erupting In Bali Could Help Predict Future Deadly Lava Flows. Newsweek (12/17, Bartels).
- Strong Earthquake Strikes Indonesia; 3 Dead. CNN (12/15, Quiano, Sterling).

Opinion Pieces

Frank Miele: Editor’s 2 Cents, Swamp Critters Target Ryan Zinke, But I’m Betting On The SEAL.

In a piece for the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (12/16, Miele), Frank Miele, managing editor of the Daily Inter Lake, defends Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who has “seemingly” become “the left’s favorite target after President Trump himself.” Miele, who “got to know” Zinke “as a state legislator, a local businessman, and even as a member of our editorial board for a brief tenure,” is bewildered by the media’s treatment of Zinke.

Our Public Lands Need Balanced — Not Extremist — Leadership.

In an op-ed for The Hill (12/17, Shea), Patrick Shea, a former director of the Bureau of Land Management and deputy assistant secretary for Land and Minerals at the Department of the Interior, raises concerns with President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “recent attacks on national monuments and public lands.” Shea is “specifically troubled by the rumors about Secretary Zinke’s choice for BLM Director — Karen Budd-Falen.” According to Shea, Budd-Falen has “a history of effectively undermining the core functions of the BLM.” Shea argues that “Budd-Falen’s narrow perspective and alignment with fringe interests makes her uniquely unqualified to lead an agency charged with managing multiple uses across a diverse landscape.”

The Endangered Species Act Is An Ineffective Regulatory Burden.

In an op-ed for The Hill (12/15, Henneke), Robert Henneke, general counsel and director of the Center for the American Future at the nonprofit Texas Public Policy Foundation, argues that “when species are endangered, the Endangered Species Act is an ineffective tool for protecting them.” Noting that “less than one percent of the species listed have ever been delisted over the forty-year tenure of the ESA,” Henneke argues that “this shows the ESA is not working, nor accomplishing its goals set by Congress.” Furthermore, Henneke asserts that “when it’s abused to stifle economic development, undermine private property rights and destroy jobs, it’s counterproductive to one species in particular — our own.”

Commentary: Couldn't Hatch Think Of Something Better Than This Monument Nonsense To Ask Trump For?

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/17, Hedden), Bill Hedden, the executive director of the Grand Canyon Trust, criticizes the move “to rob protections from more than 2 million acres of the Grand Staircase-Escalante and Bears Ears national monuments.” Hedden questions why Sen. Orrin Hatch pushed for the reduction, asking, “Couldn't he think of something else that might have provided greater benefit to Utah?” Hedden writes that “we should pay attention to what” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “learned from the millions of public comments on national monuments: More than 99 percent of Americans who spoke out told him they want the monuments protected.”

'The Case Of The Missing Frog'.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (12/17, Miller), Henry Miller, the Robert Wesson Fellow in Scientific Philosophy and Public Policy at Stanford University's Hoover Institution, writes in Weyerhaeuser v. United States Fish and Wildlife Service, “the government seeks to seize control of land it does not own, to protect an endangered species of frog that does not live there, force private landowners to tear down a healthy native forest, and install at landowner expense a new forest the landowner does not want.” Miller argues that the Supreme Court should review the case and “in its ultimate decision demonstrate that the Fish and Wildlife Service should be held to the clear language of the Endangered Species Act.” Miller also urges acting FWS head Greg Sheehan to “undo the rule making that produced this overreaching and destructive regulation.”

Tribune Editorial: Bureaucratic Kinks May Block The Lake Powell Pipeline. Good.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/16) editorialized that on Tuesday, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approved a pipeline project, that would bring “water from the rapidly shrinking Lake Powell 140 miles west to the rapidly growing St. George area.” The project has an estimated cost of nearly $1 billion and could “find itself consumed by federal red tape.” The “red tape” may come in the form of other agencies reviewing the project such as the National Park Service and the Bureau of Land Management as FERC only approved six hydroelectric generating stations.

Additional Reading.

- Interior Secretary Zinke Reportedly Dressed Down Joshua Tree Superintendent Over Climate Change Tweets. Los Angeles Times (12/15, Martelle).
- Trump's Deregulatory Promises Are Coming True And Saving $570 Million. The Hill.
- Follow The Founders And Privatize Public Lands. Forbes (12/17, Hanke).
- Reducing Antiquities Act Land Grabs. Townhall (12/16, Driessen).
- Reducing Antiquities Act Land Grabs. Canada Free Press (12/17, Driessen).
- Time To Create A Cascade-Siskiyou National Park. Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (12/15, Wuerthner).
- Richards: National Monument Shrinking Undermines Native Voices. Daily Utah Chronicle (12/16, Richards).
- Guy W. Farmer: Preventing Federal Land Grabs. Nevada Appeal (12/16, Farmer).
- Management Tools. Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (12/15).
- Well-planned, Rapid Taking Of Public Lands In Works. Montana Standard (12/17, Schoonen).
- Editorial: So Much For Access For All. Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (12/17).
- Dear President, Domestic Food Production Is Connected To Federal Lands. Tri-State Livestock News \(SD\) (12/15, Thurm).
- Trump's Offshore Oil Plan Is Coming. Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (12/16, Haifley).
- Block Offshore Drilling In Florida. Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (12/15).
- STEPHEN J. WUKELA: Drilling Off SC Coast A Bad Idea. Florence \(SC\) Morning News (12/17, Wukela).
- Protecting National Parks. Parkersburg \(WV\) News and Sentinel (12/17, Myer).
- Urgent: Extended Deadline – The National Park Service Needs To Hear From You. Huffington Post (12/16, Carli).
- Is The Best Science Always Used? Escanaba \(MI\) Daily Press (12/16, Kobasic).

- Rutledge: Protect The Law That Protects America's Birds. Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (12/15, Rutledge).
- Hoping Judge Will See My Logic In Using Up My Last Lead Shot. Modesto \(CA\) Bee (12/16, Taylor).
- Hope Next BLM Director Will Listen To Communities. Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (12/16, Henry).
- Mike Bleech: Federal Chronic Wasting Disease Legislation Announced. Erie \(PA\) Times-News (12/17, Bleech).
- Let's All Demand Higher Quality Water Management. Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (12/16, Grubbe).
- It's Time To Reverse The Damage Caused By Snake River Dams. Idaho Statesman (12/16, Jackson).
- My Experience Photographing For The National Park Service. PetaPixel (12/16, L'Ecuyer).

Top National News

Trump Denies Plans To Fire Mueller In Wake Of Controversy Over Transition Emails.

President Trump said Sunday that he is not considering firing special counsel Robert Mueller and in Sunday show appearances, and Administration officials said they were not aware of any such plans. The denials garner heavy media attention, but they came a day after Trump lawyer Kory Langofer said in a letter to Congress that Mueller improperly obtained emails from the President's transition team. Langofer's letter gets a great deal of media coverage, much of which casts the claim as the latest in a series of moves designed to undermine Mueller's investigation, which has prompted speculation among Democrats that Trump is maneuvering to fire the special counsel.

The Hill (12/17, Manchester) reports Trump said Sunday he is not considering firing the special counsel. Asked by a reporter if he was considering firing Mueller, Trump said, "No, I'm not." Errol Barnett reported on the CBS Weekend News (12/17, story 4, 1:25, Quijano) that Trump "insisted nothing will be found on his transition team's emails, now in Mueller's possession." Reuters (12/17) also reports on Trump's denial to reporters that he is considering firing Mueller.

The Washington Times (12/17, Richardson) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short "said Sunday in separate interviews that they were unaware of any such discussions." Mnuchin told CNN's State Of The Union (12/17, Tapper), "I was at dinner last night with the President and Vice President. I haven't heard anything about this, any firing." Politico (12/17, Matishak) reports that Short said on NBC's Meet the Press, "There's no conversation about that in the White House whatsoever." The Los Angeles Times (12/17, King) says that while the White House "sought to tamp down speculation Trump would move directly against the special counsel," Mnuchin "noted the president had the authority to remove Mueller if he wished," saying, "that's obviously up to him."

The Washington Post (12/17, Rucker, Dawsey, Horwitz) says Trump "sought to douse" the speculation "amid an intensifying campaign by Trump allies to attack the wide-ranging Russia investigation as improper and politically motivated." AFP (12/17) also reports that Republicans have, in recent weeks, "cast doubt on its impartiality and pressed for a new independent prosecutor to investigate anti-Trump bias," which has "led to speculation that the administration could be laying the groundwork for firing Mueller."

David Wright said on ABC World News Tonight (12/17, story 3, 2:50, Llamas) that Democrats are concerned that Trump "is searching for a pretext to fire Mueller." Eliana Johnson of Politico said on CNN Inside Politics (12/17), "The larger project, really, is to turn the Mueller investigation into the Starr investigation, which some people took seriously, but by the time the findings were released, it was considered a political and politicized process that was dismissed by half the country."

Politico (12/17, Cheney) describes "a sense of foreboding" among congressional Democrats, "who fear that GOP lawmakers, the White House and conservative media figures are orchestrating a messaging campaign with one logical goal: the firing of special counsel Robert Mueller by President Donald Trump." Democrats, Politico adds, are "viewing the situation in near-apocalyptic terms."

Several Democrats defended Mueller Sunday. Sen. Chris Van Hollen said on ABC's This Week (12/17), "I think Republicans should end their concerted effort to undermine the credibility of the Mueller investigation." He added that despite alleged donations to one party or another "people in these jobs have integrity." He defended Mueller saying he was a "straight shooter" and would get to the facts. Sen. Joe Manchin told NBC's Meet the Press (12/17, Todd), "I do not at all believe that Mr. Mueller's has been compromised, or his investigation. ... I think he's beyond reproach." Sen.-elect Doug Jones said on CNN's State Of The Union (12/17, Tapper), "I would be very surprised if Bob Mueller did anything illegally. ... I think he's moving fairly expeditiously because he understands the importance of trying to get this over and out in the open as soon as possible."

The Wall Street Journal (12/17, Viswanatha) reports that Democrats and other Mueller defenders have expressed concern that Trump may fire Mueller, and several Republicans expressed concern about possible bias in the investigation but said it would be a mistake to fire Mueller. Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn told ABC's This Week (12/17) the possible conflicts of interest could undermine the investigation, but firing Mueller would be a mistake.

Concerns that Trump is considering firing Mueller come as Langhofer argued in a letter to Congress that Mueller improperly obtained emails from the transition. The Hill (12/17, Carter) says prosecutors in Mueller's office "reportedly used the emails to question witnesses, and are also looking to the messages to confirm information and follow new leads." However, in what the New York Times (12/17, Schmidt) calls "the latest in the mounting attacks by the president and his surrogates on Mr. Mueller's investigation," Langhofer wrote that the GSA, which had the transition team emails, provided them to Mueller's investigators without allowing transition team lawyers to review them. According to Langhofer, the documents should have been protected by a number of privileges, including attorney-client privilege.

The AP (12/17, Braun, Day) reports that Langhofer said then-GAS General Counsel Richard Beckler, who was appointed by Trump but has since died, "had assured the transition in June that any request for records from Mueller's office would be referred to the transition's attorneys." However, GSA Deputy Counsel Lenny Loewentritt "told BuzzFeed that Beckler didn't make a commitment to the transition team that requests from law enforcement for materials would be routed through transition lawyers." Langhofer blames Beckler and other GSA career staff "for providing the transition documents to the FBI."

The Washington Post (12/16, Gearan, Rucker), which calls Langhofer's letter "the latest in a series of legal and public relations moves by Trump's allies to attempt to undermine Mueller's investigation and portray it as politically motivated," reports that Trump "appeared to back" Langhofer's claims, saying Sunday, that "a lot of lawyers thought that was pretty sad." Asked if Mueller had obtained the documents improperly, Trump said, "Not looking good. It's not looking good." AFP (12/17) similarly says Langhofer's claims are "the latest attack on the credibility of the probe into Russian meddling in the US election."

Axios (12/17, Allen) reports that Trump transition officials plan to ask Mueller to return the "many tens of thousands" of transition emails. Axios cites "a source close to" the transition who "said the transition will send a letter to Mueller informing him that some of the emails are privileged, and asking for their return. The transition says it is willing to provide Mueller with vetted emails." Citing the Axios report, the New York Post (12/17, Schultz) says Peter Carr, "a spokesman for Mueller's office stood by the way the special counsel obtained the documents." Carr said, "When we have obtained emails in the course of our ongoing criminal investigation, we have secured either the account owner's consent or appropriate criminal process."

USA Today (12/17) reports that Trump "said he was confident that the emails wouldn't show any evidence that his campaign or transition teams colluded with Russia in the 2016 election." Said Trump, "I can't imagine there's anything on them, frankly, because as we said, there's no collusion." Kelly O'Donnell said on NBC Nightly News (12/17, story 5, 2:50, Snow) that "White House officials stayed out of it." White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short: "Thankfully I'm not in communication with the transition lawyer for the Trump team."

Politico (12/17, Cheney) reports that House Oversight Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy said Sunday that the complaint from Trump's transition attorney's should be settled by the courts, not Congress. A Gowdy spokeswoman said in a statement, "These are issues to be briefed by the parties (or others with cognizable legal claims and standing) and decided by the court – not Congress." The Washington Examiner (12/17, Yilek) also reports on the Gowdy aide's comments, citing the Politico report.

Russian Oligarchs Sue Fusion GPS Over Trump Dossier. The Washington Times (12/17, Scarborough) reports that "three of Russia's richest oligarchs," Mikhail Fridman, Petr Aven and German Khan, have filed a lawsuit against Fusion GPS, which produced the so-called "Trump dossier," saying they became "'collateral damage' in Fusion's war to destroy the Donald Trump campaign." A Dec. 12 filing in US District Court for the District of Columbia says, "This is a defamation case brought by three international businessmen who were defamed in widely disseminated political research reports commissioned by political opponents of candidate Donald Trump in the 2016 presidential election cycle. ... The reports are gravely damaging in that, directly or by implication, they falsely accuse the plaintiffs – and Alfa, a consortium in which the plaintiffs are investors – of criminal conduct and alleged cooperation with 'Kremlin' to influence the 2016 presidential election."

Instagram Post From Russian "Troll Farm" Has Spread Quickly. The New York Times (12/17, Frenkel) reports that an Instagram post of a woman wearing a black hijab and text warning that she "hates everything from Jews and Christians to lesbians and wine – yet she 'complains about Islamophobia'" has been "liked" by more than 6,000 people since it was posted on Nov.8. The post "was created by the Internet Research Agency, or I.R.A., a so-called Russian troll farm that employed hundreds to influence discussions online by stirring debate in comment sections below online stories and creating provocative posts on social media." While the account on which the post first appeared "was banned by Instagram this year...other accounts continue to spread the image." The post, the Times adds, "demonstrates why fighting propaganda on social media will be an uphill battle."

Putin Thanks Trump For Intel That Foiled Terror Attack.

ABC World News Tonight (12/17, story 3, 2:50, Llamas) briefly reported Russian President Vladimir Putin called President Trump Sunday "to thank him for a CIA tip" that helped the Russians "foil a possible attempted terrorist bombing in St. Petersburg." Noting that the information the US provided helped Russia capture the suspected terrorists, the CBS Weekend News (12/17, story 5, 0:20, Barnett) briefly said Trump "continues to maintain a positive relationship" with Putin. NBC Nightly News (12/17, story 5, 2:50, Snow) mentioned that the Kremlin first revealed the call, "and then later, the White House did acknowledge the call and said President Trump sees it as an example of good cooperation."

The AP (12/17, Isachenkov) reports the Kremlin said, "The information received from the CIA proved sufficient to find and detain the criminal suspects." The White House said in its readout of the call that "based on the information the United States provided, Russian authorities were able to capture the terrorists just prior to an attack that could have killed large numbers of people." The White House added that Trump then called CIA Director Pompeo "to congratulate him, his very talented people, and the entire intelligence community on a job well done!" USA Today (12/17, Korte) reports the White House summary of the call "also emphasized agreement that the intelligence cooperation was 'an example of the positive things that can occur when our countries work together.'" The New York Times (12/17, Kramer) says Putin offered "rare words of praise for the CIA."

The Washington Post (12/17, Filipov) calls the conversation "unusual," noting "countries share intelligence all the time, but presidents rarely publicly thank one another for it," and also notes that it "was the two presidents' second conversation since Thursday." Bloomberg News (12/17, Rudnitsky) likewise notes that Putin spoke with Trump "for the second time in four days."

Reuters (12/17) reports the White House "did not disclose details about the plot itself," but said the attack "could have killed large numbers of people." Neither the Kremlin nor the White House "identified the would-be attackers," but Russian media reported last week that the Federal Security Service had detained ISIS militants "who had been planning a suicide bomb attack on Kazansky Cathedral on Saturday." The New York Post (12/17, Schultz) also reports that the agency "said the suspects were plotting a suicide bombing in a church and a series of other explosions in the city's busiest areas" over the weekend.

Also reporting similarly on the call are Politico (12/17, Griffiths, Samuelsohn), the Wall Street Journal (12/17, Marson), Washington Times (12/17, Boyer) and Washington Examiner (12/17, Scarry), among others.

Trump: Tax Reform Bill Will Be "A Great Christmas Gift" For Middle Class.

President Trump on Saturday called the final Republican tax reform bill released Friday "a great Christmas gift" for the middle class and predicted the US economy will "start to rock" after Congress passes the legislation. While media coverage portrayed the President as taking an early victory lap, analyses were more focused the specific provisions in the plan.

Politico (12/16, Samuelsohn) reports Trump "took an early victory lap Saturday as Republicans closed in on his administration's first major legislative accomplishment and the biggest overhaul to U.S. tax policy in 30 years." The Hill (12/16, Greenwood) reports the President said, "This is going to be one of the greatest gifts for the middle-income people of this country that they've ever gotten for Christmas."

The AP (12/16, Lemire, Ohlemacher) similarly reports that Trump "defended the Republican tax cut as a good deal for the middle class while boldly suggesting it could lead to explosive economic growth." He told reporters prior to leaving for Camp David for the weekend that the legislation will "be fantastic for the middle-income people and for jobs, most of all." The President added, "I will say that because of what we've done with regulation and other things our economy is doing fantastically well, but it has another big step to go and it can't take that step unless we do the tax bill." The AP states that "no stranger to hyperbole, Trump also predicted the legislation would cause the economy to soar beyond its current 3 percent rate of growth." He asserted, "I think we could go to 4, 5 or even 6 percent, ultimately. ... We are back. We are really going to start to rock."

According to Reuters (12/16, Volcovici), the President additionally rejected "Democratic charges that it favors the rich, saying it will be 'one of the great Christmas gifts' for the middle class." Reuters reports that although "Democrats have slammed the plan as a giveaway to corporations and the rich that would drive up the federal deficit," Trump said "The Democrats have their sound bite, the standard sound bite before they even know what the bill is all about." He also "repeated on Saturday that the tax overhaul would help bring in $4 trillion in foreign profits from U.S. companies." Trump said, "This is going to bring money in. As an example, we think $4 trillion is going to be flowing back into the country. ... That's money that's overseas that's stuck there for years and years." The Washington Times (12/16, Boyer) reports he predicted "jobs are going to come pouring back into this country."

On NBC Nightly News (12/16, story 4, 2:15, Diaz-Balart), Kelly O'Donnell said "jobs' is White House code for helping middle class families." O'Donnell added, "Even with unemployment at a 14-year low, the wages are stagnant. Under the GOP tax cut plan, a family of four with an income of $73,000 could save roughly $2,000." Nonetheless, she acknowledged "wealthy families and corporations could see the biggest gains. The corporate tax rate drops to 21 percent. The estate tax exemption would allow couples to pass on twice as much – $22 million with no inheritance tax. The alternative minimum tax intended to prevent overuse of loopholes would kick in at a higher level – $1 million for couples. But the AMT ends completely for businesses."

On the lead CBS Weekend News (12/16, lead story, 2:20, Ninan) broadcast, Errol Barnett said that when asked why the middle-class tax cuts are temporary, Trump asserted, "Whichever the Administration is, in years from now, they'll make it, and maybe can even make it more generous." However, House Minority Leader Pelosi insisted: "In every iteration, the GOP tax scam becomes even more cowardly, outrageous, dishonest, brazen theft from middle-class families."

Bloomberg News (12/16, Voskuhl, Wasson, Kapur) reports White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders also "applauded" the release of the final bill, which she said takes "a major step toward achieving the president's promises of faster economic growth and 'much needed financial relief to all Americans.'"

However, Washington Post (12/16, Balz) chief correspondent Dan Balz says the bill "represents a big bet on the part of congressional Republicans," who "hope that completion of the tax bill will help shield them from sizable losses in next year's elections." Balz contends that "as a morale boost to beleaguered politicians, its value should not be underestimated. Whether it will translate politically as they hope is a far different question." Politico (12/16, Schor, Caygle) says that although passage of the legislation "will be a real blow" to Democrats' morale, their "next chance at serious revenge will be at the polls next year."

Meanwhile, the AP (12/16, Fram) suggests "the quickest and most potent political victory that Republicans would savor" in passing the tax bill "may be what it averts: another big GOP legislative crash in the age of Trump." The AP concedes though that "even if Republicans are correct that tax cuts for business and the wealthy bolster the economy, it can take time for obvious results to show. And even with millions of families likely to enjoy lower taxes, many won't feel much until they file their 2018 tax returns in early 2019." The AP adds this will be "well after the November 2018 elections that may be a coin flip for control of Congress, and recent races suggest those contests may be heavily influenced by...Trump's unpopularity."

In addition, The Hill (12/16, Wilson) reports "Republicans in state Capitols across the country find themselves in a bind as they plan their own state budget requirements." The Hill adds that while "Republicans at the state level say their party must prove it is able to handle the responsibilities of leadership by notching legislative victories that voters will be able to judge next November," some GOP leaders worry "the tax package being pushed by congressional Republicans will undoubtedly impact their states in a negative way, foisting new uncertainty into the budgetary process as tax collections have already begun to sag."

Media Analyses Examine Provisions Of Final Tax Bill. In an analysis of "The Winners And Losers In The Tax Bill," the New York Times (12/16, Drucker, Rappeport) reports "the fine print reveals that some will get a much nicer gift than others, the benefits will change over time, and some will be left out in the cold." According to the Times, "real estate developers and technology companies could see big tax cuts, while low-income households and people buying health insurance could lose out." The AP (12/16, Boak) says that Trump will be "among the personal winners in the $1.5 trillion tax package" because in addition to securing a political victory, he will likely see "a windfall for his real estate empire, too." The AP adds also likely to benefit are oil drillers, "multimillionaire and billionaire owners of sports teams" as well as companies, lawyers, and accountants. However, the AP warns "the bill creates plenty of losers, too," including the "estimated 13 million Americans [who are] projected to lose health insurance" and the "millions of American households [that] could face tax hikes in coming years. That's because their new tax breaks are set to expire after 2025. And their taxes could creep up because the IRS has been directed to use a less generous gauge of inflation in adjusting tax brackets."

In front-page article, the New York Times (12/16, A1, Tankersley) says the legislation "does not pass the postcard test" and "leaves nearly every large tax break in place." The Times adds the final bill "was not the grand simplification of the code that Republicans promised when they set out to eliminate tax breaks and cut the number of tax brackets as they lowered rates," but rather "layers new tax complexities upon businesses large and small, and which delivers a larger share of benefits to corporations and the rich than to the middle class." The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Rubin) similarly acknowledged upper-middle-class Americans in states with higher tax burdens are likely to end up paying more under the bill.

In a front-page article, the New York Times (12/16, A1, Dougherty) reports the bill will "increase many homeowners' monthly housing costs by scaling back deductions that allow them to reduce mortgage interest and property taxes." The Times adds that "by roughly doubling the standard deduction, it reduces the incentive to buy homes by making far fewer homeowners eligible for preferential tax treatment."

According to the AP (12/16, Lowy), commuters are also "among the losers" since the measure "eliminates the tax incentive for private employers that subsidize their employees' transit, parking and bicycle commuting expenses." The AP reports "the reasoning behind the elimination of the deduction is that since the tax bill substantially lowers the corporate tax rate, smaller tax breaks that complicate the tax code are no longer necessary."

In contrast, the Wall Street Journal (12/16, Scism, Tracy) counts US property-casualty insurers, including Berkshire Hathaway Inc., Hartford Financial Services Group Inc., Liberty Mutual Insurance, and Travelers Cos., among the winners of the tax bill since the legislation closes what the Coalition for American Insurance called a loophole that allowed rivals to set up operations outside the country in jurisdictions with low tax burdens such as Bermuda and Switzerland.

Bloomberg News (12/15, Browning) reported "the top tax rate that U.S. companies would pay on an estimated $3.1 trillion in earnings they've stockpiled overseas crept up to 15.5 percent in the final version of the GOP tax bill." According to Bloomberg, "Republicans say the 'deemed repatriation' tax imposed by the GOP bill would clear the way for many of those companies to bring their earnings back to the U.S." However, the Wall Street Journal (12/16, Rockoff) reports experts predict the companies will use the money to buy back shares and fund mergers rather than hire new employees or invest in their US facilities.

Meanwhile, the New York Times (12/16, Plumer) reports the bill "largely preserves key tax credits for wind and solar power and electric vehicles, reversing language in earlier versions that could have slowed the growth of renewable energy across the United States." The Times says "the last-minute changes...reflect the growing political clout of the wind and solar industries, which now provide more than 7 percent of the nation's electricity and are two of the fastest-growing energy sources." Reuters (12/16, Volcovici) similarly says that although the US renewable energy industry "expressed relief" that the bill preserves the "key" credits, several companies "raised concerns about a provision that may threaten investment in the sector." Reuters adds the Base Erosion Anti-Abuse Tax tries "to prevent multinational companies from abusing the tax code but has worried the renewable energy industry because it would limit the ability to claim a portion of production or investment credits."

Bloomberg News (12/15, Edgerton) reported the bill additionally contains two provisions that "would be a boon to private schools, but risks reducing local funds for public schools, according education advocates." Bloomberg said the legislation "would expand tax-free 529 accounts to let families save money for a child's elementary and secondary education, in addition to college," while public schools "stand to lose resources as the Republican bill also caps deductions for state and local taxes at $10,000."

WPost A1: Middle Class Utahans Express Concerns About Tax Reform. The Washington Post (12/16, A1, Frankel) reports in a front-page article that middle class families in Utah "are still seeking basic answers about the plan and how it will affect not just their pocketbooks but their everyday lives." According to the Post, the results will be "hard to tell" because the legislation "is largely an exercise in giving with one hand and taking with the other." The Post adds "any potential effect is amplified in a state like Utah, which has the highest average family size in the nation."

Rosselló: Tax Bill "A Devastating Blow For Puerto Rico." The New York Times (12/16, Mazzei) reports the tax legislation "could deliver another hit" to Puerto Rico's economy three months after Hurricane Maria slammed into the island because the bill "would treat mainland companies in Puerto Rico, a United States commonwealth, as it does those in foreign countries, and impose a 12.5 percent tax on income they receive from intellectual property." According to the Times, "the bankrupt Puerto Rican government, which lobbied intensely for special tax treatment, fears that the bill could endanger crucial industries and thousands of jobs on the island." Gov. Ricardo Rosselló on Friday said, "This is really a devastating blow for Puerto Rico, in our greatest time of need." He added, "Congress essentially turned its back on Puerto Rico, and essentially failed in its mission. ... It's just penalizing Puerto Rico. It's putting Puerto Rico in a worse-off position."

NYTimes: Rising Inequality Created GOP Tax Bill, Which Will Cause More. The New York Times (12/16) editorializes "growing inequality helped create" the Republican tax bill, which "will widen economic inequality by lavishing breaks on corporations and the wealthy while taking benefits away from the poor and the middle class." According to the Times, "the top 1 percent of the population by wealth – the group that would primarily benefit from the tax bill – controls nearly 40 percent of the country's wealth." The Times adds that "the power of the one-percenters may help explain why President Trump, who ran as a populist, has not only abandoned any pretense of fighting for the working class but also joined Republicans in Congress in ripping up regulations that protect families and the environment – in order to help business tycoons."

Republicans Release Consensus Tax Reform Legislation As Rubio, Corker Agree To Back Bill.

In a front-page article, the New York Times (12/15, A1, Tankersley, Kaplan) reports Republican lawmakers on Friday "appeared to secure enough votes...to pass the most sweeping tax overhaul in decades, putting them on the cusp of their first significant legislative victory as leaders geared up to pass a $1.5 trillion tax cut along party lines and send it to President Trump by Christmas." The Times says Republican leaders "notched two victories on Friday, when Senator Marco Rubio of Florida said he would vote yes after gaining a more generous child tax credit in the final bill and Senator Bob Corker of Tennessee, who voted against the initial Senate bill over deficit concerns, said he would support the legislation. The bill also won praise from Senator Susan Collins of Maine, leaving it likely to pass with all 52 Senate Republicans in support."

The New York Times (12/15, Stolberg) reports Rubio on Thursday had "threatened to vote no unless House and Senate negotiators expanded the child tax credit," but on Friday, he "won an agreement from party leaders to allow families who owe no federal income taxes to still claim up to $1,400 of the $2,000 child tax credit, up from $1,100 that was in the original Senate bill." The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Rubin, Peterson, Hughes) reports Corker changed his stance following discussions with Senate Majority Leader McConnell and Sen. Pat Toomey. In a statement, Corker said, "I know every bill we consider is imperfect and the question becomes is our country better off with or without this piece of legislation. ... I think we are better off with it. I realize this is a bet on our country's enterprising spirit, and that is a bet I am willing to make."

Meanwhile, the Washington Post (12/15, A1, Paletta, Werner, Stein, Debonis) reports on its front-page that "under the tax plan, Americans would lose the personal exemptions that often dictate how much money is withheld from their paychecks. They would instead pay taxes through a new regime that exempts a higher level of income from taxation and then subjects much of the rest to lower rates." According to the Post, "many more Americans would have access to the child tax credit, but they would also face a new cap on the federal deduction for state and local tax payments." The Post adds that "on net, Republicans believe that the bill would lower most people's taxes. But many Americans – particularly those in high-tax states such as New York, New Jersey and California – would see their taxes go up." The Wall Street Journal (12/15, A1, Rubin, Hughes) reports in a front-page article that although the final legislation largely fits with earlier versions of the tax bill, Republicans abandoned some controversial measures on education.

In the lead ABC World News Tonight (12/15, lead story, 3:20, Vega) segment, senior congressional correspondent Mary Bruce reported “Republicans sealed the biggest overhaul to the nation’s tax code in a generation.” Bruce said that while the bill “is predicted to add $1.5 trillion to the debt,” the legislation “slashes the corporate tax rate from 35 to 21 percent, a big win for big business. For individuals, it lowers the top tax rate from 39 to 37 percent, a big win for the wealthy. But it limits the new mortgage interest deduction to $750,000.” Bruce added, “Republican senators say their priority is tax relief for the middle class.”

In the lead CBS Evening News (12/15, lead story, 2:20, Glor) segment, Nancy Cordes said “the final plan retains seven personal tax brackets, though the rates would drop for almost everyone. A family making $75,000 a year would see its marginal rate go from 15 percent to 12 [percent].” Cordes added, “If this passes, it will secure two other big GOP priorities as well – repealing Obamacare’s individual insurance mandate and opening up parts of Alaska’s wildlife refuge to oil drilling. And there may be more tucked into the 500-page bill, which lawmakers will now have a single weekend to read.”

In its lead NBC Nightly News (12/15, lead story, 2:25, Holt) segment, Peter Alexander reported President Trump “prais[ed] the plan as monumental,” but “a majority of Americans disapprove of the Republican bill that Democrats call a sham.” Alexander added that the legislation “also delivers a serious wound to Obamacare, eliminating the individual mandate even as Americans rush to beat today’s 2018 enrollment deadline. One more key element in the final bill: The tax cut for corporations is permanent, but the cut for individuals and married couples expires in eight years.”

In addition, The Hill (12/15, Delk) reports in its “Briefing Room” blog that Senate Minority Leader Schumer “ripped the GOP’s final tax bill released Friday evening, saying Republicans will ‘rue the day’ they pass the plan.” In a separate article, The Hill (12/15, Anapol) reports Sen. Bernie Sanders also “slammed the GOP tax bill moments after Republicans released the final version” calling the legislation a “moral and economic obscenity” in a tweet.

WPost A1: Sen. Collins Takes Risk By Supporting Tax Reform In Exchange For Future Healthcare Legislation. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (12/15, A1, Werner) reports Sen. Susan Collins is taking a “mighty leap of faith” by supporting the GOP tax bill in exchange for future healthcare funding “without knowing for certain that commitments made to her will be honored.” However, the Post adds that Collins is “poised to play an even more pivotal role in the Senate next year,” as the Republican Senate majority shrinks to 51. The piece goes on to detail Collins’ position on the bill, as well as the two healthcare bills she supports, which restore the “cost-sharing” reduction payments for insurers and create a “$10 billion ‘reinsurance’ program that states could draw on over two years to set up high-risk pools that lower costs for patients who are particularly hard to insure.”

GOP Tax Bill’s Standard Deduction To Affect 85 Percent Of Taxpayers. Appearing on the CBS Evening News (12/15, story 2, 1:40, Glor), Jill Schlesinger analyzed the GOP tax bill, reporting that “about 85 percent of taxpayer are going to be able to claim” the increased standard deduction, making filing much easier for most Americans. She also detailed changes to mortgage interest and state and local tax deductions, and advised viewers that expect to be affected by the changes to consult with a tax professional ahead of the filing deadline.

WSJournal A1: Republican Tax Simplification Promise Falls Short For Self-Employed, Business Owners. In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (12/15, A1, Saunders) reports the GOP tax bill has followed through on a promise to simplify tax filing for those covered by the expanded standard deduction, but increases complexity for many self-employed professionals and business owners. The Journal goes on to explain how the bill treats high levels of income and business revenues, noting that some critics warn the system will incentivize complex manipulations by wealthy taxpayers seeking to minimize their payments. However, the Journal concludes that many won’t mind the added complexity, if it results in lower taxes overall.

Johnson Amendment Repeal Removed From Tax Reforms. The Washington Times (12/15, Persons) reports Senate parliamentarian on Friday blocked the repeal of the Johnson Amendment, which prevents churches and nonprofits “from endorsing candidates and advocating partisan political views.” The Times adds that “Senate rules require any addition to the tax bill must be related to taxes or spending, which they determined this language did not meet.”

Charities Worry Expanded Standard Deduction Will Lead To Fewer Donations. NBC Nightly News (12/15, story 2, 2:00, Holt) reported the GOP tax bill “is generating a fair amount of concern among the nation’s 1.6 million charities that depend on tax deductible donations,” because the expanded standard deduction is “taking away a financial incentive to donate to charities." According to one estimate, the change "could lead to a $13 billion drop in charitable donations."

Tax Reform Bill Retains Private Activity Bonds. Bloomberg News (12/15, Kapur) reports the GOP tax bill will "continue to subsidize municipal bonds that help businesses to finance infrastructure projects," despite their exclusion from previous versions of the plan. The bill would ensure preferred status for bonds "used to finance valuable infrastructure projects," but does not specify if it "would stop sales of tax-exempt debt for refinancings known as advance refundings, another large segment of the market that was targeted by both the Senate and House bills." Bloomberg adds that negotiations "unleashed a potentially record-setting torrent of bond sales this month, with borrowers rushing to raise money in the $3.8 trillion municipal market before the end of the year."

NYTimes Analysis Highlights Lobbying Efforts To Influence GOP Tax Bill. The New York Times (12/15, Vogel, Tankersley) reports, "As the largest tax rewrite in decades powered through Congress, lobbyists found themselves sprinting to keep up and find ways to persuade, influence or cajole the small group of lawmakers empowered to tweak language in the final version of the joint Senate and House bill." Over half of the 11,000 registered lobbyists in Washington "reported working on tax-related issues through the first nine months of the year." The Times goes on to detail lobbyist tactics, which ranged "from boring to brass-knuckled," adding that "No matter how convincing the policy analysis or how steady the constituent pressure, though, personal and financial connections to policymakers remained among the most important currency on K Street during the tax debate."

GOP Tax Bill Incentivizes Offshoring Labor, Experts Say. The Washington Post (12/15, Lynch) reports tax experts believe the GOP tax bill "fails to eliminate long-standing incentives for companies to move overseas and, in some cases, may even increase them." Though the bill lowers the US corporate tax rate and encourages companies to keep profits in the US, the "fine print" incentivizes moving assembly lines abroad with several provisions that lowers tax burdens, the Post adds. As a result, more companies would move jobs outside of the US, in direct contradiction of President Trump's "America First" policies.

Critics Warn Tax Bill Threatens New York. The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Zuckerman, Barbanel) reports critics of the GOP tax bill are warning that it "is an absolute dagger in the heart of...New York." The Journal explains that nearly a third of New York City taxpayers itemize, and the bill's $10,000 state and local tax deduction cap is far below the city's average of $57,400. Moody's chief economist Mark Zandi says "New York's economy is a loser under the plan," and adds that some local governments may be forced to cut services. Similarly, Kathryn Wylde, chief executive officer of the Partnership for New York City, warns the bill is a "substantial tax increase for the middle class and high earners who are salaried workers," and will cost resident $30 billion per year in additional tax payments.

Dow, S&P 500 Rise Over Tax Reform Bill Progress. The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Gold, Driebusch) reports the Dow Jones Industrial Average and S&P 500 recorded gains on Friday after Republican leaders announced they had secured the necessary votes to pass their final tax reform bill.

WSJournal: GOP Tax Bill Is Extremely Pro-Growth. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/15) praises the GOP tax bill, suggesting it will be the most pro-growth piece of legislation in decades. The Journal goes on to detail the bill's benefits – which include sweeping changes to corporate rates, personal tax reforms, and a repeal of the Obamacare insurance mandate – but criticizes the decision to increase the child tax credit, which does not incentivize growth.

WPost: GOP Tax Bill Is "Unjustifiable," Will Grow Economic Inequality. In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/15) calls the GOP tax bill an "expensive, one-sided legislative power play animated by ideological misconceptions rather than a sober assessment of the country's real needs." The cuts, according to the Post, are "unjustifiable," and "will further burden low- and middle-income Americans in future generations as their government loses the means to invest in research, education, health care and infrastructure." The Post adds that the bill will "exacerbate economic inequality and add massively to the debt," and criticizes Republicans for ignoring "experts" and doubling "down on bad policy."

Trump Vows To "Rebuild" FBI, Defend Law Enforcement In Speech To Training Academy Grads.

President Trump in a speech on Friday at the FBI National Academy in Quantico, Virginia congratulated the 2017 graduating class and pledged to "rebuild" the bureau following the "disgraceful" behavior of an agent and lawyer involved in Special Counsel Robert Mueller III's investigation into the Trump campaign's ties to the Russian government last year. Media coverage, which includes nearly seven minutes on the network newscasts, was also heavy in print and online. Reporting cast the President's remarks criticizing the FBI's leadership while praising the new graduates and law enforcement as sending mixed messages to the bureau. In addition, the broadcasts highlighted that Trump refused to rule out a pardon for former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn, who recently pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his contacts with the former Russian ambassador to the US.

The New York Times (12/15, Tackett) reports "Trump escalated his criticism of the F.B.I. on Friday over its investigation of possible links between Russia and his campaign, adding a new round of his own complaints to a growing conservative effort to discredit the inquiry." The Times says that prior to the event, the President told reporters, "It's a shame what's happened with the F.B.I. ... It's a very sad thing to watch." The Times adds that Trump, without citing specifics, also "described an extraordinary 'level of anger' at the F.B.I. over the investigation" and the Washington Post (12/15, Barrett, Gearan) says the President therefore pledged to "rebuild the FBI." He added, "It'll be bigger and better than ever. But it is very sad when you look at those documents, and how they've done that is really, really disgraceful, and you have a lot of very angry people that are seeing it." Politico (12/15, Samuelsohn, Gerstein) reports Trump also condemned the investigation "as a 'scam' and 'Democrat hoax' that has wasted 'millions and millions of dollars' that hasn't come up with any evidence of collusion between his 2016 campaign and Moscow."

According to the AP (12/15, Lemire, Miller), Trump's "broadside appeared to reflect his anger over revelations that senior FBI officials exchanged anti-Trump and pro-Hillary Clinton text messages while working on last year's Clinton probe and" Mueller's investigation. The Washington Times (12/15, Boyer) reports "FBI official Peter Strzok, who played a key role in the Hillary Clinton email probe, was reassigned from...Mueller's Russia investigation after officials found texts messages from him expressing support for Mrs. Clinton during the 2016 campaign and disparaging Mr. Trump." The Times adds that "Strzok had a big part in changing former FBI Director James B. Comey's early draft language about Mrs. Clinton's actions with her private email server from 'grossly negligent' to 'extremely careless.' He also conducted the FBI's interview of Mrs. Clinton."

Meanwhile, The Hill (12/15, Fabian) reports "roughly an hour after Trump spoke at the White House," he joined Attorney General Sessions and FBI Director Wray at the graduation ceremony. The Hill says the President "cast himself as a defender of law enforcement and lauded the bravery of police officers and FBI agents." He asserted, "These are great, great people. These are really heroes for all of us." Trump continued that he supports them "100 percent" and promised to "fight for you and I will never, ever let you down. Ever." The Washington Times (12/15, Miller) reports Trump added, "I am here not only to congratulate you but to honor you for your courage and your devotion and I want you to know that with me as your president, America's police will have a true friend and loyal champion in the White House – more loyal than anyone else can be."

However, the Los Angeles Times (12/15, Tanfani) says "Trump gave a distinctly mixed message to the FBI on Friday, saying 'people are very, very angry' about what they see as a political bias in the bureau but vowing unqualified support for law enforcement." The Times adds that although "the speech marked an opportunity for Trump to reaffirm public faith in the federal justice system as the White House faces a special counsel investigation into possible cooperation between his campaign and a covert Russian effort to undermine Hillary Clinton," the President "instead used the address to mock reporters in the room as 'fake news,' slam the visa lottery system, and praise himself" over his support for law enforcement officers.

In another article, the Los Angeles Times (12/15) reports Trump subsequently "tweeted a video clip of his remarks at the ceremony and extended his congratulations to graduates." In a second video from the speech, Trump "thanked 'our law enforcement families' and included the hashtag #LESM, an acronym for 'law enforcement social media.'" The Times adds that he also replied to "a message from the official account of the Secret Service thanking Trump for hosting former leaders of the Presidential Protective Division at the White House," and "tweeted thanks to members of the military, attaching to his message a video clip of his visit after the FBI ceremony to a Marine Corps base in Quantico."

The Hill (12/15, Manchester) reports Attorney General Sessions praised Trump for becoming the president in 47 years to speak "to the FBI at Quantico, their graduating police academy class." Sessions added Trump "made clear that he supports them 100 percent in their activities and that we are going to be a law enforcement administration that helps the law enforcement be successful."

Trump: Too Soon To Discuss Possibility Of Flynn Pardon. The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Ballhaus, Viswanatha) reports the President told reporters on Friday that it was too soon to say whether he plans to pardon former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn, who recently pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI over his contacts with the former Russian ambassador to the US prior to Trump's inauguration. Bloomberg News (12/15, John) reports Trump said, "I don't want to talk about pardons for Michael Flynn yet. We will see what happens."

NBC Nightly News's (12/15, story 3, 2:10, Holt) Kristen Welker said the prospect of a pardon remains "big question as investigators probe potential obstruction charges – when the President learned Flynn had lied to the FBI." However, Julianna Goldman reported on the CBS Evening News (12/15, story 3, 1:50, Glor) that "Ty Cobb, an attorney for the President, quickly said 'there is no consideration of a pardon.'"

A Washington Post (12/15, Blake) analysis describes the President's remark as "characteristically noncommittal – but suggestive" and says "nobody should read too much into this." However, the Post concedes that in this case, "the 'yet' and the FBI addendum at the end seem clearly geared toward planting a seed and even justifying a Flynn pardon were Trump to decide to do it."

Trump: US Visa Lottery System Favors "Worst Of The Worst." Bloomberg News (12/15, Sink, Epstein) reports the President "attacked U.S. immigration policy" on Friday in a speech that "in many ways resembled Trump's campaign rallies, complete with an attack on the media and a jab at Chicago's murder rate." The Hill (12/15, Delk) in its "Briefing Room" blog reports the President said, "You think the countries are giving us their best people? No." Trump added, "They give us their worst people, they put them in a bin, but in his hand when he's picking them is really the worst of the worst."

Trump Calls For Action To Address Chicago Violence. The Daily Caller (12/15, Carr) reports the President "pointed to the need for immediate action regarding gun crime in Chicago, asking what the hell is going on in the city during his Friday speech on crime and immigration." He said, "What the hell is going on in Chicago? What the hell is happening there?" Trump added, "In the last two years, America has seen a tragic rise in violent crime. In 2015 and 2016, we witnessed the steepest two year consecutive increase in murders in nearly half a century."

However, the Chicago Tribune (12/15, Lee) says the President "underestimated how bad the problem has been." The Tribune reports that according to its count, the city has had 3,456 shooting victims this year as of Thursday, which "means there has been a shooting victim every 2 hours and 25 minutes."

Trump Draws Laugh With Joke About "Fake News" Media. The Hill (12/15, Bowden) reports the President diverged "from his prepared remarks at the FBI's National Academy graduation ceremony" to joke "that many Americans were watching at home through the cameras of the 'fake news' media," though he conceded "about 30 percent" of journalists are "fine people." Breitbart (12/15, Spiering) says that the line "earned the most laughter from some attendees and members of their families."

White House Condemns FBI Over Its "Extreme Bias" Against Trump. The Hill (12/15, Manchester) reports White House deputy press secretary J. Hogan Gidley "ripped the FBI in an interview with Fox News on Friday, saying the bureau has an 'extreme bias' against President Trump in the wake of the release of anti-Trump text messages between two FBI officials." In his appearance on "Fox & Friends," Gidley said, "It is troubling, deeply troubling, that the revelations have now come to light that there is extreme bias against this president with high-up members of the team there at the FBI who were investigating Hillary Clinton at the time." Gidley continued, "We're a little concerned at what we're seeing here. Obviously, those text messages give us quite a bit of pause and should be eye-opening at an agency that should be, quite frankly unbiased." The Washington Times (12/15, Persons) reports Gidley added the President nonetheless remains "absolutely supportive of and has full faith and confidence in the rank and file members of the DOJ and also the FBI."

Sessions: FBI Taking Bias Concerns Seriously, Playing "Fabulously Important Role" Against Violent Crime. Reuters (12/15, Lynch, Walsh) reports Attorney General Sessions on Friday "offered a tepid endorsement of the nation's leading law enforcement agency," the FBI, amid criticism of the bureau by Trump and Republicans. According to Reuters, Sessions "defended the bureau, which is part of the Department of Justice that he leads, but it was not an enthusiastic endorsement." USA Today (12/15, Johnson, Jackson) says that unlike Trump, Sessions stated, "I don't share the view that the FBI is not functioning at a high level all over the country." Sessions added, "In my view, the FBI has a huge national security requirement, but it also is fulfilling a fabulously important role" in fighting violent crime. USA Today contrasts Sessions' remarks with those of FBI Director Wray, who earlier this month “offered a ringing defense of the agency in the wake of Trump’s rebukes in which the president claimed that the bureau’s standing was the ‘worst in history.’”

However, Bloomberg News (12/15, Strohm) reports the Attorney General “said he’s concerned about allegations of bias within the FBI and will do more to monitor the behavior of employees.” Sessions pledged, “We’re going to take seriously the concerns that have been expressed. ... We will not be reluctant to admit error.” Sessions said, “We intend to monitor our people to maintain high standards. ... Sometimes things that might appear to be bad in the press have more innocent explanations, so fairness and justice should also be provided to our personnel.” The Washington Times (12/15, Noble) reports Sessions added, “Our responsibility is to provide the highest possible professional standards of law enforcement we can provide to the American people – that we do so in an effective way and we do so honorably and with integrity.”

DOJ Did Not Consult With IG Prior To Its Release Of FBI Agent’s Texts. The Hill (12/15, Greenwood) reports Justice Department Inspector General Michael Horowitz’s office in a letter to three House Democrats said Friday that it “was not consulted before the agency released an FBI agent’s text messages to Congress and the media.” According to The Hill, the letter “appeared to contradict earlier testimony from Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein as well as a statement from Sarah Flores, the director of DOJ’s office of public affairs, who told CNN that Rosenstein had consulted with the inspector general before releasing the messages.” However, “in a letter to lawmakers sent late Friday and obtained by” Politico (12/15, Gerstein, Cheney), “Horowitz noted that he’d told a House committee last month that his office had no concern about giving Congress information gathered during his review of potential election-related bias. The inspector general also acknowledged he’d ‘conveyed’ that stance directly to Justice officials.”

FBI Agents Used Texts About Trump, Clinton To Hide Affair, Sources Say. The Washington Post (12/15, Barrett) reports the texts between “senior FBI lawyer Lisa Page and senior counterintelligence agent Peter Strzok” about Trump and Clinton were sent on “work phones to try to hide their romance from a spouse and [they] made the bureau’s probe of Clinton’s private email server their cover story for being in such close contact, according to people familiar with the matter.” The Post adds that “had Page and Strzok used personal phones instead, people close to case say, it’s unlikely their text messages would have come to the FBI’s attention.” The sources identified a specific text from Page that appeared “to advise Strzok how to explain to his wife why the two of them had been texting each other.”

Kushner’s Legal Team Confirms Efforts To Hire Crisis PR Firm Over Russia Probe. The Washington Post (12/15, Dawsey) reports “senior White House official Jared Kushner and his legal team are searching for a crisis public relations firm, according to four people familiar with the matter,” including his lawyer, Abbe Lowell, who “confirmed he was looking for a firm that would handle media for all high-profile clients that receive attention from the press.” In a statement, Lowell said, “My law firm and I are considering hiring an outside consultant to handle the time-consuming incoming inquiries on the cases in which I am working that receive media attention. ... This inquiry from you about whether I am doing this is a good example of why we need one.”

Dowd, Sekulow To Meet With Mueller As Soon As Next Week, Source Says. Bloomberg News (12/15, Talev) reports Trump’s personal lawyers John Dowd and Jay Sekulow “are set to meet with Special Counsel Robert Mueller as early as next week to discuss the next phases of his Russia investigation, according to a person familiar with the matter.” Bloomberg says Dowd and Sekulow “will likely use the meeting to get a sense of the next steps in Mueller’s probe, which has already resulted in indictments and plea deals involving four former associates of the president.” ABC World News Tonight’s (12/15, story 3, 2:55, Vega) David Wright said the meeting “would be a rare sit-down for the two sides.” He added the lawyers “are hoping to get an update on where the investigation into possible collusion stands, hoping really to get a sense that that investigation might be drawing to a close. But it’s not at all clear whether Robert Mueller will give them that reassurance.”

Senate Intelligence Committee To Interview DOJ Official Tied To Fusion GPS. CNN International (12/15, Jarrett) reports a source said that the Senate Intelligence Committee on Monday is expected to interview Bruce Ohr, “a Justice Department official with ties to Fusion GPS, the opposition research firm behind the controversial Trump dossier.” CNN states that “Ohr had previously served in the deputy attorney general’s office, but according to a source familiar with the situation, was demoted amid the discovery of certain meetings with Fusion GPS founder Glenn Simpson and Christopher Steele, the former British intelligence officer who assembled the dossier.” However, CNN adds Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein “told the House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday that Ohr had 'no role' in the Russia investigation, batting away calls for a second special counsel where there is no evidence of criminal wrongdoing."

Republicans Aim To Finish House Intelligence Committee's Russia Probe By Year End. The New York Times (12/15, Fandos) reports the House Intelligence Committee "is racing to complete its investigation of Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election, scheduling a host of witness interviews here and in New York for next week as Congress heads for its break, and, Democrats said, leaving other leads unfollowed." The Times says "some of the most important witnesses are to be interviewed in New York by committee staff early next week, possibly leaving Democrats to choose between attending those depositions or voting on the massive tax bill coming before the House." The Times adds that "in an indication that Republicans hope to wrap up their probe, the House committee has yet to schedule a single interview after the holidays, according to two committee officials familiar with the schedule."

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times (12/15, Megerian, Bierman, Cloud) reports "Trump expects to be publicly absolved of any wrongdoing by special counsel Robert S. Mueller III by year's end or soon after, and several people around him say the often-impulsive president could erupt in anger if that unlikely timeline is not met." However, the Times says "few outside experts believe that the Mueller probe into potential collusion with Russia and obstruction of justice will conclude by year's end, as the White House hopes, given a recent flurry of interviews, indictments and plea agreements."

Special Counsel Asks Deutsche Bank To Turn Over Data On Potential Flynn Transactions. The Wall Street Journal (12/15, Strasburg) reports sources say US government agencies acting on behalf of Mueller's probe asked Deutsche Bank AG for information about transactions potentially linked to former national security adviser Michael Flynn.

Judge Agrees To Release Manafort From House Arrest, Retain Other Restrictions. The AP (12/15, Day) reports US District Judge Amy Berman Jackson on Friday announced she will allow the release of former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort "from his home in Virginia where he's been confined since his Oct. 30 arrest." Jackson will instead allow Manafort "to live in his home in Florida and come and go while he awaits trial. He will remain on GPS monitoring and have to get court permission to travel outside two south Florida counties. He also will have a curfew." Reuters (12/15, Freifeld, Ahmann) reports Jackson said in her order that "to be released from home confinement, Manafort must execute documents agreeing to forfeit four properties, including two in New York, one in Alexandria, Virginia, and his Florida home." According to Reuters, Manafort "is being prosecuted by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, as part of Mueller's investigation into accusations of Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and possible collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign."

Gaetz Calls On GOP Colleagues To Support Mueller's Dismissal. Breitbart (12/15, Poor) reports Rep. Matt Gaetz in a Friday appearance on CNN's "New Day" criticized Special Counsel Robert Mueller and called upon other Republican lawmakers to back his dismissal over "numerous conflicts of interest he said that went beyond just opinion, but were actions." He also said, "It's time for Mueller to put up or shut up. If there's evidence of collusion with Russia, let's see it."

Poll: 63 Percent Of Americans Believe Trump Is Attempting To Obstruct Russia Probe. The AP (12/15, Day, Swanson) reports a new poll by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research of 1,020 "adults" (12/7-12/11) shows "most Americans think Donald Trump did something illegal or at least unethical regarding ties between his presidential campaign and Russia – and they think he's trying to obstruct the investigation looking into those possible connections," although the "deeply divided country is more concerned about health care and the economy than any collusion with the Kremlin." The poll found 63 percent "say Trump has tried to impede or obstruct the investigations into whether his campaign had Russian ties. According to the survey, 86 percent of Democrats, 67 percent of independents and 24 percent of Republicans agree." In addition, 62 percent of Democrats "think Trump has done something illegal, while just 5 percent of Republicans think the same. Among Republicans, 33 percent think he's done something unethical, while 60 percent think he's done nothing wrong at all." The Washington Post (12/15, Bump) reports the AP-NORC poll revealed "there's been no change" in public opinions of Mueller's probe since June. The Post says the survey "reinforces" that "Trump's explicit strategy" to "convince his base that the investigations are both meritless and fruitless" is a success.

Trump Administration Halts EPA Climate Science Debate Plan.

The Hill (12/15, Cama) reports the Trump Administration is "putting a halt" to EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's "plans to organize a forum to challenge consensus on climate change science." The "red team, blue team" proposal was "halted after various administration officials met about it this week, Climatewire reported Friday." Climatewire was told by a source following a meeting that the idea "has been put on hold." The meeting at the White House "included White House energy adviser Mike Catanzaro, White House deputy chief of staff Rick Dearborn and the EPA's air office chief, Bill Wehrum." The Hill adds "a source close to the situation told Climatewire that there might be disagreements about how to formulate the program and who should oversee it."

Sources: U.S. Opposes Climate Change Mention In New NAFTA Deal.

Bloomberg News (12/15, Mayeda) reports that sources familiar with the NAFTA renegotiation talks says the U.S. is "pushing against the inclusion of the phrase 'climate change'" and is opposed to "any mention of multilateral cooperation on the environment." Canada and Mexico, meanwhile, "favor recognizing the challenge of climate change in the agreement" and Canada is even pushing for stronger environmental standards within the deal.

Environmental Groups Threaten Legal Action To Stop EPA Reorganization.

The Washington Examiner (12/16, Siciliano) reported that environmental groups are considering new legal action against the Environmental Protection Agency to stop EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's plans to reorganize the agency. After a New York Times report "showed the Trump administration is penalizing polluters at a much lower level than previous Republican and Democratic administrations," the Natural Resources Defense Council said it plans to submit a Freedom of Information Act request aimed at obtaining "all records related to the development of Pruitt's enforcement policy."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Tax Bill That Inequality Created." The New York Times (12/16) editorializes "growing inequality helped create" the Republican tax bill, which "will widen economic inequality by lavishing breaks on corporations and the wealthy while taking benefits away from the poor and the middle class." According to the Times, "the top 1 percent of the population by wealth – the group that would primarily benefit from the tax bill – controls nearly 40 percent of the country's wealth." The Times adds that "the power of the one-percenters may help explain why President Trump, who ran as a populist, has not only abandoned any pretense of fighting for the working class but also joined Republicans in Congress in ripping up regulations that protect families and the environment – in order to help business tycoons."

Washington Post.

"Republicans Keep On Telling Voter-Fraud Fairy Tales." The Washington Post (12/16, Board) editorializes that GOP lawmakers, facing disadvantageous demographic trends, cannot admit that there is "no evidence whatsoever that voter fraud is prevalent in the United States." By creating the Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity this spring, President Trump, similarly, is "using the specter of fraudulent voting to justify rules, including tougher state voter ID legislation, tailor-made to deter minority and young voters, who lean Democratic." However, the commission has been plagued with problems, including most recently a lawsuit brought against it by one of its own Democratic members, "alleging that he has been denied basic information on the panel's operations."

"Journalists Around The World Sit Behind Bars For Telling The Truth." The Washington Post (12/16) editorializes that the Committee to Protect Journalists' annual survey "found that 262 journalists are imprisoned for reasons connected to their work, an increase over last year's historical high of 259." For the second year in a row, Turkey under President Recep Tayyip Erdogan was ranked as "the worst offender," followed by China and Egypt. "Illiberalism is rising in many corners of the world, and when journalists are arrested, it is often a sign of worse to come," writes the Post, which adds that President Trump's "combative slogan of 'fake news'" only "echoes the rhetoric of despots in these countries." The Post concludes in writing, "What's not fake at all is that journalists everywhere are under increased threat because of rulers who take encouragement from Mr. Trump's malice."

"The Unchecked Threat From Russia." In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/16) says it is "virtually uncontested" that Russian President Vladimir Putin's regime intervened in last year's presidential election "with the intention of harming U.S. democracy," and "will almost certainly seek to do so again." However, the Post writes, "there has been no concerted effort to defend the country from this national security threat." The Post says President Trump's reasons for denying the claim "are disturbingly unclear," but "whether out of venality or vanity," he "is failing to protect the country against a serious threat."

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GOP Tax Bill Would Set Up Years Of Challenges
Prosecutors Treat Opioid Overdoses As Homicides, Snagging Friends, Relatives
CSX Chief's Death Prompts Tough Questions About Move To Hire Him

New York Times:

EPA Employees Spoke Out, Then Came Scrutiny Of Their Email
Image Of Cooperation Between White House And Mueller Starts To Fracture
Champion Of The "Little Guy"? Trump's Actions Tell Another Story
As Venezuela Collapses, Children Are Dying Of Hunger
Toronto Buzzes With Talk Of Billionaire Couple's Suspicious Death
In One New Jersey Town, Pending Tax Changes Create Anxiety

Washington Post:

Besieged IRS Loses "Will" For Oversight
Trump: No Plan To Fire Mueller
Calif. Pot Offenders Get Chance To Clear Records
GOP Faces Scramble On Tax Bill, Budget Deal
Defiant German Mayor Takes In Refugees

Financial Times:

Zuma Stands Defiant As ANC Rivals Vie For Leadership
US Companies Set To Be Big Winners From Trump's Tax Reform
Egypt's President Sets Sights On Megacity To Rival Cairo
Brussels To Launch Tax Probe Into Ikea

Washington Times:

Pelosi's Super PAC Keeps Donations From Owners Of Prostitution Website Backpage
Concessions, Talks With Trump Win Over Tax Reform Holdouts In Senate
Russian Oligarchs Sue Trump Dossier Producer For Becoming "Collateral Damage" In Smear Campaign
Center-Left Party May Join Merkel, Giving Long-Term Hope To Germany's Right Wing
Ebola Survivors In Liberia Demand Prosecutions For Fraud And Corruption That Cost Lives

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Atlanta Airport Power Outage; Atlanta Airport Power Outage-Comment; WH-Russian Meddling Investigation; Tax Reform Plan; California Wildfires; Memphis-Murder; Pentagon-UFO Program; Home Delivery Safety Tips; NYC Apartment Fire; Toronto-Mysterious Deaths; Sky Lift Malfunction; Box Office Results; High School-Christmas Charity.

CBS: McCain Health; California Wildfires; Atlanta Airport Power Outage; WH-Russian Meddling Investigation; Tax Reform Plan; Congress-Children's Healthcare; Air Force Academy-Sexual Misconduct Investigation; Rep. Kihuen-Sexual Allegation; ISS Mission; Daughters Dancing Video; Gun Control-Citizens Interview; Voice Activated Devices-Security Concerns; NFL Player Charity.

NBC: Atlanta Airport Power Outage; California Wildfires; California Wildfires-Impact; MSNBC Host-Sexual Misconduct Settlement; WH-Russian Meddling Investigation; WH-McCain Health; Australia-North Korean Agent Arrested; Pakistan-Suicide Bombing; London-New US Embassy; Rural Homes-Family Farming; Disney World-Tigers Born; Pope Francis Birthday; Holiday Celebrations; Christmas Charity.

Network TV At A Glance:

California Wildfires – 8 minutes, 40 seconds
WH-Russian Meddling Investigation – 7 minutes, 25 seconds
Atlanta Airport Power Outage – 6 minutes, 20 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Atlanta Airport Power Outage; Tax Reform Plan; McCain Health.

CBS: Atlanta Airport Power Outage; WH-Russian Meddling Investigation; Tax Reform Plan; McCain Health.

FOX: McCain Health; Atlanta Airport Power Outage.

NPR: Trump-Putin Call; Pakistan-Suicide Bombing; Philippines-LGBT Rights; Atlanta Airport Power Outage.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Delivers remarks regarding the Administration's National Security Strategy; meets with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public schedule announced.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate considers HUD general counsel and assistant secretary of defense nominees – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nominations of J. Paul Compton, Jr to be General Counsel of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and Owen West to be an Assistant Secretary of Defense Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 3312 — Systemic Risk Designation Improvement Act of 2017' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: No relevant event scheduled.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, July 3, 2017
Date: Monday, July 03, 2017 6:58:45 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JULY 3, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Holiday Message

In observance of the U.S. federal Independence Day holiday, we will not publish on Tuesday, July 4, 2017. Service will resume on Wednesday, July 5, 2017. We wish our readers a safe and happy holiday.

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Washington Post: Cabinet Secretaries' Tough Task: Lack Of Funding, Support For Agency Missions.

- U.S. News & World Report: Commissioners Show Support For National Monument Protection.
- KHON-TV Honolulu: Hero To Receive Medal Of Valor For Aid In Helicopter Crash At Pearl Harbor.
- KBFX-TV Bakersfield (CA): Shafter-Wasco Irrigation District Gets Federal Drought-prep Money.
- The Hill: Companies Push Trump To Outsource Work In National Parks.
- Houston Chronicle: As Trump Moves To Grow Oil And Gas, House Could Curb Environmental Suits.
- The Atlantic: Democrats Allege The U.S. Doesn't Track Anti-Federal Threats.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Despite Recent Legislation, Conservation Crosses Party Lines, According To New Poll.
- Southwest Colorado Journal: Outdoor Recreation Industry Generates Billions For Colorado.
- Bozeman (MT) Daily Chronicle: Sec. Zinke Should Fight For An Appropriate Budget.
- Forbes: The Best Deal Going: Privatize US Public Lands.
- Huffington Post: This Land Is Our Land.
- Fairbanks (AK) News-Miner: Progress On King Cove Road: Interior Department Allows Survey Work For Remote Airport Link.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Shutting Down RACs Makes No Sense.
- Havasu (AZ) News-Herald: Our View: Continued Federal Funding Necessary For Rural Western Counties.
- Washington Times: Energy Independence In America Can Be Achieved.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Cayugas Awarded Proceeds In Suit.
- Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe's Casino Hopes Rekindled.
- Tribe Fights Fed's Bid To Toss Oklahoma Fracking Suit.

Bureau Of Land Management

- NBC: NBC Analysis: Exploding Population, Dwindling Budget Hindering Wild Horse Management.
- U.S. News & World Report: Diving From The Sky, Firefighters Parachute To US Wildfires.
- The Guardian (UK): The New West: Why Republicans Blocked Public Land Management.
- Colorado Springs (CO) Gazette: GUEST COLUMN: Methane Rule Hurts Colorado Residents.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- DOI Opening Public Comment Period For More Offshore Oil/Gas Leasing.
- Seismic Airgun Testing A Bad Deal For Florida.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- River Restoration Work Partially Funded Through Federal Program.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Federal Offshore Well Permits Support Safe Energy And Economic Development, BSEE Says.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- The Hill: Greens Threaten To Sue Trump Over Grizzly Bear Protections.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Rare Butterfly Thrives On, And Because Of, US Military Bases.
- Miami Herald: Feds Ask For Public Comment On Florida Panther Endangered Status.
- U.S. News & World Report: Can California Fish Catch Break With Giant Tunnels?
- Courthouse News: Political Deals Rip Throat Out Of Wolf Recovery Plan, Enviro's Say.
- Washington Times: Alabama Bat Blitz Aims To Gauge Area Bat Population.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: Endangered Species Act Is Under Assault.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Charges Dropped Against 2 Youths In Tennessee Wildfires.
- Spokane (WA) Spokesman-Review: Out & About: Blanket Phone Coverage Proposed For Parks.
- New York Times: Green Thumbs Hope To Lead The Trumps Down The Garden Path.
- WTOP-FM Washington: Law Enforcement Prepares For July 4 Events On National Mall.
- Washington Post: Federal City Council To Negotiate Lease For Federally Owned Golf Courses In D.C.
- Philly (PA): The Economic Juggernaut That Is Independence National Historical Park.
- Fox News: Gettysburg Anniversary Seeing Few Flare-ups, Despite Rumors Of Violence.
- U.S. News & World Report: Rappahannock Tribe Renews Ties With Ceremony.

- Missoulian (MT): Getting The Help It Needs: Groups Work To Help Glacier Park Meet Growing Demands.
- U.S. News & World Report: Fees May Increase At Devils Tower National Monument.
- Redding (CA) Record-Searchlight: Fee Increase Proposed At Lassen Park.
- Loveland (CO) Reporter-Herald: Rocky Mountain National Park's Fall River Entrance Up For Historic Status, Possible Changes.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: UNLV Researcher Works To Eradicate Invasive Plant.
- U.S. News & World Report: Home Of Slain Activist Named As A Historic Place.
- Washington Times: Maine City Plans $900,000 River-Walk Project For Riverfront.

Top National News

- The Hill: Critics Say Trump's Latest Tweet Promotes Violence Against The Media.
- NBC: Trump Criticizes States Over Reluctance To Share Voter Data, Intensifies Feud With Media.
- Washington Post: Conway Defends Trump As His Feud With "Morning Joe" Hosts Escalates.
- NBC: Trump Hosts South Korean President, Urges Asian Allies To Coordinate On North Korea Efforts.
- ABC: Trump Suggests Lawmakers Should Just Repeal ACA, Replace Later.
- Reuters: Moderate Republican Lawmakers Warn Tax Reform Initiative In Jeopardy.
- Axios: Bannon Pushing Tax Hike For Wealthy To Pay For Middle, Working Class Tax Cuts.
- Forbes: White House Projected To Save $22 Million.
- Washington Post: Source: Trump Administration Considering Effort To Examine Climate Science.
- The Hill: White House Office Of Science And Technology Policy Unstaffed.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Bank Health, Imperiled."
 - "Europe's Deadly Paralysis On Migration."
- Washington Post.
 - "What Trump Should Say When He Meets Putin For The First Time."
 - "Trump Launches His Opening Voter Suppression Salvo."
 - "Pope Francis' Toleration Of Sexually Abusive Clergy Leaves A Stain."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Senate's Tax Panic."
 - "Trump's Signals To China."
 - "Pruitt's Clean Water Break."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Cabinet Secretaries' Tough Task: Lack Of Funding, Support For Agency Missions.

The Washington Post (7/2, Eilperin, Brown) reports that "a small group of Cabinet secretaries," including Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "are running departments with missions they have repeatedly disparaged, with employees who are secretly – and on occasion publicly – hostile." While the Secretaries "have made very public efforts to court their staff," they "frequently are crafting key initiatives in private" as the Trump Administration "sets out to overhaul the federal government." The Post says "they have erected small, secluded citadels within each department, where they can advance policies that reflect the priorities of the president."

Commissioners Show Support For National Monument Protection.

The AP (7/2) reports that "Wyoming county commissioners have signed a letter asking the U.S. Department of Interior to continue protecting national monuments." Teton County commissioners "voted Thursday to join the Mountain Pact nonprofit in their letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke regarding President Donald Trump's executive order on national monuments. Trump has asked Zinke to place national monuments designated after 1996 under review." The letter "stresses the importance of public lands to rural communities and tells Zinke to keep that in mind when the department reviews national monument designations."

Additional coverage was provided by the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (6/30, Gross).

Mesquite Council Supports Zinke's Gold Butte Review. The St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (7/1, Thomas) reports that "when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke visits Southern Nevada next month to review Gold Butte National Monument, he will be doing so with the formal support of the city of Mesquite." The Mesquite City Council, "in a 4-1 vote last week, passed Resolution No. 927 expressing its support for Zinke's review of the recently-designated national monument." The resolution "also expressed support for the Nevada Land Sovereignty Act — a bill introduced by Sen. Dean Heller and Rep. Mark Amodei that calls for congressional action in lieu of the Antiquities Act when designating large swaths of land as a national monument."

Why The Fishing Industry Wants More Say On Papahānaumokuākea. The Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\) (6/30, Eagle) reports that comments received on the Interior Department's review of national monuments "overwhelmingly support leaving the monuments alone." However, "not everyone feels each voice should carry the same weight — especially those supportive of Hawaii's commercial fishing industry." NOAA Fisheries Pacific Islands Regional Office administrator, said, "We will treat all commenters fairly."

Additional coverage was provided by the Kaua'i \(HI\) Garden Island News (7/2, Else).

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage of the national monuments review was provided by the Winter Haven \(FL\) News Chief (6/30, Frommer), the Petaluma \(CA\) Argus Courier (6/30, Kovner), the Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (7/1, Dumain), the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) Tribune (7/1, Sheeler), and KCBX-FM San Luis Obispo \(CA\) San Luis Obispo, CA (6/30, Mart).

Additional Commentary. Additional commentary appears in the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (7/1, Busse), the Montana Standard (7/2, Busse), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/30), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/30, Datko, Epstein, Fugere), the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (6/30), the Baltimore \(MD\) Sun (6/29, Carmichael), the Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (7/1), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/1, Minehart), the Pagosa \(CO\) Daily Post (6/30, Leentjes), the Boston \(MA\) Globe (7/1), the Ellsworth \(ME\) American (6/30, Liebow), and the Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (7/1).

Hero To Receive Medal Of Valor For Aid In Helicopter Crash At Pearl Harbor.

KHON-TV Honolulu (7/2, Mattison) reports that "a hero will be honored this Independence Day for his bravery after he helped a family involved in a helicopter crash at Pearl Harbor last year." Bryan Eisenberg was "working as a federal police officer for the National Park Service at the time of the crash." On July 4 in Washington, D.C., Eisenberg will receive the Medal of Valor from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.

Additional coverage was provided by WROC-TV Rochester, NY (7/2, Chodak).

Shafter-Wasco Irrigation District Gets Federal Drought-prep Money.

KBFX-TV Bakersfield, CA (6/30) reports that the Interior Department is "awarding $6.9 million to 17 drought-preparation projects in five states, including California." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said in a news release, "Drought continues to have serious adverse impacts throughout the West. Reclamation and its partners have been leaders in combating this drought for a hundred years. The newest infusion of Reclamation funds announced today will help communities in five states prepare for and respond to drought."

Companies Push Trump To Outsource Work In National Parks.

The Hill (6/30, Cama) reports that "companies that operate visitor services in national parks are pushing the Trump administration to outsource more work to the private sector." According to the article, "the hospitality industry is betting that President Trump's desire to cut the National Park Service's (NPS) budget, combined with the GOP's long-standing goal of moving federal functions to the private sector, presents an opportunity to make inroads in campgrounds, fee collection and other services at parks." However, "conservationists fear that increasing the role of concessioners is a slippery slope toward privatizing national parks."

The Joplin \(MO\) Globe (7/2, Murakami) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has proposed "outsourcing the management of the campgrounds to private companies, reducing labor and maintenance costs in the process." Zinke told a meeting of the RV Industry Association in early June, "As the secretary, I don't want to be in the business of running campgrounds."

As Trump Moves To Grow Oil And Gas, House Could Curb Environmental Suits.

The Houston Chronicle (6/30, Osborne) reported that Republicans in Congress are investigating ways to reduce the delays to drilling and mining project on federal land because of litigation from environmental groups. Rep. Mike Johnson said, "Our legal system is an important avenue for citizens seeking redress of wrongs perpetuated by the federal government...however special interests repeatedly exploit our legal system to further their own agendas." However, Rebecca Riley, a senior attorney with the NRDC, said, "The oil and gas industry routinely files lawsuits under environmental statutes. ... I don't think [Congress] would be looking at cutting the avenue off. It's such an important means to keeping government accountable."

Democrats Allege The U.S. Doesn't Track Anti-Federal Threats.

The Atlantic (7/2, Meyer) reports that "some supporters of public lands and former federal officials argue" that recent "high-profile occupations are only the tip of a more serious crisis: a simmering and abusive siege on federal employees who work for the Bureau of Land Management, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Park Service, and other agencies that manage public lands." They also claim "that the federal government does not keep track of these types of extremist threats to federal employees." On Friday, Democratic leadership on the House Natural Resources Committee will "ask the Government Accountability Office to investigate whether any of the agencies that oversee public land systematically follow anti-federal threats against public employees. The"

Despite Recent Legislation, Conservation Crosses Party Lines, According To New Poll.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (7/1, Peterson) reports that "clean air and water, access to public lands and protecting wildlife aren't exclusively red or blue issues, according to a survey released recently by the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership." According to the article, "of those contacted, 81 percent said they considered themselves conservationists." Segmented into parties, "83 percent of Republicans, 81 percent of Democrats and 80 percent of Independents described themselves that way."

Outdoor Recreation Industry Generates Billions For Colorado.

The Southwest Colorado Journal (6/30, Perkins) reports that "Colorado consumers spend $28 billion annually on outdoor recreation, according to a sneak peek released Tuesday of an economic impact report by the Outdoor Industry Association." The article notes that "in return, the outdoor recreation industry contributes $2 billion in tax revenue, $9.7 billion in wages and creates an estimated 229,000 jobs in Colorado." According to the article, "individual reports for all 50 states will be released next month, but Tuesday's sneak peek included annual numbers on the national impact of outdoor recreation: $887 billion in consumer spending, 7.6 million jobs and a combined $124.5 billion in federal, state and local tax revenue."

Sec. Zinke Should Fight For An Appropriate Budget.

In an op-ed for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (7/1, Edwards), Becky Edwards, director of the Montana Mountain Mamas, calls on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to defend the Interior Department from budget cuts. Edwards warns that "if our campgrounds are overrun with litter and we slash the very programs that keep our fishing access sites and our public lands trails open, we will lose jobs and visitation through our recreation economy, but also some of the beauty of our great state." Edwards writes: "Parents across Montana are urging Sec. Zinke to remember that simple fact: You work for us. We are putting our children's memories in your hands. Stand up and fight for an appropriate budget to manage our public lands, national parks, and recreation programs. Follow through on your promise to protect the Land and Water Conservation Fund. Remember your roots under the big sky."

The Best Deal Going: Privatize US Public Lands.

In a piece for Forbes (6/30, Hanke), Steve Hanke calls Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's stance against the privatization of public lands disappointing. According to Hanke, "Zinke's misguided views bring back an echo from the past: President Reagan's Secretary of the Interior and Sagebrush Rebel James Watt." Hanke writes that "fortunately, Reagan the intellectual slapped Watt down and fully embraced the idea of privatizing public lands," but whether President Trump will "take Zinke to the woodshed remains to be seen."

This Land Is Our Land.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (6/30, Rogers, Contributor), Will Rogers, President of The Trust for Public Land, writes that “the recognition that our public lands are a work in progress, a shared responsibility that we must expand, protect and maintain, is embodied in a more than 50-year old federal program, the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF).” However, “despite its low-profile and high-impact, the Trump Administration’s budget has targeted this wildly successful program for elimination.” Rogers warns that “killing off LWCF, or starving it of funding, would put our national parks, forests and wildlife refuges in jeopardy of commercial development and exploitation.”

Progress On King Cove Road: Interior Department Allows Survey Work For Remote Airport Link.

The Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (7/1) is pleased “to see some movement on the long-overdue King Cove Road project, especially since the movement is in the proper direction in favor of getting this road on the Alaska Peninsula built.” According to the paper, “the lives of King Cove residents are at risk without the road.” It argues that “the solution – one that would allow for timely medical flights and eliminate the risk to Coast Guard personnel – is a road to the all-weather, all-season airport at Cold Bay.”

Shutting Down RACs Makes No Sense.

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/2, Vasquez), Barbara Vasquez questions the cancellation of Resource Advisory Council meetings. Vasquez stresses “the importance of regularly meeting face to face with people you often don’t agree with.” According to Vasquez, “with the current administration asking for public comment on public land management decisions, the RACs need to keep providing a significant conduit for local involvement and discussion throughout this important process.”

Additional commentary appears in the Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (6/30).

Our View: Continued Federal Funding Necessary For Rural Western Counties.

The Havasupai \(AZ\) News-Herald (7/3) editorializes that President Trump’s proposed 2018 budget would “restrict PILT funding to the most recent 10-year average of payments ($397 million).” The paper notes that “there are more than 1,900 local governments across the US that have come to rely on PILT funding.” One possible solution that the paper supports is Rep. Paul Gosar proposal “for the sale or transfer of some public lands to state control.”

Energy Independence In America Can Be Achieved.

Senior Heritage Foundation fellow Stephen Moore writes in the Washington Times (7/2, Moore) that “we are entering an age of American energy renaissance that will last not just years but many decades.” Moore credits President Trump’s “robust and realistic strategy” for making significant progress on making the US the 21st century Saudi Arabia. Moore says that since 2007, the US has increased its oil and gas output by 75 percent, while exporting more than 150 million barrels of crude since 2015. Moore argues that “natural gas is the disruptive energy source that is blowing away the competition,” which is “good news for America because we have far more natural gas than anyone.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Cayugas Awarded Proceeds In Suit.

The Finger Lakes \(NY\) Times (6/30, SHAW) reports that “the leadership dispute within the Cayuga Indian Nation has spilled over into federal litigation out of New Mexico.” The Cayugas are “one of nearly 700 Indian tribes and organizations across the country that have been awarded more than $862.2 million by a federal district court in New Mexico.” The sum “represents money the federal government would have allocated to the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Department of Interior to provide a host of programs and services to Indian tribes.” However, “before a tribe can be given its allocation, the federal government needs to know which leadership officials represent the tribe in claiming its share of class action proceeds.” The article says that “distribution of the money to hundreds of other tribes is being held up until the Cayuga Nation and other tribal leadership disputes have been settled.”

Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe’s Casino Hopes Rekindled.

The New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (7/2) reports that the Interior Department on Friday declined a request by the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe “to suspend a review of whether it qualifies for land into trust under an alternative category to the one a federal judge rejected last year.” However, “the move could be good news for the tribe’s hopes to build a casino in Taunton, seemingly dealt a setback earlier in the week when it asked Interior officials to hit the pause button on the review that had, until the latest development, been destined to end badly for the tribe.” According to the article, “instead of suspending its review or moving forward with a decision on the issue prepared on June 19, the agency instead plans to further analyze an aspect of the case that had not been previously explored: whether the state’s authority over the tribe could be considered in place of the federal government’s authority in determining whether it met one of the alternative definitions of Indian required for land to be taken into trust on its behalf.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Taunton \(MA\) Daily Gazette (7/2, Winokoor).

Tribe Fights Feds’ Bid To Toss Oklahoma Fracking Suit.

Law360 (6/30, Powell) reports that the Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma on Thursday “defended against the dismissal of its lawsuit accusing the federal government of approving oil and gas leases and fracking permits on the tribe’s land without properly considering the environmental impacts, which links that alleged failure to a recent record-breaking earthquake in the state.” The tribe “responded to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Land Management’s motion to dismiss its suit contending that the agencies’ approvals of the leases and permits violated the National Environmental Policy Act.”

Bureau Of Land Management

NBC Analysis: Exploding Population, Dwindling Budget Hinder Wild Horse Management.

NBC Nightly News (7/2, story 9, 2:25, Snow) reported that as costs of managing wild horse populations “have skyrocketed” and President Trump’s budget proposal calls for significant federal funding cuts, “there’s growing concern about the future of these horses.” Bureau of Land Management Acting Deputy Director John Ruhs explained that the remaining funding will be targeted at the 46,000 wild horses kept in pastures and facilities, as there are insufficient funds for administering birth control to the 73,000 in the wild. NBC’s Gadi Schwartz said that the exploding population encroaches on grazing lands for ranchers’ cows.

Diving From The Sky, Firefighters Parachute To US Wildfires.

The AP (6/30, Bryan) reports on the training that smokejumpers receive. The article notes that “nearly 30 wildfires are currently burning — including an Arizona blaze that forced the evacuation of thousands of people plus others in California, New Mexico and Utah.” Federal officials recently “raised the preparedness level for U.S. firefighting forces because of the heightened fire activity.”

The New West: Why Republicans Blocked Public Land Management.

In a piece for The Guardian \(UK\) (7/2, Tracey, Sizek), Caroline Tracey, a PhD candidate in Geography at the University of California, Berkeley, writes that on March 27, President Trump “signed a joint resolution to eliminate planning 2.0.” The article says that “at first, going after planning 2.0 appears to be just one of the new administration’s many rollbacks of federal regulations and defunding of agencies.” However, “what is strange about this cut is that in certain important ways, BLM 2.0 was exactly the kind of federal land management that earlier generations of western Republicans longed for.”

GUEST COLUMN: Methane Rule Hurts Colorado Residents.

In an op-ed for the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (6/30, Chavez-Rey), Hugo Chavez-Rey, the chairman of the Colorado Hispanic Republicans, decries the failure by the Senate “to scrap an Obama-era rule that limits methane emissions from gas and oil production on federal lands.” He argues that “the rule would kill thousands of jobs and cost millions of dollars, while having virtually no impact on emissions.” Chavez-Rey urges that Interior Department “succeeds” in killing or modifying the rule.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

DOI Opening Public Comment Period For More Offshore Oil/Gas Leasing.

Natural Gas Intelligence (6/30, Cocklin) reports that “following a series of initiatives outlined on Thursday by President Trump, the Department of the Interior (DOI) readied a public comment period for a new five year offshore leasing program that would open more of the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) to oil and gas drilling.” Acting DOI Assistant Secretary Kate MacGregor said, “The Trump administration is dedicated to energy dominance, growing the economy and giving the public a say in how our natural resources are used, and that’s exactly what we are doing by opening up the request for information and a new five-year plan.” According to the article, “the 45-day public comment period would kick off an extensive period of analysis that typically takes two or three years to prepare a new five year program.”

Additional coverage was provided by UPI (6/30, Graeber), the Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/2, Zullo), the Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (6/30), the Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (6/30), The Guardian \(UK\) (6/30, Milman), the High Country \(CO\) News (6/30, Wiles), Forbes (6/30, Bradley), the Coastal Review (6/30), and World Oil (6/30).

Seismic Airgun Testing A Bad Deal For Florida.

In an op-ed for Florida Today (7/2, Jackalone), Frank Jackalone, the Florida Chapter director of the Sierra Club, opposes allowing “the use of seismic airgun blasting to map the ocean floor from Florida to Delaware in the search for oil and gas.” Jackalone notes that the Interior Department’s “very own studies estimate airgun blasting will cause 13.5 million instances of harm to Atlantic marine mammals, including the right whale, which makes its breeding ground off the coast of Florida.” Moreover, Jackalone argues “that there is no need for airgun blasting or off-shore oil drilling,” since “the fastest growing form of energy is not oil or gas, but renewables like solar and wind.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

River Restoration Work Partially Funded Through Federal Program.

The Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (7/3, Grover) reports that “the Animas Watershed Partnership was one of seven organizations to receive funding from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation for WaterSMART Watershed Management Projects.” Bureau of Reclamation Acting Commissioner Alan Mikkelsen said in a press release, “Cooperative watershed groups bring together diverse partners to address water management needs in their local communities.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Federal Offshore Well Permits Support Safe Energy And Economic Development, BSEE Says.

The World Oil (6/30) reports that “the operation of drilling an offshore oil and gas well provides for economic development and supports as many as 450 new jobs.” According to the article, “as Energy Week concludes, the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement’s well permit approvals in 2017 total 69.” BSEE Director Scott Angelle said, “I believe BSEE holds the potential to move the U.S. offshore energy program forward in both energy production and economic development, and done in a safe and environmentally-responsible manner. Overall, operators in the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf are producing more oil and gas than ever before and it all begins with drilling the well.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Greens Threaten To Sue Trump Over Grizzly Bear Protections.

The Hill (6/30, Cama) reports that “a coalition of environmental groups is threatening to sue the Trump administration over its decision to remove protections for the Yellowstone grizzly bear.” The organizations, “led by Earthjustice, said Friday that ending the threatened listing under the Endangered Species Act was premature and that the Yellowstone grizzly hasn’t shown sufficient signs of recovery.” Earthjustice attorney Timothy Preso said in a statement, “With grizzly deaths spiking, now is not the time to declare the great bear recovered and federal protections unnecessary.” He said, “The grizzly is a major part of what makes the region in and around Yellowstone National Park so special and unique. We should not be taking a gamble with the grizzly's future."

Reuters (6/30, Zuckerman) notes that "the delisting plan, scheduled to go into effect at the end of July, was initially proposed during Democratic President Barack Obama's administration."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (6/30, Ridler), NPR (6/30, Neuman), the Huffington Post (6/30, D'angelo), the Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (7/2, Golowenski) the Yellowstone Insider (6/30, Reichard), and the Madison \(WI\) Capital Times (7/2, Randolph).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Daily Mail (6/30, Zuckerman), ABC News (6/30, Ridler), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/1, Ridler), Philly \(PA\) (6/30, Ridler), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/30, Keith Ridler |, Ap), the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/30, Ridler), CNBC (6/30), and the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/30, Ridler).

Rare Butterfly Thrives On, And Because Of, US Military Bases.

The AP (7/1, Pratt) reports that "a tiny rare butterfly is flourishing" and the credit goes to the U.S. military, according to experts. The frosted elfin has "found a home at several defense installations because of the way the military manages open spaces, said Robyn Niver, an endangered species biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." The "common thread" among military bases where the butterfly has been confirmed is "the way they manage vegetation through controlled burns, which create the perfect conditions for wild blue lupine and indigo to grow, the frosted elfin caterpillar's two host plants."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Boston \(MA\) Herald (7/2), the Daily Mail (7/2), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/2, Pratt), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/2, Mark Pratt |, Ap), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/2, Pratt), and WTOP-FM Washington \(DC\) Washington (7/2).

Feds Ask For Public Comment On Florida Panther Endangered Status.

The Miami Herald (6/30, Staletovich) reports that "federal wildlife officials are asking for public comment on a review to determine whether rules protecting endangered Florida panthers need to be changed." The review is "part of a regular check-up and was not prompted by any recent actions, including a push by state wildlife officials, hunters and ranchers in 2015 to reconsider the number of panthers needed for a successful recovery, said U.S. Fish and Wildlife spokesman Ken Warren." The article says that "the assessment will likely include the recent discovery of female panthers north of the Caloosahatchee River."

Additional coverage was provided by the Naples \(FL\) Daily News (6/30, Staats).

Can California Fish Catch Break With Giant Tunnels?

Depends. The AP (7/1, Knickmeyer) reports that "Gov. Jerry Brown's plan to route much of California's mightiest river into two massive tunnels poses new perils for salmon and other struggling native species, but could give them a couple of breaks as well, experts and project supporters and opponents say in the wake of two newly issued wildlife rulings on the $16 billion project." Ultimately, water experts say, whether the Delta tunnels "hurt salmon, whales and other imperiled species depends, as always, on the intent and smarts of the officials who manage the Sacramento River's delta with the San Joaquin River, that fought-over, over-tapped spigot for the U.S. state with the most people, most crops and the biggest estuary on the West Coast."

Political Deals Rip Throat Out Of Wolf Recovery Plan, Enviros Say.

Courthouse News (6/30, YOUNG-GRINDLE) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "announced its draft recovery plan for the Mexican wolf, but environmentalists say it is more about politics than saving the wolves." Bryan Bird, Southwest program director for Defenders of Wildlife said, "Politics trumps science in this draft Mexican gray wolf recovery plan. It's a backroom deal with the states that resist wolf recovery and fail to understand the transformational benefits to the entire landscape when Mexican gray wolves thrive. Contrary to recommendations from leading wolf biologists, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's draft plan restricts the Mexican gray wolves from moving into millions of acres of suitable habitat in northern Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado. President Trump's plans to build an impenetrable border wall with Mexico will only worsen chances for the wolves' recovery. The lobos would be boxed in, incapable of beating the clock on extinction."

Alabama Bat Blitz Aims To Gauge Area Bat Population.

The AP (6/30, Pillion) reports that "dozens of bat researchers, enthusiasts and wildlife officials from around the Southeast flocked to Birmingham this week for the Alabama Bat Working Group's annual Bat Blitz event." The Working Group "consists of bat biologists and enthusiasts working for state and federal wildlife agencies, universities, and non-profit groups, plus a few volunteers who helped conduct bat surveys at Ruffner Mountain, Turkey Creek and Oak Mountain." Shannon Holbrook, "a biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Daphne office, said the survey would help them know if there were federally endangered or threatened species living in the area."

Endangered Species Act Is Under Assault.

In a piece for the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/2, Small), Sue Small criticizes "legislative attacks" on the Endangered Species Act. According to Small, "the ESA is so well-crafted that it has effectively protected 99 percent of those species listed at risk of extinction." She also argues that "it offers flexibility for private landowners, states and tribes; and it provides avenues for the public to actively protect species." Small vows to "fight for the Endangered Species Act and its safeguards."

National Park Service

Charges Dropped Against 2 Youths In Tennessee Wildfires.

The AP (6/30, Mattise) reports that "prosecutors have dropped arson charges against two juveniles in connection with the Tennessee wildfires that killed 14 people and tore through thousands of homes and businesses in November, a law enforcement official said Friday." District Attorney General Jimmy Dunn said in a statement that "after months of investigating, prosecutors can't prove the youth were responsible because there were other factors contributing to the seriousness of the fires, such as 80-mph (130-kph) winds and downed power lines that ignited flames."

Additional coverage was provided by USA Today (6/30, Satterfield) and CNN (6/30, Levenson, Burnside).

Out & About: Blanket Phone Coverage Proposed For Parks.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (7/2) reports that "proposals for increased cell phone coverage in Mount Rainier, Yellowstone and several other national parks have opened for another round of public comment, with constituents divided on the issue in a previous comment period last year." According to the article, "backcountry purists argue against increased coverage in wilderness areas of the parks while some people point out the potential safety advantages." Jeff Ruch, PEER executive director, said, "There is little evidence that increased cell coverage increases safety but there is ample evidence that drivers on poorly lit, winding park roads distracted by their devices are a hazard. By acceding to industry pressure for more coverage, park superintendents are wiring their wild lands with little thought toward preserving the values that make these cathedrals of nature so special."

Green Thumbs Hope To Lead The Trumps Down The Garden Path.

The New York Times (7/2, Baumgaertner) reports on the future of the White House Kitchen Garden, started by former First Lady Michelle Obama as part of her Let's Move! campaign to combat childhood obesity. According to the Times, "those outside the White House who support the garden are seeking creative efforts to keep it an East Wing priority." While First Lady Melania Trump's communications director, Stephanie Grisham, said that "the White House kitchen will cook with the homegrown vegetables and will donate the remaining harvest to charity," and that "the Trump family planned to continue the educational nature of the garden," the June harvest "was carried out solely by the National Park Service," and administrators from local schools whose students have worked in the garden "said they had not been invited back since the transition."

Law Enforcement Prepares For July 4 Events On National Mall.

WTOP-FM Washington (6/30, Murillo) reports that "thousands of people from around D.C., the U.S. and the world will celebrate" Independence Day in the nation's capital. Mike Litterst, with the National Park Service, "said that means a lot of planning goes into keeping things safe." Litterst said, "Security for any event on the National Mall, especially for the Fourth of July, is of tantamount — not only interest, but importance — to the National Park Service and the U.S. Park Police."

Federal City Council To Negotiate Lease For Federally Owned Golf Courses In D.C.

The Washington Post (6/30, Portnoy) reports that the National Park Service and Federal City Council “this week agreed to begin negotiating a deal that, if successful, could result in a multimillion dollar renovation of three dilapidated golf courses and a tennis center in the District.” The Federal City Council, “a private nonprofit business group, has nine months to convince the federal agency it can overhaul Park Service-owned facilities: Langston and Rock Creek Park golf courses as well as the golf course and tennis courts at East Potomac Park, known as Hains Point.” The article says that “the signing of the ‘letter of intent’ on Wednesday is the first step in what both sides expect will be a long and complicated process.”

The Economic Juggernaut That Is Independence National Historical Park.

Philly \(PA\) (6/30, Loyd) reports that Independence National Historical Park is “gearing up for more visitors, who descended on the park’s more than 20 houses and buildings in record numbers last year, the most since the Constitution’s 200th anniversary in 1987.” Independence National Park “had 5.1 million visitors, a healthy 17 percent jump over 2015, with the biggest crowds at the Liberty Bell Center, Independence Hall, Congress Hall, Old City Hall, and the Visitor Center at Sixth and Market.” The article notes that “those crowds, which tend to be highest over the summer, show that the park had a ripple effect in turning the surrounding area into something of an economic powerhouse.”

Gettysburg Anniversary Seeing Few Flare-ups, Despite Rumors Of Violence.

Fox News (7/1, Chakraborty) reports that “despite rampant rumors of violence, protests and counter-protests planned this weekend at Gettysburg that prompted heightened security, there were few flare-ups by midday Saturday.” The article says that “reports of possible disruptions and even violence have the National Park Service acting with an ‘abundance of caution.’”

Additional coverage was provided by Fox News (6/30, Wallace), the Huffington Post (7/2, Mathias), Philly \(PA\) (6/30, Schaefer), and WPMT-TV Harrisburg \(PA\) Harrisburg, PA (6/30, Lima).

Rappahannock Tribe Renews Ties With Ceremony.

The AP (7/2, Hedelt) reports that “with tribal drumbeats and singing in the air, the Rappahannock Tribe joyfully took possession of an acre of ancestral land that leaders hope will reconnect young people with the traditions of their ancestors.” Chuck Hunt, the National Park Service’s Chesapeake Bay Office superintendent, was among those who spoke at Saturday’s ceremony, “noting that the donation of land coincided with a recently released report defining the Rappahannock Tribe’s ‘Indigenous Cultural Landscape.’” Following the ceremony, Hunt “said the expectation was that the study of the Rappahannock Tribe’s history in the region would continue.”

Getting The Help It Needs: Groups Work To Help Glacier Park Meet Growing Demands.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (7/2, Backus) reports that Glacier Park Superintendent “enjoys partnerships with three key organizations that raise important funding, provide a core of willing volunteers and offer educational programs that create new constituencies.” Glacier Park Superintendent Jeff Mow “said those partnerships have never been more vital.” Mow said, “Our staffing is actually five employees less than what we had in 2002. You can imagine the sort of responsibilities they have with our number of visitors. We couldn’t be doing what we’re doing without having partners to help us.”

Fees May Increase At Devils Tower National Monument.

The AP (7/2) reports that the National Park Service is “seeking public input before it decides whether to raise fees” at Devils Tower National Monument “for a second time this year.” Prices at the monument were “raised to $30 for an annual pass, $15 for a vehicle, $7 per person and $10 for a motorcycle in January.” The NPS is “proposing raising the fees to $40, $20, $10 and $15 respectively to match the prices at other national monuments.”

Fee Increase Proposed At Lassen Park.

The Redding \(CA\) Record-Searchlight (7/2, Arthur) reports that “National Park Service officials want to hear from the public about a proposal to raise the entrance fees at Lassen National Park.” The article notes that “the proposed $5 increase per vehicle marks the second entry fee hike since 2015.” According to Lassen park Superintendent Jim Richardson, “money from the fee increase would be used to maintain and improve facilities at the park.”

Rocky Mountain National Park’s Fall River Entrance Up For Historic Status, Possible Changes.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (6/30, Johnson) reports that Rocky Mountain National Park is “looking to add the 1960s-era Fall River entrance to the National Register of Historic Places at the same time officials are looking at a redesign of that same area.” Kyle Patterson, spokeswoman for the national park, said, “That area has morphed in our past, and now we’re looking to see how we continue to manage that entrance with our record visitation and continuing to honor our history.”

UNLV Researcher Works To Eradicate Invasive Plant.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/1, Bruzda) reports that a UNLV student is working on a “project to research the best way to eradicate invasive plants and bring new, but familiar life to her ancestral land in the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area.” Ka-Voka Jackson, “a Hualapai Indian who grew up on a Peach Springs, Arizona, reservation,” is “collaborating with the National Park Service to determine how to best remove and eliminate nonnative ravenna grass weeds from five canyons along the Colorado River.” According to the article, “while she envisions a broader goal, her project’s contract with the National Park Service, designed for Glen Canyon, ends in May 2019.”

Home Of Slain Activist Named As A Historic Place.

The AP (7/1, Watkins) reports that the home of Wharlest and Exerlena Jackson has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places. Wharlest Jackson Sr., “a husband and father of five who worked three jobs so his wife, Exerlena, could stay home with the children, was killed in February 1967 by a bomb planted beneath his 1958 Chevrolet pickup and aligned with the driver’s seat.” The article says that “he was treasurer of the NAACP, and his involvement with voter registration, among other things, had angered local white supremacists.”

Maine City Plans $900,000 River-Walk Project For Riverfront.

The AP (6/30) reports that “Waterville is planning to install a $900,000 river-walk project and will start accepting bids in August from interested contractors.” According to the article, “the city applied for a $300,000 grant” from the Land and Water Conservation Fund and was “notified it was one of three municipalities in Maine to be approved for grant money.”

Top National News

Critics Say Trump’s Latest Tweet Promotes Violence Against The Media.

President Trump continued his Twitter attacks on the mainstream media over the weekend, garnering a great deal of media attention for a Sunday morning tweet featuring a video clip of him at a WWE wrestling match with the CNN logo superimposed over the face of an opponent. While several reports highlight comments from Administration officials and backers supporting the President, the coverage is largely negative, describing Trump’s tweet as promoting violence against the media.

Trump wrote in a tweet Sunday, “The dishonest media will NEVER keep us from accomplishing our objectives on behalf of our GREAT AMERICAN PEOPLE! #AmericaFirst.” The Hill (7/2, Shelbourne) says the tweet “included a video of Trump speaking Saturday night at Washington, D.C.’s Kennedy Center, where he also mocked the media.” The Wall Street Journal (7/2, Radnofsky) reports that in his remarks at the “Celebrate Freedom” concert, Trump said, “The fake media tried to stop us from going to the White House, but I’m president and they’re not. ... The fact is the press destroyed themselves because they went too far. Instead of being subtle and smart, they used the hatchet and the people saw it right from the beginning.”

However, a tweet from the President hours earlier receives far more media attention. The Washington Post (7/2, Nakamura) says the earlier tweet, which “appeared to promote violence against CNN,” featured “an old video clip of him performing in a WWE professional wrestling match, but with a CNN logo superimposed on the head of his opponent.” In it, Trump is seen “slamming the CNN avatar to the ground and pounding him with simulated punches and elbows to the head. Trump added the hashtags #FraudNewsCNN and #FNN, for ‘fraud news network.’”

Bloomberg News (7/2, Krasny) says Trump “ratcheted up his feud with the media” with the tweet, while USA Today (7/2, Singer) says Trump was “continuing his jihad against the news media,” and Reuters (7/2, Mason) says he “stepped up his feud with the media.” Reuters adds that the video “takes his criticism to a new level and drew criticism from CNN,” which said in statement, “It is a sad day when the President of the United States encourages violence against reporters. ... Instead of preparing for his overseas trip, his first meeting with Vladimir Putin, dealing with North Korea and working on his health care bill, he is instead involved in juvenile behavior far below the dignity of his office.”

To the New York Times (7/2, Grynbaum), “the video is an unorthodox way for a sitting president to express himself.” The Times adds that it “stirred criticism, disbelief and dumbfoundedness.” The Times adds that some journalists described the video’s “portrayal of violence as dangerous...could incite attacks or threats against news media employees.” Tom Llamas said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/2, lead story, 3:10) that the “bizarre video” raises the question of whether Trump’s “social media habit [is] hijacking his agenda.” Llamas also questioned whether the “shocking image of the President physically attacking someone [is] just comedy, or could it incite violence against the media?”

Elaine Quijano said on the lead story for the CBS Weekend News (7/2, lead story, 2:35) that “reporters’ rights groups are outraged,” while the AP (7/2, Lucey) quotes Bruce Brown, the executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, as “condemn[ing] the video as a ‘threat of physical violence against journalists,’” and saying that “Trump’s tweet was ‘beneath the office of the presidency.’” An AFP (7/2, Knowlton) report on the video was the lead story on the Drudge Report Sunday under the headline, “Now He Body Slams CNN!” AFP called the video “bizarre even by [Trump’s] standards,” and says it was “immediately condemned by journalists, who said Trump seemed to be promoting physical violence against the media.”

Jim Rutenberg writes in an analysis for the New York Times (7/2) that the First Amendment “is under near-daily assault from the highest levels of the government.” Rutenberg argues that “all of the attacks against something so central to [America’s] identity must have [the country] in quite the birthday funk.”

In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/2, lead story, 3:15, Snow), Kelly O’Donnell called the tweet “the art of distraction,” adding that “the media feud squeezes out other issues.” Julie Pace of the Associated Press said on CNN Inside Politics (7/2), “This is Trump’s agenda. Going after the media, trying to tear us down is as much a part of the agenda as passing a healthcare bill, trying to get a tax overhaul. He sees this as actually part of that effort. If he can undermine the reporting about him, if he can undermine the credibility of the press, he thinks he has a clear lane for doing some of the things he wants to do.”

On MSNBC AM Joy (7/2), Brian Karem of the Sentinel Newspapers said of his exchange with White House deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders that Sanders “went out of her way to bash us. I had had enough. Look, he started out telling me I am the enemy of the people. I’m not the enemy of the people. We are the people. He’s the enemy of the people because he continually tries to cleave us from the rest of us. That’s not right, that’s not what America is about.”

Politico (7/2, Morin, McCaskill) says the “incendiary post,” which portrays Trump “physically attacking” the news network, “threatens to take his fraught relationship with the media to a new, dangerous low.” Politico adds that while GOP lawmakers “have called for civility in the wake of a shooting last month at a congressional baseball practice that left House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) critically injured and others wounded,” the White House “has declined to follow their lead.”

The Washington Times (7/2, Wolfgang) reports that Sen. Ben Sasse told CNN’s State Of The Union (7/2, Tapper) that Trump “wants to ‘weaponize distrust’ in the press and warned that America is headed down a dangerous path if citizens listen only to media outlets and political leaders that reinforce their own personal views.” Sasse said, “There’s an important distinction to draw between bad stories or crappy coverage, and the right citizens have to argue about that and complain about that, and trying to weaponize distrust. The First Amendment is the beating heart of the American experiment and you don’t get to separate the freedoms that are in there.” Sasse “went on to suggest that many Americans, including Mr. Trump, are perpetuating a society in which citizens listen only to those who agree with their own political views.”

The Washington Times (7/2, Wolfgang) reports that “influential Republicans” are “urging Mr. Trump to stay off of social media.” Ohio Gov. John Kasich told ABC’s This Week, “You know it’s unfortunate, and people are now begging the president not to do this and, you know, he ought to stop doing it and we’ll have to see what happens. It’s one of the few things that I think brought Republicans and Democrats together.”

The New York Post (7/2, Moore) reports on building “bipartisan condemnation” of the video, while the Washington Examiner (7/2, Mayfield) says Democrats “took to Twitter to once again condemn President Trump’s tweeting habits.” Rep. Ted Lieu tweeted that “the president is encouraging violence and the tweet was ‘beyond unacceptable,’” while Rep. Eric Swalwell “called on all House GOP members to condemn his behavior, saying they were put in place to do just that and if they don’t, they are condoning it.” Meanwhile, a tweet from House Minority Leader Pelosi “praised journalists as ‘guardians to our democracy’ and called for a rejection to violence against them,” and Rep. Adam Schiff “joined his colleagues,” tweeting that “the president’s behavior [is] ‘beneath the dignity of the office.’”

CNN White House correspondent Sara Murray said on CNN Inside Politics (7/2), “I don’t know why Washington think this 70-year-old man is going to change. He’s not going to change. Before we go out handing awards for bravery and courage for senators standing in front of a camera and talking about how ashamed they are of Trump’s behavior, let’s remember that many of these members of Congress watched Trump say things that were equally disturbing, equally sexist, equally horrifying in 2016, and then not only voted for him, they showed up and they told their voters to vote for him too. You got what you paid for. This is not a new person that you elected. ... So it’s a little bit of a sham to say that we should be surprised he’s behaving like this. He’s a 70-year-old man. This was what he was like during the campaign. This is what he is going to be like as President.”

A USA Today (7/2, Singer) analysis of Trump’s Twitter feed found that since his election, Trump “has published more than 60 tweets disparaging ‘fake news’” but “fewer than a dozen tweets about the border wall that was the hallmark of his presidential campaign.” Moreover, Trump “has posted only 11 tweets with the word ‘trade’ and three more about NAFTA.” USA Today adds that Trump “has posted about 80 tweets referring to ‘health care’ or ‘Obamacare,’” but has “mentioned vets or veterans in only a dozen tweets, about half as many times as he has mentioned NBC.”

Administration officials and Trump supporters were firmly on Trump’s side, however. The Washington Times (7/2, Wolfgang) reports that White House national security and counterterrorism adviser Thomas Bossert “praised President Trump’s use of Twitter,” arguing on ABC’s This Week that “the social media account has helped make the commander in chief the ‘most genuine president’ in U.S. history.” Bossert argued, “There’s a lot of cable news shows that reach directly into hundreds of thousands of viewers, and they’re really not always very fair to the president. So I’m proud of the president for developing a Twitter and a social media platform where he can talk directly to the American people. ... In fact, he’s the most genuine president and the most non-politician president that we’ve seen in my lifetime. And he’s demonstrated – whatever the content of that particular tweet is or any tweet – he’s demonstrated a genuine ability to communicate to the people.” Gloria Riviera said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/2, lead story, 3:10) that Bossert “defend[ed] the President.” Bossert: “I think that no one would perceive that as a threat. I hope they don’t.”

Asked on NBC’s Meet the Press (7/2, Todd) to address President Trump’s tweets, HHS Secretary Price said, “What I’m concentrated on is the job he’s given me, and that is to make sure we fulfill the mission of the Department of Health and Human Services and that is the health of the American people.” Secretary Price and host Chuck Todd engaged in a pointed exchange on the subject, with Todd saying, “Mr. Secretary, with all due respect, you’re blaming me for what the President of the United States has spent his entire week focused on?” Price ultimately responded, “The fact of the matter is that he can do more than one thing at a time.”

The Hill (7/2, Manchester) reports that in an interview with radio host John Catsimatidis on AM 970 in New York that aired Sunday, deputy assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka “claimed...that mainstream news media are losing influence.” Gorka said, “To those supporters of the Trump administration who are worried by all the fake news reporting of the last 23 weeks, I can assure you, just ignore it. ... The fake news complex is collapsing in on itself. We see that with the massive scandal at CNN, having to fire people who were generating totally false stories about the administration. We see that with the severe personnel cuts at The New York Times.”

The New York Post (7/2, Moore) says Trump’s sons also took to Twitter “to blast the cable news network for being part of the ‘fake news’ media.” On Sunday, Eric Trump tweeted, “I love how CNN looks to #1A [First Amendment] as a justification to not uphold basic journalistic integrity or an ethical standard #FakeNews.” The tweet was in response to a post from CNN reporter Jim Acosta, who tweeted, “Hope you are enjoying #4thofjulyweekend and celebrating our cherished #1A freedoms enshrined in our Constitution which cannot be taken away.” Then, in response to another Acosta tweet in which the reporter wrote, “Isn’t pro wrestling fake?” Donald Trump Jr. tweeted, "Yes, just like your coverage."

The Los Angeles Times (7/2, King) reports that the tweet "prompted renewed expressions of support from backers." Townhall (7/2, Van Laar) similarly says that Trump's supporters "are chuckling at the video." CBS' "Face the Nation" moderator John Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (7/2, story 2, 2:35, Quijano) that the "political consequence is that it rallies his supporters and that he is basically from the inauguration, onward, been quite consistent with his campaign message, which is that basically, he is going to run the presidency in a different way than we've seen from other presidents, which is basically to stick with the affections of those who supported him, keep those affections tight and roiled up, and there's no better way to do that than in the competition with the media because a lot of his supporters see the competition not based on what the merits of the moment might be, but a fight between somebody who is their champion, fighting for the things that they want, and press corps trying to get on his way."

Sharyl Attkisson said on Fox News MediaBuzz (7/2), "The President knows by now the kind of response his tweets get and has obviously decided it works in his favor. Whether it does or not, that is clearly what he thinks." Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist said on Fox News MediaBuzz (7/2), "He's the President and should be held to a different standard than the media. But I don't see any reason that we shouldn't acknowledge the media has been so hostile and so personal in their attacks."

McClatchy (7/2, Hadley) reports that "a Reddit page dedicated to Trump has claimed credit for inspiring the tweet." The "r/The_Donald" forum "has generated plenty of controversy in the past for its anti-immigration, anti-Semitic and white supremacist posts, according to The Verge." A version of the video was posted by a user on the forum Wednesday, and as of Sunday "it has received nearly 9,000 'up votes.'" McClatchy adds that after the President's tweet, "the forum began to explode with posts claiming credit for inspiring the post and video."

WPost Analysis Compares Trump's Social Media Posts With Other World Leaders' In an analysis, the Washington Post (7/2, Wootson) examines Trump's defense of his social media activity as "modern day presidential," by comparing his tweets to "what the other leaders of the free world were tweeting out while Trump was disparaging 'Crazy Mika' and 'Psycho Joe' of 'Morning Joe' fame before the start of Thursday's workday and then defending his tweets around dinnertime on Saturday." Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau tweeted, "Last week was the lead-up to Canadian Independence Day, and there's nothing more prime minister-y than donning the Canadian colors and waxing philosophically — and bilingually — about how great America's neighbor to the north is." On the day Trump posted about the "Morning Joe" hosts, Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull "was talking about small business and technology on a live Facebook chat." Other world leaders highlighted by the Post include Russian President Vladimir Putin, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto, and British Prime Minister Theresa May.

WPost Analysis: CNN's Firing Of Journalists Over Retracted Story Did Not Pacify Trump. The Washington Post (6/30, Sullivan) reports that CNN's decision to fire three journalists "after reporting, editing and publishing a story — based on a single anonymous source — that the network says didn't go through the proper review channels," was praised by some "as welcome accountability, if a draconian form of it." However, if the move "was intended to mollify CNN's chief critic — President Trump — it certainly backfired," as Trump "and his surrogates took the opportunity to bash the network and the rest of the mainstream media more vociferously than ever."

Asked on Fox News MediaBuzz (7/2) about the story about him which was retracted by CNN, Anthony Scaramucci said, "It didn't seem like they did their homework. ... But when I started to make some calls to the senior leadership to CNN and explain my position, I thought that they moved pretty quickly. I was pretty satisfied that probably 12 to 15 hours I had spoken to them they realized they made a mistake and they took the thing down." Asked about a report that he threatened to sue CNN, Scaramucci said, "It wasn't until it became clear to me that there was still some uncertainty inside their organization about what the facts were that I had to make another phone call, and I said, 'I am not under investigation, I have done nothing wrong. I sort of feel like you guys have to clear this up. If you don't clear it up then of course I have to take action to protect myself and my reputation.'"

Coppins: "Alternative Left Media Infrastructure" Has Arisen In Trump Era. McKay Coppins writes in a piece for The Atlantic (7/2, Coppins) that "a vast alternative left-wing media infrastructure that operates largely out of the view of casual news consumers" has arisen during the Trump era and it forms "a media universe where partisan hysteria is too easily stoked, and fake news can travel at the speed of light." While "these personalities and publications do not yet wield the same influence in the Democratic Party that their counterparts do in the GOP," Coppins argues that "ignoring them would be a mistake." Coppins goes on to "attempt to map the topography of the left's modern alternative media landscape" which includes "Twitter conspiracists," "Hyperpartisan Facebook pages," "Blogs and message boards," "Podcasts," and "VIP Validators."

Trump Criticizes States Over Reluctance To Share Voter Data, Intensifies Feud With Media.

President Trump posted nearly a dozen tweets on Friday, which included posts criticizing states for refusing to comply with his Presidential Advisory Commission on Voter Integrity's request for information, denouncing MSNBC's "Morning Joe" hosts Mika Brzezinski and Joe Scarborough, and attacking the "Fake News" media as exemplified by CNN and NBC. Coverage, which included more than five minutes combined on the network newscasts, was also extensive in print and online. The mostly negative reporting characterized Trump as upset and lashing out against his critics, though some analyses suggested his tweets could help galvanize the President's core supporters.

NBC Nightly News (7/1, story 3, 1:10, Snow) Kelly O'Donnell reported that while Trump traveled to New Jersey for the day with his family, he is "taking no holiday from Twitter." O'Donnell said Trump moved from "a friendly shoutout" to "more fireworks in his running media feud, deriding the cable news hosts at Morning Joe as 'crazy' and 'dumb,' then firing a rocket at more than two dozen states."

The Washington Post (7/1, Erickson) reports the President began the day with a "shout-out" for America's northern neighbor, tweeting, "Happy Canada Day to all of the great people of Canada and to your Prime Minister and my new found friend @JustinTrudeau. #Canada150." Although the relationship between Trump and Trudeau has "gone south" in recent months, the Post says the President's tweet "perhaps reflects Trudeau's wide-ranging efforts to win Trump over, even as he opposes many of the president's policies." In a more than 2,300-word analysis, Politico Magazine (7/1, Lindzon) reports Trudeau was initially criticized when he first took office, but now "it's no exaggeration to say that Donald Trump is saving Justin Trudeau's Canadian bacon." Politico adds that "in Trump, Trudeau has the most unnatural of confederates: a man whose policies he must oppose and whose professional partnership he requires."

The Hill (7/1, Greenwood) reports the President then "accused MSNBC's parent company on Saturday of firing anchor Greta Van Susteren for refusing to go along with the network's negative coverage of him and his administration." He tweeted, "Word is that @Greta Van Susteren was let go by her out of control bosses at @NBC & @Comcast because she refused to go along w/ 'Trump hate!'"

Bloomberg News (7/1, Riley, Sullivan) reports Trump next "fired off a tweet Saturday aimed at the growing number of secretaries of state resisting a broad request for data by his voter-fraud commission, including officials from deep red states whose support the controversy-laden White House can ill afford to lose." Trump said, "Numerous states are refusing to give information to the very distinguished VOTER FRAUD PANEL. What are they trying to hide?"

The Washington Post (7/1, Nakamura, Berman) reports Trump "lashed out" at the states in a tweet that "highlighted the political stakes over his effort to validate his widespread claims of rampant illegal voting through the Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity, which is being led by Vice President Pence and Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach (R)." Reuters (7/1, Schectman, Kenning) similarly says he "lashed out" at the states that have refused to comply and the Washington Times (7/1, Boyer) reports he "slammed states that have refused to turn over voter registration data."

The AP (7/1, Causey, Ramer) says the President "is upset that all states aren't fully cooperating with his voting commission's request," while Politico (7/1, Morin) states that "Trump has in the past blamed, without evidence, an abundance of illegal voting for costing him the popular vote in last year's general election."

According to The Hill (7/1, Cohn), Trump's tweet "echoed" Kobach, who said in an interview with NPR's "All Things Considered" on Friday, "Frankly, if a state like Kentucky or California won't provide available information, one has to ask the question, 'Why not?' I mean, what are they trying to hide if they don't want a presidential advisory commission to study their state voter rolls?" However, in an interview with the Kansas City \(MO\) Star (6/30, Lowry), Kobach acknowledged the challenges in getting states on board and said his state "would not be sharing the Social Security information at this time" because that "is not publicly available." He asserted, "If the commission decides that they would like to receive Social Security numbers to a secure site in order to remove false positives, then we would have to double check and make sure Kansas law permits." Kobach added, "I know for a fact that this information would be secured and maintained confidentially.”

In the lead CBS Weekend News (7/1, lead story, 2:10, Ninan) segment, Reena Ninan reported the President’s “effort to expose alleged voting fraud in last year’s election is running into a brick wall,” which Paula Reid said was due to the commission’s request last week for “voter roll data including addresses, dates of birth, political party, and even voter history dating back to 2006.” Reid adds the “backlash” has been “swift,” as more than 20 states are refusing to comply, according to Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe, who said the Administration’s demand “is an outrageous violation of citizens’ privacy rights.” ABC World News Tonight’s (7/1, story 4, 0:45, Llamas) Gloria Riviera said “at least 13 states have flat-out refused and over two dozens others are balking at the Administration’s request to turn over voter information.”

The Wall Street Journal (7/1, Radnofsky) reports Mississippi Secretary of State Delbert Hosemann (R) said Friday in a statement that if he receives the expansive request, the Commission “can go jump in the Gulf of Mexico and Mississippi is a great state to launch from. Mississippi residents should celebrate Independence Day and our State’s right to protect the privacy of our citizens by conducting our own electoral processes.” In addition, USA Today (7/1, Berry, Groppe) reports Indiana Secretary of State Connie Lawson, a member of the commission who represents Pence’s home state, “said Friday state law prevents her from turning over all of the requested information.” Similarly, Ohio Secretary of State Jon Husted (R) “said Friday that his state will not provide the commission with the last four digits of Ohioans’ Social Security numbers or their state driver’s license IDs.” Meanwhile, Iowa Secretary of State Paul Pate (R) “said the state would require the commission to file a formal request and will not release personal information about voters” and a spokeswoman for Louisiana Secretary of State Tom Schedler (R) “said lawyers are reviewing the letter to determine how the state will respond.”

The Arizona Republic (7/1, Pitzl) reports Arizona Secretary of State Michele Reagan “will provide information that is available to anyone in the general public, as the law and a recent settlement in a registration-database lawsuit permit.” However, the Republic says “she will not release certain data Kobach is requesting because state law forbids it. That includes the last four digits of a voter’s Social Security number, his or her date of birth (only the year is permitted) and other identifying information such as the maiden name of the voter’s mother.”

In an analysis, the Washington Post (7/1, Bump, Ingraham) reports “overall, the states that have said they will not be complying at all with the Kobach commission’s request represent over 30 percent of the nation’s population.” The Post adds that their refusal to cooperate “could complicate any efforts to build a truly national voter file, although it remains unclear what the commission’s ultimate goal is in collecting the data.” The Huffington Post (7/1, Levine) contends the President’s tweets “cast doubt about the neutrality of a commission he created to investigate ‘election integrity’” because he asserted “it was a probe focused on voter fraud.” The HuffPost says Kristen Clarke, the president of the Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, “immediately seized on Trump’s tweet to urge states not to comply with the commission’s work, which she called a ‘sham.’”

Meanwhile, the Washington Post (7/1, Nakamura) reports “the Tweeter in Chief” was also “busy...launching familiar attacks against the two networks over their coverage of him.” The Hill (7/1, Byrnes) states Trump “laid into CNN,” tweeting, “I am extremely pleased to see that @CNN has finally been exposed as #FakeNews and garbage journalism. It’s about time!” In a separate article, The Hill (7/1, Carter) reports that in his fourth tweet of the day, the President “returned to attacking the hosts of MSNBC’s ‘Morning Joe’ in a tweet on Saturday, calling them ‘crazy’ and ‘dumb as a rock.’” Trump said, “Crazy Joe Scarborough and dumb as a rock Mika are not bad people, but their low rated show is dominated by their NBC bosses. Too bad!”

The Huffington Post (7/1, Levine) condemns the new tweet as the latest in Trump’s “long history of sexist comments” while The Hill (7/1, Carter) says the President’s “tweet harkened to attacks previously launched on the political morning show hosts before his crude tweets this week that were panned by members of both parties.” In a piece that provides some background on the feud, USA Today (7/1, Groppe) states that “Trump’s comments came the day after Scarborough and Brzezinski questioned Trump’s mental and emotional fitness after he attacked them on Twitter Thursday.” Politico (7/1, Morin) similarly reports “Trump and Scarborough publicly sparred this past week after the president lashed out at the MSNBC co-hosts by tweeting Thursday that Brzezinski had a ‘low I.Q.’ and had been ‘bleeding badly from a face-lift’ during a past visit to his Mar-a-Lago estate. The comments were widely criticized by lawmakers across aisle.”

The Washington Times (7/1, Harper) says Trump’s “trio of tweets directed at major broadcasters” on Saturday proved “very popular with the president’s fans, who...retweeted these messages up to 20,000 times, and liked them with the familiar Twitter heart symbol up to 33,000 times.”

Trump also posted his weekly address promoting Kate’s Law and the No Sanctuary for Criminals Act as well as an announcement that he was “Getting rdy to leave for tonight’s Celebrate Freedom Concert honoring our GREAT VETERANS w/ so many of my evangelical friends. See you soon!”

The Hill (7/1, Manchester) reports the President later returned “to rip the news media” that afternoon, “saying the ‘fake and fraudulent news media’ is trying to convince Republicans that he should not use social media.” In his eighth tweet of the day, Trump asserted, “The FAKE & FRAUDULENT NEWS MEDIA is working hard to convince Republicans and others I should not use social media – but remember, I won...” He continued, “...the 2016 election with interviews, speeches and social media. I had to beat #FakeNews, and did. We will continue to WIN!” Trump then added, “My use of social media is not Presidential – it’s MODERN DAY PRESIDENTIAL. Make America Great Again!” CNN (7/1, Leblanc) reports the President concluded, “I am thinking about changing the name #FakeNews CNN to #FraudNewsCNN!”

In an article titled “Trump Doesn’t Seem To Be Heeding Calls To Tone Down Tweets,” the AP (7/1, Lucey) says Trump’s “stream of insults has pained politicians from both parties who have appealed to him, without apparent success, to stop the 140-character bursts of character attacks and focus on running the country,” but he instead “escalated an intensely personal feud with two high-profile talk show hosts Saturday, suggesting without evidence that their network is biased against him.”

Trump Energizes Crowd At Kennedy Center Event With Media Attacks. The New York Times (7/1, Shear) reports the President on Saturday addressed “raucous supporters at a faith rally at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington [and] brought the crowd to its feet by condemning news organizations.” Trump said, “The fake media is trying to silence us. But we will not let them. Because the people know the truth. The fake media tried to stop us from going to the White House. But I’m president and they’re not.”

The AP (7/1, Lucey) reports Trump also “vowed to support and defend religious liberty, telling a gathering of evangelical Christians that the threat of terrorism is ‘one of the most grave and dire threats to religious freedom in the world today.’” Trump asserted, “We cannot allow this terrorism and extremism to spread in our country, or to find sanctuary on our shores or in our cities. We want to make sure that anyone who seeks to join our country shares our values and has the capacity to love our people.”

Trump Asked White House Staffers For Input On “Morning Joe” Tweets, Source Says. “A source close to the White House” told the New York Post (6/30, Morrongiello, Fredericks) that the President had been “asking staffers for feedback on his controversial ‘Morning Joe’ tweets Thursday.” The source claimed Trump “said to everyone, ‘I know it wasn’t presidential, but what did you think?’ ... He wanted to get people’s reactions and sense what the fallout might be.” The source added, “There’s definitely a feeling that they’re under siege, but this was also a week when they had the CNN vindication. ... So I think the White House has been in an aggressive mood as a result of that.”

Melania Trump Responds To Brzezinski, Ivanka Stays Silent On Tweets. The Hill (7/1, Bowden) reports First Lady Melania Trump on Friday “blasted” Brzezinski after she told InStyle (6/30, Cristobal) on Friday, “Melania’s got the worst job in the country and I don’t think she wants do it a lot longer. I think she will do it for as long as she has to for her son, and that’s it.” In response, ABC World News Tonight (7/1, story 2, 1:05, Llamas) reported the First Lady in a statement said, “It is sad when people try to further their own agenda by commenting on me and my family, especially when they don’t know me.”

However, the AP (7/1, Lucey) reports that while “Ivanka Trump has been vocal in using her White House role to advocate for women,” when her father “lobbed a demeaning attack on a female TV host on Twitter this week, his daughter and senior adviser kept quiet.” According to the AP, her “moment of silence...spoke to the challenges and calculations Ivanka Trump faces as she tries to promote family-friendly policies in an administration led by a man whose comments about women have made women cringe and drawn bipartisan rebuke.” The AP adds Ivanka so far has not “respond[ed] to questions about the president’s tweet or how it affects her policy efforts.”

Brzezinski Takes Credit For Introducing Powell To Trumps. In his New York Times (6/30, Rutenberg) “Mediator” column, Jim Rutenberg calls Trump’s feud with the “Morning Joe” co-hosts “a striking example of how a presidency born of television lives there still, no matter what else might be going on In Real Life (IRL, as the internet calls it).” In an interview, Scarborough and Brzezinski discussed their past relationship with the Trumps and Brzezinski “said she helped Mr. Trump find a key staff member, his foreign policy adviser, Dina Powell. Ms. Powell, a former Bush administration official, has emerged as a power inside the administration, reassuring worried outsiders." According to Brzezinski, "Dina Powell was in there because I brought her to Trump Tower and introduced her to Ivanka and Donald. I will just say that, on camera and off, we hoped for the best."

Lewandowski: Trump is the "Hemingway of Twitter" The Hill (7/1, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports Corey Lewandowski, President Trump's former campaign manager, in a Fox News appearance lauded Trump as "the Ernest Hemingway of Twitter." He added, "He's taken down his opponents on Twitter many times. You can ask 'Little Marco' or 'Lyin' Ted' or 'Crooked Hillary.' We all know the names or 'Low Energy Jeb.' When you oppose Donald Trump, beware of his hundred million social media followers."

Experts Warn Commission's Request For Data "A Gold Mine For Hackers." Politico (7/1, Geller, Bennett) reports "cybersecurity specialists" warn the Presidential Advisory Commission on Voter Integrity's request for data "would centralize and lay bare a valuable cache of information that cyber criminals could use for identity theft scams – or that foreign spies could leverage for disinformation schemes." They caution a comprehensive file on American voters would be "a gold mine for hackers" and comes as "the Trump administration is already under fire from Democrats who say it is doing little to protect the electoral process from hackers." The security specialists "were especially perturbed about Kobach's claim that the commission would publish all the voter data it receives." However, Marc Lotter, a spokesman for Vice President Pence, said, "Information being requested is already publicly available according to state law from which it would be released. ... The federal government takes cybersecurity very seriously. No publicly identifiable information will be released to the public and the information will be managed consistent with federal security guidelines."

CLC Sues Alabama For Insufficient Effort To Notify Convicted Felons Of Restored Voting Rights. The Huffington Post (7/1, Levine) reports the Campaign Legal Center (CLC) has filed a lawsuit against Alabama to require the state "to educate eligible voters about a pivotal change to a state law that could potentially restore the voting rights of thousands of convicted felons." The article says "Alabama earned praise when it passed a law in May clarifying which felonies constituted 'moral turpitude' and would therefore block people from voting, but Secretary of State John Merrill (R) told HuffPost in June that his office wouldn't take any action to make sure the thousands of people affected by the law actually know about it." In a statement, a CLC lawyer said, "The state is responsible for correcting the confusion that has wrongly disenfranchised voters for decades. In order for HB 282 to have any meaningful effect, Alabama must notify voters about their right and ensure they are able to successfully cast a ballot going forward."

Huckabee, Kasich, Dowd, Tapper Criticize Trump For "Morning Joe" Tweets. The Hill (7/1, Bowden) reports former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee said Saturday on "Fox & Friends Weekend" that Trump "should have resisted the urge to comment on Morning Joe's attacks, saying they weren't worth the trouble." Huckabee described the comments as "a mosquito bite. Swat it, leave it, go away." He added, "If I was advising Trump" he would say, "Don't let these guys even rise to the level of your attention, because they're not worth it." The Hill states that "Huckabee also said that Trump's tweets are 'distracting' from his agenda."

The Hill (7/1, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports Ohio Gov. John Kasich, speaking with ABC's Martha Raddatz, "criticized President Trump's use of Twitter on Saturday, saying his tweets are 'unacceptable.'" Kasich said, "We've seen this for quite a while. You know, it's unfortunate and people are now begging the president not to do this, and you know you got to stop doing it."

The Hill (7/1, Greenwood) reports Jake Tapper, anchor of CNN's "The Lead with Jake Tapper," on Saturday "pushed back" against Trump's tweets, "arguing that the president uses the platform more for maintaining his personal feuds with the media than for advancing his policy goals." Tapper also "argued Saturday that by using Twitter to launch personal attacks, Trump is doing little to help the voters that sent him to the White House."

Meanwhile, in her New York Times (7/1, Dowd) column, Maureen Dowd says that "with this latest toad jumping from our president's mouth, is Donald Trump acting like a sexist pig or simply a pig? I proffer, a pig." Dowd contends, "I have no doubt that he would attack a man's appearance in the same breathtakingly below-the-belt way if he felt humiliated by that man and had the ammunition." She urges Trump's critics to "not narrow it to sexism" because "it's even more troubling than that. It's cruelty on a Grand Guignol scale, both in Trump's heartless tweets and in his mindless salesmanship of the Republicans' heartless budget." She adds "When Trump called the House health care bill mean, he knows whereof he speaks. He's the King of Mean. Pathetically, Trump mistakes cruelty for strength." She concludes "you can never be sure of anything that comes out of this White House. Except the cruelty."

Conway Defends Trump As His Feud With “Morning Joe” Hosts Escalates.

White House senior counselor Kellyanne Conway came to President Trump’s defense on Friday as his feud with MSNBC’s “Morning Joe” hosts Mika Brzezinski and Joe Scarborough escalated following their allegations that his son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner and other aides had threatened to blackmail them with the publication of a negative National Enquirer article. The almost uniformly negative reporting, which was extensive in print and online and also generated seven and a half minutes combined on the network newscasts, was focused on Brzezinski’s and Scarborough’s criticism of the President’s tweet, though most pieces highlighted that the President and the White House denied attempting to blackmail the cable TV hosts.

The Washington Post (6/30, Blake) says that during an appearance on ABC’s “Good Morning America,” Conway “offered the White House’s most controversial and dangerous statement of the week” when she “went so far as to question the news media’s patriotism” over their coverage of the President. The Post reports that in a reference to Brzezinski, Conway asserted, “If you go back and you look at what is said about this president, a lack of policy coverage, there are personal attacks about his physicalities, about his fitness for office, he’s called a goon, a thug, mentally ill, talking about dementia, armchair psychologists all over television every single day.”

Politico (6/30, Nelson) reports Conway said, “It doesn’t help the American people to have a president covered in this light. I’m sorry, it’s neither productive nor patriotic. The toxicity is over the top.” According to Politico, while she “stopped short of saying she approved of the specific attacks” on Brzezinski, The Hill (6/30, Manchester) reports Conway “endorse[d] his ability to fight back when he’s attacked.” She added, “No good comes out of people attacking the president’s physical and mental states on national television everyday, to the exclusion of connecting Americans with information they need.”

In a separate article, The Hill (6/30, Manchester) reports Conway also told “Fox and Friends” that “as a woman who knows him and works for him, I’m very pleased at how he treats women in this workplace, the White House.” The Washington Times (6/30, Persons) similarly reports Conway said “that women care more about policy than Mr. Trump’s tweets.” Conway argued, “Roughly about 120 of the 160 tweets detail with policy, bilateral meetings, what president of the United States is doing right here at that White House, what the Cabinet is doing, news that he sees that he wants to convey to other people, foreign policy, ISIS – you name it – terrorist attacks. That gets very little coverage.” In contrast, Conway said, “The conversation we’re having right now is a one-way conversation of toxicity. A lot of these people on TV do not criticize him on his policies, they do not criticize his actions and his beliefs, they criticize him. The office of the president and it’s current occupant.”

Meanwhile, the Washington Post (6/30, A1, Rucker, Parker) says on its front page that “to many inside the White House, as well as outside allies, what looked like a public relations debacle [has] amounted to an abundance of ‘winning’ – a Trumpian catchphrase playfully repeated Friday by some West Wing officials, even as they were discomfited by the Brzezinski broadside.” Jason Miller, a former Trump campaign adviser, said the President’s tweets “energize the base” while Roger Stone, a former Trump adviser, “likened Trump’s attacks on the media to the strategy employed by former president Richard M. Nixon to discredit organizations such as The Post that were breaking stories on the Watergate investigation.”

However, the New York Times (6/30, A1, Mele) reports in a front-page article that Brzezinski and Scarborough “defended themselves on Friday against President Trump’s Twitter attack the day before, with Ms. Brzezinski saying that...Trump’s tweets targeting her betrayed ‘a fragile, childlike ego’ that was a profound concern.” While they were scheduled to go on vacation Friday, Politico (6/30, Nelson, Tamborrino) reports Brzezinski and Scarborough, her fiancée, “joined their morning show in its 7 a.m. hour to address the president’s attack on-air. Both insisted that they had not been rattled by Trump’s tweets and both said they had received a flood of calls and texts from concerned friends.”

ABC World News Tonight (6/30, story 3, 2:30, Llamas) reported Trump’s tweets generated “explosive fallout,” as the “Morning Joe” co-hosts argued his remarks “reveal a continued mistreatment of women.” Reuters (6/30, Chiacu) reports Brzezinski asserted the President “appears to have a fragile, impetuous, child-like ego that we’ve seen over and over again, especially with women,” while Scarborough added, “He attacks women because he fears women.” He additionally “said Trump packed ‘five or six lies into two tweets,’ including mischaracterizing their meetings at Mar-a-Lago. Brzezinski said she has never had a face-lift.”

The New York Post (6/30, Fredericks) reports Brzezinski said Friday that she had told Trump about having some cosmetic surgery done on her neck, “prompting him to gush about how ‘incredible’ she looked.” Scarborough told Vanity Fair (6/29, Fox), “The irony of it all is that Donald kept saying, 'That's incredible. You can't even tell. Who did it? Who did it?' He kept asking for the name of the doctor. He literally asked 10 times. 'Is he down here? Who is he?'"

The AP (6/30, Bauder) reports the "Morning Joe" hosts also "said Friday that President Donald Trump lied about their December encounter in a tweet and that his 'unhealthy obsession' with their program doesn't serve his mental health or the country well." Brzezinski asserted, "It's been fascinating and frightening and really sad for our country." The New York Post (6/30, Steinbuch) reports Brzezinski responded to "Trump's deeply personal attack on Twitter by assailing his 'fragile' and 'easily played ego' – saying she was worried for the United States." The Washington Post (6/30, Lac, Johnson) reports Brzezinski said Trump's tweets did not upset her, but they do "worry me about the country."

In a Washington Post (6/30, Brzezinski) op-ed, Brzezinski, Scarborough contended that despite the "personal attacks," their "concerns about his unmoored behavior go far beyond the personal." They asserted "America's leaders and allies are asking themselves yet again whether this man is fit to be president. We have our doubts, but we are both certain that the man is not mentally equipped to continue watching our show, 'Morning Joe.'" They repeatedly highlighted Trump's "unhealthy obsession with our show" and revealed "this year, top White House staff members warned that the National Enquirer was planning to publish a negative article about us unless we begged the president to have the story spiked. We ignored their desperate pleas."

The Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (6/30, Sherman) reports that "according to three sources familiar with the private conversations, what happened was this: After the inauguration, Morning Joe's coverage of Trump turned sharply negative." The piece states that in March, "Scarborough and Brzezinski found out the Enquirer was preparing a story about their affair" and "in mid-April, Scarborough texted with Trump son-in-law Jared Kushner about the pending Enquirer story." The Daily Intelligencer adds "Kushner told Scarborough that he would need to personally apologize to Trump in exchange for getting Enquirer owner David Pecker to stop the story. (A spokesperson for Kushner declined to comment). Scarborough says he refused, and the Enquirer published the story in print on June 5, headlined 'Morning Joe Sleazy Cheating Scandal!'"

Politico (6/30, Gold) reports Trump and Scarborough "sparred on Twitter on Friday over [the] National Enquirer article" and the AP (6/30, Bauder) says that they "traded accusations that the other was lying as the bizarre feud between the leader of the free world and two cable television hosts persisted on Friday."

The Washington Times (6/30, Persons) reports "Trump was apparently watching the news program because he tweeted later in the morning on their coverage" and the Wall Street Journal (6/30, Trachtenberg, Rabil) reports the President denied the allegations from the MSNBC hosts. Trump tweeted, "Watched low rated @Morning_Joe for first time in long time. FAKE NEWS. He called me to stop a National Enquirer article. I said no! Bad show." Scarborough subsequently replied, "Yet another lie. I have texts from your top aides and phone records. Also, those records show I haven't spoken with you in many months." Scarborough added, "Why do you keep lying about things that are so easily disproven? What is wrong with you?"

According to the Huffington Post (6/30, Date), the White House so far "has not directly addressed the claim that Trump's aides threatened Brzezinski and Scarborough," but McClatchy (6/30, Irby) reports the National Enquirer "put out a statement responding to Scarborough's remarks, saying the story they ran was true and they did not threaten them or their children. Brzezinski accused the Enquirer of calling her children, but not threatening them." NBC Nightly News (6/30, story 3, 2:35, Holt) White House correspondent Kristen Welker reported the Enquirer said, "At no time did we threaten either Joe or Mika or their children in connection with our reporting on the story. We have no knowledge of any discussions between the White House and Joe and Mika about our story, and absolutely no involvement in those discussions."

On the CBS Evening News (6/30, story 4, 2:25, Mason), Major Garrett cautioned "there is evidence this Twitter spat has taken a toll...on Capitol Hill, where the President's healthcare agenda is in dangerous limbo and a distracted White House gropes for a new political strategy."

CNN Producer Calls Trump "Crazy," Denigrates "Stupid" Voters. The Washington Times (6/30, Richardson) reports Jimmy Carr, a producer for CNN's "New Day" with Chris Cuomo and Alisyn Camerota, "said that media insiders view President Trump as a 'clown' who's 'f--ing crazy' and voters as 'stupid as sh--' in an undercover video released Friday by Project Veritas." James O'Keefe, the group's president, said, "It now seems pretty clear that CNN's bias and dishonesty is a plague in the once-respected news organization."

Breitbart (6/30, Spiering) reports Conway additionally challenged CNN "New Day" host Chris Cuomo on Twitter after his producer was caught on camera saying "she looked like her face 'got hit with a shovel.'" Breitbart states that Conway retweeted Donald Trump Jr., who asked: "I wonder what all the people 'outraged' (fauxoutraged) about a tweet feel about how this CNN producer talks about Kellyanne Conway?"

Obama Photographer Trolls Trump Over "Respect For Women." The Huffington Post (6/30, Hatch) reports that following "Trump's sexist Twitter meltdown about...Brzezinski," Pete Souza, former President Obama's White House photographer, "took to Instagram to remind us how much Obama valued gender equality in a series of five photos called 'Respect for women.'" The HuffPost says "Souza has made wonderful use of his Instagram account during the Trump Administration, subtly uploading photos from his days with President Barack Obama in response to some of President Trump's most outlandish moments."

WPost Analysis: Despite White House Efforts, Trump Went Off Message This Week. In a brief analysis headlined "The White House Had A Coordinated Message This Month. Trump Didn't," Washington Post (6/30, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump states that while "his communications team put in so much work to identify themes for each week of the month," an analysis of Trump's tweets this month discovered "fully 12 were actually addressing the subject that the White House was 'focusing on' that week. That's about 7 percent of on-message tweets – including two Twitter ads about infrastructure that ran on his account."

NYPost, NYTimes, Parker Condemn Trump Tweets, Wisconsin Governor Suggests He Should Tweet More. In an editorial on the President's tweets, the New York Post (6/29) says simply: "Stop. Just stop."

The New York Times (6/30, Board) editorializes that based on how Trump reacted to Brzezinski "by tweeting a stream of coarse insults," the President demonstrates he "clearly lacks the toughness of George Washington" and "the confidence of Dwight Eisenhower," as well as "the grace Richard Nixon showed, at least in public." According to the Times, "Mr. Trump may be a more tender soul, or less resilient. In any case, he can't seem to take the heat."

In her Washington Post (6/30, Parker) column, Kathleen Parker speculates whether Trump's attacks on Brzezinski have "finally force[d] Republicans to face the fact, so obvious to so many, that President Trump isn't quite right? Not in the correct sense but in the head sense." She adds "more and more Americans embrace "This is not normal" as the bumper sticker du jour" and "many are wondering again: Will this be it?" However, Parker warns "don't count on it. ... Nothing will happen until GOP constituents start shouting and, remember, these are the same people Trump has taught to hate the media."

However, The Hill (6/30, Delk) "Briefing Room" blog reports Wisconsin's Republican Gov. Scott Walker "encouraged President Trump to 'tweet more' on Friday, in stark contrast to recent Republican backlash over some of Trump's more incendiary tweets." Speaking on Fox News, Walker said, "Unlike others, I'd tell him to tweet more, to be on Facebook more, to get the message out more, but to be focused." He added, "Tweet more, I'm fine with that, but don't get off in the weeds on other issues. ... Focus on the things that the people that elected you said you wanted to have done ... and the American people, I think, will come along with him."

Trump Hosts South Korean President, Urges Asian Allies To Coordinate On North Korea Efforts.

President Trump welcomed South Korean President Moon to the White House on Friday and the two leaders showed unity against North Korean aggression in the region. While media coverage was overshadowed by the President's Twitter feud with the hosts of MSNBC's "Morning Joe," reporting was heavy in print and online. Analyses highlighted that despite finding common ground on North Korea, Trump endangered relations with South Korea by criticizing the country on trade even as he strained US-Sino efforts to rein in North Korea on Thursday by sanctioning a Chinese bank and approving an arms sale to Taiwan.

In a segment about Trump's tweets, NBC Nightly News (6/30, story 3, 2:35, Holt) reported, "One of the agenda items overshadowed today – the President's meeting with his South Korean counterpart, coming a day after the White House announced new sanctions aimed at North Korea." In a similar segment on Trump's tweets, ABC World News Tonight's (6/30, story 3, 2:30, Llamas) senior White House correspondent Cecilia Vega said the White House had "hoped a visit from South Korea's new leader might shift the focus away from the President's latest tweet controversy."

In a segment on Trump's tweets, CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/30, Cooper) reported "this was a very important day at the White House when the South Korean President was here, and all of the focus could have been on the global challenges that come out of the Korean Peninsula right now, including North Korea." Politico (6/30, Conway) reports the President "told reporters in the Oval Office on Friday that he and Moon 'accomplished a lot having to do with our thoughts on North Korea and our thoughts on trade' over a 'fantastic' dinner at the White House on Thursday, according to a pool report."

Fox News' Special Report (6/30, Hemmer) broadcast the President asserting, "The era of strategic patience with the North Korean regime has failed. The United States calls on other regional powers and all responsible nations to join us in implementing sanctions and demanding that the North Korean regime choose a better path and do it quickly." Reuters (6/30, Ahmann, Chiacu, Lambert) reports Trump also pledged a "determined response" to stop North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missiles program while CNN's Situation Room (6/30, Blitzer) said that in the joint press conference, Trump added, "We are working closely with South Korea, Japan as well as partners around the world on a range of diplomatic, security, and economic measures to protect our allies and our own citizens from this mess known as North Korea."

The Washington Post (6/30, Nakamura, Johnson) reports "the show of solidarity between the leaders of two allied nations comes after Moon swept to power in the wake of the resignation of his predecessor, Park Geun-hye, who was undone by a financial scandal." The Wall Street Journal (6/30, Lee, Mauldin, Stokols) mentions Moon said Trump has accepted an invitation to visit South Korea this year.

However, the AP (6/30, Pennington) reports that while Trump and Moon "showed joint resolve on North Korea," the President "opened up a new front of discord by demanding a renegotiation of a landmark 2012 trade pact between the two countries." The AP adds that "to rub it in, Trump called on his top economic officials to address their grievances to Moon in front of journalists."

McClatchy (6/30, Leavenworth, Kumar) says that "the exchange allowed Trump to present himself as again being tough on U.S. allies, particularly on trade deficits." Commerce Secretary Ross said, "there are a lot of non-tariff barriers to U.S. exports" in South Korea as well as the "problem with oil field tubular goods and steel products" caused by South Korean exports of "dumped Chinese steel" into the US. National Economic Council Director Cohn "then talked about China's 'predatory practices' and barriers to U.S. companies that want to export goods to China, or do business there."

The Washington Post (6/30, Swanson) reports the President "slammed" South Korea "for exporting more to the United States than it imports, restricting sales of U.S. autos, and enabling China in circumventing global trade rules." Trump said, "From when the U.S.-Korea trade deal was signed in 2011 to 2016 – and you know who signed it, you know who wanted it – our trade deficit with South Korea has increased by more than $11 billion. Not exactly a great deal." Bloomberg News (6/30, Pettypiece, Sink) reports Trump added, "The U.S. has trade deficits with many many countries, and we cannot allow that to continue. And we'll start with South Korea right now."

In a brief segment, the CBS Evening News (6/30, story 6, 0:20, Mason) reported Trump "demanded a renegotiation" of the trade deal, which the Washington Times (6/30, Miller) says that he called "a rough deal for the U.S." The President added that the talks will "hopefully" result in "an equitable" and "fair deal for both parties." Reuters (6/30, Brunnstrom, Lambert) reports Trump vowed his Administration "will do more to remove barriers to reciprocal trade and market access." He also asserted that he is "encouraged by President Moon's assurances that he will work to create a level playing field so that American workers and businesses, and especially automakers, can have a fair shake at dealing with South Korea."

Nonetheless, the Los Angeles Times (6/30, Bierman) reports "it was unclear from his and administration aides' remarks how significant a break Trump was making with a free-trade agreement that had broad support when it was approved in Congress." The Times also cautions that the "announcement could be seen as a provocation of an ally during a delicate time, when the administration is looking to South Korea to help contain North Korea's nuclear program."

China Condemns US Sanctions Against Bank, Arms Sale To Taiwan. CNN's Situation Room (6/30, Blitzer), reporting on diplomatic efforts on North Korea, said that on Thursday, the Administration "issued new sanctions against a Chinese bank for allegedly helping North Korea: Then hours later announced a massive US arms sale to Taiwan which China views as a renegade province. Beijing is furious."

The New York Times (6/30, Myers, Wee) reports Treasury Secretary Mnuchin announced the sanctions against two Chinese businessmen, the Bank of Dandong, and Dalian Global Unity Shipping, hours before Agriculture Secretary Perdue was due to arrive in Beijing with Ambassador Terry Branstad to promote "tasty, wholesome, healthy, safe U.S. beef" at a ceremony meant to "symboliz[e] the promise of a constructive era." While Perdue asserted, "We think there's an opportunity for agriculture to lead the way in the future relationship of commerce between our two wonderful countries," the event was overshadowed by the "furious response" from China.

The AP (6/30, Klapper, Pace) reports that while Mnuchin insisted “we are in no way targeting China,” the White House appears to be “engaged in a multipronged pressure campaign against Beijing, born of frustration with the limited results of their much-touted cooperation on ending North Korea’s nuclear threat.” The AP acknowledges “the shifts in Trump’s China policy in some way reflect the natural ebbs and flows that are to be expected in great power relations,” but “Trump’s rapid flip-flops on China are a departure from the practice of past U.S. presidents, who found persistent behind-the-scenes pressure and engagement of Beijing more likely than headline-grabbing confrontations to produce deals on everything from carbon emissions to currency exchange rates.”

While the Los Angeles Times (6/30, Jennings) reports the Chinese government “objected” to arms sale “and demanded that the deal be canceled,” Reuters (6/30, Blanchard, Shepherd) says Beijing “reacted relatively calmly on Friday after a series of diplomatic broadsides by the United States, expressing anger over new arms sales by Washington to Taiwan but hoping ties could soon be brought back on track.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/30, Page) reports Lu Kang, a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry, called for the Administration to reconsider, and the Washington Post (6/30, Rauhala) reports he “said Beijing has launched ‘solemn representations’ with the U.S. side over the arms sale” as well as the sanctions, which he said “go against the consensus achieved at Mar-a-Lago” when Trump met with Chinese President Xi Jinping.

However, Reuters (6/30, Shepherd, Blanchard) reports the Chinese embassy in Washington in a statement said the Chinese government and people are “outraged” and “urged the United States to revoke immediately its ‘wrong decision’ to sell Taiwan $1.42 billion worth of arms, saying it contradicted” the “consensus” reached by Trump and Xi in April. Meanwhile, the Chinese Defense Ministry “said Taiwan was the ‘most important, most sensitive core issue in Sino-U.S. ties,’ warning the United States to end such sales to avoid further damaging peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait.”

On CNN’s Situation Room (6/30, Blitzer) Rep. Gregory Meeks, a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, warned that the arms sale “tips the balance” toward Taiwan. He added, “That is, I think, out of bounds. And then it takes us away from what we want to do because others will also see that that’s out of bounds with reference to international law.”

Trump Scolds Korean Media For Knocking Over Table In Oval Office. The New York Post (6/30, Fredericks) reports “Trump doesn’t like the Korean media either after they piled into the Oval Office on Friday during his sitdown with South Korean President Moon Jae-in and crashed into a couch, damaged a table and nearly knocked over a lamp.” According to the Post, the Secret Service “had to ask the Koreans to stop running as they entered the room” and “there was a lot of jostling as the Korean journalists, unfamiliar with the Oval Office, worked their way around the two chairs where the presidents were seated to find a good spot to set up.”

The Washington Times (6/30, Chasmar) reports the President “scolded” the “aggressive reporters,” but a “video posted by C-SPAN showed Mr. Trump’s bodyguard Keith Schiller save [the] lamp from being knocked to the ground.” The Washington Examiner (6/30, Pappas) reports Trump said, “Easy fellas. Hey fellas. Fellas, easy. Fellas, easy.” He added: “You guys are getting worse.” The President continued, “They knocked the table down. It’s actually a very friendly press, don’t let that get you. Although we just lost the table.”

Pence, Moon Lay Wreath At Korean War Memorial. Reuters (6/30) reports Vice President Pence and South Korean President Moon Jae-in visited the Korean War Memorial on Friday.

Trump Suggests Lawmakers Should Just Repeal ACA, Replace Later.

President Trump tweeted Friday that if the Senate cannot pass the Better Care Reconciliation Act then Republican lawmakers should consider just repealing the Affordable Care Act and passing a replacement at a later date. While ABC World News Tonight was the sole network newscast to provide coverage, the predominantly negative reporting, which was heavy in print and online, focused on the implications of his statement and the White House’s insistence that the Administration is still committed to the BCRA.

ABC World News Tonight’s (6/30, story 4, 1:00, Llamas) Mary Bruce reported “the President did a 180 that could push [Senate Republicans] even further apart,” as does the New York Times (6/30, A1, Kaplan, Pear) in a front-page article, which says that Trump “tossed in a new complication with an old idea, suggesting the Senate could repeal President Barack Obama’s signature domestic achievement now, then replace it later.” He tweeted, “If Republican Senators are unable to pass what they are working on now, they should immediately REPEAL, and then REPLACE at a later date!”

The AP (6/30, Werner, Fram) reports Trump “revive[d] an approach that GOP leaders and the president himself considered but dismissed months ago as impractical and politically unwise,” but according to Politico (6/30, Nelson), “Trump’s suggestion somewhat mirrors” Sen. Rand Paul, who suggested Thursday that lawmakers should “split the bill into a ‘clean repeal’ that the entire GOP caucus could support and a second health care spending bill that moderate Republicans could hash out with willing Democrats.” Reuters (6/30, Chiacu) says the President’s recommendation was “welcomed” by Sen. Ben Sasse, “a Republican who has often clashed with Trump.” Sasse tweeted, “Sounds great, Pres. @realDonaldTrump. We are agreed. We need to break the logjam.”

However, Washington Post (6/30, Blake) senior reporter Aaron Blake in an analysis acknowledges “this approach may be more popular than the one [Republicans are] employing right now,” but “the bad news is it’s still hugely unpopular and would be a political gamble on a scale we have rarely seen.” Blake concludes the “gamble” would be “such a risk, in fact, that I’m doubtful Senate Republicans could even assemble 50 votes to repeal it in the first place – which would render the rest of this pretty moot.” Politico (6/30, Haberkorn) similarly contends Trump’s latest proposal is “a non-starter for many congressional Republicans who don’t want to scrap a plan that’s covering millions of Americans without something to take its place.” Politico states that “repealing the health law without a replacement would kick about 18 million Americans off of health coverage in the first year – and reach 26 million a few years later, according to a CBO analysis of a 2015 bill to repeal the health law without a replacement.”

Meanwhile, Reuters (6/30, Rampton) reports White House deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders on Friday insisted the White House remains “fully committed to pushing through with the Senate at this point but we’re looking at every possible option of repealing and replacing Obamacare.” Bloomberg News (6/30, Titus) reports Huckabee Sanders added, “We are focused on the end product here and that is repealing and replacing Obamacare.”

In addition, the Washington Times (6/30, Persons) reports Health and Human Services Secretary Price said Friday in a Fox News appearance “he believes a health bill will pass this month because the current system is ‘unacceptable.’” Price added, “The Senate understands that. The president is adamant about making certain that we move forward in a positive way for patients and families and docs and not in Washington, D.C.” According to Price, the Senate is attempting to “make sure we have a health care system that actually responds to patients. The current system doesn’t provide for that, and that’s the challenge that we’ve got to fix, and that’s the challenge that the president has demanded gets done.” Price also said, “There are some concerns about individuals on the Medicaid system and whether, as they transition to something else, there’s something that they can go to, and that’s where the tax credits come into play.”

Conservative Lawmakers Urge McConnell, Ryan To Shorten Recess If Healthcare Bill Not Passed.

The Wall Street Journal (6/30, Radnofsky) reports Sens. Ben Sasse and Rand Paul called on the White House to intervene if Senate Majority Leader McConnell is unable to secure the votes needed to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act by the end of their July 4 recess. The Washington Post (6/30, A1, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) states in a front-page article that their “fresh calls for repeal, which echoed an early-morning tweet from President Trump on Friday, underscored the extent to which Republicans remain divided on health care as they head into the Fourth of July recess.”

In addition, ten senators on Friday sent the Majority Leader a letter “asking for the GOP leader to shorten the August recess – or cancel it altogether – if the party does not make significant headway on its priorities in July, according to a copy obtained by” Politico (6/30, Everett), which reports that the lawmakers wrote they “respectfully request that [McConnell] consider truncating, if not completely foregoing, the scheduled August state work period, allowing us more time to complete our work.” The Hill (6/30, Carney) “Floor Action” blog says that the letter, which was “spearheaded by Sen. David Perdue,” came as Rep. Andy Biggs and 11 other members of the House Freedom Caucus sent a letter to House Speaker Ryan “urging him to cancel the August recess” so they can pass the healthcare legislation.

WPost A1: McConnell Attempts To Overcome Reputation As Obstructionist With Healthcare Bill.

In a nearly 2,200-word front-page article, the Washington Post (6/30, Fisher, Sullivan) reports that while Senate Majority Leader McConnell, has been deemed by his opponents as “America’s No. 1 obstructionist, the Darth Vader of Capitol Hill,” whether he can successfully enact “big-ticket” legislation, including the healthcare bill, “will depend on his ability to pivot from blocking to building.” Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich said McConnell “has a really, really difficult challenge” as the GOP has “a very narrow majority and it’s divided within itself.” Nonetheless, Gingrich praised him as “like a really good engineer, trying to think through every day, ‘How do I get the machine operating?’ ... The tools that make Mitch effective are steely determination, enormous will power and endless patience. He wants to be known as the guy who gets things done."

NYTimes A1: Trump Supporters Upset With Heller Over Opposition To Healthcare Bill. In a front-page article, the New York Times (6/30, A1, Martin, Vogel) reports Sen. Dean Heller last week "infuriated the White House and helped unravel his party's attempt to repeal the Affordable Care Act days before a vote was expected in the Senate," and now he "is facing an intense backlash in Nevada, his home state, where there is talk of a primary race challenge against him next year and a pair of the state's wealthiest Republican donors are fuming." The Times states that although America First Policies "suspended its advertising campaign against Mr. Heller after he agreed to attend a West Wing meeting on the health bill and after a group of Republican senators in attendance complained about the commercials," the lawmaker "has by no means escaped the wrath of Mr. Trump and his vocal supporters, including two billionaire casino magnates, Sheldon G. Adelson and Steve Wynn."

Polls Show Opposition To GOP Healthcare Bills "Outpace Support." The Washington Post (6/30, Guskin) reports a series of new national polls released this week "show opposition" to the Republican healthcare bills "continues to outpace support by a wide margin, with tepid support among Republicans and overwhelming opposition among Democrats." The Post says the GOP proposal "fares best in a Fox News poll" of 1,017 "registered voters" (6/25-6/27) that "showed 27 percent of registered voters favored and 54 percent opposed" while a Suffolk University-USA Today poll of 1,000 "registered voters" (6/24-6/27) "found a nearly 4-to-1 margin of opposition (45 percent opposed while 12 percent supported)," a Quinnipiac University poll of 1,212 "voters" (6/22-6/27) found 58 percent "who disapproved and 16 percent who approved," and a NPR-PBS NewsHour-Marist poll of 1,205 "adults" (6/21-6/25) "found a 3-to-1 margin of opposition, with 55 percent who disapproved and 17 percent who approved."

FreedomWorks President, Columnists Criticize GOP Healthcare Bill. In a Washington Post (6/30) op-ed, FreedomWorks President Adam Brandon warns that "the 'swamp' is winning" as Republicans "are now breaking frequent promises to repeal Obamacare." He is critical of the Better Care Reconciliation Act, which "only modifies Obamacare subsidies, bails out insurance companies, likely keeps Medicaid expansion and does nothing to lower premiums." Brandon asserts "the opposition mounted by Heller and his moderate colleagues is a symptom of Republican hypocrisy that has reared its ugly head." He concludes by hoping McConnell and other lawmakers "drive this bill in a conservative direction" as grass-roots activists "want Republicans to defeat the swamp and repeal Obamacare."

In his New York Times (6/30, Stephens) column, Bret Stephens asserts that "if Republicans had been more modest and less inept in advancing a realistic health care agenda, they might have spent the past seven years understanding, explaining and changing" the "third-party-payer problem" rather than focusing on "repeal and replace." He contends "The only genuinely promising reform in the Republican health bills are proposals to nearly double contribution limits for health savings accounts and allow them to be used to pay for premiums." Stephens concludes, "H.S.A.s can restore sanity to a market in which prices are invisible and costs keep rising, and in which the concept of 'insurance' has lost its meaning. Republicans who want to salvage a conservative policy victory from their health care fracas would be wise to leave Obamacare alone, so that its authors can pay the price for its failure, just as the G.O.P. restores price to the rest of the health care system."

In his Washington Post (6/30, Davidson) column, Joe Davidson hails Sen. Jon Tester, the ranking member on the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, for highlighting how the GOP's "heartless" legislation will hurt veterans. Davidson shares Tester's warnings and contends Chairman Johnny Isakson as well as the Department of Veterans Affairs "had the chance to refute the data presented by the Democrats, but they did not."

In his New York Times (6/30, Lieber) column, Ron Lieber asserts that if Americans plan to grow old, they need to pay attention to the Administration's plans to cut Medicaid funding by "hundreds of billions of dollars...if anything like the health care bills on the table in Washington come to pass." Lieber concludes that "big Medicaid cuts could lead all of us to miss out on the care that many of us like best – and costs the government the least – because it will be cut first."

In his New York Times (6/30, Egan) column, Timothy Egan asserts Senate Republicans' "toxic" ACA repeal bill "does nothing to fix a struggling system. But it is bold and quite daring: for this is the broadest attack on working Americans by a governing political party in our lifetime." He says the legislation illustrates "the bargain – your health care for my tax cut."

Moderate Republican Lawmakers Warn Tax Reform Initiative In Jeopardy.

Reuters (6/30, Morgan) reports Rep. Charlie Dent and 19 other Republican lawmakers from the Tuesday Group sent a letter on Friday to House Speaker Ryan warning “that efforts to overhaul the federal tax code could be jeopardized by demands for including major spending cuts in a fiscal 2018 budget resolution.” In the letter, they express “fear that if the House persists” in pursuing the “extremely problematic” cuts to mandatory programs in the budget resolution, “it could imperil tax reform.” The AP (6/30, Taylor) reports the “20 GOP moderates signaled a revolt” over “an emerging plan to force cuts to government agencies and benefit programs such as food stamps.” The AP says the lawmakers “warned that without an agreement with Democrats on increasing agency spending, moderates will be ‘reticent to support any budget.’”

Bannon Pushing Tax Hike For Wealthy To Pay For Middle, Working Class Tax Cuts.

Axios (7/2, Swan) reports that President Trump’s chief strategist Steve Bannon is pushing to “rais[e] taxes on the wealthiest Americans to pay for steep middle and working-class tax cuts.” While some officials “think it’s crazy,” Bannon “believes it’s a potent populist idea.”

White House Projected To Save $22 Million.

Forbes (7/2, Andrzejewski) reports that the Trump Administration on Friday “released their annual report to Congress on White House Office Personnel,” According to the report, which “includes the name, status, salary and position title of all 377 White House employees,” the “projected four-year savings on the White House payroll could top $22 million.” Forbes says those savings are due to “Trump’s refusal to take a salary as well as big reductions in other areas including the absence of czars, expensive ‘fellowships,’ and spending on FLOTUS staff.” Forbes goes on to list “key findings” from the report.

Source: Trump Administration Considering Effort To Examine Climate Science.

The Washington Post (7/1, Dennis, Eilperin) reports the Trump administration is mulling “whether to launch a governmentwide effort to question the science of climate change,” a move opponents “say is an attempt to undermine the long-established consensus human activity is fueling the Earth’s rising temperatures.” The effort, “driven by Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, has sparked a debate among top Trump administration officials over whether to pursue such a strategy.” A top White House official “said that while Pruitt has expressed interest in the idea, ‘there are no formal plans within the administration to do anything about it at this time.’” Energy Secretary Rick Perry “also is involved in the effort, two officials said.” E&E Publishing (6/30) reports climate scientists are concerned “that the ‘red team, blue team’ concept could politicize scientific research and disproportionately elevate the views of a relatively small number of experts who disagree with mainstream scientists.”

The Hill (6/30, Cama) reports Pruitt and Perry “have been talking up the ‘red team, blue team’ idea in recent weeks for climate science.” Last month, Pruitt told Breitbart “that the debate would be good.” He stated, “What the American people deserve, I think, is a true, legitimate, peer-reviewed, objective, transparent discussion about CO2.” The Washington Examiner (7/2, Shepherd) also provides coverage of this story.

White House Office Of Science And Technology Policy Unstaffed.

The Hill (7/1, Manchester) reported that “the last three employees of the White House’s Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) officially left the department last week, leaving the office completely unstaffed.” The article added that the final three employees “were holdovers from the Obama administration.” The Hill wrote that “the White House’s science division has largely focused in the past on issues such as biotechnology and STEM education,” and pointed out that “there were more than 100 employees in OSTP during the Obama administration.” Speculating on the significance of the moves, the Hill added that “the lack of employees in the science-focused office could reflect how much of a priority science is for the relatively new administration.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Bank Health, Imperiled.” The New York Times (7/3, Board) editorializes that even though for the first time since the 2008 financial crisis, the Federal Reserve has determined “that all of the nation’s big banks are healthy,” to the extent that that is true, “credit belongs in large part to banking reforms enacted after the crisis. And it is precisely those reforms that are now in the cross hairs” of the Trump Administration. The Times writes, “Deregulation led to the financial crash in 2008. It's safe to assume that repeating the mistake will lead to the same result."

"Europe's Deadly Paralysis On Migration." The New York Times (7/3, Board) editorializes, "With summer's warmer weather and calmer seas, tens of thousands of desperate migrants are setting out for Europe from Libya, once again overwhelming the capacity of rescue efforts on the Mediterranean and straining the ability of Italy to cope." Since the start of the year, "some 72,000 migrants arrived in Italy from Libya," while more than 2,000 died on the way. Italy "has effectively been turned into a holding pen for migrants," and "people who try to push on from Italy into France face police officers wielding tear gas at the border." The Times says "Europe has no other option" than to open up.

Washington Post.

"What Trump Should Say When He Meets Putin For The First Time." The Washington Post (7/2) argues in an editorial that in his first meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin, President Trump "should set aside his stated admiration for Mr. Putin's strongman tendencies and instead confront the Russian president with difficult questions." Trump "cannot fail to admonish Mr. Putin for Russia's attempts to meddle in the 2016 presidential election" and must "make clear the United States will not tolerate it, period." The Post says that on this and other issues Trump "must not hesitate to be blunt."

"Trump Launches His Opening Voter Suppression Salvo." The Washington Post (7/2) editorializes that the Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity "is beginning its work under the guidance of its vice chair, Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, a Republican notorious for his efforts at vote suppression" who "has written to state election officials requesting that they hand over voter rolls, including not only names, addresses and dates of birth, but also party affiliation, voting history back to 2006 and the last four digits of Social Security numbers – all of which he says will be made public." According to the Post, "commonplace and often minor inaccuracies on the rolls, along with inconsistencies in data collection and formatting among the states, give rise to the high likelihood of false 'matches' from one roll to another, and also that many voters may be purged unfairly, without safeguards or recourse."

"Pope Francis' Toleration Of Sexually Abusive Clergy Leaves A Stain." A Washington Post (7/2) editorial says Pope Francis' tolerance of Cardinal George Pell's alleged incidents of sexual assault is the latest sign that Francis' "muscular, unequivocal and truly 'zero tolerance' stance against pedophile priests and their enablers is not a priority for him." The Post says through his tolerance, Pope Francis is ensuring "that the disgrace of clergy sex abuse will continue to be a stain on the Catholic Church."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Senate's Tax Panic." The Wall Street Journal (7/2) says in an editorial that support is growing among Senate Republicans for leaving the ACA's 3.8 percent surtax on capital gains, dividends, interest, and similar forms of income in place. The Journal says that the GOP vowed to repeal all of the ACA's tax increases, which it says impact the middle class as well as the rich, and that Republican should not alter that stance.

"Trump's Signals To China." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/2) says new US sanctions on Chinese entities assisting North Korea and the recently-approved $1.4 billion arms sale to Taiwan evidence the Administration's growing frustration with Beijing's unwillingness to pressure Pyongyang over its nuclear program. The Journal expresses support for both measures, and says China's continued failure to address the growing North Korean threat may be a miscalculation of how far the Administration will go.

"Pruitt's Clean Water Break." The Wall Street Journal (7/2) briefly editorializes that despite President Trump's difficulty pushing legislation through Congress, he has been successful rolling back former President Obama's so-called pen-and-phone lawmaking, most recently in the EPA's rescindment of the Obama-era unilateral rewrite of the Clean Water Act last week. The Journal says the Obama-era EPA's redefinition of the "waters of the United States" under the Clean Water Act employed a number of arbitrary thresholds – in part empowered by Justice Anthony Kennedy in a 2006 case conceiving the new "significant nexus" standard. EPA Administrator's announcement that the agency will adopt a new rule "in accordance with Supreme Court decisions, agency guidance, and longstanding practice" that would "return power to the states and provide regulatory certainty" is a testament to the limitations of pen-and-phone rule-making, says the Journal.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Dollar Gets Squeezed From All Sides
With ISIS On The Run, An Unexpected Leader Emerges In Iraq
Senators Face Pushback From Governors On The Health Bill
US Navy Patrols Near Disputed Island In South China Sea

New York Times:

Program To Spur Low-Income Housing Is Keeping Cities Segregated
With Beaches Empty, Christie Wages One More Fight
Trump Foot Soldier Sidelined Under Glare Of Russia Inquiry
An Addict, A Confessed Killer And Now A Debut Author
Wealthy Qatar Weathers Siege, But Personal And Political Costs Grow

Washington Post:

'They Are Not Treated Like Humans'
Trump Sets Off Furor By Beating Figure Depicting News Media
Ex-Slave's Progeny Lie In Digital Age's Path
Good Dog, Good Therapist?
Trump Quiet On Revamp Of ACA

Financial Times:

Trump's CNN Smackdown Opens New Front In Media War
City Team To Press Brussels For Free-Trade Deal
Iran To Sign \$4.8bn Gas Deal With Total
EU Considers Tough New Competition Powers

Washington Times:

Supreme Court Blockbusters: Gorsuch Addition Will Bring On Bigger Cases
Republican Rebukes: Trump Using Twitter Dangerously To 'Weaponize Distrust' In Media
Trump's War Of Annihilation Strategy Against Islamic State Frees Military To Quickly Seize Territory
Trump's Sober View Of Iranian Theocracy Lends Energy To Dissident Rally In France
Boy Scout Troop 100 Celebrates Century Of Firefighting, Police Duties, Building Character In D.C.
Voter Integrity Panel's Vice Chairman Questions States' 'Idiotic' Withholding Of Information

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Trump-Media Feud; Denver-Plane Engine Fire; Pennsylvania-Home Explosion; Philadelphia-Road Rage Killing Trial; Mosul Assault; Syria-Car Bombs; Bronx-Hospital Shooting; Severe Weather; China-College Girl Kidnapping; Holiday Online Shopping; Washington State-Amtrak Derailing; Chicken Salad Recall; Drugged Racing Dogs; Wave-Wildfires; Police-Boy Help.

CBS: Trump-Media Feud; Trump Media, Healthcare-Expert Opinion; Holiday Travel; State Budgets Impasse; Philadelphia-Road Rage Killing Trial; Denver-Plane Engine Fire; Raqqa Assault; Climate Change-Coral Farming; Needless Flu Vaccine; Grizzly Bear Product Testing.

NBC: Trump-Media Feud; Philadelphia-Road Rage Killing Trial; Washington State-Amtrak Derailing; Denver-Plane Engine Fire; Syrian Refugee Camp Fire; Wimbledon-Security; Minimum Wage Increase; State Budgets Impasse; Cruise Ship Crime; American Wild Horses Protection; Canada-150 Anniversary; Sunscreen; California-Criminal Rehabilitation.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Media Feud – 11 minutes, 35 seconds
Denver-Plane Engine Fire – 1 minute, 40 seconds
Washington State-Amtrak Derailing – 35 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-Media Feud; Denver-Plane Engine Fire; State Budgets Impasse; Illinois-Income Tax Increase.

CBS: Trump-Media Feud; Qatar-Diplomacy Crisis; Trump-China, Japan Phone Calls; Trump-Putin

Meeting; Washington State-Amtrak Derailing; Small Airplane Crash; Wall Street News.

FOX: Trump-Media Feud; Healthcare Reform Plan; Wall Street News.

NPR: Trump-Media Feud; Mali-ISIS Abduction Video; Syrian Refugee Camp Fire.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — No scheduled public events announced.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No scheduled public events announced.

US Senate: 6:00 PM Senate meets in pro forma session Location: TBD <http://www.senate.gov/>
On recess until 10 July.

US House: 11:00 AM House of Representatives meets in pro forma session Location: TBD
<http://www.house.gov/>
On recess until 10 July.

Other: New White House chief usher assumes role – New White House Chief Usher Timothy Harleth begins role, moving from a position as Trump International Hotel Washington DC chief of rooms * Chief usher oversees over 90 White House Residence staff Location: TBD
<http://www.whitehouse.gov/> <https://twitter.com/whitehouse>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, July 10, 2017
Date: Monday, July 10, 2017 7:01:40 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JULY 10, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- The Log (CA): Interior Secretary Zinke Releases Boating Infrastructure Grant Funds.
- Pahrump (NV) Valley Times: Interior Secretary Zinke Says He'll Tour Nevada National Monuments This Month.
- Law360: Zinke Appoints Deputy Assistant Secretary For Indian Affairs.
- Washington Post: The Energy 202: Can Zinke Boost More Oil And Gas Drilling On Public Lands?.
- Associated Press: West Virginia, Tennessee Given Battlefield Protection Funds.
- Associated Press: Congress Returns To Battles Over Healthcare, Budget.
- Idaho Statesman: Now Is Not The Time To Undermine West's Collaborative Conservation Work On Sage Grouse.

- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Tribune Editorial: Happy Trails, Outdoor Retailers, Until We Meet Again.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Fake American Indian Art Threatens Livelihoods.
- Lawmakers Hopeful For Lumbee Recognition.
- Federal Agency Would Have Rejected Wampanoag Remand.

Bureau Of Land Management

- U.S. News & World Report: Early Plan Out For Huge Wyoming Gas Field.
- USA Today: New Species Of Toad Discovered In US For 1st Time In 50 Years.
- Riverside (CA) Press Enterprise: Will Thousands Of Wild Horses Die? That Depends On Ken Calvert, Advocates Say.
- Washington Times: Retrial Set For Defendants In Bundy Standoff Case In Nevada.
- The Hill: Congress Should Pass Resilient Federal Forests Act To Address Wildfire Threat.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- BOEM Lowers Shallow-water Royalty Rate For Lease Sale 249.
- Hogan Says He Opposes Offshore Drilling As State Raises Concerns About Seismic Testing.
- Plans For U.S. Wind Farms Run Into Headwinds.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- U.S. News & World Report: State Wildlife Officials Review Feds' Plan For Wolf Recovery.
- Denver Post: Rocky Flats Refuge Critics Dig In Over Fears That Relocated Prairie Dogs Could Unearth Radioactive Materials.
- Burlington (VT) Free Press: Fish Hatchery Re-opens In Bethel.
- U.S. News & World Report: Ohio Air National Guard Drops Plans For Large Wind Turbine.
- Rapid City (SD) Journal: Debate Rages Over Black Hills Bird.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Chicago Museum Gets $82K Grant To Preserve WWII Submarine.
- Washington Post: Where's The Water? In The Nation's Capital, Dry Fountains Mar The Landscape.
- Arkansas Democrat Gazette: War Memorial Plans Draw Scrutiny In D.C..
- U.S. News & World Report: Break-Prone Water Pipe Across Grand Canyon Needs Replacement.
- Portland (ME) Press Herald: Since 2006, Visitation At Acadia Has Gone Up A Whopping 55%.
- Arizona Republic: Page, NPS Consider Ways To Manage Hyper-popular Horseshoe Bend.
- Montgomery (WV) Herald: Turkey Spur Overlook Reopened.
- U.S. News & World Report: Bison Injures Hiker In ND's Theodore Roosevelt National Park.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Beijing Air Launches Service To Saipan.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Casino Opens.
- Samoa News: Canneries Nervous With Tuna Prices Rising Worldwide.
- St. Croix Source: The V.I. Budget Crisis: Part 13: Finding New Revenues.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): WAPA No Longer Accepting Applications For Net Metering In STT-STJ District.
- Marianas Variety: Governor Asks New DLNR Chief To Look Into Brown Tree Snake, Betel Nut Issues.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: 'We Must Prove Efforts To Hire US-eligible Workers'.
- Marianas Variety: Governor Says Extension Of CW Program Is The Priority Right Now.

Top National News

- New York Times: After Promise Of Damaging Information On Clinton, Trump's Son Met With Russian Lawyer.
- ABC: G-20 Communique Shows Division On Climate, Agreement On Trade.
- ABC: Trump, China's Xi Discuss North Korean Threat.
- NBC: Tillerson: Trump Pressed Putin On Election Meddling, Agreed On Syrian Ceasefire.
- The Hill: Media Analyses: Republicans Face Uphill Climb To Pass Healthcare Plan Before Recess.
- Associated Press: McConnell Plans Fresh Healthcare Bill In "About A Week."

- ABC: US Adds 222,000 Jobs In June, More Americans Looking For Work.
- Wall Street Journal: "Big Six" Working On Tax Reform Framework For September.
- ABC: Mnuchin: Administration Focused On Enacting Middle Class Tax Cuts This Year.
- Wall Street Journal: IRS Proposes Changes To Eight Regulations.
- Wall Street Journal: Administration May Alter Fiduciary Rule.
- Politico: Politico Analysis: Air Traffic Control Privatization Faces Hurdles Despite Trump's Support.

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Interior Secretary Zinke Releases Boating Infrastructure Grant Funds.

The Log \(CA\) (7/9) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "in a ceremony held at Yorktown, Virginia, shared a $14.7 million check with Boat Owners Association of The United States (BoatUS) Vice President Heather Lougheed, who accepted on behalf of America's recreational boaters." The figure "represents 2017-18 funding for the federal Boating Infrastructure Grant (B.I.G.) program, which funnels user taxes paid by boaters to develop transient boating projects."

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (7/7, Lucas) reports that "prior to the announcement, Zinke held a round table discussion that included Rep. Scott Taylor, R-Virginia Beach, York County Board of Supervisors Chairwoman Sheila Noll and local boaters and fishers."

Coverage by the AP was picked up by the Idaho Statesman (7/9), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/9), U.S. News & World Report (7/9), the Wichita \(KS\) Eagle (7/9), the Wichita \(KS\) Eagle (7/9), the Belleville \(IL\) News-Democrat (7/9), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/9), McClatchy (7/9), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/9).

Additional coverage was provided by the Idaho Press Tribune (7/7), the Danbury \(CT\) News Times (7/7, Koerting), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (7/7, Goad), the Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (7/7, Sikes), the New Hampshire Union Leader (7/8), the Sevierville \(TN\) Mountain Press (7/9), WAGM-TV Presque Isle \(ME\) Presque Isle, ME (7/7, Ezzy), WCAX-TV Burlington \(VT\) Burlington, VT (7/7), and KCRG-TV Cedar Rapids \(IA\) Cedar Rapids, IA (7/7, Felton).

Interior Secretary Zinke Says He'll Tour Nevada National Monuments This Month.

The Pahrump \(NV\) Valley Times (7/7, Breaun) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "didn't stop at any national monuments during his first official visit to Nevada, but he promised to return for a tour of Gold Butte and Basin and Range before the end of July." According to the article, "during an event in Pahrump on June 26, Zinke said he wants to see the two Nevada monuments from the ground and talk to stakeholders before he decides whether the designations should be reduced, rescinded or left intact." Zinke "said he plans to consult with state and county officials, business groups, tribal representatives and others."

Campaign Against Trump's Threat To US National Monuments Gathers Pace. The Guardian \(UK\) (7/7, Choat) reports that a total of national monuments are "at risk of being reduced in size or losing their designation altogether following an unprecedented presidential order issued in April." Commenters have "until Monday to voice their opinions before the Interior Department makes its recommendations."

Additional coverage was provided by the Taos \(NM\) News (7/9), the Aspen \(CO\) Times (7/7), the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (7/7, DeMille), Courthouse News (7/7, Klasfeld), and KGO-TV San Francisco \(CA\) San Francisco (7/9).

Three Arizona Congressmen Want Trump To Eliminate These State Monuments. The Arizona Republic (7/9, Frank) reports that "three Arizona congressmen are asking the Trump Administration to eliminate four of the state's national monuments, including the Grand Canyon-Parashant National Monument and the Sonoran Desert National Monument." Rep. Trent Franks, Rep. Andy Biggs and Rep. Paul Gosar were "among 14 members of Congress who signed onto a letter sent June 30 to Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke." The letter "asked Zinke to consider a 'total rescission' of the Grand Canyon-Parashant, Ironwood Forest, Sonoran Desert and Vermilion Cliffs national monuments."

Additional coverage was provided by Arizona Public Media (7/7, Conover).

99 Percent Of Comments Tell Trump To Keep Maine's Monument. The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/8, Sambides) reports that "more than 99 percent of the responses that have mentioned Maine's Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument favor keeping it, according to one of the state's largest environmental organizations." Lisa Pohlmann, executive director of National Resources Council of Maine, said that "all but 67 of the 192,052 comments about Maine's monument that were submitted to Interior's website from May 11 to July 4 supported it."

Our National Monuments Could Disappear If We Don't Act Now. For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (7/7, Peterman, Contributor), Audrey Peterman, a member of the Next 100 Coalition, writes that "the future and integrity of how our nation protects our public lands and waters is under unprecedented attack." Peterman argues that "the elimination or reduction" of Antiquities Act "would be a blow to the communities who spent decades advocating for special protections for these lands." Peterman warns that "without a public voice and a vigorous national conversation, our treasured national monuments could disappear forever."

National Monuments Are All-American. The Huffington Post (7/7, Clark, Contributor), Defenders of Wildlife President and CEO Jamie Clark writes that the Trump Administration's "brazen attempt to resize, reduce protections, or outright eliminate national monuments is a sellout of our public lands and waters to special interests." Clark asserts that "every one of the monuments under review is critical to conservation." Clark further argues that "not only is this review unprecedented, it is also contrary to overwhelming public support for conserving our wildlife and their habitat." She concludes that "the only acceptable outcome of President Trump's review is the continued preservation and stewardship of our national monuments—every single one of them."

Time Is Running Out To Stop Trump From Opening California Marine Sanctuaries To Oil Drilling. David Helvarg, executive director of the conservation and policy organization Blue Frontier, wrote in an opinion piece for the Los Angeles Times (7/7, Helvarg) that US citizens have until July 26 to register your support for America's marine monuments and sanctuaries with the Department of Commerce. In April, the President Trump "ordered a review of 27 monuments that had been declared or enlarged over the last 20 years" and then "doubled down with instructions to reconsider recently set aside marine sanctuaries." Helvarg says "particular consideration out to be paid to our marine sanctuaries," and that the "only activities that are prohibited throughout the sanctuaries are ocean dumping, seabed mining and oil drilling." Helvarg contends the Trump Administration "doesn't seem to get it, or to understand that lost 'opportunity costs' related to oil drilling, dumping and mining represent gained opportunity benefits for coastal economies."

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by the Huffington Post (7/8, Russ, Contributor), the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (7/9, Boster), and the Daily Beast (7/9, Mcnearney).

Additional Commentary. Additional commentary appeared in the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/9, Cornell), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/9, Pearce), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Sun (7/8, Douglas), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (7/9, Simon, Martinez), the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (7/7, Macker), the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) Tribune (7/7, Harmon), the Providence \(RI\) Journal (7/7, Anderson), the Idaho Falls \(ID\) Post Register (7/9), the Santa Fe New Mexican (7/8), the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (7/9, Jewel), the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (7/8, Olsen), and the Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\) (7/7, Bartimus).

Zinke Appoints Deputy Assistant Secretary For Indian Affairs.

Law360 (7/7, Powell) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "announced Thursday the appointment of a Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma citizen with an extensive background in tribal finance as deputy assistant secretary for policy and economic development at the Bureau of Indian Affairs." Gavin Clarkson assumed the role on June 11.

The Energy 202: Can Zinke Boost More Oil And Gas Drilling On Public Lands?.

The Washington Post (7/7, Grandoni) analyzes if Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's order to accelerate the permitting process will boost oil and gas drilling on federal lands. The Post notes that most sites lack data, and "have to be physically surveyed before the agency grants a permit." What's more, the "permit is only one step in the process," and "it's unclear how much interest there will be in developing the public lands given how low energy prices remain."

In an editorial, the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/9) welcomes Zinke's "order to speed up approval of permits to drill for oil and natural gas on public land.” The paper notes that the Bureau of Land Management’s permit-approval process has long been “in need of an overhaul.” It argues that “Thursday’s order, which aims to reduce both the backlog of permit applications and the number of days to approve them, is a sensible response to a long-running problem.”

Additional coverage of the order was provided by Fox News (7/7, Corke), the Daily Caller (7/7, Pearce), Utah Policy (7/9), the Mat-Su Valley \(AK\) Frontiersman (7/9), the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (7/6, Mose), the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (7/7, Gruver), World Oil (7/7), and Public News Service (7/7).

West Virginia, Tennessee Given Battlefield Protection Funds.

The AP (7/10) reports that West Virginia and Tennessee are “among the states receiving part of $7.2 million in grants to help identify, preserve and protect historic battlefields.” The announcement was made by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke last Wednesday. The National Park Service “said in a news release the projects include 19 battlefields threatened by urban and suburban development in nine states.” The agency “said the projects cover nearly 1,200 acres of battlefield land as part of the American Battlefield Land Acquisition Grants program.”

Congress Returns To Battles Over Healthcare, Budget.

The AP (7/9, Fram) reports on Congress’ agenda as lawmakers return from their July 4 recess. Of note, Sen. Lisa Murkowski and Sen. Maria Cantwell “have a bill to speed federal approval of projects to export liquefied natural gas and boost other energy sources and efficiency measures.” The article notes that “the legislation also sets up a land and water conservation fund.”

Now Is Not The Time To Undermine West’s Collaborative Conservation Work On Sage Grouse.

In an op-ed for the Idaho Statesman (7/7, Brooks), Brian Brooks, the executive director of the Idaho Wildlife Federation, writes “that an unprecedented collaboration among local, state and federal officials, landowners, sportsmen, recreationists, energy industries and other stakeholders resulted in conservation plans across the West devoted to providing a sustainable future” for the greater sage-grouse and sagebrush country. But now, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “ordered a ‘review’ of the conservation plans by his specially appointed federal team,” and “as part of that review, the secretary has suggested shifting the focus of these plans from restoring and conserving sage grouse habitat to setting population objectives that could be achieved by such ‘creative approaches’ as captive breeding.” Brooks points out that “even as Zinke complains of top-down schemes imposed on the West, he and his hand-picked team would be serving special interests in Washington, D.C., by gutting plans that were driven by local stakeholders and by science.”

Tribune Editorial: Happy Trails, Outdoor Retailers, Until We Meet Again.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/8) editorializes that Utah has lost the Outdoor Retailer show “over a fight they essentially have already lost.” The paper notes that “despite a massive push by Gov. Gary Herbert, the Utah Legislature and Utah’s congressional delegation, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke did not recommend that the Bears Ears monument be rescinded.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Fake American Indian Art Threatens Livelihoods.

The AP (7/8, Lee) reports that “the recent spread of fake Native American art and jewelry has shown the need to update how the federal government protects tribal artists from fraud that undercuts the value of their work, according to two U.S. senators who gathered suggestions for reforms on Friday.” Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich “convened a hearing in the American Indian arts hub of Santa Fe, where federal law enforcement officials and leading Native American artists described a disheartening influx of counterfeit jewelry, weavings and contemporary art knock-offs.” Udall “said he hopes to propel efforts to modernize the Indian Arts and Crafts Act to cope with sophisticated international jewelry rings that copy Native American designs and police online sales.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Santa Fe New Mexican (7/8, Garcia) and PBS NewsHour (7/9, Etman).

Lawmakers Hopeful For Lumbee Recognition.

The Winston-Salem \(NC\) Journal (7/9) reports that "lawmakers and members of the Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina said they are hopeful the tribe will receive its long-fought federal recognition." Rep. Robert Pittenger "met with Harvey Godwin, chairman of the tribe, ahead of the Lumbee Homecoming State of the Tribe address Friday." Pittenger and Sen. Richard Burr "filed bills in May to grant the tribe federal recognition." Pittenger "said there is a meeting next week within leadership to discuss what can be done in the House of Representatives to move the bill."

Additional coverage was provided by the Fayetteville \(NC\) Observer (7/8, DeVane).

Federal Agency Would Have Rejected Wampanoag Remand.

The Falmouth \(MA\) Enterprise (7/7, Houghton) reports that "while much of Mashpee was waiting on a ruling on June 25 regarding the US Department of the Interior's ruling on the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe's land status, an official with the department had already made his decision." James E. Cason, associate deputy secretary with the Interior Department, "drafted a ruling on the remand that was shared with the tribe on June 19." Cason found, "through a process known in the department as M-37029, that the tribe could not meet the Indian Reorganization Act's first definition of Indian, nor the second definition as interpreted by Judge William Young in the US District Court, Massachusetts." Therefore, "he could not grant the tribe's land-into-trust application under either definition."

Bureau Of Land Management

Early Plan Out For Huge Wyoming Gas Field.

The AP (7/7) reports that the Bureau of Land Management released a draft environmental impact study for the Normally Pressured Lance Field in western Wyoming. The project, which could be one of the largest natural gas fields in the nation, covers 220 square miles and could support up to 3,500 wells. Jonah Energy is planning to drill for 5.25 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. The BLM said the project would create 700 full time jobs and bring in $2.2 billion in royalties.

New Species Of Toad Discovered In US For 1st Time In 50 Years.

USA Today (7/7, Rice) reports that "scientists this week announced the discovery of the Dixie Valley toad that lives only in a small, 2-square-mile area of Churchill County in northern Nevada." Scientists in the study "said the new species is already threatened by the proposed development of a nearby geothermal energy facility, the Dixie Meadows Geothermal Utilization Project." The Bureau of Land Management is "reviewing the proposed facility."

Will Thousands Of Wild Horses Die? That Depends On Ken Calvert, Advocates Say.

The Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (7/9, Horseman) reports that "wild horse advocates say proposed language in the fiscal 2018 budget would open the door for the mass killing of horses roaming millions of acres of federal land." They're calling on Rep. Ken Calvert "to strip the language out of the spending bill, which is being crafted this month." In an email July 5, "Calvert gave no indication of where he stood." He said, "The massive and growing number of wild horses and burros on our public lands throughout the West is a tremendous challenge. The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) working together with Congress and other interested parties need to find long-term strategies to address this imbalance."

Retrial Set For Defendants In Bundy Standoff Case In Nevada.

The AP (7/9, Ritter) reports that "federal prosecutors in Nevada are about to try again to prove that four men should spend decades in prison for bringing assault-style weapons to a confrontation that stopped government agents from rounding up cattle near Cliven Bundy's ranch more than three years ago." Jury selection starts Monday in Las Vegas "for the conspiracy retrial of four defendants whose cases were left undecided when jurors weren't able to reach a verdict in April." The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/9, Wilson) reports that "the retrial follows a mistrial in April, when jurors deadlocked on 50 of the 60 counts against the first batch of defendants in the three-part case. Prosecutors eventually plan to try 17 men on charges resulting from the April 2014 armed standoff between individual rights activists and Bureau of Land Management agents, who came to Bunkerville to seize Bundy's cattle from public land."

Congress Should Pass Resilient Federal Forests Act To Address Wildfire Threat.

For the "Congress" blog of The Hill (7/7, Smith, Contributor), Nick Smith, executive director of Healthy Forests, Healthy Communities, writes that "the 2017 wildfire season is reigniting a national discussion on the causes of catastrophic wildfires and the solutions that are needed to protect forests, property and human lives in the future." Smith argues that the bipartisan Resilient Federal Forests Act is "a balanced solution now moving through Congress that will help restore overgrown and fire-prone forests, while creating new jobs across the nation." The legislation gives the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management "the tools and resources they need to better manage our public lands." Smith encourages Congress "to pass this important legislation that will help our federal land agencies increase the pace and scale of forest management projects that mitigate the impacts of drought, climate change and other challenges to our public lands."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

BOEM Lowers Shallow-water Royalty Rate For Lease Sale 249.

Offshore Magazine (7/7) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has "set the royalty rate at 12.5% for leases located in water depths less than 200 m (656 ft) in the proposed Gulf of Mexico Sale 249." BOEM "said the reduction reflects recent market conditions and the marginal nature of remaining GoM shelf resources." Lease Sale 249 is currently scheduled for Aug. 16.

Additional coverage was provided by Maritime Executive (7/9) and World Oil (7/7).

Hogan Says He Opposes Offshore Drilling As State Raises Concerns About Seismic Testing.

The Baltimore Sun (7/7, Dance) reports that Gov. Larry Hogan "said this week he's against gas drilling off of Maryland's coast, and as President Donald Trump's administration considers seismic testing to search for energy reserves, state officials are asking the federal government to more closely study its impact." Mark Belton, Hogan's secretary of Natural Resources, "sent a request to federal wildlife officials asking for a review of how seismic testing could harm whales, dolphins and turtles, commercial fisheries and recreational activity."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Post (7/9, Dance) and the Annapolis \(MD\) Capital Gazette (7/7, Dance).

Additional coverage of offshore drilling was provided by the Gainesville \(FL\) Sun (7/10), the Northwest Florida Daily News (7/9), the Ocala \(FL\) Star-Banner (7/8), the Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (7/7, Stauffer), and NJ News (7/7).

Plans For U.S. Wind Farms Run Into Headwinds.

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Ailworth) reports that as the offshore wind industry turns to America, red tape surrounding federal waters and the lack of US-based deep-water turbine producers pose challenges. Further, the Block Island wind farm – which sits off Rhode Island's coast – currently generates power for 24.4 cents per kilowatt-hour, compared to well under 10 cents per kilowatt-hour in Europe. Still, the Journal says developers are hopeful that supply chain, regulatory, and cost-related hurdles will wane as more projects establish themselves this side of the Atlantic. Indeed, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo has called for 2.4 gigawatts of offshore wind power to be developed by 2030, and Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker signed a law last year for the state to add 1.6 gigawatts by June 2027.

Fish And Wildlife Service

State Wildlife Officials Review Feds' Plan For Wolf Recovery.

The AP (7/8) reports that "state wildlife officials are reviewing the federal government's plan for recovering endangered wolves that once roamed parts of New Mexico, Arizona and northern Mexico." A draft was recently released by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "as the agency works to meet a court-ordered deadline to have the plan completed by the end of November."

In an op-ed for the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/9, Robinson), Michael J. Robinson of the Center for Biological Diversity, criticizes the plan. According to Robinson, "the plan would strip wolves of federal protection well before their survival and recovery is secure, turning over management to state game departments that are hostile to their very existence."

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/7, Walcher), Greg Walcher, president of the Natural Resources Group, writes that “the saga of the Mexican wolf’s endangered listing, and subsequent federal management, perfectly illustrates why the federal approach to wildlife conservation doesn’t work.” The new plan “does include specific de-listing criteria, as Western States have advocated for 15 years,” and Walcher commends the FWS “for finally defining the light at the end of the tunnel.” However, “beyond wolf population numbers, predictably, the plan also proposes ongoing federal monitoring for the next 35 years, at a cost of $58.275 million.”

Additional coverage was provided by the El Defensor Chieftain \(NM\) (7/7) and the Eastern Arizona Courier (7/8, Showers).

Rocky Flats Refuge Critics Dig In Over Fears That Relocated Prairie Dogs Could Unearth Radioactive Materials.

The Denver Post (7/7, Aguilar) reports that “a group fighting next year’s opening of Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge is lambasting a plan to relocate prairie dogs to the place where nuclear weapons components were assembled for nearly 40 years, claiming the burrowing animals could bring to the surface long-buried radioactive contaminants.” However, “officials in charge of the refuge say the warnings are without merit, given that the 200 or so prairie dogs that may be moved to Rocky Flats from Longmont wouldn’t be placed anywhere near the actual site where plutonium triggers were made for the nation’s nuclear weapons arsenal.” Dave Lucas, refuge manager for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, “said the arriving animals would be located next to an existing prairie dog colony along State Highway 128, on Superior’s southern boundary.”

Fish Hatchery Re-opens In Bethel.

The Burlington \(VT\) Free Press (7/7) reports that “devastated six years ago by flooding from Tropical Storm Irene, the White River National Fish Hatchery in Bethel on Friday resumed operations, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” The hatchery is “poised to help restore populations of landlocked Atlantic salmon and lake trout throughout the region, a news release from the service states.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (7/9, Ring, Press).

Ohio Air National Guard Drops Plans For Large Wind Turbine.

The AP (7/8) reports that “bird advocates are hailing the National Guard Bureau’s decision not to build a commercial-scale wind turbine at Camp Perry near Ohio’s western Lake Erie shoreline.” The decision last month has prompted the American Bird Conservancy and the Black Swamp Bird Observatory “to drop a federal lawsuit over the proposed 198-foot-tall wind turbine.” According to the article, “advocates were upset that the turbine’s foundation was already installed before the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service produced an opinion about the turbine’s potential effects on birds and bats.”

Debate Rages Over Black Hills Bird.

The Rapid City \(SD\) Journal (7/9, Tupper) reports that “with a decision forthcoming on proposed protections for a rare species of woodpecker found in the Black Hills, a new population estimate for the bird has provoked warring reactions from opposing sides of the debate.” According to the article, “a master’s thesis presented in May by Elizabeth Matseur of the University of Columbia-Missouri estimated a population of 2,920 black-backed woodpeckers in the Black Hills in 2015, and 3,439 in 2016.” Those figures are “about three to four times higher than the estimate included in a still-pending 2012 petition to list the birds as a threatened or endangered species.”

National Park Service

Chicago Museum Gets $82K Grant To Preserve WWII Submarine.

The AP (7/8) reports that the National Park Service has “awarded a grant to Chicago’s Museum of Science and Industry to help preserve and expand access to its U-505 submarine.” The NPS “announced the roughly $82,000 Maritime Heritage Grant on Friday.” The award is “one of 13 grants totaling more than $1.7 million the government is giving for projects that teach and preserve items related to U.S. maritime history.”

WCBC-AM Cumberland, MD (7/7) reports that Acting National Park Service Director Michael T. Reynolds said, “Protecting our nation’s maritime history is an important part of the National Park Service's mission to share America's story. These grants will support efforts to conserve important parts of our maritime history and educate students of all ages."

Where's The Water? In The Nation's Capital, Dry Fountains Mar The Landscape.

The Washington Post (7/9, Hendrix) reports that the National Park Service is "attempting to bring back another dormant fountain: the Bolivar Memorial, which sits directly outside the front door of the Interior Department." In his confirmation hearing, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "cited the need to fix Washington fountains as part of addressing the $12.5-billion maintenance list at parks throughout the country." NPS "staff members learned that their new boss had taken an interest in the Bolivar fountain, which is visible from his office."

War Memorial Plans Draw Scrutiny In D.C..

The Arkansas Democrat Gazette (7/10, Lockwood) reports that "backers of a new World War I memorial are eager to break ground, but first they have to consult with a number of federal bodies and comply with a thick stack of government rules and regulations." On Thursday, "they're scheduled to appear before the National Capital Planning Commission, which must sign off on the project before it can advance." The article notes that "the proposal is drawing extra attention because it will be placed in Pershing Park, which is eligible, on its own, for listing on the National Register of Historic Places."

Break-Prone Water Pipe Across Grand Canyon Needs Replacement.

The AP (7/7, Davenport) reports that "Grand Canyon National Park officials plan to replace much of a decades-old, problem-plagued pipeline system that's forced officials to ask hotels and residents to wash dishes and laundry less frequently and backpackers to drink treated creek water." According to the article, "preliminary plans call for ferrying pipe pieces and equipment by helicopter into the canyon to replace miles of pipeline serving the South Rim." The National Park Service is "seeking public comment on several plans to replace the pipe before reviewing how the plans could impact the environment."

Since 2006, Visitation At Acadia Has Gone Up A Whopping 55%.

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (7/9, Schaufler) reports that Acadia National Park officials and "partners are working on a transportation plan that could alleviate congestion – potentially relying on approaches such as parking space reservations at peak times and increased bus service." According to the article, "growing challenges with vehicular congestion and trail compaction signal the need to address a broader concern – Acadia's long-term carrying capacity."

Page, NPS Consider Ways To Manage Hyper-popular Horseshoe Bend.

The Arizona Republic (7/7, Craven) reports that Horseshoe Bend has "received such a dramatic influx of visitors over the past year that the National Park Service is working with Page city officials to better manage the scenic overlook." According to the article, "options range from Page selling or swapping the land that contains the parking lot to charging a fee that could fund improvements." The article says that "a proposed $10 admission fee to Horseshoe Bend in the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area could go into effect as early as spring 2018."

Turkey Spur Overlook Reopened.

The Montgomery \(WV\) Herald (7/8) reports that the National Park Service, in partnership with Friends of New River Gorge National River announced "the reopening of the popular Turkey Spur overlook, located in the Grandview area of New River Gorge National River." On June 30, "an opening ceremony was held to thank donors and to officially reopen the overlook to the public." Park superintendent Lizzie Watts said, "We are so grateful for the significant contribution of both funds and labor from our Friends group, as well as from many community members and businesses."

Bison Injures Hiker In ND's Theodore Roosevelt National Park.

The AP (7/8) reports that "officials at Theodore Roosevelt National Park in North Dakota are reminding visitors to keep their distance from bison and other large animals." The National Park Service "says a visitor was injured by a bison in the park's North Unit on June 30."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Beijing Air Launches Service To Saipan.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (7/7, Cabrera) reports that “Beijing Capital Airlines landed for the first time in the CNMI yesterday when its Airbus A330 aircraft with 240 passengers and crew flew in from Hangzhou, China and touched down at the Francisco C. Ada-Saipan International Airport at 2:45pm.” Marianas Visitors Authority marketing manager Bruce Bateman, who was “present at the arrival area to greet the arriving passengers,” said, “Tourism drives the CNMI economy. We need tourism as our lifeblood and so we are happy to welcome all these tourists that come in. Hopefully new developers came along with the passengers who arrive today and make new hotels for us.”

Casino Opens.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (7/7, Encinares) reports that “without much fanfare, Imperial Pacific International (CNMI) LLC officially moved its casino operation to the unfinished Imperial Pacific Resort across the street, while closing down its temporary training site inside the T Galleria.” The article says that “although there was no official opening ceremony, a large number of tourists showed up at the new casino site, resulting in increased foot traffic within the vicinity and creating more business for businesses in the area.”

Canneries Nervous With Tuna Prices Rising Worldwide.

Samoa News (7/6, Mereghetti) reports that “tuna prices are currently on the rise across all markets, with canneries worried this could be a long-term trend.” According to the article, “sustainability measures introduced in the Indian Ocean are expected to cause prices to increase in the second half of the year, as the EU fleet is closing in on the yellowfin quota introduced this year for the first time.”

The V.I. Budget Crisis: Part 13: Finding New Revenues.

St. Croix Source (7/4, Kossler) reports that “with a crippling budget crisis, credit downgrades and lenders balking at buying V.I. bonds, getting new revenue sources online has been a high priority.” Gov. Kenneth Mapp has “asked for and the Legislature gave him some new taxes to help reduce the structural deficit.” However, the article proposes that “there is one large untapped source of potential tax revenue: Cannabis.”

WAPA No Longer Accepting Applications For Net Metering In STT-STJ District.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (7/1) reports that “the Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority advises the public that it will no longer accept new applications for net metering in the St. Thomas – St. John district since the allowable capacity has been reached.” With 961 homes contributing solar electricity to the STT/STJ grid, WAPA gave notification that the 10 megawatt limit (from 2009 law) has been reached, and no further contributors will be accepted.

Governor Asks New DLNR Chief To Look Into Brown Tree Snake, Betel Nut Issues.

Marianas Variety (7/4, Villahermosa) reports that Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres “swore in Anthony T. Benavente as the new secretary of the Department of Lands and Natural Resources on Monday morning, and asked him to address the brown tree snake issue and the betel nut shortage.” Regarding brown tree snakes, Torres said: “It’s a critical issue, and our community needs to stick together. If you spot a snake please go after it and try to kill it or report it so our department can go out there. If we allow brown tree snakes to come onto our island they will devastate our bird population and cause all kinds of problems.” The governor added, “The second issue that I want him to look into is related to betel nut. I have spoken to some officials in Hawaii, and they will come in and see if we have problems with our betel nut trees. We will also ask our neighboring islands in Micronesia like Guam to be more careful when sending cargo here because of possible betel nut tree devastation, and that’s our livelihood, too, so we need to be vigilant.”

‘We Must Prove Efforts To Hire US-eligible Workers’.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (7/6, Cabrera) reports that “more than anything else, the burden of showing Congress that the CNMI is doing its part to recruit, hire, and retain U.S. eligible workers falls on Commonwealth employers themselves,” according to Marian Aldan Pierce, “the guest speaker in yesterday’s membership meeting of the Saipan Chamber of Commerce at the Hibiscus Hall of the Fiesta Resort & Spa Saipan.” She said that “by showing Congress that the CNMI is doing its best to hire U.S. workers, only then will it listen to pleas of Commonwealth employers to be allowed to continue hiring foreign workers.”

Additional coverage was provided by Marianas Variety (7/6, Villahermosa).

Governor Says Extension Of CW Program Is The Priority Right Now.

Marianas Variety (7/6, Villahermosa) reports that Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres “said their priority right now is to push for the extension of the CW program for another 10 years.” Currently, the program is set to expire in Dec. 2019. In an interview on Monday, the governor “said he met with a working group a couple of weeks ago, and they are now finalizing legislation that will be submitted to the office of U.S. Congressman Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan for review and introduction.”

Top National News

After Promise Of Damaging Information On Clinton, Trump’s Son Met With Russian Lawyer.

Media coverage of a report that President Trump’s son Donald Jr. met with a Russian lawyer after that lawyer promised damaging information on Hillary Clinton is overwhelmingly negative, citing the report as the first indication that Trump’s campaign was willing to accept Russian help.

The New York Times (7/9, Becker, Apuzzo, Goldman) cites “three advisers to the White House briefed on the meeting and two others with knowledge of it,” who said that Trump Jr. “was promised damaging information about Hillary Clinton before agreeing to meet with a Kremlin-connected Russian lawyer during the 2016 campaign.” Trump’s campaign chairman at the time, Paul Manafort, and Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner also attended the meeting at Trump Tower on June 9, 2016. The Times says the meeting “points to the central question in federal investigations of the Kremlin’s meddling in the presidential election: whether the Trump campaign colluded with the Russians,” adding that the accounts “represent the first public indication that at least some in the campaign were willing to accept Russian help.”

The CBS Weekend News (7/9, lead story, 2:10) reported Trump Jr. has released a statement confirming the June 9, 2016 meeting, but said he was not told the name of the lawyer beforehand. Still, ABC World News Tonight (7/9, lead story, 4:00) said that Trump Jr. in his own statement said “he was willing to meet with someone he said had helpful information for the campaign,” which “leads to the question: Were some in the campaign willing to accept Russian help?”

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, Ballhaus) reports that in a statement Saturday, Trump Jr. did not mention that the person seeking the meeting said she could provide helpful information. Noting that Trump Jr.’s Sunday statement said the person “offered him information on Mrs. Clinton but that her statements ‘made no sense’ and the information was not ‘meaningful,’” the New York Times (7/9, Stack) reports that Trump Jr. “has given two different explanations” for the meeting in less than 24 hours.

The Washington Post (7/9, Borchers) says Trump Jr.’s statement “has made a potentially damaging New York Times report much, much worse.” The Post describes the statement as “stunningly incriminating,” noting that he “confirmed that he went into the meeting expecting to receive information from the Russian lawyer that could hurt Clinton. That is a breathtaking admission.” In what the Washington Times (7/9, Miller) says is a “startling switch,” Trump Jr. said Sunday that “the lawyer claimed Russia was working to help Hillary Clinton’s campaign.” According to Trump Jr., the lawyer, Natalia Veselnitskaya, “claimed to have information that ‘individuals connected to Russia were funding the Democratic National Committee’ and supporting Clinton.”

The Washington Post (7/9, Helderman, Hamburger) says that the meeting “seems likely to become a focus of investigations into whether the Trump campaign coordinated and encouraged Russian efforts to intervene in the election to hurt Clinton and elect Trump.” Responding to the report on CNN’s State Of The Union (7/9, Bash), Rep. Adam Schiff, ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said, “It certainly raises questions for a variety of reasons, of course. The President’s son had denied having any kind of meetings like this. They claim that this meeting had nothing to do with the campaign and yet the Trump campaign manager is invited to come to the meeting. And there’s no reason for this Russian government advocate to be meeting with Paul Manafort or with Mr. Kushner or the President’s son if it wasn’t about the campaign and Russia policy. Obviously, they were trying to influence one of the candidates, the leading candidate at that time on the Republican ticket. ... Yes, we need to get to the bottom of it.”

White House: "It Was A Nothing Meeting." NBC Nightly News (7/9, lead story, 3:35, Snow) reported that the White House is "downplaying" reports of the meeting. In an appearance on "Fox News Sunday," White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus was dismissive of the meeting, describing it as a "nothing meeting," Politico (7/9, McCaskill) reports. Priebus told Fox "that it was a 'short' meeting about Russian adoption that lasted only 20 minutes." Said Priebus, "It was a nothing meeting. ... I don't know much about it other than it seems to be on the end of the Trump individuals a big nothing burger but may spin out of control for the [Democratic National Committee] and the Democrats."

The Hill (7/9, Shelbourne) reports that Export-Import Bank senior vice president Anthony Scaramucci, "defended" Trump Jr. on Sunday, writing in a tweet, "@DonaldJTrumpJr is a virtuous and honorable man. Virtue means the courage to act with integrity. Don does that everyday. #stopwitchhunt."

The AP (7/9) quotes Mark Corallo, a spokesman for Trump's legal team, as saying, "The President was not aware of and did not attend the meeting."

Writing for the National Review (7/9), Rich Lowry also casts doubt on the report, asking, "if you are the Kremlin and you have cooked up this sensitive intelligence operation that need only involve your hackers and Wikileaks – both of whom are presumably completely reliable – are you really going to risk mucking it up by having some hack lawyer go and try to collude about it with whomever can be rounded up in the Trump campaign? (And at a time when everyone assumed the Trump campaign was a sure loser?)." Lowry adds that "at this point the collusion story has everything – intrigue, breaking news, 'smoke,' even a special counsel – except plausibility."

Similarly, in a piece for the New York Post (7/9) headlined, "The Times 'Exposé' On Donald Trump Jr. Is A Big Yawn," Michael Walsh downplays the importance of the story, writing that the Times delivered the news "in the breathless tones that might announce a cure for cancer or the discovery of life on Mars." Walsh writes that "in the end, the lawyer had nothing, gave nothing, got nothing in return, in a meeting that lasted 20 minutes. This is a scandal?"

Bush Ethics Lawyer: Meeting "Borders On Treason." Meanwhile, Richard Painter, who served as an ethics lawyer under President George W. Bush, took a much different view of the story, telling MSNBC on Sunday that the meeting "borders on treason," The Hill (7/9, Carter) reports. Painter said, "This was an effort to get opposition research on an opponent in an American political campaign from the Russians, who were known to be engaged in spying inside the United States. ... We do not get our opposition research from spies, we do not collaborate with Russian spies, unless we want to be accused of treason." Painter added that the Bush Administration "would not have allowed the meeting" to occur. Said Painter, "If this story is true, we'd have one of them if not both of them in custody by now, and we'd be asking them a lot of questions. ... This is unacceptable. This borders on treason, if it is not itself treason."

Flynn Has Not Been Seen Publicly In Nearly Six Months. The Washington Times (7/9, Boylan) reports that former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn "has not been seen publicly in nearly a half-year amid a swirl of investigations, media reports and speculation about his activities." The Times says Flynn's public absence "could reflect a behind-the-scenes battle between the White House and Mr. Flynn's attorney, Robert Kelner." Kelner, the Times adds, "declined to comment on whether Mr. Flynn is cooperating with special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into the Russia issue."

More Than Half Of Comey Memos On Trump Meetings Contained Classified Information. The Hill (7/9, Solomon) cites "interviews with officials familiar with" the memos that former FBI Director Comey "wrote as personal recollections of his conversations with President Trump about the Russia investigation," who said that more than half the documents "have been determined to contain classified information." The Hill says this "raises the possibility that Comey broke his own agency's rules and ignored the same security protocol that he publicly criticized Hillary Clinton for in the waning days of the 2016 presidential election."

G-20 Communique Shows Division On Climate, Agreement On Trade.

The conclusion of the G-20 summit meeting in Hamburg received coverage in all the major print and online sources with most of them focusing on the division between the US and the others on the Paris climate accord with headlines like the New York Times "World Leaders Move Forward On Climate Change, Without US," and Reuters "US Isolated On Climate At Summit Of World Leaders" being fairly typical, while a minority of sources gave equal weight to the agreement on trade with the Wall Street Journal "G-20 Leaders Find Trade Compromises But Split On Climate" and the AP "G-20 Shut Trump Out On Climate, Strike Deal On Trade" being the most prominent.

ABC World News Tonight (7/8, story 5, 0:35, Harris) reported, "President Trump went to the G20 expecting to get an earful from world leaders about climate change after he pulled out of the Paris accords, and today he did." ABC (Vega) added, "German Chancellor Angela Merkel singled out the US, saying that she deplors the United States' decision to pull out of this Paris deal." The CBS Weekend News (7/8, story 4, 0:30, Ninan) reported, "Historically, the US has led the drafting of the final summit statement. Not so under President Trump." NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 2, 0:30, Jackson) reported Trump "appeared more comfortable personally," but was "more isolated on policy points, like trade and especially climate." NBC adds that "the White House [was] downplaying the divisions" and shows Gary Cohn, White House chief economic adviser, saying: "You get 20 of your friends to agree to where to have dinner tonight. It's really hard."

The Washington Post (7/8, Birnbaum, Paletta) reports the G-20 was "unable to resolve key differences on core issues such as climate change and globalization" and "left other nations fearing for the future of global alliances in the Trump era." French President Emmanuel Macron exclaimed, "Our world has never been so divided. ... Our common goods have never been so threatened." The Post adds that "the divisions were most bitter on climate change," and calls the agreed statement on trade a "nominal compromise." German Chancellor Angela Merkel said, "Unfortunately, and I deplore this, the United States of America left the climate agreement." The Post also quotes an anonymous European official saying, "It seems clear that President Trump is committed to being less predictable."

The New York Times (7/8, Erlanger, Smale, Friedman, Davis) reports the G-20 "struck a compromise...to move forward collectively on climate change without the United States." They approved "a detailed policy blueprint" called the G20 Climate and Energy Action Plan for Growth. The climate language was seen as "a much-needed victory for Ms. Merkel," but otherwise, the Times says it was "a bitter disappointment" for her. In part because the Times says the news was "primarily about Mr. Trump and his first meeting with" Russian President Vladimir Putin, and in part because of the violent demonstrations by anarchists. The Times quotes Trump saying, "Nothing's easy," and praised Merkel for conducting the event "so professionally."

USA Today (7/8, Korte) reports there was "a near-unanimous agreement," with 19 countries signing on to a declaration that the Paris climate agreement is "irreversible." That was "all of them...the United States." The result was "widely expected" says USA Today, and depicts Trump's stance as meaning that the US "is free to renege on agreements made by the previous administration." USA says briefly that on the other issues of the meeting – trade and migration – "Merkel found a way to accommodate Trump's view of U.S. national interests."

Reuters (7/8, Carrel, Barkin) reports the other "leading economies broke with U.S. President Donald Trump on climate policy" in what it calls "a rare public admission of disagreement." While Chancellor Merkel "achieved her primary goal" in producing "a single communique with pledges on trade, finance, energy and Africa," yet "the divide between Trump...and the 19 other members...was stark." Reuters says Trump's policy, which it describes as "a more unilateral, transactional diplomacy" has led to "a void in global leadership."

ABC News (7/8, Dolak) reports at the meeting, "the United States is the lone outlier on climate change."

CNN (7/8, Dewan, Halasz) reports Chancellor Merkel ended the meeting "with a rebuke to President Donald Trump's stance on climate change," but made "a concession on his protectionist trade policies." Afterwards, Russian President Vladimir Putin praised Merkel, saying, "Although the US will withdraw, they are nevertheless still prepared to carry on now (with) discussions on this subject. It seems to me this is a very positive point and can be chalked up to the successes of Angela Merkel."

CBS News (7/8, Carissimo) reports Merkel "spoke out against the Trump administration's intentions to drop out of the Paris Agreement on climate change." The other leaders also "agreed that the decision to leave the accord would be permanent."

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Peker, Horobin) focused its coverage first of all on trade, saying that the G-20 agreed to oppose protectionism and to support fair trade and said it accepted measures take to defend a balanced trade. It quotes Chancellor Merkel saying that on climate, it was "everyone against the United States of America," and on trade, negotiations "were especially tough" because of "the United States taking certain positions." The G-20 also agreed to attempt to reduce a global overproduction of steel, and on that and other fair trade issues, the Journal says that Trump was not alone. The Journal also quotes a tweet from the President in which he said the meeting "was a wonderful success and carried out beautifully by Chancellor Angela Merkel. Thank you!"

The AP (7/8, McHugh, Moulson) offers a similar approach, pointing out that the others "lined up against U.S. President Donald Trump on climate change," but "also revealed tensions on trade," while the leaders "forged a deal that endorsed open markets but acknowledged countries had a right to put up barriers to block unfair practices." Chief economic adviser Gary Cohn said the final communique "came together pretty reasonably," and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said there was "incredible consensus" on trade. Still, the AP says the meeting "was marked by clashing visions, especially" between the US and the European Union.

The Washington Post (7/8, Birnbaum, Paletta) reports Merkel said that on trade, "we have been able to get satisfactory results in place." Meanwhile, an unnamed White House official said, "It's been a really great success." One of the Administration's successes was an agreement to "share information about steel production by August and to publish a formal report with recommendations by November."

Bloomberg News (7/8) in its headline said the US "squeezes steel concessions from G-20" and reports that the group "agreed to address growing overcapacity" in steel, which Bloomberg described as "bowing to pressure from the Trump administration."

Trump Said To Enjoy G-20. The Washington Post (7/8, Birnbaum, Paletta) reports on "signs that Trump enjoyed the visit" mentioning that at a dinner for the leaders and their spouses, he "was among the last to leave." Also at a Saturday morning event for female entrepreneurship, Trump called Merkel "incredible," and Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "spectacular."

The New York Times (7/8, Thrush) says that at the meeting Trump was an "outlier" on climate, and "wildly unpopular" for his trade and immigration policies. Yet, aides to the President saw the meeting as "a surprising early high point in his presidency, providing a brief but welcome respite from the forever wars in Washington." And "the high point of the trip from the president's perspective" was his "powerful invocation of Western exceptionalism to a crowd of like-minded Polish nationalists on Thursday."

Media Analyses See Little Gained By Trump. Bloomberg News (7/8, Olorunnipa, Wadhams) in an analysis says that Trump had identified trade, North Korea, and steel as the focus of his efforts in Hamburg, and adds that he achieved "little concrete progress on those issues." In his meeting with Putin, says Bloomberg, "Trump's twin concerns, Iran and Ukraine, were barely touched upon as the two agreed on a Syrian cease-fire, details to come." His meetings with the heads of "South Korea, Japan and China ended without a clear consensus about how to curb North Korea's nuclear ambitions." Still, says Bloomberg, Trump was not "totally empty-handed...and his team seemed upbeat when briefing reporters on Air Force One on the return flight." Bloomberg also quotes national security adviser H.R. McMaster and chief economic adviser Gary Cohn with positive takes on the trip, and quotes Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin calling the Syrian ceasefire "a major, major success."

ABC News (7/8, Roberts) carries an analysis on its website in which Cokie Roberts identifies as "the bottom line" of the summit: "The United States is no longer the star on the world stage." She says that the Trump-Putin meeting was "a sideshow" and that it was "a victory for Putin."

TIME (7/8, Shuster) in its analysis says that the US under Trump is no longer interested in "human rights and the rule of law" given "Trump's recent attacks against journalists, migrants and religious minorities." Time adds "the only leader facing isolation at the summit" was Trump. Time concludes that the lesson of the meeting is that "No global approach is possible without agreement between the U.S. and its traditional allies."

Dan Balz in an analysis for the Washington Post (7/8, Balz) said the major events of the trip were the address in Warsaw and the meeting with Putin, and both, he said could be "foundational moments in the Trump presidency." About the Putin meeting, Balz says, "the lengthy meeting was a constructive sign." But Balz adds that with respect to allegations of Russian meddling in the US elections, "the president continues to look for diversions and digressions." In Warsaw, Balz says the address "drew more positive reviews," but cites critics calling it "too dark" and linked to "a philosophy that champions closed borders and that does not celebrate pluralistic values." Still he cites the Wall Street Journal's praise in which that paper said it hopes the speech was "defining" for the Administration. Balz concludes by asking whether Trump's Warsaw speech or his tweets are more defining.

NBC Nightly News (7/8, story 7, 2:40, Snow) shows Nicolle Wallace, NBC News political analyst, saying, "People who are used to looking at America as part of a community of nations, as a trusted member of NATO, as a responsible leader, as the largest and most powerful democracy the world over, are startled and increasingly alarmed by what they see from Donald Trump."

Trump, China's Xi Discuss North Korean Threat.

ABC World News Tonight's (7/8, story 3, 0:35, Vega) Cecilia Vega reported on the "high-stakes meeting" between President Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit on Saturday. "In front of the camera," Trump made "no public push for China to take a harder line on North Korea in the wake of last week's successful ICBM test," but officials "say behind the scenes, the President had very direct discussions." Trump told Xi, "The success may take longer than I'd like. It may take longer than you'd like. But there will be success in the end, one way or another," broadcast the CBS Weekend News (7/8, story 2, 0:30, Garrett).

As Trump returns from Europe, however, "there were few visible signs of progress on North Korea," says USA Today (7/8, Korte), which notes Secretary Tillerson on Friday complained, "China has taken significant action, and then I think for a lot of different reasons, they paused and didn't take additional action."

Chinese, Japanese Leaders Seek Closer Ties Amid North Korean Threat. Bloomberg News (7/8, Reynolds, Zhai) reports Chinese President Xi Jinping and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe met on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit in Germany on Saturday "to overcome years of rocky ties to better handle the military threat from North Korea." Bloomberg says Abe has sought friendlier bilateral ties, but his efforts have "been interspersed with repeated spats over history and territory, and progress has been slow since he took office in 2012 amid the worst bilateral crisis since the 1970s." Improved ties could also have negative political consequences for China's Communist Party leaders. Nonetheless, the two leaders agreed to more closely collaborate in pressuring Pyongyang; however, as with the US, Russia, and South Korea, which also condemned North Korea's first intercontinental ballistic missile test, China and Japan favor different approaches "on how best to rein in" Kim Jong-un.

Error In Xi's Title Reported As Possible Cause Of Offense. The Washington Post (7/8, Lewis) reports the White House in a news release on the meeting labeled Xi as president of the Republic of China, and not the People's Republic of China. The Post explains that the Republic of China is the government of Taiwan. The Post says it may be "a minor oversight," but could also be seen "as an offense by Beijing." The Post recounts several other mislabelings and misspellings by the White House, but also notes that the Obama White House had misspelled President Ronald Reagan's name. Bloomberg News (7/8) reports the mislabeling of President Xi adds "an embarrassment to a record of fraught relations."

Alaskans Not Worried. The Washington Post (7/8, O'Malley) reports Alaskans asked about the threat from North Korea do not appear to be "all that worried." Anchorage Mayor Ethan Berkowitz said, "I'm worried about moose, not missiles ... Bears, not bombs."

Tillerson: Trump Pressed Putin On Election Meddling, Agreed On Syrian Ceasefire.

On Friday, President Trump met with Russian President Vladimir Putin on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit in Germany. The highly-anticipated meeting received heavy cable and network news coverage, especially related to seemingly conflicting accounts by Secretary Tillerson and Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov on the discussion over Russia's election meddling. President Trump's meeting with Russian President Putin was also widely covered in the major print media. The coverage focused on Secretary of State Tillerson's account of the meeting in which he said that Trump "pressed" Putin on the alleged Russian meddling in the 2016 election, but that both quickly moved on to Syria in which they agreed to a ceasefire in the southwest of that country. Tone of the coverage was generally positive with most outlets viewing the meeting as successful with respect to Syria and with respect to US-Russia relations given that a half-hour meeting lasted for over two hours. A substantial amount of coverage was devoted to the length of the meeting, with most adding that First Lady Melania Trump entered the meeting after an hour, apparently for the purpose of wrapping it up, but that the presidents continued to talk for another hour.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (7/7, lead story, 3:35, Guthrie) story, Hallie Jackson called the encounter "the most important diplomatic meeting yet for President Trump, formally face to face for first time with the leader of the country accused of meddling in our election – and that was topic number one for the US, with two different stories tonight on how that discussion went." She continued, "The marathon meeting, set to last roughly 30 minutes, instead stretched to two hours and 16 minutes. Not even an appearance by Melania Trump, who later sat next to Putin at dinner, could help wrap things up." Tillerson told reporters, "They sent in the First Lady at one point to see if she could get us out of there, and that didn't work either."

In CNN's Situation Room's (7/7, 5:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, 0:20, Sciotto) lead story, correspondent Jim Sciotto also said the "blockbuster" meeting "ran four times longer than planned," and that "Tillerson said President Trump opened by raising concerns about Russia's interference in the 2016 campaign. Tillerson says the two leaders had a robust and lengthy exchange on the subject, with Putin denying any involvement."

In the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (7/7, 6:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, 0:, Baier), Bret Baier reported that "the leaders of the two largest nuclear powers in the world" met face-to-face for a "scheduled 30 minute meeting lasting almost two and a half hours." Baier said Trump and Putin discussed "Syria, North Korea, and Russia's aggressive moves in Eastern Europe," but the so-called "elephant in the room, we are told, got top billing. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said President Trump confronted Russian leader Vladimir Putin over alleged Russian interference in the 2016 election at the beginning of that meeting," which Putin denied. "According to Tillerson," Baier said, Putin "then asked to see the US proof."

In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/7, lead story, 3:15, Muir), Tillerson told correspondent Cecilia Vega, "The President at this point, he pressed him and then, you know, felt like at this point let's talk about how do we go forward." He added, "There was not a lot of re-litigating of the past." Vega said Lavrov was also in the room, but "says President Trump heard Putin's denial and accepted it. The White House tonight says that is not the case."

The Washington Post (7/7, Filipov, Phillip) reports on what it calls "a lengthy face-to-face meeting" described by Secretary of State Tillerson who was at the "two-hour-and-fifteen-minute meeting" and said, "The president pressed President Putin on more than one occasion regarding Russian involvement." He added, "President Putin denied such involvement, as I think he has in the past."

The New York Times (7/7, Davis, Thrush) reports Trump "questioned" Putin "about Moscow's interference in the 2016 elections," but "Mr. Putin denied any meddling," then the two "quickly turned to how they could work together, including on combating cyber attacks and de-escalating the Syria war." The Times adds the meeting "was so all-consuming that even Mr. Trump's wife Melania failed to pry the two leaders apart halfway through." The meeting, says the Times "eclipsed the rest" of the Group of 20 meeting, and "turned into a bright spot for Mr. Trump."

The Wall Street Journal (7/7, Nicholas, Grove) reports in a front-page story that Trump and Putin differed over charges of election interference and how to deal with North Korea, but agreed on a ceasefire in Syria.

The AP (7/7, Superville, Isachenkov) reports Trump "confronted" Putin "directly...over Moscow's meddling in the 2016 presidential campaign" and according to Tillerson they had a "robust and lengthy" discussion in which Putin denied Russia interfered in the election. Lavrov said that Trump "accepted Putin's assurances." Tillerson said that Trump is "rightly focused on how do we move forward." The AP adds that the meeting was "originally scheduled for 35 minutes," but "clocked in at 2 hours and 16 minutes." Tillerson said that Mrs. Trump had come in at one point, apparently "to try to wrap things up," but, said Tillerson, "clearly she failed."

The Washington Times (7/7, Persons, Miller) reports Tillerson said that Trump "brought up Russia's interference in the U.S. election at the start" of the meeting and they had "a very robust and lengthy exchange" on the matter.

The Los Angeles Times (7/8, Bennett) reports Trump called it a "tremendous meeting," speaking to reporters before meeting with British Prime Minister Theresa May.

USA Today (7/7, Korte) alone reports that Trump and Putin came to a "stunning" agreement "not to meddle in each other's elections in the future." Now, both "are setting up lower-level talks to work out details."

Trump, Putin Agree To Establish Southern Syrian Ceasefire. Fox News' Special Report (7/7, 6:03 p.m. EDT, 3:01, Baier) reported the US and Russia will, with Jordan's assistance, establish a ceasefire and attempt to de-escalate the conflict in southwest Syria. The accord will go into effect on Sunday and "is designed to cool off tensions while the battle against ISIS continues and the political solution to Syria is put in place."

In the lead story for the CBS Evening News (7/7, lead story, 2:35, Pauley), Foreign Affairs Correspondent Margaret Brennan reported on President Trump's meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin on Friday and said during their discussion, Trump and Putin "agreed to cooperate in war-torn Syria. Tillerson announced a limited ceasefire in the southwest of that country, but admitted that key details were still being negotiated." Tillerson said the agreement "is our first indication of the US and Russia being able to work together in Syria." He added, "I will tell you that by and large, our objectives are exactly the same." Brennan reported "Tillerson later clarified that the US would still like Assad to leave power, and the hope is that Russia will agree to negotiate a peace deal."

ABC World News Tonight's (7/7, story 2, 0:30, Muir) Cecilia Vega said Jordan also agreed to the US-Russian ceasefire deal, and added that "whether this one will stick" remains to be seen.

The New York Times (7/7, Harris) reports Tillerson said the US and Russia, along with Jordan, agreed to support "a cease-fire in a limited area of southwestern Syria that will begin at noon on Sunday." The agreement followed "months of negotiations." Tillerson said in announcing the agreement, "I think this is our first indication of the U.S. and Russia being able to work together in Syria." And, the agreement "gave Mr. Trump a tangible achievement coming out of a risky and heavily scrutinized meeting."

Chief Washington Correspondent James Rosen of Fox News' Special Report (7/7, 6:07 p.m. EDT, 7:39, Baier), "Of all that hangs on the handshake" between Trump and Putin, "nothing is more consequential than the Syrian civil war," now "in its seventh year with more than 400,000 lives lost." State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert commented, "We believe Russia has unique leverage over the Syrian regime. We are going to continue to put pressure on them and ask them to do more." Rosen added that Tillerson "hailed" the ceasefire agreement.

The Washington Post (7/7, Filipov, Phillip) reports Tillerson said that Trump and Putin made a "de-escalation agreement" with respect to part of southwestern Syria, about which Tillerson added, "We'll see what happens." Meanwhile, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov gave a positive take on the meeting, saying that the two presidents were "looking for mutually beneficial agreements and not trying to act out some confrontation scenarios."

Bloomberg News (7/7, Arkhipov, Talev, and Gordon) offered the most critical reports, saying that Trump got "a 140-character headline that Trump can use to show that his idea of working more closely with Putin's government is starting to bear fruit," but "nothing else." Bloomberg adds, "Trump did not extract any price from Putin for the invasion of Ukraine, his coziness with Syria's dictator Bashar al-Assad, his ineffectiveness at confronting Islamic State or his support for the Iranian regime." And afterwards, the "Russians, to put it mildly, were delighted."

More Commentary. In "The Fix," the Washington Post (7/7, Borchers) reports that Russia had made the first impression about the Trump-Putin meeting, but that the White House did not allow it "to hang in the air for long" with a news conference featuring Secretary of State Tillerson. That, said the Post, indicates "the White House came to play."

Aaron Blake writes in the Washington Post (7/7, Blake) "The Fix" that "the big question...was whether President Trump would confront" Putin regarding "Russian hacking in the 2016 election." Blake says the answer is "a resounding maybe." While Tillerson said, "The president pressed President Putin on more than one occasion," which, says Blake, "sounds pretty serious," but Tillerson also said, "There was not a lot of re-litigating things from the past." And that, writes Blake "doesn't sound like a ton of pressing." Blake adds, that "is pretty much how Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov described it."

David Ignatius writes in the Washington Post (7/7, Ignatius) "Post Partisan" blog that the meeting was important, not for any particular agreement but for "the restoration of dialogue between the U.S. and Russia." Ignatius says that Trump "may claim a 'win,' but the greater beneficiary is probably Putin." And, Ignatius says, the ceasefire in Syria has prepared the way "for other U.S.-Russia efforts to de-escalate the Syria conflict and begin to stabilize the country." There was also, "some useful dialogue about North Korea."

James Freeman, writing in the Wall Street Journal (7/7, Freeman) on the other hand says that Putin is losing, given the relative size of the Russian and American economies and its reliance on oil. Freeman argues that Trump's energy policy further weakens Russia by increasing world oil supplies and so lowering the price of oil.

Gail Collins writes in her column in the New York Times (7/7, Collins), about the Trump-Putin meeting, saying that the President was acting as "Diplomacy Don, who seemed to fall head over heels for Putin," and "Good At Meetings," in which he sits "there nodding a lot, leading the other side to think he's in agreement."

Nicholas Kristof writes in the New York Times (7/7, Kristof) about the meeting,, "If only Trump confronted Vladimir Putin with half the energy with which he denounces CNN and other news organizations!"

The New York Times (7/7) editorializes on the Trump-Putin meeting that "it is important that...Mr. Trump began by raising the interference issue and then reportedly pressed him more than once on Russian involvement during the course of their two-hour-and-15-minute conversation." Still, the Times questions "whether even now Mr. Trump understands the gravity of Russia's interference in America's democratic processes." The Times says that question "overshadowed" the Syrian ceasefire they agreed to.

The Washington Post (7/7) editorializes against President Trump telling President Putin, "It's an honor to be with you." The Post says, "It is not an honor to sit down with the leader of a regime that invades peaceable neighbors, covertly interferes in the elections of democratic nations, and orchestrates and tolerates the assassination of domestic political opponents and journalists." Still, the Post adds, "it is crucial for the world's two major nuclear powers to engage with each other." The Post encourages discussions on "cyberwar rules" and "nuclear weapons, too," as well as "a peaceful future for... Syria."

The Wall Street Journal (7/7) editorializes on the Trump-Putin meeting in Hamburg, saying that it is pleased by the ceasefire in Syria, but thinks it unlikely to be a precedent, given Putin's apparent plans for building Russian influence in the Middle East. The Journal says that Trump's raising of charges of Russian meddling in the 2016 election is a good sign that Trump intends to represent US interests.

Media Analyses: Republicans Face Uphill Climb To Pass Healthcare Plan Before Recess.

While President Trump urged Republicans Sunday to repeal and replace the ACA, in appearances on the Sunday talk shows Republicans appeared divided on how to do that, and several reports question whether any plan can pass before lawmakers leave town for their August recess. The Hill (7/9, Shelbourne) reports that in a tweet Sunday, Trump urged Republican lawmakers "to repeal and replace ObamaCare, saying now is the chance to dismantle the previous administration's signature healthcare legislation." Trump wrote, "For years, even as a 'civilian,' I listened as Republicans pushed the Repeal and Replace of ObamaCare. Now they finally have their chance!" The AP (7/9) says Trump's tweet "came as two moderate Republican senators," Sens. Bill Cassidy and John McCain, "indicated Sunday that the initial GOP bill to repeal and replace the nation's healthcare law was probably 'dead' and Trump's proposal to just repeal it appears to be a 'nonstarter.'"

Politico (7/9, Everett) says Republicans "appear miles away from their long-sought repeal of Obamacare," and Bloomberg News (7/9, Dennis) depicts disagreement among Senate Republicans appearing on the Sunday shows, saying they "clashed... about the path forward for their stalled health-care bill, with passage of any plan before the August congressional recess in doubt and rival factions trying to pull it in opposite directions." On "Fox News Sunday," Sen. Bill Cassidy "declared an earlier Republican leadership plan 'dead' and suggested turning to a different bill that he drafted with Republican Senator Susan Collins of Maine."

On ABC's This Week (7/9, Stephanopolous) meanwhile, Sen. Ted Cruz "pitched his proposal to allow insurers to offer insurance plans that are cheaper with less coverage, as long as they also offer a plans complying with the Affordable Care Act's mandates." Cruz told ABC, "You, the consumer, should be able to choose what health care you want to buy." The Washington Times (7/9, Howell) reports, that Cruz said that while Senate Republicans face a "rocky path," they "can navigate through it if they focus on regulating insurance and driving down premiums." Cruz said, "I think we're making real progress. In my view, failure is not an option." Cruz told CBS (7/9, Dickerson), "There's no doubt this has been a rocky path to getting there but I continue to believe we can get this done. I think there are a lot of senators who have been working in good faith, working collaboratively for a long time." A front-page story in the Washington Post (7/7, A1, Sullivan) reports that while Cruz's Senate colleagues "kept a low profile over the week-long July Fourth recess," he "seemed to relish debating health care with vocal liberal critics." Cruz, the Post adds, "sees his best path to a second term, which he will seek next year, in rallying his conservative base to turn out for him," and while "he alienates a growing number of voters concerned about the fate of the ACA, doing his part to push for a full or even partial repeal is one key way his allies believe he can make that happen."

The Washington Post (7/9, Weigel) says Republicans differed "not merely on how to amend the bill but also on whether a bill could pass at all." Cassidy told Fox that the chances that a bill will pass are "50/50," and Sen. John McCain said on CBS' "Face the Nation," "My view is it's probably going to be dead," while White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus said on "Fox News Sunday," "They will get a repeal and replace bill done."

Reuters (7/9) also highlights McCain's comment, while the New York Post (7/9, Schultz) says McCain "suggested starting all over and bringing Democrats to the table." Said McCain, "If you shut out the adversary or the opposite party, you're going to end up the same way Obamacare did when they rammed it through with 60 votes. Only guess what? We don't have 60 votes." McCain told CBS, "I fear that it's going the fail, and then we should convene a Republican conference and say, 'What are we going to do?' Introduce a bill, say to the Democrats, 'Here's a bill.' It doesn't mean they control it, it means they can have consideration. Even when they lose, then they're part of the process. That's what democracy is supposed to be all about."

On NBC's Meet the Press (7/9, Todd), Sen. Lindsey Graham also argued for a bipartisan compromise saying, "I think this bill was better than Obamacare. ... Whether or not we can come together, I don't know. Mitch is trying. I would support the proposal before us, but you got different camps in the Republican party. But Obamacare is going to fail. My advice is if it does fail, work together in a bipartisan fashion to replace it. I don't know what the outcome will be, but Mitch is trying really hard."

The Wall Street Journal (7/9, A1, Armour) reports that during the recent recess, lawmakers heard from constituents who opposed the GOP plan and Sen. John Hoeven told a local newspaper that he does not support it, adding his name to the nine Republican senators who have come out against the measure.

Karoun Demirjian of the Washington Post said on CNN Inside Politics (7/9), "What we are in right now at this moment heading back to DC is exactly what the Republican leaders planned to avoid. They wanted to do this before the Fourth of July recess so they did not have everybody going home and clearly getting an earful from constituents, who do not want to lose their healthcare, seeing that 22 million number and being uncomfortable with it. Aside from that, how crazy though is it? I know this is a very trite point s at this point. But to say if you don't behave we're going to make you work with the Democrats is a vision of everything that is wrong."

Michael Shear of the New York Times said on CNN Inside Politics (7/9), "The irony here is that in some ways they put themselves in this mess because the way they decided to gin up the intensity for replacing and repealing and replace is by focusing on how much of a disaster Obamacare had become. How many times have we heard them all talk about it's collapsing, it's ending, it's blowing up? That, they thought, was going to provide the...intensity to get this done. Now what it has done is forced them into the place McConnell was suggesting, they have to do something right now, otherwise they look like they're not addressing it."

Mnuchin: Trump Will "Go To The Next Plan" If Current Healthcare Proposal Fails. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on ABC's This Week (7/9, Stephanopolous), "What I would say is the President's first priority is for the Senate, the House to pass the plan, and I know you have Senator Ted Cruz on right after me, and I'm very hopeful that his plan and his changes will get supported. And I think we'd like to get healthcare done. If we don't get this passed then the President as he said will go to the next plan."

GOP Governors Urge Senators To "Do No Harm" On Healthcare. The AP (7/9, Noon, Barrow) reports that Republican governors "who have experienced some of the upside of the law are warning their GOP senators to first, do no harm." The AP features comments from several Republican governors, noting that to them "the issue is less about delivering a triumph to President Donald Trump and more about not blowing a hole in state budgets and maintaining health care coverage for constituents." According to the AP, "some governors are uniquely positioned to press home-state Republican senators who could deny Majority Leader Mitch McConnell the votes he needs to pass a Republican health care bill."

McConnell Plans Fresh Healthcare Bill In "About A Week."

The AP (7/7, Schreiner, Fram) reports Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said on Thursday that he "plans to produce a fresh bill in about a week," but is open to the possibility of "a Plan B," saying, "If my side is unable to agree on an adequate replacement, then some kind of action with regard to the private health insurance market must occur."

The Washington Post (7/7, Snell, Sullivan, Costa) reports the White House and Republican leaders in the Senate "are planning a final, urgent blitz" on the healthcare act, to pass the measure "before their month-long August recess." The Post says "the next 14 days probably represent their last chance to salvage their flagging endeavor." The President, Vice President and Sen. McConnell "intend to single out individual senators and escalate a broad defense of the evolving proposal" according to the Post. In addition, the Post says McConnell will depend on Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) and "his controversial amendment that would allow insurers to offer plans that don't meet ACA requirements — provided they also offer some that do." The Washington Post (7/7, A1, Sullivan) reports on Sen. Cruz's series of town hall meetings in which he was "grappling with a state that, much like the rest of the country, has been deeply divided and firmly gripped by the months-long GOP effort to fulfill its signature campaign promise."

The New York Times (7/7, A1, Steinhauer, Pear) reports that during the July 4th recess, Republican senators "from red states blanched at its impact on rural communities," and Sen. John Hoeven (R-ND) "signaled this week that he would not vote for the bill as written." One concern in rural areas is "Medicaid parity" as Herb B. Kuhn, president of the Missouri Hospital Association, put it, "per capita federal spending on Medicaid would be much higher in states that have chosen to expand Medicaid" under the Senate bill.

Bloomberg News (7/7, Litvan) reports that Sen. McConnell "is taking a risk by calling for a bipartisan health-care plan if the Republican-only bill fails." That's because, those who favor such a plan may drop the Republican bill. In response to McConnell's comment, Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) said, "Democrats are eager to work with Republicans to stabilize the markets and improve the law."

The New York Times (7/7, Hulse) reports McConnell is facing a difficult problem in attempting to build a majority for a healthcare bill. According to the Times, "his best chance to pass the bill was a quick strike before the Fourth of July recess." McConnell's abilities are praised and the Times says, "he has more often fashioned a way out that few others saw."

The Wall Street Journal (7/7) identifies six senators as key to putting together that majority and describes some options available to McConnell including increasing Medicaid funding, easing regulations on insurance, boosting funding for opioid addiction treatments, restoring funding for Planned Parenthood, and keeping some taxes enacted under the ACA.

NYTimes Analysis: Tax Treatment Of Employer-provided Insurance Boosts Healthcare Costs.

The New York Times (7/8, A14, Zernike) reports on the "giant health insurance subsidy no one is talking about" saying that "economists on the left and the right argue that to really rein in health costs, Congress should scale back or eliminate the tax exclusion on what employers pay toward employees' health insurance premiums."

NYTimes Analysis: Repeal First Strategy Brings Large Risks. In an analysis, the New York Times (7/7, Sanger-Katz) takes up the question of what would happen if the Republicans decided to repeal the ACA first, and then develop a replacement. The Times says that it would bring "tremendous political risks for Republicans and practical risks for consumers." The Times, citing the CBO, says such a repeal would result in 18 million people losing insurance within a year. The reason is that it would repeal "only the funding" and not the "regulatory structure." The Times also says it is not clear that the imminent repeal of the ACA would cause Senators to work together to develop a replacement, as some Republicans may be content to get rid of it, while Democrats may prefer to wait and see what happens.

Republicans Urged To Think About Healthcare. Peter Suderman, features editor at Reason, writes in the New York Times (7/7, Suderman) that "Republicans don't know what they want, much less how to get it," while Democrats have "a distinct vision of robust universal coverage guaranteed by the government and paid for by a combination of delivery-system efficiencies and higher taxes." Suderman says that Republicans need to develop "a set of guiding principles." He offers: dropping the idea of universal coverage; unifying the healthcare system from its current division into Medicaid, Medicare, and employer-provided insurance; and distinguishing between insurance and healthcare. He argues that health insurance is "a financial product" intended to prevent "financial ruin" and should not be treated as a means to provide healthcare. He urges Republicans to start at the beginning, and while that might mean they will not have a bill this summer, it could mean improved healthcare in the long run.

More Commentary. Greg Sargent writes for the Washington Post (7/7, Sargent) "Plum Line" blog that Republicans are having a hard time putting together a majority for repeal because "the passage and implementation of the ACA has given rise to a latent majority in Congress — or at least one in the Senate — that has more or less made peace with the ACA's spending and regulatory architecture and its fundamental ideological goals."

Paul Krugman writes in his column in the New York Times (7/7, Krugman) that "everything [Republicans] say involves either demonstrably dishonest claims about Obamacare or wild misrepresentations of their proposed replacement, which would — surprise — cut taxes for the rich while inflicting harsh punishment on the poor and working class."

US Adds 222,000 Jobs In June, More Americans Looking For Work.

ABC World News Tonight (7/7, story 10, 0:15, Muir) reported, "There is also news tonight about the American economy. The US adding 222,000 jobs last month. This marks 81 straight months of job growth in the US, about 15 million jobs added since 2010." The CBS Evening News (7/7, story 9, 0:15, Pauley) added, "the unemployment rate climbed to 4.4 percent as more Americans started looking for work." NBC Nightly News (7/7, story 10, 0:25, Guthrie) reported the news "is better than expected." NBC added, "job growth is on pace with 2016, although across the board salaries haven't risen much since the last recession."

The New York Times (7/7, Cohen) reports the US "labor market roared back in June, with a hefty monthly gain in jobs," and revised numbers mean April and May "added 47,000 more jobs" than originally reported. One analyst said, "The retail, manufacturing and construction sectors were weak," but added, the "economy looks strong enough to absorb these workers elsewhere." The Wall Street Journal (7/7, A1, Sparshott) reports in a front-page story the economic expansion is entering its ninth year, but so far has failed to produce much wage growth.

Stock Market Gains. The Wall Street Journal (7/7, Driebusch, Kantchev) reports US stocks were up on the week, and the Journal credited financial companies' gains as the chief reason. The Journal adds that those firms have been gaining since the Federal Reserve announced they had passed the stress tests. The positive jobs report is also given some credit for the gains.

Analyses: First Half Of 2017 Looks Like First Half Of 2016. The Washington Post (7/7, Bump) in an analysis says that the Trump economy "looks an awful lot like that of his predecessor, Barack Obama" with the gains so far being "basically identical" to those in the first half of 2016.

The Wall Street Journal (7/7, Morath) offers a similar analysis, saying that Friday's Labor Department report was almost the same as the first half of 2016. The Journal says that the Administration's reaction has been different from what then candidate Trump and his advisers said about the reports last year.

Bloomberg News (7/7, Miller) also says the job market "in the first six months of Donald Trump's tenure looks a lot like the one that prevailed toward the end of Barack Obama's."

"Big Six" Working On Tax Reform Framework For September.

The Wall Street Journal (7/7, Rubin) reports plans for tax reform are in the hands of "The Big Six" – Reps. Paul Ryan and Kevin Brady, Sens. Mitch McConnell and Orrin Hatch, and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn. All six are reportedly meeting on a regular basis to discuss tax reform, with plans to develop a framework by September.

Mnuchin: Administration Focused On Enacting Middle Class Tax Cuts This Year.

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said ABC's This Week (7/9, Stephanopolous) that the Administration still intends to pass tax reform this year and "its focus is on cutting taxes for middle-class Americans and businesses rather than the wealthy," USA Today (7/9, Davidson) reports. Mnuchin told ABC, "We're absolutely committed to getting tax reform done this year. ... It's critical for economic growth. We need to get back to 3% or better GDP." The AP (7/9) says Mnuchin "knock[ed] down a report that White House advisor Steve Bannon had floated the idea" of a tax increase on wealthier Americans, saying, "I have never heard Steve mention that." Reuters (7/9) also highlights Mnuchin's comments on reports that Bannon was advocating such a proposal.

Bloomberg News (7/9, Krasny) quotes Mnuchin as saying, "Our plan is to have a full-blown release of the plan in the beginning of September, with being able to vote and getting this passed before the end of the year." He added that the "'objective' of the proposal is still that no one in the middle class will have a tax increase." The AP (7/9) report that Mnuchin said the Administration plan "would pay for itself, but that's only if about $2 trillion in increased revenue resulting from projected faster economic growth is included." The AP adds, however, that "congressional budget scorekeepers may not agree that tax cuts would produce such growth."

The New York Post (7/9, Schultz) reports that some Republican members of the New York delegation "have rejected the tax plan because it eliminates the popular deduction for state and local taxes they believe will hurt hard-working families." Mnuchin told ABC that "he's heard their concerns," saying, "I think we've heard a lot of feedback from New York, California, New Jersey, Connecticut, Illinois, and I think we want to be sensitive to those states and those economies as we shape the plan."

IRS Proposes Changes To Eight Regulations.

The Wall Street Journal (7/7, Rubin) reports the Internal Revenue Service on Friday issued a list of eight tax regulations it proposes to change. The list was issued in response to an executive order signed by President Trump in April.

Administration May Alter Fiduciary Rule.

The Wall Street Journal (7/8, Beilfuss) reports on the Administration's review of the fiduciary rule adopted under the Obama Administration, saying that it may survive in an altered form as the Labor Department in a filing with the US District Court for the Northern District of Texas said that it does not support a part of the rule that would allow for class-action suits against brokers for failing to act as fiduciaries. The Administration has been conducting a review of the rule with a focus on the costs of compliance.

Politico Analysis: Air Traffic Control Privatization Faces Hurdles Despite Trump's Support.

Politico (7/9, Gurciullo, Gardner) reports that a month after President Trump publicly announced his support, the GOP proposal to privatize the air traffic control system “still faces opposition from rural interests, small-plane owners and key Republicans in Congress.” Some members of Congress “have expressed confidence” that House Speaker Ryan will bring the bill to a vote this year. However, the September 30 deadline for reauthorizing the FAA is similar to the deadline for raising the debt ceiling to prevent a shutdown, and the House version would have to be reconciled with the Senate’s, which lacks a privatization provision. If the chambers can’t agree on a compromise before October, Politico says that “one likely scenario is that lawmakers will simply extend the FAA’s current authorization while they hash things out.”

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

New Hurdles For GOP Health Bill
Plan For New Trading Pit Triggers Feud In US Options Market
Tiffany Hunts For Path To ‘Cool’
Trump’s Son Met With Russian Claiming To Have Clinton Intel

New York Times:

Trump’s Son Met With Russian Lawyer After Being Promised Damaging Information On Clinton At Private Dinners. Pence Quietly Courts Big Donors And Corporate Executives
The Scholar Who Will Help Lead Trump’s Assault On Rules
Iraqi Prime Minister Arrives In Mosul To Declare Victory Over ISIS
Long After Protests, Students Shun The University Of Missouri

Washington Post:

Cruz Suddenly On Spot To Pass Healthcare Bill
Memorials Wait For Water To Gush Again
Trump Advocates Russia As Partner
‘No Harm, No Foul’: A Novel Defense In Shkreli Trial
As Mosul Falls, War Stretches On
Trump Jr. Says Russian He Met Promised Info On Clinton

Financial Times:

Trump Says ‘Time To Move Forward’ With Russia
Iraqi PM Hails Victory Over Isis In Mosul
China Trade Offers Clues To N Korea Economic Health
Volatility Flickers Back To Life In Markets

Washington Times:

Trump Tweets Defend Confrontation With Putin Over Election Meddling
Higher Taxpayer Subsidies Keep Shaky Obamacare Markets Stable
Senate Democrats Hold Blue Slips, Delay Trump’s Federal Judicial Nominees
Where Is Michael Flynn? Ex-National Security Adviser Near Center Of Russian Meddling Scandal Missing
‘Hillary Clinton Defense’ Fails To Persuade Justice Department To Free Former Navy Sailor
Robot Challenge Promotes STEM Education Around The World, Even In Least-Developed Countries

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Heat Waves-Wildfires; Weather Forecast; Mosul Victory; North Korea Threat; Greece-Bar Fight American Death; London Child-US Treatment; Alligator Attack Survivor; Amazon Prime Day Shopping; Tennessee-Hit And Run; LA-Power Plant Fire; NYC-Penn Station Repairs; Veteran Recovery.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Russia Meddling Investigation-Expert Opinion; Mosul Victory; Heat Waves-Wildfires; NYC-Penn Station Repairs; USA Gymnastics Sex Abuse Trial; London Child-US Treatment; Climate Change-Virginia Land Sinking; Tesla-New Car Model; Google-Pollution Mapping; Accessible Water Park.

NBC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Heat Waves-Wildfires; Dentist-Sedation Danger;

London Child-US Treatment; Mosul Victory; Lacking Skilled Workers; Opioid Addiction Treatment; China-Energy Future; Tour De France Crash; Minor League Baseball News; Olympic Sprinter-New Record; Apartment-Good Dog Certification.

Network TV At A Glance:

Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump – 11 minutes, 35 seconds
Mosul Victory – 6 minutes, 10 seconds
Heat Waves-Wildfires – 6 minutes, 5 seconds
London Child-US Treatment – 5 minutes, 15 seconds
NYC-Penn Station Repairs – 2 minutes

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Congress Back In Session; Mosul Victory; Heat Waves-Wildfires.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Heat Waves-Wildfires; Florida-Shark Attacks; Florida-Road Rage; Wall Street News.

FOX: Healthcare Reform Bill; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Heat Waves-Wildfires.

NPR: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; New Tax Plan; Mosul Victory; Congress Back In Session.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — No public events scheduled.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in an interview with Laura Ingraham of The Laura Ingraham Show; participates in a call with Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras of Greece; participates in a call with Prime Minister Zoran Zaev of Macedonia; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Youssef Chahed of Tunisia.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate votes on OIRA Administrator nominee – Senate convenes and resumes consideration of the nomination of Neomi Rao to be Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs Administrator, followed by a vote on the nomination and a vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the nomination of David Nye to be a U.S. district judge * Cloture motion on Rao's nomination passed by 59 votes to 36 last month Location: Washington, DC
<http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 12:00 PM Congressional Internet Caucus Advisory Committee discussion on data warrants – Advisory Committee to the Congressional Internet Caucus Advisory Committee 'Data Warrants From Across the Pond: Fighting Crime While Preserving Privacy' discussion, with a panel of Deputy Assistant Attorney General Richard Downing, American Civil Liberties Union Legislative Counsel Neema Singh Guliani, American University Associate Professor of Law Jennifer Daskal, and Reform Government Surveillance's Stephanie Martz exploring the pros and cons of the Department of Justice proposal to update the Electronic Communication Privacy Act and what it means for Congress, for U.S. citizens, and for U.S. internet companies Location: Rm 2237, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.netcaucus.org
<https://twitter.com/NetCaucusAC> #crossborderwarrants

Congress returns after Independence Day District Work Period (aka State Work Period) *
House of Representatives meets in a pro forma session (10:00 AM EDT)

Other: 10:00 AM Heritage Foundation hosts discussion on 'Silk Road and the Caspian' – 'Security and Economic Development: Silk Road and the Caspian' discussion co-hosted by the Caspian Policy Center and Institute for Analysis of Global Security. Speakers include Ambassador of Azerbaijan to the U.S. Elin Suleymanov, Ambassador of Uzbekistan to the United Nations Bakhtyor Ibragimov, Ambassador of Kazakhstan to the U.S. Erzhan Kazykhanov, Caspian Policy Center Director Efgan Niftiyev, and The Paulson Institute Vice Chairman Evan Feigenbaum Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org
<https://twitter.com/Heritage>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, July 17, 2017
Date: Monday, July 17, 2017 7:02:24 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JULY 17, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Interior Secretary Tours Cascade-Siskiyou Monument.
- The Hill: Zinke: Trump Is Great Boss Because He 'Doesn't Micromanage'.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Congressional Republicans Want Nevada Monuments Cut Back.
- Huffington Post: Hunting And Fishing Groups Are Starting To Turn On Trump's Interior Secretary.
- U.S. News & World Report: Fight Over Copper Mining In Northern Minnesota Heats Up.
- The Guardian (UK): 'More Valuable Than Gold': Yellowstone Businesses Prepare To Fight Mining.
- Watertown (NY) Daily Times: Additional Coverage| Sackets Harbor Battlefield Receives $683k Toward Acquiring Horse Island.

- Huffington Post: The House Of Representatives Should Stand Up For Public Lands.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Respect, Just A Little Bit.
- Beaumont (TX) Enterprise: Bouquets And Brickbat.
- Houston Chronicle: Thumbs Up, Thumbs Down.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Halftown Faction Gets Nod To Lead Cayugas.
- A New Look At Mashpee Tribe's Status.
- Editorial: Give Lumbees What They Deserve.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Montana Delayed Oil And Gas Drill Applications Less Than 100.
- Associated Press: Federal Ranger's Testimony Sought In Steinle Murder Trial.
- U.S. News & World Report: BLM Plans To Relocate 1,500 Wyoming Wild Horses.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Rallies Support Defendants In Bunkerville Standoff Case.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Don't Risk Fishing, Tourism Jobs On A Small Amount Of Oil.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Delegation Supports Intake.
- Effort To Bring Water To Eastern New Mexico Inches Along.
- Gila River Agreement Shows Arizona Is Ready To Deal On Water.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Bald Eagle Threat: Lead Ammo Left Behind By Hunters.
- Baton Rouge (LA) Advocate: Plaintiff In St. Tammany Landowner Vs. Frog Dispute Seeks Leap To U.S. Supreme Court.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Newly Discovered Toad Species In Nevada Already Under Threat.
- U.S. News & World Report: Group Calls For Release Of Mexican Gray Wolves In New Mexico.
- Buffalo (NY) News: Fish & Wildlife Service Will Conduct Sea Lamprey Survey In WNY Waters.
- U.S. News & World Report: Snakes, Lizards To Be Feature Of Dickson Mounds Kids' Day.
- New York Times: The Government Is Now The Yellowstone Grizzly's Biggest Threat.

National Park Service

- Sonora (CA) Union Democrat: Park Service Names Associate Director For Workforce And Inclusion.
- Curbed Washington: D.C.'s LGBT Landmarks Will Be Identified, Highlighted In An Online Database.
- New York Times: Protected Wolves In Alaska Face Peril From Beyond Their Preserve.
- U.S. News & World Report: Training Ordnance Found On New North Carolina Island.
- The Guardian (UK): In The Grand Canyon, Uranium Mining Threatens A Tribe's Survival.
- U.S. News & World Report: Yellowstone Proposes Building New Youth Education Campus.
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Physically Disabled Persons Praise, Question Access To Acadia.
- Frederick (MD) News-Post: C&O Canal Trust Helps Park Service With Budget Shortfalls.
- KULR-TV Billings (MT): Facebook Founder Mark Zuckerberg Talks 'Climate Change' In Glacier Park.
- Mount Desert (ME) Islander: MDI Couple Oversees NPS Digital Domain.
- Kansas City (MO) Star: K-State Researches Bear Cams In Alaska National Park.
- U.S. News & World Report: 'Jr. Rangers' Offered I & M Canal Activities In July, August.
- Porterville (CA) Recorder: Sequoia National Park Celebrates Latino Conservation Week.
- Marin (CA) Independent Journal: Point Reyes Legal Settlement A Victory For National Parks Everywhere.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- PBS: INSIGHTS ON PBS HAWAII Giving A Damn.
- Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists: Nuclear Weapons And Climate Change: A Double Whammy For The Marshall Islands.
- Japan Times: Palau Boasts Incredible Maritime Diversity.
- Marianas Variety: The Value Of Island Land Ownership.

US Geological Survey

- Santa Rosa (CA) Press Democrat: PD Editorial: Congress Should Save Earthquake Warning System.

Top National News

- Washington Post: Administration To Highlight US-Made Products During “Made In America Week.”
- ABC: Trump Officially Hires Lawyer Ty Cobb To Handle “Mounting Questions Over Russia.”
- CNN: Russian-American Lobbyist Confirms Attendance At Meeting With Trump Jr., Veselnitskaya.
- Fox News: France Recognizes Trump As Guest Of Honor At Bastille Day Parade.
- Associated Press: White House Warns Budget Deficit To Reach $702 Billion This Year.
- Washington Post: WPost: Trump Budget Will Not Spur Economic Growth.
- New York Times: NYTimes: Trump Unlikely To Return To Climate Change Commitments.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - “Save The Census.”
 - “Smoking Marijuana While Black.”
 - “India’s Turn Toward Intolerance.”
- Washington Post.
 - “A Partisan Brawl In Maryland.”
 - “A Promising Decline In Teen Smoking.”
 - “The CBO Finds Mr. Trump’s Budget Lacking.”
- Wall Street Journal.
 - “Prosecutors And Political Corruption.”
 - “The UN Bans Nuclear Weapons.”
 - “The DC Circuit Vs. Deregulation.”

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today’s Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Interior Secretary Tours Cascade-Siskiyou Monument.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (7/15, Perkowski) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke visited the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument on Saturday. While Zinke is “prepared to accept the premise that the area’s flora and fauna justify a monument designation, Zinke said the Cascade-Siskiyou’s boundaries seem arbitrary in some areas.” He noted that “so far, nobody at the Interior Department has taken responsibility for drawing the boundaries or explaining their placement.” According to Zinke, “it’s become clear the boundaries weren’t established at the direction of local U.S. Bureau of Land Management officials.” He said, “They had nearly no input in drawing the boundaries and that concerns me.”

The Ashland \(OR\) Daily Tidings (7/16, Freeman) reports that Zinke said his tour of the monument “reveals that ‘a lot of the use is heavy recreation,’ but he stopped short of saying some of those lands should be downgraded from monument status.” Zinke added “that some lands now within national monument boundaries are ‘better suited’ under National Recreation Area status.”

The AP (7/14, Selsky) reports that Zinke was scheduled on Saturday to meet with Oregon Gov. Kate Brown, who is “trying to persuade him to leave it alone, and will also tour the monument, which former President Barack Obama expanded in the final days in office by 48,000 acres.” Brown said Friday in a statement, “The future of Oregon’s federal public lands and the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument gives me great concern, as I know it does for many Oregonians. Oregonians have a long tradition of environmental stewardship and deep appreciation for our public lands, and I will make sure the voices of Oregonians are heard by Secretary Zinke and the federal administration.”

The Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (7/16, Thomas) reports that “the one-hour meeting left

Brown with no indication of what Zinke's recommendation might be to President Trump in regard to the monument's designation and current boundaries." Brown said, "I urged [Zinke] and the federal administration to not backtrack on the monument and to not turn their backs on progress we have already made and look forward to working with the administration collaboratively as we seek to protect what we have created in Oregon." Brown "said Zinke expressed his desire to work collaboratively with the state of Oregon and 'take a holistic approach in terms of the expanded monument designation.'"

Additional coverage was provided by the Oregonian (7/14, Theen), the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (7/15, Selsky), the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (7/14, Freeman), the Ashland \(OR\) Daily Tidings (7/14, Freeman), the Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (7/15, Selsky), Oregon Public Broadcasting (7/14), KGW-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (7/14, Selsky), KDRV-TV Medford \(OR\) Medford, OR (7/15, Barrett), KTVZ-TV Bend \(OR\) Bend, OR (7/17), KOBI-TV Medford \(OR\) Medford, OR (7/16, Elliott), and KATU-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (7/16).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/14, Selsky), the Fort Bend \(TX\) Herald (7/14), the Idaho Statesman (7/14, Selsky), the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (7/15, Selsky), the Provo \(UT\) Daily Herald (7/14, Selsky), the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) Tribune (7/14, Selsky), and KPTV-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (7/14, Selsky).

Zinke: Trump Is Great Boss Because He 'Doesn't Micromanage'.

The Hill (7/16, Manchester) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "praised President Trump in a weekend interview, calling him 'the best boss' he's ever had." In an interview published on Saturday by Capital Press, Zinke said, "He's the best boss I've ever worked for. He doesn't micromanage."

Congressional Republicans Want Nevada Monuments Cut Back.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/14, Brean) reports that in a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "members of the all-GOP Congressional Western Caucus urged the reduction or repeal of 19 of the 22 monuments currently under review by the Trump Administration." The 17 lawmakers "who signed the June 30 letter are also calling for nine monuments to be rescinded altogether, four of them in Arizona, two in Utah and one each in California, Maine and Oregon." They say that "eight other monuments — four in California, two in New Mexico, one in Idaho and one in Montana — should be chopped down in size 'in coordination with state and local stakeholders.'"

Nye Awaits Secretary Zinke's Tour Of Basin And Range. The Pahrump \(NV\) Valley Times (7/14, Sokolova) reports that Nye County is "awaiting the visit" of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "who could redraw the boundaries" of the Basin and Range National Monument. Zinke's visit is "expected to take place later in July, however the exact date is still unclear." Alex Hinson, deputy press secretary for the Department of Interior, "said the dates of Zinke's trip have not been finalized yet."

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the St. George & Southern Utah Independent (7/16, Croft), the Ventura County \(CA\) Star (7/14, Roth), the Lodi \(CA\) News-Sentinel (7/15, Cathey), the Lake County \(CA\) Record-Bee (7/15, Raskin-Zrihen), the Deming \(NM\) Headlight (7/13), KOB-TV Albuquerque \(NM\) Albuquerque, NM (7/13), and KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (7/14).

Commentary appeared in the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (7/16), the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (7/14), the New London \(CT\) Day (7/16, Mathews, Alonso), the Bonner County \(ID\) Daily Bee (7/16), the Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (7/15, Wender, Keeley), the Durango \(CO\) Herald (7/14, Pearson), the Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (7/15), and the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (7/15).

Hunting And Fishing Groups Are Starting To Turn On Trump's Interior Secretary.

The Huffington Post (7/14, D'angelo) reports that when President Trump tapped Ryan Zinke "to lead the Interior Department, hunting and fishing groups around the country rejoiced." However, over the past four and a half months, "some of those same organizations have changed their tune as Zinke has cozied up to fossil fuel interests and come to support a budget proposal — one he initially vowed to fight — that would slash funding for land acquisition and conservation programs while promoting increased drilling and extraction on public lands." According to Whit Fosburgh, president of the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, "the level of frustration is growing daily' among outdoor groups." Fosburgh said, "To date, it's been overwhelmingly development, development, development — without even lip service to conservation. That is troubling."

Fight Over Copper Mining In Northern Minnesota Heats Up.

The UAP (7/15, Karnowski) reports that “the fight over whether to allow copper-nickel mining near the Boundary Waters Canoe Area of northeastern Minnesota is shifting to the capital city as the U.S. Forest Service opens a new set of public meetings on its proposal to bar minerals exploration and development on more than 234,000 acres near the pristine wilderness for up to 20 years.” The meetings in St. Paul on July 18 and in the Iron Range city of Virginia on July 25 “follow one held in Duluth in March.” Mining advocates have “announced plans to boycott the St. Paul meeting” and “they plan a show of force at the Virginia event instead.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Greater New Milford \(CT\) Spectrum (7/16, Karnowski), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/15, Karnowski), Philly \(PA\) (7/15, Karnowski), the St. Paul \(MN\) Pioneer Press (7/15, Karnowski), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/15, Karnowski), Yahoo! News (7/15, Karnowski, Karnowski, Press), and KAAL-TV Austin \(MN\) Austin, MN (7/15, Karnowski).

Additional coverage was provided by the Hibbing \(MN\) Daily Tribune (7/14, Lueck) and WCCO-AM Minneapolis \(MN\) Minneapolis (7/15).

‘More Valuable Than Gold’: Yellowstone Businesses Prepare To Fight Mining.

The Guardian \(UK\) (7/16, Woods, Montana) reports that around Yellowstone National Park, “mining companies anticipate the end of the Obama-era moratorium, but local businesses are fighting back.” In November 2016, former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell “announced a two-year moratorium on new mineral leases on 30,000 acres of federal public land in the Paradise Valley.” In April 2017, Sen. Jon Tester “introduced a bill that would make the moratorium permanent.” According to the article, “mine opponents are thrilled, but the bill faces a hard road forward in a Senate dominated by Republicans who share President Trump’s commitment to expanding the extractive industries’ footprint on public land.”

Additional Coverage| Sackets Harbor Battlefield Receives $683k Toward Acquiring Horse Island.

Additional coverage of federal grants announced to protect battlefields was provided by the Watertown \(NY\) Daily Times (7/15, Block) and the Fredericksburg \(VA\) Free Lance-Star (7/15).

The House Of Representatives Should Stand Up For Public Lands.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (7/14, Rogers, Contributor), Will Rogers, President of The Trust for Public Land, writes that “the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior and the Environment released its draft bill for fiscal year 2018 yesterday and it ignores the Trump Administration’s harmful proposal to starve the Land and Water Conservation Fund.” Rogers warns that “the disproportionate cuts proposed to The Land and Water Conservation Fund could have disastrous impacts across the country.” He asserts that “the reckless proposal to wipe out the funding that protects our national parks and public lands is completely out of step with America’s values and ignores the broad bipartisan support in Congress for the Land and Water Conservation Fund.”

Respect, Just A Little Bit.

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/14, Walcher), Greg Walcher, president of the Natural Resources Group, writes that the Trump Administration has “reassigned several federal land managers to positions in other regions, or even in other agencies.” Walcher finds it “noteworthy” that “this time is that some of the transfers signal an important shift in the federal approach to private property rights.” According to Walcher, “that’s because some of the officials being transferred are people who have created very prickly relationships with local communities and landowners.” He concludes that “the new Administration’s policy reversal is welcome news to landowners, who might feel less like Rodney Dangerfield (‘no respect’) and more like Aretha Franklin (‘just a little bit’).”

Bouquets And Brickbat.

The Beaumont \(TX\) Enterprise (7/15) extends a “bouquet” Big Thicket National Preserve Ranger Michael Hughes “for being honored with a Department of Interior Valor Award for his outstanding performance while responding to the May 2016 flooding throughout Southeast Texas.”

Thumbs Up, Thumbs Down.

The Houston Chronicle (7/14) gives a “thumbs” to the nomination of Susan Combs for assistant secretary of policy management and budget at the Interior Department.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Halftown Faction Gets Nod To Lead Cayugas.

The Finger Lakes \(NY\) Times (7/16, SHAW) reports that "a faction led by Clint Halftown is the federally recognized governing body of the Cayuga Indian Nation." Assistant Bureau of Indian Affairs Secretary Michael Black issued the decision Friday. Black "said in addition to Halftown, the other members of the Cayuga Nation Council now recognized as the governing body are Timothy Twoguns, Gary Wheeler, Michael Barringer and Donald Jimerson." Halftown said in a written statement, "On behalf of the citizens of the Cayuga Nation, we are greatly pleased by this decision. It signifies an end to the bitter turmoil created by dissident members of our Nation. More important, it represents a new beginning where we can all work together to the betterment of our people."

A New Look At Mashpee Tribe's Status.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (7/14, Lindahl) reports that "as the federal government considers a route for the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe to retain its sovereign land while sidestepping a landmark 2009 U.S. Supreme Court case, Congress is studying whether the way the government creates reservations for tribes should be overhauled in the wake of that ruling." Legislation introduced in the House "earlier this year would create a 'fix' to the 2009 Carcieri decision, which made it difficult for tribes recognized after 1934, including the Mashpee tribe, to get land in trust, U.S. Rep. Norma Torres, ranking member of the Indian affairs subcommittee said at a hearing this week." James Cason, acting deputy Interior secretary, said at the Congressional hearing, The Interior Department "continues to search for a way to allow the Mashpee tribe's 171 acres on the Cape and 150 acres in Taunton, where it intends to build a casino, to remain in trust."

Editorial: Give Lumbees What They Deserve.

In an editorial, the Fayetteville \(NC\) Observer (7/12) supports extending full federal recognition to the Lumbee tribe. According to the paper, "all that's left to do is to resolve an issue of fairness, to ensure that the Lumbees get the same rights and assistance as every other recognized tribe in the United States."

Bureau Of Land Management

Montana Delayed Oil And Gas Drill Applications Less Than 100.

The AP (7/16) reports Montana has less than "100 delayed oil and gas drillings applications on federal land within the state, and the Bureau of Land Management is not the cause of delays in the state, a BLM official said." BLM field manager Scott Haight said, "In Montana, there were 84 pending applications and of those, 82 of them are in a pending status. There's no way of acting on them because they're in the Interior Board of Land Appeals."

Additional coverage was provided by the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (7/16, Lutey).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by U.S. News & World Report (7/16), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/16), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/16), and the Idaho Statesman (7/16).

Federal Ranger's Testimony Sought In Steinle Murder Trial.

The AP (7/14, Elias) reports that "a federal agency is prohibiting a ranger from testifying about his stolen gun used to fatally shoot a California woman, whose 2015 death was referenced repeatedly by then-candidate Donald Trump to underscore his call to deport criminals living in the country illegally." Juan Francisco Lopez Sanchez, "who was deported five times, admits fatally shooting Kate Steinle while she walked with her father on a San Francisco pier crowded with tourists." Two years after the slaying, "the case is inching closer to trial." However, Lopez-Sanchez' attorneys are "now wrangling with the Department of Interior over whether Bureau of Land Management ranger John Woychowski can be called as a witness."

Additional coverage was provided by the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/14, Ho) and KQED-FM San Francisco \(CA\) San Francisco (7/14, Emslie).

BLM Plans To Relocate 1,500 Wyoming Wild Horses.

The AP (7/14) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “released a draft environmental assessment for a proposed relocation of about 1,500 wild horses.” According to the article, “the assessment that was released on Wednesday calls for reducing populations in the Salt Wells Creek, Adobe Town and Great Divide Basin herd management areas to their low appropriate management levels.” The AP says that “the overall population of the areas, 2,836 wild horses, exceeds the required management level of 1,560 animals.”

Rallies Support Defendants In Bunkerville Standoff Case.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/15, Bekker, Michor) reports that “hundreds of supporters turned out at a Las Vegas event Saturday night supporting the defendants facing trial in the Bunkerville standoff case.” The crowd “gathered at Rainbow Gardens to hear speeches from Las Vegas City Councilwoman Michele Fiore, members of the Bundy family and even Roger Stone, an on-and-off adviser for President Donald Trump.” The article says that “the overarching theme at Saturday event” was that “the ‘mainstream media’ hasn’t given the Bundy family a voice.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Don't Risk Fishing, Tourism Jobs On A Small Amount Of Oil.

In an op-ed for the Press of Atlantic City \(NJ\) (7/16, Savitz), Jacqueline Savitz, a senior vice president at Oceana, writes that “late last month, the New England Fishery Management Council joined its Mid-Atlantic and South Atlantic council colleagues in officially documenting concern over Trump administration-backed plans to use seismic airgun blasting to search for oil off the Atlantic coast.” She argues that “offshore oil exploration threatens decades of progress toward making America’s fish stocks great again and thereby threatens economies and livelihoods along the East Coast.” According to Savitz, “it’s not worth taking these risks, especially considering the small amount of oil at stake.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Delegation Supports Intake.

The Sidney \(MT\) Herald (7/15, Weele) reports that “the delegation for Montana and North Dakota have displayed its support this week for the Lower Yellowstone Irrigation Project.” On Tuesday, “senators and representatives from Montana and North Dakota sent a letter to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Bureau of Reclamation to urge those agencies to continue to support the project and not reallocate funding currently provided for the LYIP.” The article says that “oral arguments that will determine the fate of the proposed project at the Intake Diversion Dam to make the project more fish friendly are scheduled to be heard during this month.”

Effort To Bring Water To Eastern New Mexico Inches Along.

The AP (7/14, Bryan) reports that “the U.S. government is funneling another $5 million” to the Ute pipeline project. According to the article, “the pipeline would bring water from Ute Reservoir to Cannon Air Force Base, Clovis, Portales and other communities along the Texas-New Mexico border.” The article notes that “the price has ballooned to more than a half-billion dollars, and the Bureau of Reclamation has acknowledged it could end up costing $750 million.”

Gila River Agreement Shows Arizona Is Ready To Deal On Water.

The Arizona Republic (7/14) editorializes that “if we are to continue to prosper as communities into the distant future, we will need to work together to solve the problem of water scarcity.” The paper says “that is why the ‘consummation’ July 14 of the five-party water-conservation agreement in Phoenix is so important.” According to the editorial, “it demonstrates in deed the kind of creative cooperation that is essential if the West is to meet the greatest threat on its horizon.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Bald Eagle Threat: Lead Ammo Left Behind By Hunters.

The AP (7/16, Esch) reports that “bald eagles have made a remarkable recovery across the United States since the pesticide DDT was banned 45 years ago, but the majestic birds are still dying from another environmental poison: lead from bullets and shotgun pellets in wildlife carcasses left behind by hunters." The issue is "that eagles and other scavengers eat the guts of deer or the carcasses of coyotes, woodchucks and other game shot by hunters." The article notes that "on former President Barack Obama's last day in office, Fish and Wildlife Service Director Dan Ashe signed an order calling for phase-out of lead ammunition on federal lands by 2022." However, "President Donald Trump's new Secretary of the Interior, Ryan Zinke, reversed Ashe's order on his first day in office."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Olean \(NY\) Times Herald (7/16, Esch), the Niagara \(NY\) Gazette (7/16, Esch), ABC News (7/16, Esch), the Daily Mail (7/16), and WVEC-TV Hampton Roads \(VA\) Hampton Roads, VA (7/16).

Plaintiff In St. Tammany Landowner Vs. Frog Dispute Seeks Leap To U.S. Supreme Court.

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (7/15, Pagonos) reports that the Pacific Legal Foundation "filed a petition last week asking the Supreme Court to review the decision to designate the 1,500 acres as critical habitat" for the dusky gopher frog. According to the article, "while the lower courts held that the Fish and Wildlife Service acted within its discretion in making its designation, the plaintiffs were encouraged by a strong dissent on the part of six judges on the 5th Circuit, who said the decision gives the government virtually limitless power to designate 'critical habitat.'" The issue for the Supreme Court, "according to the petition, is whether the Endangered Species Act gives the federal government the power to designate as critical habitat private land that has no actual connection with a protected species and, even if does, whether the U.S. Constitution allows that."

Additional coverage was provided by Law360 (7/14, Rodriguez).

Newly Discovered Toad Species In Nevada Already Under Threat.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/17, Brean) reports that "Nevada researchers just identified the first new species of toad found anywhere in the U.S. in 50 years, and the race is already on to save it from extinction." Conservationists are "preparing an emergency petition to have the Dixie Valley toad listed as an endangered species to protect it from a proposed geothermal energy project at the edge of its isolated home in Churchill County." According to the article, "their only known habitat is a spring-fed marsh covering just more than 2 square miles of federal land in the remote Dixie Valley, about 400 miles northwest of Las Vegas."

Group Calls For Release Of Mexican Gray Wolves In New Mexico.

The AP (7/17) reports that "environmentalists are asking that federal wildlife managers release more captive Mexican gray wolves into the wild in New Mexico to help with recovery of the endangered species." The Center for Biological Diversity "outlined its request in a letter to regional officials with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." The center "pointed to two family packs that biologists earlier this year identified for release and an additional three packs to bolster genetic diversity among wolves currently in the wild in New Mexico and neighboring Arizona."

Fish & Wildlife Service Will Conduct Sea Lamprey Survey In WNY Waters.

The Buffalo \(NY\) News (7/14, Pignataro) reports that "U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service survey crews will take to the upper Niagara River, lower Buffalo River and Cattaraugus Creek later this month to estimate the numbers of invasive sea lamprey in those waters." The survey will be conducted "between July 25 and Aug. 3."

Snakes, Lizards To Be Feature Of Dickson Mounds Kids' Day.

The AP (7/14) reports that Dickson Mounds Museum will "feature 'Snakes, Lizards and More' for its Kids' Day presentation on Sunday." The event celebrating World Snake Day is co-sponsored by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service .

The Government Is Now The Yellowstone Grizzly's Biggest Threat.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (7/14, McNamee), Thomas McNamee argues that the Yellowstone grizzly bear population has not truly recovered. He notes that "nearly all conservation biologists outside government say that an absolute recovery will never be possible for the Yellowstone grizzly population." McNamee claims that "the only way Yellowstone's grizzly bears can be expected to thrive in the long run is for their ecosystem to be connected by a corridor of occupied habitat to other grizzly populations — the one centered in Glacier National Park to the north and others up the Rocky Mountain chain to Alaska." He concludes that "taking away federal protection now — with the bears' food sources plunging and their ecosystem isolated — is an act of either deceit or folly."

Additional commentary appears in the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (7/16), the Idaho State Journal (7/14, Wuerthner), and the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (7/15, McCoy).

National Park Service

Park Service Names Associate Director For Workforce And Inclusion.

The Sonora \(CA\) Union Democrat (7/14, McCarthy) reports that the National Park Service announced a new associate director for workforce and inclusion. According to NPS public affairs staff, Tony Nguyen is "in charge of all staffing and employee management programs for more than 22,000 employees in more than 400 national parks and offices." Michael T. Reynolds, acting director of the National Park Service, said, "We look forward to bringing in Tony's fresh perspective on how we can ensure that every NPS employee has a safe and respectful workplace."

D.C.'s LGBT Landmarks Will Be Identified, Highlighted In An Online Database.

The Curbed Washington (7/14, Goldchain) reports that "every single LGBT landmark in the nation's capital is going to be identified, studied, and later inserted into a publicly-accessible online database." The Interior Department "awarded a $50,000 grant to the D.C. Historic Preservation Office within the D.C. Office of Planning (OP) in order to fund the project." It is "one of 13 projects in the nation funded by the U.S. Department of Interior that is aimed to benefit the National Register of Historic Places through increasing the number of listings associated with underrepresented communities."

Protected Wolves In Alaska Face Peril From Beyond Their Preserve.

The New York Times (7/14, Klein) reports that "a recent study suggests that efforts to limit populations of...predators outside" the borders of the Yukon-Charley Rivers National Preserve is "having negative effects on wolves living within the preserve." The study, "published in June in Wildlife Monographs, suggests that when the Alaskan authorities were limiting wolf populations outside the Yukon-Charley preserve, survival rates of wolves within the preserve were lower than usual." The research "highlight the notion that managing wildlife within human-imposed boundaries requires communication and cooperation with the authorities beyond a preserve's boundaries, and could have implications for wildlife management programs elsewhere."

Training Ordnance Found On New North Carolina Island.

The AP (7/14) reports that "an ordnance disposal unit has removed a World War II-era training device from a new island off the North Carolina coast." According to the National Park Service, "the Hatteras Island Rescue Squad responded to a report of an old military device on the sand bar Friday." The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/14, Parker) reports that a Navy bomb disposal squad "removed the object from the beach of Shelly Island and said it was a World War II training ordnance." The unit "transported it to Virginia for safe disposal." National Park Service spokesman Boone Vandzura said, "The crew was very professional. We're happy that Cape Point and that area are reopened for the weekend."

Additional coverage was provided by WITN-TV Greenville, NC (7/14).

In The Grand Canyon, Uranium Mining Threatens A Tribe's Survival.

The Guardian \(UK\) (7/17, Walters) reports that the Havasupai tribe is raising concerns about a mining company's plans to drill to "extract high-grade uranium ore" within the Grand Canyon watershed. The company, Energy Fuels Inc, "pledges to operate safely, but the Havasupai and others say that's impossible to promise, especially as too little is known about subterranean water flow." They claim "that any contamination of the groundwater from the mining operations will end up in Havasu Creek, destroying an ancient way of life if they leave the canyon, sickening them if they stay."

Yellowstone Proposes Building New Youth Education Campus.

The AP (7/15) reports that Yellowstone National Park "wants to move and rebuild its youth education campus to expand dorm and classroom space." The park issued "an environmental assessment last week that proposes building five dormitories." The park also "proposes new staff offices and a new dining area for youth educational programs."

Physically Disabled Persons Praise, Question Access To Acadia.

The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/16, Kong, Ring) reports that Acadia National Park's effort to improve access for physically disabled people is drawing both praise and criticism. Meanwhile, the National Park Service, "in a five-year plan on accessibility, acknowledges that it is under-serving people with varying abilities and lays out a strategy to build momentum and advance the effort."

C&O Canal Trust Helps Park Service With Budget Shortfalls.

The Frederick \(MD\) News-Post (7/15, Anderson) reports that "for the past 10 years, the C&O Canal Trust, the official nonprofit partner organization of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park, has done for the park what it cannot do for itself." According to the article, "in order to fill in some of the staffing gap and prevent major lapses in canal maintenance, the Trust has raised about $350,000 to directly fund repair projects, organized countless volunteer cleanup efforts, and has taken over many visitor service functions." The article notes that "recent repairs have included fixing a large section of the towpath that had been washed out by a river near the town of Potomac, and a major push to restore the historic homes that housed the families who operated the canal lock mechanisms in the 19th-century."

Facebook Founder Mark Zuckerberg Talks 'Climate Change' In Glacier Park.

KULR-TV Billings, MT (7/16, Lutz) reports that "Facebook founder, Mark Zukerberg took to his own Facebook account over the weekend to talk and share pictures of Glacier National Park." In his post, Zuckerberg said "I'm spending the afternoon at Glacier National Park in Montana with some National Park Service Rangers." According to the article, "it appeared the visit had something to do with Zuckerberg's interest in climate change." Zuckerberg said in his post, "The impact of climate change is very clear at Glacier."

MDI Couple Oversees NPS Digital Domain.

The Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (7/14, Broom) reports that Ginny Reams, the web content manager, and Todd Edgar, the NPS.gov manager, is "responsible for building the systems that all of the parks use to maintain their websites." Edgar said, "We're constantly making changes and improvements. Over the last couple of years, we've made some pretty substantial ones." The article notes that "one of those improvements was making sure all of the park service websites were mobile friendly." Edgar said, "That was absolutely necessary because about half of NPS.gov's traffic is mobile now."

K-State Researches Bear Cams In Alaska National Park.

The Kansas City \(MO\) Star (7/14, Gutierrez) reports that "thousands of people around the world are spending hours online this month watching a bear cam in Katmai National Park and Preserve in southern Alaska." Meanwhile, "two researchers from Kansas State University are studying this bear love-in." The researchers "want to know whether people have the same emotional response to experiencing animals virtually, online, as they do seeing them in person at the park."

'Jr. Rangers' Offered I & M Canal Activities In July, August.

The AP (7/16) reports that "the I & M Canal National Heritage Area will have 'Junior Ranger' days on July 27 and Aug. 24 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m." The National Park Service Junior Ranger program "offers young visitors a chance at a series of activities, questions and answers with the park ranger and a Junior Ranger patch."

Sequoia National Park Celebrates Latino Conservation Week.

The Porterville \(CA\) Recorder (7/15) reports that "in celebration of Latino Conservation Week, Sequoia National Park will play host beginning today to 20 young Latino adults from Los Angeles as they collect scientific data on sequoias, hike the Giant Forest, and learn about stewardship."

Point Reyes Legal Settlement A Victory For National Parks Everywhere.

In an op-ed for the Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (7/15, Moskowitz), Deborah Moskowitz, president of the Resource Renewal Institute, writes that a federal court has "delivered a victory" to the Point Reyes National Seashore and, "by extension, to all of our nation's parks by approving a settlement agreement committing the park service to modernize its obsolete general management plan based on an environmental impact study, and allow the public to comment to the plan.” According to Moskowitz, the settlement “reached with park service means that by 2021 the seashore and those portions of the GGNRA now open to cattle grazing will have a refreshed, scientifically based general management plan that addresses these and other 21st-century realities.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

INSIGHTS ON PBS HAWAI'I Giving A Damn.

PBS (7/13) provides a report on the migration of Micronesians to Hawaii with “a new environmental tragedy that threatens the Marshall Islands,” Nuclear Weapons And Climate Change: A Double Whammy For The Marshall Islands.

The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists (7/14, Bastian) reports that “although many areas of the Marshall Islands are threatened by radioactive contamination from US nuclear testing during the Cold War—and, more recently, by rising sea levels in a warming climate—the US military continues to use the Kwajalein Atoll for missile testing and other operations.” The United States is “modernizing facilities in the Marshalls, just as it did during the age of nuclear testing.” However, “these steps, seen largely as successes by the Pentagon and the American public, leave behind casualties.” The article says that “for the Marshallese, casualties came in the form of deadly radiation and displacement during the period when America was testing the most powerful weapons the world had ever seen.”

Palau Boasts Incredible Maritime Diversity.

The Japan Times (7/13, Kameda) reports that Palau has “boosted its efforts to preserve its rich maritime environment for generations to come, with some of the measures including the introduction of environmental protection taxes and education for children, an official from the Tokyo branch of the country’s tourism office said at a recent seminar in Tokyo.” Palau “boasts the Rock Islands Southern Lagoon, which was designated in 2012 as a mixed World Heritage site; one of only 35 such sites in the world that feature elements of both natural and cultural significance.” Tsuyoshi Shibamura, marketing and sales coordinator of the Palau Visitors Authority Japan Office, told an audience at the Minato City Eco-Plaza on June 22, “It’s like an aquarium in the sea, given the amazingly diverse species.”

The Value Of Island Land Ownership.

In a piece for the Marianas Variety (7/14, Sakaziro), Christy Sakaziro writes that “throughout Micronesia, the incorporation of island societies into the Western market economy and the rising tide of privatization are washing away the collective ownership of land.” As a result, “the decline in traditional kin-based lawn ownership is now notable in many islands.”

US Geological Survey

PD Editorial: Congress Should Save Earthquake Warning System.

The Santa Rosa \(CA\) Press Democrat (7/15) editorializes that “an early-warning system created by scientists at Caltech, UC Berkeley and the universities of Oregon and Washington has shown great promise, and earthquake scientists are ready to roll it out along the West Coast — if the Trump administration doesn’t kill federal funding for the program dubbed ShakeAlert.” It argues that “abandoning the early-warning system would be, at best, shortsighted — trimming $10.2 million from a $3.5 trillion budget while virtually assuring much larger outlays for disaster relief programs in the future.” It urges Congress to provide funding for the early warning system.

Top National News

Administration To Highlight US-Made Products During “Made In America Week.”

Largely overshadowed by reporting on the Russia investigation and the healthcare debate, the Administration’s “Made in America Week” generated largely negative coverage, which describes how many of the products made by Trump’s own company are manufactured overseas. Media analyses also casting the theme week as an effort by the Administration to distract attention from both the Russia and healthcare narratives.

The Washington Post (7/16, Rucker) says the theme weeks are “orchestrated by aides to bring discipline to the White House and focus Trump’s schedule and message on a set of policies” and says that “highlighting US-made products is inconsistent with [Trump’s] practices as a businessman.” The Trump Organization has for years “outsourced much of its product manufacturing.” Likewise, “the clothing line of Ivanka Trump, the president’s older daughter and a senior White House adviser, relies exclusively on foreign factories employing low-wage workers in countries such as Bangladesh, Indonesia and China, according to a recent Washington Post investigation.” The New York Post (7/16, Schultz) says Trump was elected “with a strong ‘America First’ agenda, despite family products manufactured overseas where labor is cheaper.” White House director of media affairs Helen Aguirre Ferre was asked “whether any announcements of Trump family products being made in America will be forthcoming this week,” to which she replied, “We’ll get back to you on that.”

Politico (7/16, Restuccia) reports that over the next three weeks, “the White House will hold events pertaining to three vaguely defined themes.” In addition to “Made in America,” the other themes are “American Heroes” and “American Dreams.” The Hill (7/16, Delk) says the “Made in America” messaging campaign is “in preparation for the Senate’s push to rewrite the US tax code.” The Wall Street Journal (7/16, Bender) reports that press secretary Sean Spicer said the themes are part of an effort to set the stage for Trump’s arguments for tax reform.

However, Bloomberg News (7/16, Sink) casts the theme weeks as “part of an effort to shift focus by a White House besieged by the investigations into Russian election meddling and struggling to pass a health-care bill.” The AP (7/16, Colvin) similarly describes the Administration as “plagued by daily revelations related to the escalating Russia investigations,” and says it is trying “to focus on issues that matter to the president’s base.” Ferre told reporters Sunday “that the White House will be hosting a ‘Made in America’ product showcase Monday featuring products from all 50 states.” In addition, Trump “is expected to issue a proclamation Wednesday on the importance of making goods in America, and will travel to Virginia on Saturday for the commissioning of the USS Gerald R. Ford, a new aircraft carrier.”

The Washington Examiner (7/16, Quinn) says that when reporters asked “why the White House wasn’t launching a healthcare-themed week, particularly as Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell has struggled to gain support for the Senate’s plan to repeal and replace parts of Obamacare,” a “senior administration official” said, “It’s something that enormous White House and administration resources have been devoted to since day one.”

Detroit News Analysis: Steel Tariffs Could Hurt US Automakers. A Detroit News (7/16, Thibodeau, Lynch) analysis says that while US steel companies might benefit from the tariffs on steel imports being considered by the Trump Administration, the tariffs “could hurt US automakers and other industries – and raise prices for buyers of their goods.” According to economists, “a protective tax on imported steel would give makers of domestic steel the incentive to raise their prices – just because they could.” Such a move, they say, “would make US-made cars more expensive and push consumers to buy cheaper cars from foreign companies unaffected by the tariff.”

US Firms Say China Has Fallen Short On Keeping Promises Made In Trade Deal. The Wall Street Journal (7/16, Schlesinger, Bunge, Andriotis) reports that while Commerce Secretary Ross declared in May that winning promises from China to open markets in finance and agriculture was a “herculean accomplishment” and “more than has been done in the whole history of US-China relations on trade,” US companies say that although China has lived up to the letter of its promises, it has not lived up to the spirit. According to the companies, access to some areas has improved slowly and modestly, while obstacles in other areas will continue to be a hindrance for years.

WSJournal Analysis: Trump’s Trade Agenda Tempered By World Economy. A Wall Street Journal (7/16, Davis) analysis says President Trump’s protectionist promises during the campaign are being tempered by international economic changes and the institutions overseeing trade. The Journal says Trump has taken a different tack than his predecessors, who praised free trade but favored protectionist policies. Trump, the Journal says, threatened protectionism during the campaign, but his policies have been more modest.

Trump Officially Hires Lawyer Ty Cobb To Handle “Mounting Questions Over Russia.”

President Trump on Saturday announced he has hired veteran attorney Ty Cobb as the White House special counsel to oversee the Administration’s response to the various investigations into Russian collusion. While coverage in print and online of Donald Trump Jr.’s meeting with Russian attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya subsided heavily from Friday, the network newscasts devoted nearly six minutes combined to the story. Reporting remained overwhelmingly negative toward the President's son and the Administration's defense of his actions.

ABC World News Tonight's (7/15, story 3, 3:05, Llamas) David Wright reported that on Saturday, "as some of the best golfers in the world played at his club here in New Jersey, the President naturally had a prime seat. But Trump won't get much of a break from mounting questions over Russia. The main focus now: that meeting Don Jr. had at Trump Tower last June with Russian sources he was told were peddling 'official documents and information that would incriminate Hillary, part of Russia and its government support for Mr. Trump.'"

Errol Barnett of the CBS Weekend News (7/15, story 2, 1:40, Ninan) similarly reported "President Trump appeared in good spirits greeting guests at the Women's US Open Golf Tournament at his Bedminster golf course. But privately, investors are concerned about revelations of Kremlin-linked attendees at a meeting in Trump Tower last year." Barnett added "Rinat Akhmetshin, a Russian-American with suspected links to Russian intelligence," claimed Friday that he had also attended the June 2016 meeting reportedly "between Donald Trump Jr., campaign manager Paul Manafort, son-in-law Jared Kushner, intermediary Rob Goldstone, and Russian lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya." This revelation, said Barnett, "contradicts public statements from Donald Trump Jr., who based on emails he released, accepted the meeting hoping to receive damaging info about Hillary Clinton."

An AP (7/15, Lemire) analysis says "the day-after-day drip-drip-drip of revelations over the past week about Donald Trump Jr.'s contact with the Russian lawyer in 2016 underscores the White House's inability to shake off the Russia story and close the book on a narrative that casts a shadow over Trump's presidency." The AP adds that "no matter how presidential Trump may have looked on his back-to-back trips to Europe in recent days, the persistent questions about connections between Trump's team and Russia prevent him from savoring a public relations victory and building momentum for his stalled legislative agenda." According to the AP, "the investigations have thrown the White House off balance, leaving some officials on edge about whether there are more disclosures to come."

"However relaxed the President may appear," reported NBC Nightly News (7/15, story 6, 1:05, Diaz-Balart) Kelly O'Donnell, Trump is "trying to change course," first by "playing down one crisis with his dismissive label referring to the 'Russia hoax story' in a tweet about the stock market rally, while making official his hiring of a new lawyer inside the White House, naming Washington veteran Ty Cobb as the President's special counsel." Reuters (7/15, Ainsley) says that "sources familiar with the hiring said Cobb would handle the White House's response to Russia-related investigations."

The Washington Times (7/15, Miller) reports Cobb, "a partner at the Washington law firm Hogan Lovells who specializes in white-collar crime," will also "coordinate with Mr. Trump's outside counsel, Marc Kasowitz," who had previously handled all White House press inquiries on the matter and "provided limited response to the news media." The Hill (7/15, Bowden) reports Cobb also has "experience as a federal prosecutor and defense attorney."

Meanwhile, USA Today (7/15, Schouten, Schnaars) reports that although Trump has "stockpiled nearly $12 million for his 2020 re-election campaign," the President's legal expenses have been "soaring as his administration deals with a rapidly expanding investigation into possible collusion between his campaign and the Russian government, documents released Saturday afternoon show." According to USA Today, Federal Election Commission filings reveal "Trump's campaign racked up more than $677,000 in 'legal consulting' fees between April and June, more than twice the $249,000 he spent on legal bills during the first three months of his presidency." USA Today adds that "most of the legal expenses were tied to his longtime election law firm, Jones Day," but also "a nearly $90,000 payment for legal expenses to his company, the Trump Organization, and $50,000 payment on June 27 to the law firm of Alan Futerfas, the New York-based criminal attorney now representing Donald Trump Jr." Politico (7/15, Severns) states that "the campaign spent significantly more in this area during the late spring and summer than during the first three months of the year, when it reported paying $249,344 on legal expenses. Trump has spent more than $4.5 million of campaign funds on legal costs since the beginning of his campaign."

Sekulow: Administration's Struggles To Make "A Fascinating Movie One Day." The Hill (7/15, Cohn) reports the President's attorney Jay Sekulow in a CNN's "Anderson Cooper 360" interview on Friday "dismissed allegations of lawbreaking by members of the administration as the plot of 'a fascinating movie one day. ... But none of it violates the law.'" Sekulow added, "The president has stated very clearly that he was not aware of the meeting and did not attend the meeting. And that has been undisputed. No one has disputed that. So he was not aware of it, did not attend it."

NYTimes A1 Deems "Soviet Veteran" Akhmetshin A "Master Of The Dark Arts." In a front-page profile headlined "Soviet Veteran Who Met With Trump Jr. Is A Master Of The Dark Arts," the New York Times (7/15, Higgins, Kramer) reports Russian-American lobbyist Rinat Akhmetshin has had "one consistent message for the journalists who met him over the years at the luxury hotels where he stayed in Moscow, London and Paris, or at his home on a leafy street in Washington: Never use email to convey information that needed to be kept secret." The Times adds that while "he insisted" he was not "an expert in the technical aspects of hacking nor, a spy, Mr. Akhmetshin talked openly about how he had worked with a counterintelligence unit while serving with the Red Army after its 1979 invasion of Afghanistan and how easy it was to find tech-savvy professionals ready and able to plunder just about any email account."

WPost Profiles Publicist Goldstone Behind Trump Jr. Meeting. The Washington Post (7/15, Boburg, Gillum) profiles the "colorful" publicist Rob Goldstone, 57, who sent "the email to Donald Trump Jr. [that] described an intricate back channel between the Kremlin and the Trump campaign that could provide incriminating information about Hillary Clinton" and organized the meeting between the President's son and the attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya. The Post says that according to "friends and former associates," Goldstone is "a bon vivant who posts self-deprecating videos on social media, hobnobs with New York socialites and sometimes uses bluster and hyperbole to open doors." The Post adds "the boutique PR firm he has run for 20 years with a partner has relied on a small roster of clients and piecemeal work, setting up shop for several years in rent-free office space and neglecting to pay taxes some years in the 2000s, according to interviews and records."

NYTimes Analysis: Ukrainian Payments To Manafort Illustrate Country's Corruption. The New York Times (7/15, Kramer) reports Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort "recently filed financial reports with the Justice Department showing that his lobbying firm earned nearly $17 million for two years of work for a Ukrainian political party with links to the Kremlin," but "curiously, that was more than the party itself reported spending in the same period for its entire operation — the national political organization's expenses, salaries, printing outlays and other incidentals." According to the Times, "the discrepancies show a lot about how Mr. Manafort's clients — former President Viktor F. Yanukovich of Ukraine and his Party of Regions — operated" and also "in a broader sense...underscore the dangers that lurk for foreigners who, tempted by potentially rich payoffs, cast their lot with politicians in countries that at best have different laws about money in politics, and at worst are, like Ukraine in those years, irredeemably corrupt."

DeSantis Wants Rhodes To Testify On Leaks. The Hill (7/15, Bowden) reports Rep. Ron DeSantis, a member of the House Oversight Committee, on Saturday told conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt on MSNBC "that he wants former senior Obama administration official Ben Rhodes to testify on Capitol Hill." DeSantis, the chair of the national security subcommittee, said, "If you look at some of the leaks that have come out, for example, when the president's having a conversation with a foreign leader, there may be a memo that's created, distributed to the National Security Council. The next thing you know, it's on the front page of the paper." DeSantis added, "There's only so many places that would come from. And the Obama holdover working with Rhodes, that's a place we've been encouraged to look."

Democrats Call For More Scrutiny Of Kushner. Breitbart (7/15, Baker) reports Rep. Al Green on MSNBC's "AM Joy" on Saturday "said...that 'probable cause clearly exists' to have a grand jury investigate President Donald Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner for his meeting a Russian lawyer along with Donald Trump Jr. and Paul Manafort." Green added, "With reference to Mr. Kushner and this meeting that took place, there is one significant fact that we have to address, and that is, there is enough probable cause here for a grand jury to investigate. If the special counsel is doing his job, either he will have agents talking to Mr. Kushner or he will have a grand jury looking into this. There is probable cause for a grand jury to look into it and any prosecutor who says there is not probable cause is an outlier or outright liar because the probable cause clearly exists."

In a Politico Magazine (7/14, Price) op-ed, Ned Price, a special assistant to former President Obama for National Security affairs as well as a former spokesperson and senior director on the National Security Council, questions why Kushner continues to maintain a Top Secret security clearance in light of the latest revelations and argues his status "is an affront to America's national security and a slap in the face to the career professionals subject to a different set of rules." According to Price, if the Administration and Congress refuse to revoke Kushner's security clearance, then "there's an unmistakable double standard at play. Career officials, many of whom spend decades in service of their country, are subject to a different set of rules than those under the protection of the powerful. That's never how the system has worked, nor is it how it should work.”

Meanwhile, The Hill (7/15, Bowden) reports Rep. Maxine Waters on Friday “called on her colleagues across the aisle in the House and Senate to step up their criticism of President Trump as the investigation into possible collusion with Russia evolves.” Waters said, “It’s amazing that we have members of Congress who are defending and protecting this president. I am surprised.” She added, “Here they are in the face of growing evidence that there have been contacts with, perhaps collusion with, and obstruction of justice by this president – they’re willing to defend him. And I don’t know if they’re just scared of him, if they’re frightened, if they don’t have the guts to stand up. What is wrong with them, I just don’t quite understand.”

Publishers Compete For Rights To Comey Memoir. The New York Times (7/15, Alter) reports former FBI Director James Comey “is writing a book about his experience in public service, including his tumultuous and brief tenure in the Trump administration.” The Times states that Comey “has been meeting with editors and publishers in New York in recent days, and is being represented by Keith Urbahn and Matt Latimer, partners at the literary agency Javelin. The book is expected to go to auction this coming week, and all the major publishing houses have expressed keen interest, Mr. Latimer said.”

NYTimes, Columnists Criticize Trump Over Latest Russia Meeting Revelations. The New York Times (7/15) editorializes that “even without the widening scandal over election interference, President Trump would have had a hard time managing America’s relations with Russia, which are as tense as at any time since the end of the Cold War.” The Times contends that “the complex differences between the two countries will not be easily resolved” and warns Russian President Vladimir Putin “has shown a ruthless commitment to self-preservation that relies heavily on returning Russia to a mythical place of power and glory, not in helping the West build a more stable world.” The Times adds the President “is making sound policy making even harder, though, with his admiration of Mr. Putin and his willingness to surrender the country’s international leadership, which was on display during the Group of 20 meeting in Germany.”

Meanwhile, USA Today (7/15, Rossman) reports Fox News anchor Shepard Smith on his “Shepard Smith Reporting” on Friday “slammed what he called ‘lies’ and ‘deception’ pushed by Donald Trump Jr. in a fiery Friday rant over emerging details of Trump Jr.’s meeting with a Russian lawyer last summer.” USA Today says that Smith “launched into a tirade over Trump Jr.’s stance the meeting equated to nothing even as new details showed it included eight people.” He asserted, “We’re still not clean on this. ... Why all these lies? Why is it lie after lie after lie? If you clean, come on clean.” Smith added “the deception...is mind-boggling. ... And there are still people out there who believe we’re making it up and one day they’re going to realize we’re not.”

In a New York Times (7/15, Green) op-ed, Bloomberg Businessweek senior national correspondent Joshua Green states that “as recently as five or 10 years ago, every major news outlet would have treated” Donald Trump Jr.’s meeting with a Russian lawyer in a bid to help his father in the election “as front-page news and a dire threat to Mr. Trump’s presidency,” but due to what had formerly been the “political fringe of right-wing talk radio, the Drudge Report and dissident publications like Breitbart News” as well as on Fox News “you’re apt to find an alternative reality in which the same set of facts is rearranged to compose an entirely different narrative.” According to Green, “The Breitbart mind-set – pugnacious, besieged, paranoid and determined to impose its own framework on current events regardless of facts – has moved from the right-wing fringe to the center of Republican politics.” Green concludes “Don Jr.’s travails will be a good test of the resiliency of the new Republican worldview.”

In his New York Times (7/15, Bruni) column, Frank Bruni contends that in regards to the President, “what we saw before Nov. 8 was what we got from Jan. 20 onward: a child in a man’s suit, a knave in a knight’s armor, a dangerous experiment with unforeseeable consequences.” In reflecting back on Trump’s first six months in office, Bruni says “we have to stop rolling our eyes when he brags about how much he has done, because he’s right. He has done plenty.” Bruni adds that “With his stances on climate change, trade and refugees and with all the air kisses blown at Vladimir Putin, he has altered our place in the world and splintered its postwar framework.”

In her New York Times (7/15, Dowd) column, Maureen Dowd asserts “the night in Washington is dark and full of terrors. The Game of Trump has brought a pagan lawlessness never before seen in the capital.” Dowd compares the President and his Administration to characters from “Game of Thrones,” citing how “Don Jr. was not ashamed that he had gleefully met with Russians to collect dirt on Hillary Clinton. He was only annoyed, as he told Sean Hannity in the womb of Fox News, that the meeting turned out to be “a nothing” and “just a wasted 20 minutes.” The thought that it was improper has not entered his mind.”

In her Washington Post (7/14, Marcus) column, Ruth Marcus stated that while “every week – nearly every day – brings fresh, stomach-churning evidence of President Trump’s unfitness for office," his reaction to learning of his son's meeting with the Russian lawyer "may be the most revolting." Marcus acknowledged "Donald Trump Jr. at least had the decency to admit" that he should have "done things a little differently," but she condemned the President for his "staggering refusal to recognize the reality of Russian attempts to interfere in the election."

In a Politico Magazine (7/15, D'Amico) op-ed, Steven D'Amico, principal at the "Democratic opposition research" firm D'Amico Strategy and Communications who formerly served as "the research director at American Bridge 21st Century, where I led the investigative efforts targeting Trump," argued that despite the President's defense of his son's meeting "with a Kremlin-linked lawyer and a former Soviet spy promising dirt on Hillary Clinton" and suggestion other candidates would have done the same, "I know nothing is farther from the truth." According to D'Amico, "given the inexperience of Trump's team, you might get why they don't understand what 'opposition research' actually is," but "a good opposition researcher assembles the case against their opponent by lawfully compiling the best portfolio of evidence." He concluded "when digging for 'dirt,' you should not pursue information obtained illicitly, whether by Russian hackers or Nixonian Plumbers. And if by chance you stumble across it, you do what anyone running for office should do – report it to the authorities."

Russian-American Lobbyist Confirms Attendance At Meeting With Trump Jr., Veselnitskaya.

Russian-American lobbyist Rinat Akhmetshin, labeled by some articles as a former Soviet counterintelligence officer, confirmed to the AP on Friday that he had joined Donald Trump, Jr. and Russian attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya at a controversial meeting last year. All three network newscasts and most of the cable broadcasts led with coverage, while reporting was also extensive in print and online, and it greatly overshadowed President Trump's visit to Paris to celebrate Bastille Day and meet with French President Emmanuel Macron.

In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 5:01 p.m. EDT, lead story, 1:24, Acosta), National Correspondent Jason Carroll said that as President Trump "return[ed] to the United States after a morning Bastille Day parade in Paris, he lands amid a firestorm swirling around his son and top aides over a meeting with" Veselnitskaya, "held during his presidential campaign." Carroll reported "in addition to Donald Trump Jr., Jared Kushner, Paul Manafort, Russian lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya, and publicist Rob Goldstone, the Trump Tower meeting included additional people, despite the President's statement Thursday." In a lead story for CNN's Situation Room's (7/14, 6:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, Acosta) second segment, Jim Acosta said the meeting was allegedly "arranged with a promise that the Trump camp would get dirt on Hillary Clinton from Moscow, information Trump Jr. says he never got." This "new disclosure," said correspondent Diane Gallagher, "represents yet another version of who was in the room and adds to a growing list of questions about why the story keeps changing."

According to NBC News (7/14, Dilanian, Lebedeva, Jackson), which broke the story, Akhmetshin was "a former Soviet counterintelligence officer who is suspected by some U.S. officials of having ongoing ties to Russian intelligence," though he "denies any current ties to Russian spy agencies." In an interview, he told the AP (7/14, Butler, Day) that Veselnitskaya had asked him to attend the meeting that day. He also "said Veselnitskaya brought with her a plastic folder with printed-out documents that detailed what she believed was the flow of illicit funds to the Democratic National Committee," and Akhmetshin recalled she said that they "could be a good issue to expose how the DNC is accepting bad money." However, Akhmetshin added, "Trump Jr. asked the attorney if she had all the evidence to back up her claims, including whether she could demonstrate the flow of the money. But Veselnitskaya said the Trump campaign would need to research it more. After that, Trump Jr. lost interest."

In a subsequent interview with the Washington Post (7/14, A1, Helderman, Hamburger) that was printed on its front page Akhmetshin "emphatically denied...that he ever worked as an intelligence agent though he did confirm that he served as an 18-year-old draftee for two years in a unit of the Soviet military that had responsibility for law enforcement issues as well as some counterintelligence matters." He asserted, "I never worked for the Russian government. I served as a soldier, for two years, like tens of millions of Russian young men who were drafted. I am proud of my military service. At no time have I ever worked for Russian government or any of its agencies. I was not an intelligence officer. Never."

In an interview with the New York Times (7/14, A1, Sullivan, Vogel, Goldman) that was also published on its front page, Akhmetshin said he attended the meeting in his capacity as a lobbyist at Veselnitskaya's request and insisted "I am a target of well-coordinated and financed smear campaign." Meanwhile, Donald Trump Jr.'s attorney Alan Futerfas "suggested in an interview on Friday that his client has not disclosed all the details of the meeting because it was hard to remember." Futerfas asserted, "The frustrating part of this exercise is that it concerns events that occurred 13 months ago that were considered insignificant at the time and essentially forgotten."

Nonetheless, Bloomberg News (7/14, Voreacos, Pettypiece) reports "the revelation adds to the questions surrounding the now infamous meeting at Trump Tower and the extent of the contacts between Trump associates and Russians seeking to help the 2016 Trump presidential campaign." Rep. Denny Heck told CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 6:08 p.m. EDT, 8:12, Acosta), "We can turn the page on whether or not there was collusion," because there was "prima facie" collusion, but whether crimes were committed depends on "whether or not there was a quid pro quo, and that is not yet readily apparent."

In addition, Rep. Ruben Gallego told CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 5:10 p.m. EDT, 10:01, Acosta) he is concerned whether senior adviser Jared Kushner "purposely left" Akhmetshin "off the disclosure form. If this person is not someone we should feel threatened by, why leave him off the disclosure form? Two, we know in the room there was some element of a Russian spy there. Former KGB-ers, agents, and the word 'former' – is it a very loose word when it comes to the Russian spy agency," because "once a Russian spy, you're always going to be a Russian spy." Gallego continued, "Lastly, who are the other two people? We now know we have Paul Manafort, Donald Trump Jr., and Jared Kushner in a room with people that have ties to foreign intelligence, particularly Russians."

Meanwhile, "two sources familiar with the handling of the matter told" Yahoo! News (7/14, Isikoff) "that Marc Kasowitz, the president's chief lawyer in the Russia investigation, and Alan Garten, executive vice president and chief legal officer of the Trump Organization, were both informed about the emails in the third week of June, after they were discovered by lawyers for Kushner." According to Yahoo! News, the revelation "that Trump's lawyers were told about the emails in June raises questions about why they would not have immediately informed the president."

On CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 6:25 p.m. EDT, 25:04, Acosta), Senior Political Correspondent David Axelrod, "a former White House insider," said the multiple explanations and changing accounts are "terribly, terribly demoralizing." He also said that he has not seen a story snowball like this in "decades," and it "is consuming" the White House now that it has "reached this watershed." Axelrod called it "a public relations disaster that is cascading, and they've got a legal problem that is also cascading." Former State Department spokesman John Kirby said Russia is "not beneath using people who have loose or no relationship with the government" – so-called "cut-outs" – "in trying to co-opt them and find stuff out for them, prospectively innocently, but then they get sucked into a larger vortex, potentially espionage." Kirby added, "I don't know what the case is here with this meeting, but it certainly wouldn't surprise me if they used some of this meeting, and used the approach to it, to feel out the Trump campaign to see how much the Trump campaign really wanted to work with them."

Despite the President's praise of his own transparency, Politico (7/14, Nussbaum) reports that "as new details about the meeting emerged in media reports" on Friday, "critics saw again what they described as a pattern of half-truths, dodges and outright falsehoods from the White House." In an analysis, Washington Post (7/14, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump examines "how Donald Trump Jr.'s depiction of what happened at that meeting has evolved" while in his Washington Post (7/14, Sargent) column, Greg Sargent contends the revelations will make the President's claims of being transparent "a lot harder to sustain" because it "underscores that we are seeing a pattern of what we might call obfuscation by omission."

In his New York Times (7/14, Brooks) column, David Brooks contends the version of Trump Jr. "we see through the Russia scandal story is not malevolent: He seems to be simply oblivious to the idea that ethical concerns could possibly play a role in everyday life." Brooks adds that "when the Russian government offer came across his email, there doesn't seem to have been a flicker of concern. Instead, he replied with that tone of simple bro glee that we remember from other scandals." He contends "the Trumps have an ethic of loyalty to one another" but "the House of Trump has sprayed an insecticide on any possible complementary code, and so they are continually trampling basic decency. Their scandals may not build to anything impeachable, but the scandals will never end."

In a Washington Post (7/14, Mowatt-Larssen) op-ed, Rolf Mowatt-Larssen, the Director of the Intelligence and Defense Project at the Belfer Center who formerly served as the Director of Intelligence and Counterintelligence at the Department of Energy and worked for 23 years as a CIA intelligence officer, warns the meeting "is in line with what intelligence analysts would expect an overture in a Russian influence operation to look like. It bears all the hallmarks of a professionally planned, carefully orchestrated intelligence soft pitch designed to gauge receptivity, while leaving room for plausible deniability in case the approach is rejected." Mowatt-Larssen adds "the Trump campaign's willingness to take the meeting – and, more important, its failure to report the episode to U.S. authorities – may have been exactly the green light Russia was looking for to launch a more aggressive phase of intervention in the U.S. election campaign." While Mowatt-Larssen concludes "the suggestion that this was a nothing meeting without consequence is, in all likelihood, badly mistaken," Breitbart (7/14, Pollak) senior-editor-at-large Joel Pollak contends "there was no collusion, based on what is known thus far." Pollak adds "in the absence of any evidence of collusion, the media and the Democrats are talking about an 'attempt to collude,' which is a meaningless term, legally and literally."

Media Outlets Profile Russian-American Lobbyist. In the lead CBS Evening News (7/14, lead story, 3:15, Mason) segment, Major Garrett said Rinat Akhmetshin "was born in the former Soviet Union and served in its military. He has suspected ties to Russian intelligence. Akhmetshin, now a US citizen, lobbies to lift anti-Russian sanctions." The AP (7/14, Tucker, Braun) reports Akhmetshin previously "attracted congressional scrutiny over his political activities" and the Human Rights Accountability Global Initiative, a non-profit foundation he helped establish. The AP cites Congressional documents as showing the foundation "spent $290,000 last year on lobbying" and paid him at least $10,000 for his work. The AP adds Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley in March "pressed the Justice Department about why Akhmetshin has not registered as a foreign agent," stating in a letter that he "reportedly admitted to being a 'Soviet counterintelligence officer' and has a long history of lobbying the U.S. government for pro-Russia matters."

The Los Angeles Times (7/14, Wire) reports Akhmetshin "lobbied Rep. Dana Rohrabacher...at least twice about U.S. relations with Russia." The Times adds that Rohrabacher, the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Europe, Eurasia and Emerging Threats, "has long been known for encouraging improved relations with Russia, something that's made him an outlier in the Republican Party." The Hill (7/14, Easley, Solomon) reports this "lobbying effort," which was led by Akhmetshin, "his lobbying partner Robert Arakelian," former Rep. Ron Dellums, and former Export-Import Bank General Counsel Howard Schweitzer, "was directly connected to" Russian businessmen Denis Katzyv, Mikhail Ponomarev, and Albert Nasibulin who lobbying records said "support policies that would reinstate the ability for U.S. citizens to adopt Russian children." However, the three Russians "did not contribute money to the lobbying effort or own a piece of" Human Rights Accountability Global Initiative.

Meanwhile, CNN's Situation Room's (7/14, 6:05 p.m. EDT, 5:11, Acosta) Jim Sciutto described Akhmetshin as "the second Russian figure we've had to sort of familiarize ourselves with this week," with the first being Veselnitskaya, "who was the impetus really for this meeting." Sciutto said Akhmetshin was specifically lobbying on Russia's behalf against the Magnitsky Act. One "crucial" issue, said Sciutto, is whether Akhmetshin will be subpoenaed as a witness. Since "he's a dual national and has national citizenship, he can be subpoenaed to come before that committee," and when he does so, "he will be under oath." Sciutto continued (7/14, 5:29 p.m. EDT, 29:00, Acosta), "Early on, this red herring was just about" the Magnitsky law's "adoption tied to a major US sanctions program," but it now "raises the question of was there a quid pro quo premise to this."

The AP (7/14, Vasilyeva) says that central to concerns over the meeting are a group of "unlikely figures" that consist of "a billionaire real estate mogul, his pop singer son and a music promoter" as well as "a property lawyer, Russia's prosecutor general and a Russian-American lobbyist." The AP profiles the individuals who participated in the meeting. "A source familiar with the circumstances told" CNN (7/14, Staff) that in addition to Akhmetshin, Veselnitskaya, Trump Jr., Kushner, Manafort, and publicist Rob Goldstone, "there were at least two other people in the room as well, a translator and a representative of the Russian family who had asked Goldstone to set up the meeting. The source did not provide the names."

Veselnitskaya Admits To Contact With Russian Prosecutor General Over US Sanctions Law. In an interview with the Wall Street Journal (7/14, Forrest, Sonne), Veselnitskaya insisted she was not working for the Russian government, but she admits she was in contact with Russian Prosecutor General Yuri Chaika and other officials on a regular basis to discuss the Magnitsky Act.

DHS Confirms Veselnitskaya Was Granted Special Entry Into US On Request Of DOJ. The Homeland Security Department confirmed to The Hill (7/14, Solomon, Easley) on Friday that Veselnitskaya had been "granted special entry to the United States on multiple occasions in 2015 and 2016 at the request of the Justice Department." DHS also told The Hill that Veselnitskaya "eventually won a nonimmigrant work visa around the time she met President Trump's eldest son in New York last summer." According to DHS, Veselnitskaya repeatedly entered the US "between September 2015 and February 2016 under a 'Significant Public Benefit Parole' document requested by the Justice Department so she could participate in a court case for a client." The Hill adds "the request was done 'in concurrence' with the U.S. attorney's office in New York City, which was enforcing a civil asset forfeiture case against Prevezon Holdings, a company owned by Russian businessman Denis Katsyv, whom Veselnitskaya represented as a private attorney in their home country."

However, a New York Times (7/14, Qiu) Fact Check piece states that the President this week "wrongly blamed former Attorney General Loretta Lynch for admitting the lawyer to the United States in the first place." The Times reports "the use of parole for entry is not particularly unusual, and approval authority lies with the Department of Homeland Security," even though the DOJ had made the request. The Times adds "there is no indication that Ms. Lynch was personally responsible for the decision."

Conway: Goalposts Of Russia Investigation Continue To Move. The Hill (7/14, Delk) reports senior counselor Kellyanne Conway in an interview with "Fox & Friends" on Friday "accused opponents of the White House of moving the goalposts on allegations of collusion between President Trump's campaign team and Moscow." According to The Hill, Conway "describ[ed] the controversy as nothing more than a conspiracy theory in remarks first noted by" Politico (7/14, Nelson), which states that she said "the goal posts have been moved" because Hillary Clinton and others had "promised systemic, hard evidence of systemic, sustained, furtive collusion that not only interfered with our election process but indeed dictated the electoral outcome."

Caputo Defends Himself Against Accusations Of Involvement In Alleged Russian Collusion. Reuters (7/14, Cowan) reports Michael Caputo, an adviser to Trump's presidential campaign, testified before the House Intelligence Committee on Friday and insisted "he never heard of anyone in the campaign talking with Russians." Caputo and his attorney, Dennis Vacco, subsequently conducted a three hour press conference broadcast by CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 5:32 p.m. EDT, 32:01, Acosta). Caputo asserted, "I intentionally stayed out of the hair of the White House and the Administration, especially since my name was brought up in the context of the Russia investigation. Nobody in the administration or the White House needs my telephone number on their call list, needs me on their visitor logs, or needs e-mails from me. As soon as this is over, I would like to get back in touch with the Administration and the White House, but for God's sake, you guys got to end this stuff." Vacco said, "The takeaway here is that he had no Russian contacts during the course of his involvement in the campaign." Vacco added the Senate Intelligence Committee has asked his client for information – "principally emails" – and "we're in communication with them right now." He called the committee's request "rather broad and expansive in terms of time and subject matter, so that's what we're negotiating right now, some limitation at lead in terms of the breadth of the request." He again stressed "subpoenas were not involved, and we've provided information to this committee voluntarily," and "anticipate to do the same with the Senate Committee."

CNN's Situation Room's (7/14, 5:42 p.m. EDT, 42:42, Acosta) Jim Acosta said during the press conference, Caputo "was very passionate" and "said he had no contact with the Russians, that he didn't even use Russian dressing." CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 6:48 p.m. EDT, 48:08, Acosta) Special Investigative Correspondent Drew Griffen, who spoke with Caputo prior to his testimony, said Caputo told him "he's been unfairly dragged into this, almost in tears after his testimony. ... And he says it's just because of his former work in Russia – nothing else – because, he says, while he worked at the Trump campaign," he did not "hear any discussions about Russia." In video footage from the interview, Caputo explained that "in fact, we were so busy just trying to keep up with the sun rising and setting on that campaign, that I can't imagine anyone had the time, nor the wherewithal, to go out there, even do something like this." Caputo added, "The idea that somebody at that campaign would have had the forethought and the treachery or the resources to go out and do this is laughable."

In an appearance on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (7/14, 8:07 p.m. EDT, 7:04, Carlson), Caputo called his hearing before the Committee "a fishing expedition" in part because the members of the committee asked him about matters as far back as 1994, and questioned him about his wife, who was born in Ukraine. Caputo pointed out that "there is difficulty going on between" Russia and Ukraine, and therefore "if you are from Ukraine, that doesn't make you a fan of Russia." Caputo also demanded an apology from Rep. Jackie Speier for accusing him of involvement.

Parscale To Testify Before House Intelligence Committee. The AP (7/14, Bykowicz) reports Brad Parscale, the data and digital director for Trump's presidential campaign, "said Friday he will speak with the House Intelligence Committee later this month as part of its Russia probe." In a statement, he “said...that he is ‘unaware of any Russian involvement’ in the data and digital operations of Trump’s campaign. He said he is voluntarily appearing before the panel and looks forward to ‘sharing with them everything I know.’”

House Intelligence Committee Postpones Testimony Of Stone. Bloomberg News (7/14, House) reports the House Intelligence Committee on Thursday “postponed the scheduled July 24 closed-door testimony of former Donald Trump campaign adviser Roger Stone in its probe of Russian meddling in the presidential election, Stone’s lawyer said Friday.” Stone’s attorney, Robert Buschel, told Politico (7/14, Samuelsohn), “For now, it’s canceled with an advisement it will be rescheduled at an unspecified time.” Politico adds Rep. Adam Schiff, the top ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, “appeared to confirm the delay during an interview with CNN on Friday, even while adding that Stone can still expect to be get a request to appear before the panel.” Schiff said, “Mr. Stone will certainly be coming. He’s very much a person of interest.” However, Schiff added, “The reality is we have a certain order in terms of receiving documents. Our decisions on schedules are made on what’s best for the basis of the investigation.”

Meanwhile, Julianna Goldman of the CBS Evening News (7/14, story 2, 2:15, Mason) called Caputo “a protégé” of Stone and she reported Stone’s “appearance before the House committee later this month was postponed so members have more time to prepare. For his part, Stone says he’s had no contact with Russian officials, but he told our Jeff Pegues he was in touch with Russian hacker Guccifer 2.0 and with WikiLeaks during the campaign.” Goldman added that “Trump’s long-time attorney Michael Cohen is also scheduled to appear before the committee in September. Both the House and the Senate are still in the early stages of their investigations, which will eventually move up the ladder to the President’s inner circle.”

Trump Plans To Hire Cobb To Lead Legal Team On Russia Probes. Bloomberg News (7/14, Jacobs) reports the President “plans to put a veteran Washington lawyer, Ty Cobb, in charge of overseeing the White House’s legal and media response to investigations into Russian meddling in the 2016 campaign, a White House official said,” and Cobb is “expected to join the White House at the end of the month.” Bloomberg adds that “according to the people familiar with the move, Cobb is intended to be traffic cop, enforcer of discipline, and public spokesman – the point person for queries from congressional panels and the Justice Department special counsel Robert Mueller.”

Romney McDaniel Skeptical GOP Can Pay Administration’s Legal Bills. The Hill (7/14, Greenwood) reports Republican National Committee Chairwoman Ronna Romney McDaniel said Friday on WMAL’s “Mornings on the Mall” radio show “that she doesn’t know if it is legal for the party to pay the Trump administration’s legal bills related to investigations of possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia.” Romney McDaniel said, “I don’t even know if that’s legal, if we would even be allowed to do that. ... That would have to go through the lawyers first before it would come to us.” She added, “I’m always going to look to support the President. But we’ve gotta just make sure that anything we do is legal and then we’d have to talk to people who donated to us and make sure they’d want to do it that way. There’s other ways to support the President. There’s a legal defense fund that you could start. There’s lots of other ways. But we, of course, support the President.”

Kushner To Replace Gorelick On Russia Case With Lowell. Senior adviser Jared Kushner’s “high-powered lawyer” Jamie Gorelick will no longer represent him over the Russia probe, but “will continue to work on the matters for which we were originally retained, with regard to ethics compliance, the SF-86 process, and related issues,” she told Politico (7/14, Conway) on Friday. Gorelick added Abbe Lowell will replace her on Russia-related investigations, as “Bob Mueller and three of our partners left the firm to form the Special Counsel’s Office.”

Breitbart (7/14, Shaw) cites Yahoo! News in reporting that “Lowell has represented clients including disgraced Democratic Sen. John Edwards and American lobbyist Jack Abramoff and will exclusively represent Kushner in inquiries from congressional committees and...Mueller.” However, Breitbart says that “sources told Yahoo News that Gorelick’s days were numbered as Kushner’s top lawyer once Lowell was hired over a month ago, as it would be rare for two prominent lawyers to share responsibility in such a probe.”

GOP Lawmakers, Voters Largely Defend Administration. The CBS Evening News (7/14, story 3, 2:20, Mason) reported “the President’s supporters are standing by him.” Dean Reynolds added that “six months into his presidency, they have four words of advice for Mr. Trump – steady as you go.”

The New York Times (7/14, Peters) says that the “veneration” of Russian President Vladimir Putin by “some prominent Republicans” in recent years “helps explain why revelations about Russia’s involvement in the election – including recent reports that members of Mr. Trump’s inner circle set up a meeting at which they expected a representative of the Russian government to give them incriminating information about Hillary Clinton – and Mr. Trump’s reluctance to acknowledge it, have barely penetrated the consciousness of the president’s conservative base.” According to the Times, “Putin is no archvillain in this understanding of America-Russian relations. Rather, he personifies many of the qualities and attitudes that conservatives have desired in a president of their own: a respect for traditional Christian values, a swelling nationalist pride and an aggressive posture toward foreign adversaries.”

The Hill (7/14, Delk) reports Rep. Dave Brat, a member of the House Freedom Caucus, in a MSNBC interview “defended...Trump against allegations that his campaign colluded with Russia, saying ‘everybody colludes’ in Washington.” While Brat acknowledged “the Russians were obviously involved in our election process,” he added, former President Obama “knew that for several months, didn’t do anything about it.”

Rep. Ron DeSantis told Breitbart (7/14, Hayward) that he wants “an investigation into possible leaks of classified information by former FBI Director James Comey” and he criticized special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation because of “all the prosecutors he’s brought in, and it’s almost as if he just hired the legal department at the Democratic National Committee.” According to Breitbart, DeSantis “complained” that “I mean, you have all these maxed-out donors to Hillary Clinton. Could he not find one Republican?” DeSantis added, “I’m not saying you can’t be a good prosecutor if you donate to a Democrat or a Republican or whatever. But it’s just odd that the people he’s bringing in are all on one side of the fence. The law firm he pulled all these from, they have some very strong Republicans who are very accomplished that he could have asked, but he didn’t do that.”

However, The Hill (7/14, Bowden) reports Rep. Adam Kinzinger in an interview with CNN’s “New Day” on Friday “pushed back...on President Trump’s claim that ‘many people’ would have taken the meeting with a Russian lawyer that ensnared his eldest son.” Kinzinger said he would “absolutely not” have taken such a meeting and said, “Frankly, if it happened to me, would call the FBI and say, ‘Hey, this government or that government is offering information – do you want me to take this meeting as counterespionage or something?’” Nonetheless, he asserted, “There are some on the other side of the aisle who are really hysteric about this. I’ve heard the word treason. This isn’t treason.”

In her Washington Post (7/14, Rubin) column, Jennifer Rubin blames Trump Jr.’s ethical lapses involving his meeting with Russian lawyer on the Republican Party and contends “it’s a party as unfit to govern as Trump is unfit to occupy the White House. It’s not by accident that Trump chose to inhabit the party that has defined itself in opposition to reality and to any ‘external moral truth or ethical code.’”

Pelosi, Democrats Push To Expand Russia Probe. The Washington Post (7/14, Demirjian) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi “said Friday that she thinks President Trump and his family members may have violated campaign finance law, and potentially laws prohibiting cybercrime and espionage as well, through their meetings with Russian operatives during the 2016 presidential campaign.” Pelosi outlined the laws she believes Trump Jr., Kushner, and campaign manager Paul Manafort broke and “called on the president to revoke Kushner’s security clearance.” However, the Post says Pelosi “was careful not to call for impeaching Trump, saying that ‘the laws are certainly clear – when the facts are clear, then this Congress will make a decision in that regard.’” The Washington Times (7/14, Persons) reports Pelosi also “announced plans Friday to force House Republicans to take on-the-record positions on President Trump’s possible Russian ties.” She asserted that “Republicans in Congress should stop hiding, and stop hiding the truth from the American people.”

The Hill (7/14, Delk) reports Reps. Ruben Gallego and Ted Lieu “read Donald Trump Jr.’s emails regarding a 2016 meeting with a Russian lawyer on the House floor Friday, calling them a ‘smoking gun’ in the probe into Russia’s meddling in the 2016 presidential election.” The Hill adds that they “brought with them a large poster board to the House floor featuring a Time magazine cover from this week, which has the words ‘Red Handed’ printed underneath Trump Jr.’s face.” Rep. Dana Rohrabacher “took to the floor afterwards, saying that the Democratic lawmakers were using “sinister sounding descriptions” of Trump Jr.’s contacts with Russia.”

Meanwhile, Reuters (7/14, Sims) reports Rep. Maxine Waters, the ranking member of the House Financial Services Committee, and other Democrats in Congress “have renewed efforts to find possible links between” Trump and Russia by focusing upon Germany’s Deutsche Bank as well as Russian lenders Sberbank and Gazprombank. Waters said she has “filed a resolution of inquiry demanding the U.S. Treasury Secretary hand over documents in his possession, ‘relating to President Trump’s financial connections to Russia, certain illegal financial schemes, and related information.’” Reuters adds the resolution “specifically...is seeking documents that may have been unearthed by the Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network that could show any ties between Trump's finances and Russia." According to Reuters, the request applies to "Trump, and 22 of his closest associates, including family members and top White House and campaign advisers."

Politico (7/14, Cheney) reports Rep. Don Beyer, Rep. Mike Quigley, and other Congressional Democrats that have been "raising questions about Jared Kushner's campaign contacts with Russia are beginning to ask: What did Ivanka Trump know, and when?" Beyer told Politico, "We learned this week that Ivanka Trump's husband, Jared Kushner, updated his filing of that form three times, most recently to include the June 2016 meeting ... Did Ivanka Trump disclose that meeting on her initial SF-86 filing? Has she updated her security clearance paperwork to reflect this and other meetings which Jared Kushner failed to disclose subsequently?" He added, "The high standard to which we hold Advisors to the President requires that we get answers to these questions, and I intend to raise them with the Trump Administration."

However, Breitbart (7/14, Madine) reports that in a setback for Democrats, the Federal Election Commission declined Commissioner Ellen Weintraub's proposal for "new rulemaking regarding alleged foreign influence in the 2016 election to target conservative media including the Drudge Report and Breitbart News." In a statement, Vice Chair Caroline Hunter and Commissioners Lee Goodman and Matthew Petersen asserted they "cannot support proposals that would burden the free speech rights of American citizens based on incomplete information about foreign activities in the 2016 election."

Russia Threatens To Expel Americans Over Seized Diplomatic Compounds. The New York Times (7/14, Nechepurenko) reports a spokeswoman for the Russian Foreign Ministry warned Friday that the government "is losing patience and is prepared to expel American diplomats if the United States does not reverse its decision to expel 35 Russian diplomats and block access to Russian diplomatic estates." Reuters (7/14, Osborn, Tsvetkova) reports Maria Zakharova "said...too many American spies operated in Moscow under diplomatic cover and said [Russia] might expel some of them to retaliate against the United States." According to Reuters, the threat "reflects rising frustration in Moscow over the Trump administration's refusal to hand back two Russian diplomatic compounds which were seized at the same time as some of Russia's diplomats were sent home last year." Reuters adds that she also "complained...that U.S. officials were not issuing visas to Russian diplomats to allow Moscow to replace the expelled employees and get its embassy back up to full strength."

Bossert Says US-Russia Cyber "Dialogue" Remains Possible, But No Intel Sharing. The Washington Times (7/14, Blake) reports White House homeland security adviser Tom Bossert on Friday "defended [the President's] decision to discuss forging an 'impenetrable' cybersecurity unit with his Russian counterpart last week, but said Washington and Moscow must come to an understanding before pursuing any sort of partnership." Bossert said, "President Trump, I believe, is right in his continued assertion that even with countries with whom we have friction or disagreements, we have a responsibility on behalf of the American people to continue to have conversations to the extent that they can yield a positive result."

However, Politico (7/14, Bennett, Geller) reports "Bossert stressed that while any sort of 'partnership' with Russia is off the table, the door is still open for a 'dialogue.'" Bossert insisted, "We are not discussing a partnership here. We wouldn't have the conversation about partnership. But we had to have a dialogue, and that's where we'll start." Politico adds that "such conversations are mostly in line with Obama-era digital diplomacy between Washington and Moscow, and would be typical for any new administration, cyber policy experts said."

Meanwhile, under the headline "White House Says US-Russia Cyber Unit Would Not Share Intel," The Hill (7/14, Uchill) reports Bossert asserted the focus of such a unit would be on developing the norms of "what is acceptable behavior in cyberspace and what norms and expectations that we'll have moving forward." GSA Removes Kaspersky From List Of Approved Vendors. Reuters (7/14, Finkle, Menn, Volz) reports Russian cybersecurity software firm CEO Eugene Kaspersky "had a big American dream" to be a "major vendor to the U.S. government," but he was "never able to overcome lingering suspicions among U.S. intelligence officials that he and his company were, or could become, pawns of Russia's spy agencies." The General Services Administration on Tuesday "removed Kaspersky from a list of approved vendors, saying GSA's mission was to ensure the security of U.S. government systems." In addition, FBI agents "last month interviewed Kaspersky employees, asking whether they reported to Russia-based executives and how much data from American customers could be seen by Russian employees, according to three current and former employees."

Hacker Says State Department Official's Email Has Been Breached. The Hill (7/14, Chalfant) cites Foreign Policy in reporting "a hacker calling himself 'Johnnie Walker' sent an email Tuesday morning alleging to have hacked emails from the unnamed official's account." The email claims the account belongs to an official "said to specialize in matters related to Russia at the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, a member of the intelligence community that aims to use intelligence to serve U.S. diplomatic efforts," The Hill adds.

WSJournal Questions Timing Of Republican Operative's Alleged Suicide. CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 5:50 p.m. EDT, 50:48, Acosta) correspondent Brian Todd reported on "serious new questions" surrounding the timing of Republican activist Peter Smith's alleged suicide, in which he left a "strange suicide note" that detailed "his reported attempt" to acquire "those Clinton emails hacked by the Russians during last year's campaign." Smith "was found dead in his room in this hotel near the Mayo Clinic in Rochester" in mid-May. Police ruled Smith's death a suicide, and the medical examiner's report, quoted Todd, said he had "placed bag over head and attached helium source." The 81-year-old allegedly "left a road-map" that, according to police, explicitly said "there was no foul play" leading to his death. However, Todd said Smith told the Wall Street Journal that he had "been contacted by someone from the 'Dark Web' claiming to have Clinton's personal emails," and claimed he reached out to former National Security Advisor Michael Flynn to help authenticate them. Rep. Eric Swalwell, in video footage, asserted Smith's efforts "should be probed further, and I hope it now gets folded into what we're doing" in the Russia investigation.

France Recognizes Trump As Guest Of Honor At Bastille Day Parade.

French President Emmanuel Macron named President Trump on Friday as the guest of honor at the country's annual Bastille Day parade. However, the limited media reporting highlighted that Trump's recognition on his final day in Paris was overshadowed by domestic controversy.

In the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (7/14, 6:01 p.m. EDT, lead story, 1:13, Baier), Chief White House Correspondent John Roberts said Trump, in "a rare and very prestigious moment," was "the guest of honor at France's Bastille Day parade." He was the first President to receive the honor "since President Bush in 1989." However, Roberts added Trump's day "was tempered by yet another twist in his son Don Jr.'s meeting with Russian attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya." In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/14, lead story, 4:00, Muir), Chief Investigative Correspondent Brian Ross similarly said that upon Trump's return, "he was met by an afternoon rainstorm and new questions about whether his son, Don Jr., has told the full story of his meeting with the Russian lawyer." In another lead story, NBC Nightly News's (7/14, lead story, 2:50, Holt) Peter Alexander said after "taking part in French Bastille Day celebrations," Trump returned to the US and "to a parade of problems."

Nonetheless, USA Today (7/14, Bhatti, Onyanga-Omara) reports "France put on a dazzling Bastille Day display for President Trump on Friday, an occasion that marked both the founding of French democracy and the centennial of the United States' entry into World War I." USA Today adds that "the colorful parade along the French capital's famous Champs-Élysées included U.S. soldiers marching with their French counterparts." According to the Washington Post (7/14, McAuley, Johnson), the President "could be seen eagerly leaning forward in his seat of honor and gesturing to his wife or Macron as each new spectacle came forth. During short lulls, Trump would pull Macron in for a conversation."

The Wall Street Journal (7/14, Ballhaus, Horobin) similarly reports the President appeared to enjoy the ceremony while the New York Times (7/14, Haberman) states that "the American president, who has a fascination with displays of military strength, had hoped to have tanks and jets at his own inaugural parade, but he was told he could not. So the Bastille Day parade seemed like a natural fit for Mr. Trump, who sometimes appears bored at public events but who seemed transfixed at the performance in Paris."

The Hill (7/14, Bowden) reports the President on Friday also "proclaimed that the United States' relationship with France is 'stronger than ever' in a captioned photograph with...Macron." Trump tweeted, "Great evening with President @EmmanuelMacron & Mrs. Macron. Went to Eiffel Tower for dinner. Relationship with France stronger than ever."

CNN (7/14, Collinson) reports the President later "showed how much he appreciated the hospitality, tweeting a picture of he and Macron, heads close together, deep in conversation as they watched the parade with the Arc de Triomphe in the background." The President tweeted, "It was a great honor to represent the United States at the magnificent #BastilleDay parade. Congratulations President @EmmanuelMacron!"

Breitbart (7/14, Moons) reports the President then tweeted, "The United States mourns for the victims of Nice, France. We pledge our solidarity with France against terror." NBC News (7/14, Smith) reports Trump additionally tweeted, "Great conversations with President

@EmmanuelMacron and his representatives on trade, military and security."

While the AP (7/14, Hinnant, Salama) says "the unexpected bromance between the leaders of America and France was on full display for the world Friday at the annual Bastille Day military parade and celebration in Paris," NBC Nightly News (7/14, story 2, 0:25, Holt) stated that in "a moment that has a lot of people talking," Trump had a "long goodbye with French President Emmanuel Macron as he concluded his trip to Paris. Their farewell handshake today went on and on and on, lasting nearly 30 seconds. At one point, Mr. Trump even pulled in France's first lady without ever letting go of her husband's hand until finally it was time to leave for the flight back home."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (7/14, Stevenson) acknowledges Trump's relationship with Macron has been "dissected ad nauseam," but says their handshake serves as "a window into the relationship between Trump and one of his most powerful and popular European counterparts – a man who, at first, appeared to be a political adversary. The two still don't see eye-to-eye on every issue, but if this endless handshake is any indication, they've come a long way since May 25." When CNN's Situation Room (7/14, 6:39 p.m. EDT, 39:20, Acosta) asked about the "power handshake," former State Department spokesman John Kirby said Trump "prides himself on relationships and leading through relationships," and the handshake thus constituted "a way to demonstrably show" his relationship with Macron, and that the two leaders are "going to move forward." He added, "I think there is also a little bit of masculinity there, a little bit of trying to be the alpha male."

Macron Vows France Will Conduct "Fight Without Mercy" Against Terror. The AP (7/14, Ganley, Krivokapic) reports Macron on Friday "vowed to 'fight without mercy' inside and outside France to end extremist attacks like the one that killed 86 revelers on Bastille Day in the Riviera city of Nice one year ago." In addition, according to the AP, "in a deeply moving sequence of the day-long commemoration, the names of the victims, from toddlers to a 92-year-old, were read aloud and posted on a board to form the shape of a heart. The sequence, accompanied by a choir, with at least one member holding back tears, ended with a minute of silence."

Melania Trump Helps Advance French-American Relations. "Let no one say that Melania Trump, first lady of the United States, has not done her part to further French-American relations," the New York Times (7/14, Friedman) reports, as "on her Bastille Day visit to Paris with her husband, Mrs. Trump fully committed." The Times adds that "it was almost as if she had packed according to theme. Which was? The flags, French and American. In all three of her public appearances in Paris, Mrs. Trump wore a variation on red, white, and blue."

Collins Laments That Macron Is Not American President. In her New York Times (7/14, Collins) column, Gail Collins asks, "Why can't Emmanuel Macron be our president?" According to Collins, American observers of Trump's visit to Paris "must have wondered how we got the wrong guy. Macron seemed so smart, so charming. The fact that he didn't father any children would not normally be a big selling point, but right now we are yearning for a president with no offspring." However, Collins acknowledges "that Melania Trump did fine. The Parisian press praised her wardrobe. Unlike her husband, she didn't say anything weird. Nobody accused her of having sinister meetings with Russians. Give the woman some credit."

White House Warns Budget Deficit To Reach $702 Billion This Year.

The AP (7/14, Taylor) reports the Office of Management and Budget "said Friday that worsening tax revenues will cause the budget deficit to jump to $702 billion this year. That's a $99 billion spike from what was predicted less than two months ago." The AP adds the OMB "also says the deficit for the 2018 budget year that starts on Oct. 1 will increase by $149 billion to $589 billion. But lawmakers are already working on spending bills that promise to boost that number even higher by adding to Trump's Pentagon proposal and ignoring many of Trump's cuts to domestic programs." OMB Director Mulvaney said, "The rising near-term deficits underscore the critical need to restore fiscal discipline to the nation's finances. Our nation must make substantial changes to the policies and spending priorities of the previous administration if our citizens are to be safe and prosperous in the future."

WPost: Trump Budget Will Not Spur Economic Growth.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/16) calls President Trump's budget "monumentally unwise." Citing an analysis from the CBO, the Post says that despite the Administration's "grandiose assurances," the CBO said "there is no proposal in President Trump's budget that would supercharge economic growth — the president promised 3 percent per year — and balance the budget within a decade. Instead, they found a lot of question marks and missing details."

NYTimes: Trump Unlikely To Return To Climate Change Commitments.

In an editorial, the New York Times (7/14) argues that there is “zero chance” that President Trump will return the US to previous climate change commitments, but goes on to speculate “what could conceivably change Mr. Trump’s mind.” While concrete effects of climate change may be effective, “A more promising scenario is that someday Mr. Trump will awaken to the fact that the leaders of the world...regard him with astonishment and dismay.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Save The Census.” A New York Times (7/17, Board) editorial notes the Government Accountability Office placed “the 2020 census on its list of high-risk projects early this year, due to uncertainty about its budget and technology, and Americans’ increasing distrust of government data collection.” Meanwhile, President Trump has not yet named permanent replacements for John Thompson, who resigned as Census Bureau director in June, or Nancy Potok, who resigned as deputy director in January. The bureau also faces a budgetary raise of only about one-tenth of what it needs. Nonetheless, the Times argues, local governments’ ability to plan depends on census results, which must be completed by summer 2020 for “congressional reapportionment and redistricting to take place.” The Times concludes, “Any failure would be immediately apparent – and it would tar Republicans at the height of the 2020 primary campaign season.”

“Smoking Marijuana While Black.” In an editorial, the New York Times (7/17, Board) says New York City “has reduced the number of arrests for low-level marijuana possession,” but “black and Latino New Yorkers are far more likely to be arrested for smoking in public than whites, who are just as likely to use marijuana.” The Times argues that these arrests result in “virtually no public safety benefit and can cause lasting damage to people who often have had no other contact with the criminal justice system.” Since the state of New York “missed an opportunity to fix this problem five years ago when a bill that would have made public display of marijuana an offense similar to a traffic violation – rather than a crime – died in the Legislature,” the Times says it may be “up to the city’s criminal justice system, particularly the district attorneys, to bring fairness and sanity to these cases.”

“India’s Turn Toward Intolerance.” The New York Times (7/17, Board) editorializes that since Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s “landslide victory” in 2014, “there has been an alarming rise in mob attacks against people accused of eating beef or abusing cows, an animal held sacred to Hindus,” even though he pledged “to unleash his country’s economic potential and build a bright future while he played down the Hindu nationalist roots of his Bharatiya Janata Party.” The Times notes India’s film censor board, in a move seemingly intended to protect both Modi and the BJP party from criticism, decided “that a documentary film about one of India’s most famous sons, the Nobel Prize-winning economist Amartya Sen, cannot be screened unless the director cuts” specific words, such as “cow.” The Times says the ruling “might seem like merely a farcical move by Hindu fanatics, if it were not so in line with much else that is happening in Mr. Modi’s India, and if the implications for India’s democracy weren’t so chilling.”

Washington Post.

“A Partisan Brawl In Maryland.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/16) argues that Maryland state Democratic lawmakers’ blocking of salaries for two of Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan’s recess appointments to fill Cabinet vacancies “may seem underhanded” but “also appears to be legal.” The Post asserts that the salary obstruction of Department of Planning Secretary appointee Wendi Peters and Department of Health Secretary appointee Dennis R. Schrader “is partly Mr. Hogan’s own fault” because of the nominees’ “unimpressively qualified” backgrounds. Gov. Hogan “insists he is standing by his appointments,” but Maryland State Treasurer Nancy Kopp has stopped disbursing the two appointees salary payments on advice of Maryland Attorney General Brian Frosh. The Post concludes, “Both sides may have a principle to stand on, but in this case Democrats may have the last word.”

“A Promising Decline In Teen Smoking.” The Washington Post (7/16) says in an editorial that a new Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report showed that “the estimated number of middle and high school students who are tobacco users dropped from 4.7 million in 2015 to 3.9 million in 2016” and argues that this finding is an “encouraging signal” that interventions stopping teenage use of cigarettes and e-cigarettes “may be working.” The Post says that “experts have attributed the drop to a range of federal, state and local policies designed to dissuade young adults from using tobacco, such as increasing tobacco taxes and expanding antismoking ordinances to include e-cigarettes and other new products.” The Post adds, however, that the report indicates several challenges that remain, such the disparate use of tobacco in low-income, rural, and LGBT communities, and the Post concludes that the FDA must adopt stricter standards on e-cigarettes and cigars.

“The CBO Finds Mr. Trump’s Budget Lacking.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/16) calls President Trump’s budget “monumentally unwise.” Citing an analysis from the CBO, the Post says that despite the Administration’s “grandiose assurances,” the CBO said “there is no proposal in President Trump’s budget that would supercharge economic growth — the president promised 3 percent per year — and balance the budget within a decade. Instead, they found a lot of question marks and missing details.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Prosecutors And Political Corruption.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/16) argues that the decision last week by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals to vacate the conviction of former New York Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver in the wake of the Supreme Court’s landmark 2016 McDonnell v. United States case does not mean that the Supreme Court condones corrupts politicians. The Journal asserts that, though the Second Circuit tossed Silver’s conviction despite concluding that the government had presented sufficient evidence to prove the corruption counts against Silver, it overturned the conviction not because it ignored evidence but because the jury instructions did not conform with McDonnell v. United States and were therefore in error. The Journal argues that former US attorney Preet Bharara, the prosecutor in the Silver case, overlooked a faulty jury instruction for the purpose of getting a high-profile conviction, and concludes that the lesson of this case is that prosecutors need to follow the law even when prosecuting corrupt politicians.

“The UN Bans Nuclear Weapons.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/16) argues that the United Nations’ Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons signed this month by 122 non-nuclear UN member states disregards the realities of international security. In addition to the fact that the world’s nine nuclear countries boycotted the vote, the Journal says that the treaty does nothing to halt nuclear proliferation in Iran and North Korea. The Journal argues that, although Iran signed the agreement, the treaty does not define peaceful purposes and thus presents opportunities for abuse, and that North Korea, who did not sign the agreement, will completely disregard the treaty’s prohibition.

“The DC Circuit Vs. Deregulation.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/16) argues that the United Nations’ Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons signed this month by 122 non-nuclear UN member states disregards the realities of international security. In addition to the fact that the world’s nine nuclear countries boycotted the vote, the Journal says that the treaty does nothing to halt nuclear proliferation in Iran and North Korea. The Journal argues that, although Iran signed the agreement, the treaty does not define peaceful purposes and thus presents opportunities for abuse, and that North Korea, who did not sign the agreement, will completely disregard the treaty’s prohibition.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GOP Push To Pass Healthcare Law Faces New Setback
From \$2 Billion To Zero: A Fund Goes Bust In The Oil Patch
Two VIP Billionaires Teamed Up To Run Luxury Hotels. It’s Been A Slog

New York Times:

A Top Republican Vows A Vote On Healthcare, But Uncertainty Reigns
After NFL Concussion Settlement, Feeding Frenzy Of Lawyers And Lenders
She’s His Rock. His Parole Officer Won’t Let Him See Her.
Qatar Opens Its Doors To All, To The Dismay Of Some
A Russian Developer Helps Out The Kremlin On Occasion. Was He A Conduit To Trump?
Roger Federer Wins Record-breaking Eighth Wimbledon Title

Washington Post:

Suburbia Is Left Scrambling As Firms Relocate To Big Cities
Nevada's Rocky Healthcare Future
UAE Tied To Hack Targeting Qatar
US Flood Insurance Program Struggling
Build A Chapel, And Perhaps They Won't Come

Financial Times:

Winnie The Pooh Barred By China's Online Censors
Chinese Purchases Of Ports Top \$20bn In Past Year
Cuba Courted In Diplomatic Push On Venezuela Crisis
Hammond Seeks Brexit Transition As Cushion For Economy

Washington Times:

With John McCain Sidelined By Surgery, Senate Has No Timetable For Obamacare Repeal Vote
Russia Suspected Of Using Bermuda Shell Company To Exploit American Anti-Fracking Activists
If 'Dodgy Dossier' Accusation True, Trump Jr. Would Have No Reason To Meet With Russian Lawyer
Maduro Divides Venezuela's Neighbors In Effort To Save Regime, Socialist Movement
Efforts To Estimate Scope Of FISA Intrusion On Americans Halts Under Trump Administration
Republican Campaign Operatives Aim To Make Elizabeth Warren As Toxic As Nancy Pelosi

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Severe Weather-Flood; Weather Forecast; Trump-Lowest Approval Rating; Healthcare Reform Bill; Chicago Gun Violence; Honolulu-High Rise Fire; London Child-US Treatment; Wimbledon Tournament News; Side Jobs; Plane-Emergency Evacuation; Kayaking Accident; Gas Station-Price Cut; Garth Brooks Concert; Funeral Salute.

CBS: Trump-Lowest Approval Rating; Russia Meddling Investigation-Expert Opinion; Healthcare Reform Bill-Expert Opinion; Iran-US Captive; Severe Weather-Flood; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Car Accident Survivor; OJ Simpson Parole.

NBC: Severe Weather-Flood; Healthcare Reform Bill; Trump-Lowest Approval Rating; Boat Accident; UK-Tougher Acid Attack Punishment; Jimmy Carter-Health Condition; Oldest Track Athlete; Fields Medal Awardee Dies; Silicon Valley-Sexual Harassment; Child-Vocabulary Learning; Afghan Teens-International Robot Competition; Children's Hospital.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Lowest Approval Rating – 7 minutes, 30 seconds
Weather – 5 minutes, 45 seconds
Healthcare Reform Bill – 4 minutes, 20 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Severe Weather-Flood; WH-Made In America Week; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Healthcare Reform Bill.

CBS: Severe Weather-Flood; Martin Landau Dies; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump; Healthcare Reform Bill; Wall Street News.

FOX: Healthcare Reform Bill; Russia Meddling Investigation; Martin Landau Dies.

NPR: Philadelphia-Murdered Missing Men; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Brexit Negotiation; Heat Wave-Wildfires.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in a Made in America product showcase.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President to participate in a Made in America product showcase; participates in a bilateral meeting with President Aleksandar Vucic of Serbia; delivers the keynote address at the Christians United for Israel Washington Summit.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate aims to end debate on deputy defense secretary nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Patrick Shanahan to be Deputy Secretary of Defense, including a motion to invoke cloture on the nomination Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

5:00 PM Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on State Department reauthorization – Hearing on 'A Review of the State Department Reauthorization Bill for FY 2018 and the State Department Reorganization Plans', with testimony from Deputy Secretary of State John Sullivan Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

US House: 7:00 PM Markup hearing on 'FY2018 Transportation, Housing and Urban Development Appropriations Bill' Location: Rm 2359, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

7:30 PM House Committee on Veterans' Affairs legislative hearing – House Committee on Veterans' Affairs legislative hearing on 'H.R. 3218 – the Harry W. Colmery Veterans Educational Assistance Act of 2017' Location: Rm 334, Cannon House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

Other: 9:00 AM Israeli PM Netanyahu speaks at Christians United for Israel Annual Washington Summit via satellite – Christians United for Israel Annual Washington Summit, with speakers including Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu (via satellite), President's Deputy Assistant Sebastian Gorka, Israeli Knesset Member Avi Dichter, National Center for Policy Analysis Chairman of the Board and Executive Director Col. (Ret.) Allen West, John Bolton, Daughters for Zion National Director Lynne Hammond, and Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations Executive Vice Chairman Malcolm Hoenlein Location: Walter E. Washington Convention Center, 801 Mount Vernon Place NW, Washington, DC www.cufi.org/site/PageServer?pagename=2017Summit_Register <https://twitter.com/CUFI>

10:00 AM 'The Russia Challenge in Europe' CSIS discussion and report roll out – 'The Russia Challenge in Europe: The INF Treaty and Implications for Army Modernization' Center for Strategic and International Studies Missile Defense Project and CSIS Defense-Industrial Initiatives Group discussion and report roll out of DIIG's new report, 'The Army Modernization Imperative: A New Big Five for the Twenty First Century'. Speakers include Republican Sen. Tom Cotton, former Assistant Secretary of the Army for Acquisition, Logistics, and Technology Heidi Shyu, AUSA National Security Studies Director Col. (Ret.) Dan Roper, and House Armed Services Committee Professional Staff Member Douglas Bush Location: CSIS, 1616 Rhode Island Ave, Washington, DC <http://www.csis.org> <https://twitter.com/CSIS>

10:00 AM Dem Rep. Frank Pallone speaks at CAP Action Fund on 'Ensuring Access to Prescription Drugs' – Democratic Rep. Frank Pallone speaks at Center for American Progress Action Fund on 'The Health Care Fight: Ensuring Access to Prescription Drugs', on the challenges of addressing the American public's concerns about rising drug costs and pharmaceutical policy reform, as well as the latest developments in Congress' efforts to repeal the Affordable Care Act Location: Center for American Progress Action Fund, 1333 H St. NW, Washington, DC www.americanprogressaction.org <https://twitter.com/CAPaction>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, July 24, 2017
Date: Monday, July 24, 2017 6:58:18 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JULY 24, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Reuters: U.S. National Monument in Colorado to Remain Intact.
- Taos (NM) News: Udall Supports Preserving Monuments.
- Associated Press: $53M To Go To US National Park Maintenance, Infrastructure.
- Colorado Springs (CO) Gazette: Zinke In Denver Makes A Case For Energy Production On Public Lands.
- Washington Post: Interior Dept. Nominee, Set For Confirmation Vote Monday, Is Accused Of Conflict Of Interest.
- CBS News: Interior Department Prevents Glacier Expert From Accompanying Mark Zuckerberg On Tour.
- Associated Press: Climate Scientist Files Complaint On Trump Administration.

- Ketchikan (AK) Daily News: Two Good Picks.
- Steamboat (CO) Pilot & Today: Friends Of The Yampa, Conservation Colorado, Rig To Flip: Leave National Monuments Alone.
- Walla Walla (WA) Union-Bulletin: Decision To Keep Hanford Reach Monument Status Is Sound.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Interior Approves Gaming Contract Between Arizona And Tohono O'odham Nation.
- State, Federal Reps Support Beloit Casino Plan.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Amarillo (TX) Globe News: Amarillo-area Helium Auction Brings In $60M.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Newly Discovered Nevada Toad Species Already Under Threat.
- New York Times: They'll Shoot Horses, Won't They?

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- BOEM Prepares For Latest Gulf Lease Sale.
- Dominion Energy And Dong Energy To Build Small-scale Project Offshore Virginia.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Post: Trump Administration Orders Review Of Prohibitions On Killing Bear Cubs And Wolf Pups With Their Mothers.
- San Francisco Chronicle: No-wake Zones Proposed For Havasu National Wildlife Refuge.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Mexican Wolf Advocates Make Final Push Against Recovery Plan.
- Charleston (SC) Post and Courier: Federal, State Officials Seek Clues In Destruction Of Goose Creek Bald Eagle Nest.

National Park Service

- Chicago Tribune: Utah's Crowded Zion National Park May Soon Require Reservations.
- KUTV-TV Salt Lake City: Zion National Park To Get $694K For Park Maintenance Work.
- Washington Times: Saguaro National Park To Get $215K For Infrastructure Work.
- WGCL-TV Atlanta: Enota Park To Receive Facelift Thanks To Federal Government.
- VTDigger (VT): Burlington Receives $500,000 For Waterfront Park.
- Portland (ME) Press Herald: Acadia National Park Gets Funding For Trail Maintenance.
- Houston Chronicle: Crews Stop Spread Of Huge California Wildfire Near Yosemite.
- Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: National Park Service Love Story: Couple Works To Save Energy, Restore Landscape At Five Western Pa. Parks.
- Tri-City Herald (WA): Visitor Center Provides Point Of Contact For Manhattan Project National Park.
- Charleston (SC) Post and Courier: National Park Service Beginning To Lay Plans For Reconstruction Park In And Around Beaufort.
- Houston Chronicle: Carver's Caribou Relief Finds Home On National Park Sign.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Mississippi River Recreation Area Named One Of Top 10 Parks.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Rush On $10 Senior Lifetime Pass To National Parks Causes Shortage In Twin Cities.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: National Parks Should Be Considered Before Oil And Gas Leasing.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Talane (ASM): Dengue Fever On The Rise, More Confirmed Cases.

Top National News

- CBS: Media Analyses: White House Sends Conflicting Messages On Russia Sanctions.
- Washington Times: Senate Republicans To Hold Healthcare Vote This Week.
- ABC: Nine Immigrants Dead In Human Smuggling Tragedy.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "California Shows How States Can Lead On Climate Change."
- Washington Post.
 - "Jim Vance. On And Off Camera He Will be Missed."
 - "Texas, Stop Trying To Pass This Bathroom Bill."

- "Mr. Trump's Election Commission Is Fully Transparent About Its Purpose: Voter Obstruction."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump's Syria Muddle."
 - "Randi Weingarten's 'Racism' Rant."
 - "West Chester Beats Obama."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

U.S. National Monument in Colorado to Remain Intact.

Reuters (7/21, Coffman) reports Secretary Zinke on Friday said that Colorado's Canyons of the Ancients National Monument "is no longer on a list of more than two dozen national monuments under review by the Trump administration for possible reduction or elimination." He has recommended that it be kept "intact, with no modifications." The story also appears at the New York Times (7/21, Reuters), U.S. News & World Report (7/21, Coffman),

The AP (7/21, Daly) reports Zinke cited the importance of the monument's "Native American archaeological sites." The AP story also appears at ABC News (7/21), San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/21, Daly), Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (7/21, Daly), Texarkana \(TX\) Gazette (7/21, Daly), Maryville \(TN\) Daily Times (7/21, Daly), Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/21, Daly), Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/21, Daly), Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (7/21, Daly, Press), Washington \(DC\) Post (7/21, Matthew Daly |, Ap), Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/23, Daly), U.S. News & World Report (7/21, Daly), New York Daily News (7/21), Washington \(DC\) Times (7/21, Daly), Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/21), KCNC-TV Denver (7/21)

The Denver Post (7/21, Douglas) reports in a story, also published in the Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (7/21, Douglas), that Zinke, in making the announcement, was "following through on his promise to U.S. Sen. Cory Gardner in June." Additional and similar coverage appears in the North Denver News (7/21), The Hill (7/21, Henry), Washington Times (7/21, Wolfgang), and KCNC-TV Denver (7/21, Bush).

Udall Supports Preserving Monuments.

The Taos \(NM\) News (7/23, Hooks) reports Sen. Tom Udall is attempting to "rally public opposition against President Trump's threat to rescind or shrink Rio Grande del Norte and other national monuments."

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/22, Bennett) also reports on Udall's efforts, while KLAS-TV Las Vegas (7/22, Marin) reports in Nevada, "nearly a million acres" are being reviewed for their status as part of the Gold Butte and Basin 'N' Range monuments. The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/23, Coleman) reports Zinke is scheduled to make a recommendation in "just one month."

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/21, Brea) reports Secretary Zinke "is expected in Nevada soon to review two national monuments here," Rep. Ruben Kihuen (D-NV) "said he feels left out of the process." KSNV-TV Las Vegas (7/21, Nunley, Fiegenger) reports on a "six-state RV road trip" by the Center for Western Priorities to promote the monuments.

$53M To Go To US National Park Maintenance, Infrastructure.

The AP (7/22) reports on Saturday, Secretary Zinke "announced more than $50 million for maintenance and infrastructure work at national parks." He spoke at Rocky Mountain National Park, accompanied by US Senator Cory Gardner (R-CO). According to the department $20 million will come from Congress and $33 million from "outside organizations."

The AP story also appeared at: KTVA-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (7/23), News 13 \(FL\) (7/22), WDEF-TV Chattanooga \(TN\) Chattanooga, TN (7/22), CBS News (7/22), ABC News (7/22), KAAL-TV Austin \(MN\) Austin, MN (7/22), the Greeley \(CO\) Tribune (7/22), San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/22), Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (7/22), Olean \(NY\) Times Herald

(7/22), KEYE-TV Austin \(TX\) Austin, TX (7/22), WBRZ-TV Baton Rouge \(LA\) Baton Rouge, LA (7/24, Press), WTTG-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (7/22), Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/22), Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/23), Washington \(DC\) Post (7/22, Press), Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/22), Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (7/22), Philly \(PA\) (7/22), U.S. News & World Report (7/22), Washington \(DC\) Times (7/22), KCNC-TV Denver (7/23), and Denver \(CO\) Post (7/22, Douglas).

The Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (7/22, Pohl) and KMGH-TV Denver (7/22) also report on the news.

Zinke In Denver Makes A Case For Energy Production On Public Lands.

The Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (7/22, Bunch) reports Secretary Zinke, speaking to the Western Conservative Summit on Friday in Denver, said that the US “should open up its public lands and shores for more energy production.” He said, “I can tell ya, the war on American energy is over.” One reason he gave is that US “national parks are about $11.5 billion behind in maintenance and repairs, and public lands and wildlife refuges are about $15 billion in need.”

Interior Dept. Nominee, Set For Confirmation Vote Monday, Is Accused Of Conflict Of Interest.

The Washington Post (7/21, Fears) reports President Trump’s nominee for deputy secretary of the Interiors, David Bernhardt, is called “‘an excellent choice’ by supporters and ‘a walking conflict of interest’ by opponents.” Secretary Zinke called him “an excellent choice.”

The Washington Times (7/23, Wolfgang) reports that “green groups and other critics” say President Trump’s nominee for deputy Interior secretary, David Bernhardt, “failed to disclose lobbying work he did on behalf of California’s Westlands Water District while spearheading the Trump administration’s transition team at the Interior Department.” Last week, the nonprofit watchdog the Campaign for Accountability “filed a formal complaint asking US attorneys to investigate Mr. Bernhardt’s lobbying work last year,” alleging that he “continued lobbying efforts even after formally terminating his lobbyist registration in mid-November to head transition efforts at Interior.”

The Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (7/21, Daugherty) reports he was “criticized” by Sen. Bill Nelson (D-FL) Thursday, for “his noncommittal position on an oil drilling moratorium in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico.”

The AP (7/24, Daly) reports he is being opposed by “Democrats and environmental groups,” who accuse him of having worked on behalf of “corporations at the expense of the environment.” The story also appears at the Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/23, Daly), Washington Post (7/24, Daly), Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/24, Daly), WRAL-TV Raleigh, NC (7/24, Daly), Yahoo! News (7/24, Daly), WTOP-FM Washington (7/24), ABC News (7/24), Washington Times (7/24, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (7/24, Daly), and U.S. News & World Report (7/24, Daly)

Interior Department Prevents Glacier Expert From Accompanying Mark Zuckerberg On Tour.

CBS News (7/21) carries an AP story reporting that the “Interior Department prevented Glacier National Park’s superintendent from accompanying Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg on a recent park tour to save money, not to mute criticism over climate change,” according to departmental spokeswoman Heather Swift. The AP adds that Park superintendent Jeff Mow and US Geological Survey ecologist Daniel Fagre “had planned to accompany Zuckerberg,” but the department assigned “park rangers to the tour instead.” It also appears at the Fort Wayne \(IN\) Journal-Gazette (7/21, Volz).

Climate Scientist Files Complaint On Trump Administration.

The AP (7/21) reported that Joel Clement, who until recently was director of the Department of Interior’s Office of Policy Analysis, “says he was mistreated by officials in the administration of President Donald Trump for speaking about climate change.” Clement was reassigned to a position in which he had no background, which he claims is a violation of his federal whistleblower protections. The story also appears at San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/21), U.S. News & World Report (7/21), Greenville \(TN\) Sun (7/21, Fitzgerald), Washington \(DC\) Times (7/21), and KTOO-FM Juneau \(AK\) Juneau, AK (7/23, Rott).

Two Good Picks.

The Ketchikan \(AK\) Daily News (7/21, Picks) in an editorial praises the selection of Chris Oliver to be assistant administrator of the National Marine Fisheries Service, and “Joe Balash as the U.S. Department of Interior’s assistant secretary for land and mineral management.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke in announcing the nomination said, “It’s been a long time” since an assistant secretary in the Interior Department was from Alaska. The paper concludes, “it will be good to have people who already know Alaska in these positions.”

Friends Of The Yampa, Conservation Colorado, Rig To Flip: Leave National Monuments Alone.

Friends of the Yampa, Conservation Colorado, and Rig To Flip write in the Steamboat \(CO\) Pilot & Today (7/22) saying that President Trump’s request that Interior Secretary Zinke “conduct a review of existing national monuments since 1996” is “unprecedented.” The groups also say any change to the national monuments would “compromise America’s public lands legacy and our native and cultural heritage,” and would “also hurt surrounding communities and small businesses.”

Decision To Keep Hanford Reach Monument Status Is Sound.

The Walla Walla \(WA\) Union-Bulletin (7/23) in an editorial questions the decision to review monument status, but says, Secretary “Zinke is embracing his work” given the beauty of the monuments. It quotes him saying about the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in Oregon, “Beautiful country, no doubt.” He added, “There’s areas that are being harvested (for timber), and harvested well. On the trail I saw horseback, and the resident artisan and the people (who) are incredibly passionate about this monument.” He “recommended no changes be made” which the paper says is “great news.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Interior Approves Gaming Contract Between Arizona And Tohono O’odham Nation.

The Arizona Daily Star (7/23, Fischer) reports the US Department of Interior has “approved the changes in the gaming compact between the Tohono O’odham Nation and the state.” As a result, “the state will no longer oppose expanded gaming on the site.”

State, Federal Reps Support Beloit Casino Plan.

The Beloit \(WI\) Daily News (7/21, Montgomery) reports that following “a promising meeting” regarding “the Ho-Chunk Nation casino plan for Beloit at the federal level in Washington, D.C. ...Wisconsin state and federal legislators from both parties are coming together to support the project.” Sen. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) said, “I have requested that the Bureau of Indian Affairs give this project timely consideration and I continue to support seeing it move forward.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Amarillo-area Helium Auction Brings In $60M.

The Amarillo \(TX\) Globe News (7/23) reports, “The Bureau of Land Management sold nearly $60 million in helium,” in its “fourth annual Amarillo-area auction.”

Newly Discovered Nevada Toad Species Already Under Threat.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/23) carries an AP story about “Nevada’s new toad species” which “is already on the brink of extinction.” The Dixie Valley toad “recently identified” as “the first new species of toad found anywhere in the U.S. in 50 years.” Meanwhile, “the Bureau of Land Management is currently reviewing a plan by Reno-based Ormat Technologies to build up to two 30-megawatt geothermal power plants directly adjacent to the toad’s habitat.” The AP story also appears at the Washington Post (7/22, Press), Houston Chronicle (7/22), Philly \(PA\) (7/22), and U.S. News & World Report (7/22).

They’ll Shoot Horses, Won’t They?

Ellie Phipps Price writes in an op-ed in the New York Times (7/21, Price) against changing “longstanding restrictions on killing wild horses and burros” and against Secretary Zinke’s plan “to end the ban on selling these animals for slaughter for food in Mexico and Canada” while also reducing “funding for fertility control — the only scientifically recommended, humane tool available to manage wild horse herds." Still, Price acknowledges "A new approach to protecting America's 73,000 wild horses and burros is in fact needed."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

BOEM Prepares For Latest Gulf Lease Sale.

Your Oil and Gas News (7/21) reports the US Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) will "offer blocks totalling 75.9 million acres" in the Gulf of Mexico to be auctioned in Lease Sale 249, on August 16.

Dominion Energy And Dong Energy To Build Small-scale Project Offshore Virginia.

Offshore Wind Journal (7/20) reports Dominion Energy Virginia announced it will be "moving forward on the mid-Atlantic's first offshore wind project in a federal lease area" after signing a contract with Dong Energy for it "to build two 6 megawatt turbines."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Trump Administration Orders Review Of Prohibitions On Killing Bear Cubs And Wolf Pups With Their Mothers.

The Washington \(DC\) Post (7/21, Fears) reports the department's acting assistant secretary Aurelia Skipwith has requested that the National Park Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reconsider rules on "various prohibitions that directly contradict State of Alaska authorizations and wildlife management decisions." The rules in question "forbid killing bear cubs with their mothers and wolf pups and mothers in the season when they den. They also prohibit using dogs to hunt big game and killing predators for the sole purpose of increasing the number of animals for hunting."

The Denver Post (7/21, Fears) also carries the story.

No-wake Zones Proposed For Havasu National Wildlife Refuge.

The San Francisco Chronicle (7/23) carries an AP story reporting the US Fish and Wildlife Service is proposing "a series of no-wake and restricted zones throughout the Havasu National Wildlife Refuge's backwaters." Refuge Manager Richard Meyers said it will have little effect on recreational boating. He said, "There was a lot of confusion in the public ... people believed we wanted to make the entire refuge a 'no-wake' zone. That isn't the case." The AP story also appears at the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/23), Houston Chronicle (7/23), U.S. News & World Report (7/23), and Washington Times (7/23).

Mexican Wolf Advocates Make Final Push Against Recovery Plan.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (7/23, Moss) reports on protesters "advocating for endangered Mexican gray wolves" assembling "ahead of a public meeting about a new federal management plan for the animals, developed by the U.S Fish and Wildlife Service."

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/22, Hayden) reports "environmental groups are relieved," but "dissatisfied," and a "cattle ranchers' group doesn't think much of the plan, either."

Federal, State Officials Seek Clues In Destruction Of Goose Creek Bald Eagle Nest.

The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (7/21, Knapp) reports, "Federal and state wildlife officers are trying to figure out who destroyed an active bald eagle nest" in the Goose Creek area. They are "offering a $1,000 reward for information." The AP story appears at the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/23), Washington \(DC\) Post (7/21, Press), Fox News (7/21), Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (7/21), San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/21), Philly \(PA\) (7/21), U.S. News & World Report (7/21), and Washington \(DC\) Times (7/21).

National Park Service

Utah's Crowded Zion National Park May Soon Require Reservations.

The Chicago Tribune (7/21, Whitehurst) carries an AP report that Zion National Park is considering "requiring reservations to get in" as a way "to manage an overwhelming surge of visitors." The park had 4.3 million visitors last year. The AP story also appears at the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/21, Whitehurst), Denver \(CO\) Post (7/21, Whitehurst), Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/21, Whitehurst), Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/21, Whitehurst), and ABC News (7/21).

Zion National Park To Get $694K For Park Maintenance Work.

KUTV-TV Salt Lake City (7/22) carries an AP report that Zion National Park will receive "over $694,000, nearly evenly split as coming from the federal government and from Zion Park Foundation and Zion National Park Foundation."

The AP story also appears at the Cache Valley \(UT\) Daily (7/23), U.S. News & World Report (7/22), Saguaro National Park To Get $215K For Infrastructure Work.

The Washington Times (7/22) carries an AP story on Saguaro National Park, saying it will "receive over $215,000." It also appears at KGUN-TV Tucson \(AZ\) Tucson, AZ (7/23) and Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/23).

Enota Park To Receive Facelift Thanks To Federal Government.

WGCL-TV Atlanta (7/23) reports Enota Park will receive $600,000 "through their Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership Program."

Burlington Receives $500,000 For Waterfront Park.

VTDigger \(VT\) (7/21) reports Burlington, Vermont will receive a $500,000 grant to help the city "establish a new waterfront park." Funding is from "the Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership, a competitive program run by the National Park Service."

Acadia National Park Gets Funding For Trail Maintenance.

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (7/22, Quimby) reports the National Park Service on Saturday announced that Acadia National Park "has been awarded $192,286 for trail maintenance." It will receive from Friends of Acadia, "another $259,112 for trail maintenance through the park service's Centennial Challenge program."

Crews Stop Spread Of Huge California Wildfire Near Yosemite.

The Houston Chronicle (7/23) carries an AP report that fire crews "slowed the spread" of a wildfire "in a rural area of California near Yosemite National Park." It was reported "45 percent contained" on Sunday.

National Park Service Love Story: Couple Works To Save Energy, Restore Landscape At Five Western Pa. Parks.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (7/23, Murray) reports on MaryEllen Snyder, management assistant for Western Pennsylvania National Parks, and her husband and parks project manager, Leroy Renninger and their work "together since 1979, when Mr. Renninger proposed in Yellowstone National Park."

Visitor Center Provides Point Of Contact For Manhattan Project National Park.

The Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (7/22) reports the US Department of Energy and National Park Service will co-host the dedication of the "Manhattan Project National Park Interim Visitor Center at the Tri-Cities Enterprise Center in north Richland this week."

National Park Service Beginning To Lay Plans For Reconstruction Park In And Around Beaufort.

The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (7/22, Behre) reports on the coming Reconstruction Era National Monument to be opened in South Carolina "about two years away." Right now, "the National Park Service is getting down to the nitty-gritty of refining its vision, properties, exhibits and more."

Carver's Caribou Relief Finds Home On National Park Sign.

The Houston Chronicle (7/22, Woods) carries an AP story about Marianne Stolz who, along with her family was "on a three-week vacation in April when the National Park Service called and asked whether she would do a commission for the new entrance sign at Denali National Park and Preserve." She "jumped at the offer, and now the new sign features a 3-by-3 foot relief carving of a caribou." The AP story also appears at the San Francisco Chronicle (7/22, Woods), U.S. News & World Report (7/22, Woods), and Washington Times (7/22, Woods).

Mississippi River Recreation Area Named One Of Top 10 Parks.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/23, Svitak) reports, "The National Park Service has named the Mississippi National River and Recreation Area one of '10 National Parks That Reflect the American Spirit.'" The others are listed.

Rush On $10 Senior Lifetime Pass To National Parks Causes Shortage In Twin Cities.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/22, Svitak) reports on people trying to find "a senior pass for the national park system" as the price will rise at the end of August. As a result of demand there was only one "Twin Cities location that still had them available — the Minnesota Valley National Wildlife Refuge — which ran out Tuesday."

National Parks Should Be Considered Before Oil And Gas Leasing.

Fred J. Fagergren, former superintendent in the National Park Service, writes in The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/22), in opposition to oil and gas leasing "adjacent to Dinosaur National Monument, in direct view of the park entrance road, Dinosaur Quarry Visitor Center and Carnegie Fossil Quarry" arguing in support of the position of NPS staff that "their development would hurt both the environmental quality and visitor experience at the park." In general, Fagergren argues against development near national parks because of the resulting "oil derricks, hazy skies and loud equipment."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Dengue Fever On The Rise, More Confirmed Cases.

The Talane \(ASM\) (7/20) reports dengue fever cases have increased with 15 confirmed cases from July 6 to the 17, up from "one or two confirmed dengue cases per month."

Top National News

Media Analyses: White House Sends Conflicting Messages On Russia Sanctions.

Media reports cast statements Sunday by White House officials on whether the President would sign a bill imposing new sanctions on Russia as conflicting. Both networks that aired Sunday night, reported the story. In its lead story, the CBS Weekend News (7/23, lead story, 2:30, Quijano) briefly stated Congress has agreed to pass a "sweeping" sanctions bill against Russia for its election interference and the annexation of Crimea, but the White House "sent conflicting messages on whether the President intends to sign that bill."

The AP (7/23, Lardner) reports new White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said the Administration is supportive of being tough on Russia and "particularly putting these sanctions in place." Appearing on ABC's This Week, Sanders said, "We support where the legislation is now, and will continue to work with the House and Senate to put those tough sanctions in place on Russia until the situation in Ukraine is fully resolved." Reuters (7/23, Ali) likewise says Sanders indicated President Trump is "open to signing" the legislation. However, Anthony Scaramucci, the new White House communications director, "said Trump had not yet decided whether he would sign the bill." Scaramucci told CNN's "State of the Union," "My guess is...that he's going to make that decision shortly." The Wall Street Journal (7/23, Andrews) says Scaramucci was more cautious about the president's direction.

Scaramucci also indicated that Trump remains unconvinced that Russia interfered in the election, "even though the intelligence community insists otherwise," ABC World News Tonight (7/23, story 2, 3:00) reported. Scaramucci said Trump "basically said to me, 'hey, maybe they did it, maybe they didn't do it.'"

On CNN's State Of The Union (7/23, Tapper), Scaramucci said the President will "make the decision when the time is right." He added, "If he makes a decision that it's 100 percent true, he'll be super tough on Russia. But let him do it at his own time and pace."

Noting the apparent contradiction in their remarks in a front-page story, the Washington Post (7/23, A1, Nakamura, Parker) says "either Sanders got out ahead of President Trump or...Scaramucci...didn't have the most up-to-date information." Later Sunday, the White House "argued that the seemingly dueling statements were not, in fact, contradictory, and noting that newest bill includes some changes the administration supports, like adding sanctions on North Korea." A "senior White House official" said in a statement, "The administration supports sanctions on Russia and Iran and supports the direction the bill is headed, but won't weigh in conclusively until there is a final piece of legislation and no more changes are being made."

Likewise, when asked about "the different messages coming out of the President's communications team," a White House spokesperson told the Washington Times (7/23, Swoyer) that "both Mrs. Sanders and Mr. Scaramucci were accurate, saying although Congress made changes to the legislation...the White House won't yet confirm whether or not the president will back it until the bill is finalized."

The New York Times (7/23, A1, Baker) calls Sanders' comments "a striking turnaround." The new White House press secretary said adjustments made to the bill were enough to satisfy the President's concerns, but the Times says, "in reality...the changes...mainly provided a face-saving way to back down from a confrontation it was sure to lose if the sanctions bill reached the floor of the House." The Hill (7/23, Shelbourne) also reports Sanders' comments.

Cardin, Thune: In Trump's Best Interest To Sign Sanctions Bill. On Fox News Sunday (7/23, Wallace), Sen. John Thune said the bill is one that the President "should sign" into law. Sen. Ben Cardin added, "This is a very strong bill and it imposes mandatory sanctions on Russia, provides for congressional review if the President wants to wait or eliminate sanctions, it's very bipartisan. ... If he vetoes the bill, we will override his veto."

NYTimes Analysis: Sanctions "Setback" For Both Trump And Putin. The New York Times (7/23, Sanger) reports that "throughout 2016, both Donald J. Trump and President Vladimir V. Putin complained that American-led sanctions against Russia were the biggest irritant in the plummeting relations between the two superpowers." Now, however, it is "clear that those sanctions not only are staying in place, but are about to be modestly expanded – exactly the outcome the two presidents sought to avoid." The Times says that by "constantly casting doubt on intelligence that the Kremlin was behind an effort to manipulate last year's presidential election," Trump has "so unnerved members of his own party that even they saw a need to curb his ability to lift those sanctions unilaterally." Scaramucci, the Times notes, repeated those doubts on Sunday.

Bloomberg News (7/23, Krasny) reports Scaramucci said that "somebody" told him recently that "if the Russians actually hacked this situation and spilled out those emails, you would never have seen it." When "pressed about who his informant had been," Scaramucci said, "how 'bout, it was the president."

Volker: Russia To Blame For "Hot War" In Ukraine. Reuters (7/23, Zinets, Williams) reports US special envoy Kurt Volker said Sunday that Russian aggression is to blame for violence in eastern Ukraine, which he called a "hot war" rather than a "frozen conflict." During a visit to Ukraine, Volker "said he would prepare a set of recommendations on how Washington can better engage with the peace process," which he said, "we all need to address as quickly as possible."

Russian Ambassador To US Ends Tenure. The AP (7/23, Lucey) reports Russian Ambassador to the US Sergei Kislyak – "a high-profile figure in the controversy over Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election" – has concluded his assignment in Washington. The Russian Embassy in Washington announced on Twitter that Kislyak's tenure ended Saturday. His successor "has not been announced, although it is widely expected to be Anatoly Antonov, a deputy foreign minister and former deputy defense minister seen as a hardliner regarding the United States."

WPost A1: Local Governments Still Using Russian Software Despite Warnings. The Washington Post (7/23, A1, Gillum, Davis) reports that "local and state government agencies from Oregon to Connecticut say they are using a Russian brand of security software despite the federal government's instructions to its own agencies not to buy the software over concerns about cyberespionage." The General Services Administration (GSA) this month "removed Moscow-based Kaspersky Lab from its list of approved vendors," suggesting "a vulnerability exists in Kaspersky that could give the Russian government backdoor access to the systems it protects, though they offered no explanation or evidence of it."

Senate Republicans To Hold Healthcare Vote This Week.

The Washington Times (7/23, Swoyer) reports that the Senate will vote this week "on whether or not to open debate on the House's health care bill," but "several senators on Sunday appeared unclear on exactly which direction the Senate will go this week after they've been debating whether or not to repeal Obamacare and replace it later, or to repeal and replace in one push."

Reuters (7/23, Becker) also says "it remained unclear which version of the bill senators would vote on." Sen. Susan Collins said on CBS' "Face the Nation," "It appears we'll have a vote on Tuesday but we don't know whether we'll be voting on the House bill, the first version of the Senate bill, the second version of the Senate bill."

The AP (7/23, Yen) reports that Senate Republican Conference Chairman John Thune told Fox News Sunday that it is "not yet known whether the legislation will seek to replace the Affordable Care Act or simply repeal it." According to Thune, Majority Leader McConnell "will make a decision soon on which bill to bring up for a vote, depending on ongoing discussions with GOP senators." Thune said, "That's a judgment that Senator McConnell will make at some point this week before the vote." While he "express[ed] his own hope it will be a repeal-and-replace measure," he added, "But no matter which camp you're in, you can't have a debate about either unless we get on the bill. So we need a 'yes' vote." Thune also told Fox that if the repeal effort falls short this week, Republicans will try again, Politico (7/23, Ehley) reports. Thune said, "What will happen is, if and when that were to occur, we'll go back to the drawing board and get a bill up. ... We are going to vote to repeal and replace Obamacare. It's not a question of 'if,' it's a question of 'when.'"

The Washington Post (7/23, Goldstein) reports that Sen. John Barrasso "indicated" Sunday that Republicans "may not have enough support to prevail on even a first step — a routine vote to begin the floor debate." Barrasso told CBS' "Face the Nation," "We're continuing to work with all of the members. We're getting much closer to that." The Wall Street Journal (7/23, Andrews, Armour, Peterson) says a failure on the motion to proceed would be a defeat for Trump and Republicans, and could mean the end of their efforts to overhaul the ACA. The Journal adds that there is little indication that senators who opposed the Senate bill earlier this month have changed their minds.

Sen. Rand Paul told CNN's State Of The Union (7/23, Tapper) that he would back a repeal of Obamacare, but continues to withhold support for the Senate Republican bill. Paul added that he favors "legalizing inexpensive insurance" which "means the federal government doesn't regulate it and allow the sale of inexpensive insurance again, legalizing the ability to join an association across state lines."

On ABC's This Week (7/23, Stephanopoulos), White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said the President's preference is repeal and replace, saying that he is "committed to repealing and replacing Obamacare," and The Hill (7/23, Bolton) cites two senators who attended last week's meeting with Trump at the White House who said that "McConnell revived the Senate's version of the repeal-and-replace legislation after Trump pressed him directly on it."

The Los Angeles Times (7/23, Wigglesworth) reports that in a tweet Sunday night, Trump "sought to turn up the pressure on Republican lawmakers," writing that "if they fail to pass legislation to roll back his predecessor's healthcare law, 'the repercussions will be far greater than any of them understand!'" It was unclear "whether Trump was referring to political repercussions for lawmakers or those that would be felt by Americans seeking health coverage absent the passage of legislation to overhaul the Affordable Care Act, or Obamacare."

Trump To Speak To Press About Healthcare Monday. USA Today (7/24, Toppo) reports that President Trump will speak to the press at the White House about healthcare on Monday following a meeting "with what he calls 'victims of Obamacare.'"

Nine Immigrants Dead In Human Smuggling Tragedy.

ABC World News Tonight (7/23, lead story, 2:40, Llamas) reported that a tractor-trailer with 38 immigrants "packed inside" was found early Sunday by police in San Antonio, Texas, who discovered that eight immigrants had already died from the heat inside the truck. Thirty people were rushed to the hospital, with "20 in critical condition, suffering from traumatic brain injuries from heat stroke and dehydration." One in critical condition died at the hospital. Acting ICE Director Thomas Homan said that "there may have been as many as 100 people in the truck," and San Antonio Fire Chief Charles Hood described the incident as "a mass casualty situation." The CBS Weekend News (7/23, story 3, 2:15, Quijano) reported that temperatures in the vehicle "had climbed well above 100 degrees," with no air conditioning or water. US Attorney Richard Durbin "called it an alien smuggling situation gone horribly wrong." Police Chief William McManus "says cars picked up some people inside the trailer before authorities arrived. Others escaped into a forested area nearby."

The New York Times (7/23, Montgomery, Fernandez, Joseph) reports that McManus said at an early morning news conference that a Walmart employee "making the rounds late Saturday night was approached by someone from the truck 'asking for water'" and that the employee "returned with the water and called the police, who found the bodies at the back of the truck." McManus also said DHS and ICE officials "were helping in the investigation." San Antonio Mayor Ron Nirenberg in a statement described the incident as "tragic" and that it "shines a bright light on the plight of immigrants looking for a better life and victims of human trafficking."

The AP (7/23, Gay, Weissert) reports that the driver of the tractor-trailer, James Matthew Bradley Jr., "was taken into custody and would be charged on Monday." Homan said, "Even though they have the driver in custody, I can guarantee you there's going to be many more people we're looking for to prosecute," saying it was unlikely that the immigrants crossed the border in the truck.

WOAI-TV San Antonio (7/23, Santos) reports that police have taken into custody 15 people who "are believed to be human trafficking victims who escaped the scene" where 38 immigrants were discovered early Sunday.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"California Shows How States Can Lead On Climate Change." A New York Times (7/24, Board) editorial says California's "cap-and-trade program, which effectively puts a price on emissions," is "a bold, bipartisan commitment that invites similarly ambitious policies from other states, and it sends a strong signal to the world that millions of Americans regard with utmost seriousness a threat the Trump administration refuses to acknowledge, let alone reckon with." The Times notes nine states in the Northeast have joined "what is known as the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative, which, like California's effort, is a market-based cap-and-trade program that goes beyond state boundaries," and suggests New Jersey and Virginia may soon join the group. These state efforts, the Times concludes, indicate that "Trump may be going one way, but America is going the other."

Washington Post.

"Jim Vance. On And Off Camera He Will be Missed." A Washington Post (7/23) editorial.

"Texas, Stop Trying To Pass This Bathroom Bill." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/23) writes that the Texas Legislature should stop pushing for the passage of a bill that would regulate transgender use of bathrooms in government buildings and schools, arguing that, under the measure, "not only will transgender people who live in Texas be hurt but so will the state's standing and economy." The Post adds that some, such as Texas Republican Speaker of the House Joe Strauss, have opposed the legislation, and concludes by asking whether Texas lawmakers wish to create a "backlash" like that following North Carolina's passage of a similar law.

"Mr. Trump's Election Commission Is Fully Transparent About Its Purpose: Voter Obstruction."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/23) says that during a recent appearance on MSNBC, the commission's co-chair, Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach – "a Republican titan of voter suppression who has been repeatedly sued for his relentless efforts to cull voters from the rolls" in Kansas – "was asked if he believed that Hillary Clinton won the popular vote by nearly 3 million votes, as the official tally indicates." Kobach replied that "we may never know the answer to that question." The Post adds that "the offhand remark was in keeping with Mr. Kobach's years-long effort, along with that of other Republicans, to erode public confidence in American elections to provide a pretext for tough state laws whose real goal is to obstruct voting by minorities and young people, who tend to support Democrats."

Wall Street Journal.

"Trump's Syria Muddle." A Wall Street Journal (7/23) editorial is critical of the Trump Administration's apparent willingness to allow Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to remain in power, saying Syria is unlikely to be stable if he does.

"Randi Weingarten's 'Racism' Rant." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/23) argues that American Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten's speech last week attacking Education Secretary DeVos and linking school choice to racism shows that Secretary DeVos is appropriately addressing what it calls the public-school monopoly. The Journal argues that concludes that Secretary DeVos should interpret Weingarten's speech to mean that teachers unions are so entrenched in their monopoly that they will attack any school choice initiative.

“West Chester Beats Obama.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/23) writes that the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s acceptance of Westchester County, New York’s recent report showing that county zoning laws were race-neutral vindicates Westchester County Chief Executive Rob Astorino, who for seven years fought the Obama Administration’s HUD over the issue. The Journal concludes that Astorino’s fight was a key battle against what it calls the worst excess of the Obama Administration in its misuse of federal regulations to impose liberal policy items.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

White House Signals Support For Bill On Russia Sanctions
Wall Street Outlasts Congress On Banker Pay, But Still Loses
Lawyers Hope To Do To Opioid Makers What They Did To Big Tobacco
President’s Sign-Off Deals Blow To China Inc.’s Global Spending Spree

New York Times:

White House Signals Acceptance Of Russia Sanctions Bill
Companies Rush To Develop “Utterly Transformative” Gene Therapies In China, Herd Of “Gray Rhinos” Threatens Economy
With More Ships In The Arctic, Fears Of Disaster Rise
When Health Law Isn’t Enough, The Desperate Line Up At Tents

Washington Post:

Local Governments Still Use Russian Brand Of Software
Afghan Fight Grinds On
Message Misfire Follows Overhaul
Heat Kills 9 Packed Into Truck In Texas
GOP’s Internal Feuds Threaten Legislative Goals Of Trump, Party
In China, The Live-Stream Dream

Washington Times:

60 Votes Or Nothing: Senate Parliamentarian Warns Republicans About Rules For Health Care Bill
Congress’ Bipartisan Agreement To Take Hard Line Against Russia Puts Trump To Test On Sanctions
Jared Kushner: Jewish-American Paradox, Traditional Presidential Family Adviser
Fact-Checkers Drawn Into Heated Debate Over Number Of Noncitizens Who Vote Illegally
Maryland Democrats See Opportunity In Governor’s Race, Try To Link Hogan With Trump
After Six Months In White House, Trump Aims To Amplify Leadership Brand

Financial Times:

Lord’s Victory For England Female Cricket Team
Two Wall Street Chiefs Enjoy \$314m Share Bonanza
Gauland Struggles To Tame Germany’s Wayward AfD
EU Ready To Retaliate Against US Sanctions On Russia

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Texas-Immigrant Deaths; WH-Russia Meddling Investigation; Raqqa Assault; London Baby-US Treatment; Severe Weather; Weather Forecast; Princess Diana-20th Anniversary; Mexico-Bootleg Liquor Warning; Boston-Building Fires; North Carolina-Manhunt; Poker Tournament Winner; Miami-Alligator Rescue; Disabled Olympian.

CBS: WH-Russia Meddling Investigation; Russia Meddling Investigation-Analysis; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Kentucky-Anti-abortion Protest; Severe Weather; Boston-Building Fires; West Coast-Wildfires; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Afghanistan-Accidental Airstrike; Italia-Prison Restaurant; NYC Whale Watching.

NBC: Preempted by NASCAR.

Network TV At A Glance:

Russia Meddling Investigation – 7 minutes, 20 seconds

Texas-Immigrant Deaths – 4 minutes, 55 seconds

Weather – 2 minutes, 35 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Russian Meddling Investigation-Kushner; WH-Russia Meddling Investigation; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; British Baby-Legal Battle; Afghanistan-Suicide Bombing; Syria-ISIS Battle.

CBS: Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Trump-Republicans Comment; WH-New Communications Director; WH-Russia Meddling Investigation; Russia Sanctions Bill; British Open News; USS Constitution Reopening.

FOX: Texas-Immigrant Deaths; WH-New Communications Director; China-US Detainee Released.

NPR: Healthcare Reform Plan; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Cincinnati-Police Violence Protest; West Coast-Wildfires.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in a greeting with victims of Obamacare; gives a statement on healthcare; gives remarks at the 2017 National Scout Jamboree.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President to participate in a greeting with victims of Obamacare; introduces the President as he delivers a statement on healthcare.

US Senate: 4:00 PM Senate votes on deputy interior secretary nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of David Bernhardt to be Deputy Secretary of the Interior, including a vote on the nomination * Cloture motion passed by 56 votes to 39 last week, with six Democrats joining Republicans in voting in support Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

6:00 PM SALDEF hosts Langar on Capitol Hill – SALDEF 4th Annual 'Langar on the Hill', hosted by 10 students from SALDEF's SikhLEAD internship class with the support of Democratic Sen. Kamala Harris, to 'celebrate Sikh values of unity and selfless service'. Speakers – including Members of Congress, federal agencies, and SALDEF officials – explain 'the importance of Langar and unity in the context of the American experience' * Langar is 'a Sikh tradition that serves as a 500-year-old anti-segregation movement' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC <http://saldef.org/> <https://twitter.com/SALDEF>

President Trump's son-in-law testifies to closed Senate Judiciary Committee hearing after meeting with Russian lawyer – Senate Committee on the Judiciary closed hearing with testimony from White House Senior Advisor (and President Donald Trump's son-in-law) Jared Kushner * Follows a meeting involving Kushner, President Trump's son Donald Trump, Jr., former Donald J. Trump for President campaign manager Paul Manafort, and Russian attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya in June 2016 which emails released by Trump, Jr. have shown was supposedly for Russia to pass on information to 'incriminate' Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton * Trump, Jr. and Manafort will be among witnesses at a Committee hearing on 'Oversight of the Foreign Agents Registration Act and Attempts to Influence U.S. Elections: Lessons Learned from Current and Prior Administrations' Wednesday Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

US House: 2:00 PM House of Representatives meets for legislative business Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

3:00 PM Bipartisan House forum on press freedom – Bipartisan Reps. John Conyers, Steve Cohen, Mark Sanford, and other Members of Congress host forum on 'The State of Press Freedom in 21st Century America', on topics including 'President Donald Trump's repeated attempts to seemingly de-legitimize mainstream news outlets by calling them 'fake news' and 'the enemy of the American people', 'Threats by President Trump to change libel laws to make it easier to pursue lawsuits against the press', 'The potential epidemic of misinformation being presented to the public as 'news' that may threaten to undermine the credibility of legitimate journalism', 'Restrictions on access to press briefings', and 'Physical threats to journalists'. Panel features Jeff Ballou (National Press Club), Jennifer Rubin (Washington Post), Kyle Pope (Columbia Journalism Review), Alicia Shepard (USA Today), Floyd Abrams (Gordon & Reindel), Rick Blum (Open Government), and Marvin Kalb (Brookings Institution) Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2167, Washington, DC www.house.gov/conyers <https://twitter.com/repjohnconyers>

4:00 PM Bipartisan Heroin Task Force hosts roundtable on addiction treatment for children and adolescents – Bipartisan Heroin Task Force hosts roundtable on addiction treatment for children and adolescents, led by co-chairs Reps. Annie Kuster and Tom MacArthur, focusing on the challenges associated with treating children and adolescents for substance abuse. Panel of experts include Department of Health and Human Services Office of the Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation Division of Science Policy Director Dr Christopher Jones and Foster Children Evaluation Services Assistant Director Heather Forkey Location: Cannon House Office Building, Rm 340, Washington, DC kuster.house.gov <https://twitter.com/RepAnnieKuster>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.J. Res. 111, Providing for congressional disapproval under chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, of the rule submitted by Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection relating to ‘Arbitration Agreements’, and ‘H.R. 3219, the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 2018’ (aka ‘Make America Secure Appropriations Act, 2018’) Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 7:00 AM NAACP Annual Convention continues with Dem lawmakers at Federal Policy and Legislative Workshop – National Association for the Advancement of Colored People 108th Annual Convention continues, with agenda today including Federal Policy and Legislative Workshop (2:30 PM EDT) with members of Congress discussing legislation and public policy issues facing the African-American community, including voting rights, policing issues, gun control, healthcare, labor issue and criminal justice reform. Participants include Democratic Sens. Ben Cardin, Cory Booker, Tammy Duckworth, Kamala Harris and Reps. Bobby Scott, Sheila Jackson Lee, Henry Johnson, Robin Kelly, Cedric Richmond, Nanette Barragan and Scott Taylor Location: The Baltimore Convention Center, 1 West Pratt Street, Baltimore, MD Baltimore <http://www.naacp.org> <https://twitter.com/NAACP>

8:30 AM UK international trade secretary speaks at AEI on ‘The Future of UK Trade Policy’ – UK International Trade Secretary Liam Fox speaks on ‘The Future of UK Trade Policy’ at the American Enterprise Institute, discussing the future of the UK’s sovereign trade policy and trade relationship with the U.S. * Secretary Fox is in the U.S. for talks with U.S. Trade Representative Amb. Robert Lighthizer on a post-Brexit U.S. free trade deal Location: American Enterprise Institute, 1789 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.aei.org/> #Brexit

12:00 PM House Freedom Caucus Chairman GOP Rep. Mark Meadows speaks at NPC – National Press Club Luncheon Series event with House Freedom Caucus Chairman Republican Rep. Mark Meadows, who discusses the inner-working of the caucus, its deliberations, philosophical approach to issues, and some other aspects that ‘never made headlines’ Location: National Press Club, 529 14th St, NW, Washington DC <http://press.org/> #NPCLive

2:00 PM Bipartisan Task Force on Reforming and Reorganizing U.S. Foreign Assistance report launch at CSIS – Bipartisan Task Force on Reforming and Reorganizing U.S. Foreign Assistance report launch at Project on U.S. Leadership in Development Chevron Forum. The Task Force – consisting of former officials from the administrations of Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama – has identified ‘actionable recommendations that the Trump Administration and the U.S. Congress can take to improve the efficiency, effectiveness, and accountability of U.S. foreign assistance programs’. Speakers include Task Force Co-Chairs Republican Sen. Todd Young and Democratic Sen. Jeanne Shaheen, along with members former Counselor to USAID Hilda Arellano, former USAID Assistant to the Administrator for the Bureau of Policy, Planning and Learning Susan Reichle, former House Committee on Foreign Affairs Senior Adviser Nilmini Rubin, former U.S. Ambassador to the African Union John Simon, and former USAID Chief of Staff Michele Sumalis Location: Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest, Washington, DC www.csis.org <https://twitter.com/csis>

3:00 PM Brookings forum on broadband with GOP Rep. Marsha Blackburn – ‘Including broadband in Trump’s infrastructure plan: Opportunities and challenges’ Brookings’ Center for Technology Innovation forum on the inclusion of broadband in President Donald Trump’s infrastructure plan, with a congressional perspective of the pending White House plan. Includes keynote from Republican Rep. Marsha Blackburn, with panelists includes Wireless Infrastructure Association President and CEO Jonathan Adelstein, CTIA – The Wireless Association Executive Vice President Brad Gillen, and Office of Rep. Frank Pallone Chief Telecom Counsel David Goldman Location: Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.brookings.edu> #USBroadband

UK Parliament members arrive in Washington, DC, for annual exchange program – 40th annual British American Parliamentary Group exchange program begins in Washington, DC. UK Members of Parliament Suella Fernandes, Rehman Chishti, David Morris, Kerry McCarthy, Michelle

Donelan, Gerald Jones, Holly Lynch, and Tommy Sheppard meet Republican and Democratic Members of Congress before traveling to their counterparts' home districts in Nebraska, Arkansas, California, Alabama, New York, and Arizona, where they network with leaders and staffers and discuss 'significant domestic and foreign policy issues at the federal, state, and local levels', before the program concludes with a final meeting in Boston * BAPG exchange has been exchanging ideas since 1977 under the auspices of the U.S. State Department International Visitor Leadership Program Location: TBD www.state.gov <https://twitter.com/StateDept>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, July 31, 2017
Date: Monday, July 31, 2017 7:04:20 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JULY 31, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Scottsbluff (NE) Star-Herald: Interior Chief Ends Nevada Trip For Monday Cabinet Meeting.
- U.S. News & World Report: By Helicopter And On Horseback, Zinke Reviews Monuments.
- U.S. News & World Report: Montana Refuge Opened To Ranchers Who Lost Grass To Fires.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: Zinke Denies Threats In Calls.
- Washington Post: Why Americans Are Fighting Over A Gorgeous Monument Called Bears Ears.
- Breitbart: Interior Dept. Publishes Its 12 American Made Accomplishments Since Agency Was Founded In 1849.
- Loveland (CO) Reporter-Herald: Editorial: National Parks Need More Help Than This.

- Huffington Post: Antiquities Act Of 1906: No Presidential License To Revoke National Monuments.
- Durango (CO) Herald: Coal Rule Rollback Shortchanges Treasury, Lands And Economy.
- Missoulian (MT): Montana's Wildfires Are Part Of Growing National Emergency, Should Be Treated Like Other Natural Disasters.
- Washington Post: Washington Is Dysfunctional. This Senate Rule Change Could Help Fix It..

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Wyoming Reservation Readies For Solar Eclipse Tourists.

Bureau Of Land Management

- U.S. News & World Report: Federal Ranger To Testify In San Francisco Murder Trial.
- E&E Publishing: Court To Decide Fate Of Federal Fracking Authority.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Utah Governor: Rethink Lease Sites.
- U.S. News & World Report: Energy Company Applies To Mine 4.1M Tons Of Coal In Colorado.
- U.S. News & World Report: Big Federal Wild Horse Roundup Planned In Northeast Nevada.
- U.S. News & World Report: Las Vegas Water Pipeline Fight To Go Before Federal Judge.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: U.S. Rep. Tom Emmer Pushes To Restore Mineral Rights.
- Denver Post: Saving Wild Horses Requires Culling The Herd.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Push For Arctic Energy Development Met With Criticism.
- Oil Group Fights Enviro's Challenge To Offshore Drilling Order.
- Our Views: Assess Oil Potential Of East Coast Waters.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Bill Would End Trinity River Fish Disease Preventive Flows, County Water Right.
- Drag Boat Competitions Approved At East Park Reservoir.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- 12 Years After Gulf Oil Platform Destroyed, Feds Start Investigating Environmental Damage.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Daily Caller: GOP Pushes Bill About Gray Wolf.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wildfire Won't Ruin Hunting Seasons At Okefenokee Refuge.
- Bozeman (MT) Daily Chronicle: States Taking Over Grizzly Management Monday.
- Bradenton (FL) Times: Delisting Would Put Panthers In Peril.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Connelly: Sage-grouse Aren't Pheasants, And Captive Rearing Is Doomed To Fail.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: Yellowstone National Park To Discipline Workers For Sexual Misconduct.
- U.S. News & World Report: Acadia Receives $192K For Trail Maintenance.
- U.S. News & World Report: National Park In Ohio To Get Nearly $1.5M In Federal Funds.
- U.S. News & World Report: Grand Teton Park To Receive $2M For Jenny Lake Renovations.
- U.S. News & World Report: Officials At Mammoth Cave To Make Trail More Accessible.
- U.S. News & World Report: Grand Teton Park Plans For Eclipse Crowd.
- Los Angeles Times: Dark Sky Designation Puts Joshua Tree National Park In A New Light.
- U.S. News & World Report: After Wildfire, Gatlinburg Is Getting Back On Its Feet.
- Kingstree (SC) News: National Park Service Releases Reconstruction Era Theme Study.
- Savannah (GA) Morning News: Savannah Native Appointed National Park Service Chief Historian.
- Victorville (CA) Daily Press: Eradicating All Mountain Goats At Olympic National Park Isn't Wise.
- Roseburg (OR) News-Review: Senior Pass Price Hike Not As Unreasonable As It Seems.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Samoa News: Amata Introduces Assistant Secretary Of Insular Affairs Nominee.
- Marianas Variety: American Samoa Gets $94,906 From Feds.
- Snopes: Trump Administration Allegedly Threatens Alaskan Senators With Retribution After Health Care Vote.

Top National News

- ABC: As He Mulls Next Steps, Trump Urges Senate To Tackle ACA Repeal Again.
- CBS: Trump Replaces Priebus With Kelly As Chief Of Staff.
- Reuters: Trump Calls On Congress To Give More Leeway To Police In Speech Condemning MS-13 Gang Violence.
- Bloomberg News: Mnuchin Pressures Congress To Raise Debt Ceiling Before Deadline.
- Washington Post: White House Kicks Off Tax Reform Push, Mulvaney Says That Goal Is To Cut As Much As Possible.
- CBS: US Economy Continued To See "Slow And Steady" Growth In Second Quarter.
- The Hill: Republicans To Push Tax Reform Over August Recess.
- Wall Street Journal: Mnuchin: Debt Limit Must Be Raised By Sept. 29.
- Washington Post: EPA Museum Being Changed To Reflect Trump Administration Priorities.
- Wall Street Journal: Researchers: If It Is Real, Policy Response To Climate Change Is Open To Debate.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Britain Joins The Shift To Electric Cars."
 - "Pakistan's Prime Minister Falls, Again."
- Washington Post.
 - "The Public Is Still Waiting For Answers On A District Police-Involved Shooting."
 - "The Ouster In Pakistan Is Actually A Glimmer Of Hope."
 - "The Man Who May Disenfranchise Millions."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Regime Change Solution In Korea."
 - "A Fiduciary Rule Reckoning."
 - "Putin's Advances In Syria."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Interior Chief Ends Nevada Trip For Monday Cabinet Meeting.

The AP (7/30, RITTER, SONNER) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke toured two national monuments in Nevada on Sunday and canceled plans for meetings Monday in the Las Vegas area in order to head back to Washington, D.C., for what he said will be a Cabinet meeting involving President Donald Trump's top appointees." Zinke toured the Gold Butte and Basin and Range national monuments, "but he didn't say he's made any decisions about whether to downsize the two monuments created last year by President Barack Obama before he left office." Zinke said, "Monuments have been adjusted ...18 times before, Zinke said. "So I don't think there's too much question that a monument can be adjusted. Whether a monument can be rescinded or not, that is a question for the courts."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), Business Insider (7/30, Ritter, Sonner), the Dayton \(OH\) Daily News (7/30, Ritter, Sonner), and the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/30, RITTER, SONNER).

Additional coverage was provided by KSNV-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/30, Clemons).

Zinke: Feds Must Ensure Monument Designation Is 'Smallest Area Compatible With Protection'. USA Today (7/31, Thomas) reports "in speaking with reporters, Zinke addressed concerns that the monument review might entail downsizing, which could leave formerly protected areas vulnerable to commercial development or mining." Zinke "stressed what he said is the importance of public access and ensuring any monument designation is 'the smallest area compatible with protection of the object' — a phrase Zinke repeated several times throughout a 25-minute conversation with reporters." He said, "What I've learned in the monument review is that every monument is unique. In a lot of cases, people are afraid that public land is going to be sold so they feel like a monument is a tool to make sure that public land stays in public hands. Up front, I am an advocate to never sell or transfer public land, and so is the president."

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Caps Review Of Monuments With Bunkerville Visit. The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/30, Rogers) reports that "the Riverside Road location where Zinke made his remarks is within 3 miles of the April 2014 armed standoff on the Virgin River between federal agents from his department and militia supporters of defiant rancher Cliven Bundy — the subject of a high-visibility trial in federal court in Las Vegas." According to the article, "Bundy's wife, Carol, said she was disappointed he didn't meet with her on his way to Gold Butte even though she has reached out to him through emails, certified letters and phone calls to his staff."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by U.S. News & World Report (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/30, Ritter, Sonner), the Hilton Head Island \(SC\) Packet (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), ABC News (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), Philly \(PA\) (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/29, RITTER, SONNER), the Greeneville \(TN\) Sun (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/30, Ritter Scott Sonner |, Ap), the St. Joseph \(MO\) News-Press (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Seattle \(WA\) Times (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/30, RITTER, SONNER), and the Daily Mail (7/30).

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (7/30, Rogers), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (7/30, Brean) and KSNV-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/30).

Decisions Made With Enormous Support Should Stand. In an op-ed for the Las Vegas Sun (7/30, Torres), Jocelyn Torres, the Nevada program director for the Conservation Lands Foundation, writes that "more than 90,000 people spoke up in support of Nevada's national monuments — Basin and Range and Gold Butte — during the public comment period opened as part of President Donald Trump's executive order reviewing certain national monument designated under the Antiquities Act." However, "the monuments' fate remains unknown despite tens of thousands speaking up in support along with Native American tribes; federal, state and local elected officials; businesses and tourism groups like the Latin Chamber of Commerce and Nevada Resort Association; scientists; the arts community and archaeological, conservation and recreation groups." She concludes that "as we face many unknowns, and await Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's final recommendation to President Trump on national monuments, one thing is certain: Our time would be better spent moving forward restoring and enjoying our national monument than rehashing decisions made with input from community members, elected officials, businesses, archaeologists, recreationists and conservationists."

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by the Pahrump \(NV\) Valley Times (7/28, Brean, Martin), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Sun (7/28, Gonzalez), and KVVU-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/31, Jacob).

By Helicopter And On Horseback, Zinke Reviews Monuments.

The AP (7/28, Lee) reports that "ranchers who want to scale back two national monuments in New Mexico competed for attention with the outdoor recreation industry as U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke conducted a series of private stakeholder meetings linked to a nationwide review of 27 monuments approved by past presidents." Zinke "skipped a heavily attended public forum about the future of the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument in southern New Mexico organized largely by monument supporters, amid a series of private meetings with ranchers, electric utility executives, irrigation district officials and some defenders of the monuments." The article says that Zinke's "tightly controlled visit, mostly away from the public's eye, is stirring concern among business owners — from fishing guides to local homebuilders — who say they increasingly depend on the flow of tourists and outdoor enthusiasts to the monuments."

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (7/29, Soular), the Santa Fe \(NM\) Reporter (7/30, Grubs), and KOB-TV Albuquerque \(NM\) Albuquerque, NM (7/29).

Interior Secretary Zinke Surveys Sabinoso Wilderness. The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/29, Oswald) reports that "at a June U.S. Senate committee hearing, Department of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and U.S. Sen. Martin Heinrich engaged in a testy exchange over a stalled deal that would provide public access to the federally designated Sabinoso Wilderness, 16,000 acres of spectacular canyon country in northeastern New Mexico 'landlocked' by surrounding private property." At the time, "Zinke wouldn't commit to accepting the particulars of a plan, first announced last year, for the non-profit Wilderness Land Trust to donate an adjacent former ranch to the federal government as an access point for hikers, horseback riders and hunters to enter the wilderness." But "after a horseback ride with Heinrich and Sen. Tom Udall, an elk-and-chicken fajita lunch overlooking the Sabinoso's Canyon Largo and conversations with a couple dozen hunting and wilderness advocates, Zinke said he has 'very favorable impressions' of the access plan, with 'fine points' and 'final details' to be worked out."

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (7/30, Oxford) and the Santa Fe New Mexican (7/29, Oxford).

Montana Refuge Opened To Ranchers Who Lost Grass To Fires.

The AP (7/29) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "opening the Charles M. Russell Wildlife Refuge to grazing for ranchers who lost rangeland in a large wildfire in eastern Montana." Refuge manager Paul Santavy "says the fire left some ranchers with no rangeland for cattle to graze." According to the article, "individual agreements will need to be negotiated, but refuge managers plan to allow ranchers to move cows onto the refuge and complete the paperwork later."

KECI-TV Missoula, MT (7/30, McDermott) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "We have a saying that Montana is one small town with really long roads, and as a neighbor in that small town, the Department is dedicated to providing disaster relief and resources where possible. When I talk about restoring trust between local communities and the federal government, and being a good neighbor, this is exactly what I mean. My staff and I heard from ranchers, equipment dealers, and other concerned citizens, and we all got to work. I applaud the quick work and flexibility of the team at the CMR for getting this done for the community."

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (7/29, Lutey) reports that Zinke said, "At the end of the day, the government belongs to the people. We're happy to do it."

Zinke Denies Threats In Calls.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/29, Oswald) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said Saturday that there was no threat in his calls to Alaska's two Republican U.S. senators last week after one of them broke ranks with the GOP on a health care vote." Zinke dismissed speculation in the media that the calls were "threatening." He said, "That's ridiculous. ... Quite frankly, it's laughable."

The Hill (7/30, Henry) reports that the President has "unleashed a new group of advocates in his failed push to convince the Senate to repeal ObamaCare: his Cabinet." Both Interior Secretary Zinke and Energy Secretary Perry were "used by Trump in the battle, highlighting the president's willingness to exert pressure in new ways on lawmakers opposing his agenda." According to the article, "Zinke's threats in a phone call to Alaska Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, in particular, led to rancor."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (7/28, Henry, Cama), the Independent \(UK\) (7/28, Mortimer), and the Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (7/30, Goldberg).

Why Americans Are Fighting Over A Gorgeous Monument Called Bears Ears.

The Washington Post (7/30, Fears) reports on the fight over the Bears Ears National Monument. Opponents of the designation "regard it as a federal intrusion in a state where the U.S. government owns more than 60 percent of the land." However, supporters point to the "valuable sites in Bears Ears, containing pottery, drawings, dwellings and spiritual gathering places."

Interior Dept. Publishes Its 12 American Made Accomplishments Since Agency Was Founded In 1849.

Breitbart (7/30, Starr) reports that the Interior Department "recently published a list of accomplishments by the federal agency since it was founded in March of 1849, titled 'Made In America: 12 things brought to you by the Interior Department.'"

Editorial: National Parks Need More Help Than This.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (7/29) editorializes that "and all 417 National Park Service units have maintenance needs," but national parks "would lose $400 million in funding in fiscal year 2018, under President Trump's proposed budget." The paper says that "if private groups are going to be relied on to provide 62.3 percent of the maintenance funding, as they are in this initial push," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "will need to find donors to give $7 billion toward the $11.3 billion in needs and $4.26 billion from the government." It concludes that "if Zinke wants to be seen as an advocate for the parks, he's got a lot more work to do."

Antiquities Act Of 1906: No Presidential License To Revoke National Monuments.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (7/30, Fein, Contributor), attorney Bruce Fein argues that "the text, spirit, and 111 year history of the Antiquities Act of 1906 militate against presidential power to revoke a national monument proclamation made by a predecessor president." He adds that "nothing in the text hints at presidential authority to revoke a national monument designation." Fein says that "if President Donald Trump or any successor desires the authority to revoke national monument designations, they should urge Congress to amend the Antiquities Act accordingly."

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the Arizona Republic (7/28, Gabriel), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/29), the Boston Globe (7/30, Abel), the Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (7/30, Boddie), the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (7/30, Hunter), and the New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (7/30, Chase).

Coal Rule Rollback Shortchanges Treasury, Lands And Economy.

In an op-ed for the Durango \(CO\) Herald (7/29, Brown), Todd Brown, a member of the Telluride Town Council, criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for halting a rule that would have "closed a loophole that would stop the exploitation of taxpayer-owned national public lands." According to Brown, "over the past 30 years, the government's undervaluation of coal mined on national public lands may have cost taxpayers upward of $30 billion in lost revenue." He argues that "the staying of this rule, along with the department's interest in development of public lands for extractive industries, puts our communities at risk." In conclusion Brown urges the Trump Administration "to heed local calls to examine our federal coal program and fix it once and for all."

Montana's Wildfires Are Part Of Growing National Emergency, Should Be Treated Like Other Natural Disasters.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (7/30) editorializes that "wildfires are a growing national emergency," but "the United States government continues to manage them, and fund them, as though they were an unforeseen, temporary inconvenience." The paper argues that "just as hurricanes and floods are considered disaster emergencies in some parts of the country, so too should wildfires that threaten neighborhoods and livelihoods be met with swift action from the nation's emergency response agencies."

Washington Is Dysfunctional. This Senate Rule Change Could Help Fix It..

Sen. Ron Johnson writes in a Washington Post (7/28, Johnson) op-ed that the Senate confirmed 50 of President Trump's 229 executive nominations as of July 22, which represents only 22 percent of those nominated. By comparison, at the same point in President Obama's first term, the Senate confirmed 53 percent of nominees. Johnson says, "This situation is clearly the result of a breakdown in the Senate." Rules allowing senators to use hours or days to debate nominations are being abused, Johnson argues. A "simple proposal" he offers is to "Change the rules of the Senate to limit debate on sub-Cabinet and lower-court nominees to two hours on the Senate floor." He suggests that Senate committees can vet nominees and provide a report to the full Senate, after which they can then vote.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Wyoming Reservation Readies For Solar Eclipse Tourists.

The AP (7/30) reports that "tribal officials on Wyoming's Wind River Reservation are preparing for thousands of visitors looking for a prime spot to view next month's solar eclipse." According to the article, "more than 10,000 people are expected to come to Fremont County and the reservation, whose Crowheart community is on the center line of the Aug. 21 eclipse." Shoshone and Arapahoe Fish and Game director Art Lawson "says he will have three game wardens on patrol, plus officers brought in from Montana by the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

Bureau Of Land Management

Federal Ranger To Testify In San Francisco Murder Trial.

The AP (7/28, Thanawala) reports that “a federal agency has agreed to allow a ranger to testify at a trial over a fatal San Francisco shooting with the ranger’s gun that became a flashpoint in the national immigration debate, a judge in San Francisco said Friday.” According to the article, “the scope of the ranger’s testimony will be determined by the judge who presides over Juan Francisco Lopez Sanchez’s trial in the 2015 shooting of Kate Steinle, Judge Richard Loftus said.” Federal officials “had previously resisted efforts” to have Bureau of Land Management ranger John Woychowski “testify about his stolen gun, but Loftus said the parties reached an agreement to produce the ranger as a witness.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/30, Thanawala), Philly \(PA\) (7/28, Thanawala), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/28, Sudhin Thanawala |, Ap), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/28, Thanawala), and the Daily Mail (7/28).

Additional coverage was provided by the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/28, Ho) and KQED-FM San Francisco \(CA\) San Francisco (7/28, Emslie).

Court To Decide Fate Of Federal Fracking Authority.

E&E Publishing (7/28) reported the 10th US Circuit Court of Appeals heard oral arguments in the case determining if the federal government has the authority to regulate hydraulic fracturing, but the court may never issue an opinion on the matter. The Trump Administration is rolling back the rule and wants to freeze the case during the process. All three judges on the panel were skeptical about freezing the case indefinitely while the BLM conducts a new rule-making process to repeal the regulation. The BLM maintains that the lower court’s ruling that the federal government lacks authority to regulate fracking is incorrect, but any decision would not be efficient and would interfere with the new rule-making process.

Utah Governor: Rethink Lease Sites.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/29, Webb) reports that Utah Gov. Gary Herbert is asking the Bureau of Land Management “to rethink its plans to offer oil and gas leases near Dinosaur National Monument due to potential disturbances that would result for visitors there.” In a letter submitted to the BLM this week, said the state “wishes to ensure leasing of these parcels does not impact visual resources or cause light or sound disturbances” within the monument. The letter “doesn’t outright call for the agency not to offer the leases in December, but appears to suggest that as a possibility.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/28, Maffly).

Energy Company Applies To Mine 4.1M Tons Of Coal In Colorado.

The AP (7/28) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “has to decide if it will allow an energy company to mine up to 4.1 million more tons of coal in northwest Colorado.” Peabody Energy has “applied to lease 1 more square mile (2.6 square kilometers) of federal coal west of Steamboat Springs as part of an ongoing mining operation.” The BLM “says it will make the decision under the President Donald Trump administration’s energy policies.”

Big Federal Wild Horse Roundup Planned In Northeast Nevada.

The AP (7/28) reports that “federal officials are planning the biggest roundup in years of horses roaming public rangeland in northeast Nevada.” The Bureau of Land Management is “seeking public comments for an environmental assessment of the removal of more than 6,700 horses from area between Wells and Ely.” The BLM “estimates the current wild horse population in the Antelope and Triple B wild horse complexes at about 7,700, not including foals born this year.”

Las Vegas Water Pipeline Fight To Go Before Federal Judge.

The AP (7/29, Ritter) reports that “a decades-long fight over a plan to pump water from arid and sparsely populated valleys along Nevada’s eastern edge and pipe it to thirsty Las Vegas is about to get its first hearing before a federal judge.” According to the article, “environmental groups and American Indian tribes are expected to tell U.S. District Judge Andrew Gordon in Las Vegas on Monday that a proposed 263-mile (423-kilometer) north-to-south water pipeline just west of the Nevada-Utah state line amounts to a city water grab supported by incomplete and inadequate federal environmental studies.” Southern Nevada Water Authority attorneys are “expected to argue that the state’s largest metropolitan area and economic hub has to have water, and that the U.S. Bureau of Land Management properly granted rights of way for the pipeline to cross federal lands in 2012.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/30, Brean).

U.S. Rep. Tom Emmer Pushes To Restore Mineral Rights.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (7/29, Rao) reports that Rep. Tom Emmer is “pushing legislation that would ban the U.S. Forest Service from withdrawing mining rights in Minnesota without congressional approval.” According to the article, “the move comes in response to the Obama administration’s 11th-hour decision not to renew mining leases for Twin Metals in northeastern Minnesota.” Before the House Natural Resources Committee on Thursday, Emmer testified “that the legislation simply allows people to exercise their mineral rights, and that all projects are still subject to stringent state and federal reviews and requirements.”

The Virginia \(MN\) Mesabi Daily Tribune (7/29) editorializes that the White House, “with an actual direction given to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, could end this all where it stands.” It says that “if that doesn’t happen, Congress can simply pass Emmer’s bill along through the House and Senate and straight to President Donald Trump’s desk.” But “if neither of those happen, the Range has only the comment period and Secretary Zinke left to lobby against moving forward on the study period and 20-year withdrawal.”

Saving Wild Horses Requires Culling The Herd.

In an op-ed for the Denver Post (7/28, Kafer), Krista Kafer, “a professor, public policy analyst and writer,” supports “congressional efforts to allow the slaughter of horses,” but Kafer argues that current legislation does not to go “far enough.” Kafer asserts that “the only humane solution to this unsustainable situation is to cull the herd.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Push For Arctic Energy Development Met With Criticism.

U.S. News & World Report (7/28, Huang) reports that “Alaskan lawmakers continue to push for energy development in the Arctic region, citing economic and national security incentives and highlighting regulatory safeguards for the environment.” However, “critics say drilling can be done in less environmentally perilous areas while still boosting the local and national economies.” Walter Cruickshank, deputy director of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, told an audience at the Center for Strategic and International Studies “that in the near future, any oil and gas developments are going to take place in relatively shallow waters and closer to existing infrastructure.” He said, “Longer term, it’s hard to say what the investment will be, but there won’t be any if there aren’t leases made available for folks.”

Oil Group Fights Enviros’ Challenge To Offshore Drilling Order.

Law360 (7/28, Phillis) reported that the API asked an Alaska federal court to dismiss a complaint filed by environmental organizations challenging President Trump’s executive order looking to review drilling in the Arctic and Atlantic, arguing it was brought in the wrong court.

Our Views: Assess Oil Potential Of East Coast Waters.

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (7/30) urges President Trump “to push for exploration of oil and gas deposits off the East Coast of the United States.” The paper emphasizes that “as the U.S. Interior Department said, assessments of whether there is an offshore mineral bonanza are out of date.” It adds that “dramatic improvements in technology make it vital that a more comprehensive assessment of energy potential be made off the Atlantic coast.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Bill Would End Trinity River Fish Disease Preventive Flows, County Water Right.

The Eureka \(CA\) Times Standard (7/28, Houston) reports that “local tribal and government officials say a bill currently under U.S. Senate review would virtually end Trinity River dam water releases used to prevent fish kills and do away with Humboldt County’s 60-year right to river water in favor of providing more water to Central Valley irrigators.” Rep. Jared Huffman said the bill is “but one of several attempts over the years by Central Valley water contractors and suppliers, namely the Fresno-based Westlands Water District, to redirect more Trinity River water for their own interests.”

Drag Boat Competitions Approved At East Park Reservoir.

The Red Bluff \(CA\) Daily News (7/29) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation “approved drag boat exhibitions and competitions at East Park Reservoir in Colusa County, California for up to five years.” The article says that “the inaugural event, hosted by the California Hot Boat Association, is scheduled for Sept. 9-10 at Serenity Cove on the reservoir’s east side.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

12 Years After Gulf Oil Platform Destroyed, Feds Start Investigating Environmental Damage.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (7/28) reports that “twelve years after Hurricane Ivan destroyed a Taylor Energy Co. platform in the Gulf of Mexico, the federal government has finally started investigating how oil and gas that is still leaking from its wells damages natural resources.” The flow of oil, “if left unchecked, could continue for 100 years or more,” says the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement. Last Thursday July 27, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration “confirmed the investigation.” Keeley Belva, a spokeswoman for the oceanic agency, said, “NOAA is a trustee for the Taylor Energy Incident in Louisiana, and we are in the early stages of a Natural Resource Damage Assessment process.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

GOP Pushes Bill About Gray Wolf.

The Daily Caller (7/28, Pearce) reports that the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works “passed a bill Wednesday that would remove federal protections for gray wolf populations in Wyoming and the Great Lakes states.” The “HELP for Wildlife Act” reinstates 2011 and 2012 Fish and Wildlife Service “final rules that remove federal protections for the wolf in Wyoming and delist the Great Lakes states gray wolves from the Endangered Species List.” The bill also “bars judicial review of the final rules, leaving the FWS in control of any future federal protections.”

Wildfire Won't Ruin Hunting Seasons At Okefenokee Refuge.

The AP (7/29) reports that “a recent wildfire that burned vast acreage near the Georgia-Florida state line hasn't stopped plans for hunting seasons to open in the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “said in a news release that small game hunting for quail, rabbits and squirrels will open Aug. 15.” Also, “seasons for deer, feral hogs and turkeys will open between September and March.”

States Taking Over Grizzly Management Monday.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (7/30, Wright) reports that “state officials are excited about taking more responsibility for the Yellowstone ecosystem grizzly bears, but they say management will largely stay the same after delisting takes effect Monday.” The animals will “no longer be listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act and state wildlife agencies in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho will assume more authority over the bears, with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service taking a backseat.” Officials from Montana and Wyoming “said that while the change will erase a level of bureaucracy in their decision making, their focus will still be on keeping the population in good shape.”

Delisting Would Put Panthers In Peril.

In an op-ed for the Bradenton \(FL\) Times (7/30, Compton), Glenn Compton, the Chairman of Manasota 88, writes that delisting the Florida panther “would be disastrous for the panther.” Compton argues that “the Florida panther has not recovered in numbers to ensure its long-term viability as a species.”

Connelly: Sage-grouse Aren't Pheasants, And Captive Rearing Is Doomed To Fail.

In an op-ed for the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (7/28, Connelly), Dr. Jack Connelly, a retired state wildlife agency research biologist, questions Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's support of “Wyoming's recent decision to raise sage-grouse in captivity as a ‘conservation’ measure.” He notes that scientific research has “shared at least two things in common: All focused on the importance of habitat conservation and restoration, and none suggested captive rearing of sage grouse as a viable management tool for restoring or maintaining populations.” Connelly urges the state "to reconsider it at the next legislative session" and hopes "that the idea does not catch on in other states."

National Park Service

Yellowstone National Park To Discipline Workers For Sexual Misconduct.

The AP (7/28, Brown) reports Yellowstone National Park will discipline as many as 10 of its maintenance workers "after an investigation found female employees were subjected to sexual harassment and other problems." The park and the Department of Interior's Office of Inspector General "launched its investigation last year, after a park employee complained to a local magazine and members of Congress that a pervasive 'men's club' environment had encouraged the exploitation and abuse of female workers." Additional steps to be taken at the park will include "instituting a new policy intended to curb the misuse of alcohol by employees after hours at remote work locations."

Acadia Receives $192K For Trail Maintenance.

The AP (7/30) reports that Acadia National Park "says it will use a $192K competitive federal grant to fix up its trails." Rep. Chellie Pingree "said the grant was matched by more than $259,000 raised by the group Friends of Acadia." The money will "go toward deferred trail maintenance."

National Park In Ohio To Get Nearly $1.5M In Federal Funds.

The AP (7/30) reports that "officials say Cuyahoga Valley National Park in northeast Ohio is receiving nearly $1.5 million in federal funding for its new visitor center." The federal grant, which was announced last week, is "part of $50 million being given to 42 parks in 29 states for improvements."

Grand Teton Park To Receive $2M For Jenny Lake Renovations.

The AP (7/30) reports that Grand Teton National Park will "receive $2 million to complete renovations around its feature attraction, Jenny Lake." According to the article, "about $757,000 of that money is coming from the National Park Service's Centennial Challenge Program," and "the rest, $1.26 million, will come from the Grand Teton National Park Foundation."

Officials At Mammoth Cave To Make Trail More Accessible.

The AP (7/29) reports that "officials at Mammoth Cave National Park are working to make a trail more accessible to people with disabilities." The park is "building half-mile, 8-foot wide concrete walkway along the park's Echo River Springs Trail." The upgrades will "include four exhibits with tactile features for people who are visually impaired along with an improved parking lot and bathroom."

Grand Teton Park Plans For Eclipse Crowd.

The AP (7/29) reports that Grand Teton National Park will "alter some road traffic and parking in order to accommodate an expected influx of people looking to view the total solar eclipse on Aug. 21." According to the article, "fees will be waved at the Granite Canyon, Moose and Moran entrance gates to ease the flow of traffic." The park has "designated five viewing areas — along the road to Kelly, the Gros Ventre Campground, the Craig Thomas Discovery and Visitor Center in Moose, Colter Bay and Jackson Lake Lodge."

Dark Sky Designation Puts Joshua Tree National Park In A New Light.

The Los Angeles Times (7/29, Sahagun) reports that Joshua Tree National Park has "been certified as the 10th International Dark Sky Park in the U.S. National Park system." The announcement was celebrated last Wednesday.

After Wildfire, Gatlinburg Is Getting Back On Its Feet.

The AP (7/29, Ahillen) reports the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is bouncing back after a Nov. 28 blaze. According to the article, "new growth is well underway through most of the burn areas." Also, "all but four of the 17 trails closed within the park in the fire's aftermath have been reopened."

National Park Service Releases Reconstruction Era Theme Study.

The Kingstree \(SC\) News (7/28) reports that the National Park Service has “published a theme study looking at nationally significant historic properties of the post-Civil War Reconstruction Era.” The National Historic Landmarks theme study “identifies noteworthy resources related to the Era of Reconstruction that help tell the American story.” Dr. Joy Beasley, National Park Service Acting Associate Director for Cultural Resources, Partnerships and Science, said, “Discovering the lesser known stories of the Reconstruction Era and identifying places and people who impacted our collective American story is the result of two years of dedicated work by historians, field practitioners, and subject matter experts. This theme study continues to build upon our shared narrative as Americans; knowing who we are, where we came from, and understanding the events, activities, and places that shape us citizens today is at the heart of the National Park Service mission.”

Savannah Native Appointed National Park Service Chief Historian.

The Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (7/28) reports that Turkiya L. Lowe has been appointed the chief historian of the National Park Service. She most “recently served as Southeast Region chief historian and chief for the Southeast Region’s Cultural Resource Research and Science Branch where she oversaw the region-wide History and Cultural Anthropology Programs for 67 (now 70) National Parks within nine states, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.”

Eradicating All Mountain Goats At Olympic National Park Isn’t Wise.

In his column for the Victorville \(CA\) Daily Press (7/29, Matthews), Jim Matthews criticizes the document released by the National Park Service “to control the growing, introduced population on mountain goats in Olympic National Park in Washington.” He argues against the preferred NPS solution “to eradicate the goats from the park, using live capture initially and then lethal methods until they are gone.” Instead, Matthews proposes that “a hunting program on Olympic National Park would solve both the overpopulation problem and make the goats wary of humans, but it will still allow visitors to see a majestic Northwest native in the park.”

Senior Pass Price Hike Not As Unreasonable As It Seems.

In an editorial, the Roseburg \(OR\) News-Review (7/30) observes that people are rushing to lifetime senior passes for national parks and federal recreational areas before prices go up on Aug. 28. But it argues that “$80 isn’t really an unreasonable price for a lifetime pass to more than 2,000 sites — all of those run by the National Park Service, plus hundreds run by other federal agencies.” It says that “eighty dollars just feels like a lot the first time you hear about the increase, because the price jump for the lifetime pass is so dramatic.” The paper concludes: “In fact, it’s an increase that’s long past due. Those extra 70 bucks will go to a good cause. Those national parks and other recreation areas we’re all so eager to visit will reap the benefits.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Amata Introduces Assistant Secretary Of Insular Affairs Nominee.

Samoa News (7/21) reports that Congresswoman Aumua Amata, “introduced President Trump’s nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of Insular Areas, Doug Domenech this morning in the Senate Energy & Natural Resources Committee hearing room.” Amata told Senate panel, “My home district of American Samoa is an insular area, and I can think of no one I would like to see in the position more than Doug Domenech. His knowledge and experience of the region and the mission of the office is unparalleled, and I know that his leadership will be welcomed as we seek to craft real solutions for the constituents we serve. In fact, I have had the pleasure to see him in action, and know that he will hit the ground running.”

American Samoa Gets $94,906 From Feds.

Marianas Variety (7/25) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula “made available $94,906 for natural and cultural resource protection in American Samoa.” Pula said, “We are pleased to support Gov. Lolo Moliga and the Department of Marine and Wildlife Resources team in their efforts to preserve natural ecosystems vital to American Samoa’s environment and the people’s livelihood. American Samoa’s natural resources are highly vulnerable to the impacts of land-based pollution, illegal near-shore fishing and changes in climate for which this funding is greatly needed.”

Trump Administration Allegedly Threatens Alaskan Senators With Retribution After Health Care Vote.

Snopes (7/27, Garcia) reports the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee “announced on 27 July 2017 that it would postpone a vote on nominees” to both the Department of the Interior and the Department of Energy “until a date and time to be determined.” The article notes that “three nominees to the Department of the Interior — Brenda Burman for commissioner of reclamation; Susan Combs for assistant secretary for policy, management and budget; and Doug Domenech for assistant secretary for insular affairs — were reportedly slated for consideration at that meeting.”

Top National News

As He Mulls Next Steps, Trump Urges Senate To Tackle ACA Repeal Again.

HHS Secretary Price and other Administration representatives appeared on the Sunday morning political talk shows to discuss their next steps on repealing and replacing the Affordable Care Act, but a main focus of the limited coverage of the topic was on President Trump’s continued Twitter cajoling of Republicans on Capitol Hill to act. Also getting attention is the President’s threat to end payments to insurers under the ACA as part of his effort to “let Obamacare implode.”

ABC World News Tonight (7/30, story 4, 2:05, Wright) reported, “The President is making it clear [that] he’s not ready to accept defeat on healthcare reform. ... But the Republicans who voted against the bill have no regrets. Maine’s Susan Collins says she got a round of applause at the airport when she landed in Bangor.” Collins: “It was just amazing. I’ve never had that happen in the 20 years that I’ve been privileged to serve in the Senate.” Wright: “President Trump has repeatedly said the only alternative to a repeal is to let Obamacare fail. ... He repeated that Friday, after the Senate’s vote.” Trump: “You know, I said from the beginning, let Obamacare implode. And then do it. I turned out to be right. Let Obamacare implode.” On the CBS Weekend News (7/30, story 3, 1:25, Quijano), Errol Barnett reported, “With the implosion of Republican efforts to repeal Obamacare last week, President Trump’s health secretary emphasized some things still need to be done. ... But Democrats want Republicans to come to the negotiating table and find ways to stabilize the existing framework.”

Reuters (7/30, Cornwell) reports in a brief item that “for the second day running,” the President “tweeted his impatience with Congress’ inability to accomplish its seven-year goal of replacing the Affordable Care Act.” Trump tweeted, “Don’t give up Republican Senators, the World is watching: Repeal & Replace...and go to 51 votes (nuke option), get Cross State Lines & more.” The Los Angeles Times (7/30, King) reports that Trump “urged GOP senators to try again,” even though Senate Majority Leader McConnell “said last week it was time to move on to other matters.” The New York Post (7/30, Li) also briefly reports on Trump’s tweet.

Axios (7/30, Swan, Nather) writes that Trump “is spoiling for war against the health insurance industry. ... On Twitter, the President threatened to end so-called ‘bailouts’ for health insurance companies – referring to payments the government makes to insurers so they can make insurance less costly for low-income people (as they’re required to do).” While “it may sound like good politics for a populist Republican president” to do so, “the potential consequences are alarming. If Trump follows through on his Twitter-threat, insurers would dramatically raise prices – shredding the final layers of duct tape holding together the ACA insurance markets.”

The Washington Examiner (7/30, Lim) writes that Trump’s “repeated calls for Senate Republicans to ram through healthcare reform using the nuclear option conflict with his earlier aversion to the controversial parliamentary procedure.” In November 2013, Trump tweeted, “Thomas Jefferson wrote the Senate filibuster rule. Harry Reid & Obama killed it yesterday. Rule was in effect for over 200 years.”

John Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (7/30, story 6, 0:45, Quijano), “If the President keeps attacking Republicans, that didn’t work in getting healthcare passed, and so it’s difficult to see how more abuse from the President will help with the Republicans, in part because of his approval ratings, which are quite low.”

The AP (7/30, Yen) reports, “The White House stepped up demands Sunday for revived congressional efforts on health care and suggested senators cancel their entire summer break, if needed, to pass legislation after failed votes last week.” Aides said the President “is prepared in the coming days to end required payments to insurers under the Affordable Care Act as part of a bid to let ‘Obamacare implode’ and force the Senate to act.” The Washington Times (7/30, Howell) says that “the Trump administration is on the warpath.”

USA Today (7/30, Jackson) reports that Price “said during Sunday show interviews that the administration would look at current regulations they believe drive up health care costs, including the mandate that requires people to buy health insurance.” Bloomberg News (7/29, Mohsin) reports that Price said that “‘no decision’s been made’ on whether to continue key Affordable Care Act subsidies to health-insurance companies, but that the administration’s job is ‘to follow the law of the land.’” The Washington Times (7/30, Sherfinski) reports that on ABC’s This Week, Price said, “All things are on the table to try to help patients. What we’re trying to do is to make it so we have a healthcare system that responds to the needs of the American people.”

Price said on NBC’s Meet The Press (7/30, Todd), “I think what the President has explained and punctuates is his seriousness about this issue and his passion for turning the healthcare system in a direction that puts patients first, not government and not insurance companies.” On ABC’s This Week (7/30, Raddatz), Price said he believed the President’s sentiment of letting Obamacare implode and then attempting to negotiate underlies “the seriousness that he understands the American people dealing with the current situation.”

The Washington Times (7/30, Sherfinski) reports that Kellyanne Conway said Sunday that the President “will decide this week whether to cut off cost-sharing payments that go to insurance companies” under the ACA. Politico (7/30, Klimas) reports that Conway said on Fox News Sunday, “He’s going to make that decision this week, and that’s a decision that only he can make.” Conway also said on Fox News Sunday (7/30, Wallace), “The President will not accept those who said it’s ‘time to move on.’ He wants to help the millions of Americans who have suffered with no coverage.”

Politico (7/30, Klimas) reports that OMB Director Mulvaney said on CNN’s State Of The Union that “the Senate should not vote on anything else until it’s voted again on repealing Obamacare.” Mulvaney said, “In the White House’s view, they can’t move on in the Senate. You can’t promise folks you’re going to do something for seven years, and then not do it.”

The Hill (7/30, Henry) reports that the President has “unleashed a new group of advocates in his failed push to convince the Senate to repeal ObamaCare: his Cabinet.” Both Energy Secretary Perry and Interior Secretary Zinke were “used by Trump in the battle, highlighting the president’s willingness to exert pressure in new ways on lawmakers opposing his agenda.” Perry wrote an op-ed in the Cleveland Plain Dealer that did not mention his agency, which “raised eyebrows among good government groups and Democrats.” And “Zinke’s threats in a phone call to Alaska Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, in particular, led to rancor.”

Collins Criticizes Proposed Cuts In Payments To Insurers. The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Burton) reports that Collins said Sunday that President Trump’s threatened cuts in payments to insurers would be “detrimental” to the poor. She said on CNN’s State Of The Union, “They’re paid to the insurance companies, but the people that they benefit are people who make between 100% and 250% of the poverty rate. So we’re talking about low-income Americans who would be devastated if those payments were cut off.” Politico (7/30, Klimas) reports that Collins said that she is “‘troubled’ by the uncertainty those statements are creating, including destabilization of insurance markets.”

Collins said on NBC’s Meet The Press (7/30, Todd), “I don’t accept the premise that we should not proceed to reform the law.” She added that what needs to be done is “to go through the normal process, identify the problems, have hearings, hear from experts, hear from all the stakeholders, and produce a series of bills to fix the real flaws in the Affordable Care Act.”

Ducey Gave McCain Okay To Vote For Senate Bill. The Arizona Republic (7/30, Nowicki, Sanchez) reports that during the debate over Senate repeal measures, Sen. John McCain “repeatedly invoked the name of Gov. Doug Ducey, saying he wanted to ensure any new law didn’t punish their home state of Arizona. ... But despite eventually getting the go-ahead from Ducey,” McCain voted against the final measure. A Republican aide “familiar with conversations between the governor and the senators told The Arizona Republic the governor ‘was OK with this moving forward if it meant it was going to be a vehicle for a better bill.’”

Politico Magazine (7/30, Shenon) looks back at McCain’s near-defection from the GOP in 2001 under encouragement from then-Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, writing that Daschle and other Democrats are now “questioning whether the party should mount a new campaign to lure McCain and other wavering Republican senators away from the GOP.”

Centrist “Problem Solvers Caucus” Working On ACA Reform In House. Politico (7/30, Caygle, Demko) reports, “A coalition of roughly 40 House Republicans and Democrats plan to unveil a slate of Obamacare fixes Monday they hope will gain traction after the Senate’s effort to repeal the law imploded.” The “Problem Solvers caucus,” headed by Reps. Josh Gottheimer (D-NJ) and Tom Reed (R-NY), “is fronting the effort to stabilize the ACA markets ... Their plan focuses on immediately stabilizing the insurance market and then pushing for Obamacare changes that have received bipartisan backing in the past."

Progressives See Lessons For Future Single-Payer Push In GOP Defeat. The Washington Post (7/30, Weigel) reports that "progressive Democrats who watched Republicans fail to unwind the Affordable Care Act are thinking harder about passing major expansions" of healthcare coverage. For many "younger activists and legislators, the push to undo the ACA with just 51 Senate votes is less a cautionary tale than a model of how to bring about universal coverage." While Democratic leaders have "not embraced" the effort, for many of them, the GOP's "near miss on repeal demonstrated boldness from which a future left-wing majority could learn." Referring to a single-payer plan, freshman Rep. Ro Khanna (D-CA) said, "When we do have a Democratic president, and when we do have a Democratic majority, I'd support getting this through with 51 votes in the Senate."

Reuters Poll: Most Want ACA Kept Or Modified; Majority Says Congress Should Move On. Reuters (7/29, Kahn, Erman) reports that a new Reuters/Ipsos poll finds that 64 percent of Americans want "to either keep or modify the Affordable Care Act," up from 54 percent in January, "and a majority of Americans want Congress to turn its attention to other priorities."

Dionne: Nuns Spoke Out Against Senate Measures. In his Washington Post (7/30) column, E.J. Dionne spotlights Roman Catholic nuns who organized in opposition to the GOP legislation, calling "the Senate GOP's core proposal 'the most harmful legislation for American families in our lifetimes.' ... In speaking out as they did, the socially minded nuns – who do the work of justice and mercy every day in hospitals, clinics, homeless shelters and schools – made clear that depriving millions of Americans of health coverage truly is a moral outrage."

Trump Replaces Priebus With Kelly As Chief Of Staff.

President Trump announced Friday that he has replaced White House Chief of Staff Priebus with Homeland Security Secretary Kelly. Media coverage, which included 12 minutes on the network newscasts, was also extensive in print and online. The tone of the reporting on the staffing shakeup was mixed, with most analyses suggesting the change shows the strength of new White House communications Anthony Scaramucci in an Administration marred by turmoil, though conservative news outlets praised Trump for firing Priebus for his connections to the Republican Party establishment.

In the lead CBS Evening News (7/28, lead story, 2:55, Mason) segment, Major Garrett reported that the President "characteristically...broke the news on Twitter." In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (7/28, A1, Ballhaus, Nicholas) reports Trump in two tweets announced, "I am pleased to inform you that I have just named General/Secretary John F Kelly as White House Chief of Staff. He is a Great American...and a Great Leader. John has also done a spectacular job at Homeland Security. He has been a true star of my Administration." The President later added, "I would like to thank Reince Priebus for his service and dedication to his country. We accomplished a lot together and I am proud of him!" The AP (7/28, Lemire, Colvin) reports Trump also told reporters, "Reince is a good man. John Kelly will do a fantastic job."

The New York Times (7/28, A1, Baker, Haberman) in a front-page article reports "Priebus, the White House chief of staff who failed to impose order on a chaos-wracked West Wing, was pushed out on Friday after a stormy six-month tenure." The Times describes "Priebus's ouster [as] the latest convulsion in a White House that has been whipsawed by feuds and political setbacks in recent days" and says the President "became convinced that Mr. Priebus was not strong enough to run the White House operation and that he needed a general to take charge." In contrast, according to the Times, "Mr. Kelly, who has demonstrated strong leadership at the Department of Homeland Security, had become a favorite of Mr. Trump's." The Times adds that while "always seeming to be on the edge of ouster, Mr. Priebus saw his fate finally sealed a week ago when Mr. Trump hired Mr. Scaramucci, an edgy Wall Street financier, over the chief of staff's objections."

Bloomberg News (7/28, Olorunnipa, Talev) reports "the ouster of Reince Priebus, who said he delivered his resignation on Thursday, caps a week of intensified infighting at the White House in which he was embroiled in a public feud with...Scaramucci. It also comes as the administration suffered two stinging defeats in Congress."

According to Reuters (7/28, Holland, Rampton), "Priebus' 189-day tenure was the shortest in modern history for a White House chief of staff." Reuters reports that Priebus "had hoped to stay on at least a year but struggled to manage his unpredictable boss and was unable to get a handle on conflicting factions in the White House who have frequently squabbled." In the lead NBC Nightly News (7/28, lead story, 2:30, Holt) segment, Kristen Welker reported "a source close to Priebus says he privately offered his resignation" on Thursday after Scaramucci "launched a profanity-laced tirade against him in the New Yorker," but "sources inside the White House say the President has been frustrated with Priebus' perceived lack of leadership for months and having put him in charge of healthcare, last night's defeat was the final straw."

The Hill (7/28, Manchester) says that Priebus' dismissal has also "drawn new attention to a past tweet criticizing former President Barack Obama for going through a number of chiefs of staff." The Hill reports that in 2012, Trump said, "3 Chief of Staffs in less than 3 years of being President: Part of the reason why @BarackObama can't manage to pass his agenda." The CBS Evening News (7/28, story 2, 1:35, Mason) stated that "if you're keeping score, turmoil in the Trump Administration over the past six months has seen the ouster of national security adviser Michael Flynn, FBI Director James Comey, communications director Mike Dubke, press secretary Sean Spicer, and now...Priebus."

Nonetheless, the Washington Post (7/28, Rucker, Phillip, Costa, Parker) suggests the "major shake-up [is] designed to bring order and military precision to a West Wing beset for six straight months by chaos, infighting and few tangible accomplishments." The Post says "Kelly's hiring is expected to usher in potentially sweeping structural changes to the turbulent operation and perhaps the departures of some remaining Priebus allies. Kelly intends to bring some semblance of traditional discipline to the West Wing, where warring advisers have been able to circumvent the chief of staff and report directly to the president and sidestep the policy process, according to people with knowledge of his plans." An informal White House adviser said, "I think any observer...could...realize the White House is failing. ... And when the White House is failing, you can't replace the president."

In the lead ABC World News Tonight (7/28, lead story, 3:40, Muir) segment, chief White House correspondent Jonathan Karl also predicted "a purge of RNC veterans, Republican National Committee veterans, in the White House. The people that Priebus had brought in will be leaving, leaving very soon. Many of them today." The Hill (7/28, Fabian, Kamisar) says "speculation is [also] swirling about the future of [White House Chief Strategist] Bannon and other top aides as Trump shakes up his team."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (7/28, Phillips) contends that the President "with every staff move...seems to be moving ever further away from the Republican establishment and building a much more insular team that fits his narrow worldview. Nowhere is this more evident than in the Priebus-Kelly switch." The Post adds "it's not much of an overstatement to say that Priebus, along with Vice President Pence, was Trump's connection to Capitol Hill insiders" and suggests Trump's dismissal of Priebus and Spicer indicates he is done offering "olive branches" to the GOP establishment.

Meanwhile, Politico (7/28, Palmeri, Dawsey, Isenstadt) reports White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "declined to directly answer whether Priebus or Trump made the decision for Priebus to go." She told reporters, "We all serve at the pleasure of the president. The conversations about this started with the president and Reince about two weeks ago." The Washington Times (7/28, Boyer) reports Sanders also praised Kelly, saying, "He has helped seal the border and reduced illegal immigration by 70 percent." She added, "He is respected by everyone, especially the people at the Department of Homeland Security. The entire administration loves him and no one is comparable."

Politico (7/28, Lima) reports Kelly in a statement said he was "honored to be asked to serve as the Chief of Staff." Kelly said, "I have been fortunate to have served my country for more than 45 years – first as a Marine and then as the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security." He added, "To the tremendous men and women of DHS, I thank you for the opportunity to serve as your Secretary. When I left the Marines, I never thought I would find as committed, as professional, as patriotic a group of individuals. I was wrong. You accomplish great things everyday defending our nation and I know your exceptional work will continue."

The Hill (7/28, Byrnes) reports Priebus issued a statement Friday saying that his tenure as chief of staff "has been one of the greatest honors of my life to serve this President and our country. I want to thank the President for giving me this very special opportunity." He added, "I will continue to serve as a strong supporter of the President's agenda and policies. I can't think of a better person than General John Kelly to succeed me and I wish him God's blessings and great success."

In an interview with Wolf Blitzer of CNN's Situation Room (7/28, 7:05 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Priebus said he would not comment on what Blitzer described as Trump's "bitter accusations against you, specifically the leaking." Priebus called the allegation "ridiculous," but confirmed that he believes "there is leaking inside the White House." He said, "I think that Gen. Kelly should see if he could get to the bottom of it and figure it out. But obviously unnamed sources are something that's been problematic and I wish him well, and I'm going to try to help him out. But obviously that's going to be on his plate and I hope he can get to the bottom of it." Priebus declined to say whether he believes the FBI should get involved in the investigation. In the CNN (7/28, Diaz) interview, Priebus also asserted, "Look, the President wanted to go a different direction. I support him in that." He continued, "General Kelly is a brilliant pick. ... We'll be working on a transition. It's not like it's a situation where there's a lot of ill feelings. I think this is good for the President."

Breitbart (7/28, Spiering) lauds the decision. Breitbart reports "Kelly earned the respect of the president as the head of his Department of Homeland Security (DHS), as the pair shared a deep respect for the rule of law and order" and says "Trump's decision signals that he wants more gravitas and discipline in his chaotic White House, relying on a retired Marine General to take the place of Priebus – who sometimes struggled to earn the respect of the president's staff." Politico (7/28, Bender, Hesson, Beasley) reports "Kelly's aides say" that he and the President have become "exceptionally close during the months he has served as the public face and chief defender of Trump's immigration policies."

The New York Times (7/28, Nixon, Shear) profiles "the square-jawed Mr. Kelly, the first general to hold the chief of staff position since Alexander M. Haig during the Nixon administration," and says he "will be an imposing and strait-laced figure in a West Wing filled with constantly warring aides and advisers, most of whom came to Washington with virtually no experience in federal government before Mr. Trump's victory last year." According to the Times, "The selection of Mr. Kelly was quickly praised by both Republicans and Democrats, who expressed hope that he would bring a swift end to the distracting feuds among the president's staff."

However, in a Daily Caller (7/28, Pfeiffer) article titled on the homepage "Trump Rinses Hands Of Priebus," the piece acknowledges that "Kelly, who has little political experience, will be taking on a job historically suited for Washington insiders." In the second NBC Nightly News (7/28, story 2, 1:20, Holt) segment, political director and moderator of "Meet the Press" Chuck Todd asserted that "of everybody in the President's orbit... Kelly was probably the best candidate he could have picked to be chief of staff, but he can only be successful if, number one, the President gives him some authority, at least on staffing, and number two, if there is an acknowledgment of where things get started and where they end." Todd said, "I imagine that somebody who has worn the uniform is going to be harder to end-run than" Priebus, but "ultimately it's about – what authority does this President give his new chief of staff?"

Pence Congratulates Kelly On Appointment, Thanks Priebus For Service. The Hill (7/28, Eberhardt) reports Vice President Pence on Friday "congratulated incoming White House Chief of Staff John Kelly on his appointment, moments after President Trump announced via Twitter that he would replace Reince Priebus with Kelly." Pence tweeted, "Congratulations to my friend General/Secretary John Kelly for being named @WhiteHouse Chief of Staff. I know you will do a great job! #MAGA." Pence added, "Well said, Mr. President. Grateful to Reince for his friendship and service to America. He's been a huge part of our success!"

Conway: For White House Staff To Succeed, Recognize That Trump Is "Your Superior." The Hill (7/28, Manchester) reports senior counselor Kellyanne Conway in Fox News interview on Friday "offered advice to her colleagues on Friday following a major staff shakeup: Don't treat President Trump like a peer." Conway "recalled a meeting with Trump in August when she was tapped as his campaign manager and told him she'd 'never' address him by his first name and said 'I don't consider myself your peer.'" According to Conway, "The reason I said that is because I do think that it is important to set up that level of deference and humility when you've got someone who's your boss, now the president of the United States, now the chief of staff, a general, a secretary, who is clearly your senior, your superior."

Duke To Become Acting DHS Secretary After Kelly Sworn In As Chief Of Staff On Monday. Fox News (7/28) reports Elaine Duke, "sworn in as the deputy secretary of Homeland Security on April 10 after she was confirmed by the Senate," will take over as acting Homeland Security Secretary on Monday after Kelly is sworn in as chief of staff. Fox News states that "in her position as deputy secretary, Duke led 'all efforts related to the strategic execution of DHS's vital missions,' according to her DHS biography."

Mulvaney Denies Reports Of White House "Chaos." The Hill (7/28, Concha) reports White House Budget Director Mulvaney in a Fox Business interview on Friday "accused the media of selling 'palace intrigue' stories on the administration while ignoring good news for the economy that President Trump is achieving." Mulvaney said, "I will push back a little bit on that whole chaos thing." He added the Administration on Thursday shared "a unified position on basic principles on taxes. That is not chaotic. We just rolled out of the Office of Management and Budget late last week over 860 regulatory actions that we have delayed or stopped in the first six months of this administration. That is not chaos." Mulvaney concluded, "The chaos will play out in the media, it always does. Palace intrigue sells better than raw numbers, but the raw numbers are looking better and better, and that is because the administration is doing its work."

GOP Lawmakers Complain About Infighting In White House. Politico (7/28, Bade, Bresnahan) reports that "as House Republicans vented about the Senate's failure to repeal Obamacare at a private meeting Friday morning," Rep. Dave Trott "shocked the room when he said the president had been unhelpful on health care, according to sources at the meeting." Politico adds that Trott "worried aloud that constant White House infighting was distracting from the Republican agenda – and he said he felt the president could have done more to get the bill across the finish line." Politico states that Trott had been "simply vocalizing what's on many members' minds already, even if few say so publicly for fear of retribution. Hill Republicans are increasingly worried that Trump's penchant for drama – and the constant bickering in the West Wing – is going to crush their agenda."

US Lawmakers, Former Officials Discuss Foreign Policy Impact Of Cabinet Reshuffling. Lucas Tomlinson of Fox News' Special Report (7/28, 6:23 p.m. EDT, Baier) reported, "With the White House weighing a decision to deploy nearly 4,000 American troops to Afghanistan very soon, expect newly-installed White House Chief of Staff John Kelly to fall back on his more than four decades in uniform leading the Marines." Tomlinson continued, "Before becoming President Trump's Director of Homeland Security, Gen. Kelly served three tours in Iraq. In 2008, he led the entire Marine force in volatile western Anbar Province. ... In 2010, he became the highest military ranking officer to lose a son or daughter in combat."

In a telephone interview with former Defense Secretary Panetta, Bret Baier of Fox News' Special Report (7/28, 6:47 p.m. EDT, Baier), asked whether "it is comforting in some sense to have someone with Gen. Kelly's experience at the President's right side" in light of the North Korean threat and situations in Syria and Venezuela. Panetta responded, "I don't think there's any question that I feel a hell of a lot better about having John Kelly in the room and in the Oval Office when it comes to dealing with the crises the President has to confront abroad." Panetta added that Kelly "was my military aid, the person in touch with the military establishment at DOD, but he also dealt with the congressional inquiries that came in from both Republicans and Democrats, so he's got great experience not only in Washington but also in understanding what our military needs to do in order to remain the strongest on the face of the earth."

On Fox News' Special Report (7/28, 6:12 p.m. EDT, Baier), former White House Deputy Chief of Staff Karl Rove said Trump's decision to replace Priebus with Kelly "was a deliberate decision" that "will be reflected in the policymaking process of government. Clearly Gen. Kelly, from a military background and his service at the Department of Homeland Security, is focused on methodical process." Rove added, "The very first week that President Trump was in office, he issued the executive order on immigration and on visas for people from terrorist states," and that "there is pretty good evidence that Gen. Kelly raised concerns about this, on a Wednesday or Thursday, saying basically back to his people at the White House, 'I've got concerns, this looks like it applies to current green card holders, I am worried about the lack of clarity on how it affects Iraqi civilians who helped American military.'" Rove said every one of Kelly's "objections turned out to be a major problem with the first iteration of the President's executive order on these visas from terror states." Fox News' Special Report's (7/28, 6:09 p.m. EDT, Baier) Catherine Herridge reported Kelly nonetheless "backed the President's controversial executive order to block entry from six predominately-Muslim countries and suspend the refugee program. While courts will have the final say, the policy is being enforced for the time being."

On CNN's Situation Room (7/28, 6:32 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Sen. Richard Blumenthal said Kelly "has certainly been loyal to the President, but unfortunately, there has been not only the travel ban, the Muslim travel ban that has been struck down by some of the courts, upheld in part by the United States Supreme Court, that created a great deal of chaos and confusion. But also even just as alarmingly, the in effect draconian, sweeping changes in policy that have meant arrests and deportations of people who have been here, working hard for decades, heads of families, many of them with children who are US citizens, spouses who are US citizens." Blumenthal said these immigrants are "often given day's notice before they were going to be deported" to "places that are extraordinarily dangerous, even deadly for them if they are returned to Central America. And I would hope that maybe as Chief of Staff, Gen. Kelly would persuade the President that these immigration policies are deeply flawed and, in fact, betray American values."

When asked on CNN's Situation Room (7/28, 6:21 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) whether he agreed with Kelly's support of Trump's proposed border wall and hard-line stance on immigration, Rep. Mark Sanford responded, "For the most part, yes. Again, I think we have to secure our southern border. I've been clear about that for a long time."

Rebecca Berg of Real Clear Politics told CNN's Situation Room (7/28, 6:25 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that President Trump appears to have staffed his Administration with generals like Defense Secretary Mattis or "very, very wealthy people" from the business community, like "Wilbur Ross at Commerce, Rex Tillerson, former CEO of Exxon/Mobil, his Secretary of State." Trump's selection of Kelly as Chief of Staff is, Berg said, "another example of Trump needing someone" who "he views as a peer" – an advantage that "Priebus didn't have in his pocket."

WSJournal, Columnists Weigh In On Staffing Shakeup. The Wall Street Journal (7/28) editorializes that Priebus is not responsible for the turmoil in the White House, the President is. The Journal adds Kelly will likely face the same obstacles as Priebus does if Trump refuses to become more disciplined in his decision-making process and his public statements.

The New York Times (7/28) editorializes that Trump "presumably" wants Kelly "to bring order to an increasingly dysfunctional White House," but "Kelly's first and biggest challenge is to bring discipline to the president, since the chaos starts with him." The Times concludes "It may be that nobody is equal to the task of persuading Mr. Trump to stop blindsiding his staff and Americans with tweeted attacks and impromptu announcements; nobody can stop him from dragging the needle across his own daily agenda; nobody can get him to stop fooling around and govern. It is now Mr. Kelly's job to give it a try."

In her Washington Post (7/28, Marcus) column, Ruth Marcus contends "the Trump White House is imploding" and acknowledges "the temptation, of course, is to begin with" Scaramucci's recent "profane rant against soon-to-be-former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus and chief strategist Stephen K. Bannon. But the more powerful, more ominous evidence of implosion and its consequences is found in the collapse of congressional efforts to repeal/replace/do something, anything, with the Republican Party's chief nemesis over the past seven years: the Affordable Care Act." She also predicts Kelly is unlikely to "fare much better" than Priebus because "daily, the president's boundless anger seems to find a new target: He is variously unhappy with his lawyer/his strategist/his press secretary. There is always someone else for Trump to blame, never himself."

In her Washington Post (7/28, Parker) column, Kathleen Parker asserts "Trump had his worst day since he was elected president – we'll just call it Friday – and his worst week since the last one. Things can only get worse and worse, as the Bard would permit me to say." According to Parker, "A few Trump loyalists may wait for the last lifeboat, but it's only a matter of time before this administration capsizes, titanically." She adds the President's "chaotic White House operation is a constant reminder that no one's in charge. The cumulative effect of all of these affronts to normalcy, decorum and democracy is to reveal the profile of a deadly iceberg off the ship of state's bow."

Meanwhile, in her Washington Post (7/28, Sullivan) column, Margaret Sullivan says that "in every job, there are firing offenses," and for Scaramucci, "here's one that ought to qualify: not having a clue about how 'off the record' works." She cites his language attacking Priebus as "way beyond colorful, way behind 'inappropriate' and all the way into territory that – even in this bizarre moment in history – had the power to shock" and argues that "in any other world, his gig should be over, right now, before it's begun. But in Trump World, [his defense] makes perfect sense: Blame the media and move on."

However, in a Fox News (7/28, Gingrich) op-ed, former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich praises Kelly and contends that if Trump and Kelly, "two powerful, experienced leaders [can] forge a unique working relationship," then "I predict the White House will become more orderly and disciplined – with clear lines of authority, serious planning and strong teamwork." He concludes that "If these two powerful leaders truly become a team, the Trump presidency will become one of the most effective in our history."

Trump Calls On Congress To Give More Leeway To Police In Speech Condemning MS-13 Gang Violence.

President Trump on Friday spoke to law enforcement officers at Suffolk County Community College in Long Island to promote his Administration's efforts to eradicate the MS-13 gang and to call upon Congress to give police additional leeway to use force when arresting suspects. While media coverage was focused on the President's replacement of White House Chief of Staff Priebus with Homeland Security Secretary Kelly and the CBS Evening News was the sole network newscast to broadcast, reporting in print and online outlined some of the Trump's most controversial remarks at the event and examined his strained relationship with Attorney General Sessions.

Reuters (7/28, Rampton, Rosenberg) reports the President "painted a dark and brutal portrait of American communities he said had been ravaged by gang violence as he pressed Congress to help him stop illegal immigration and boost deportations." The New York Times (7/28, Haberman, Robbins) reports Trump "wound up delivering a de facto campaign rally with a spray of Long Island police officers applauding behind him." He also "as expected...called on Congress to fund hiring 10,000 more Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents to crack down on undocumented immigrants in the United States, including those he said pose a criminal threat, and added that the initial spending for his proposed wall on the Mexico border was just approved by the House."

The Washington Post (7/28, Nakamura) reports Trump "warned of an uptick in violence from the transnational gang MS-13 that he said exploited weak political leadership and immigration enforcement to terrorize communities as the White House launched a renewed push to Congress to beef up funding for border security measures." Thomas Homan, acting director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, "said his agency has arrested 3,311 gang members this year, including 100 in New York, a majority of whom were affiliated with MS-13." According to Homan, "Targeting, arresting, and removing members of violent street gangs, such as MS-13, sends a clear message to criminal enterprises around the world: You are not welcome in the United States, and you'll find no harbor here." Tucker Carlson of Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (7/28, 8:26 p.m. EDT, Carlson) reported that "the Department of Justice estimates there are more than 10,000 members [of MS-13] in the United States."

In an article headlined "Donald Trump Declares War On Gangs, Defends Law Enforcement," Breitbart (7/28, Spiering) reports he "also vowed to defend law enforcement and stop criminal illegal aliens from crossing the border." The President vowed, "From now on, we're going to enforce our laws, protect our borders, and support our police like our police have never been supported before." The Wall Street Journal (7/28, Ballhaus, Reinhard) reports he said, "You know when you see these thugs being thrown into the back of a paddy wagon, you just see them thrown in rough. ... I said, please don't be too nice." To applause of the audience, the President added, "When you guys put somebody into the car and you're protecting their head – you know... like don't hit their head, and they've just killed somebody – I said, you can take the hand away, OK?"

Meanwhile, the CBS Evening News (7/28, story 6, 1:50, Mason) broadcast Trump stating that his Administration's policy is "to dismantle, decimate, and eradicate MS-13. We will find you. We will arrest you. We will jail you. And we will deport you." Correspondent Don Dahler said that Trump chose the venue "because near the Suffolk County community college where he spoke, 17 gang-related murders happened over the past 18 months."

Police Cheer Trump For Critique Of "Pathetic Mayor," Prompting De Blasio To Push Back. The Hill (7/28, Greenwood) reports President Trump on Friday "drew a round of applause from law enforcement officials...after he took a swipe at mayors who don't let police 'do their job.'" He said, "I've met police that are great police that aren't allowed to do their job because they have a pathetic mayor or a mayor that doesn't know what's going on." The President added, "Were you applauding for someone in particular?"

The New York Times (7/28, Goodman) says Trump's remarks "appeared to take a swipe at the elected leader of his hometown, Mayor Bill de Blasio," when he "spoke of 'a pathetic mayor' who had not let the police 'do their job.'" According to The Times, "The White House did not respond to a request for clarification – and Mr. Trump mentioned other cities, including Chicago, in the speech – but he has criticized Mr. de Blasio and his policing policies in the past." The Times says de Blasio's mayoral campaign issued "a response soon after the speech that doubled as a fund-raising pitch for donations of as little as $3."

Chicago Marks 400 Homicides This Year As Trump Promotes Biker Cop. According to a Chicago Tribune (7/28) tally, Chicago has exceeded 400 homicides this year and the city "is on pace to have a deadlier year than 2016, when gun violence reached levels not seen in 20 years. ... While fewer people have been shot this year, more of them are dying from their wounds." The Tribune adds "the percentage of fatal shootings is running about 1.3 percent higher than last year."

The Chicago Tribune (7/28, Janssen) reports Trump on Friday "repeated his claim that he last year identified a mystery Chicago cop" to Mayor Rahm Emanuel who had been "part of a volunteer brigade of motorcyclists who escorted his campaign in Chicago last year" and had insisted he "could solve the city's crime problem in 'a couple of days,'" but the President asserted that "he never heard back from Emanuel – a claim disputed by the mayor's spokesman Adam Collins, who said Emanuel never received the name." Chicago Police spokesman Frank Giancamilli said CPD has also been "unable to identify any Department member who had a conversation with then-candidate Trump."

New York Police Departments, Immigration Advocates Criticize Trump Speech. The Hill (7/28, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) on Friday issued a response to Trump's address, "saying officers are trained to treat all people with 'dignity and respect.'" In a statement, the IACP said, "Managing use of force is one of the most difficult challenges faced by law enforcement agencies. The ability of law enforcement officers to enforce the law, protect the public, and guard their own safety, the safety of innocent bystanders, and even those suspected or apprehended for criminal activity is very challenging." The IACP added, "For these reasons, law enforcement agencies develop policies and procedures, as well as conduct extensive training, to ensure that any use of force is carefully applied and objectively reasonable considering the situation confronted by the officers."

The Hill (7/28, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports the Suffolk County Police Department responded Friday to Trump's comments advocating for tougher treatment of suspects, tweeting, "The SCPD has strict rules & procedures relating to the handling of prisoners. Violations of those rules are treated extremely seriously." The SCPD added, "As a department, we do not and will not tolerate roughing up of prisoners.."

The Hill (7/28, Delk) reports New York Police Commissioner James O'Neill earlier Friday said the department would not be represented at Trump's speech because "We have a lot to do, a lot of work to do in New York City." However, The Hill acknowledges "The commissioner's jurisdiction of New York does not extend to all of Long Island, where the meeting on gang violence is taking place. It is not clear if the NYPD would have been expected to attend the event."

Daniel Altschuler of Make The Road New York told Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (7/28, 8:32 p.m. EDT, Carlson) that while Trump calls MS-13 the biggest problem for immigrant families, Immigration and Customs Enforcement is the real "threat to immigrant communities," because ICE "is a rogue and out-of-control agency. Ten immigrants have died in detention because of actions by Immigration Enforcement." He added, "This is a rogue agency that the President is seeking to empower. What we are saying is that we refuse and refute the criminalization of immigrant communities."

Sessions Hails Law Enforcement For Often "Thankless" Work, Hopes For Improved Relationship With Trump. Attorney General Sessions, speaking in El Salvador to address a graduation ceremony for the International Law Enforcement Academy, told the AP (7/28, Gurman) that he is "eager to use his aggressive work against the MS-13 street gang to help mend his tattered relationship with" the President following "a week of sour performance reviews from his boss." Sessions said MS-13 is "one of many issues that we share deep commitments about." Sessions added that the gang "is in a very expansive mode and we need to slam the door on that. We need to stop them in their tracks and focus on this dangerous group."

Politico (7/28, Nelson) reports the "embattled" Sessions also "said Friday that law enforcement work is 'often thankless,' a remark that comes as he has been under withering criticism from his onetime ally, President Donald Trump." Sessions told graduates, "While there are good days and bad days in any job, one thing has been clear to me, it is a privilege to serve one's country in law enforcement, to wake up each morning and fight the fight for the rule of law. ... It is hard work and often thankless, but the right to be safe in your community is the right on which all the others are based."

Meanwhile, CNN's Situation Room's (7/28, 6:55 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Wolf Blitzer said that under Trump's presidency, "there have been some positive developments clearly" on MS-13. White House reporter Kaitlan Collins acknowledged, "There's been a few," such as declining border crossings. Yet, Trump has "time and time again" distracted "from those things that are working for him." Collins added that in Long Island, Trump "was talking about the election," rather than "focusing on what...Sessions is doing in El Salvador right now," talking "with law enforcement officials about combating the MS-13 gang."

Asked if he believes Attorney General Sessions will retain his post, Trump's former campaign manager, Corey Lewandowski, told Bret Baier of Fox News' Special Report (7/28, 6:21 p.m. EDT, Baier), "That's a difficult question," in part because "it was a mistake for Jeff to recuse himself" from the Russia investigation. Lewandowski added that as long as Trump is "happy with the work that he's doing, particularly on the MS-13 crisis," Sessions will likely remain.

Police Veterans Warn Phoenix Immigration Policies Could Embolden Cartels. Writing in Breitbart (7/28, Arce), retired Phoenix police detective Robert Arce says that as the city's officials and police department prepare "to implement a soft approach to dealing with illegal immigrants during traffic stops and investigations, veteran law enforcement officials worry that the measure could provide a safe haven for Mexican drug cartels and lead to yet another explosion in gory crime scenes." According to Arce, "the concern among veteran detectives is that this policy could have the same effect that a previous policy did that led to Phoenix seeing a record setting number of murder[s] linked primarily to illegal immigrants and Mexican drug cartels."

Border Patrol Agents Seize Almost $8 Million In Drugs Over Two Days Along Texas Border. Breitbart (7/28, Price) reports Customs and Border Protection officers and Border Patrol agents this week "teamed up to seize almost $8 million in drugs at and near the Texas-Mexico Border in Laredo." Breitbart states that "CBP officers discovered a large amount of cocaine, crystal methamphetamine and heroin in two separate busts on July 22," which were estimated to have more than $1,183,000 in street value.

Address Of Suffolk County Community College Is 1001 Crooked Hill Road. The Hill (7/28, Smilowitz) reports Trump's speech to law enforcement officers was held at Suffolk County Community College, which is located at 1001 Crooked Hill Rd. and "is just blocks away from a major highway called the Long Island Expressway – often referred to by locals as the L.I.E." The Hill highlights that "Trump labeled Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton 'Crooked Hillary' during last year's campaign, sometimes shortening it on Twitter to 'Crooked Hill' or just 'Crooked H.'"

Mnuchin Pressures Congress To Raise Debt Ceiling Before Deadline.

Bloomberg News (7/28, Woods) reports Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in a letter Friday "stepped up pressure on lawmakers to raise the government's borrowing limit, even as House members left town for their five-week recess." Mnuchin said "it is critical that Congress act" to raise the debt ceiling before Sept. 29, though "the Congressional Budget Office estimates the Treasury can fund the government through early- to mid-October under the current borrowing limit." According to Bloomberg, "Treasury has been relying on special accounting maneuvers since March to stay under the nearly $20 trillion debt cap."

Meadows Forecasts Clean Debt Ceiling Hike In October. The Hill (7/28, Elis) reports House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows said Friday that he "believes Congress will adopt a continuing resolution (CR) instead of passing spending bills for 2018 by October and that a clean debt ceiling hike will pass with Democratic support, contrary to the wishes of conservative Republicans." Meadows said, "September is going to be a very difficult month. I mean, obviously all of this is coming into play right away, all the fiscal issues and deadlines are going to make it extremely difficult to get everything done in a piece-by-piece basis." He added, "We're almost anticipating a bigger bill with a whole bunch of things put together that would maybe bring a whole lot of Democrats on board and pass with less than a majority of the majority."

White House Kicks Off Tax Reform Push, Mulvaney Says That Goal Is To Cut As Much As Possible.

"The White House and congressional Republicans – backed by business and conservative groups – are mustering forces to muscle through a large tax cut package later this year," the Washington Post (7/28, Paletta) reports, which began with their release Thursday of "a broad statement that set out principles for the tax overhaul plan they hope to pull together" but lacked details. The Post adds Republicans "face many hurdles and have yet to gel behind a strategy" and "no member of the White House's senior economic team has been a part of a major tax overhaul bill." However, White House Budget Director Mulvaney said Friday on CNBC "that the goal was to cut taxes as much as politically possible." Mulvaney asserted "the central debate" remains "how big is tax reform going to be? How big are the tax reductions going to be?"

Ryan Pledges To "Do Tax Reform Better" Than Healthcare. Politico (7/28, Nelson) reports House Speaker Ryan in an interview with Fox Business that aired Friday said, "We looked at healthcare and said let's make sure that do tax reform better and differently, so we have had exhausting meetings – not exhausting, we've exhausted these points between all three branches, all three decision makers: Senate, House, White House." Ryan added, "We've had meeting after meeting after meeting to make sure we see it the same way and on common ground."

However, a Wall Street Journal (7/28, Rubin) analysis warns the Republican Party's failure to pass a healthcare bill to replace the Affordable Care Act will have repercussions on the GOP's tax reform push and could show the difficulties in building consensus on the legislation.

Tax Policy Center Analysis: Americans Earning Between $150,000-$300,000 To See Tax Hike.

The Wall Street Journal (7/28, Saunders) reports a new study from the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center of President Trump's tax reform proposals and past statements suggests that Americans who earn between $149,400 and $307,900 will have their taxes increase if the Administration successfully reforms the tax code.

US Economy Continued To See "Slow And Steady" Growth In Second Quarter.

The CBS Evening News (7/28, story 9, 0:15, Mason) reported that the economy grew at a rate of 2.6 percent in the second quarter of this year, which is "more than double the first quarter rate." For eight consecutive years the economy has continued to grow, "the third-longest expansion in US history."

However, the New York Times (7/28, Schwartz) says this growth rate is "well short of the pace President Trump has promised and lower than what many experts had been anticipating until recently." The Times says the Commerce Department's report Friday "is a sign that the economy remains on track, with underlying growth in line with where it has been since the current recovery began eight years ago this summer."

GDP growth since the US emerged from recession in 2009 has averaged 2.1 percent, the Wall Street Journal (7/28, Sparshott) reports. In comparison, the Journal says growth over a 10-year period in the 1990s averaged 3.6 percent and growth over a 9-year period in the 1960s averaged 4.9 percent. This slow, steady growth, it says, has helped generate a long period of job growth and created stability in the economy.

Growth rates were the fastest in Texas at 3.9 percent, West Virginia at 3 percent, and New Mexico at 2.8 percent, the Wall Street Journal (7/28, Chaney) reports. The growth in these states is attributed to a revitalized mining sector, which has benefited from the recovery in commodity prices.

Meanwhile, in an analysis titled "White House Tailors Jobs Message To Its Base In Rust Belt," the Wall Street Journal (7/28, Stokols, Morath) suggests Trump has been focused on promoting manufacturing because he is already looking ahead to his reelection campaign.

Sasse: Adolescents Should Get Jobs, "Learn How To Become An Adult." Sen. Ben Sasse writes in the New York Times (7/28, Sasse) that while "Adolescence is a great thing," we have "made it too long." Sasse recalls his own childhood, waking up at five am to work in the fields to detassel corn. He says most agricultural work today is done by machine and there are fewer household chores needing to be done. Students entering college having done very little "hard physical work." Sasse argues that if "done right," adolescence "should not be an escape from adulthood; it should be when we learn how to become adults." He offers suggestions of things parents can do to help "create experiences for our kids that build character."

Republicans To Push Tax Reform Over August Recess.

The Hill (7/30, Jagoda) reports that in the wake of an announcement from Republican leaders and the White House of "a consensus on goals for tax reform," Republicans "will be vigorously selling tax reform over the August recess," and "they'll have business groups and conservative advocacy organizations helping them in the efforts." The Washington Times (7/30, Sherfinski) reports that while GOP leaders "insist they won't make the same mistakes with tax reform," that they did with healthcare, "there are enough similarities between the two issues that lawmakers are worried." The Times points out that Republicans enter the debate "with only vague principles, have struggled to pique Democrats' interest and have received conflicting signals from the White House about priorities."

House Speaker Ryan said on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (7/30, Bartiromo), "It is more important for us than anything that we get tax reform done because we think it's absolutely critical for strong economic growth." Ryan added, "I feel much more confident that we are going stick the landing on tax reform because we have now said we have consensus, here is the framework, let's go get it done."

American Action Network Will Spend Up To $20 Million To Promote Tax Reform. The Charlotte \(NC\) Observer (7/30, Glueck) reports American Action Network will be giving a "multi-million dollar boost" to Republicans in their effort to pass tax reform legislation, as the group "expects to spend as much as $20 million" in support of what it calls the "Middle Class Growth Initiative." The initiative is to "promote tax cuts for 'working families and small businesses,'" and "simpler, fairer and pro-growth" tax reform. It plans to "offer a comprehensive message on tax reform through radio, television, mail and digital ad buys."

Mnuchin: Debt Limit Must Be Raised By Sept. 29.

The Wall Street Journal (7/30, Davidson) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said in a letter to lawmakers on Friday that the debt ceiling must be raised by Sept. 29 or the government could run out of money to pay the bills, which means that when lawmakers return from August recess, they will have 12 working days to address the issue.

EPA Museum Being Changed To Reflect Trump Administration Priorities.

The Washington Post (7/30, Eilperin, Dennis) reported that a miniature museum at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Building depicting the EPA's history and mission is facing scrutiny. The museum, "which opened just days before President Barack Obama left office, is being reworked to reflect the priorities of the Trump administration, an effort that probably will mean erasing part of the agency's history."

Researchers: If It Is Real, Policy Response To Climate Change Is Open To Debate.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/30), David Henderson, a research fellow with the Hoover Institution and an economics professor at the Naval Postgraduate School, and John Cochrane, a senior fellow of the Hoover Institution and an adjunct scholar of the Cato Institute, argue that even if climate change is real, the correct policy prescription remains open to debate.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Britain Joins The Shift To Electric Cars." The New York Times (7/31, Board) editorializes that Britain's pledge to end new gas and diesel car sales by 2040 "is good news for the planet and for human health, even if caveats and challenges abound." The success of the effort, says the Times, will depend not only on "an upgrade in generating capacity, improved batteries and new sources of government income to replace lucrative fuel taxes," but also "on where the electricity comes from." Nonetheless, the Times concludes, "Bringing people around is a big challenge in the fight against climate change," so "the announcements by Britain, France, India and Norway are important, and the more governments that follow suit, the better."

"Pakistan's Prime Minister Falls, Again." In an editorial, the New York Times (7/31, Board) laments that "the decision of the Pakistani Supreme Court to disqualify" Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif is not "a triumph for the rule of law," but rather "a sad commentary on the state of affairs in Pakistan that the best hope on all these fronts after Mr. Sharif's fall from power – remarkably, his third ouster – is that things don't get worse." The Times says Sharif's ouster also threatens "the future of Pakistan's troubled relations with the United States and India," as well as hopes for "any improvement in relations with the Trump administration." Despite its "unpromising" prognosis, the Times acknowledges the leadership reshuffling "does create opportunities for some change of course," so the Administration "should make every effort to persuade Mr. Sharif's successor that eradicating terrorists in Afghanistan is in the interests of both countries."

Washington Post.

"The Public Is Still Waiting For Answers On A District Police-Involved Shooting." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/30) criticizes the US Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia for delays in the investigation of the Sept. 11, 2016, fatal shooting of motorcyclist Terrence Sterling, arguing the slow pace is "typical of the office's lack of urgency in handling these critical matters." The Post says the delay "leaves the public wondering how much official interest there is in getting to the bottom of police-involved shootings."

"The Ouster In Pakistan Is Actually A Glimmer Of Hope." A Washington Post (7/30) editorial writes that "once again, Pakistanis are being reminded" that "in the nation's 70-year history, not one prime minister has served out a full five-year term." The latest example came Friday, when Pakistan's Supreme Court "disqualified — essentially dismissed — Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on grounds that he had lied to the nation about his family's wealth and financial dealings." The Post says the court's ruling offers "a glimmer of hope for accountability and rule of law in a nation that could use much more of it."

"The Man Who May Disenfranchise Millions." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/30) says that in an email to a Trump transition official, Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, who now chairs President Trump's election integrity commission, "said he was preparing an amendment to the National Voter Registration Act to allow states to demand documentary proof of citizenship for new registrants.” The Post says the commission is “stacked with Kobach clones who have made voter suppression into a political cottage industry,” and if it “endorses the Kansas model, or even recommends requiring documentary proof of citizenship as a condition of voter registration, millions of Americans will face disenfranchisement, and democracy itself will be at risk.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Regime Change Solution In Korea.” A Wall Street Journal (7/30) editorial argues that the North Korean crisis is accelerating and that a new US strategy is needed. According to the Journal, CIA Director Pompeo recently suggested that the Administration may be contemplating a goal of regime change in Pyongyang, and offers its support for the idea, saying Friday’s ICBM test shows there’s is no time to waste.

“A Fiduciary Rule Reckoning.” The Wall Street Journal (7/30) says in an editorial that the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals on Monday will hear arguments from business groups trying to overturn a lower court decision upholding the Obama-era Labor Department’s new fiduciary rule on retirement accounts. The Journal is very critical of the rule, arguing that it hurts the people it is intended to help, and express hope that the Fifth Circuit will roll it back.

“Putin’s Advances In Syria.” The Wall Street Journal (7/30) writes in an editorial that Russia last week moved to consolidate its strategic gains in Syria by ratifying a 49-year lease on Hmeymim air base. The Journal says the long-term lease solidifies Russia’s position as the defender of the Assad regime and sends a message that it plans to remain even after the defeat of ISIS.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

US Companies Post Profit Growth Not Seen In Six Years

Trump Deepens GOP Divide

OPEC Has A Crippling Problem: Its Members Can’t Stop Pumping

Four Activists Challenge Plans To Carve Up DowDuPont

New York Times:

Putin, Responding To Sanctions, Orders US To Cut Diplomatic Staff By 755

Republicans Worry That White House Disarray Is Undermining Trump

Big Rigs, A Human Smuggling Mainstay, Often Become Rolling Traps

Hot Spot For Tech Outsourcing: The United States

More New Yorkers Opting For Life In The Bike Lane

China Shows Off Military Might As Xi Jinping Tries To Cement Power

Washington Post:

Venezuelan Vote Escalates Crisis

For Sessions, A Swift And Steadfast Souring

US Flies Bombers Close To N. Korea

Putin Tells US To Cut Diplomatic Staff By 755

Asylum Seekers’ Cases Failing

Financial Times:

Flanders Battle Centenary Stirs Memory Of Hell

Pimco Pulls In \$50bn Active Cash As Investors Drawn To New Star

Seven Dead As Venezuelans Protest Over New Assembly

Trump’s Rift Widens With Republicans

Washington Times:

Republicans Move To Tax Reform, But Fight Feared Similar To Obamacare Repeal

Trump Administration Suggests Ending Enforcement Of Obamacare’s Individual Mandate

Special-Ops Troops’ Drug, Alcohol Abuse Prompts Call For Congressional Review Of ‘Culture’

‘No Drama’ Kelly Joins White House In Effort To Control Chaos, Infighting, Leaks

Man ‘Marries’ His Laptop, Sues For State Recognition And A Wedding Cake

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Australia-Terrorism Plot Foiled; North Korea-Missile Test; Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; WH-Healthcare Reform; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Caribbean-American Attacked; Minneapolis-Manhunt; North Carolina-Islands Power Outages; Colorado-Treasure Hunt Deaths; Smartphone App-Bullying; New Jersey Gov-Temper; Germany-River Crossing Scare; Honolulu-Pedestrian Smartphone Ban; Ferrari Clashing; Elderly Sky Diver.

CBS: North Korea-Missile Test; Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; WH-Healthcare Reform; WH-Staff Shakeup; Australia-Terrorism Plot Foiled; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; North Carolina-Islands Power Outages; Hot Car-Child Death; Ohio State Fair-Ride Accident; ISIS-Child Fighters; Gulf Of Mexico-Red Snapper Season; Long Island Beach-Sand Art.

NBC: Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; North Korea-Missile Test; Australia-Terrorism Plot Foiled; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; North Carolina-Islands Power Outages; Airline-Seat Sizes; Sunday Night Program Note; Russian Antivirus-Cyber Security; Baseball-Hall Of Fame; UK-2040 Gasoline Car Ban; Bird Lover.

Network TV At A Glance:

North Korea-Missile Test – 4 minutes, 20 seconds

WH-Healthcare Reform – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

Venezuela-Political Turmoil – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation – 4 minutes, 10 seconds

Australia-Terrorism Plot Foiled – 3 minutes, 50 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: North Korea-Missile Test; WH-Healthcare Reform; Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; LA-Restaurant Car Crash; Alabama-Jail Escape.

CBS: Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; WH-Healthcare Reform; NBA News; Baseball-Hall Of Fame; Wall Street News.

FOX: New WH Chief Of Staff; North Korea-Missile Test; Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; LA-Restaurant Car Crash.

NPR: Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Russia-US Sanctions Retaliation; WH-Healthcare Reform; Taiwan-Typhoon Landing.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in the swearing-in of White House Chief of Staff John Kelly; leads a Cabinet meeting; meets with US Ambassador to Israel David Friedman; meets with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson; presents the Medal of Honor.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Meets President Giorgi Margvelashvili and PM Giorgi Kvirikashvili of Georgia and visits US and Georgian troops participating in the Noble Partner exercise.

US Senate: 4:00 PM Senate aims to end debate on Eleventh Circuit judicial nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Kevin Newsom to be U.S. Circuit Judge for the Eleventh Circuit, including a vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the nomination Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: On recess until 5 September.

Other: Young America's Foundation Annual National Conservative Student Conference – Young America's Foundation Annual National Conservative Student Conference. Speakers include former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, Republican Sen. Mike Lee, and former U.S. Treasurer Angela Buchanan Location: George Washington University, 2121 I St NW, Washington, DC www.yaf.org <https://twitter.com/yaf>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, June 5, 2017
Date: Monday, June 05, 2017 7:01:42 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JUNE 5, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- U.S. News & World Report: US Agencies Emphasize Cooperation Entering Wildfire Season.
- Newsmax: Ryan Zinke: Paris Climate Agreement Was Bad For US.
- Denver Post: Ryan Zinke Mulls Protections For Greater Sage Grouse.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Battle Brewing Over National Monuments In Nevada, Elsewhere.
- CNN: Where Trump's Border Rhetoric Meets Reality.
- Nation Sun News: Secretary Zinke Slated For Hearing On Interior Department Budget.
- Mohave Valley (AZ) Daily News: County To Back Mining On Federal Lands.
- Wall Street Journal: Democrats Denied Power To Seek Records From Executive Branch.

- Los Angeles Times: Trump Administration Posts 'Help Wanted' Signs For Government Service.
- Alaska Dispatch News: It's Time For Alaska To Reckon With The End Of Fossil-Fuel Era.
- New York Times: Written Proof That The President's Lobbyist Ban Is Worthless.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Despite $1.2 Billion In Purchases, Tribal Land Buy-back 'Treading Water.'
- BIA Gets Quick Win In Challenge To Tribal Leadership Ruling.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Las Vegas Review-Journal: BLM Pulls Plan To Auction Oil And Gas Leases Near Zion National Park.
- U.S. News & World Report: Oregon Hiking Trail Marred By Swastikas, Other Graffiti.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Can Oil Rigs And Lionfish Bring Us Together?

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- There's A New Sheriff On The Gulf.
- Florida Gov. Scott Approves Plan To Hand Out Oil Spill Money.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Times: Congressman Fights With Officials Over Boating-wake Rules.
- Miami Herald: Removal Of Dry Tortugas Croc Troubles Experts.
- Billings (MT) Gazette: Expansion Of Prairie Dog Vaccine Proposed.
- Law360: Judge Casts Out Enviros' Bull Trout Suit Against FWS.
- Charleston (WV) Gazette-Mail: Federal Fish Hatchery Recovers From The Ravages Of The June 2016 Floods.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wildlife Officials Investigating Grizzly Bear Shooting Death.
- Eastern Arizona Courier: Fish And Wildlife Names 2016 Recovery Champion.

National Park Service

- Sacramento (CA) Bee: Free Admission To National Parks For Fourth-graders, Families.
- Montgomery (WV) Herald: County Joins Push For Parks Repairs.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Yellowstone Park Says Its Winning Against Non-native Fish.
- Pocono (PA) Record: DWG Park Ranger Retiring After 25 Years.
- U.S. News & World Report: Solo Climber Is 1st Up Mighty California Rock Without Ropes.
- U.S. News & World Report: Army Helicopter Rescues Canadian Cop From Mount Rainier.
- U.S. News & World Report: Body Found In Utah's Zion National Park.
- Houston Chronicle: Climber Killed In Fall On Devils Tower; 1st Death Since 2003.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Firstpost (IND): Pacific Islands Accuse US Of 'Abandoning' Them To Climate Change.
- SatPRNews (POL): Remote Pacific Regions Set For Broadband Internet Under New World Bank Projects.

US Geological Survey

- Los Angeles Times: From Elevators To Trains, Earthquake Early Warning System Grows As Trump Threatens To Kill It.

Top National News

- ABC: Trump Reiterates Need For "Travel Ban" In Wake Of London Attack.
- Los Angeles Times: White House Unable To Answer Whether Trump Believes In Climate Change.
- ABC: Haley: "Trump Believes The Climate Is Changing."
- Associated Press: Trump To Kick Off Infrastructure Week With Focus On ATC Privatization.
- ABC: Labor Department: Jobless Rate Falls To Lowest Level In 16 Years.
- Wall Street Journal: Commerce Department: Trade Deficit Increases In April.
- The Hill: AFP, Freedom Partners Urge Price To Loosen ObamaCare Regulations.
- New York Times: Justice Department Files Appeal To Supreme Court Over Trump Travel Order.
- Bloomberg Politics: Democrats Considering Strategy Of Using Debt Ceiling Debate As Leverage.
- Washington Post: AFGE Union Chief Rallying Opposition To Trump's Proposed Budget Cuts.
- Wall Street Journal: Mulvaney: US Will Not Default On Debt Payments.

- Politico: Cohn: White House Give Congress A Detailed Tax Reform Plan In September.
- Washington Post: WPost A1: Trump Rolling Back Obama Policies, But Making “Little Progress” On Own Agenda.
- New York Times: Current Value Of Costs Of Climate Change Difficult To Calculate.
- Associated Press: Trump’s Claim US Is Cleanest And Most Environmentally-Friendly Country On Earth Questioned.
- Associated Press: States Form Climate Alliance To Meet Goals Of Paris Accord.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - “Another Terrorist Attack, And More Agony, In Britain.”
 - “Undoing All The Good Work On Cuba.”
- Washington Post.
 - “A Baltimore Case Shows How Trump’s Deportation Crackdown Can Lead To Lawlessness.”
 - “Goldman Sachs Makes An Irresponsible Deal With The Corrupt Venezuela Regime.”
 - “The Best Solution To Metro’s Financial Problems Is Crystal Clear.”
- Wall Street Journal.
 - “Jihad Returns To Britain.”
 - “How To Make Medicine More Expensive.”

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today’s Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

US Agencies Emphasize Cooperation Entering Wildfire Season.

The AP (6/2, Ridler) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue “signed a memorandum Friday emphasizing cooperation among federal, state, tribal and local agencies in battling wildfires as the main part of the wildfire season arrives.” Zinke and Perdue signed the document following a briefing at the National Interagency Fire Center in Boise. the article notes that “the agreement doesn’t announce any major changes in firefighting strategy for this year’s wildfire season that both secretaries say will be challenging.” It says that “the objectives of firefighter safety and public safety remain top priorities, and there’s a continued emphasis on a need for efficiency and communication.”

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/2, Russell) reports that the document is “actually something the two departments sign each year, but it’s the first time the two secretaries came out in person and signed it together at NIFC, where wildland firefighting efforts are coordinated for the nation.” Zinke said, “It really is about a shared stewardship. All of us care deeply to make sure that we have public access, to make sure that we keep our public lands in perpetuity.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (6/2, Ridler), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (6/2, Ridler), the Business Insider (6/2, Ridler), the Daily Mail (6/2), Fox News (6/2, Ridler), the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (6/4, Ridler), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/3, Ridler), Philly \(PA\) (6/2, Ridler), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/2, Ridler), the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (6/2, Ridler), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/2, Ridler), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/2, Ridler).

Additional coverage was provided by the Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (6/2, Ellis), Boise State University \(ID\) (6/2, Madrid), the Sierra \(CA\) Sun Times (6/4), KBSC-FM Boise \(ID\) Boise, ID (6/2, Michael), KIFI-TV Idaho Falls \(ID\) Idaho Falls, ID (6/2), KWYB-TV Butte \(MT\) Butte, MT (6/2, Crossley), and KTVB-TV Boise \(ID\) Boise, ID (6/2, Parsons).

New Ag, Interior Secretaries Call For Retaining Public Lands, Upping Resource Extraction. The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/2, Russell) reports that Zinke and Perdue “brought a message to Boise on Friday: Public lands must be retained, but they also must produce more through resource extraction.” Before “a crowd of more than 300 at Boise State University,” Zinke said, "Up front, I'm not an advocate for sale or transfer of public lands." Both Zinke and Perdue "also stressed collaboration and interagency cooperation, saying they want everyone working together on public lands issues, from federal, state and local governments to citizens, businesses and conservationists."

Zinke On Why He Suspended All Resource Advisory Councils. The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/2, Russell) reports that Zinke and Perdue visited Boise with "a strong message of support for collaboration in efforts to solve the nation's public lands issues – even as the Trump Administration has suspended all meetings of local Resource Advisory Councils through September." Asked at the National Interagency Fire Center, "why the RACs have been suspended, Zinke said, 'I have 225 different councils and boards, so I suspended them all, so I could ask: What do you do? Who's on your board? What have you done in the last year? What have you done in the last two years?'" Zinke "said the Department of Interior is spending $15 million a year on the various boards and councils, and he didn't want to 'pick and choose' which to keep or cut." He said, "So I did it blanket across. And alls I asked was two pages. ... I just want to know what you do, who's on the board, what you've done the last year, what you've done the last five years, so I have a degree, and then as they deliver it, we'll look at it, and then I give 'em the thumbs up to continue mission. But that's why. Rather than me going through a list of 220, I just said ... look, if you guys can't deliver a two-page document and tell me who you are, what you do, how much it costs, and give me your milestones, then maybe we should look at redoing the boards. Most people complied."

Ryan Zinke: Paris Climate Agreement Was Bad For US.

Newsmax (6/2, Fitzgerald) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has said he does not believe climate change is a hoax, but on Friday he defended President Donald Trump's decision to pull out of the Paris climate agreement, saying the 'deal is bad' for the United States." Zinke said, "It's only 20 pages, but as you read through it, we pay for it. We pay billions of dollars up front, more than anyone else." Moreover, the deal itself "doesn't do anything," Zinke said. "It doesn't move the needle if everyone complies, and we lose jobs. It was a bad deal. If we're going to sit down and have a climate change deal, then let's make it fair."

What Does Trump Believe About Climate Change? His Aides Won't Say, And You Can't Ask Him. In an interview with CNN (6/2, Merica) "New Day," Interior Secretary Zinke said "that while he doesn't 'believe [climate change] is a hoax,' he was unable to answer whether Trump agrees." Zinke added, "I do not speak for the President," though he acknowledged he had not asked Trump.

Additional coverage was provided by CNBC (6/4, DiChristopher).

Coal Jobs Are Gone And Both The Right And Left Are Answerable. In a blog on Forbes (6/4), contributor Erik Sherman writes, "The problems of coal are macroeconomic in nature," and "the Paris accord would likely do nothing that would eliminate those mine-related jobs faster than advances in other technologies, market economics, and financial realities would." Sherman questions "how much genuine and significant interest either party has in the travails of the working class," noting that "no matter who is in office, median incomes stay virtually fixed, which technically means that half of the working population faces an unchanging income ceiling, even as increased wealth continues to settle at the top."

Trump's Paris Decision Won't Benefit U.S. Coal Miners. Institute for Policy Studies Climate Policy Program Director Basav Sen writes for Newsweek (6/2, Sen) that the Trump Administration's decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord "sends a very ugly message to the world," and also said the decision was a "colossal foreign policy mistake." However, many other countries "have made substantially more progress in rolling back fossil fuels and expanding clean energy. And they're planning to forge ahead while the U.S. goes backward," Sen said.

Ryan Zinke Mulls Protections For Greater Sage Grouse.

The Denver Post (6/4, Finley) reports that Western leaders are "opposing a possible Trump administration push to overhaul federal plans for protecting greater sage grouse across a Texas-sized area in 10 states." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "last week stayed mum on whether he'll move ahead on a review of the plans." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in a prepared statement, "Secretary Zinke has made clear his commitment to working with, rather than against, local communities and being a good neighbor to private landowners. The Interior Department is looking forward to working with state and local partners to ensure we are striking a true balance between both conservation and responsible multiple use of our public lands."

Mead Advises Zinke Sage Grouse Plans Don't Need Big Changes. The Casper \(WY\) Star-

Tribune (6/2, Richards) reports that in a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead and Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper “reiterated their belief that a population-based conservation strategy would ‘not be the right decision’” to protect the greater sage-grouse. They also “said large changes to the plans are not likely necessary.” Mead and Hickenlooper wrote, “Wholesale changes to the land use plans are likely not necessary at this time. We hope that you will engage the Task Force before committing to making any changes.”

Battle Brewing Over National Monuments In Nevada, Elsewhere.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/2, Martin) reports that “a battle is brewing among activists across the political spectrum over a Trump administration review of recently established national monuments” and the Antiquities Act. According to the article, “in the most recent salvo, 71 environmental and natural resource lawyers sent a letter to the administration saying a White House executive order that authorized the review incorrectly implied that President Donald Trump has the authority to rescind or modify national monuments created by previous presidents.” However, “conservative groups like the Heritage Foundation and The Sutherland Institute argue Trump has the authority to manage public lands and reduce the size of national monuments, a practice that has occurred several times.”

Additional coverage of the review was provided by the Pasadena \(CA\) Star-News (6/1, Scauzillo).

Op-ed: Antiquities Act Review A Chance To Scale Back Executive Overreach. In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/3, Simmons, Lofthouse), Randy T. Simmons, a professor of political economy at the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business at Utah State University and president of Strata, and Jordan K. Lofthouse, a Strata Ph.D. fellow, writes that the review of national monuments, “especially the 1.3 million-acre Bears Ears National Monument, is a unique opportunity to reflect on the uses and abuses of the Antiquities Act.” They argue that “the Bears Ears designation is a cautionary tale of the nearly unlimited power of the president and how that power affects real Americans.” They conclude that “the current review of national monuments is a good chance to scale back past overreach and reflect on the indiscriminate power given to the president.”

Op-ed: State Politicians May Not Support Our Newest Monument But Real Utahns Do. In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/2, Baca), Angelo Baca, cultural resources coordinator for Utah Diné Bikéyah, writes that “64 percent of Utah’s likely voters support keeping Bears Ears as a national monument, at its current size” and “only 30 percent oppose the monument,” according to the latest poll commissioned by Utah Diné Bikéyah and conducted by Public Opinion Strategies. He notes that “the public comment period recently closed (with 96 percent of the 685,000 comments submitted in favor of monument protection), and now Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke faces a choice: Will he try to force us to go back, or will he join us in moving forward?”

No Need To Review Hanford, Other Monuments. The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/4) editorializes that if the review of national monuments “leads to anything but maintaining the status of these monuments, it will be because the administration ignored the public.” The paper asserts that “there is little opposition to the monuments under review.” It concludes that “if this review really is about process and public input,” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “can wrap it up early.”

Judith K. Wellington: Our Battle To Protect Sacred Spaces From Trump. In an op-ed for the Arizona Daily Star (6/3, Wellington), Judith K. Wellington, who works for the Synod of the Southwest in Tucson as a part-time consultant for Native American Ministries, calls on “decision-makers to uphold the Bears Ears National Monument.” Wellington emphasizes that “the Bears Ears region contains more than 100,000 sites with archaeological, cultural and spiritual significance, and is a biologically sensitive part of God’s creation.” Wellington says that during the public comment period, she “joined with a group of indigenous peoples who also practice Christianity to send Zinke, who is also a Christian, a letter explaining the gravity of what this administration is doing, and warning of the spiritual danger of desecrating sacred places.”

Where Trump’s Border Rhetoric Meets Reality.

CNN (6/3, Kopan) reports that Rep. Will Hurd’s Texas district “includes more than 800 miles of border with Mexico, which is more than one-third of the entire US-Mexico border.” Standing opposed President Trump’s border wall, he asked Homeland Security Secretary John Kelly where a wall should be build during a congressional hearing, showing “pictures of parts of his district” in the process. CNN lauds his credibility on the subject, saying he “spent nearly a decade in the CIA overseas and went on to advise a cybersecurity firm, giving him a deep understanding of best practices in approaching security." Residents of Hurd's district also stand in opposition to a wall, though the piece says they want "a secure border and to combat any cartels and violence in Mexico." However, "a closed border could be devastating to their way of life."

Oculus Founder Plots A Comeback With A Virtual Border Wall. The New York Times (6/4, Wingfield) reports that Oculus VR founder Palmer Freeman Luckey, who sold his company to Facebook for $2 billion in 2014 but was forced to leave the company "after news spread that he had secretly donated to an organization dedicated to spreading anti-Hillary Clinton internet memes," has "a new start-up in the works, a company that is developing surveillance technology that could be deployed on borders between countries and around military bases, according to three people familiar with the plan who asked for anonymity because it's still confidential." The Times cites people familiar with the plan who say Luckey "believes his system, which can be mounted on telephone poles, can be built far more cost effectively than Mr. Trump's proposed wall on the Mexican border – and with fewer obstacles from landowners."

Secretary Zinke Slated For Hearing On Interior Department Budget.

The Nation Sun News (6/5) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will "testify about his department's budget" on Thursday before the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies.

County To Back Mining On Federal Lands.

The Mohave Valley \(AZ\) Daily News (6/4, Seckler) reports that Mohave County supervisors "will look to approve Monday two letters supporting the opening of public lands to mining," and the board "will look to ask the U.S. Department of Interior to review the 2012 withdrawal of land in the Arizona Strip from uranium mining." The board's letter "to current U.S. Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke states that uranium mining does not affect ground water or destroy the natural resources of the land. Once completed, the land is returned to its native state, it says." The board "will also look to send a letter to Zinke to remove monument designations."

Democrats Denied Power To Seek Records From Executive Branch.

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Palazzolo, Viswanatha) reports that the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel has determined that only committees and subcommittees, rather than individual members of Congress, have the authority to request information from the executive branch. The office's acting official in charge, Curtis Gannon, wrote on May 1, "the executive branch's longstanding policy has been to engage in the established process for accommodating congressional requests for information only when those requests come from a committee, subcommittee, or chairman authorized to conduct oversight." The Journal says that Democratic lawmakers have been sending letters daily to the White House on a wide range of issues, including the Russia investigation, ethics, healthcare, and the environment.

A Washington Post (6/2, Bump) analysis says Trump attempted to issue a "blanket ban on oversight requests sent by Democratic lawmakers," which was first reported by Politico. However, according to an Administration spokesperson, departments were told only "to accommodate the requests of chairmen, regardless of their political party," which the Post says is "a neat trick since the chairmen of committees of a Republican-controlled Congress are all Republicans." The piece maintains that such requests are "one of the more nuanced aspects of the checks-and-balances system" and that it is just "one example of Trump's bristling at the formal and informal checks that exist on his power."

Trump Administration Posts 'Help Wanted' Signs For Government Service.

"More than four months after taking office, the president who built his brand telling people 'You're fired!' is having a hard time staffing up," the Los Angeles Times (6/3, Bierman) reports, as "Trump has found it harder to fill out his administration than his recent predecessors." According to the nonpartisan nonprofit Partnership for Public Service, so far the Senate has confirmed just "40 of the 1,242 positions in the federal government that require a vote" as opposed "to 94 confirmed for President George H.W. Bush at this stage in his presidency, 161 for Bill Clinton, 127 for George W. Bush and 150 for Barack Obama." The Times says the Administration "complains that Senate Democrats have used arcane rules to stall the process," but Trump is "far behind his predecessors in submitting nominations." The Times adds "Obama, George W. Bush and Clinton each had nominated more than 200 people requiring a Senate vote at this stage. Trump has put 110 names forward."

It's Time For Alaska To Reckon With The End Of Fossil-Fuel Era.

In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (6/2, Smith), Ceal Smith, research director for the Alaska Climate and Energy Action Network and chair of the Alaska Climate Caucus, warns that "our Earth's climate is rapidly warming – and in Alaska twice as fast as the global average." But "even if climate change weren't biting us, Alaska would do well to acknowledge the abrupt shift in global energy markets that is signaling the end of the fossil-fuel era based solely on economics." Smith argues that "the best move Alaska could make would be to market its remaining low-carbon conventional gas reserves from Point Thomson at a premium to emerging low-carbon energy markets that pay carbon credits, like those in California and the European Union, and leave the rest in the ground."

'War' On Energy Is Over; How Fares The Planet? In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (6/2, Moore), Shannyn Moore, a radio broadcaster, questions why Alaska would want to pursue more energy development in the face of climate change. She notes that "Obama opened up the Beaufort and Chukchi seas, but the oil companies couldn't figure out how to do the job right and pulled out." To Moore, it doesn't make sense "to put short-term financial gains ahead of the future of our planet."

Written Proof That The President's Lobbyist Ban Is Worthless.

The New York Times (6/3) editorializes "we wanted to believe that President Trump was doing the right thing when the White House announced in January that executive branch officials would be banned for two years from working on policy or regulations they once were paid to influence as lobbyists and lawyers," but his promise "seems worthless" as his Administration granted waivers to at least 16 staff members "to let them violate the rule." The Times contends the waivers "are further evidence of the White House's disregard, even contempt, for good government." The Times concludes, "Leave it to Mr. Trump to take an exception to a rule and make it the rule. 'Ethics waivers' are now presidential permission to ignore ethical standards."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Despite $1.2 Billion In Purchases, Tribal Land Buy-back 'Treading Water.'

Cronkite News (6/2, Gilmore) reports that the Interior Department "has 'not accomplished much' in its program to buy up marginal Indian lands and return them to tribes, despite spending two-thirds of a $1.9 billion fund for the program, a department official said recently." Acting Deputy Interior Secretary James Cason "told a House Natural Resources subcommittee that at its current pace, the government will run through the rest of the money from the so-called Cobell settlement before its scheduled 2022 expiration date with little to show for its efforts." Cason told the committee last week, "After expending a total of $1.3 billion to date, it is my view that Interior has not been successful in materially reducing fractional interests. In my mind we are almost back where we started eight years ago, just merely treading water."

BIA Gets Quick Win In Challenge To Tribal Leadership Ruling.

Law360 (6/2, Lidgett) reports that "a federal judge on Thursday said that the Bureau of Indian Affairs did not err in finding that a general council established to serve as the governing body of the California Valley Miwok tribe in 1998 isn't the tribe's valid representative, saying that claims from a faction challenging the decision must fail." U.S. District Judge William B. Shubb gave "a summary judgment win to the federal government in a suit from a faction of the California Valley Miwok tribe led by Silvia Burley."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Pulls Plan To Auction Oil And Gas Leases Near Zion National Park.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/2, Brean) reports that "citing 'substantial feedback from the public,' federal officials in Utah have decided not to open up land just outside Zion National Park for possible oil and gas development, at least not yet." The Bureau of Land Management "announced Friday that it is deferring plans to offer 'fluid mineral leases' on three parcels totaling just over 4,700 acres near the iconic park 160 miles northeast of Las Vegas." The bureau "received tens of thousands of mostly negative public comments about the proposed auction, which was originally set to take place in September."

Additional coverage was provided by the St. George \(UT\) News (6/2, Applegate).

Oregon Hiking Trail Marred By Swastikas, Other Graffiti.

The AP (6/2) reports that "a horseback rider discovered swastikas and other offensive graffiti along a popular trail at Crooked River Ranch in Central Oregon." The group Friends and Neighbors of the Deschutes Canyon Area "plans to help the U.S. Bureau of Land Management remove the spray-painted graffiti."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Can Oil Rigs And Lionfish Bring Us Together?

In an op-ed for the Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (6/3, Gaetz), former state Sen. Don Gaetz opposes lifting the ban on offshore drilling in the eastern Gulf of Mexico. He argues that "America's energy independence doesn't require rigs sprouting from the waves in the eastern Gulf." Furthermore, he notes that the Pentagon has told the Interior Department that "offshore drilling in the Eglin Range interferes with those missions and imperils Northwest Florida's bases."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

There's A New Sheriff On The Gulf.

The Houston Chronicle (6/2, Osborne) reported that the new director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Scott Angelle laid out his vision for the agency while meeting with reporters on Thursday. Angelle said, "The policy of the country is to develop these resources. ... I don't have the luxury of having an agency that's an 'either/or' agency. This agency, it's about safety, it's about environmental sustainability, and it's about energy production. The equation we have is an 'and' equation."

Florida Gov. Scott Approves Plan To Hand Out Oil Spill Money.

The AP (6/2) reported Florida Gov. Rick Scott signed a bill on Friday that guarantees the distribution of $300 million in damages related to the BP oil spill to eight counties hit hardest by the accident. The state is slated to receive $2 billion for economic losses, and received the first payment almost a year ago, but money remained tied up in the legislature.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Congressman Fights With Officials Over Boating-wake Rules.

The AP (6/4) reports that "a wildly unpopular effort to impose wake restrictions on Lake Havasu boaters" has Rep. Paul Gosar "ready to do battle with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, including getting the agency's regional director taken off his job." Gosar "wants to see Benjamin Tuggle removed or relocated." Gosar claimed "Tuggle did not follow proper protocol during the boating restriction proposal and failed to collect public opinion on the action." Gosar said, "(Tuggle) did not follow the law, and there need to be consequences. I'm not done with Fish and Wildlife. I probably can't get Tuggle fired, but I can get him relocated. I'm looking for a deserted island that he can have jurisdiction over. maybe [sic] someplace out near the Bahamas."

Removal Of Dry Tortugas Croc Troubles Experts.

The Miami Herald (6/2, Staletovich) reports that experts are questioning the decision to remove "a rare crocodile from the remote islands in the Dry Tortugas it had peacefully inhabited for 14 years." According to the article, "the request from Everglades National Park Superintendent Pedro Ramos to move the croc came at 5:39 p.m. on a Friday afternoon, when U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service croc experts were unavailable to weigh in on the plan." Ramos "included emails from the park's chief biologist and Dry Tortugas manager relaying increased concerns about visitors feeding the croc, but gave only one example of a specific threat: the croc swimming toward a chum bag dangled off a boat by an angler in early May." The article says that "faced with the dire warnings, FWS state supervisor Larry Williams was left with little choice but to agree two hours later." South Florida wildlife biologist Joe Wasilewski said, "It wasn't good science. It wasn't good management. It was hasty. There should have been some consultation with a croc biologist, and if they did, they should have consulted with more because every croc biologist I know would be opposed to just grabbing him and putting him in the Everglades.”

Expansion Of Prairie Dog Vaccine Proposed.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/2) reports that “use of an oral vaccine that protects prairie dogs from the plague will be expanded on the Charles M. Russell and UL Bend National Wildlife Refuges in Montana under a plan proposed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” The new plan would “allow for vaccine distribution on wilderness areas within the refuges and on nearby private lands when requested by landowners.” The FWS has “completed an environmental assessment for the action and is seeking public comment on the proposal.”

Judge Casts Out Enviros’ Bull Trout Suit Against FWS.

Law360 (6/2, Lidgett) reports that U.S. District Judge Michael W. Mosman on Friday “agreed with a magistrate judge’s recommendation to grant the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s bid to dismiss a complaint alleging that it hasn’t done enough to protect the bull trout’s cold-water habitat from global warming, rejecting objections from the environmental groups that filed the suit.” Mosman “dismissed eight Endangered Species Act claims with leave to renew and one Administrative Procedures Act with prejudice.”

Federal Fish Hatchery Recovers From The Ravages Of The June 2016 Floods.

The Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (6/3, McCoy) reports that “eleven months after flooding knocked the White Sulphur Springs National Fish Hatchery out of business, it’s almost open for business again.” Tyler Hern, the hatchery’s lead fish biologist, said, “By 2018, we’ll be able to meet our [trout-egg] obligations again. We won’t be completely back to normal until 2019, but we’re getting there.”

Wildlife Officials Investigating Grizzly Bear Shooting Death.

The AP (6/2) reports that “state and federal wildlife officials are investigating after a male grizzly bear that had been shot to death was found in the Stillwater River in northwestern Montana.” According to the article, “investigators believe the bear may have been dumped off a bridge west of Whitefish between May 25 and May 28, when boaters found the carcass in the water.”

Fish And Wildlife Names 2016 Recovery Champion.

The Eastern Arizona Courier (6/3, Sowders) reports that Scott Richardson, “a senior U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist, was recently named a 2016 Recovery Champion for his work with an endangered species.” Richardson earned the honor “for his work with the lesser long-nosed bat.” In a May 22 press release announcing the award, FWS cited Richardson for “years of dedication to science” and “motivating and coalescing conservation efforts resulting in the bat’s recovery.” FWS Arizona Field Supervisor Steve Spangle said, “Scott engages everyone equally and takes to heart that people can’t support science they don’t understand.”

National Park Service

Free Admission To National Parks For Fourth-graders, Families.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/3, Oide) reports that fourth-graders and their families are “eligible for free admission to national parks and other federal lands.” WAVY-TV Norfolk, VA (6/2) reports that the National Park Service is “again offering a fourth grade pass with its ‘Every Kid in a Park’ program.”

County Joins Push For Parks Repairs.

The Montgomery \(WV\) Herald (6/4, Plummer) reports that the Fayette County Commission “became one of more than 1,600 local and county governments nationwide – including several other local governments – to formally support legislation to repair deteriorating National Park Service assets.” The Fayette County Commission “agreed to pass a resolution supporting” the National Park Service Legacy Act. The commission also “voted to write letters to West Virginia’s congressional representatives urging them to support and consider sponsoring The National Park Service Legacy Act.”

Yellowstone Park Says Its Winning Against Non-native Fish.

The AP (6/4) reports that “researchers trying to preserve native cutthroat trout in Yellowstone National Park say they are on track to eliminate non-native fish from Yellowstone Lake in about a decade.” The National Park Service is “trying to get rid of lake trout, which were discovered in Yellowstone Lake in 1994.” Researchers, who “use nets to remove lake trout,” have “removed 2.6 million pounds (1.2 million kilograms) since 1996, including more than 366,000 pounds (166,000 kilograms) last year.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (6/4), the Daily Mail (6/4), Philly \(PA\) (6/4), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/4, Press), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/4).

DWG Park Ranger Retiring After 25 Years.

The Pocono \(PA\) Record (6/4, Scott) reports that supervisory park ranger Christopher Kross “retired recently after 25 years with the Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area.” Kross has “been a key member of the search-and-rescue and high-angle rescue teams, taking part in more than 100 search-and-rescue missions in the park and on surrounding public lands.” The article notes that “for his outstanding work over the years, Kross has been twice nominated for the National Park Service’s Harry Yount Award.”

Solo Climber Is 1st Up Mighty California Rock Without Ropes.

The AP (6/4, RODRIGUEZ) reports that “elite rock climber” Alex Honnold this weekend became the first to climb El Capitan in Yosemite National Park “without any safety gear for eight years.” It took him “about four hours using only his hands and feet.”

Army Helicopter Rescues Canadian Cop From Mount Rainier.

The AP (6/2) reports that the National Park Service “says a member of Canada’s national police force was rescued by an Army helicopter near the summit of Mount Rainier.” Dennis Endong Cui, 27, was “hoisted from the top of Gibraltar’s Rock on the south side of Mount Rainier Thursday afternoon.” The NPS “says Cui and two other climbers went up Fuhrer Finger Wednesday when Cui became ill and said he couldn’t go on.”

Body Found In Utah’s Zion National Park.

The AP (6/2) reports that “authorities found a body in Zion National Park while they were investigating calls about an abandoned vehicle.” According to the article, “the body was recovered on Thursday by park staff.” The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/3, Lacanlale) reports that the death has been “ruled a suicide, the National Park Service said.”

Climber Killed In Fall On Devils Tower; 1st Death Since 2003.

The AP (6/4) reports that “a climber has died in a fall from Devils Tower,” according to authorities. The National Park Service “says it was the first climbing death there since 2003.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Pacific Islands Accuse US Of ‘Abandoning’ Them To Climate Change.

Firstpost \(IND\) (6/2) reports that “Pacific Islands, at risk of being swallowed by the rising seas, accused Washington of ‘abandoning’ vulnerable nations and expressed dismay on Friday after Donald Trump pulled the United States out of the Paris climate deal.” According to the article, “leaders of a cluster of small remote island states in the Pacific, which are at the forefront of the battle against climate change and already suffering the effects of unpredictable weather, expressed deep disappointment at the controversial move.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Special Broadcasting Service \(AUS\) (6/2, Pearl), Radio New Zealand (6/1), and UpRoxx (6/1, Shrayber).

Remote Pacific Regions Set For Broadband Internet Under New World Bank Projects.

SatPRNews \(POL\) (6/1, Rutkowski) reports that the World Bank’s Board of Executive Directors has approved $36 million in grants “to help provide reliable fiber optic broadband internet to approximately 80,000 people in Kiribati and the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM).” The grants, including $20 million for Kiribati and $16.26 million for FSM, “will finance the installation of a submarine cable system connecting Tarawa (Kiribati) to Nauru, and Kosrae state (FSM) to Pohnpei state (FSM), which is connected to global networks.” The projects are “part of the Pacific Regional Connectivity Program, which aims to bring more reliable and affordable internet to the majority of countries in the Pacific Islands."

US Geological Survey

From Elevators To Trains, Earthquake Early Warning System Grows As Trump Threatens To Kill It.

"While the future of the West Coast's earthquake early warning system is in peril from President Trump's proposed budget cuts, the network is on the verge of a breakthrough in California," the Los Angeles Times (6/2, Lin) reports, as "businesses and government agencies have begun working with the U.S. Geological Survey to test the system." The Times highlights these advances and warns that "the rapid progress could all unravel if President Trump's budget is approved." The Times adds that the Interior Department "is proposing no funding for the system this year, and 'would end USGS efforts to implement the ShakeAlert earthquake early warning system, suspending internal efforts and eliminating external funding to partners' such as Caltech, UC Berkeley, the University of Oregon and the University of Washington." Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, said Thursday that the Administration's proposal is "incredibly misguided and dangerous, and undercuts the $23 million already invested in the program."

Congress Should Fund Earthquake Warning System. In an editorial, the Seattle Times (6/4) urges Congress to continue funding for "an earthquake warning system for the West Coast." The paper says "one inexpensive way to protect millions of citizens is to warn them of major earthquakes, which are a real and persistent threat."

Top National News

Trump Reiterates Need For "Travel Ban" In Wake Of London Attack.

President Trump's response to the London terrorist attack sparked unfavorable media reviews and derision from London Mayor Sadiq Khan and former Obama officials. While media coverage split along ideological lines on the issue of Trump's immigration order, there was near unanimity in the assessment that Trump had taken Khan's comments in the aftermath of the attack out of context. Typical of much of the coverage of Trump's reaction was ABC World News Tonight (6/4, story 4, 2:00, Wright), which reported that for Trump, the "panicked scenes in London were an opportunity to settle old scores." A scathing, front-page piece by Philip Rucker in the Washington Post (6/4, A1) charges that Trump "reacted impulsively...by stoking panic and fear...and capitalizing on it to advocate for one of his more polarizing policies and to advance a personal feud." The Los Angeles Times (6/4, King), meanwhile, refers to a "discordant note" by Trump after the attack, and to Bloomberg Politics (6/4, Campbell), his "eagerness to turn the London attack to domestic political advantage...will put further pressure on US-UK relations."

Others in the media were even more vocal in their angry dismissal of Trump. The Hill (6/4, Concha) noted that "MSNBC anchor Thomas Roberts twice asked if...Trump 'is trying to provoke a domestic terrorist attack' during a Sunday afternoon segment." Roberts asked "Atlanta Mayor Kasim Reed (D), 'Is the president trying to provoke a domestic terrorist attack with this Twitter rant because – only to prove himself right?'" The Gateway Pundit (6/3, Taylor) noted that on Saturday evening, "religious scholar Reza Aslan, host of CNN's Believer, went on a profane Twitter rant against...Trump," calling him a "piece of s---", a "stain on the presidency" and an "embarrassment to America and humanity" over his "calling for reinstatement of his travel ban." Aslan, notes today's Boston Globe (6/5, Reiss), "apologized" last night, writing on Twitter, "I should not have used a profanity to describe the President when responding to his shocking reaction to the #LondonAttacks."

To the New York Times (6/4, Grynbaum), it was a case of "the cycle of partisan broadsides and ideological combat that seems to dominate the media universe these days" kicking "into high gear," with Aslan's original message prompting "expressions of outrage from right-wing news outlets like Breitbart News and the hosts of 'Fox & Friends.'" However, adds the Times, "The backlash against Mr. Trump's tweets...went beyond Mr. Aslan," as "critics pointed to the president's criticism of London's mayor."

The Washington Post (6/4, Selk) reports that in the hours after the attacks, "those world leaders who did speak out early were largely circumspect. Restrained. Sympathetic. ... And then there was...Trump," who even before London police "or anyone else had announced that the attack was linked to terrorism," retweeted "an unsourced blurb" from the Drudge Report: "Fears of new terror attack after van 'mows down 20 people' on London Bridge." On Sunday morning, notes Reuters (6/4, Morgan), Trump urged the world to stop being "politically correct" in order to ensure security, tweeting, "We must stop being politically correct and get down to the business of security for our people. If we don't get smart it will only get worse." Trump also tweeted, "We need to be smart, vigilant and tough. We need the courts to give us back our rights. We need the Travel Ban as an extra level of safety!"

Bloomberg Politics (6/4, Campbell) notes that "Trump's travel-ban comment was his first reaction on Twitter to the London attack," and that he "followed it about eight minutes later with a more conventional expression of concern: 'Whatever the United States can do to help out in London and the UK, we will be there – WE ARE WITH YOU. GOD BLESS!'"

In a later tweet, says USA Today (6/4, Przybyla), Trump "seemed to blast the gun control debate in the United States," writing, "Do you notice we are not having a gun debate right now? That's because they used knives and a truck!" To the Washington Examiner (6/4, Feldscher), Trump was poking "at Democrats and other gun control activists...noting their silence in the wake of the attacks."

The Wall Street Journal (6/4, Nicholas) reports Trump also appeared to suggest Khan was downplaying the threat posed by terrorism, tweeting, "At least 7 dead and 48 wounded in terror attack and Mayor of London says there is 'no reason to be alarmed!'" The New York Times (6/4, Baker) says the President was reacting to a BBC interview in which the mayor had said that residents had "no reason to be alarmed" as they encounter more police patrolling the streets. However, the Times says the President's post "mischaracterized what Mr. Khan said about the attack." During the interview, Khan also said he was "appalled and furious that these cowardly terrorists would target" innocent civilians and vowed that "we will never let them win, nor will we allow them to cover our city."

The AP (6/4) likewise indicates that Khan "did use those words in a television interview, but it was to reassure Londoners about a stepped up police presence," the Washington Times (6/4, Miller) said "the president appeared to take Mr. Khan's quote out of context," and the New York Post (6/4, Brown) that "Khan's comment was in relation to the increased police presence following the attack." The Washington Post (6/4, Selk) reports that a spokesman for Khan responded that the mayor "has more important things to do than respond to...Trump's ill-informed tweet that deliberately takes out of context his remarks."

The Hill (6/4, Savransky) noted that "Khan, the son of Pakistani immigrants, became the first Muslim mayor of a major Western capital when he was elected last year." As Politico (6/3, McCaskill, Morin) recounts, "Khan criticized Trump during the US presidential campaign, tweeting in May 2016 that his 'ignorant view of Islam could make both our countries less safe' and 'risks alienating mainstream Muslims.'" At any rate, the New York Times (6/4, Baker) reports, "it was not the first time a member of the Trump family criticized Mr. Khan." Back "in March, after a terrorist attack in London, Donald Trump Jr., the president's son, posted a link to an article in Britain's Independent newspaper from the previous September quoting Mr. Khan about terrorism. 'You have to be kidding me?! Terror attacks are part of living in big city, says London Mayor Sadiq Khan,' the younger Mr. Trump wrote at the time." The Times adds that "Trump's post left the impression that Mr. Khan was minimizing the importance of terrorist attacks."

In fact, ABC World News Tonight (6/4, story 4, 2:00, Wright) reported, "Trump and Khan have clashed before over the travel ban." The mayor was shown saying, "I think the ban is cruel and shameful, and our prime minister should not be condoning it." ABC added that "Khan called for Trump's state visit to be canceled. Soon after the controversy, the White House agreed to postpone the trip."

Politico Europe (6/4, Paun) reported that "Trump's jibe at Khan drew criticism from Conservative British politicians, including Penny Mordaunt, the minister of state for the Department for Work and Pensions, and Britain's EU Commissioner for the Security Union Julian King." Tory MP Daniel Hannan tweeted that "this was 'not a great moment to insult the mayor of the capital city of your chief ally, Mr President. Alarm is the last thing we need right now.'"

On CNN's State of the Union (6/4, Tapper), Al Gore said in reaction to Trump's tweet attacking Khan, "I actually happened to see the statement from the mayor of London, and that's not what I heard him say, and I don't think that a major terrorist attack like this is the time to be divisive and criticize a mayor who is trying to organize his city's response to this attack. The terrorists want us to live in a state of constant fear and having an effective response is the main thing, and it looks to me like the London police were there in six minutes and the scourge of terrorism has to be defeated. We have to defeat it not only with force of arms but force of our values.”

Trump Golfs Two Days In A Row After London Terror Attacks. The New York Post (6/4, Schultz) reports that after “firing off some tweets about the London terrorist attacks,” Trump spent a second day in a row at his Trump National Golf Club in Sterling, Virginia yesterday, according to pool reports. The Post says Trump “often blasted his predecessor” for golf outings, “especially following terror attacks.” For instance, on October 13, 2014 Trump tweeted, “Can you believe that, with all of the problems and difficulties facing the US, President Obama spent the day playing golf. Worse than Carter.”

The Indianapolis \(IN\) Star (6/4, Horner) reports former Indianapolis Colts quarterback Peyton Manning and Sen. Bob Corker joined the President yesterday for golf, “according to several reports.” The Star says that while Manning “has denied interest in running for office,” that “doesn’t mean he can’t rub elbows with politicians.”

Lewandowski Defends Travel Order. Former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said on Fox News MediaBuzz (6/4), “Our thoughts and prayers with the victims and the families in London and the President said that he will stand firm with anything he can do to help the people there. ... But you have to remember, we have seen courts legislating from the bench prohibiting the President from implementing a program which will call for extreme vetting coming into the United States. These are the same courts which have decided to legislate from the bench as opposed to interpret the rules that the President clearly has a constitutional authority to implement on behalf of the people of our country. And what he said is that our system is not designed right now to make sure that we know who’s coming into our country, so we have to stop being politically correct so that we’re saving American lives and hopefully we don’t have terrorist attacks on our own soil.”

NYTimes’ Martin: Trump Hurting His Own Legal Case. Asked about Trump’s tweets, Jonathan Martin of the New York Times said on CNN Inside Politics (6/4), “Politically and legally he is endangering his own so-called ban. First, by calling it a ban, and secondly, this was supposed to be a temporary 90-day deal until you figured out a more permanent policy on these migrants, and now he’s basically casting it as an indefinite ban on people from all of these countries.”

US Cities “On Alert”; FBI Says 2,000 “Potential Terrorists” In US. ABC World News Tonight (6/4, story 6, 1:20, Llamas) reported major US cities are “on alert after the attacks in London. The fear, a copycat. ... The concern, homegrown terror. Investigations in all 50 states. The FBI [is] saying 2,000 potential terrorists in the US, half of those may have had contact with terror groups like ISIS.”

American Among Those Injured In Attack. The CBS Weekend News (6/4, story 2, 1:55, Morgan) reported the victims of Saturday’s attack “hail from around the globe,” with a Canadian and a Frenchman among the dead while “American, British, German and Spanish are among the wounded.”

Warner Says No Specific Terrorist Threats Against US. On CNN’s State of the Union (6/4, Tapper), Sen. Warner said about the possibility of terrorism in the United States in the wake of the London attack, “I received a brief this morning from our national center of counter terrorism center,” and “there’s no specific threat against the United States. ... What you’re seeing in Britain is a resoluteness and recognition that as the British went through three decades of terrorism, they’ll carry-on. I think in many ways that’s what we need to do here.” On CBS’ Face the Nation (6/4, Dickerson), Warner said about the possibility of regulating cyberspace to better defend against terrorism threats: “I think we do need to reexamine the roles of all of these platform companies, the Facebook, the Twitters, the Googles, and recognize there may need to be some responsibility to curate information.”

Blunt Says Muslim Communities Must Confront Extremism; Collins Calls For “Better” Vetting. The Washington Times (6/4, Miller) reports that appearing on Fox News Sunday, Sen. Roy Blunt “said Sunday that the Muslim communities must take responsibility for the fight against homegrown terrorism.” Said Blunt, “We need to talk about it, our friends who are Muslim need to admit that this extreme sense of Islam that results in these attacks has to be called for what it is and we have to try to do what we can to intervene.”

Blunt also told Fox News Sunday (6/4, Wallace), “ISIS tends to take credit for the things that you can steal a truck, get your van drive in the car, terrorized people with very little planning or backup. Other groups believe are looking at other things we believe and we are constantly have to be vigilant, I think Secretary Kelly is right when he says that only because we have been fortunate and worked hard to prevent this have we not had these kinds of attacks here.”

NBC Nightly News (6/4, story 3, 2:20, O’Donnell), meanwhile, reported that “some Republicans, concerned about the specific” travel ban sought by the President, say he “has a point." Sen. Susan Collins was shown saying, "We need to do a better job of vetting individuals who are coming from war-torn countries into our nation." On CBS' Face the Nation (6/4, Dickerson), Collins had prefaced her statement indicating, "I think that the travel ban is too broad and that is why it has been rejected by the courts."

The CBS Weekend News (6/4, story 5, 1:45, Morgan) showed Sen. Mark Warner saying on CNN's "State of the Union," "Don't continue to call for this travel ban, which is, frankly, all of the leaders of the intelligence community have said would be, in effect, would be a slap in the face to Muslim Americans and others, and in many ways, might actually incite more incidents."

Kerry, Susan Rice: Travel Ban Will Help Terrorists. On NBC's Meet the Press (6/4, Todd), former Secretary of State John Kerry said in response to the London attack: "The fact is if people want to kill themselves, this is really hard for law enforcement. ... And what we really need to do is focus more...not on a travel ban. ... A travel ban will be cannon fodder to the recruiters. It's the worst thing we can do. But a great deal more effort has to go into the building of community, the reaching out and working with these entities, these sectors of society."

Bloomberg Politics (6/4, Niquette, Brody) reports former National Security Adviser Susan Rice similarly told ABC's This Week that there is no evidence that a travel ban would make the US safer. In fact, she said, "there's a very real risk that by stigmatizing and isolating Muslims from particular countries, and Muslims in general, that we alienate the very communities here in the United States whose cooperation we most need to detect and prevent these home-grown extremists from being able to carry out attacks." The Washington Times (6/4, Miller) notes that Rice argued that "to protect Americans from such attacks, which appeared to be carried out by radical Islamic terrorists, the US must 'strengthen our intelligence, our law enforcement, and work together with critical partners like the United Kingdom.'"

Gore: We Need To Defeat "Scourge Of Terrorism" With "Force Of Our Values." Al Gore said about the London attack on Fox News Sunday (6/4, Wallace), "Most of the attacks, both in England and here in the United States have been by homegrown terrorists, and of course the courts will deal with the travel ban. They've already been struck down, we will see what the Supreme Court does. This scourge of terrorism, we have to defeat it, but we have to defeat it not only with the force of arms but with the force of our values. I truly believe that giving people around the world a sense that the world has our act together and we will move forward to a bright future, is one of the important tasks at hand."

WSJournal: Debate Needed On Surveillance, Terrorism. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/4) casts the President's tweet calling for his travel ban as too harsh, but warns his opponents that opposition to surveillance and to an honest debate on the nature of the terror threat will make Trump-style politics ever more popular across the country – and even within the political class.

White House Unable To Answer Whether Trump Believes In Climate Change.

President Trump, Vice President Pence, and a half dozen top officials spoke out Friday in defense of the President's decision to pull the US out of the Paris climate accord, but the extensive coverage was almost uniformly negative in the cable and network newscasts as well as in print and online. Reporting highlighted that no White House official was able to state whether Trump still believes climate change is a hoax and showcased the many municipal, state, and international promises to strengthen the climate agreement regardless of the US withdrawal.

The Los Angeles Times (6/2) reports the President "shared a Twitter moment consisting of statements praising his decision to withdraw from the Paris climate change accord" and "retweeted a message from radio host and conservative commentator Tammy Bruce in which she promoted an upcoming appearance on Fox News' 'Fox & Friends'" where she "slammed the Paris accord as 'climate reparations' and called it 'a reinforcement of a globalist dynamic that had nothing to do with the issue' of climate change." Trump additionally "retweeted a message from his son Eric that linked to a Reuters report on the three major U.S. stock indices closing at record highs on Thursday." The Huffington Post (6/2, Moran) says that the President "turned to his favorite social media platform in an apparent effort to find support and justify a decision that analysts say has brought America's era of global leadership to an end." According to the Post, within "minutes, Trump retweeted seven flattering posts" and "managed to squeeze in an extra plug for his upcoming appearance on the Fox network."

The Washington Post (6/2, Wagner) reports the President's announcement and White House have "cast the decision as being in the best interests of coal miners and other working-class Americans whose support helped sweep him into office." According to the Post, "Trump's withdrawal from the Paris accord plays particularly well with rural backers who embraced his

'America First' mantra and are wary of the impact of Obama-era deals cut with allies overseas." In a Washington Post (6/2, Balz) analysis, Dan Balz describes Trump's decision as "the clearest statement yet of convictions and principles that make up his worldview. 'America First' is more than a mere slogan. ... It is the sum of long-standing beliefs – and grievances – about the way things are and ought to be." Balz adds that "implicit" in the President's arguments is "the assertion that his approach will produce more jobs, more economic wealth and a better life for the working men and women who have been harmed by past global agreements" or at least "prevent the further loss of jobs for those forgotten Americans, as he has described them."

The Los Angeles Times (6/2, Decker) similarly says that Trump's "lengthy – and disputed – economic and foreign policy explanations...for ceding U.S. leadership on the issue were cast in terms that aimed to please his 2016 voters, those who were older, whiter and more rural than the nation as a whole." The Times adds the "decision was greeted with applause in his strongholds in places such as western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, whose economies have long been dependent on fossil fuels, primarily coal, that would be restricted by the Paris agreement's terms for reducing emissions."

However, Kristen Welker of NBC Nightly News (6/2, story 3, 2:30, Diaz-Balart) reported that at the center of the "mounting fallout" is a White House "unable to answer a key question: 'Does the President believe today that climate change is a hoax?'" On CNN's Situation Room (6/2, 5:07 p.m. EDT, 7:02, Blitzer), White House correspondent Jim Acosta reported, "the White House cannot answer [that] critical question" and he said on CNN's Situation Room (6/2, 6:07 p.m. EDT, 7:03, Blitzer) that when reporters "asked once again whether he believes climate change is a hoax" and "whether he believes it is real," the President "did not answer the question." Acosta added, "Once again, he left it to his top aides and administration officials," including Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, who struggled on Friday "to provide some climate cover."

"The White House refused to say on Friday whether...Trump still believed that climate change was a hoax, as he said for years before taking office," the New York Times (6/2, A1, Baker) reports on its front-page, and "under questioning, each of the president's advisers said they could not answer what he actually believed about the science of the issue." Pruitt told reporters, "What's interesting about all the discussions that we had through the last several weeks have been focused on one singular issue: Is Paris good or not for this country? That's the discussions I've had with the president."

The Huffington Post (6/2, Kaufman) reports Pruitt added "he doesn't 'know what it means to deny the climate' in a defiant rebuke of his critics." Pruitt asserted, "People have called me a climate skeptic or climate denier. I would say that they were climate exaggerators." Reuters (6/2, Gardner, Heavey) reports Pruitt also "said he had indicated that global warming is occurring, and that 'human activity contributes to it in some manner. Measuring with precision, from my perspective, the degree of human contribution is very challenging.'"

In addition, the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Ballhaus, Stokols) reports White House press secretary Sean Spicer said, "I have not had an opportunity to have that discussion" with Trump but promised "if I can, I will" get clarification from the President. The Washington Post (6/2, Johnson) reports White House senior counselor Kellyanne Conway said on ABC News's "Good Morning America," "The president believes in a clean environment, clean air, clean water. He has received awards as a businessman, in that regard." The Post adds that its fact-checkers "have yet to find any evidence of those awards." When asked to follow up, Conway added, "You need to ask him that, and I hope that you have your chance."

David Axelrod, a senior adviser to former President Obama, told CNN's Situation Room (6/2, 5:41 p.m. EDT, 41:24, Blitzer), "Plainly, the White House doesn't want to answer that question because either way they go, they buy themselves some trouble. If the President walks away from his past statements – calling climate change a hoax and, you know, general skepticism about the issue – he antagonizes his base. If he reiterates that position, then he brings another firestorm down on himself. So they have chosen this very awkward netherworld, and they send the human pincushion Sean Spicer out there to say, after getting two days of questions about this, that, 'Gee, I hadn't gotten a chance to ask the President that question on the day that he absents the United States from the most significant climate change agreement in global history.'" The Daily Caller's White House correspondent, Kaitlan Collins, similarly told CNN's Situation Room (6/2, 6:44 p.m. EDT, 44:36, Blitzer), "I don't think the President's opinion on climate change has changed that much since when he tweeted a few years ago it was a hoax and BS. And the White House knows that, so they don't want to answer."

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (6/2, Persons) reports the Vice President in an interview with “Fox & Friends” said the President “made it very clear that we’re withdrawing from the Paris accord and we’re putting the American worker, the American economy first, but you also heard him leave the door open to negotiating a better arrangement, [and] maybe re-entering the Paris accord under new terms and new conditions.” The Hill (6/2, Greenwood) reports Pence “questioned why climate change is such a ‘paramount issue for the left’” while the Huffington Post (6/2, Miller) says that he “dismissed any ‘apocalyptic predictions’ surrounding Trump’s decision, noting that the U.S. has already ‘demonstrated real progress’ in reducing carbon emissions.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Schwartz) reports Secretary of State Tillerson told reporters, “I think it’s important that everyone recognize the United States has a terrific record on reducing our own greenhouse gas emissions; it’s something I think we can be proud of and that was done in the absence of the Paris agreement.” Tillerson said, “I don’t think we’re going to change our ongoing efforts to reduce those emissions in the future, either.” Reuters (6/2, Torbati) says that he indicated the Administration “will continue its efforts to reduce its greenhouse gas emissions despite...Trump’s decision to leave the Paris climate accord” and Politico (6/2, Restuccia) reports Tillerson “declined to specifically endorse the move.”

The Hill (6/2, Hensch) reports Education Secretary DeVos also “defended President Trump’s decision to withdraw from the Paris climate agreement, but told reporters that she ‘certainly’ believes in climate change,” but when “asked how humans could help slow climate change...said, ‘I don’t have an answer.’” The Huffington Post (6/2, Miller) reports that despite her “glowing praise” for the President, DeVos “was noticeably tight-lipped regarding her own beliefs on climate change.” Speaking at a student science fair at Eagle Academy Public Charter School in Washington, DeVos said, “I’m here to talk about students and schools today, and I would hope that we could focus on the opportunity that these kids have in this unique environment and this unique school with amazing teachers and administrators.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Landers) reports Energy Secretary Perry said in an interview Friday that he doesn’t “have a problem with” China taking “the mantle of leadership on the climate.” Perry added that “huge emitter[s]” of pollution like China “need to clean their air up,” and dismissed claims that the US is stepping back from leading the world in environmental protection as “political blather.”

Under the headline “Trump’s Paris Rejection A Defeat For Deal’s White House Backers,” The Hill (6/2, Easley, Parnes) describes the President’s decision as “a stinging defeat to advisers and close family members who had advocated for Trump to keep the United States in the pact” – daughter Ivanka Trump, her husband Jared Kushner, Tillerson, and Cohn – as well as a victory for “the advisers who are seen as closest to the base: Chief strategist Stephen Bannon,” Pence, Pruitt, and Conway. The AP (6/2, Lederman, Lee) calls the withdrawal from the Paris accord “the latest challenge he has presented to Tillerson, a newcomer himself to the world of diplomacy who is still working to establish his credibility as an advocate of American foreign policy.”

In an article titled “Steve Bannon Is Great Again (In Trump’s Eyes),” the Boston Globe (6/2, Pindell) says the ruling shows “Bannon is back in power, and his influence appears to be growing.” Breitbart (6/2, Pollak) reports MSNBC’s Morning Joe host Joe Scarborough similarly “fumed at...Trump’s decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Accords by blaming Bannon” and he “kept returning to the ‘President Bannon’ theme.”

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (6/2, A1, Eilperin, Dennis) reports Pruitt has also “emerged as one of the most influential policy architects in the president’s Cabinet, a skilled and sometimes brash lawyer who is methodically taking apart a slew of regulations and agreements affecting everything from manufacturing operations to landfills.” The Post highlight that Pruitt “played a decisive role in convincing the president that it made sense to abandon the U.S. commitment to cut its greenhouse gas emissions under the 2015 international agreement.” However, EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman “emphasized that Pruitt is focused on executing the strategy that Trump laid out for his Cabinet,” saying, “Administrator Pruitt is implementing President Trump’s executive orders to protect the environment, save manufacturing jobs and promote American energy independence.”

Nonetheless, Pentagon Correspondent Barbara Starr reported that CNN’s Situation Room (6/2, 6:56 p.m. EDT, 56:36, Blitzer) is “learning how concerned some are inside the Administration” about Trump’s decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord. Starr said “the US intelligence community and the Pentagon have warned for months climate change could lead to war” because “weather disasters forced 21 million people out of their homes last year,” and in Somalia, “hundreds of thousands of people have been displaced not by war, but by drought and famine.” Starr added, “During his confirmation process, Defense Secretary James Mattis wrote, ‘Climate change can be a driver of instability,’” and “a Director of National Intelligence report warned just nine months ago, ‘When climate-related effects overwhelm a state’s capacity to respond or recover, its authority can be so undermined” that “in the most dramatic cases, state authority may collapse.” Reuters (6/2, Torbati) similarly reports the decision to pull out of the climate agreement and the President’s “apparent disregard for climate science is at odds with the U.S. military’s consensus on the risks of climate change to security.”

Mayors, Governors Vow To Support Paris Accord. ABC World News Tonight’s (6/2, story 2, 2:55, Muir) Mary Bruce reported the White House gave “a staunch defense of the President’s controversial decision,” but “from Mexico City, to New York, to Paris itself, buildings [were] bathed in green in support of the agreement.”

The CBS Evening News (6/2, story 2, 2:00, Mason) reported that across the nation, “governors and mayors are saying that if the President won’t lead the way on protecting the environment, they will.” Correspondent Carter Evans interviewed California Gov. Jerry Brown as he “was boarding a flight to Beijing to attend a clean energy summit. He’s going as the leader of the sixth richest economy in the world – the state of California.” Brown said the President “is wrong on the facts, wrong on the science, wrong on the economy.” The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Lazo) similarly highlights California’s status as a national leader in combating climate change.

The Boston Globe (6/2, Abel) reports Massachusetts Governor Charlie Baker on Friday “joined the governors of New York, California, and Washington state to form the ‘United States Climate Alliance,’ which they said would strive to stick to the nation’s commitments in the Paris accord.” In a statement, Baker said, “As the commonwealth reiterates its commitment to exceed the emission reduction targets of the Paris Climate Agreement, today we join the US Climate Alliance to expand on our efforts while partnering with other states to combat climate change.”

Reuters (6/2, Gaffen) reports New York Governor Andrew Cuomo also said Friday his state will invest in renewable energy “in an effort to create as many as 40,000 jobs by 2020.” Newsday \(NY\) (6/2, Harrington) reports the state will seek bids for $1.5 billion in projects in the wake of President Trump’s decision to exit the Paris climate accord.

USA Today (6/2, Groppe) says mayors from both parties representing a number of cities nationwide also “pledged Friday to take the lead in reducing the nation’s carbon footprint.” The Hill (6/2, Bowden) reports their efforts will be assisted by former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, who on Friday “pledged $15 million from his philanthropy efforts to the United Nations to pay the United States’ contribution under the Paris climate accord.” During a press conference, Bloomberg asserted, “The United States, through strong action from local leaders, businesses and investors, remains committed to fulfilling the Paris agreement.”

Meanwhile, Bryan Llenas of Fox News’ Special Report (6/2, 6:11 p.m. EDT, 11:33, Rosen) reported Pittsburgh Mayor Bill Peduto “says he’s offended the President evoked an image of a dirty city” by crediting his decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord in part to protect cities like Pittsburgh. Peduto said in video footage, “During the 1980s and 1990s, when we said our future economy may not be based upon big manufacturing, we were able to turn the corner in building a new economy. Pittsburgh is the poster child of showing why the Paris agreement is a good economics for the United States.” Peduto on Friday also “signed an executive order promising Pittsburgh will be one of at least 92 cities nationwide that will continue to honor the Paris climate accords in defiance of the President.”

While Trump justified his decision by saying he was “elected to represent the citizens of Pittsburgh, not Paris,” the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Hanrahan, Maher) reports Peduto asserted on CNN (6/2, Watkins), “We didn’t invest in our past, we invested in our future. We are the example of what the Paris agreement could mean to jobs and the economy in the United States.” The New York Times (6/2, Lyons, Badger, Blinder) “The Upshot” blog in an analysis argues the President “picked the wrong city” as “the former steel hub has spent the last 30 years trying to remake its economy in precisely the mold that climate advocates envision.” According to the Times, Trump “seemed to be reaching for a stereotype of a coarse industry town where workers would cheer the return of coal (and where they might also scoff at the comparison to Paris),” but “many are no longer waiting for old industry to return.” The Times adds that “if anything, the city today stands to be affected more by Mr. Trump’s threats to repeal the Affordable Care Act than by his promises to revive the steel and coal industries.”

USA Today (6/2, Hughes) reports on the effects of climate change on Sarichef Island, Alaska, which “loses somewhere between nine and 22 feet of shoreline every year” according to federal officials. Residents “worry that President Trump’s decision to pull out of the Paris climate agreement will” accelerate the erosion. Though they saw little help in the eight years the lobbied the Obama Administration, they worry that Trump will be worse. “He doesn’t believe climate change is real,” one resident warned, calling it “scary.”

However, Breitbart (6/2, Riehl) reports “several Breitbart News Daily SiriusXM listeners from Pennsylvania called in...to express their support for President Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accords" while in a segment on the future of coal, NBC Nightly News (6/2, story 4, 2:00, Diaz-Balart) Anne Thompson noted coal miners in West Virginia are "more optimistic" and in a front page article, the Washington Post (6/2, Samuels) details increasing optimism in Gillette, Wyoming as residents are "beginning to feel the comeback they voted for." The Post highlights the coal industry's struggles in Wyoming under the previous Administration, which locals believe was driven by politics, not facts. Nonetheless, the Post concedes "Trump's decision on Paris wasn't what many here wanted," as several of the coal companies in the state wanted the US to stay in the agreement.

Politico (6/2, Juliano) reports Trump's campaign "announced a 'Pittsburgh, not Paris' rally across from the White House on Saturday to celebrate the United States' withdrawal from a global climate agreement." According to Politico, the Fairfax County Republican Committee and the Republican Party of Virginia are sponsoring the event to "demonstrate our support for President Trump and his fearless leadership."

World Leaders Recommit To Paris Accords. The AP (6/2, Cook, Charlton) reports that as "millions" worldwide denounced Trump, "many nations pledged to ramp up their efforts to curb global warming instead." Reuters (6/2, Escrib, Blenkinsop) reports China and Europe "pledged on Friday to unite to save 'Mother Earth' in the face of...Trump's decision to take the world's second largest carbon polluter out of the Paris climate change pact" while Russia, India, and Mexico "quickly signaled their commitment to the accord, although a Kremlin aide said it would not be viable without U.S. participation."

The New York Times (6/2, Smale) reports German Chancellor Angela Merkel "add[ed] her voice to a global chorus of defiance and criticism" against Trump and "expressed profound regret at the decision, declaring on Friday, 'This decision cannot and will not deter all of us who feel obliged to protect this earth.'" According to the Times, Merkel adopted "tones similar to that of President Emmanuel Macron of France, who on Thursday invited American scientists to continue their environmental work in his country," as Merkel asserted, "We will gather all our strength – in Germany, in Europe and in the world – to meet the great challenges of humanity, like climate change, and to successfully master these challenges."

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (6/2, A1, Birnbaum) says "an international realignment [is] already taking shape...as European and Chinese officials signed a raft of agreements to bind themselves tightly together." According to the Post, Trump's "pullout left the United States as a global outlier, and, many European leaders and experts said, a severely diminished force in the world" while giving "China fresh weight in a newly unbalanced landscape where longtime U.S. allies are searching for stability."

The Los Angeles Times (6/2, Wilkinson) similarly suggests the President's decision "is the most concrete sign yet that his 'America First' approach to foreign policy has begun to disrupt the global order and ultimately could cede Washington's dominant role on the world stage to China" while the AP (6/2, Pace) says it "sends an unmistakable message to the world: America First can mean America Alone."

China "may find it hard to fill the vacuum," the New York Times (6/2, Wong) acknowledges, but "for now, public affirmations of the Paris agreement by Chinese leaders send a strong signal to other nations that might be wavering in the wake of the withdrawal by the United States." The Times reports Chinese Prime Minister Li Keqiang on Friday failed to reach agreement with European diplomats "to endorse a joint statement on climate change" due to a trade dispute, though they "made public affirmations in Berlin on Thursday and in Brussels on Friday to work with each other," as does the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Norman, Peker, Dalton). In a separate article, the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Taplin) also says that while Chinese leaders may want to chart the green energy course, their domestic energy markets are distorted and as such its promises to fight climate change lacked the credibility of the US and EU.

However, the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Grove, Marson) reports Russian President Vladimir Putin on Friday dismissed concerns over Trump's decision, saying, "Don't worry, be happy." Putin added, "He said he wants to review the agreement or sign a new one. He doesn't refuse to work on the problem. You shouldn't make noise about it, but create conditions for cooperation." Bloomberg Politics (6/2, Arkhipov, Biryukov) reports Putin for "the second time in two days...used the spotlight of Russia's premier business event of the year to express support for Trump, who had just stunned political and business leaders worldwide by announcing that the U.S. would withdraw from the Paris climate accord, the most ambitious effort to combat global warming."

Meanwhile, AFP (6/2) reports the leaders of several Pacific Island countries on Friday "accused Washington of 'abandoning' vulnerable nations and expressed dismay Friday after Donald Trump pulled the US out of the Paris climate deal."

Reuters (6/2, Thomas) reports Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development Secretary General Angel Gurría “held out hope on Friday the United States might row back on...Trump’s decision to withdraw from the Paris climate agreement, saying the pact was good for growth.” In a statement, Gurría said, “The OECD urges countries, companies, cities, states, and citizens to step up their efforts in combating climate change, in defending the future generations that it threatens, through ambitious outcomes under the Paris Agreement. We also hope that the U.S. government might find it possible to reconsider its decision at a future moment.”

NYTimes A1: Former Coal Giant India On Track To Green Future. In a front-page article, the New York Times (6/2, A1, Anand) details India’s “astonishing turnaround” to green energy. The country, which “went on a building spree of coal-fired power plants” a few years ago, is now “canceling many in the early planning stages,” and committed to “achieving 40 percent of its electricity capacity from nonfossil-fuel sources by 2030” in the Paris climate accord. What’s more, the country’s power minister Piyush Goyal said “in late April that the country would take steps to assure that by 2030 only electric cars would be sold.”

UN Warns Withdrawal From Paris Accord Could Prompt Trade Lawsuits, Hurt FDI. Reuters (6/2, Miles) reports “Trump’s decision to pull out of the Paris climate accord will affect foreign direct investment (FDI) and may lead to investor-state disputes, the head of investment at the U.N. trade and development agency UNCTAD said on Friday.” James Zhan, senior director of investment and enterprise at UNCTAD, said, “We cannot quantify it but we see there will be an important impact on global FDI and on FDI into the U.S. as well.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Mauldin) suggests the President risks prompting trade disputes, as Reuters (6/2, Chestney) says the withdraw “might give U.S exports a competitive advantage” over other countries, which “will struggle to respond with any carbon tariffs due to the complexity of keeping them within international trade rules.” However, Reuters acknowledges “European and other nations have shown no appetite for responding with a regime of carbon tariffs.” The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Turner) similarly highlights these concerns.

Trump “Snubbed” US Business Leaders, But Withdrawal From Paris Accords Unlikely To Have Much Impact. In a Washington Post (6/2, McGregor) analysis, Jena McGregor says Trump also “snubbed America’s CEOs” by refusing to listen to the US “business leaders [who] came together to write letters, make personal appeals and run full-page ads imploring Trump to stay in the climate pact.” McGregor highlights that Disney CEO Robert Iger and Tesla and SpaceX CEO Elon Musk withdrew from the President’s advisory council on Thursday in protest, and Bloomberg Politics (6/2, Dlouhy) reports “on Wall Street, corporate executives pilloried the businessman president. Goldman Sachs’ CEO tweeted for the first time, calling the move a setback for the world.” Bloomberg adds Trump’s decision “leaves him more alienated than ever, isolated on the world stage and increasingly embattled at home.”

However, the AP (6/2, Koenig) reports “Trump’s decision to withdraw the United States from the Paris climate accord may have only limited immediate impact on many U.S. companies, according to analysts,” who added “the Paris agreement only went into effect last year, it’s voluntary, and doesn’t carry penalties for countries that fall short of emissions-cutting targets.” The AP says “many big companies in industries such as autos and aviation have already committed to reducing emissions and are spending billions to do it. They aren’t likely to change course.”

In a front-page article, the New York Times (6/2, A1, Thomas) reports that “while multinational corporations such as Disney, Goldman Sachs and IBM have opposed the president’s decision to walk away from the international climate agreement, many small companies around the country were cheering him on, embracing the choice as a tough-minded business move that made good on Mr. Trump’s commitment to put America’s commercial interests first.” According to the Times, “This full-throated support from the small-business community comes even as the Trump administration struggles to advance health care legislation and tax reform plans through Congress — and despite the swelling controversy over Mr. Trump’s ties to Russia.”

Meanwhile, New York Times (6/2, Thompson, Bajaj) Opinion section graphics director Stuart Thompson and editorial board member Vikas Bajaj identify the “corporate honchos...on the president’s advisory panels: the Strategic and Policy Forum and the Manufacturing Jobs Initiative.” They call on these leaders to “stand up for what they believe” and withdraw from the councils or risk “lending their own credibility and implicit support, and that of their companies, to his environmentally, diplomatically, and economically self-defeating position.”

MIT Officials, Kerry, Markey: Trump Misunderstood Climate Research. Reuters (6/2, Flitter) reports Massachusetts Institute of Technology officials on Friday “said...Trump badly misunderstood their research when he cited it on Thursday to justify withdrawing the United States from the Paris Climate Agreement." Erwan Monier, a lead researcher at the MIT Joint Program on the Science and Policy of Global Change and one of the study's authors, said, "We certainly do not support the withdrawal of the U.S. from the Paris agreement." John Reilly, the co-director of the program, added, "If we don't do anything, we might shoot over 5 degrees or more and that would be catastrophic." Reilly also told Reuters "MIT's scientists had had no contact with the White House and were not offered a chance to explain their work."

In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (6/2, lead story, 3:00, Mason) broadcast Former Secretary John Kerry, who "negotiated the Paris accord," rejecting Trump's position on grounds that he based it on flawed research. Kerry asserted, "That's not a real study. That's an industry-based study by people who oppose climate change, action, and who have been among the leaders in the whole theory of a climate hoax – which, by the way, there is not one scientific fact that supports the notion in a peer-reviewed study that it's a hoax." In an interview with the Boston Globe (6/2, Viser), Kerry called Trump's decision an act "of craven ignorance and cynicism that moved the presidency of the United States away from global leadership into a narrow little niche of ideological, political self preservation." He added, "It's tragic for the consequences. It's also built on an enormous lie that the economy is somehow hurt by the steps that were being taken." However, the Globe mentions White House deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "rebutted Kerry, saying he was failing to grasp the concerns that the electorate made clear in November." Huckabee Sanders added, "With all due respect Secretary Kerry sounds unhinged and his comments here reflect just how out of touch he and his party are with everyday, hard-working Americans."

Sen. Ed Markey told CNN's Situation Room (6/2, 6:23 p.m. EDT, 23:12, Blitzer), "Donald Trump's climate science is as bogus as a degree from Trump University." Trump "basically has decided he would honor his pledge to 70,000 coal miners in our country, and break the pledge the United States made to the world and break the pledge which this generation of Americans should keep to every subsequent generation of Americans to avoid the most catastrophic consequences of climate change." Markey accused Trump of "just listening to Steve Bannon, to the climate deniers, and trying to make his base be happy even if the National Academy of Sciences of every single country in the world has concluded that science of climate change is absolutely and totally non-debatable with regard to accelerating and it being caused by human activity." He said the decision to withdraw from the accord "undermines our credibility as a global leader" and is "an abdication of American economic opportunity, national security interests, of the public health implications," and "a moral failure."

New York AG Claims Exxon Mobil May Have Misled Investors On Carbon Costs. The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Olson) reports the New York attorney general's office on Friday filed documents alleging that Exxon Mobil misled investors over carbon costs and the New York Times (6/2, Cardwell, Schwartz) reports the office asserted Exxon Mobil's "public statements about its risk management practices were false and misleading," and that the company "may still be in the midst of perpetrating an ongoing fraudulent scheme on investors and the public." The filings allege that "Exxon told its investors that it used one set of estimates known as proxy costs while a set of lower costs was used internally in business planning." The company rejected the accusations in a statement, saying, "Exxon Mobil's external statements have accurately described its use of a proxy cost of carbon, and the documents produced to the attorney general make this fact unmistakably clear."

Refiners Fight Over Pennsylvania's Laurel Pipeline. Reuters (6/2, Renshaw, Resnick-Ault) reports a regulatory dispute over Buckeye Partners' 350-mile Laurel Pipeline in Pennsylvania could "redraw the map for international flows of crude and fuel into coveted coastal markets." A request to reverse the flow of a section of the line "would effectively block five East Coast refineries from serving Pittsburgh," and would hand their market share to Midwest refiners.

Meteorologists, US Evangelical Environmentalist Groups, Columnists Criticize Trump. "On the basis of science, not politics, meteorologists and leaders from the weather community largely united in denouncing the Trump administration's withdrawal from the Paris climate agreement," the Washington Post (6/2, Samenow) reports, and the American Meteorological Society's executive director Keith Seitter in a statement "called the decision 'deeply troubling,' and said it ignored 'so many...components of the risk calculus that went into the treaty.'" Seitter added, "From a scientific viewpoint, it is particularly troubling that the President's claims cast aside the extensively studied domestic and global economic, health, and ecological risks of inaction on climate change." The president of The Weather Channel, David Clark, also described the decision as "a blow for all of us, whether you 'believe' in climate change or not, whether you work in coal or not, whether you voted for Trump or not, whether you're American or not."

Reuters (6/2, McLaughlin) reports Evangelical Christian environmental groups on Friday also “panned...Trump’s decision to withdraw the United States from a global climate change pact, with leaders saying the political left does not have a monopoly on this issue.” Kyle Meyaard-Schaap, the national organizer and spokesman for Young Evangelicals for Climate Action, said the decision “was an affront to our faith in Christ, who calls us to love and be concerned for our neighbors around the world who are impacted by climate change.”

Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (6/2, Milbank) column that President Trump’s withdrawal from the Paris climate accord “wasn’t terribly surprising,” but criticizes him for using “jingoistic rhetoric” and mocking world leaders. Milbank warns that “Trump is projecting retreat, which isolates America,” and that his decision has caused the US to lose “its seat at the table” on climate change action.

David Brooks argues in his New York Times (6/2, Brooks) column that Trump’s decision is explained by “his core worldview that life is nakedly a selfish struggle for money and dominance.” By following this philosophy, Brooks adds, Trump and his advisers “sever relationships, destroy reciprocity, erode trust and eviscerate the sense of sympathy, friendship and loyalty that all nations need when times get tough.”

In her Washington Post (6/2, Parker) column, Kathleen Parker highlights the “100 businesses, 80 university presidents, three governors and 30 mayors” that have announced intentions to follow the Paris climate accord in the wake of Trump’s decision to pull out of it. She adds that according to Bloomberg, the group “could still reduce America’s contributions to greenhouse-gas emissions by 26 percent from 2005 levels by 2025.”

David Leonhardt suggests in his New York Times (6/2, Leonhardt) column that a “more politically persuasive message about climate change” may be needed to “punish” Republicans for opposing climate change regulation. To that end, he calls on readers to send articles “about how to develop a more effective political message on climate change.”

Holman W. Jenkins, Jr. argues in his Wall Street Journal (6/2, Jenkins) column that the Paris climate accord’s emissions targets were unenforceable and have little relation to temperature reduction. The costs associated with meaningful reduction of carbon emissions, he adds, are not supported by voters. Despite Trump’s decision to leave the accord, Jenkins says, the US has and will continue to lead the world in reducing emissions.

Haley: “Trump Believes The Climate Is Changing.”

ABC World News Tonight’s (6/3, story 4, 2:00, Llamas) Gloria Riviera reported the Administration has made “a stunning reversal” on President Trump’s position on climate change. Ambassador Haley, in an interview with CNN, said, “President Trump believes the climate is changing and he believes pollutants are part of that equation, so that is the fact.” Haley added, “Just because we got out of a club doesn’t mean that we don’t care about the environment.” Riviera said the revelation came one day after Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Pruitt “couldn’t respond to a direct question” on the matter.

The Washington Post (6/3, Jordan) reports Trump “famously called climate change a ‘hoax’” during the campaign and the Wall Street Journal (6/3, Bendavid) says he claimed it had been invented by the Chinese. Bloomberg Politics (6/2, Dlouhy, Flavelle) reported that on Friday, Pruitt and White House press secretary Sean Spicer were unable to answer, but his position on climate change “isn’t merely about semantics.” According to Bloomberg, “The mystery over Trump’s climate views could complicate U.S. efforts to negotiate greenhouse gas reduction agreements with other countries – the kind of new deal Trump said he would be willing to pursue as he announced his Paris decision. If climate change is a hoax, after all, why would it make sense to force China or India to further curb their use of fossil fuels?”

In a nearly 4,600-word front-page analysis, the New York Times (6/3, A1, Davenport, Lipton) examines the Republican Party’s “journey from debating how to combat human-caused climate change to arguing that it does not exist.” The Times attributes blame to “big political money, Democratic hubris in the Obama years and a partisan chasm that grew over nine years like a crack in the Antarctic shelf, favoring extreme positions and uncompromising rhetoric over cooperation and conciliation.”

According to the AP (6/3, Borenstein), “facts muddy [Trump’s] claim” that the US “will continue to be the cleanest and most environmentally friendly country on Earth” despite his withdrawal from the Paris climate accords because “data show that the U.S. is among the dirtiest countries when it comes to heat-trapping carbon pollution. One nation that has cleaner air in nearly every way is Sweden.” The AP adds that according the Department of Energy’s Oak Ridge National Laboratory, “in 2014, the U.S. spewed 237 times more carbon dioxide into the air than Sweden.”

Hundreds Rally Outside White House In Support Of Trump. While Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord had "angered many world leaders," and in Europe, his "decision was met with shock and dismay," Paula Reid of the CBS Weekend News (6/3, story 2, 1:30, Ninan) reported his supporters "rallied outside the White House to express thanks for making good on a campaign promise." The Hill (6/3, Cohn) reports "the 'Pittsburgh Not Paris' rally, organized at the last minute by the Fairfax County Republican Committee and the Republican Party of Virginia, brought in an estimated few hundred supporters to a park near the White House."

Brown, De Blasio Join World Leaders In Committing To Paris Accords. The Los Angeles Times (6/3, Meyers) reports California Gov. Jerry Brown on Saturday "landed in China...to seek a broader role in shaping the world's climate change policies as America retrenches." The Times says the focus of Brown's "five-night mission is...to reaffirm a global obligation to green growth as America's de facto envoy on climate change."

The Hill (6/3, Carter) "Briefing Room" blog reports New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio on Friday "signed an executive order...that reaffirmed the city's commitment to upholding the goals of the Paris climate change agreement despite President Trump withdrawing the U.S. from the agreement." De Blasio said, "We here in New York City are shocked at the development this week in Washington, D.C., to see the president of the United States pull out of the Paris accord and literally set this nation, and the whole globe, on the path of denial." According to The Hill, the order "instructs New York City to adopt the principles of the Paris climate agreement, supporting its key principles of reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050 and keeping a global temperature increase below 1.5 degrees Celsius."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (6/3, Viscusi) reports French President Emmanuel Macron and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Saturday "pledged to work together to cut carbon emissions, re-affirming their commitments to the Paris accord." Bloomberg adds that while neither Macron nor Modi "mentioned Trump by name, both stressed their commitment to the Paris accord which the U.S. president vilified Thursday as being harmful to the American economy."

In addition, AFP (6/3) reports the African Union on Saturday "joined the chorus of disapproval" with Trump and "express[ed] its full support for the initiative." Guinean President Alpha Conde, the current chair of the AU, in a statement "called for the matter to be discussed at the G20 summit in Germany next month 'to raise US President Donald Trump's awareness of the issues of global warming.'" Conde added, "The African continent, though less guilty than others for anthropogenic (man-made) factors which cause climate change, is the one that suffers most directly."

WPost, Dowd, Douthat Criticize Trump For Withdrawing US From Paris Accord. In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/3) details what states can do to combat climate change in the wake of President Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris agreement. The Post points to California's cap-and-trade law as an effective way to limit emissions, and argues that "the most valuable thing state leaders can do is expand on this model." The Post goes on to list other steps states can take, including encouraging denser urban development, investing in public transit, updating building codes and appliance standards, and raising gas taxes.

In a New York Times (6/3, Dowd) op-ed, contributor Maureen Dowd criticizes President Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris climate agreement, calling it an "existential threat to the planet." She suggests that "Trump was goaded in the direction of dropping out of the Paris accord by a couple things that irritated him," including suggestions that his view on climate change was "evolving" and a rude reception from French president Emmanuel Macron.

Ross Douthat details in his New York Times (6/3, Douthat) column the "lukewarm" approach to climate change, which recognizes that humans are primarily responsible but doubts "that climate change represents a crisis unique among the varied challenges we face, or that the global regulatory schemes advanced to deal with it will work as advertised." Lukewarmers, he adds, reject the "apocalyptic, absolutist rhetoric" used by that push for climate regulation. He goes on to criticize republicans for letting "lukewarmers poke holes in liberal proposals for climate insurance policies" while doing nothing themselves, and concludes that a "very different" GOP will be needed "to offer a fully-credible policy alternative to climate alarmism."

Trump To Kick Off Infrastructure Week With Focus On ATC Privatization.

The White House said Saturday that President Trump will kick off "infrastructure week" on Monday with events focused on fulfilling his campaign promise related to aviation and transportation. Although the network newscasts were dominated by the latest developments from the terrorist attacks in London, the print dailies, wires, and online publications provided coverage. Reporting was mostly straightforward about the upcoming events, which analyses suggest could help the White House reclaim control of the media narrative after a week of negative articles.

For example, the AP (6/3, Thomas, Boak) reports Trump's week of events will "highlight his effort to modernize American infrastructure – the highway, waterway, electrical and airway systems on which the nation operates." National Economic Council Director Cohn said Friday, "It doesn't matter who you are, whether you are farmer in the Midwest, or a mother driving your kids to and from school, or a worker or a college kid flying back and forth to school, you're affected by infrastructure." Cohn added the US is "falling behind and the falling behind is affecting economic growth in the United States. The president wants to fix the problems and he doesn't want to push these liabilities into the future."

Trump plans to "put a spotlight on his vows to privatize the nation's air traffic control system and spur $1 trillion in new investment in roads, waterways and other infrastructure," the Washington Post (6/3, A1, Wagner) says in a front page article, as part of "a stepped-up effort...to show that the White House remains focused on its agenda, despite cascading headlines about his administration's ties to Russia." In addition, he will travel to the Ohio River to tout "the importance of waterways and to lay out his vision of infrastructure investments more broadly, aides say," and will host "a bipartisan group of mayors and governors to Washington to discuss the topic and venture to the Transportation Department to talk about roads and railways." The Cincinnati Enquirer (6/3, Shesgreen) reports the President will speak in the Cincinnati area on Wednesday, "according to a White House spokeswoman," who called the week "a critical pillar of the president's agenda to promote job creation and grow the U.S. economy."

The New York Times (6/3, Davis, Kelly) says Trump will "lay out a vision this coming week for sharply curtailing the federal government's funding of the nation's infrastructure and calling upon states, cities and corporations to shoulder most of the cost of rebuilding roads, bridges, railways and waterways." According to the Times, the President's Monday speech on privatizing air traffic control is his "first concrete explanation of how he intends to fulfill a campaign promise to lead $1 trillion in United States infrastructure projects." In an interview Friday, Cohn said, "We like the template of not using taxpayer dollars to give taxpayers wins," adding, "We want to be in the partnership business. We want to be in the facilitation business, and we're willing to provide capital wherever necessary to help certain infrastructure along."

Bloomberg Politics (6/3, Niquette, Levin) says "Trump's actions come after an initial outline of his infrastructure plan and his proposed budget sparked criticism from state and city leaders of both parties, who said they'd be left with too much of the financial burden." Bloomberg reports the plan to privatize the US air traffic control system, which is currently run by the Federal Aviation Administration, "will be based largely on legislation introduced in 2016 by" House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee Chairman Bill Shuster, "according to a White House official." While Cohn "provid[ed] few specifics, [he] said Trump's proposal would create a new user fee to replace current taxes on aviation fuel and airline tickets." He also promised the plan will include "unspecified protections for rural airports; critics of the air-traffic plan have said it would jeopardize small airports by giving too much power to airlines and large hubs."

The Hill (6/3, Zanona) reports Transportation Secretary Chao "will testify next week in front of two congressional panels on the issue, as lawmakers begin work on reauthorizing the" FAA. According to the Washington Times (6/3, Miller), "the bold move to dislodge air traffic control (ATC) from the Federal Aviation Administration and create a quasi-independent, non-profit corporation to do the job is a fitting kickoff for Mr. Trump's weeklong focus on his infrastructure agenda."

However, The Hill (6/3, Zanona) reports Trump "may let Congress answer one of the key questions hanging over his $1 trillion infrastructure package: how to pay for it." White House officials said Friday they are still "debating whether to identify funding offsets when it releases a proposal or let lawmakers hash it out at the committee-level." The Hill contends that "coming up with a palatable offset is likely to be the biggest hurdle facing Trump's ambitious plan to upgrade U.S. roads, bridges, airports and other public works."

Meanwhile, Reuters (6/3, Rampton) suggests the President's infrastructure push "could energize his supporters and distract from political intrigue in Washington" as well as "the political furor over Russia's alleged meddling in the 2016 U.S. election," which "will come to a head on Thursday when former Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey, who was leading the Russia probe until Trump fired him, testifies before a U.S. Senate panel." Politico (6/3, Gardner) in an article headlined "Trump Pivots To Infrastructure As He Enters Bruising Week" says that beside the "full-throated infrastructure push," the week is "otherwise expected to be full of loud and potentially damaging news about the FBI and Russia."

Labor Department: Jobless Rate Falls To Lowest Level In 16 Years.

The Labor Department announced Friday that US employers added 138,000 jobs in May, as the unemployment rate declined to 4.3 percent, the lowest level since 2001. While media coverage was overshadowed by President Trump's decision to pull the US out of the Paris climate accords, all three network newscasts ran short broadcasts while the New York Times and Wall Street Journal published several articles discussing the implications. Reporting examined the mixed state of the economy, although most analyses suggested labor shortages could be to blame for the slowdown in hiring.

ABC World News Tonight (6/2, story 7, 0:20, Muir) said the jobs data "shows the unemployment rate coming down in this country, but the pace of job creation is now slowing." The CBS Evening News (6/2, story 3, 0:15, Mason) similarly said the Labor Department reported "job creation slowed in May," as "employers added 138,000 jobs, 66,000 fewer than the month before." NBC Nightly News (6/2, story 5, 0:20, Diaz-Balart) called the report "some mixed news on the economy." The Washington Post (6/2, Swanson) reports Labor Secretary Acosta called the hiring figures "a positive sign that our economy is moving in the right direction." Acosta added, "More than 600,000 private-sector jobs have been created since Inauguration Day. These continued improvements have real impact on the lives of American families, as more people take home a paycheck."

In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (6/2, A1, Morath) touts the performance of the economy, but acknowledged labor shortages may be responsible for the decline in hiring. The New York Times (6/2, Cohen) similarly says the "milestone on the jobless rate "was offset by "halfhearted wage growth and a shrinking labor force [that] revealed the economy's stubborn weak spots." However, the Times argues "the report is unlikely to deter the Federal Reserve from raising interest rates when its policy makers meet in Washington this month," as does a second Wall Street Journal (6/2, Timiraos) article, which notes that Fed officials are more concerned with unemployment and hiring than inflation.

However, in the New York Times (6/2, Irwin) "The Upshot" blog, Neil Irwin expresses concern that "the May job numbers raise a depressing possibility: that this is as good as it will get for the United States labor market." While he acknowledges the trends are "what you would expect...if the job market were close to full employment, a state where nearly everyone who wants a job can get one," Irwin admits "that's the goal. ... But one of the great hopes for the United States economy over the last few years has been that an improving labor market would pull back in many of the millions of people who left the labor force in the aftermath of the 2008 recession." He concludes "there is still hope for America's armies of nonemployed. But if we keep getting monthly reports like the one for May, we will have to grapple with the possibility that a low unemployment rate and plentiful jobs aren't going to be enough to pull them into the labor market."

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Levitz) says the Baca, Summit, and Yuma counties in Colorado, which have the lowest unemployment rate in the country, are emblematic of the problems with full employment, as businesses in the community are having trouble keeping their employees. In a separate article, the Wall Street Journal (6/2, Lahart) questions why wages remain weak even as the economy has improved.

Commerce Department: Trade Deficit Increases In April.

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Mitchell, Leubsdorf) reports the Commerce Department said Friday that America's goods and services trade deficit increased to $47.62 billion in April – a 5.2 percent increase over in March, and a 13.4 percent increase compared to a year ago. Economists credited foreign trade as the most likely factor inhibiting overall second quarter growth, as well as a strong dollar; meanwhile, imports grew by 7.5 percent in the first quarter, suggesting US consumers and firms have increased spending.

AFP, Freedom Partners Urge Price To Loosen ObamaCare Regulations.

The Hill (6/2, Hellmann) reports Americans for Prosperity and Freedom Partners sent a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Price "urging the Trump administration to move forward with regulatory action loosening ObamaCare regulations as Congress continues to drag its feet on passing repeal legislation." In particular, the conservative groups "ask Price to loosen ObamaCare's essential health benefits, which are 10 services insurers are required to cover in their health insurance plans."

Justice Department Files Appeal To Supreme Court Over Trump Travel Order.

The New York Times (6/2, Liptak) reports the Justice Department on Thursday sent three urgent requests to the Supreme Court over President Trump's travel order. The DOJ filed a petition to request a review of the Fourth Circuit's recent decision to uphold a block on the travel ban and they have asked "the justices to act a little faster than usual, urging them to decide whether to hear the case before they leave for their summer break." The government has additionally requested the court "stay two rulings blocking parts of the travel ban," which if granted "would revive the ban while the justices decide how to respond to the petition." The Times says the court will likely hear the appeal.

James Rosen reported in the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (6/2, 6:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, 0:21, Rosen) that the Supreme Court may decide whether "Trump's so-called travel ban will be the law of the land. The President's executive order, placing a temporary ban on refugees from six predominately-Muslim countries designated as hotbeds of terrorism, has lost at the district and appellate court levels." Correspondent Kevin Corke explained the Supreme Court will consider whether Trump's "fiery campaign rhetoric" evidences "that the real intention for the travel ban was to discriminate against Muslims."

ABC World News Tonight (6/2, story 5, 0:20, Muir) reported, "The Administration has argued the ban is about national security. The high court could decide by the end of the month whether they'll take the case." NBC Nightly News (6/2, story 6, 0:20, Diaz-Balart) reported the Justice Department wants "the court to decide by the end of June whether it will take up the case in the fall."

US Demands Social Media Account Information From Visa Applicants. AFP (6/2) reports visa applicants to the US are now being asked by US consular officials "to provide their identities on social media, among other more vigorous screening methods." According to a State Department official who spoke on condition of anonymity, officials now have the ability to request extra information from those applicants they believe need "more rigorous national security vetting." The official said that these new security procedures went into effect as of May 25.

Democrats Considering Strategy Of Using Debt Ceiling Debate As Leverage.

"Congressional Democrats might abandon their calls for raising the nation's debt limit without any conditions," Bloomberg Politics (6/3, Litvan) reports, as House Minority Leader Pelosi "signaled" the party could change its position in order "to use [the] leverage to try to prevent Republicans from enacting tax cuts for wealthy Americans." Bloomberg says this strategy "would be a significant change for Democrats, who have spent the past eight years arguing that debt ceiling increases should be free from conditions, and could further complicate efforts to raise the government's borrowing authority when the current limit is reached later this year." Bloomberg adds Senate Democrats intend "to discuss the possibility of tying support for an increase to concessions on the tax cuts when lawmakers return from a week-long Memorial Day recess next week, said a Democratic aide in the chamber."

AFGE Union Chief Rallying Opposition To Trump's Proposed Budget Cuts.

Under the headline "Drain The Swamp? Not If This Guy Can Help It," the Washington Post (6/4, Hesse) profiles J. David Cox, president of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), "the largest federal workers union in America," saying that President Trump has vowed to "'Drain that swamp.' The swamp was the federal government of Washington. The epicenter of the swamp was metaphorically at 80 F St. NW, in the office of...Cox," whose union represents thousands of federal workers in agencies targeted by Trump budget cuts. The Post details Cox's efforts to rally opposition to Trump's planned budget cuts at agencies such as the EPA, and Departments of Energy, Labor, and Transportation, among many others.

Mulvaney: US Will Not Default On Debt Payments.

The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Davidson) reports White House Budget Director Mulvaney said in a Facebook Live video chat with the New York Times (6/2, Rappeport) that if Congress does not raise the debt ceiling, the US will be unable to "meet all of [its] obligations as a nation; that's not a desirable outcome," but he insisted there is "absolutely no way" the Administration will default on its debt payments. Mulvaney added, "We are not going to do that. You can take that off the table."

Cohn: Congress Has "No Other Choice" But To Raise Debt Ceiling. In a Friday interview with CNBC (6/2, Belvedere), National Economic Council Director Cohn said Congress has "no other choice" but to raise the debt limit and said, "I'm confident that Congress will get the ceiling raised." Cohn added, "At the end of the day, the deficit ceiling has to be raised. This is money that the Congress appropriated. They chose to spend the money." According to Cohn, "In a perfect world you would love to have a clean debt ceiling. But if we need to get things attached to get it through, we'll attach things."

Pelosi: Democrats Will Not Give Unconditional Support To Raising Debt Ceiling. The Wall Street Journal (6/2, Hughes) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi on Friday told reporters that while she would not necessarily oppose raising the debt ceiling, she asserted, "I don't have any intention of supporting a lifting of the debt ceiling to enable the Republicans to give another tax break to the wealthy in our country."

Cohn: White House Give Congress A Detailed Tax Reform Plan In September.

Politico (6/2, Lorenzo) reports National Economic Council Director Cohn said Friday in a Fox Business News interview that the Administration "will have a very detailed, drafted tax plan to be delivered to Congress by when they get back from the August recess." According to Politico, "Asked about the possibility of a slimmed-down plan made up of only tax cuts, Cohn said everything is being considered but the administration prefers an overhaul." Cohn said, "We are really driven to do the big reform and cut. Reform is still part of our agenda. The president ran on a reform agenda." He added, "We are into the nitty-gritty details of working on tax reform right now."

White House Officials: Infrastructure Funding To Be Excluded From Tax Reform Bill. The Hill (6/2, Zanona) reports White House officials on Thursday "assured conservative groups...that Trump will leave his infrastructure plan out of any tax reform efforts, according to a source who was at the meeting." According to The Hill, "While the comments appear consistent with a one-page tax plan summary released by the administration in April, there had still been hope on Capitol Hill that tax reform would be used to help pay for Trump's rebuilding effort. And Trump himself has repeatedly floated the idea of linking the two issues...in an effort to get more Democrats on board." The Hill adds the officials "told conservatives that Trump would not couple his tax plan with infrastructure or use tax reform to help pay for the rebuilding program, though they emphasized the infrastructure proposal is still being developed, a source said."

GOP Lawmakers "Frustrated" With Trump Over Lack Of Details On Tax Reform. House Republicans are increasingly "frustrated with the lack of any details about the Trump administration's tax plan, as the slow pace leaves lawmakers in limbo in their negotiations over how to deliver on long promised tax cuts," Bloomberg Politics (6/2, House, Kapur) reports, and their "pessimism...stands in sharp contrast to...Trump's public promises." A member of the House Ways and Means Committee "said the prospect of a detailed White House plan emerging soon was akin to the chances of spotting a unicorn" and said that despite the many meetings of White House officials and lawmakers, the Administration's effort "so far feels like amateur hour."

AFP Kicks Off Ad Campaign To Promote Tax Reform. The Hill (6/2, Jagoda) reports Americans for Prosperity on Thursday kicked off "a six-figure advertising effort urging lawmakers to pass tax reform," in particular "reform that lowers rates, reduces the number of tax brackets and eliminates preferences for special interests." The Hill says "the ads are part of a broad multi-million dollar effort on tax reform running across a network of advocacy groups backed by billionaire GOP donors Charles and David Koch." AFP will focus on 18 House Republicans in "the first wave of ads," including Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady and Reps. Peter Roskam, Erik Paulsen, and Carlos Curbelo. In an interview with The Hill, AFP President Tim Phillips said, "We're hoping to see faster progress."

NYTimes Analysis: Lawmakers Should Consider Deficit In Writing Tax Cuts. Writing in the New York Times (6/2, Mankiw) "The Upshot" blog, N. Gregory Mankiw compares "the economic circumstances" confronting President Trump to those of other "tax-cutting Republican president[s], along the lines of Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush." Mankiw contends "Trump faces a vastly different set of circumstances" that are "not in the position of Ronald Reagan in 1981 or George W. Bush in 2001 but rather of Ronald Reagan in 1986." According to Mankiw, Trump "should follow the Reagan of the later period and aim for revenue neutrality. He should broaden the tax base, lower rates and reform the tax code to promote saving, investment and growth." Mankiw concludes "When judging revenue neutrality, policy makers will need to rely on a credible, impartial arbiter, like the Congressional Budget Office. In this era of alternative facts, it would be far too easy to pass irresponsible tax cuts and hand the bill to future generations."

WSJournal: Trump Has Tax Reform Leverage Over Senate Democrats. The Wall Street Journal (6/2) editorializes that while Senate Minority Leader Schumer has condemned the White House tax reform outline for proposing to eliminate the state and local tax deduction, the loophole provides an opportunity to force him and other Democrats to the negotiating table if they want to save the tax break. The Journal concludes that the outcome is a win for conservatives either way, as Schumer either participates in the tax reform discussions or the deduction is removed and the tax code both becomes more equitable and has lower rates.

Collins Skeptical Of Administration's Tax Proposal Progress. In her New York Times (6/2, Collins) column, Gail Collins contends that while President Trump on Thursday "blurted out that his 'tax bill is moving along in Congress,'" his comments come as "something of a surprise since, A) there is no tax bill and, B) nothing is moving along in Congress." Collins argues "nobody seems to have any idea what's going on" with tax reform as Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, Budget Director Mulvaney, and National Economic Council Director Cohn are on different pages. She concludes "The bad news is that Trump, in a desperate lunge to accomplish something, will try to ram through a quick-and-dirty tax cut that will aid the rich and increase the deficit. ... The good news is that this crowd is so inept it might not work."

WPost A1: Trump Rolling Back Obama Policies, But Making "Little Progress" On Own Agenda.

On its front page, the Washington Post (6/4, A1, Johnson, Eilperin, O'Keefe) reports that President Trump "has in many ways made good on his promise to be a political wrecking ball," withdrawing the US "from the Paris climate accord," working "to roll back dozens of health, environment, labor and financial rules put in place by former president Barack Obama, and" scrapping "a far-reaching trade deal." However, the President and Hill Republicans "have made little progress in building an affirmative agenda of their own," such as repealing and replacing the Affordable Care Act, "the $1 trillion package of infrastructure projects Trump promised, the wall along the Southern border he insisted could be quickly constructed and the massive tax cuts he touted during the campaign. Even debate over health-care reform is largely focused on eliminating key parts of the Affordable Care Act and allowing states to craft policies in their place."

Current Value Of Costs Of Climate Change Difficult To Calculate.

The New York Times (6/2, Irwin) reports that the US leaving the Paris climate accord and President Trump's "broader unwillingness to fight climate change...will have broad economic consequences," but their form "depends on many things," including "the pace of scientific advances around renewable energy, the vicissitudes of commodity markets, and the investment decisions of businesses, governments and individuals worldwide." Part of the issue is "not whether some jobs involving fossil fuels will go away if greenhouse gases are regulated more stringently; what matters is whether the jobs that emerge to replace them will pay better or worse," which depend on a number of factors. Additionally, many of the expected costs due to climate change – "potentially including vast expenditures to try to protect cities from rising seas, adjusting agriculture to new climate patterns, and countless other changes" – will occur in an uncertain time in the future, meaning how much the costs should be discounted to the present is uncertain.

Trump's Claim US Is Cleanest And Most Environmentally-Friendly Country On Earth Questioned.

The AP (6/3, Borenstein) reports that while President Trump said that the US "will continue to be the cleanest and most environmentally friendly country on Earth", the AP says that "facts muddy that claim." Citing data from the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the AP says that Sweden "has cleaner air in nearly every way is Sweden" and indicates the US ranking based on total carbon dioxide output, as well as on a per capita basis and a per dollar of gross domestic product basis. On all three measures, the US produces more carbon dioxide than nearly all other countries. On other measures of clean air the US ranks better, such as in the amount of "dangerous soot or fine particles" on which measure it ranks sixth cleanest.

Rubin: Republican Leaders Losing Touch With Reality. Jennifer Rubin writes in her "Right Turn" blog for the Washington Post (6/4, Rubin), that President Trump in rejecting the Paris climate accord said he represented "Pittsburgh, not Paris" and that by doing so seemed to have a "conception of Pittsburgh as a heavy-industry steel town" an idea that is "badly out of date" according to Rubin. She argues that Trump and other Republican leaders have an out-of-date view of the country, and accuses them of "hiding from" the contemporary economy and science, and being "less and less grounded in reality."

States Form Climate Alliance To Meet Goals Of Paris Accord.

The AP (6/2, LeBlanc) reports Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker (R), Vermont Gov. Phil Scott (R), New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D), Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy (D), and Rhode Island Gov. Gina Raimondo (D) all proclaimed their intention to continue to “combat climate change” by reducing carbon emissions despite the President’s decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord. Several also announced they would join the US Climate Alliance, begun by the governors of California, Washington, and New York. The Financial Times (6/3, Crooks) reports the alliance has pledged to meet the commitments developed by President Obama in the Paris accord and that its members include states that produce over 30 percent of US GDP.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Another Terrorist Attack, And More Agony, In Britain.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/4) argues that statements by British Prime Minister Theresa May and Labour leader Corbyn about Saturday’s terror attack in London, “though different in tone...were grown-up responses” and “contrasted sharply with President Trump’s bizarre Twitter barrage in which he variously scorned the mayor of London for seeking to reassure his people, blamed political correctness for what he said was the world’s weak response to terrorism, claimed that the attacks bolstered his case for a travel ban on Muslims and argued that gun control was pointless, because terrorists in this case had used knives and a truck.” The Times adds that “that both Mrs. May and Mr. Corbyn have not similarly politicized these horrible events is reassuring.”

“Undoing All The Good Work On Cuba.” The New York Times (6/5, Board) in an editorial says that if President Trump reverses President Obama’s Cuba policy, “he will further isolate America, hurt American business interests and, quite possibly, impede the push for greater democracy on the Caribbean island.” The Times says Trump would return to an approach tried “for more than 50 years” without leading to improvements in Cuba. The Times says that while the “engagement” policy “cannot guarantee Cuban reforms, but it is the best bet.”

Washington Post.

“A Baltimore Case Shows How Trump’s Deportation Crackdown Can Lead To Lawlessness.” A Washington Post (6/4) editorial cites a case in which Baltimore lawyer, Christos Vasiliades, who represented a man accused of rape, was arrested “for trying to get his client’s accuser to back off by warning her that she risked arrest as an undocumented immigrant if she showed up in court to testify” as “a microcosmic illustration of the damage President Trump’s intensifying deportation crackdown may inflict.” While Federal officials say arrests at courthouses are “a last resort,” the Post says the US Commission on Civil Rights and the chief justice of the California Supreme Court both argue that “arresting undocumented immigrants at courthouses imperils entire communities, making victims less likely to report crimes and witnesses less likely to testify.”

“Goldman Sachs Makes An Irresponsible Deal With The Corrupt Venezuela Regime.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/4, Board) says Goldman Sachs fund managers’ $2.8 million secondary-market discount purchase of “bonds issued by the state-owned oil company of Venezuela” was undoubtedly “a really sweet deal for Goldman and its clients,” but it constituted a “terrible deal” for Venezuelans. The Post says Goldman Sachs chief executive Lloyd Blankfein’s repudiation of President Trump for his decision to withdraw from the Paris accord and proposed restrictions on travel “from certain Muslim-majority nations” evidences that the company’s leadership is “not indifferent to important ethical and public policy concerns.” If both “Goldman Sachs and the rest of Wall Street really want a reputation for social responsibility,” however, “they will eagerly seek alternatives to business as usual with Caracas.”

“The Best Solution To Metro’s Financial Problems Is Crystal Clear.” The Washington Post (6/4) writes in an editorial that “the chief solution” to the DC Metro’s financial problems is “crystal clear”: a “steady source of earmarked funding” in the form of a one percent sales tax in the District, Northern Virginia, and Maryland. Based on recent polls the Post has done with George Mason and the University of Maryland, a sales tax option has a majority of support, whereas as respondents disliked raising general taxes, property taxes, or taxes on buildings near Metro stations. They also disliked more service cuts and fare hikes. The Post says, however, that enacting a regional sales tax would be “a very heavy lift,” as Virginia GOP lawmakers and Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan would have to give their assent.

Wall Street Journal.

“Jihad Returns To Britain.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/4) casts the President's tweet calling for his travel ban as too harsh, but warns his opponents that opposition to surveillance and to an honest debate on the nature of the terror threat will make Trump-style politics ever more popular across the country – and even within the political class.

“How To Make Medicine More Expensive.” In an editorial that focuses primarily on Nevada and Maryland, the Wall Street Journal (6/4) criticizes states for considering bills the Journal says are attacks on the generic drug industry. The Journal also says FDA Commissioner Gottlieb is preparing a plan to foster more innovation and competition among generics, which the Journal argues, unlike the state bills under consideration, would make medicine more available and affordable.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Islamic State Claims London Attack
Low-Tech Terror Attacks Prove Harder To Thwart
Democrat Questions Russia Link As Comey Heads To Hill
More Chinese Companies Turn To Shadow Banking

New York Times:

After London Attack, Prime Minister Says, 'Enough Is Enough'
Trump's Off-The-Cuff Tweets Strain Foreign Ties
Bank At Center of US Inquiry Projects Russian 'Soft Power'
Climate Science Meets A Stubborn Obstacle: Students
GM Wants To Drive The Future Of Cars That Drive Themselves
On Mosul's Front Line: A Grueling Battle On Civilian Streets

Washington Post:

Attack Becomes Political Issue
Rules Put In Reverse: Legislation Still In Park
Presidential Response? Stoking Fear And A Feud.
In Va. Primaries, Progressive Democrats Try To Shake Up Party
El Cenizo V. Texas

Financial Times:

May Pledges To Ramp Up Battle With Extremism
Rosneft Set To Step Up Output If OPEC Deal Falter

Washington Times:

Trump, May Call For Tough Measures In Response To London Attacks
Another British Terrorist Attack Puts Theresa May's Snap Election Rout In Further Jeopardy
Trump Quietly Slashes Number Of Refugees From Obama's Target Despite Court Order
Homeland Security Has No Archive For Pence Panel On Illegal Immigrants Who Vote
Lawmakers Demand More Information And Privacy Protections Before Reauthorizing FISA Snooping Powers
Afghanistan Terror Threatens To Nip Pakistan's Budding Economy: Ambassador Waits For Trump Strategy

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: London Attack; London Attack-Suspects; London Attack-Local Responses; London Attack-Trump Response; Russia Meddling Investigation-Comey; London Attack-US Security; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert; Italy-Soccer Fans Stampede; NYC Police Dragging; Box Office News; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert Closing.

CBS: London Attack; London Attack-Victims; London Attack-Suspects; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert; London Attack-Trump Response; Italy-Soccer Fans Stampede; California-Muslims; Georgia-Muslim Refugee; Teaching Manner.

NBC: London Attack; London Attack-Counterterrorism; London Attack-Trump Response; Oregon

Train Stabbing-Protests; Bill Cosby Trial; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert; Cancer-Electronic Lifeline; NBC-Putin Interview; Dr. Seuss Museum.

Network TV At A Glance:

London Attack – 21 minutes, 55 seconds
Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert – 7 minutes, 15 seconds
London Attack-Trump Response – 6 minutes, 5 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: London Attack; Oregon Train Stabbing-Protests.
CBS: London Attack; London Attack-Trump Response; Russia Meddling Investigation-Comey; Oregon Train Stabbing-Protests; NBA Finals; Wall Street Market.
FOX: London Attack-Trump Response; London Attack; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert; Middle East-Terrorism Connections.
NPR: London Attack; Ariana Grande-Manchester Concert; Oregon Train Stabbing-Protests; NBA Finals.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Announces the Air Traffic Control Reform Initiative; announces the Air Traffic Control Reform Initiative; host a reception for Gold Star Families.
VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President as he announces the Air Traffic Control Reform Initiative; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Duško Markovic of Montenegro; joins the President for a reception for Gold Star Families; delivers remarks at the Atlantic Council's Distinguished Leadership Awards.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate debates resolution commemorating the 50th anniversary of the reunification of Jerusalem – Senate convenes for legislative business, with agenda including beginning consideration of 'S. Res 176, A resolution commemorating the 50th anniversary of the reunification of Jerusalem' Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

5:00 PM Senate Foreign Relations Committee top secret briefing on the Islamic State group outside the Middle East – Closed / Top Secret / Sensitive Compartmented Information briefing on 'Beyond Iraq and Syria: ISIS' Global Reach', given by State Department Bureau of Counterterrorism and Countering Violent Extremism Acting Coordinator for Counterterrorism Justin Siberell; and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs Conrad Tribble Location: SVC-217, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

US House: Returns after Memorial Day District Work Period (aka State Work Period)

*No votes in the House of Representatives today.

Other: 7:30 AM American Jewish Committee Global Forum continues – American Jewish Committee Global Forum continues, with day two speakers Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, Austrian Foreign Minister Sebastian Kurz, Cypriot Foreign Minister Nicos Anastasiades, Romanian President Klaus Iohannis, Singaporean Foreign Minister Vivian Balakrishan, Japanese State Minister for Foreign Affairs Kentaro Sonoura, Israeli Public Security and Strategic Affairs Minister Gilad Erdan, Atlanta Mayor Kasim Reed, Hudson Institute's Michael Doran, Amb. Wendy Sherman, The Atlantic's McKay Coppins, Tablet's Yair Roseneberg, and The Washington Post's Jennifer Rubin Location: Washington Hilton, 1919 Connecticut Ave, Washington, DC <http://www.ajc.org/> <https://twitter.com/AJCGlobal>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC. Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, June 12, 2017
Date: Monday, June 12, 2017 7:02:17 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JUNE 12, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Reuters: Interior Secretary To Make Proposal On Bears Ears Monument In Test For Protected Land.
- NPR: What Utah's Canyon Country Can Tell Us About Donald Trump's National Monuments Review.
- WMUR-TV Manchester (NH): Sununu To Meet With Trump Administration Officials In DC, NH.
- St. George & Southern Utah Independent: Department Of The Interior Introduces "Current Wildland Fires" Program.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Idea To Turn Campsites Over To Private Entities Has Opponents Worried Prices Could Skyrocket.
- Wyoming Business Report: Additional Coverage: Secretary Zinke Signs New Order On Sage Grouse.

- Arctic (AK) Sounder: Additional Coverage: AFN Leaders Meet With Secretary Of The Interior.
- Idaho Statesman: Trump's Ag And Interior Secretaries, And Idaho, Off To A Good Start.
- Portland (ME) Press Herald: Our View: Interior Secretary Should Do More Than Visit Maine's New National Monument.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Once Appearing Near Settlement, Wind River Legal Dispute Drags On.
- Tasks Lie Ahead For Tribal Casino After Legislation Passes.

Bureau Of Land Management

- U.S. News & World Report: Guidelines Developed For Drilling Near Chaco Canyon.
- Associated Press: Federal Agency Deciding Whether Oil Industry Owes Royalties.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Conservation Groups Girding For Battle Over National Petroleum Reserve In Alaska.
- Glenwood Springs (CO) Post Independent: BLM Seeks Comment On Gas Development West Of Rifle.
- Roseburg (OR) News-Review: Fishing In The Healing Waters Of The Umpqua.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wild Horses Available For Adoption In Wyoming.
- KXTV-TV Sacramento (CA): Inmate-trained Wild Mustangs Up For Adoption.
- Sacramento (CA) Bee: Cadiz Inc. Would Damage Mohave Desert.
- KRWG-FM Las Cruces (NM): All Public Lands Matter: We Need BLM To Protect Otero Mesa.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Mark Sanford, Environmental Groups In Race Against Clock To Stop Offshore Drilling.
- Cape Wind Opposition Continues.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- C.A.S.T. For Kids Helps Expand Options For Disabled Youths.
- Kids With Special Needs Went Fishing, Reeling In Excitement.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Feds Give Gulf Drillers A Break.
- BSEE Director Angelle's Tour Ends With 'Fact Finding' Efforts In Lafayette.
- New BSEE Director Urges Change Of Focus.
- Wildlife & Fisheries Proposes More Artificial-reef Sites For Defunct Oil Platforms.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Helena (MT) Independent Record: Endangered Species Cuts Could Hit Jobs In Montana.
- Washington Examiner: Senate's Midnight Measure Would Protect Gorillas.
- Spokane (WA) Spokesman-Review: Wolves May Be Exploring New Territory In Western Washington.
- Washington Times: Additional Coverage: DNA From Zoo's Polar Bears Used In Fight Against Poaching.

National Park Service

- Washington Post: Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool To Be Drained, Cleaned After Parasite Kills 80 Ducklings.
- NPR: A Birmingham Motel Is Part Of A Civil Rights National Monument.
- Washington Times: Glacier National Park Maintenance Backlog Drops.
- Denver Post: Federal Hiring Freeze Causing Headaches At Rocky Mountain National Park.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Local Students Experience Milestone Moment At Zion National Park.
- WRTV-TV Indianapolis: Great Sand Dunes About To Experience 'Globally Rare Natural Phenomenon'.
- U.S. News & World Report: Crews Almost Done Clearing Mountain Highway In Montana.
- San Francisco Chronicle: Zip Trip: C&O Canal Restoration Project.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Anchorage Mayor's Chief Of Staff Leaves For Job With National Park Service.
- WLOS-TV Asheville (NC): Woods To Retire As Blue Ridge Parkway Superintendent.
- Chicago Tribune: Route 66, A Celebration Of Kitsch That's Worth Saving.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Marianas Variety: Interior Funding Powers Utilities In Pacific Territories And Freely Associated States.
- St. Thomas Source: Mapp Meets With Interior Officials As Territory Receives Grants.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Funding To Reclaim Abandoned Mines Falls Short.
- Concern Raised About Peabody Mine Cleanup On Navajo, Hopi Land.
- Coal Sector Reignites Under Trump But Is Projected To Burn Out In The Long Run.

US Geological Survey

- Quad-City (IA) Times: U.S. Geological Survey To Conduct Dye Study At Lock And Dam 14.

Top National News

- Associated Press: Trump Speech At DOT Decries Project Approval Process As Overly Burdensome.
- Associated Press: Trump To Focus On Job Training This Week.
- ABC: Sessions Will Testify Before Senate Intelligence Committee On Tuesday.
- ABC: Trump Goes "On The Offensive" Against "Cowardly" Comey.
- NBC: Trump Expresses Willingness To Testify Under Oath Over Comey's Allegations.
- Los Angeles Times: Trump: "America Is Going To Build Again."
- Associated Press: Trump Is Fighting Against Regulations, Not Climate Change.
- Associated Press: Perry Says US Will Focus On "Early Stage" Research Of Climate Technology In Beijing.
- The Hill: OMB Considers Trump's Clean Power Plan Review, Nears Public Release.
- Wall Street Journal: China Aims To Work With US States On Climate Issue.
- Reuters: US, G7 Remain At Odds On Climate Change.
- The Hill: The Hill Analysis: Economic Growth A "Bright Spot" For Trump.
- Wall Street Journal: Lawmakers Unclear On When To Raise Debt Limit.
- Politico: Treasury To Propose "Modest" Bank Reforms.
- Wall Street Journal: Labor Department Partially Implements Obama-Era Fiduciary Rule.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Mr. Trump Goes After The Inspectors."
 - "Shunning Gun Control, Helping Terrorists."
- Washington Post.
 - "Good News: The US And Mexico Agreed On A Sugar Deal But That's Bad News, Too."
 - "Virginia's Breakthrough On Rectifying An Enormous Injustice."
 - "When Mentally Ill Parents Murder Their Children."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump's Steel-Trapped Minds."
 - "A Single-Payer Test Drive."
 - "Hezbollah In The Bronx."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Interior Secretary To Make Proposal On Bears Ears Monument In Test For Protected Land.

Reuters (6/10, Volcovici) reports Interior Secretary Zinke on Saturday was expected "to make a recommendation to the White House...on whether to rescind or resize Utah's Bears Ears monument, setting the tone for the administration's broader study of which lands protected by past presidents should be reopened to development," but "an Interior Department official did not say when the recommendation would be made public." According to Reuters, "The 1.35 million-acre monument, created by former president Barack Obama at the end of his term and named after its iconic twin buttes, is the first of 27 national monuments that will be evaluated by the Department of the Interior after President Donald Trump ordered the review in April.”

Additional coverage was provided by NPR (6/9, Siegler), the Deseret \(UT\) News (6/10, O'Donoghue), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/10), the High Country \(CO\) News (6/9), KSL-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/10, O'Donoghue), and KTVX-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/10, Comeau).

Utah Claims Bears Ears Monument Will Kill Uranium Industry. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/9, Maffly) reports that the Obama Administration “pointedly excluded the White Canyon uranium district from the Bears Ears National Monument, disappointing the tribes that proposed the monument and paleontologists who hoped to see the canyons’ Triassic fossils protected.” However, President Obama’s “nod to mining interests isn’t stopping Utah officials from claiming that the 1.3-million-acre monument he designated last year will destroy the state’s uranium industry.” In comments submitted to the Interior Department for the review of national monuments, the Legislature’s Commission for the Stewardship of Public Lands “argued the Bears Ears designation not only abused the Antiquities Act, but also undermines national security by disrupting access to fissionable materials needed for electrical generation and military readiness — a claim dismissed as nonsense by many observers.”

Factbox: Review Of U.S. National Monuments Could Unlock New Energy Reserves. Reuters (6/10, Bolton) reported that while Bears Ears is not believed to carry energy reserves, the recommendation will set the tone for the review of other monuments that may possess natural resources.

Op-ed: Mormons Have A Responsibility To Protect Public Lands. In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (6/11, Simonsen), Soren Simonsen, a community and regional planner, writes that “the Bears Ears region has special history and meaning and great ancestral and spiritual significance to our native sisters and brothers.” However, “it is equally important to all Americans as we preserve, visit and learn from its abundant sacred and historic places.” He urges “local, state and federal political leaders to keep the designation of the Bears Ears National Monument intact.”

What Utah’s Canyon Country Can Tell Us About Donald Trump’s National Monuments Review.

NPR (6/10, Dwyer, Siegler) reports that although “a looming decision on whether to abolish or shrink the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah should provide an early signal of how the Trump administration will deal with a long list of public lands issues,” the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument “offers a more comprehensive glimpse into the controversy that eddies around many of the monuments — and a revealing peek into what Zinke may ultimately recommend to the president.” The article provides “a tour of the national monument’s economic impact, the political cloud surrounding it — and what we can expect next, once that final call comes down.”

Monumental Legal Dispute Surrounds Antiquities Act. The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/11, Hill) reports that the review is “triggering considerable debate over whether it’s legal for presidents to reduce the size of monuments created by their predecessors, or rescind monument creations altogether.” Legal experts expect that the question will be resolved in court.

Fishermen Lawsuit Against Marine Monument To Progress Slowly. The AP (6/9) reports that “a fishermen group’s lawsuit against the creation” of the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument is “likely to progress slowly while the federal government reviews national monuments around the country.” Lawyers for the fishermen “who sued say their case is likely to proceed slowly since it could be made irrelevant by Trump’s review of the monuments.”

City Council May Support Shrinking Sequoia Monument. The Porterville \(CA\) Recorder (6/10) reports that the Porterville City Council will “consider sending a letter to the United States Department of Interior asking the Giant Sequoia National Monument be reduced in size from 328,000 acres to 90,000 acres.”

Trump’s Attack On National Monuments Reflects Disregard For America’s Diversity. For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (6/9, Arce, Patton, Contributors), Maite Arce, president and CEO of Hispanic Access Foundation, and Hillerie Patton, president of the Dignitas Agency and former employee of Nevada’s Bureau of Land Management, write that national monuments “engage and pay homage to the cultures and communities that contribute to our country’s great history.” They claim that the review of national monument shows “dishonor for U.S. public lands and extreme contempt for one of the nation’s most important conservation tools.” They argue that “this misguided mandate threatens to marginalize, erase, and censor the stories, histories and experiences embodied by our nation’s public lands.” They add that “it will take us a giant step backward, and reopen wounds that, for many, have only begun to heal.”

Trump, Pearce Abuse Power On Monument. In an op-ed for the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (6/11, Fischmann), former state senator Steve Fischmann writes that “the suggestion that the feds imposed” the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument on Dona Ana County “in an act of oppression turns history on its head.” He asserts, “in fact, the feds created the monument at the community’s request.” Fischmann argues: “This was not an abuse of authority. It was government at its best – effectively responding to the people’s wishes.”

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Independent (6/12, Briggs) and the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/11).

Sununu To Meet With Trump Administration Officials In DC, NH.

WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (6/9, DiStaso) reports that Interior Ryan Zinke will visit New Hampshire Tuesday to meet with Gov. Chris Sununu “and other Granite Staters during a roundtable discussion at Bass Pro Shops in Hooksett.” According to the article, “the meeting will be closed to the media, but the Sununu and Zinke will hold a news conference afterward.”

The Bedford \(NH\) Bulletin (6/12, Landrigan) reports that Zinke will “formally announce the release of $1 billion from two federal trust funds that support fish and wildlife preservation across the country.” The Pittman-Robertson Fund, “which goes through the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, delivers about $7.5 million in grants to New Hampshire Fish and Game — a quarter of the state agency’s total budget.”

Department Of The Interior Introduces “Current Wildland Fires” Program.

The St. George & Southern Utah Independent (6/11) reports that the Interior Department “announced recently that it is expanding and enhancing its wildfire location data-sharing program for 2017.” The new service is called “Current Wildland Fires” and is accessible through the Geoplatform ArcGIS Online Organization. Mark Bathrick, director of Interior’s Office of Aviation Services, said, “By providing greater public access to a wider array of wildland fire location data, drone operators will Know Where Not To Go in near real-time. As the 2017 wildland fire season gets underway, this improved service should greatly reduce the incidents of drone incursions on wildfires and enhance the safety of our firefighters and the communities they work so hard to protect.”

Idea To Turn Campsites Over To Private Entities Has Opponents Worried Prices Could Skyrocket.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (6/11, Moss) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “says government shouldn’t be in the business of running campgrounds, so he wants to turn national park campsites over to private businesses.” Last week, Zinke told members of the National Association of RV Parks & Campgrounds, “I don’t want to be in the business of running campgrounds. My folks will never be as good as you are on it.” According to the article, “a handful of companies already run campsites, lodging and concessions throughout the U.S. park system, but some fear widespread privatization could make recreation and camping prohibitively expensive in Western states.”

Additional Coverage: Secretary Zinke Signs New Order On Sage Grouse.

Additional coverage of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s Secretarial Order 3353, “which aims to improve sage grouse conservation and strengthen communication and collaboration between state and federal governments,” was provided by the Wyoming Business Report (6/8), the Wyoming Tribune Eagle (6/9), the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/12, Harmon), the Craig \(CO\) Daily Press (6/9, Blair), the Baker City \(OR\) Herald (6/9, Jacoby), and the Baker City \(OR\) Herald (6/9).

Additional Coverage: AFN Leaders Meet With Secretary Of The Interior.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “was in Alaska last week meeting with organizations and individuals throughout the state” was provided by the Arctic \(AK\) Sounder (6/9, Restino), the Bristol Bay \(AK\) Times (6/9, Restino), and the Mat-Su Valley \(AK\) Frontiersman (6/9, Adams).

Trump’s Ag And Interior Secretaries, And Idaho, Off To A Good Start.

In an editorial, the Idaho Statesman (6/9) says that President Trump’s “heads of the departments of Agriculture and Interior were ambassadors of cooperation when they were here June 2 during their whirlwind trip to Boise. We hope that is their model for the future." Their visit was "a success for Idaho, the federal government and the joint management interests of the vast and revered public lands within our borders and throughout the West." The paper says that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "in particular, scored points by reaffirming that he has no time for the 'transfer of public lands' drama that has distracted the West in recent years."

Additional coverage was provided by the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (6/12, Dentzer).

Our View: Interior Secretary Should Do More Than Visit Maine's New National Monument.

In an editorial, the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/12) says Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "coming to Maine this week to visit the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, where he plans to paddle a canoe and talk with locals about whether they feel that they were sufficiently consulted about the new monument's designation last year." Katahdin Woods and Waters is "on a list of national monuments being reviewed by the Trump administration for what would be a historic first: elimination of their permanent status as national treasures created under the 111-year-old Antiquities Act." The paper trusts that "while Zinke is in Maine, he will hear from longtime fans of the idea of a monument, as well as former critics who have been won over and some who still oppose it." According to the paper, "a monument that attracts visitors is a way to generate economic activity for the people of the region, helping the nearby towns grow again and prosper."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Once Appearing Near Settlement, Wind River Legal Dispute Drags On.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/11, Rosenfeld) reports that "recent developments in the legal dispute between the Northern Arapaho Tribe and federal government on the Wind River Reservation in central Wyoming suggest a resolution may not be near after all." The tribe and the Bureau of Indian Affairs "moved to settle in March, after a federal judge ruled in favor of the Arapaho in several key aspects of the case last fall that deals with how federal money is distributed to the tribes." The Eastern Shoshone Tribe, "which shares the reservation with the Arapaho, sought to enter the lawsuit shortly before the settlement conference, a move that had the potential to upend the mediation." U.S. District Judge Brian Morris has "yet to rule on whether the Shoshone will be allowed to enter the case, which began in 2015, but it appears that regardless, the settlement efforts have not yielded a consensus between the Arapaho and the federal government."

Tasks Lie Ahead For Tribal Casino After Legislation Passes.

The AP (6/11, Haigh) reports that "the tribes that run Connecticut's two casinos have won the long-sought approval of the General Assembly to run a third one, but there are still major tasks ahead as they seek to fend off competition from Springfield, Massachusetts." Federal and local authorizations are required before the Mashantucket Pequot and Mohegan tribes can "begin transforming a former movie theater complex in East Windsor into a $300 million satellite casino, which will be 25 minutes away from the $950 million MGM Resorts casino, opening in late 2018." MMCT Venture, "the company created by the tribes, also needs to finish designing its new gambling and entertainment center and obtain financing while dealing with the legal challenges expected from MGM and others."

Additional coverage was provided by the New London \(CT\) Day (6/10, Collins).

Bureau Of Land Management

Guidelines Developed For Drilling Near Chaco Canyon.

The AP (6/9, Bryan) reports that "federal land managers have laid out their plans for weighing the effects of oil and gas development in northwestern New Mexico on everything from archaeological resources to light pollution." The Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Indian Affairs "released a final scoping report this week as work continues to revamp the management plan that guides development in one of the nation's largest basins." According to the article, "federal officials have acknowledged that the management plan is in need of an update due to changing technologies that are expected to result in more wells and surface disturbances than was planned for more than a decade ago."

Federal Agency Deciding Whether Oil Industry Owes Royalties.

The AP (6/9) reported the Bureau of Land Management is reviewing 2,500 requests to flare from wells the agency manages in North Dakota to see if the oil industry owes royalties for flaring that was avoidable on federal and tribal oil wells. If the agency determines flaring could have been avoided, companies may be forced to pay royalties to the US government.

Conservation Groups Girding For Battle Over National Petroleum Reserve In Alaska.

Alaska Dispatch News (6/10) reported that the Trump Administration is pushing for more development in Alaska's North Slope, despite objections from environmental groups. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke signed an order to revisit a management plan to allow for geological exploration in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska, along with the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Environmentalists say that when the reserve was created in 1976, the Interior Secretary was directed to uphold environmental and subsistence values. Nicole Whittington-Evans, Alaska's director for the Wilderness Society, said, "People hear the name and immediately associate the entire area as a place where oil and gas development is its purpose. ... But that is not what the originating statute actually dictates. It has extraordinary wetlands and wildlife resources that need to be protected."

BLM Seeks Comment On Gas Development West Of Rifle.

The Glenwood Springs \(CO\) Post Independent (6/10) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "moving forward with oil and gas development on land 9 miles west of Rifle and is seeking public comment on the project." Under the Balzac Gulch Master Development Plan, Terra Rocky Mountain LLC will "drill up to 66 oil and gas wells from three existing pads over the next two years." Acting Colorado River Valley Field Manager Gloria Tibbetts said, "The BLM takes a broad, multiyear look at potential oil and gas development through Master Development Plans to better understand and mitigate potential impacts as well as streamline drilling permit approval. Oil and gas development on public lands and minerals in the Colorado River Valley Field Office supports a working landscape that creates jobs and helps Western Slope communities grow."

Fishing In The Healing Waters Of The Umpqua.

The Roseburg \(OR\) News-Review (6/11, Hoard) reports that "about 20 veterans and volunteers...came out to a fly fishing event this weekend thanks to the Roseburg District Bureau of Land Management and Project Healing Waters Fly Fishing, a national nonprofit meant to support those who have served in the military." According to the article, "the veterans stayed at the Eagleview Group Campground Thursday through Saturday, sharing barbecue dinners and telling fishing stories by the campfire." Cheyne Rossbach of the Roseburg BLM said, "The BLM is proud to partner with Project Healing Waters to help put on these events and help the veterans." Rossbach "added that many BLM retirees are involved with the program, including Jay Carlson, former district manager and an avid fly fisherman."

Wild Horses Available For Adoption In Wyoming.

The AP (6/9) reports that "wild horses are available for adoption this summer at the Rock Springs Wild Horse Holding Facility." The Bureau of Land Management "estimates 42 wild horses are available for adoption."

Inmate-trained Wild Mustangs Up For Adoption.

KXTV-TV Sacramento, CA (6/9, Moore) reports that "five inmate trained horses are up for adoption in the Wild Horse Program, a collaboration between the Bureau of Land Management and the Sacramento County Sheriff's Department." According to the article, "inmates gain skills, confidence and leadership qualities in learning to train them, and adoption programs like this one provide a safety valve to ease pressure on the overgrazed public lands."

Cadiz Inc. Would Damage Mohave Desert.

In separate letters to the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/9), Sen. Dianne Feinstein and Mojave National Preserve superintendent Mary G. Martin rebut Winston Hickox's recent op-ed in support of the Cadiz water project. Feinstein claims that the op-ed shows "Cadiz will continue to prioritize its investor's financial interests over California's irreplaceable public lands" instead of providing "the public an open and honest discussion about their water extraction project." Also, Martin claims "Hickox's op-ed contains misrepresentations and untrue statements about the Cadiz project." Martin thanks Feinstein "for her leadership in opposing President Donald Trump's administration's effort to drain groundwater from our desert, parks and wildlife.”

All Public Lands Matter: We Need BLM To Protect Otero Mesa.

In commentary for KRWG-FM Las Cruces, NM (6/11, Soules), New Mexico state Sen. William Soules urges the public to comment on a Bureau of Land Management Resource Management Plan for Otero Mesa. According to Soules, “a draft RMP is expected this year, and by using our voices we can call on the BLM to use all of the tools at their disposal to create a balanced plan that adequately protects the Otero Mesa landscape.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Mark Sanford, Environmental Groups In Race Against Clock To Stop Offshore Drilling.

The Beaufort \(SC\) Gazette (6/9, Angst) reported that 60 organizations from South Carolina and along the Atlantic coast expressed support for Rep. Mark Sanford’s bill that would prevent offshore drilling and all related activities for 10 years in the Atlantic, Straits of Florida and Eastern Gulf of Mexico. The coalition of groups wrote, “If passed, this legislation would give our businesses, communities and organizations the assurance needed to ensure the longevity of our livelihoods without the fear of impacts from offshore drilling and seismic airgun blasting.” Sanford said in a statement, “The administration’s latest action in opening the waters of the Atlantic to seismic testing is another in a string of decisions that is fundamentally at odds with the notion that the government closest to the people governs best.”

Columbia \(SC\) State (6/9, Henderson) provided continuing coverage that a federal notice seeks public comment for five exploration companies which are looking to use seismic testing in the Atlantic.

Cape Wind Opposition Continues.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (6/11, Bragg) reports that “opponents of the stalled Cape Wind offshore wind farm continued efforts in April and May to end the company’s federal lease.” The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, “though, has no plans to rescind the lease for 30 acres in Nantucket Sound, agency spokesman Stephen Boutwell said.” Boutwell said, “Cape Wind Associates LLC is currently in good standing.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

C.A.S.T. For Kids Helps Expand Options For Disabled Youths.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (6/10, Wyatt) reports that the 21st annual C.A.S.T. for Kids event was held on Saturday at Horsetooth Reservoir. The C.A.S.T. foundation along with the Bureau of Reclamation and the Centennial Bass Club of Northern Colorado “assembled nearly 50 boats...for disabled and disadvantaged children to climb aboard and catch some fish.”

Kids With Special Needs Went Fishing, Reeling In Excitement.

KRCR-TV Redding, CA (6/10, Wong) reports that “kids with disabilities, or who are disadvantaged, got the chance to cast their own fishing lines Saturday morning at Shasta Lake for the ‘Catch a Special Thrill’ event.” The Bureau of Reclamation “helped organize a day for kids with special needs throughout Shasta County to get outdoors and out on the lake.” Sheri Harral with the Bureau of Reclamation said, “It’s in the hopes that they will grow to love the outdoors and the love of fishing.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Feds Give Gulf Drillers A Break.

The Houston Chronicle (6/9, Osborne) reports that “federal regulators are extending the amount of time offshore oil and gas drillers in the Gulf of Mexico have to resume work on a lease once activity has ceased.” The Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement “announced Friday it would now allow 12 months of inactivity, up from six months, before suspending leases in federal waters.” BSEE Director Scott Angelle said, “These additional months mean companies doing business on the Outer Continental Shelf will have more planning flexibility, which will help them be more cost efficient, create more jobs and maximize the economic benefit for the entire nation.”

Additional coverage was provided by E&P Magazine (6/9) and World Oil (6/9).

BSEE Director Angelle’s Tour Ends With ‘Fact Finding’ Efforts In Lafayette.

The Lafayette \(LA\) Daily Advertiser (6/9, Stickney) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Scott Angelle completed a “five-day trek across the Gulf Coast” on Friday. Angelle “met with industry representatives in New Orleans, Houston and Lafayette.” Angelle said Wednesday at the Offshore Operators Committee general meeting in Houston, “BSEE maintains a high focus on safety and the environment, and also a focus on responsible energy production. My mission under Secretary (Ryan) Zinke’s leadership is not how do we promote either/or, it’s how do we do it all?” He continued, “How do we promote more responsible energy development while being safe and environmentally conscious? I don’t think that’s too much to ask.”

New BSEE Director Urges Change Of Focus.

The Anchorage \(AK\) Petroleum News (6/11) reports that Scott Angelle, “the new director of the federal Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, urged more focus on economic opportunities in a May 31 town hall meeting with employees in Sterling, Virginia.”

Wildlife & Fisheries Proposes More Artificial-reef Sites For Defunct Oil Platforms.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (6/9, Masson) reports that “Louisiana anglers have seen the numbers of oil and gas platforms decline over the last few years after a 2010 directive from the U.S. Department of Interior ordered all non-producing oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico be plugged and any remaining structures be removed within five years.” The Idle Iron policy “meant anglers had to watch as many of their favorite fishing platforms were deconstructed and carted on barges back to dry land.” The Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries is “hoping to keep more of that structure in the Gulf, and has selected several additional special artificial reef sites (SARS) in the near- and offshore waters along the state’s coast.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Endangered Species Cuts Could Hit Jobs In Montana.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (6/11, Chaney) reports that “many state groups and agencies that handle Endangered Species Act functions for the federal government have been casting worried looks at the endangered status of their funding.” President Trump’s proposed 2018 budget “hits corners of several agencies that protect threatened animals like bull trout and grizzly bears.” According to the article, “should those cuts come to pass, that could also endanger lots of jobs in Montana.”

Senate’s Midnight Measure Would Protect Gorillas.

The Washington Examiner (6/9, Siciliano) reports that the Senate “passed a bill late Thursday night that seeks to restore funding for endangered species programs to protect gorillas and elephants in Africa and India, while guarding the U.S. against invasive pests from other countries.” The bipartisan Wildlife Innovation and Longevity Driver (WILD) Act was “passed by unanimous consent, with lawmakers on both sides of the aisle praising the bill’s emphasis on reauthorizing the programs.” The WILD Act “reauthorizes programs to protect gorillas, tigers, Asian and African elephant species, and rhinos, while nearly doubling the amount of money for the Department of Interior to run the sea turtle program.”

Wolves May Be Exploring New Territory In Western Washington.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/11) reports that “gray wolves appear to be checking out territory west of the Cascades in eastern Skagit County, according to photos, tracks and other signs, federal officials say.” According to the article, “if observations prove to be true, a pack in Western Washington would be a leap toward delisting wolves from state and federal endangered species protections.” U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Carnivore Lead Gregg Kurz said, “It’s too early to confirm whether a pack is present there, but we have confirmed what we believe to be wolf activity in the area.”

Additional Coverage: DNA From Zoo's Polar Bears Used In Fight Against Poaching.

Additional coverage that the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium's polar bear cubs are "helping the federal government fight crimes against their wild relatives in the Arctic, thanks to advancements in forensic science and DNA testing" was provided by the AP (6/11, Neese).

National Park Service

Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool To Be Drained, Cleaned After Parasite Kills 80 Ducklings.

The Washington Post (6/9, Moyer) reports that "the Lincoln Memorial's Reflecting Pool will be drained and cleaned next week after a waterborne parasite killed several ducklings, officials said." According to a statement by the National Park Service, "since May 20, about 80 ducklings have been found dead in the Reflecting Pool, and necropsies showed the likely cause of death to be parasites that grow in snails that live in the water." The NPS said that "chemical treatments cannot kill the parasites and snails, so the water must be drained and cleaned."

The AP (6/9) reports that the statement says "humans who come in contact with the parasite can develop a skin rash, though it rarely requires medical treatment."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/9), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (6/9), the Daily Mail (6/9), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/10), Philly \(PA\) (6/9), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/9), the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/9), and WUSA-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/9).

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/9, Weil, Moyer), CNN (6/9, LeBlanc), CNN International (6/9, LeBlanc), NPR (6/9, Wamsley), USA Today (6/10, Rossman), TIME (6/9, Gajanan), the Atlanta \(GA\) Journal-Constitution (6/11, Erdman), the Daily Mail (6/9, Duncan), the Huffington Post (6/10, Papenfuss), the Tech Times (6/11, Norman), Breitbart (6/11, Starr), the Morning Ticker (6/10, Taylor), WRC-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/10, Rempfer), WRC-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/10, Rempfer), and WTTG-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/9).

A Birmingham Motel Is Part Of A Civil Rights National Monument.

NPR (6/10) reports that "the A.G. Gaston Motel was where Martin Luther King stayed when he visited Birmingham" is now part of the Birmingham Civil Rights National Monument. Bishop Calvin Woods discussed its history.

Glacier National Park Maintenance Backlog Drops.

The AP (6/10) reports that "Glacier National Park's maintenance backlog has dropped by $31 million over the last year, according to a report by the National Park Service." The park's deferred maintenance "dropped to $148.2 million in 2016, down from $179.8 million in 2015." The article notes that "the ongoing rehabilitation of the 50-mile Going-to-the-Sun Road, expected to wrap up early next year, helped knock out a substantial chunk of the existing backlog last year."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Idaho Statesman (6/10), the Ravalli \(MT\) Republic (6/10), the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (6/10), and the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (6/10).

Federal Hiring Freeze Causing Headaches At Rocky Mountain National Park.

The Denver Post (6/9) reports that many visitors to Rocky Mountain National Park will "experience delays and long lines for much of the busy season due to a slow hiring process and budgetary challenges." According to the article, "the amount of permanent staff at RMNP is around 200, and that doubles during the busy season." This year however, "there are significant hiring delays for both seasonal and permanent employees."

Local Students Experience Milestone Moment At Zion National Park.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/11, Benavidez) reports that "fourth-graders from Rainbow Dreams Academy, Victory Mission Baptist Church, 100 Academy of Excellence and Booker, Kelly and Wendell Williams elementary schools" were invited to Zion National Park "along with a small group of children from Child Protective Services." According to the article, "in partnership with the National Park Service, the National Park Foundation and the Every Kid In A Park program, Las Vegas City Councilman Ricki Barlow worked for a year to bring the students to Zion." Barlow was "supporting 1 Million African-American Youth In A Park, an extension of Every Kid in a Park led by National Park Foundation board member Stephen Hightower."

Great Sand Dunes About To Experience ‘Globally Rare Natural Phenomenon’.

WRTV-TV Indianapolis (6/9, Contreras) reports that “this is the best time of the year to experience a globally rare natural phenomenon at the sand dunes in the San Luis Valley, according to a Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve spokesperson.” Medano Creek is “now approaching what’s called ‘surge flow,’ a phenomenon where creek water flows in waves across the sand.”

Additional coverage was provided by WXYZ-TV Detroit (6/9, Contreras).

Crews Almost Done Clearing Mountain Highway In Montana.

The AP (6/10) reports that “after weeks of moving snow along Glacier National Park’s Going-to-the-Sun Road, crews are almost ready to declare the Big Drift open for travel.”

Zip Trip: C&O Canal Restoration Project.

In a video posted by the San Francisco Chronicle (6/11), Alison Greenberg, Executive Director with Georgetown Heritage, and Jenny Anzelmo-Sarles, spokesperson for the National Park Service, talked “about the restoration effort at the C&O Canal in Georgetown.”

Anchorage Mayor’s Chief Of Staff Leaves For Job With National Park Service.

The Alaska Dispatch News (6/10, Kelly) reports that Anchorage Mayor Ethan Berkowitz’s chief of staff Susanne Fleek-Green, is leaving the city to become the superintendent of Lake Clark National Park and Preserve. Fleek-Green’s starts her new position on Monday.

Woods To Retire As Blue Ridge Parkway Superintendent.

WLOS-TV Asheville, NC (6/9) reports that Mark Woods, superintendent of the Blue Ridge Parkway, “said he will retire July 3, 2017, after a 37-year career with the National Park Service.” Woods said, “It has been such a privilege to have a career in the National Park Service. The National Park Service serves to protect and tell the stories of some of our country’s most amazing places from presidential homes and sacred battlefields, to natural resource treasures like we have along the parkway. National Park Service sites truly represent the best America has to offer.”

Route 66, A Celebration Of Kitsch That’s Worth Saving.

In an editorial, the Chicago Tribune (6/9, Board) praises the successes of the National Park Service’s Route 66 Corridor Preservation Program. It notes that “a bipartisan bill now in Congress would designate Route 66 as a National Historic Trail,” which “would ensure preservation funds are allocated for roadway projects every year.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Interior Funding Powers Utilities In Pacific Territories And Freely Associated States.

Marianas Variety (6/12) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula has “made available $380,447 in maintenance assistance funding from the Office of Insular Affairs to support two regional initiatives and one local initiative that support and bolster capacity for the power utilities in all main islands of the Pacific U.S. insular areas.” Pula said, “Electrical power is costly for residents in the territories and freely associated states. We do all we can to help them keep costs down through building local capacity and facilitating collaboration of ideas and expertise.”

Mapp Meets With Interior Officials As Territory Receives Grants.

The St. Thomas Source (6/8) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp met with Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula and “other officials Tuesday to discuss issues facing the territory.” According to the Interior Department, “the discussions covered infrastructure challenges related to the hospitals and Mapp’s efforts to bring greater fiscal stability to the territory.” The article notes that “Mapp’s trip coincided with the release of $704,000 in federal technical and maintenance assistance funding through the Office of Insular Affairs.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Funding To Reclaim Abandoned Mines Falls Short.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (6/11, Peterson) reports that "U.S. House members gathered last week to discuss the allocation of funds in the federal program to reclaim abandoned mines." Rep. Steve Pearce "scolded the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement for the lack of oversight of the funds." Jeff Graves, the Colorado director of the Inactive Mines Reclamation Program, "said once the federal program ends in 2021, the allocated money left won't be enough."

Additional coverage was provided by the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (6/10, Ward).

Concern Raised About Peabody Mine Cleanup On Navajo, Hopi Land.

Bloomberg BNA (6/9, Lee) reports that "Arizona residents and environmentalists are growing increasingly worried about the cleanup of a large coal mine that's moving swiftly toward closure." Peabody Energy Corp., "the mine's operator, promises that the reclamation will be done right." If it's not, local residents "fear the Navajo and Hopi tribes in the northern part of the state will be left with a parched, ravaged homeland that might never be fully restored."

Coal Sector Reignites Under Trump But Is Projected To Burn Out In The Long Run.

The Washington Times (6/11, Wolfgang) reports that despite signs of a US coal industry rebound, "even the most ardent coal proponents say the revival will be short-lived," as "many coal-fired power plants and utilities" are "moving toward cheaper natural gas." Energy Information Administration (EIA) data show that "coal production during the final week of May was 22 percent higher than during the same week last year, with nearly 15 million short tons." However, the Times calls statistics presented by EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt on ABC's "This Week" on June 4 "misleading"; Pruitt said 50,000 coal-related jobs were created in the US last quarter, but that count includes "a host of positions not directly related to coal mining," according to the article.

US Geological Survey

U.S. Geological Survey To Conduct Dye Study At Lock And Dam 14.

The Quad-City \(IA\) Times (6/9, Geyer) reports that U.S. Geological Survey scientists will "conduct a hydraulic study on Tuesday using a harmless, florescent red dye at the Mississippi River's Lock and Dam 14 at LeClaire." According to the article, "researchers will measure the distribution of the dye in the auxiliary lock and map the dyed water downstream after the dyed water is released from the lock." The goal is "to understand how well water mixes within the lock chamber, to quantify the amount of leakage into and out of the lock through the gates, and to determine how quickly the dye becomes diluted downstream once it is released from the lock."

Additional coverage was provided by KWQC-TV Davenport, IA (6/11).

Top National News

Trump Speech At DOT Decries Project Approval Process As Overly Burdensome.

President Trump on Friday concluded Infrastructure Week with a speech at the Department of Transportation focused on the Administration's commitment to reducing regulatory burden for new projects with the creation of two new councils to help projects work through the approval process. The major print dailies and wire reports covered the address, although reactions to the speech were not exactly optimistic about the success of Trump's proposals. Reporting also highlighted that Trump dropped binders of environmental impact statements on the floor next to him to demonstrate the extent of the current review process.

The AP (6/9, Superville) reports Transportation Secretary Chao and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke were among the officials in attendance, during which Trump said "my administration is committed to ending these terrible delays" on groundbreaking "once and for all." Driving home the point about the current environmental review and permitting process, Trump, "with the dramatic flair of the reality TV star he used to be," picked up "a pair of thick binders that held the environmental impact statement for a Maryland highway" before letting each fall on "the floor with a loud thud after he thumbed through them." Before giving the speech, Trump participated in a transportation roundtable discussion with state officials, where Trump said his Administration intends to make US infrastructure "once again...the envy of the world."

The Washington Post (6/9, Laris) reports, coming just one day after James Comey's testimony before Congress, "Trump on Friday appeared before a friendly audience at the U.S. Department of Transportation to try to build some momentum for a signature campaign promise," his plan to unleash $1 trillion in public and private spending power for infrastructure projects. In his DOT speech, Trump said, "These binders on the stage could be replaced by just a few simple pages" that would remove "unnecessary things that cost millions and millions of dollars and they actually make it worse." The Post says the Administration's infrastructure plan, which relies heavily on private spending spurred by tax breaks, is no longer looking like the "opportunity for bipartisanship" that seemed possible after the election. The story concludes by mentioning that "Chao said the Department of Transportation issued a public call in the Federal Register Friday 'soliciting solutions and suggestions on ways to improve government permitting. So, if you have ideas, we want to hear from you.'"

Reuters (6/9, Shepardson) reports Trump stated the project permitting process is "one of the biggest obstacles to creating this new and desperately-needed infrastructure," being "painfully slow, costly and time-consuming." The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Bender) reports Trump proposed two new offices to help with project planning, one that would help project managers work with the proper bureaucratic channels and make information about projects more publicly available, and another under the White House Council of Environmental Quality that would focus on streamlining the project approval process.

U.S. News & World Report (6/9, Soergel) reports the new council focused on helping project managers work through the approval process "will also improve transparency by creating a new online dashboard allowing everyone to easily track major projects through every stage of the approval process," Trump said, adding that "We will hold the bureaucracy accountable" by possibly fining agencies with consistent project delays. The story says Trump, Chao, and Zinke were all in attendance at the transportation roundtable discussion with state leaders about "how best to move forward on infrastructure revitalization."

Bloomberg Politics (6/9, Niquette) reports Barack Obama "had created a similar dashboard" to the one Trump proposed. USA Today (6/9, Korte) reports "the White House did not immediately explain how Trump's new federal permitting council would differ from the one that already exists": the Federal Permitting Improvement Steering Council, which was created in 2015 by Congress and the Obama Administration. Bloomberg News (6/9, Niquette) reports in another story, however, that "after Trump's speech at the Department of Transportation, the White House confirmed that he was referring to the Federal Permitting Improvement Steering Council, which was authorized by Congress in 2015 and implemented by President Barack Obama."

In a story titled, "Trump's 'infrastructure week' goes off the rails," The Hill (6/9, Zanona) reported "the White House's self-proclaimed 'infrastructure week' has generated a flurry of headlines on nearly everything else," with Comey's testimony having "commanded the attention of Washington and major cable news networks all week long."

NBC News (6/9, Popken) reports Trump "didn't unveil a formal plan for achieving any of these goals" laid out in his speech, adding to his "week of non-starters."

MarketWatch (6/9, Schroeder) reports the Democratic opposition is also "giving Trump's infrastructure plans the cold shoulder," with Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer having said the plan would benefit investors, not the general public.

The Baltimore Sun (6/9, Fritze) reports on Trump's use of Maryland's Intercountry Connector toll road as an example of the "painfully slow" environmental review process.

CNN (6/9, Merica) summarizes Trump's cross-nation trips this week to promote his infrastructure plan as "ill-timed."

The Los Angeles Times (6/9), CNBC (6/9), and Mediaite (6/9, Meyer) posted video of Trump's speech.

Chao Calls For Public Input On Infrastructure Regulations. Truckinginfo (6/9, Cullen) reports on Secretary Chao's blog post Friday to mark the end of Infrastructure Week "by asking the public to comment 'on ways to identify and reduce unnecessary regulatory obstacles that too often stand in the way of completing important infrastructure projects across the nation.'" Chao said, "we know you can help us identify more" ways to reduce regulatory burden for infrastructure projects, noting that Deputy Transportation Secretary Jeff Rosen "has already acted on what we've been hearing and identified dozens of ways to streamline the process."

JD Supra (6/9) reports on the Transportation Department's request Friday for stakeholders to "help identify non-statutory requirements that should be removed or revised by submitting comments by July 24, 2017." According to the report, DOT's call for input "presents an opportunity for interested stakeholders to identify specific administrative and regulatory requirements that impede project development and approvals and to present ideas on how these impediments can be eliminated."

Transit Projects Around The Country Could Be In Jeopardy. The Washington Post (6/9, Paletta, Debonis) reports that “dozens of public transit projects around the country are in danger of stalling as the White House’s plan to boost U.S. infrastructure fails to gain momentum – with thousands of jobs at risk.” According to the story, “local officials who had long anticipated federal support for their projects” are now “worrying whether they will get it” amidst uncertainty over the Administration’s infrastructure plan and how much direct Federal spending it will include in the bid to unleash $1 trillion in public and private spending power. While “Trump had originally held out hope that infrastructure spending could be a rare source of bipartisan action this year,” his “hopes have dissipated in recent months as controversies enveloped the White House and Democrats grew skeptical of Trump’s plans to provide large tax credits to private companies to finance much of the construction.”

NYTimes: Trump’s Infrastructure Plan Should Focus On Promoting Investment, Not Scrapping Permitting Rules. In an editorial, the New York Times (6/9) contends that “lacking a real plan to fix the country’s roads, bridges and water systems, President Trump on Friday” in a speech at the Department of Transportation to cap off Infrastructure Week “trained his guns on the phantom menace of cumbersome regulations that he said were delaying much-needed public works projects.” While the Times acknowledges that “most people can agree that the government should work faster and more efficiently,” the outlet argues “lack of serious investment” is the real problem, not “a half-century of bipartisan environmental law.”

Trump To Focus On Job Training This Week.

President Trump this week plans to focus on expanding apprenticeship programs as part of his job creation initiative. While media coverage was limited to the wires and a handful of print and online outlets, reporting is mostly positive and suggests that the President’s business skills and television experience as the host of “The Apprentice” could help Trump’s jobs program succeed.

The AP (6/10, Boak, Kellman) reports the President “is trying to change the subject back to his promise to make American job creation a top priority” by focusing next week on “bringing more Americans into the economy by having them start working as apprentices.” The AP says that while “there are few specifics as to how Trump would encourage more Americans to simultaneously work and learn as apprentices,” Trump will be “visiting a technical college in Waukesha, Wisconsin, on Tuesday, delivering a policy speech at the Labor Department on Wednesday and meeting with eight governors at the White House on Thursday.” Reed Cordish, a presidential aide on intragovernmental and technology issues, told reporters that when the government partners with businesses and schools, “the country has seen the best results.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/10, Morath) reports Ivanka Trump said the Administration is focused on “supporting working families and creating a pathway for them to have robust and successful careers. There has been great focus on four-year higher education, and in reality, that is not the right path for everyone.” Labor Secretary Acosta added, “Closing the skills gap is critical for increasing labor-force participation.” USA Today (6/10, Sullivan) reports Ivanka also said that in addition to Acosta, Commerce Secretary Ross and Education Secretary DeVos “have been looking at existing federal job-training programs to determine which work and which are redundant.”

The Hill (6/10, Easley) reports Ivanka added the President’s visit to the Waukesha County Technical College, will “raise awareness about the fact that there are important and very viable and respectable career paths outside of a traditional four-year college experience that should be considered and should be invested in.” Ivanka “credited German chancellor Angela Merkel – who has a frosty relationship with her father – for planting the seeds for the new initiatives by taking her on a tour of an apprenticeship facility in Berlin earlier this year.” Ivanka said, “We looked around the globe and sought to find examples of where apprenticeships and workforce development and training programs were very successful and really thriving. Germany is a great example of that.” The Hill notes Vice President Pence is currently in Wisconsin “to discuss the administration’s economic agenda with Gov. Scott Walker (R) and small business owners from across the state.”

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (6/10, Gilbert) describes Wisconsin as “an example of a blue-collar state with a relatively strong tradition, by U.S. standards, of apprenticeships,” but also a state “where business and political leaders have complained that a skills gap is a big factor holding back job growth. While statewide unemployment has declined to a 17-year-low of 3.2%, job growth has been chronically sluggish.” The Journal Sentinel states that the White House will use the President’s visit to WCTC “to publicize its goal to vastly ‘scale up’ the use of apprenticeship programs to close a skills gap that is making it hard to fill many jobs in manufacturing and other sectors.” Cordish said, “The students [at WCTC] are learning skills and trades that will lead to their employment right in that area, jobs that are available – good, high-wage jobs that are available in that locality.”

Meanwhile, Politico (6/10, Kullgren) says the “centerpiece” of the “three-day blitz” will be the President’s speech at the Labor Department “to announce yet-undisclosed executive actions to promote job training.” Politico adds “in touting apprenticeships, a rare policy tool that enjoys bipartisan support, Trump will have to maneuver around the awkward fact that his proposed budget would cut Labor Department funding for training and employment services by 36 percent, including deep reductions in training for adults and dislocated workers.” However, a senior Administration official insisted, “The problem is not money. The problem is [training programs] haven’t been set up in an effective and accountable way, and that’s what we’ll be addressing through this initiative. The president put forth a very fiscally responsible and prudent budget.”

Reuters (6/10, Rampton) reports Trump, the “reality television star with a show called ‘The Apprentice,’ will spend a lot of time next week promoting a plan to expand apprenticeships to help companies find more skilled workers to fill jobs, the White House said.” Reuters adds that the President is in his element for “workforce development week,” as “a real estate developer who is familiar with the use of apprenticeship programs in the building trades.” The Los Angeles Times (6/10, Puzanghera) similarly states that “Trump will focus...on something he knows well – apprentices.” The Times adds the Administration “is reviewing and could shift the $16.7 billion spent on 43 job training programs spread across 13 agencies,” although the President’s proposed budget for 2018 “would cut funding for adult, youth and dislocated worker training grants to states by 40%, to $1.6 billion, according to the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, a liberal think tank.”

However, the Washington Examiner (6/10, Lawler) highlights that the “workforce development week” comes after a “botched ‘infrastructure week’” that was “overshadowed by former FBI Director James Comey and President Trump’s tweets.” Vanity Fair (6/10, Fox) runs a similar report headlined “As Comeygate Deepens, Ivanka Offers a Bipartisan Distraction.”

Sessions Will Testify Before Senate Intelligence Committee On Tuesday.

Attorney General Sessions on Saturday said he will testify before the Senate Intelligence Committee on Tuesday to address allegations about his meetings with Russian officials that former FBI Director James Comey made during his hearing on Thursday. Media coverage, which included more than four minutes combined on the two network newscasts to broadcast, was also heavy in print and online. Reporting was generally negative and suggests Sessions testimony will likely be dominated by question of his meetings with Russian officials when he was a surrogate for President Trump’s campaign.

ABC World News Tonight’s (6/10, story 2, 2:30, Llamas) Mary Bruce said “the spotlight of the Russia investigation is bringing new scrutiny to” Sessions, who had been “the first senator to endorse candidate Trump. In March, citing those campaign ties, Sessions recused himself from overseeing the Russia investigation.” Bruce also reported investigators have been reviewing “Trump’s first major foreign policy address at a DC hotel last year” that was attended by Sessions and Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak. Bruce added the Attorney General was invited to testify “specifically because there are so many Russia-related questions for Sessions.” Sen. Chris Murphy said Comey suggested “that there are some untold stories about why Jeff Sessions decided to recuse himself,” and Sen. Richard Blumenthal remarked, “What we have is a pattern of contacts with the Russians by [former National Security Adviser Michael] Flynn, by Sessions, by [senior adviser Jared] Kushner, secret and then concealed.”

The New York Times (6/10, Savage) reports Sessions “had been scheduled to testify before other committees about the Justice Department’s budget that day, but he will instead appear before the intelligence panel” to discuss “issues related to Russia’s interference in the 2016 election.” According to the Times, Sessions “may face sharper questioning from the intelligence committee, which has had access to intelligence materials in its inquiry into the Russian meddling.” The Times highlights that Comey “invoked” Sessions “several times” during his testimony and “said, cryptically, on Thursday that even before Mr. Sessions recused himself, there had been classified facts ‘that would make his continued engagement in a Russia-related investigation problematic.’ That led officials to believe that ‘he was not going to be in contact with Russia-related matters much longer.’” The CBS Weekend News (6/10, story 2, 1:40, Barnett) Correspondent Errol Barnett reported the former FBI Director additionally “explained why he didn’t report his concerns to...Sessions.” Comey: “Our judgment, as I recall, is that he was very close to and inevitably going to recuse himself for a variety of reasons. We also were aware of facts that I can’t discuss in an open setting, that would make his continued engagement in a Russia-related investigation problematic.”

The Washington Post (6/10, Horwitz) reports Sessions told Sen. Richard Shelby, chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee on commerce, justice, science and related agencies, and Rep. John Abney Culberson, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on commerce, justice, science and related agencies, that despite previously accepting their invitation, “In light of reports regarding Mr. Comey’s recent testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, it is important that I have an opportunity to address these matters in the appropriate forum.” Sessions added, “The Senate Intelligence Committee is the most appropriate forum for such matters, as it has been conducting an investigation and has access to relevant, classified information.” However, the Post states that “a Justice Department official said that committee hearing probably will be closed to the public.”

Meanwhile, Reuters (6/10, Ali) and USA Today (6/10, Mallenbaum) report Sessions will designate Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein to testify before the Senate and House Appropriations subcommittees in his stead. “Briefing congressional appropriators on the Justice Department’s budget is a critical part of the attorney general’s job,” the AP (6/10) says, and “the fact that Sessions would delegate that task to his deputy showed the Russia investigation was distracting him from his core duties.”

In addition, Politico (6/10, Cheney, Bresnahan) mentions the President “has privately expressed frustration about Sessions’ decision to recuse himself, and the two have had a tense relationship in recent weeks. Sessions even offered to resign before Trump left on his first foreign trip, but the president ultimately declined the offer, according to a person who regularly speaks with Sessions.” In an analysis, CNN (6/10, Cillizza) Editor-At-Large Chris Cillizza says that for Sessions, it “not been a good seven days.” According to Cillizza, “Sessions’ week went from really bad to holy-cow-what-else-can-happen-to-me” after Comey “testified about his interactions with Trump over the Russia investigation. While Sessions wasn’t the focus of the questions (or the answers), he came under some heavy criticism from his former underling.” Cillizza concludes Sessions “had the Worst Week in Washington.”

Trump’s Base Supports President, Poll Finds Americans Trust Comey More. The Washington Post (6/10, A1, Phillip, O’Keefe) reports on its front-page that Democrats and “many legal experts in both parties” view Comey’s testimony as “dire legal peril” for the President, but “to Trump, many Republicans and a broad constellation of surrogates and conservative media outlets, the takeaway is much different: exoneration.” The Post contends “the starkly different interpretation of Comey’s testimony on the right provides another illustration of the deepening national divide over Trump, whose approval ratings are mired in the mid- to high-30s amid the Russia probe and other controversies and whose agenda has bogged down in Congress with relatively few major accomplishments so far.” The AP (6/10, Lemire, Thomas) similarly reports the President is “banking on his loyal base of supporters to help him through the tangle of the Russia turmoil.” According to the AP, Trump’s response to Comey on Friday was made with “his core backers in mind” and “his strategy is consistent with the way Trump has governed in his first four months in office.”

However, the Huffington Post (6/10, Edwards-Levy) reports a new HuffPost/YouGov poll of 1,000 “adults” (6/8-6/9) released Saturday found “by a 20-point margin, 46 percent to 26 percent, Americans say Comey is more honest and trustworthy than Trump, with the remainder unsure.” According to the poll, “Similar shares of the public hold favorable views of both men: 38 percent for Trump, and 35 percent for Comey. But Trump’s unfavorables, at 53 percent, are significantly higher than Comey’s, at just 33 percent.” The poll shows half of respondents “believe that Trump asked Comey to pledge loyalty to him...with just 15 percent believing Trump’s disavowal of having done so.” In addition, 42 percent “believes...Trump attempted to order [Comey] to drop the FBI investigation” of Flynn, while 28 percent “don’t believe that Trump did so.” However, the poll suggests Comey’s testimony has “failed to move the needle much on broader views about the Russia story, which remain unfavorable – but not yet overwhelmingly so – toward the White House.”

Comey Associate In Contact With Senate Judiciary Committee Over Memos. “A source familiar with the discussions” told Politico (6/9, Cheney) that “Dan Richman, a longtime friend and adviser to...Comey, has been in contact with the Senate Judiciary Committee regarding a series of memos that Comey authored about his private conversations with President Donald Trump from January through April.” The source “says Richman connected with the Senate panel via the office of special counsel Robert Mueller, who is leading a high-profile investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. ... The source says the matter will be addressed on Monday.”

NYTimes A1: Trump’s Feud With Comey “Overshadowed” Big Warning Of Russian Threat. In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (6/10, A1, Baker, Sanger) cautions that “lost in the showdown” between Trump and Comey “was a chilling threat to the United States” when Comey “testified that the Russians had not only intervened in last year’s election, but would try to do it again.” Comey warned, “It’s not a Republican thing or Democratic thing – it really is an American thing. They’re going to come for whatever party they choose to try and work on behalf of. And they’re not devoted to either, in my experience. They’re just about their own advantage. And they will be back.” The Times adds that Comey’s “warning about the Russian threat was overshadowed by his confrontation with Mr. Trump, who fired him last month.”

WPost Analysis: McCain’s Travel Schedule Likely Behind “Groggy” Comey Questioning.

Washington Post (6/10, Kane) columnist Paul Kane highlights that Sen. John McCain “seemed a bit groggy during Thursday’s high-profile congressional hearing” and suggests his strange performance could be because “he had spent the previous week on the other side of the world, hop-scotching his way around the Pacific trying to reassure allies that the U.S. government remains in their corner.” According to Kane, McCain has “long played” this role, “but it’s taken on a more serious tenor in the era of President Trump. Already this year, the senator has logged more than 75,000 miles to more than 15 nations across three continents, according to his staff.” Kane adds that during the Congressional Memorial Day recess, McCain had traveled “from Australia to Vietnam to Singapore...to shore up frayed alliances.”

NYTimes Analysis: By Tapping Wray For FBI Director, Trump Revives Christie’s “Bridgegate.”

When the President nominated Christopher Wray as FBI Director this week, “it appeared that Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey had finally made an imprint on an administration he was supposed to have helped shape all along,” the New York Times (6/10, Katz, Bernstein) reports, as Wray had served as Christie’s counsel “during Bridgegate and helped him avoid legal consequences, including testifying in court.” The Times notes “several Bridgegate figures are now in the Trump inner circle – no surprise, considering that Mr. Trump and Mr. Christie have been friends since they first dined together in the early 2000s.” According to the Times, Trump and Christie also “share a New York-New Jersey style of transactional what-have-you-done-for-me-lately politics, where policy seems secondary, ethics rules are meant to be bent, apologies are rare, secrecy is sacrosanct and lawyers are plentiful.”

NYTimes Chronicles How Pro-Trump Conspiracy Theorist Spread False Comey Story. The New York Times (6/10, Peters) recounts how Jack Posobiec, “a pro-Trump activist notorious for his amateur sleuthing into red herrings like the “Pizzagate” hoax and a conspiracy theory involving the murder of a Democratic aide,” last month “had his Twitter sights set on James B. Comey” and “as the journey of...one tweet shows, misinformed, distorted and false stories are gaining traction far beyond the fringes of the internet.” According to the Times, “just 14 words from Mr. Posobiec’s Twitter account would spread far enough to provide grist for a prime-time Fox News commentary and a Rush Limbaugh monologue that reached millions of listeners, forging an alternative first draft of history in corners of the conservative media where President Trump’s troubles are often explained away as fabrications by his journalist enemies.”

NYTimes, Columnists Praise Comey, Criticize Trump. The New York Times (6/10) editorializes that House Speaker Ryan’s defense of President Trump for firing former FBI Director James Comey has made Ryan “the unofficial leader of the Trump Excuses Caucus,” which consists “exclusively of Republicans. Some of its members remain staunch supporters of Mr. Trump, while others are doubtless panicked about their political futures with Mr. Trump strutting about at the head of the party, insulting everyone and everything in sight: staff members, allies, laws, diplomatic decorum and common sense.” According to the Times, “Thin-skinned as he is, Mr. Trump ought to be offended by Mr. Ryan’s condescension. The president obviously knows that it’s wrong to interfere in an investigation.” The Times concludes “Republican officeholders are in a quandary, ashamed of Mr. Trump but terrified that if they speak out his voters will send them packing in 2018. If they can fake respect for him long enough, they might manage to enact their agenda.”

In her New York Times (6/10, Dowd) column, Maureen Dowd acknowledges Trump “is not in immediate jeopardy of being indicted or impeached” after Comey’s testimony and so “the master of low expectations headed off to his New Jersey golf club to celebrate...he still has plenty of time for further self-incrimination.” Nonetheless, Dowd contends “Thursday’s hearing underscored how adept Trump is at creating the kind of havoc that could bring down his presidency.” She adds “the main takeaway...is that with the absurdist Trump administration, we have sunk very low. There’s no way that the Republicans would not be calling for the head of a Democratic president who had done this stuff. They would be going nuts trying to impeach him.”

In her Washington Post (6/9, Marcus) column, Ruth Marcus said Comey’s account “was devastating, both legally and politically. And as congressional investigators and, more ominously, special counsel Robert S. Mueller III proceed, the facts may become far worse for the president." She contended that while Comey testimony brings Trump "significantly closer" to meriting charges of obstruction of justice, "considering whether a prosecutor would be able to prove obstruction beyond a reasonable doubt is a question that is both premature and slightly off-point." She adds Mueller and Congress should be left alone to "continue their essential work. In the meantime, don't be fooled or diverted by the attacks on Comey and others." Marcus concluded, "Trump is president. It's his conduct that is at issue. And vindication, if it is to come, feels awfully far off."

In her Washington Post (6/9, Parker) column, Kathleen Parker suggested Comey's testimony showed he was "no match" for Trump and argued the former FBI Director's "concentration on the president's hope may have doomed him." Parker added, "not only did he lose his job, but also his testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee seemed weak tea in the broader context of the president's potential criminality." Parker concluded Comey had attempted "to convey his humility juxtaposed with the steamrolling Trump," but instead revealed that he "may be constitutionally unable to fully grasp...that integrity is no weapon in a knife fight."

In his New York Times (6/9, Egan) column, Timothy Egan contrasted Comey the "G-Man" to Trump the "Con Man" and "a crackpot." However, although he conceded "it's riveting stuff that the former top cop in the country called out Trump for 'lies, plain and simple'" while "the credibility-free Trump spokeswoman Sarah Huckabee Sanders was compelled to state, 'I can definitely say that the president is not a liar,'" Egan asserted "we need to step away from the quick hits of the news cycle and dwell on the big picture. Trump took an oath to defend the United States. The nation is under assault by Russian hackers, growing more sophisticated by the day. And the president won't even acknowledge the threat." He dismisses the chances of "an obstruction-of-justice indictment" or impeachment, but concludes "We're lucky to have a robust and dogged former G-man as a special counsel, posing real peril for the Russian stooges who helped put this president in office."

Trump Goes "On The Offensive" Against "Cowardly" Comey.

Media reports describe President Trump as going "on the offensive" against former FBI Director Comey with a tweet describing him as "cowardly" and questioning whether the leak of his memo about their private conversation was legal. Trump's Sunday tweet began a day when Comey's testimony dominated the conversation on the Sunday talk shows. The discussions were somewhat negative for Trump, as no Republicans backed his description of Comey as a liar or sought to refute Comey's account of his private meetings with Trump, but in a positive sign for the President, GOP lawmakers also said they saw no evidence that Trump committed obstruction of justice.

In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/11, lead story, 3:25, Llamas), Mary Bruce described Trump as "back on the offensive against James Comey," while Bloomberg Politics (6/10, Krasny, Niquette) says Trump "slammed" Comey with the tweet, and the New York Times (6/11, Thrush) calls the tweet Trump's "harshes shot yet against his former F.B.I. director." The Washington Post (6/11, Johnson) reports that Trump "took aim" at Comey Sunday morning, writing, "I believe the James Comey leaks will be far more prevalent than anyone ever thought possible. Totally illegal? Very 'cowardly!'" USA Today (6/11, Page) says the President's son, Donald Jr., offered "a more extensive defense," on Saturday, telling Fox News that Comey had "proven himself to be a liar in all this." However, in giving "his version of his father's one-on-one conversation with Comey," he "also seemed to confirm Comey's claim that the president told him he hoped the FBI director would 'let go'" of the Michael Flynn investigation. Trump Jr. said, "'Hey, hope this happens but you got to do your job.' That's what he told Comey," which is "at odds with the president's comments at a Rose Garden news conference Friday, when he said 'I didn't say that.'" In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/11, lead story, 3:25, Llamas), Bruce also said Trump Jr. seemed "to contradict" the President.

Politico (6/11, Morin) says it is unclear whether Comey "did anything illegal by disclosing details about his behind-closed-door meetings with Trump." Politico adds that before his tweet about Comey, Trump "accused media outlets of not reporting on 'great economic news' that has happened since he was elected (including the months before he was sworn in)," writing in a pair of tweets, "The #FakeNews MSM doesn't report the great economic news since Election Day. #DOW up 16%. #NASDAQ up 19.5%. Drilling & energy sector...way up. Regulations way down. 600,000+ new jobs added. Unemployment down to 4.3%. Business and economic enthusiasm way up — record levels!" Trump "also went after Democrats," tweeting, "The Democrats have no message, not on economics, not on taxes, not on jobs, not on failing #Obamacare. They are only OBSTRUCTIONISTS." The New York Post (6/11, Brown) also reports on what it describes as Trump's "Sunday tweetstorm."

Politico (6/11, Cheney) says no Republicans "embraced Trump's depiction of Comey as a liar or attempted to dispute Comey's account of private meetings with the president" during appearances on the Sunday talk shows. Sen. Mike Lee said on ABC's This Week (6/11, Stephanopoulos) that Comey "doesn't strike me as someone who would lie under oath." Even Trump's "staunchest Republican defenders declined to directly back up" his claim that Comey's leak was illegal. Rep. Peter King said on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (6/11, Bartiromo) that "even if the law were not broken, Comey shouldn't have leaked to the press." Politico adds that some lawmakers were "more troubl[ed]" by "the fact that Trump continues to weigh in on the investigation – in public and on Twitter – and has launched a campaign to attack Comey's credibility." Sen. Lindsey Graham said on CBS' Face The Nation (6/11, Dickerson), "You may be the first president to go down because you can't stop inappropriately talking about an investigation that if you just were quiet would clear you."

Sen. Susan Collins said on CNN's State Of The Union (6/11, Keilar), "I found Director Comey, former Director Comey's testimony to be candid, to be thorough, and he testified under oath, so I believe that the information that he gave our committee is what he believed happened."

Sen. Dianne Feinstein said on CNN's State Of The Union (6/11, Keilar), "I believe the FBI Director. I know him the best. I've observed him the longest. I know he has his own band of integrity. ... In this kind of thing, he's not going to lie. It's just not in him to do this." Sen. Joe Manchin said on ABC's This Week (6/11, Stephanopoulos) that Comey "did a good job and I think everyone there, Democrats and Republicans alike thought he did a good job and he was forthcoming."

Although the Wall Street Journal (6/11, Meckler) cites legal experts who say Comey's actions were not illegal since the material in question was not classified and he was no longer government employee, there was disagreement Sunday among lawmakers about Comey's decision to leak his memos about his meetings with Trump. Sen. Joe Manchin said on ABC's This Week (6/11, Stephanopoulos), "That was concerning when we heard that, you know, but I looked at it as self-preservation. We're in an unprecedented era, if you will, kind of unorthodox approaches to governing and with that it looks like that he took whatever action he thought for self-preservation and we'll see if that rises to a level of greater concern or of any type of action that needs to be taken and I think Bob Mueller will do an open, fair and honest job on that also."

Sen. Mike Lee said on ABC's This Week (6/11, Stephanopoulos) that "I'm not wild about the fact that he had these memos leaked. Leaked specifically with the intent of prompting the appointment of a special counsel. That doesn't seem to me to be the kind of thing we want out of an FBI director." The Washington Times (6/11, Swoyer) reports that Sen. James Lankford said on CBS' Face The Nation that Comey's leak was "inappropriate," but "releasing his memos [is] not damaging to national security."

Collins, Schumer Urge Trump To Turn Over Tapes – If They Exist. According to the Washington Post (6/11, Grandoni), Sen. Susan Collins also "said President Trump should turn over tapes of conversations he had with...Comey – if they exist." Collins told CNN's State Of The Union, "He should voluntarily turn them over not only to the Senate Intelligence Committee, but to the special counsel. ... I don't understand why the president just doesn't clear this matter up once and for all." The AP (6/11, Yen) reports that on CBS' "Face the Nation," Senate Intelligence Committee member Sen. James Lankford "agreed the panel needed to hear any tapes that exist. 'We've obviously pressed the White House,' he said."

The Washington Times (6/11, Swoyer) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer also "said Mr. Trump should clear up any cloud over his presidency by releasing tapes of his private conversation with Mr. Comey if they exist, as the president has suggested." If the tapes do not exist, Schumer added, Trump "should make that known so there is 'no more game playing.'"

GOP Senators See No Obstruction Of Justice By Trump. Sen. Mike Lee also said on ABC's This Week (6/11, Stephanopoulos) that if anyone has "evidence of collusion bring it forward. If he's got evidence of corruption, of obstruction, bring it forward. I have yet to see anything even a scintilla and so it's time to wrap this up and time to move on. I don't see any evidence of anything happening here and it is a result I think it's time to move forward." Lankford said on CBS' Face The Nation (6/11, Bartiromo) that "this looks more like an inappropriate conversation than obstruction." Politico (6/11, Guida) reports that on CBS' Face The Nation (6/11, Dickerson), Sen. Lindsey Graham "said revelations about Trump's conversations with former FBI Director James Comey about the Russia probe don't amount to 'obstruction of justice.'"

Daniel Henninger of the Wall Street Journal said on Fox News The Journal Editorial Report (6/10), "There something about the Comey narrative that just didn't quite add up. ... Virtually everybody listening to his description of what went on in the Oval Office, certainly anybody who has been around Washington would have said something improper happened there. You're the director of the FBI and he could have walked out of that office and gone to White House counsel Don McGahn and said, 'The President has just done something improper. You have to explain that this sort of thing can't happen,' or even go to Attorney General and to say 'I don't know, I was so startled,' strange."

Joseph Rago of the Wall Street Journal said on Fox News The Journal Editorial Report (6/10), "The narrative is 'I was so stunned, I just couldn't – I didn't have the composure to do anything' but he goes back and writes a memo to himself, he discusses it with a half dozen of his senior deputies and then reserves all of this information for himself, doesn't inform the public, doesn't tell any of his superiors, it just doesn't add up."

Former NSC aide Gillian Turner said on Fox News MediaBuzz (6/11), "What I took away from this hearing is he's a very skilled political operative. He's clearly somebody who knows how to achieve objectives and goals he wants in the Washington universe of things. But he's still not a partisan. He's showing you can do that without being a partisan. He's angered and alienated people on both sides of the aisle."

Lawmakers Split Along Party Lines On Whether Trump Should Testify Publicly. In appearances on the Sunday talk shows, lawmakers were divided over whether President Trump should testify publicly. Politico (6/11, Guida) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer invited Trump to testify before the Senate, telling CBS, "I think we could work out a way that it could be dignified, public, with questions, with Leader McConnell."

Sen. Jack Reed said on Fox News Sunday (6/11, Wallace), "By the time the special prosecutor is ready to depose or ask the President to speak under oath, there will be a myriad of questions. What I don't want to see is simply 'I just said I would talk about Comey, I'm not talking about anything else.' To resolve the situation he has to be prepared to speak on all these matters." Politico (6/11, Guida) reports that Reed "urged" that Trump "be deposed as part of the special counsel's investigation into any ties Trump's campaign had with Russia." Reed said that at some point Mueller "has to come to the president with a list of questions that only the president can answer. ... The president should answer truthfully, under oath, those questions."

Rep. Luis Gutierrez said on CNN's State Of The Union (6/11, Keilar) that Trump "said 100 percent he's ready to testify under oath," adding, "we should call his bluff. This is the same President of the United States that said to us 100 percent I'm going to give you my income taxes." Rep. Ted Lieu said on MSNBC AM Joy (6/11), "[Sunday] morning President Trump tweeted that James Comey was cowardly. I thought James Comey showed a lot of courage in testifying under oath before Congress in an open hearing. I urge the President to show that same courage and testify under oath before Congress in an open hearing."

Graham said on CBS' Face The Nation (6/11, Dickerson), "I think it is inappropriate for the President to testify publicly, but if you are so obsessed, and I know you are frustrated, he doesn't believe he did anything wrong with the Russians and I tend to believe him. He can't collude with his own government, why do you think he is colluding with the Russians, so there is a part of this that genuinely frustrates the President but, Mr. President, let's not make a circus out of your presidency."

Collins said on CNN's State Of The Union (6/11, Keilar), "The President should fully cooperate with a special counsel and he's indicated that he will do so." When asked whether Trump's testimony should be made public, she responded, "It would be unusual if in the midst of the investigation he were to release a video or a transcript, of the investigation, before the investigation is concluded. That is frustrating," but Mueller "wants to make sure that he has all the evidence put together, rather than releasing it in a piecemeal basis."

Bharara: There Is Enough Evidence For Obstruction Case Against Trump. The Hill (6/11, Savransky) reports former US Attorney Preet Bharara said Sunday that he believes there evidence to start an obstruction of justice case against President Trump. Bharara told ABC's This Week (6/11) "that there is sworn testimony that 'on at least one occasion, the president of the United States cleared the room of his vice president and his attorney general and told his director of the FBI that he should essentially drop the case against his former national security adviser.'" He added, "Whether or not that is impeachable or that's indictable, that's a very serious thing, and I'm not sure that people fully get that the standard is not just whether something is a crime or not. ... Whether or not it can be charged as a crime or Congress will impeach, it is a very serious thing. ... That's an incredibly serious thing if people think that the president of the United States can tell heads of law enforcement agencies, based on his own whim or his own personal preferences or friendships, that they should or should not pursue particular criminal cases against individuals. That's not how America works."

Comey Could Get $10 Million For Memoir. The New York Post (6/11, Moore) cites a report from The Daily Mail which said that Comey's memoir could fetch as much as $10 million and the former FBI director "already has Hollywood movie execs lining up to film the White House blockbuster." The Daily Mail quoted an acquisition editor for a New York publishing house who said, "Jim Comey's story has everything, from White House intrigue to possible corruption and law breaking. His explosive story makes 'West Wing' and 'House of Cards' on a par with Mister Rogers. ... When his proposal hits my desk, I've already been authorized to offer $10 million."

Trump Expresses Willingness To Testify Under Oath Over Comey's Allegations.

President Trump on Friday said that former FBI Director James Comey's testimony before the Senate on Thursday made him feel "total and complete vindication" and asserted he is "100 percent" willing to testify before Special Counsel Robert Mueller under oath if asked. His remarks in response to Comey's testimony generated saturation coverage in print and online, while the network newscasts devoted more than 16 minutes combined to discussing the President's comments. Reporting characterized Trump as defiant and the mainstream media was generally skeptical of his pledge, though it was well received by conservative outlets.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (6/9, lead story, 2:55, Holt) segment, Chief White House Correspondent Hallie Jackson said that the President is "punching back, pitting his word against James Comey's, saying he lied and willing to swear to it under oath." In a front-page article, the New York Times (6/9, A1, Davis, Thrush) reports that in a joint press conference with Romanian President Klaus Iohannis at the White House on Friday, a "defiant" Trump accused Comey "of lying under oath to Congress in testimony that the president dismissed as a politically motivated proceeding" and "asserted that Mr. Comey's comments on Thursday, in which the former F.B.I. director implied that the president fired him for pressing forward with the Russia investigation, had failed to prove any collusion between the Trump campaign and Moscow nor any obstruction of justice."

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, A1, Ballhaus, Lee) reports on its front-page that the President said he was "100%" willing to testify under oath to Mueller that he had never asked Comey to end the FBI's investigation into former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn and never asked him to "pledge allegiance." CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 6:30 p.m. EDT, 30:45, Blitzer) broadcast Trump asserting, "I didn't say that. I mean, I will tell you, I didn't say that. And there would be nothing wrong if I did say it, according to everybody I read today, but I did not say that." Reuters (6/9, Holland) reports he added, "I would be glad to tell [Mueller] exactly what I just told you."

CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 5:30 p.m. EDT, 30:49, Blitzer) broadcast Trump stating, "I hardly know [Comey]. I'm not going to say, I want you to pledge allegiance. Who would do that? Who would ask a man to pledge allegiance under oath? I mean, think of it. I hardly know the man. It doesn't make sense." Reuters (6/9, Holland) reports the President also denounced Comey as "a leaker" before insisting, "we want to get back to running our great country." In the lead story of its second hour, CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 6:02 p.m. EDT, lead story, 2:56, Blitzer) broadcast Trump highlighting "jobs, trade deficits. We want them to disappear fast. North Korea, big problem. Middle East, a big problem. So that's what I am focused on. That's what I have been focused on." He added Comey's testimony "showed no collusion, no obstruction. We are doing really well." He called the controversy "an excuse by the Democrats, who lost an election that some people think they shouldn't have lost. Because it's almost impossible for the Democrats to lose the electoral college, as you know."

According to the Los Angeles Times (6/9, Bierman), "No president has been compelled to testify in public – former President Clinton testified privately in a civil suit, though his testimony later became public – and Congress most likely could not require Trump's testimony."

Bloomberg Politics (6/9, Sink) suggests that "Trump's offer to testify heightens the drama of his standoff with Comey" while the Washington Post (6/9, A1, Nakamura) says on in a front page article that the President's remarks "represented a dramatic new development" even as he "said...Comey's testimony proved he had not colluded with the Russians or sought to obstruct the investigation." According to Trump, "Frankly, James Comey confirmed a lot of what I said and some of the stuff he said just wasn't true."

Meanwhile, USA Today (6/9, Jackson, Johnson) says the President also “tweeted an attack on Comey” and the AP (6/9, Tucker, Werner) reports he “struck back” at Comey “with an early morning tweet.” The Washington Times (6/9, Persons) reports Trump said, “Despite so many false statements and lies, total and complete vindication...and WOW, Comey is a leaker!”

Nonetheless, in a fact check, the AP (6/9, Woodward) says “Trump’s claim of vindication from Comey’s testimony is groundless.” The AP adds “Comey merely testified that the FBI investigation into possible collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign did not extend to Trump himself. That’s not vindication.”

Politico (6/9, Nelson, Nussbaum) states that “the accusation – essentially alleging that Comey committed perjury in his congressional testimony – is just the latest broadside Trump has launched against his former FBI director, but it is not expected to be the last.” Politico adds the President’s tweet “raised eyebrows in the West Wing, with at least two senior White House aides expressing surprise Friday morning at the president’s missive slamming Comey,” but Politico (6/9, Palmeri, McCaskill, Cheney) in a separate article reports a White House official later said, “What you saw during the press conference with the Romanian president is a perfect reflection of how he’s feeling – vindicated, defiant.”

However, the AP (6/9, Colvin, Woodward) reports Trump “cryptically refused to say whether” his meetings with the former FBI Director “were taped – a matter at the heart of the conflicting accounts of what passed between them at a time when Comey was leading an FBI investigation into Russia’s interference in the presidential election and its ties to the Trump campaign.” Trump said, “Well, I’ll tell you about that maybe sometime in the very near future,” but he insisted he wasn’t “hinting anything,” before adding: “Oh you’re going to be very disappointed when you hear the answer, don’t worry.” In the lead Fox News’ Special Report (6/9, 6:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, 0:07, Baier) segment, correspondent Bret Baier similarly said the President gave “another cryptic answer to the question about whether his talks with Comey were recorded.”

A Washington Post (6/9, Phillips) analysis cautions that the President also “perhaps tweet[ed] himself into more trouble” about Comey because “in his second tweet before lunchtime Friday...Trump potentially undermined his private lawyer’s statements denying key parts of Comey’s testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee the day before.” The Post says Trump retweeted a Fox News article in which “Harvard Law professor emeritus Alan Dershowitz argued that the president didn’t obstruct justice in speaking with Comey about ‘letting go’ of the FBI investigation into fired national security adviser Michael Flynn.” According to the Post, “Trump appears to be using two parallel arguments: I didn’t tell Comey to back off Flynn. Or maybe I did – and that would be okay, too.” Nonetheless, the Post concludes “both cannot be true.”

Trump’s Legal Team Expected To File Complaint With DOJ IG Over Comey’s Leaked Information.

In ABC World News Tonight (6/9, lead story, 4:00, Llamas) lead segment, Chief White House Correspondent Jonathan Karl said a “source close to the President’s legal team tells me they plan to file a complaint with the Justice Department’s internal watchdog asking that they investigate whether or not Comey acted inappropriately when he leaked his information about his conversations with the President.”

Margaret Brennan of the CBS Evening News (6/9, lead story, 3:10, Pelley) reported “Comey testified yesterday that shortly after he was fired, he gave memos documenting his conversations with the President to a friend, who in turn gave them to a reporter,” and that “the President’s lawyer, Marc Kasowitz, plans to file a complaint with the Justice Department inspector general and Senate Judiciary Committee. He argues Comey released sensitive information.” The Washington Times (6/9, Boyer) reports Kasowitz will file the complaint next week, “a source close to the president’s legal team said Friday.”

Politico (6/9, Nelson) reports Trump’s former campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said on ABC’s “Good Morning America” that Comey “admitted” to being “the leaker. He is the deep state in Washington that is everything is wrong. He admitted under oath that he gave his contemporaneous notes to a law professor.” He added, “If that’s what he has done, he continues to do this, if this is his pattern, as the FBI director he absolutely should have been fired, and if he is the chronic leaker he should be potentially prosecuted for leaking information.” According to Politico, Lewandowski’s suggestion “that Comey should be prosecuted went one step further than...Kasowitz, did a day earlier in a statement to reporters that followed the former director’s testimony.”

Chief Washington Correspondent and ‘Face the Nation’ host John Dickerson commented on the CBS Evening News (6/9, story 4, 1:50, Pelley) that “in Washington the word ‘leak’ can cover everything from passing on highly classified information, which is illegal, to passing on politically inconvenient information, which isn't. What the President and his lawyer are trying to do is undermine Comey's stature by hoping that when they say the word 'leaker,' people think of that distasteful class of people like Edward Snowden or Chelsea Manning. But Comey doesn't seem to have done anything illegal. Still, in Washington, you're not supposed to talk about conversations that you had privately with the President, but Director Comey said the downside of not talking about those conversations would have been worse than breaking that rule."

CNN's Situation Room's (6/9, 5:42 p.m. EDT, 42:57, Blitzer) Wolf Blitzer said former FBI Director James Comey testified on Thursday "that he shared that memo of that conversation he had with the President with a friend of his, professor at Columbia University Law School, he said, because, quote, 'I thought that might prompt the appointment of a special counsel.' That friend was told, share the information with a journalist which, of course, the friend did." Justice Correspondent Evan Perez said that request "is strange," and "would be probably a fireable offense, but" the situation "is something beyond strange now." Perez added that because Comey is now a private citizen "and he's sharing notes that he took – a lot of people are saying, well, these are still official government records and you needed to leave them there and not give them to someone else. I think he felt like these were extraordinary circumstances and he needed to take these measures."

The Washington Post (6/9, Zapotosky) similarly reports that while Trump "lambasted...Comey on Friday as a 'leaker' for engineering the release of details of their conversations to a news reporter" and although "the unflattering moniker might fit" Comey, "that does not make Comey a criminal, legal analysts said." In a separate analysis, Washington Post (6/9, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump stated that Stephen Kohn, a partner at a law firm focused on whistleblower protection, described the White House's threats as "frivolous grandstanding." Kohn added, "First of all, I don't believe the inspector general would have jurisdiction over Comey any more, because he's no longer a federal employee. ... But, second,' he continued, 'initiating an investigation because you don't like somebody's testimony could be considered obstruction. And in the whistleblower context, it's both evidence of retaliation and, under some laws, could be an adverse retaliatory act itself." However, in an update, Bump acknowledges Tom Devine, legal director for the Government Accountability Project "pointed out...that Comey himself isn't covered by the Whistleblower Protection Act since he was both a presidential appointee and a representative of the FBI, a position which doesn't fall under the act's purview."

WPost A1: Kasowitz's Clients Include Russians With Ties To Kremlin. The Washington Post (6/9, A1, Boburg) reports in a front-page article that Marc Kasowitz, "the hard-charging New York lawyer President Trump chose to represent him in the Russia investigation," has a number of "prominent clients with ties to the Kremlin, a striking pick for a president trying to escape the persistent cloud that has trailed his administration." The Post identifies his clients as "Oleg Deripaska, a Russian oligarch who is close to President Vladimir Putin and has done business with Trump's former campaign manager" Paul Manafort as well as "Sberbank, Russia's largest state-owned bank, U.S. court records show."

Sessions Disputes Comey's Testimony Over Recusal From Russia Probe. Fox News (6/9, Singman) reports Attorney General Sessions "is firing back at...Comey, after he suggested in Thursday's hearing that there might be more than meets the eye to the AG's recusal from the Russia probe." In a statement, Justice Department spokesman Ian Prior rejected Comey's assertion and said Sessions "began consulting with career Department of Justice ethics officials to determine whether he should recuse himself" shortly after taking office." Prior "said Sessions' discussions with ethics officials were focused on a regulation that prohibits DOJ attorneys from participating in investigations that involve 'entities or individuals' with whom the person has a 'political or personal relationship.'" Prior added, "Given Attorney General Sessions' participation in President Trump's campaign, it was for that reason, and that reason alone" Sessions decided in March to recuse himself from the investigation.

Jeff Pegues of the CBS Evening News (6/9, story 3, 2:15, Pelley) reported Comey "left no doubt that he didn't trust...Sessions. He told senators that he didn't feel comfortable telling Sessions the President had pressured him to stop the FBI's investigation of fired National Security Adviser Michael Flynn." Pegues added, "Those reasons are unclear, but Sessions had failed to disclose at least two meetings with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak. They were reported in the media in early March, and one day later, Sessions did recuse himself." On Thursday night, "the Justice Department said Sessions' decision was based on his 'participation in President Trump's campaign and it was for that reason alone.'"

Michelle Kosinski reported, "Also emerging from Comey's closed door meeting with senators, the possibility that...Sessions might have had a third undisclosed meeting with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak in 2016," and that sources told CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 5:06 p.m. EDT, 6:45, Blitzer) that "intercepted communications revealed a discussion of such a meeting among Russians." On Friday, the Justice Department "says Attorney General Sessions has no plans to resign and denies the meeting with Kislyak. Sessions will publicly face questions from senators on Tuesday."

However, The Hill (6/9, Greenwood) "Briefing Room" blog reports House Minority Leader Pelosi on Friday "renewed her call" for Sessions "to step down from his role at the Justice Department amid reports that he may have held a third undisclosed meeting with Russia's ambassador." On MSNBC's "Morning Joe," Pelosi asserted, "When you talk about all of these things, just remember there's something strange that isn't connecting." She added, "I can't...confirm or deny the issue of the third meeting. But I did say on March 2 that he should resign. Sessions should resign as attorney general."

The Hill (6/9, Hensch) reports former Attorney General Alberto Gonzales asserted on WABC Radio on Friday that Sessions and Comey "fail[ed] to do their job." Gonzales said, "The inspector general at the Department of Justice is going to look at this, and they're going to write a report, and I think it's going to be a scathing report, condemning both the attorney general and the former FBI director for failing to do their job protecting the FBI." Gonzales added that both men "put at risk the independence of the FBI."

House Intelligence Committee Asks White House For Comey Tapes. Reuters (6/9, Zengerle) reports Rep. Mike Conaway and Rep. Adam Schiff, the lawmakers leading the House Intelligence Committee's investigation, "said on Friday they had written to former FBI director James Comey to request any notes or memoranda related to discussions with...Trump" and "written to Don McGahn, the White House counsel, and asked him whether White House recordings or memos of Comey's conversations with Trump exist. If they do, they asked that copies of the materials be provided to the panel by June 23." According to Politico (6/9, Cheney), "Their request comes less than two hours after...Trump, in a Rose Garden news conference, refused to answer questions about whether such tapes exist."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN's Situation Room (6/9), "I have urged that had committee that I sit on, the Judiciary Committee, subpoena those tapes, and I believe that it is necessary to subpoena the tapes and subpoena documents that may be in the possession of the White House, just as Jim Comey has offered to make those documents available that he did. I tend to doubt it, because one would think he would voluntarily." Blumenthal continued, "The President is dealing with this very profoundly issue of obstruction of justice and potential collusion with the Russians in interfering with our campaign as kind of a reality show. He is playing to an audience, but we're dealing here with issues that affect potentially untruths under oath and he's calling someone else a liar. If he's willing to come forward and give his own testimony under oath, that is to be welcomed with, but he ought to do it and submit to questions."

Rep. Ruben Gallego told CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 6:13 p.m. EDT, 13:32, Blitzer), "I would hope" Trump will in fact make a statement under oath, "But this President seems to have a problem with the truth. He doesn't seem to follow up with anything he said he will do. The first thing we should go to is whether there are tapes. If there are tapes it is his duty to turn them over since he basically brought them into the conversation and called out the former FBI director, who under oath said that he felt pressured by the President to drop the Flynn investigation."

Former CIA counterterrorism analyst Phillip Mudd, asked on CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 5:32 p.m. EDT, 32:36, Blitzer) whether he believed such tapes existed, asserted, "Heck no, and I think it's pretty straightforward. We have the President who has portrayed himself from the tough guy, everything from reality TV that we talked about to the presidency. I suspect there are no tapes and now he has to come out and say the tough guy was bluffing. I think this story will end up being simpler in retrospect and the reason he's not that you canning about is because there's nothing there." A Washington Post (6/9, Phillips) analysis similarly suggests that based on the President's comments Friday "it doesn't sound like...Trump has tapes of his conversations with...Comey." According to the Post, "A little common sense suggests that if the president has proof to clear his name, he would share it ASAP. ... Or maybe, once again, the president tweeted something that there is no evidence to back up."

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (6/9, Persons) reports Trump's former campaign manager Corey Lewandowski "said Friday he doesn't know if tapes were made of President Trump's conversations with...Comey." On NBC News, Lewandowski said, "I don't work for the White House, I don't work in the White House, I don't know if tapes were made, are made. If they are, I think James Comey's credibility is at a zero right now." Lewandowski added, "That's from Democrats who questioned him not that long ago during the Hillary Clinton investigation. It's from the Republicans who questioned him yesterday."

Senate Judiciary Committee Not Ruling Out Comey Subpoena. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, told The Hill (6/9, Carney) on Thursday that she and Chairman Chuck Grassley "have discussed potentially forcing Comey to meet with their committee." However, when "pressed if they had discussed a timeline, Feinstein deferred to Grassley, noting, 'He's the chairman; he'll make that decision.'" A spokesman for Grassley said after Comey's testimony that "no specific decisions on issuing subpoenas have been made at this time."

The Hill (6/9, Carney) "Floor Action" blog reports Grassley is also "threatening to subpoena a firm tied to the controversial opposition research dossier on President Trump." According to The Hill, Grassley has "sent a letter to Glenn Simpson, a former Wall Street Journal reporter who now heads Fusion GPS, warning that if he refused to 'comply voluntarily' with the committee's request, senators 'will begin consideration of compulsory process under its rules.'" In the letter, which was released Friday, Grassley gave Simpson until Wednesday to respond to his letter and said, "Your attorney has failed to sufficiently explain your claims that responding to the Committee's requests would infringe upon or violate your and/or Fusion's First Amendment rights, attorney-client and attorney work product privileges, and confidentiality agreements." The Hill adds "the back-and-forth comes as Grassley digs deeper into former British spy Christopher Steele's controversial dossier, which alleges that the Russians have compromising information on Trump."

Kushner To Meet With Senate Intelligence Committee Staff. The AP (6/9) reports "President Trump's son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner is expected to meet with staff from the Senate Intelligence committee in coming days, according to" Sen. Angus King, who "says Kushner will have a face-to-face meeting with panel staff as early as next week. A spokeswoman for King on Friday confirmed the senator's comments in an earlier interview on CNN." The AP adds "Kushner will likely be asked about his meetings with the Russian ambassador to the United States." However, an Administration official "says no meeting had been formally scheduled and discussions about possible dates were ongoing."

Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 6:03 p.m. EDT, 3:58, Baier) Chief Intelligence Correspondent Catherine Herridge similarly reported Kushner, "could meet with [Senate] investigators...this month, according to congressional sources. Though Kushner's team suggested a meeting is not imminent."

Mueller Adding Dreeben To Special Investigation Team. CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 6:09 p.m. EDT, 9:26, Blitzer) Senior Washington Correspondent Brianna Keilar reported that according to the National Law Journal, Mueller is "adding to his team a top criminal law expert, Michael Dreeben, someone who tried obstruction of justice cases in the past. Perhaps a sign that this is something that Mueller's investigation could look at." The Washington Post (6/9, Horwitz) calls Deputy Solicitor General Dreeben "one of the federal government's top criminal law specialists." The Post highlights that at the Justice Department, he has "argued more than 100 cases before the Supreme Court [and] is the department's go-to lawyer on criminal justice cases and is highly respected by Democrats and Republicans because of his encyclopedic knowledge of criminal law." The Post adds DOJ officials say "Dreeben will work part time for Mueller...while he continues to oversee the department's criminal appellate cases."

White House Shortlist For FBI Director Had Included Mueller. "The Trump White House had been considering Robert Mueller as a top candidate to lead the FBI before the deputy U.S. attorney general changed course and tapped Mueller to serve as special counsel investigating Russian interference in last year's election, two sources familiar with the process told" NPR (6/9, Johnson), which adds that "Mueller had gone so far as to meet with Justice Department leaders and White House officials about the FBI job, which opened after President Trump fired Director James Comey on May 9." According to NPR, "that idea went by the wayside after Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein instead reached out to Mueller to run the politically sensitive Russia probe, which is examining ties between Russians and Trump campaign aides, the sources said."

White House Press Office Punishes NYTimes Over Debunked Russia Article. The New York Post (6/9, Morrongiello) reports Peter Baker, the chief White House Correspondent for the New York Times "was relegated to the back row of a White House press conference on Friday, one day after fired FBI Director James Comey said a bombshell report about Russia by the major newspaper was 'not true.'" According to the Post, "Despite Trump's frequent criticism of the outlet, the Times has been in the first few rows of every press conference the president has held since taking office." The Post adds that "the snub came just 24 hours after Comey told a Senate panel that an anonymously-sourced Times report from mid-February was false.”

Nielsen: About 19.5 Million US Viewers Watched Comey’s Testimony. Reuters (6/9, Richwine) reports according to Nielsen, “former FBI Director James Comey’s dramatic testimony before Congress on Thursday brought big audiences to U.S. broadcast and cable networks, drawing about 19.5 million viewers.” Reuters adds “that is a large audience for a daytime event, though it is short of the 30.6 million who tuned in to President Donald Trump’s inauguration in January.”

Donald Trump Jr. Contends Dow “Exonerated” President. The AP (6/9, Lemire) reports Donald Trump Jr.’s tweets on Thursday “defending his father and attacking Comey” drew attention to the Twitter feed of President Trump’s eldest son, which “can at times be as inflammatory as his father’s.” According to the AP, “Trump Jr. declined to comment Friday about his tweets, leaving unanswered questions as to whether they were urged by the White House, which outsourced its Comey response to the Republican National Committee and the president’s personal lawyer.” The Huffington Post (6/9, Dicker) reports Donald Trump Jr. on Thursday also “told Fox News’ Sean Hannity that the stock market’s rise amid the proceedings cleared the president’s name.” Trump Jr. asserted, “When the Dow hits another all-time record right during the testimony, you know that he’s been exonerated. The markets basically said this has been nonsense.”

Lawmakers, Journalists Divided Over Comey’s Testimony Along Partisan Lines. According to a New York Times (6/9, Hulse) analysis, “the ultimate outcome” of Mueller’s special investigation “may boil down to a simple judgment: Was Mr. Trump criminal or clueless?” The Times adds that “in assessing the remarkable and detailed testimony by Mr. Comey, most lawmakers seemed to come down by party affiliation. Democrats said they believed that Mr. Trump had clearly breached the wall of allowable contact between the White House and law enforcement, while Republicans said Mr. Trump had acted inappropriately but not illegally.”

USA Today (6/9, Cummings) describes Comey’s testimony as evidence of “the widening media divide in America.” The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Andrews) reports Republican lawmakers continue to support the President, including Senate Majority Whip Cornyn and Sen. Lindsey Graham, as does the AP (6/9, Werner) in an article headlined “GOP Shrugs Off Comey Revelations, Sticks With Trump.” According to the AP, the reaction “underscored what’s become a hardening dynamic of the Trump presidency: Republicans on Capitol Hill and off are mostly sticking with the president despite the mounting scandals and seemingly endless crises that surround him.”

Breitbart (6/9, Starr) reports Rep. Louie Gohmert during an appearance that Fox and Friends on Friday condemned Congress for leaving Trump to “dangle” by concluding business after Comey’s testimony. Gohmert added, “I’m very concerned we are not being supportive enough to get the message out and here President Trump is...as [Sen.] Marco Rubio was pointing out...the only thing that didn’t leak was the truth – that [Trump] was not under investigation.”

The Washington Times (6/9, Persons) reports Sen. Rand Paul said Friday on Fox News “that the Russia and Flynn investigation also needs to look into reining in leaks at the National Security Agency.” Paul asserted, “We need to get to the bottom of who was listening to General Flynn’s conversations because leaking that is a felony and very dangerous to the republic.” He added, “I hope the special counsel will also be looking at this because I don’t think Americans want to live in a society where the government becomes so powerful that it’s listening to all of our phone calls or reading all of our emails.” According to Paul, “I’m guessing the special counsel’s ability to bring people in can be better than a committee. And sometimes you can find the truth a little better because a grand jury or a special counsel works behind closed doors.”

Meanwhile, McClatchy (6/9, Glueck) reports “social conservatives and evangelical activists were unequivocally in...Trump’s corner Friday” at a Faith and Freedom Coalition summit, “offering a vibrant snapshot of the strong support the president still enjoys from the conservative grassroots a day after...Comey’s explosive testimony.”

In an exclusive, Breitbart (6/9, Klein) reports former UN Ambassador John Bolton argued Comey’s testimony shows the investigation is “just a travesty that...is being dragged out.” Bolton added, “We’ve seen Washington in the past year awash about leaks about Trump, his campaign, his presidency. I would think if there was any real evidence that would have leaked out. That would have been too good for somebody to withhold. It hasn’t happened yet.” However, Bolton acknowledged, “I don’t have any doubt that Russia tried to interfere in the election because I think it wants to reduce American faith in their institutions. But as for the specific picture that the president’s opponents are trying to paint, they are painting without colors at this point.”

However, Nancy Cordes of the CBS Evening News (6/9, story 2, 2:05, Pelley) reported, “Not one senator on the intelligence committee has questioned Comey’s memory or veracity.” Sen. Marco Rubio commented, “I was, quite frankly, impressed by his honesty. That’s the first time I've ever seen a witness come before Congress and admit they leaked something to an intermediary to get it to the press." Like most lawmakers, Cordes said, Rubio "does not doubt that Comey felt pressured by the President," but some Republican senators, "like Idaho's Jim Risch, did challenge Comey's interpretation of the President's words." Sen. James Risch stated, "You may have taken it as a direction, but that's not what he said."

In addition, the Washington Times (6/9, Persons) reports Sen. Susan Collins said on MSNBC Friday that "Trump made a 'truly outrageous' request in asking...Comey to drop the investigation into former...Flynn." Collins added, "I think Mr. Comey has made some mistakes. I think he's made some mistakes in the handling of the Hillary Clinton case. And I think he should've told the president when the president made the truly outrageous and unacceptable request that he drop or let go [of] the Michael Flynn investigation."

In contrast, McClatchy (6/9, Roarty) reports Democrats "were eager to spread a succinct, biting message Thursday as Comey testified before the Senate Intelligence Committee, and party stalwarts thought possible obstruction could have far-reaching political consequences for the president and Republican Party." DNC Chair Tom Perez said Comey's testimony "just gave us the clearest and most damning evidence yet that President Trump lied to the American people and is likely under investigation for obstruction of justice – a serious and disturbing charge."

Reuters (6/9, Cornwell) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi "said on Friday there was no question...Trump abused his power in interactions with...Comey but she said it remained to be seen if he had obstructed justice." Pelosi asserted Trump's actions were "beyond the pale" and said, "There's no question he abused power. Whether he obstructed justice, remains for the facts to come forward, and that's what we want are the facts." The Hill (6/9, Delk) "Briefing Room" blog reports Pelosi also "said she didn't think it was "such a big deal" that former Attorney General Loretta Lynch specified to...Comey that an investigation into Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server while secretary of State should be called a 'matter.'" Pelosi told reporters that she believed Lynch's comments were "misinterpreted," adding, "Matter, investigation – I don't know that that's such a big deal."

The Hill (6/9, Carney) "Floor Action" blog reports Sen. Dianne Feinstein on Friday sent a letter to Grassley asserting, "It is my strong recommendation that the Judiciary Committee investigate all issues that raise a question of obstruction of justice. These issues should be...subject to full committee hearings." According to The Hill, "Feinstein's request was quickly backed by Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), who is also a member of the Judiciary Committee."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 5:21 p.m. EDT, 21:34, Blitzer) that Comey, "in one of the most powerful moments yesterday said he was fired, and he was asked to drop that investigation of...Flynn so that the President could change the course of the Russia investigation. If that's not an exact quote, that's pretty close. Changing the course of the Russia investigation goes to the national security of this country because, as Jim Comey said, the Russians are coming back against America, and the only way to help protect this country is to deter them by getting to the bottom of how they meddled in this election, and whoever colluded with them, and holding them accountable and making them pay a price."

Blumenthal added (6/9, 5:15 p.m. EDT, 15:18, Blitzer) that "Comey certainly indicated that he would be cooperative" and has "urged that the tapes be made available if they exist. That's very, very important because that cooperation stands in very distinct contrast to the White House and the President, who has called this investigation a witch-hunt and apparently has refused cooperation." Blumenthal said he also believes it "is very, very important" that Sessions "and his deputy, Rod Rosenstein, should come before the Judiciary Committee as well and answer questions specifically on the reasons why they failed to come to their defense and safeguard the FBI from this intimidation when it occurred."

In a piece on Trump's tweets Friday, USA Today (6/9, Jackson) reports Sen. Chris Coons said, "What struck me is that it is completely unacceptable for the president to ask the FBI director to be personally loyal to him and to ask the FBI director to drop it with regards to an ongoing investigation into his former national security adviser." Sen. Brian Schatz also "fired back at Trump...saying the president appeared to be accusing Comey of a serious crime: lying to Congress."

The Washington Times (6/9, Persons) reports Sen. Joe Manchin said Friday on MSNBC "that those on both sides of the political aisle are concerned about the perceivably close relationship between the Trump administration and the Russian government." Manchin asserted, "I think there's an awful lot of us on both sides of the aisle that are very uncomfortable with this relationship that they seem to have. I think it goes all the way to the day Comey was fired to the day the Russians were there – not allowing the press of the United States of America's in, the free press of America, but letting the controlled press of Russia in. Those are a lot of concerning things.”

The Hill (6/9, Hensch) reports Nick Akerman, “a former prosecutor who worked on the Watergate investigation,” said Thursday on CNBC’s “Closing Bell” that there is “no question that Trump was involved in obstruction of justice.” Akerman asserted Comey’s testimony “makes that crystal clear.” In addition, The Hill says Akerman also “compared former national security adviser Michael Flynn to James McCord, one of the first people arrested in the Watergate investigation. Trump asked Comey to drop an FBI investigation into Flynn, according to Comey.”

Media commentary was similarly divided along partisan lines, with Wall Street Journal (6/9, Jenkins, Jr.) columnist Holman W. Jenkins, Jr. concluding in a piece titled “Why Trump Wins” that Comey’s testimony failed to resonate among the President’s supporters. Writing in The Hill (6/9, O’Reilly) “Pundits” blog, Bill O’Reilly contends Comey’s admission of leaking “was almost beyond belief” and “bizarre.” According to O’Reilly, Comey’s revelation “says he’s kind of devious although I have to give him credit for owning up to the incredible situation.”

Fox News Insider (6/9) reports Judge Jeanine Pirro on “Fox & Friends” on Friday called Comey a “predator” who sought “revenge” with the leaks of his memos, adding, “He is an operator. He is part of the Washington elite.” Pirro added, “It’s clearly about revenge. This is a setup.” Breitbart (6/9, Pollak) Senior Editor-at-Large Joel Pollak contends Comey’s testimony “undermined Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation by revealing it to be a deliberate political setup.” He concludes, “Nothing Mueller does can be taken at face value any longer, and every action he takes will be clouded by political suspicion. He should be dismissed and replaced by an independent, bipartisan commission. Otherwise the truth will never be known, or trusted.”

The Hill (6/9, Greenwood) “Briefing Room” blog reports former Attorney General Michael Mukasey said on Newsmax TV on Friday that Comey has revealed former Attorney General Loretta Lynch turned the Justice Department into “an arm of the [Hillary] Clinton campaign.” Mukasey added, “What makes it egregious is the fact — and I think it’s obvious that it is a fact — that the attorney general of the United States was adjusting the way the department talked about its business so as to coincide with the way the Clinton campaign talked about that business.”

Nonetheless, The Hill (6/9, Kamisar) reports “conservative commentator Charles Krauthammer believes...Trump is now under investigation by the Justice Department amid probes into ties between the Trump campaign and Russia.” Krauthammer said Friday at the Faith and Freedom Coalition’s Road to Majority conference in Washington, “Comey handing over his notes to former Director Mueller, who is running the [special] investigation, means that Trump is now under investigation.” He added, “That’s the irony — all he was trying to do was to get the story out that he wasn’t, but in pursuit of that, he created a string of events where it’s likely, we don’t know, he is under investigation.”

In his New York Times (6/9, Brooks) column, David Brooks says Comey’s testimony had some “important” implications: first “that he cast some doubt on reports that there was widespread communication between the Russians and the Trump campaign,” second “that as far as we know, Donald Trump has not performed any criminal act that would merit removing him from office,” and third that “Trump is characterologically at war with the norms and practices of good government.” Brooks concludes “the good news is the civic institutions are weathering the storm. The Senate Intelligence Committee put on a very good hearing. The F.B.I. is maintaining its integrity. This has, by and large, been a golden age for the American press corps. The bad news is that these institutions had better be. The Trump death march will be slow, grinding and ugly.”

Julie Pace of the Associated Press told Fox News’ Special Report (6/9, 6:39 p.m. EDT, 39:01, Baier) that Comey’s decision not to stand up to Trump over the alleged inappropriate behavior is “where Comey was weakest in the testimony. It was a huge question going in given that everything reported given his interaction. We didn’t come out of it with any clear answer. He essentially said I wish I could’ve been stronger, I wish I could’ve been more courageous.”

Ron Brownstein, the senior editor at The Atlantic, told CNN’s Situation Room (6/9, 6:45 p.m. EDT, 45:50, Blitzer) that one of the Administration’s problems “is this consistent pattern of undisclosed meetings.” He added that further disclosures of such meetings may prompt Democratic senators to push harder for Sessions’ resignation.

In the lead segment for CNN’s Situation Room (6/9, 5:01 p.m. EDT, lead story, 1:24, Blitzer), Senior White House Correspondent Jim Acosta said Trump appears to be trying “to have it both ways, clinging to the testimony of former FBI director James Comey as his salvation while also slamming the man he fired in the same breath.” Politico Magazine (6/9, Shafer) senior media writer Jack Shafer similarly contends “that the White House has turned to the ‘disloyal’ Comey for a lifeline says volumes about Trump's desperate quest for self-preservation, to finally free himself from the oppressive 'cloud' of personal suspicion that has ground him down. "

Julie Pace of the Associated Press told Fox News' Special Report (6/9, 6:33 p.m. EDT, 33:11, Baier), "I think the President does feel vindicated on one front, and that's the fact that James Comey did tell him three times that he personally was not under investigation as it relates to the Russian collusion during the election. But obviously there is a lot that is left on the table here, and we are in a situation right now because so many of these conversations were just the President and Comey, it's Comey's word against Trump's."

Washington Post (6/9, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump says Trump is attempting to both "make the question a he-said, he-said contest between the two men" while also making "himself seem more believable" and "if that seems familiar, it should. It was precisely the strategy Trump and his team used during the 2016 campaign, fighting hard against Hillary Clinton until she was viewed as unfavorably as him and then squeaking past her in just enough places to win the presidency." According to Bump, "Trump can lie with literal impunity at this point and has a motive to do so. Comey faces legal repercussions for lying – and it's not really clear why he would."

In his Washington Post (6/9, Milbank) column, Dana Milbank states that "the line that chilled me more than any other was Comey's account of why he wrote extensive, real-time notes of his conversations with Trump. 'The nature of the person,' Comey explained in part. 'I was honestly concerned that he might lie about the nature of our meeting, and so I thought it really important to document.'" According to Milbank, "the essence of Comey's testimony: that the president of the United States is at his core a dishonest and untrustworthy man. It was judgment on character, not a legal opinion, and even Republicans on the Senate Intelligence Committee made no real attempt to dispel it."

Similarly, in his New York Times (6/9, Cohen) column, Roger Cohen asserts "somebody's lying. I think we know who it is. People have habits; to lie is one of Donald Trump's." Cohen adds "You don't need to be Sherlock Holmes to smell a rat. Russia is big; so is Trump's problem with it. He never – never! – asked Comey what should be done to stop Russian interference in American democracy." Cohen concludes "Comey has moved the pendulum. Trump is vulnerable."

Meanwhile, on CNN's Situation Room (6/9, 6:36 p.m. EDT, 36:02, Blitzer), Abby Phillip of the Washington Post suggested, "There are two options. He either has tapes or he doesn't, and if he doesn't have tapes, and he is going to reveal that at some future date, that fits into a pattern with this President, where he's trying to create a sense of suspense about something that simply doesn't exist." She stated, "The longer the prospect of tapes is out there, even if they don't exist, the more it calls into question whether there is something out there that could refute what James Comey is saying. So that's part of Trump's MO – but if there are tapes, that's a legal problem."

In his New York Times (6/9, Bruni) column, Frank Bruni calls the President "utterly confusing at his news conference on Friday afternoon. But I don't think he was confused." According to Bruni, Trump "decided – perhaps for his own amusement, perhaps to pull our attention away from the legalities of his interactions with James Comey – to keep people guessing about whether he'd recorded any of those conversations, as he vaguely suggested he had last month. He wore an expression of mischief on his face. He looked pleased. He clarified nothing."

In her New York Times (6/9, Collins) column, Gail Collins contends that while the President "probably meant nothing indictable" during his remarks on Friday, "we have a chief executive who says there'd be 'nothing wrong' if he asked the F.B.I. director not to investigate a former member of his administration suspected of having improper relations with a country that tried to interfere with our election." According to Collins, "The bottom line here is that our president appears to be unnervingly loony. Not just in the normal political way, with bad judgment or an overblown sense of importance. Loony like your cousin Fred who lives with his mother and isn't allowed out of the house with more than $2 in pocket money."

In her Washington Post (6/9, Emba) column, Christine Emba says "the uncomfortable parallels were hard to ignore" between the Comey hearing and "the patronizing, painful back-and-forth that victims have been conditioned to expect should they dare lodge a complaint about harassment or assault. ... The only thing missing was a question about what the FBI director had been wearing at the time." Emba concludes "Comey humbly admitted that he wasn't 'Captain Courageous' in his dealings with President Trump, yet he still got the benefit of the doubt. Shouldn't others who tell their stories in even more difficult circumstances be given the same?"

Trump: "America Is Going To Build Again."

The Los Angeles Times (6/10) reports President Trump on Saturday “tweeted (6/10) a video of his weekly address, which recapped the broad blueprint for infrastructure overhaul that he laid out earlier in the week.” In the address, the President promised, “America is going to build again.” The Washington Examiner (6/10, Giaritelli) says the “weekly address served to remind the public what this past week was supposed to be about after the White House’s infrastructure theme was drowned out by fallout from fired FBI Director James Comey’s Senate hearing.”

Will: To Modernize US Infrastructure, Reform Permit Process. In his Washington Post (6/9, Will) column, George Will contends that “the inaccurately named Center for American Progress” released a report defending government bureaucracy and regulation, which refocuses attention on Philip Howard, founder and chair of the reform advocacy group Common Good. Will says Howard two years ago released an analysis “argu[ing] that time is money, and that the United States is wasting enormous amounts of both with an infrastructure approval system that is an ‘accident of legal accretion over the past 50 years.’” Will adds Howard found, “America could modernize its infrastructure, at half the cost, while dramatically enhancing environmental benefits, with a two-year approval process.” Will concludes “Intelligent people of goodwill can dispute, as the CAP rejoinder does, Howard’s cost-benefit calculations,” but CAP “partakes of the hyperbole normal in today’s environmental policy debates,” titling its response to Howard the “meretricious: ‘Debunking the False Claims of Environmental Review Opponents.’”

Trump Is Fighting Against Regulations, Not Climate Change.

The AP (6/10, Flesher, Biesecker) reports President Trump’s “beliefs about global warming remain something of a mystery,” but “his actions make one thing clear: He doesn’t consider it a problem for the federal government to solve.” The AP says the President’s decision to withdraw the US from the Paris climate accords reflects his “belief in easing the regulatory burden,” a position that “is firmly in the Republican mainstream.” However, the AP adds “what sets him apart is his zealotry and public dismissiveness of the scientific evidence showing the Earth is warming and man-made carbon emissions are largely to blame.”

California Partners With Germany To Fight Climate Change. Reuters (6/10, Shalal) reports California, the largest US state “in economic terms,” and Germany, the largest economy in Europe, are “teaming up” with the “‘Under 2 Coalition,’ which includes cities, regional governments and states,” to “cooperate on tackling climate change following the U.S. government’s decision to withdraw from the 2015 Paris agreement.” In a statement, California Gov. Jerry Brown said, “California and Germany unite the world leaders in the fight against climate change, the existential threat of our time.”

New Coal Mine Opening In Pittsburgh. Don Dahler reported on the CBS Weekend News (6/10, story 9, 2: 35, Dahler) that a new coal mine has opened “60 miles outside Pittsburgh,” shortly after President Trump announced he would pull out of the Paris climate agreement. Though the mine “was in the works before the election,” Dahler noted, “the President highlighted it as a rare bright spot” last week. The mine is “only hiring 70 to 100 workers,” but locals hope the news will mean more income for everybody.

Perry Says US Will Focus On “Early Stage” Research Of Climate Technology In Beijing.

The AP (6/9, Brown) reports that while energy ministers from several countries reported “increased spending to help counter climate change” during the clean energy conference in Beijing this week, Energy Secretary Perry “said deep cuts to research in Trump’s proposed budget reflected an increased understanding that developing new technologies into commercial projects should be left to private companies.” Perry explained the US government would spend money on “early stage” research, adding that “once (a new technology) has been proven up, we need to get out of the business.”

Perry Discusses Paris Accord, Energy Policy After Trip To Asia. In a Bloomberg News (6/9) interview, Energy Secretary Perry discusses his trip to China and US energy policy. Perry praises the shale gas revolution, and encourages natural gas development. Perry went on to call arguments against withdrawing from the Paris agreement “political rhetoric,” suggesting that the money would be “better spent in national labs on technology that we know are going to have an effect on the environment.”

China Signals Willingness To Work With Individual States At Clean Energy Meeting. AFP (6/9, Jackson) reports China gave California Gov. Jerry Brown “a red carpet reception this week” while possibly snubbing Energy Secretary Perry at the ministerial-level clean energy meeting last week. AFP says that while Xie Zhenhua, China’s top climate negotiator, praised California’s climate policies and experience, Perry “was granted a reception with China’s number seven, Zhang Gaoli." Some analysts argue that the meeting may mean "that China has not given up on Washington," but Willy Lam, an expert on politics at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, believes that "the message is that irrespective of the decision of Donald Trump, China is willing to work with individual states and cities in the United States."

Campaign Urges Chamber Of Commerce Members To Leave Over Its Support Of Paris Accord Pullout. Bloomberg Politics (6/9, Natter) reports President Trump's decision to exit the Paris climate accord has led to a campaign by "Public Citizen and other groups" to encourage companies including to withdraw from the US Chamber of Commerce, which supported the decision. Senator Sheldon Whitehouse, author of a report on the "corporate disconnect over climate change", said in a statement, "It's time for member companies to ask themselves whether they want to side with a relentless climate foe, or protect the health and safety of the American people and the reputation of our country." When asked about the situation by Bloomberg, some "companies said they agree with the Chamber on some issues, but not all. Others say they are putting pressure on it to change course."

Washington Post Fact Checks Trump's Coal Claims In Paris Accord Speech. In an analysis of President Trump's speech on the Paris accord, the Washington Post (6/9, Lee) determines that it "was filled with misstatements." In a fact-check, the Post explains that Trump's claims that new coal mines are opening have little to do with the accord, and are instead driven by increasing global demand for metallurgical coal. What's more, it "doesn't signal a long-term coal renaissance," analysts say. The piece also disputes Trump's claim that the Paris accord "effectively blocks the development of clean coal in America." According to the Post, "clean coal" technology has developed since the US entered the agreement in 2015, but "remains expensive and not viable economically without being linked to an enhanced oil recovery project."

Rep. McClintock: Trump Was Right To Leave Paris Accord. In an op-ed in The Hill (6/9, McClintock), Rep. Tom McClintock praises President Trump's decision to leave the Paris climate accord, arguing that it would be "debilitating" to average families. He goes on to criticize climate change alarmists, and adds that "historical fluctuations in both CO2 atmospheric concentrations and global temperatures suggest that natural influences vastly outweigh the human causes of global warming." He concludes that President Trump chose "a future in which families can enjoy the prosperity that abundant energy provides and the quality of life that comes from that prosperity."

OMB Considers Trump's Clean Power Plan Review, Nears Public Release.

The Hill (6/9, Cama) reports the White House's Office of Management and Budget is reviewing the Environmental Protection Agency's proposed review of the Clean Power Plan, the final step before it is publicly released for comments. According to The Hill, the Administration "is expected to seek a full repeal of the rule."

China Aims To Work With US States On Climate Issue.

The Wall Street Journal (6/11, Spegele) reports that even though President Trump has pulled the US out of the Paris climate agreement, China is engaging with US states to work to address the issue of climate change. The article highlights the lavish welcome that California Gov. Jerry Brown received last week at a clean-energy forum in China. Energy Secretary was also in the country attending the event, but he wasn't given a similar welcome. Perry expressed support for Brown trying to address the issue. Perry stated, "My hat's off to Gov. Brown for the work that he does to promote California."

US, G7 Remain At Odds On Climate Change.

Reuters (6/11, Jewkes) reports that differences between the US and other G7 nations over climate change "remain wide and are not likely to narrow," environment ministers said Sunday after talks in Bologna. "Positions over the Paris accord are far apart...and will remain that way," Italian Environment Minister Gian Luca Galletti said on the sidelines of the meeting. German Environment Minister Barbara Hendricks said, "There will be a final communique tomorrow that will differentiate opinions," without providing details.

Bloomberg Politics (6/11, Albanese, Parkin) likewise says the US will join other G7 nations in a communique "that will acknowledge points of disagreement." Hendricks told reporters that talks with EPA Administrator Pruitt "underlined agreement on such issues as pollution of the oceans," but that Pruitt "made clear" the nations are at odds on climate protection. The AP (6/11, Santalucia, Jordans) reports Pruitt "attended the first few hours of the two-day summit before returning to Washington for a Cabinet meeting, US officials said."

The Hill Analysis: Economic Growth A “Bright Spot” For Trump.

The Hill (6/11, Elis) says, “The economy is emerging as a bright spot for President Trump,” as “The S&P 500 is up more than 12 percent since Election Day, unemployment has reached a 16-year low and economic growth in the coming year is expected to reach 2.3 percent, more robust growth than the 1.6 percent it grew in 2016.” On Friday, closing out the Administration’s “infrastructure week,” “Trump sought to play up his handling of the economy again.” The analysis highlights how “controversy” surrounding former FBI director James “Comey’s firing has led to a new drop in the polls for Trump, whose approval rating in the Real Clear Politics average is just 39 percent, with 55 percent expressing disapproval.”

WSJournal A1 Analysis: Fed’s Monetary Tightening Failing To Produce Intended Effects On Markets. The Wall Street Journal (6/11, A1, Harrison) reports that as the Federal Reserve likely will decide to raise short-term interest rates for the fourth time since December 2015 at a meeting this week, recent tightening policy efforts have yet to impact financial markets, where stocks have hit records this year and bond yields have fallen. Accommodative financial conditions – currently on par with those at the peak of Fed stimulus in early 2015 – put the market at risk for overheating and then snapping back. The Journal explains that such a situation suggests that there are limits to the Fed’s influence over the economy, and lead the central bank to shift its strategy. Harvard economist Jeremy Stein said the Fed is less likely to back away from its plan to continue raising rates, and the Journal says it’s too early to know whether officials will raise rates more quickly than planned.

Lawmakers Unclear On When To Raise Debt Limit.

The Wall Street Journal (6/11, Davidson) reports that amid a lack of information and mixed messages from the Trump Administration lawmakers could leave town for summer recess in six weeks not knowing when it needs to lift the debt ceiling. That confusion, the Journal adds, makes it more difficult for the Administration to convince Congress to raise the debt limit sooner rather than later.

Treasury To Propose “Modest” Bank Reforms.

“The Treasury Department on Monday is set to propose modest revisions to banking regulations put in place after the financial crisis, a sharp contrast to the slash-and-burn approach to those rules that was approved by House Republicans just this week,” Politico (6/9, Guida) reports, although the “long-awaited report ordered by President Donald Trump...will call for a streamlining of regulators’ authority and for shrinking the power of the popular consumer watchdog agency created by the 2010 Dodd-Frank Act, according to people familiar with the document.” Politico states that “the report is one of a series that the department is drafting in response to a February executive order by Trump for a comprehensive review of financial regulations, which he says are hindering U.S. economic growth.” Politico adds the Treasury Department proposal “is probably closer to what is achievable, given that Senate Republicans will need Democratic votes to pass most major legislation.”

WPost Analysis: House Bill Would Limit Shareholders’ Ability To File Resolutions. In an analysis of the potential impact of a Dodd-Frank rollback on energy companies, the Washington Post (6/9, Grandoni) explains that the Financial Choice Act, the bill designed to dismantle Dodd-Frank, would set a “prohibitively high bar for most investors” to file a shareholder resolution. According to Eastman Chemical Company CEO Mark Costa, the change is meant to combat “activist investors with insignificant stakes in public companies” that “make shareholder proposals that pursue social or political agendas unrelated to the interests of the shareholders as a whole.” However, the Post notes that the bill is “expected to die a quick death” in the Senate.

Labor Department Partially Implements Obama-Era Fiduciary Rule.

The Wall Street Journal (6/9, Hayashi) reports a core principle of the fiduciary rule went into effect on Friday, to the dismay of many companies in the financial industry who had expected it to be pulled back under President Trump. The Labor Department is implementing the rule in two stages, first with the core principle, which requires brokers and advisers working with tax-advantaged retirement savings to act in the best interest of their clients, as “fiduciaries.” The second includes operational requirements, which will become effective in January and requires conflict of interest disclosures to investors. The Journal says Labor Secretary Acosta chose to more strictly follow rule-making procedures rather than to risk delaying the rule.

Labor Department Reverses Obama-Era “Persuader Rule.” The Washington Post (6/9, Eilperin) reports the Labor Department on Tuesday announced that it would reverse the "persuader rule," which was approved during the Obama Administration but had yet to go into effect due to ongoing litigation. The rule would have required companies to "disclose their initial contacts with outside consultants on how to respond to unionizing efforts." The Post says the reversal "marks a victory for business groups and a setback for organized labor and underscores the extent to which the department is starting to shift course under its new secretary, Alexander Acosta."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Trump Goes After The Inspectors." A New York Times (6/12, Board) editorial charges that the Trump Administration is "undermin[ing] the inspectors' role by failing to hire for open positions and planning to slash the offices' budgets, one of the many ways the White House has found to diminish the oversight functions of the federal government." The Times says Congress "has demonstrated bipartisan willingness to step up for inspectors general in the past, and last year it expanded the types and scope of protection offered to government whistle-blowers. Now it needs to protect the watchdogs from an administration that wants to starve them."

"Shunning Gun Control, Helping Terrorists." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/12, Board) writes that "in his obligation to protect the public, President Trump would do well to note that the nation's loophole-ridden gun laws are hailed by the Islamic State as a pro-mayhem advantage." Having "clumsily raised the issue" in wake of the latest attacks in London, Trump "needs to know that in the years since Britain held a national gun debate and enacted laws for public safety, it has suffered only one mass shooting involving four or more victims. In this country, the F.B.I. has found the rate of such deadly sprees has more than doubled since 2000, to more than 16 a year."

Washington Post.

"Good News: The US And Mexico Agreed On A Sugar Deal But That's Bad News, Too." In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/11) writes that negotiations between the Administration and the Mexican government on access to the US for Mexican sugar producers is both "good news and bad news." On one hand, it "avoids an impending trade war over the commodity, thus preserving a modicum of good relations leading into negotiations over updating" NAFTA. On the other hand, it "perpetuates a system of market manipulations that hurts American consumers of the commodity while benefiting no one but a well-connected few who produce it in the United States." The Post says the deal further increases minimum prices for consumers by tightening supply limitations, leaving American producers still unsatisfied and constituting "a major concession by Mexico for the sake of good bilateral relations."

"Virginia's Breakthrough On Rectifying An Enormous Injustice." The Washington Post (6/11) editorializes that Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe, "overcoming bitter opposition from Republican lawmakers," has "largely rectified an enormous, archaic injustice: the disenfranchisement of tens of thousands of former felons – about half of them African Americans – whose debt to society has been paid, in many cases decades ago." The Post adds that "after prevailing in state courts," McAuliffe (D) "was able to assert his power under the state constitution and has so far restored the vote to more than 156,000 ex-convicts," and "by the time his four-year term in office ends in January, he is on pace to have restored rights (including the right to serve on juries) to at least another 5,000 former felons." The Post notes that "a future governor might slow the pace of ongoing restorations or even shift criteria," but "those already re-enfranchised are secure in their restored rights, and" McAuliffe's "legacy is assured."

"When Mentally Ill Parents Murder Their Children." The Washington Post (6/11) editorializes about "the grim appraisal of Prince George's County State's Attorney Angela Alsobrooks as she catalogued the failures that led to the murders of two young children by their mentally ill mother." According to the Post, "there were clear warnings that a troubled young mother needed help and that her children were in danger," and "the tragic case exposes fault lines in systems set up to treat mental illness and protect children, underscoring the need for improvements." The Post adds that under current law, "teachers, health-care workers and certain other workers must report to authorities when they suspect a child has been abused but not when they believe a child is in danger of being abused." Alsobrooks "has spent the past three years unsuccessfully trying to persuade state lawmakers to strengthen the reporting requirement to cover threats and to provide training in assessing danger."

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s Steel-Trapped Minds.” The Wall Street Journal (6/11) editorializes that an honest review of US steel imports as ordered by President Trump’s executive order wouldn’t produce findings to justify a broad-based tariff that would kill jobs in industries that use steel, including construction, automotive, and machinery. The Journal says the Commerce Department already has imposed 152 so-called antidumping and countervailing-duty orders on steel imports from 32 countries. These protectionist measures have allowed domestic producers to raise prices and increase their profit margins. However, the Journal says before the imposition of such duties, US manufacturers were forced by foreign competition to become more efficient by improving technology and workflow. Moreover, some steel imports are necessary as many downstream consumers say domestic steel doesn’t adhere to industry quality or safety standards.

“A Single-Payer Test Drive.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/11) cites a single-payer healthcare bill passed in the California state Senate and argues that if Democrats believe government should have greater control over healthcare, then Gov. Jerry Brown should sign the measure into law and force progressives to live with the consequences before such a system is imposed on the entire nation.

“Hezbollah In The Bronx.” The Wall Street Journal (6/11) editorializes that Federal prosecutors in the Southern District of New York announced on Tuesday that charges were filed against naturalized citizens Ali Kourani and Samer el Debek, two alleged Hezbollah operatives who helped organize potential attacks in the US and Panama, and against US and Israeli embassies. The Journal accuses Iran of extending Hezbollah a $200 million annual budget and of providing most of the roughly 80,000 missiles that Hezbollah uses against Israel, and says the charges against Kourani and Debek reinforces that Iran rightfully deserves its reputation as the world’s leading state sponsor of terrorism.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Uber Faces Deeper Turmoil At Top
Fed Finds Foe In Financial Markets
When Currencies Fall, Export Growth Is Supposed To Follow—Until Now
Sessions Testimony To Keep Russia Probe In Focus

New York Times:

Democrats In Split-Screen: The Base Wants It All. The Party Wants To Win.
Role Of Trump’s Personal Lawyer Blurs Public And Private Lines
Seizing On Opioid Crisis, A Drug Maker Lobbies Hard For Its Product
Reviving A Lost Language Of Canada Through Film
Uber Weighs Leave Of Absence For Chief Executive
For Britain, Political Stability Is A Quaint Relic
Duterte, Focused On Drug Users In Philippines, Ignored Rise Of ISIS
Tony Awards 2017: ‘Dear Evan Hansen’ Wins Best Musical, ‘Oslo’ Wins Best Play

Washington Post:

Turning Pain Into Hope
Partisan Districts’ Future Is At Stake
President Looms Over Costly Race In Georgia
I Covered Terrorism On 3 Continents. Then My Family Was Victimized. True To The Law’s Principles Or Betraying Her Own?

Financial Times:

May Faces Party Showdown After Disastrous Election
State Investors Stock Up On Record Gold Reserves
Uber Board Discuss Change In Role For Kalanick

Washington Times:

Homeland Security Secretary Suggests Amnesty For Dreamers, Implores Congress To Solve Problem

Attorney General Jeff Sessions To Testify: Senate Democrats Demand Public Hearing
Big Names, Long Days: Virginia Democrats In Tight Race For Governor Make Final Campaign Push

Federal Government Owns Little Infrastructure For Trump To Privatize
Pentagon Continues LGBT Pride Celebration: Conservatives Say It's A Shame In Trump Administration
Coal Sector Reignites Under Trump But Is Projected To Burn Out In The Long Run

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Comey Testimony-WH; Somalia-US Drone Strike, Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered; Home Explosions; Jennifer Lawrence-Emergency Landing; Florida-Airplane Crash; Look-A-Like Prisoner; Penn State Frat Death-Trial; Bill Cosby Trial; Weather; Swim-Carbon Monoxide Danger; Uber-Shake Up; Japan-Car Crash; Kickboxing Fight; Lottery Winner; Heart Transplant Teen.

CBS: Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered; Philippines-US Anti-ISIS Support; Somalia-US Drone Strike; Syria-Raqqa, Mosul Assaults; Comey Testimony-WH; LA-Anti-Trump Rally; Puerto Rico-US State Poll; Jimmy Carter-Public Appearance; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; US Mall Redevelopment; US Flag Day.

NBC: Comey Testimony-WH; Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered; Kidnapped Woman Rescue-Video; Uber-Shake Up; Weather; Russia-Ghost Towns; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; US Rising Drug Cost; French Open Winner; Big Sur-Landslides; Retirement-Farming.

Network TV At A Glance:

Comey Testimony-WH – 8 minutes, 5 seconds

Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered – 4 minutes, 25 seconds

Weather – 2 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump Anti-Corruption Lawsuit; Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; Stanley Cup Winner; Jennifer Lawrence-Emergency Landing.

CBS: Comey Testimony-WH; Stanley Cup Winner; French Open Winner; US World Cup Qualifying; Broadway News; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; US Gasoline Price; Wall Street News.

FOX: Comey Testimony-WH; London Terror Attack.

NPR: French Parliament Election; Pro-LGBT Rallies; Qatar Diplomatic Crisis; Stanley Cup Winner.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Leads a Cabinet Meeting; Welcomes the 2016 NCAA Football National Champions: The Clemson Tigers.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President for a Cabinet meeting.

US Senate: 4:00 PM Senate votes on beginning debate on Countering Iran's Destabilizing Activities Act and on DoD nominee – Senate convenes and resumes consideration of the motion to proceed to 'S.722, Countering Iran's Destabilizing Activities Act of 2017', then the nomination of Kenneth Rapuano to be Assistant Secretary of Defense, followed by votes on the nomination and the motion Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 2:00 PM House of Representatives meets for legislative business Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

4:00 PM Treasury Secretary Mnuchin testifies to House Appropriations subcommittee on budget – Financial Services and General Government Subcommittee 'Department of the Treasury – Budget Hearing', with testimony from Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin Location: Rm 2359, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'S. 1094 – Department of Veterans Affairs Accountability and Whistleblower Protection Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2372 – VETERAN Act', 'H.R. 2579 – Broader Options for Americans Act', and 'H.R. 2581 – Verify First Act' Location: H-313, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

7:00 PM House Appropriations subcommittee markup hearing – Military Construction, Veterans Affairs and Related Agencies Subcommittee markup hearing on FY 2018 Appropriations

Bill Location: Rm 2362-A, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

7:00 PM Defense Secretary Mattis testifies to House Armed Services Committee on FY'18 budget – Hearing on 'The Fiscal Year 2018 National Defense Authorization Budget Request from the Department of Defense', with testimony from Secretary of Defense James Mattis; and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford, Jr. Location: Rm 2118, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

Clemson Tigers visit Capitol Hill – 2016-2017 College Football Playoff National Championship winners Clemson Tigers visit the U.S. Capitol, immediately following a ceremony at the White House, visiting Statuary Hall and the Rotunda, where Republican Rep. Jeff Duncan and other members of the South Carolina Congressional delegation deliver brief remarks Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://www.clemson.edu/> <https://twitter.com/ClemsonUniv>

Other: 4:00 PM 'Smart Cities and Intelligent Transportation Systems' 1776 / Israel Embassy discussion – 'Smart Cities and Intelligent Transportation Systems – The Case of Mobileye' event, co-organized by 1776 and the Embassy of Israel as part of the Embassy's 'Jerusalem Events' series, with Mobileye Director of Strategic Initiatives Uri Tami sharing his company's vision on opportunities for smart cities and intelligent transportation systems, from driver assistance systems to big data. Other speakers include Israel Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Ron Dermer and 1776 CFO Steve Graubart Location: 1776, 1133 15th St NW, Washington, DC 1776dc.com <https://twitter.com/1776dc>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, June 26, 2017
Date: Monday, June 26, 2017 7:01:43 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, JUNE 26, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Daily Inter Lake (MT): Whitefish Hosts Western Governor's Meeting.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Interior Secretary To Address Group In Northern Nevada.
- Bloomberg News: Trump To Call For U.S. 'Dominance' In Global Energy Production.
- E&E Publishing: Trump Homes In On 4 Conservation Picks.
- U.S. News & World Report: Acadia Advisory Panel To Resume Meetings In September.
- West Central Tribune (MN): Adviser To Trump Interior Official Speaks Of 'Balance And Trust' While In Duluth.
- Government Executive: Can Volunteers Save Federal Lands And Create A Hiring Pipeline For Agencies?

- Centralia (WA) Chronicle: Congress Members Ask For Government Help Combating Columbia River Mussels.
- Washington Examiner: Military Service Dogs, Vets Get Hero's Welcome On Capitol Hill.
- The Blaze: Left-wing Environmentalists Working To Undermine Trump's 'Swamp' Clean Up.
- The Hill: Channeling Teddy Roosevelt: How Trump And Interior Sec. Zinke Can Protect Public Lands.
- Daily Signal: Obama's Last-Minute Land Grab Was Bad For Utah.
- KRWG-FM Las Cruces (NM): Lang: Las Cruces-Area Monument Providing Economic Benefits To Southern New Mexico.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Massachusetts Tribe Awaits Federal Decision On Casino Land.
- Air Force Says Proposed Spokane Tribe Casino Poses No Insurmountable Obstacles.
- Dakota Access Review To Re-Examine Impact On Tribe.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Taos (NM) News: Despite Modern Look, Redesigned BLM Websites Lack Details, Documents.
- McClatchy: Coal, Climate Change At Center Of Court Case Than Could Affect Mining Across The West.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Citing Trump's Executive Order, BLM Considers Leasing Sage Grouse Habitat For Oil And Gas.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Dinosaur Drilling Proposal In Dispute.
- Medford (OR) Mail Tribune: Three Artists Will Portray National Monument In Their Own Way.
- Natural Gas Intelligence: Brief – Bureau Of Land Management.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: Venting Of Methane Hurts State.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Seismic Tests As A Steppingstone To Virginia Offshore Drilling Raises Excitement And Concern.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Hoeven Announces $24.4 Million In Bureau Of Reclamation Funding For Rural Water Projects.
- Arizona Coal Train Serving Navajo Generating Station Derails Near Page.
- Montana Hemp Farmer Can't Irrigate Her Crops Under Fed Rules.
- California Reservoir On Shaky Ground Highlights Aging U.S. Dams' Risks.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- TIME: Yellowstone Grizzly Bears Could Be Vulnerable To Hunters.
- U.S. News & World Report: Feds To Give Update On California's Big Water Tunnels.
- The Hill: Invasive Carp Found Near Lake Michigan.
- Kingman (AZ) Daily Miner: Feds Remove Hualapai Mexican Vole From Endangered Species List.
- Denver Post: How Biologists Are Working To Keep The Great Sand Dunes Tiger Beetle Off The Endangered Species List.
- South Florida Sun Sentinel: High Water Levels Threaten Survival Of Everglades, Expert Warns.
- Boston Globe: 2 Humpback Whales Die After Stranding On Cape Cod.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wisconsin Works To Improve Mississippi River Beaches.
- Citrus County (FL) Chronicle: USFWS Seeking Comment On Three Sisters Proposal.
- Seattle Times: We Must Reject Trump's Plan For Oil And Gas Drilling In ANWR.
- Bozeman (MT) Daily Chronicle: We Can Find A Balance Between People, Carnivores.

National Park Service

- The Guardian (UK): As Trump Moves To Privatize America's National Parks, Visitor Costs May Rise.
- Washington Post: Six Nazi Spies Were Executed in D.C. White Supremacists Gave Them A Memorial – On Federal Land.
- Reuters: Conservative Activists Hold Muted Rallies In Washington.
- U.S. News & World Report: Officials Draining Pool At World War II Memorial.
- Inside NoVa (VA): Park Service Closes Access To Roosevelt Island For Tree Removal.
- U.S. News & World Report: Yellowstone Wants Brucellosis Quarantine Facility In Park.
- WSBT-TV South Bend (IN): EPA Says Indiana Dunes Beaches Safe After Toxic Spill.
- U.S. News & World Report: HOPE Crew Begins Restoration Work On Fort Monroe Building.
- U.S. News & World Report: Somerset County Coroner Recalls 9/11, Aftermath.

- U.S. News & World Report: Teens Handcuffed For Selling Water On National Mall.
- USA Today: Acadia National Park: From Sunrise To Sunset.
- Omaha (NE) World-Herald: Editorial: Homestead National Monument Gets An Appropriate Addition.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Pacific (GUM) Daily News: GovGuam Agencies Receive $500K To Fund Priority Programs.
- Marianas Variety: Additional Coverage: Bordallo Addresses OIA Budget Cuts During Natural Resources Hearing.
- New York Times: After Puerto Rico's Debt Crisis, Worries Shift To Virgin Islands.

US Geological Survey

- Los Angeles Times: Earthquakes May Be The Rare Issue Uniting Democrats And Republicans In California.

Top National News

- ABC: Trump: "I Cannot Imagine" Republican Senators Will Not Vote For Healthcare Bill.
- CNN: Trump Questions Mueller's Impartiality, But White House Denies Dismissal Rumors.
- Washington Post: "Bombshell" WPost Report Suggests Obama Knew Of Russian Election Meddling.
- Fox News: Trump, Aides Accuse Obama Of Failing To Respond To Russian Meddling.
- Reuters: House Leaders Pushing For Bipartisan Deal To Raise Debt Ceiling.
- Politico: Administration, Congress Consider Writing Tax Reform Measure In Secrecy.
- McClatchy: McClatchy Analysis: Trump's Infrastructure Legacy Is Mostly Pipeline Approvals.
- Washington Post: WPost: GOP Not Planning "Real Tax Reform."

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Iran Puzzle."
 - "School Districts Fight Segregation On Their Own."
 - "Progress On Gay Rights In Serbia, With A Catch."
- Washington Post.
 - "We're Close Than Ever To Eradicating Polio – And Yet There's Syria."
 - "There's Reason To Doubt Saudi Arabia's Charming New Crown Prince."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Missile Defense Imperative."
 - "Trump' Tapes' Trick."
 - "Nevada Solar Subsidy Resurrection."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Whitefish Hosts Western Governor's Meeting.

The Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (6/24, Wilson) reports that "for the second time this decade, Whitefish will play host to the annual summer meeting of the Western Governor's Association next week as the top elected officials from 10 states join other dignitaries to discuss issues facing the American West." Among the headliners for event, which begins Monday afternoon, is Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.

Eco-group Billboard Blitz To Greet Interior Chief In Montana. The AP (6/23, Volz) reports environmentalist groups intend to give Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "an unexpected homecoming when he returns to his Montana hometown next week" to address the Western Governors Association's annual conference in Whitefish on Tuesday, as they erected a "billboards blitz" to "urge him not to touch the Upper Missouri River Breaks, one of two dozen national monuments he's reviewing to eliminate or scale back protections." The AP adds that they also are airing "television ads [that] will tell him to leave alone a conservation plan by the Obama administration and 11 Western states to protect the sage grouse, an imperiled bird."

Coverage by the AP was picked up by ABC News (6/23, Volz), the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (6/23, Volz), the Daily Mail (6/23), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/24, Volz), Philly \(PA\) (6/23, Volz), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/23), the Gillette \(WY\) News Record (6/25, Volz), the Provo \(UT\) Daily Herald (6/23, Volz), U.S. News & World Report (6/23, Volz), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/23, Matt Volz |, Ap), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/23, Volz).

Also providing coverage of the national monument review is the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (6/24, Puckett).

Guest Opinion: Public Losing Ground In Zinke's First Months At Interior. In an op-ed for the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/24, Saeger), Chris Saeger, Executive Director of the Western Values Project, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "coming home to Montana with a lot of baggage." Saeger claims that "altogether, Zinke's time at the Department of Interior has been characterized by decisions that benefit the special interests that brought him to power, and harm public lands users." Saeger concludes, "That's a record he's not likely to mention at the Western Governors' Association meeting in Whitefish, but it will be widely felt by Westerners who need him to take a more responsible approach to the management of our public lands."

Interior Secretary To Address Group In Northern Nevada.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/25, Brean) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will "visit Northern Nevada on Sunday to address a group that stirred controversy last year during the confirmation process for another member of President Donald Trump's Cabinet." Zinke is "scheduled to deliver the keynote speech at a private meeting of the Rule of Law Defense Fund, a right-leaning policy group once led by former Oklahoma Attorney General Scott Pruitt before he became administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency."

KTVN-TV Reno, NV (6/25, Jay) reports that "on Monday, Zinke is expected to meet with local, state, and federal officials to make an announcement 'regarding the Trump Administration's commitment to rural communities.'"

Trump To Call For U.S. 'Dominance' In Global Energy Production.

Bloomberg News (6/25, Dlouhy) reports that during what is being called "Energy Week," President Trump "will tout surging U.S. exports of oil and natural gas during a week of events aimed at highlighting the country's growing energy dominance." In addition, Trump "plans to emphasize that after decades of relying on foreign energy supplies, the U.S. is on the brink of becoming a net exporter of oil, gas, coal and other energy resources." The aim of the week "to draw attention to Trump's domestic priorities and away from more politically treacherous matters such as multiple investigations into Russian interference in the 2016 election."

Trump Homes In On 4 Conservation Picks.

E&E Publishing (6/23, Hiar) reports that the Trump Administration "may be close to naming four key public land management positions, according to sources in the recreation and ranching communities." Larry Voyles, "who has led Arizona's Game and Fish Department since 2008, is believed to be in the running for Interior's assistant secretary for fish, wildlife and parks." A contender to lead the US Fish and Wildlife Service is Scott Talbott, the director of Wyoming's Game and Fish Department.

Acadia Advisory Panel To Resume Meetings In September.

The AP (6/25) reports that the Acadia National Park Advisory Commission will "resume meetings in September following a hiatus ordered by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." The article notes that "the reinstatement comes days after Maine Sens. Susan Collins and Angus King urged Zinke to reconsider his decision to suspend the Acadia Advisory Commission."

Additional coverage was provided by the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/23, Kong, Ring).

Adviser To Trump Interior Official Speaks Of 'Balance And Trust' While In Duluth.

The West Central Tribune \(MN\) (6/24, Myers) reports that the senior adviser to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was in Duluth on Saturday "to speak to the annual conference of the Outdoor Writers Association of America." Dave Mihalic, "a longtime National Park Service official who retired in 2003 as superintendent of Yosemite National Park, spoke to a packed room of outdoor writers, media producers and editors and outdoor recreation industry reps at the Duluth Entertainment Convention Center." According to the article, "while Mihalic said he couldn't speak on specific policy issues, or speak for his longtime friend Zinke, he said the nation's newly installed top park ranger will be a good steward of federal lands even as the Trump administration moves to slash the budgets of federal land management agencies."

Can Volunteers Save Federal Lands And Create A Hiring Pipeline For Agencies?

Government Executive (6/22, Katz) reports that "lawmakers in both chambers of Congress and political parties want to create a corps of volunteers to help maintain and preserve federal lands and parks, who would then receive a leg up when applying for federal jobs." The 2017 21st Century Conservation Service Corps Act would "codify and expand the use of existing programs allowing federal land management agencies to use volunteers to fill vacancies on restoration projects." The measure would "target veterans, underprivileged youth, inner-city kids and others."

Congress Members Ask For Government Help Combating Columbia River Mussels.

The Centralia \(WA\) Chronicle (6/23) reports that "on Wednesday, a bipartisan group of congressional representatives from around the Pacific Northwest sent a letter to the secretary of the interior asking for assistance in preventing the spread of the invasive zebra mussel into the Columbia River system." The letter "notes that the zebra mussel could cost the region around $500 million per year while compromising the river's ecosystem, fisheries and hydropower infrastructure." The letter calls on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to make a generous sum of federal funds available in order to contain the spread of the mussels."

Military Service Dogs, Vets Get Hero's Welcome On Capitol Hill.

The Washington Examiner (6/23, Bedard) reports that "an unusual gathering of lawmakers, administration officials and veterans are joining next week to celebrate the most unique of military tag teams – servicemembers and their service dogs." At Tuesday's "Sixth Annual Toast to Veterans and Those Who Serve in Congress," the American Humane Association is "to be singled out for helping reunite service dogs and their handlers in its bid to help both shift to civilian life." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "who headlined the event in the last two years, has been invited."

Left-wing Environmentalists Working To Undermine Trump's 'Swamp' Clean Up.

The Blaze (6/25, Haskins) reports that "as part of his efforts to clean up corruption and improve government services," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "informed in June several key senior staff members in Department of the Interior agencies that they would be reassigned." Now, "left-wing environmentalists" are "actively fighting the moves, which they say 'are sowing chaos in the ranks of the agency's leadership.'" The Center for Biological Diversity has "filed a Freedom of Information Act request to determine the motives behind the staff reassignments."

Channeling Teddy Roosevelt: How Trump And Interior Sec. Zinke Can Protect Public Lands.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/24, Barron, Contributor), Christopher Barron, a conservative strategist and the President of Right Turn Strategies, writes that "as an outspoken supporter of Trump," he was "disappointed in his decision to issue the unnecessary executive order mandating" the review of national monuments. Barron was "even more disappointed" by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "initial recommendation that the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah be reduced in size." Barron argues that the executive order was "entirely unnecessary because the Antiquities Act, the legislation by which this and other National Monument designations were made, already provides a remedy if someone is unhappy with a designation – Congress can act." He notes that "Trump ran for president promising to 'Make America Great Again.'" Barron asserts that "nothing is more fundamental to American greatness than our lands."

In an op-ed for the Greeley \(CO\) Tribune (6/22, Lien), David Lien, a former Air Force officer and chairman of the Colorado Backcountry Hunters & Anglers, questions if President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke are honoring President Theodore Roosevelt's conservationist legacy. Lien hopes Trump will "become the next Theodore Roosevelt — a strong voice for our wild public lands, waters and wildlife — but his recent actions suggest the opposite, a Roosevelt Republican in name only."

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/24, Pok), Benjamin Pok, student body president of the Associated Students of Westminster College, Salt Lake City, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendation for boundary revisions for Utah's Bears Ears National Monument “sets the stage for additional attacks on America’s national parks and public lands — a wrong-headed effort to reduce protections that would lead to a loss in economic prosperity for future generations and the degradation of vital cultural resources.” He notes that “on June 8, the 111th anniversary” of President Theodore Roosevelt’s “signing of the Antiquities Act, 100 student leaders representing 850,000 college students in 24 states sent a letter to Secretary Zinke urging him to protect Bears Ears and other monuments.” Pok says that he and “the other 99 student leaders who signed our letter and thousands of students in my state, want to send a strong message: we must provide economic opportunities for young workers while preserving America’s rich legacy and natural environment for generations to come.” They urge Zinke “to carry forward President Roosevelt’s remarkable leadership by reversing his current course” because as “Roosevelt demonstrated, protecting our environment and boosting our economic potential are not mutually exclusive endeavors.”

Obama’s Last-Minute Land Grab Was Bad For Utah.

Trump Is Showing He Hears The People. In a piece for the Daily Signal (6/23, Lee), Sen. Mike Lee supports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s recommendation that the borders of the Bears Ears National Monument should be redrawn. He notes that the Antiquities Act is “very clear that monument designations should be limited to ‘the smallest area compatible with the proper care and management of the objects to be protected.’” Lee supports a legislation approach, instead of “unilateral decisions” by the executive branch, which would invite “future abuses.”

Lang: Las Cruces-Area Monument Providing Economic Benefits To Southern New Mexico.

In an op-ed for KRWG-FM Las Cruces, NM (6/25, Lang), Chris Lang, the Founder of Organ Mountain Outfitters, argues against resizing of the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument. He notes that Bureau of Land Management data “show the new monument has had a 102 percent increase in visitation from 2015 to 2016, equaling more than 85,000 additional visitors.” Furthermore, “thanks to the OMDP designation, Las Cruces and Mesilla have happily been graced with increased economic opportunities driven by the rise in visitation and attention of the national press.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Massachusetts Tribe Awaits Federal Decision On Casino Land.

The AP (6/24) reports that Mashpee Wampanoag tribe is “anticipating a decision from the federal government on 321 acres it wants designated as sovereign tribal land.” The Interior Department has notified the tribe “that it will announce whether it will grant land in trust status to 170 acres in Mashpee and 151 acres in Taunton by Tuesday.”

Air Force Says Proposed Spokane Tribe Casino Poses No Insurmountable Obstacles.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/24, Massey) reports that Spokane County is “moving forward with its lawsuit against a long-planned gaming and retail development on the West Plains, pointing to concerns that the Spokane tribe’s $400 million casino would hurt other businesses in the area.” However, “encroachment of Spokane Tribe Economic Project (STEP) on the neighboring Fairchild Air Force Base, cited early as a down side to the project, is not likely to be a barrier – at least not an insurmountable one – according to the Air Force.” Col. Christopher Karns, director of Air Mobility Command Public Affairs, “said that the base is ‘basically neutral’ on the issue of the planned casino, though he said projects of such a scope necessarily raise some concerns.”

Dakota Access Review To Re-Examine Impact On Tribe.

The AP (6/25, Nicholson) provides a question and answer look at some of the pressing issues still surrounding the continuing fight over the Dakota Access pipeline. The primary uncertainty facing the pipeline as a result of Judge James Boasberg’s decision to require the US Army Corps of Engineers to carry out additional environmental studies is that the line may be shut down. While the tribes and Energy Transfer Partners have disagreed over the importance of the ruling, Boasberg could invalidate the Corps’ permission for the project while the agency completes its review. The tribes have pushed for a full environmental study including public and tribal input, but ETP expects a more limited process, with the Corps upholding its conclusions.

Bureau Of Land Management

Despite Modern Look, Redesigned BLM Websites Lack Details, Documents.

The Taos \(NM\) News (6/23, Hooks) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “recently updated its websites.” While it is a “more modern-looking design,” some are complaining about the lack of “access to basic information necessary for government transparency.” The BLM said that “the changes are mobile friendly and followed the redesigns of the websites for the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement.”

Coal, Climate Change At Center Of Court Case That Could Affect Mining Across The West.

McClatchy (6/23, Leavensworth) reports that the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver will rule any day now on a case with “major repercussions for coal mining on western public lands.” The decision “could force the U.S. Interior Department to more extensively analyze how expansion of coal mining on federal land affects carbon emissions.” The case centers on whether the U.S. Bureau of Land Management accurately considered the impact of an expansion of “the nation’s two most productive coal mines, the North Antelope Rochelle mine and the Black Thunder mine, both of which sit on federal land in the Powder River Basin of northeast Wyoming.”

Citing Trump’s Executive Order, BLM Considers Leasing Sage Grouse Habitat For Oil And Gas.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/24, Richards) reports that with the Interior Department “reviewing sage grouse conservation plans and President Donald Trump’s directive to make energy development a priority on public lands, a renewed sage grouse debate in Wyoming is flaring up — and an upcoming lease sale in the southwestern part of the state may be the first battlefield.” The Bureau of Land Management is “offering up a number of leases for oil and gas development in the state’s high desert district in December.” Some environmental groups say that “some of those land parcels are in either general sage grouse habitat or areas designated as crucial for the bird’s range.” But “it’s the agency’s justification for leasing in sage grouse areas that has sparked the greatest concern, the groups say.” According to the article, “in the environmental assessment for the lease sale, BLM cites Trump’s executive order from March, which calls for promoting ‘clean and safe development of our nation’s vast energy production, while at the same time avoiding regulatory burdens that unnecessarily encumber energy production.’”

Dinosaur Drilling Proposal In Dispute.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/25, Webb) reports that “environmentalists are questioning a proposal by the Bureau of Land Management to offer oil and gas leases near Dinosaur National Monument in Utah, where a recently adopted master leasing plan designed to better protect the monument doesn’t apply.” Conservation groups are also “waiting to see whether such plans, an approach introduced by the Obama administration, will continue to be available to the agency under the Trump administration and new Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.” The adoption of such a plan by the BLM’s White River Field Office “helped to address concerns about visual, noise and other impacts of possible leasing near Dinosaur in the case of BLM lands in Colorado.” However, “the monument extends into northeastern Utah, where no such plan is in place, and the BLM is considering leasing acreage near the monument in December.”

Three Artists Will Portray National Monument In Their Own Way.

The Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (6/25, Freeman) reports that three artists have been “selected this summer to interpret” the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument’s “raw essence in their own media.” According to the article, “artists stay at a trailer parked at the Bureau of Land Management’s Hyatt Lake Recreation Area campground for easy access to the monument,” and “when completed, they each will hold at least one public exhibit of the art they produced during their unpaid term.”

Brief – Bureau Of Land Management.

Natural Gas Intelligence (6/23) reports that “two U.S. Bureau of Land Management (BLM) field offices in Utah are seeking public comments through July 24 on environmental assessments (EA) for proposed oil and natural gas lease sales in the northeast area of the state.” One EA “assessed 64 potential parcels, comprising 66,626 acres, in Duchesne and Uintah counties, including 2,080 acres of split-estate land." The second EA "looked at 15 potential parcels comprising 32,013 acres in Emery County, mostly southeast of Ferron."

Venting Of Methane Hurts State.

In an op-ed for the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/25, Foster), Demis Foster, Executive Director of Conservation Voters New Mexico, writes that the oil and gas industry's "outsized role" in New Mexico is "exactly why we need state and federal efforts to limit methane waste." According to Foster, "oil and gas companies routinely and deliberately vent methane into the atmosphere, burn it as a waste product from oil drilling, and allow it to leak unchecked from poorly maintained equipment, robbing taxpayers of needed funding to the tune of $330 million every year from federal and tribal lands alone." He also notes that "methane is also a powerful climate pollutant that is contributing to our warming world, impacting our water supply, food supplies and worsening wildfires here in New Mexico, where low-income, rural, Latino and indigenous communities are already feeling these impacts."

Additional coverage of the rule was provided by the Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (6/25, Moses).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Seismic Tests As A Steppingstone To Virginia Offshore Drilling Raises Excitement And Concern.

The Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (6/25, Mayfield) reports that "there's excitement in the oil industry and worry among environmentalists and many coastal tourism leaders about the Trump administration restarting a process this month that could lead to seismic tests off Virginia and other Atlantic states." President Trump "made clear in an executive order in April...that he wants to put the coast back in play for potential drilling, and that starting seismic surveys is key." Meanwhile, "more than 125 local governments along the Atlantic – including the Virginia Beach City Council last week – have adopted resolutions opposing offshore oil and gas activity."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Hoeven Announces $24.4 Million In Bureau Of Reclamation Funding For Rural Water Projects.

The Dunn County \(ND\) Herald (6/23) reports that Sen. John Hoeven "announced that the Bureau of Reclamation has awarded $24.4 million in federal funding to build and improve water supply systems in a number of North Dakota and tribal communities." Hoeven said, "North Dakota communities, regardless of zip code or population, should have access to good, quality water. These grants will help to improve and expand our water supply systems to ensure that North Dakota communities have the infrastructure they need."

Arizona Coal Train Serving Navajo Generating Station Derails Near Page.

The Arizona Republic (6/24, Randazzo) reports the electric train that serves the Kayenta Mine in Arizona "derailed June 15 about 24 miles south of Page, damaging the tracks and cutting off the fuel supply to the Navajo Generating Station." The plant operator, Salt River Project, "has enough coal on site to keep the station running, plant manager Joe Frazier said Friday" and "he expects the track to be repaired by the first week of July." The Republic adds that "the train was making the 78-mile journey north" from the mine to the power plant "when 18 carloads of coal as well as the engine with two operators aboard derailed, he said." No one was injured as a result of the derailment.

Montana Hemp Farmer Can't Irrigate Her Crops Under Fed Rules.

The AP (6/24, Neuman) reports that Montana's Industrial Hemp Pilot Program is "underway for the first time this year, allowing approved farmers to grow the fibrous plant under oversight from the state Department of Agriculture." However, the plants "in the Helena Valley field are going without water due to conflicting regulations coming from federal and state authorities." The Bureau of Reclamation "holds a statute banning the use of its water on federally controlled substances, which includes marijuana and its close relative, hemp, even if a state has legalized either of the substances."

California Reservoir On Shaky Ground Highlights Aging U.S. Dams' Risks.

The Wall Street Journal (6/23, Carlton) reports that experts say the Calaveras Reservoir, which sits on an active earthquake fault just 10 miles outside of San Francisco Bay Harbor, is a severe potential threat and that if it breaks, thousands of homes would be caught in flood waters. The owner of the dam sought to build a replacement seven years ago, but this work is not projected to be complete until 2019, four years behind schedule. In 2001, the California Division of Safety of Dams ordered the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission to ensure the reservoir remains no more than 40 percent full. The new dam is being constructed out of rock, dirt and natural materials. Such earthen dams, according to engineering experts, have a better chance of withstanding an earthquake.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Yellowstone Grizzly Bears Could Be Vulnerable To Hunters.

TIME (6/23, Chan) reports that "a decision by federal officials to revoke special protections for grizzly bears near Yellowstone National Park will put the animals back in the crosshairs of trophy hunters and may reverse decades of conservation efforts, animal activists said." Wildlife conservationists claim "that lifting protections that have been in place for more than 40 years will leave the bears vulnerable to mass slaughter." Wayne Pacelle, president of The Humane Society of the United States, said, "This is the greatest gift to trophy hunters. This is the greatest wish that the trophy hunting and ranching lobbies could have received from the Trump Administration."

Additional coverage was provided by the Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (6/23, Montero), the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (6/24, Chaney), the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (6/23, Koshmrl), Slate (6/23, Matthews), and the National Memo (6/25, Pacelle).

Feds To Give Update On California's Big Water Tunnels.

The AP (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith) reports that the federal regulators evaluating Gov. Jerry Brown's twin tunnel project are "promising a status update Monday." According to the article, "rulings had been expected this month from the National Marine Fisheries Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on the environmental impacts of the proposed tunnels, which would be California's biggest water project in decades." The environmental decisions, "when they come, would be the first in a series of federal and state rulings expected in coming weeks and month that will determine the fate of the proposed twin 35-mile (55-kilometer) tunnels."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by Philly \(PA\) (6/25, Knickmeyer, Smith), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/26, Knickmeyer Scott Smith |, Ap), the Business Insider (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), the Daily Mail (6/26), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/25, Knickmeyer, Smith), and ABC News (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith).

Invasive Carp Found Near Lake Michigan.

The Hill (6/23, Cama) reports that "a fisherman has found a live Asian carp in a Chicago waterway about 9 miles from Lake Michigan, officials said." The AP (6/23, Flesher) reports that it was found "well beyond an electric barrier network designed to prevent the invasive fish that have infested the Mississippi River system from reaching the Great Lakes, officials said Friday." However, "officials cautioned that the discovery doesn't mean Asian carp populations have become established in the network of rivers and canals between the barriers and the Great Lakes, or in the lakes themselves."

Additional coverage was provided by Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (6/25, Hawthorne).

Feds Remove Hualapai Mexican Vole From Endangered Species List.

The Kingman \(AZ\) Daily Miner (6/25, Moffat) reports that "federal officials said Friday they will remove the Hualapai Mexican vole from the endangered species list after 30 years, a move that one environmental group criticized as 'premature' for an animal it says could still be at risk." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced "that the original 1987 decision to protect the Hualapai Mexican vole in Arizona as an endangered subspecies of other Mexican voles was made in error. Subsequent studies have indicated that it is not sufficiently different from other Mexican voles – of which there are many – to be considered a subspecies."

How Biologists Are Working To Keep The Great Sand Dunes Tiger Beetle Off The Endangered Species List.

The Denver Post (6/25, Finley) reports that “depending on results of an upcoming U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service survey,” the Great Sand Dunes tiger beetle “could be placed on the list of endangered species.” According to the article, “beetles and other bugs face an onslaught — motorized off-road recreational vehicles, urban development, pesticides.” Federal land managers “say the beetles have survived because their habitat has been spared damage.” The article notes that “no motorized dune buggies or ATVs are allowed in the 146,000-acre Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve and adjacent Nature Conservancy-owned Medano-Zapata Ranch.”

High Water Levels Threaten Survival Of Everglades, Expert Warns.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (6/24, Waters) reports that “heavy rains earlier this month caused water to rise so high that the Everglades could be irreparably damaged, says a Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission official.” Ron Bergeron, who is the FWC commissioner “point man on Everglades issues, said he has been on the phone repeatedly with Gov. Rick Scott over the past 10 days and the governor is ‘totally involved’ in the matter.” In addition, Bergeron has “had emergency meetings with state and federal agencies, including the FWC, the U.S. Department of the Interior, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the South Florida Water Management District and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.”

2 Humpback Whales Die After Stranding On Cape Cod.

The Boston Globe (6/23, Grant) reports that “researchers are investigating what caused two humpback whales to beach and die on Cape Cod Wednesday.” According to Brian Sharp, rescue manager for the International Fund for Animal Welfare, “the first of the whales was reported stranded by the US Fish and Wildlife Service on Monomoy Island about 2 p.m. Monday.”

Wisconsin Works To Improve Mississippi River Beaches.

The AP (6/25) reports that “a work crew is spending a week on a Mississippi River island to eradicate invasive plants and poison ivy as part of a state and federal effort to clean up beaches along the waterway.” The WisCorps conservation team is “working with the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources to clear up nearly 20 beaches between La Crosse and Brownsville.” The effort is “a joint venture of the department and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in response to public complaints about brush and weeds at campsites.”

USFWS Seeking Comment On Three Sisters Proposal.

The Citrus County \(FL\) Chronicle (6/25) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “seeking comments on the draft Environmental Assessment (EA) for the development of visitor services facilities, infrastructure and habitat improvements at Three Sisters Springs, the Crystal River National Wildlife Refuge and on the findings of appropriateness and compatibility determinations for proposed public-use activities.”

We Must Reject Trump’s Plan For Oil And Gas Drilling In ANWR.

In an op-ed for the Seattle Times (6/23, Williams), David B. Williams argues that the Artic National Wildlife Refuge is “the quintessential example of a wild, untrammled landscape,” and “not oil drilling.” He claims that “in the United States, there is no other place like the refuge, no other landscape so vast, so undisturbed, so sacred, so wild.” Williams concludes that “it is our privilege and our patriotic duty to reject the president’s plans and call for its full protection.”

We Can Find A Balance Between People, Carnivores.

In an op-ed for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (6/24, Sellers), Martha Sellers, the director of development and communication for People and Carnivores, writes that “addressing coexistence challenges in rural communities, on the ground, in partnership with ranchers, hunters and outfitters, rural residents, land managers, and scientists is essential for large carnivore conservation.” Sellers proposes that “by partnering with additional neighbors in one community and then carrying lessons learned to other locales, we can scale up coexistence strategies to match the size and needs of whole communities as well as the size of bear and wolf home ranges.”

National Park Service

As Trump Moves To Privatize America's National Parks, Visitor Costs May Rise.

The Guardian \(UK\) (6/25, O'Connor) reports that "with the proposed National Park Service budget slashed by almost $400m," the Trump Administration "says it will turn to privatizing public park services to address...deferred maintenance costs." However, "some public lands advocates are concerned that privatization would drive up costs for visitors and put the egalitarian nature of visiting a park out of reach for some."

Six Nazi Spies Were Executed in D.C. White Supremacists Gave Them A Memorial – On Federal Land.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (6/23, A1, Cox) reports on the discovery of a memorial to six Nazi spies on Federal land in Southwest Washington DC's Blue Plains. National Park Service employee Jim Rosenstock investigated and found that Adolf Hitler, at the start of WWII, recruited eight Germans to show US vulnerability to a Nazi attack. Rosenstock believes the American Nazi Party erected the memorial to the executed spies in the 1970s.

Conservative Activists Hold Muted Rallies In Washington.

Reuters (6/25, Harte, Whitesides) reports, "Conservative activists held a pair of rallies in Washington on Sunday to decry the handful of celebrities who have joked about violence against President Donald Trump and to protest efforts to stop contentious speakers at colleges." The events drew "only a few dozen supporters, with nearly as many counterprotesters at one of the" rallies. Richard Spencer, "an avowed white nationalist and founder of the so-called "alt-right" movement, drew about 100 supporters to [a] rally at the Lincoln Memorial." Spencer told reporters "he was disappointed with Trump's presidency so far, and was waiting for the president to enact the policies he promised during his campaign." Meanwhile, "in front of the White House, Trump supporters gathered to denounce celebrities such as the comedian Kathy Griffin and the actor Johnny Depp, who have both made joking allusions to Trump being assassinated."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/25, Moyer, Laris).

Officials Draining Pool At World War II Memorial.

The U.S. News & World Report (6/23) reports that "officials are draining a pool and other water features at the World War II Memorial in Washington." The National Park Service "said in a statement Friday that the draining will happen Sunday and will allow for the replacement of current incandescent light fixtures with high efficiency lighting." According to officials, "the pools will be refilled and operational again on June 30."

Additional coverage was provided by WTTG-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/25) and WTOP-FM Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/23, Hensley).

Park Service Closes Access To Roosevelt Island For Tree Removal.

Inside NoVa \(VA\) (6/25) reports that "public access to Theodore Roosevelt Island will be prohibited through mid-July as the National Park Service works to remove diseased trees from along trail areas." WTOP-FM Washington (6/23, Moore) reports that "the work is expected to last as long as three weeks, but crews will work in sections, so parts of the 88-acre park will reopen sooner, the park service said."

Yellowstone Wants Brucellosis Quarantine Facility In Park.

The AP (6/25) reports that Yellowstone National Park is "taking steps toward turning part of its bison trap at the northern edge of the park into a certified brucellosis quarantine facility." Park officials have "been talking since at least April with the U.S. Department of Agriculture and state livestock officials about upgrades they could make to the Stephens Creek Facility, as well as testing requirements needed to certify bison as brucellosis-free there." The article says that "the move is meant to eventually get the 24 male bison at the trap to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation without first transferring them to quarantine corrals at Corwin Springs."

EPA Says Indiana Dunes Beaches Safe After Toxic Spill.

WSBT-TV South Bend, IN (6/25, Torie) reports that "after a company admitted they leaked a toxic chemical into a Lake Michigan tributary this spring," the EPA "says the lake water is safe." The EPA and the National Park Service will "continue to test the area through the summer."

HOPE Crew Begins Restoration Work On Fort Monroe Building.

The AP (6/24, Black) reports on the work of HOPE (Hands-On Preservation Experience), "a national program that connects young people from across the country by having them preserve and restore structures on public land." At Fort Monroe, the HOPE crew will be "working on the first and second floor porches of Building 50, which is managed by the National Park Service." The NPS "estimates the project will cost $180,000."

Somerset County Coroner Recalls 9/11, Aftermath.

The AP (6/24, Hurst) reports that Somerset County Coroner Wallace Miller recently "spoke to a crowd of approximately 130 people as part of an ongoing Friends of Flight 93 Series at the national memorial's Learning Center." National Park Service officials "who introduced him at the event described the event as a unique one, noting that Miller served as the lone liaison to family members who lost loved ones that day – and that the coroner hasn't spoken about it at the site very often."

Teens Handcuffed For Selling Water On National Mall.

U.S. News & World Report (6/23, Nelson) reports that "police handcuffed three teenagers Thursday evening for attempting to selling water without a permit on the National Mall." The McClatchy (6/23, Harrell) reports that Tim Krepp, "a tour guide, took photos of the incident, which happened near the Washington Monument and posted them on Twitter." According to the article, "Krepp got in heated debates on Twitter with various users throughout the day arguing the arrest was racist since the teens were African-American."

Acadia National Park: From Sunrise To Sunset.

USA Today (6/23, Cerbin) reports that in September, Acadia National Park will host its ninth annual Night Sky Festival. John Kelly, management assistant at the park, "says the Sept. 21-24 event will offer activities inside and outside the park ranging from the 'fun and silly' to the 'highly scientific.'"

Editorial: Homestead National Monument Gets An Appropriate Addition.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (6/25) editorializes that a 1945 Allis-Chalmers Model C is "making its way from Alaska to Homestead National Monument near Beatrice, Nebraska." According the article, "the last resident to receive free land under the federal Homestead Act of 1862, in Alaska," used it. The paper says that "the tractor will help Homestead National Monument tie the nation's first homestead, near Beatrice, to its last."

Office Of Insular Affairs

GovGuam Agencies Receive $500K To Fund Priority Programs.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (6/24, Mora) reports that "more than half a million dollars has been made available this week from Technical Assistance grant funding to benefit programs identified as priority needs for Guam." According to a news release from the Office of Insular Affairs, "$516,031 has been set aside for fiscal 2017 by Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula." Pula said, "Guam is the biggest island of the U.S. Insular Areas in the Pacific and an important regional hub for cultural and business travel and exchange. We are pleased to provide this funding that assists the Government of Guam to keep the public safe and ensure overall efficiencies in public services."

Additional coverage was provided by the Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (6/26).

GovGuam Needs To Automate, Put More Services Online. The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (6/25) editorializes that "the government of Guam needs to make a stronger effort to upgrade technology to help save money and better serve the public." A technical assistance grant from the Office of Insular Affairs will "help the Department of Public Health and Social Services improve automation in processing applications for health certificates, sanitary permits, and controlled substances registration certificates." According to the paper, "this upgrade is long overdue and will make it more convenient for people who need to apply for these certificates and permits."

Additional Coverage: Bordallo Addresses OIA Budget Cuts During Natural Resources Hearing.

Additional coverage that Congresswoman Madeleine Z. Bordallo of Guam "questioned proposed cuts to the Office of Insular Affairs contained in the president's budget request during a hearing of the House Committee on Natural Resources" was provided by the Marianas Variety (6/26) and the Guam Daily Post (6/24).

After Puerto Rico's Debt Crisis, Worries Shift To Virgin Islands.

The New York Times (6/25, Walsh) reports that while all US territories are facing financial challenges that could presage the same kind of collapse that has "engulfed" Puerto Rico, "the debt dilemma is now most acute in the Virgin Islands." The territory's small population owes $6.5 billion to pensioners and creditors, and factors such as insufficient tax revenue, a weak pension system, the loss of a major employer, and a new reluctance from investors after it received a junk bond rating have made it impossible for the government to meet its obligations. Although the Virgin Islands insists it doesn't intend to default on its debts like Puerto Rico, just the prospect of bankruptcy through Congress' passage of the Promesa law last year has scared off investors, in what the Times calls "something of a self-fulfilling prophecy." Gov. Kenneth has "scrambled": hiring collection agents to go after delinquent property and income taxes, raising sales taxes, and restructuring the pension system.

US Geological Survey

Earthquakes May Be The Rare Issue Uniting Democrats And Republicans In California.

The Los Angeles Times (6/23, Lin, Krishnakumar) reports that elected officials from Democrat and Republican parties have "supported an earthquake early warning system for the West Coast that, after years of work, was scheduled to begin its first limited public operation next year." However, President Trump's budget proposal "calls for cuts that experts say would kill the warning network." The article says that "the next few months will determine whether officials on both sides of the aisle can come together to save it."

Top National News

Trump: "I Cannot Imagine" Republican Senators Will Not Vote For Healthcare Bill.

President Trump on Saturday posted two tweets promoting the Senate's healthcare bill and expressing confidence that Republican lawmakers will eventually support the legislation. ABC World News Tonight and the CBS Weekend News led with the coverage, which received more than five minutes combined on the network newscasts, and reporting highlighted the heightened role the President is likely to play in lobbying GOP holdouts to vote for the Better Care Reconciliation Act.

In the lead ABC World News Tonight (6/24, lead story, 1:35, Llamas) segment, David Wright reported "the White House is gearing up for another round in the fight to repeal Obamacare." Trump "is not letting up on his push to pass healthcare legislation replacing ObamaCare," The Hill (6/24, Cohn) says, and he has been "reportedly calling senators to urge them to vote for the legislation." Trump tweeted, "Democrats slam GOP healthcare proposal as Obamacare premiums & deductibles increase by over 100%. Remember keep your doctor, keep your plan?" The Hill (6/24, Greenwood) reports he added, "I cannot imagine that these very fine Republican Senators would allow the American people to suffer a broken ObamaCare any longer!"

In a third article, The Hill (6/24, Bowden) reports the President has spent the past two days "calling senators to mobilize support for GOP healthcare legislation." NBC Nightly News (6/24, story 3, 2:10, Snow) Kelly O'Donnell reported Vice President Pence also took to Twitter on Saturday, posting video of his speech "promising a repeal before summer's out."

In an analysis, the Washington Post (6/24, Kane) suggests Senate Majority Leader McConnell can use all the help he can get "to navigate the perilous path in trying to appease one bloc of holdouts without losing votes from another bloc." The Post emphasizes "McConnell can only afford to lose two of the 52 Republicans in the Senate, but as the week went on, he had many more holdouts than that." The Post adds "the highest profile defection, for now, came from" Sen. Dean Heller, "usually a go-along-get-along acolyte to party leadership."

According to a front-page New York Times (6/24, A1, Steinhauer) article, Heller "is the man everyone wants," but "this has not been a good thing for him." The Times reports Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval "is counting on Mr. Heller to provide what could be a crucial vote to maintain President Barack Obama's health care law, which has been a boon for small businesses in Nevada," while McConnell "is trying to prevent Mr. Heller from undermining that goal," Democrats are attempting to oust him, and "far-right Republicans in his state – who strongly support President Trump – also have their eyes on Mr. Heller to see if he will abandon the president.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/24, Hackman) examines the challenges facing Heller’s re-election bid, while the Washington Post (6/24, Weigel) reports “progressive groups, pro-Trump PACs and interest groups dead set against the Republicans’ health-care bill have scrambled onto Nevada’s TV stations and news sites to lobby” Heller on the bill. The Post adds that while America First Policies on Friday announced plans to air digital and TV ads calling on Heller to support the bill, the pro-Trump nonprofit “was late to the game. One month ago, AARP began running ads asking Heller to vote no if the Republicans’ health-care bill got to the Senate. An ad portrays an irate couple learning that ‘if you’re over 50, health-care companies can charge you five times more,’ a dramatization of what AARP calls ‘the age tax.’”

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (6/24, A1, Eilperin, Goldstein) reports “a small group of moderate Republican senators, worried that their leaders’ health-care bill could damage the” US’ “social safety net, may pose at least as significant an obstacle to the measure’s passage as their colleagues on the right.” According to the Post, the “dramatic shift” represented by the bill’s Medicaid cuts, which are a “bold redistribution of wealth,” is “creating substantial anxiety for several Republican moderates whose states have especially benefited from the expansion of Medicaid that the Affordable Care Act has allowed.”

Meanwhile, the CBS Weekend News (6/24, lead story, 1:30, Ninan) stated that “the bill, some are calling Trumpcare, is losing traction two days after it was released.” Errol Barnett reported Heller “joined Senators Rand Paul, Ted Cruz, Mike Lee, and Ron Johnson in opposing the Bill unless changes are made. The 142-page legislation cuts Obamacare’s insurance mandates, slashes new taxes on the wealthy, and rolls back the expansion of Medicaid. But it keeps tax credits to help lower income Americans buy insurance.”

NYTimes, The Hill Analyses: Medicaid Cuts Could Limit Nursing Home Access, Exacerbate Opioid Crisis. The New York Times (6/24, Rau) reports “Medicaid pays for most of the 1.4 million elderly people in nursing homes,” but Senate Republicans have said “little...about what would happen to older Americans in nursing homes if” the “steep cuts” they are proposing take effect. The Times acknowledges “most Medicaid enrollees are children, pregnant women and nonelderly adults,” but states that “long-term services such as nursing homes account for 42 percent of all Medicaid spending – even though only 6 percent of Medicaid enrollees use them.” Toby Edelman, a senior policy attorney at the Center for Medicare Advocacy, warned that if the Senate’s bill passes, “The states are going to make it harder to qualify medically for needing nursing home care. They’d have to be more disabled before they qualify for Medicaid assistance.”

Meanwhile, The Hill (6/24, Roubein) reports “fears that cuts to Medicaid could exacerbate a national opioid epidemic that took more lives last year than the Vietnam War have emerged as a huge threat to the Senate GOP’s ObamaCare repeal-and-replace bill.” Michael Botticelli, the former director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP), told The Hill, “It’s just unconscionable to me that anybody who is serious about dealing with this opioid addiction could be satisfied with the bill – even supporting $45 billion, let alone $2 billion.” He added that the legislation would “really have disastrous consequences for people who are struggling with opioid addiction.” The Hill mentions that while Sens. Shelley Moore Capito and Rob Portman have not come out against the bill, they “want substantial more dollars to go toward the opioid epidemic, and $2 billion in funding for the next fiscal year is a far cry from the pair’s proposal for $45 billion over a decade.”

FREOPP President Praises Healthcare Bill, Douthat Condemns Legislation. In a Washington Post (6/24, Roy) op-ed, Avik Roy, president of the Foundation for Research on Equal Opportunity (FREOPP), contends the Better Care Reconciliation Act “will, if passed, represent the greatest policy achievement by a Republican Congress in generations.” Roy adds that “for decades, free-market health-reform advocates have argued that the single best idea for improving U.S. health care is to maximize the number of Americans who can afford to buy health insurance for themselves, instead of having to depend on the government or their employer. The Senate bill transforms the American health insurance landscape in this direction.” Roy concludes “Senate Republicans should stand strong,” as if the legislation becomes law, “it’s likely that more people will have health insurance in five years than do today but in a market with lower premiums, lower taxes and a more fiscally sustainable future. History will remember these Republicans for that.”

Meanwhile, in his New York Times (6/24) column, Ross Douthat acknowledges the Senate’s healthcare legislation “does indeed improve upon the House’s bill in several important ways,” but is still “a political suicide attempt” rather than “sound public policy.” He concedes, “There are good ideas worked in, but still too much needless callousness” and says “stinginess is still the essential problem for the Senate’s alternative.” However, Douthat concludes that if the GOP focuses the projected savings from the bill on tax reform “organized around payroll tax cuts, refundable child tax credits, a larger earned-income tax credit, and other measures that would make up for the thinning of working-class insurance coverage with more cash in paychecks and bank accounts," then "I will recant my opposition to this bill. But I don't expect any such recantation to be required, because the Republican Party remains what it is, not what the country needs it to become."

In an editorial, the New York Times (6/24) presents how readers would be affected by the GOP's healthcare proposals to illustrate to lawmakers "that there are many more Americans like them who are worrying about a future without affordable health care."

Trump Questions Mueller's Impartiality, But White House Denies Dismissal Rumors.

President Trump, in a previously recorded interview with Fox News' "Fox and Friends" that aired on Friday, denied the existence of any recordings of his conversations with ousted former FBI Director James Comey, and insisted that he claimed to have taped those discussions to compel Comey to tell the truth on the Russian investigation. Trump additionally expressed concern over Special Counsel Robert Mueller's impartiality given his past relationship with Comey. Coverage, which included more than three minutes combined on the network newscasts, was also heavy in cable TV as well as in print and online. The predominately negative reporting focused on speculation over whether the President would dismiss Mueller despite White House denials and also highlighted that Trump's threat to release "tapes" of his conversations of Comey raises questions about President's trustworthiness.

In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room (6/23, 5:03 p.m. EDT, lead story, 3:28, Blitzer), White House Correspondent Sarah Murray reported, "President Trump may have come clean about the existence of tapes from his conversations with former FBI Director James Comey," but he has also showed "no sign of regret" about suggesting the conversations were recorded. In video footage from an interview with Fox News' "Fox and Friends," Trump said his decision "wasn't very stupid, I can tell you that." The New York Times (6/23, Haberman) reports the President "appeared to acknowledge...that his tweet hinting of taped conversations with...Comey was intended to influence the fired F.B.I. director's testimony before Congress, and he emphasized that he committed 'no obstruction' of the inquiries into whether his campaign colluded with Russia."

Bloomberg News (6/23, John) reports Trump "said his threat of possible tapes of his meetings with James Comey – which he now says was a ruse – may have caused the former FBI director to alter his recounting of what happened." The President asserted, "When he found out that I – you know, that there may be tapes out there, whether it's governmental tapes or anything else and who knows, I think his story may have changed. Then he has to tell what actually took place at the events." He added Comey "did admit that what I said was right and if you look further back before he heard about that, I think maybe he wasn't admitting that, so you'll have to do a little investigative reporting to determine that, but I don't think it'll be that hard."

In the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (6/23, 6:00 p.m. EDT, lead story, 0:31, Rosen), James Rosen reported that in the "exclusive interview," Trump also "expressed doubt about whether Special Counsel Robert Mueller, responsible for investigating Mr. Trump's alleged ties to Russia and related matters, can possibly be impartial." Rosen explained Trump said "he is worried about the relationship between Mueller and...Comey." In the interview, which was broadcast by the CBS Evening News (6/23, story 5, 1:05, Mason), Trump was asked whether Mueller should recuse himself and he responded, "Well, he's very, very good friends with Comey, which is very bothersome, but he's also – we're going to have to see. I mean, we're going to have to see in terms – look, there has been no obstruction, there has been no collusion. There has been leaking by Comey. But there's been no collusion, no obstruction, and virtually everybody agrees to that. So we'll have to see. I can say that the people that have been hired are all Hillary Clinton supporters."

The Washington Post (6/23, Rucker) reports the President "said three times 'we'll have to see,' and argued that Mueller's long friendship with...Comey and hiring of investigators with Democratic ties are 'very bothersome' and 'ridiculous.'" While the Post adds Trump conceded Mueller "is an honorable man" and said "hopefully he'll come up with an honorable solution," USA Today (6/23, Jackson) contends Trump's remarks were "not exactly a vote of confidence."

Chief White House Correspondent Jonathan Karl of ABC World News Tonight (6/23, story 5, 2:05, Muir) said that Trump essentially "suggested Special Counsel Robert Mueller is tainted and politically biased against him." White House press secretary Sean Spicer clarified Friday that the "President has no plans to fire Mueller, but insisted he does have the power to do so."

Reuters (6/23, Holland) reports Spicer “told reporters that while Trump ‘retains the authority’ to dismiss special counsel Robert Mueller, ‘he has no intention of doing that.’” To CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 5:41 p.m. EDT, 41:45, Blitzer) Chief Political Analyst Gloria Borger, Spicer effectively “said look, the President has no intention of firing Mr. Mueller, but I wouldn’t be surprised if it’s still going through the President’s head.”

Meanwhile, the AP (6/23, Tucker, Pearson) highlights that “Robert Mueller, the somber-faced and demanding FBI director who led the bureau through the Sept. 11 attacks, and James Comey, his more approachable and outwardly affable successor, may be poles apart stylistically but both command a wealth of respect in the law enforcement and legal community.” Nonetheless, the AP adds “that hasn’t stopped...Trump and his associates from repeatedly trying to draw unflattering attention to their relationship, insinuating a personal bond they suggest could disqualify Mueller from credibly serving as special counsel in charge of the Russia investigation.” According to the AP, Trump’s “emphasis on their ties, besides being aimed at undermining Mueller’s credibility and the legitimacy of his investigation, could also be an attempt by Trump to make the case for an eventual Mueller dismissal on conflict of interest grounds. But the truth is more complicated and not squarely on the president’s side.”

Senior Legal Analyst Jeffrey Toobin of CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 6:37 p.m. EDT, 37:18, Blitzer) said Trump’s interview was “amazing” on “many different levels. First of all, you have the President of the United States saying he put out essentially this false tweet, this bluff which implied that there were tapes, even though he knew that there weren’t. Presidents don’t bluff generally.” Toobin said it constituted “a disastrous miscalculation on the President’s part because it led Director Comey to start the process that led to the special counsel being appointed.” Toobin also said (6/23, 6:40 p.m. EDT, 40:25, Blitzer) he does not “think there would be all that great big a reaction among the Republicans in the Congress if Donald Trump were to fire – were to fire Mueller. You know, John McCain would say he’s troubled and several other people would say they were troubled. But, you know, it would continue to be business as usual.” Bash, however, countered that “support goes a bridge too far,” and they are instead just “dealing with it.”

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 6:09 p.m. EDT, 9:05, Blitzer) he thinks Mueller “is safe for right now in this job because the firestorm that would result from the President firing him would be intolerable. But the President is obviously – he’s trying to shoot across his bow, possibly to intimidate him. and the entire episode with the tapes, which turned out apparently to not exist, was an effort, in my view, to intimidate Jim Comey. And the President has left that issue ambiguous.” Rep. Andre Carson told CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 5:23 p.m. EDT, 23:08, Blitzer) he did not believe Mueller’s future is in jeopardy, because “Mueller is a pro. He’s respected in the Justice Department” and is “very objective when it comes to investigations. I think he’s the right man for the job, and I think to get to the bottom of what we need to get to the bottom of, I think he’s the man to do it.”

However, Charles Krauthammer told Fox News’ Special Report (6/23, 6:39 p.m. EDT, 39:36, Rosen) that “the idea that this is intimidation of a witness is pure rubbish,” and “we are now at the tertiary level of accusation.” After a year of investigation, Krauthammer stated, no evidence of collusion has been uncovered “so there is no obstruction,” which “is shaky” to prove anyway.

Polls Show More Americans Disapprove Of Trump’s Firing Of Comey. The Wall Street Journal (6/23, Hook) reports a Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll of 900 “adults” (6/17-6/20) found 46 percent disapproved of the President’s decision to dismiss Comey, up from 38 percent in May. However, the Journal adds Trump’s approval rating remained unchanged at 40 percent while 50 percent expressed mistrust of the media.

The Hill (6/23, Delk) reports 45 percent “said they are more likely to believe Comey’s testimony before senators on June 8, while 22 percent said they would believe Trump’s side of the story. Another 21 percent said they don’t believe either Trump or Comey’s account of the events, while 8 percent said they believe both.”

Trump Losing Patience With McGahn, Strives To Keep Calm Over Russia Probes. “White House counsel Don McGahn has largely stepped back from managing Donald Trump’s response to the expanding Russia investigation, but that hasn’t stopped the president from lashing out at him about it anyway,” Politico (6/23, Cook, Dawsey) reports, adding Trump on Monday gave McGahn “a dressing down in the Oval Office for not doing more to squash the Russia probe early on.” Politico says that “the episode – recounted by four people familiar with the conversation – came as part of a broader discussion on Monday about the president’s frustrations with special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election” and Trump’s firing of Comey. Politico contends “Trump’s willingness to lay into him for the escalation of the probe – largely the result of Trump’s own decision to dismiss Comey – illustrates McGahn’s falling stock in the West Wing, as well as Trump’s desire to find someone to blame for his legal predicament.”

Meanwhile, in a nearly 2,200-word front-page article, the Washington Post (6/23, A1, Parker, Rucker) reports the President “has a new morning ritual. Around 6:30 a.m. on many days – before all the network news shows have come on the air – he gets on the phone with a member of his outside legal team to chew over all things Russia.” The Post says that “the calls – detailed by three senior White House officials – are part strategy consultation and part presidential venting session, during which Trump’s lawyers and public-relations gurus take turns reviewing the latest headlines with him. They also devise their plan for battling his avowed enemies: the special counsel leading the Russia investigation; the “fake news” media chronicling it; and, in some instances, the president’s own Justice Department overseeing the probe.” The Post adds Trump’s advisers hope the calls will help “compartmentalize the widening Russia investigation,” but “it rarely works. ... Asked whether the tactic was effective, one top White House adviser paused for several seconds and then just laughed.”

Glowing LATimes Profile Highlights Careers Of Mueller’s Team. The Los Angeles Times (6/23, Tanfani) profiles Andrew Weissmann and deputy solicitor general Michael Dreeben and contends they will bring their “searing experience to their new jobs working for Robert S. Mueller III, the special counsel investigating any links or coordination between President Trump’s associates and the Russian government – a probe that has expanded to include whether the president sought to obstruct an FBI investigation.” The Times asserts Mueller’s “first 13 hires speak volumes: They include veteran prosecutors who spent years unraveling complicated conspiracies in high-pressure cases. Some legal experts say that may be bad news for the president.” The Times also chronicles the careers of James Quarles III, Aaron Zebley, Jeannie Rhee, Lisa Page, and Elizabeth Prelogar.

Bharara Shared Concerns With DOJ Over Phone Call From Trump. The Hill (6/23, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog cites BuzzFeed in reporting former US Attorney Preet Bharara had “emailed officials from the Justice Department to notify them about a phone call he received from President Trump’s secretary one day before he was asked to resign in March.” In the memo, Bharara related, “At approximately 4:41 pm, on 3/9/17, I received the following voicemail at work: ‘Hi, Mr. Bharara. This is Madeline Westerhout calling from President Donald Trump’s office. If you could please give me a call back at that would be great. Thanks.’” He added, “After receiving that message, I immediately consulted with the Deputy U.S. Attorney, Joon Kim, about the propriety of returning the call. We printed out and reviewed a copy of the May 11, 2009 (as well as he December 19, 2007) Memos relating to Communications with the White House.” Bharara continued, “I advised him of the phone call from the President, and we discussed the propriety of speaking with the President in light of all the circumstances, including appearances issues.”

FBI Investigating Manafort’s Financial Deals. The New York Times (6/23, McIntire) reports the FBI is “examining financial transactions involving Paul Manafort and his son-in-law, who embarked on a series of real estate deals in recent years fueled by millions of dollars from Mr. Manafort, according to two people familiar with the matter.” The Times states that these “transactions involve the financing of apartments and luxury homes in New York and California using money from Mr. Manafort, as well as from other investors solicited by the son-in-law, Jeffrey Yohai, including the actor Dustin Hoffman and his son. F.B.I. agents have reviewed financial records related to Mr. Yohai, who has been accused in a lawsuit of defrauding investors, the sources said.”

Key Lawmaker Asks For Formal Response On Comey Tapes. Reuters (6/23, Zengerle) reports Rep. Mike Conaway, the head of the House Intelligence Committee’s Russia investigation, “said on Friday he wanted a formal response from President Donald Trump to a request for records about conversations with fired FBI Director James Comey.” Politico (6/23, Cheney) reports Conaway said, “I don’t think tweets are ever official. We’d like something on letterhead.”

CNN’s Situation Room’s (6/23, 6:07 p.m. EDT, 7:18, Blitzer) White House Correspondent Sarah Murray said White House press secretary Sean Spicer on Friday suggested the White House “may have something to provide to congressional investigators,” and The Hill (6/23, Manchester) reports White House legislative affairs assistant Marc Short later sent Conaway and ranking member Rep. Adam Schiff, “In response to the Committee’s inquiry, we refer you to President Trump’s June 22, 2017, statement regarding this matter.”

Poll: Voters Want Congress, Media To Move On From Russia Probes. A new Harvard-Harris Poll survey of 2,237 “registered voters” (6/19-6/21), which was “provided exclusively to” The Hill

(6/23, Easley), reveals “a majority of voters believe the Russia investigations are damaging to the country and are eager to see Congress shift its focus to healthcare, terrorism, national security, the economy and jobs.” In particular, 64 percent “said the investigations into President Trump and Russia are hurting the country” and 56 percent “said it’s time for Congress and the media to move on to other issues, compared to 44 percent who said the focus should stay on Russia.” However, The Hill adds “voters are taking the investigations seriously: Fifty-eight percent say they’re concerned by allegations of obstruction of justice against Trump, with the same number worried about possible dealings between Trump and the Russian government.”

“Bombshell” WPost Report Suggests Obama Knew Of Russian Election Meddling.

The Washington Post, citing advisers to former President Obama, reports in a more than 8,200-word article that his Administration had been aware of Russian President Vladimir Putin’s attempt to disrupt the 2016 presidential election in favor of then-candidate President Trump. “Putin has repeatedly – and often tauntingly – denied that his government interfered in the 2016 U.S. presidential race,” the Washington Post (6/23, Miller) reports, but the “new details” outlined in the other article “reveal the extent to which the Russian meddling bore Putin’s own signature and brushstrokes.” The Post says “the CIA had obtained intelligence from sources inside the Russian government by early August that captured the Russian leader’s specific instructions to subordinates on the operation’s objectives: disparage and seek to defeat the Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton while helping to deliver the White House to Trump.” A former CIA official “likened the intelligence to the ‘holy grail,’ a rare window directly into the plans and intentions of Putin, a former KGB operative who takes extraordinary precautions to protect himself from foreign surveillance.” The Post adds that the “intelligence was as raw as it was compelling, and it took other U.S. spy agencies months to reach consensus that Putin not only directed the interference but worked to defeat Clinton.”

CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 5:03 p.m. EDT, lead story, 3:28, Blitzer) Justice Correspondent Jessica Schneider reported that according to the Post’s “bombshell report...the Obama Administration knew Putin was directing cyberattacks during the 2016 campaign – three months before the election.” ABC World News Tonight’s (6/23, story 6, 0:45, Muir) Jonathan Karl said the Post revealed “the CIA in early August delivered an envelope marked eyes only, directly to President Obama and three of his top aides,” which asserted “Putin himself directed the attack. ... Obama, did confront Putin about that, but did little else.”

In the lead story for CNN’s Situation Room’s (6/23, 6:01 p.m. EDT, lead story, 1:14, Blitzer) second hour, Michelle Kozinski said the “extensive” Post reporting “shows that the CIA had information it had captured Vladimir Putin’s specific orders on interfering in the US election. You see the Obama Administration struggling with this, how to handle it, how to make sure it didn’t look like they were trying to interfere in the election. Now, some on the inside regret that they didn’t do more to expose it and to punish it.” The Post’s “bombshell report,” said Kozinski, outlined “the US intelligence community’s case for Russia’s meddling in the 2016 election, and revealing it was directly ordered by Vladimir Putin.” It also detailed that “intelligence sources had captured Putin’s own instructions to disrupt and discredit the presidential race, with the goal of defeating or hurting Hillary Clinton and helping Donald Trump.” She added that the Post report “revealed the frustrations now among some them that more was not done to punish Russia.”

CNN’s Situation Room’s (6/23, 5:23 p.m. EDT, 32:01, Blitzer) Blitzer explained Obama is now “facing some tough questioning, even from members of his own Administration.” Chief Political Correspondent Dana Bash of CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 6:33 p.m. EDT, 33:38, Blitzer) said that “there is a lot of frustration that the President won’t, from within the Administration, from Capitol Hill, from people who are trying to get him to understand that this Russia issue is a big deal in terms of policy making going forward. And, you know, there’s even some attempt to work around that on Capitol Hill. There’s a bipartisan congressional move to make sort of a 9/11 kind of commission on cyber terrorism, to try to avoid this in the future. But, you know, that is certainly an important part of the story, the part of the story when it comes to preventing in the future.”

CNN’s Situation Room’s (6/23, 5:14 p.m. EDT, 14:51, Blitzer) Blitzer said a former senior Administration official under Obama told the Post, “It is the hardest thing about my entire time in government to defend. I feel like we sort of choked.” Blitzer explained the former official referred “to the lack of reaction from President Obama and his advisers immediately to take action against the Russians once they confirmed that Putin personally authorized the hacking and the intervention in the election.” Rep. Andre Carson said he was “not surprised” about Russia’s attempted interference, and “the intelligence committee has to be given the resources and the support it needs" to investigate that allegation. On the issue of whether Obama's advisors should have reacted, Carson conceded "mistakes were made," but that "hindsight is 20-20."

The CBS Evening News (6/23, story 4, 2:10, Mason) Jeff Pegues reported, "A former US official tells CBS News there was a debate about 'how can we punish the Russians and not have it appear like we're trying to help Hillary.' Ultimately, the Administration decided to focus on shoring up state election systems against further attacks, rather than having the President publicly speak out." However, Pegues added, the White House in December announced new sanctions against Russia, expelled 35 of its operatives from the US, and seized Russia's "compounds in Maryland and New York." Correspondent Julianna Goldman said US officials who raided the compounds found "a trove of missing and damaged material materials [that] have been useful in the ongoing investigation," and added some of the Russian "diplomats were kicked out because they were suspected of election interference operations." Former CIA Deputy Director Michael Morell, however, said those actions were likely "seen by Vladimir Putin as only a slap on the wrist" that did not "hurt him politically in any way."

The Hill (6/23, Williams) reports "the Obama administration is under fresh scrutiny for its response to Russian meddling in the election" from "frustrated Democratic lawmakers and strategists." Rep. Eric Swalwell, a member of the House Intelligence Committee who co-chairs the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee, criticized Obama's response as "inadequate. I think they could have done a better job informing the American people of the extent of the attack." Rep. Jim Himes, another member of the House Intelligence Committee, "called the penalties 'barely a slap on the wrist.'" Meanwhile, Sen. John McCain "said in a statement Friday that the administration 'abjectly failed to deter Russian aggression' and 'failed to impose any meaningful costs on Russia.'"

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN's Situation Room (6/23, 6:19 p.m. EDT, 19:30, Blitzer), "What this report shows is that the United States must act decisively and aggressively and make Russia pay a price, and that's a matter of bipartisan agreement. I think I'm virtually quoting Sen. Lindsey Graham, a Republican of South Carolina, and we are strongly of a mind in a bipartisan way that the sanctions bill ought to be passed immediately. It was passed overwhelmingly with a bipartisan majority in the United States Senate, and is now unfortunately caught up in a procedural issue in the House." Blumenthal added that that Administration has granted "virtually no support" for the proposed new sanctions, but "whether you think that the Administration acted appropriately or not – and remember, the audacity of this hack was unprecedented – the involvement of the top levels of the Russian government in this kind of intrusion into our democracy was unknown previously, at least."

However, the Washington Times (6/23, Persons) reports former Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said Friday on MSNBC, "The current administration and current president is kinda sending the signals that this will be tolerated." He added, "I have not heard from President Trump a strong statement of condemnation about the Russia behavior, and about what all of his intelligence community is telling him happened last year, and what we said publicly last year happened." Johnson asserted, "From my point of view, we took steps that were cybersecurity-related that would have the affect of undermining this kind of effort in the future."

The Hill (6/23, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports Ned Price, a former spokesman for the National Security Council and a Special Assistant to President Obama, told MSNBC's Greta van Susteren on Friday, "Our critics are judging our actions in mid-2016 based on what we know by mid-2017. It's an unfair standard." Price said, "Knowing what we now know, we went on an aggressive push to make it clear both privately to the Russians that we knew what they were up to through multiple warnings, through multiple channels, over the course of many weeks, and to the American people." He added, "No one should be surprised. The voices we're hearing from the Hill now, that are saying we should have done more, we could have done more, many of those Republican voices on the Hill, within the House are now stalling a very strong Russia sanctions bill that sailed through the Senate 97-2. So it's just chock-full of hypocrisy here."

Politico (6/23, Lahut) reports Jennifer Palmieri, Hillary Clinton's former communications director, on Friday also "said...the Obama administration 'made the best decisions they could' when deciding when to publicly disclose evidence that Russian officials tried to interfere with the 2016 election." In an interview with MSNBC, Palmieri said, "I know that the Obama White House [was] in a very difficult situation, and they made the best decisions they could." She added, "I think they did it in the best interest of the country," but suggested "Democrats should have sounded a greater alarm at the hacks and that the news media should have covered the interference more thoroughly."

Trump Criticizes Obama For Doing "Nothing" About Russia Before The Election. The Hill (6/23, Manchester) reports President Trump, in an interview with Fox News' "Fox and Friends" that aired on Friday, "criticize[d] former President Barack Obama over Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election, accusing Obama of doing 'nothing' before the election." Trump said, "Well I just heard today for the first time that Obama knew about Russia a long time before the election, and he did nothing about it. But nobody wants to talk about that." He continued, "The CIA gave him information on Russia a long time before they even – before the election. And I hardly see it. It's an amazing thing." The President added, "In other words, the question is, if he had the information, why didn't he do something about it? He should have done something about it. But you don't read that. It's quite sad."

Conway Insists Trump Has Used The "Bully Pulpit" Against Foreign Interference In US Elections.

The Washington Times (6/23, Persons) reports senior counselor Kellyanne Conway on CNN asserted, "The president has met with his national security team many times, he has a commission on voter integrity, and he himself has used the power of the bully pulpit to express his resistance towards any type of outside interference. I think the president has been very clear about how he feels about this issue and many others." The Times adds "the interview took a heated turn when Ms. Conway accused CNN of 'abetting' the idea that the Trump team colluded with Russian leaders." Conway said, "I realize that we just like to say the word Russia, Russia to mislead the voters, and I know CNN is aiding and abetting this nonsense as well, but you've asked me the same question three times now and I'm answering it."

Meanwhile, "a source close to Senate GOP leadership told" Breitbart (6/23, Boyle) that a CNN (6/22, Frank) report alleging "the Treasury Department and Senate Intelligence Committee are probing a Russian investment fund with ties to several senior finance world leaders close to President Trump" is "entirely untrue and there is no such probe in the committee." The source said, "This is nothing besides Democrats trying to frustrate the efforts of President Trump's administration."

Current, Former Officials Warn US Unprepared For Future Russian Meddling. NBC Nightly News

□ (6/23, story 2, 2:45, Holt) Chief White House Correspondent Hallie Jackson reported "the US may not be ready to stop Russia or others from interfering in our next election." She said current and former US intelligence officials told NBC News that Russia interfered "in three key ways: by spreading fake news online, by hacking and leaking embarrassing material, and by cyberattacking election databases that never changed any votes. To stop it from happening again, experts say the government would need to coordinate with tech companies to top the flow of fake news, show Vladimir Putin there's a cost to interfering, and give states more tools to prevent and recover from cyberattacks." Jackson said "multiple government officials and outside experts" issued "an urgent warning," but a White House official said, "when it comes to protecting our elections, there are some moves the public will see and some they won't, since the Administration doesn't want to publicly telegraph everything it's doing."

Russian Officials Push Back, Accuse US Of Meddling. The Los Angeles Times (6/23, Ayres) reports "some Russian officials" are now "pointing the finger at Washington, saying it's America that is meddling in Moscow's domestic affairs. In fact, Kremlin officials say, the U.S. has been doing it for years." According to the Times, "Russian officials say what is at stake now are Russia's 2018 presidential and national elections. They said the government must act swiftly to counter any attempts by the United States and its allies to interfere."

Senate Intelligence Committee To Hold Hearing On Russian Meddling In European Elections.

The Hill (6/23, Greenwood) reports the Senate Intelligence Committee in a hearing Wednesday "will turn its attention to Russia's efforts to meddle in European elections." The Hill says their focus will be on French and Montenegrin elections.

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (6/23, Boylan) reports the House Intelligence Committee will interview John Podesta, Hillary Clinton's former presidential campaign chairman, in a closed session "next week – in addition to experts on Kremlin interference in recent and future European elections."

Senate Committee Investigates Whether Lynch Interfered With Probe Into Clinton's Emails. ABC World News Tonight □ (6/23, story 7, 0:20, Muir) reported the Senate Judiciary Committee launched a new investigation on Friday, "this time focusing on former Attorney General Loretta Lynch" and "whether Lynch interfered in the Hillary Clinton email case. The panel wants information about her communication with a Clinton campaign aide. Earlier this month, James Comey testified Lynch told him to downplay the FBI investigation."

Bloomberg News (6/23, Dennis) reports the Committee has sent letters to Lynch "and three others asking for information about their communications related to the email investigation," which Politico (6/23, Wright) reports were signed by Chairman Chuck Grassley and ranking member Sen. Dianne Feinstein as well as Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime and Terrorism

Chairman Lindsey Graham and ranking member Sheldon Whitehouse. Politico says they “are seeking answers about a Russian intelligence memo – which was obtained by the FBI – that suggested Lynch had assured a member of the Clinton campaign, Amanda Renteria, that the investigation into Clinton’s emails would not go too far.”

However, Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN’s Situation Room (6/23, 6:24 p.m. EDT, 24:53, Blitzer) that he is “certainly less concerned” about whether Lynch attempted to influence the FBI’s investigation than he is about “the firing of Jim Comey,” which “ought to be the focus of” the Senate Judiciary Committee’s investigation. He added that “the Judiciary Committee has a responsibility for overseeing the Department of Justice for making sure that the FBI’s protected against political interference. That’s the reason why Comey’s firing is squarely within our jurisdiction, and why we need to take this oversight responsibility very, very carefully, and investigate whether it was part of an obstruction of justice.”

Poll: Majority Of Voters Support Investigation Of Lynch. A new Harvard-Harris Poll survey of 2,237 “registered voters” (6/19-6/21), “provided exclusively to” The Hill (6/23, Easley), reveals “a majority of voters say former Attorney General Loretta Lynch should be investigated for an election-year meeting with former President Bill Clinton that took place while the FBI was investigating Hillary Clinton’s use of a private email server from her time as Secretary of State.” The poll found “58 percent say Lynch should be investigated, against 42 percent who say she should not.”

Gowdy: House Oversight Committee Will Not Investigate Russia Matters. The Washington Post (6/23, Debonis) reports House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy “said Friday that, with limited exceptions, his panel will not probe matters related to the alleged Russian interference in the presidential campaign – including President Trump’s possible obstruction of the federal investigation into it.” The Post adds that Gowdy “told reporters that the investigation is more squarely under the purview of special counsel Robert S. Mueller III and other congressional committees.” Politico (6/23, Bade) reports that “while Oversight will likely pursue some investigations eventually, Gowdy was adamant that he does not want to infringe on” Mueller’s probe and he “argued that the Russia scandal and questions of obstruction fall more in the jurisdiction of other committees – including the House Judiciary Committee and the House Intelligence Committee, where he helps lead the investigation of Moscow’s interference in the 2016 election.”

Trump, Aides Accuse Obama Of Failing To Respond To Russian Meddling.

Both the President and his top aides on Sunday criticized former President Obama for failing to prevent Russian meddling in the 2016 election. There was, however, very little media coverage of the remarks. In fact, none of the networks last night reported any aspect of the Russia controversy.

President Trump said in an interview broadcast on Fox News’ Fox & Friends Sunday (6/25), “I heard today for the first time Obama knew about Russia a long time before the election and he did nothing about it, but nobody wants to talk about that. The CIA gave him information on Russia a long time before...the election. And I hardly see it. It is an amazing thing. If he had the information, why did they do something about it? He should’ve done something about it. But you don’t read that. It is quite sad.”

Likewise, senior White House counsel Kellyanne Conway, the Washington Post (6/25, Parker) reports, appeared on ABC’s “The Week” where she “struck a combative tone,” saying: “It’s the Obama administration that was responsible for doing absolutely nothing from August to January with the knowledge that Russia was hacking into our election. They did absolutely nothing. They’re responsible for this.” The Post says the White House is “sticking with a new strategy to fault” the former President “for an issue currently facing the president himself as part of a widening FBI probe.” Conway also said on ABC’s This Week (6/25, Stephanopolous) that Trump has said he “thinks Russia was involved, but that others are hacking, too.” The Washington Post (6/25, Parker) notes that during the first presidential debate, Trump “acknowledged that Russia could be behind the hacking,” but added, “But it could also be China, but it could also be lots of other people, it could also be someone sitting on their bed that weighs 400 pounds, OK?”

The New York Times (6/25, Haberman) reports that “in the span of 72 hours,” Trump has “described the email hacking that roiled the 2016 campaign as a Democratic ‘hoax’ and as clear aggression by Russia that...Obama failed to address.” At “other times,” Trump has said the hacking “might have been done by China” or even “some guy in his home in New Jersey.” The Times calls the comments “proof to dismayed members of Mr. Trump’s party that he still refuses to acknowledge a basic fact agreed upon by 17 American intelligence agencies that he now oversees: Russia orchestrated the attacks, and did it to help get him elected."

However, the President and his aides weren't the only ones to blame Obama for failing to act on the alleged Russian interference. The Los Angeles Times (6/25, King) reports Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said Sunday that the former President "should have reacted more forcefully upon learning of Russian election-meddling." However, Schiff also "asserted that it was illogical for President Trump to levy such criticism against his predecessor." On CNN's "State of the Union," Schiff said, "I think the [Obama] administration needed to call out Russia earlier, needed to act to deter and punish Russia earlier." Failure to do so, he said, had been "a very serious mistake." Schiff told CNN's State Of The Union (6/25, Bash), "What he should have done, and what I urged at the time, I urged him to speak out to the American people saying, 'This is what Russia is doing. Russia had better stop it and we're going to enter into conversations with our European allies, who have similarly been the victim of Russian hacking in their elections, to embark on a new round of sanctions,' and I think those sanctions should have been not only imposed earlier, but far stronger than the sanctions the Obama Administration ultimately would impose after the election."

Politico (6/25, Temple-West) reports Schiff suggested that "fear of being perceived as interfering with the US election likely weighed on Obama," and the Washington Times (6/25, Richardson) quotes him as saying the Obama Administration was concerned about "being perceived as interfering in the election, trying to tip the scales for Hillary Clinton." He added, "I also think they were concerned about not want to play into the narrative that Donald Trump was telling, that the election was going to be rigged, even though Donald Trump was talking about a completely different kind of rigging than foreign intervention." Reuters (6/25, Harte) also briefly reports Schiff's comments.

Spicer: Comey's Testimony Proves Trump "Was Right." White House press secretary Sean Spicer said on Fox News MediaBuzz (6/25) that President Trump said he hoped there were no tapes of his conversations with former FBI Director Comey "because he knew that the truth would come out and I think he is glad that the truth is coming out that he had said very clearly that on three occasions he was told that he wasn't under investigation. There was no obstruction and he was right. I think that having Director Comey admit it under oath in testimony proves the President was right."

A Wall Street Journal (6/25) editorial says the President took his time, but ultimately admitted last week that he doesn't have tapes of his conversations with Comey. The Journal says is an illustration of how Trump undermines his own credibility with his use of social media.

Mukasey: Obstruction Charge Against Trump Would Face Legal Hurdles. Former Attorney General Michael Mukasey writes in the Wall Street Journal (6/25, Mukasey) that an obstruction charge against the President would face two hurdles. One is that the decision whether to charge former National Security Adviser Flynn was not Comey's to make. The other obstacle, Mukasey argues, is the statutory requirement that a president had acted "corruptly."

Manu Raju said on CNN Inside Politics (6/25), "The thing that Mueller is looking at, too, is the pattern of activity by the President, not just his firing of James Comey, which they say is perfectly within his legal rights to do that, but also his conversations with...Comey...and his apparent ask, according to Comey's own testimony, that he drop the Michael Flynn investigation and the loyalty pledge, of course the White House denies that. We'll see if the President goes under oath and says that as well. What we learned as well that the intelligence chiefs, both Mike Rogers and Dan Coats, told Senate investigators and Bob Mueller that the President asked them to publicly say that there was no conclusion, that he's not under investigation. They did not feel that he ordered them to squash the investigation in any way. But it doesn't really matter what they felt. It matters what the President's intent was."

Karoun Demirjian of the Washington Post said on CNN Inside Politics (6/25), "You can see the push and pull between instinctual Trump and lawyered-up Trump. Trump wants to cast a shadow over Mueller. That is why he is saying, 'They're very, very good friends,' even though we know that they're not. They're just colleagues that worked together in the past and then remembering that he has got to stay on message and saying, 'There's no obstruction, no collusion and Bob Mueller is an honorable man,' which is the line that most people in the GOP are taking. You would be very, very hard-pressed to find more than a handful of Trump devotees on the Hill that would say anything bad about Mueller."

Leaked Memo: CNN Execs To Review All Russia Stories After Retraction. Breitbart (6/25, Nolan) reports that BuzzFeed's Deputy News Director Jon Passantino "tweeted a screenshot of a leaked internal memo from Barbieri to CNN staff instructing them that all future Russia-related stories must be cleared by him or the VP of Premium Content Video, Jason Farkas." The email, which was sent on Saturday morning, reads, "No one should publish any content involving Russia without coming to me and Jason [Farkas]." CNN issued a retraction for their "now-deleted story this week following an investigation by Breitbart News," saying in a statement released Friday night, "On June 22, 2017, CNN.com published a story connecting Anthony Scaramucci with investigations into the Russian Direct Investment Fund. That story did not meet CNN's editorial standards and has been retracted."

Clinton-Linked Firm Reportedly Behind Salacious Trump Dossier. In the top story on the Drudge Report Sunday night, the New York Post (6/24, Sperry) explored the "secretive Washington firm that commissioned the dubious intelligence dossier" on Donald Trump, which it says is now "stonewalling congressional investigators trying to learn more about its connections to the Democratic Party." The Senate Judiciary Committee earlier this month threatened to subpoena the firm, Fusion GPS, "after it refused to answer questions and provide records to the panel identifying who financed the error-ridden dossier." According to the Post, the firm was "on the payroll of an unidentified Democratic ally of Clinton when it hired a long-retired British spy to dig up dirt on Trump."

Kushner's Dealings With Deutsche Bank May Draw Scrutiny From Mueller. The Washington Post (6/25, Kranish) reports that in October, 2016, Jared Kushner's real estate company "finalized a $285 million loan as part of a refinancing package for its property near Times Square in Manhattan." According to the Post, the loan came "at a critical moment" when Kushner was "playing a key role" in the Trump campaign, and Deutsche Bank was "negotiating to settle a federal mortgage fraud case and charges from New York state regulators that it aided a possible Russian money-laundering scheme." Those cases were settled in December and January. The Post says the October deal "illustrates the extent to which Kushner was balancing roles as a top adviser to Trump and a real estate company executive." Both Kushner and Deutsche Bank "declined to comment."

Analysts: Mueller's Team At Risk Of Cyber Attacks. The Washington Times (6/25, Noble) reports as members of Mueller's team are "publicly identified, security analysts say their emails, online data and past law firm communications could become targets" for cyber attacks – "a fear that could explain why officials have been reluctant to release their names." The Times says that "after an election season in which hackers – presumably Russian operatives – broke into systems of the Democratic National Committee and the chairman of Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign and attempted to break into state election systems, it's no leap to assume they will try to penetrate the systems of the investigators who are targeting them, analysts said."

Gowdy Says He Will Not Focus On Russia Investigation As House Oversight Chair. USA Today (6/25, Collins) reports Trey Gowdy, the new chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee, "says he plans to turn the committee away from its investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 election, a departure" from Rep. Jason Chaffetz's "aggressive approach." Gowdy "believes much of the Russia investigation belongs under the special counsel or other congressional committees," and says he would prefer to have the Oversight Committee "focus on some of the less headline grabbing, but still important issues."

On Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (6/25, Bartiromo), Chaffetz said, "I do think it is appropriate that Congress overlooks the shoulder" of special counsel Robert "Mueller. He's got great credentials and a great background. I don't know why he was put in place, there should have never been a special counsel, but now that there is, somebody needs to be a watchdog on that."

Schiff: Possible Lynch Meddling In Clinton Email Probe Makes Me "Queasy." The New York Post (6/25, Schultz) reports Rep. Adam Schiff on Sunday borrowed a line from former FBI Director Comey, saying he's "queasy" about the possibility of former Attorney General Loretta Lynch meddling in the FBI's investigation of Hillary Clinton's emails. "It does give me a queasy feeling as well," Schiff said on CNN's "State of the Union." Schiff was "siding with" Sen. Dianne Feinstein, who also said she felt "queasy" over the thought Clinton's email investigation may have become politicized by Lynch.

Lawmakers Pressing DHS To Prevent Election Hacking. The Hill (6/25, Chalfant) reports that "growing concerns about threats to US election systems have put the heat on the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and its efforts to boost national cybersecurity." After DHS officials testified last week that they have evidence that Russia targeted election-related systems in 21 states, lawmakers are "pressuring the department to offer more help to states and provide more details about what happened in 2016." According to The Hill, lawmakers have "zeroed in on Homeland Security's decision to designate election infrastructure as critical."

Report: Moscow Recalls Kislyak. “Three sources familiar with the decision” tell BuzzFeed (6/25, Hudson) reports that the Kremlin has decided to recall its ambassador to the United States, Sergey Kislyak. The decision to bring Kislyak back to Russia “rather than appoint him to a senior position at the United Nations in New York, as several outlets previously reported, comes amid investigations by the FBI and Congress” into the ambassador’s contacts with President Trump’s top aides during the 2016 presidential campaign. Though Kislyak’s departure “has long been expected, Moscow would not confirm his departure date.” The US-Russia Business Council, however, is hosting a going away party for Kislyak on July 11.

Europeans Confident About Their “Counterassault” Against Russian Digital Meddling. “Four dozen officials and researchers interviewed recently” by the Washington Post (6/25, Priest, Birnbaum) “sounded uniformly more confident” than their American counterparts “about the results of their efforts” to thwart Russia’s disinformation, hacking, and influence campaigns. Russia has “decades of experience wielding propaganda, going back to the Soviet era,” and its influence campaign has recently benefited from “the digital sophistication that Moscow can now employ.” Nonetheless, “researchers in Britain, France, Germany, the Czech Republic, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, Ukraine and Latvia” have launched a “counterassault,” and political leaders have appealed to both mainstream and public media outlets “to ignore predictable releases of embarrassing documents stolen by Russian hackers in an effort to tip elections in favor of pro-Russian candidates.” The European experts argued the best way to counter Russian influence “is to make it visible” and then move to suppress it.

House Leaders Pushing For Bipartisan Deal To Raise Debt Ceiling.

Rep. John Yarmuth, the ranking member of the House Budget Committee, told Reuters (6/23, Gibson, Becker) “Congressional leaders are quietly working on a bipartisan deal to raise the U.S. debt ceiling within weeks, hoping to prevent the difficult debt issue from snarling a budget fight to come in September.” Yarmuth said, “There is talk going on, there is leadership conversation about this,” and he “added that House Democrats do not plan to demand concessions from Republicans in exchange for supporting a debt limit increase.”

Poll: 57 Percent Oppose Raising Debt Ceiling. The Hill (6/23, Elis) reports a Morning Consult-Politico poll of 2,051 “registered voters” (6/15-6/19) released Thursday found 57 percent “oppose a debt ceiling increase, while just 20 percent support it. Another 22 percent said they don’t know or have no opinion.” The Hill adds that “the feelings were stronger among Republicans, 64 percent of whom do not Congress to raise the limit, as opposed to 59 percent of independents and 49 percent of Democrats.” According to The Hill, this “may complicate efforts for lawmakers to pass the measure, which economists say is essential to prevent a financial or economic crisis.”

Administration, Congress Consider Writing Tax Reform Measure In Secrecy.

“While many griped about the secrecy surrounding the health legislation, few rank-and-file Republicans seem to be objecting to that approach on tax reform,” Politico (6/23, Becker, Lorenzo) reports, and “both senior administration officials and congressional leaders are already telegraphing that the tax reform measure they hope to move this fall will largely be shaped among themselves in private meetings.” Politico states that while House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady “has been saying for weeks that a more closely held approach is basically the only way Republicans can squeeze a tax overhaul into an agenda that also includes health care, the debt limit and government funding,” National Economic Council Director Cohn “put it more bluntly, telling technology executives on Tuesday that the administration isn’t interested in negotiating a tax reform measure on the House or Senate floor.”

Meanwhile, Politico (6/23, White, Wilhelm) reports in a separate article that “Congressional Republicans and the Trump administration, under pressure to deliver on what they hope will be the crown jewel of their economic agenda, appear close to formally jettisoning the controversial border tax proposed by House Republicans while still presenting a plan in two months that would include permanent changes to the tax code.” However, Politico warns that “whether they can dump the border tax – which would hit imports but not exports – and still meet the ambitious goals set out by President Donald Trump and House Speaker Paul Ryan remains a daunting challenge” Politico adds that “if the White House gets its way and kills the 20 percent tax on corporate imports proposed by Ryan and Brady, analysts say they’ll almost certainly have to aim higher on corporate rates – more in the 25 to 28 percent range, which means companies could still be enticed by lower tax rates in other countries.”

McClatchy Analysis: Trump’s Infrastructure Legacy Is Mostly Pipeline Approvals.

McClatchy (6/23, Leavenworth) reports President Trump “has tapped various friends and supporters to help shape his infrastructure agenda, including CEOs, who have a financial interest in the regulatory relief Trump is promising and implementing.” McClatchy says Trump’s infrastructure statements and appointments in the Energy and Interior Departments “have emboldened energy company CEOs, some of whom have publicly urged the president to intervene on their behalf.” For example, even though the FERC under Barack Obama “approved numerous energy pipelines, including several opposed by environmental groups and rural landowners,” the agency also “occasionally” rejected permits, as in 2016 when it rejected a permit for the Jordan Cove LNG export facility in Oregon. Then, this past April National Economic Council Director Cohn hinted the Administration is working to approve Jordan Cove. McClatchy also says that “Trump has not revealed plans for new legislation or administrative changes to expedite infrastructure,” so the Administration is working within current legal boundaries “to reverse decisions of a prior administration.”

FERC Releases Favorable Environmental Review For Mountain Valley Pipeline. The AP (6/23, Rankin) reports a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission environmental review of the $3.5 billion Mountain Valley Pipeline released Friday found that it would significantly impact forest, but that “other adverse effects would be limited.” Environmental groups are already criticizing the review, claiming that it “does not look closely enough at the cumulative impacts of the Mountain Valley Pipeline and Atlantic Coast Pipeline.”

WPost: GOP Not Planning “Real Tax Reform.”

The Washington Post (6/24, Board) editorializes that while Republicans have promised to “pass a bill with lower rates for both individuals and businesses, applied to an income ‘base’ broadened by the elimination of deductions and credits,” but House Speaker Ryan and Vice President Pence revealed last week that they are “planning something that’s not real tax reform at all.” The Post castigates Ryan and Pence for their recent remarks on tax reform and concludes “the week’s GOP messaging [was] unanimous and reinforced suspicions that, for all their talk of reform, slashing taxes, mainly for the wealthy and corporations, is the one policy that Republicans agree on and therefore the only policy they are actually going to enact.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Iran Puzzle.” The New York Times (6/26, Board) reports former President Obama’s desire “to establish better relations with Iran” is at risk, in part because of “Iran’s barely-concealed territorial and political ambitions, which are rightly of concern in Washington.” The Times argues the “momentary thaw” is also threatened by “President Trump’s fondness for Saudi Arabia, a Sunni Muslim nation, which has led him to demonize Iran, a Shiite nation and the Saudis’ chief rival for regional influence.” The Syrian crisis may serve as the “flashpoint” in US-Iranian relations, the Times suggests, because the situation in Syria is “where the interests of Iran and the United States are most sharply at odds, and in Iraq where they most nearly converge.” The Times warns “Trump’s demonizing of Iran, and his unwillingness to engage its government, could result in a broadening of the American military mission from defeating ISIS to preventing Iranian influence from expanding.”

“School Districts Fight Segregation On Their Own.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/26, Board) says a growing number of school districts are “refusing to accept segregation” and “promoting integration by taking socioeconomic status into account as they assign children to schools.” Some districts, “including Dallas, a segregated city with a lurid history of fighting desegregation – have recognized the dangers of racial and socioeconomic isolation and are taking steps to bring together children of different backgrounds.” Meanwhile, “That has yet to happen in the hypersegregated city of New York, where Mayor Bill de Blasio put forward a ‘diversity’ plan in which the word ‘segregated’ fails to appear at all.” The Times asserts that to address the problem, the first step “is summoning the courage to call it by its rightful name.”

“Progress On Gay Rights In Serbia, With A Catch.” A New York Times (6/26, Board) editorial says Serbian President Aleksandar Vucic’s nomination of “Ana Brnabic, a 41-year-old, openly lesbian, woman as prime minister,” shocked “Serbians and outside observers alike.” If Serbia’s Parliament approves Brnabic’s nomination, the Times says, it “would send a powerful signal that it is time for Serbia – and the rest of the world – to move beyond old prejudices.” However, the Times cautions, the move “also plays to the canny Mr. Vucic’s political ambitions.” The Times explains “there is every reason to suspect that the choice of Ms. Brnabic is a decoy move,” and any progress inherent in Vucic’s choice “will be sadly compromised” if “Brnabic is approved only to become the tool of an autocrat, or discarded to further Mr. Vucic’s sweeping political ambitions.”

Washington Post.

“We’re Close Than Ever To Eradicating Polio – And Yet There’s Syria.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/25) writes that with a new outbreak of the poliovirus in Syria that has paralyzed 17 children, a “mixture of optimism and worry is warranted.” On one hand, with just six reported cases of wild poliovirus reported this year in the last three endemic countries – Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Nigeria – which is “fewer than at any moment ever.” With such low numbers, the Post says “eradication may indeed be within reach,” if immunization and surveillance are sustained. On the other hand, Syria’s outbreak is the second occurrence during its civil war – which is “the real culprit.” The Post concludes, “fortunately, there is an effective vaccine and a fair amount of experience in extinguishing such an outbreak, and with enough effort and immunization, it can be contained.”

“There’s Reason To Doubt Saudi Arabia’s Charming New Crown Prince.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/25) cautions “there is growing reason for doubt about” Saudi Arabia’s recently-named Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman’s capabilities. The Post explains Prince Salman’s “market-oriented economic reforms look stalled,” and “his aggressive initiatives in foreign affairs are proving self-defeating – and damaging to the interests of the United States.” The Post points to the “unwinnable” Saudi-led military intervention in Yemen and the blockade of Qatar as two specific initiatives that risk “serious harm to U.S. interests.” Though Prince Salman “may be charming,” the Post cautions that “his adventurism makes him a questionable ally.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Missile Defense Imperative.” The Wall Street Journal (6/25) editorializes Sen. Dan Sullivan has proposed an amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act that would increase funding for a more integrated Ground-based Midcourse Defense System that includes additional missile interceptors and sensors, and more research. The Journal acknowledges that the proposal is expensive, but argues in light of an ever-more-dangerous world, such an investment is wise and necessary to protect America.

“Trump’ Tapes’ Trick.” A Wall Street Journal (6/25) editorial says the President took his time, but ultimately admitted last week that he doesn’t have tapes of his conversations with Comey. The Journal says is an illustration of how Trump undermines his own credibility with his use of social media.

“Nevada Solar Subsidy Resurrection.” The Wall Street Journal (6/25) editorializes that Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval’s restoration of net metering – which compensates electricity customers at near the retail rate for excess solar power they remit to the grid – is a mistake. Not only does it unfairly shift costs to lower-income customers without rooftop solar panels, but the Journal says the excess generation frequently isn’t needed and can make it more difficult to manage the grid. In fact, net metering tends to benefit the solar rooftop-leasing companies much more than consumers, because the companies install the equipment for free and take all the subsidies. Further, ceasing the subsidy in 2015 didn’t hurt solar growth, as Nevada saw a 71 percent increase in solar energy generation in the past year.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Senators Lay Out Demands On Health Bill

Dan Loeb’s Third Point Makes Its Largest-Ever Bet With Nestlé Stake

The Shale Revolution’s Staggering Impact In Just One Word: Plastics

Bungled Attacks, Small Operations Signal New Phase In Terror

New York Times:

In Towns Already Hit By Steel Mill Closings, A New Casualty: Retail Jobs

Where Trump Zigs, Tillerson Zags, Putting Him At Odds With White House

Senate Leaders Try To Appease Members As Support For Health Bill Slips After Puerto Rico's Debt Crisis, Worries Shift To Virgin Islands For Grieving Parents, Trump Is 'Speaking For The Dead' On Immigration

Washington Post:

As Coral Withers, So Will Florida Keys Economy In Europe, Fake News From Russia Is Old News Caught And Released
Doubts Over Health Bill Rise
Kushner's Firm Given Loan Amid Campaign

Financial Times:

More Than 150 Die In Pakistan Tanker Blaze
Rome Sets Aside €17bn To Wind Down Failing Lenders
Kushner Meeting Shines Spotlight On Russian Bank
Google Faces €1bn Day Of Reckoning In Brussels

Washington Times:

Pentagon Welcomes Greater Freedom Under Trump But Is Wary Of Blame
Republican Leaders Need Delicate Balance Of Various Factions To Gain Support For Health Care Bill
After Obama's Bad Deal, American Black Hawks Will Replace Russian Helicopters For Afghan Air Force
Mueller Mum On Much Of Team: Members At Risk Of Cyberintrusions From Hackers They're Investigating
Islamic State Flag On New Hampshire Dam Raises First Amendment Questions In Times Of Terrorism

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Trump-Healthcare Reform Bill; Supreme Court-Immigration Order; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Malaysia-Flight Malfunction; Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire; Nanny Cam-Nurse Violence; Amusement Park-Ride Malfunction; Ticks Warning; Columbia-Tourist Ship Sunk; California-Road Rage; Prince Harry-Royal Life; Veteran Boxer.

CBS: Healthcare Reform Bill; Supreme Court-Immigration Order; Supreme Court-Justice Retiring; Gay Pride Rally; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire; China-Sichuan Landslide; Ramadan Ends; Sacramento-Hate Crime; Mosul Assault; Earthquake Warning System; Teen Criminal Rehabilitation.

NBC: Healthcare Reform Bill; Supreme Court-Immigration Order; Airplane Incidents; Teen Climber Rescue; Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire; Alt-Right Groups Growing; US Workers-Job Skills; Gay Pride Rally; Smartphone Emojis; Olympian Sisters.

Network TV At A Glance:

Healthcare Reform Bill – 8 minutes, 30 seconds
Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire – 3 minutes, 40 seconds
Supreme Court-Immigration Order – 3 minutes, 30 seconds
Heat Wave-Wildfires – 2 minutes, 50 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Takata Airbag-Bankruptcy; Healthcare Reform Bill; Gay Pride Rally; Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire.

CBS: Takata Airbag-Bankruptcy; Healthcare Reform Bill; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Columbia-Tourist Ship Sunk; Gay Pride Rally; Wall Street News.

FOX: Healthcare Reform Bill; Supreme Court-Immigration Order; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Pakistan-Oil Tanker Fire.

NPR: ISIS-Ohio Gov Web Hacking; US-India Summit; Healthcare Reform Bill; Takata Airbag-Bankruptcy.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and US Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley; meets with Prime Minister Narendra Modi of India.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President for lunch with US.Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley; joins Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) Administrator Seema Verma for a listening session with victims of Obamacare; joins the President for an expanded bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Narendra Modi of India.

US Senate: 4:00 PM East West Center in Washington launches 'India Matters for America/America Matters for India' – East West Center in Washington and Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), in partnership with Senate India Caucus and House India Caucus, launch 'India Matters for America/America Matters for India' – a publication and web resource for 'credible and nonpartisan information, graphics, analysis, and news at the national, state, and local level on U.S.-India interactions' – via briefing bringing together experts from the U.S. Govt, business, and academia to assess 'how the partnership between the U.S. and India has moved towards greater cooperation in matters of regional security, trade, and cultural exchange' Location: Rm 902, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://www.eastwestcenter.org/ewc-in-washington> <https://twitter.com/EastWestCenter>

4:00 PM Senate Armed Services subcommittee marks up National Defense Authorization Act – Airland Subcommittee closed markup hearing on 'National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018' * Conducted at the secret level Location: Rm 232A, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

4:00 PM Senate votes on NRC nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Kristine Svinicki to be a Nuclear Regulatory Commission member, including a vote on the nomination * Cloture motion on the nomination passed by 89 votes to 10 last week Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 3:00 PM Dem Reps. Don Beyer, Ro Khanna, and Jaimie Raskin mark Fair Representation Act introduction – Democratic Rep. Don Beyer discusses the introduction of the Fair Representation Act – legislation that would 'reform Congressional elections, defeat gerrymandering, combat political polarization, and give voters real voice and choice when electing their representatives' – via press conference with supporters of the proposal, including Democratic Reps. Ro Khanna and Jaimie Raskin Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC beyer.house.gov/ <https://twitter.com/RepDonBeyer>

4:00 PM East West Center in Washington launches 'India Matters for America/America Matters for India' – East West Center in Washington and Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), in partnership with Senate India Caucus and House India Caucus, launch 'India Matters for America/America Matters for India' – a publication and web resource for 'credible and nonpartisan information, graphics, analysis, and news at the national, state, and local level on U.S.-India interactions' – via briefing bringing together experts from the U.S. Govt, business, and academia to assess 'how the partnership between the U.S. and India has moved towards greater cooperation in matters of regional security, trade, and cultural exchange' Location: Rm 902, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://www.eastwestcenter.org/ewc-in-washington> <https://twitter.com/EastWestCenter>

7:00 PM Defense Subcommittee closed markup hearing on FY 2018 Appropriations Bill Location: H-140, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

House Armed Services Committee Majority Staff background press briefing on topics in the Chairman's Mark Location: Rm 2212, Rayburn House Office Bldg., Washington, DC armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

Other: 7:30 AM EIA Energy Conference – 2017 EIA Energy Conference, bringing together thought leaders from industry, govt, and academia to discuss current and future challenges facing domestic and international energy markets and policymakers. Day one speakers include Republican Rep. Greg Walden, EIA Acting Administrator and Deputy Administrator Howard Gruenspecht, Pioneer Natural Resources Executive Chairman of the Board Scott Sheffield, and Opower President and Founder Alex Laskey. Topics include U.S. exports of crude oil and petroleum products, renewable finance and project costs, the energy-water nexus and induced seismicity, the future of nuclear power, gasoline fuel quality and octane supply, big data and energy information, natural gas infrastructure to serve growing markets, electrification in developing countries, coal and natural gas competition, human behavior and energy use in buildings, JODI and energy data transparency, and international transportation and electric vehicles Location: Washington Hilton, 1919 Connecticut Ave NW, Washington, DC
<http://www.eia.doe.gov> #EIAGov

3:45 PM GOP Sen. Marco Rubio keynotes AEI event on transnational organized crime in the Americas – Republican Sen. Marco Rubio keynotes American Enterprise Institute discussion on 'Kingpins and corruption: Targeting transnational organized crime in the Americas', followed by panel discussion on the findings of a new AEI report on the subject Location: AEI, 1789 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC www.aei.org <https://twitter.com/AEI>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, November 6, 2017
Date: Monday, November 06, 2017 6:21:18 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Reuters: Trump Move Stirs Debate Over Utah Monuments.
- The Hill: Democrats Oppose Effort To Delay Or Repeal Interior Methane Rule.
- Associated Press: Western Governors Want Federal Help In Invasive Mussel Fight.
- E&E Publishing: Interior Review Omits Oil And Gas Rule.
- The Hill: Trump Urged Native American Leaders To Extract Resources From Their Land: Report.
- Huffington Post: Trump's Exit From Anti-Corruption Pact Helps Big Oil Hide How Much It Pays In US Taxes.
- Reuters: Former Puerto Rico Official Denies Any Role In Whitefish Deal.

- Associated Press: California Asks US For $7.4 Billion For Wildfire Rebuilding.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Wyoming's Quiet Governor Faces A Brash Interior Secretary, With A Bird In The Balance.
- Newsweek: Additional Coverage: Trump Administration Threatens National Parks And Monuments.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Native Hawaiians Again Seek Political Sovereignty With A New Constitution.
- White Mountain Apache Ask For Tweak To Allow Water Project.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Oregonian: Days Before Trial, Defense Confirms FBI Had Surveillance Camera Outside Bundy Ranch.
- U.S. News & World Report: Stretch Of Nevada Highway Honors Fallen BLM Firefighters.
- Fairbanks (AK) News-Miner: BLM Announces Hearings On Ambler Road.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Sen. Broxson Aims To Keep Drilling Moratorium In Gulf Of Mexico.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- ND Officials: Optimism Builds Over $1 Billion Water Pipeline To Serve Red River Valley, Central ND.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Examiner: Will The Energy Industry Even Want To Drill In ANWR?
- Washington Post: Powerful Lawmaker Wants To 'Invalidate' The Endangered Species Act. He's Getting Close.
- U.S. News & World Report: Walleye Delay Action On Endangered Colorado Pikeminnow.
- Paris (TN) Post-Intelligencer: Input Sought For Sport Hunting At Cross Creeks.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: On Eve Of Asia Trip, Trump Pays Visit To Pearl Harbor.
- Denver Post: Proposed Entrance Fee Hikes At National Parks Could Backfire And Push Visitors To Annual Passes.
- Washington Post: Activists Behind A Rejected 45-foot Statue Of A Naked Woman In D.C.
- U.S. News & World Report: Albert Pike's Complicated Legacy Leaves DC Statue In Limbo.
- Arizona Daily Sun: Women Take The Lead For Northern Arizona's Public Lands.
- U.S. News & World Report: Proposed Plan Would Make Visitors Reserve Trip To Arches.
- Aurora (IL) Beacon-News: National Park Service Approves Campana Building Plan.

US Geological Survey

- KTOO-FM Juneau (AK): Geology Gets Political As Federal Scientists Pursue New ANWR Oil Assessment.

Opinion Pieces

- Trump Is Leading The Most Corrupt Administration In U.S. History, One Of First-Class Kleptocrats.
- Our View: Cheers And Jeers.
- Don't Delay The Methane Waste Rule.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Associated Press: Trump Calls For Bilateral Trade Deal With Japan.
- Associated Press: Trump Praises Japan As "Treasured Partner And Crucial Ally" At Yokota Air Base.
- CBS: Media Analyses: North Korea To Dominate Focus Of Trump's Asia Trip.
- Associated Press: House Republicans Revise Tax Bill Into "Less Generous" Version.
- Associated Press: Ryan: GOP Weighing Repeal Of ACA Mandate As Part Of Tax Reform.
- New York Times: Labor Department: US Added 261,000 Jobs In October.
- Washington Post: White House Approves The Release Of Report Blaming Humans For Climate Change.
- Washington Post: US Delegates Not Expected To Play Key Role In Global Climate Talks.
- San Antonio Express-News: At Least 25 Killed In Texas Church Mass Shooting.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "In Asia, Mr. Trump Is Met By Doubt."

- "Willie Horton, Updated For The Trump Era."
- "New Yorkers Can Make Crooked Politicians Pay."
- Washington Post.
 - "Should DC Build A New Hospital? Officials Should Be Cautious."
 - "A Case On Imported Solar Cells Will Put Trump's Promise On 'America First' To The Test."
 - "Satellite Photographs Reveal North Korea's Crimes Against Humanity."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Tax Rate Cleanup In Aisle Two."
 - "Tax Reform And ObamaCare."
 - "The Stealth-Tax Republicans."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Trump Move Stirs Debate Over Utah Monuments.

Reuters (11/3, Cullen) reports that President Trump's announcement last week that he intends to reduce the size of two national monuments in Utah has "stoked local divisions over land use, with all sides anticipating a protracted battle over the move." According to the article, "on one side, Native American groups and environmentalists expressed anger and are ready to sue the U.S. government." Meanwhile, "on the other, conservative-leaning residents welcomed the decision, seeing it as a reversal of government overreach and a boost for traditional industries like drilling, mining and grazing."

Additional coverage was provided by Wyoming Public Radio (11/3, Huntington).

Greens Sue Trump For National Monument Documents. The Hill (11/3, Cama) reports that "a coalition of environmental groups is suing the Trump administration to try to obtain Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendations for which national monuments to shrink." The groups, "led by Earthjustice, accuse the Interior Department, its Bureau of Land Management and the White House Council on Environmental Quality of breaking the law by missing a key deadline to respond to their Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests for the recommendations."

Also reporting are Reuters (11/3, Flitter) and Law360 (11/3, Phillis).

Democrats Oppose Effort To Delay Or Repeal Interior Methane Rule.

The Hill (11/3, Henry) reports 81 House and Senate Democrats sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke asking him "not to delay or repeal a rule updating limits on methane leaks from oil and natural drilling sites on federal land." The lawmakers said that they support the Bureau of Land Management's rule, as it "prevents the unnecessary waste of a public resource, and makes sure that American taxpayers get fair value in return for commercial use of that public resource."

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/4, Romeo) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recently "said the BLM will seek a one-year delay for the rule that was supposed to take effect January 2018, though its unclear if he intends to rewrite the rule or completely dismantle it." The article notes that "a public comment on the decision can be made online until Monday."

New Mexico Regulators Report Drop In Methane Emissions. The AP (10/19, Bryan) reports that "methane emissions from oil and natural gas production in New Mexico have dropped by more than 50 percent over the past year thanks to advances in technology and changes in the way wells are drilled, state regulators said Friday." Energy, Minerals and Natural Resources Secretary Ken McQueen "told a panel of state lawmakers that most companies actively drilling in New Mexico are abiding by reporting requirements and are tracking the volumes of methane intentionally released through venting and flaring as part of their operations." Also, "with 60,000 active wells being documented each month, McQueen said his agency found 56 instances in which operators failed to report the required data." He testified, "That leads us to believe we have a very high compliance level."

Western Governors Want Federal Help In Invasive Mussel Fight.

The AP (11/3, Ridler) reports that the Western Governors' Association, which represents the governors of 19 Western states, on Thursday "sent a letter urging Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to put in place by spring 2018 controls to prevent the spread of zebra and quagga mussels." The AP states that the letter "is the second they've sent this year about invasive mussels to Zinke." The AP adds the governors are "particularly concerned about the mussels reaching the Columbia River Basin, Lake Tahoe, and the Colorado River Basin above Lake Powell."

Interior Review Omits Oil And Gas Rule.

E&E Publishing (11/3, King) reports that last week, the Interior Department "unveiled its review of all department actions with the potential to burden domestic energy activity." The report "touched on the department's ongoing examination of rules introduced by the Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife Service, and National Park Service under the previous administration to guide oversight of oil and gas operations on sites the agencies manage." However, "beyond a mention of Secretary Ryan Zinke's secretarial order listing four Interior rules pinpointed in President Trump's March 28 'energy independence' directive, the NPS rule doesn't even appear in the document." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift explained, "The NPS rule was under review. No action has been taken or identified for it, which is why it is not in the report."

Trump Urged Native American Leaders To Extract Resources From Their Land: Report.

The Hill (11/5, Thomsen) reports that President Trump "reportedly encouraged Native American leaders to 'just do it' and extract resources from their own land, despite federal regulations blocking them from doing so, Axios reported on Sunday." According to the article, "after the leaders told Trump they couldn't drill for the resources because of regulations, Trump reportedly said: 'But now it's me. The government's different now. Obama's gone; and we're doing things differently here.'" However, "a person in the meeting disputed that Trump was telling the leaders to break federal law and start drilling on the land, telling Axios that the remarks were just 'Trump speak.'"

Trump's Exit From Anti-Corruption Pact Helps Big Oil Hide How Much It Pays In US Taxes.

The Huffington Post (11/4, Kaufman) reported that the Interior Department announced Thursday the United States would withdraw immediately from the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI), "a move critics said could help oil companies keep hidden how much they pay in U.S. taxes." NPR (11/3, Chappell) reported that the EITI is designed to collect and share government and corporation data showing "how much money is being paid and received for oil, gas, mining and renewable energy operations on public lands." Since the summer, the US has cited multiple factors as obstacles to remaining in the group, including the Trade Secrets Act and tax reporting laws. However, "a State Department spokesperson says the U.S. will remain as one of 17 'supporting countries' of the initiative."

CNBC (11/3, DiChristopher) reports that the Trump administration is being criticized for its decision to withdraw from its role as an implementing country in the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative on Thursday. Corinna Gilfillan, head of the U.S. office of Global Witness, said, "We strongly dispute the U.S. government's claim that U.S. laws prevent compliance with the EITI standard when it is Exxon and Chevron's preference for secrecy that made it impossible for the U.S. to comply." Gilfillan added, "When major Russian and Chinese oil companies are disclosing more information about their deals around the world than their U.S. counterparts, you have got to ask: What are Exxon and Chevron so desperate to hide?"

Former Puerto Rico Official Denies Any Role In Whitefish Deal.

Reuters (11/3, Brown) reports Elias Sanchez, a friend and one-time adviser to Puerto Rico Governor Ricardo Rossello, in papers filed on Friday in federal court in San Juan "said under penalty of perjury that he 'never had any kind of relationship' with contractor Whitefish Energy or its principals." Reuters says that although Rossello eventually "canceled the contract after an uproar over its provisions," some creditors and lawmakers suggested that the deal had been "facilitated by lobbyists, namely Sanchez, a lawyer who ran Rossello's 2016 gubernatorial campaign." According to Reuters, "Sanchez asked the court to strike references to his name in that filing, saying he had no contact with PREPA about Whitefish" while a company spokesman "said on Friday that its chief executive officer, Andy Techmanski, never met Sanchez."

California Asks US For $7.4 Billion For Wildfire Rebuilding.

The AP (11/3, Rodriguez) reports California Gov. Jerry Brown on Friday asked the federal government for $7.4 billion to rebuild after last month's wildfires that "killed at least 43 people and destroyed about 8,900 homes and other buildings." In a letter, Brown said that while "the full economic impact to the agricultural, tourism, hospitality, and wine industries is still not known," the funding would help with cleanup and housing, transportation, agriculture, environmental protection and other programs in affected areas.

Wyoming's Quiet Governor Faces A Brash Interior Secretary, With A Bird In The Balance.

In an analysis, the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (11/4, Richards, Rosenfeld) compares and contrasts Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke with Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead and their approach to sage grouse conservation. The story is "about a federal administrator who seems close to unraveling one of the governor's signature achievements – preserving sage grouse protections – and attacking one of Mead's core beliefs about how politics should be conducted."

Additional Coverage: Trump Administration Threatens National Parks And Monuments.

Additional coverage that the Trump Administration is "trying to scrap a ban against uranium mining in the watershed near the country's most renowned natural wonder: the Grand Canyon" was provided by Newsweek (11/5, Pereira).

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Native Hawaiians Again Seek Political Sovereignty With A New Constitution.

The Washington Post (11/5, Lyte) reports that "decimated in number after the Western world first occupied the archipelago and later feeling marginalized within the federal bureaucracy, Native Hawaiians are now pushing hard to create their own nation, seeking the type of self-governance Native American tribes across the country established long ago." A group that "includes politicians, police officers, fast-food workers and farmers has drafted a new constitution and plans for a ratification vote." The article says that "leaders are working to raise $2.5 million and have joined with a consortium of advocacy groups to spur the nation-building effort."

White Mountain Apache Ask For Tweak To Allow Water Project.

The AP (11/4, Windes) reports that "a White Mountain Apache leader told House members Thursday that the tribe desperately needs to 'replace the failing and terminal groundwater well system,' but that current Interior Department regulations are preventing the tribe from moving forward on the project." Tribe Vice Chairman Kasey Velasquez "told a House Natural Resources subcommittee that Interior officials do not oppose the project, but that they are not sure current regulations allow money from a settlement fund to be 'used for the system's cost overruns.'" The solution, the Apache claim, "is a one-page bill that would add 17 words to the law to clarify the situation." However, "Velasquez said it is needed urgently so there is no delay in work to improve the dire condition of the tribe's critical water infrastructure."

Bureau Of Land Management

Days Before Trial, Defense Confirms FBI Had Surveillance Camera Outside Bundy Ranch.

The Oregonian (11/3, Bernstein) reported from Las Vegas that "more than three years after the 2014 Bundy standoff with federal officers near Bunkerville and after two trials in the case, testimony elicited in court Friday revealed for the first time that the FBI had one surveillance camera perched on a hill overlooking the Bundy Ranch." National Park Service ranger Mary Hinson testified that she "did not know if the footage, which captured images from outside the Bundy home and a stage set up miles down the road, was recorded. She said the FBI operated the camera." According to the Oregonian, Hinson's testimony "came during questioning by defendant Ryan Bundy in a pretrial hearing held in federal court in Nevada."

The AP (11/5, Ritter) reports that "in opening statements Tuesday prosecutors will accuse the 71-year-old Bundy, sons Ryan and Ammon Bundy, and co-defendant Ryan Payne of enlisting a self-styled militia to defy government authority." The AP adds, "Defense attorneys say the four men didn't conspire with anyone, didn't wield weapons and didn't threaten anybody. They cast the standoff as a peaceful protest, with no shots fired and no one injured before overreaching government officials abandoned the cattle round-up and went home."

The Oregonian (11/5, Bernstein) notes that last year, “federal prosecutors in Portland suffered a stunning blow when a jury acquitted Ammon Bundy, older brother Ryan Bundy and five others in refuge takeover. Prosecutors in Nevada also were largely unsuccessful earlier this year in two trials of more minor figures in the Bunkerville standoff. Except for guilty verdicts against two of six lesser players, the trials ended with acquittals or hung juries.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (11/3, Ferrara) and the Oregonian (11/5, Bernstein).

Stretch Of Nevada Highway Honors Fallen BLM Firefighters.

The AP (11/3) reports that “a stretch of state highway in northern Nevada is being named after two former firefighters for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management who died in the line of duty.” Gov. Brian Sandoval “joined state transportation officials and others Thursday at the dedication honoring Will Hawkins and Jacob O’Malley along State Route 140 north of Winnemucca near the Oregon line.” According to the article, “the two men died in a single-vehicle rollover crash on the highway when a tire blew out in July 2016 while on a routine patrol searching for lightning-sparked fires.”

BLM Announces Hearings On Ambler Road.

The Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (11/5, Granger) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “scheduled several public meetings to continue gathering comments about the Ambler Road Project, the proposed 200-mile road that would connect Northwest Alaska with the Dalton Highway and Fairbanks.” The BLM is “working on an environmental impact statement for the project, identifying and analyzing concerns and issues associated with the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority’s proposal.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Sen. Broxson Aims To Keep Drilling Moratorium In Gulf Of Mexico.

The Gulf Breeze \(FL\) News (11/2) reported in a subscription-only article, that two Florida lawmakers filed resolutions to extend the current moratorium on drilling in the Gulf of Mexico east of the Military Mission Line. Noting that testing and training activists conducted from Florida’s air and sea bases require “unconstrained access to the east Gulf of Mexico airspace and seaspace.” Sen. Doug Broxson said “We all want to see a broadened economic base, but never at the expense of this commitment of our military.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

ND Officials: Optimism Builds Over $1 Billion Water Pipeline To Serve Red River Valley, Central ND.

The Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (11/5, Springer) reports that “the push to deliver water from the Missouri River to the Red River Valley is gaining momentum and officials are optimistic that construction on the $1 billion project will start in 2019.” Currently, “35 community and rural water systems in central and eastern North Dakota have committed to the project, which aims to pipe water from the Missouri to the Sheyenne River, a tributary of the Red River.” Officials are negotiating with the Bureau of Reclamation “for agreements that would enable the pipeline project to use water pumped from Lake Audubon on the Missouri and to use a portion of the McClusky Canal.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Will The Energy Industry Even Want To Drill In ANWR?

The Washington Examiner (11/6, Siegel) reported that despite a Republican push to allow oil and natural gas drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, energy companies “might not be interested in taking up the opportunity.” Tom Walsh, public affairs chairman and an oil and gas consultant, explained, “There is a lot of pressure from the shale play and Lower 48, and the price structure currently is not terribly supportive of activities in Alaska because we are a high-cost environment to produce oil.” Meanwhile, Erik Milito, upstream director at the American Petroleum Institute, said, "Opening it would be an important step towards increasing American competitiveness and securing our nation's energy future."

Powerful Lawmaker Wants To 'Invalidate' The Endangered Species Act. He's Getting Close.

The Washington Post (11/5, Fears) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop, "who said he 'would love to invalidate' the Endangered Species Act is closing in on his goal." Bishop "recently shepherded five bills out of the Natural Resources Committee he chairs that would dismantle the law piece by piece." The article notes that "unlike earlier GOP attempts to weaken the act, Bishop is poised to realize his ambition because of Republicans' control of both chambers of Congress and the White House."

Walleye Delay Action On Endangered Colorado Pikeminnow.

The AP (11/5, Harmon) reports that "just as it approaches recovery, the endangered Colorado pikeminnow faces a new threat, a predator that eagerly scarfs down young pikeminnow, taking a jagged bite out of the species' overall numbers." According to the article, "walleye is a prized food fish, but its voracious appetite for pikeminnow is proving to be a setback to expectations that the pikeminnow could be removed from the endangered species list." Tom Chart, a fisheries biologist who heads the Upper Colorado River Endangered Species Recovery Program for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, "Walleye have gone gangbusters in Lake Powell."

Additional coverage was provided by the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (11/5, Harmon).

Input Sought For Sport Hunting At Cross Creeks.

The Paris \(TN\) Post-Intelligencer (11/3) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "seeking public comment through Nov. 27 on a draft sport hunting plan, environmental assessment and compatibility determination for Cross Creeks National Wildlife Refuge." The objective of the draft sport hunting plan is to update the 1984 Cross Creeks Sport Hunting Plan.

National Park Service

On Eve Of Asia Trip, Trump Pays Visit To Pearl Harbor.

The AP (11/4, Lemire) reports President Trump "paid a solemn visit to the memorial at Pearl Harbor," in what the AP called "a sacred journey" in preparation for his trip to Asia, "shadowed by fears of another international conflict." Before going, the President said, "We are going to visit very shortly, Pearl Harbor, which I've read about, spoken about, heard about, studied, but I haven't seen. And that is going to be very exciting for me." At the memorial, the President and Mrs. Trump gave a wreath which was placed "near a wall of names of the fallen." Afterwards, they "tossed white flower petals into the waters above the battleship's sunken hull." The President, added the AP, "appeared moved by the visit." Meanwhile, he "said not a word about North Korea or its nuclear ambitions on Friday."

The Washington Post (11/4, Parker, Teague) reports the President was an "eager tourist" in Hawaii, and "appeared energetic and enthusiastic." After the flight, he "emerged from his plane buoyed, shaking heads with well-wishers on the tarmac for roughly 15 minutes," and said, "I tell you: This is very special being in Hawaii." The Post added, he "seemed genuinely excited about his planned evening visit to Pearl Harbor." The Post describes his visit to the memorial and concludes, "he was restrained and respectful, largely listening and taking in the memorial."

Proposed Entrance Fee Hikes At National Parks Could Backfire And Push Visitors To Annual Passes.

The Denver Post (11/3, Blevins) reports that "a plan to bump entrance fees at the 17 busiest national parks to $70 from $30 during the peak summer months will help parks struggling to cover the tab for long-delayed upkeep as crowds continue to surge." However, "if that peak-season pricing plan is deployed next summer, the anticipated spike in demand for $80 America the Beautiful annual passes – a mere $10 extra for a year's access to about 2,000 federal recreation sites – could hinder the National Park Service's quest to balance cost-sharing between visitors and the federal government." Emily Douce, the director of budget and appropriations for the National Parks Conservation Association, said, "It is unknown how these proposed increases will impact the parks and the people who visit them, but it does seem reasonable that people will see the bargain in buying the America the Beautiful annual pass for entry into all our national parks and other federal lands. Our concern is how much analysis did the administration undergo to understand the implications of these fee increases."

Additional coverage of the proposal was provided by the Hi-Desert \(CA\) Star (11/3, Hunt) and the Village Voice \(NY\) (11/3, Gross).

Activists Behind A Rejected 45-foot Statue Of A Naked Woman In D.C.

Have A New Plan: A 26-foot Digital Artwork Of A Naked Woman. The Washington Post (11/3, Stein) reports that the activists who "wanted to place a 45-foot-tall statue of a nude woman on prime land on the Mall" now "want to erect a 26-foot-tall scaffold covered on two sides by 26-foot-tall digitized portraits of a nude woman." The National Park Service "hasn't finalized the permit for the structure, but Mike Litterst, a spokesman for the agency, said it is in the final stages of issuing it." Natalie White, a spokeswoman for the "Catharsis on the Mall" festival, "said that after the Park Service rejected the group's initial permit application, women behind Catharsis decided they still wanted to promote a message of female empowerment." She "said activists are making the best of the situation while still fighting to bring the original 45-foot statue to the Mall."

Additional coverage was provided by WTOP-FM Washington (11/5, Amouzadeh).

Albert Pike's Complicated Legacy Leaves DC Statue In Limbo.

The AP (11/4, Portnoy) reports that nearly everyone agrees that a statue of Confederate general Albert Pike should be removed from Judiciary Square in Washington DC. However, "the problem is that if Congress votes to remove it, no one wants custody." Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton "filed legislation this month to seek congressional approval for the statue's removal." But "her two-page bill is silent on where the statue should go."

Women Take The Lead For Northern Arizona's Public Lands.

The Arizona Daily Sun (11/5, Cowan) reports that "while it's no longer a rarity for women to hold top public lands jobs, the fact remains that the balance" in the National Park Service and Forest Service "remains lopsided, with women making up 35 percent of employees at the Forest Service and 38 percent at the National Park Service." The article notes that "at the same time, the agencies are confronting longstanding patterns of harassment, including sexual harassment, that have been forced into the spotlight through news reports, federal testimony, surveys and agency investigations." Grand Canyon National Park superintendent Chris Lehnertz believes "the two are connected." She said, "I do believe there is a certain amount of culture change that comes from having more women in the workforce. It doesn't just take women to change our hostile work environment and sexual harassment, but it does take fair representation to change the overall culture of the Park Service."

Proposed Plan Would Make Visitors Reserve Trip To Arches.

The AP (11/3) reports that the National Park Service "proposed a new plan that would put in place a reservation system for visitors traveling to Arches National Park during its high-visitation season." Park officials last Wednesday "emphasized the point of the plan is not to limit the number of visitors, but to spread visitation out during the course of the day and throughout the year." The plan would "limit park entries during certain three-hour windows between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. over the March-through-October high season."

National Park Service Approves Campana Building Plan.

The Aurora \(IL\) Beacon-News (11/5, Girardi) reports that the National Park Service has "approved the plan for apartments at the historic Campana Building on the border of Batavia and Geneva." Evergreen Real Estate Group has "submitted a zoning application with Batavia to renovate the former Campana factory for a mixed use, mixed-income development with 80 market-rate and income-restricted apartments."

US Geological Survey

Geology Gets Political As Federal Scientists Pursue New ANWR Oil Assessment.

KTOO-FM Juneau, AK (11/3, Harball) reports that as Democrats and Republicans spar over drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, David Houseknecht, who works for the U.S.

Geological Survey, is “trying to figure out two key questions: How much oil is in the Arctic Refuge, and where is it?” According to the article, “the answers could decide ANWR’s fate, no matter how the politics play out.” In Alaska giving a talk to an industry group, “Houseknecht wanted to make one thing clear right off the bat: he’s doesn’t like taking sides.” Houseknecht “explained coming up with a new estimate is a challenge — mainly because he doesn’t have much to work with.” He said, “In essence there’s nothing new there. We have not assessed or reassessed the ANWR area for 20 years because there’s no new data. We have no reason to think differently today than we did 20 years ago.” The Trump Administration is “making a controversial push to allow what’s called 3-D seismic testing in the Arctic Refuge’s coastal plain,” and “that could give geologists a clearer picture of how much oil might be there.” But “Houseknecht warned his audience that the results of that testing might not be what they’re hoping for.”

Opinion Pieces

Trump Is Leading The Most Corrupt Administration In U.S. History, One Of First-Class Kleptocrats.

A more than 4,400-word Newsweek (11/3, Nazaryan) analysis stated that while President Trump promised to “drain the swamp” during the campaign, “many observers believe the swamp has grown into a sinkhole that threatens to swallow the entire Trump administration.” According to Newsweek, “The number of White House officials currently facing questions, lawsuits or investigation is astonishing.” Zephyr Teachout, a Fordham University law professor who authored a book on corruption in the US, declared Trump’s “the most corrupt presidency and administration we’ve ever had” while presidential historian Robert Dallek argued “no American leader has acted with more unadulterated self-interest as Trump.” However, Newsweek acknowledged that “to supporters of the president, charges of corruption are being leveled with undue zeal by anti-Trump forces that will say or do anything to thwart the president’s agenda and lead to his removal from office.” Newsweek also outlined specific complaints against several cabinet members.

Our View: Cheers And Jeers.

The Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (11/4) gave a “jeer” to the Interior Department for failing to give enough assistance to stop the “spread of invasive mussels.” According to the paper, “despite their urgent requests,” governors in Western states are “being met by mostly platitudes from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s agency.” The paper says that “Zinke should recognize that most Western governors belong to the Republican Party of which he is also a member and could make significant trouble for the secretary should he continue to ignore their concerns.”

Don’t Delay The Methane Waste Rule.

In an op-ed for the Santa Fe New Mexican (11/4, Ulibarri), Rock Ulibarri, board chairman of Hispanics Enjoying Camping, Hunting and the Outdoors urges the Trump Administration to not “delay of the Bureau of Land Management methane waste rule, which protects public health, the environment and saves taxpayers millions.” Ulibarri writes that “this rule — which took six years to develop with a variety of stakeholder input — prevents more than $330 million worth of natural gas from being wasted on public and tribal lands from venting, flaring and leaking.”

Additional Reading.

- The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Should Not Be Open To Further Oil Exploration. The Hill (11/3, Lewis).
- As Wildfires Expand, Fire Science Needs To Keep Up. Conversation \(UK\). (11/5, Simeoni)
- PD Editorial: Fight Wildfires Without Gutting Conservation Rules. Santa Rosa \(CA\) Press Democrat (11/5).
- Trump’s Carbon Cowboy. Huffington Post (11/3, Brune).
- Pricing The Public Out Of The Parks. Huffington Post (11/3, Piraino).
- In Our View: Parks Should Be For All. Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (11/3).
- OUR VIEW: Speak Out On Massive Park Fee Hike. Peninsula \(WA\) Daily News (11/5).
- Rant & Rave: National Park Fee Hike, Bike-share Vandalism And Free Auto Repairs. Seattle Times (11/5).
- National Park Fee Increase Will Hurt Veterans. Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (11/4, Brickner).

- National Park Fee Hikes Will Hurt Users, Facilities. Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (11/5, Peck).
- Fee Hike Won't To Fix Parks Maintenance Backlog. Kitsap \(WA\) Sun (11/5, Blair).
- Trail Gazette Editorial – Fee Hike At Rocky A Bad Idea. Estes Park \(CO\) Trail-Gazette (11/3).
- 'This Land Is Your Land': If You Can Pay And Are White. Fergus Falls \(MN\) Journal (11/5, Kagan).
- Leveraging Taxpayer Funds To Improve Regional Parks. East Bay \(CA\) Times (11/5, Doyle).
- Protecting Sage-grouse Has Tidal Wave Of Benefits. Idaho State Journal (11/5, Brooks).
- Mille Lacs County Sues Feds To Get FOIA Response. Minneapolis Star Tribune (11/3, Shiffer).
- Consider Ratepayer As California WaterFix Costs Mount. Orange County \(CA\) Register (11/3).

Top National News

Trump Calls For Bilateral Trade Deal With Japan.

Coverage of President Trump's trip to Asia focuses mostly uncritically on his remarks on trade in Tokyo and on his earlier comments on North Korea. The AP (11/5, Lemire, Colvin) reports that Trump "opened his second day in Japan by pushing for stronger, more equitable economic ties." The AP says that Trump's "message to a group of American and Japanese business leaders" was that the US "was open for business, but he wanted to reshape the nations' trade relationship." Trump "rebuked the current relationship, saying the trade deals were 'not fair and not open,'" but "downplayed the potentially contentious nature of the negotiations, though the Japanese government has not shown much appetite for striking a new bilateral trade agreement."

The Los Angeles Times (11/5, Bennett) report that Trump "began day two Monday by telling Japanese business leaders" that Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "is 'a terrific person,' then assailed them for years of unfair trade." USA Today (11/5, Jackson) reports that Trump told the group, "I have to say, for the last many decades Japan has been winning – you know that." Trump "has threatened to seek changes in various US free trade deals," and Japan "in particular criticized Trump for pulling the United States from the proposed Trans-Pacific Partnership."

The Wall Street Journal (11/5, Bender) reports that in pressing for a bilateral trade deal, Trump offered few specifics on how to narrow the trade deficit with Japan, which totaled nearly $70 billion in 2016. Trump tweeted (11/5), "Heading into the 12 days with great negotiating strength because of our tremendous economy." Politico (11/5, Restuccia) reports that Trump also called on Japan to manufacture more cars in the US, saying, "Try building your cars in the United States instead of shipping them over."

The Los Angeles Times (11/5, Bennett) reports that on Sunday, Trump golfed with Abe, and "the Japanese leader surprised Trump with the sort of trucker hats Trump favors, embroidered in his preferred color – gold – and borrowing from Trump's signature slogan: 'Donald & Shinzo, Make Alliance Even Greater.'" The Japan Times (11/5, Osaki, Kikuchi) reports, "After nine holes, the two leaders were scheduled to enjoy a teppanyaki (iron-plate grill) steak dinner in Tokyo's glitzy Ginza district." Trump tweeted, "Playing golf with Prime Minister Abe and Hideki Matsuyama, two wonderful people!" David Nakamura of the Washington Post tweeted, "WH official said Trump and Abe talked a bit about trade and North Korea during their round but did not keep score."

Trump Does Not Bow In Greeting Emperor And Empress. The Daily Caller (11/5, Pickrell) reports that when Trump met Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko on Monday morning, he "opted for a strong handshake over a bow. ... Although the president's actions differed from those of his predecessor, the greeting passed without incident."

Trump Warns North Korea Not To "Underestimate" US Resolve. Earlier coverage focused on the President's remarks about North Korea. On ABC World News Tonight (11/5, story 5, 3:15, Llamas), Jonathan Karl reported, "In a speech to US troops at the American air base near Tokyo, [Trump] set the tone for a trip where the North Korea threat will be issue number one." Trump: "No one, no dictator, no regime, and no nation should underestimate, ever, American resolve. We dominate the sky. We dominate the sea. We dominate the land and space."

On the CBS Weekend News (11/5, story 2, 2:10, Quijano), Margaret Brennan reported, "The warning to North Korea was unmistakable. ... In recent months, North Korea has launched two ballistic missiles over its territory. Unity was the message" as Abe "warmly embraced Mr. Trump, presenting him with campaign-style baseball caps that said 'Donald and Shinzo Make Alliance Even Greater.'" The two leaders then played nine holes of golf, while their wives had tea and went shopping for pearls at a high end boutique." On NBC Nightly News (11/5, story 3, 1:35, Snow), Kelly O'Donnell said, "Of course, North Korea is on the agenda, along with meetings with Asian leaders" and Putin.

The AP (11/5, Lemire, Colvin) reports, "Trump has delivered harsh denunciations of the renegade North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, belittling him as 'Little Rocket Man' and threatening to rain 'fire and fury' on his country if the belligerence continues. But Trump also has begun highlighting the plight of the North Koreans." He told reporters on Air Force One, "I think they're great people. They're industrious. They're warm, much warmer than the world really knows or understands." USA Today (11/5, Jackson) reports that Trump intends to "try to persuade China and other nations to cut economic ties to North Korea, thereby pressuring" Kim "to give up nuclear weapons."

Chris Wallace said on Fox News Sunday (11/5) that Trump "is two days into the longest and most crucial diplomatic trip of his presidency." He is meeting allies in Asia with the hope to "rally support against a nuclear armed North Korea." The main agenda items involve "how to put more pressure on North Korea to drop its nuclear weapons program." Major Garrett, who is traveling with the President, said on CBS' Face The Nation (11/5, Dickerson) that "North Korea will assuredly dominate all the President's conversations here in Asia."

The Washington Post (11/5, Nakamura, Parker) reports, "Trump told reporters that he plans to decide 'very soon' whether to relabel North Korea a state sponsor of terrorism." But he "also offered encouragement for North Korean citizens, calling them 'great people.'" The Washington Times (11/5, Boyer) reports that Trump "told US service members in Japan on Sunday that 'no dictator' should underestimate America's military power and determination." David Andelman writes in his USA Today (11/5) column, "For a nation like Japan, which has feared Trump's expectation that he wants every ally to do more for its own defense, those words about US strength could be read as reassuring. But they could be frightening for South Korea."

The Guardian \(UK\) (11/5, McCurry) reports that Trump "has indicated that he would be prepared to meet" Kim "at some point, though he said it was still 'far too early' for a one-to-one conversation with his adversary." He said in an interview, "I don't think it's strength or weakness, I think sitting down with people is not a bad thing."

Michael Shear of the New York Times said on CNN's Inside Politics (11/5) that North Korea is a problem that is "immune to some of the personal relationship-building that the President has done. So while he gets high marks for some of these relationships with the Japanese prime minister, with the president of China, the North Korean problem is not going to be solved by a couple of rounds of golf." But Kenneth Weinstein of the Hudson Institute writes in the Wall Street Journal (11/5) that Trump is rightly looking to China to aid in dealing with Kim.

Trump Reportedly Said "Samurai" Japan Should Have Shot Down North Korean Missiles. The Japan Times (11/5) reports that Trump "has said Japan should have shot down the North Korean missiles that flew over the country" earlier this year, according to "diplomatic sources." Trump "questioned Japan's decision not to shoot down the missiles when he met or spoke by phone with leaders from Southeast Asian countries over recent months," and "said he could not understand why a country of samurai warriors did not shoot down the missiles."

Trump Expects To Meet With Putin. The Wall Street Journal (11/5, Bender) reports that Trump said he expects to meet with Russian President Vladimir Putin during the trip. Trump said, "It's expected we'll meet with Putin, yeah. We want Putin's help on North Korea, and we'll be meeting with a lot of different leaders." The New York Times (11/5, Davis) reports that the meeting would happen on the sideline of the upcoming Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit in Da Nang, Vietnam.

Russian activist Garry Kasparov tweeted, "'Putin's help on North Korea?! How, by asking Kim Jong-un to return all of the Russian nuke and missile technology he's been giving him?'"

Corker Declines To Comment On Trip. The Washington Post (11/5, Sullivan) reports that Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Bob Corker, who has been at odds with Trump, was "resolutely mum when asked about President Trump's upcoming trip to Asia" and other issues. Corker said, "I have no desire to enter into, you know, 24/7, you know, disagreement. When I have strong disagreements, I'm going to express them strongly."

Significance Of "Indo-Pacific" Terminology Examined. Jonathan Swan of Axios (11/5) writes about "the Trump administration's revealing decision to rename the 'Asia-Pacific' as the 'Indo-Pacific.'" Veteran Asia correspondent Richard McGregor said, "The US is now entrenching new language for America's role in the Asia. ... That attempts to bring India permanently into the US web of alliances and partnerships in the region. And it is the precursor to the new partnership – 'the quad' – which will bring together the US, Japan, India and Australia."

Josh Rogin writes in the Washington Post (11/5), "After months of what officials and Asia experts saw as a somewhat disjointed and contradictory approach to Asia's rising power, officials say the administration is coalescing around a strategy that will attempt to define the Indo-Pacific chessboard on America's terms."

NYTimes: Trump "Arrives In Asia As A Wounded Leader." The New York Times (11/5) editorializes, "As President Trump undertakes his first official trip to Asia, American leadership and credibility are in doubt. Leaders in the region worry that his inflammatory statements and impulsiveness could lead to war with North Korea. And there is a serious debate in many Asian countries about whether the future lies in closer partnerships with China, the ascendant power," or with the US. Trump "arrives in Asia as a wounded leader, with low ratings at home and a stalled legislative agenda, and dogged by revelations of Russian interference" in the 2016 election. Asian nations "want and need America to serve as a democratic counterweight to China." Trump's trip "will reveal whether he can rise to this challenge."

Trump Praises Japan As "Treasured Partner And Crucial Ally" At Yokota Air Base.

The AP (11/5, Lemire, Colvin) reports as President Trump landed at Yokota Air Base near Tokyo, he "was greeted by cheering service members," and in a speech "touted American firepower and the U.S. alliance with Japan." Trump said, "Japan is a treasured partner and crucial ally of the United States and today we thank them for welcoming us and for decades of wonderful friendship between our two nations." He is "expected to spend much of his 12-day, five-country Asian tour exhorting allies and rivals to step up efforts to counter the dangers posed by North Korea." Following his remarks, Trump went to the Kasumigaseki Country Club "for lunch and a round of golf with Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and Japanese golfer Hideki Matsuyama."

Bloomberg News (11/4, Sink) reports the President "warned nations against challenging the U.S. as he rallied American troops in Japan" at Yokota Air Base. Trump said, "We dominate the sky, we dominate the sea, we dominate the land and space." He added, "No one – no dictator, no regime and no nation – should underestimate ever American resolve." He also "called Japan a 'treasured partner and crucial ally.'" The Los Angeles Times (11/4, Bennett) reports Trump "described the troops as the 'last bulwarks' against threats from 'tyrants and dictators who prey on the innocent.'"

The AP (11/5, Lemire, Colvin) reports the visit with Abe began, "with a round of golf, a custom cap and a hamburger of American beef." The AP called it "an effusive display of friendship that...will give way to high-stakes diplomacy." Trump said before dinner, "The relationship is really extraordinary. We like each other and our countries like each other."

AP Analysis: Japanese Trip To Focus On North Korea, Trade, Abductions, And Golf. The AP (11/4) reports on President Trump's visit to Japan, saying that he and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "will meet on the golf course Sunday before holding formal talks on Monday." The visit is expected to focus on North Korea, trade, abductions of Japanese by North Korea, and golf.

AP Analysis: Asian Trip "A Crucial International Test" For Trump. The AP (11/4, Lemire) reports President Trump is "ready to exhort Asian allies and rivals on the need to counter the dangers posed by North Korea's nuclear threat." The AP adds that the trip is "the longest Far East itinerary for a president in a generation." The AP calls it "a crucial international test" given the difficulties facing Asia, and says the President's "spontaneous, and at times reckless, style flies in the face of the generations-old traditions and protocol that govern diplomatic exchanges in Asia."

McMaster To Accompany Trump At Every Stop On Asia Trip. In a look at who is traveling to Asia with President Trump, and who is not, the AP (11/4, Lemire) writes that National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster, "the target of a far-right attack campaign over the summer, has been instrumental in organizing the trip. A three-star general, McMaster has declared that 'there is a military option' that could be used against the nuclear threat posed by North Korea."

The New York Times (11/4, Landler) writes, "The staffing of any major presidential trip is an exercise in internal politics – sometimes byzantine – as the White House parcels out coveted seats on Air Force One. But the Trump administration's staffing of this trip is drawing particular scrutiny from those seeking clues about who's up or down, and what message the president is trying to send to allies and adversaries." The President will "be backed by a full complement of national security advisers." McMaster "will accompany the president on every stop," as will Secretary of State Tillerson.

CNN (11/4, Diamond, Collinson) reports on its website that North Korea will be a key issue on the trip, and as McMaster "warned [this week], the clock is ticking. CNN learned earlier this week that North Korea is working on an advanced version of its existing KN-20 intercontinental ballistic missiles that could potentially reach the United States, and it is entirely possible that next year, Pyongyang could master the technology to tip such a missile with a miniaturized warhead."

In his New York Times (11/4) column, Nicholas Kristof writes that ex-CIA Director John Brennan "estimates the chance of a war with North Korea at 20 to 25 percent," while Joel Wit of Johns Hopkins University "puts it at 40 percent" and Richard Haass of the Council on Foreign Relations "says the odds may be somewhere around 50/50." Kristof quotes McMaster's recent remarks: "Our president has been really clear about this. He is not going to permit this rogue regime, Kim Jong-un, to threaten the United States with a nuclear weapon. And so he is willing to do anything necessary to prevent that from happening."

Media Analyses: North Korea To Dominate Focus Of Trump's Asia Trip.

President Trump left the US on Friday to begin a 12-day trip that will include stops in five Asian countries. While the CBS Evening News was the sole network newscast to mention the trip, the cable newscasts and many print analyses highlighted that the visit is expected to focus on stopping North Korea's nuclear program and discussions about putting country-to-country trade agreements in place of regional ones. However, coverage of the trip was overshadowed by the developments in the investigation into alleged Russian collusion, with most outlets portraying Trump's departing remarks as an attempt to detract attention away from the probe.

The CBS Evening News' (11/3, story 5, 0:45, Mason) Chip Reid briefly reported, "The President will be in Hawaii this evening, the first stop on that trip to Asia," which will focus on "North Korea and its nuclear weapons." Fox News' Special Report (11/3, 6:09 p.m. EDT, Baier) correspondent Kristin Fisher similarly reported North Korea will be Trump's top priority, "and he will be leaning on the leaders of Japan, South Korea, Vietnam, the Philippines, and most importantly, China, to put more pressure on Pyongyang." Fox News' Special Report (11/3, 6:51 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Trump, who said before boarding Air Force One, "We will be talking about trade. We will be talking obviously about North Korea. We will be enlisting the help of a lot of people and countries. We will see what happens. But I think we are going to have a very successful trip. There's a lot of goodwill."

The Washington Post (11/3, Nakamura, Taylor) reports the President's visit to Asia, "the longest overseas trip of any president since George H.W. Bush in 1991," comes "as the once unthinkable has become a palpable concern from Tokyo to Seoul to Beijing – a war with a nuclear-armed North Korea." According to the Post, "Trump's trip – with bilateral visits to Japan, South Korea and China and stops at regional summits in Vietnam and the Philippines – could go a long way toward determining the success of his administration's policy." However, the Post concedes "Trump's escalating rhetoric and Pyongyang's accelerating weapons programs have set the region on edge and prompted national security adviser H.R. McMaster to declare this week that the world is 'running out of time' to stop the North."

The Wall Street Journal (11/3, Bender) reports McMaster added that "the president's trip will focus on three goals: First, strengthening international resolve to denuclearize North Korea," followed by promoting a "free and open Indo-Pacific Region" and seeking "fair and reciprocal trade." In an interview with NHK \(JPN\) (11/3), McMaster "said Trump will help pull the curtain back on what kind of regime North Korea is." McMaster also said the US may increase military pressure on the North. Mentioning "that the US is currently deploying 3 aircraft carriers in the Western Pacific region," McMaster said the carriers symbolize America's aim of ensuring "the North Korean regime knows that any aggression on its part will be met with an overwhelming response." McMaster also stressed that the US will continue to share information with Japan in case of an emergency, and "said the 2 countries completely agree on how to assess security threats by the North and others, and how to respond to the threats to protect people."

International Business Times (11/3, Pignataro) reports that according to McMaster, the President is not expected "to tamp down on his explosive rhetoric against North Korea during the trip." Breitbart (11/3, Spiering) similarly reports that "White House aides cautioned that Trump would be frank with leaders during his visit on the threat posed by North Korea." McMaster said Thursday: "The president will use whatever language he wants to use, obviously." McMaster added, "I don't think the president really modulates his language. Have you noticed him do that?"

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times (11/3, Bierman) describes Trump's fourth foreign trip as president as "perhaps the toughest test yet of his acumen on a world stage before foreign leaders skeptical of his leadership, confused by his mixed messages and worried about his impulsive behavior." The Times adds "Asia trips are famously grueling, given the long flights and time difference," and warns "missteps could set off unintended consequences, especially considering Trump's past war of words with North Korea's Kim and that regime's propensity to rattle its neighbors with nuclear and missile tests."

Bloomberg News (11/3, Scott, Hunter) says the trip “provides Trump an opportunity to look presidential and talk tough about North Korea’s Kim Jong Un,” but it “isn’t without peril for a commander-in-chief known for off-the-cuff pronouncements and awkward encounters with world leaders.” In addition, AFP (11/3, Beatty) reports that Trump’s trip comes loaded with “heavy domestic baggage,” including “a trail of invective and scandal that risks overshadowing efforts at top-level diplomacy.”

The AP (11/3, Colvin) reports the President is also “being pulled in different directions as he heads to Asia on a grueling 12-day trip.” The AP says Trump’s “loyal supporters are eager to hear him take a hard line on the Chinese trade and economic practices he railed against as a candidate,” but “many” Administration officials “are pushing Trump to sweep those concerns aside as he works to pressure China’s Xi Jinping to tighten the screws on North Korea.” In a second article, the AP (11/3, Talmadge, Kurtenbach, Gomez) reports “security and trade will loom large during” the trip while the South China Sea is another “trouble spot where Trump can showcase American leadership and commitment to the region in a high-profile way. Or display a lack of both.”

Leading the second hour of CNN’s Situation Room (11/3, 6:00 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), host Wolf Blitzer said Trump was “on the attack as he heads towards Asia with lots of baggage from the Russia investigation.” Kristin Fisher of Fox News’ Special Report (11/3, 6:10 p.m. EDT, Baier) likewise said that President Trump departed Friday for his tour of Asia, “leaving behind the growing cloud of the special counsel’s investigation, which continued to seep its way into the West Wing this week.” Adding to “his frustrations with the Justice Department, President Trump has also been very critical of the State Department. He slashed its budget, refused to fill vacancies, and undercut its Secretary for trying to working with North Korea.”

According to McClatchy (11/3, Kumar), Trump’s trip “may offer him some much-desired respite from the turmoil engulfing his White House. And for a president who has always gotten along better with autocratic leaders than democratically elected ones, he’s headed to the right place.” McClatchy adds that unlike his predecessors who would criticize foreign leaders over their human rights record, the President “shares some of the ideals of autocratic leaders and has voiced admiration for their strength.” Politico (11/3, Schwartz) says that ahead of Trump’s first visit to China, “reporters are wondering whether he will set aside his war on the media and stick up for First Amendment principles – or let a country notoriously hostile to free speech run roughshod over the American press.”

However, the New York Times (11/3, A1, Sang-Hun, Rich) reports on its front-page that as South Korean President Moon Jae-in “prepares to host Mr. Trump’s first visit to South Korea, he finds himself caught in a bind, compelled by the White House and conservatives at home to support hard-line policies that he once criticized – and that many of his supporters worry are dragging their nation to the brink of war.” The Times adds “South Korea is more accustomed to belligerence from Pyongyang than Washington, and there is widespread concern that Mr. Trump may make matters worse when he arrives next week.” The Washington Post (11/3, Fifield, Taylor) similarly contrasts Trump’s warm relationship with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe with his more tense relationship with Moon in an article titled “As Japan Buddies Up To Trump, South Korea Frets It’s Being Disrespected.”

Trump To Attend East Asia Summit. Reuters (11/3, Mason, Brice) reports Trump on Friday told reporters “he would spend an extra day in the Philippines during his trip to Asia, which the White House confirmed would be to attend the East Asia Summit.” He said, “We’re actually staying an extra day in the Philippines. We have a big conference, the second conference, and I think we’re going to have great success.” The New York Times (11/3, Landler) reports White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders confirmed the President’s attendance at the “meeting of leaders from Australia, Japan, China, Russia and other countries that his predecessor, President Barack Obama, had made a priority.” The Times says “Trump’s earlier decision to skip the meeting had rattled officials in the region, who warned that it would raise questions about the United States’ commitment to Southeast Asia.”

Trump Receives Briefing In Hawaii En Route To Asia. The Los Angeles Times (11/3, Kaleem) reports Hawaii Gov. David Ige welcomed the President at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam, where “about 100 supporters – a mix of military service members and civilians – cheered the president and First Lady, who were given traditional Hawaiian leis upon arrival.” According to the Times, “large crowds of anti-Trump protesters were expected to demonstrate on the streets as the president makes his way to sites around the city before sleeping at the Ritz-Carlton hotel in tourist-heavy Waikiki.”

Martha MacCallum of Fox News’ Special Report (11/3, 6:12 p.m. EDT, Baier), reporting from Pearl Harbor, said "the first and very important briefing of the trip will be when he sits down at PACCOM, the Pacific Command, which oversees essentially 50 percent of the globe and 36 countries under its naval and military jurisdiction." MacCallum said it is unclear whether Trump will discuss the "several military incidents that have been problematic" this year. She stressed "this is an area of the world that is very much at the read., and it's the sphere of our military defense, protecting the whole west coast of the United States and our capabilities beyond." MacCallum added that Trump will then "take in the enormity of that moving experience" at the USS Arizona in Pearl Harbor. She said the experience "will be very much on the President's mind as he begins this trip."

US-Russia Discuss Possible Trump-Putin Meeting. The New York Times (11/3, Macfarquhar) reports "talks are underway to arrange a second meeting between President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia and President Trump on the sidelines of an Asian economic summit meeting next week in Vietnam, the Kremlin said on Friday." Dmitri Peskov, the spokesman for Putin, told reporters on Friday that a meeting at the Asian Pacific Economic Cooperation summit meeting in Danang, Vietnam "is indeed being discussed." He added, "It is hard to overestimate the importance and significance of any contact between the president of Russia and the United States for all international matters."

However, the Washington Post (11/3, Filipov) reports "there is scant optimism in Russia that face-to-face talks will yield any breakthroughs on the long list of issues that divide Washington and Moscow." According to the Post, "sanctions against Russia, tensions in Syria, the threat of military conflict in North Korea and the stalemate over Ukraine top the litany of seemingly intractable differences in the U.S.-Russia relationship. Looming above it all is the sense in Moscow that the closer special counsel Robert S. Mueller III comes to Trump's inner circle in his investigation into alleged Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election, the less likely the U.S. president will be to try to reverse the downward spiral with Russia."

On CNN's Situation Room (11/3, 6:13 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Rep. Ted Lieu said in light of the Russia investigation, "it would be a horrible idea" for Trump to meet with Russian President Vladimir Putin during his tour of Asia. He reiterated, "Putin is not our ally, our friend," and Trump "should not take these actions by meeting with Putin. He should be imposing sanctions on Russia, which he's already weeks behind the deadline." On whether Secretary Tillerson will remain in the Administration, Lieu speculated, "We'll see." He added, "The President is making Rex Tillerson's job very difficult. When Rex Tillerson was trying to engage in diplomacy with North Korea," Trump tweeted "that was a waste of time. The problem is when the President does that publicly, he undercut it is credibility of Rex Tillerson. So now when he talks to leaders and members of Congress, we don't know who he's speaking with."

North Korea Condemns "Surprise" US Air Force Exercise Over Korean Peninsula. The AP (11/3, Tong-Hyung) reports an official with the South Korean military said Friday that two US B-1B bombers escorted by two South Korean F-16 fighter jets on Thursday "flew over the Korean Peninsula for bombing exercises that are also a show of force against North Korea ahead of President Donald Trump's first official visit to Asia." USA Today (11/3, Onyanga-Omara) reports North Korea in response "accused the 'gangster-like' United States of staging a 'surprise nuclear strike drill.'"

Brian Todd of CNN's Situation Room (11/3, 5:51 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported "military and intelligence officials are bracing for a possible provocation from" North Korean leader Kim Jong-un during the President's tour of Asia. He explained the American B-1 bombers, joined by Japanese and South Korean fighter jets, flew near the Korean Peninsula. Todd said these "are the weapons that experts say would play key roles in any strikes on North Korea. These maneuvers bring a swift brush back from Kim Jong-un's regime," which believes the US may be staging a surprise nuclear strike drill targeting the nation. As such, "commanders and intelligence agencies from Washington to Pyongyang are jittery because of so many potential provocations coming so close to the President's trip." South Korean lawmakers have also warned "another North Korean missile test could be imminent because they sighted movement of vehicles around a missile research facility in Pyongyang."

US Officials "Deeply Skeptical" About Yun's Chances For Diplomacy. Reuters (11/3, Spetalnick, Mohammed, Shin) reports "interviews with more than a dozen current and former U.S. officials and South Korean diplomats" found "most were deeply skeptical" of US Special Representative for North Korea Policy Joseph Yun, who "might be Washington's best diplomatic hope for reducing the risk of a devastating war on the Korean peninsula, he serves an administration riven by divisions over how to handle Pyongyang." Reuters says one White House dismissed Yun "with a note of sarcasm," calling him "such a dreamer," while another US official said, "We don't think this is going anywhere."

Former North Korean Diplomat Does Not View Trump's North Korea Rhetoric As Reckless. The Atlantic (11/2, Friedman) reports "Thae Yong Ho, one of the highest-ranking officials ever to defect from North Korea, doesn't agree with those who argue that Donald Trump is recklessly tempting war by threatening and taunting Kim Jong Un." While Thae stands by "one of the arguments he often made as a diplomat: that North Korean leaders think of nuclear weapons in defensive terms – as a means of deterring foreign, and particularly American, military intervention --" he also "stressed" that Kim "knows well that once he uses his nuclear weapons against America or South Korea, then that could end up with the total destruction of the North Korean [political] system." Still, North Korea can still leverage its weapons advancements "to go on the offensive militarily and pursue its dream of reunifying the Korean peninsula under the North's control," Thae argued, "echoing a point that Trump administration officials like National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster have made."

Royce Urges Trump To Add North Korea As State Sponsor Of Terrorism. The Washington Times (11/3, Taylor) reports House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Ed Royce late Thursday called on "the White House to add North Korea to Washington's official state sponsors of terrorism list before President Trump arrives in East Asia over the weekend on an 11-day tour of the region." Royce said, "There is simply no reason for further delay of this decision. ... I urge the administration to take quick action."

Analysts Examine Role Of Kim Jong-Un's Wife On Regime. Brian Todd of CNN's Situation Room (11/3, 6:56 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said according to some analysts, recent images of Kim Jong-un's wife, Ri Sol-ju, signal that "there's some stability inside the regime now," and that the North Korean leader may be trying to portray a softer image. Todd outlined some new information about Ri's "powerful connections" and "mysteries surrounding the couple's children."

Poll Finds Large Majority Of Americans Believe Trump "Really Willing" To Use Military Force Against North Korea. The Hill (11/3, Anapol) reports a new survey from the Pew Research Center of 1,504 "adults" (10/25-10/30) found 88 percent of Republicans and 83 percent of Democrats "think the president is 'really willing' to use military force against" North Korea. The Hill states that the survey "also showed an increased concern about North Korea's willingness to use military force against the U.S., with 71 percent saying the U.S. should take North Korea's nuclear threats 'very seriously,' a 15-point increase from 2013." However, The Hill adds "only 9 percent of Democratic and Democratic-leaning respondents said they are at least somewhat confident in Trump's ability to handle North Korea, while 80 percent of Republicans and Republican leaners said they were confident in the president."

USA Today Profiles Camp Humphreys Ahead Of Trump Visit. USA Today (11/3, Maresca, Today) reports Camp Humphreys, "the U.S. military's newest and largest overseas base for 26,000 soldiers, family members and civilians is finally humming with activity – and buzzing about the growing threat from nearby North Korea." According to USA Today, the new headquarters of the Eighth Army is 40 miles south of Camp Yongsan in Seoul "and about 60 miles from the Demilitarized Zone that divides North and South Korea," which puts Camp Humphreys "about twice as far from North Korea as its predecessor, one of the main reasons for the move." USA Today notes "President Trump is scheduled to visit this $10.7 billion, 3,500-acre base in the city of Pyeongtaek during his stop in South Korea on Nov. 5-8."

Ivanka Trump Promotes Value Of Women In Economy In Tokyo Address. Bloomberg News (11/2, Buckland) reports Ivanka Trump "lauded the Japanese government's efforts to increase female workforce participation during a speech in Tokyo on Friday, giving a high-profile boost to Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's 'Womenomics' initiative." She asserted, "Womenomics recognizes the centrality of women, who represent roughly half of our global population, in achieving true economic growth." She added, "When women work, it creates a unique multiplier effect: women are more likely than men to hire other women, to give them access to capital, mentorship and networks." Reuters (11/3, Wilson) reports Ivanka Trump also argued "the world must boost women and minority participation in the fields of science, technology, engineering and maths (STEM)." She said, "Female and minority participation in STEM fields is moving in the wrong direction."

The Washington Post (11/2, Fifield) reports the Japanese government hopes her "much-anticipated speech...will make waves." The Post describes her address as a "double-whammy win for Prime Minister Shinzo Abe" because "he gets a high-profile speaker for one of his key initiatives – and one that has failed to bear any other fruit" while also allowing him to "curry more favor with Donald Trump just two days before he arrives in Tokyo on his first trip to Japan as president." However, the Post acknowledges that "despite all the hype, the hall where Trump spoke was barely half full," and the New York Times (11/3, Rich) says "the lukewarm turnout on Friday morning contrasted with the breathless coverage of her visit by the Japanese news media, which followed Ms. Trump's every move around Tokyo and treated her landing at Narita International Airport and dinner at a luxurious restaurant on Thursday night as major news." According to Josh Raffel, a White House spokesman, Ivanka Trump's speech "was the most registered event" at the conference, "but security delayed everyone from being able to get into the room on time."

Families Of Japanese Abducted By North Korea Looking Forward To Trump Putting Spotlight On Plight. "Four decades ago, according to the Japanese government, at least 17 Japanese citizens vanished at the hands of North Korea, leaving their families with precious little information," the New York Times (11/3, Rich) reports, and now President Trump "plans to press the cause, meeting during a visit to Japan starting Sunday with several of the affected families, including the parents of Megumi Yokota, abducted by North Korea in 1977 when she was just 13 years old." The Times says that in Japan, "the tragic disappearances strike a deeper emotional chord than the fear of ballistic missile attacks, and have resonance akin to that of the fate of American P.O.W.'s during the Vietnam War."

Chinese Official Rejects Blame For US Opioid Crisis. The New York Times (11/3, Wee) reports Wei Xiaojun, deputy director of the narcotics control bureau at the Chinese Ministry of Public Security, "disputed the assertion that China was largely to blame" for the opioid crisis in the US. While Trump last week "said that he would raise the issue of 'the flood of cheap and deadly fentanyl' made in China as a top priority in his meeting with President Xi Jinping on Wednesday," the Times states that Wei asserted, "'based on the intelligence and evidence shared' between the countries, there is no reason to conclude that 'a large portion' of the fentanyl and similar substances in America comes from China." However, the Times adds Wei "acknowledged at a news conference that 'China does not reject, nor does it deny, that there's truth' that some drugs abused by Americans – especially fentanyl, a very powerful synthetic opioid – come from China." The Wall Street Journal (11/3, Areddy, Dou) reports Wei also criticized the US for rushing to judgment against Chinese nationals recently indicted for distributing fentanyl, especially since the country is cooperating with US efforts to stop the drug trade.

Chinese Media Praises Kelly For Remarks On Communism. Breitbart (11/3, Martel) reports the Global Times \(CHN\) is praising White House Chief of Staff Kelly "for stating in an interview that the repressive communist system 'has apparently worked for the Chinese people.'" Breitbart adds that "the article urges those who decry China for its rampant human rights abuses, violations of international law, and consistent belligerence against its neighbors to abandon a 'Cold War mentality' against Beijing."

Taiwan President Visits Guam During Pacific Tour. Reuters (11/3, Maratita) reports Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen on Friday arrived in Guam at the conclusion of a trip "visiting diplomatic allies in the Pacific – a trip that caused strong objections from China, which claims Taiwan as its own." Reuters notes that China "had urged the United States not to allow Tsai to transit its territory on her trip, which included two days in Hawaii before she headed on to Tuvalu, the Solomon Islands and the Marshall Islands." Reuters adds that "the timing is particularly touchy" given Trump's visit to Beijing next week. However, while Reuters says Guam Governor Edward Calvo's office "described Tsai's visit as 'private and unofficial,' she was provided with a police escort upon her arrival."

WSJournal: Trump Must Demonstrate US Commitment To Asia. The Wall Street Journal (11/3) editorializes that for President Trump's trip to Asia to be considered a success, he must reassure American allies that the US stands with them against common threats, including North Korea's nuclear program and China's aggressive behavior in the region.

Paulson: Trump Needs To Challenge Xi On America's Interests During Visit. In a Washington Post (11/3, Paulson) op-ed, former Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson Jr. asserts President Trump "should be strategic and forceful in defense of America's industries of the future" when he meets with Chinese President Xi Jinping, who "drags his feet at his own peril because the United States and others are reexamining their open-door policies and demanding greater reciprocity in China." According to Paulson, "Xi's new consolidation of power – and ability to use it now to get difficult things done – means Trump may have a greater opportunity on his trip to achieve breakthroughs in the security and economic arenas."

CFR President Concerned By Trump's Comments On Tillerson, US Approach To North Korea. Reuters (11/3) reports that in an interview with Fox News' Laura Ingraham on Thursday, President Trump "said he was unsure whether his top diplomat, Rex Tillerson, would remain in his post for the rest of Trump's term in the White House and was 'not happy' that some State Department staff were not supporting his agenda." Trump "said he alone determines U.S. foreign policy. 'The one that matters is me,' Trump said. 'I'm the only one that matters because, when it comes to it, that's what the policy is going to be.'" Council of Foreign Relations President Richard Haass believes Trump's comments indicate trouble not just for Tillerson but for overall foreign policy.

CNN's Situation Room (11/3, 6:44 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) also broadcast segments of Trump's interview.

House Republicans Revise Tax Bill Into "Less Generous" Version.

The AP (11/3, Gordon, Taylor) reports House Republicans on Friday "quietly made changes to their far-reaching tax overhaul: Now its tax cuts would be less generous for many Americans." In particular, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady "released a revised version of the bill that would impose a new, lower-inflation 'chained CPI' adjustment for tax brackets immediately instead of in 2023," which "means more income would be taxed at higher rates over time – and less generous tax cuts for individuals and families." In a statement, Brady said the updated bill represents "pro-growth tax reform that will deliver more jobs, fairer taxes, and bigger paychecks for people across our country."

A front-page Washington Post (11/3, A1, Debonis) article reports Brady said Friday that President Trump has been "pushing Republican leaders in Congress to make a major and potentially explosive change to their tax bill, directing them to use the legislation to begin dismantling the Affordable Care Act." Brady "said Trump has personally requested he include repeal of the mandate – the health law's chief mechanism to compel Americans to become insured and to keep the insurance market stable." Speaking at an event hosted by Politico, Brady said Trump "feels very strongly about including this at some step before the final process. ... He's told me that twice by phone and once in person. ... And members have as well." However, the Post adds "Brady hinted Friday he was not inclined to introduce a new complication into the 400-plus-page bill, which was introduced Thursday after months of negotiations."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (11/3, Rubin) reports that although the bill's family tax credit expires at the end of 2022, Brady asserted it "will never go away" as future lawmakers would act to extend the tax break.

House Republicans "Bullish" On Passage Of Tax Reform Bill. According to The Hill (11/3, Jagoda, Wong), House Republicans on Friday also "appeared bullish they would soon pass the first overhaul of the U.S. tax system in more than three decades." Rep. Kevin Cramer told The Hill that passage is "a layup," Rep. Tom Cole said, "I think at the end of the day, we're not going to lose very many members," and Rep. Dave Brat, a member of the House Freedom Caucus, asserted, "Leadership did a great job on this thing. ... It's pro-growth, there's middle-class tax cuts for real."

Cohn: Tax Cuts Will Not Be Retroactive, Will Benefit Economy. Reuters (11/3, Brice) reports National Economic Council Director Cohn in an interview with Fox Business Network on Friday said the tax reform plan "would not make adjustments retroactive...despite calls from U.S. lawmakers who want cuts to apply to 2017 as the party aims to pass the bill by year's end." Cohn asserted, "We're trying to deliver great tax reform to the American public. We can't get it retroactive to this year. We're trying to do a tax plan that starts on Jan. 1 of next year."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (11/3, Smialek) reports Cohn, speaking on Bloomberg Television, "said the time is ripe for a fiscal boost to the U.S. economy, disagreeing with" Goldman Sachs CEO Lloyd Blankfein, "the man who was his boss for more than a decade at Goldman Sachs Group Inc." Cohn said, "If you looked at today's employment data report, you've had no wage growth. ... Our tax plan is designed to create wage growth."

Schumer: GOP Tax Bill Resembles A "Dead Fish." The Washington Times (11/3, Sherfinski) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer on Friday "likened the House GOP's newly unveiled tax legislation to a 'dead fish' and said it represents a 'betrayal' to middle class families throughout the country." Schumer added, "The more people learn about this bill, the less they're going to like it."

Lewandowski To Promote Tax Plan For Ad Campaign. Bloomberg News (11/3, McCormick) reports "the White House-sanctioned America First Policies" has announced "plans to spend about $1 million on ads promoting the Republican tax proposal and will feature the president's first campaign manager, Corey Lewandowski, as its pitchman." According to Bloomberg, the television and online campaign "is an initial down payment on what the group says will be a multimillion-dollar effort it hopes will help the president and Republicans score their first major legislative win." Bloomberg adds "the new ads, scheduled to start Friday and run for about a week, are set to appear on Fox News Channel and on local cable in five congressional districts represented by lawmakers who opposed a budget resolution that was a precursor to the tax legislation."

Tax Reform Bill Prompts Lobbying Frenzy. The New York Times (11/3, Tankersley, Kaplan, Vogel) reports the release of the tax reform bill on Thursday has "set off a scramble among lobbyists and interest groups desperate to preserve prized tax breaks that are suddenly at risk in the sweeping bill moving through the House." However, the Times says that "the ability of K Street to prevent longstanding tax provisions from getting the ax is running headfirst into Republicans' own mad dash as they attempt to quickly pass the tax rewrite and get it to President Trump's desk by Christmas."

Although the legislation is opposed by private-equity firms, the Wall Street Journal (11/3, Gottfried) says the bill could have been harsher toward the industry. The New York Times (11/3, Hsu) also reports the measure would preserve "the so-called carried-interest provision," which is "a loophole that benefits hedge funds, private-equity funds and other investment managers, despite President Trump's campaign promises to eliminate it." According to the Times, the provision "is beloved by, and hugely valuable to, private-equity and other Wall Street investors."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (11/3, Rappeport) reports the commercial real estate industry "appears to have emerged from the Republican tax rewrite relatively unscathed." The Times says that if passed, "developers like Mr. Trump, who made much of his fortune building skyscrapers, hotels and resorts, will have little to worry about."

Tax Foundation Analysis Finds New Tax Cuts Do Not Fully Pay For Themselves. Bloomberg News (11/3, Wasson) reports that according to the Tax Foundation, "the House tax plan does not pay for itself through growth, and more income benefits flow to the top 1 percent than to other groups in its first year." The study found "the bill would lower federal revenue by $1.98 trillion over 10 years – before accounting for any economic growth it would produce. ... But accounting for growth would trim that 10-year revenue loss to $989 billion." The Tax Foundation also determined "over the long run, the bill's changes would lead to a 3.9 percent higher gross domestic product, would create 975,000 full-time equivalent jobs and would lead to wages that are 3.1 percent higher."

WSJournal A1: GOP Tax Bill Places Importance On Path To Wealth, Not Sum Of Riches. The Wall Street Journal (11/3, A1, Rubin) in a front-page article outlines how the House Republican tax bill will benefit employers rather than individuals. Rep. Chris Collins acknowledged this disparity, saying, "If you earn your income as a doctor, a lawyer, an architect, you're not getting anything. ... But you're not supposed to get anything – that's how you earn your income. It wasn't intended to lower the tax rate for a doctor, a lawyer or an architect. It was intended to lower the rate for manufacturing companies making widgets and employing other people."

Poll: Majority Of Americans Opposing New Tax Reform Bill. ABC News (11/3, De Jong) reports a new ABC News/Washington Post poll of 1,005 "adults" (10/29-11/1) found "Americans oppose Donald Trump's emerging tax plan by broad a 17-point margin, with 60 percent saying it favors the wealthy – including six in 10 of the wealthy themselves." In addition, 50 percent "oppose the plan, up 6 percentage points from September; 33 percent support it, up 5 points. The rest, 17 percent, are undecided." According to ABC News, "criticism of the plan goes hand-in-hand with negative views of Trump's efforts to improve the federal tax system overall: 56 percent rate him negatively on this issue, versus 34 percent positively."

WPost: GOP Tax Plan Should Phase Out If Government Doesn't Meet Revenue Targets. In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/3) calls on Republicans to prove that their tax plan will pay for itself by modifying their legislation to phase in cuts "only so long as the federal government meets revenue targets." The piece details how this can be accomplished, concluding that "if Republicans refuse to add this essential safeguard to their tax plan, it would be strong evidence they do not believe the story they are telling Americans about self-financing tax cuts."

WSJournal: Trump Tax Plan Hides Additional Taxes On High Earners. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/3) criticizes the GOP tax plan for having a hidden 45.6 percent marginal tax rate for some high earners. The Journal explains that the plan's 12 percent rate phases out for people making over $1 million, and warns that it will hurt job creation by levying additional taxes on the most powerful engine for economic growth.

Milbank: GOP Tax Cuts Only Benefit The Wealthy. Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (11/3, Milbank) column that the GOP tax plan "makes the rich richer and shifts the burden onto the working class." Milbank goes on to criticize ads promoting the plan, adding that the wealthiest taxpayers would get "about $1,100 for every dollar" the average American gets in cuts.

Ryan: GOP Weighing Repeal Of ACA Mandate As Part Of Tax Reform.

The AP (11/5, Freking) reports Speaker Ryan said yesterday “Republicans are discussing whether their tax plan should include a repeal of the Obama health law’s requirement that people have insurance coverage or face a penalty, a step pushed by President Donald Trump but seen by some GOP lawmakers as possibly imperiling a much-needed legislative victory.” The AP adds that such a move “would be another shot at further undermining the Affordable Care Act after repeated failures by the GOP-led Congress to repeal and replace the law.” The Washington Post (11/5, O’Keefe) notes that appearing on “Fox News Sunday,” Ryan “said that repealing the individual mandate is ‘one of the things that’s being discussed,’” and added, “We’re listening to our members about what we can do to add to this bill to make it even better.”

Ryan also told Fox News Sunday (11/5, Wallace) that tax reform “will help get our economy growing and reach its potential,” and pledged to “clean out the special interest loopholes in the tax bill and let people keep their money in the first place.”

WSJournal Endorses Idea. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/5) endorses including a repeal of ACA mandates in the GOP’s tax reform bill, noting a CBO study that found doing so would lead to $275 billion in savings for the government. To the Journal, eliminating the mandates is not just a fiscally wise approach to funding tax reform, but also a good political move.

Labor Department: US Added 261,000 Jobs In October.

The New York Times (11/3, Casselman) reports the Labor Department on Friday revealed “the hurricane-battered job market surged back to life in October” with the addition of 261,000 jobs, “the most in more than a year.” According to the Times, the effect of hurricanes in Florida and Texas was most visible “in the weather-dependent leisure and hospitality sector, which lost 102,000 jobs in September, then gained them all back and more – 106,000 jobs – in October.” The Times adds that “the hurricanes’ damage to the labor market also was not quite as bad as initially believed,” as the Labor Department “revised its estimate of September payrolls from a decline of 33,000 – the first net loss in jobs in seven years – to an 18,000-job gain. With the revision, the economy has now added jobs for 85 straight months, a record.”

However, the Wall Street Journal (11/3, A1, Torry) in a front-page article warns the good economic news could challenge the Federal Reserve’s plans to raise short-term interest rates in December. In another article, the Wall Street Journal (11/3, Harrison) examines how the economy’s continued strong performance may challenge the upcoming tenure of President Trump’s nominee for Fed chairman, Jerome Powell.

The CBS Evening News (11/3, story 8, 0:15, Mason) and NBC Nightly News (11/3, story 9, 0:25, Holt) provided similar coverage.

WSJournal A1: Companies Selling More, Increase Spending As Economy Improving. In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (11/3, A1, Francis) reports that as the economy improves, large US companies are recording strong sales and healthy profits, which are allowing them to spend more on investments.

NYTimes: Trump Should Have Kept Yellen At The Fed. In an editorial, the New York Times (11/3) praises President Trump’s choice of Jerome Powell to lead the Federal Reserve, calling him a “levelheaded and competent person” and a “far better choice than other candidates Mr. Trump was said to be considering.” However, the Times argues that Trump “would have made a much better decision had he offered Ms. Yellen a second term,” noting that she “has done a terrific job” at the Fed.

White House Approves The Release Of Report Blaming Humans For Climate Change.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (11/3, A1, Mooney, Eilperin, Dennis) reports the Administration “released a dire scientific report Friday calling human activity the dominant driver of global warming, a conclusion at odds with White House decisions to withdraw from a key international climate accord, champion fossil fuels and reverse Obama-era climate policies.” The Post adds that “to the surprise of some scientists, the White House did not seek to prevent the release of the government’s National Climate Assessment, which is mandated by law.” According to the Post, “the report affirms that climate change is driven almost entirely by human action, warns of a worst-case scenario where seas could rise as high as eight feet by the year 2100, and details climate-related damage across the United States that is already unfolding as a result of an average global temperature increase of 1.8 degrees Fahrenheit since 1900.”

A New York Times (11/3, A1, Friedman, Thrush) front-page article says that “while there were pockets of resistance to the report in the Trump administration, according to climate scientists involved in drafting the report, there was little appetite for a knockdown fight over climate change among Mr. Trump's top advisers, who are intensely focused on passing a tax reform bill – an effort they think could determine the fate of his presidency." However, the Times concedes "the White House put out a statement Friday that seemed to undercut the high level of confidence of the report's findings." The Times adds that while Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Pruitt and Energy Secretary Perry are skeptics, National Economic Council Director Cohn was responsible for approving the report and he "generally believes in the validity of climate science and thought the issue would have been a distraction from the tax push, according to an administration official with knowledge of the situation." The Wall Street Journal (11/3, Hernandez) says 13 federal agencies were responsible for producing the report.

ABC World News Tonight (11/3, story 9, 0:15, Muir) and NBC Nightly News (11/3, story 7, 0:20, Holt) provided similar coverage in brief reports.

New Climate Change Report Unlikely To Impact Policy. The New York Times (11/4, Plumer) reports the Trump Administration "on Friday published a report on climate change from its own scientists that left no doubt about its grim reality and its causes." However, there is "little reason to think that yet another scientific report will fundamentally shift attitudes on global warming — either among policymakers or the public at large." White House aides "said that President Trump, who spent much of Friday in the air on his way to meetings in Asia, was barely aware of the report's existence."

US Delegates Not Expected To Play Key Role In Global Climate Talks.

The Washington Post (11/3, Dennis, Mooney) reports delegates from more than 190 countries will convene in Bonn, Germany on Monday for the annual international climate talks. The US delegation "finds itself largely on the sidelines," and other nations have, according to the Post, seemingly reacted to President Trump's decision to withdraw the US from the Paris climate accord "with a collective shrug." Former State Department Deputy Legal Adviser Sue Biniaz confirmed the US will send "a State Department-led delegation with a career diplomat in charge, and that seems to send a signal that they're not going to Bonn to throw bombs or anything." Still, former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, Washington Gov. Jay Inslee, Oregon Gov. Kate Brown, and California Gov. Jerry Brown will join a collection of other elected officials, philanthropists, and business leaders in an attempt "to step into the gap."

At Least 25 Killed In Texas Church Mass Shooting.

The San Antonio Express-News (11/5, Bradshaw, Downs) reports "at least 25 people were killed at the First Baptist Church of Sutherland Springs Sunday morning" after "a man walked into the church...and opened fire." Moreover, "between 15-20 people were wounded." The AP (11/5, Vertuno) says "federal law enforcement swarmed the small community 30 miles southeast of San Antonio after the attack to offer assistance, including ATF investigators and members of the FBI's evidence collection team." All three network newscasts led with the story. ABC World News Tonight (11/5, lead story, 3:00, Llamas) remarked on "an entire town in shock as they learn the devastating news" of "this massacre, now the deadliest church shooting in America, and the fourth deadliest in modern history, behind Las Vegas, Orlando, and Virginia Tech." NBC Nightly News (11/5, lead story, 2:15, Snow) also referred to "the nation's worst mass shooting at a house of worship."

"Two law enforcement officials" tell the Washington Post (11/5, Holley, Phillips, Lowery) that "the suspect has been identified as Devin Kelley, 26, a Texas man who lived in a nearby county. Those officials did not see any immediate sign that he was motivated by international terror groups, but they cautioned the investigation is still in its early stages." ABC World News Tonight (11/5, story 2, 1:15, Thomas) said Kelley is "a military veteran," and the CBS Weekend News (11/5, lead story, 2:30, Quijano) that he "served four years in the Air Force before receiving a dishonorable discharge in 2014." He "fled in a vehicle after the attack," and "later died after his vehicle was run off the road."

The Los Angeles Times (11/5) says "Kelley, who served in logistics readiness at Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico starting in 2010, was court-martialed in 2012 for two counts alleging assault on his spouse and assault on their child, Ann Stefanek." Kelley "was convicted and sentenced to 12 months in custody" in addition to his "bad conduct discharge." USA Today (11/5, Toppo) runs a similar story.

Reuters (11/5, Garza) refers to "the latest in a rash of mass shootings that have plagued the United States in recent years, stirring a national debate over whether easy access to firearms was contributing to the trend." President Trump "said he was monitoring the situation while in Japan on a 12-day Asian trip," tweeting, "May God be w/ the people of Sutherland Springs,

Texas. The FBI & law enforcement are on the scene.” CNN (11/5, Diamond) reports that in his first public comments about the shooting, Trump called it “an ‘act of evil’” and “horrific,” adding, “We cannot put into words the pain and grief we all feel and we cannot begin to imagine the suffering of those who lost the ones they love.”

USA Today (11/5, Bacon) reports Sen. Ted Cruz also took to Twitter, where he wrote, “Keeping all harmed in Sutherland Springs in our prayers and grateful for our brave first responders on the scene.” The Washington Post (11/5, Holley, Phillips, Lowery) notes Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton said in a statement, “The thoughts and prayers of all Texans are with the people of Sutherland Springs as tragic reports come out of First Baptist Church. My office stands ready to assist local law enforcement as needed.”

Politico (11/5, Griffiths), the Los Angeles Times (11/5, Pearce), Washington Times (11/5, Richardson), New York Times (11/5, Mele) and Wall Street Journal (11/5, Korn), among other news outlets, run similar stories on the shooting. The Hill (11/5, Beavers), meanwhile, reports “Democrats are renewing their calls for gun reform.” Sens. Bob Casey, Dick Durbin and Kamala Harris “were among the Democrats who urged Congress to act in response to the latest deadly shooting.”

Under the headline “Obama Uses Texas Church Massacre To Call For Fewer Guns,” meanwhile, the Daily Caller (11/5, Hasson) reports the former president said on Twitter “that Americans should ask God for ‘the wisdom to ask what concrete steps we can take to reduce the violence and weaponry in our midst.’”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“In Asia, Mr. Trump Is Met By Doubt.” The New York Times (11/5) editorializes, “As President Trump undertakes his first official trip to Asia, American leadership and credibility are in doubt. Leaders in the region worry that his inflammatory statements and impulsiveness could lead to war with North Korea. And there is a serious debate in many Asian countries about whether the future lies in closer partnerships with China, the ascendant power,” or with the US. Trump “arrives in Asia as a wounded leader, with low ratings at home and a stalled legislative agenda, and dogged by revelations of Russian interference” in the 2016 election. Asian nations “want and need America to serve as a democratic counterweight to China.” Trump’s trip “will reveal whether he can rise to this challenge.”

“Willie Horton, Updated For The Trump Era.” The New York Times (11/5) editorializes that a recent mailer sent out by the campaign of Jack Martins, “the Republican candidate for Nassau County executive,” is “an amalgam of McCarthyism and the notorious Willie Horton ad” because of its attempt to appeal to fear through a race-based message and its misleading ploy to link Laura Curran, the Democratic candidate, to illegal immigration and MS-13. The mailer in question features images of Latino men with tattoos, the headline “Meet Your New Neighbors!,” and the accusation that Curran is supported by groups who “want to make Nassau County a sanctuary county for illegal immigrants.” The Times declines to specifically endorse Curran, but it concludes that Long Island residents might “ask themselves if they want to be represented by someone who stands proudly, as Mr. Martins does, behind so scurrilous a campaign tactic.”

“New Yorkers Can Make Crooked Politicians Pay.” The New York Times (11/5) editorializes that New Yorkers voting on Tuesday “should approve Proposals 2 and 3.” Proposal 2 proposes to “direct Albany to give judges authority to reduce or revoke the pension of a politician who commits a crime in office,” while Proposal 3 proposes to “give communities in the Adirondacks and Catskills more flexibility to make vital repairs to roads or bridges and to add services like bike lanes or utility lines.”

Washington Post.

“Should DC Build A New Hospital? Officials Should Be Cautious.” A Washington Post (11/5) editorial.

“A Case On Imported Solar Cells Will Put Trump’s Promise On ‘America First’ To The Test.” The Washington Post (11/5) says in an editorial that if President Trump supports the request for solar panel tariffs sought by US manufacturers SolarWorld Americas and Suniva and SolarWorld Americas, that would “contradict his avowed motive – to support middle-class US jobs,” since according to the Solar Energy Industries Association, the resulting cost increase “would threaten thousands of jobs, as well as raise prices for the increasing number of consumers who rely on solar energy, in order to protect a fraction of the jobs such a move would risk." The Post asks, "Will Mr. Trump's effort to put 'America first' be moderated by reality – or will the president plow ahead regardless of the country's real interests?"

"Satellite Photographs Reveal North Korea's Crimes Against Humanity." The Washington Post (11/5) editorializes that "satellite photography has become an invaluable tool in the cause of human rights," as "David Hawk and Amanda Mortwedt Oh of the Committee for Human Rights in North Korea used it to prepare a report providing unsettling details about a parallel set of prison camps in North Korea that exist along with the political camps exposed earlier." Adds the Post, "The Nazi concentration camps shocked the world. If such a horror is discovered today, shouldn't it prompt a response? Mr. Hawk has laid out the evidence of atrocity."

Wall Street Journal.

"Tax Rate Cleanup In Aisle Two." The Wall Street Journal (11/5) says in an editorial that Republicans are defending a proposed tax rate of 45.6% that would apply to tax-filing couples earning between $1.2 million and $1.6 million. The Journal says this rate, which should be eliminated, is basically hidden in the House tax plan, and is reached by adding a surcharge to the 39.6% rate.

"Tax Reform And ObamaCare." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/5) endorses including a repeal of ACA mandates in the GOP's tax reform bill, noting a CBO study that found doing so would lead to $275 billion in savings for the government. To the Journal, eliminating the mandates is not just fiscally wise approach to funding tax reform, but also a good political move.

"The Stealth-Tax Republicans." According to a Wall Street Journal (11/5, Board) editorial, the arrests in Saudi Arabia reflect the competition for regional influence between the Saudis and Iran, who are said to be looking to generate instability throughout the Middle East in the aftermath's of the ISIS defeat in Iraq and Syria.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

At Least 26 Dead In South Texas Church Shooting
Broad Crackdown Reins In Saudi Elite
New York Fed President Dudley To Announce Early Retirement
Amazon Snips Prices On Other Sellers' Items Ahead Of Holiday Onslaught

New York Times:

Texas Church Shooting Leaves At Least 26 Dead, Officials Say
Commerce Secretary's Offshore Ties To Putin 'Cronies'
Kremlin Cash Behind Billionaire's Twitter And Facebook Investments
Saudi Crown Prince's Mass Purge Upends A Longstanding System
De Blasio Kept Crime Down In First Term. His Next Goal: Nicer Police.
Tax Plan Burdens Blue-state Republicans And Their Districts
Shalane Flanagan Solves NYC Marathon For American Women

Washington Post:

Sweeping Saudi Purge Hits Rivals Of Prince
At Least 26 Dead In South Texas Church Shooting, Officials Say
9 In Trump's Orbit Had Contacts With Russians
In Search Of Trump Country
'Fat Leonard' Probe Expands To Ensnare More Than 60 Admirals
Nigerien Soldier's Assertion About Tracking Militants Shifts Narrative

Financial Times:

Saudi Arabia's Young Prince Tightens Grip With Lightning Crackdown
China Launches 'Magical' Island-Building Ship On Eve Of Trump Visit
Pierre Gramegna Emerges As Early Eurogroup Frontrunner

Washington Times:

26 Dead After Gunman Opens Fire In Texas Church: State's Largest Mass Shooting

Virginia Governor Candidates Reach Out From Center In Politically Polarized State
Brazile's Revelations Further Fracture, Distract Democratic Party
Russia Dossier Investigators Suspect Reporters Were Paid To Spread Collusion Claims
House Republicans Sneak In 'Hidden Tax Increase' Each Year By Changing Cost-Of-Living Calculation

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Texas Church Shooting; Texas Church Shooting-Suspect; Texas Church Shooting-Victims; Severe Weather; Trump-Asia Tour; DNC-Hillary Rigging Accusation; Hollywood Sexual Misconduct Accusations; Mississippi-Escapee Manhunt; Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted; College Football-Officer Attacked; New York Marathon Winner; Texas Church Shooting-Recap.

CBS: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour; DNC-Hillary Rigging Accusation; New York City Marathon; Saudi Arabia-Princes Arrested; Hollywood Sexual Misconduct Accusations; Amazon-Pharmacy Entry; Anti-Crime Coalition; Hollywood-Mountain Lions.

NBC: Texas Church Shooting; Texas Church Shooting-Details; Trump-Asia Tour; Russia Meddling Investigation-Wilburn Ross; Russia Meddling Investigation-Flynn; Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted; Saudi Arabia-Princes Arrested; State Elections-Female Candidates; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery; Baseball World Series; New York Marathon Winner; House Buying Trend.

Network TV At A Glance:

Texas Church Shooting – 12 minutes, 35 seconds
Trump-Asia Tour – 7 minutes

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour.

CBS: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour; Russia Meddling Investigation; Severe Weather; Wall Street News.

FOX: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour.

NPR: Texas Church Shooting; DNC-Hillary Rigging Accusation; Saudi Arabia-Princes Arrested.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Delivers remarks to U.S. and Japanese Business Leaders; participates in an Embassy meet and greet; participates in a welcoming ceremony and state call with Their Majesties Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko of Japan; participates in the honor guard ceremony; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Abe; participates in a meeting with families of North Korean abductees; attends a state banquet.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a series of briefings at the Defense Intelligence Agency.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate aims to end debate on assistant AG nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Steven Andrew Engel to be an Assistant Attorney General, including a vote to invoke cloture on the nomination
Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 12:00 PM House Ways and Means Committee marks up Tax Cuts and Jobs Act – Markup hearing on 'H.R. 1, The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act' * Released last week, the bill would reduce the number of different tax bands, increase the standard deduction, eliminate the Alternative Minimum Tax, largely eliminate the State and Local Tax Deduction, convert corporate tax into a flat rate, and increase the estate tax exemption
Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1100, Washington, DC <http://waysandmeans.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/WaysandMeansGOP>

House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 3043 – Hydropower Policy Modernization Act of 2017' and 'H.R. 3441 – Save Local Business Act' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 9:00 AM 'How Do You Solve a Problem Like North Korea?' Cato Institute conference – 'How Do You Solve a Problem Like North Korea?' Cato Institute conference, with panels on 'Pyongyang's Capabilities and U.S. Policy' and 'New Approaches to Solving the North Korea Problem'. Includes keynote from former New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson, with other speakers including The Nonproliferation Review Editor Joshua Pollack, New America Senior Fellow

Suzanne DiMaggio, Ploughshares Fund President Joe Cirincione, Hoover Institution Fellow in Contemporary Asia Michael Auslin, City College of New York Chair in Political Science Rajan Menon, and Cato Institute Senior Fellow Doug Bandow Location: Cato Institute, 1000 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.cato.org/> <https://twitter.com/CatoInstitute>

9:45 AM Bill Clinton among speakers at Georgetown symposium on his campaign and presidency – Georgetown Institute of Politics and Public Service 'Clinton 25: Georgetown Reflects On The Vision Of Bill Clinton' symposium continues, examining the vision that drove the campaign and presidency of President Bill Clinton, 25 years after his election. Day two agenda includes keynote from Clinton, with other speakers including former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, former Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo, former White House Chiefs of Staff Thomas McLarty, Erskine Bowles and John Podesta, former White House Deputy Chief of Staff Maria Echaveste, former Senior Advisor for Policy and Strategy Rahm Emanuel, former White House Political Director Minyon Moore, former Domestic Policy Council Director Bruce Reed, and former Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott Location: Georgetown University, 37th and O Sts NW, Washington, DC www.georgetown.edu <https://twitter.com/GUPolitics> #Clinton25

3:30 PM NASA astronaut Jack Fisher speaks at GW on live aboard the ISS – NASA astronaut Col. Jack Fisher speaks at the George Washington University Elliott School of International Affairs Space Policy Institute on 'Living and Working Aboard the International Space Station', including discussing the research investigations he conducted in microgravity, 'the importance of international collaboration in space', and how space policy has evolved in his tenure as a NASA astronaut Location: George Washington University Elliott School, 1957 E St NW, Washington, DC elliott.gwu.edu <https://twitter.com/elliottschoolgw>

4:00 PM She Should Run National Conversation – She Should Run National Conversation on the evolution of elected leadership, with speakers including Democrats Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand and Reps. Brenda Lawrence, Bonnie Watson Coleman, Stephanie Murphy and Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, and Washington, DC, Mayor Muriel Bowser, and State's Attorney for Baltimore Marilyn Mosby * She Should Run provides an approachable starting place and network for women leaders considering a future run for office and for those who support them Location: Studio Theatre, 1501 14th St NW, Washington, DC www.sheshouldrun.org <https://twitter.com/SheShouldRun>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, November 13, 2017
Date: Monday, November 13, 2017 6:02:21 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- USA Today: Vice President Pence Honors Veterans By Cleaning Vietnam Memorial.
- Omaha (NE) World-Herald: Chuck Hagel Honors Vietnam Vets at D.C. Memorial: 'You Are The Quiet Heroes Of Your Generation'.
- Washington Post: 'We're Searching To Reclaim What Was Lost': In Museum Archives, A Tribe Urgently Seeks Proof Of Its Past.
- Associated Press: Zinke Says Democrats Holding Interior Nominees 'Hostage.'
- Fox News: Fox News Interviews Zinke About Energy Production On Federal Lands, National Park Fee Hikes.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Mohegan Sun And Foxwoods Enlist Senators In Casino Fight With MGM.
- How The Opioid Crisis Is Affecting Native Americans.
- ‘Poor’ Communication Between Blackfeet, BIA Puts Range Rider Program On Edge.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: US Sage Grouse Policy Heading Back To Square One.
- Associated Press: County In Oregon Asserts Greater Role In Use of Federal Land.
- Associated Press: Environmentalists Target Methane Emissions In New Mexico.
- Associated Press: Settlement Reached In Lawsuit Against Bureau of Land Management.
- New York Times: America’s Wildest Place Is Open for Business.
- Associated Press: Land Managers Drafting Plan For New Mexico’s Otero Mesa.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Carolinas Prepping For Offshore Wind With Hi-Res Wildlife Surveys.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Federal Vacancies Would Impede Recovery From Next Drought, Natural Resources Secretary Says.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Associated Press: Alaska Lawmaker Sees Financial Boon in Refuge Drilling.
- Associated Press: Florida Manatees Starting Annual Migration Earlier This Year.
- Associated Press: NY Man Pleads Guilty To Trafficking In Lion, Tiger Skulls.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: Catharsis Brings Burning Man Spirit To Nation’s Capital.
- Money: You Can Go To Any National Park For Free This Weekend.
- Associated Press: Ecological Research Tower to Be Built at Yellowstone Park.
- Associated Press: Memphis Grad Traveling To All National Park Service Sites.
- Associated Press: Pa. Woman Wants To See All 59 National Parks Before Going Blind.
- Washington Post: Park Service Wants To Ban Sports From Washington Monument Grounds.
- Associated Press: Grand Canyon Overwhelmed With Interest in Bison Program.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- New York Times: After Irma and Maria: How 3 Spots on the U.S. Virgin Islands Are Faring.
- South Florida Sun Sentinel: After Hurricanes Strike, U.S. Virgin Islands Pitches Florida Investors To Help Rebuild.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Frustration Sets In After Coal Mine Health Study Suspended.
- Company Wants To Restart Black Diamond Coal Mine.

Opinion Pieces

- The GOP Tries To Trade Polar Bears For Tax Cuts.
- COMMENTARY: Trump Administration Shouldn’t Undermine Sage-Grouse Compromise.
- Rapid Increase In Park Fees Will Keep Visitors Out.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- ABC: On Russian Meddling, Trump Sides “With Our Agencies, Especially As Currently Constituted.”
- Associated Press: Media Analyses: Trump Unlikely To Rebuke Duterte For Drug War Killings.
- Politico: Trump To Make “Major” Trade Announcement Wednesday.
- Associated Press: US States, Cities Pledge Commitment To Paris Accord.
- NBC: Democrats Field Alternate US Delegation To Global Warming Conference.
- Politico: JCT: Middle Class Will See Biggest Tax Cuts Under Senate Bill.
- New York Times: Republicans Search For Analyses Showing Tax Cuts Won’t Add To Deficit.
- Bloomberg News: McConnell Concedes He Exaggerated Claims On Tax Bill.
- Reuters: Wind Energy Industry Lauds Senate For Preserving Tax Credit.
- Washington Post: WPost A1: Pruitt Uses Industry Data To Challenge Findings By EPA Scientists.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Right Way To Cut Corporate Taxes."
 - "Gun Carnage In The Nation. Groundhog Day In The Capitol."
- Washington Post.
 - "Metro Need $500 Million A Year, And It Needs It Now."
 - "The Little-Discussed Part Of The GOP Tax Bill Proves What Its Really About."
 - "Tillerson's Redesign For State Looks A Lot Like A Retreat."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "ObamaCare Tax Relief."
 - "A Nafta Recession?"
 - "Putin's Syria Play."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Vice President Pence Honors Veterans By Cleaning Vietnam Memorial.

USA Today (11/11, Groppe) reported Vice President Mike Pence and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke helped clean names etched onto the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Saturday. After arriving at the memorial with his wife, Pence, wearing blue jeans and yellow gloves, "carried an orange cleaning bucket with the message "Let's Do This" to an area close to the center of the wall." USA Today quotes Zinke saying to the vice president, "You scrub and I'll dry."

ABC News (11/11) reported Pence "shook hands and posed for photos with the volunteers in subfreezing temperatures just after dawn." Pence and Zinke were also joined by James Pierce, "a National Park Service ranger who lost a leg while serving with the North Carolina Army National Guard in Afghanistan." The event was sponsored by the New Day USA, a mortgage company specializing in loans to veterans.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/11, Burr) reports Zinke said as he cleaned the monument, "Every name is a story, and there are so many names." The Tribune notes Zinke, a former Navy SEAL, is "the first Interior secretary in nearly half a century with military experience, a distinction he says he takes seriously." Zinke told an audience of Vietnam veterans at the monument Saturday afternoon, "A lot of the reason I received what I did and my generation [did] is because you did not. I think as a nation we should be ashamed at how we viewed your service, your dedication. The monument behind me, I think, is not a tribute to victory or defeat, it's a tribute to remembrance. We should never run away from our history as a country, we should learn."

The Washington \(DC\) Examiner (11/11) reports Zinke tweeted a picture of himself and the Pences that read, "Up early with @VP Pence to wash the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall this chilly #VeteransDay." Later, Pence tweeted a picture with the caption, "Moving start to Veterans Day. Thanks to @NewDayUSA volunteers who joined @NatIParkService, @SecretaryZinke, Karen & me to clean the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Also inspiring to meet NPS ranger & veteran James Pierce. To all Veterans, we are grateful for your service & sacrifice." The Examiner notes Zinke, "a retired Navy SEAL commander and former congressman from Montana, will also have Veterans Day-related events throughout the day."

Also covering this story are NPR (11/11, Benderev) and The Hill (11/11, Bowden).

They Served Together in 2004, And Int. Sec. Zinke Used Veterans Day To Recognize Gen. Mattis. Independent Journal Review (11/11, Fink) reported Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has known Defense Secretary Gen. James Mattis "for over a decade, and his experience with the general in Fallujah, Iraq, left a lasting impression." On Saturday, Zinke tweeted a photo of himself and Mattis with the caption, "Happy #VeteransDay to General Mattis. Served in Fallujah together in 2004 and now #SecondService under @POTUS Trump."

Here's What Former SEAL Ryan Zinke Is Drinking On Veterans Day. The Daily Caller (11/9, Pearce) reports Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift “confirmed” to The Daily Caller News Foundation that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke enjoyed a “Legacy Lager” from Dog Tag Brewing Foundation on Veterans Day on Friday “to honor those who have served and are still serving in the United States military.” The Dog Tag Brewing Foundation was founded in late 2015 by former marine Seth Jordan to raise money for charities selected by Gold Star families. According to the Caller, “Dog Tag donates 100 percent of its profits in the form of grants to charities picked by Gold Star families.”

Chuck Hagel Honors Vietnam Vets at D.C. Memorial: ‘You Are The Quiet Heroes Of Your Generation’.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (11/11, Morton) reports former Nebraska senator and Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel gave the keynote speak to thousands of people gathered Saturday at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Hagel said, “This memorial was built for future generations, so they would learn from this war and would always remember that wars have serious and lasting consequences.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Maya Lin, the memorial’s architect, also spoke at Saturday’s event. Following the ceremony, Hagel “joined Zinke and others in presenting wreaths at the center of the memorial, while a bagpiper played ‘Amazing Grace’ on the knoll above.”

Recognizing The Pa. Veterans Who Just Donated $40K to Vietnam War Memorial | Secretary Ryan Zinke. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke wrote in the Philadelphia Inquirer (11/9, Zinke) that “few memorials evoke as strong an emotional response as the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington.” Zinke wrote, “As the secretary of the interior, I am the steward of our lands, memorials, and monuments. It’s my job to oversee our nation’s war memorials on the National Mall, which are part of the National Park System. Caring for our Vietnam War Memorial would not be possible without the support of thousands of veterans and their families across the country.” He also recognized the Butler County (Pa.) American Legion Riders, who “drove down in buses to meet” him in Washington, where they “group hand-delivered a $40,778.28 check for the upkeep of the Vietnam War Memorial as well as building of the future museum.” Zinke concludes, “Our nation must never forget the names on the Vietnam Wall. That is why the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund, the nonprofit that built the memorial, organized the reading of every single name on the Wall from Tuesday through Friday by veterans and the families and friends of loved ones who gave their lives in Vietnam. I’m proud to have participated in the reading this year.”

‘We’re Searching To Reclaim What Was Lost’: In Museum Archives, A Tribe Urgently Seeks Proof Of Its Past.

The Washington Post (11/11, Kaplan) reported that at “Smithsonian Institution facility in Suitland, Md., three generations of Biloxi-Chitimacha-Choctaws just spent a week painstakingly sifting through materials from their tribe’s past.” They were seeking evidence to “supplement their petition for official ‘acknowledgment’ from” the Bureau of Indian Affairs, “a decades-old effort that has gained new urgency as the state of Louisiana moves to resettle the last island residents.” Their ancestors escaped the Trail of Tears and “found refuge nearly 200 years ago on an island on Louisiana’s Gulf Coast.” However, Isle de Jean Charles is “slipping into the sea, a consequence of coastal erosion, subsidence and climate change.” Following two failed attempts, the tribe last year was “awarded a grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development: $48 million to relocate the 25 remaining families.” Tribal leaders in their HUD application “laid out an idyllic vision” consisting of “hurricane-proof houses arranged in the same pattern as the buildings on the island.” However, it is unclear “how much of that vision will become reality” because the grant is “being administered by Louisiana’s Office of Community Development, and not always according to the tribe’s preferences.”

Zinke Says Democrats Holding Interior Nominees ‘Hostage.’

The AP (11/11, Daly) reports Interior Secretary Zinke on Thursday sent a “sharply worded letter” to Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin accusing Senate Democrats of “holding the department’s nominees ‘hostage’ to a political agenda that includes opposition to his review of presidentially designated monuments.” Zinke asserted the nominees “have nothing to do with this monument review, yet they have been forced to sit on the sidelines [for months]. As a former Navy SEAL, this is not the type of hostage situation I am accustomed to.” According to the AP, “Durbin has placed holds on four Interior nominees: Susan Combs, nominated as assistant secretary for policy, management and budget; Joseph Balash, assistant secretary for land and minerals management; Ryan Nelson, solicitor; and Brenda Burman, commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, which oversees dams and water projects in 17 Western states.”

Fox News Interviews Zinke About Energy Production On Federal Lands, National Park Fee Hikes.

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was interviewed Thursday evening on Fox News @ Night (11/9) about criticism he has received from environmentalists. In response to concerns about increasing energy production on Federal lands, Zinke said, “If you want to make our country not dependent on foreign oil. I am a former seal. I don’t want to see your kids, my kids go to foreign shores and fight for a commodity we have here. We are going to do it right. We are not going to sell or transfer public land, but if you believe in the concept that the best science, best practices, greater good in the longest term, then you’re with the secretary of the interior. But if you believe public land is exclusive, only for the elite few that want to look at it but i’m a public access person. I think the public land should be available to america and the public.” Zinke also called criticism of National Park fee increases “baloney,” adding, “The greatest bargain in America is $80 for a year-long pass of our public lands. I face an $11.5 billion backlog of our public lands and parks. Our parks are being loved to death. everyone loves our parks. As a former military, there’s two things we need fun absolutely: the military and our parks. Come on, America. if you think $80, all year, every park, all the time, by a car load, is too much to ask, I mean, come on. It’s our parks. Those that don’t believe that we should invest in our parks. Our parks aren’t Republican or Democrat or Independent issue. It’s an American issue. America, step up. Go to our parks and enjoy them. They are treasures we need to invest in.” Later in the segment, Zinke discussed his involvement with Whitefish and said he will spend time over the weekend visiting national monuments in honor of Veterans Day.

The Hill (11/10, Cama) also reported on Zinke’s comments from the Fox News interview.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Mohegan Sun And Foxwoods Enlist Senators In Casino Fight With MGM.

The Connecticut Post (11/11, Vigdor) reported Connecticut’s US senators sent a letter to the Department of Interior urging clarification on a “a joint casino venture between the Mohegans and Mashantucket Pequot tribes planned north of Hartford complies with a gambling compact with the state.” The agency has not ruled either way on the legality of the project, “creating a degree of uncertainty for the tribal owners of Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods.” Democrats Richard Blumenthal and Chris Murphy, along with US Rep. Joe Courtney (D-CT) wrote to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Nov. 2 “asking the agency to review and sign off on changes to the tribes’ existing compact with the state.” MGM officials, which oppose the tribal casino because it would challenge an MGM resort set to open next year in Springfield, Mass., “say that the absence of a formal approval by the Interior Department, the parent agency of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, constitutes a denial.”

The Connecticut Mirror (11/9, Radelat) reported that Connecticut sought Interior Department “approval of amendments that said the new casino would not violate an exclusivity clause in the years-old compact the tribes have with Connecticut that allowed them to open the Foxwoods Resort Casino and Mohegan Sun.” The compact states the tribes “agreed to share 25 percent of their slot revenue with the state, but that arrangement would only hold if no new casinos were opened in Connecticut.” During an Oct. 26 meeting with tribal representatives, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “asked the Connecticut tribes to submit information on why his agency would have to weigh in on a commercial casino – that is one that is not built on tribal land nor on land taken by the federal government in trust and therefore subject to the Indian Gaming Regulation Act.” Attorneys for the Mashantucket Pequot and the Mohegan tribes have responded to Zinke’s request for additional information, “insisting the secretary weigh in on the amendment, even though Zinke told them he is concerned doing so would ‘indirectly facilitate the operation of a commercial casino gaming facility.’”

How The Opioid Crisis Is Affecting Native Americans.

NPR (11/11) interviewed Dr. Ron Shaw, president of the Association of American Indian Physicians, about how the opioid crisis is affecting Native Americans. According to a report from the Centers for Disease Control, “the death rate of Native Americans from opioid overdoses was the highest of any racial demographic. Some 8.4 per 100,000 Native Americans died of opioid overdoses in 2014.” Shaw explained that “many Native American populations suffer from what is known as historical and intergenerational trauma," which has "been shown to be associated with increased rates of depression, drug use and drug addiction." Shaw advocates for getting native leaders to "testify before Congress, including the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and try to put the native-specific issues before our legislators."

'Poor' Communication Between Blackfeet, BIA Puts Range Rider Program On Edge.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (11/11, Franz) reported the Blackfeet Tribe has received "mixed signals" from the Bureau of Indian Affairs regarding the future of a conservation program on the reservation east of the mountains. BIA notified the Blackfeet Tribal Business Council in early October "that the range rider program would be terminated." The program, which costs about $140,000 annually, is managed by the BIA "and funded by a fee paid by local cattle producers." In response, Blackfeet Tribal Chairman Harry Barnes sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke noting that "under federal law, the BIA has to consult with the tribe before making any decision that directly impacts jobs on the reservation." The BIA has since "changed course and decided to make 'tweaks' to the program instead of terminating it." Interior spokesperson Heather Swift said the mix-up was due to "poor" communication between the BIA and the tribe.

Bureau Of Land Management

US Sage Grouse Policy Heading Back To Square One.

The AP (11/11, Sonner) reports federal scientists and land managers who have been working on strategies to protect the greater sage grouse's habitat in the American West "for nearly two decades are going back to the drawing board under a new Trump administration edict to reassess existing plans condemned by ranchers, miners and energy developers." The AP adds that federal officials are finishing a "series of public meetings with three sessions starting Tuesday in Utah ahead of a Nov. 27 cutoff for comment on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's order last month to consider revisions to land management amendments for the greater sage grouse that were adopted under the Obama administration." Zinke has said "he wants to make sure the amendments don't harm local economies in 11 western states and allow the states to have maximum control over the efforts within their borders." However, conservationists claim the move is "a thinly veiled attempt to allow more livestock grazing and drilling, similar to Trump's efforts to roll back national monument designations, but on a much larger scale."

County In Oregon Asserts Greater Role In Use of Federal Land.

The AP (11/9, Selsky) reported the three-member Crook County Court governing body approved a provision after a public meeting Wednesday to "take some control over federal lands that cover half of the high desert, mountains and forests within its borders." Crook County Court previously "considered the policy more than a year ago — before elections shifted the political landscape." However, Federal Bureau of Land Management district head Carol Benkosky had warned passing the measure "would create an adversarial relationship with federal agencies." The policy states that "timber harvest, ranching, farming, and mining are the lifeblood of Crook County's economy" and that "humans are entitled to an equal opportunity to use federal and private lands for both recreation and economic growth." County Commissioner Jerry Brummer "said after the meeting that he believes the Trump administration will be receptive to the county's attempt to assert its authority in helping manage federal lands."

Environmentalists Target Methane Emissions In New Mexico.

The AP (11/9, Bryan) reported representatives with the nonprofit Environmental Defense Fund released a report Thursday that shows "methane emissions from oil and natural gas production in New Mexico are higher than what state and federal regulators have measured and the failure to capture the pollution is costing the state revenues and royalties." The state's producers are "emitting 570,000 tons of methane annually, amounting to more than $27 million in lost tax revenues and royalties that could otherwise be used for government programs and services, according to the report." Jon Goldstein, director of regulatory and legislative affairs for the Environmental Defense Fund, said the report emphasizes "that methane is a big problem for the state but it's an even larger opportunity. I like to think of it as a multi-hundred-million-dollar piece of low-hanging fruit in a time of tight state budgets."

Settlement Reached In Lawsuit Against Bureau of Land Management.

The AP (11/9, Warren) reported a federal judge on Wednesday “approved the terms that settle a long-running dispute involving the Bureau of Land Management and property owners along the Red River.” The BLM argued the river “has shifted as much as 2 miles (3.2 kilometers) in some areas over the past century, and some of the dry land where the river once flowed belonged to the government, not residents who claimed ownership.” The landowners’ lawyer, Robert Henneke, said BLM’s claims “amounted to an unlawful federal land grab.” Henneke explained the settlement “contains three provisions, including the one dictating that the river, wherever it may flow now and in decades to come, constitutes the boundary. Federal officials will dismiss the land surveys that were previously done, Henneke said, and the BLM will issue a disclaimer on maps the agency previously released showing federal boundaries that extended into Texas.”

America’s Wildest Place Is Open for Business.

The New York \(NY\) Times (11/10, Solomon) carried an interactive piece Sunday highlighting the geography and wildlife found in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, “the single largest parcel of public land in the United States”. The article says the push by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to open up more of the area to drilling “seems all the more hawkish given that drilling has scarcely begun on existing leases in the reserve.”

Land Managers Drafting Plan For New Mexico’s Otero Mesa.

The AP (11/10) reported the Bureau of Land Management is drafting a resource management plan for southern New Mexico’s Otero Mesa, with a goal of having it ready for public comment next spring. BLM officials said oil and gas development on the mesa could lead to the construction of 350 new miles of road over the next two years. BLM “believes development will also bring jobs and income within those industries to Otero County.” Southwest Environmental Center director Kevin Bixby “said he worries the mesa would be irrevocably spoiled if industrial uses such as oil and gas drilling or mining were allowed.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Carolinas Prepping For Offshore Wind With Hi-Res Wildlife Surveys.

North American Windpower (11/9, Lillian) reported UK-based APEM said it is “carrying out high-resolution aerial surveys of wildlife off the coasts of North and South Carolina” on behalf of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management. Surveys of the Carolinas “will gather data on birds, marine mammals, sharks, fish, turtles and other marine species in an area of almost 10,000 square nautical miles, says APEM.” According to APEM, the “surveys will provide baseline data to help with the process of siting and permitting future offshore wind developments.”

Windpower Engineering & Development (11/9, Froese) reported that BOEM has, to date, “held one lease sale off the coast of North Carolina, awarding a 122,405 acre lease off Kitty Hawk, NC to Avangrid. BOEM is continuing to evaluate other potential lease areas off the Carolinas and data from this study will assist with that process.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Federal Vacancies Would Impede Recovery From Next Drought, Natural Resources Secretary Says.

The Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (11/11, Todd) reported California Secretary for Natural Resources John Laird said after the Democratic Women’s Club of Santa Cruz County meeting Saturday that the state would be in danger if another drought occurs because federal support remains uncertain. The Trump Administration has yet to fill “high-level vacancies for a slate of federal departments,” including the Bureau of Reclamation, which still lacks a commissioner. During the previous drought, “five agencies — two state departments and three federal departments — were in control of California’s water supply, Laird said.” Negotiations between state and federal agencies were vital “in providing timely relief, Laird said. Under the Obama administration, federal support was outlined within 24 hours.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Alaska Lawmaker Sees Financial Boon in Refuge Drilling.

The AP (11/10, Daly) reported Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R) has proposed legislation opening Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas drilling, which "would generate $2 billion in royalties over the next decade — with half the money going to her home state." Murkowski, chair of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, will hold a hearing on the bill next week. In particular, the bill "calls for at least two major lease sales over the next decade in areas encompassing at least 400,000 acres each in the refuge's coastal plain," with surface development limited to 2,000 acres." Murkowski said the bill "represents "a tremendous opportunity for both Alaska and our country." However, environmental groups and other critics have called Murkowski's "projections wildly optimistic, noting that recent sales on Alaska's North Slope have fallen short of projected revenue."

Newsweek (11/10, Pereira) reports ANWR, "has long been on the radar for energy. It was established in 1960, and by 1980, per the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, the 1002 area, the coastal plain where Murkowski wants to drill, was designated as 'non-wilderness' because of its oil and gas potential." Murkowski's bill "requires Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to approve two lease sales of at least 400,000 acres and allows for 2,000 acres to be developed specifically for wells and support facilities."

Florida Manatees Starting Annual Migration Earlier This Year.

The AP (11/11, Gillis) reported manatees this month "seem to be starting their annual migration a little early." A cold front last week caused coastal water temperatures to decrease to 70 degrees, about the "point at which these tropical marine mammals move inland in search of warmer confines." Carol Knox, with the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, explained, "Manatees this time of year are searching for warmer waters to help them survive winter's cold, which they generally find in freshwater springs and the outflow of power plants." Manatees are expected to "trickle into the Orange River and FPL canal between now and January, typically the coldest month of the year." According to the AP, manatees "were reclassified from endangered to threatened by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service earlier this year, but the animals are still protected by state and federal laws."

NY Man Pleads Guilty To Trafficking In Lion, Tiger Skulls.

The AP (11/10) reported a New York City Man pleaded guilty in Federal court "to illegally trafficking in parts from endangered African lions and tigers worth more than $150,000." Federal prosecutors claim the 41-year-old Queens man "admitted to purchasing a tiger skull from undercover agents working for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. He also admitted to purchasing lion skulls from an auction house in Texas." Prosecutors said he shipped the skulls to his New York City home, where he sent endangered animal parts to a wholesale buyer in Thailand.

National Park Service

Catharsis Brings Burning Man Spirit To Nation's Capital.

The AP (11/10, Khalil) reported on Catharsis on the Mall, a three-day event "that seeks to bring a small slice of the famed Burning Man festival to the foot of the Washington Monument." The event began Friday afternoon and continued "the-clock through Sunday with seminars, events and performances in tents, stages and camps." A "massive" metal dragon "will roll through the streets around the Capitol during a protest march at dawn Sunday. On Saturday night, a small wooden temple will be set ablaze under the close eye of fire marshals." The AP said "R-Evolution, a 47-foot-high sculpture of a nude woman in a yoga pose that was featured at this year's Burning Man," would not be at the festival after the Interior Department reversed course on permission that was initially given by the National Park Service.

You Can Go To Any National Park For Free This Weekend.

Money (11/9, Calfas) reported all parks in the National Park system were free to visitors over the "weekend in honor of Veterans Day — the last time the National Park Service will offer this kind of deal this year." This means all "parks with an entrance fee will not charge visitors on Nov. 11 and Nov. 12. While not all national parks incur a cost, many of the most popular sites, including Yellowstone, the Grand Canyon and Yosemite, among others, do." Money added that the free weekend "comes just two weeks before the deadline for National Park goers to submit their thoughts on a proposed price increase for 17 parks during their most popular season of the year."

Ecological Research Tower to Be Built at Yellowstone Park.

The AP (11/9) reported a 59-foot tower is being built on the Blacktail Deer Plateau in Yellowstone National Park “as part of a new ecological research and monitoring site.” The tower “will be built and funded by a National Science Foundation project aimed at studying the causes and effects of environmental change.” Construction is projected to begin later this year, and “park officials have decided the tower won’t significantly harm the environment.”

Memphis Grad Traveling To All National Park Service Sites.

The AP (11/11) reports on University of Memphis graduate Mikah Meyer’s plan to travel 100,000 miles “in a converted cargo van over a three-year period, taking in all 417 sites in the National Park Service system.” Meyer’s journey across the US “began during his freshman year when his 58-year-old father died from cancer” and he took a road trip to “kind of heal.” His adventure began April 29, 2016, and 18 months later, “he’d traveled to nearly 250 sites.” When Meyer completes his journey in April 2019, “he’ll be the youngest person to experience every park, and the only one to complete the tour in one continuous trip.”

Pa. Woman Wants To See All 59 National Parks Before Going Blind.

The AP (11/11, Negley) reports on Laura Griffith’s goal to see each of the national parks before she goes blind due to retinitis pigmentosa, a degeneration of the eye’s rods and cones. In the past two years, Griffith and her husband “have explored nearly 40 national parks. They have about 20 parks left in their quest to see nature’s majesty from coast to coast.” “I think my favorite visual sight was Crater Lake,” Laura Griffith said. “Which was an immense, spectacular blue lake, big enough even for me to see enough pieces of it to get a vision of this giant lake.”

Park Service Wants To Ban Sports From Washington Monument Grounds.

The Washington Post (11/9, Ruane) reported the National Park Service said Thursday “that it wants to permanently close the grounds of the Washington Monument to recreational activities and increase reservation fees for use of its 28 athletic fields on the Mall and in Rock Creek Park.” NPS spokesman Mike Litterst said in an email that the Washington Monument ground “were closed earlier this year for turf restoration, and the Park Service wants that closure to continue after the project is finished this year.” The proposal would also increase reservation rate fees to “$70 per two-hour block — $30 an hour plus a $10 administrative fee,” and “permitting will shift from the D.C. Department of Parks and Recreation to the National Park Service, the owner of the fields, Litterst said.”

Also reporting on this story are the Washington \(DC\) Times (11/11, Blake), WJLA-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (11/10, Tschida), WTTG-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (11/10, Logan) and WTOP-FM Washington \(DC\) Washington (11/10, Augenstein).

Grand Canyon Overwhelmed With Interest in Bison Program.

The AP (11/10) reported Grand Canyon National Park said it has been “overwhelmed by the amount of interest in a program to thin a herd of bison using volunteer shooters.” Last month, the National Park Service approved a plan “to decrease the herd through roundups and by seeking volunteers who are physically fit and proficient with a gun to kill the animals.” Grand Canyon spokeswoman Kirby-Lynn Shedlowski said “she initially received dozens of calls a day from people across the country wanting to volunteer.” Callers are now “directed to a recorded line and asked to check back periodically.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

After Irma and Maria: How 3 Spots on the U.S. Virgin Islands Are Faring.

“Hurricanes Irma and Maria both hit the United States Virgin Islands in September as rare Category 5 storms, but the devastation there has been largely overshadowed by the damage and death this year’s hurricane season left behind in Florida, Texas, Puerto Rico and the Caribbean nations,” the New York Times (11/10, Pérez-Peña) reports, and Virgin Islands Gov. Kenneth Mapp on Thursday announced “he would go to Washington next week to request $7 billion in aid.” According to the Times, “in a territory with just 103,000 residents, more than 33,000 individuals and families have applied for assistance from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and government agencies reported on Thursday that 73 percent of customers still had no power.” The Times returns to three different locations in the US Virgin Islands “photographed not long after the storms" to see how the recovery effort is progressing.

After Hurricanes Strike, U.S. Virgin Islands Pitches Florida Investors To Help Rebuild.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (11/12, Lyons) reported economic development specialists from the U.S. Virgin Islands "used the Fort Lauderdale International Boat Show as a platform to pitch professional service firms and light manufacturers that might want to locate in St. Thomas, St. Croix or St. John." Gov. Kenneth Mapp is expected to ask Congress for $7 billion in aid, and the Interior Department recently "advanced the islands nearly $225 million in federal excise tax revenue from rum shipments to the U.S. mainland." However, the Virgin Islands Economic Development Authority "knows it must think for the long term." Wayne Biggs Jr., the authority's acting chief executive officer and Andrew Clutz, a marketing consultant, said in an interview with the Sun Sentinel that "the USVI offers generous job-related tax incentives such as 90 percent reductions in corporate and personal income tax, 100 percent exemptions on excise, property and gross receipts taxes and property taxes of nearly 75 cents per $1,000 or assessed value."

Office Of Surface Mining

Frustration Sets In After Coal Mine Health Study Suspended.

The AP (11/12, Virtanen) reports some Appalachia residents expressed frustration that a new federal study that was supposed to provide the most comprehensive review of surface mining's impact on health was suspended by the Trump Administration three months ago, citing budget reasons. The goal of the canceled "study — by National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine — was a consensus from experts in various fields on potential short- and long-term health effects, focused on West Virginia, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee." Even though the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement said the cancellation was due to budget reasons, an academies spokesman "said the mining study was the only project stopped, with the group having five others underway." The AP says the suspension "feeds the mistrust they've long harbored for politicians who routinely side with businesses." Former coal miner resident Chuck Nelson said if the study "comes out negative against the coal industry, it's swept under the rug, and the funding's stopped by these politicians who cater to the coal industry."

Company Wants To Restart Black Diamond Coal Mine.

The Tacoma \(WA\) News Tribune (11/11, Mapes) reported Pacific Coast Coal Co. wants to start mining an old King County coal mine, the John Henry mine, once again. Washington, along with Tennessee, are one of two states that delegates regulation of mining to the federal government, but the "project nonetheless has raised local ire about the greenhouse-gas emissions created by burning the coal, as well as water pollution and noise." King County Executive Dow Constantine "has vowed to work with state agencies and Washington's congressional delegation, as well as the courts if need be, to stop the project." David Morris, general manager of Pacific Coast Coal, said because "there still are rich seams of coal underground" there, it "makes sense to mine them as the company proceeds with its reclamation work at the site." The county and state "have demanded more comprehensive analysis of the projects and its impacts." Chris Holmes, public-affairs officer with the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement in Washington, DC, "said those and other comments are presently under review."

Opinion Pieces

The GOP Tries To Trade Polar Bears For Tax Cuts.

Washington Post (11/10, Parker) columnist Kathleen Parker wrote that as "momentum builds" for former Alabama Supreme Court chief justice Roy Moore's departure from the Alabama Senate race, "Republicans desperate to pass something before year's end have been trying to pull elephants out of hats." As such, they have "turned from draining the swamp to thawing the Arctic to scrounge up more money. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) has introduced a bill that would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas drilling." Parker lamented that Murkowski, "usually the more rational member of Alaska's Senate duo, seems to have fallen under the spell of the greedy brotherhood." Indeed, Parker is saddened that a "few Republicans would sacrifice even a square inch of the Arctic unnecessarily for the profit of a political victory."

COMMENTARY: Trump Administration Shouldn't Undermine Sage-Grouse Compromise.

Robert Gaudet, president of the Nevada Wildlife Federation, writes in a piece for the Las Vegas Review-Journal (11/11, Gaudet) that the sagebrush lands “that are essential to sage-grouse are also essential to mule deer, elk, pronghorn and a lot of other wildlife that Nevadans care about.” Despite years of progress by the Bureau of Land Management and the US Forest Service to develop plans aimed at saving sage-grouse, the Interior Department is now “looking at weakening or eliminating safeguards in important sage-grouse habitats, areas considered key to maintaining the bird’s population.” Gaudet says Secretary Ryan Zinke “sent a defining message in June” when ordering the review “in light of his order targeting perceived burdens on energy development.” However, Gaudet asserts “the sage-grouse plans don’t shut down energy development,” citing a recent report by Backcountry Hunters & Anglers that says “79 percent of the areas with medium or high potential for energy development fall outside grouse habitat.”

Rapid Increase In Park Fees Will Keep Visitors Out.

Stephanie Adams, Yellowstone program manager for National Parks Conservation Association, wrote in a piece for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (11/11, Adams) that a proposal by Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke and the Trump Administration “to more than double entrance fees at” 17 national parks during their peak visitation seasons “has been largely – and justifiably – met with outrage by park communities and Americans from across the country.” Even though the “reasoning provided is the fee increase is needed to tackle the Park Service’s $11.3 billion in repair backlog,” Adams said the Interior Department “estimates these increased fees would raise about $70 million — an amount that would cover a mere 2 percent of the maintenance backlog at the 17 parks proposed for entrance fee increases.” Adams concluded, “Instead of putting the backlog on the shoulders of parks visitors, the administration and Congress should support the National Park Service Legacy Act.”

Additional Reading.

- An Ounce Of Prevention Worth A Pound Of Cure. Mesquite \(NV\) Local News (11/9)
- Drilling, Drilling, Everywhere. The Huffington Post (11/9, Banerjee)
- Dirty Deeds. Durango \(CO\) Telegraph (11/9, Chamberlin)
- Zinke’s decision on NM monuments disrespectful. Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (11/10, Arnold)

Top National News

On Russian Meddling, Trump Sides “With Our Agencies, Especially As Currently Constituted.”

Media reports cast President on Trump Sunday as walking back his comments earlier this about whether he accepts Russian President Vladimir Putin’s denials of meddling in the US election last year. All three of the networks led last night with reports on the President’s trip. Tom Llamas opened the ABC World News Tonight (11/12, lead story, 3:40) broadcast saying the President is “on the last leg of his tour in Asia, facing backlash from 8,000 miles away” for his comments about Russia’s meddling in the US election.

Reuters (11/12, Holland), for example, says Trump “distanced himself” from remarks he made Saturday in which he suggested he believed Putin when he said there had been no Russian meddling in the election. Reuters says those comments drew “criticism at home because US intelligence agencies have long since concluded there was Russian meddling.”

USA Today (11/12, Jackson) reports that “after spending a week sticking to the script...Trump’s Asia trip veered off course this weekend into another kerfuffle over Vladimir Putin and Russian election meddling.” Seeking to “clarify comments he had made hours before,” Trump said Sunday, “I’m with our agencies, especially as currently constituted with their leadership.” Trump’s “revised” comments came after he “caused a stir by suggesting to reporters that he believed Putin’s denials more than the conclusions of US intelligence officials.” The Wall Street Journal (11/12, Bender) reports that a day after he called former US intelligence officials “political hacks,” Trump shifted his tone, saying, “I believe very much in our intelligence agencies.”

The AP (11/12, Lemire, Colvin) reports Trump said Sunday “he believes US intelligence agencies...but Trump also said he believes Russian President Vladimir Putin is sincere when he says Russia didn’t interfere.” The Washington Times (11/12, Boyer) similarly says Trump “clarified Sunday that he believes the assessment of US intelligence agencies...but also said he believes...Putin is ‘sincere’ in his denials of interference.”

Bloomberg News (11/12, Arkhipov, Jacobs) says the President “once again waded into the controversy of whether he thinks Russia meddled in last year’s election,” saying on Sunday that he believes “very much in our intelligence agencies.” Trump, “who often sidesteps direct questions on Russia’s culpability,” said “that all he meant was that Putin himself clearly believed” Russia was not involved.

Asked on NBC’s Meet the Press (11/12, Todd) whether the President believes the US intelligence reports that Russia meddled in the election, White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short said, “The President believes that after years of investigations, tens of millions of taxpayer dollars, there is zero evidence of any ballot being impacted by Russian interference.” He added that what Trump “is trying to do right now is recognize that the gravest threat America faces is North Korea developing nuclear weapons,” which “is a greater threat than Russia buying Facebook ads in America.”

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, appearing on CBS’ Face The Nation (11/12, Dickerson), said, “Let me be clear, nobody thinks [Russian meddling] has had any impact on the elections so whatever occurred, there was no impact.” Politico (11/12, Warmbrodt) reports Mnuchin’s remarks.

The President’s comments drew criticism from lawmakers on the Sunday morning shows. Asked on CNN’s State Of The Union (11/12, Tapper) about Trump’s comments, Sen. Dick Durbin said they are “incredible to me” because “we had a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee” where “we produced a Facebook ad that had a phony committee...and it was paid for with rubles from Russia.” He asked what else the President was “waiting to see before he acknowledges what our intelligence agencies and most people in both political parties acknowledge?”

Sen. Bernie Sanders said on CBS’ Face The Nation (11/12, Dickerson) that the idea that Trump says he believes Putin while “he does not believe the intelligence agencies of the United States...is beyond absurd.”

Republican Sen. Pat Toomey said on NBC’s Meet the Press (11/12, Todd), “It’s clear that President Putin orchestrated an effort to meddle and disrupt our elections” and that he doesn’t “think there’s anything we can trust that comes out of Putin’s mouth.”

An AP (11/12, Lemire, Colvin) analysis says Trump’s Asia trip “wound down as it began, with a visit meant to be centered on trade and North Korea shadowed by questions about Russia.” Mark Landler writes in a New York Times (11/12) analysis that “for nine days on the road, President Trump had been measured, disciplined and studiously scripted as he picked his way through the geopolitical minefields of Asia. Then came the 10th day,” when he unleashed a “stream of tweets,” saying those who want to probe his ties to Russia were “haters and fools,” ridiculed “crooked” Hillary Clinton, and said he could call Kim Jong-un “short and fat.”

Politico (11/11, Restuccia, Cook) similarly says Trump “stayed on script for more than a week as he crisscrossed through Asia – and then Russian President Vladimir Putin showed up.” After meeting briefly with Putin, Trump “abandoned the diplomatic tone the White House had carefully scripted for his five-country tour, once again contradicting the overwhelming consensus” the US intelligence community that Russia manipulated the 2016 election.

Molly Ball of TIME said on CNN Inside Politics (11/12), “Ironically, his insistence on taking everything personally makes everything a story about him. It would have been conceivable or you could imagine a different president, perhaps, who could say that they accept these conclusions and it’s not about them. This is a story about Russia. This is a story about our institutions. But the fact that Trump believes this is about him.”

Brennan And Clapper Say Trump Being “Played.” The Washington Post (11/12, Wagner) reports former CIA Director Brennan and former DNI Clapper said Sunday that President Trump is being “played” by President Vladimir Putin and “accused him of being susceptible to foreign leaders who stroke his ego.” Appearing on CNN’s State Of The Union, Brennan said, “By not confronting the issue directly and not acknowledging to Putin that we know you’re responsible for this, I think he’s giving Putin a pass. I think it demonstrates to Mr. Putin that Donald Trump can be played by foreign leaders who are going to appeal to his ego and try to play upon his insecurities, which is very, very worrisome from a national security standpoint.” Also on CNN’s State Of The Union, Clapper “said he agrees with that assessment.” Said Clapper, “He seems very susceptible to rolling out the red carpet and honor guards and all the trappings and pomp and circumstance that come with the office, and I think that appeals to him, and I think it plays to his insecurities.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/12, Youssef) reports Clapper said Russia poses an ongoing threat and yet Trump insists on “rolling out the red carpet” for the Russian leader. “The Russians do not harbor good intentions toward the United States, and there shouldn't be any illusions or any ambiguity about that. And our President fosters that ambiguity," Clapper said. Brennan added, "It's very clear that the Russians interfered in the election, and it's still puzzling as to why Mr. Trump does not acknowledge that, embrace it and also push back hard against Mr. Putin."

The Los Angeles Times (11/12, King) calls their remarks "an extraordinary critique of President Trump's mode of dealing with foreign leaders," while Bloomberg News (11/12, Niquette) and the AP (11/12, Lemire, Colvin) also reports their remarks. Reuters (11/12, Lynch) reports Brennan "declined to say whether he knows of any intelligence to suggest that the Russians have compromising or damaging information on Trump."

USA Today (11/12, Shesgreen) reports the two former officials were responding to Trump's statement that Putin "means it" when he denies the Kremlin meddled in the 2016 presidential election, which he "since tried to clarify."

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin responded to their remarks on CNN's State Of The Union (11/12, Tapper) saying, "In all due respect to your previous guests, I think those were the most ridiculous statements." He added that Trump "is not getting played by anybody," but that he was "focused on some very important issues, which are North Korea and Syria."

Abby Phillip of the Washington Post said on CNN Inside Politics (11/12), "It's worth noting here that...current officials believe what the former officials believe, that Russia meddled in the election. The only person that doesn't seem to believe that is President Trump." Michael Warren of the Weekly Standard similarly said on CNN Inside Politics (11/12), "The problem is that it's everybody in the Administration, everybody in the intelligence community. There is nobody in the White House even, who disagrees with the view that Russia did something, except for the President. And that's a problem."

Clinton Aide Calls Trump A "Russian Agent," Yates Calls President "Shamelessly Unpatriotic."

The Daily Caller (11/12, Donachie) reports that a former adviser to Hillary Clinton called Trump a Russian "agent" and urged "those who are in a position to put forth articles of impeachment should do so." Adam Parkhomenko tweeted, "Russia has an agent in the White House. His name is Donald Trump. This is the United States of America and those in a position to utilize safeguards in place such as the 25th or Impeachment are not defending the constitution and it's absolutely disgusting."

The Daily Caller (11/12, Daley) reports former acting attorney general Sally Yates called the President "shamelessly unpatriotic" in response to his comments about Putin over the weekend. Yates said in a Saturday tweet that Trump's statements about Putin are "disturbing and shamelessly unpatriotic."

New York Times (11/12, Blow) columnist Charles Blow, along similar lines, calls Trump's remarks "a striking declaration, a betrayal of American trust and interests that is almost treasonous in its own right."

McAuliffe, Perez Dismiss Impeachment Talk. Politico (11/12, Siders) reports Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe said Sunday he does not support impeaching President Trump. "Let [Special Counsel Robert] Mueller, and let the people who are doing the process, go through and do what they're doing," McAuliffe said. "You don't prejudge investigations." A second Politico (11/12, Warmbrodt) report says DNC Chairman Tom Perez told ABC's "This Week" that he is "not talking about impeachment," but "declined to rebuke" Tom Steyer's multimillion-dollar television campaign calling for Trump's impeachment. "Tom Steyer has a right to do whatever he feels he needs to do," Perez said.

WTimes Analysis: Schiff "Unrelenting" In Quest To Validate Fusion GPS Dossier. The Washington Times (11/12, Scarborough) reports Rep. Adam Schiff "has not given up on proving that his party's financed, Kremlin-sourced dossier is true." The California Democrat "pressed his case again this month during a long closed hearing with former Trump campaign volunteer Carter Page to try to revive what had become dormant charges of criminal conduct." Schiff, it notes, "previously said that one of his main objectives for the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence investigation is to find which dossier parts are true."

Comey Increasingly Active On Twitter Amid Trump Attacks. The Washington Post (11/12, Phillips) reports former FBI director James Comey "has been somewhat active on Twitter over the past month, mostly tweeting nature photos and avoiding anything blatantly political." The tweets "may seem innocuous to someone who had not been following the news of the past couple days," but the Post says they came after President Trump resurrected his attacks against Comey.

Media Analyses: Trump Unlikely To Rebuke Duterte For Drug War Killings.

The AP (11/12, Lemire) reports Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte has "sanctioned a bloody drug war that features extrajudicial killing,” and boasted this week “that he murdered a man with his own hands. All that may well go unmentioned in public” by President Trump when the leaders hold talks Monday. In what the AP calls a break with his presidential predecessors, Trump has “largely abandoned publicly pressing foreign leaders on human rights, instead showing a willingness to embrace international strongmen for strategic gain.” The Washington Post (11/12, Rauhala) likewise says that while former President Obama “called out Duterte’s rights record, Trump has steered clear of public comment.” US lawmakers are “calling on Trump to express concern, and the White House hinted that he just might.”

Jonathan Karl said on the ABC World News Tonight (11/12, lead story, 3:40), “White House officials say it will come up,” but “I, frankly, can’t see this being a major topic of discussion with President Trump.” Major Garrett reported on the CBS Weekend News (11/12, lead story, 2:35, Quijano) that White House Chief of Staff Kelly “told us human rights has been ‘a hot topic here,’ but the United States still needed proof of abuses. Duterte said this won’t even come up.” NBC Nightly News (11/12, lead story, 2:35, Diaz-Balart), meanwhile, reported that in planning for the Asia tour, “the White House considered not coming to Manila to avoid the bad political optics of the President being seen with a violent authoritarian like Duterte.” However, other Asian leaders “urged” Trump to reconsider, and now “he’s actually adding an extra day here in Manila. It is a show of support for those leaders and allies he needs to trade and North Korea.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/12, Watts) reports that a Duterte spokesman said he and Trump “were genuinely pleased to have finally met” very briefly at the APEC summit in Vietnam over the weekend. Duterte said he and Trump would have “an interesting time” in the Philippines and that they “share so many ideas.”

Duterte, the New York Times (11/12, Paddock, Villamor) reports, “unleashes profane diatribes about countries and world figures he dislikes, with the United States often on the receiving end. But more quietly, he seems to have warmed to the United States and President Trump, who also has a notably provocative style.” The Times says “one big reason for his shift in rhetoric when it comes to the United States is clear: President Trump is a marked improvement in Mr. Duterte’s eyes over Barack Obama, who urged the Philippines leader to follow the rule of law in tackling the illegal drug trade.”

Reuters (11/12, Holland, Lema) reports Trump joined ASEAN leaders at “an extravagant gala dinner” in Manila Sunday, “a show of amity in a region fraught with tensions that have lurked behind his marathon tour of the continent.” Trump is “expected to try during the summit to shore up relations, which have been strained by the mercurial Duterte’s notorious anti-US sentiment and his enthusiasm for better ties with Russia and China.”

Trump, Duterte “United” On Fight Against ISIS. NBC Nightly News (11/12, story 2, 2:10, Diaz-Balart) reported Trump’s visit to Manila comes “just weeks after government forces, backed by the United States, drove ISIS out of” Marawi. More than half a million people fled the city during the five month battle, and the army retook the city “only by destroying it.” While ISIS lost more than 900 fighters in the battle, “it’s claiming victory because it held this city for so long.” Describing the Philippines as the “new front line for ISIS in Asia,” NBC (Neely) said Trump and Duterte appear “united in fighting a common enemy.”

CBS News: Hitman Claims Duterte Pays For Murders In Drug War. The CBS Weekend News (11/12, story 2, 3:30, Quijano) reported on Duterte’s war on drugs, traveling with Philippine police as they conducted raids on alleged drug users and dealers. CBS’ Kylie Atwood spoke to one “hit man” who claimed that “every murder” as part of the war on drugs, the police pay him and his partner $400. When asked if the money comes from Duterte, the man responded, “This is from the President.” However, “despite Duterte’s public comments endorsing the killing drug users,” a spokesperson for the Philippines National Police “said they follow the rule of law and are not hiring hitmen.” When Atwood asked one police official when the war on drugs will end for the country, the official said, “We want to end it by having no demand and no supply in the country.”

Duterte Turns Down Trump Offers To Mediate South China Sea Dispute. The New York Post (11/12, Moore) reports President Trump “touted his negotiating skills as he inserted himself” Sunday in a dispute among Asian nations over control of the South China Sea, saying “if I can help you, let me know.” Speaking in Vietnam, the President told reporters, “South China Sea – as you know, we’re looking at – we’re looking at it together. If I could help mediate or arbitrate, please let me know. I know we’ve had a dispute for quite a while with China. If I can help in any way, I’m a very good mediator and a very good arbitrator. I have done plenty of it from both sides. So if I can help you, let me know.” Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte, however, “quickly shot down Trump’s offer.”

Conway Downplays Trump’s “Short And Fat” Tweet About Kim Jong-Un. All three networks reported briefly on Trump's tweets over the weekend directed at North Korea leader Kim Jong-Un. ABC World News Tonight (11/12, lead story, 3:40) said the President "took on Kim Jong-Un, tweeting, 'Why would Kim Jong-Un insult me by calling me 'old,' when I would NEVER call him 'short and fat?' Oh well, I try so hard to be his friend, and maybe someday, that will happen!'" The CBS Weekend News (11/12, lead story, 2:35, Quijano) said Trump "did some provoking of his own on Twitter after the North Korean dictator called him a quote 'old lunatic,'" and NBC Nightly News (11/12, lead story, 2:35, Diaz-Balart) reported Trump, asked about the possibility of becoming friends with Kim, said, "Strange things happen in life. That might be a strange thing to happen. But it's certainly a possibility."

The Washington Times (11/12, Howell) reports White House counselor Kellyanne Conway Sunday defended the President's tweet, saying Trump was "responding the way he does to somebody who insulted him first" when he criticized North Korean leader Kim Jong-un's appearance on Twitter. Asked by Martha Raddatz on ABC's This Week if the President's comments were "helpful," Conway responded, "What's helpful, in full context, is a 13-day trip where the President is very focused on global security and combating terrorism, and most importantly containing a nuclearized North Korea."

The Los Angeles Times (11/12, Bierman) reports that hours after President Trump "taunted" Kim on Twitter, suggesting he is "short and fat," the White House Chief of Staff Kelly "insisted he doesn't carefully follow Trump's comments on social media and tells other aides not to react to them." Speaking to reporters in Vietnam, Kelly said, "Someone, I read the other day, said we all just react to the tweets. We don't. I don't. I don't allow the staff to. We know what we're doing. Believe it or not, I do not follow the tweets." He added, "I find out about them. But for our purposes, my purpose, is we make sure the president is briefed up on what he's about to do."

Photographer Who Protested White House Restrictions Gets "His Revenge." The Washington Post (11/12, Nakamura) reports New York Times photographer Doug Mills on Friday was part of the traveling "press pool" shadowing President Trump in Danang, Vietnam, when he tweeted a "photo" of "a black box to protest the White House's decision to shut out the pool from any coverage" of the APEC forum. On Monday, Mills "got his revenge" at the ASEAN summit, snapping a shot of the ASEAN leaders' "family photo" that "spread quickly through social media after he posted it online." Political pundits "quickly made hay of the photo and poked fun at Trump."

Trump To Make "Major" Trade Announcement Wednesday.

Politico (11/12, Restuccia) reports President Trump said Sunday he'll make a "major" announcement on trade Wednesday at the White House upon returning from his trip to Asia. The statement will "detail Trump's discussions with world leaders during his 12-day, five-country tour of Asia." During a meeting with Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe in Manila, Trump said, "A lot of things are happening on trade and I'll be announcing pretty much what happened here and also with other meetings, including with China, South Korea and lots of other places." He later added, "We've made some very big steps with respect to trade, far bigger than anything you know." Politico says he "did not offer any specifics about the pending announcement."

Meanwhile, a Wall Street Journal (11/12, Browne) analysis of the President's trip to China said Trump appeared to absolve President Xi Jinping of all responsibility for China's trade abuses, but a closer examination reveals that the lack of announcements may have been part of the White House strategy.

US States, Cities Pledge Commitment To Paris Accord.

The AP (11/11, Jordans, Thiesing) reported that at a global climate conference in Bonn, Germany on Saturday, California Gov. Jerry Brown, former New York City mayor Michael Bloomberg, and representatives from other US states, cities, companies, and universities "said they are still committed to curbing global warming even as U.S. President Donald Trump's administration is walking away from the Paris climate accord." While the alliance, dubbed "America's Pledge," has a collective economy exceeding that of Japan and Germany combined, it cautioned in a report that "we cannot underscore strongly enough the critical nature of federal engagement to achieve the deep decarbonization goals the U.S. must undertake after 2025."

In an interview with the New York Times (11/11, Friedman), Bloomberg said, "Just because the federal government has chosen not to participate [in the Paris climate accord], the American public represented by its elected officials at other levels, by corporations, by universities, we understand that there's a problem and we have to help solve that problem if we're going to have a future in this world." The Times said that the "dueling American delegations...mirror a larger division within the United States over climate change" following Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris agreement.

Meanwhile, Reuters (11/12, Rowling) reports that the "mayors from 25 cities around the world, representing 150 million citizens, pledged on Sunday to cut their carbon emissions to net zero by 2050, while boosting efforts to become more resilient to extreme weather and other pressures linked to climate change." Reuters adds that "they pledged to put in place by 2020 their new, ambitious climate action plans, to be developed with help from the C40 Cities network."

Democrats Field Alternate US Delegation To Global Warming Conference.

NBC Nightly News (11/12, story 8, 2:35, Diaz-Balart) reported "there are competing US interests at work" at the climate talks in Bonn. On the one hand, "the Trump Administration plans to make the case for cleaner fossil fuels and nuclear energy as an answer to climate change. But another American delegation, critical of President Trump's decision to withdraw from the Paris climate agreement, is also at the conference." It is led by California Gov. Jerry Brown and former Vice President Al Gore, who "will emphasize that much of this country remains committed to reducing carbon emissions that warm the planet."

Also among the Americans in Bonn, Politico (11/12, Siders, Holden) reports, are "several Democratic US senators" who "began meeting last week with officials from other countries, seeking to minimize Trump's withdrawal from the Paris climate agreement."

JCT: Middle Class Will See Biggest Tax Cuts Under Senate Bill.

A new report from the Joint Committee on Taxation shows that the Senate tax reform plan "would go much further than a competing House proposal toward making good on Republican promises to focus on the middle class," Politico (11/12, Faler) reports. According to the JCT analysis, "moderate-income people would consistently see the largest percentage declines in their tax bills." In 2019, people earning between $50,000 and $70,000, "would see their taxes fall by 7.1 percent," while "those earning between $20,000 and $30,000 would see a 10.4 percent decline," and "millionaires would get a 5.3 percent tax cut." Moreover, "unlike with the House plan, that trend holds up throughout the period over which JCT analyzed the Senate proposal." In 2027, "millionaires would get a 2.8 percent tax cut from the Senate plan, compared with a 6.1 percent decline for people in the middle and a 10.3 percent reduction for those earning between $20,000 and $30,000." The Hill (11/12, Jagoda) says the JCT analysis "contrasts with its score of the House bill" which it estimated "would cut taxes on average for all income groups in 2019 but would increase taxes on average for those making $20,000 to $40,000 in some later years."

WSJournal Analysis: GOP Plans Will Make System Simpler, But Many Households Will Fare Worse. A Wall Street Journal (11/12, Rubin) analysis says that while the House and Senate tax plans will not make enable most Americans to file a return the size of a post card, they do move toward making the system simpler. However, simpler may not mean better for many households as some will fare worse under the House plan, according to the Journal.

Millionaires, Billionaires Urge Congress Not To Cut Their Taxes. The Washington Post (11/12, Long) reports that more than 400 millionaires and billionaires are writing to Congress this week to urge Republicans not to cut their taxes. They argue that "the GOP is making a mistake by reducing taxes on the richest families at a time when the nation's debt is high and inequality is back at the worst level since the 1920s," and their letter "calls on Congress not to pass any tax bill that 'further exacerbates inequality' and adds to the debt." The letter urges lawmakers "to raises taxes on rich people like them." Signatories include "Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream founders Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield, fashion designer Eileen Fisher, billionaire hedge fund manager George Soros, and philanthropist Steven Rockefeller, as well as many individuals and couples who aren't household names but are part of the top 5 percent ($1.5 million in assets or earning $250,000 or more a year)."

WPost: GOP Bill's Elimination Of AMT Would Benefit The Wealthy. In an editorial the Washington Post (11/12) that a provision of the tax bill that would "repeal of the alternative minimum tax," would "serve the interests of wealthy taxpayers — and tax avoiders."

Dionne: Republican Tax Plans Favor "Extremely Rich" Over Everyone Else. E.J. Dionne Jr. writes in his column in the Washington Post (11/12) that Republican Members of Congress do not "denounce" President Trump, because what "they care about most" is not his tendency toward "autocracy" or "bigotry", but that he "is tilting our economy toward people just like him." He urges Democrats to ensure that Trump is "exposed as a fraud whenever he says he has the backs of the 'forgotten men and women.'" Dionne argues that Trump and the Republican leaders in Congress, as exhibited in the tax reform plans, are focused on “pay[ing] off their largest contributors.” The plans, says Dionne “don’t simply favor the well-off”, but “advantage certain kinds of extremely rich people” specifically those he calls “the biggest stockholders” and “struggling millionaire and billionaire heirs and heiresses.” Dionne also says that the tax plans do not simplify the tax code, but make it “even more complex,” in the interest of the rich.

Republicans Search For Analyses Showing Tax Cuts Won’t Add To Deficit.

The New York Times (11/12, Tankersley) reports that although GOP leaders “keep insisting that their plans to cut taxes by $1.5 trillion over the next decade will not add to the national debt,” economic analyses “keep predicting that the plans will do just that.” As a result, House and Senate GOP leaders and the Administration are seeking to “hunt down – and promote – more optimistic forecasts, even if they exclude large parts of the tax bills from their analyses or assume growth-boosting features that are not, in fact, in the bills.”

McConnell Concedes He Exaggerated Claims On Tax Bill.

Bloomberg News (11/10, Dennis) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell “acknowledged to The New York Times Friday he erred when he said in an MSNBC appearance last week that ‘nobody in the middle class is going to get a tax increase.’” McConnell said, “You can’t guarantee that absolutely no one sees a tax increase.” Bloomberg adds that he joins House Speaker Ryan “in walking back their statements on taxes. Ryan had said in a radio interview Wednesday, ‘So actually, even though there’s a lot of false information out there, everybody gets a tax cut.’” According to Bloomberg, “that statement was false, as there are millions of people who would face higher tax bills from the loss of deductions,” and a spokesman for Ryan on Thursday “told The Washington Post that he misspoke.”

Will: GOP Tax Plan “An Implausible Instrument Of Simplification.” In his Washington Post (11/10, Will) column, George Will states that while “the Republicans’ tax bill would somewhat improve” the country’s current tax system, the latest “bill, which is 429 pages and is apt to grow, is an implausible instrument of simplification. And it would worsen the tax code’s already substantial contribution to ‘moral hazard.’”

Lahart: Tax Reform Delays Should Make Wall Street Investors Nervous. The Wall Street Journal (11/10, Lahart) “Heard on the Street” columnist Justin Lahart argues that the longer it takes for lawmakers to vote on a complete tax reform bill, the more anxious investors should get. He suggests delays will likely result in less friendly legislation for Wall Street, particularly if Republicans are unable to get the votes.

Wind Energy Industry Lauds Senate For Preserving Tax Credit.

Reuters (11/10, Groom) reports the American Wind Energy Association (AWEA) trade group on Friday “cheered a Senate tax proposal that, unlike the House version unveiled last week, preserves the tax credit that helps wind farms compete with plants fired by fossil fuels.” AWEA CEO Tom Kiernan asserted the legislation “keeps a promise to America’s more than 100,000 wind energy workers and restores the confidence of businesses pouring billions of dollars into rural America.”

However, a Wall Street Journal (11/10) editorial calls for Republicans to stop protecting the wind lobby and end the industry’s tax credit.

WPost A1: Pruitt Uses Industry Data To Challenge Findings By EPA Scientists.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (11/10, A1, Eilperin, Dennis) reports Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Pruitt is spearheading “a profound shift...in which the agency has reassessed its own data and analyses at the prompting of corporations.” According to the Post, “on pesticides, chemical solvents and air pollutants, Pruitt and his deputies are using industry figures to challenge past findings and recommendations of the agency’s own scientists.” While the “change has drawn praise from longtime EPA critics, such as House Science Committee Chairman Lamar Smith,” the Post says that “environmentalists contend Pruitt is sidelining agency scientists on key decisions.”

EPA Advisor Challenges Pruitt To “Officially Fire” Her. The Washington Post (11/10, Dennis, Eilperin) reports that although Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Pruitt recently announced plans “to forbid scientists who receive grants from the agency from serving as outside advisers” on the EPA’s Scientific Advisory Board, Clean Air Science Advisory Committee, and Board of Scientific Counselors, Robyn Wilson, “an Ohio State University professor and specialist in risk analysis” who was recently informed that her services on the Scientific Advisory Board were no longer needed, responded, "Mr. Pruitt is welcome to officially fire me from the Board, as I am clearly not on the new list of SAB members." However, Wilson continued, "given I had one year left in my term, and I was hired by the previous Administrator, it seems as if the appropriate way for him to enact this policy is to provide an official letter informing me that I am being let go before my term ends."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Right Way To Cut Corporate Taxes." In an editorial, the New York Times (11/12) says while Republicans "are right about the corporate tax system being broken," they are "wrong about why it's failing and how to fix it." the Times argues that "true reform" would "not blow a $1.7 trillion hole in the budget over the next decade, which is what the House plan would do, according to the Congressional Budget Office," and it would "make the system fairer and more efficient. If Republicans worked with Democrats, they could reach a compromise to lower the top corporate tax rate to between 25 percent and 28 percent, eliminated loopholes and reduced the incentive businesses have to take on debt, rather than to use equity to expand." In addition it would "include a minimum tax on profits earned abroad by American corporations in the year those profits are earned, minus a credit for taxes paid to other countries."

"Gun Carnage In The Nation. Groundhog Day In The Capitol." A New York Times (11/12, Board) editorial says "no one more clearly epitomizes the Groundhog Day image of dogged persistence in the face of repeated rejection than Senator Dianne Feinstein," who "responded to the Texas massacre last week (26 dead) by once more introducing her signature proposal to revive the federal ban on rapid-fire assault weapons adapted from the military battlefield." the Times adds that while the elections last week "produced victories for some Democratic candidates who dared call for tougher gun safety," President Trump offered "yet another genuflection before the N.R.A. There is no gun problem in the nation that cannot be dealt with, he said, if enough citizens have guns. Happy Groundhog Day."

Washington Post.

"Metro Need $500 Million A Year, And It Needs It Now." The Washington Post (11/12) editorializes that the primary cause of the problems plaguing Washington's Metro system are caused by "funding, according to a comprehensive study of the network by Ray LaHood, a former Republican congressman who served as transportation secretary in the Obama administration." The Post opines that "what distinguishes Metro from its peers elsewhere is not how much it spends but how much it receives, both from local stakeholders in Virginia, Maryland and the District and from the federal government, whose employees make up 40 percent of rush-hour passengers." It concludes by asserting that "their failure to commit to ongoing, assured and adequate funding led Metro to its current woes," and that "it's on them to ante up to set the system up for a brighter future."

"The Little-Discussed Part Of The GOP Tax Bill Proves What Its Really About." In an editorial the Washington Post (11/12) that a provision of the tax bill that would "repeal of the alternative minimum tax," would "serve the interests of wealthy taxpayers — and tax avoiders."

"Tillerson's Redesign For State Looks A Lot Like A Retreat." In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/12) says "there is not an agency in government that could not benefit from a fresh look," but raises questions about Secretary of State Tillerson's "redesign" of the State Department. The Post notes that the president of the American Foreign Service Association, former ambassador Barbara Stephenson, has raised an "alarm about the future of the US diplomatic corps," saying the department has decided "to slash promotion numbers by more than half." In response, "a State Department spokeswoman" said that "suggestions that drastic cuts to our Foreign Service ranks are taking place are simply not accurate," and that freezes on personnel movement, including hiring, will be lifted "at the appropriate time." The Post argues that the US "has sprawling interests around the globe," and the "redesign" must "not be a recipe for retreat."

Wall Street Journal.

"ObamaCare Tax Relief." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/12) makes a case for repealing the ACA's individual mandate as part of the tax reform legislation being crafted by Congress.

“A Nafta Recession?” The Wall Street Journal (11/12) editorializes that many economists agree that President Trump’s threat to withdraw from the North American Free Trade Agreement would not help the economy if it came to fruition. Several economists that the Journal surveyed predicted that such a move would cause a recession. The Journal concludes that Trump’s focus on a protectionist trade agenda is his Achilles’ heel, although he is generally doing well with regard to economic policy.

“Putin’s Syria Play.” The Wall Street Journal (11/12) editorializes that a joint statement made on Saturday by Russia and the US announcing plans aimed at the deconfliction of parts of Syria amounts to giving Iran and Russia an advantage in the region, while leaving America’s Syrian and Kurdish allies, who were largely responsible for the near-complete ouster of ISIS from its territory, with an uncertain future. The Journal asserts that military conditions on the ground will dictate the terms of lasting peace in the area, not the deconfliction strategy favored by Russia and Iran.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GOP Bills Remove Some Of The Tax Code’s Complexities
Surveillance Cameras Made By China Are Hanging All Over The US
Uber Board Settles Feud, Clearing Way For SoftBank Deal

New York Times:

Security Breach And Spilled Secrets Have Shaken The NSA To Its Core
Despite Recent Wins For Democrats, Gerrymanders Dim Hopes For 2018
Trump Health Agency Challenges Consensus On Reducing Costs
Appeal Offers Hope For Newtown Families In Suit Against Gun Companies
Liz Smith, Longtime Queen Of Tabloid Gossip Columns, Dies At 94
One Week After Texas Church Shooting, A Sunday Service Offers Hope

Washington Post:

Sheriffs Raise Their Voices For Trump
The Love Of His Life Was Killed — Then So Was He Tragedy And Testimony
The Children’s War
Difficult Decisions Loom On Tax Cuts

Financial Times:

Trump Under Scrutiny Over Rapport With Philippines’ Duterte
UK Spymasters Raise Suspicions Over Kaspersky Software’s Russia Links
Somaliland Hopes Election Will Bolster Case For Independence
US Banks’ ‘Stop Gap’ Brexit Plans Set To Retain London Jobs

Washington Times:

Russia Today Registration Part Of Justice Department Crackdown On Foreign Agents Law
Goose Chase? Schiff Unrelenting In Quest To Hunt Down Proof From Russia Dossier
Iran Vs. Saudi Arabia: Dangerous War Looms Between Middle East Powerhouses
Biden’s Moment: Book Tour Can Pave Way To Presidential Campaign Trail
Health Care Voters Turn Republican Election Strength Into Liability

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Trump-Asia Visit; Roy Moore-Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Middle East Earthquake; Florida-Airport Bomb Scare; Kevin Spacey Sexual Assault Scandal; Texas Church Shooting-Aftermath; San Diego Gym Accident; Google-Business Listing Scam; Speed Boat Crash; Texas Party Floor Collapse; Texas-Apartment Fire; Veteran Marathon Runner.

CBS: Trump-Asia Visit; Philippines-War On Drugs; Roy Moore-Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Sexual Misconduct Awareness Movement; Texas Church Shooting-Aftermath; Face Transplant Receiver; Obama Presidency Photographer; Vietnam War Veteran Photographs.

NBC: Trump-Asia Visit; Philippines-ISIS; Texas Church Shooting-Aftermath; Texas Church Shooting-Gunman; San Diego Gym Accident; Middle East Earthquake; Poland-Independence Day;

Climate Change-Glaciers; Liz Smith Dies; Holiday Travel Deals; Commercial Rocket Blastoff; Breakfast At Tiffany's; Hurricane Recovery-Caribbean.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Asia Visit – 8 minutes, 50 seconds

Texas Church Shooting – 8 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-Asia Visit; Minnesota-Mall Robbery Attempt; Middle East Earthquake.

CBS: Trump-Asia Visit; Philippines-War On Drugs; Trump-Putin Comment; Tax Reform Plan; Sexual Misconduct Awareness Movement; Roy Moore-Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Middle East Earthquake; Wall Street News.

FOX: Trump-Asia Visit; Central America, Middle East Earthquakes; Minnesota-Mall Robbery Attempt; Liz Smith Dies.

NPR: Texas Church Shooting; Roy Moore-Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Trump-Asia Visit; Middle East Earthquake; Central America Earthquake.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in a photo opportunity with President Rodrigo Duterte of the Philippines; participates in the opening ceremony of the 31st ASEAN Summit; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull of Australia; participates in a bilateral meeting with President Rodrigo Duterte of the Philippines; attends the 5th U.S.-ASEAN Summit; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Narendra Modi of India; participates in an embassy meet and greet; has dinner with Prime Minister Turnbull.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a meeting with Vatican Secretary of State Pietro Parolin; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for Kenneth Juster as U.S. Ambassador to India; participates in a campaign event for Governor Greg Abbott of Texas.

US Senate: 9:00 AM Opioid users call on Congress to fund addiction treatment and overdose prevention – Dozens of opioid users and their allies visit Capitol Hill to pressure Congress to invest $45 billion in addiction treatment and overdose prevention efforts to help address the opioid epidemic, with actions at the office of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Rm 317, Russell Senate Office Bldg, and the office of House Speaker Paul Ryan, Rm 1233, Longworth House Office Bldg (9:00 AM EST) * Followed by Capitol Hill press conference to announce the launch of the Opioid Network, a new direct action group that includes activists involved in recent efforts to save Obamacare (3:00 PM EST) Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC populardemocracy.org <https://twitter.com/popdemoc>

3:00 PM Senate Finance Committee considers Tax Cuts and Jobs Act – Executive Session, to consider 'an original bill entitled the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act' * Unveiled last week, the bill is similar to that which was recently passed by the House Committee on Ways and Means, although features some key differences, including retaining the seven income tax rates, eliminating the state and local tax deduction, and cutting corporation tax at a later date Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://finance.senate.gov>

4:00 PM Senate votes on transportation under secretary nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Derek Kan to be Under Secretary of Transportation for Policy, with agenda including a vote on the nomination followed by a vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the nomination of Steven Bradbury to be Department of Transportation General Counsel * Cloture motion on the Kan nomination passed by 87 votes to nine last week Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 9:00 AM Opioid users call on Congress to fund addiction treatment and overdose prevention – Dozens of opioid users and their allies visit Capitol Hill to pressure Congress to invest $45 billion in addiction treatment and overdose prevention efforts to help address the opioid epidemic, with actions at the office of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Rm 317, Russell Senate Office Bldg, and the office of House Speaker Paul Ryan, Rm 1233, Longworth House Office Bldg (9:00 AM EST) * Followed by Capitol Hill press conference to announce the launch of the Opioid Network, a new direct action group that includes activists involved in recent efforts to save Obamacare (3:00 PM EST) Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC populardemocracy.org <https://twitter.com/popdemoc>

11:00 AM Tax reform press conference with Washington, DC, mayor and Dem Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton – Washington, DC, Mayor Muriel Bowser and Democratic Rep. Eleanor Holmes North discuss their concerns with the House Republican tax reform bill – the ‘Tax Cuts and Jobs Act’ – via press conference with other speakers including Alexandria, VA, Mayor Allison Silberberg, National League of Cities Senior Executive and Federal Advocacy Director Irma Esparza Diggs, National Association of Counties Executive Director Matthew Chase, and Americans Against Double Taxation’s Andrew Koneschusky Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.dc.gov <https://twitter.com/MayorBowser>

1:00 PM Antimicrobial Resistance Aware Fair on Capitol Hill – Antimicrobial Resistance Aware Fair – presented by AdvaMed, BD (Becton, Dickinson and Company), and Infectious Diseases Society of America in cooperation with bipartisan Reps. Mike Thompson, Erik Paulsen, John Shimkus, and Gene Green – featuring interactive displays on patient resources, the public health response and research on antimicrobial resistance (AMR), diagnostics, and treatment Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Gold Rm, Washington, DC <http://www.advamed.org> <https://twitter.com/AdvaMedUpdate>

2:00 PM House meets for legislative business, with Tax Cuts and Jobs Act expected to be on week’s agenda – House of Representatives meets for legislative business * Chamber is this week expected to debate ‘H.R. 1, The Tax Cuts and Jobs Act’, which would reduce the number of different tax bands, increase the standard deduction, eliminate the Alternative Minimum Tax, largely eliminate the State and Local Tax Deduction, convert corporate tax into a flat rate, and increase the estate tax exemption Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on Conference Report to Accompany ‘H.R. 2810 – National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 9:30 AM U.S.-Japan Council Annual Conference – 2017 U.S.-Japan Council (USJC) Annual Conference, ‘Unity in Diversity: Shaping the Future Together’, bringing together regional, national, and international leaders from govt, business, academia, and the nonprofit sector to discuss strengthening the bilateral relationship. Keynotes include Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross, Secretary of Transportation Elaine Chao, Japan Financial Services Agency Commissioner Nobuchika Mori, Northrop Grumman Corporation Chairman, CEO, and President Wes Bush, Industrial Growth Platform Managing Partner Kazuhiko Toyama, and Goldman Sachs Japan Company Vice Chair Kathy Matsui, with other speakers including Massachusetts State Rep. Keiko Orrall and former U.S. Ambassador to Japan Tom Schieffer Location: JW Marriott Washington, DC, 1331 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.usjapanCouncil.org/> <https://twitter.com/USJC>

2:00 PM Secretary of Defense James Mattis hosts honor cordon to welcome Georgian Defense Minister Levan Izoria to the Pentagon Location: The Pentagon, Arlington, VA <http://www.defense.gov/> <https://twitter.com/DeptofDefense>

2:00 PM Czech Republic Ambassador to the U.S. speaks at Potomac Institute – Potomac Institute Inter-University Center for Terrorism Studies discussion on ‘Czech Republic-U.S. Strategic Partnership’, with Czech Republic Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Hynek Kmonicek Location: Potomac Institute for Policy Studies, 901 N Stuart St, Arlington, VA www.potomacInstitute.org <https://twitter.com/PotomacInst>

4:00 PM GOP Rep. Jim Banks speaks on education at Heritage Foundation – ‘Educational Freedom for Those Who Secure Our Freedoms’ Heritage Foundation and EdChoice panel discussion, with panelists including Republican Rep. Jim Banks, EdChoice Research and Innovation Vice President Paul DePerna, Civitas Institute Communications Fellow Brooke Medina, and Heritage Foundation Center for Education Policy Will Skillman Fellow in Education and Director Lindsey Burke Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org <https://twitter.com/Heritage>

5:00 PM Wall Street Journal CEO Council Annual Meeting opens – Wall Street Journal CEO Council Annual Meeting commences with a welcome reception and opening dinner. The event brings together 100 of the world’s leading CEOs to debate and decide on action plans for addressing key economic issues. Day one speakers include Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin and News Corporation CEO Robert Thomson Location: Four Seasons Hotel Washington, DC, 2800 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://ceocouncil.wsj.com/> #WSJCEOCouncil

6:00 PM The Dialogue Leadership for the Americas Annual Awards Gala – The Dialogue Leadership for the Americas Annual Awards Gala, celebrating individuals and organizations committed to advancing democratic governance, social equity, and prosperity in the Western Hemisphere. Honorees include Inter-American Development Bank President H.E. Luis Alberto

Moreno (Distinguished Leadership Award for Social Equity) and FUNDEMAS Founding President and Grupo AGRISAL Chairman Roberto Murray Meza (Distinguished Leadership Award for Civic Engagement). Presenters include Democratic Sen. Mark Warner and Republican Rep. Francis Rooney Location: Mandarin Oriental Hotel Group, 1330 Maryland Ave SW, Washington, DC www.thedialogue.org https://twitter.com/The_Dialogue #DialogueLeaders

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, November 20, 2017
Date: Monday, November 20, 2017 6:12:29 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Politico: Trump Says Decision On Elephant Hunting Trophies To Come This Week.
- Washington Post: Zinke Rocked Moccasins To Celebrate Native Cultures. But Tribes Are Focused On His Plans To Rock Bears Ears.
- Brainerd (MN) Daily Dispatch: Interior Secretary Visits Mille Lacs, Discusses Law Enforcement Crisis.
- St. Thomas Source: Mapp Meets Interior Secretary Zinke In D.C.
- U.S. News & World Report: Transmission Line From Oregon-To-Idaho Gets Approval.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Congress Pushes Back On Interior Plan That Would More Than Double National Park Fees.

- Austin (TX) American Statesman: Susan Combs Hits A New Hurdle In Her Path To Washington Post.
- Federal News Radio (DC): House Committee Backs Westward Move For Interior Employees.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: BLM Advisory Councils Are Free To Meet Again After Initial Review.
- CNN: Additional Coverage: Poor Record-Keeping Hindering Zinke Travel Investigation, IG Says.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Program Helps Tribal Court Employees Increase Navajo Language Skills.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: The Powder River Basin Is Poised For Another Boom, But Some Say The Feds Are In The Way.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: BLM Picks Up Tab For Plugging Old Wells Near Douglas Pass.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Mark Sanford Opposes Energy Bill Championed By GOP Leaders.
- BOEM Looks For Comments On Hilcorp's Liberty Development.
- Louisiana May See More Offshore Oil Money Under Cassidy Budget Amendment.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Wash. Reps Float Bill To Speed Up DOI Water Project Reviews.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- USA Today: Congress Moves To 'Drill, Baby, Drill' In Alaska's ANWR Refuge. Here's What You Should Know.
- High Country (CO) News: Fish And Wildlife Retracts Opposition To Arizona Project.
- Palm Beach (FL) Post: How A Neon Green Fern Sparked An Environmental Showdown.
- U.S. News & World Report: With Dam Cleared From Creek, Endangered Fish Expand Range.

National Park Service

- Roll Call: Proposal Restricting National Mall Access A 'Game Changer' For Hill Athletes.
- WRC-TV Washington: Beach Boys, Wynonna To Play National Christmas Tree Lighting.
- U.S. News & World Report: Fort Sumter Seeks Comment On New Plan For Disabled Access.
- U.S. News & World Report: Grand Teton Park Increases Fees To Camp, Boat, Get Married.
- Omaha (NE) World-Herald: Last Homesteader's Tractor Goes On Display At Homestead National Monument.
- Arizona Daily Star: Saguaro National Park, Open Space Highlight Debate Over New Fry's.
- Harrison (AR) Daily Times: $5K Grant For Compton VFD.
- Marin (CA) Independent Journal: Point Reyes Ranch Plan Comment Period Extended.
- KOMO-TV Seattle: Man Gets Prison Time For 2001 Sex Assault Of Child In Olympic National Park.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Snake Program Obtains Two New 'Sniffer' Dogs.

Office Of Surface Mining

- West Virginia Retraining Program Provides Unemployed Coal Miners With Computer Skills.
- Powder River Basin Mines Earn Awards For Land Management Efforts.

US Geological Survey

- San Francisco Chronicle: Danger Endures In Wine Country As Fight Shifts From Fires To Mudslides.
- Additional Reading.

Opinion Pieces

- Trump Does The Right Thing For Elephants. He Shouldn't Back Down Now.
- Trump Bags Another Anti-Obama Trophy: Dead Elephants.
- Commentary: Assault On ESA Endangers Utah Coffers.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Washington Post: Media Analyses: Officials Send Mixed Signals On Keeping ACA Mandate Repeal In Tax Bill.

- New York Post: Trump Says He Should Have Left UCLA Players "In Jail."
- Washington Post: Trump Touts Economy, Promotes Tax Reform.
- Associated Press: STRATCOM Commander Says Would Refuse Nuclear Strike Order If Illegal.
- New York Times: White House Requests $44 Billion In Additional Disaster Relief.
- New York Times: Puerto Rico Power Authority CEO Resigns Amid Prolonged Post-Hurricane Blackout.
- Associated Press: Officials Say Keystone Leak Will Not Factor Into Monday's Expansion Vote.
- Los Angeles Times: LATimes Analysis: Strong Economy A "Lifeline" For Trump's "Embattled Presidency."
- New York Times: NYTimes Analysis: Trump Still Facing Challenges In Push For Faster Infrastructure Projects.
- Washington Times: Administration Officials Say "Administrative State" Is Being Rolled Back.
- Associated Press: Paris Climate Signatories Agree On Path Forward To Reduce Greenhouse Gas Emissions.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Trump Administration Is Making War On Diplomacy."
- Washington Post.
 - "The House Tax Bill Unleashes A Dangerous Avalanche Of Campaign Cash."
 - "The White House's Much-Needed Rebuke To A Country Smothering Democracy."
 - "A School Volunteer Abused At Least 23 Children. Officials Ignored It."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Germany's Green Energy Meltdown."
 - "A Blue Slip – Not A Franken Veto."
 - "The Menendez Mistrial."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Trump Says Decision On Elephant Hunting Trophies To Come This Week.

Politico (11/19, Griffiths) reports President Trump tweeted Sunday a final decision would come this week on whether to maintain a ban on importing elephant hunting trophies from Zimbabwe and Zambia, "indicating he was leaning toward keeping the Obama-era rules in place." Trump wrote, "Big-game trophy decision will be announced next week but will be very hard pressed to change my mind that this horror show in any way helps conservation of Elephants or any other animal." The Washington Post (11/19, Gearan) says it was "not immediately clear whether the reference to 'any other animal' might mean he is also reconsidering his administration's separate lifting of import bans on lion trophies last month."

Also reporting are The Hill (11/19, Beavers), the Washington Examiner (11/19, Feldscher), CNN (11/19, Graef, Green), and the AP (11/19).

Trump Decision To Delay Repeal Of Elephant Trophy Import Ban Prompts Praise. Roxana Saberi of the CBS Weekend News (11/18, story 4, 2:00, Ninan) reported, "Faced with growing outrage over a move that would have lifted a ban on imports of elephant trophies from two African countries," President Trump on Friday tweeted he is putting the decision "on hold until such time as I review all conservation facts." The decision initially "sparked backlash from celebrities, including Ellen DeGeneres," and the "anger spread online through the #bekindtoelephants. Animal rights groups argue the ban has helped protect Africa's endangered elephants. And The Humane Society of the United States found that after the ban was put in place in 2014, imports of elephant trophies from Zimbabwe fell dramatically." HSUS President Wayne Pacelle "is welcoming President Trump's announcement to delay a decision on lifting the ban, but says the ban should be permanent." Pacelle argued that a live elephant can generate more than $1 million in tourist revenues, compared to only $20,000 for its tusks.

The New York Times (11/17, Cochrane) reports Trump's "evening Twitter message reversed a decision by his own administration that was announced this week and promoted as recently as Friday afternoon by the White House press secretary, Sarah Huckabee Sanders."

The Washington Post (11/18, Eilperin, Gearan) says the "public and private pressure prompted President Trump to overturn his administration's...move to allow elephants shot for sport in Zimbabwe and Zambia to be imported back to the United States as trophies, according to interviews with several individuals briefed on the decision." The Post adds that the announcement "marked animal welfare activists' first federal victory since the president took office in January, and came just hours after" White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "defended the trophy import authorization, saying it resulted from a review by 'career officials' that began in 2014 under former president Barack Obama." While the Post acknowledges Career Fish and Wildlife Service officials did make the decision, "political appointees at Interior did press for resolution of the issue, which is a top priority for hunting industry allies of" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who said following Trump's announcement that "the issuing of permits is put on hold as the decision is being reviewed."

Prior to the President's announcement, ABC World News Tonight (11/17, story 7, 1:30, Muir) reported on the growing "outrage" over "a decision by the Trump Administration lifting a ban on importing trophies of elephants hunted in Africa." Correspondent David Wright said the African elephant is still "a 'threatened' species, but as of today, big game hunters who kill these creatures in Zambia or Zimbabwe will be allowed to get their trophies through US Customs." President Trump himself "is not a big game hunter, but his sons are." Wright said the Administration's "announcement is sparking outrage across the political spectrum, from Fox News commentator Laura Ingram to, just today, Ellen DeGeneres." The White House has pushed back against the criticism, "saying this action comes after a study by professionals of the Department of Fish and Wildlife. Still, conservationists are not convinced."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (11/18, Stokols) reports the President on Saturday morning retweeted comments by cable television hosts Greta Van Susteren and Piers Morgan expressing their thanks for his decision.

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (11/17, Cassata), the Washington Post (11/17, Parker, Eilperin), the Washington Post (11/17, Parker, Eilperin), the Washington Post (11/18, Wootson), the Washington Post (11/17, Ingraham), the Washington Examiner (11/17, Siciliano), the Los Angeles Times (11/17, Pearce), Bloomberg News (11/17, Marois), Reuters (11/17, Shepardson, Beech), Reuters (11/17, Herskovitz), Reuters (11/17, Shepardson, Beech), Politico (11/17, Lacy), The Hill (11/17, Cohn), USA Today (11/17, Cummings), USA Today (11/18, Walker, Welle), Newsweek (11/17, Valencia), the Christian Science Monitor (11/17, Biesecker), the Huffington Post (11/17, D'Angelo), Fox News (11/17), CNN (11/17, Diaz), CNN (11/18, Green), CBS News (11/17), NBC News (11/17, Silva), NBC News (11/18, Helsel), ABC News (11/17, Keneally), ABC News (11/17, Ebbs), CNBC (11/18), CNBC (11/17, Wilkie), the Washington Times (11/17, Miller), MarketWatch (11/18, Coffey), MarketWatch (11/17, Linnane), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (11/18, Danner), the New York Post (11/17, Tacopino), the Boston Herald (11/18), the San Francisco Chronicle (11/17, Boucher), the New York Daily News (11/17, Scott-Reid), the Arizona Republic (11/17, Cummings), the Independent \(UK\) (11/18, Francisco), BBC News \(UK\) (11/18), BBC News \(UK\) (11/18), The Guardian \(UK\) (11/17, Wong, Helmore), the Telegraph \(UK\) (11/18, Riley-Smith), UPI (11/17, Haynes), and Townhall (11/18, Meads).

Also reporting are The Hill (11/17, Byrnes), the AP (11/17, Cassata), and the New York Daily News (11/17).

Zinke Rocked Moccasins To Celebrate Native Cultures. But Tribes Are Focused On His Plans To Rock Bears Ears.

The Washington Post (11/17, Fears, Eilperin) reports that while Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke this week "proudly showed his support for the worldwide Native American and indigenous peoples cultural celebration, sporting a pair of beaded moccasins over star-spangled socks," Western tribes "remain upset over a larger Indian symbol that the secretary plans to rock to its foundation: the 1.35 million-acre Bears Ears National Monument in southern Utah." According to the Post, "outraged representatives of the tribes involved with Bears Ears said Friday that they will lose a key part of their cultural heritage if the monument, designated last December by President Barack Obama, is reduced to a small fraction of its current size."

Interior Secretary Visits Mille Lacs, Discusses Law Enforcement Crisis.

The Brainerd \(MN\) Daily Dispatch (11/18) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke arrived on the Mille Lacs Reservation “for an impromptu visit” Thursday and Friday “to discuss the current law enforcement crisis.” Chief Executive Melanie Benjamin “described the meeting as very positive,” saying, “Secretary Zinke wanted to hear from us about this issue and listened intently, and promised to do what he can to help.” Following the meeting, Zinke and his staff “joined about 800 Mille Lacs Band members for the annual Community Feast.”

Mapp Meets Interior Secretary Zinke In D.C.

The St. Thomas Source (11/18) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp met with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Thursday “to discuss hurricane response and recovery in the U.S. Virgin Islands.” Zinke said, “Recovering from natural disasters requires a team effort, and the Department of the Interior is absolutely committed to helping the Virgin Islands return to normal. Our Insular Affairs team has been working around the clock to provide relief to those ravaged by hurricane, and we will continue these efforts in the weeks and months to come.”

Transmission Line From Oregon-To-Idaho Gets Approval.

The AP (11/17) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “signed off on a right-of-way that will allow Idaho Power to build a 293-mile transmission line from Oregon to Idaho.” The Interior Department announced the approval the Boardman-to-Hemingway project on Friday, “saying it will create nearly 500 jobs.”

The Ontario \(OR\) Argus Observer (11/19, Meyer) reports that Katherine MacGregor, acting assistant secretary of land and mineral management, said in a statement, “This project will help stabilize the power grid in the Northwest, while creating jobs and carrying low-cost energy to the families and businesses who need it.”

Also reporting are The East Oregonian (11/17, Plaven), KNDU-TV Yakima \(WA\) Yakima, WA (11/17), and KTVZ-TV Bend \(OR\) Bend, OR (11/17).

Congress Pushes Back On Interior Plan That Would More Than Double National Park Fees.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/17, Burr) reports that Congress is “pushing back on an Interior Department proposal to more than double entrance fees at some national parks during peak times and could look at legislation to halt any increases.” Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, “says he will hold hearings on the park-fee proposal and look at legislation to prohibit an agency from raising fees without consulting Congress.” Bishop said, “It is very difficult to allow an agency to raise money by itself. That’s troublesome to me. Raising fees should have congressional input.” Rep. Mia Love is “also pushing back, arguing that the fee increases would hurt Utah families and the Interior Department should be looking to charge international tourists more money than Americans who own the system.” Love “noted the opposition isn’t partisan...and although Love supports most of Zinke’s efforts at the Interior Department, she said, ‘I’ve got to fight him on this.’”

Additional coverage of the proposal was provided by the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (11/17, Bear), the St. George \(UT\) News (11/17, Wadsworth) and the St. George \(UT\) News (11/17, Wadsworth).

Susan Combs Hits A New Hurdle In Her Path To Washington Post.

The Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (11/17, Recio) reports that “former Texas Comptroller Susan Combs has hit yet another roadblock on the way to a U.S. Senate vote for a top position at the Interior Department.” Sen. Dick Durbin has “put a ‘hold’ on Combs and another Interior Department nominee – blocking them from getting a Senate vote – until he gets ‘clarification’ of the agency’s plans to re-designate environmentally sensitive public lands known as national monuments.”

House Committee Backs Westward Move For Interior Employees.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (11/17, Wing) reports that Republican leaders on the House Natural Resources Committee have written to President Trump “in support of an Interior Department re-organization.” Committee Chairman Rob Bishop and “six of his colleagues from Western states urged the White House to strongly consider moving some Interior offices out of Washington and closer to the people they serve.”

BLM Advisory Councils Are Free To Meet Again After Initial Review.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (11/19, Webb) reports that “after a suspension for an Interior Department review, Resource Advisory Councils (RACs) to the Bureau of Land Management and other similar advisory groups 'are free to meet according to normal procedures.'" That's following "completion of the initial phase of the review process, Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email Friday."

Additional Coverage: Poor Record-Keeping Hindering Zinke Travel Investigation, IG Says.

Additional coverage of Inspector General Mary Kendall's Wednesday memorandum on the "poor" record-keeping hindering the watchdog's investigation of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's travel expenses was provided by CNN (11/17, Wallace) and Vanity Fair (11/17, Levin).

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Program Helps Tribal Court Employees Increase Navajo Language Skills.

The Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (11/19, Smith) reports on a program that helps tribal court employees increase Navajo language skills. The program, a collaboration between the Navajo Nation Judicial Branch and Navajo Technical University, "funded by a $150,000 grant from Tribal Justice Support under the U.S. Department of the Interior."

Bureau Of Land Management

The Powder River Basin Is Poised For Another Boom, But Some Say The Feds Are In The Way.

A 1,600-word Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (11/18, Richards) analysis highlighted opinion that the Powder River Basin (PRB) "is poised for a boom Wyoming desperately needs," but industry observers say the Bureau of Land Management is "slowing down opportunities and hampering development, while environmentalists say Wyoming needs federal regulations to avoid disaster when a bust inevitably strikes." US Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) "has floated a number of bills that establish the right for states to take over more of the oil and gas permitting process on federal land, or with federal minerals," but these proposals have been stalled by divided opinion.

BLM Picks Up Tab For Plugging Old Wells Near Douglas Pass.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (11/18, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "busy plugging six oil and gas wells that a company left unplugged in the Douglas Pass area, a project that apparently will cost the agency far more money than it recovered in bond funds from the operator." BLM spokesman David Boyd said "the wells were on five leases operated by Diamond Oil and Gas or Diamond Operations Group LTD." He explained that "the BLM's Northwest District in Colorado asked for funding from the agency's national office to plug the wells and received $550,000 to complete the work, although the actual cost likely will end up being lower."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Mark Sanford Opposes Energy Bill Championed By GOP Leaders.

The Miami Herald (11/17, Dumain) reports that Rep. Mark Sanford (R-S.C.) said he opposes aspects of a proposed House bill aimed at expanding domestic energy production because it would promote offshore drilling. Rep. Sanford "plans to form a coalition of Republicans and Democrats to formally ask for changes to the bill." The bill includes a controversial provision to partially rollback the 1972 Marine Mammal Protection Act, which has been "endorsed by powerful industry lobbyists such as the American Petroleum Institute." Opponents to the rollback say the Marine Mammal Protection Act "is effectively the last remaining law in place preventing indiscriminate drilling and testing for oil and natural gas in the Atlantic Ocean."

BOEM Looks For Comments On Hilcorp's Liberty Development.

UPI (11/17, Graeber) reported the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is looking for comments about a draft environmental impact statement on Hilcorp Alaska's plan to build artificial islands to drill in the Beaufort Sea. Lois Epstein, the Arctic program director for the Wilderness Society, expressed several concerns about the development. She said Hilcorp has a record of pipeline releases in the state, the last of which needed intervention from Gov. Bill Walker.

Louisiana May See More Offshore Oil Money Under Cassidy Budget Amendment.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (11/17, Schleifstein) reported Sen. Bill Cassidy said Louisiana's share of Gulf of Mexico offshore revenue may increase by $100 million during 2020 and 2021. The senator attached an amendment to the legislation opening the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge for drilling to offset an expected shortfall in revenue from the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act. Cassidy's amendment would alter the way money from the GOMESA is shared between the federal government, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi and Alabama.

Bureau Of Reclamation

Wash. Reps Float Bill To Speed Up DOI Water Project Reviews.

Law360 (11/17, Westney) reports that "two Republican lawmakers introduced a bill Thursday meant to speed up the environmental planning and review of water projects by two U.S. Department of the Interior agencies and to advance a specific water management project for the Yakima River in Washington state." Reps. Dan Newhouse and Dave Reichert "put forward H.R. 4419, the Bureau of Reclamation and Bureau of Indian Affairs Water Project Streamlining Act of 2017."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Congress Moves To 'Drill, Baby, Drill' In Alaska's ANWR Refuge. Here's What You Should Know.

USA Today (11/19, Collins) reports that "Congress may be on the verge of finally handing" backers of oil and gas drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge permission to do so. The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee voted last week "to approve a bill that would allow oil and gas exploration in the refuge's 1.5-million-acre coastal plain. The measure will be added to the Senate's tax-reform package."

NPR (11/18, Detrow) reported that Sen. Maria Cantwell opposes the drilling and said, "The fact our committee's contribution to that deal is about 7/100th of one percent of the Republicans' increased deficit spending shows that this is not a serious budget proposal. It's a cynical effort to open up the heart of the Arctic Wildlife Refuge for oil." Sen. Lisa Murkowski defended the proposal saying, "Alaskans will do this the right way. ... We will protect the environment while providing substantial economic benefits all across America."

Fish And Wildlife Retracts Opposition To Arizona Project.

The High Country \(CO\) News (11/17, Shogren) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "last month lifted its longstanding objections to the construction of a city-sized development that threatens the last free-flowing major river in the arid Southwest." The FWS "had twice in recent years warned that a key federal permit to build 28,000 homes, golf courses and other amenities near the San Pedro River in southern Arizona would have 'appreciable' effects on wildlife." However, "last month, the Fish and Wildlife Service reversed itself, according to an Oct. 26 letter obtained by High Country News through a Freedom of Information Act request."

How A Neon Green Fern Sparked An Environmental Showdown.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (11/17) reports on the dispute "between the South Florida Water Management District and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service concerning a 65-year relationship that required the federal government to control invasive species in the popular Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge." This month, the water management district's governing board gave the approval "to finalize a new 20-year lease on the land with Fish and Wildlife." The agreement "puts the onus for invasive cleanup on the district, but the wildlife service agreed to pay at least $1.25 million annually to the district for the effort."

With Dam Cleared From Creek, Endangered Fish Expand Range.

The AP (11/19) reports that "populations of an endangered fish have been found in new areas of an Alabama creek, upstream of where a dam was removed four years ago in an effort to expand the fish's range." The vermilion darter "needs clear, free-flowing streams to survive and had been blocked from moving upstream by the old dam." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "partnered with the Freshwater Land Trust to remove the nearly 100-year-old Shadow Lake dam in 2013, and this month confirmed the darters have expanded their range upstream of the old dam site."

National Park Service

Proposal Restricting National Mall Access A 'Game Changer' For Hill Athletes.

Roll Call (11/17, Connolly) reports the National Park Service "held meetings last week with leagues from across the city — including the House softball league — informing them that it planned to permanently close access" on the National Mall, "from Third Street to 17th Street, to 'organized sports.'" Also, "the park service plans to raise permit fees from as little as $7 for an entire season to $70 per two-hour period on the Mall fields west of the Washington Monument." Those meetings were "preliminary, informal efforts to give those stakeholders background information about the possible changes, including modifications to the reservation system/process and fees, as well as locations available for use by organized sports," park service spokesman Mike Litterst said in a statement Wednesday.

Additional coverage was provided by Fox News (11/17, Weber).

Beach Boys, Wynonna To Play National Christmas Tree Lighting.

WRC-TV Washington (11/17, Vesoulis) reports that "the Beach Boys, Wynonna and The Texas Tenors will play the White House's National Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony, National Park Service officials said." The tree will "arrive in Washington Monday, and it will be illuminated Nov. 30 on the Ellipse at President's Park, also known as the White House."

Fort Sumter Seeks Comment On New Plan For Disabled Access.

The AP (11/19) reports that the Fort Sumter National Monument is seeking public input "on a proposal to add ramps and an enclosed elevator for the disabled." The monument currently has "inoperable accessibility chairlifts." According to the article, "the proposed design includes a ramp leading from the parade ground of Fort Sumter to the lower level of Battery Huger which will provide access to restrooms and water."

Additional coverage was provided by the Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (11/19, Petersen).

Grand Teton Park Increases Fees To Camp, Boat, Get Married.

The AP (11/19) reports that Grand Teton National Park will "increase fees for various permits, including backcountry camping, weddings and motor boats." According to park spokesman Andrew White, "the fee adjustment is part of the park's annual review of programs." White said, "It's not a response to any sort of budget issue. We're just making sure we're recovering the cost associated with these programs."

Last Homesteader's Tractor Goes On Display At Homestead National Monument.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (11/19, Hendee) reports that "the tractor used on the nation's last homestead will be unveiled Monday at Homestead National Monument of America near Beatrice, Nebraska." According to Superintendent Mark Engler, "the tractor represents the end of America's epic homestead movement," He said, "When most people think of homesteading, they have an image in their minds of a single-bottom plow being pulled by a team of horses. This tractor will show the size and scope of homesteading ... (and) the relevancy of this law that transformed our nation."

Saguaro National Park, Open Space Highlight Debate Over New Fry's.

The Arizona Daily Star (11/18, Davis) reports that "for the second time in six months, Saguaro National Park is in the middle of a development dispute, with the National Park Service fighting a proposed project near its boundaries." The first project was "the 178-home, gated Lazy K Bar housing on 138 acres near Saguaro Park-West in Marana that was approved this spring after a nearly three-year dispute." Now, "it's a much smaller project — a Fry's supermarket, two smaller stores and a nine-pump gas station — on 16.3 acres, lying across town, near Saguaro National Park-East."

$5K Grant For Compton VFD.

The Harrison \(AR\) Daily Times (11/17) reports that “the Compton Volunteer Fire Department received a $5,000 National Park Service Rural Fire Assistance Program grant from Buffalo National River at a ceremony at Compton on Monday, Nov. 13.” While presenting the grant to members of the department, Buffalo National River deputy superintendent Laura Miller said, “This grant will be used to purchase much needed firefighting equipment and personal protective gear.”

Point Reyes Ranch Plan Comment Period Extended.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (11/18, Prado) reports that “the comment period dealing with the roiling issue of the future of ranching in the Point Reyes National Seashore has been extended by the National Park Service.” According to the article, “a 30-day comment period on the alternatives was to run through Nov. 15, but because of the interest, it has been extended through Wednesday.” Melanie Gunn, Point Reyes National Seashore spokeswoman, said, “We had multiple requests for an extension to this first comment period. Although we are working under a tight timeline for the General Management Plan Amendment, we are able to extend this comment period for an additional week with an interest in robust public engagement.”

Man Gets Prison Time For 2001 Sex Assault Of Child In Olympic National Park.

KOMO-TV Seattle (11/17) reports that “a Port Angeles man was sentenced to eight years in federal prison this week after he was convicted of sexually assaulting a child back in 2001 in Olympic National Park.” Charles Jason Butcher “admitted the assault in a recorded phone call with his victim in 2016.” The Peninsula \(WA\) Daily News (11/19, Gottlieb) reports that Butcher “pleaded guilty to the charge in May, denying that he sexually assaulted a second minor in 2001.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Snake Program Obtains Two New ‘Sniffer’ Dogs.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (11/20) reports that “the Division of Fish and Wildlife and the CNMI Brown Tree Snake program recently welcomed two new detector canines from Oklahoma.” The dogs, named Greta and Zing’r, “took 60 hours to travel from Aachen Dutch Shepherds in Oklahoma to Saipan via Micronesia Air Cargo Services, with an overnight stop in both Hawaii and Guam.” Acting Lands and Natural Resources secretary Augustin Kaipat said, “I extend a well-deserved thank you to everyone who assisted in the procurement of our two new canines here at the BTS program as well as funding provided by the Office of Insular Affairs.”

Office Of Surface Mining

West Virginia Retraining Program Provides Unemployed Coal Miners With Computer Skills.

The CBS Weekend News (11/18, story 9, 2:05, Ninan) reported on a West Virginia retraining program for unemployed coal miners, an industry that has seen its workforce shrink by over 40 percent in recent years. Correspondent Weijia Jiang says the “free training program called ‘Mined Minds’ that teaches former coal miners to become computer coders, creating apps, websites, and games. Founder Amanda Laucher started the nonprofit in Pennsylvania in 2015 because her younger brother was worried about losing his coal mining job.” West Virginia Sen. Joe Manchin (D) “helped Mined Minds establish headquarters near West Virginia’s capital with federal grants.” Manchin said the program “gives us a chance to diversify ourselves and be something that people think we’re not.”

Powder River Basin Mines Earn Awards For Land Management Efforts.

The Gillette \(WY\) News Record (11/19) reports that “four of the Powder River Basin’s largest coal producers have been named winners of the Good Neighbor Award by the federal Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement (OSMRE).” Arch Coal, Cloud Peak Energy, Kiewit Mining Group and Peabody Energy were “recognized for working with the local community while completing their mining and reclamation operations, according to a press release announcing the awards.” According to Travis Deti, executive director of the Wyoming Mining Association, “by singling out more than half of the mines in the Powder River Basin, which produces more than 30 percent of the coal burned in U.S. coal-fired power plants, OSMRE sends a message that mining coal can be done in a way that respects the environment.”

US Geological Survey

Danger Endures In Wine Country As Fight Shifts From Fires To Mudslides.

The San Francisco Chronicle (11/19, Alexander) reports that “with hundreds of square miles littered with trees and stripped of vegetation in the wake of the Northern California fires, mudslides are a near certainty as winter rains arrive.” The article notes that “a huge effort among federal, state and local agencies is working to tame the threat.” Notably, the U.S. Geological Survey has “mapped areas where damaging flows are most likely to strike.”

Additional Reading.

- Alaskan Town's Polar Bear Problem Leads To Tourism Boom. ABC News (11/18, Robach, Crawford, Dawson, Vollmayer, Efron).
- Strong Earthquake Rattles Tibet But Only Minor Damage Reported. Reuters (11/17, Blanchard).
- Strong Earthquake Strikes East-northeast Of Tadine, New Caledonia: USGS. Reuters (11/19, Von Ahn).

Opinion Pieces

Trump Does The Right Thing For Elephants. He Shouldn't Back Down Now.

Washington Post (11/19) editorial says African elephants are “a species in crisis, and the US government should not do anything that could endanger them further.” The Post welcomes Trump’s intervention Friday to put hold a decision by the Interior Department. It argues that the “threat of an import ban creates a large incentive for African countries seeking tourist dollars from American safari hunters to ensure their hunts are sustainable.”

Trump Bags Another Anti-Obama Trophy: Dead Elephants.

In an editorial, the New York Times (11/17) says the Trump Administration’s decision this week to lift a ban on importing elephant trophies from Zimbabwe “is a gift to the big game trade from Ryan Zinke, the interior secretary, who’s apparently not satisfied with scrapping environmental and species protections on just one continent.” The Times argues the move will not only “endanger gains made by governments and environmental groups to protect elephants from illegal trade in ivory and other body parts,” but also send “yet another message that this is an administration in service of itself and its cronies.”

Commentary: Assault On ESA Endangers Utah Coffers.

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/18, Feral, Harris), Priscilla Feral, the President of Friends of Animals, and Michael Harris, the director of Friends of Animals’ Wildlife Law Program, criticize five bills making their way “through Congress aimed squarely at dismantling the Endangered Species Act piece by piece.” The authors warn that the bills “should matter to Utah residents, as the state is ground zero for legal assaults against the act.” They warn that Rep. Rob Bishop’s “attempt to disembowel the ESA not only imperils Utah’s unique wildlife but more than one thousand species across the U.S. as well as state coffers.”

Additional Reading.

- Elephant Trophies? Seriously? This Is What Washington Is Spending Its Time On? Fox News (11/20, Velicovich).
- Why Can't We Protect Elephants? New York Times (11/18, Shipstead).
- The Beauty Of Bears Ears And Of Protecting It. Boston Globe (11/16, Nash).
- Stop The Assault On U.S. National Monuments. Baltimore Sun (11/17).
- Trump Threatening National Marine Monuments. Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (11/17, Martin).
- Push Back Against Joshua Tree National Park Fee Increase. Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (11/18, Schneider).
- Editorial Board: Respect Local Compromise On Sage Grouse. Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (11/19).
- Opening Sabinoso A Major Gain For New Mexico. Santa Fe New Mexican (11/18, Heinrich).

- We Must Strive To Be Responsible Stewards Toward Our Wild Places. Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal.
- Development And Conservation Go Hand In Hand In New Mexico. Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (11/19).
- Another Look At BLM Gas Flaring Rules. Montana Standard (11/19, Freeman).
- The Forefront Of Renewable Power. Kokomo \(IN\) Perspective (11/18, Floyd).
- EDITORIAL: Bid To Ban Offshore Leases Shortsighted. Waynesboro \(VA\) News Virginian (11/19).
- Editorial: Military Can Learn To Live With Energy Exploration In The Atlantic. Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (11/18).
- Study Needed: Mountaintop Removal Mining Deserves Scrutiny. Parkersburg \(WV\) News and Sentinel (11/20).
- Editorial: If The Blues And The County Want The Public's Help, They Should Play It Straight. St. Louis Post-Dispatch (11/19).
- My Freedom Is On The Line To Fight Climate Change, More Will Follow. The Hill (11/17, Ward).

Top National News

Media Analyses: Officials Send Mixed Signals On Keeping ACA Mandate Repeal In Tax Bill.

OMB Director Mulvaney told CNN's State Of The Union Sunday that if repealing the ACA's individual mandate becomes an "impediment" to passing tax reform legislation, the White House is open to removing that provision from the legislation, the Washington Post (11/19, Sullivan) reports. Mulvaney said, "If we can repeal part of Obamacare as part of a tax bill and have a tax bill that is still a good tax bill, that can pass, that's great. ... If it becomes an impediment to getting the best tax bill we can, then we are okay with taking it out." However, he added that "he does not think it is currently an impediment," and House and Senate negotiators would have to determine whether to include the provision in the final bill. Similarly, Mulvaney told CBS' Face The Nation (11/19, Dickerson) that the Administration is looking for the "best tax bill that can pass," even if that means removing the mandate repeal.

Politico (11/19, McCaskill) quotes Mulvaney as telling CNN, "If they do get rid of this penalty, the folks who benefit from that are predominantly folks who make less than $50,000 or $100,000 a year. ... There's actually a benefit if the repeal goes away, but it's up to the House and Senate to hammer through those details." The Washington Times (11/19, Wolfgang) also reports on Mulvaney's comments, as does Reuters (11/19, Mutikani, Volcovici).

In a separate story, Reuters (11/19) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told Fox News Sunday that repealing the mandate was not a "bargaining chip" in negotiations. Mnuchin said, "This is all about getting this passed in the Senate. This isn't a bargaining chip, the President thinks we should get rid of it and I think we should get rid of it. ... It's an unfair tax on poor people."

The Washington Post (11/19, Sullivan, Paletta) reports on Mulvaney's comments under the headline, "As Clock Ticks On Tax Bill, White House Signals A Compromise." However, the AP (11/19, Superville) says Administration officials "sent mixed signals Sunday," citing Mulvaney's comments and comments from White Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short, who told ABC's This Week (11/19) that the White House "is very comfortable with the House bill," which does not include the repeal, but sees the mandate as a tax and "we like the fact that the Senate has included it in its bill." The New York Post (11/19, Moore) also says Administration officials "gave conflicting signals" about the mandate.

Sen. Susan Collins said CNN's State Of The Union (11/19, Tapper), "I hope the Senate will follow the lead of the House and strike it. If not, I think we need to fix it, by passing two bills: the Alexander-Murray bill, which will help to stabilize markets and reduce premiums; and the bill I have introduced with Bill Nelson of Florida that would create high-risk pools that would protect people with preexisting conditions and also help to reduce premiums by 20 percent." USA Today (11/19, Slack) reports that Collins said removing the mandate could cause premium increases and "cancel out the tax cut that they would get." The Wall Street Journal (11/19, Torry, Rubin) reports that Collins also said that the Senate bill should lower the corporate rate to 22 percent instead of 20 percent and use the additional revenue to keep the so-called SALT deduction, which the Senate bill currently eliminates.

NYTimes Analysis: Savings From Mandate Repeal Could Be Less Than Republicans Anticipate.

A New York Times (11/19, A1, Zernike, Goodnough) analysis says Republicans, who are relying on the mandate repeal “to free up hundreds of billions of dollars to pay for an array of tax cuts to corporations and individuals,” are “assuming that without a mandate, many people would no longer buy insurance, so the government would spend billions of dollars less on” subsidies to help people pay for premiums. However, “polling data, analysis from a private forecasting agency and interviews with people who buy coverage through the Affordable Care Act marketplaces suggest the savings could be far less, largely because many people who qualify for the subsidies will still want to take advantage of them.” A Kaiser Family Foundation survey “found that just 7 percent of people who buy insurance on the individual market said they would go without coverage if the mandate were no longer enforced,” and “a majority said the mandate was not a reason they bought insurance.”

Trump Says He Should Have Left UCLA Players “In Jail.”

Media reports describe President Trump as lashing out via Twitter Sunday at LaVar Ball, the father of LiAngelo Ball, one of the UCLA basketball players caught shoplifting in China, after the elder Ball downplayed both Trump’s role in his son’s release and the seriousness of the accusations his son was facing.

Sunday afternoon, Trump tweeted, “Now that the three basketball players are out of China and saved from years in jail, LaVar Ball, the father of LiAngelo, is unaccepting of what I did for his son and that shoplifting is no big deal. I should have left them in jail!” The New York Post (11/19, Moore) reports that “shortly before 7 p.m.,” Trump tweeted, “Shoplifting is a very big deal in China, as it should be (5-10 years in jail), but not to father LaVar. ... Should have gotten his son out during my next trip to China instead. China told them why they were released. Very ungrateful!”

The Washington Examiner (11/19, Cohen) reports that Trump “fired back at LaVar Ball,” while The Hill (11/19, Samuels) says Trump “lashed out” at Ball, and ABC World News Tonight (11/19, story 10, 0:30, Llamas) described a “brewing battle” between Trump and Ball. The Daily Caller (11/19, Caruso) also reports on Trump’s tweet as does the Wall Street Journal (11/19, Rubin).

The Los Angeles Times (11/19, King) says Trump’s Sunday morning tweet “drew a quick backlash on social media,” with “many” expressing “incredulity that a sitting US president would publicly regret having come to the aid of American citizens being held by an authoritarian government.” Rep. Adam Schiff was “among Trump’s sharper critics,” tweeting, “How can someone in such a big office be so small?” A report (11/19, Thompson) on Trump’s tweet on the sports website Deadspin was headlined, “Donald Trump Wishes He’d Left UCLA Teens in Chinese Prison Because His Feelings Are Hurt.”

The New York Times (11/19, Hoffman) says Trump “made it clear on Twitter that he expected the players to thank him for his involvement, claiming they faced 10 years in jail, though many legal experts weighed in to say it was unlikely the charges would have been that serious.” All three did thank the President once they returned to the US, and “apparently satisfied with their level of thanks,” Trump “took to Twitter to acknowledge their gratitude.”

Townhall (11/19, Meads) reports that after the player “promptly said thank you,” it “seemed as if the saga was over.” But, Politico (11/19, Griffiths) says LaVar Ball’s comments in an interview with ESPN, “seemed to catch his attention again.” Bloomberg News (11/19) reports that in the interview, Ball “minimized Trump’s involvement in winning the players’ release.” USA Today (11/19, Schad) says Ball was asked about Trump’s involvement in his son’s release and replied, “Who? ... What was he over there for? Don’t tell me nothing. Everybody wants to make it seem like he helped me out.” He added, “Like I told him, ‘They try to make a big deal out of nothing sometimes.’ ... I’m from L.A. I’ve seen a lot worse things happen than a guy taking some glasses.”

Trump Touts Economy, Promotes Tax Reform.

Washington Post (11/17, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump says “it’s rare when President Trump lays bare the contradiction at the heart of his push for tax reform so specifically,” but on Friday he did so in a pair of tweets. The President tweeted, “Great numbers on Stocks and the Economy. If we get Tax Cuts and Reform, we’ll really see some great results!” Trump added, “If Democrats were not such obstructionists and understood the power of lower taxes, we would be able to get many of their ideas into Bill!”

Meanwhile, Politico (11/17, Haberkorn, Bresnahan) reports Sens. Lindsey Graham, Lamar Alexander, Susan Collins, and Bill Cassidy on Thursday had “personally lobbied...Trump to support a bill to shore up Obamacare markets while repealing the law's individual mandate as part of tax reform, according to GOP sources." A White House spokesman said Trump and the lawmakers "discussed the ongoing efforts to pass historic tax reform and other legislative objectives."

Mnuchin Touts Benefits Of Tax Reform. Bloomberg News (11/17, McGregor) reports Treasury Secretary Mnuchin in an interview on Fox News said Friday that the Republican tax reform plan will "benefit" New York's economy "by lowering the corporate tax to 20 percent." Mnuchin added, "That's a huge boom for the financial services industry – they can hire more people, they can pay more people, they can create more jobs, they can be competitive." Meanwhile, the Washington Times (11/17, Persons) reports Mnuchin conceded, "There will be people who make more than $1 million, in high-tax states, who will be paying more." Mnuchin added, "As the president has said, this is not a tax plan to cut taxes for rich people. This is a plan to make businesses competitive."

Reuters (11/17, Johnson) reports that in an interview with CNBC, he also insisted "the majority of small businesses and non-corporate enterprises known as 'pass-throughs' would see a significant tax cut under the Republican tax plan." Mnuchin said 98 percent "of the number of pass-throughs have $500,000 or less of income. ... Those people will get substantial reductions."

Hassett: "Not Economically Rational" To Argue Tax Cuts Will Increase Deficit. Bloomberg News (11/17, Voskuhl) reports Kevin Hassett, Chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, during a White House briefing on Friday argued "it's just not economically rational" to assume Republican tax reform proposals will increase the deficit in the long term. However, Bloomberg asserts "independent studies have reached differing conclusions." Bloomberg says "the conservative-leaning Tax Foundation, a Washington policy group, said earlier this month that the House's tax bill would cost $1.98 trillion over a decade – compared with current law" while the Penn Wharton Budget Model at the University of Pennsylvania "found that, after accounting for larger economic effects, the House bill would 'reduce revenues between $1.5 trillion and $1.7 trillion' over 10 years. The Senate plan would reduce revenue by $1.4 trillion to $1.7 trillion, the model found."

Bureau of Labor Statistics: Unemployment Rate Has Fallen To Record Low In 13 States This Year. The Hill (11/17, Wilson) reports that according to the monthly Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) report released Friday, "the unemployment rates in Alabama, Hawaii, Maine, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas and Washington all met or beat their lowest rates ever" while "California, Colorado, Idaho, North Dakota and Oregon also hit new lows earlier this year." The Hill adds that "nationally, the unemployment rate sits at 4.1 percent, the lowest level since December 2000, when it hit 3.9 percent."

Washington Examiner: Cutting Corporate Tax Rates Benefits Everyone. In an editorial, the Washington Examiner (11/17) criticizes Democratic opposition to cutting the corporate tax rate, adding that doing so "is neither corporate welfare nor a massive giveaway to the wealthy." According to the Examiner, the cut "is a fair and even-handed way of reducing economic distortions, making American businesses more competitive worldwide, and encouraging them to reinvest overseas profits in jobs and growth back home." What's more, corporations will have less incentive to pass costs on to taxpayers by raising prices, paying lower wages, and issuing smaller dividends.

STRATCOM Commander Says Would Refuse Nuclear Strike Order If Illegal.

The AP (11/18, Gillies) reports that at the Halifax International Security Forum on Saturday, Air Force Gen. John Hyten, the commander of US Strategic Command, said that if he received orders from President Trump to launch nuclear weapons, and if such a strike would be illegal, then he would refuse the order. Hyten said he has discussed such a scenario with the President, adding, "If it's illegal, guess what's going to happen. I'm going to say, 'Mr President, that's illegal.' And guess what he's going to do? He's going to say, 'What would be legal?'" Hyten said he would then provide Trump "with options with a mix of capabilities to respond to whatever the situation is, and that's the way it works." Reuters (11/18, Brunstrom, Stone) reports Hyten also "said running through scenarios of how to react in the event of an illegal order was standard practice, and added: 'If you execute an unlawful order, you will go to jail. You could go to jail for the rest of your life.'" Reuters says some lawmakers are pursuing legislation aimed at restricting the president's nuclear authority, and on Tuesday, a Senate committee "held the first congressional hearing in more than four decades on the president's authority to launch a nuclear strike."

LA Times: Bill To Restrict President's Nuclear Authority Jeopardizes Means To Deter Aggression. The Los Angeles Times (11/18) editorializes that while it is "dismayed" by "President Trump's bellicose statements and impulsive governing style," it cannot "support the Restricting First Use of Nuclear Weapons Act of 2017 proposed by Sen. Ed Markey of Massachusetts and Rep. Ted Lieu of Torrance." The Times says its "principal concern about this bill is that it would make it harder for a president not just to use nuclear weapons, but also to deter aggression by leaving adversaries in doubt about whether and when such weapons might be used." The Times reiterates that it shares concerns over Trump's rhetoric, but notes "the president has deferred to the advice of his national security team, including on nuclear strategy." As such, the Times concludes, "Congress shouldn't attempt to legislate a drastic change in the president's authority to defend the nation."

White House Requests $44 Billion In Additional Disaster Relief.

The New York Times (11/17, A1, Kaplan) reports on its front page that the White House on Friday asked Congress "for $44 billion in additional relief in response to this year's devastating hurricanes, but facing rising budget deficits and pushing a tax cut that could cost $1.5 trillion, the administration also suggested that lawmakers make spending cuts to offset disaster costs." According to the Times, "Administration officials laid out a menu of options for budget cutting, totaling $59 billion, from small nicks like $8 million from a rural energy program to far larger options, such as $3.9 billion from student financial aid and $1 billion from transportation infrastructure funds." Budget Director Mulvaney asserted "the administration believes it is prudent to offset new spending." However, the Times acknowledges "some of those proposals were sure to raise eyebrows" and lawmakers "swiftly dismissed [the request] as inadequate."

The Wall Street Journal (11/17, Peterson, Andrews) highlights the bipartisan criticism to the aid proposal. Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn in a hearing Thursday condemned the proposal as "wholly inadequate" while Rep. Nita Lowey, the ranking member on the House Appropriations Committee, in a statement said Friday that the request "does not come close to what local officials [in Puerto Rico] say is needed."

Puerto Rico Power Authority CEO Resigns Amid Prolonged Post-Hurricane Blackout.

The New York Times (11/17, Robles) reports Ricardo L. Ramos, CEO of the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority, resigned yesterday "amid a two-month island-wide blackout and weeks of bruising public outcry over a costly contract to restore service." According to the article, "The governor, Ricardo A. Rosselló, told reporters that he accepted the resignation because Mr. Ramos had become a distraction," and "a spokeswoman for Mr. Rosselló said the governor had not asked for Mr. Ramos to step down."

The Washington Post (11/17, Mufson, Hernández) reports Rosselló said, "The executive director is a professional. He has worked hard to restore the system in Puerto Rico but understands that this is a context that has greatly distracted from what could be recovery."

Bloomberg News (11/17, Levin, Spalding) reports Ramos's resignation "made clear" that Rosselló "wants to remain in charge of the battered island's recovery."

USA Today (11/17, Stanglin) reports San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulin Cruz called the resignation the "right thing." She added, "That he helped destroy the credibility of the PR government is a disgrace."

The Hill (11/17, Henry) reports "less than 45 percent of power has been restored to Puerto Rico since Hurricane Maria swept across" the island. The Washington Examiner (11/17, Siegel) reports PREPA and Ramos "have been especially criticized for signing a $300 million contract with small Montana firm Whitefish Energy to restore the island's power."

The Daily Caller (11/17, White) and the AP (11/18, Coto) also provide coverage of Ramos' resignation.

WPost: Puerto Rico Still Faces Enormous Problems. The Washington Post (11/17) writes in an editorial that despite depictions the departure from Puerto Rico of the Army general tasked with leading the military's response to Hurricane Maria is "a sign the island is no longer in crisis mode but instead is transitioning to long-term recovery," there are clearly enormous problems on the island still. Considering this, the Post argues that "more than ever, the people of Puerto Rico must not be forgotten," and that "those charged with rebuilding the island need to show they are up to the task and not repeat the mistakes that marked the initial response to the catastrophic storm."

Officials Say Keystone Leak Will Not Factor Into Monday's Expansion Vote.

The AP (11/17, Schulte, Nord) reports that despite the seemingly poor timing of the Keystone pipeline leak, officials "say state law does not allow pipeline safety to be a factor" in their decision on whether to expand the system. The Nebraska Public Service Commission is scheduled to vote

Monday on whether to allow the Keystone XL expansion proposed by TransCanada. The decision “will hinge on testimony and documents generated from public hearings over the summer and from more than 500,000 public comments, Nebraska Public Service Commission spokeswoman Deb Collins said.” A state law passed in 2011 “prevents the commission from factoring pipeline safety or the possibility of leaks into its decisions.” Opponents of Keystone XL “are incensed that the leak won’t be considered.”

Meanwhile, the New York Times (11/17, Smith) reports the images of “South Dakota grassland blemished by 210,000 gallons of leaked Canadian crude oil could not have come at a worse time for the Keystone Pipeline’s operator, TransCanada.” The Times adds that a preliminary report filed with the state “listed ‘equipment failure’ as the cause.” The company had about 75 TransCanada workers and contractors at the site on Friday, “along with federal and state regulators, to begin a lengthy cleanup that will include the excavation of part of the pipeline.”

LATimes Analysis: Strong Economy A “Lifeline” For Trump’s “Embattled Presidency.”

A Los Angeles Times (11/19, Lauter) analysis reports that the economy “has become a lifeline” for President Trump’s “otherwise embattled presidency.” Increasingly, the President has “tout[ed] low unemployment, record high stock market values and healthy economic growth rates in speeches and his ubiquitous tweets,” and the reaction from voters, “even some who are otherwise skeptical of the president, show how the economy’s strong performance has bolstered Trump’s standing.” The Times cites a focus group conducted by Democratic pollster Peter Hart which found that “even participants who voted for Trump last year sharply criticized his administration,” but “when the subject turned to the economy, opinions of Trump noticeably warmed.”

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Still Facing Challenges In Push For Faster Infrastructure Projects.

The New York Times (11/18, Meier) examines President Trump’s pledge to accelerate the review process for completing major construction projects, including his goal for agencies to complete environmental reviews in two years. The centerpiece of President Trump’s plan gives an office within the White House called the Council on Environmental Quality “the authority to coordinate actions and direct how environmental reviews are performed. Much of the plan’s inspiration lies in a report, ‘Two Years Not Ten Years,’ issued in 2015 by Common Good, a nonpartisan research and advocacy group.” The Trump Administration’s recent budget proposal included “a six-page fact sheet about infrastructure funding, including private investment,” but “several recent projects illustrate the pitfalls new proposals confront and the challenge Mr. Trump faces in breaking the logjams,” including maintenance at Penn Station in Manhattan and construction to build the proposed Northern Corridor.

Administration Officials Say “Administrative State” Is Being Rolled Back.

The Washington Times (11/19, Richardson) reports that at the Federalist Society’s national convention this weekend, “top-ranking members of the Trump administration...share[d] their progress rolling back the administrative state.” White House Counsel Donald McGahn said, “The President is making fundamental changes to how the regulatory state interacts with the people, and he is selecting judges who will enforce the law as written and respect the separation of powers.” HHS Office for Civil Rights Director Roger Severino similarly said, “The project of regulatory roll-back is well underway under this Administration.” He cited several of what he called “great developments for shutting down the regulatory state.”

Paris Climate Signatories Agree On Path Forward To Reduce Greenhouse Gas Emissions.

The AP (11/18, Jordans) reported that the Bonn climate talks ended Saturday after an “all-night negotiating session” and progress toward “creating a comprehensive rule book for fighting global warming.” Fiji’s Prime Minister Frank Bainimarama, who presided over the meeting, said “notable achievements” were made regarding agriculture, ocean protection, indigenous people’s rights and the launch of a new system to help people in poor countries get insurance against the effects of climate change. Reuters (11/18, Chestney, Doyle) reported that despite the Trump administration’s decision to withdraw from the Paris climate accord, nearly 200 nations remain committed to keeping the global agreement on track. Delegates “agreed to launch a process in 2018 to start reviewing existing plans to limit greenhouse gas emissions as part of a long-term effort to ratchet up ambition,” which will be known to as the “Talanoa Dialogue.”

Politico (11/18, Holden) reported that the White House “goaded activists at the international climate talks by pushing coal and other fossil fuels,” although behind closed doors, “U.S. negotiators stuck to their Obama-era principles on the 2015 Paris deal.” Observers at the conference “said the U.S. made no effort to disrupt the talks,” but that “Washington was ‘not in the negotiations with the same credibility as before.’” Bloomberg News (11/17, Shankleman) reported that Trump has “weakened” the Paris deal, according to Christian Ehler, a German member of the European Parliament, who said, “the U.S. was creating a huge vacuum, so now you see people trying to fill it up. There’s a leadership gap, and I think now the interests are falling apart in a way.”

Future Success Of Paris Accord Unclear After UN Climate Talks. The New York Times (11/18, Plumer) reported that on Wednesday at the United Nations climate talks in Bonn, German Chancellor Angela Merkel declared that “climate change is an issue determining our destiny as mankind.” She then conceded that because of Germany’s continued reliance on coal energy, her own nation will likely miss its own greenhouse gas emissions reduction goals, delivering “a stark reminder that the real action on global warming does not unfold in international venues.” Ultimately, the Times says, the Paris climate accord is “a giant bet on the power of peer pressure – with the future of the planet at stake.” The biggest unknown centers on “whether this whole process will translate into meaningful further action to cut emissions,” says the Times. In Bonn, however, “there were a few signs peer pressure is working and that some countries are indeed feeling compelled to take stronger action.”

Small Island Nations Losing Faith In Global Efforts Against Climate Change. The New York Times (11/17, Plumer, Friedman) reported that small island nations “are among the smallest contributors to climate change, producing less than 1 percent of global greenhouse gas emissions,” but they “are among the most vulnerable nations to global warming.” Leaders of small islands say the industrialized world “owes some recompense for the disasters these vulnerable nations will suffer in the years ahead,” but as the United Nations climate talks “on bolstering the Paris agreement draw to a close, island leaders say the décor seems a cruel taunt.” Hopes among island nation leaders that they “will see a major increase in financial support to help address the consequences of climate change” are also waning, as are efforts “to expand ways for nations to adapt to future disasters.” As a result, some island officials, like those in Seychelles, “frustrated by the slowness of the United Nations process, have decided to take matters into their own hands.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Trump Administration Is Making War On Diplomacy.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/18) says Secretary of State Tillerson “has shown that business experience isn’t easily transferable to government,” as he is “widely seen as ill suited to diplomatic leadership and determined to dismantle his own department.” The Times explains the State Department “is being undermined by budget cuts, a failure to fill top jobs, an erratic president and a secretary who has called reorganization, rather than policy, his most important priority.” The timing of the State Department’s redesign “could hardly be worse,” the Times says, in light of “the aggressive behavior of North Korea, Russia and China.” Ultimately, the Times concludes, Tillerson’s tenure will be based on his efforts to “forestall war with North Korea, manage the rise of China, check Russia’s efforts to undermine democracy, lay the groundwork for postwar stability in Syria and Iraq, and protect America’s international standing.”

Washington Post.

“The House Tax Bill Unleashes A Dangerous Avalanche Of Campaign Cash.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/18) argues against a provision in the Republican tax bill that would roll back the Johnson Amendment, which would permit “churches, charities and foundations to engage in candidate-specific politicking and enable donors to reap tax breaks for political contributions.” The Post warns that churches and church-affiliated groups have lax filing requirements and could be used to completely mask donors, making them the “latest vessels for dark-money politics.” The Post concludes that this change is unwanted, and would only serve to make churches “servants of special interests seeking to further warp the nation’s electoral politics.”

“The White House’s Much-Needed Rebuke To A Country Smothering Democracy.” A

Washington Post (11/18) editorial says that at the ASEAN summit last week, Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen, “who has been slowly squeezing the life out of democracy in Cambodia, delivered a fawning tribute to President Trump” and even “expressed delight” about Trump’s pledge to abstain from other nations’ internal affairs. The Post argues that the President’s “declaration in his inaugural address that ‘we do not seek to impose our way of life on anyone’ was an invitation to potentates such as Hun Sen to smother liberty.” On Thursday, however, the White House delivered “a much-needed rebuke to Hun Sen,” potentially signaling that “the Trump administration is waking up, belatedly, to the reality that the United States can’t ignore the internal affairs of other nations when democracy is under siege.”

“A School Volunteer Abused At Least 23 Children. Officials Ignored It.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/18) blasts Prince George’s County school officials for ignoring red flags that school volunteer Deonte Carraway sexually abused at least 23 minors “during school hours and on school property.” The Post says, “School officials have not been forthcoming, but information revealed in a lawsuit against the system provides troubling answers. Not only were there warning signs – lots of them – but they were ignored.” The Post calls for “a complete, public accounting of exactly what went wrong at this school and who was responsible.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Germany’s Green Energy Meltdown.” The Wall Street Journal (11/17) editorializes that Germany has admitted it will fall short of its 2020 carbon emissions-reduction goal, and its 2030 goal is almost certainly out of reach as well. The Journal says the failure of Chancellor Angela Merkel, who herself championed the now-failing energy revolution, to form a coalition government will come at significant price, and if she again recommits to dirty-coal and high-cost energies at the expense of clean energy, she should expect voters to once again rebel in 2021.

“A Blue Slip – Not A Franken Veto.” The Wall Street Journal (11/17) discusses in an editorial the news that as Sen. Al Franken faces calls for him to resign, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley said earlier this week he will move ahead with a confirmation hearing for Minnesota Supreme Court Justice David Stras, ending a veto by Franken on the issue. The piece concludes by lauding Grassley for restoring Senate courtesy to its rightful purpose.

“The Menendez Mistrial.” The Wall Street Journal (11/17) writes in an editorial that the corruption charges against Sen. Robert Menendez were thin, in light of the news that a jury failed to convict the senator, resulting in a mistrial. The Journal argues that while Menendez is not a model public servant, it is not clear that his actions amounted to criminal activity. The editorial concludes that although prosecutors will likely move to retry the senator to vindicate their initial charges, it would be more prudent to simply drop the case.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GE Housecleaning Will Alter Board’s Makeup

German Coalition Talks Collapse

Trump Administration Tightens Scrutiny Of Skilled Worker Visa Applicants

How China’s Acquisitive HNA Group Fell From Favor

New York Times:

Behind Mugabe’s Rapid Fall: A Firing, A Feud And A First Lady

Will Cutting The Health Mandate Pay For Tax Cuts? Not Necessarily

He Took On The Voting Rights Act And Won. Now He’s Taking On Harvard.

In Race Against Roy Moore, Democratic Candidate Is Mostly On His Own

Mel Tillis, Country Star Known For His Songs And His Stutter, Dies At 85

Washington Post:

Kitchen Nightmares

Mugabe Declines To Step Down

West Wing Aides Split On Russia Inquiry

As Business Booms, A Tax Cut Is Seen As ‘Overdue’

Fake Opioid Pills Are Flooding Into The US — With Lethal Results

Financial Times:

Mugabe Defies Calls To Step Down As Zimbabwe President
Banks Prepare To Settle With Brussels Over Forex Cartel Probe
Companies Face High Cost To Meet New EU Data Protection Rules
Beijing Vies For Greater Control Of Foreign Universities In China

Washington Times:

Doug Jones, Roy Moore's Opponent In Alabama, Campaigns As A Political Bridge-Builder
Roy Moore Focuses Battle On Establishment Republicans
Lerner, Paz Say They Fear Physical Harm From Enraged Public, Want IRS Testimony Sealed Permanently
'Year Of The Woman' Senators Condemn Sexual Harassment, Campaigned For Ted Kennedy
Democrats Give Dubious Credit To Trump-Russia Dossier Despite Public Information Debunking Claims

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Severe Weather; Weather Forecast; Argentina-Missing Submarine; Police Shooters-Manhunt; Roy Moore Campaign; Russia Meddling Investigation; Nursing Home Mismanagement; Black Friday Shopping; Jeffrey Tambor Sexual Misconduct Allegation; Trump-Lavar Ball Twitter War; NASCAR News; Challenger Incident Memorial.

CBS: Roy Moore Campaign; Roy Moore Campaign, Tax Reform Bill-Expert Comment; Hollywood Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Keystone Pipeline Spill; Zimbabwe-Military Coup; Argentina-Missing Submarine; NASCAR News; Britain-New Royal Portrait; Puerto Rico Recovery; Teens-International Charity.

Network TV At A Glance:

Roy Moore Campaign – 4 minutes, 50 seconds
Hollywood Sexual Misconduct Allegations – 2 minutes, 40 seconds
Argentina-Missing Submarine – 2 minutes, 20 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation; Argentina-Missing Submarine; Country Music Star Dies.

CBS: Tax Reform Plan; Roy Moore Campaign; Country Music Star Dies; Wall Street News.

FOX: Roy Moore Campaign; Trump-Lavar Ball Twitter War.

NPR: Zimbabwe-Military Coup; Puerto Rico Recovery; Argentina-Missing Submarine; Kenya-Political Instability; Morocco-Stampede.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Holds a Cabinet Meeting; has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Ben Carson; meets with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and US Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President to participate in a Cabinet Meeting; joins the President for lunch with Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Ben Carson.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Senate Finance subcommittee field hearing on NAFTA – International Trade, Customs, and Global Competitiveness Subcommittee field hearing on 'Modernization of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)', with testimony from Office of the U.S. Trade Representative General Counsel Stephen Vaughn; Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers CEO and President Mitch Bainwol; Border Trade Alliance Chair Paola Avila; San Antonio Chamber of Commerce CEO and President Richard Perez; Texas Association of Business CEO Jeff Moseley; Texas Farm Bureau President Russell Boening; and Texas Oil and Gas Association President Todd Staples Location: San Antonio Marriott Plaza Hotel, 555 S Alamo St, San Antonio, TX San Antonio <http://finance.senate.gov>

Senate on recess until 27 November.

US House: House of Representatives on recess until 27 November.

Other: 2:00 PM Spain Ambassador to the U.S. speaks at Potomac Institute – Potomac Institute Inter-University Center for Terrorism Studies Ambassador's Forum on 'Spanish-U.S. Strategic Partnership', with Spain Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Pedro Morenes and former U.S. Marine Corps Commandant Gen. (Ret.) Alfred Gray Location: Potomac Institute for Policy Studies, 901 N

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, November 27, 2017
Date: Monday, November 27, 2017 6:05:27 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Associated Press: Candidate To Lead US Land Agency: No Advocate Of Transfers.
- NPR: Montana Monument May Expand Under Trump Administration.
- Mille Lacs (MN) Messenger: Secretary Of The Interior Ryan Zinke Visits Mille Lacs County.
- The Atlantic: Trump Has Raised The Stakes Of The Public-Land Debate.
- CNN: Documents Show Involvement Of Zinke's Wife On Official Trip.
- Washington Post: The Energy 202: Internal Watchdog Says Interior Should Focus On Climate Change. It Isn't.
- Huffington Post: Group Lobbying To End Trophy Hunting Ban Is Alarmingly Close With Ryan Zinke.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Program Enhances Navajo Language In Tribal Courts.
- Native Americans Rewrote The Playbook For Preserving Public Land.
- Desecrated In Macabre Ways, The Ancestral Remains Of Catalina's Native Americans Finally Come Home.
- American Indians Strive To Restore Nearly Lost Tribal Food Traditions.
- In Indian Country, Honoring Flag Might Mean Different Anthem.
- Five Myths About American Indians.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Putting The 'Education' Back In Bureau Of Indian Education.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Forest Service Weighs Changes To Protections For Sage Grouse.
- Salem (OR) Capital Press: BLM Focuses On Productive Partnerships.
- Riverside (CA) Press Enterprise: Will A Senate Bill Save Thousands Of Wild Horses, Burros From Being Euthanized?
- Associated Press: Public Meetings Scheduled For Burning Man Permit Renewal.
- E&E Publishing: New BLM Regime Shifts Energy Landscape In Colo.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Jerry Brown Has Meeting In Norway About California's Offshore Wind Potential.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Associated Press: NRA, Hunting Group Say Grizzly Bear Hunts Needed For Safety.
- E&E Publishing: Right And Left Wings Battle Over Migratory Bird Treaty.
- Associated Press: EPA Still Weighing Fine For Geese Deaths At Former Mine.
- Associated Press: Trappers Ask Court To Throw Out Lawsuit Over US Fur Exports.
- Payson (AZ) Roundup: Fish And Wildlife Retracts Opposition To Arizona Project.
- San Francisco Chronicle: A World Apart On The Butte Sink Marsh.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: State Attorneys General Bash Plan To Hike National Park Fees.
- Associated Press: Utah's Grand Staircase Monument May Face Sharp Reduction In Size.
- Associated Press: Carlsbad Caverns National Park Keeps Concessions Contractor.
- Associated Press: Johnny Cash Boyhood Home Considered For Historic Nomination.
- Associated Press: Smokies Look For Private Money To Replace Emergency Radios.
- Associated Press: Renovations Set To Begin At Boulder Beach Campground.
- Associated Press: 8 Tennessee Sites Added To Historic Places Register.
- CNN: National Park Service Doesn't Object To Sale Of Trump Wine At Park.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): National Parks Reopen In U.S. Virgin Islands Following Hurricanes.

US Geological Survey

- Washington Post: Oil And Gas Industry Is Causing Texas Earthquakes, A 'Landmark' Study Suggests.
- Associated Press: Earthquake Recorded Off Oregon Coast.

Opinion Pieces

- Ryan Zinke's Missteps On Ivory.
- Editorial: Fee Hikes At National Parks Would Limit Access To Wealthy Americans.
- Op-ed: The Facts About Multiple Land Use In Utah.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- CBS: Media Analyses: Trump Blasts Jones Again In Implicit Moore Endorsement.
- Washington Examiner: Trump To Push Tax Reform On Hill, In Purple State This Week.
- Washington Times: As English Files Suit, DOJ Backs Trump's Appointment Of Acting CFPB Director.
- USA Today: Politico Analysis: Pruitt Seeking To Re-Engineer EPA's Culture.

- New York Times: Puerto Ricans Flee Island For US Mainland.
- Washington Post: Balz Discusses Study On “Glaring Alarm” Over Trump’s Reliance On Executive Action.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - “Cops, Cellphones And Privacy At The Supreme Court.”
 - “New York City Has Been A Problem Landlord.”
- Washington Post.
 - “Colleges Need To Take On Greek Life Before More People Die.”
 - “Two Of Trump’s Judicial Nominees Deserve A Much Closer Look.”
 - “The Fates Of 700,000 ‘Dreamers’ Hang In The Balance. This One Should Not Be Hard For Congress.”
- Wall Street Journal.
 - “Tax Reform, Growth, And The Deficit.”
 - “Patents And Property At The Supremes.”
 - “Richard Cordray’s Political Stunt.”

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today’s Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Candidate To Lead US Land Agency: No Advocate Of Transfers.

The AP (11/26, Gruver) reported Karen Budd-Falen, a candidate to lead the Bureau of Land Management, “says environmentalists mischaracterize her as an advocate of” signing over public lands “to state and local governments and private interests when in fact she’s got no opinion on the issue.” Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift “declined to say whether Budd-Falen was still a candidate or when somebody might be nominated for the director job, which has been vacant since January.” The AP noted Budd-Falen “and her husband, Frank Falen, have a practice with four other attorneys” that focuses “largely on ranchers and property rights – anything from easements to oil and gas leases and how to comply with government regulations.” According to the AP, her past clients included Cliven Bundy.

Montana Monument May Expand Under Trump Administration.

NPR (11/26, Hegyi) reported that this past summer, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommended Montana’s Badger Two-Medicine “become a new national monument, and President Donald Trump is expected to announce decisions about monuments in December.” The designation “would protect more than 200 square miles of federal land from any future oil and gas development.” NPR discusses Zinke’s ties to Montana, saying that while he has “encouraged mining, drilling and reducing the size of national monuments elsewhere in the country, he’s left existing national monuments in Montana alone and he’s urged mining bans near Yellowstone National Park.”

The Huffington Post (11/27, Papenfuss) also reports on this story.

Secretary Of The Interior Ryan Zinke Visits Mille Lacs County.

The Mille Lacs \(MN\) Messenger (11/22, LaMoore) reported Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke “made an impromptu visit to the Mille Lacs County area on Thursday and Friday, Nov. 16 and 17, to discuss the current law enforcement crisis.” Zinke told the Messenger that he had never visited northern Minnesota and he wanted to start visiting tribal reservations in this part of the country. Zinke’s visit “comes on the heels of a Nov. 8 letter from the Department of the Interior to Mille Lacs County Attorney Joe Walsh” that “reaffirms the federal government’s position that the Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe reservation exists.” Zinke said, “Tribal law enforcement within those boundaries needs to be honored. This is a capable law enforcement agency and should be treated as such.”

Trump Has Raised The Stakes Of The Public-Land Debate.

The Atlantic (11/20, Felton) reported on steps the Trump Administration has taken to roll back federal protection of US land. The Atlantic said that this summer, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “reviewed and suggested modifying 10 national monuments; Trump reportedly said that he planned to shrink at least two, Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante; a House bill was introduced that would limit the president’s power to protect land; and a Senate budget resolution could open a wildlife refuge to drilling.” The article details the federal government’s expanding role in land protection in the past 120 years, including President Theodore Roosevelt’s signing of the Antiquities Act in 1906. The Atlantic said that Democratic presidents starting with Jimmy Carter “exercised their land-protection power extensively,” despite Republican claims of federal overreach.

Documents Show Involvement Of Zinke’s Wife On Official Trip.

CNN (11/21, Killough, Wallace) reported the advocacy group Western Values Project, through a Freedom of Information Act request, obtained a batch of government documents and emails that show Department of Interior staffers accommodating a “a last-minute change in Lolita Zinke’s travel itinerary during a May trip to Alaska, Norway and Greenland.” According to the documents, when a staffer learned that Lolita Zinke would be leaving Alaska to return to Washington, DC on a different date from that previously scheduled, the staffer emailed another staffer: “UGH! We have all kinds of planes, trains and automobiles manifests to now scramble with.” In an exchange of emails, aides “also discussed...that Lolita Zinke would need to pay her own way to attend an event hosted by the governor of Alaska, which included a meal.” Multiple emails indicate that Secretary Zinke “acknowledged that he would personally pay for his wife’s meal.”

The Energy 202: Internal Watchdog Says Interior Should Focus On Climate Change. It Isn’t.

An analysis by the Washington Post (11/22, Grandoni) “PowerPost” blog reported the Interior’s Office of the Inspector General listed climate change among the “most significant management and performance challenges” facing the department in a report released last week. The Trump Administration, however, “has taken few – if any – steps to address the emerging threat.” Rather, under the leadership of Secretary Ryan Zinke, the department “has reoriented its mission around boosting the extraction of fossil fuels and other resources on the more than 500 million acres under its management as part of the Trump administration’s sweeping ‘energy dominance’ agenda.” The Post analysis also said the Bureau of Indian Affairs “has scrubbed mentions of climate change from the website of its Tribal Climate Resilience Program (now just ‘Tribal Resilience Programs’), which helped tribes study climate change impacts.”

Group Lobbying To End Trophy Hunting Ban Is Alarmingly Close With Ryan Zinke.

The Huffington Post (11/23, D’Angelo) reported on the relationship between Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Safari Club International (SCI), which donated thousands of dollars to Zinke’s congressional campaigns. The Huffington Post said the “appropriateness of the relationship has come into question after the Interior Department lifted Obama-era bans on importing elephant and lion trophies from Zimbabwe and Zambia.” Additionally, SCI said on its website that its Director of Litigation, Anna Seidman, “had a prime spot” at a recent signing ceremony for a pair of secretarial orders to overturn a pair of hunter-focused secretarial orders.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Program Enhances Navajo Language In Tribal Courts.

The AP (11/23, Smith) reported on steps taken by the Navajo National Judicial Branch to “enhance the Navajo language in tribal courts.” The program, a collaboration between the branch and Navajo Technical University, “has students learning court transcription and interpretation in Navajo and English.” According to the AP, the “program was funded by a $150,000 grant from Tribal Justice Support under the U.S. Department of the Interior.”

Native Americans Rewrote The Playbook For Preserving Public Land.

The Los Angeles Times (11/26, Schneider) reports that former President Obama’s Proclamation 9558, which conserves “over 100,000 Native American archaeological and cultural sites within the newly established 1.35-million-acre Bears Ears National Monument,” is now under attack by the Trump Administration. Utah’s Republican congressional delegation “immediately vowed to amend the Antiquities Act to strip its authority for presidents to act on their own to protect large expanses of federal land." The passage of a bill sponsored by Rep. Rob Bishop (R-UT) "would mark a decided tilt in favor of industrial and political forces that have worked for decades in the West to dismantle safeguards for federal land and the environment." However, President Trump's "antipathy to the antiquities law and the new monument has galvanized Native American groups, who see the standoff as another test of their strength a year after the confrontation over the Dakota Access pipeline in North Dakota."

Desecrated In Macabre Ways, The Ancestral Remains Of Catalina's Native Americans Finally Come Home.

The Los Angeles Times (11/22, Sahagun) reported on steps taken by the Gabrielino-Tongva Tribe to retrieve Native American remains that "sat in storage for decades" following the closure of a museum in 1950 and give them "a proper burial." The Times said that a "in a private ceremony in July 2016, the remains of 200 ancestors...were reburied on a bluff in the heart of Catalina, surrounded by green hills essentially unchanged from when the Gabrielino-Tongva roamed the 76-square-mile island." According to the Times, the reclaimed remains "tell a story that mirrors a broader trend as local tribes use their growing political influence and the legal authority of the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act to take back remains and artifacts held by museums and universities for proper care and burial."

American Indians Strive To Restore Nearly Lost Tribal Food Traditions.

The San Francisco Chronicle (11/22, Duggan) reported that Thanksgiving is the annual time of the year when "American Indians are recognized by the wider American society, albeit usually in caricature. To present modern ideas of indigenous food that also recognize precolonial traditions, native chefs from across the continent are flying to New York City over Thanksgiving weekend to participate in a series of pop-up dinners." Additionally, a young generation of American Indians "are working to reintroduce native food ways to their tribes" by organizing "intertribal events to share ideas and reconnect with their culture." However, Northern California tribes continue to "struggle for the right to gather foods like acorns, mussels and surf fish that have sustained their tribes for thousands of years" as newer generations "have been cut off from ancestral hunting and gathering grounds, and those grounds have compacted as wild salmon and other vital foods dwindle."

In Indian Country, Honoring Flag Might Mean Different Anthem.

The AP (11/25, Fonseca) reported that Native Americans have a "unique take" on the debate on "taking a knee" during the national anthem "as the ethnic group with the highest military-service rate, and an enduring regard for warriors." Many tribes "have their own national anthems known as flag songs that focus on veterans." Reverence that some tribes display toward veterans "is almost sacred," as warriors are "blessed through ceremonies before they encounter enemies, and welcomed back with parades, giveaways, eagle feathers, cleansing ceremonies and songs."

Five Myths About American Indians.

Kevin Gover, director of the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian, debunked five myths about American Indians in the Washington Post (11/21, Gover), which he attributes to centuries of "narratives, novels, short stories, textbooks, newspapers, art, photography, movies and television" perpetuating old stereotypes or creating new ones. He says that a singular Native American culture does not exist, explaining that "lumping all Native Americans into an indiscriminate, and threatening, mass continued during the era of western expansion, as settlers pushed into tribal territories in pursuit of new lands on the frontier." Gover wrote that "vast differences – in culture, ethnicity and language – exist among the 567 federally recognized Indian nations across the United States."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Putting The 'Education' Back In Bureau Of Indian Education.

Sue Parton, president of the Federation of Indian Service Employees, writes in the Oklahoman (11/26, Parton) that for too long, the Bureau of Indian Education, the Department of the Interior, Congress, "and other agencies have neglected the very real problems that have done a disservice to Native students in their schools, including off-reservation Indian boarding schools." Parton says that BIE schools “continue to wrestle with low student achievement; punitive, ineffective ways to address discipline and safety issues; a lack of social, emotional and health care services; staff turnover and poor morale; retaliation against whistleblowers; opaque rather than transparent decision making; and a lack of true accountability.” To overcome these obstacles, Parton proposes community schools, which “educate the whole child, working with community partners that provide programs and services to take on not just educational improvements but the complex problems that hinder good outcomes.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Forest Service Weighs Changes To Protections For Sage Grouse.

The AP (11/22, Ridler) reported the US Forest Service said Tuesday that it is working with the US Bureau of Land Management regarding “protection plans for sage grouse in six Western states after a U.S. court agreed with mining companies and others that the agency illegally created some safeguards in Nevada.” Forest Service spokesman John Shivik “said the coordinated review makes sense two years after federal officials decided the chicken-sized bird shouldn’t receive endangered-species protections.” The agency is accepting public comments in Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, and Wyoming through Jan. 5.

BLM Focuses On Productive Partnerships.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (11/22, Dumas) reported that Kathy Benedetto, senior adviser to BLM, “told ranchers at the Idaho Cattle Association annual convention” last week that Interior Secretary has developed a plan for the department to be more a more productive partner with public-lands users. She said Zinke has been defining his priorities over the past nine months, “including restoring a regulatory balance, expanding access to public lands, restoring trust and being a good neighbor.” There is also a renewed focus at BLM “on shared conservation stewardship, including efforts to try outcome-based grazing, revisit sage grouse conservation plans and reconsider the land-use planning process.”

Will A Senate Bill Save Thousands Of Wild Horses, Burros From Being Euthanized?

The Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (11/24, Horseman) reported that advocates for wild horses applauded an “explanatory statement on the Senate Appropriations Committee’s $32.6 billion Interior spending bill for fiscal 2018” that calls for “humane and politically viable options” to deal with wild horse overpopulation on federal land. This contrasts with a “similar bill passed by the House Appropriations Committee in July” that “allows horses to be euthanized as a means of population control.” Bureau of Land Management officials have “said that the current wild horse population, estimated at 73,000, is more than the land can sustain and the population doubles every four years and that not enough horses are being adopted to keep pace with population growth.” Nevertheless, Suzanne Roy, executive director of the American Wild Horse Campaign, said in a news release, “The Senate has heard the voice of the Americans loud and clear and rejected the killing of our nation’s iconic wild horses and burros.”

Public Meetings Scheduled For Burning Man Permit Renewal.

The AP (11/23) reported the Bureau of Land Management and the organizers of the annual Burning Man counterculture festival will host “a series of meetings next month to get the public’s input regarding the proposed renewal of the event’s permit.” The meetings are scheduled for Dec. 4 to 6 in Gerlach, Reno, and Lovelock. The formal permit renewal process is expected to starting March.

New BLM Regime Shifts Energy Landscape In Colo.

E&E Publishing (11/22, King) reported that environmental advocates support the North Fork Alternative Plan, a proposal to close off 75 percent of the North Fork Valley’s federal lands to energy leasing. However, the North Fork Valley plan, “which BLM’s Uncompahgre Field Office in western Colorado is considering as part of its latest resource management plan (RMP), is hotly contested by fossil fuel developers.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Jerry Brown Has Meeting In Norway About California's Offshore Wind Potential.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (11/24, Nikolewski) reported Gov. Jerry Brown, during his trip to Europe earlier this month, met "with executives from one of the world's biggest energy companies to discuss the possibilities of developing the first offshore wind project in California." He met "with Bjørn Otto Sverdrup, senior vice president for corporate sustainability for Statoil in Norway, according to the news website Axios." There are no offshore wind farms on the West Coast and there is just one that "has been completed in the U.S. – off the shores of Block Island in Rhode Island." The Union-Tribune mentioned that in May 2016, Brown called on the US Department of the Interior "to establish a state task force in coordination with Bureau of Ocean Energy Management to identify promising areas for wind energy off California's coastline." Brown said to Axios, "It's great, all that wind blowing, if we can get it, if the price is right, if the technology is there, if we can get through appropriate analysis. ... I think it may have real potential, but there's lots of issues there."

Fish And Wildlife Service

NRA, Hunting Group Say Grizzly Bear Hunts Needed For Safety.

The AP (11/25, Brown) reported the National Rifle Association and Safari Club International have "want to ensure their members can hunt grizzly bears in the three-state region around Yellowstone National Park after the animals lost U.S. protections." In response to conservation groups suing the US Fish and Wildlife Service for revoking the species' threatened status in July, the NRA and SCI "asked U.S. District Judge Dana Christensen to let them intervene in the case." The hunting groups argued in "affidavits submitted by their attorneys that hunting would help the region's economy, allow states to better manage the animals and improve public safety."

Right And Left Wings Battle Over Migratory Bird Treaty.

E&E Publishing (11/22, Doyle) reported that federal officials may be banned from "pursuing companies whose operations incidentally kill migratory birds, under a two-pronged maneuver now advancing publicly on Capitol Hill and quietly inside the Interior Department." The Migratory Bird Treaty Act "prohibits the unauthorized taking of more than 800 species of migratory birds." The US Fish and Wildlife Service "currently contends this includes killing that is 'incidental' to industrial or commercial activities, regardless of the corporate actors' intentions." Rep. Liz Cheney (R-Wyo.) is "leading one effort to steer the law in industry's direction" by adding an amendment into the "SECURE America Energy Act" that specifies accidental or incidental take was not covered by the MBTA. A "related effort" could also "be afoot in the office of Interior's solicitor. There, attorneys appointed in the Trump administration are second-guessing a key legal opinion issued by their predecessors" regarding the MBTA.

EPA Still Weighing Fine For Geese Deaths At Former Mine.

The AP (11/24) reported the Environmental Protection Agency said it has not yet decided whether to fine the companies responsible for polluting the waters of a former open pit copper mine, killing at least 3,000 snow geese last year. However, EPA project manager Nikia Greene "told the Montana Standard that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which has jurisdiction over migratory birds, won't fine Montana Resources and BP-owned Atlantic Richfield Company over the bird deaths at the Berkeley Pit in Butte." A FWS spokeswoman declined to comment.

Trappers Ask Court To Throw Out Lawsuit Over US Fur Exports.

The AP (11/23, Brown) reported that attorneys for fur trappers are asking a federal judge to throw out a lawsuit against the US Fish and Wildlife Service to block the export of bobcat pelts from the United States. The AP said FWS "regulates trade in animal and plant parts according to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, or CITES, which the U.S. ratified in 1975." The plaintiffs "allege the government's export program doesn't protect against the accidental trapping of imperiled species such as Canada lynx." However, the fur trappers' attorneys argued that the lawsuit would "do away with the CITES export program."

Fish And Wildlife Retracts Opposition To Arizona Project.

The Payson \(AZ\) Roundup (11/25, Shogren) reported the US Fish and Wildlife Service "last month lifted its longstanding objections to the construction of a city-sized development that threatens the last free-flowing major river in the arid Southwest." The agency had twice in recent years

“warned that a key federal permit to build 28,000 homes, golf courses and other amenities near the San Pedro River in southern Arizona would have ‘appreciable’ effects on” some 400 species of migratory birds that are sustained by the river. Yet last month, FWS, “under pressure from the developer and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers,” reversed itself and “agreed that the federal permit to allow a developer to fill in 51 acres of desert washes for roads and building pads would not adversely impact endangered or threatened species.” The Roundup said the “reversal comes as President Donald Trump has repeatedly ordered agencies to roll back environmental protections to facilitate business interests.”

A World Apart On The Butte Sink Marsh.

The San Francisco Chronicle (11/26, Stienstra) reports on duck hunting “in the Butte Sink marsh, nestled at the foot of the Sutter Buttes about 60 miles north of Sacramento.” About a million ducks are located in the area, as just two weeks ago, 700,000 were counted at adjacent Gray Lodge Wildlife Area. The article mentions that “if 10 percent of bird watchers would buy the $25 Federal Duck Stamp, according to one report from the Department of the Interior, it would raise $125 million per year for wetlands purchases and protection.”

National Park Service

State Attorneys General Bash Plan To Hike National Park Fees.

The AP (11/22, Mulvihill) reported a group of attorneys general from 10 states and the District of Columbia sent a letter on Wednesday urging “the National Park Service to scrap its proposal to more than double the entrance fee at 17 popular national parks.” They said in a letter to NPS’ acting director, “We cannot let the most popular and awe-inspiring national parks become places for the wealthy.” According to the AP, the signers are all Democrats except for Arizona’s Mark Brnovich, a Republican. The NPS “estimates that higher fees will generate an additional $70 million a year,” but the AGs “say the increase actually could reduce the number of visitors and revenue.”

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (11/22, Hart) reported that in the letter, California Attorney General Xavier Becerra “offered a glimpse at his legal theory, saying the National Park Service proposal does not adequately take into account the impact of the fee increase on park visitors. He argued the agency has not done the necessary outreach to those who could be affected, and slammed it for not undertaking an economic analysis, saying the fee increases are ‘unlikely’ to achieve the stated purpose of addressing deferred maintenance backlog.”

San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (11/23, Alexander) reported that since NPS introduced the rate plan last month, over “65,000 people have logged comments about the hikes, most with concerns about people being priced out of such iconic spots as the Grand Canyon and Yellowstone.” According to the Chronicle, “If the concerns laid out in the letter are not addressed, Becerra’s office said litigation would follow.”

Also reporting on this story are the Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (11/22, Ulloa), Porterville \(CA\) Recorder (11/24), Orange County \(CA\) Register (11/22, Fisher), and KTAR-FM Glendale \(AZ\) Glendale, AZ (11/22).

Utah’s Grand Staircase Monument May Face Sharp Reduction In Size.

The AP (11/25) reported that Kane County officials “suggested to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke that the 1.9 million acre Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in southern Utah could be shrunk to about one-tenth the size, according to maps obtained by a Salt Lake City newspaper.” The maps suggest the monument could be reduced to about 200,000 acres covering two separate areas. The Salt Lake Tribune “obtained a version from state public lands officials through a second request for public records.” According to the AP, the “announcement of reductions to Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument and the new Bears Ears National Monument is expected to be made by President Donald Trump when he visits the state early next month.”

Carlsbad Caverns National Park Keeps Concessions Contractor.

The AP (11/25) reported Carlsbad Caverns National Park has signed a new 10-year contract with Carlsbad Caverns Trading Co., LLC, “the company that has provided concessions at the southern New Mexico tourist destination for the last decade.” The National Park Service’s “commercial services program administers more than 500 concession contracts across the country with gross receipts totaling about $1 billion annually.”

Johnny Cash Boyhood Home Considered For Historic Nomination.

The AP (11/23) reported the Arkansas Historic Preservation Program's review board is considering the boyhood home of country music icon Johnny Cash and 13 other state properties for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places. The Cash home "was built in 1934 in Dyess in northeastern Arkansas, about 30 miles (48 kilometers) northwest of Memphis, Tennessee."

Smokies Look For Private Money To Replace Emergency Radios.

The AP (11/26) reports Great Smoky Mountains National Park law enforcement officials are "turning to private fundraisers to try to find enough money to replace their outdated hand-held radios." Officials said the park "needs $1.3 million to replace the radios and $1.2 million to fix repeaters and transmitters to make sure signals reach throughout the rugged national park and surrounding jurisdictions." According to the AP, a nonprofit group "is trying to raise $1.5 million for the radios with the federal government paying the rest."

Renovations Set To Begin At Boulder Beach Campground.

The AP (11/24) reported the National Park Service said a five-month, $3.4 million renovation project at Boulder Beach Campground will begin Monday. Lake Mead National Recreation Area superintendent Lizette Richardson "says the campground has been recognized as one of the top 50 in the West."

8 Tennessee Sites Added To Historic Places Register.

The AP (11/22) reported the Tennessee Historical Commission announced Tuesday the additions of eight state properties to the National Register of Historic Places. The AP said the "newly listed sites are the Leach Fire Lookout Tower in Cedar Grove; the Tennessee War Memorial in Nashville; Mt. Zion Negro School near Bradford; Blue Springs Lutheran Church and Cemetery in Mosheim; Farmers and Merchants Bank in Ethridge; Hardison Mill Farm and the Pottsville General Store, near Columbia; and the Black Creek Fire Lookout Tower in Robbins."

National Park Service Doesn't Object To Sale Of Trump Wine At Park.

CNN (11/22, Wallace) reported the National Park Service does not object to selling bottles from Trump Winery at a gift shop in Shenandoah National Park. National Park Service spokesman Jeremy Barnum explained the gift store is managed by a private company. Barnum said, "The concessioner has been selling wine from the distributor of this particular winery in Virginia for years." While NPS decides what types of products the shops may sell, the agency "does not specify what brands of these products should be sold."

Office Of Insular Affairs

National Parks Reopen In U.S. Virgin Islands Following Hurricanes.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (11/22) reported the Department of the Interior announced Tuesday that the "Christiansted National Historic Site and Buck Island Reef National Monument on the island of St. Croix, and Trunk Bay Beach at Virgin Islands National Park on the island of St. John have reopened following lengthy closures because of damage wrought on the parks by Hurricanes Irma and Maria." Interior Secretary Zinke said, "I couldn't be more proud of the hard work of National Park Service staff, volunteers, and their partners in the Virgin Islands. Their commitment to the park and to the community is inspiring. I've heard many stories of staff tending to the needs of the park and their neighbors before even taking care of themselves." Governor Kenneth Mapp said, "The reopening of Buck Island Reef National Monument, Trunk Bay Beach, and Christiansted National Historic Site represents another significant milestone in the recovery of the U.S. Virgin Islands."

US Geological Survey

Oil And Gas Industry Is Causing Texas Earthquakes, A 'Landmark' Study Suggests.

The Washington Post (11/24, Guarino) reported that a new study was published Friday in the Science Advances journal over the increased rate of earthquakes occurring in Texas and whether humans are in any way responsible. The study was performed by a team from the US Geological Survey and the study's author, Southern Methodist University Associate Professor of Geophysics

Maria Beatrice Magnani. Magnani commented on the pattern of earthquakes that led to the study and said “it’s been a head-scratching period for scientists.” The researchers were attempting to understand “what has been causing the rash of Texas quakes.” USGS geophysicist and the study’s co-author Michael Blanpied said, “the main approach has been to correlate the location to where there has been human activity.”

Earthquake Recorded Off Oregon Coast.

The AP (11/24) reported the US Geological Survey recorded a “a 4.7-magnitude earthquake in the Pacific Ocean off the coast of Oregon” Friday morning. The earthquake “occurred at a depth of 6.2 miles (10 kilometers).”

Opinion Pieces

Ryan Zinke’s Missteps On Ivory.

In an editorial, the Boston Globe (11/24) wrote that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has, in a span of just eight months, “made so many missteps that Donald Trump himself tweeted out a policy reversal late last week.” The Globe criticized several aspects of Zinke’s leadership, including his “part of an embarrassing travel scandal” and his links to the now-scuttled Whitefish Energy Holdings deal to rebuild Puerto Rico’s power grid after Hurricane Maria. However, even President Trump “distanced himself from Zinke, last week, after the US Fish and Wildlife Service moved to overturn an Obama administration ban on importing elephant trophies.”

Editorial: Fee Hikes At National Parks Would Limit Access To Wealthy Americans.

In an editorial, the San Francisco Chronicle (11/24) criticized the plan to “charge a whopping $70 to enter some of America’s most beloved national parks.” The proposed fee increases “have come under fire by nature enthusiasts, outdoors groups and, now, California Attorney General Xavier Becerra and 10 of his counterparts from other states.” The attorneys general challenged the “backdoor math” of how the “punitive math” will help the parks’ financial situation. According to the Chronicle, “the crux of their argument is a simple one. The national parks belong to all Americans, not only the wealthy ones.” Instead of raising fees, the Chronicle calls on Congress to appropriate much-needed funds to the park service.

Op-ed: The Facts About Multiple Land Use In Utah.

Don Peay, founder of Sportsmen for Fish and Wildlife, wrote in the Deseret \(UT\) News (11/26, Peay) that “we are grateful that President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke are coming to Utah, to hopefully restore multiple use status to our great public lands — lands and herds we want to pass on in abundance for future generations.” Peay claims hunting and fishing a $2.3 billion Utah industry, and with “careful management and hundreds of millions of investment, we have proven we can have it all, energy, mining, ranching, camping, hiking, hunting, fishing and tourism.” According to Peay, the “Grand Staircase and Bears Ears monuments have been damaging to habitat restoration projects, and fortunately these herds were established before monument status.” He also criticizes out-of-state “environmental groups” for not contributing “one dime to restore Utah’s herds or improve our great state and federal lands.”

Additional Reading.

- Bears Ears Perfects America’s Best Idea By Including Tribes. San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (11/22, Jarvis)
- There Is No Good Time To Lift The Ban On Elephant Trophy Hunting In Zimbabwe. Washington \(DC\) Post (11/24, Liss)
- Hiking National Parks Good; Hiking Entry Fees Bad. Tacoma \(WA\) News Tribune (11/25)
- A Curious Decision By The Interior Department. Greene County \(PA\) Observer-Reporter (11/23)

Top National News

Media Analyses: Trump Blasts Jones Again In Implicit Moore Endorsement.

In two tweets on Sunday, President Trump again weighed in on the Alabama Senate race, blasting ex-US Attorney Doug Jones ahead of the Dec. 12 special election. Trump said across the two tweets, "The last thing we need in Alabama and the U.S. Senate is a Schumer/Pelosi puppet who is WEAK on Crime, WEAK on the Border, Bad for our Military and our great Vets, Bad for our 2nd Amendment, AND WANTS TO RAISES TAXES TO THE SKY. Jones would be a disaster! I endorsed Luther Strange in the Alabama Primary. He shot way up in the polls but it wasn't enough. Can't let Schumer/Pelosi win this race. Liberal Jones would be BAD!" While Trump did not mention scandal-plagued ex-state Supreme Court Justice Roy Moore in either tweet, coverage casts the President's comments – much as it did his remarks last week – as an implicit endorsement of the GOP candidate.

On the CBS Weekend News (11/26, story 3, 1:50, Quijano), Errol Barnett reported that "Trump, who last week defended Roy Moore, repeated that stance on Twitter today. 'Moore's opponent Doug Jones would be disaster,' he said, reminding that he initially backed Moore's opponent." On NBC Nightly News (11/26, story 3, 0:55, Snow), Kelly O'Donnell reported that "Trump pushed for Roy Moore's victory without naming Moore. 'Can't let Schumer/Pelosi win this race. Liberal Jones would be bad.' Some Republicans have urged President Trump to persuade Roy Moore to leave the race. But he has ignored that pressure. He cites Roy Moore's denial of any wrongdoing. So President Trump is indirectly endorsing Roy Moore."

Alabama Live (11/26, Gore) reported that with the tweets, Trump "is doubling down on his criticism of" Jones, pressing "for Republican support while" not mentioning Moore. USA Today (11/26, Estepa) reports that Trump "doubled down on his insistence that a Democrat shouldn't win Alabama's Senate seat, once again appearing to back" Moore. The New York Times (11/26, Caron) also says that Trump "doubled down on his criticism of...Jones, and reiterated his support for...Moore."

The Washington Post (11/26, Kane, Nakamura) says that Trump "continued his lonely campaign to boost" Moore, criticizing Jones "as other GOP lawmakers continued to oppose their party's nominee over sexual misconduct allegations." The Post says that while Trump didn't mention Moore in his tweets, the President criticized Jones "in a way that made clear that Trump supported the controversial Republican nominee."

Politico (11/26, Nussbaum) reported, "The tweets come as Trump has become increasingly vocal about the charged Alabama Senate race, which just weeks ago was seen as a lock for Republicans. But in the wake of a slew of accusations against Moore – including that he molested a 14-year-old girl when he was in his 30s – many Republican leaders called on Moore to drop out of the race, though Moore vehemently denied the accusations." Under the headline "Trump Chooses Legislative Agenda Over GOP Repulsion Of Moore," the AP (11/26, Colvin) reports that with his tweets, Trump made "clear the success of his legislative agenda outweighs widespread GOP repulsion at the prospect of seating...Moore, who is dogged by allegations of sexual misconduct."

The Hill (11/26, Savransky) reported that Trump "last week appeared to throw his support behind...Moore," telling reporters, "We don't need a liberal person in [the Senate seat], a Democrat." Newsweek (11/26, Silverstein) reported on its website that Trump "has still not said if he believes Moore's accusers are lying and he has not formally endorsed the former judge's campaign. He said he would decide this week whether he's going to campaign for Moore ahead of the Dec. 12 vote." The Daily Caller (11/26, Crowe) headlined its report "'Jones Would Be A Disaster' – Trump Issues Backhanded Endorsement Of Moore."

On NBC Nightly News (11/26, story 4, 1:30, Snow), political analyst Mark Murray said of the Alabama Senate race, "This is really turning into a no-win situation for Republicans. If Roy Moore does end up winning, you will see Democrats trying to label the Republican Party as the party of Donald Trump and Roy Moore, as we head into the 2018 mid-term elections. If Roy Moore ends up losing, then Republicans will find a situation where Democrats are one seat closer to a potential Senate majority in 2018, if there is a wave."

Michael Bender of the Wall Street Journal said on CNN Inside Politics (11/26), "I think what we've seen from President Trump and his political calculations, it's very short-term. He's not worried about the long-term brand of the Republican Party, like Mitch McConnell would be, or the long-term implications for the legislative agenda over the next 18 months. He's focused on the near term. He wants immediate wins. We've seen that repeatedly. He talked about these major legislative issues that can take years of singular focus. He expects them to be done right away. He wants Roy Moore in the Senate for a vote on a tax reform plan. It's almost as simple as that."

Correspondent Ellison Barber said on Fox News MediaBuzz (11/26) that Trump gave Moore "a non-endorsement endorsement. Initially, you had the White House saying...that if these allegations are true, he should step down. And then they repeatedly said that President Trump wants the voters of Alabama to decide. He had noticeably not said anything about it until those comments [last week] on the South Lawn. ... Then you had him tweet again today that it is better than a Pelosi or a Schumer puppet. There is only so much they can push back at some point. The White House can say as much as they want that he wants the voters of Alabama to decide. ... It doesn't really matter when President Trump comes out and then says what he has said, I think you have to take his words more than anything from the press secretary."

Fox News' "The Five" co-host Juan Williams said on Fox News MediaBuzz (11/26), "I think you have to put this in political context and the political context is this. Remember, President Trump did not back Judge Moore in the Republican primary in the state of Alabama. He picked the incumbent, the appointee Luther Strange. So what you get is a situation where then once Roy Moore won the seat, there was pressure on him. I think he felt somewhat, 'Maybe I made the wrong call earlier. My base is with Judge Moore.'"

Report Examines Jones' Positions On Issues Highlighted By Trump. Meanwhile, Alabama Live (11/26, Gore) offers "a look at Jones' stances on the issues highlighted by" Trump, such as the President's claims that "the former federal prosecutor is 'weak on crime, weak on the border and bad for the military.'" For example, of Trump's claim that Jones "is 'weak on crime,'" Alabama Live says that the Democrat, "a former US Attorney for the Northern District of Alabama and assistant U.S. attorney in Birmingham, has touted his law enforcement background, including the prosecution of two Ku Klux Klan members for the decades old bombing at the 16th Street Baptist Church."

ABC News: President Was Unhappy With Ivanka Trump's Criticism Of Moore. On ABC World News Tonight (11/26, story 3, 2:50, Llamas), Lana Zak reported on Trump's Sunday tweets criticizing Jones, and highlighted the President saying last week of the allegations about Moore, "Well, he denies it. Look, he denies it. You're talking about, he said 40 years ago this did not happen." Zak added that Trump's "comments [stand] in sharp contrast to those of his daughter and adviser, Ivanka Trump, who earlier told the AP, 'There's a special place in hell for people who prey on children. I've yet to see a valid explanation, and I have no reason to doubt the victims' account.' Now, ABC News has learned the President was not happy by Ivanka's quick reaction."

On Sunday Shows, GOP Senators Press For Moore's Exit From Race. Bloomberg News (11/26, Talev, Niquette) reports that Trump "didn't join fresh suggestions to abandon Moore, made by" GOP Sens. Rob Portman (OH), Tim Scott (SC), and John Thune (SD) during "separate Sunday talk show appearances." Portman, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," said "it would be 'best' if Moore stepped aside." And Thune, appearing on "Fox News Sunday," said, "If Roy Moore wins and he comes into the Senate in January, there's going to immediately be an ethics investigation, which is going to be a cloud that he'll be operating in. It's going to be a distraction for us and for our agenda."

Scott, appearing on ABC's This Week (11/26, Raddatz), said, "It is pretty clear to me that the best thing that Roy Moore can do for the country is to move on," and added that "the reality of it is, the allegations are strong and credible." The Wall Street Journal (11/26, Nunn) quotes Scott as saying, "In my opinion, and in the opinion of many Republicans and conservatives in the Senate, it is time for us to turn the page, because it is not about partisan politics." The Huffington Post (11/26, Fang) reported that Scott, "as he repeated his call for Moore" to step aside, said, "I want to be on the side of right when history writes this story."

However, under the headline "Trump Continues To Implicitly Endorse Roy Moore," the New York Post (11/26, Moore, Schultz) reports that Scott "declined to criticize Trump's defense of Moore. Asked if the president had compromised his moral authority by defending Moore, Scott replied 'I don't think so.'" The Hill (11/26, Beavers) quoted Thune as saying, "I would like to see the president come out and do what we've done, saying Moore should step aside."

The Washington Times (11/26, Swoyer) reports that GOP Sen. Lindsey Graham (SC), appearing on CNN's "State of the Union," "said Sunday that...Trump is throwing a lifeline to...Moore and warned that a victory by Mr. Moore would be baggage for the" GOP. Said Graham, "The moral of the story is don't nominate somebody like Roy Moore. From a party perspective, we got to look long term not short term." The Hill (11/26, Shelbourne) quoted Graham as saying of Trump's tweets, "Well, that's a political decision by the president and he's definitely trying to throw a lifeline to Roy Moore."

The Washington Examiner (11/26, Siegel) reported that GOP Sen. Jeff Flake (AZ), in a Sunday tweet, "warned fellow Republicans not to 'succumb' to 'political tribalism' by supporting...Moore." Said Flake, "After what we know, for Republicans to support Roy Moore over Doug Jones is political tribalism at its worst. We shouldn't succumb to it." The Hill (11/26, Samuels) reported that Flake, "who has announced he will not seek reelection in 2018, has been an outspoken critic of Trump and of Moore." In another report, The Hill (11/26, Shelbourne) said,

"The remarks from the Republican senators contrast with Trump's attitude toward Moore," as the President argues that "the GOP cannot afford to lose the Alabama seat vacated by Attorney General Jeff Sessions."

RNC Chair Says Voters To Serve As Moore's "Judge And Jury." The Hill (11/26, Bowden) reported that RNC chief Ronna Romney McDaniel, in an interview over the weekend with John Catsimatidis on AM 970 in New York, said "that Alabama voters will have to be the 'judge and jury' on whether" Moore wins. Said McDaniel, "The allegations were obviously very concerning, concerning to the degree that we [the RNC] pulled our resources. [But] Roy Moore cannot be replaced on the ballot. He is the candidate. The Alabama [Republican] Party has stood by that. Now the Alabama voters are going to have to be the judge and jury on this."

WPost Analysis: Moore Allegations Present Suburban Women With "Awkward Choice." The Washington Post (11/26, Weigel) reports that with the special election rapidly approaching, "a battle is emerging for...white suburban women who typically support GOP candidates but, unlike many of their male counterparts, have become uneasy about Moore. Each side, relying at times on the candidates' wives to make their case, is presenting female voters with an awkward choice regarding their vote Dec. 12: stand by a man accused of making unwanted sexual advances toward teenage girls when he was in his 30s, or vote for a Democrat with liberal views on abortion and other issues and whose victory could imperil the Senate's Republican majority."

Trump To Push Tax Reform On Hill, In Purple State This Week.

The Washington Examiner (11/26, Feldscher) reports President Trump "announced his arrival back in the nation's capital" with a tweet "urging the Senate to pass tax reform, which he promised would benefit all Americans." Trump tweeted, "Back in D.C., big week for Tax Cuts and many other things of great importance to our Country. Senate Republicans will hopefully come through for all of us. The Tax Cut Bill is getting better and better. The end result will be great for ALL!"

CNN (11/26, Schatz) reported on its website that Trump will travel to Capitol Hill on Tuesday "to meet with Senate Republicans at their luncheon" in a bid to help the Republican tax bill across the finish line. Trump will also "speak with the so-called 'Big Four': House Speaker Paul Ryan, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer." In addition, Michael Bender of the Wall Street Journal told CNN Inside Politics that Trump is "using a familiar page from his playbook: persuasion in his own words." Said Bender, "His team now is drafting a speech to be delivered this week in a purple state where, unsurprisingly, a Democratic senator is seeking re-election in 2018. ... But to find success with this, watch for two things: Can Trump avoid the kind of unforced errors that normally cause him needless distractions? And can he show the kind of discipline and follow through in the days and weeks to come that are necessary? The fate of this party's last best chance to pass major legislation this year hangs in the balance. "

As English Files Suit, DOJ Backs Trump's Appointment Of Acting CFPB Director.

The Washington Times (11/26, Dinan) reports that the Justice Department said in a ruling Saturday that President Trump "acted quickly enough to install his own acting director" of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, which "appears to give the White House the upper hand in a developing battle with anti-Trump forces." However, it is not clear "whether the ruling will be enough to head off a brewing constitutional crisis, with two different people now claiming to be the rightful acting director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau." In a move the Times says was "tinted with anti-Trump politics," former director Richard Cordray "announced a new deputy director Friday then sped up his own resignation, which would normally make the deputy director, Leandra English, the acting director." However, Trump "countered...by quickly naming his own chief manager, Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney, as acting head of the CFPB." The Wall Street Journal (11/25, Hayashi) quotes an unnamed senior White House official who accused Cordray of "provoking" a fight with the appointment.

Meanwhile, a front-page story in the Wall Street Journal (11/26, A1, Hayashi) reports that the night before CFPB was to reopen with two temporary leaders, English has sued the Administration to block Mulvaney from taking control. The Washington Post (11/26, Merle) says English filed suit in the US District Court of DC, calling "herself the 'rightful acting director' of the CFPB and asked for a temporary restraining order to prevent Trump from appointing" Mulvaney. The suit says, "The President's purported or intended appointment of defendant Mulvaney as Acting Director of the CFPB is unlawful."

The Washington Times (11/26, Boyer, Dinan) says English's suit argues that "the federal vacancy law doesn't apply if another later statute sets out a different process for a board's succession." The New York Times (11/26, Cowley) quotes English as saying in her suit, "The President's attempt to appoint a still-serving White House staffer to displace the acting head of an independent agency is contrary to the overall statutory design and independence of the bureau."

Reuters (11/26) reports that Senate Minority Whip Durbin told CNN's "State of the Union" that Trump's move would violate the Dodd-Frank law. Durbin told CNN "that he did not believe the Trump administration had the authority to appoint Mulvaney under the 2010 Dodd-Frank law, which created the agency." Durbin said, "I read the provision. ... It says that when the director steps aside, the deputy director shall be in charge of the agency – not may – shall be in charge, and so now there's an effort by Mick Mulvaney and the attorney general to really push him into this position so he can take away their power." However, on the same program, Sen. Lindsey Graham "disputed the notion that the White House lacked authority," saying, "I think the president's on good ground here to appoint somebody under the vacancy statute."

A Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorial raises the possibility that Cordray sought to create chaos on Monday when CFPB opens. The Journal says that while the Administration will ultimately prevail under the law, if English refuses to vacate what she argues is her office, she will have to be escorted out which Cordray and Democrats will exploit for political gain.

The AP (11/26, Condon) says the dispute may end in a court fight. Senate Republican Conference Chairman John Thune told Fox News Sunday that he expects that Mulvaney "will be on the job and he'll be calling the shots over there" on Monday. But, he added that "ultimately, this may end up in court." Thune also said that with Mulvaney running the agency, he hopes to see "reforms to that agency, which has essentially very little accountability to the Congress or anybody else." The CBS Weekend News (11/26, story 4, 0:30, Quijano) reported Sen. Elizabeth Warren said Trump "is creating chaos and supports this dispute being settled in the courts."

CFPB Lawyer Backs DOJ's Ruling. Politico (11/26, Woellert) reports that CFPB general counsel Mary McLeod has "sided with the Justice Department" over the appointment, "adding further confusion to the leadership battle over the controversial watchdog agency." In a Nov. 25 memo obtained by Politico, "McLeod said Trump had the legal authority to name an acting director to the bureau under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act." McLeod wrote, "As General Counsel for the Bureau, it is my legal opinion that the President possesses the authority to designate an Acting Director for the Bureau. ... I advise all Bureau personnel to act consistently with the understanding that Director Mulvaney is the Acting Director of the CFPB."

Politico Analysis: Pruitt Seeking To Re-Engineer EPA's Culture.

USA Today (11/26, King) reports that EPA Administrator Pruitt is "on a mission to re-engineer the agency's culture by returning power to states and away from the Washington bureaucrats and coastal elites he said have led it astray." Pruitt has "adopted a 'red team/blue team' model designed to challenge climate change assumptions that global warming is occurring and humans are the primary cause." This "has raised some of the loudest alarm bells among his many critics who consider it an attack on settled science." USA Today adds that Pruitt arrived at EPA "under a mutual cloud of hostility," having sued it "14 times on behalf of Oklahoma challenging a variety of regulations and billing himself as 'a leading activist against EPA's activist agenda.'" After nearly a year at the agency, "Pruitt still feels the resistance from employees."

Puerto Ricans Flee Island For US Mainland.

The New York Times (11/26, Rojas) reports that in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria's devastation, and in the midst of a sluggish recovery on the island, tens of thousands of Puerto Ricans have left the island to settle on the US mainland, with some planning to stay only for a while but many making plans to stay permanently. Many University of Puerto Rico law students have accepted an offer from Touro Law Center to complete their semester at the school's campus in New York. The decisions of these individuals to leave have been received with mixed reactions from the remaining residents in Puerto Rico, from support to envy or even feelings of betrayal.

Chef Jose Andres Has Served More Than Three Million Meals To Hurricane Victims In Puerto Rico.

On CBS' 60 Minutes (11/26), Anderson Cooper reported on the efforts of chef Jose Andres, who, along with "an army of chefs and volunteers," has "served more than three million meals to the hungry people of Puerto Rico" since Hurricane Maria.

Balz Discusses Study On "Glaring Alarm" Over Trump's Reliance On Executive Action.

In an analysis for the Washington Post (11/25, Balz), Dan Balz writes that in the "most recent issue of the Forum, a nonpartisan journal of ideas and political analysis," Sidney M. Milkis and

Nicholas Jacobs of the University of Virginia argue that President Trump's "deployment of what they call 'executive-centered partisanship' is both in keeping with the modern presidency and a potentially damaging shift in our politics." Balz says that "on the arena of executive action, he is pursuing a model established by his recent past predecessors, with worrisome consequences to constitutional governance." To Milkis and Jacobs, "what began in other presidencies has become 'a glaring alarm during Trump's presidency,'" and refer to "the 'false illusion' that the executive 'can truly function as a representative democratic institution.'"

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Cops, Cellphones And Privacy At The Supreme Court." The New York Times (11/26) editorializes that the Supreme Court should revise its so-called third-party doctrine, which "was developed in the 1970s and holds that people have no expectation of privacy when information has been voluntarily shared with a third party, like a cellphone service provider," when it considers a case involving the issue this week. The Times opines that the doctrine is no longer compatible with the realities of the digital age, when people frequently share data automatically generated by third parties in the course of everyday activities

"New York City Has Been A Problem Landlord." The New York Times (11/26) editorializes that "the news that the New York City Housing Authority falsely certified for years that it had inspected apartments for lead paint is a stark sign of how powerless public housing tenants can be and how much the system has eroded." The Times asserts that "the city needs to do more to show 400,000 residents of public housing that their conditions matter." One public housing resident quoted in the editorial believes that the city only cares about whether money is paid on time, while mold has been in her apartment for years with no response.

Washington Post.

"Colleges Need To Take On Greek Life Before More People Die." The Washington Post (11/26) editorializes that, while banning Greek life at many US universities may not be realistic, universities must establish a "new normal" involving "students committing to changes in behavior and university officials not looking away until someone dies." The Post cites the recent deaths of four young men because of initiation events or parties at fraternities, along with reports of other troubling behavior at both sororities and fraternities nationwide. The Post opines that the heavy promotion of partying and "the ability of these groups to discriminate and reward privilege is — or should be — antithetical to the mission of universities."

"Two Of Trump's Judicial Nominees Deserve A Much Closer Look." The Washington Post (11/26) editorializes that the Senate must reassert its duty "to 'advise and consent' on judicial nominees, rather than ramming through whomever the president selects." The Post specifically criticizes the nominations of Brett Joseph Talley, who the American Bar Association unanimously found to be unqualified, and Thomas Farr, who was involved in a racially-based voter suppression campaign while working for a senator's reelection campaign. The Post criticizes Judiciary Committee Chairman Charles Grassley's decision to "no longer honor all requests by senators to block unpalatable nominees from their home state."

"The Fates Of 700,000 'Dreamers' Hang In The Balance. This One Should Not Be Hard For Congress." The Washington Post (11/26) editorializes that as about 700,000 young, undocumented immigrants in the US face the termination of legal protections that they have relied on since 2012, lawmakers in Washington have turned the problem into a partisan bargaining chip. Democrats threaten to shut down the government unless a spending bill is amended to fix the problem, while Republicans demand concessions on border enforcement in exchange for crafting a solution. The Post opines that "the haggling over dreamers is Washington at its dysfunctional worst."

Wall Street Journal.

"Tax Reform, Growth, And The Deficit." A Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorial says Senators have to decide whether the tax reform bill will be an overall benefit to the nation. The Journal argues it will because it is a sign of confidence that better policies can rebuild the country's economic strength.

"Patents And Property At The Supremes." The Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorializes that the policy of inter partes review that was established by Congress via the 2011 America Invents Act had good intentions, but is damaging to constitutional principles and should be changed. The Supreme Court will review the policy on Monday in Oil States Energy v. Greene's Energy; Oil States claims that inter partes review violates Article III and the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution.

"Richard Cordray's Political Stunt." A Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorial raises the possibility that by resigning unexpectedly and appointing his chief of staff Leandra English as deputy director, former CFPB Director Richard Cordray sought to create chaos on Monday when CFPB opens. The Journal says that while the Administration will ultimately prevail under the law, if English refuses to vacate what she argues is her office, she will have to be escorted out which Cordray and Democrats will exploit for political gain.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

CFPB Deputy Chief Sues Trump Over Agency Leadership
Inside The Wal-Mart Vs. Amazon Battle Over Black Friday
The Economy Is Humming, But Businesses Aren't Borrowing
A Self-Made Star Shows One Way To Crack The Gen Z Code

New York Times:

Congress Returns To Intense Pressure To End Secrecy Over Sex Harassment
In Tax Debate, Gift To Religious Right Could Be Bargaining Chip
Long Divided, Iran Unites Against Trump And Saudis In A Nationalist Fervor
Myanmar General's Purge Of Rohingya Lifts His Popular Support
Added To The Storm's Toll, Guilt And Heartache For Puerto Ricans Who Fleed
Battle For Control Of Consumer Agency Heads To Court

Washington Post:

Urgent Agenda Awaits On Hill
An Apex Predator Returns
Some Women Leave Caliphate But Vow To Fight On For ISIS
High Court Case Could Burst Dam On Sports Betting
Pressure On Congress To Move On Harassment

Financial Times:

Dark Sky Over Bali Volcano Cancels Flights
Saudi Crown Prince Pledges To Rid World Of Islamist Terror
Agustin Carstens Urges US To Maintain Leadership In World Economy
Corporate Japan Hit By Severe Labour Shortages

Washington Times:

Trump Vs. Cordray Fight Over CFPB Chief Goes To Court
In Hiroshima, Japan's Military Debate Over Pacifist Constitution Hits Home
Democrats Use Testimony Of Former Bodyguard In Quest To Prove Trump Activities With Prostitutes
Pope Francis To Visit Myanmar, Carefully Confront Rohingya Muslim Crisis
Energy Advocates, Environmentalists Look For Murkowski's Vote On ANWR Oil Drilling

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Al Franken-Sexual Misconduct; John Conyers-Sexual Misconduct; Trump-Roy Moore Campaign; FBI-Russian Hacking Notification; High school Car Murder; Florida-Road Rage; Egypt-Mosque Attack; US Navy-Plane Crash; Holiday Travel; Weather Forecast; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Holiday Shopping; Newark Airport-Scary Landing; Nightclub Floor Collapse; Prince Harry Engagement; Homeless Veteran; Cancer Survivor Pianist.

CBS: Al Franken-Sexual Misconduct; Massage Company-Sexual Allegations; Trump-Roy Moore Campaign; Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Appointment; Egypt-Mosque Attack; Holiday Travel; Holiday Shopping; CBS Evening News New Anchor; Black Friday Gun Sales; Longest Living US President; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Syria Civil War-Volunteer Doctor; NYC-Self Driving Cars; School Lunch Charity.

NBC: Al Franken-Sexual Misconduct; John Conyers-Sexual Misconduct; Roy Moore Campaign; Roy Moore Campaign-Expert Comment; Holiday Shopping; Florida-Road Rage; Saudi Arabia-Crown Prince; Tobacco New Advertisements; Time Magazine Deal; Recycling Ideas; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Meteor Sighting; WW2 Veteran Marathon; Bike Business Charity.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Roy Moore Campaign – 7 minutes, 5 seconds
Al Franken-Sexual Misconduct – 5 minutes, 55 seconds
Indonesia-Volcano Eruption – 1 minute

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Appointment; Congress Sexual Allegations; Holiday Travel; Tobacco New Advertisements;

CBS: Congress Sexual Allegations; Trump-Roy Moore Campaign; Holiday Shopping; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Miss Universe Pageant.

FOX: Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Appointment; Congress Sexual Allegations; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption.

NPR: Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Appointment; Congress Sexual Allegations; Russian Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Trump-Roy Moore Campaign.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and Members of the Senate Finance Committee; hosts an event honoring the Native American code talkers; meets with Secretary of Defense James Mattis.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public schedule announced.

US Senate: 11:00 AM GOP Sen. James Lankford release federal govt waste report – Republican Sen. James Lankford releases his annual report on federal govt waste and solutions, this year entitled 'Federal Fumbles: 100 ways the government dropped the ball', identifying new examples of waste, inefficiency, and duplication in govt, along with solutions to resolve each fumble
Location: U.S. Capitol, S-325, Washington, DC <http://www.lankford.senate.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/SenatorLankford>

4:00 PM Senate resumes consideration of U.S. district judge nominee – Senate convenes and resumes consideration of the nomination of Dabney Lanhorne Freidrich to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Columbia Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: No votes in the House of Representatives today

Other: No relevant event scheduled.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, October 2, 2017
Date: Monday, October 02, 2017 7:08:59 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Atlanta Journal-Constitution: After Price Resignation, Democrats Keep Focus On Travel By Other Trump.
- Wall Street Journal: A Return To The Conservation Ethic.
- KBSC-FM Boise (ID): Zinke Set To Change Obama's Sage Grouse Plan For Idaho And 9 Other States.
- Press TV (IRN): US Interior Secretary Hints At Economic War On Iran.
- Associated Press: Springfield Mayor: Wonders Of Wildlife A "Game-Changer."
- Los Angeles Times: What The Trump Administration Doesn't Understand About Wildfires.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Lake Superior Island Returned To Chippewa.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Eureka (CA) Times Standard: Environmental Groups Name Toilet After Interior Secretary In Public Lands Protest.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: DC Monuments "Report" Takes Hike To Nowhere.
- Washington Examiner: Ryan Zinke's Monumental Disappointment In Montana.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Zinke Is Far From Teddy Roosevelt.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Public Meeting Set For Tuesday On Hilcorp's Beaufort Sea Project.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Feds Won't Oppose Klamath River Dam Removal, Official Says.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Offshore Safety Chief Urges Shift From "Little Bitty Things."

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Associated Press: DNA Tests Confirm Gray Wolf Is Roaming NW Washington State.
- Omaha (NE) World-Herald: Omaha Zoo Helps Breed, Release Critically Endangered Frogs.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: No Increased Danger After Yosemite Rocks Fall.
- Associated Press: Missing Hiker Found In Sequoia National Park.
- Washington Times: Successful Border Enforcement Saves Habitat, Visitor Security On National Park Service Land.
- Associated Press: Park Officials Prepare To Phase Down Services On North Rim.
- Associated Press: Permission Sought For Observatory Atop Colorado's Pikes Peak.

Top National News

- USA Today: Trump Blasts Critics Of Administration's Response To Hurricane Maria.
- ABC: After Trump Again Calls To End Protests, Fewer NFL Players Kneel During Anthem.
- NBC: Trump: Tillerson "Wasting His Time" Talking To North Korea.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Actually, A Health Care Deal Is Possible."
 - "Discrimination Inside The N.Y.P.D."
 - "Goodbye Seal, Goodbye Flag."
- Washington Post.
 - "Will Trump's Tax Cuts Profit Trump?"
 - "The Republican Rot Runs Deeper Than Roy Moore."
 - "The Guggenheim Caves To Threats – And Squashes Free Expression."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Tax Policy Center Propaganda."
 - "Trump's Excellent Judges."
 - "Arbitration Is Back At The Supreme Court."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

After Price Resignation, Democrats Keep Focus On Travel By Other Trump.

Throughout the weekend, there was ongoing coverage of the travel expenses of members of President Trump's Cabinet. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (10/1, Dupree) reports that as HHS Secretary Price "departed, Democrats were already asking the feds for more details on the travel habits of others in the Trump Cabinet, especially zeroing in on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, EPA chief Scott Pruitt and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin." Zinke "has already said he thinks questions about his travel are 'BS,' amid reports that he had the Interior Department spend over $12,000 on a private jet to fly home to Montana." The Hill (9/29, Delk) reported that Rep. Betty McCollum (D-N) sent a letter to Zinke on Friday, "asking for more information on the privately chartered flights he took at taxpayer expense while in office, saying that the flights have created 'the appearance of a serious conflict of interest.'"

Bloomberg News (9/29, Olorunnipa, John) reported that Zinke flew from Las Vegas to Montana "in June aboard a plane owned by the executives of a Wyoming company. ... A department official said Zinke has never met the energy executive who owned the plane, and that the charter plane company he used has been a vendor of the federal government for years." The Washington Times (9/29, Wolfgang) reported that on Friday, Zinke "said all of his private flights...had been cleared by the department's ethics office."

Among the other sources mentioning Zinke in coverage of the issue were BBC News \(UK\) (9/29), the Daily Beast (9/29, Ryan), CBS News (9/29, Watson), CNN (9/29, Green), Esquire Magazine (9/29, Pierce), the Huffington Post (9/29), NBC News (9/29), Politico (9/29, Lefebvre), Quartz (9/30, Timmons), and TIME (10/1, Miller).

A Return To The Conservation Ethic.

In her Wall Street Journal (9/29) column, Kimberley Strassel praises Interior Secretary Zinke's plans to restore the conservation vision of Gifford Pinchot. Zinke told Strassel, "My first goal is to restore trust with America that we are in fact using our public lands 'for the benefit and the enjoyment of the people' – not for the very few and the elite. ... We are going to be great stewards of these treasures, but we are also going to restore access to the people and to industry – and be a partner." Zinke also told Strassel that he may move the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Fish and Wildlife Service out of Washington to the West, possibly Colorado.

Zinke Set To Change Obama's Sage Grouse Plan For Idaho And 9 Other States.

In continuing coverage, KBSC-FM Boise, ID (9/29, Barnhill) reported on its website that though the Interior Department under President Obama did not put the greater sage grouse on the endangered species list, "officials created a plan which restricted ranching, mining and other resource extraction – but not as drastically as a listing decision would have." Interior Secretary Zinke is now "set to reverse much of this plan."

US Interior Secretary Hints At Economic War On Iran.

Iranian state outlet Press TV \(IRN\) (9/30) reported that Interior Secretary Zinke "says Washington is now better placed to use its 'economic dominance' to cut Iran's oil revenues." Press TV writes, "American companies have been jacking up shale oil production" since President Trump "walked away from the Paris climate treaty. US ability to extract energy from vast shale formations has put the country on the brink of being a global energy powerhouse." In his Friday speech at the Heritage Foundation, Zinke said US "economic leverage would work to supplant every drop of crude that Iran produces and energy dominance is part of that."

Springfield Mayor: Wonders Of Wildlife A "Game-Changer."

The AP (9/30) reported on the opening of the Wonders of Wildlife National Museum & Aquarium in Springfield, Missouri last week. Interior Secretary Zinke "scuba-dived into the aquarium" along with actor Mark Wahlberg. Forbes (10/1, Shiels) also has a report.

What The Trump Administration Doesn't Understand About Wildfires.

Char Miller, a professor of environmental analysis at Pomona College, writes in the Los Angeles Times (10/1) that the Trump Administration's "key wildfire officials – Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue and EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt – have refused to acknowledge the primary role that dangerous climatological factors, such as drought, heat and wind, play in energizing and propelling wildland fire. Instead, they're fingering 'radical environmentalists' who allegedly have scuttled timber sales that would have removed trees and reduced ignition sources."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Lake Superior Island Returned To Chippewa.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/30, Louwagie) reported that the Grand Portage Band of Lake Superior Chippewa and the Nature Conservancy have "announced that, with approval from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs," Susie Island, the largest of "the 13 small Lake Superior islands off the northeast tip of Minnesota...has been returned to the tribe." The Susie Islands Archipelago "is located entirely within the boundaries of the Grand Portage Indian Reservation," though initially left out. The band "made a long-term goal to reacquire the islands where ancestors had gathered blueberries and fished. It succeeded in getting most of them, but the large island was among the last to be returned."

Bureau Of Land Management

Environmental Groups Name Toilet After Interior Secretary In Public Lands Protest.

The Eureka \(CA\) Times Standard (9/30, Houston) reported that two Humboldt County, California environmental organizations, "protesting Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's proposal to downsize a southern Oregon and northern California national monument...chose to give...Zinke a monument of his own: a toilet." Representatives of the Environmental Protection Information Center and the Northcoast Environmental Center held a ribbon cutting at "the vault toilet at the Ma-le'l Dunes' south entrance in Manila on Saturday morning. ... As the bathroom is Bureau of Land Management property, the wood plaque bearing Zinke's name was removed after the ceremony." Breitbart (10/1) picked up the report.

DC Monuments "Report" Takes Hike To Nowhere.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/1) editorializes, "The leaked draft of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendations to President Trump on 27 national monuments...is so vague it's useless to the communities that would be affected by any changes." Since the White House "is not answering questions about it...everyone, especially those who live, work and play in or near the monuments, is left to speculate on the few semi-solid recommendations in the draft."

Ryan Zinke's Monumental Disappointment In Montana.

William Perry Pendley writes in his Washington Examiner (10/2, Pendley) column that Interior Secretary Zinke's "leaked report on President Trump's ordered review of 27 national monument designations or expansions of the last 21 years was trebly disappointing." Zinke "failed to recommend revocation of any Clinton and Obama decrees, despite finding that many failed to satisfy the requirements of the Antiquities Act of 1906. He offered boundary adjustments for only four monuments...but suggested, with unwarranted optimism, the worst of the others could be eased by expanding the lawful activities there." And he "urged using the widely-discredited act to set more land off-limits, including in his backyard in Montana."

Zinke Is Far From Teddy Roosevelt.

Brian Sybert of the Conservation Lands Foundation and David Petersen of Colorado Backcountry Hunters and Anglers wrote in the Santa Fe New Mexican (9/30), "In his so-called review of national monuments, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke – who likes to declare himself a Teddy Roosevelt fan – claims that his recommended changes to our national monuments will help sportsmen by 'restoring' fishing and hunting rights taken away by previous administrations. That's an outright lie. Hunting and fishing are currently allowed in every single one of the 23 land-based national monuments included in Secretary Zinke's review." Sybert and Petersen argue that the recommendations "aim to shrink our national monuments and weaken protections to make it easier for private industry to exploit these treasured public places."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Public Meeting Set For Tuesday On Hilcorp's Beaufort Sea Project.

The Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (10/1) reports, "A public hearing will be held Tuesday in Fairbanks about a proposed oil and gas development project north of Alaska in the Beaufort Sea." Hilcorp "has filed a plan with the U.S. Bureau of Ocean Energy Management to build a small artificial gravel island in the sea. The island would be similar to four existing oil and gas producing islands in the area."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Feds Won't Oppose Klamath River Dam Removal, Official Says.

The Eureka \(CA\) Times Standard (9/29, Houston) reported that Bureau of Reclamation Deputy Commissioner Alan Mikkelsen "said in a recent interview with an Oregon newspaper that the department will not interfere with a plan to remove four dams from the 236-mile Klamath River." Mikkelsen said, "Interior is not going to do anything to slow or stop the dam removal process." The Klamath Hydroelectric Settlement Agreement "proposes to remove four hydroelectric dams from the Klamath River starting in 2020 in order to improve water quality for wildlife and downstream users."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Offshore Safety Chief Urges Shift From "Little Bitty Things."

The Houston Chronicle (9/29, Osborne) reported that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Scott Angelle "said in a recent interview that he was concerned that over-policing was creating a contentious environment in which the bureau and the oil companies it oversees were spending too much time sending paperwork back and forth and not enough time focused on preventing oil spills and blowouts." Angelle said, "If you're inspecting around some things, but they're for little bitty things and we're not focused on the big things, or we're not even inspecting for those big things, isn't that a misalignment?" At BSEE, Angelle "has instigated an agency overhaul designed to reduce lag times in permitting and focus inspections on those violations and operations determined to pose the greatest risk."

Fish And Wildlife Service

DNA Tests Confirm Gray Wolf Is Roaming NW Washington State.

The AP (9/30) reported that Fish and Wildlife Service officials "say DNA testing has confirmed that a wolf is roaming on the west side of the Cascade mountains in northwestern Washington state. ... Fish and Wildlife spokeswoman Ann Froschauer says it's not clear where the gray wolf came from because DNA samples don't find a connection with known wolf packs in eastern Washington, Idaho or British Columbia."

Omaha Zoo Helps Breed, Release Critically Endangered Frogs.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (9/29, Peters) reported, "This summer, Omaha's zoo introduced 82 critically-endangered Mississippi gopher frogs into the wild." The Henry Doorly Zoo & Aquarium "partnered with the Memphis Zoo and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to breed the frogs using in vitro fertilization."

National Park Service

No Increased Danger After Yosemite Rocks Fall.

The AP (9/29) reported that "geological analysis Friday found there was no more danger than usual of another giant rock fall after two huge slides, including one involving a slab of granite the size of a 36-story building, occurred this week on the famed El Capitan rock formation in Yosemite National Park." One person was killed and two injured "in the successive rock falls on Wednesday and Thursday at the climbing mecca." The Los Angeles Times (9/29, Serna, Tchekmedyan) reported that "park officials said Friday that despite the rockfalls, El Capitan remains safe, and climbers continued their treks."

The Independent \(UK\) (9/30, Baynes) reported that British climber Andrew Foster “was trapped when more than 1,000 tonnes of rock fell from the face of the El Capitan monolith on Wednesday.” Fox News (9/29) reported on its website that “a rock climber fell Friday in Yosemite National Park and had to be airlifted out of the area” in “the third incident in Yosemite this week.”

Missing Hiker Found In Sequoia National Park.

The AP (9/30) reported, “A hiker who went missing days ago in Sequoia National Park has been found safe.” The National Park Service “says a helicopter on Saturday found 49-year-old Edward Newbegin hiking on a trail. He was uninjured and was escorted out of the area to reunite with his family.”

Successful Border Enforcement Saves Habitat, Visitor Security On National Park Service Land.

The Washington Times (10/1, Dinan) cites Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in southern Arizona as “one of the success stories of the border, where a combination of stiffer enforcement, changing migration patterns and a new spirit of cooperation between federal agencies has produced gains unimaginable just a few years ago.” For more than a decade, the area “was considered prime crossing territory for illegal immigrants and smugglers.” At its worst, “tens of thousands of illegal immigrants and smugglers crossed the southern Arizona borders each month, cutting trails on foot or barreling through in vehicles,” leaving “mountains of trash in their wake.” Now, “visitors are coming back to the parks in Arizona.”

Park Officials Prepare To Phase Down Services On North Rim.

The AP (9/30) reported, “Grand Canyon National Park is preparing to begin the annual phasedown of services on the North Rim before its Dec. 1 winter closure. Seasonal shutdown of most visitor services begins with Grand Canyon Lodge serving its last meal the morning of Oct. 16,” with the last North Rim trail rides the day before. The North Rim “will remain open from Nov. 1 to Nov. 30 only for day use. All North Rim operations close Dec. 1 or earlier if snow closes State Route 67.”

Permission Sought For Observatory Atop Colorado’s Pikes Peak.

The AP (9/29) reported that the National Space Science and Technology Institute recently submitted an application to the US Forest Service “seeking permission to build an observatory atop Colorado’s Pikes Peak. ... The Forest Service as well as Colorado Historic Preservation Office and the National Park Service will take part in analyzing the proposal.”

Top National News

Trump Blasts Critics Of Administration’s Response To Hurricane Maria.

Media coverage of the Administration response to Hurricane Maria focuses heavily on the President’s tweets yesterday (particularly his comments concerning San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz) and is decidedly negative, casting Trump as lashing out and questioning the accuracy of his claims.

Trump on Sunday morning “defended his administration’s response to the humanitarian disaster in Puerto Rico, dismissing any critics of his relief efforts as ‘fake news’ and ‘politically motivated ingrates,” USA Today (10/1, Jackson, Slack) reports. In a pair of tweets, Trump wrote, “We have done a great job with the almost impossible situation in Puerto Rico. ... Outside of the Fake News or politically motivated ingrates...people are now starting to recognize the amazing work that has been done by FEMA and our great Military.” In a third tweet, “Trump had kind words for Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rossello, thanking him and ‘all of those who are working so closely with our First Responders. Fantastic job!’” The New York Post (10/1, Moore) describes Trump as “lash[ing] out” and “ramping up his feud with the mayor of San Juan and the ‘Fake News’ media for their criticism of his response to Puerto Rico in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria.”

Politico (10/1, Cohen) says Trump’s Sunday tweets “were in contrast to some he wrote Saturday in which he assailed” Cruz “and the news media – and seemingly mocked the population of Puerto Rico as lazy.” Politico adds that it also “wasn’t clear whether Trump’s claims Sunday were true. CNN, for instance, quoted the governor of Puerto Rico as saying that some areas of the island remain basically isolated, casting doubt on Trump’s claim that ‘all buildings now inspected.”

The AP (10/1, Colvin) says Trump “spent Saturday ensconced in his New Jersey golf club and on Sunday attended an international golf competition near New York City,” and “appeared unconcerned with the optics of spending his Sunday afternoon watching The Presidents Cup at the Liberty National Golf Club as the crisis continued.” NJ News (10/1) reports that as Trump awarded the Presidents Cup trophy to the US team on Sunday, he discussed “golf and hurricane relief.” Trump said, “On behalf of all of the people of Texas and all of the people of – if you look today and see what’s happening, how horrible it is, though we have it under really great control in Puerto Rico. ... And the people of Florida, who have really suffered over this last short period of time with the hurricanes, I want to just remember them and we’re going to dedicate this trophy to all of those people that went through so much.”

Julie Pace of the AP said on CNN Inside Politics (10/1), “For the President, everything comes down to winning and losing. And he watches the coverage right now, he is seeing people, either officials or Puerto Ricans who are being critical of the federal response and he believes that that reflects poorly on him. So he wants to push back and make it sound like he is actually winning this. But in doing that, in framing it in that context, he’s really losing sight of what we’re actually talking about.”

Administration officials also spoke out in defense of the Administration response on Sunday. The Hill (10/1, Savransky) reports, “White House officials on Sunday were united in blaming factors beyond their control for Puerto Rico’s struggle to recover from hurricane damage.” Business Insider (10/1) says, “The White House has increasingly attempted to spin its response to Maria – which many have criticized as slow to recognize the extent of devastation – as a success.”

OMB Director Mulvaney also took aim at Cruz, Politico (10/1, Temple-West) reports. Mulvaney told CNN’s State Of The Union (10/1, Tapper), “My understanding is that as of yesterday, she had not even been to the FEMA operation center in her own city. ... It is unfortunate that the San Juan mayor wants to sort of go against the grain. We’d love to have her on the team as we all pull in the same direction.” The Hill (10/1, Beavers) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin also “defended” the President for his “series of attacks” against Cruz. Appearing on NBC’s Meet the Press (10/1, Todd), Mnuchin said, “When the President gets attacked, he attacks back, and I think the mayor’s comments were unfair, given what the federal government has done.”

National Economic Council Director Cohn told Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (10/1, Bartiromo) that he wanted to “reiterate how involved the Administration continues to be.” He noted that “the United States has gone through extraordinary efforts to deliver goods to the island” and that currently, “our big challenge to get those goods delivered to the citizens of the island that need those goods.”

FEMA Administrator Long also defended Administration efforts on ABC’s This Week (10/1), saying, “We have been working with mayors all around Puerto Rico to make sure we have a strategy” and “that we execute the strategy going forward.” He said that the mayor of San Juan does “have access to commodities” as “we have established 11 regional distribution hubs.” Long told Fox News Sunday (10/1, Wallace) that “the bottom line is this is the most logistically challenging event the United States has ever seen and we have been moving and pushing as fast as the situation allows.” USA Today (10/1, Slack) that in response to Long’s claim on Fox, “social media users quickly shot back, outlining other significant logistical challenges the US has tackled in its history.”

Axios (10/1, Allen) reports that it obtained a leaked update, sent by Homeland Security Adviser Bossert to West Wing colleagues, “that points to a rapid recovery no one on the ground is witnessing” in Puerto Rico. In the memo, Bossert says, “The storm caused these problems, not our response to it. We have pushed about as much stuff and people through a tiny hole in as short a timeframe as possible.” In a separate story, The Hill (10/1, Manchester) reports Bossert “said the federal government has ‘a strong ground game’ in Puerto Rico...despite dire reports from residents and journalists on the island.” He stated in the memo obtained by Axios: “We have a strong ground game in place on the island with military leadership. [Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo] Rossello should continue to get more public messaging support from us.” Newsmax (10/1, Burke) says Bossert “outlin[ed] a public relations campaign to promote rapid stabilization and a ‘bright future,’ Axios reported.” Bossert added in his message that President Trump’s visit to the island on Tuesday “will inspire the people and let them know we all care.”

The Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (10/1, Danner) says that despite Bossert’s suggestions, the “reality of the humanitarian crisis in Puerto Rico...has rarely lined up with the Trump administration's optimistic takes on the situation. Criticism of federal relief efforts continues to intensify as many of the supplies that have been delivered to the island remain out of the hands of the communities that need them." Citing Trump's tweets Sunday morning, Mother Jones (10/1, West) says the President "appears to be ignoring whatever positive PR strategy his adviser Bossert is going with."

Reuters (10/1, Respaut, Stargardter) reports that lawmakers on Sunday urged Trump to "stop sniping" at Cruz and "get to work helping them recover." Senate Minority Leader Schumer told CBS' "Face the Nation" that the relief effort has been "slow footed, disorganized and not adequate. ... The president, instead of tweeting against the mayor of San Juan who's watching her people die and just made a plea for help, ought to roll up his sleeves and get to work here."

Bloomberg News (10/1, Levin) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders "bridled at the administration's continued attacks on Cruz," telling CNN's State Of The Union (10/1, Tapper), "Speaking from his fancy golf club, playing golf with his billionaire friends, attacking the mayor of San Juan, who is struggling to bring electricity to the island, food to the island, water to the island, gas to the island, that is just – it is unspeakable." Rep. Shelia Jackson Lee said on MSNBC's Politics Nation (10/1), "I applaud Mayor Cruz for taking him on because, unfortunately, he does not know the topography or he does not know Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico happens to have many cities. Mayor Cruz made it very clear that what she is speaking of is those individuals, those mayors, those small governments beyond San Juan who cannot speak for themselves who are facing the devastation of bodies, the devastation of dead animals, the lack of water, having to travel an hour and a half for a bag of groceries, roads that are impassable. And the President failed on this, absolutely failed."

Criticism also came from inside Trump's party on Sunday. Ohio Gov. John Kasich said on CNN's State Of The Union (10/1, Tapper), "When people are in the middle of a disaster, you don't start trying to criticize them." He added, "What's happening down there is just terrible. And maybe part of it is storm fatigue." He concluded that "when you get behind the curve on a natural disaster, you get behind the curve, you just play catch-up all the way and it never works out the way you want it to."

Sen. Marco Rubio said on CBS' Face The Nation (10/1, Dickerson), "Every minute we spend in the political realm bickering with one another over who's doing what, or who's wrong, or who didn't do right is a minute of energy and time that we're not spending trying to get the response right."

Susan Ferrechio of the Washington Examiner said on Fox News MediaBuzz (10/1), "Let's try to imagine an alternative universe where Hillary Clinton were President right now. What do you think the narrative would look like? Do you really think it would be the San Juan mayor proclaiming people are dying and we are not getting any help? I think that he did well with Texas and Florida and Democrats were really looking for a way to turn Puerto Rico into a Katrina-like disaster for Trump."

Katie Pavlich of Townhall.com said on Fox News MediaBuzz (10/1), "I think they are not pointing out in fairness of yes, the San Juan mayor is saying these things, but the governor is out praising the President's response and saying, 'Yes this is a difficult situation. We need more help, obviously. This is not going to be over in the week coming. It's going to be a long-term process.' But they tried to pin all this on the President and ignore the timeline of what the Department of Homeland Security has done and try to get those people on the ground to distribute those supplies."

San Juan Mayor Says She Is Willing To Meet With Trump. Meanwhile, the Washington Post (10/1, Snell) reports that as Trump "continued to praise the relief effort and the US government response," Cruz on Sunday "called for more, better coordinated federal aid...to deal with the widespread storm damage in Puerto Rico." In an appearance on ABC's This Week (10/1), Cruz "avoided directly criticizing Trump...and attempted to refocus the discussion on speeding aid and supplies to people on the island territory." Cruz said, "All I did last week, or even this week, was ask for help. ... It has to happen in a sustained manner. It has to happen quickly." Cruz also "said she would be willing to meet with Trump during his planned visit to Puerto Rico this week." The Wall Street Journal (10/1, Mauldin, Bender) says Cruz took a different tone on NBC's "Meet the Press," saying of Trump's comments, "Bring it on. I'm here," and he can "attack me all he wants." David Wright said on ABC World News Tonight (10/1, story 2, 2:45, Llamas) that while Cruz has said she is willing to meet with Trump, "it's not clear the invitation has been given."

A Politico (10/1, Karni) analysis says "Cruz's frustration with the layers of bureaucracy standing between her wiped-out city and food and water delivery might have been in line with Trump's own interest in cutting regulations and red tape," but her "plea was interpreted by Trump as a personal insult." Politico adds that "longtime Trump watchers" saw his "personal reaction to Cruz [as] par for the course," for Trump, who "has gone after morning show hosts like Mika Brzezinski, lawmakers from his own party, like Arizona Republican Sen. John McCain, members of his own Cabinet...and even taken on the NFL. And it was in line with how he has reacted to individuals who criticize him personally for years." In a profile of Cruz, the AP (10/1, Coto) says she has risen "to international prominence as a target of Twitter attacks." The AP adds that Cruz's critics "have questioned her management style, noting that some early supporters – including people who occupied key positions – have resigned or been dismissed."

Rosselló Says A Surge Of Fuel And Supplies Has Begun Reaching Puerto Rico. The New York Times (10/1, Fausset) reports that Rosselló said Sunday that "a surge of fuel and food supplies and federal government personnel has begun to arrive" on the island. According to Rosselló, "over the next two days, more than half a million barrels of diesel fuel and nearly a million barrels of gasoline would reach Puerto Rico." In addition, Rosselló "said that the Defense Department had increased its footprint on Puerto Rico to 6,400 people, from roughly 4,600 two days earlier, with more coming, and that other federal agencies were also sending more staff to aid in the island's recovery." On the CBS Weekend News (10/1, story 2, 2:20, Quijano), correspondent David Begnaud reported that Rosselló "warned" Sunday "that he believes there could be a mass exodus of Puerto Ricans to the US mainland unless Congress passes a financial aid package soon."

Tom Llamas reported in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (10/1, lead story, 2:35) that FEMA has approved "63,000 applications for $7 million worth of assistance," and "delivered 2 million liters of water and 1 million meals." Alex Perez added that Navy hospital ship Comfort is "arriving this week. 6,400 troops already on the ground. With communications crippled, the general now in charge of military operations here, says the challenge is finding where the needs are so they can be met." Ron Mott presented a more negative picture on NBC Nightly News (10/1, story 2, 1:50, Snow), saying, "We spent the day looking for people getting emergency aid that's supposed to be flowing out of 11 FEMA distribution centers to local authorities around the island. What we found was confusion. Local officials couldn't point us to the centers where people could get relief supplies."

Guaynabo Mayor Casts Doubt On Cruz's Claims. The Daily Caller (9/30) reports that Guaynabo Mayor Angel Perez on Saturday "cast serious doubt" on Cruz's claims. Perez said "that his experience with the federal government has been different from Cruz's, in part because – unlike Cruz – he has been participating in meetings with officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and other federal agencies." Perez said, "My experience is different. I have been participating in different meetings at the headquarters of FEMA and our government and the help is coming in and right now my experience is different from hers. I'm receiving help from the government, we are receiving assistance from FEMA, I got people over here helping us with applications for the people that have damage in their houses. And we have here in Guaynabo, we have thousands of people that lost partially or totally their houses."

Residents Scramble For Food, Water, Fuel As Shortages Grip Puerto Rico. Reuters (10/1, Respaut, Brown) highlights shortages on the island, reporting that residents are "scrambl[ing] for all the staples of modern society – food, water, fuel, medicine, currency – in a grinding survival struggle that has gripped Puerto Ricans across social classes." Reuters adds that "severe shortages have thrown even relatively affluent Puerto Ricans into the same plight as the hundreds of thousands of poor residents here." On The CBS Weekend News (10/1, story 12, 1:55, Quijano), Dr. John LaPook reported from an elementary school that is serving as a shelter for people who "have been displaced, really no place to go because of the hurricane."

The New York Times (10/1, Healy) reports that on the island of Vieques, eight miles east of Puerto Rico, "solitude used to be an allure of life," but in Maria's wake, "that solitude is a big problem." Vieques' 9,000 residents "have been largely cut off from the world for 11 days since Hurricane Maria hit, with no power or communications and, for many, no running water." The Wall Street Journal (10/1, Hernandez) highlights the impact Maria has on the beachside town of Humacao, about an hour southeast of San Juan.

A front-page story in the Washington Post (10/1, A1, Schmidt, Hernández) reports that "an unknown number of families are still trapped in this part of Utuado, much of which is inaccessible nearly two weeks after the storm." The Post says that if aid has been "slow to reach Puerto Rico as a whole, getting help to isolated communities such as Utuado has been taking even longer" to reach "these rural neighborhoods, tucked between mountain ranges and nestled along murky river beds." Hector Ruiz, a utility worker hired by the Utuado municipality to clear its roads, "estimated that it will take at least one more month to make the entire highway in Utuado accessible."

After Trump Again Calls To End Protests, Fewer NFL Players Kneel During Anthem.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/1, story 7, 1:35, Llamas), Ron Claiborne reported, "Across the NFL, players once again taking a knee during the national anthem" on Sunday. "The new protests following the President's tweet on Saturday, 'Very important that NFL player stand tomorrow and always for the playing of our national anthem. Respect our flag and our country!' Oakland's Marshawn Lynch getting ready for his game with a shirt reading, 'Everybody versus Trump.' In San Francisco, 30 49ers players once again protesting and taking a knee, like their former Quarterback Colin Kaepernick, who initially sparked the uproar with his protests against alleged police mistreatment of minorities. ... But today, far fewer players knelt during 'the Star-Spangled Banner.' No owners joined them. Where there were protests, the reaction in the stands was far more muted than a week ago."

On the CBS Weekend News (10/1, story 6, 1:50, Quijano), Tony Dokoupil reported that Trump "first raised the issue last month, re-upped it in tweets all week, and drew a new line in the sand late Saturday. 'Very important that NFL players stand tomorrow and always,' he wrote. 'Respect our flag.'" Dokoupil added, "Last week, more than a hundred NFL players sat, knelt or raised their fist during the anthem. Some followed this afternoon, though more opted to stand linking arms, praying, even singing. The controversy has also spread to high schools. On Friday, two players in Texas were kicked off their team for protests during the anthem. Their coach is a veteran."

Under the headline "Fewer NFL Players Kneel During Anthem As Trump Repeats Call For Protest To End," Reuters (10/1, Radnage, Woodall) reports, "Several dozen NFL players, fewer than last week, chose to kneel during the US national anthem before league games on Sunday, a day after... Trump again demanded an end to a protest he sees as a sign of disrespect for the flag. At least 40 players, most of them on the San Francisco 49ers, bent a knee during pre-game renditions of the" anthem "in the 14 [NFL] games played so far on Sunday, compared with 180 players in all 16 games a week earlier." The Wall Street Journal (10/1, Beaton) headlines its report "NFL Protests Are More Muted."

The Washington Times (10/1, Richardson) reports that during a game played Sunday in London, England, "three Miami Dolphins knelt during the anthem, then stood for 'God Save the Queen.'" Breitbart (10/1, Gwinn) reports that the Baltimore Ravens took "a knee before the playing of the anthem, and then [stood] during it. In response, a stream of boos...descended on the players from the assembled crowd at M&T Bank Stadium." The Washington Post (10/1, Boren, Kilgore) reports that on Sunday, "NFL teams and players demonstrated again in a variety of ways, from players making individual statements along sidelines to pregame attire aimed at Trump to entire teams kneeling before the anthem or locking arms during the song."

Ryan: On Racial Issues, Trump's "Heart's In The Right Place." House Speaker Paul Ryan on Sunday was asked on CBS' Face The Nation (10/1, Dickerson) about race in America, in the context of the recent violence in Charlottesville, Virginia; the NFL protests; and other events. Ryan said of Trump, "I know his heart's in the right place." Ryan said he knew this after "some candid conversations about this, especially during that time" around the Charlottesville unrest, and that "what matters is that we have to show people that we are inclusive society, that we want everyone to succeed." Ryan also said he thinks NFL players had a right to express themselves under the First Amendment. He added that people who think the kneeling of NFL players was disrespectful to the flag don't "see the point" the players are trying to make.

Sanders: NFL Protests Are About Criminal Justice Reform. Sen. Bernie Sanders on Sunday was asked on CNN's State Of The Union (10/1, Tapper) about the ongoing feud between Trump and NFL players. Sanders said, "Let's not worry about the politics of what's going on," but instead discuss "why players are doing what they're doing." He added that there is a criminal justice crisis in the US, saying the nation has more people "in jail than any other major country on earth." Sanders said he thinks the players are "talking about...the need for criminal justice reform."

Vincent: NFL Leadership Has Been Slow To Detail League Policy On Protests. In a Wall Street Journal (10/1, Vincent) op-ed, former Major League Baseball commissioner Fay Vincent discusses the NFL anthem protests, saying that in sports, it's up to commissioners to offer a response to the pressure from the public and to specify what is acceptable behavior on the part of a league's players. Commissioners, says Vincent, must rapidly explain that the disruption of games or the offending of paying customers crosses a line. Vincent says that the NFL has yet to address these issues, and he suggests that ex-Secretaries of State James Baker or Condoleezza Rice would perhaps be a good choice to, on the NFL's behalf, offer a statement of league governance regarding the protests.

Citing Anthem Protests, Renacci Canceled Ad Buy Slated For Sunday NFL Game. The Cleveland

Plain Dealer (9/29, Richardson) reported that Rep. Jim Renacci (R-OH), who is mounting a 2018 bid to succeed term-limited Gov. John Kasich (R-OH), on Friday said “he would pull a $20,000 ad buy scheduled to air during National Football League games this weekend in response to player protests.” Renacci “said he was pulling the ads from Sunday’s Cincinnati Bengals-Cleveland Browns matchup after players last week knelt during the national anthem in response to President Donald Trump’s attacks on their earlier protests.”

In a news article, the Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (9/29, Ludlow) flatly asserted that Renacci “is wrapping himself in red, white and blue in quickly canceling a TV spot his campaign had purchased during the [Bengals-Browns] game on Sunday.” In a statement, Renacci – running in a crowded GOP primary – said, “While the First Amendment clearly affords NFL players and officials the freedom to engage in this appalling behavior, having the right to do something does not mean it’s the right thing to do. ... And while the right to speak and protest peacefully is a fundamental freedom that we as Americans enjoy, protesting the most sacred symbols of those freedoms is both sadly ironic and an inexcusable, offensive display of contempt for what our nation stands for.”

Trump: Tillerson “Wasting His Time” Talking To North Korea.

Media coverage of President Trump’s tweets Sunday about North Korea is critical with reports casting the President as undercutting Secretary of State Tillerson. NBC Nightly News (10/1, story 3, 1:15, Snow), for example, reported President Trump “appeared to undermine the diplomatic channel announced just yesterday by the Secretary of State,” tweeting (10/1), “I told Rex Tillerson he’s wasting his time trying to negotiate with Little Rocket Man.” He added, “Save your energy, Rex, we’ll do what has to be done.” While NBC said the White House “won’t say” if Trump is “suggesting military action or taunting Kim Jong-Un,” ABC World News Tonight (10/1, story 2, 2:45, Llamas) said Trump “not only taunted Kim Jong-un, he publicly undercut” Tillerson after he visited China, “trying to broker an end to North Korea’s nuclear program.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/1, Wilkinson, King) too says Trump “undercut his top diplomat” in a “stunning rebuke” that marked “the latest incident in which Trump has publicly contradicted Tillerson and quickly dashed any hope for progress in easing perilously volatile tensions” with North Korea. USA Today (10/1, Slack) similarly says Trump “appeared to undercut his own secretary of State’s diplomatic efforts to resolve the nuclear standoff,” and the New York Times (10/1, Baker) says he “seemed to undercut his own secretary of state on Sunday as he belittled the prospect of a diplomatic resolution.”

Bloomberg News (10/1, Niquette, Wadhams) says Trump’s “admonishment” of Tillerson for “wasting his time” in seeking negotiations with North Korea “further highlighted differences within the administration on how best to get Kim Jong Un to halt his nuclear weapons program.” State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert, however, tweeted after Trump’s comment that while diplomatic channels are open “for now” to Kim, “they won’t be open forever.”

According to the AP (10/1, Lee), the tweets are “raising speculation about whether Trump could be undermining efforts to maintain channels of communication or somehow bolstering the diplomat’s hand in possible future talks.” The Hill (10/1, Manchester) reports the President’s tweets came “amid the escalating crisis on the Korean Peninsula.” The Washington Post (10/1, Nakamura) reports the President “has taken an increasingly hard-line stance toward Pyongyang over its nuclear weapons and ballistic missile tests,” while the Wall Street Journal (10/1, Schwartz) notes it was not the first time Trump and Tillerson have sent differing signals about North Korea, as well as other topics.

Reuters (10/1, Chiacu, Holland) reports Trump tweeted that his predecessors had all “failed” on North Korea by “Being nice to Rocket Man,” so “why would it work now?” The Washington Examiner (10/1, Feldscher) reports Trump “alluded to attempts to make peace with Kim not working over the last several administrations,” but noted that Kim “has only been in power since his father died in 2011.” The New York Post (10/1, Moore), however, says it is “unclear whether Trump was referring to the Kim family, which has ruled North Korea since 1948, or just Kim Jong Un, who is just 33-years-old and took over from his father Kim Jong II in 2010.”

Breitbart (10/1, Wong) reports Trump’s tweets “suggest he is opposed to trying to negotiate with Kim Jong-Un,” but cautioned that he “could also be acting as if he is opposed to Tillerson’s efforts, in a good cop, bad cop routine.” Former State Department officials Aaron David Miller and Richard Sokolsky write for Politico Magazine (10/1) that “even if they’re playing good cop/bad cop, this is a shocker: Donald Trump is basically announcing that any negotiations with North Korea are worthless. This not only undercut Tillerson personally, but also undermines US interests and the secretary of state’s sensible decision to talk to the North Korean regime.” They argue what while many have called for Tillerson to resign, “it’s magical thinking to believe that Tillerson's successor could fundamentally alter the downward trajectory of the State Department or do much more to fix the world's problems. As long as Donald Trump is president, more likely than not, the Department of State is going to remain closed for the season."

Politico (10/1, Toosi, Cohen) reports Trump's tweet "drew some startled reactions in the diplomatic field." Richard N. Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, tweeted, "Diplomacy not a favor we dispense but a critical national security tool for ourselves. Potus truly misguided here-& SecState should resign." Carl Bildt, co-chair of the European Council on Foreign Relations, tweeted: "President Trump spectacularly shot down SecState Tillerson after important Beijing talks. How long can this last?"

NYTimes Analysis: Trump "Relishes" Public Fights. Peter Baker writes in a New York Times (10/1) analysis that while "opponents, independent analysts and even some of his own advisers winced at his latest outbursts," President Trump has recently criticized the mayor of San Juan, Puerto Rico, "excoriating kneeling football players," and undercut "his own secretary of state." Trump, however, "was convinced that he was putting points on the board, according to those close to him." Baker writes that Trump's "view of politics is unlike that of any president in modern times. Where other occupants of the Oval Office might go out of their way to avoid public fights with hurricane victims, popular athletes or members of their own team, Mr. Trump relishes them. He thinks they make him look strong."

Poll: Trump Foreign Policy Splits Republican Party. The Washington Post (10/1, Balz, Guskin) reports President Trump's "often-controversial foreign policy pronouncements, which have generated criticism abroad, have produced sharp divisions within the Republican coalition, with the party badly split on the issues of trade, immigration, climate change and the value of US alliances, according to a new poll by the Chicago Council on Global Affairs." The poll's survey found that Trump's "most fervent supporters solidly support his views on these issues, but Republicans with less favorable impressions of the president are far less enthusiastic and are more closely aligned in their attitudes with the overall population."

Report: Trump Ordered "Pressure" Campaign Early In Administration. The Daily Caller (10/1, Pickrell) reports President Trump "quietly signed a government directive ordering a sweeping pressure campaign on North Korea early on in his administration to derail the rogue regime's nuclear plans," according to a report Saturday by the Washington Post. The Caller writes, "It turns out the Trump administration has a very clear strategy for dealing with the rogue regime. The Department of Defense has been targeting North Korean spies and hackers, the Department of State has been encouraging foreign governments to cut ties with Pyongyang at every opportunity, and the Department of the Treasury has been tightening the noose on North Korea's economy through escalating sanctions on the regime and its supporters." At the same time, the US has been "keeping the door open for negotiation."

Italy Becomes Fifth Country To Expel North Korean Ambassador. The Washington Post (10/1, Fifield) reports Italy "has become the latest country to expel a North Korean ambassador," saying that isolation was "inevitable" if Pyongyang continued to push ahead with its nuclear weapons program. Italian Foreign Minister Angelino Alfano said the North Korean ambassador in Rome, Mun Jong Nam, had been ordered to leave. "We want to make Pyongyang realize that their isolation is inevitable if they don't change tack," Alfano told Italian newspaper la Repubblica in an interview published Sunday.

North Korean Ship Carrying Weapons For Egypt Seized. The Washington Post (10/1, Warrick) reports that last August, "a secret message was passed from Washington to Cairo warning about a mysterious vessel steaming toward the Suez Canal." The freighter named Jie Shun "was flying Cambodian colors but had sailed from North Korea, the warning said, with a North Korean crew and an unknown cargo shrouded by heavy tarps." Egyptian officials seized a cache of "more than 30,000 rocket-propelled grenades," the "largest seizure of ammunition in the history of sanctions" against North Korea. A UN investigation ultimately "uncovered a complex arrangement in which Egyptian business executives ordered millions of dollars worth of North Korean rockets for the country's military while also taking pains to keep the transaction hidden, according to US officials and Western diplomats familiar with the findings." The incident "prompted the latest in a series of intense, if private, US complaints over Egyptian efforts to obtain banned military hardware from Pyongyang, the officials said."

Group: Kim Jong Un's Nephew Was In Danger After Father's Assassination. The Wall Street Journal (10/1, Gale) reports that when Kim Jong Nam, the exiled half brother of North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, was assassinated in a Malaysian airport on Feb. 13, his 21-year-old son, Kim Han Sol, was believed to be the next target. A group of North Korean dissidents known as the Cheollima Civil Defense moved quickly to get Kim Han Sol, his mother, and sister out of their Macau home and fly them to a secure location.

Former WPost Reporter: China Losing Leverage Over Kim. Blaine Harden, former Post reporter and consultant to the Frontline documentary “North Korea’s Deadly Dictator” airing on PBS on Oct. 4, writes in the Washington Post (10/1) that “to the frustration of President Trump, China seems to be losing leverage over the young dictator next door.” While the Kim regime “has become more dependent than ever on Chinese trade,” that dependence is “clearly not swaying the behavior of Kim Jong Un.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Actually, A Health Care Deal Is Possible.” A New York Times (10/2, Board) editorial says Sen. Lamar Alexander, a Republican, and Sen. Patty Murray, a Democrat, “have resumed negotiations that offer a more productive path, one that could preserve the best of Obamacare while offering adjustments that both parties can accept.” If successful, the Times says, Alexander and Murray could “offer Congress a way out of the morass with a modest bill that could help strengthen the A.C.A.’s individual insurance markets, which are used by about 10 million people, without overhauling the whole system in ways that could deprive millions of people of subsidized care.” The Times stresses that any healthcare “deal will involve compromise,” and that Republican lawmakers “might benefit even more than they realize.”

“Discrimination Inside The N.Y.P.D.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/2, Board) points to a lawsuit filed last week accusing the New York Police Department’s intelligence division of discrimination as a sign “that the system needs some revision.” Notably, the Times says, the NYPD labor relations department reportedly has “‘no set policy’ on promotions for detectives,” and frustration over that lack of a policy “runs especially deep among black officers in the intelligence division, which covers terrorism and other major crimes.” Regardless of the outcome of the lawsuit, the Times concludes, it has at least put the department “on notice that it needs to develop a transparent and objective system.”

“Goodbye Seal, Goodbye Flag.” The New York Times (10/2, Board) editorializes on Staten Island’s efforts to change the borough flag, noting that borough president James Oddo and Emil Micha, a senior adviser, reportedly designed a new flag that “had finally found favor at City Hall” last week. The Times wonders whether a new flag will “make Staten Islanders feel better about their place in the sun, or at least in the big city,” and says while it may be “too early to tell,” the move is “a tonic for the borough president.”

Washington Post.

“Will Trump’s Tax Cuts Profit Trump?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/1) writes that President Trump may benefit financially from Republicans’ tax proposal, as evidenced by the Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center report released Friday “showing that, by 2027, the GOP tax plan would provide massive benefits to upper-income taxpayers even as it smacked large sections of the middle class with a net tax hike.” The Post argues that because Trump has refused to release his tax returns, “it is impossible to know for sure” whether he will benefit from the plan. The Post concludes that Congress should consider a tax plan “only after” Trump publishes his returns.

“The Republican Rot Runs Deeper Than Roy Moore.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/1) says, “It was dispiriting that Roy Moore won the” GOP primary runoff “the same week that Sen. Bob Corker (R-Tenn.) announced he would be leaving it. But the rot runs deeper than either event would suggest. When Senate leadership is content with the kind of process and dishonesty we witnessed with health-care and now tax ‘reform,’ neither event should come as a big surprise.” The Post says “Moore is unfit to be a senator” and there are “similarities between Mr. Trump and the insurgent judge. Both have questioned Barack Obama’s citizenship and displayed disdain for the rule of law,” for example. The Post adds that “if the Republican leadership is afraid of what Mr. Moore could bring to Washington, it may want to reconsider the wisdom of opening the door to his hate-filled appeals and disruptive behavior by backing Mr. Trump in the first place.”

“The Guggenheim Caves To Threats – And Squashes Free Expression.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/1) writes that the recent decision of the Guggenheim Museum to remove three pieces from an upcoming art exhibition that had sparked protests from animal rights activists signified a surrender to threats and a disregard for free expression. The Post concludes that the Guggenheim's decision "sends a chilling message about artistic freedom, which could set a troubling precedent the next time some other institution plans to display something someone else doesn't like or approve of."

Wall Street Journal.

"Tax Policy Center Propaganda." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/1) writes that a Tax Policy Center report released Friday assessing Republicans' tax plan offered an impossibly specific analysis that criticized the proposal – particularly, the plan's effect on reducing government revenues and benefiting the top 1 percent of taxpayers – without sufficient evidence. The Journal contends that the Tax Policy Center has a progressive bias and creates anti-tax reform propaganda.

"Trump's Excellent Judges." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/1) applauds President Trump for his four latest judicial nominations for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals – Don Willett, James Ho, Stuart Duncan, and Kurt Engelhardt. The Journal praises each judge's legal achievements and argues that their nominations highlight Trump's greatest political success as he rapidly remakes the federal appellate and district courts with qualified, conservative picks.

"Arbitration Is Back At The Supreme Court." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/1) urges the Supreme Court to hear challenges to an Obama-era National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) opinion that prohibits arbitration class-action waivers in employment contracts. According to the Journal, the court has repeatedly ruled that the Federal Arbitration Act preempts state laws and court rulings against forced arbitration, and urges the court to reinforce previous rulings on the issue.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Trump Tells Tillerson Talking To North Korea Is Waste Of Time
At The Center Of The Equifax Mess: Its Top Lawyer
The Man Who Exposed College Basketball
Hedge Funds: Not Dead Yet

New York Times:

Catalonia's Independence Vote Descends Into Chaos And Clashes
As Catalans Voted, 'Dying With Fear' At High School Turned Polling Place
Trump Says Tillerson Is 'Wasting His Time' On North Korea
Back At Full Strength, Supreme Court Faces A Momentous Term
SI Newhouse Jr., Who Turned Condé Nast Into A Magazine Powerhouse, Dies At 89

Washington Post:

Assailed Over Maria Relief, Trump Stays His Course
Crucial Term For Top Court Kicks Off
President Contradicts Tillerson On N. Korea
Illicit Cargo Exposes N. Korea's Arms Trade
In Catalonia, A Chaotic Yes
A Mountain Of Worry In Puerto Rico

Financial Times:

Catalans Defy Madrid To Register Clear Vote For Independence
Puerto Ricans Wrestle With Question Of Whether To Leave
WTO Chief Warns Of Risks To Trade Peace

Washington Times:

Benghazi Suspect's Criminal Trial To Test Speed Of U.S. Courts Vs. Military Tribunals
Tormenting Manafort Is Seen As Weissmann's Way To Snare Big Prosecution Targets For Mueller
Successful Border Enforcement Saves Habitat, Visitor Security On National Park Service Land
With Gorsuch filling out bench, Supreme Court ready to Break Ground On High-Profile Cases
Trump, Aides Accuse Media Of Misrepresenting Federal Response To Puerto Rico Disaster
Struggling Venezuelans Stop Putting Faith In Maduro's Heated Anti-American Rhetoric

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; White House-Trump Tweets; OJ Simpson Parole; Terror Attacks Abroad; Spain-Catalonia Protest; Ship Sinking Report; NFL Kneeling Protest; Air France-Emergency Landing; Florida-Murder Manhunt; Netflix Phishing; Pro Rugby Player Prank; Veteran Returns Home.

CBS: OJ Simpson Parole; Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; Hurricane Recovery-Florida Keys; Ship Sinking Report; White House-Tax Reform; NFL Kneeling Protest; France Terror Attack; Canada Terror Attack; Spain-Catalonia Protest; Rep. Scalise Recovered; Hurricane Irma-Lawsuits On Chemical Companies; Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico Shelters.

NBC: OJ Simpson Parole; Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; White House-Trump Tweets; Canada Terror Attack; France Terror Attack; Spain-Catalonia Protest; Opioid Epidemic; Air France-Emergency Landing; Supreme Court Back In Session; Pinball Machine.

Network TV At A Glance:

Hurricane Recovery – 9 minutes, 5 seconds

OJ Simpson Parole – 8 minutes

Spain-Catalonia Protest – 5 minutes

Terror Attacks Abroad – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: OJ Simpson Parole; Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; Spain-Catalonia Protest.

CBS: Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; OJ Simpson Parole; Terror Attacks Abroad; Spain-Catalonia Protest; Trump-North Korea Tweet; NFL Kneeling Protest; Wall Street News.

FOX: Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; GOP Congress-Tax Reform;

NPR: Hurricane Recovery-Puerto Rico; Trump-North Korea Tweet; Supreme Court-Gerrymandering; Terror Attacks Abroad.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Leads a deregulation summit; meets with the governors of Kentucky, Mississippi, Maine, and New Hampshire; welcome Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha and Madam Chan-o-Cha of Thailand; has dinner with Republican Members of Congress.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public schedule announced.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate votes on FCC nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Ajit Varadaraj Pai to be a Federal Communications Commission member, followed by a vote on the nomination * Cloture motion on the nomination passed by 55 votes to 41 last week Location: Washington, DC

<http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 12:00 PM House of Representatives meets for legislative business Location:

Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 36 – Pain-Capable Unborn Child Protection Act' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/>

<https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 1:30 PM Dem Rep. David Cicilline speaks on President Trump's 'deregulation agenda' in Public Citizen call – Democratic Rep. David Cicilline speaks on Public Citizen press call, making the case for 'robust regulation and enforcement', and highlighting what they describe as 'conflicts of interest at the heart of President Donald Trump's deregulatory agenda'. Other speakers include Consumer Federation of America Legislative Director and General Counsel Rachel Weintraub, KidsAndCars.org President and founder Janette Fennell, Coalition for Sensible Safeguards Coalition Manager Michell McIntyre, and Public Citizen President Robert Weissman * During the call, Rep. Cicilline unveils new legislation requiring disclosure of conflicts Location: TBD www.citizen.org https://twitter.com/public_citizen

6:00 PM IFES 2017 Democracy Awards Dinner – International Foundation for Electoral Systems 8th Annual Charles T. Manatt Democracy Awards presentation, awarded each year to one Democrat, one Republican, and a member of the international community who 'demonstrate the dedication to democracy and human rights embodied by Charles Manatt' Location: Four Seasons Hotel, 2800 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC www.ifes.org <https://twitter.com/IFES1987>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, October 16, 2017
Date: Monday, October 16, 2017 7:13:22 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- New York Times: Zinke Vows To End "Virus" Of Harassment In Park Service.
- Washington Times: US, States Struggle To Pay Spiraling Cost Of Fighting Fires.
- Politico Magazine: Trump's Love Affair With Coal.
- New York Times: Drilling In The Arctic Wildlife Refuge: How The G.O.P. Could Finally Break The Impasse.
- Washington Post: Interior Looks At Behind-The-Scenes Land Swap To Allow Road Through Wilderness Refuge.
- Havasu (AZ) News-Herald: Interior Department May Expand Recreational Shooting On Federal Lands.

- The Hill: Fight Over National Monuments Intensifies.
- U.S. News & World Report: Colorado County Hopeful Changes On Grouse Will Help Industry.
- Politico: Kelly Tries To Get Empty Administration Jobs Filled Fast.
- Washington Times: Additional Coverage: Ryan Zinke Has Flag Lowered Above Interior Dept. When He Leaves The Building: Report.
- CNN: What's Up With Ryan Zinke?
- The Hill: Ryan Zinke Wants To Break Many Conservation Efforts.
- Deseret (UT) News: In Our Opinion: We Support Coalition Efforts In Western Lands Debate.
- Arizona Daily Sun: Our View: Be Better Prepared For New Era Of Uranium Mining.
- Yakima (WA) Herald-Republic: Land-water Fund Supports Our Way Of Life And Economy.
- Moffat County Commissioner Don Cook told the Craig Press that the issue impacts about 40 percent of the county's land area.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribe Demands Nix Of Slawson Drilling Go-Ahead.
- Flandreau Tribal Police Officer Fired After Reporting High-speed Chase To Feds.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Fence Post: Wyoming Attorney Karen Budd-Falen May Be Next BLM Leader.
- Kingman (AZ) Daily Miner: Gosar Helping La Paz County With 8,000 Acre Solar Farm.
- Alaska Public Radio Network: State Recoups Almost $600,000 From Suit Involving Interior River.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Bella Vista Water District To Reduce Energy Costs With Solar Energy Project.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Cleanup Under Way After Large Oil Spill Off Louisiana Coast.
- Gulf Oilfield Returns To Normal After Hurricane Nate.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Wall Street Journal: It's Lizard Vs. Oil Magnate In The Latest Fight Over Fracking In Texas.
- USA Today: When Nature Calls: Florida Wildlife Refuge Makes Restrooms Artsy, Educational.
- U.S. News & World Report: US Agency's Bid To Allow Trumpeter Swan Hunting Draws Fire.
- U.S. News & World Report: Colorful North Georgia Fish Could Get Federal Protection.
- U.S. News & World Report: Century Old Buildings In Northeast Wisconsin To Be Restored.
- Law360: Elephant Trophy Ban Faces Tough DC Circuit Bench.
- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Federal Wildlife Agency Says Wolf Was Shot, Offers Reward.
- Medford (OR) Mail Tribune: OR-7's Daughter Got Some New Bling.

National Park Service

- Kearney (NE) Hub: Nation's Last Homesteader's 1945 Allis Chalmers To Be Restored.
- WUSA-TV Washington: New Mural Comes To Tenleytown, Honoring The Neighborhood's History.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Washington Post: Trump Botches Reference To 'President' Of Virgin Islands A Day After Rick Perry Called Puerto Rico A 'Country'.
- Reuters: U.S. Diplomacy With North Korea To Continue Until 'First Bomb Drops': Tillerson.

US Geological Survey

- U.S. News & World Report: Group Launches Campaign To Rename Colorado's Gore Range.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- NBC: Trump Faces Bipartisan Criticism Over ACA Subsidy Move.
- Bloomberg News: Trump Takes Victory Lap On Healthcare Executive Order As Criticism Continues.
- NBC: Trump Refuses To Certify Iran Nuclear Deal, Approves Sanctions On IRCG.
- New York Times: North Korea Hints At Possible Retaliation Over Joint US-South Korea Exercises.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- Washington Post.

- "Avoiding Fiscal Disaster."
- "Too Many In Prison."
- "Parochialism Continues To Cripple Metro."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump's NAFTA Threat."
 - "The Antidote To Steve Bannon."
 - "The Rest Of The Russia Story."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Zinke Vows To End "Virus" Of Harassment In Park Service.

The New York Times (10/13, Cochrane) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "vowed Friday that there would be 'no quarter' for employees who sexually harass or discriminate against colleagues," and "said he would dismiss anyone found guilty of harassment and supervisors who sweep such charges under the rug." In an address to employees at Grand Canyon National Park, Zinke said, "I have no problem removing manager after manager until there are none left. ... Intimidation, harassment and discrimination are viruses within an operation, and we're going to eradicate them."

The Los Angeles Times (10/13, Sahagun) reports that Zinke said, "Under my leadership we're going to hold people accountable. We're also fixing the problem of victims being afraid of retaliation or inaction by codifying the right of victims to report abuse to any manager at any location across the service, and by bringing on an independent investigative partner."

The Washington Post (10/13, Rein) reports that "Zinke said he fired four 'senior leaders' in recent weeks, adding, 'The consequence of [these] actions has to be clear.'" According to an Interior Department official, "the terminations were of senior executives and other senior officials and that the offenders were guilty of sexual harassment, intimidation and abuses of authority."

The Washington Examiner (10/13, Siciliano) reports that "the department announced that it would be increasing its ability to investigate and address harassment complaints by increasing Employee Relations and Labor Relations staff with ten additional employees." Also, "ethics staff will be beefed up with four additional employees to improve the park service's 'capacity to investigate and resolve allegations and incidents of harassment efficiently,' the agency said."

Meanwhile, the AP (10/14, Fonseca) reports that "a survey of National Park Service employees found widespread complaints of harassment and discrimination in the workplace, and top officials vowed to address the problems that have tarnished the agency's image." According to department, "nearly two of five Park Service employees surveyed this year had experienced some sort of harassment or discrimination over a 12-month period." Also, "more than 10 percent of employees were sexually harassed." The article adds that "about 19 percent of employees reported gender harassment," but "less than 1 percent reported sexual assault."

Also reporting are Government Executive (10/13, Corrigan), Cronkite News (10/13, Clair), Outside (10/13, Ogles), Law360 (10/13, Gurrieri), and KGTU-TV San Diego San Diego (10/14, Mendoza, Packard).

Local TV coverage was provided by KNXV-TV Phoenix (10/15), KTVK-TV Phoenix (10/13), and KSTU-TV Salt Lake City (10/14).

US, States Struggle To Pay Spiraling Cost Of Fighting Fires.

The AP (10/15, Thompson, Elliott) reports that "the long and brutal 2017 wildfire season is stressing the state and federal agencies that have to pay for the army of ground crews and machinery required to fight them." The federal government "spent more than $2.7 billion on firefighting in its most recently finished budget year, a record that far surpassed the previous high point of $2.1 billion set just two years ago." The U.S. is "seeing more and bigger wildfires, and the wildfire season is getting longer." According to Jennifer Jones, a spokeswoman for the National Interagency Fire Center, "the reasons are hotter, drier weather and a buildup of dead and dying trees because of past fire-suppression practices."

Additional coverage was provided by NPR (10/13, Brumfiel) and the Grass Valley \(CA\) Union (10/15, Boardman).

Strong Winds Prompt More California Wildfires Evacuations. The CBS Weekend News (10/14, lead story, 2:30, Morgan) reported that strong winds "prompted more wildfire evacuations today in northern California." Ten thousand firefighters "are battling 16 large fires that have forced 100,000 people from their homes." Sonoma County Sheriff Rob Giordano said, "It is not over. Stay away from the houses." In addition, California Gov. Jerry Brown visited the area and is quoted saying, "This is truly one of the greatest, if not the greatest, tragedy that California has ever faced. The devastation is just unbelievable. It's a horror that no one could have imagined." The Los Angeles Times (10/14, Serna, Nelson, Megerian, Kohli) reports the death toll has risen to 40.

The Washington Post (10/14, Bonos, Wang, Wootson) says Northern California officials "ordered a new round of mandatory evacuations overnight Saturday for parts of the Sonoma Valley and eastern Santa Rosa as gusting winds returned." The National Weather Service "warned Friday night that strong winds were expected throughout Northern California, with gusts of 35 to 45 mph, putting much of the region under a red flag warning."

NBC Nightly News (10/14, lead story, 2:30, Diaz-Balart) reported that "a red flag warning stretches up and down the state, warning that fires burning since last Sunday are likely to continue spreading." And the weather forecast "suggests Mother Nature will not help damp down the 16 fires burning from the north in Mendocino to the south of Los Angeles and Anaheim. No rain expected there until next Thursday or Friday at the earliest."

Death Toll Rises In California Wildfires As Forecasts Call For High Winds This Weekend. NBC Nightly News (10/13, story 3, 2:00, Holt) reported on the rising death toll in California's wildfires, calling this "the deadliest week for wildfires in that state's history, and there's no sign of a let-up coming." NBC noted that "many of those who died in the fires were in their 70s and 80s." NBC also reports that "more than 2,800 homes were destroyed" in Santa Rosa. Meanwhile, there's a new red flag warning taking effect as "wind gusts could top 50 miles an hour at higher elevations over the weekend, which has everyone here on high alert."

In a front-page story, the Washington Post (10/13, A1, Lowery) reports there were "at least 17 blazes still burning as of Friday." Santa Rosa Mayor Chris Coursey said Friday, "We all have suffered a trauma here. And we're going to be a long time in recovering from this incident."

The Los Angeles Times (10/13, Nelson) reports, "Some Santa Rosa residents may be allowed to return home Saturday or Sunday," and officials said they are working to reopen the Kaiser hospital as well as get power restored. Mayor Coursey said the city has suffered "$1.2 billion in damage, and 5% of its residences were lost to flames."

The New York Times (10/13, A1, Fuller, Pérez-Peña) in a front-page story reports that for those victims of the fire, "advance warning was measured in minutes or seconds, or never came at all," and "hesitation was lethal." The Times reports the confirmed death toll at 35 as of "Friday night, making this the deadliest wildfire outbreak in California history, and the figure is likely to climb."

ABC World News Tonight (10/13, story 4, 2:30, Muir) reported that officials "fear possible worsening winds" with "dangerous conditions expected through Sunday." Smoke has reached San Francisco, "75 miles away." The fires have spread over an area "larger than New York City," and at least 3,500 structures have been destroyed. The CBS Evening News (10/13, story 4, 2:35, Mason) reported that "more than 200" people "are unaccounted for," with local authorities attempting to check their homes. So far "the fires in six counties have burned more than 220,000 acres."

ABC World News Tonight (10/13, story 5, 0:35, Muir) said the fires are "shaping up to be a statewide event," and that by Saturday morning "we're talking about Los Angeles and Ventura counties – winds'll be ripping there." These "dry Santa Ana winds" have dropped humidity levels to under 10%, "dangerous levels."

The AP (10/13, Elias, Gecker) reports that firefighting crews have arrived in the past day from as far away as Australia and Canada. Firefighters were able to gain "some ground on a blaze burning in the heart of California's wine country." California emergency operations director Mark Ghilarducci said, "The emergency is not over, and we continue to work at it, but we are seeing some great progress."

The Los Angeles Times (10/13, Nelson, Kohli, John, Smith, Agarwal) reports, "The Redwood fire in Mendocino County has burned 34,000 acres and was 10% contained as of Friday.” That fire along with the 2,500-acre Sulphur fire have prompted the evacuation of 8,000 people. Meanwhile, the Tubbs fire has burned 34,770 acres and as of Friday “was 25% contained, a jump from the 10% containment gained Thursday night.”

Northern California Fires Have Destroyed At Least 5,700 Buildings. The New York Times (10/14, Watkins) reports state officials “announced Friday that the wildfires across Northern California have destroyed at least 5,700 buildings.” An analysis by The New York Times “using satellite images in combination with its own ground surveys found that one fire in particular incinerated at least 5,100 structures, which would make it the most destructive wildfire in the state’s history.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Ailworth, Lazo, Lovett, Elinson) reports that families and friends are searching frantically to find loved ones amid the devastation in California. Families are showing up at evacuation centers and posting desperate notes on Facebook. The Journal adds that more than 1,300 missing persons reports have been filed already in Sonoma County alone.

See It, Say It: Climate Change. The Washington Post (10/14) editorializes the natural disaster that started in California last Sunday has been “unprecedented, and so the question that must be confronted is what caused the deadliest week of wildfires in the state’s history.” Gov. Jerry Brown (D) “pointed the finger at climate change. ‘With a warming climate, dry weather and reducing moisture, these kinds of catastrophes have happened and will continue to happen and we have to be ready to mitigate, and it’s going to cost a lot of money,’ he said last week.” The Post concedes no single fire can be specifically linked to climate change, “but scientists say there is a clear connection between global warming and the increase in recent years in the severity and frequency of wildfires in the West.”

Trump’s Love Affair With Coal.

In a piece titled “Trump’s Love Affair With Coal,” Politico Magazine (10/15, Grunwald) reports that “as the Trump administration has battled internally and seesawed publicly over issues like trade, health care, infrastructure and even immigration, there’s no issue where it’s been more consistent and emphatic than its support for coal.” Coal miners showed up “at his raucous campaign rallies, and sure enough, he’s been a relentless advocate for this small and beleaguered industry.” The Los Angeles Times (10/15, Halper) reports that despite the attempts of the Trump Administration to end what it calls the “war on coal,” coal communities have yet to see significant benefit.

Trump Says He Ended The ‘War’ On Coal Companies. But It’s Too Late To Save Them. In a piece for the Washington Post (10/13, Federman), Adam Federman, reporting fellow with the Investigative Fund at the Nation Institute, wrote that while opponents and energy executives depicted the Obama administration’s “three-year moratorium on federal coal leasing” as a “witch hunt” and “a politically motivated sham,” President Trump “promised to save the coal industry from oppressive regulations and slumping sales.” In a March speech at EPA headquarters, Trump announced that he was lifting the moratorium along with other measures. But, Federman says, the move actually exposed coal’s “weaknesses – and revealed a trend that coal companies and the Trump administration have not acknowledged publicly: The companies are scaling back, in some cases shedding workers and passing on the opportunities the federal government now wants to give them.” While coal companies have outwardly “embraced Trump’s aggressive rollbacks,” in private, coal executives are “deeply skeptical about the administration’s ability to alter market conditions.”

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by Bloomberg News (10/13, Frisch) and the Huffington Post (10/13, Marshall).

Drilling In The Arctic Wildlife Refuge: How The G.O.P. Could Finally Break The Impasse.

The New York Times (10/13, Fountain) reports that the Trump Administration and congressional Republicans “in recent weeks have renewed the fight over opening part” of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration. The battle over the refuge, “which pits Republicans in Washington and much of the political and business establishment in Alaska against congressional Democrats and environmental and conservation groups, has been going on for decades.” Now, “with Republicans holding both houses of Congress and the presidency, the prospects for opening the refuge, at least to studies of its oil and gas potential, are better than they have been in years.” The article adds that “a budget resolution introduced late last month, and supported by Senator Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, may help pave the way.”

Interior Looks At Behind-The-Scenes Land Swap To Allow Road Through Wilderness Refuge.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (10/15, Eilperin) reports, "The Interior Department is preparing to set aside a decades-old ban on development in federally protected wilderness areas by pursuing a controversial proposal to build a nearly 12-mile road through" Alaska's Izembek National Wildlife Refuge by turning federal land over to a tribal corporation. Opponents say that "allowing the project would violate the founding principle of federal wilderness...and set a precedent that could endanger other refuges." The Post says that "multiple federal analyses have suggested alternatives to a new road...as the preferred policy option." Meanwhile, an Interior study "concluded that the project should not be pursued because many species would be harmed." However, documents obtained by the Defenders of Wildlife under the Freedom of Information Act "make clear that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has elevated the issue to one of the agency's top priorities, and his appointees have taken deliberate steps to conceal the plan from the public."

Interior Department May Expand Recreational Shooting On Federal Lands.

The Havasupai \(AZ\) News-Herald (10/14, Hyde) reports that "target shooting, hunting and fishing could be expanded on public lands under a federal proposal drawing attention in Arizona." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "directed land managers to come up with a plan to expand recreational shooting in areas like Ironwood Forest National Monument in Tucson." Proponents "say it could mean more hunting and fishing opportunities on federal land." However, critics "think it risks people's safety and could trash some of nature's most pristine areas." Additional coverage was provided by KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (10/14, Hyde).

Fight Over National Monuments Intensifies.

The Hill (10/15, Henry) reports that House Republicans are moving forward with a bill to reform the Antiquities Act, "raising the stakes in their ongoing effort to curtail the president's ability to set aside wide swaths of federal land as national monuments and protect them from future development." Rep. Rob Bishop's bill "would give presidents the power to declare monuments of up to 640 acres without restriction." However, "as potential designations get bigger, they would have to meet other conditions, including environmental reviews and approval by state and local officials who are currently not involved in the monument designation process." According to the article, "changing the Antiquities Act, rather than rescinding previously monuments, is a higher priority for the interest groups who oppose monument-making power."

Colorado County Hopeful Changes On Grouse Will Help Industry.

The AP (10/15) reports that "officials in northwest Colorado say they hope changes to federal plans for dealing with an imperiled bird species will allow more energy development in their part of the state." The Interior Department is "reconsidering restrictions on mining, oil and gas drilling, grazing and other activities imposed by the Obama administration to protect greater sage grouse."

Additional coverage was provided by the Craig \(CO\) Daily Press (10/13, Blair) and the Aspen \(CO\) Times (10/15, Blair).

Kelly Tries To Get Empty Administration Jobs Filled Fast.

Politico (10/15, Cook) reports White House Chief of Staff Kelly is "reversing efforts under his predecessor Reince Priebus to run most" political appointments through the West Wing, giving Cabinet secretaries more autonomy in their selections. According to 10 interviews with White House officials and advisers close to the Administration, Kelly is seeking "to do a better job of finding candidates for the hundreds of jobs" still vacant. Part of the issue with the vacancies is the Administration requirement that candidates be "loyal to the administration and not have spoken harshly about the president during the campaign," criteria that "created a particular problem" on national security, as scores of Republican experts signed a letter criticizing Trump prior to the election. The issue was exacerbated by "many experienced Republicans" who would ordinarily seek middle- and top-level posts choosing "to sit out the Trump administration in January."

Additional Coverage: Ryan Zinke Has Flag Lowered Above Interior Dept. When He Leaves The Building: Report.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has a flag hoisted above his agency whenever he's in the building for work" was provided by the Washington Times (10/13, Persons), USA Today (10/13), TIME (10/13, Waxman), Newsweek (10/13, Lanktree), CNN International (10/13), the National Review (10/16, Nordlinger), MSNBC (10/13, Benen), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/13), the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (10/13), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (10/13, Devlin), the Boston Globe (10/13, Finucane, Meyers), the St. Louis Post-Dispatch (10/13), the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (10/15, Rubel), the Daily Mail (10/13, Earle), KGW-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (10/13), and WUSA-TV Washington Washington (10/13).

What's Up With Ryan Zinke?

In an analysis for CNN (10/13, Krieg), Gregory Krieg points out that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has been appearing in the headlines since arriving to work for his first day on horseback. Zinke has also grabbed attention for his review of recently designated national monuments and the move "to expand hunting and fishing access on public lands."

Ryan Zinke Wants To Break Many Conservation Efforts.

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/14, Rodewald, Fitzpatrick), Amanda Rodewald and John Fitzpatrick, both faculty fellows at Cornell University's Atkinson Center for a Sustainable Future, write that "despite praising and promoting public-private partnerships as cost-effective approaches to managing federal lands," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is proposing "to overhaul agreements built upon decades of negotiations among ranchers, conservationists, sportsmen, industries, and agencies" with its plan "to revise 98 land-use management plans developed to conserve the Greater Sage-Grouse across 10 Western States." They write that "an unprecedented and bipartisan conservation partnership crafted a package of plans to save the Greater Sage-Grouse," the "package of plans, finalized in 2015, was the crux of the Interior Department's decision not to list Greater Sage-Grouse." They warn that "if the conservation plans are revoked and aggressive development resumed, Greater Sage-Grouse populations are forecast to plummet by up to one-third by 2050, again raising the probability of Endangered Species listing."

In Our Opinion: We Support Coalition Efforts In Western Lands Debate.

In an editorial, the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/13) supports the a new coalition that are seeking to promote a "shared vision" for Western lands. Among the signatories to a recent letter sent to members of Congress, are "Utah, Montana and Nevada ranchers, as well as Californian conservationists." The paper is hopeful "that an effort that has so many groups agreeing on principles will translate to agreement on balanced policies that can lead to conservation and the wise use and development of lands in the West."

Our View: Be Better Prepared For New Era Of Uranium Mining.

Expecting that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will "turn his attention to reopening parts of the Grand Canyon watershed to uranium mining," the Arizona Daily Sun (10/15) advises opponents "to pick their spots and negotiate for highly restricted and monitored mine sites in exchange for areas of permanent withdrawal." It urges Grand Canyon advocates "to get up to speed on modern breccia pipe mining and come up with counter-proposals that contain the risks in exchange for protecting the most vulnerable seeps and springs."

Land-water Fund Supports Our Way Of Life And Economy.

In an op-ed for the Yakima \(WA\) Herald-Republic (10/15, Joyce), Steve Joyce, managing partner of Red's Fly Shop in the Yakima River Canyon, urges support for the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which is "at risk once again and will expire in one year unless Congress reauthorizes it." Joyce hopes Congress will "agree that LWCF is a great deal for all of us and permanently reauthorize this program to the benefit of all Americans."

Moffat County Commissioner Don Cook told the Craig Press that the issue impacts about 40 percent of the county's land area.

He says there was little local input when the restrictions were adopted under Obama.knnjmbghbn

Sage grouse once ranged widely across the West but have seen their habitat shrink dramatically as the region develops.

Luke Schafer with Conservation Colorado says the changes announced by Interior could throw out years of work on sage grouse.

Copyright 2017 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribe Demands Nix Of Slawson Drilling Go-Ahead.

Law360 (10/13, Phillis) reports that “the Mandan, Hidatsa & Arikara Nation on Thursday told a North Dakota federal court that drilling company Slawson Exploration Co. Inc. appealed an administrative order prematurely, arguing that the court should throw the case out so that the U.S. Department of the Interior’s process can continue unimpeded.” The MHA Nation argued “that because the administrative process had not fully played out and no final agency action had occurred, the federal courts did not have jurisdiction when it issued a temporary restraining order.”

Flandreau Tribal Police Officer Fired After Reporting High-speed Chase To Feds.

The Sioux Falls \(SD\) Argus Leader (10/13, Ellis) reports that “a former police officer for the Flandreau Tribal Police Department says he was fired after filing a complaint with the Bureau of Indian Affairs over the department’s role in a high-speed chase last summer.” According to the article, “Nick Cottier, a BIA certified tribal police officer, says he was removed after he notified BIA’s district office in Aberdeen about the chase, which left three young adults with life threatening injuries and questions about why the chase took place.” The article notes that “the pursuit violated BIA and department pursuit policies on several levels, according to a copy obtained by Argus Leader Media.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Wyoming Attorney Karen Budd-Falen May Be Next BLM Leader.

The Fence Post (10/13, Spencer) reports that Wyoming attorney Karen Budd-Falen could be the next leader of the Bureau of Land Management. Budd-Falen has “worked extensively for private property owners, agricultural operations and local governments.” The article notes that “among her most well-known clients is the Bundy family who made headlines after a 2014 standoff between federal agents and supporters of rancher Cliven Bundy.”

Gosar Helping La Paz County With 8,000 Acre Solar Farm.

The Kingman \(AZ\) Daily Miner (10/15) reports that “a bipartisan bill to foster economic development and job creation in rural Arizona has moved forward to a committee hearing, Rep. Paul Gosar said in a statement Wednesday.” The bill, H.R. 2620, “will allow La Paz County to buy 8,000 acres from the Bureau of Land Management at fair market value to use for solar energy development.” Gosar said, “Solar energy generation in La Paz County will provide clean renewable power for the southwestern United States as well as create high-paying jobs and economic development for this rural corner of Arizona.”

State Recoups Almost $600,000 From Suit Involving Interior River.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (10/13, Bross) reports that the state of Alaska has “re-couped nearly $600,000 in legal fees from a 2012 lawsuit with the Bureau of Land Management over an Eastern Interior river.” According to U.S. District Court documents, Alaska “sought a million dollars in fees after prevailing in a suit to gain title to the Mosquito Fork of the Forty Mile River.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Bella Vista Water District To Reduce Energy Costs With Solar Energy Project.

WaterWorld (10/13) reports that “the Bureau of Reclamation awarded Bella Vista Water District a WaterSMART Water and Energy Efficiency Grant to install two solar photovoltaic power generation facilities near the cities of Bella Vista and Redding.” The BOR “provided BVWD a grant for $999,938 out of a total project cost of $2,571,782.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Cleanup Under Way After Large Oil Spill Off Louisiana Coast.

The Wall Street Journal (10/15, Molinski, Sider) reports LLOG Exploration Co said 9,350 barrels of oil that spilled into the Gulf of Mexico near Louisiana appeared to be contained. The BSEE said the spill, which stemmed from a fractured offshore pipeline, is not expected to impact the shoreline, and there are no reports of injuries. The agency is still investigating the cause of the fracture. The Coast Guard discovered three sheens of oil on the surface Saturday morning during an observation flight. The Wall Street Journal (10/14, Molinski, Sider) reported LLOG shut in all wells that could have been contributing to the spill on Thursday, after workers noticed discrepancies between well and platform data. The company does not think the hurricane caused the fracture in the pipeline, because tests conducted after the storm showed it was in good condition. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/14, Schleifstein) reported the BSEE said, "LLOG reported that through the use of a remotely-operated vehicle, a fracture was observed in a jumper pipe leading from Mississippi Canyon Block 209, Well No. 1 to a manifold located on the seafloor. ... As a result of shutting in the well, the flow through the fracture in the pipe has ceased." The agency went on to say, "A sheen was observed and reported through the National Response Center. ... Monitoring of the residual sheen continues. No shoreline impacts have been reported. There are no reports of personnel injuries." LLOG also "reported that two skimming vessels sourced from Clean Gulf Associates and Marine Spill Response Corporation are on location and are prepared to respond." The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (10/14) reported the Coast Guard said, "Initial trajectory models calculated by the responsible party and NOAA indicate that any surface oil is expected to move in a southwesterly direction and is not expected to impact the shoreline."

The AP (10/14) and The Hill (10/14, Manchester) also provided coverage.

Gulf Oilfield Returns To Normal After Hurricane Nate.

The Houma \(LA\) Courier (10/14) reported that as of Saturday, the BSEE said that all but 1.4 percent of the Gulf of Mexico's 737 platforms had returned to normal operations. Workers returned to all of the 20 rigs working in the Gulf. Around 1 percent of production remained shut in

Fish And Wildlife Service

It's Lizard Vs. Oil Magnate In The Latest Fight Over Fracking In Texas.

The Wall Street Journal (10/13, Matthews) reports on the looming battle between frackers in the Permian Basin of Texas and the rare dunes sagebrush lizard, which environmentalists are seeking to classify as an endangered species.

When Nature Calls: Florida Wildlife Refuge Makes Restrooms Artsy, Educational.

USA Today (10/13, Ruane) reports that the J.N. "Ding" Darling National Wildlife Refuge has "rolled out its newest exhibit: learning lavatories." Refuge Manager Paul Tritaik joked, "We wanted to transform a necessary nature call into an innovative nature enthrall." The article notes that "a $125,000 grant from the West Coast Inland Navigation District and contributions from private donors paid for the restroom renovations."

US Agency's Bid To Allow Trumpeter Swan Hunting Draws Fire.

The AP (10/14, Karnowski) reports that "a federal plan to let hunters shoot trumpeter swans has drawn fire from some of the people who toiled to bring the majestic white birds back from the brink of extinction." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "working on a plan that would let hunters shoot them in several states that allow the hunting of tundra swans, a more numerous species." According to the article, "tundra swans look almost identical to trumpeter swans, especially at a distance, and a tundra swan hunter who mistakenly shoots a trumpeter is subject to a fine." The article says that "the risk is expected to grow as trumpeter swans spread from states that have invested heavily in restoration efforts, such as Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan in the Mississippi Flyway."

Colorful North Georgia Fish Could Get Federal Protection.

The AP (10/15) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is considering protecting the trispot darter as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. Jeff Powell, an assistant field supervisor at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, "It is a beautiful little fish, and it has a unique life history and it's really interesting. If we can keep this species alive in the Conasauga River, the way we're going to do that is protecting water quality, and that benefits everybody."

Century Old Buildings In Northeast Wisconsin To Be Restored.

The AP (10/15) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “working to restore buildings on some islands in northeast Wisconsin that date back more than a century.” According to the article, “renovations to the 325-acre Plum Island and the 4-acre Pilot Island could total almost $7 million.” The FWS and the Friends of Plum and Pilot Island nonprofit are “covering the costs of the renovations.”

Elephant Trophy Ban Faces Tough DC Circuit Bench.

Law360 (10/13, Hoover) reports that “a skeptical D.C. Circuit panel on Friday suggested that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service bypassed its required rule-making process when it banned imports of sport-hunted African elephant trophies from Zimbabwe.” The FWS “faced pushback from the three-judge panel while fending off a challenge from the Safari Club and the National Rifle Association to its decision to ban the imports under the Endangered Species Act.”

Federal Wildlife Agency Says Wolf Was Shot, Offers Reward.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/13, Mortenson) reports that “state and federal wildlife officials are investigating the death of a second wolf discovered in the Fremont-Wenema National Forest of Southern Oregon in the past year.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of the person responsible for shooting a gray wolf designated OR-33 by Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.”

OR-7's Daughter Got Some New Bling.

The Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (10/13, Freeman) reports that “state and federal wildlife managers will again be able to track gray wolf OR-7's Rogue Pack now that one of his presumed offspring is sporting a new GPS collar.” In a “textbook” capture, “biologists on the morning of Oct. 3 were able to trap, tranquilize and collar the newly named OR-54 in Klamath County's Wood River Valley, the eastern portion of the pack's normal range, according to the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.” According to John Stephenson, a wildlife biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Bend, “the roughly 80-pound female is about 1½ years old and is likely from OR-7's 2016 litter.”

National Park Service

Nation's Last Homesteader's 1945 Allis Chalmers To Be Restored.

The Kearney \(NE\) Hub (10/14, Hendee) reports that a 1945 Allis Chalmers Model C tractor will join “the collections of Americana preserved by the National Park Service across the nation when it goes on permanent display at Homestead National Monument of America near Beatrice next month.” Currently, “the machine – used in Alaska by the last person to receive free land under the federal Homestead Act of 1862 – is undergoing preservation treatment by members of the Tractor Restoration Club at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.” According to the article, “the public unveiling of the 1945 Allis Chalmers tractor used by America's last homesteader is scheduled for 2 p.m., Nov. 20, at Homestead National Monument of America near Beatrice.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (10/14, Hendee).

New Mural Comes To Tenleytown, Honoring The Neighborhood's History.

WUSA-TV Washington (10/14, Thande) reports that “a new mural has popped-up in Tenleytown, celebrating the neighborhood's history.” The mural was “unveiled with a ribbon cutting and dedication ceremony Saturday morning.” The article notes that “Mayor Muriel Bowser attended alongside Councilmember Mary Cheh and National Park Service Superintendent Julia Washburn.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump Botches Reference To 'President' Of Virgin Islands A Day After Rick Perry Called Puerto Rico A 'Country'.

The Washington Post (10/13, Blake) reports President Trump, at the Values Voters Summit on Friday, mistakenly said he met with the “president” of the US Virgin Islands. The Post explains that “the Virgin Islands don't have a president; they have a governor, Kenneth Mapp, with whom Trump met 10 days ago. In fact, their president is none other than Trump himself, since they are Americans." According to the Post, "Trump's flub comes a day after [Energy Secretary] Rick Perry made a similar error on Puerto Rico."

Black Lawmakers Pushing For More Aid, Attention To Virgin Islands. USA Today (10/13, Berry) reports the Congressional Black Caucus has asked House Speaker Ryan to approve an official congressional trip to the US Virgin Islands "to assess the damage there and draw attention to the plight of residents still struggling in the wake of two major hurricanes." Caucus Chairman Rep. Cedric Richmond said Thursday, "We think it's important for people not only who are on the ground to see the cavalry coming, but it's important for us to go down and independently assess the needs of the people." Del. Stacey Plaskett, the representative from the US Virgin Islands, "said the region will need much more than the $5 billion" requested by the territory's governor.

U.S. Diplomacy With North Korea To Continue Until 'First Bomb Drops': Tillerson.

Reuters (10/15, Lynch) reports Secretary of State Tillerson told CNN on Sunday that President Trump had instructed him to continue diplomatic efforts with North Korea, saying "those diplomatic efforts will continue until the first bomb drops." Speaking on CNN's State Of The Union, Tillerson "downplayed" Trump's tweets suggesting the Secretary of State was wasting his time trying to negotiate with Pyongyang. Trump "has made it clear to me to continue my diplomatic efforts," Tillerson said. The AP (10/15) reports Tillerson added, "He is not seeking to go to war."

McMaster Defends Trump's North Korea Tweet. Asked on Fox News Sunday (10/15, Rosen) if the President's tweets regarding North Korea were having a positive impact, National Security Advisor McMaster said, "I think with a real danger is in terms of communicating with Kim Jong-un is that he doesn't understand how serious we are about his behavior and behavior of the regime." He added, "The President has been very clear on that and i think that's beneficial to the safety and security of not only the United States, but our great allies in South Korea and Japan."

US Geological Survey

Group Launches Campaign To Rename Colorado's Gore Range.

The AP (10/14, Fixler) reports that "the rugged mountain underbite in Summit and Eagle counties known as the Gore Range," could be renamed. The range is "named for a 19th century Irish aristocrat named Lord St. George Gore," but "for roughly 10,000 years and before formal government removal to a Utah reservation in 1879, the Ute tribe, who called themselves the Nuntzi, resided in the valley they referred to as Naa Ohn Kara." According to the article, "the native Ute spoke of the Rockies as the Shining Mountains, and if a local group gets its way that's what they intend to re-label the local range." Summit's Board of County Commissioners "formally supported the change through a recent resolution, and the campaign is gaining steam." The article says that "the goal is to gain further momentum, hear other pitches for an alternative name — though preference remains giving the Utes a chance to heavily weigh in — and then take it to the USGS's Board of Geographic Names to decide."

Additional Reading.

- Public Explores Turners Falls 'Fish Lab' During Open House. Greenfield \(MA\) Recorder (10/14, Ashline).
- Groundbreaking Report Documents Hundreds Of Human-triggered Earthquakes. Fox News (10/13).
- Yellowstone Supervolcano Isn't About To Erupt: But Here's What Happens When It Does. Newsweek (10/13, Frankel).
- Supervolcano Eruption At Yellowstone: No, You Shouldn't Worry. TIME (10/13, Chan).
- Minnesota To Collar More Than 100 Wild Deer With Tracking Devices To Fine-tune Its Fight Against CWD. Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/14, Kennedy).
- Ruffed Grouse Numbers Lagging For Hunters So Far This Fall In Wisconsin, Minnesota. Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (10/14, Smith).
- U.S. Drillers Idle Rigs In Eagle Ford, Barnett. San Antonio Express-News (10/13, Eaton).

Top National News

Trump Faces Bipartisan Criticism Over ACA Subsidy Move.

Coverage of the Sunday morning talk show discussion of President Trump's decision to halt payments of Affordable Care Act subsidies is mostly negative, with critics from both parties getting more attention than defenders. Analyses also say that the chances for a deal on restoring the payments is slim, which could lead to a government shutdown in December.

NBC Nightly News (10/15, story 4, 2:30, Snow) reported, "The President is under fire from an influential group of doctors, insurance companies, and many in the business community after announcing he would end subsidies to offset the cost for Obamacare for low income Americans. Today, even some leading Republicans said the President's decision will hurt families, including many in the middle class who voted for him."

Reuters (10/15, Morgan) writes that the decision will make it harder for the President "to engage in bipartisan talks with Democrats as Congress edges toward a possible government shutdown." The Washington Post (10/15, Kane) reports that Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Chairman Lamar Alexander and ranking member Sen. Patty Murray "have been in negotiations over ways to stabilize the ACA markets ever since Republicans failed in their bid to repeal" the law, but that Trump's move could complicate matters. The Wall Street Journal (10/15, A1, Armour, Peterson) reports that their plan is expected this week, as is a more conservative version by Sen. Ron Johnson.

Sen. Lindsey Graham said on CBS' Face The Nation (10/15, Dickerson), "I hope that we can get a deal between Sen. Alexander and Patty Murray that will allow us to continue the payments but get reform ... The President is not going to continue to throw good money after bad give $7 billion to insurance companies unless something changes about Obamacare that would justify it."

Sen. Susan Collins said on CNN's State Of The Union (10/15, Tapper) that "what the President is doing is affecting the ability of vulnerable people to receive healthcare right now." On ABC's This Week (10/15), Collins – who cited healthcare as one reason why she decided to stay in the Senate rather than run for Maine governor in 2018 – said that she is "very disappointed in the President's actions of this past week."

The New York Times (10/15, Hulse) reports that while the Trump Administration "found a legal justification for its decision to stop paying as much as $7 billion this year to insurers in exchange for holding down out-of-pocket expenses for millions of Americans," Democrats are calling the move "a blatant attempt to undermine the health care law by roiling the insurance markets and driving up costs for consumers." Sen. Chris Murphy said on Fox News Sunday (10/15, Rosen) that the President is trying to "sabotage" the Affordable Care Act, calling Trump's action "the equivalent of healthcare arson." The Hill (10/15, Hellmann, Rouben) reports that Democrat "say Trump now owns ObamaCare, bearing responsibility for any problems that arise in the system, including higher premiums and insurer exits."

The Washington Examiner (10/15, Leonard) reports that there is "great uncertainty over whether they will be able to strike a deal to keep Obamacare's insurer subsidies flowing now that President Trump will not be funding them" – which could lead to a government shutdown. The Washington Times (10/15, Howell) reports that Democrats "downplayed talk of forcing" a shutdown, but Trump "has shown little interest in a deal that temporarily shores up the 2010 health care law without paving the way for repeal or bolstering other parts of his agenda, leaving little room for a deal." House Minority Leader Pelosi said on ABC's This Week (10/15) that it is up to the Republicans to keep the government open in December. She said, "What he's doing is hurting the American people. This isn't about policy or politics; it's about the American people." The Washington Post (10/15, Kane) reports that Pelosi also cited the ongoing healthcare fight as her reason for remaining her party's leader in the House, despite some caucus dissension.

USA Today (10/15, O'Donnell) reports that Ohio Gov. John Kasich "added to the chorus of critics who are questioning President Trump's decision to stop paying the subsidies that help cover the out of pocket health care costs of millions of Americans." Kasich said on NBC's Meet The Press (10/15, Todd), "What are they doing? Are they just passing these things and people are praising what the President did because of politics? I mean, do they understand the impact that this has on families, on people?"

USA Today (10/15) says in an editorial, "Trump and fellow Republicans spent much of the Obama administration complaining about how the president was legislating by the fiat of executive order, bypassing Congress and undermining existing law. So what has President Trump done with his latest actions on the Affordable Care Act? Legislate by fiat, bypass Congress and undermine existing law." USA Today calls the President's move "a blatant effort to do himself what Congress refused to do this summer: sabotage the health insurance markets that millions of individual Americans have come to rely on to cover themselves and their families.”

But Michael Tanner of the Cato Institute writes in a responding USA Today (10/15) op-ed, “For all the headlines about ‘dismantling Obamacare,’ President Trump’s executive order will likely have less of an impact than its supporters hope or critics fear.” But it “represents a modest step toward giving consumers more choices and expanding millions of Americans’ access to lower cost insurance that better fits their individual needs.”

Trump Takes Victory Lap On Healthcare Executive Order As Criticism Continues.

President Trump took to Twitter on Saturday morning to reiterate his support for the executive orders he signed late this week rolling back provisions of the Affordable Care Act and ceasing the cost-sharing reduction (CSR) payments to health insurers. While media coverage fell heavily from a day earlier, reporting highlighted his new remarks in addition to the growing industry pushback against his recent actions on healthcare.

Bloomberg News (10/13, Sobczyk, Litvan, Tracer) reports that the President “boasted about triggering a decline in health insurance stocks with his decision to end federal subsidies to those companies that help low-income Americans afford their medical coverage.” According to the New York Times (10/14, Fortin), “It is unlike...Trump to cheer when stocks fall, but early on Saturday he did just that.” The Times reports that “on Friday, stocks for Centene, Molina and Anthem, insurers that have participated in state marketplaces under the Affordable Care Act, slumped by more than 3 percent” while “shares in Acadia Healthcare declined by more than 3 percent and in Tenet Healthcare dropped by just over 5 percent.”

The Hill (10/14, Carter) reports Trump tweeted, “Health Insurance stocks, which have gone through the roof during the ObamaCare years, plunged yesterday after I ended their Dems windfall!” He added, “Very proud of my Executive Order which will allow greatly expanded access and far lower costs for HealthCare. Millions of people benefit!”

USA Today (10/14, Schouten) reports the President’s decision “to abruptly cut off federal payments to insurers reverberated through the political world Saturday, putting pressure on Congress to take action to address the high premiums that American consumers could face and jolting the insurance industry.”

The Hill (10/14, Sullivan, Bolton) says “key Republican members of Congress want to restore the ObamaCare payments” and Senate Republicans, including Majority Whip John Cornyn, “made clear before leaving Washington for a weeklong Columbus Day recess that they were not fans of simply letting ObamaCare fall apart.” However, The Hill acknowledges “a spokesman for Cornyn said Friday that his boss had not yet weighed in on Trump’s decision to end the ObamaCare payments, adding that his previous statement did not necessarily reflect his views of this week’s action.” On the CBS Weekend News (10/14, story 2, 2:05, Morgan), Errol Barnett reported that although the President “beamed over cutting Obamacare subsidies,” Sen. Susan Collins “feels differently.” Collins said, “I will say that I’m very concerned about the President’s executive order.”

Meanwhile, the Washington Post (10/14, A1, Goldstein) in a front-page article warns the timing of the President’s decision “could inflict maximal disruption on the Affordable Care Act enrollment season scheduled to begin in two weeks.” The Post reports “the most immediate upheaval is playing out in a set of states where regulators had ignored the risk that the president might carry out his threat and told insurers not to include any cushion in their 2018 rates for ACA health plans,” but even in “states that prepared for a possible cutoff of the ‘cost-sharing reduction’ payments, Trump’s action so close to the fifth sign-up period is sowing widespread confusion among consumers, according to leaders of insurance exchanges and enrollment-assistance organizations around the country.” MNSure CEO Allison O’Toole said, “The timing couldn’t be worse.”

“Nearly 70 percent of those benefiting from the so-called cost-sharing subsidies live in states Trump won last November, according to an analysis by” the AP (10/14, Cassidy, Hoyer), which reports that “the number underscores the political risk for Trump and his party, which could end up owning the blame for increased costs and chaos in the insurance marketplace.”

In a separate article, the AP (10/14, Fram, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports America’s Health Insurance Plans, Blue Cross Blue Shield Association, the American Medical Association, the American Academy of Family Physicians, the US Chamber of Commerce and other “leading” healthcare groups “joined Saturday in a letter to House and Senate leaders imploring Congress to restore the payments.” The Hill (10/14, Manchester) reports that in the letter, the organizations warned, “There will be serious consequences without Congressional action: millions will face higher premiums, fewer choices, and less access to the medical care they need. Let’s work together on solutions that deliver the access, care, and coverage that the American people deserve.”

According to The Hill (10/14, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog, former Vice President Joe Biden on Saturday “defended the Affordable Care Act as something that brought people ‘peace of mind,’ following President Trump’s executive order aimed at taking action on the law after Congress failed to repeal it.” In addition, The Hill (10/14, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports NAACP interim president and CEO Derrick Johnson in a statement “accused President Trump of trying to ‘kill’ the Affordable Care Act on Saturday, saying that his executive order to open up ObamaCare markets to new plans was a ‘new low.’” Johnson said, “President Trump’s executive orders to kill the Affordable Care Act – and make no mistake, this action is intended to do exactly that – are a new low.”

Media Analyses Consider How Trump Working To Undo Obama’s Legacy. In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (10/14, A1, Baker) says that Trump “leaves little doubt about what he thinks of his predecessor’s top domestic and international legacies,” but “as much as he has set his sights on them, Mr. Trump after nearly nine months in office has not actually gotten rid of” the Affordable Care Act or Iran nuclear deal, though “in the past few days, he took partial steps to undercut both initiatives and then left it to Congress to figure out what to do next. Whether either will ultimately survive in some form has become a central suspense of Mr. Trump’s first year in office.” According to the Times, “In the case of health care, Mr. Trump is making a virtue of necessity.” However, the Times acknowledges “a question for the president is whether partial actions will satisfy supporters demanding a full repudiation of the Obama era.”

In an analysis, the Washington Post (10/14, Wagner, Nakamura) states that with Trump “frustrated with his inability to spur Congress to act on much of his agenda,” he “is increasingly using his executive powers in a risky bid to gain leverage with lawmakers on an array of unfulfilled campaign promises.” The Post adds “the strategy has been cheered by many of the president’s core supporters, who view it as Trump making good on his pledge to be a disruptive force in Washington while dismantling the legacy of” former President Obama, “but such political hostage-taking carries considerable risk, particularly given the paralysis that has gripped Congress in the first nine months of the Trump presidency and the real possibility that the ‘deals’ Trump is seeking won’t materialize.” The Post warns “hanging in the balance now are the ability of millions of Americans – including many of Trump’s working-class supporters – to afford health insurance, the fate of hundreds of thousands of “dreamers” who could face deportation, and the international standing of the United States.”

In another analysis, the Washington Post (10/14, Balz) contends the President seems to be “perfecting a style of leadership commensurate with his campaign promise to disrupt business as usual in Washington,” which it labels “governing by cattle prod.” The Post describes the tactic as “born of frustration and dissatisfaction” and concedes it has “overload[ed] the circuits of government – from Capitol Hill to the White House to the Pentagon to the State Department and beyond.” The Post adds that “in the face of his own unhappiness, the president is trying to raise the pain level wherever he can.”

The New York Times (10/14, Bouchard, Boardman) also takes “a look at four of the most significant areas where Mr. Trump has acted to undo his predecessors’ accomplishments, and where those actions now stand.” The Times says that regarding the ACA, the Administration “has made a variety of moves, including two major actions on Thursday, that could fundamentally undermine the viability of the federal health care marketplaces, a central part of the law.” The Times contends that “for now, the law’s provisions remain in effect, but many people will be closely watching whether the Trump administration’s executive actions drive insurance companies to withdraw from the federal health care exchanges, or, if they stay, whether premiums will rise uncontrollably.”

Trump Refuses To Certify Iran Nuclear Deal, Approves Sanctions On IRCG.

President Trump on Friday announced his Administration would not certify Iran is in compliance with the 2015 nuclear deal, but he stopped short of withdrawing the US from the accord. Trump made clear that if Congress and US allies did not impose tougher conditions on Iran, which he accused of violating the spirit of the accord, then he will terminate the US’ participation. While coverage says Trump’s move stopped short of his campaign promise to completely abandon the accord, cable and network outlets made clear that Trump’s move defied recommendations from Cabinet officials as well as the international community.

NBC Nightly News (10/13, story 2, 2:00, Holt) said Trump, in his “fiery speech” threatening to withdraw from the accord, issued “a blistering indictment of Iran’s terrorism, starting with the hostage taking at the US embassy in Tehran in 1979.” Correspondent Andrea Mitchell reported he also ordered “new sanctions against Iran’s hard-line revolutionary guard, instruct[ed] the intelligence agencies to reinvestigate reports Iran is dealing with North Korea, [and] demand[ed] Congress restrict Iran's missile program and make all restrictions on the nuclear program permanent under US law." Reuters (10/13, Holland, Bayoumy) reports the President also "gave the U.S. Congress 60 days to decide whether to reimpose economic sanctions on Tehran that were lifted under the pact."

According to a front-page New York Times (10/13, A1, Landler, Sanger) article, Trump "listed three...triggers – the deployment of an intercontinental ballistic missile by Iran, Iran's refusal to negotiate an extension of the deal's existing constraint on its nuclear activities and evidence that Iran could manufacture a bomb in less than 12 months" that "could prompt the United States to walk away from the deal." The Times says that with his "fire-breathing indictment of the Iranian government's activities around the Middle East," the President "seemed determined to erase any residual hope that the nuclear deal might form the basis of a new relationship between the United States and Iran."

While the Washington Post (10/13, A1, Gearan, Phillip) in a front-page article acknowledges his decision "throws [the deal's] future into doubt," the Post says that his approach "falls well short of Trump's repeated campaign vow to scrap the deal altogether, marking the latest collision between his 'America first' worldview and the realities of global diplomacy and dealmaking" while AFP (10/13, Beatty) similarly says that "behind Trump's hardline rhetoric was a subtle but significant presidential climbdown."

However, when asked Friday whether he may scrap the entire deal, Trump responded, "Well, I may do that. I may do that. The deal is terrible. So what we've done is, through the certification process, we'll have Congress take a look at it and I may very well do that," broadcast CNN's Situation Room (10/13, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer). The Wall Street Journal (10/13, A1, Schwartz) reports in a front-page article that during his speech at the White House, Trump asserted, "It is under continuous review, and our participation can be canceled by me, as president, at any time."

Reuters (10/13, Oliphant) reports Trump continued, "We'll see what happens over the next short period of time and I can do that instantaneously." He added, "I like a two-step process much better" than withdrawing from the accord immediately. The AP (10/13, Lee) reports the President said Congress "may come back with something that's very satisfactory to me, and if they don't, within a very short period of time, I'll terminate the deal." While Trump cannot unilaterally "terminate the accord, which lifted sanctions on Iran in exchange for concessions regarding its nuclear program," the AP concedes that "withdrawing the U.S. would render the deal virtually meaningless."

The Washington Times (10/13, Boyer) reports that in his address, the President "also said he's directing the Treasury Department to sanction Iran's Revolutionary Guard Corps over its support of terrorism in the Middle East, calling it a 'long overdue step.'" Trump stated, "We will not continue down a path whose predictable conclusion is more violence, more terror and the very real threat of Iran's nuclear breakout." He continued, "Iran is not living up to the spirit of the deal."

Breitbart (10/13, Nazarian) reports the President also referred to the ICRG as "the Iranian Supreme Leader's corrupt personal terror force and militia." He called on American allies to join the US "in taking strong actions to curb Iran's continued dangers and destabilizing behavior, including thorough sanctions outside the Iran deal that target the regime's ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and all of its destructive activities; of which there are many." In a release, Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said the Administration made the designation against the ICRG "for providing support to the IRGC-QF, the key Iranian entity enabling Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's relentless campaign of brutal violence against his own people, as well as the lethal activities of Hizballah, Hamas, and other terrorist groups"

Nonetheless, Bloomberg News (10/12, Wadhams) states that the Administration "stopped short of declaring the Revolutionary Guard, which plays a key military and economic role within Iran, a foreign terrorist organization." Politico (10/13, Toosi) similarly says that "in what amounted to a pulled punch, he stopped short of formally branding the notorious military unit a terrorist group." Politico describes the action as an apparent "compromise between Trump's desire to crack down on perceived Islamist threats and the tricky nature of singling out an arm of a foreign government, even a hostile one, for punishment."

Leading CNN's Situation Room (10/13, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), correspondent Jim Acosta reported Trump "turned his campaign rhetoric into action" by granting Congress "a chance to toughen the agreement. If Congress fails to act, he warns, he may scrap the deal." Trump "arrived at his policy after senior leaders in his own Cabinet pleaded with him to stay in the agreement now. The President was still in a defiant mood, insisting Iran had violated the agreement." Trump's decision came a day after Secretary of State Tillerson told reporters, "We don't disagree, we don't dispute that [Iran] is under technical compliance." Acosta added (10/13, 5:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that "there are mixed messages coming from the Administration." Acosta continued that while Trump "said today that he may end up canceling the agreement altogether," Tillerson "told reporters that the US would remain in the deal if Congress does nothing, and it's unclear if Republican lawmakers will be able to find the votes on Iran when they have failed to act on so many other fronts."

Margaret Brennan, in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (10/13, lead story, 2:25, Mason), also called Trump's decision "at odds with his own national security team." She added Tillerson, Defense Secretary Mattis, and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs Joseph Dunford "designed the new strategy as a compromise to keep Mr. Trump from scraping the agreement completely." Reuters (10/13, Ali) reports Mattis "said on Friday he had not yet seen any provocative actions from Iran following...Trump's speech...and added there had been no change in U.S. military posture so far." Mattis told reporters, "Right now, we keep an eye on the potential for more provocations from the Iranians but right now we have not seen that." Mattis added, "With the Iranians destabilizing record from Lebanon to Syria, from Yemen to Afghanistan, of course we watch for this. ... Right now we are not changing our posture."

The Hill (10/13, Mitchell) reports Mattis said, "I give advice to the president. He was elected by the American people and I stand by this Iran strategy as it came out today." A Defense Department spokesman told Reuters (10/13, Stewart) the Pentagon is "assessing the positioning of its forces as well as planning but offered few details." The spokesman explained, "We are identifying new areas where we will work with allies to put pressure on the Iranian regime, neutralize its destabilizing influences, and constrain its aggressive power projection, particularly its support for terrorist groups and militants."

Meanwhile, The Hill (10/13, Bowden) reports Tillerson "said that Trump's decision to declare Iran noncompliant presented a 'real opportunity' for the U.S. and its allies to address more of Iran's actions in the region." Tillerson continued, "I think we have a real opportunity to address all the threats that are posed by Iran." Tillerson added, "I think the plan the president's laid out has been quite clear in terms of articulating those threats; that really, it's in all of our interests to work together."

Breitbart (10/13, Mason) reports Tillerson and National Security Advisor H.R. McMaster in a conference call on Thursday "laid out the broad strokes of what a White House fact sheet referred to as 'President Donald J. Trump's New Strategy on Iran.'" According to Breitbart, McMaster described the policy change as the result of "months of an inter-agency process." Former White House advisor Dr. Sebastian Gorka last week told Breitbart News, "I can tell you one thing: I was in the Oval the day it was recertified last. It was the president behind the Resolute Desk. It was Steve [Bannon] and myself on the side of the president. It was H.R. McMaster, Rex Tillerson, [Steven] Mnuchin who were saying we have to recertify."

Politico (10/13, Johnson) credits Ambassador Haley with becoming the Administration's "most vocal public proponent of decertification – and Trump's favorite internal voice on Iran – further boosting her standing with the president at a time when she is seen as a potential successor to Tillerson, whose tense relationship with Trump has burst into the open in recent days." Politico states that "in internal debates, where most members of the...cabinet initially opposed decertification, Haley played a similar role: She was 'the most engaged and most vocal' cabinet member who favored decertification, according to a senior White House aide." However, Politico adds "the fingerprints of former U.N. ambassador John Bolton, whose access to Trump was recently limited by chief of staff John Kelly, were also on Trump's Friday address in the form of a warning that Trump, who opted not to push for steps that could undo the nuclear agreement, could still cancel the deal 'at any time.'"

GOP Lawmakers Praise Trump's Stance, Begin Drafting Reforms To Nuclear Deal. Leading Fox News' Special Report (10/13, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Baier), correspondent John Roberts reported lawmakers are already "working on a fix." Roberts said Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Bob Corker along with Sens. Tom Cotton, and Marco Rubio "are proposing the re-imposition of US sanctions if Iran approaches the threshold of developing a nuclear weapon; making those restrictions permanent by removing the sunset provisions; bolstering International Atomic Energy Agency verification powers; and limit Iran's advanced centrifuge program."

However, Reuters (10/13, Zengerle) reports that while Corker and Cotton "offered an outline of legislation they said would 'address flaws' in the accord," Rubio "said he had 'serious doubts' about the Corker-Cotton plan," although he agreed to "reserve judgment until the final measure, but preferred that Trump abandon the deal." The Hill (10/13, Kheel) reports Rubio said,

"President Trump made the right decision to decertify the Obama administration's Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action on Iran (JCPOA). ... He is correct in finding that this deal is not in our national interest."

The Hill (10/13, Oliveira) reports GOP lawmakers "said Trump's move to decertify the deal, known formally as the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) – while stopping short of withdrawing from the accord – signaled the United States's deep issues with the deal." Rep. Tom Garrett, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, told The Hill, "I think the statement that it would send is we're not happy with terms of JCPOA." Rep. Francis Rooney, another member of the committee, added, "Declining to certify might present an opportunity to see if we can get Iran back to table to fix some of the blatant problems and deficiencies that exist in the joint plan of action now." The Daily Caller (10/13, Picket) reports House Speaker Ryan also "praised...Trump Friday for decertifying the nuclear agreement." Ryan said, "I support President Trump's decision to reevaluate this dangerous deal, and the House will work with his administration to counter Iran's range of destabilizing activities."

Meanwhile, The Hill (10/13, Kheel) reports that "top House Republicans said Friday that the chamber would take up bipartisan Iran sanctions legislation unrelated to an Obama-era nuclear deal after President Trump decertified the deal and called on Congress to amend a law providing oversight of the accord." In a statement, House Majority Leader McCarthy, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Ed Royce, Armed Services Chairman Mac Thornberry, and Rep. Liz Cheney said, "We cannot allow such a regime to become a nuclear power. The nuclear deal has significant flaws that must be addressed if that objective is going to be accomplished." They continued, "We are committed to work with the president to address these flaws, hold Iran strictly accountable to its commitments and support efforts to counter all the Iranian threats." However, Reuters (10/13, Zengerle) reports that McCarthy "did not advocate ending the deal."

The Washington Examiner (10/13, Ferrechio) says Senate Majority Leader McConnell "joined other Republicans in praising Trump's announcement," which he touted as "an appropriate response to the consequences of the Obama administration's failed policies." McConnell added, "I am committed to working with the Trump administration to constrain Iran's support for terrorism and proxy militias, impede the threat of ballistic missiles and deny Iran the path to a nuclear weapon." McConnell continued, "Strengthening the criteria attached to a presidential certification is solely within the powers of the American government and based on making the verification of the JCPOA more in keeping with our national interests."

The Hill (10/13, Delk) "Briefing Room" blog reports Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John McCain also "praised President Trump's decision to decertify Iran's compliance with the Obama-era international nuclear accord, saying Tehran has 'literally been getting away with murder.'" McCain asserted, "The goals President Trump presented in his speech today are a welcomed long overdue change."

AFP (10/14, Smialowski) reports that while Corker and Cotton proposed an amendment to the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act (INARA) "that would toughen Iran's compliance requirements and address 'deficiencies' in the deal," diplomats "expressed worry that tweaking INARA could jeopardize the agreement, and warned that the US unilaterally abolishing the "sunset" would make it harder to negotiate with allies that back the existing agreement." The Washington Examiner (10/13, Weaver) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi "called President Trump's Friday threat to withdraw from the Iran nuclear agreement a 'grave mistake' that threatens American security, and argued that the Iranians are in compliance with the 2015 agreement." She added, "The president, I think, is being frivolous with this."

Sen. Ben Cardin, the ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, told CNN's Situation Room (10/13, 6:11 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that while he "opposed the agreement when it was presented, because I thought we could have done a lot better dealing with Iran's non-nuclear issues and dealing with what happens after the time period to make sure Iran does not become a nuclear weapons state, but it's clearly in our national security interest for the United States to comply with the nuclear agreement as long as Iran's complying with it." On those non-nuclear issues, like Iran's human rights violations and support of terrorism, Cardin said the US needs "the international community working with us so that we can get unified sanctions to get Iran to change its behavior." Cardin added that withdrawing from the agreement gives the US "less leverage" on those issues, as it isolates the US internationally. In an interview with USA Today (10/13, Shesgreen), Cardin denounced Trump's decision as "reckless and dangerous." In a statement, Cardin also accused Trump of making a "'political decision' that will make it harder for the U.S. to address other threats posed by Iran by imposing 'self-inflicted international isolation on the United States.'"

CNN (10/13, Barrett, Killough, Walsh) reports online that while he had "opposed the original deal," Senate Minority Leader Schumer in a statement "predicted Congress would not scrap" the deal. He said Mattis and Dunford "both said that it's in our national security interest to keep the JCPOA in place and I agree. ... I believe Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, will heed their recommendation." Rep. Eliot Engel, the ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, "said Iran must never be able to obtain a nuclear weapon but that Trump's approach is wrong."

On CNN's Situation Room (10/13, 5:30 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Rep. Ruben Gallego called Trump's decision "deeply irresponsible." He explained, "While I was sitting on the Armed Services Committee, I actually asked the Secretary of Defense whether or not Iran was in compliance, if he recommended that we stayed within the JCPOA. And the Secretary of Defense, Mattis, said, yes, yes, we should." Gallego posited Trump made the decision not "for any type of foreign security, but really to fulfill the President's ego" by acting on a campaign promise. Second, Gallego said, "the problem is, what does this mean for the rest of our partners around the world?" Lastly, he said, "doing these types of actions does not encourage peaceful end to" the North Korean nuclear threat.

AB Stoddard of Real Clear Politics told Fox News' Special Report (10/13, 6:43 p.m. EDT, Baier) that with Trump's decision, "the onus is completely on Congress. As I said before, I don't have a lot of faith in Congress doing anything in 60 days. There are members, like Sen. Corker and Sen. Cotton, they want to make – they want to place greater restrictions. They are watching the ICBM testing, the things that the Iranian regime is doing that violates the spirit but not per se the letter of the law. That is going to be a really hard sell."

Gulf States, Israel Embrace Trump's Approach, As Iran, EU, Russia, And UN Condemn Efforts To Weaken Nuclear Deal. Chief White House correspondent Jonathan Karl of ABC World News Tonight (10/13, story 3, 2:15, Muir) reported that the President defied "some of America's closest allies, and even some of his own advisers," in declaring "that Iran is not keeping its side of the nuclear agreement negotiated under President Obama." Karl added Tillerson "had been working the phones to reassure European allies who are firmly committed to the Iran deal," and "they're not particularly happy with the President's actions," although "after those conversations, what's notable is that France, Germany, and the UK did not directly criticize the President and said they would work with the United States on curbing Iran's support for terrorism and its missile program." Fox News' Special Report (10/13, 6:05 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Tillerson as stating, "I fully expect that our allies and friends in Europe and in the region are going to be very supportive in efforts undertaken to deal with Iran's threats."

Reuters (10/13, Yaakoubi) reports Saudi Arabia "welcomed the new U.S. policy toward Iran and said lifting sanctions had allowed Iran to develop its ballistic missile program and step up its support for militant groups, state news agency SPA reported on Friday." Reuters (10/13, Hashem) reports the United Arab Emirates also "said on Friday it fully supported the new U.S. policy toward Iran and it renewed its commitment to work with Washington to counter Iran's support of extremism, the state news agency WAM reported."

The AP (10/13) reports Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in a statement "congratulated" Trump and "praised what he called a 'courageous decision.'" Reuters (10/13, Williams) reports Netanyahu in a Facebook video said Trump "boldly confronted Iran's terrorist regime [and] created an opportunity to fix this bad deal, to roll back Iran's aggression and to confront its criminal support of terrorism." Reuters (10/13, Williams) reports Israeli Intelligence Minister Israel Katz "said...Trump's speech...was 'very significant' and could lead to war given threats that preceded it from Tehran."

Meanwhile, senior international correspondent Frederik Pleitgen of CNN's Situation Room (10/13, 6:05 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), reporting from Tehran, said Iran's reaction "has been extremely forceful" and "extremely fast." Pleitgen reported Iranian President Hassan Rouhani responded "with a speech of his own, and absolutely blasted the US President, saying that the US can't unilaterally pull out of that deal, accusing him of lies and deceit." Rouhani cautioned "at some point that President Trump's remarks show that the US was, quote, 'against the Iranian people.'" Pleitgen said "two things that really stood out" about Rouhani's comments. "On the one hand, he said the Iranians would not pull out of the deal unless the US was not in compliance," meaning "if the US does levy new sanctions against Iran." More importantly, Pleitgen said, Rouhani "defended the Revolutionary Guard," meaning "sides that have been at odds with one another really seem to be pulling together in the face of what...Trump said."

The Washington Post (10/13, Cunningham) reports that while Rouhani had recently "sought to curb the Revolutionary Guard's role in a stagnant economy as part of a bid to woo further foreign investment," he now "said...Iran is united in the face of foreign aggression." Rouhani asserted the Administration has “made us more united than ever. ... You can try to separate the government and the people, but you cannot sow discord.”

The AP (10/13, Karimi) reports Rouhani in his televised address also “said Friday his country ‘will continue to stick to’ the nuclear deal, calling it ‘much stronger’ than U.S. President Donald Trump thinks.” He added, “The U.S. is more lonely than ever about the deal.” The Wall Street Journal (10/13, Fitch, Eqbali, Iran) reports Rouhani said, “The Iranian people will not bend down before a dictator. It has never surrendered and will never.” He continued that “no paragraph or article or note will be added” to the deal to placate Trump. USA Today (10/13, Stanglin) reports he asserted, “No president can revoke an international document backed by the U.N. on his own.”

However, Reuters (10/13, Hafezi) reports that “Rouhani said Tehran might walk away if the continuing agreement does not serve the country’s national interests” and “said Tehran will double its efforts to expand the country’s defense capabilities, including the country’s ballistic missile program despite the U.S. pressure to suspend it.” Elizabeth Palmer of the CBS Evening News (10/13, story 2, 1:50, Mason) reported Rouhani “hinted that Iran may escalate its conventional weapons program, possibly its ballistic missile development. For millions of Iranians, especially the young who counted on improved relations with the US and the rest of the world to bring investment, jobs, and reform, this is a black day. They fear hard liners will now gain ground, arguing the US can’t be trusted.”

The Washington Times (10/13, Muñoz) reports Iranian cleric Ayatollah Mohammad Ali Movahedi Kermani also “lashed out at...Trump’s decision to decertify the nuclear deal with the country Friday, saying Washington’s actions ‘revealed the true image of America across the world.’” In a speech, Kermani described Trump’s action as “ridiculous” and “said the move was just another example of U.S.-led efforts to bring Tehran under the heel of the West.” Reuters (10/13, Hafezi) cites the Tasnim news agency in reporting Esmail Ghaani, the deputy commander of the IRGC Quds force, said, “We are not a war-mongering country. But any military action against Iran will be regretted.” Ghaani continued, “Trump’s threats against Iran will damage America. ... We have buried many...like Trump and know how to fight against America.” Reuters (10/13, Solovyov) additionally cites the TASS news agency in reporting Iranian parliament speaker Ali Larijani warned that if the US withdraws from the deal, the agreement would collapse and “said that Washington’s withdrawal from the nuclear deal could lead to global chaos.”

In another article, Reuters (10/13, Mohammed, Strobel) reports “key U.S. allies, including Britain, France and Germany who, along with Russia and China, negotiated the deal with Iran alongside the European Union,” also “defended the 2015 nuclear agreement with Tehran and said they would stick by it, after...Trump threatened to terminate the agreement.” The New York Times (10/13, Castle, Erdbrink) says “the reaction was far from panicked” and while “they avoided direct criticism of Mr. Trump, Prime Minister Theresa May of Britain, Chancellor Angela Merkel of Germany and President Emmanuel Macron of France said in a rare joint statement that they ‘stand committed’ to the 2015 nuclear deal and that preserving it was ‘in our shared national security interest.’” Reuters (10/13, Melander, Irish) reports Macron also “assured...Rouhani on Friday of France’s commitment to the 2015 Iranian nuclear deal, Macron’s office said.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/13, Norman) reports EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini additionally told reporters, “The president of the United States has many powers, not this one.” She added, “The agreement is working, has been implemented, continues to be implemented. I would expect all sides to stick to it.” The Washington Post (10/13, Birnbaum, Witte) reports also Mogherini ‘described the deal as “robust’ and said Iran is upholding its end of the bargain, with no recorded violations.” She continued, “The deal has prevented and continues to prevent and will continue to prevent Iran from developing a nuclear weapon.”

In addition, Reuters (10/13, Teterevleva) reports the Russian Foreign Ministry issued a statement Friday that said Trump’s announcement “once again underlines the inadmissibility of using aggressive and threatening rhetoric in international relations.” Reuters (10/13, Lowe) cites the RIA news agency in reporting that Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov “said...it was ‘extremely troubling’ that...Trump was raising questions that had been settled when an international deal on Iran’s nuclear program was signed.” Reuters (10/13, Kolodyazhny) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov also “told his Iranian counterpart Mohammad Javad Zarif that Russia remains fully committed to the Iran nuclear deal, Russia’s foreign ministry said in a statement.”

Meanwhile, the AP (10/13) reports a spokesman for UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres said Guterres “‘strongly hopes’ the Iran nuclear deal will remain in place.” Reuters (10/13, Nasralla) reports Yukiya Amano, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, “reiterated on Friday that Iran was under the world’s ‘most robust nuclear verification regime’” and asserted, “The nuclear-related commitments undertaken by Iran under the JCPOA are being implemented.”

Former US Officials Criticize Trump’s Position On Iran Deal. The Hill (10/13, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports former Vice President Joe Biden in a Facebook post on Friday “said President Trump’s decision to decertify Iran’s compliance with an international nuclear deal would ‘isolate’ the U.S.” He warned, “This decision will cost us leverage. It will weaken our unity with our allies. It will damage our credibility.”

Former CIA Director and Defense Secretary Leon Panetta, on CNN’s Situation Room (10/13, 6:25 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), similarly said he worries Trump’s action is “going to damage the United States’ position in the world. It’s going to weaken our world leadership at a very dangerous time.” Panetta continued, “It raises questions about whether we will stick to our word, whether we’re credible, and it really raises questions about our going it alone in the world and not working with our allies and working with others to try to make sure that we try to get Iran to address these other concerns.” He said the move also “creates a very dangerous example of a President who is anxious to blow up agreements but doesn’t quite have a strategy as to where we’re going once he does that.”

The Hill (10/13, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog reports former Secretary of State John Kerry in a statement also “slammed” Trump. Kerry said, “I strongly hope that the other six signatories will prove to the world what responsible behavior is, and adhere to this agreement – no matter what false accusations and contrived provocations are put forward by President Trump.” He continued, “Our allies and our Congress must not act as the only adults left in the room with the power to protect our national interests. I served in the Senate for nearly 28-plus years. I can’t imagine a more important moment than this one where cooler, wiser voices have had a bigger responsibility to put a policy back on track.”

In a New York Times (10/13, Blinken) op-ed, Antony Blinken, the former United States Deputy Secretary of State and Deputy National Security Advisor to former President Obama, asserts “Trump waxed disingenuous about the deal – weaving together misstatements, exaggerations and distortions – to trigger the one totally subjective standard for decertification in the 90-day review law: an assertion that the nuclear steps Iran is actually taking to implement the J.C.P.O.A. are insufficient to warrant the suspension of sanctions.” He calls on Congress to “resist the temptation – and the political pressure – to unilaterally renegotiate the Iran deal and therefore kill it.” Blinken concludes lawmakers should instead “usefully lay out what Mr. Trump’s speech did not: an actual comprehensive strategy to contend with Iran’s non-nuclear behavior, including diplomatic efforts to end the conflicts in Yemen, Syria and Iraq that Iran exploits; stronger security cooperation with the Gulf States and Israel; better coordination with America’s allies; and targeted sanctions on Iran that do not violate the nuclear accord.”

CNN’s Situation Room’s (10/13, 5:38 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Jim Sciutto reported David Axelrod, adviser to former President Obama, suggested that “changing the terms would be viewed by the Iranians as bad faith,” and “essentially breaking the contract.” According to Axelrod, Trump “doesn’t seem to feel there are consequences to this, but there are, not just in terms of the Iranians, but our international partners.”

Writing in Politico Magazine (10/13, Shapiro), Daniel Shapiro, a distinguished visiting fellow at the Institute for National Security Studies in Tel Aviv who previously served as US ambassador to Israel and was a senior director for the Middle East and North Africa at the National Security Council during the Obama Administration, reflects on the drafting of the deal and outlines what he believes is “that’s the least risky, best managed potential outcome of Trump’s reckless decertification decision.” McClatchy (10/13, Ordoñez, Goldstein) reports other former US diplomats and their counterparts abroad are also “shaking its head at Trump’s actions and wondering how long allies and adversaries will continue to trust the United States.”

International Companies Concerned By Trump’s Iran Stance. The Wall Street Journal (10/13, Faucon, Kent) reports that Tillerson on Friday said American companies approved to do business with Iran are not affected by Trump’s demands on the nuclear deal, but the executives of major companies now have to decide whether they can tolerate the uncertainty of possible future sanctions and so will likely soon have to make a choice whether to remain in the country.

WSJournal Lauds Trump As WPost, Columnists Criticize Action On Iran Deal. The Wall Street Journal (10/13) editorializes that President Trump’s decision not to certify the Iran nuclear deal is a positive strategic move away from his predecessor’s failure to stand up to Iran’s aggression in the Middle East, even if his policy shift does not take tangible action on the accord.

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/13) condemns the President for his “act of political vanity and geopolitical folly” that makes “one of the most serious national security challenges facing the United States, that of Iran, considerably worse.” While the Post acknowledges “the nuclear accord is flawed" and says the Administration "is justified in imposing sanctions on Iran's Revolutionary Guard Corps," Trump "appears to have no clear plan to address Iran's military entrenchment in Syria, which is threatening to touch off a new conflict with Israel." The Post concludes "Rather than tackling those urgent challenges, Mr. Trump prefers to renounce the legacy of his political nemesis Barack Obama and thereby reopen the one front where Tehran is currently contained. North Korea will take note: The United States cannot be trusted to stick to any nuclear accord."

In his New York Times (10/13, Stephens) column, Bret Stephens asserts "Donald Trump has taken a hostage" in the form of the deal because his decision not to certify the deal is "a psychological step, a brash signal that Trump is prepared to see the deal fail and accept the consequences, including war, if he can't negotiate a better one."

In her Washington Post (10/13, Rubin) column, Jennifer Rubin says the President's announcement "set off a series of predictable and negative consequences." She adds, "I strongly disagree with the President's reckless, political decision and his subsequent threat to Congress. At a moment when the United States and its allies face a nuclear crisis with North Korea, the President has manufactured a new crisis that will isolate us from our allies and partners, compromising our ability to employ a diplomatic surge on the Korean Peninsula."

In his Washington Post (10/13, Waldman) column, Paul Waldman contends "it would be edifying to hear Trump or some of his aides and allies explain exactly how this scenario is supposed to play out and where it's supposed to end up. But if they tried to do that, it would become obvious how little they've thought it through." He asserts "Presidents don't need to be policy geniuses, but at the very least they need a sense of how cause leads to effect and a vision of what they're trying to accomplish." However, Waldman concludes "Trump has neither, which means he's either being pushed around by people who have figured out how to manipulate him for their own ideological ends, or he's flopping about aimlessly with no principles to guide him except if Obama did it, I should do the opposite. Either way, it's not very encouraging."

In his Washington Post (10/13, Ignatius) column, David Ignatius warns "Trump's speech tossed a verbal grenade into a turbulent Middle East," which while it "may have been the goal of a president who styles himself as 'the great disrupter'" also "fuels regional feuds that Trump can't control and provokes disputes with both allies and adversaries that may frustrate America's interest in curbing Iran's bad behavior." According to Ignatius, "facing so many flash points in trying to contain Iran, Trump has chosen to put the nuclear issue center stage, once again." He adds that "rather than focusing on Iranian behavior, Congress and foreign allies will instead be preoccupied anew with Trump's threatening statements about the future of the nuclear agreement. It will be about Trump, more than Iran. But maybe that's the way he wants it."

North Korea Hints At Possible Retaliation Over Joint US-South Korea Exercises.

The New York Times (10/13, Sang-Hun) reports that "amid heightened tensions over North Korea's advancing nuclear missile program," a 10-day joint US-South Korea naval exercise will begin Monday "in waters east and west of South Korea." Both the US and South Korea maintain the drills are defensive in nature, but it is "unclear whether North Korea will lash out with a weapons test during the exercise, as it often has in the past." The official Korean Central News Agency on Friday quoted North Korean researcher Kim Kwang-hak as stating, "We have already warned several times that we will take counteractions for self-defense, including a salvo of missiles into waters near the U.S. territory of Guam." He continued, "The U.S. military action hardens our determination that the U.S. should be tamed with fire and lets us take our hand closer to the 'trigger' for taking the toughest countermeasure."

China Reports Significant Drop In Imports From North Korea. The Washington Post (10/13, Denyer) reports Huang Songping, a spokesman for China's General Administration of Customs, announced Friday "that China's imports from North Korea fell 37.9 percent in September, the seventh successive monthly decline," and that its "exports North Korea dropped a more modest 6.7 percent in September." Noting "China is North Korea's economic lifeline, and Beijing's role in the sanctions effort is critical," the Post says that "there is reason to believe that there has been a recent slowdown in trade, experts say." Still, "fishermen and seafood traders said smuggled seafood was still moving across the border."

EU To Ratchet Up Pressure On North Korea, Venezuela. The Wall Street Journal (10/13, Norman) reports that on Monday, European Union foreign ministers are expected to approve a new series of measures aimed at further pressuring North Korea over its nuclear threat. Diplomats also said bloc officials are also expected to further efforts to impose new sanctions against officials in Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro's government.

NATO Head Reiterates Call For Political Solution To North Korean Crisis. NATO Secretary-

General Jens Stoltenberg urged all nations in the alliance “to find a political solution to the crisis in North Korea,” as military action would “have devastating effects for many, many people and therefore we have to try to avoid that,” reports Bloomberg News (10/13, Bravo, Cehic) . Stoltenberg, who is slated to visit South Korea and Japan to reiterate NATO’s cooperation with the two countries, stressed, “We need to understand that we can’t do nothing, we can’t just sit there and just watch North Korea develop these weapons.”

Analysts Suggest Administration Not Ready For Military Action In North Korea. The AP (10/13, Pennington) examines whether President Trump’s “ominous rhetoric” and repeated military exercises over the Korean Peninsula suggest that US officials are “readying for what many feel is unthinkable – a military conflict with a nuclear-armed North Korea that would put millions of civilians at risk?” Former senior Pentagon adviser Jim Schoff said he does not believe American “policymakers think we’re on the brink of an all-out war,” although “he added that doesn’t mean the administration is bluffing or has ruled out some kind of limited strike in response to a North Korean provocation.” Former Air Force Brig. Gen. Rob Givens posited any “decision to strike a few strategic targets” could “happen very quickly,” and the public would not likely see it coming. Givens “cautioned that North Korea was likely to fight back against even a limited strike, meaning the U.S. would have to prepare for a major conflict if it took that step.”

Diehl: Corker May Have Had Broader Goal In Suggesting Trump Facilitating A World War III. Jackson Diehl, in his column for the Washington Post (10/13, Diehl), argues Secretary of State “Tillerson gets low marks from many in Washington, both inside and outside the State Department,” but Sen. Bob Corker seemingly considers Tillerson to be “instrumental in opening a path away from confrontation with North Korea through quiet diplomacy with China.” Diehl says “Corker’s assertion that ‘we could be heading towards World War III’ was a more pungent way of conveying Trump’s undermining of diplomacy,” with his point being “that the combination of exaggerated statements and the undercutting of Tillerson could corner the White House.” Perhaps, Diehl adds, “Corker may also have had a more sly purpose,” because by suggesting the possibility of a World War III, Trump will undoubtedly do all he can to prove the senator wrong, and Corker “will have achieved his purpose.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

Washington Post.

“Avoiding Fiscal Disaster.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/15) calls for Senate to reject the budget outline as doing “tax reform the wrong way”: inflating “the debt to pay for tax cuts, nullifying the benefits of the rewrite by plunging the country into dangerous fiscal territory.” The Post condemns the plans supporters who argue otherwise as relying on “a combination of budget gimmickry and magical thinking.” The Post argues that the right way to tax reform is by “taking care to simplify the code without harming the country’s already stretched finances,” and calls on senators to make good “on years of rhetoric promising budgetary responsibility.”

“Too Many In Prison.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/15) writes that the Sentencing Reform and Corrections Act – a bill by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Charles Grassley (R-IA) and Sen. Richard Durbin that aims to reduce the federal prison population by lowering mandatory-minimum sentences for nonviolent drug offenses – “would be a significant step forward” but “would also be far from sufficient as a solution to overincarceration.” The Post argues that in order to address overincarceration, criminal justice reform also needs to occur at a state and local level and go beyond addressing nonviolent drug offenders.

“Parochialism Continues To Cripple Metro.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/15) writes that the DC Metro system continues to face problems that are worsened by the fact that top officials from Virginia, Maryland, and the District have little contact with each other. This communication problem is heightened by “the fact that any jurisdiction on the Metro board can veto decisions favored by the other two” – a situation the Post describes as a “recipe for gridlock,” as highlighted by recent disagreement over the construction of Maryland’s Purple Line. The Post concludes that the core problem “is that Metro board members are so parochial and tunnel-visioned that they cannot discern the Purple Line’s clear benefit to the region amid the clutter of their separate agendas.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s NAFTA Threat.” A Wall Street Journal (10/15) editorial says if the President’s threats to back out of the trade pact are a negotiating tactic designed to get concessions from Mexico and Canada, it may work. However, the Journal warns that if Trump is playing a game of chicken, he will lose.

"The Antidote To Steve Bannon." The Wall Street Journal (10/15) says in an editorial that the best way for the GOP to protect itself from Bannon is for senators like Collins, John McCain, Lisa Murkowski, and Rand Paul to back the President's tax reform plan so the establishment GOP can show some victories heading into 2018.

"The Rest Of The Russia Story." The Wall Street Journal (10/15) in an editorial questions why Democrats and Fusion GPS do not appear to want to publicly disclose who requested the dossier on Trump put together by Christopher Steele prior to the 2016 election. The Journal says the public should know whether then-FBI Director James Comey was relying on the dossier when he obtained warrants monitoring the Trump campaign.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Healthcare Back On Congress's Front Burner

Central Bankers Cling To Stimulus Amid Weak Inflation

Wildfire Victims Had Only Seconds To Make Fateful Choices

Barbarians Open Their Gates As Blackstone, Others Seek Retail Cash

New York Times:

The World Once Laughed At North Korean Cyberpower. No More.

Mogadishu Truck Bombings Are Deadliest Attack In Decades

For Weinstein, A Brush With The Police, Then No Charges

Jeff Flake's Lesson For Republicans: Cross Trump At Your Own Risk

After The Las Vegas Shooting, Concertgoers Became Medics

Aiding Transgender Case, Sessions Defies His Image On Civil Rights

Washington Post:

Trump May Have Bolstered Kneelers' Legal Position

Terrorist Blasts In Somalia Kill 276

Interior's Alaska Land Swap Plan Stirs Worry

A Case Of Politics Fatigue Has Fewer Focusing On Va. Governor's Race

Miles Of Lovely Countryside, Obliterated By Fire

Iraqi Forces Clash With Kurds In Move To Retake Base, Oil Fields

Financial Times:

Death Toll In Somalia Bombing Rises To 276

Austrian Far-Right Posts Strongest Result Since 1999

Alleged Murder Plot Exposes Battle To Succeed Robert Mugabe

UberEats A Bright Spot On Menu With \$3bn Potential Sales

Washington Times:

Democrats Downplay Shutdown Over Obamacare, But Deal With Trump Looks Unlikely

Trump's Decertification Plan For Nuclear Deal Gives Congress 60 Days To Get Tough On Iran

Commission For Modern Military To Consider Skills-Based Draft, Women's Roles, Millennial Recruitment

Confederate Heritage Stands Strong In Parts Of Rural Virginia

Medical Rights, Religious Freedom Clash When Illegal Immigrant Youths Seek Abortions

Feds Granting Nearly 2 Million Work Permits To Illegal Immigrants In 2017

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Kaepernick NFL; California Wildfires; California Wildfires-Tracking; Missouri Jailbreak; White House-Bannon, Tillerson; Somalia-Bombing; Weinstein-Sexual Harassment Scandal; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery; Dating App Danger; Old Murder Case-New Witness; Highway Shootout; Restaurant Thief; Baltimore School Choir.

CBS: California Wildfires; Trump-Legislative Agendas; Iran Nuclear Deal-Iranian Response; Syria-Raqqa Assault; Somalia-Bombing; Weinstein-Sexual Harassment Scandal; Hurricane Ophelia; Las Vegas Shooting Survivors; Opioid Epidemic-DEA Whistle Blower; Gene Therapy-Blindness; Voyager-Time Capsule.

NBC: California Wildfires; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery; Trump-Tillerson Relations; Healthcare Executive Order; Hurricane Ophelia Tracking; Sir Roger Moore Tribute; NFL News.

Network TV At A Glance:

California Wildfires – 8 minutes, 10 seconds

Weinstein-Sexual Harassment Scandal – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery – 3 minutes, 45 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Kaepernick NFL; Healthcare Executive Order-Reponses; Iran Nuclear Deal; Trump-Tillerson Relations.

CBS: California Wildfires; Somalia-Bombing; Iran Nuclear Deal-Iranian Response; Trump-Legislative Agendas; Kaepernick NFL; Baseball News.

FOX: Louisiana Oil Rig Explosion; California Wildfires; Hurricane Ophelia; Sen. Feinstein Reelection.

NPR: California Wildfires; Austria-Parliamentary Election; Somalia-Bombing; Louisiana Oil Rig Explosion.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Holds a Cabinet Meeting; has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell; gives remarks at a McMaster for Governor Reception.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President for a Cabinet meeting; joins the President for lunch with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell; participates in the second round of the US-Japan Economic Dialogue with Deputy Prime Minister Taro Aso.

US Senate: 4:00 PM Senate returns from Columbus Day recess, and votes on nominated U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican – Senate returns after Columbus Day State Work Period * Chamber convenes and resumes consideration of the nomination of Callista Gingrich to be U.S.

Ambassador to the Holy See, with agenda including a vote on the nomination Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

Sen. Thad Cochran returns to the Senate – Republican Sen. Thad Cochran returns to work in the Senate, following treatment for urological issues and a number of weeks recovering at home in Mississippi * Sen. Cochran's absence from the chamber caused confusion last month when President Donald Trump repeatedly claimed that the Graham-Cassidy healthcare reform bill would have had the votes to pass in time to take advantage of budget reconciliation rules was it not for the fact that one senator – who he did not name – was in hospital, only for Sen. Cochran to subsequently explain that he was not hospitalized and for analysts to point out that three Republican senators and all 49 Democrats had already expressed their opposition to the bill Location: TBD <http://www.cochran.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenThadCochran>

US House: 10:00 AM House of Representatives meets in pro forma session

On recess until 23 October.

Other: 8:00 AM Labor Secretary Acosta attends U.S. Chamber Foundation 'America Working Forward' event – U.S. Chamber of Commerce Foundation hosts 'America Working Forward' – a national workforce conference bringing together employers, education and training providers, and policymakers from across the country for panel discussions on new approaches to improve recruiting, training, and worker retention. Attendees include Secretary of Labor Alexander Acosta, Rhode Island Governor Gina Raimondo, Strada Education Network Senior Vice President for Philanthropy Daryl Graham, U.S. Chamber of Commerce Senior Executive Vice President Suzanne Clark, and U.S. Chamber Foundation Center for Education and Workforce Senior Vice President Cheryl Oldham

Location: U.S. Chamber of Commerce, 1615 H St NW, Washington, DC www.uschamber.com <https://twitter.com/USChamber>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, October 23, 2017
Date: Monday, October 23, 2017 7:02:04 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, OCTOBER 23, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Associated Press: Arctic Refuge Drilling Closer As Senate Moves To Open Site.
- Washington Examiner: Trump Administration Scrambles To Save Largest Coal Plant In The West.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Izembek Road Opponents Struggle To Shine Light On Interior Department Plans.
- New Orleans Times-Picayune: Louisiana To Congress: How Much Gulf Oil Money Will We Get?.
- Arizona Daily Star: Hunters, Others React To Proposed Recreational-Shooting Expansion At Ironwood.
- New York Times: Where Did The Napa Fire Begin? Investigators Scour The Ashes.
- Government Executive: Federal Agencies Deal With Sexual Misconduct Inconsistently.

- E&E Publishing: Lolita Zinke Makes Her Mark Outside The Cabinet.
- Washington Post: Hogan's Idea To Widen Washington-Area Highways To Add Toll Lanes Has Hit Barriers Before.
- Reuters: White And Male: Broader Bureaucracy Mirrors Trump Cabinet's Profile.
- Los Angeles Times: Land-Grabbing Republican Lawmakers Are Trying To Gut The Antiquities Act.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Cronkite News: Plan Keeps Most Of Sonoran Desert National Monument Open To Shooters.
- Associated Press: National Tribal Group Calls For Drilling Moratorium Around Chaco.
- KQED-FM San Francisco: Federal Agency Promoted Ranger Five Months After His Gun Was Stolen And Used In Steinle Killing.
- U.S. News & World Report: Nevada Prison-Raised Sagebrush Seedling Ready To Be Planted.
- Havasu (AZ) News-Herald: Our View: La Paz Federal Land Purchase Should Be Model For Country.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Resort Town Gets High-Priced Help To Take Aim At Turbines.
- Don't Open Eastern Gulf Of Mexico To Offshore Drilling: Guestview.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- U.S. News & World Report: 16 Charged In Southern California Animal Trafficking Sweep.
- Boston Globe: New York Shipping Firm Would Pay At Least $13.3 Million In Buzzards Bay Oil Spill Settlement.
- Madison (IN) Courier: Big Oaks Military Activities Under Review.
- Monroe (MI) Evening News: Wildlife Refuge Dock, Pier Finished, To Open In Spring.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: Doing Science At The Wildlife Refuge.
- Louisville (KY) Courier-Journal: 2,000 Acres On Pine Mountain Protected In Three New Kentucky Preserves.
- U.S. News & World Report: More Bison To Join American Indian Herd In Wyoming.
- U.S. News & World Report: Survey: 949 Key Deer Survived Irma Landfall In Florida Keys.
- Houston Chronicle: Estimated Population Of Squirrel Plummet After Wildfire.
- Washington Times: Home On The Range: Annual Bison Roundup Is A Quiet Affair.
- Washington Post: A Huge Salmon Die-Off Is Happening – And Our Cars Might Be Responsible.
- Rutland (VT) Herald: Vermont's Rare Songbird Threatened.

National Park Service

- Los Angeles Times: Rep. Adam Schiff Reintroduces Legislation Aimed At Protecting Open Space.
- St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Ice Rink Boosters 'Disappointed' By Federal Response To Latest Push For Project.
- Washington Post: Testing Of Levee Closes Part Of 17th Street In Downtown Washington.
- WKRN-TV Nashville (TN): New Documents Detail How Firefighters Discovered Chimney Tops II Wildfire In Smokies.
- U.S. News & World Report: New Quarter Honoring Indiana Revolutionary War Figure.
- WBUP-TV Marquette (MI): Design Isle Royale National Park's Next Passenger Vessel.
- Willoughby (OH) News-Herald: James A. Garfield National Historic Site Among Field Trip Grant Winners.
- U.S. News & World Report: Federal Government To Keep $20K After Yellowstone Drug Bust.
- Yellowstone Insider: Yellowstone To Replace Arsenic Leaching Pipes Near Mammoth Hot Springs.
- U.S. News & World Report: Park Hikers May Have Died In 'Sympathetic Murder-Suicide'.
- U.S. News & World Report: Rangers Investigating Death At Harpers Ferry National Park.
- Huffington Post: Additional Coverage: Feds Surrender In Tooth-And-Nail Fight To Leash Dogs In Bay Area's Open Space.
- Bozeman (MT) Daily Chronicle: Additional Coverage: Yellowstone Plans To Build New Youth Campus.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- St. Thomas Source: December Congressional Appropriation 'Our Biggest Opportunity,' Plaskett Says.
- Pacific (GUM) Daily News: NKorea Months From Perfecting Nuclear Capabilities.
- Pacific (GUM) Daily News: Solar Panels To Be Installed At GMH.

Office Of Surface Mining

- No Word From Interior On Review Of Halted Mountaintop Removal Study.
- Advocates, Lawmakers Prepare For Battle Over Reclamation Fee.

US Geological Survey

- Odessa (TX) American: GOOD NEWS: Sul Ross Student Studies Pallid Sturgeon Via USGS Internship.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- CBS: Trump Makes Case For Budget And Tax Reform, Urges House To Move Quickly.
- CNN: White House Reiterates Support For Kelly's Defense Of Trump As Video Released.
- Reuters: Trump Promises Tax Cut After Senate GOP Passes Budget.
- Bloomberg News: US Posts Largest Budget Deficit Since 2013.
- Reuters: Judge Extends Halt To Trump's Travel Ban.
- Wall Street Journal: Mattis To Discuss North Korean Threat With Asian Defense Ministers.
- Wall Street Journal: Administration Plan For Coal, Nuclear Power Draws Criticism From Environmental, Oil Groups.
- New York Times: EPA Cancels Climate Change Speeches By Agency Scientists.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "America's Forever Wars."
- Washington Post.
 - "Sessions's Plan For Immigration Courts Would Undermine Their Integrity."
 - "Watch What Duterte Does, Not What He Says."
 - "Why is Va. Treating Its Students – Especially Its Black Students – Like Criminals?"
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump Caves On Ethanol."
 - "Shinzo Abe's Big Win."
 - "Richard Cordray's Bad Numbers."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Arctic Refuge Drilling Closer As Senate Moves To Open Site.

The AP (10/20, Daly) reported in continuing coverage that the Republican-controlled Senate is one step closer to drilling in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Reserve after passing a budget measure authorizing Congress to pursue legislation allowing exploration by a majority vote. Sen. Dan Sullivan said, "More energy production means more American jobs, more American economic growth, more American national security...and a more sustainable global environment, because no one in the world produces energy more responsibly than Americans, especially Alaskans." Sen. Maria Cantwell said, "The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is one of the most pristine areas of the United States, and we have been protecting it for decades for a reason." NBC News (10/20, Seitz-Wald) reported Senate Republicans blocked a Democratic measure that would have blocked ANWR drilling from being included in the GOP budget. Environmental activists are now looking to block drilling later in the process, which could take some time because it is tied with the GOP tax reform effort. The Hill (10/22, Henry) reports more than 300 businesses and groups have already signed a letter delivered to senators opposing drilling ANWR.

PJ Media (10/22, Ballasy) reported that Sen. Ed Markey (D-Mass.) is led the opposition in Congress to any attempts to allow oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Also opposed, Sen. Michael Bennet (D-Colo.) said the U.S. should not permit drilling because oil prices are low. "We are importing much less oil and natural gas than we did when there was a consensus that we needed to protect the refuge," noted Sen. Bennet.

Could Congress' Budget Put Refuge, Animals In Harm's Way? The Arizona Republic (10/20, Bowling) reports that the congressional debate over whether or not to open Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration and drilling has drawn the attention of state lawmakers and conservation groups nationwide. In Arizona, critics of the plan have focused on the impact Arctic drilling can affect migration patterns for an array of birds that travel south every year. An American Petroleum Institute spokeswoman did not comment on the issue, but provided a link to a column by Upstream Director Erik Milito saying Arctic energy exploration would occur "under parameters that ensure minimal effect to the surrounding environment and wildlife" and would bring "jobs and badly needed revenue for the state."

Cash-Poor Alaska Eyes Foreign Capital To Jump-Start Energy Projects. Reuters (10/20, Nickel) reports that the state of Alaska is attempting to attract foreign investors for its oil and gas industry. Last month, China Investment Corp. and Sinopec met with state officials. Reuters adds that "this year, a state budget shortfall led the state to withhold hundreds of millions of dollars owed to small oil explorers." Alaska Governor Bill Walker's Chief Energy Advisor John Hendrix said "it's a challenging sell." Hendrix also said, "when you talk about (exporting) to the Far East, we're closer than California."

Trump Administration Scrambles To Save Largest Coal Plant In The West.

The Washington Examiner (10/23, Siciliano) reports that "resuscitating" the Navajo Generating Station "could be the first test of President Trump's resolve to restore demand for coal in the electricity sector, especially since the government is a majority stakeholder in the plant it is seeking to save." The Trump Administration has "until December to save the largest coal-fired power plant in the West, but the prospects for the plant burning coal after 2019 are questionable." The deliberations to secure new owners for the plant will "continue into next year even after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke signs off on a key environmental determination for the plant and approves a lease extension by Dec. 1."

Izembek Road Opponents Struggle To Shine Light On Interior Department Plans.

The Alaska Dispatch News (10/22, Martinson) reports that "opponents of a longtime effort to build a road from King Cove to Cold Bay – through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge – say they are struggling to illuminate the Interior Department's current legal path toward allowing the road." Opponents of the road claim "that documents recently obtained through a Freedom of Information Act Request show that the agency is not looking to make the specifics of its plans public any time soon." The Interior Department "declined to answer specific questions about the legal steps required to approve the road, or a timeline for doing so." Alex Hinson, deputy press secretary for the Interior Department, said, "The Alaska Congressional Delegation, Governor, Mayor of King Cove, King Cove Native Corporation, and affiliated Alaska native tribal entities have asked us to consider a small land exchange to build a life saving road for aeromedical evacuations from King Cove to the all weather airport at Cold Bay. We do not comment on pre-decisional negotiations."

Louisiana To Congress: How Much Gulf Oil Money Will We Get?.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/20, Schleifstein) reported Gov. John Bel Edwards' coastal adviser Johnny Bradberry sent a letter to Louisiana's congressional delegation to help find out how much money the state will receive in offshore drilling royalties under the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act. Initial estimates from the Interior Department found the state would receive between $62-75 million, about half the estimated annual maximum for Louisiana. Bradberry wrote Rep. Steve Scalise saying if the funding will be less than $100 million in the future, "we would respectfully ask for your help to revisit and pursue other federal opportunities that could also provide assistance for coastal protection and restoration going forward." Scalise said, "The money Louisiana gets from offshore revenue sharing is critical to restoring our coast and protecting our communities from future storms in the Gulf, and I've worked successfully for years to fight back efforts by people in Washington who tried to take that revenue sharing away from us."

Hunters, Others React To Proposed Recreational-Shooting Expansion At Ironwood.

The Arizona Daily Star (10/22, Hyde) reports that "the federal proposal to expand target shooting, hunting and fishing on public lands is drawing attention in Arizona." In September, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "directed land managers to come up with a plan to expand recreational shooting in areas like Ironwood Forest National Monument near Tucson." Supporters argue "it could mean more hunting and fishing opportunities on federal land." Opponents believe "it risks people's safety and could trash some of nature's most pristine areas." The article shares the perspectives of "five Arizona residents who hunt or target shoot."

Where Did The Napa Fire Begin? Investigators Scour The Ashes.

The New York Times (10/20, Fuller, Johnson) reported California's 160 full-time fire investigators are examining the origins of the "most destructive fire in California history." Determining the cause of the fires "could have huge financial implications in deciding who ultimately pays for the extensive damage, including almost 8,000 structures destroyed." Wildfire experts believe it is too early to come to a conclusion, "but that the circumstances – nighttime ignition coupled with fierce winds – raise the possibility of power lines being involved." Pacific Gas and Electric runs power lines in the affected areas, and "said it was complying with a request from regulators to preserve all potential evidence." The Times reports that in Calistoga, "where the deadliest of the first is believed to have started, wires littered the roads even a week after the fires began. But whether the power lines provided the spark that began the fire remains an open question."

Federal Agencies Deal With Sexual Misconduct Inconsistently.

Government Executive (10/20, Katz) reports that "federal agencies are operating with no clear definition of sexual misconduct and have doled out inconsistent punishments for those found to have engaged in the behavior, according to a new report from House Republicans." However, "some members of the Trump administration have already taken steps to crack down on sexual harassment in government." The article notes that "at the Interior Department, which has perhaps seen the most high-profile cases of sexual harassment in government in recent years, Secretary Ryan Zinke announced last week new policies to better protect employees after an internal survey found 39 percent of National Park Service employees said they were victims of some sort of harassment in the previous year."

Lolita Zinke Makes Her Mark Outside The Cabinet.

E&E Publishing (10/20, Doyle) reports on the "diverse activities" of Lolita Zinke, the wife of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, which "spotlight the sometimes blurry boundaries between public and private spheres that confront family members in every administration." The article notes that "at times, she's right by the Interior secretary's side, although officials characterize this support as familial and nothing out of the ordinary." Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift said, "Mrs. Zinke has zero role at the department." An Interior official added that "much like previous secretaries and spouses, she occasionally meets her husband while he is traveling at her own personal expense" and that "she and all Cabinet spouses received a federal ethics briefing."

Hogan's Idea To Widen Washington-Area Highways To Add Toll Lanes Has Hit Barriers Before.

The Washington Post (10/21, Shaver) reports that the proposal by Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan to build toll lanes on three of the state's highways – its portion of the I-495 Capital Beltway, along I-295 between Baltimore and DC, and on I-270 between DC and Frederick – is even more ambitious than "similar proposals that stalled over the years after being deemed too expensive or disruptive to adjacent communities." Even in spite of the fact that Hogan's proposal would rely in part on funding from private partners with a vested stake in the new toll lanes, "the largest such deal for highways in North America," those private builders would have to "figure out what state planners haven't been able to: how to add four cost-effective toll lanes without having to demolish dozens, and potentially hundreds, of homes and businesses."

White And Male: Broader Bureaucracy Mirrors Trump Cabinet's Profile.

Reuters (10/20, Lange) reports that while President Trump has "faced criticism from advocacy groups for not including more women and minorities in his cabinet last January," an analysis of Office of Personnel Management data found 88 percent of the more than 1,000 mid-level political appointments filled by the middle of the year "were non-Hispanic white and 62 percent were men." Reuters says in former President Obama's Administration, "non-Hispanic whites made up 67 percent of that group and men accounted for 47 percent – closer to what the U.S. population looks like." Max Stier, the president of the Partnership for Public Service, said the data shows that "this administration so far has not in any direct sense prioritized diversity." However, Reuters adds that when "asked to comment on the mid-level personnel data, White House spokeswoman Lindsay Walters said Trump had a long history of promoting women and pointed to last week's nomination of Kirstjen Nielsen to lead the Department of Homeland Security."

Land-Grabbing Republican Lawmakers Are Trying To Gut The Antiquities Act.

Don't Let Them. In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (10/21, Board) opposes a new "movement in Congress to severely reduce a president's authority to protect federal lands from development and other uses that would mar their beauty and damage our national heritage." The paper urges House Speaker Paul D. Ryan to "mothball" the "disingenuously named" National Monument Creation and Protection Act. The Times concludes that "the Antiquities Act should not be undone to feed the appetites of land-hungry politicians."

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/21, Coppola), Tracy Coppola, senior legislative counsel for public lands at the nonprofit environmental law organization Earthjustice, also opposes the National Monument Creation and Protection Act. Coppola characterizes the legislation a "bill that misses the mark on the role protected national monuments and national parks play in the lives of everyday Americans."

In an op-ed for the Ravalli \(MT\) Republic (10/22, Fugere, Hutcheson, Doyle, Epstein), Nicolle Fugere,, Hilary Hutcheson, Shane Doyle, and Larry Epstein, representatives of Hold Our Ground, criticize Rep Greg Gianforte and Sen. Steve Daines for supporting measures targeting the Antiquities Act. They warn that "H.R. 2900 and S. 33 would make it difficult, if not impossible, for any future president to act" for public lands on a "groundswell of public support."

Additional coverage was provided by The Guardian \(UK\) (10/21, McLaughlin) and Vice (10/20).

Bureau Of Land Management

Plan Keeps Most Of Sonoran Desert National Monument Open To Shooters.

Cronkite News (10/20, Vernile) reports that the Bureau of Land Management last Friday "recommended closing 53,300 acres of the Sonoran Desert National Monument to recreational shooting, but keeping the remaining 443,000 open to shooters." The plan, posted in the Federal Register, "calls for making 11 percent of the monument's land off-limits to shooting." The article notes that "hunting is not affected by any of the proposals considered by the bureau, and would be allowed anywhere in the monument with the proper permits."

National Tribal Group Calls For Drilling Moratorium Around Chaco.

The AP (10/20) reported that the National Congress of American Indians are calling for a drilling moratorium near Chaco Culture National Historic Park in New Mexico. A resolution to cease drilling in portions of the San Juan Basin was approved Friday by the group. The AP adds that "the critics say increased development has the potential to destroy parts of the landscape that could provide a better understanding of the ancient civilization that once inhabited the area."

Federal Agency Promoted Ranger Five Months After His Gun Was Stolen And Used In Steinle Killing.

KQED-FM San Francisco (10/20, Emslie) reports that "five months after Kathryn Steinle was slain on San Francisco's waterfront, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management promoted the law enforcement ranger whose unsecured stolen gun was used to kill her, according to an internal BLM email obtained by KQED." BLM ranger John Woychowski "faced neither discipline nor criminal charges for failing to secure his weapon – a misdemeanor under California law." The AP (10/20) reports that Woychowski was "promoted to a supervisory position five months after Kate Steinle's July 2015 death."

Nevada Prison-Raised Sagebrush Seedling Ready To Be Planted.

The AP (10/20, Dornan) reports that "inmates at Warm Springs Prison in Carson City are spending the week loading up 70,000 sagebrush plants they spent the last six months sprouting and tending." According to Scott Miller, part of the crew that worked on the project this year, "the sagebrush will be planted in burned out areas near Susanville and Winnemucca." Miller "said the Bureau of Land Management already has spots picked out to put the plants after they clear out the cheat grass."

Our View: La Paz Federal Land Purchase Should Be Model For Country.

The Havasu \(AZ\) News-Herald (10/22) editorializes that an effort to allow the La Paz County “to buy 8,000 acres from the Bureau of Land Management is now working its way through Congress.” The paper says that it’s important that “it’s getting a full hearing in Congress” because that “means interested parties and chime in and the special interests get to plead their cases.” The paper hopes that the process will produce “a result that is in the public’s best interest.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Resort Town Gets High-Priced Help To Take Aim At Turbines.

E&E Publishing (10/20, Kurtz) reports that “already targeted by an appropriations bill in Congress, two proposed wind energy projects off the coast of Maryland could face a sneak attack in the Free State’s upcoming legislative session.” According to the article, “officials in the resort town of Ocean City, Md., fearful that wind turbines will damage their lucrative tourist economy, have hired a plugged-in Annapolis lobbyist to help them push the two projects farther offshore.” However, “some stakeholders in the long battle to bring offshore wind energy to Maryland are skeptical.”

Don’t Open Eastern Gulf Of Mexico To Offshore Drilling: Guestview.

In an op-ed in the Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal, (10/19, Beaven) Heather Beaven, a member of the Truman Project and Oceana think-tanks, says she opposes offshore drilling along Florida’s Gulf Coast. She says that opening the area to offshore oil and gas drilling would be a “direct threat to our national security operations and our coastal economies,” and cites concerns that such activities “could interfere with critical opportunities for advanced weapons testing and joint training exercises” by the U.S. military.

Fish And Wildlife Service

16 Charged In Southern California Animal Trafficking Sweep.

The AP (10/20) reports that “authorities have seized dozens of animals and filed charges against 16 people as part of what they say is the largest wildlife trafficking sweep in Southern California.” Federal authorities “call the sweep ‘Operation Jungle Book’ and say it’s an effort to combat a growing illegal market for exotic animals that threatens the survival of species.” Ed Grace, acting chief of law enforcement for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, “Wildlife trafficking does not stop at international borders, and it is our duty to protect imperiled species both at home and abroad.”

Also reporting are the Los Angeles Times (10/20, Easter), the Orange County \(CA\) Register (10/20, Dixon), NBC News (10/21, Dzhanova), and KTLA-TV Los Angeles Los Angeles (10/20, Turner, Abovian).

New York Shipping Firm Would Pay At Least $13.3 Million In Buzzards Bay Oil Spill Settlement.

The Boston Globe (10/20, Andersen) reports that “a New York shipping company and its affiliates will shell out $13.3 million plus interest to pay for devastating wildlife damages incurred when one of its barges dumped 98,000 gallons of oil into Buzzards Bay during a massive spill in 2003, under terms of a proposed settlement filed Thursday in federal court in Boston.” The agreement, “if approved by a judge, will require Bouchard Transportation Company, Inc. and related entities to make payments to settle outstanding federal and state natural resource damage claims, according to a statement released Thursday by the US Fish and Wildlife Service, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and state officials in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.” According to a release by the government, “the proposal ‘compensates for injury to migratory birds’ and follows prior payments the company made totaling $6 million to compensate for injuries to shoreline and aquatic resources, coastal recreational uses, and piping plovers.”

Big Oaks Military Activities Under Review.

The Madison \(IN\) Courier (10/21) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “examining military activities at Big Oaks National Wildlife Refuge under its mandatory 10-year re-evaluation.” The agency is “evaluating recently expired and newly requested military activities under the Compatibility Determination process that includes ground personnel doing reconnaissance and survival training, temporary storage of scrap metal, establishing temporary located military equipment such as radar offset reflector sites, and any other use that could be beneficial to the refuge operations and maintenance.”

Wildlife Refuge Dock, Pier Finished, To Open In Spring.

The Monroe \(MI\) Evening News (10/21, Cousino) reports that “construction has been completed for a school ship dock and fishing pier at the gateway in Trenton to the Detroit River International Wildlife Refuge, part of a $25 million total investment in the refuge.” According to refuge manager Hartig, “the dock that extends 740 feet into the river and connects to a 200-foot-long fishing dike won’t open until spring.” Hartig said Wednesday, “It’s not open right now. There are people still working on roads and heavy equipment moving around. It’s not safe for people to come.”

Doing Science At The Wildlife Refuge.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/23) reports that “dozens of New Mexico high school students from five towns and cities experienced science disciplines firsthand at a national wildlife refuge, thanks to a partnership between Highlands University and the Denver Zoo.” The STEM Showdown event was held at the Rio Mora National Wildlife Refuge last month. According to the article, “the students learned about science firsthand in 30-minute field sessions on a variety of topics like hydrology and wetlands, veterinary medicine, beaver ecology, geospatial science, and ‘amazing rare’ species.”

2,000 Acres On Pine Mountain Protected In Three New Kentucky Preserves.

The Louisville \(KY\) Courier-Journal (10/20, Bruggers) reports that “conservation efforts are on the move again in Eastern Kentucky with the creation of three new preserves on 2,000 acres of Pine Mountain.” The Kentucky Natural Lands Trust “bought the property and announced its acquisition on Friday.” According to the trust, “funding came from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s Imperiled Bat Conservation Fund, along with ongoing support from the Forecastle Foundation, the Snowy Owl Foundation, Beckham Bird Club, Louisville Audubon Society, KNLT’s board and a broad base of other donors.”

More Bison To Join American Indian Herd In Wyoming.

The AP (10/20, Gruver) reports that “ten more buffalo are set to join a nascent herd on the starkly beautiful landscape of a Wyoming American Indian reservation, a project significant to tribal members who went over a century without living with the animals dear to their culture.” The buffalo set “to be released Saturday by the Eastern Shoshone Tribe and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will join 10 released last fall on the Wind River Indian Reservation.”

Survey: 949 Key Deer Survived Irma Landfall In Florida Keys.

The AP (10/22) reports that “federal wildlife officials say Hurricane Irma didn’t wipe out a herd of tiny, endangered deer found only in the Florida Keys.” According to a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service survey released last week, “949 Key deer survived the hurricane’s 130-mph (209-kph) winds and 10 feet (3 meters) of storm surge.”

Estimated Population Of Squirrel Plummeted After Wildfire.

The AP (10/21, Davenport, Press) reports that “an endangered squirrel species’ estimated population has plummeted since a major wildfire burned much of its habitat atop a southeastern Arizona mountain last summer.” According to the Arizona Game and Fish Department, “an annual multi-agency survey of the Mount Graham red squirrel produced an estimate of only 35 squirrels, which is only 14 percent of the 252 squirrels estimated in 2016.” Steve Spangle, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service supervisor, said damage from the Frye fire to the squirrel habitat was “a textbook example of how species with low population sizes, especially those confined to a small geographic area, are vulnerable to natural events such as fires, floods, and severe drought.”

Home On The Range: Annual Bison Roundup Is A Quiet Affair.

The AP (10/21, Backus) reports close to 350 bison were rounded up this year “as a crew of biologists, wardens, veterinarians and others with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service took note of their general condition and took some blood samples from a smattering of the adults.” The objective is “on preserving the genetics of the National Bison Range herd, which is considered among the best in the nation.” Lee Jones, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service wildlife health specialist, said, "Our goal is to keep inbreeding down as much as possible. The animals that are most highly related to the rest are removed from the herd."

A Huge Salmon Die-Off Is Happening – And Our Cars Might Be Responsible.

The Washington Post (10/20, Fears) reports that "a recent study traced a major coho salmon die-off to contaminants from roads and automobiles – brake dust, oil, fuel, chemical fluids – that hitch a ride on storm water and flow into watersheds." The study, published Wednesday in the journal Ecological Applications, said, "Our findings are . . . that contaminants in stormwater runoff from the regional transportation grid likely caused these mortality events. Further, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to reverse historical coho declines without addressing the toxic pollution dimension of freshwater habitats."

Vermont's Rare Songbird Threatened.

In an op-ed for the Rutland \(VT\) Herald (10/20, Matteson), Mollie Matteson, a senior scientist with the Center for Biological Diversity, claims that "national politics are putting American wildlife at risk of extinction." Matteson argues that "decisions that should be founded on science and environmental health are instead based on money, power and influence." According to Matteson, "the biggest long-term threat to the Bicknell's thrush is climate change" so "it's frustrating and discouraging to watch our federal government continue to deny the reality of climate change and refuse to take action to stop it."

National Park Service

Rep. Adam Schiff Reintroduces Legislation Aimed At Protecting Open Space.

The Los Angeles Times (10/20, Carpio) reports that Rep. Adam Schiff and Sen. Dianne Feinstein "announced on Wednesday they have introduced legislation that would protect more than 191,000 acres of open space in their districts." Schiff "met with about 40 of his constituents at Brand Park in Glendale on Wednesday to talk about the second iteration of the Rim of the Valley Corridor Preservation Act, which, if approved, would allow local agencies to use federal resources to maintain, improve and preserve many parks, hiking trails and mountain ranges used by the public." Schiff said, "The goal with the legislation is to enable local landowners, local governments and interested stakeholders to better utilize federal resources to preserve this beautiful ecosystem for generations to come, as well as improving access to recreational and educational opportunities. This is a truly once-in-a-lifetime chance to protect this beautiful open space. By expanding the national recreation area, the National Park Service will have the authority to implement capital improvements."

Ice Rink Boosters 'Disappointed' By Federal Response To Latest Push For Project.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (10/21, Kohler) reports that "representatives from a nonprofit group seeking to develop an ice rink complex at Creve Coeur Lake Memorial Park, members of county government and area economic development officials tried to convince the federal government on Friday that the regional National Park Service office blocking construction was unfairly biased against the plan." However, "an attorney for the nonprofit Legacy Ice Foundation, which would lease the county-owned facility, said the argument didn't get any traction with officials visiting from the U.S. Department of Interior to meet several state and local officials." Gregory R. Smith, of the St. Louis law firm Husch Blackwell, said, "We were disappointed in the response. We were disappointed with what we saw as a failure to recognize the clearly prejudicial position expressed by the (regional) office."

Testing Of Levee Closes Part Of 17th Street In Downtown Washington.

In its "Dr. Gridblock" blog, the Washington Post (10/20, Hedgpeth) reports "part of 17th Street in Northwest Washington between Constitution and Independence avenues is closed Friday." because of "a test installation of the 17th Street levee, according to officials with the National Park Service." Officials said "the annual test is need to make sure the levee closure can be put up properly in case of high water."

New Documents Detail How Firefighters Discovered Chimney Tops II Wildfire In Smokies.

WKRN-TV Nashville, TN (10/20) reports that "newly released documents from the National Park Service reveal new details about the initial discovery of the Chimney Tops II wildfire and matches that were believed to have been involved in starting it." The documents "also estimate the costs for fighting the fire by the National Park Service were upward of $15 million."

New Quarter Honoring Indiana Revolutionary War Figure.

The AP (10/20) reports that "a new quarter featuring Revolutionary War figure George Rogers Clark is set for release next month in the southwestern Indiana city where his American soldiers captured a British-held fort." The National Park Service "says the new quarter will be released during a Nov. 14 ceremony at the Vincennes Riverfront Pavilion near the Clark Memorial grounds." According to Clark Memorial superintendent Frank Doughman, "it took more than two years for selection of the design from among 20 proposals submitted."

Design Isle Royale National Park's Next Passenger Vessel.

WBUP-TV Marquette, MI (10/20, Snitz) reports that Isle Royale National Park is "planning to replace its passenger vessel, the Ranger III, and has partnered with The Grand Portage Band of Chippewa for a design contest." Environmental Protection Specialist Jeff Henquinet said, "The Ranger III currently holds up to 149 passengers. We've put a lot of miles on it. It's still in good shape. Our crew has kept it together very well, but at some point in time we will need to think about replacing it."

James A. Garfield National Historic Site Among Field Trip Grant Winners.

The Willoughby \(OH\) News-Herald (10/20) reports that James A. Garfield National Historic Site and Cuyahoga Valley National Park were "selected to receive a 2017 field trip grant from the National Park Foundation, the official charity of America's national parks." The grant, "part of the Foundation's Open Outdoors for Kids program, supports Every Kid in a Park. Beyond making field trips possible, the Every Kid in a Park Focus City program raises local community awareness about the importance of connecting kids to the outdoors."

Federal Government To Keep $20K After Yellowstone Drug Bust.

The AP (10/20) reports that "two Illinois men have forfeited more than $20,000 that was seized during a drug bust in Yellowstone National Park to the federal government." The Wyoming U.S. Attorney's Office "argued that the federal government should keep the money since the men had planned to use it to buy marijuana in Oregon to sell in Illinois." According to the article, "the men failed to file a claim to recover the money before the deadline this week and were informed that the government would be keeping the cash on Wednesday."

Yellowstone To Replace Arsenic Leaching Pipes Near Mammoth Hot Springs.

Yellowstone Insider (10/21, Reichard) reports that Yellowstone National Park will "replace a sewer line that reportedly led to the Gardiner Sewer District filing a lawsuit over arsenic leaching." According to the article, "the replacement will come sometime in the next two years."

Park Hikers May Have Died In 'Sympathetic Murder-Suicide'.

The AP (10/22, Nguyen) reports that "friends and relatives of a couple whose bodies were found in Joshua Tree National Park say they believe the two got lost while hiking in the sprawling desert park and struggled in the searing heat with little food or water before they died in a 'sympathetic murder-suicide.'" According to the article, "Rachel Nguyen, 20, and Joseph Orbeso, 22, had been missing for nearly three months after going for a hike in late July and failing to return to their bed-and-breakfast." The article says that "autopsies found both had gunshot wounds and evidence at the scene led detectives to believe Orbeso shot Nguyen and then himself, the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department said in a statement Friday."

Rangers Investigating Death At Harpers Ferry National Park.

The AP (10/21) reports that "authorities are investigating an accidental death inside Harpers Ferry National Historical Park."

Additional Coverage: Feds Surrender In Tooth-And-Nail Fight To Leash Dogs In Bay Area's Open Space.

Additional coverage that the National Park Service has "announced that it's 'permanently' backing off its plan to impose tough new leash restrictions on dogs on federally managed open space in the San Francisco Bay Area" was provided by the Huffington Post (10/21, Papenfuss), the San Francisco Examiner (10/22, Stephens), and KOED-FM San Francisco San Francisco (10/20, Hernandez).

Additional Coverage: Yellowstone Plans To Build New Youth Campus.

Additional coverage that Yellowstone National Park will “build a new youth campus at Mammoth Hot Springs that will house up to 140 students at a time for educational programs within the park” was provided by the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (10/20, Wright).

Office Of Insular Affairs

December Congressional Appropriation ‘Our Biggest Opportunity,’ Plaskett Says.

The St. Thomas Source (10/19, Kossler) reports that “this year’s emergency congressional appropriations for hurricane recovery are the territory’s best opportunity for substantial federal help,” according to Delegate Stacey Plaskett. She said Thursday that “after the year ends, new funding will be harder to come by.” Earlier this week, Plaskett “said she wanted the legislation to ‘encompass the totality of the needs of the Virgin Islands for rebuilding.’”

NKorea Months From Perfecting Nuclear Capabilities.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (10/19, Riechmann) reports that CIA Director Mike Pompeo “said Thursday that North Korea is months away from perfecting its nuclear weapons capabilities.” At a national security forum in Washington, Pompeo said that “‘they are close enough now in their capabilities that from a U.S. policy perspective we ought to behave as if we are on the cusp of them achieving’ their objective of being able to strike the United States.” Speaking later at the same event, National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster said, “We are in a race to resolve this short of military action.”

Solar Panels To Be Installed At GMH.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (10/20, Sablan) reports that Guam Memorial Hospital will “soon install solar panels, which will help save money in energy costs that can be spent on other needs at the hospital.” Hospital officials “announced the solar panel project during a press conference Friday, and said they hope it will be completed by the end of the year.” According to officials, “the project is being funded by an Empowering Insular Communities grant from the U.S. Department of Interior.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Guam Daily Post (10/20, Chargualaf).

Office Of Surface Mining

No Word From Interior On Review Of Halted Mountaintop Removal Study.

The Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (10/21, Ward) reports that officials at the National Academies of Science, Engineering and Medicine have not heard from the Trump Administration “about a financial review that halted a major study of the potential public health effects of mountaintop removal coal mining.” According to academies spokesman William Kearney, “no update on the financial review has been provided to the academies by the Interior Department.” Last week, Rep. Raúl Grijalva wrote to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “to ask for an explanation of the fate of about $400,000 in unspent money that was set aside for the mountaintop removal study, which Grijalva referred to as ‘canceled.’” But the agency hasn’t responded.

Advocates, Lawmakers Prepare For Battle Over Reclamation Fee.

E&E Publishing (10/20, Brown) reports that “the confusing fight over renewing the nation’s convoluted system for cleaning up abandoned coal mines has ensnared legislation bent on turning reclamation into economic growth.” The Abandoned Mine Land (AML) fee “doesn’t expire until 2021,” but “coal state lawmakers are already debating the issue, remembering the last reauthorization took at least a decade.” The article says that “as expected, old tensions over how to spend the money have re-emerged between historical coal states like Pennsylvania and West Virginia — those with the most cleanup needs — and the current top coal state, Wyoming — which pays more than half of all fees but is certified as having finished cleaning up priority abandoned sites (Greenwire, Sept. 29, 2016).” However, “the real wrench came when the coal industry came out earlier this year in outright opposition to reauthorizing the coal fee for the first time since Congress imposed it in 1977 (E&E Daily, June 8).”

US Geological Survey

GOOD NEWS: Sul Ross Student Studies Pallid Sturgeon Via USGS Internship.

The Odessa \(TX\) American (10/21, Lang) reports that Sam Burch, “a Sul Ross State University graduate student in geology and a research technician at the Rio Grande Research Center (RGRC), was selected for a prestigious U.S. Geological Survey hydrology-based internship this past summer.” Burch “worked with the Columbia Environmental Research Center (CERC), based in Columbia, Mo., and traveled the Missouri River Basin and its tributaries studying and mapping river modifications (including man-made channels and dams) and their effect on the pallid sturgeon.”

Additional Reading.

- New Kilauea Volcano Summit Eruption Video Hits Web. West Hawaii Today (10/20).
- 2 Million Americans Are Drinking High Levels Of Arsenic In Their Well Water. Huffington Post (10/22, Hsiao)/
- ‘Tired Mountain Syndrome’? North Korea’s Nuclear Test Site May Have It. Chicago Tribune (10/22, Fifield).
- What’s Shaking? New Online Map Shows Texans Where Earthquakes Strike. Dallas Morning News (10/20, Kuchment, Writer).

Top National News

Trump Makes Case For Budget And Tax Reform, Urges House To Move Quickly.

Coverage of President Trump’s budget and tax reform plan portrays the measure as having momentum after initial passage in the Senate last week, but possibly in peril in the House because the plan is projected to increase the federal deficit. Reports say that the White House is campaigning hard for the measure, trying to avoid the missteps of the healthcare effort.

Errol Barnett reported on the CBS Weekend News (10/22, story 2, 1:25, Ninan) that the President “is now optimistic his tax plan will pass soon. ... The Republican-controlled Senate passed the budget this week, which the House is expected to take up in coming days.” Tom Llamas said on ABC World News Tonight (10/22, story 2, 0:40) that it would be “the biggest tax cut ever.” Trump said during an interview on Fox News’ Sunday Morning Futures (10/22, Bartiromo), “We have so many things in this plan that are going to be for growth.” He said that if GDP growth hits 2.5%, “it more than pays for everything.” USA Today (10/22, Jackson) reports that the President said in the interview that “legislative setbacks suffered” by the GOP on healthcare “won’t affect the prospects of a tax cut.”

On NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 3, 1:45), Kate Snow reported that the President “turned up the pressure on Republicans to come up with a tax reform package today, saying he wants an overhaul plan on his desk by Thanksgiving.” The AP (10/22, Colvin) reports that during a conference call with House Republicans, the President urged legislators to move quickly. According to one GOP official, Trump “told the members they were on the verge of doing something historic.” The Washington Post (10/22, Wagner, Newmyer) reports that during the call, the President and House Speaker Ryan “argued that passing the revised Senate budget this week provides the best shot to get a tax bill enacted by the end of the year, according to participants.” The Hill (10/22, Marcos) reports that Vice President Pence also took part in the call.

Politico (10/22, Bade) writes, “Trump’s presence on the call highlights the sensitivity of this week’s budget vote for House Republicans. Backing the Senate bill would require House Republicans to endorse a budget that is not balanced over 10 years, adds $1.5 trillion to the federal deficit through tax cuts, and does not include spending reductions the House had incorporated in its own earlier draft of the budget.” Axios (10/22, Swan) reports that House Ways and Means Committee Republicans “are currently exploring not cutting the income tax rate for people who earn $1 million or more per year,” which “will help stem the deficit increase from tax cuts for corporations and the middle class.”

The President also makes his case in a USA Today (10/22) op-ed, writing, “We are now among the highest taxed nations in the developed world. ... Revising our tax code is not just a policy discussion – it is a moral one, because we are not talking about the government’s money – we are talking about your money, your hard work.” He writes, “The tax cuts and reforms of the 1980s show that when we empower the American people to pursue their dreams, they will not only achieve greatness and create prosperity beyond imagination, they will build an entirely new world."

WTimes Analysis: President's "Game Plan" Includes Ivanka Trump/Kushner "Charm Offensive."

The Washington Times (10/22, Miller) reports that the President "has an aggressive game plan to corral Senate support for tax reform, including repeated phone calls, golf outings, formal meetings and deploying Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner in a charm offensive." The Times says that the President "is determined to avoid a repeat of the fiasco of the Obamacare repeal when the bill fell short by a single Republican vote." Axios (10/22, Swan) reports that Ivanka Trump will appear at a White House tax reform town hall in Bucks County, Pennsylvania on Monday.

Mulvaney, McConnell Hopeful For Tax Measure By End Of Year. Reuters (10/22, Chiacu, Schroeder) reports that OMB Director Mulvaney and Senate Majority Leader McConnell both "said on Sunday they hoped for action on a Republican tax reform package by the end of the year, while keeping their options open on how to pay for sweeping tax cuts." The Washington Times (10/22, Richardson) reports that Mulvaney told Fox News that "he 'absolutely' believes that President Trump will have a tax reform bill on his desk by December." Mulvaney said on Fox News Sunday (10/22, Perino), "We are hearing [that] the House may go ahead and either take the Senate amendments or move very quickly to accept them, and we may save as many as ten or 12 legislative days."

Bloomberg News (10/22, Niquette, Varley, Brody) reports that McConnell said the measure could advance and be made revenue-neutral, echoing the President's growth argument. McConnell said on CNN's State Of The Union (10/22, Bash) that there will be significant "growth [that] you'll get out of this pro-growth tax reform, which reduces rates for the middle class, which makes it considerably less likely that jobs go overseas, by correcting business taxes in such a way that produces more jobs and opportunity." McConnell said on Fox News Sunday (10/22, Perino) that the "overall goal is the middle tax relief."

Lankford, Commentators Say Budget Would Drive Up Deficit. Sen. James Lankford, appearing on CBS' Face The Nation (10/22, Dickerson), said that there is "tremendous frustration" among some senators "as we walk through this process. There are several votes to bring back the budget not necessarily on the tax side but some of the spending side."

Jason Furman, who chaired the White House Council of Economic Advisers during President Obama's second term, writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/22) that the reduction in the corporate rate to 20% would reduce federal annual revenue by about $200 billion, but is not likely to lead to the growth in average income suggested by the White House. Robert Samuelson writes in his Washington Post (10/22) column, "We cannot afford the Trump tax cut if it loses any revenue; the idea that it will 'pay for itself' looks like wishful thinking – nice if it happens, but the odds are against it."

White House Reiterates Support For Kelly's Defense Of Trump As Video Released.

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders rallied behind White House Chief of Staff Kelly over his defense of President Trump's phone call expressing his condolences to the widow of Sgt. La David Johnson after Rep. Frederica Wilson exacerbated the tension on Friday by rejecting his criticism of her while asserting in an interview with the New York Times that the Administration is "full of white supremacists." The tone of the coverage was dramatically different from the positive reception on Thursday, as reporting highlighted that video footage of a 2005 speech showed Kelly mischaracterized her remarks. Many articles also took issue with Sanders' assertion that Kelly, a four-star general, was above reproach by virtue of his long career serving his country.

Leading CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 5:04 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), White House correspondent Sarah Murray said Trump's "response to a US soldier killed in Niger" is "devolving into a political brawl," with "Trump taking to Twitter again overnight to blast" Rep. Wilson, "who accused him of being insensitive in a condolence call when he told Myeshia Johnson...that her husband knew what he got into when he signed up to serve." Trump's tweeted, "The Fake News is going crazy with wacky Congresswoman Wilson (D), who was SECRETLY on a very personal call, and gave a total lie on content!" Murray added that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders on Friday "refused to entertain really any questions about that mission in Niger, instead insisting the Administration would wait until an investigation into the events is completed."

Leading the second hour of CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), host Wolf Blitzer similarly said the White House is attempting "to quash the controversy," but NBC Nightly News (10/20, story 2, 2:15, Holt) reported the "fierce political battle" instead "intensified" on Friday. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (10/20, A1, Nakamura) says

Kelly's "false claims" and "escalating political mud fight [have] overshadowed the grief of Myeshia Johnson and the heroism of her dead husband, Sgt. La David Johnson, who gave his life for his country." The Post adds that the President, in an interview with Fox Business that was recorded on Friday, "accused Wilson of debasing Kelly by suggesting that the chief of staff had defended the president at Trump's insistence, in order to keep his job." Trump asserted, "When she made that statement, I thought it was sickening, actually." He continued by praising Kelly's "incredible job" and "said the general, who had listened in on his call with Johnson, was 'offended' that Wilson would make it public."

Leading the CBS Evening News (10/20, lead story, 2:45, Mason), Anthony Mason said Kelly's "emotional defense of the President...came back to bite him...when his facts were called into question by video and by a check of the record." While Sanders "told a reporter Friday that it would be 'highly inappropriate' to get into a debate with 'a four-star Marine general' over whether he misstated facts," the Washington Post (10/20, Wagner) reports that although Kelly on Thursday "said he had been 'stunned' to hear Wilson claim credit at the ceremony for securing the funding for" a federal building named after two slain FBI agents, "a video of her speech at the ceremony showed Wilson did not take credit for securing the money. She instead spent about two minutes of a nine-minute speech recalling the effort that she led in Congress to name the building for the agents, whom she praised effusively in her remarks."

According to Bloomberg News (10/20, Sink, Olorunnipa), the South Florida Sun Sentinel released the video of the event, which "showed that Kelly mischaracterized Wilson's remarks." Bloomberg acknowledges "she did at one point in her speech discuss her work to name the building after the slain FBI agents, though the congresswoman says the speed with which the legislation passed through Congress was a testament to the respect among lawmakers for law enforcement."

Nonetheless, The Hill (10/20, Fabian) says Sanders "vociferously defended" Kelly and suggested his "four-decade career in the Marine Corps makes him beyond reproach." Politico (10/20, Nelson, Caputo) reports Sanders "aggressively defended" Kelly and the Washington Times (10/20, Boyer) reports Sanders "insisted...Kelly was accurate when he described...Wilson talking mostly about herself at the dedication of an FBI building in Florida in 2015." Sanders asserted, "There was a lot of grandstanding. ... He was stunned that she took that opportunity to make it about herself."

The Hill (10/20, Fabian) reports Sanders also said, "As Gen. Kelly pointed out, if you are able to make a sacred act like honoring American heroes all about yourself, you are an empty barrel." She continued, "If you don't understand that reference, I'll put it a little more simply – as we say in the South, all hat no cattle." According to The Hill, "Wilson is known in Congress for her ornate hats."

In addition, The Hill (10/20, Fabian) reports Sanders said, "If the spirit of which [the President's] comments were intended were misunderstood, that's very unfortunate." Sanders added, "His comments were very sympathetic, very respectful, and that was the spirit in which the president intended them. If they were taken any other way, that's certainly an unfortunate thing."

However, The Hill (10/20, Manchester) reports that in a follow up statement to media outlets, Sanders "conceded on Friday evening that 'everyone can be questioned' while defending her earlier remarks in which she said debating...Kelly would be 'highly inappropriate.'" Sanders acknowledged, "Of course everyone can be questioned but after witnessing General Kelly's heartfelt and somber account, we should all be able to agree that impugning his credibility on how best to honor fallen heroes is not appropriate."

Meanwhile, the AP (10/20, Lemire) reports Wilson on Friday "kept the barbed exchanges going, adding a new element by suggesting a racial context." In an interview that ran on the front page of the New York Times (10/20, A1, Alcindor, Shear), Wilson "called Mr. Kelly a liar and hinted strongly that the altercation, prompted by a call from President Trump to the widow of a fallen black soldier, was racially charged." The Times says that although "she stopped short of accusing Mr. Kelly, a retired Marine general, of racial animus, she did say that others in the White House are racially biased." She asserted, "The White House itself is full of white supremacists." Wilson continued, "I feel very sorry for [Kelly] because he feels such a need to lie on me and I'm not even his enemy. I just can't even imagine why he would fabricate something like that. That is absolutely insane. I'm just flabbergasted because it's very easy to trace." She added, "They are making themselves look like fools. They have no credibility. They are trying to assassinate my character, and they are assassinating their own because everything they say is coming out and shown to be a lie."

The Washington Times (10/20, Miller) reports Wilson in an appearance on CNN separately

"accused...Kelly of lying about her and using a 'racist term' when he publicly admonished her for politicizing the president's condolence call to a Special Forces' widow." Wilson said, "He has my sympathy for the loss of his son, but he can't just go on TV and lie on me." However, the Times says Wilson "took offense at the phrase 'empty barrel.'" She explained, "That's a racist term, too. I'm thinking about that. We looked it up in the dictionary because I had never heard of an empty barrel, and I don't like to be dragged into something like that."

On CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 5:42 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), White House reporter Kaitlan Collins said while Wilson contributed "to this ongoing feud," Trump "is certainly the one who started it. But overall, the more important thing here is that the focus is shifting away from these four dead soldiers and on to a war of words between the White House and a Congresswoman." On Sanders' suggestion that four-star generals should not be questioned, former CIA counterterrorism official Philipp Mudd questioned, "why are we talking about this? what was she talking about? what a hot mess this is," because it would mean "we can't ask questions" from former officials. On Afghanistan, for example, "We're 16 years into a war and the United States military under the direction of the President is expanding the troop presence in Afghanistan when we've failed to subdue the Taliban and they're on the rise. Why do we think another troop surge is going to win? That's not a fair question to ask?"

Rep. Eric Swalwell likewise told CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 6:12 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), "Of course [Kelly] should be questioned," because all American "leaders are supposed to be questioned. That's what the soldiers who, you know, fight and sacrifice for our country – that's what they're fighting for is the ability of the press and our constituents to question us." On the issue of the ambush in Niger, Swalwell lamented, "There is a blunder somewhere," and the victims' "families are owed an accurate explanation as to what happened to their loved ones."

Jake Sullivan, a former director of the State Department Policy Planning Office, told CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 5:13 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said attention should be focused on how the US can prevent similar attacks from happening again. "I have to say," he continued, "it was President Trump who kicked off the politics by falsely claiming that his predecessors didn't get involved in talking to the families of the fallen."

Former President Obama's senior adviser, David Axelrod, told CNN's Situation Room (10/20, 6:34 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that he believes "it's tragic that all of this has eclipsed what should be a reflection on these four service people who gave their lives, these four Green Berets, for the country and the investigation of exactly what happened here." Former State Department spokesman John Kirby described Sanders' remarks on questioning Kelly "absolutely an ignorant thing to say."

On Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/20, 8:05 p.m. EDT, Carlson), Mark Green, a former First Public Advocate of New York City, argued that the issue is why Trump said what he said, and why he "was silent for 12 days" on the four US soldiers' deaths. Green also dismissed the host's criticism of Wilson for allegedly transforming Kelly's comments into a race issue.

Washington Post (10/20, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump contends "Kelly is not first-and-foremost a Marine general. He is the White House chief of staff who was brought out to the daily news briefing to provide cover for how Trump handled a phone call to the family of a dead soldier and who then proceeded to disparage a member of Congress while telling an untrue story about her." He adds in no way is it "inappropriate to ask Kelly questions about his comments simply because he used to serve in the military, any more than it would be inappropriate to ask those same questions of his predecessor in the chief of staff role, Reince Priebus." Bump continues "even if Kelly were still a general, it's the media's job to ask questions." He concludes "Sanders's move is disrespectful, dishonest and dangerous. It suggests that some people who serve the country are above fair criticism and the need to be held accountable and, more egregiously, that those they serve should enjoy that same privilege."

Trump Thanks Fox News For Defending His Call To Widow. The Hill (10/20, Delk) "Briefing Room" blog reports President Trump on Friday "thanked Geraldo Rivera...for defending him against accusations that he was inconsiderate to the family of a slain U.S. soldier." In reposting a video featuring Rivera saying that the President "gets no slack at all, and it's part of the reason we are so utterly divided now, that even this, even the most sacred event – honoring a hero – becomes politicized," Trump tweeted, "Thank you @GeraldoRivera @FoxandFriends. Agree!"

Meanwhile, in the lead Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/20, 8:00 p.m. EDT, Carlson) story, host Tucker Carlson recalled Kelly's "18 minutes of mesmerizing remarks from the briefing room and begged politicians and the press not to politicize the mourning of Gold Star families," and "singled out" Wilson. According to Carlson, Wilson appeared "delighted on the attack because it made her more famous, which goes to prove Gen. Kelly was right in the first place."

Eric, Lara Trump: Kelly Thought Gold Star Controversy Was “Disgusting.” The Washington Times (10/20, Persons) reports Eric Trump in an appearance on Fox News said Friday that Kelly “was upset when my father was criticized. I think he came to my father’s defense in a very big way because I think he thought it was disgusting.” Lara Trump added, “My father-in-law is the biggest champion of the military there is, and we all in this country love and respect our military and no one more so than the president.”

The Hill (10/20, Manchester) reports Lara Trump also indicated that she had read the transcript of the President’s call with Myeshia Johnson, but Sanders “said Friday that there was no transcript.” Sanders stated, “I believe she was responding to reports and things she read. I haven’t spoken directly to her. I refer you to the campaign that handles her press inquiries.”

Under Threat Of Subpoena, Mattis Meets With McCain, Graham To Discuss Niger Operations.

Leading Fox News’ Special Report (10/20, 6:00 p.m. EDT, Baier), chief White House correspondent John Roberts reported Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John McCain “complained loudly last week that the Senate is not getting the information it deserves about military operations in Niger, and he’s prepared to do whatever it takes to get it,” so “under the threat of a subpoena for information on the Niger attacks,” Defense Secretary Mattis “marched over to Sen. John McCain’s office” for a meeting with him and Sen. Lindsey Graham.

CNN’s Situation Room’s (10/20, 5:09 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Pentagon correspondent, Barbara Starr, similarly reported Mattis briefed McCain a day after the lawmaker had “threatened subpoenas if the Pentagon doesn’t start telling Congress what it knows” about the incident.

The Washington Post (10/20, Demirjian) reports Mattis told McCain and Graham that “the military is shifting its counterterrorism strategy to focus more on Africa, put decision-making authority in the hands of commanders in the field, and expand the ability to use lethal force against suspected terrorists,” the lawmakers said. CNN’s Situation Room (10/20, 6:08 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) global affairs correspondent Elise Labott reported Mattis also defended “his troops in the face of criticism.” Said Mattis, “We can do better at communication. We can always improve on communication, and that’s exactly what we’re going to do.” Mattis continued, “Having seen some of the news reports, the US military does not leave its troops behind, and I – we’d just ask that you not question the actions of the troops who were caught in the firefight and question whether or not they did everything they could in order to bring everyone out at once.”

Bloomberg News (10/20, Dennis) reports that following the meeting, Graham warned “the war on terrorism will expand with more aggressive rules of engagement.” Fox News’ Special Report (10/20, 6:38 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Graham, who predicted that “the next 9/11 will come from Niger.” He added, “the war is heading to Africa. It is beginning to morph as we suppress the enemy in the mid-east, they are going to move. They are not going to quit.”

On Fox News’ Special Report (10/20, 6:43 p.m. EDT, Baier), Erin McPike of the Independent Journal Review commented, “I’ve heard a number of congressman say we are not talking about how ISIS is on the run because of the liberation of Raqqa. But this entire story shows they might be on the run, that they are running to other areas,” namely, Africa, and therefore “all of these missions are really important. and they continue to be.”

Pentagon Attempts To Answer Questions About Failed Niger Operation. In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (10/20, lead story, 4:15, Muir), David Muir reported, “It’s been 16 days since those lives were lost, and today President Trump was asked again to address the mission in public,” and whether the fallen soldiers had “adequate intelligence” and “adequate backup.” Correspondent Mary Bruce reiterated, “The week ended the same way it began: with questions about why President Trump still hasn’t addressed the ambush in Niger that killed four Special Ops soldiers.” As of Friday night, “key questions remain: Did the unit get the proper advance intelligence and backup support? Officials say they didn’t expect to be in combat. Also, was Sgt. La David Johnson left behind? The rest of the unit pulled out, but his body was not recovered for at least 20 hours. The President silent on the details even as he takes credit for US victories against ISIS.”

In a front-page article, the New York Times (10/20, A1, Searcey, Cooper, Schmitt) reports “the Pentagon is trying to determine whether American forces involved in a deadly ambush in Niger this month diverted from their routine patrol to embark on an unapproved mission, military officials said on Friday.” The Times says these questions have arisen “because the American and Nigerian soldiers on the patrol have given conflicting accounts about whether they were simply ambushed or were attacked after trying to chase Islamic insurgents, according to military officials from both countries.”

David Martin of the CBS Evening News (10/20, story 2, 2:20, Mason) explained, “The body of Sgt. La David Johnson was found nearly a mile away from the ambush site. Why he got separated from the other Americans, and how long he survived, remain unclear. Pentagon officials say a locator beacon was tracked for several hours, fueling hopes he was alive and raising the agonizing question of whether he could have been saved if the US military had been able to react faster. The biggest mystery is why the patrol had not expected enemy contact in a part of Niger where this UN map shows 46 attacks took place over the last 20 months." Martin added that the Pentagon's "investigation has to determine not only what happened on the ground in Niger but why Washington failed to meet its obligation to the troops."

In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (10/20, lead story, 2:15, Holt), Pentagon correspondent Hans Nichols revealed that "a senior congressional aide who has been extensively briefed tells NBC News the ambush that killed him and three other soldiers stemmed in part from a massive intelligence failure." The Pentagon has cautioned "that such conclusions are premature." The FBI has joined "the investigation with forensic support, looking into how a team of well-trained Special Forces was ambushed, the Pentagon says, by a group of roughly 50 ISIS-linked fighters."

Senate To Conduct AUMF Debate Following Niger Deaths. The Washington Post (10/20, Demirjian) reports the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "is taking up a long-awaited debate about authorizing military force against the Islamic State as President Trump comes under unprecedented public scrutiny for his treatment of dead soldiers' families, following an ambush on troops helping to fight Islamic terrorists there." The Post reports the committee "will grill Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and Defense Secretary Jim Mattis in an open hearing on Oct. 30 about whether the administration thinks it is necessary for Congress to pass a new authorization for use of military force, or AUMF, to replace existing AUMFs that date back to the early years of the George W. Bush administration." The Post describes the hearing as a possible "precursor to a more congressionally-driven legislative effort to write an AUMF that can draw enough Republican and Democratic support to pass."

However, in an analysis, McClatchy (10/20, Clark, Goldstein) questions if Democrats will try to "use the incident as Trump's Benghazi." McClatchy highlights that "Democratic calls for hearings and probes are mounting." Sen. Richard Blumenthal, a member of the Armed Services Committee, calling for "a full and prompt investigation" in addition to hearings, as has Sen. Bill Nelson, while Rep. Ted Lieu wants the House Foreign Affairs Committee to hold hearings. Nonetheless, McClatchy acknowledges "many key Democrats," including Sen. Tim Kaine, "have urged resisting the temptation to use Niger for political gain."

State Department: Ambassador Did Not Deny Request For Support To Niger Attack Victims. The Los Angeles Times (10/20, Bennett) reports a State Department spokesman on Friday said the US ambassador to Niger "did not deny support for a U.S. Special Forces unit that lost four soldiers in a deadly ambush on the border between Mali and Niger on Oct. 4." The spokesman said, "As required by the president, the embassy and U.S. AFRICOM continuously engage to address security threats to all U.S. government personnel and operations." The spokesman added, "This close cooperation ensures activities are coordinated, effective and sustainable. The president directs that disagreements, which are rare, are quickly referred to the secretary of Defense and secretary of State for immediate resolution."

France Calls On US To Increase Support For Efforts Against West Africa Militants. Reuters (10/20, Irish, Stewart) reports French Defense Minister Florence Parly in a visit to Washington, DC for meetings with Defense Secretary Mattis and National Security Adviser McMaster on Friday called on the US to "step up its support for a planned African force to fight Islamist militants in West Africa or it could fail, leaving French troops to carry the burden alone." Parly said, "In the Sahel, France is deploying in a high-intensity environment, with tremendous support from the United States. We are immensely grateful for that support." However, Parly added, "Much more needs to be done. We can't be, and don't want to be, the praetorian [guards] of sovereign African countries. They must be made able to defeat terror on their own."

UN: Militants Have Perpetrated At Least 46 Attacks In Area Of Niger Where US Troops Killed. Reuters (10/20, Balima) reports a UN agency on Friday announced that in the Tahoua and Tillabery regions of Niger, which was "where four U.S. Green Berets were killed during a mission the U.S. military had considered low-risk," armed groups have conducted at least 46 recorded attacks since early last year.

LATimes Analysis: Kelly Resembles Trump Voters, Not President. The Los Angeles Times (10/20, Bierman) says that in "Kelly's extraordinary remarks on Thursday from the White House briefing room, in which he segued from defending Trump to speak of loss – both his own, of a son, and the country's, of old civilities, all while attacking a Florida congresswoman – offered a glimpse of what" he and the President "seem to share. Both hearken to an undefined time in America when some things were 'sacred,' as Kelly put it, to a better moment that's been lost." The Times adds that "in sharing his nostalgia, Kelly did not sound like the more rough-spoken Trump. But he sounded an awful lot like many of the voters who put Trump into office."

Fox News Apologizes For Featuring Pro-Trump Veteran Who Lied About Being A Navy SEAL.

The New York Times (10/20, Bromwich) reports Fox News on Thursday issued a correction after airing a story earlier this month about John Garofalo, "a highly decorated veteran: a Navy SEAL who had served in Vietnam, had earned two Purple Hearts and had hand-carved a presidential seal that he hoped to give to President Trump." The Times adds that in addition to retracting the story, the network "said that 'all' of his claims 'turned out to be untrue.'" In a statement, Fox said Garofalo "did not serve in Vietnam," was "never a U.S. Navy SEAL," and while "he showed us medals, Garofalo was not awarded two Purple Hearts or any of the other nearly two dozen commendations he claimed to have received, except for the National Defense Service Medal." Fox concluded, "We apologize to our viewers, especially veterans and servicemen and women."

WPost: Kelly Owes Wilson An Apology. In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/20) demands White House Chief of Staff Kelly apologize to Rep. Frederica S. Wilson for mischaracterizing "the representative's remarks at the dedication of an FBI building in Miramar, Fla., in 2015." The Post adds that "as a video by the Florida Sun Sentinel of Ms. Wilson's remarks that day shows, Mr. Kelly got it all wrong." The Post concludes "it is unfortunate that the sacrifice of brave people...can get overwhelmed by the petty name-calling of politics. That is a point Mr. Kelly was trying to make Thursday, and that he undercut with his misrepresentation of Ms. Wilson. He needs to set the record straight."

Marcus Criticizes Kelly For Declaring Women "Sacred." In her Washington Post (10/20, Marcus) column, Ruth Marcus says that while Kelly on Thursday had her "mesmerized and, to be honest, a bit teary-eyed as the retired four-star general spoke of what it is like to be on the early-morning receiving end of the news that would break any parent's heart," his "disquisition" reminiscing on how women had been "sacred" during his youth left her "taken aback." According to Marcus, assuming Kelly was "referring to the report on Harvey Weinstein – where were you, exactly, during the presidential campaign?" She concludes that "if the upside of chivalry is the opened door, the cape spread upon the muddy ground, the downside is the presumption, perhaps subconscious, that feminine is the equivalent of weak; the impulse to treat women in the workplace differently from their male counterparts; and the consequent distortion – sometimes overt, more often subtle – of career choices and opportunities."

Trump Promises Tax Cut After Senate GOP Passes Budget.

Reuters (10/20, Ahmann) reports President Trump in an interview on Friday with Fox Business scheduled to air on Sunday "said...he thinks Republicans have the votes needed to pass a big tax cut package" and "said he had been thinking about tying tax legislation to an infrastructure spending bill but that it was not clear a combined package would gain more votes." Trump asserted, "I don't want to take any chances cause I feel we have the votes right now the way it is," according to the transcript of the interview. The Hill (10/20, Manchester) reports the President also argued "lawmakers should forego Christmas break if they do not pass tax reform before then."

Meanwhile, the AP (10/20, Gordon, Taylor) reports the President in a pair of early morning tweets also said, "The Budget passed late last night, 51 to 49. We got ZERO Democrat votes with only Rand Paul (he will vote for Tax Cuts) voting against. This now allows for the passage of large scale Tax Cuts (and Reform), which will be the biggest in the history of our country!"

Ryan: GOP Tax Plan To Introduce New Tax Bracket For Highest Earners. The Washington Times (10/20, Persons) reports House Speaker Ryan in an appearance on CBS News "said Friday that the House plans to introduce a fourth tax bracket for high-income earners." Ryan asserted, "This is about the people, about half of which in this country are living paycheck to paycheck, and giving them a break on their taxes, giving them some tax relief, and closing loopholes and carve-outs, which disproportionately benefit the very high income people — the very well-connected businesses." The Hill (10/20, Jagoda) reports Ryan continued, "We're introducing the fourth bracket...so that high-income earners do not see a big rate cut, and so that those resources go to the middle class."

Politico (10/20, Faler) reports Ryan "declined Friday to get into the specifics of how it would work, saying lawmakers are still hashing that out, but said Republicans don't want their plan to be a windfall for the rich." According to Politico, "Ryan's comments came on the heels of Senate approval of a budget plan that will grease the legislative skids for Republicans' tax rewrite plans."

Conservative Lawmakers Signal Support For Tax Cuts. Reuters (10/20, Becker) reports the President's tax reform proposals "won partial support on Friday" after Sen. Rand Paul "said he was 'all in' for massive tax cuts, but the party was still far from united over how to achieve the main item on its domestic agenda." The Washington Times (10/20, Persons) reports Paul tweeted, "I'm all in for tax cuts @realDonaldTrump. The biggest, boldest cuts possible – and soon!" The Times highlights that Paul had been the sole Republican to vote against the Senate GOP's budget bill "due to changes in the federal spending caps."

Meanwhile, in an interview with Bloomberg News (10/20, House), House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows revealed he has told "Republican leaders most of his group will support the GOP's budget – as long as the Ways and Means Committee marks up and passes a tax bill by the week of Oct. 30," as the lawmakers within the group "want a House-wide floor vote on a tax bill by Thanksgiving." Meadows said, "We are willing to take a look at supporting the Senate budget next week without going to conference, as long as it speeds up the work on the tax bill." Politico (10/20, Ferris, Bade) reports the House Freedom Caucus "decided on the stance on a conference call Friday, according to GOP sources."

In addition, The Hill (10/20, Elis) reports Rep. Dave Brat, a member of the conservative House Freedom Caucus, and other conservatives "are dropping their demands for billions in mandatory spending cuts as GOP House leaders ready to take up the Senate-passed budget next week, a key step for tax reform." According to The Hill, House Budget Committee Chairwoman Diane Black issued a statement on Friday announcing her support for the Senate budget bill.

The Washington Times (10/20, Persons) reports Sen. Tim Scott in an appearance on Fox News "said Friday that he's 'encouraged' by talks with the House Freedom Caucus about the Republican budget deal." Scott said, "The word coming out of the House as late last night when we were still on the floor was that the budget as we constructed it probably is acceptable for the Freedom Caucus. ... If that's the case, that saves us about two weeks of negotiations with the House."

A front-page Wall Street Journal (10/20, A1, Rubin) analysis lays out the challenges that remain to passing a tax reform bill, as does the New York Times (10/20, Tankersley), which reports the passage of the Senate's budget resolution "sets the stage for what could be a wild ride of tax debate over the next few months, which Republican leaders hope will end with...Trump signing a bill into law by Christmas." The Times emphasizes that "it will be a difficult task, particularly in the Senate, where Republicans can afford to lose only two votes from their ranks to pass a bill along party lines." Bloomberg News (10/20, Kapur) similarly acknowledges the "sharp divides over an array of non-binding amendments revealed the towering challenge [the President] faces from here."

WSJournal: House Should Pass The Senate Budget. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/20) writes that instead of forming a combined budget in a conference committee, the House of Representatives should pass the Senate budget, which – unlike the deficit-neutral House budget – leaves room for $1.5 trillion in tax cuts over 10 years.

WPost: Despite Senate's Vote For "Fiscal Irresponsibility," Congress Still Has Time To Form Better Budget. In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/20) writes that although Senate Republicans on Thursday passed a budget plan allowing a "massive tax cut with uncertain benefits for most Americans," there is still an opportunity for congressional committees to halt the Senate's "fiscal irresponsibility" and form a plan that at least calls for revenue-neutral tax reform, such as that passed before by the House.

US Posts Largest Budget Deficit Since 2013.

Bloomberg News (10/20, Wasson, Mohsin) reports the US on Friday "posted its largest budget deficit since 2013 in the fiscal year that just ended, as a pickup in spending exceeded revenue gains." According to Bloomberg, the Treasury Department revealed that the deficit "grew to $665.7 billion in the 12 months through Sept. 30, compared with a $585.6 billion shortfall in fiscal 2016," which "was in line with the Congressional Budget Office's estimate of $668 billion." Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and OMB Director Mick Mulvaney in a joint statement "blamed weaker-than-expected tax receipts on historically 'sub-par' economic growth." Mulvaney said, "These numbers should serve as a smoke alarm for Washington, a reminder that we need to grow our economy again and get our fiscal house in order. We can do that through smart spending restraint, tax reform, and cutting red tape." The Wall Street Journal (10/20, Davidson) reports that Mnuchin said that the deficit "underscore the importance of achieving robust and sustained economic growth." Mnuchin added, "Through a combination of tax reform and regulatory relief, this country can return to higher levels of GDP growth, helping to erase our fiscal deficit."

According to the New York Times (10/20, Rappeport), the budget deficit "highlight[s] the nation's worsening fiscal trajectory as lawmakers consider a $1.5 trillion tax cut." The AP (10/20, Taylor) reports House Speaker Ryan in a Friday appearance on "CBS This Morning" said, "We're Republicans. We're sensitive to the deficit." However, Senate Minority Leader Schumer asserted, "With the deficit as large and growing as quickly as it is, Republicans pursuing a reckless plan that would blow a huge hole in the deficit and put Medicare and Medicaid at risk is the height of irresponsibility."

Judge Extends Halt To Trump's Travel Ban.

Reuters (10/21, Goldberg) reports that US District Judge Derrick Watson on Friday extended his block on President Trump's travel ban. Watson's ruling, issued in the US District Court for the District of Hawaii, "converted his temporary restraining order to a preliminary injunction."

Mattis To Discuss North Korean Threat With Asian Defense Ministers.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Lubold) reports Defense Secretary Mattis arrived in the Philippines on Sunday, and will meet with Japanese Defense Minister Itsunori Onodera, Philippine Defense Minister Delfin Lorenzana, and South Korean Defense Minister Song Young-moo during a Monday gathering of Association of Southeast Asian Nations defense ministers. The Journal says Mattis is also slated to meet with Indian, Indonesian, and Malaysian officials for discussions on "the regional security crisis caused by the reckless DPRK, North Korea provocations" and other issues, according to Mattis in remarks to reporters.

NBC Analysis: North Koreans Appear Unafraid Of Potential War With US. On NBC Nightly News (10/22, story 7, 1:50, Snow), Keir Simmons reported from a 1,000-year-old Buddhist temple 100 miles north of Pyongyang, North Korea. Noting the temple's beauty, Simmons said, "Standing here, it's hard to take in that the leadership of North Korea has said a nuclear war could break out at any moment." Simmons mentioned that the temple was bombed by the US during the Korean War, and he asked a woman there if she fears the temple will see another war. The woman reportedly replied, "Another war won't happen because we are a nuclear superpower. ... The US should wake up from its war dream." A monk at the temple said, "Kim Jong-un will protect us," and reportedly added that "sometimes it's okay to kill if it saves more lives."

Petraeus Comments On North Korea Rhetoric. Former CIA Director Petraeus, in an appearance on ABC's This Week (10/22, Raddatz), commented on the rhetoric on North Korea and the possibility for a diplomatic resolution. Petraeus said, "Really, all of this rhetoric, frankly, is aimed, not at North Korea, but at China." He added, "Secretary [of State] Tillerson is undertaking the kind of strategic engagement that is necessary here, to build a relationship with China." Petraeus downplayed the likelihood a US-North Korea military conflict, and noted that the communication strategy was to encourage China to act on this issue.

Cruz Urges State Dept. To Relist North Korea As State Sponsor Of Terrorism. Sen. Ted Cruz, in an op-ed for the New York Times (10/22, Cruz), outlines the long list of "accusations against Pyongyang." He stresses, "It is time to acknowledge that North Korea may never be interested in negotiating away its nuclear deterrent," and thus "the United States must approach North Korea with sobriety and urgency." Cruz "strongly urge[s] the State Department to relist North Korea" as a state sponsor of terrorism, which will strengthen the US' "hand and weaken that of Kim Jong-un," and ultimately "meet this challenge with the resolve it has long demanded."

Administration Plan For Coal, Nuclear Power Draws Criticism From Environmental, Oil Groups.

The Wall Street Journal (10/22, Puko) reports that an Energy Department proposal asking the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to implement market reforms designed to shore up nuclear and coal-fired power plants is drawing opposition from an array of environmental and oil groups, including oil and gas companies, some public utilities, wind and solar power producers, electricity consumers, and environmentalists. The plan submitted last month, which in effect would ensure profits for certain nuclear and coal-fired power plants, has placed coal miners and a small group of power companies against nearly the entire rest of the energy industry, much of which views the proposal as a bailout for struggling power plants.

EPA Cancels Climate Change Speeches By Agency Scientists.

The New York Times (10/22, Friedman) reports the EPA has canceled speeches by three agency scientists who were slated to discuss climate change at the State of the Narragansett Bay and Watershed conference on Monday in Rhode Island. EPA spokesman John Konkus confirmed the speaking appearances had been canceled. The Times adds that the move "highlights widespread concern that the E.P.A. will silence government scientists from speaking publicly or conducting work on climate change.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“America’s Forever Wars.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/22) writes that in light of the fact that the US military is widely deployed and engaged in a large number of conflicts – with just over 240,000 troops in at least 172 countries and territories, many engaged in counterterrorism operations – it is “time to take stock of how broadly American forces are already committed to far-flung regions and to begin thinking hard about how much of that investment is necessary, how long it should continue and whether there is a strategy beyond just killing terrorists.” The Times concludes that while the military is “essential” for national security, the US should incorporate more diplomacy and engagement in multilateral institutions and should examine how to address its military “largess.”

Washington Post.

“Sessions’s Plan For Immigration Courts Would Undermine Their Integrity.” The Washington Post (10/22) editorializes that Attorney General Sessions “decided the state of the immigration courts in remarks Oct. 12 before the Justice Department’s Executive Office for Immigration Review, lamenting ‘rampant abuse and fraud’ in asylum applications.” The Post notes that as part of Sessions “push for an overhaul of the immigration system, the department also plans to begin evaluating immigration judges on the basis of how many cases they resolve.” The Post argues that “this proposal would do little to fix the United States’ backlogged immigration courts and much to undermine their integrity.” According to the Post, “implementing quotas could actually have the effect of jamming up the court system further,” as “immigrants ill-served by judges struggling to meet quotas would be more likely to battle the judges’ rulings, glutting federal appeals courts.” The Post contends that “providing more resources to immigration courts would be a much more effective means of tackling the backlog.”

“Watch What Duterte Does, Not What He Says.” A Washington Post (10/22) editorial describes Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte as “erratic, profane and crude,” and says he is “a person to whom the old adage applies: Watch what he does, not what he says.” Duterte, who launched “a nationwide extrajudicial campaign against suspected drug dealers and users in which thousands of people were killed,” has said “he may end the awful campaign. Let’s hope he means it.” The Post adds that Trump, who is scheduled to visit the Philippines in November “should do what he can to bring Mr. Duterte back toward the United States and discourage him from resuming the extrajudicial drug war.”

“Why is Va. Treating Its Students – Especially Its Black Students – Like Criminals?” The Washington Post (10/22) editorializes that “in a staggering number” of school discipline cases, “the students, who are often preteens in elementary and middle schools, are referred to police and the courts — a wildly disproportionate response that can stigmatize children at school and, in some cases, be a stain on their records for years.” According to the Post, “in the most comprehensive study on the so-called school-to-prison pipeline, published by the Center for Public Integrity in 2015, Virginia schools were the worst offenders, shunting disobedient kids to law enforcement at nearly three times the national rate.” The Post adds that “a new state law is in place to encourage local school boards to develop alternatives to suspending students, including counseling, community service and mediation,” but “lawmakers will have to keep the pressure on to tamp down what amounts to massive overreaction on the part of school authorities.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump Caves On Ethanol.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/22) writes that President Trump and EPA Administrator Pruitt caved under pressure from the ethanol lobby and Midwestern Republican senators when Pruitt announced Thursday that the EPA won’t reduce its proposed biofuels quota for 2018 and in fact may even increase it. The Journal argues that the decision represents a capitulation to one of Washington’s worst examples of corporate welfare and a violation of one of Trump’s key campaign promises.

“Shinzo Abe’s Big Win.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/22) says Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s victory in Sunday’s snap election does not reflect a resounding support for his policies, but instead voters’ belief that there were no other viable candidates. The Journal says Abe's failure to deliver on his promise to boost economic growth potential is particularly damaging, and unless he revisits that promise, he will neither thwart a leadership challenge from his own party nor succeed in his call to reform the constitution.

"Richard Cordray's Bad Numbers." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/22, Journal) writes that a new Treasury Department report found that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's 2015 study – upon which it based its rule prohibiting mandatory arbitration agreements forbidding customers from filing class-action lawsuits – carried faulty analysis and that the arbitration rule in fact would hurt consumers and the economy. The Journal concludes that Senate Republicans should consider the report's findings as it potentially heads to vote this week on a Congressional Review Act resolution to overturn the CFPB rule.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

At Fidelity, New Fallout From Claims Of Sexual Harassment, Bullying

China's Pursuit Of Fugitive Businessman Guo Wengui Kicks Off Manhattan Caper Worthy Of Spy Thriller

Trump Backs Some GOP Senators As Bannon Escalates 'War' On Incumbents

Hunt For Yield Fuels Boom In Another Complex, Risky Security

New York Times:

A Newly Assertive CIA Expands Its Taliban Hunt In Afghanistan

Still Waiting For FEMA In Texas And Florida After Hurricanes

Hopes Dim For Congressional Russia Inquiries As Parties Clash

Where Internet Orders Mean Real Jobs, And New Life For Communities

Xi Jinping Pushes China's Global Rise Despite Friction And Fear

A Long-Delayed Reckoning Of The Cost Of Silence On Abuse

Washington Post:

Learning To Love The Coffee They Grow

Trump's Sons See Green In The Blues

Decisive Win For Japan's Abe

Virginia Is On Mind Of Democrats Nationwide

Retirement And College Costs Create Double Bind

Financial Times:

Shinzo Abe Gains Big Victory In Japan Election

Babis Victory In Czech Election Raises Populism Fears

'Wolf Of Wall Street' Warns ICOs Are 'Biggest Scam Ever'

Washington Times:

Mueller's Top Gun In Russia Probe Known For Hardball Tactics, Overturned Rulings

Shinzo Abe, 'Trusted Trump Ally' In Japan, Wins Mandate Before Summit On North Korea, Trade

Federal Tax Loophole Let Planned Parenthood Build Clinics Financed With 'Abortion Bonds'

Abortion, Immigration Dilemmas: Feds Under Short Deadline To Resolve Case For Mexican Girl

Sessions' 'Sanctuary' Penalties Also Hurt Jurisdictions Cooperating With Immigration Agents

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; White House-Tax Reform; Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt; Hollywood Sexual Harassment Scandals; Oklahoma-Tornadoes; Miami Terror Plot Investigation; Ohio-Police Shooting; JFK Files Revealed; Furniture Recalls; West Virginia-Storage Fire; Bill O'Reilly-Sexual Harassment Settlement; Vegetable Recall; Long Island Robbery; Marine Air Show Family.

CBS: White House-Fallen Soldiers Call; White House-Tax Reform; Former Presidents Public Appearance; JFK Files Revealed; Severe Weather; Catalonia Independence Movement; Health-Gene Cancer Therapy; Air Pollution Health Risk; Walking-Healthy Habit.

NBC: Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt; Hollywood Sexual Harassment Scandal; White House-Tax Reform; Oklahoma-Tornadoes; Puerto Rico-Hurricane Recovery; Japan-Election Result; North Korea Threats; China-People's Congress; Police Bodycam Effectiveness; Atlanta-New Football Stadium; Creative Pediatrician.

Network TV At A Glance:

JFK Files Revealed – 4 minutes, 35 seconds

Hollywood Sexual Harassment Scandals – 4 minutes, 25 seconds

Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

White House-Tax Reform – 3 minutes, 50 seconds

Severe Weather – 2 minutes, 30 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Miami Terror Plot Investigation; Congress-Healthcare Bill; Fidelity-Sexual Harassment.

CBS: Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Afghanistan-US Policy; Congress-Tax Reform; Severe Weather.

FOX: Congress-Healthcare Bill; White House-Tax Reform; US Gasoline Price.

NPR: Trump-Asia Tour; Japan-Election Result; Niger-US Casualty Investigation; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with Prime Minister Loong of Singapore; presents the Medal of Honor.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers remarks at an event to commemorate the anniversary of the 1983 bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon; attends the President's joint press conference with Prime Minister Loong; attends the President's presentation of the Medal of Honor.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate debates disaster relief supplemental – Senate convenes and resumes consideration of the House Message to Accompany 'H.R.2266, the Additional Supplemental Appropriations for Disaster Relief Requirements Act', including a vote on a motion to invoke cloture Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 2:00 PM House of Representatives returns after District Work Period

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 469, the Sunshin for Regulations and Regulatory Decrees and Settlements Act of 2017' and 'H.R. 732, the Stop Settlement Slush Funds Act of 2017' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 8:15 AM Singaporean PM Lee speaks at Economic Club of Washington, DC – Singaporean Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong speaks at the Economic Club of Washington, DC, discussing U.S.-Singapore bilateral relations, economic developments in Singapore and the Asia-Pacific, and other global developments Location: The Mayflower Hotel, 1127 Connecticut Ave, NW, Washington, DC www.economicclub.org <https://twitter.com/TheEconomicClub>

6:00 PM Future of Health Summit – Milken Institute Future of Health Summit, bringing together over 500 thought leaders from business, govt, philanthropy, technology, life sciences, food, and health to explore solutions to improve health and wellness. Speakers include U.S. Surgeon General Vice Adm. Jerome Adams, National Institutes of Health Director Francis Collins, Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Scott Gottlieb, NIH National Institute on Drug Abuse Director Nora Volkow, Democratic Sen. Cory Booker, Republican Sen. Ben Sasse, Virginia Governor Terry McAuliffe, World Bank Group President Jim Yong Kim, PepsiCo Chairperson and CEO Indra Nooyi, SoulCycle CEO Melanie Whelan, Major League Soccer President Mark Abbott, Susan G. Komen Foundation founder Nancy Brinker, former U.S. CTO Aneesh Chopra, IBM Watson Health General Manager Deborah DiSanzo, sweetgreen co-founder Jonathan Neman, and former Acting Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services Karen DeSalvo Location: The Ritz-Carlton, Washington DC, 1150 22nd St NW, Washington, DC www.milkeninstitute.org <https://twitter.com/MilkenInstitute>

7:00 PM White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders speaks at GW on President Trump's first year – 'Trump's First Year: Will Politics, Policy and the Presidency Ever be the Same' forum, hosted by George Washington University School of Media and Public Affairs and the White House Correspondents' Association to explore the Trump presidency, deals made and lost, whether he has kept his campaign policies, and how policy can be covered during the 'Twitter presidency'. Speakers include White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, Yahoo! News Chief Washington Correspondent Olivier Knox, Fox News Chief White House Correspondent

John Roberts, American Urban Radio Networks White House correspondent and Washington Bureau Chief April Ryan, The New York Times White House Correspondent Glenn Thrush, GW Professor of Political Science Sarah Binder, Bloomberg News White House Correspondent Margaret Talev and GW School of Media and Public Affairs Director Frank Sesno Location: George Washington University School of Media and Public Affairs, 805 21st St NW, Washington, DC <http://www.gwu.edu/index.cfm> <https://twitter.com/GWTweets>

Military Officers Association of America Annual Meeting – Military Officers Association of America (MOAA) Annual Meeting, including Career Fair, MOAA Partners and Exhibitors Expo, Community Heroes Awards Night, Congressional Breakfast, and Chapter Levels of Excellence Award Ceremony Location: Holiday Inn Hotel & Suites Alexandria-Historic District, 625 First St, Alexandria, VA <http://www.moaa.org/> <https://twitter.com/MilitaryOfficer>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, October 30, 2017
Date: Monday, October 30, 2017 6:12:03 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2017 6:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- ABC: Puerto Rick Gov. Rosselló Announces Cancellation Of Whitefish Energy Contract.
- New York Times: Trump Plans To Shrink Two National Monuments In Utah.
- Los Angeles Times: Under Trump, The Lines Are Drawn For A Battle Over Resources In The West.
- Breitbart: Interior Department Kickstarts Initiative To Get Veterans Back Into America's Wild.
- E&E Publishing: Key Obama-Era Leasing Reform To Get The Ax.
- Politico Morning Energy: Energy Dominance Meets Market Realities.
- The Guardian (UK): Ryan Zinke: Cowboy In Trump's Cabinet Taking Aim At America's Public Lands.
- Daily Sabah (TUR): Turkish Touch On Los Angeles.

- KTVZ-TV Bend (OR): Western Senators Urge Longer Sage Grouse Comment Period.
- The Hill: Trump Administration's Costly One-Two Punch For Taxpayers.
- Billings (MT) Gazette: Guest Opinion: Don't Drill Beside TR's National Park.
- The Hill: It's Congress' Turn To Fight Wildfires.
- Seattle Times: Don't Let Congress Hand Arctic Refuge To Big Oil And Gas.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Deadline Near For Tribal Members To Claim Settlement Money.
- Tribal Leaders Call Land-Use Bill Step In Right Direction.
- Tribal Leaders Received Payments In Failed Brokerage Deal.

Bureau Of Land Management

- CBS: CBS: Wild Horse Protection.
- Taos (NM) News: State, BLM Work Together On Land Exchange.
- U.S. News & World Report: Plan Keeps Most Of Sonoran Desert Monument Open To Shooters.
- KSNV-TV Las Vegas: Bunday, Sons Finally Get Their Day (more Likely Months) In Court For Armed 2014 Standoff.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Air Gun Oil Exploration Might Blast Rare Whale Out Of The Gulf.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Idaho Approves $3 Million To Study Raising Boise River Dams.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- How A 672,000-Gallon Oil Spill Was Nearly Invisible.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- CNN: Forensics Lab Solves Crimes Against Animals.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wildlife Refuge In New England Set For Major Expansion.
- Victoria (TX) Advocate: First Whooping Cranes Sighted At Wildlife Refuge.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Lawmakers: High User Fees Could Hurt Acadia, National Parks.
- New York Times: Trump Celebrates Halloween Early With Journalists' Children.
- Los Angeles Times: Too Many Tourists: Crowding Is A Big Headache At National Parks And Theme Parks.
- CNN: Parks Service Denies Permit For Giant Statue Of Naked Woman On National Mall.
- Washington Examiner: Feds Pull Funding For Black Panther Legacy Project In Berkeley After Backlash.
- Denver Post: Light Pollution Is Stealing Your View Of The Stars.
- Rafu Shimpo (CA): Culture Of Harassment At NPS 'Completely Unacceptable'.
- Marin (CA) Independent Journal: Marin Resident To Head Golden Gate National Recreation Area.
- USA Today: Once-thriving Thurmond, W.Va., Is Now A Coal-country Ghost Town.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Fourpole Creek Watershed Association Honored For Work Protecting Local Waterway.

US Geological Survey

- San Jose (CA) Mercury News: Proposed Name Change For Confederate Corners Subject Of Monterey County Online Survey.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Associated Press: Trump Blasts Mueller Probe Amid Reports That Charges Could Be Announced Today.
- New York Times: Mattis Threatens "Massive" Military Response From US Should North Korea Use Nuclear Weapons.
- NBC: Mattis, Pence Deliver New Warning To North Korea Over Nuclear Weapons.
- CBS: Federal Grand Jury Approves First Criminal Charges In Russia Investigation.
- Washington Post: WPost A1: While Trump Is Eager Salesman On Tax Reform, Congress Crafting Policy.
- Bloomberg News: Brady Announces Republican Tax Plan Will Preserve Itemized Property Tax Deduction.

- Wall Street Journal: National Association of Home Builders To Oppose GOP Tax Bill.
- Reuters: Despite Paris Accord Withdrawal, US To Attend Global Climate Change Talks.
- Chicago Sun-Times: Gore: "Zero Chance" Trump And Pruitt Will Change Their Minds On Climate Change.
- USA Today: USA Today Weighs Administration's Approach To Clean Power Plan.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Insect Armageddon."
 - "Phil Murphy For Governor Of New Jersey."
 - "Abandoned In Calais."
- Washington Post.
 - "Trump Needs To Say Something – And Do Something – About The Assault On The Rohingya."
 - "A Trump Tax Idea That Might Actually Do Some Good."
 - "Chevy Chase Populism In Maryland."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Game Of Healthcare Thrones."
 - "Toomey's 'Guidance' Repeal Guide."
 - "How To Kill American Solar."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Puerto Rick Gov. Rosselló Announces Cancellation Of Whitefish Energy Contract.

On Sunday, Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló announced the cancellation of energy firm Whitefish Energy's contract with the Puerto Rico Electrical Power Authority. On ABC World News Tonight (10/29, story 5, 2:00, Llamas), Victor Oquendo reported on the "shock announcement from the governor." Rosselló: "I have asked the board of the power authority to invoke the cancellation clause in the contract immediately." Oquendo: "That contract with Whitefish Energy could soon be scrapped after the revelations the Montana power company had just two employees when it was awarded a massive $300 million contract to restore power across the island," and that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "hails from the same town the company is based in." Politico (10/29, Wilhelm) reports that Zinke said on Friday that he had "'absolutely nothing to do' with the awarding of the contract to Whitefish."

On the CBS Weekend News (10/29, story 4, 2:00, Quijano), David Begnaud reported, "Three hours after the governor's surprise announcement, Ricardo Ramos, head of the Puerto Rico Electrical Power Authority, announced that the contract will be canceled, but only after Whitefish completes its current work." Ramos: "It becomes effective in 30 days." Begnaud: "So far, Ramos says Whitefish has been paid nearly $11 million, and there is another $9.8 million payment that is pending." The AP (10/29, Coffey, Levin, Fieser) reports that Rosselló also "said that Whitefish will continue with current work, but the contract would then be scrapped – leading to delay of 10 to 12 weeks in completing the work."

On NBC Nightly News (10/29, story 2, 2:35, Snow), Gabe Gutierrez reported that Whitefish Energy CEO Andy Techmanski said that he "had nothing to hide. ... You used LinkedIn to get a $300 million contract?" Techmanski: "LinkedIn's going love this, but yeah." Gutierrez: "He strongly denies that [Zinke] or anyone else in the Trump Administration had anything to do with the contract. Still, FEMA said it had significant concerns and never reviewed the document, despite wording that suggested otherwise. ... Techmanski says that language wasn't supposed to be there and had been deleted from an amended version of the contract."

USA Today (10/29, Gomez) reports, "Democrats and Republicans in Congress have called for investigations, and last week...Rosselló requested that the inspector general of the Department of Homeland Security look into the contract." The Wall Street Journal (10/29, Scurria) reports that Sens. Maria Cantwell and Ron Wyden have also asked the US Comptroller General to investigate the use of public money under the Whitefish contract. The New York Times (10/29, Robles, Caron) reports, "Critics have raised questions about why the power authority opted not to request aid from mainland utilities after Hurricane Maria struck the territory."

The Washington Post (10/29, Mufson) reports that Rosselló's statements have "added to the confusion about the oversight of the utility and the commonwealth, both of which are bankrupt. A financial oversight board Congress created for Puerto Rico is planning to ask a federal court this week for clear authority to examine contracts as small as $10 million," and a federal judge "is overseeing the restructuring of Puerto Rico's more than $70 billion in debts."

Before the announcement, San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz was asked on MSNBC's AM Joy (10/29) if she supported a cancellation. Cruz said, "Yes, I called for that last week. There were too many questions. It was evident that this company did not have everything that was required to complete the mission that it has to do in Puerto Rico."

Also reporting are NPR (10/27, Wamsley), The Hill (10/27, Bowden), The Hill (10/28, Cama, Henry), and the San Diego Union-Tribune (10/27, Gomez).

Trump Administration Disavows Puerto Rico Power Contract. The AP (10/27, Biesecker, Daly) reports the Trump Administration "scrambled Friday to distance itself from the decision to award a $300 million contract to help restore Puerto Rico's power grid to a tiny Montana company from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's hometown," as White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "said federal officials played no role in the selection of Whitefish Energy Holdings by the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority." Sanders "said Zinke had given the president his personal assurance that he had nothing to do with what she described as 'a state and local decision made by the Puerto Rican authorities and not the federal government.'" The AP reports Zinke "also issued a fiery denial on Twitter, saying 'Only in elitist Washington, D.C., would being from a small town be considered a crime.'" In addition, Reuters (10/27, Heavey, Cowan, DiSavino) reports White House spokesman Raj Shah "said that the administration's 'understanding' was that the contract was awarded solely by PREPA, and they are 'not aware of any federal involvement' in the deal."

In the lead ABC World News Tonight (10/27, lead story, 3:05, Muir) story, chief White House correspondent Jonathan Karl reported that the two-year-old company has "just two employees, but clear political ties to the Trump Administration." Karl added that "before this, it's largest previous federal contract just over $1 million, about 1/300th the size of the Puerto Rico deal." According to Karl, Whitefish Energy's "main financial backer, Dallas based HBC Investments, was founded by Joe Colonna, who donated more than $75,000 to Energy Secretary Perry's 2008 and 2012 campaigns as well as "nearly $90,000 to support the Trump campaign and the RNC in 2016." However, an Energy Department spokesperson said the department "was not involved in the selection of Whitefish for this contract."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (10/27, Pérez-Peña) reports the Federal Emergency Management Agency "said on Friday that it had 'significant concerns'" about the Whitefish Energy contract and "warned that it might refuse to cover any costs if the contract between Whitefish Energy and the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority, known as Prepa, was found to be improper." The Washington Post (10/27, Davis) reports FEMA also "said in a statement that it is looking into whether the contract between Whitefish Energy and the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority, or PREPA, 'followed applicable regulations to ensure that federal money is properly spent.'" Ricardo Ramos, the Executive Director of Prepa, in an interview on Friday told the Wall Street Journal (10/27, Scurria) that provisions in the agreement claiming FEMA had approved the deal were a mistake caused by his rush to sign the deal. Ramos also expressed hope that the controversy would not drive the company to back out of the contract.

Reuters (10/27, Heavey) reports a spokesman for Whitefish Energy in an interview with MSNBC defended the company's contract as having been reached "in good faith with PREPA." He asserted the deal "speaks for itself" and added, "There's nothing there."

However, on the CBS Evening News (10/27, lead story, 2:25, Mason), correspondent David Begnaud reported San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz "believes the deal with Whitefish Energy should be voided. She described the company as 'inadequate' and asked for transparency." Julianna Goldman reported in the second CBS Evening News (10/27, story 2, 1:55, Mason) segment that several lawmakers are demanding further investigations, and House Minority Leader Pelosi late Friday called for the contract "to be terminated immediately." Goldman added that the Department of Homeland Security's inspector general has agreed to conduct an audit of the company's ties to lawmakers and government officials, "but there's one aspect of the deal that appears to be off limits. The contract says federal and state officials 'don't have the right to review the cost and profit elements of the labor rates.' Like $462 per hour for a subcontractor site supervisor, and time and a half for anyone working over 40 hours."

Also reporting are the Washington Times (10/27, Boyer), The Hill (10/27, Fabian), The Hill (10/27, Cama), Politico (10/27, Lima, Lefebvre), the Washington Examiner (10/27, Siciliano), the Washington Examiner (10/27, Siegel), Fox News (10/27), and Montana Public Radio (10/27, Ouellet, Hegyi).

Whitefish Energy HQ Based Out Of Home Owned By CEO In Zinke's Hometown. On the CBS Weekend News (10/28, story 3, 2:00, Ninan), David Begnaud recounted visiting the headquarters of Whitefish Energy Holdings "in a remote, affluent area nestled in the mountains of northwestern Montana" that is also the hometown of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. Begnaud reported "the headquarters turns out to be a two-bedroom, two-bath house that's owned by" CEO Andy Techmanski, and "according to real estate record online, the house was up for sale, but it was taken off the market two days after Hurricane Maria made landfall in Puerto Rico." Begnaud said that since winning a $300 million contract with Puerto Rico's power authority PREPA, Whitefish has grown from two employees to more than 300. He added that the AP has revealed "the Secretary's son at one time had a job with Whitefish Energy," although Zinke "is insisting he had absolutely nothing to do with" the contract.

Trump Plans To Shrink Two National Monuments In Utah.

The New York Times (10/27, Friedman) reports Sen. Orrin Hatch on Friday "said...that President Trump had told him the administration would shrink" Bears Ears National Monument, created by former President Obama, and the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, established by former President Clinton, based on the recommendation of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "said a final report would be released 'shortly,'" but she "did not confirm whether the president has signed off on it in part or in whole." Sanders said, "I'm not going to get ahead of the president's announcement on the specifics of that, but I can tell you he will be going to Utah in the first part of early December and we will release more details at that point, if not before."

The Washington Post (10/27, Eilperin, Fears) reports "Trump did not specify exactly how he would change the boundaries, according to Hatch spokesman Matt Whitlock, though Interior Department officials have privately indicated that the administration plans to shrink it by hundreds of thousands of acres." Hatch said, "I was incredibly grateful the President called this morning to let us know that he is approving Secretary Zinke's recommendation on Bears Ears." Hatch added, "We believe in the importance of protecting these sacred antiquities, but Secretary Zinke and the Trump administration rolled up their sleeves to dig in, talk to locals, talk to local tribes, and find a better way to do it. We'll continue to work closely with them moving forward to ensure Utahns have a voice."

The AP (10/27, Daly) reports that "the Republican-led San Juan County, Utah commission welcomed Trump's action on Bears Ears." According to the article, "the three-member panel objected to the monument designation, saying it was too large and could hurt residents' ability to earn a living from livestock grazing."

The AP (10/28, Daly) adds that "environmental groups have promised to take the Trump administration to court to block any attempts to rescind or reduce the monument designations." Reuters (10/27, Flitter) reports that "the Navajo, who consider Bears Ears sacred ground, on Friday followed up their comment in September that they would sue the Trump administration for violating the Antiquities Act if it tried to reduce the monument's size." Ethel Branch, the Navajo Nation's attorney general, said, "The Navajo Nation stands ready to defend the Bears Ears National Monument. We have a complaint ready to file upon official action by the President."

Also reporting are The Hill (10/27, Henry), the Wall Street Journal (10/27, Carlton), the Washington Post (10/27, Eilperin, Fears), the Washington Times (10/27, Persons), the Washington Examiner (10/27, Siegel), the Los Angeles Times (10/27, Schneider), Reuters (10/27, Flitter), CNN (10/27, Merica), Newsweek (10/28, Kwong), the Huffington Post (10/28, Papenfuss), the Independent \(UK\) (10/27, York), The Guardian \(UK\) (10/27, Milman, Agencies), the Salt Lake City Weekly (10/27, Harris), WEAR-TV Mobile \(AL\) Mobile, AL (10/27, Mullahy), KSTU-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (10/27, Edwards, Wells), and KTVX-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (10/27, Mills).

Trump To Visit Utah Ahead Of Decision On Bears Ears Monument. The Washington Examiner (10/27, Morrongiello) reports that President Trump will "visit Utah in early December where he is expected to shrink the size of two national monuments – Bears Ears and Grand Staircase – that were designated under previous administrations.” White House press secretary Sarah Sanders “announced the upcoming visit at a briefing on Friday, hours after Trump met with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to discuss his review of various monument designations.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/27, Burr, Maffly) and the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/27, O'Donoghue).

Under Trump, The Lines Are Drawn For A Battle Over Resources In The West.

The Los Angeles Times (10/27, Schneider) reports that “nearly a year after the 2016 election, a momentous 21st century confrontation is building over coal mining that is serving as a proxy for upcoming skirmishes over the West’s rural extractive economies.” According to the article, “the issue for both sides, as it was in the 1980s under the Reagan administration, is whether hard-rock mining, oil and gas, timber harvesting and irrigated agriculture will thrive or fade away.” Currently, “fossil fuel development commands the playing field.” The article notes that “in his first major policy speech, delivered in late September, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke laid out the contours of the administration’s perspective for an audience at the Heritage Foundation.” Zinke said, “This administration, the president, believes in American energy dominance. Our goal is an America that is the strongest energy superpower this world has ever known. I can assure you today that the war on American energy is over.”

Interior Department Kickstarts Initiative To Get Veterans Back Into America’s Wild.

Breitbart (10/27, Wong) reports that the Interior Department on Thursday welcomed “a gathering of veterans, hunting, and wildlife groups” for a “meeting to discuss how to improve access for hunting and fishing for veterans, particularly wounded warriors and those with PTSD.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “hosted the gathering to kickstart the initiative, one of his big priorities at the department.” Addressing the group, Zinke said, “Our veterans are spending more time overseas than they are at home. And it has an effect on the VA. It has an effect on communities because normal has become over there, rather than over here, so I’m concerned about the experience when they come home that our public lands are once again returned to the people.” Zinke continued, “Hunting and fishing is part of our legacy. And a lot of veterans are part of our hunting and fishing experience, and I am concerned that we’ve seen a lack of access, roads being closed, the wilderness, even.”

Key Obama-Era Leasing Reform To Get The Ax.

E&E Publishing (10/27, Streater) reported the Interior Department is working to eliminate master leasing plans, “a key Obama-era leasing reform strategy designed to guide oil and natural gas development away from areas with high natural and cultural resource values.” MLPs allowed the Bureau of Land Management to prevent energy development around national parks and other environmentally sensitive areas. Interior argues that removing MLPs will streamline the regulatory process for energy development on public lands, which instead will be guided by individual resource management plans. While MLP proponents say they offer certainty for the energy industry on where new oil and gas and mining activity is suitable, “reducing challenges to leases,” the industry complained that MLPs “restrict access to valuable domestic energy resources.”

Energy Dominance Meets Market Realities.

Politico Morning Energy (10/27, Adragna) reports that the Interior Department “plans to offer 10 million onshore acres in the National Petroleum Reserve in northern Alaska in December and 77 million offshore acres across the entire Gulf of Mexico in March, but the combination of low oil prices and ample private land available for fracking may keep some away.” Ken Medlock, director of the Baker Institute’s Center for Energy Studies at Rice University in Houston, said, “It’s almost like having a fire sale of all the acreage. Wouldn’t surprise me at all if there’s a lot of acreage that doesn’t sell.”

Ryan Zinke: Cowboy In Trump’s Cabinet Taking Aim At America’s Public Lands.

The Guardian \(UK\) (10/27, McLaughlin, Montana) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “meticulously crafts his image as wilderness-loving western cowboy and sportsman.” However, “nine months into his job at the Department of the Interior, the federal agency that oversees most public lands and natural resources, the act is wearing thin with environmentalists and outdoors enthusiasts who say his early moves demonstrate strong allegiance to the oil, gas and other extractive industries seeking access to some of America's most spectacular protected landscapes." Land Tawney, president of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers, said, "He sold himself as a Theodore Roosevelt Republican. That means wise use. More and more sportsmen are waking up to what's going on."

Additional commentary appeared in the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (10/28, McCoy).

Turkish Touch On Los Angeles.

The Daily Sabah \(TUR\) (10/28, Sayiner) reports that "the first Hollywood Turkish Film Festival was held on Oct. 20-22." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "participated in the festival where famous Turkish actors and actresses, including Demet Akbag, Selçuk Yöntem and Meryem Üzerli, were also in attendance."

Western Senators Urge Longer Sage Grouse Comment Period.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (10/27) reports that "Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley, along with their Western Democratic colleagues, on Friday urged Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke to extend the comment period by 45 days for changes to the Greater Sage-grouse conservation plans." The letter from seven Western senators "responds to the Trump administration publishing a Notice of Intent earlier this month to amend Greater Sage-grouse conservation plans with only a 45-day comment period, closing on November 27." They wrote, "Given the importance and complexity of the proposed rule, and the intersection with BLM's resource management plans, it is essential that all stakeholders have sufficient opportunity to prepare and provide feedback."

Trump Administration's Costly One-Two Punch For Taxpayers.

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/29, Jenkins), David Jenkins, the president of Conservatives for Responsible Stewardship, criticizes the "policy rollbacks" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt are "pursuing at the behest of special interests." Jenkins points to the rules "designed to limit the waste of taxpayer-owned natural gas, increase royalty revenue and reduce air pollution." He argues "these common-sense standards were designed to help cut the approximately $2 billion worth of natural gas (primarily made up of methane) currently wasted by the oil and gas industry every year." Jenkins urges the Trump Administration to "halt efforts to roll back methane waste rules designed to protect taxpayers and their resources."

Guest Opinion: Don't Drill Beside TR's National Park.

In an op-ed for the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/27, O'Neill), Jayson O'Neill, deputy director of the Western Values Project, claims that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "set on opening up any and all of our public lands to special interests, including a pending oil and gas lease proposal that borders Theodore Roosevelt National Park, which was created to honor and protect Roosevelt's former ranch and conservation legacy." O'Neill argues that "through this effort they are getting rid of common-sense rules that protect our national parks, wildlife habitat, and outdoor recreation opportunities from the very industrial exploitation that Roosevelt warned us of." He writes that "if Zinke wants to honor Roosevelt's legacy, he should not continue to give our national park and monument landscapes away to special interests."

It's Congress' Turn To Fight Wildfires.

In an op-ed for The Hill (10/28, HumphriesOpinion Contributor —), Rebecca Humphries, CEO of the National Wild Turkey Federation, urges Congress "to implement long-needed changes to laws regulating national forest management and end the erosion of the Forest Service's budget for proactive forest work." She argues that "active forest management and forest restoration can significantly diminish the severity of damage caused by fire." But to do so, agencies "need adequate funding to effectively manage these lands."

Don't Let Congress Hand Arctic Refuge To Big Oil And Gas.

Natural Resources Defense Council President Rhea Suh, in an op-ed in the Seattle Times (10/27, Suh), criticized GOP leaders in Congress as having "stooped to backdoor budget chicanery to try and raid the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge" in "a shameful betrayal of the public interest" that must be defeated. Other provisions would open to drilling "federal waters in the Arctic Ocean, the eastern Gulf of Mexico and up and down the Atlantic seaboard, irreplaceable marine and coastal habitat that have been protected from the oil and gas industry." Suh calls for the public "to stand up and demand that Congress strip these pernicious provisions out of the final budget language that both houses agree to and make sure they do no more damage.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Deadline Near For Tribal Members To Claim Settlement Money.

The AP (10/27) reports that “American Indian tribal members and their descendants have until Nov. 27 to ask for their share of the remainder of $3.4 billion in settlement money awarded to Native Americans after a major class-action lawsuit against the federal government.” U.S. District of Columbia District Court Judge Thomas Hogan set the deadline in a January order, “after it was apparent that efforts to find tribe members to entitled to the award money listed as ‘whereabouts unknown’ were no longer as successful.” According to the article, “unclaimed funds that remain after the deadline passes will be added to the Cobell Educational Scholarship Fund.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/27, Wilson).

Tribal Leaders Call Land-Use Bill Step In Right Direction.

The AP (10/29, Windes) reports that “tribal leaders backed a House bill Wednesday that would give tribes the ability to control more of their land, instead of having to get federal approval for virtually any use.” The American Indian Empowerment Act would “let tribes shift federally controlled trust land to ‘restricted fee land,’ a move that could save millions of dollars that tribes now spend on ‘burdensome regulation,’ while restoring a level of tribal sovereignty.” The article adds that “while they called the bill a step in the right direction, however, witnesses said they are concerned about ambiguities in the thin, three-page bill that ‘could allow state or local governments to implement property taxes on tribal land,’ among other issues.”

Tribal Leaders Received Payments In Failed Brokerage Deal.

The Sioux Falls \(SD\) Argus Leader (10/27, Ellis) reports that Lower Brule Tribal Council members were “among those who received payments from a taxpayer guaranteed loan that was used to buy a failing Wall Street brokerage firm.” However, “the payments to tribal members were not illegal and simply part of doing business in Indian Country.” Those are among the conclusions of an investigation by the Interior Department “into the tribe’s purchase of Westrock Group, a brokerage that went bankrupt shortly after the Lower Brule tribe bought it.”

Bureau Of Land Management

CBS: Wild Horse Protection.

The CBS Weekend News (10/29, story 8, 2:25, Quijano) reported, “President Trump’s proposed budget has ignited a battle in the wild west between the livestock industry and animal rights activists. It’s a dispute over grazing territory. Tens of thousands of wild horses could end up being slaughtered.”

State, BLM Work Together On Land Exchange.

The Taos \(NM\) News (10/28) reports that New Mexico State Land Commissioner Aubrey Dunn and Acting Bureau of Land Management New Mexico State Director Aden Seidlitz s”igned a proclamation Friday (Oct. 27), agreeing to work together on a land exchange that will consolidate state and federal holdings within the Río Grande del Norte National Monument and the Sabinoso Wilderness Area.” The Interior Department is “expected to transfer 43,000 acres of state-owned surface and mineral estate within the monument and the wilderness area to the BLM in exchange for giving the state 78,000 federal acres in several counties including Chaves, Colfax, Guadalupe, Lincoln, McKinley, Mora, Otero, Rio Arriba, San Juan, Sandoval, Santa Fe, Socorro and Torrance Counties.”

Plan Keeps Most Of Sonoran Desert Monument Open To Shooters.

The AP (10/28, VERNILE) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “recommended closing 53,300 acres of the Sonoran Desert National Monument to recreational shooting, but keeping the remaining 443,000 open to shooters.” The plan, “posted Oct. 20 in the Federal Register, calls for making 11 percent of the monument’s land off-limits to shooting.” The article notes that “hunting is not affected by any of the proposals considered by the bureau, and would be allowed anywhere in the monument with the proper permits.”

Bundey, Sons Finally Get Their Day (more Likely Months) In Court For Armed 2014 Standoff.

KSNV-TV Las Vegas (10/29, Clemons) reports from Las Vegas that “Bunkerville rancher Cliven Bundy and two of his sons – Ryan and Ammon along with independent militia leader Ryan Payne – will appear in federal court at 8:30 a.m.” this morning “as jury selection begins in a long-awaited trial.” The four “have been in a federal detention for nearly two years, awaiting earlier trials of others connected to the confrontation,” and “they face potential decades in prison if convicted of conspiracy and other charges related to the 2014 incident.” KSNV-TV adds that in April 2014, “Bundy and his supporters had a week of confrontations with Bureau of Land Management Rangers and contractors hired by the government to confiscate nearly 1,000 head of his cattle grazing in the Gold Butte area.” Two previous trials of other defendants “ended with several acquittals and just a pair of convictions, leading three defendants to cut plea deals with prosecutors on much lesser charges.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas Review-Journal (10/28, Ferrara, Lochhead).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Air Gun Oil Exploration Might Blast Rare Whale Out Of The Gulf.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/27, Baurick) reported the Center for Biological Diversity is petitioning to have the Gulf of Mexico’s population of Cuvier’s beaked whales listed under the Endangered Species Act, warning that seismic air gun testing could deafen or kill the remaining numbers. The whale is the deepest diving mammal, and has already struggled because of the Gulf’s oil industry, according to Abel Caldiva, a biologist with the center. Endangered status could lead to the northern Gulf being designated a critical habitat, and lead to the development of a federal recovery plan for the whale.

Bureau Of Reclamation

Idaho Approves $3 Million To Study Raising Boise River Dams.

The AP (10/28) reports that “Idaho officials have approved spending $3 million to help pay for a federal study to increase the height of three dams on the Boise River.” The Idaho Water Resources Board on Tuesday “approved paying for half of the $6 million study that requires a 50 percent non-federal match.” The Bureau of Reclamation study will “look at raising Anderson Ranch Dam by 6 feet, Arrowrock Dam by 10 feet and Lucky Peak Dam by 4 feet.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/27, Ellis).

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

How A 672,000-Gallon Oil Spill Was Nearly Invisible.

The New York Times (10/29, Caron) reports that when an oil pipeline owned by LLOG Exploration, lying about a mile below the surface of the Gulf of Mexico, fractured in early October, about 672,000 gallons of oil escaped, in what appears “to be the largest since the Deepwater Horizon explosion in 2010.” However, “hardly any of it was visible” on the surface, as “the oil seemed to have completely disappeared.” The oil, under high pressure and seeping through a small fracture, escaped in droplets measured in microns, according to Lt. Cmdr. Steven Youde of the Coast Guard. Much of the oil was eaten by oil-degrading bacteria, with larger droplets that rose to the surface broken down by “sunlight, wind and wave action.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Forensics Lab Solves Crimes Against Animals.

CNN (10/29) provided a look at the United States Fish and Wildlife Service Forensics Laboratory, “the only lab in the world devoted entirely to investigating crimes against animals.” According to the article, “located in Ashland, Oregon, this state-of-the-art facility boasts a pathology department, an on-site forensic ornithologist and a genetics team to investigate illegal animal killings, smuggling and other crimes.”

Wildlife Refuge In New England Set For Major Expansion.

The AP (10/29, Casey) reports that “a plan to significantly expand a wildlife refuge that covers parts of the Connecticut River watershed in New England is running into opposition from the timber industry and governors in several states.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “earlier this year released a 15-year conservation plan for the Silvio O. Conte National Fish and Wildlife Refuge, which covers more than 37,000 acres in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut.” The agency “identified 197,000 acres that could be added to the refuge either through purchases or other agreements with land owners or nonprofits.”

First Whooping Cranes Sighted At Wildlife Refuge.

The Victoria \(TX\) Advocate (10/27, Priest) reports that “whooping cranes are back on the Texas Coast, about two months after Hurricane Harvey changed their wintering grounds.” Wade Harrell, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services’ whooping crane recovery coordinator, said Friday, “Two groups of two were spotted at different times and at different locations. I think the first group was on Wednesday and the second group was on Thursday. They were adults, and that’s pretty typical. The family groups or the pairs with juveniles are usually the last to arrive.” Harrell said the whooping cranes were seen on Blackjack Peninsula at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge.

National Park Service

Lawmakers: High User Fees Could Hurt Acadia, National Parks.

The AP (10/27) reports that “Maine’s congressional delegation is turning a critical eye on a U.S. Department of the Interior proposal to raise fees at national parks, including Acadia National Park.” Sens. Susan Collins and Angus King “sent a letter to the department after an announcement that it’s proposing increasing fees at 17 national parks. The peak season increases would help offset overdue maintenance costs.” They “say the department should consider creating a National Park Service Legacy Restoration Fund or Conservation Service Corp to help address the backlog.”

The AP (10/27) reports that Washington Gov. Jay Inslee “says that a National Park Service plan to impose steep increases in entrance fees at 17 of its most popular parks would hurt rural counties in Washington state.” In a letter sent to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Thursday, Inslee “says the increase would likely decrease the number of visitors to the parks, and that the cost would put the parks out of reach to lower and middle income families.”

Also reporting are the Daily World \(WA\) (10/28), the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (10/28, Frissell, Reilly), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (10/27, Sambides), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/27, Kasler), and KCNC-TV Denver Denver (10/27, Boyd).

Commentary in the Los Angeles Times (10/27, Board), the Denver Post (10/27), the New Republic (10/27, Atkin), and the Canandaigua \(NY\) Daily Messenger (10/29, Lisenbee) criticized the proposal, while the Chicago Tribune (10/27, Board) supported it in an editorial.

Trump Celebrates Halloween Early With Journalists’ Children.

The New York Times (10/27, Flegenheimer) reports that “for some 180 seconds on Friday,” the “Halloween-costumed” children of White House reporters “inspired a quintessential Trump performance – part executive gripe session, part grandfatherly charm, part open-mic night for the under-12 set.”

Although the CBS Evening News (10/27, story 12, 0:25, Mason) in a brief report acknowledged “Trump observed a truce with reporters...long enough to invite their kids into the Oval Office for an early Halloween celebration,” ABC World News Tonight (10/27, story 10, 0:40, Muir) broadcast the President asking, “So how does the press treat you?” He continued, “I’ll bet you get treated better by the press than anybody in the world, right? Huh? I think so. Hi, sweetie. Well, congratulations, folks. You did a good job.” Trump added, “You did a good job. Here you did a good job. I wouldn’t say you did very well here. But really beautiful children.”

The AP (10/27) reports that “the president will also be welcoming ghost[s] and goblins to the South Lawn for trick-or-treating on the eve of Halloween on Monday.” The AP adds that “federal agencies including NASA, the Secret Service and the National Park Service also will be handing out giveaways.”

Additional coverage was provided by ABC News (10/29, Caplan).

Too Many Tourists: Crowding Is A Big Headache At National Parks And Theme Parks.

The Los Angeles Times (10/28, Martin) reports that “across the country, people have been trekking to national parks, theme parks and other tourist attractions in record numbers during the past few years, creating an unexpected problem for the tourism industry: too many customers.” Without a solution, managers “fear that long lines and unruly crowds ultimately will turn off future visitors.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/27, Reese).

Parks Service Denies Permit For Giant Statue Of Naked Woman On National Mall.

CNN (10/27, Tatum) reports that “the group behind an effort to bring a 45-foot-tall sculpture of a naked woman to the National Mall says it is ‘looking to formalize litigation’ after the National Park Service denied approval of the statue.” Natalie White, spokeswoman for Catharsis on the Mall, said in a statement, “We need a law firm willing to take on overly restrictive NPS rules that inappropriately seem to value the preservation of the perceived aesthetic of the National Mall over First Amendment activities. Historical use of this public space includes free-speech demonstrations that continue to shape the character of our country.”

Also reporting are Newsweek (10/27, Solis).

Feds Pull Funding For Black Panther Legacy Project In Berkeley After Backlash.

The Washington Examiner (10/29, Lim) reports that “a Black Panther Party legacy project at the University of California Berkeley will no longer proceed after the National Park Service bowed to pressure applied by conservative organizations and pulled federal funding, according to a report.” The National Park Service “announced in September it would award $98,000 to Ula Taylor, UC Berkeley’s incoming African-American studies chairwoman,” for the Black Panther Party Research, Interpretation & Memory Project. Spokesman Craig Dalby said, “After an additional review of the project, the [National Park Service] decided not to move forward with funding the project.”

Also reporting are the San Francisco Chronicle (10/27, Robertson) and the East Bay \(CA\) Times (10/27, Drummond).

Light Pollution Is Stealing Your View Of The Stars.

National Parks Want To Give It Back. The Denver Post (10/29, Finley) reports that managers at national parks are “trying to set themselves up as preserves by obtaining official ‘dark sky’ designations.” Karen Treviño, chief of National Park Service’s Natural Sounds and Night Skies Division, said, “On one hand, it would be an honor to be able to provide the American public with an experience they are seeking, particularly if they cannot get that anyplace else. That’s partly why national parks were established. On the other, it’s kind of sad to think we might get to a point one day where national parks are the only places where Americans could have that type of experience.”

Culture Of Harassment At NPS ‘Completely Unacceptable’.

The Rafu Shimpo \(CA\) (10/26) reports that Sen. Mazie Hirono, ranking member of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee on National Parks, “on Oct. 13 called for action to be taken following the release of a National Park Service (NPS) survey that found that 38 percent of NPS employees have been harassed or discriminated against in the past year.” The Interior Department “announced that NPS will receive additional resources to address complaints and expand training.” Hirono said, “Today’s announcement confirms what we’ve known for some time – there is a pervasive culture of workplace harassment in the National Park Service. Continued silence and inaction are completely unacceptable. Working together, we can provide the necessary oversight and resources to ensure that all NPS employees – regardless of age, race, gender, and sexual orientation – have a safe working environment.”

Additional coverage of the issue was provided by the Washington Post (10/27, Davidson).

Marin Resident To Head Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (10/27, Prado) reports that Laura Joss, regional director for the National Park Service’s Pacific West Region, will become the next superintendent of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in November. Joss said, “It’s been a dream job for years. I’m so happy and amazed that this opportunity came about.”

Once-thriving Thurmond, W.Va., Is Now A Coal-country Ghost Town.

USA Today (10/27) reports on Thurmond, “a ghost town whose fortunes rose and fell with the coal industry." According to the article, "much of the once-bustling town of 500 is now owned by the National Park Service's New River Gorge National River."

Additional coverage was provided by USA Today (10/27, Bordsen).

Office Of Surface Mining

Fourpole Creek Watershed Association Honored For Work Protecting Local Waterway.

The Huntington \(WV\) Herald-Dispatch (10/28) reports that "watershed volunteers were recognized for their tireless efforts of working for clean water in WV for the 19th year at Watershed Celebration Day an event hosted by Friends of the Cheat and the WV Watershed Network earlier this year." According to the article, "volunteers took part in tours of the Cheat River watershed as they floated down the river to learn the positive impact of tourism or hiked into the mountains to see how volunteers can plan, fund, and implement remedial projects that treat acid mine drainage." Rick Buckley, with the Office of Surface Mining, "an original partner helping FOC clean up pollution from old coal mine drainage in the Cheat Watershed," said, "The Friends of the Cheat (FOC) has been in existence for 23 years and are both locally and nationally recognized for their leadership role and determination to restore, preserve, and promote the outstanding natural qualities of the Cheat Watershed. It is exciting for us to have them host other volunteers and demonstrate the keys to their many successes."

US Geological Survey

Proposed Name Change For Confederate Corners Subject Of Monterey County Online Survey.

The San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (10/27, Johnson) reports that "seeking community input on possible renaming of the little known "Confederate Corners" intersection, Supervisor Jane Parker and Monterey County staff have released an online survey allowing the public to weigh in." The survey says "that the Board of Supervisors has been asked by the U.S. Board on Geographic Names to make a recommendation about how to handle the Confederate Corners name, which the U.S. Geological Survey uses to designate the intersection of Monterey-Salinas Highway and Hitchcock Road where former Confederate soldiers settled after the Civil War." The survey, "which will accept responses until Nov. 8, asks respondents to decide between four main options: Take no action and allow the USGS to make a decision about the name; ask the USGS to remove the name 'Confederate Corners' and leave this as an unnamed location; ask the USGS to change the name; and 'Other.'"

Additional Reading.

- Armageddon Via Imaginary Planet Has Been Pushed Back — Yet Again — To November. Washington Post (10/28, Selk).
- New USGS Map Shows Where Hurricane Maria Triggered Landslides On Puerto Rico. Weather Channel (10/27, Breslin).
- After The Napa Fires, A Disaster-in-Waiting: Toxic Ash. Wired (10/29, Rogers).
- 100-year Floods Prompt Drone Visit At Historic Site. Gillette \(WY\) News Record (10/28, Albers).
- Alaska's Glaciers Are Shrinking Fast. KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (10/27, Gillette).
- Pacific Sees Preview Of Flood Inundation Map. Missourian (10/27, Masson).
- Thousands Of Monarch Butterflies Could Be Stranded. New York Post (10/27).
- Toxic Ash, Debris From California Wildfires Pose Risks During Cleanup. CNN (10/28, Wotus, Gray).
- Volcano Watch: USGS Maps Identify Lava Inundation Zones For Mauna Loa. Hawaii Tribune-Herald (10/29).
- When Will The Yellowstone Supervolcano Erupt?. Forbes (10/27) .

Top National News

Trump Blasts Mueller Probe Amid Reports That Charges Could Be Announced Today.

In the wake of reports that a grand jury has approved the first charges in special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election, the President took to Twitter Sunday to criticize the investigation, Hillary Clinton and congressional Democrats. Trump's tweets and speculation about who is targeted by the indictment garner heavy media coverage – leading two of the three network news broadcasts – and were the subject of a great deal of discussion on the Sunday talk shows. Trump is generally cast as lashing out at the investigation and seeking to shift attention to possible connections between members of the Clinton campaign and Russia.

Trump tweeted, "All of this 'Russia' talk right when the Republicans are making their big push for historic Tax Cuts & Reform. Is this coincidental? NOT!" In a series of earlier tweets (1, 2, 3, 4) Trump wrote, "Never seen such Republican ANGER & UNITY as I have concerning the lack of investigation on Clinton made Fake Dossier (now $12,000,000?),....the Uranium to Russia deal, the 33,000 plus deleted Emails, the Comey fix and so much more. Instead they look at phony Trump/Russia,.....'collusion,' which doesn't exist. The Dems are using this terrible (and bad for our country) Witch Hunt for evil politics, but the R's...are now fighting back like never before. There is so much GUILT by Democrats/Clinton, and now the facts are pouring out. DO SOMETHING!"

The AP (10/29) says Trump "is unleashing new criticism of the investigations into possible ties between his campaign associates and Russia." The Los Angeles Times (10/29, Willman) says that in "an angry series of tweets," Trump "sought to blame partisan politics for the widening scandal," and the Washington Post (10/29, Johnson) reports that in the "four tweets sent over 24 minutes," Trump "expressed frustration that his campaign is under investigation over possible ties to Russia's plot to influence the 2016 election but that his former opponent Hillary Clinton is not facing the same level of scrutiny." In the lead story for The CBS Weekend News (10/29, lead story, 2:15), Eliane Quijano said Trump in "a hail of tweets...shrugged off the looming charges, suggesting in capital letters that the spotlight be turned instead towards Hillary Clinton." USA Today (10/29, Wolf) reports that Trump "appeared ready for the other shoe to drop, taking to Twitter on Sunday to denounce the investigation, Democrats and his election opponent, Hillary Clinton." To the New York Times (10/29, Davis), Trump was seeking "to shift the focus to a litany of accusations against" Clinton "a day before the special counsel inquiry will reportedly produce its first indictment in the case." Similarly, the Washington Examiner (10/29, Feldscher) says Trump responded to reports that indictments are about to be announced "by pointing the finger at Democrats."

Kate Snow reported in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (10/29, lead story, 2:30) that Trump "bemoaned all the Russia talk," and Kelly O'Donnell said he "vent[ed] broadly about the Russia investigation." Politico (10/29, Griffiths) says Trump "expanded on his long-simmering disdain for the investigation," while The Hill (10/29, Samuels) describes Trump as lashing out and says his "outrage" was "apparently prompted by a Washington Post report earlier this week that a lawyer working for Clinton's campaign and the Democratic National Committee (DNC) helped fund" the so-called Trump Dossier.

A New York Post (10/29, Moore) headline, meanwhile, describes a "Twitter meltdown" by Trump. The Post reports that Trump's "twitter explosion comes as CNN reported" that Mueller "is expected to announce his first indictments in the case as soon as Monday." However, Bloomberg News (10/29, Levin) reports that special White House counsel Ty Cobb said news of the pending charges did not trigger Trump's tweets. Cobb said in an emailed statement, "Contrary to what many have suggested, the president's comments today are unrelated to the activities of the special counsel, with whom he continues to cooperate." The Washington Examiner (10/29, Lim) reports that Cobb told the New York Times on Saturday that Trump "has no concerns" about "any impact" of conversations between Mueller, Manafort or Flynn. Cobb said, "I think he would be sad for them, as a friend and a former colleague, if the process results in punishment or indictments. ... But to the extent that that happens, that's beyond [Trump's] control." The Washington Times (10/29, Sherfinski) and the Daily Caller (10/29, Donachie) also report on Trump's tweets.

Politico (10/29, Nussbaum) says the expected indictment leaves Trump "facing a politically perilous week as his White House juggles unveiling significant tax legislation, announcing its pick for Federal Reserve chair and launching a 12-day-long foreign trip." According to Politico, "the expected indictment...could make Monday one of the most politically consequential days of this presidency." Politico cites "a senior White House official and a top GOP Capitol Hill aide" who said that House Republicans "still plan to release a draft of their tax bill this week." Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway "said the White House could keep its policy aims front and center this week," telling Politico, "We know there is a complete disconnect between what Americans are told matters to them and what they tell us matters to them."

Indictment Could Be Unsealed Today; Schiff Says Manafort Or Flynn Could Be The Targets.

Reuters (10/29, Hosenball) cites "a source briefed on the matter" who said a Federal grand jury approved charges on Friday. While the indictment "was sealed under orders from a federal judge so it was not clear what the charges were or who the target was," the source said it could be unsealed as early as Monday. David Wright reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/29, story 2, 3:10, Llamas) that "sources tell ABC News the grand jury has approved charges." Wright added that there is "no shortage of possible members of Trump's inner circle who have faced questions about their dealings with Russians. Or there could be others we haven't heard of before." Wright said that while the "two key targets so far" are former Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort and former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn, "Manafort's team says they don't think an indictment is coming their way. Flynn's team hasn't responded." Also in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (10/29, lead story, 2:30), O'Donnell said that "Manafort and Flynn deny any wrong doing and others who've received less public attention could be in jeopardy."

Paula Reid reported in the lead story for The CBS Weekend News (10/29, lead story, 2:15) that because "the threat of an indictment can certainly provide an incentive to cooperate with investigators," if the person "who is expected to be charged suddenly decides to work with the special counsel, it is possible that the charges could remain under seal, and we won't see any arrests this week."

Rep. Adam Schiff, ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said on MSNBC AM Joy (10/29), "I don't know who was indicted. We certainly do know Manafort has at least told people that he believed that he would be indicted. It could be Manafort. It could be Flynn. Many people have been pointing out that you generally go after the small fish first. Those are not small fish. We are talking about the National Security Adviser for the President and we are talking about the President's campaign manager. If those are the small fish then the big fish has got to be pretty big." Schiff said on ABC's This Week with George Stephanopoulos (10/29), that if it is Manafort, "it may help us answer one very central question in the investigation. That is, we know that the Russian government, through intermediaries, was reaching out to the Trump campaign, reaching out to Paul Manafort and others. ... We also know from the Washington Post reporting that contemporaneously to that, Paul Manafort is reaching out in the other direction...offering information in exchange for money. ... The question is, who gave what to whom, as a result of these overtures?"

Francesca Chambers of DailyMail.com said on Fox News MediaBuzz (10/29), "One thing I can tell you is the White House received no indication that it is someone who works at the White House currently, Jared Kushner or someone who would be close to the President like Don, Jr." Julie Pace of the Associated Press said on CNN Inside Politics (10/29), "One thing that is certain no matter what happens tomorrow, this undermines the message that the White House has been trying to push, which is essentially that the Mueller investigation is turning up nothing and is close to ending. That is simply factually inaccurate." Similarly, Perry Bacon of FiveThirtyEight said on CNN Inside Politics (10/29), "Sarah Sanders, I assume, cannot say the investigation is ending tomorrow after an indictment comes out. So I'll be curious to see what the tweets are like, if they back off." Bacon added, "What do the members say? There's always this idea out there that maybe Trump will fire Mueller. I'll be curious if the members sort of at this point say, you cannot, cannot do that or we will do something else."

"Face the Nation" host John Dickerson was asked on The CBS Weekend News (10/29, story 2, 1:50, Quijano) about the political significance of an indictment. Dickerson said, "It depends who the indictment is aimed at and if it is a minor character on the fringe of this story, it won't mean very much. In fact, you can imagine, and now we're really getting into the ether, here, of speculation. But if it's a sideline figure that is not related to the President, it is possible to imagine that the President would take some heart from that and say it approves this is a witch hunt. On the other hand, if it is somebody very close to the Trump campaign, then it would require all kinds of responses both from the President and his team, that would create more volatility."

BuzzFeed: FBI Probe Focusing On 13 Wire Transfers By Companies Linked To Manafort.

BuzzFeed (10/29, Leopold, Cormier) reports that the FBI's investigation of Manafort "includes a keen focus on a series of suspicious wire transfers in which offshore companies linked to Manafort moved more than $3 million all over the globe between 2012 and 2013. Much of the money came into the United States." BuzzFeed News "has learned that investigators have been scrutinizing at least 13 wire transfers between 2012 and 2013." Citing the BuzzFeed report, the Daily Caller (10/29, White) says the wire transfers "drew the attention of federal law enforcement officials who were examining if he was helping the Ukrainian regime launder millions it plundered through corrupt dealings.”

Gowdy: Mueller Should Put A Stop To Leaks. In appearance on Fox News Sunday (10/29, Wallace), House Oversight Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy called on Mueller to crack down on leaks, Politico (10/29, Guida) reports. Gowdy said, “The only conversation I’ve had with Robert Mueller, it was stressing to him the importance of cutting out the leaks with respect to serious investigations.” He added, “It is kind of ironic that the people in charge of investigating the law and executing the law would violate the law. ... Make no mistake, disclosing grand jury material is a violation of the law. So, as a former prosecutor, I’m disappointed that you and I are having the conversation because somebody violated their oath of secrecy.” Gowdy also “said he’s not pushing for Mueller’s investigation to be curtailed or shut down.” Townhall (10/29, Meads) says Gowdy “lambasted Democrats, leaks stemming from special counsel Robert Mueller’s Investigation, and President Trump’s Department of Justice” during the Fox interview.

Christie: Disclosure Of Grand Jury Indictments Could Be A Criminal Violation. The Washington Examiner (10/29, Giaritelli) reports that New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie told ABC’s This Week with George Stephanopoulos the person who told CNN that the grand jury will issue indictments this week may have committed a crime. Christie said, “We don’t know who leaked it to CNN. It would be a crime if prosecutors or agents leaked it. If defense lawyers leaked it, it might be less. ... It’s supposed to be kept secret.” Christie said on CNN’s State Of The Union (10/29, Tapper) that “there are very, very strict laws on grand jury secrecy. So depending upon who leaked this to CNN, that’s a criminal violation, potentially.” Similarly, Christie told CBS’ Face The Nation (10/29, Dickerson) that “there are strict laws against any of this type of leaking of grand jury activity and so the idea that we may know, in fact that there is been some activity done already depending upon who leaked that information, that could be criminal violation as well.”

Waters Sees Sufficient Grounds To Discuss Impeachment. Rep. Maxine Waters said on MSNBC AM Joy (10/29), “I have faith in our special counsel. Mueller is doing a good job. As a matter of fact, he’s going to be bringing some indictments next week. We don’t know who they are. It could be Manafort, it could be Flynn, it could be Carter page, I don’t know, but I think that if a reasonable person takes a look at all of the connections with Russia, the fact that this President has said that he wanted to lift sanctions, the fact that we pass law that said – strengthened those sanctions against Russia and he has not implemented the law that we passed, he won’t say a negative word about Putin, there’s enough there for responsible, reasonable members of Congress to talk about impeachment.”

Portman: Americans Should Be Focused On Russian Meddling. Sen. Rob Portman was asked on NBC’s Meet the Press (10/29, Todd) if he is concerned the President may issue pardons or fire Mueller. Portman said, “I hope Congress will encourage that the Senate Intelligence Committee, which I think is doing a great job, bipartisan with Senator Warner, Senator Burr, complete their work and that we support this investigation that the Department of Justice has now appointed this special prosecutor. Let’s let him get to the bottom of it. As you know, I’ve been involved in this issue quite a while in terms of the disinformation the Russians are doing, in terms of their meddling and every American, Republican and Democrat alike, should be focused on that.”

Gowdy, King Question Uranium One Deal. Gowdy was also asked on Fox News Sunday (10/29, Wallace), about the Uranium One investigation. Gowdy said that “we’ve spent most of 2017 trying to better understand what Russia did to this country in 2016. Not to the Democrats, not to the Republicans but to the country. So, what we know is that Russia was not our friend in 2016. It is not that big of a leap to ask if they were our friends in 2010. That is not that big of a leap. It was not Republicans who gave the reset button to Russia. It was not Republicans who said we will have more flexibility in a second term. It was a Republican named Mitt Romney that said Russia was our greatest threat and the Democrats laughed at him. So yes, I do want to know if the same group that tried to sabotage our democracy in 2016 is buying uranium in 2010. I want to know that.”

Sen. Angus King appeared on CNN’s State Of The Union (10/29, Tapper), “I think one of the House committees has already begun an oversight committee hearing. I always think oversight hearings are appropriate. I’ve been trying to understand this deal, I think the important thing that I learned in reading the background is the company changed hands, but the uranium that’s mined in the United States cannot leave the United States. So it wasn’t really the sale of uranium. It was the sale of a mining and manufacturing company. But there are questions about it. And I think, you know, we need to get to the bottom of them.”

Collins: Podesta, Wasserman Schultz Should Be Called To Testify About Trump Dossier.

Reuters (10/29, Gibson) reports that Sen. Susan Collins told CBS' Face The Nation Sunday that Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta and former DNC Chairwoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz should be called to testify concerning reports that the DNC and the Clinton campaign paid for parts of the Trump dossier. Collins said, "It's difficult to imagine that a campaign chairman, that the head of the DNC would not know of an expenditure of this magnitude and significance. ... But perhaps there's something more going on here. But certainly, it's worth additional questioning of those two witnesses. And the lawyer; absolutely, he more than anyone." Politico (10/29, Guida) reports that Collins said, "Certainly, it's worth more questioning of those two witnesses," and the Washington Times (10/29, Sherfinski) quotes Collins as saying, "They absolutely need to be recalled." Collins "also said she has not yet seen any 'definitive' evidence of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia." The AP (10/29) also reports on Collins' comments.

Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (10/29, story 2, 1:50, Quijano) that news of the dossier "certainly helps the President make his case. or at least before this indictment news came forward, about what the Clinton team was up to. But really, there are two separate things. And so particularly with respect to the Senate Intelligence Committee, Sen. Collins was saying that the lawyer, who we know was involved with this creation of the dossier or at least spending money on it, was at the table with John Podesta, the chairman of the Clinton campaign when he said he knew nothing about how it was funded. So that lawyer will now, according to Senator Collins, should come back and testify himself as opposed to sitting there just as somebody there going along with John Podesta."

WTimes: Nunes Has Shifted Russia Debate Closer To Democrats. The Washington Times (10/29, Scarborough) reports that House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes "has shifted the Russia debate in Washington further away from President Trump and closer to Democrats" by "expos[ing] the practice of 'unmasking' by Obama aides and flush[ing] out the source of payments for the scandalous anti-Trump dossier that drove the Russia collusion narrative." While Nunes "talked publicly about his discovery to much derision from Democrats and Washington's press corps," his "legacy lives on" as "both the Senate and House intelligence committees have summoned former Obama aides as witnesses."

Schiff said on MSNBC AM Joy (10/29), "I used to be part of a commission, the Democracy Assistance Commission, that would meet with emerging democracies, and one of the points we would always make is, if you win an election, when you win an election, you don't try to use the justice system, pervert the justice system to punish your vanquished opponent, and that's what is happening here. The White House in violation of Justice Department policy has intervened with the Justice Department to say we want you to take certain steps, and lift the gag rule to advance an investigation of my vanquished opponent. I have to say for the Republicans in Congress to go along with that, to open up an investigation to become complicit in that makes them part of the dismantling of the checks and balances, one brick at a time."

Book Claims Obama Plotted To "Destroy" Trump. The Washington Examiner (10/29, Bedard) reports in its "Washington Secrets" column that new book titled, "All Out War: The Plot To Destroy Trump," alleges that former President Obama was "dumbfounded" that Trump beat Clinton in the election and, along with "a top aide began plotting to 'destroy' the president-elect around Christmas" with a goal of setting him up for impeachment. Author Ed Klein describes "a 'Christmastime' dinner during which national security adviser Susan Rice pushed plans to 'unmask, or disclose, the names of several Trump campaign associates who were mentioned or whose conversations were captured in intelligence intercepts of Russian officials.'"

The Federalist (10/29, Davis) reports that since April of last year, Obama's campaign organization, Obama for America, "has paid over $972,000 to Perkins Cole," the "law firm that funneled money to Fusion GPS, the firm behind the infamous" Trump dossier. The Federalist adds that the "timing and nature of the payments...raise significant questions about whether OFA was funding Fusion GPS, how much Obama and his team knew about the contents and provenance of the dossier long before its contents were made public, and whether the president or his government lieutenants knowingly used a partisan political document to justify official government actions targeting the president's political opponents named in the dossier."

Rivkin, Casey: Trump Can Shut Down Mueller Probe With Blanket Pardon. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/29), David Rivkin and Lee Casey, who served in the White House Counsel's office and Justice Department in the Reagan and George H.W. Bush Administrations, argue that Mueller's investigation, which has been widely seen as partisan from its start, has become open-ended and Trump can bring it to an end by issuing a blanket pardon to anyone involved in alleged collusion with Russia during the campaign. If Congress was to find evidence of collusion, they add, the House can decide whether to begin impeachment proceedings.

Twitter Suspends Stone. USA Today (10/28, Miller) reported Saturday that Twitter has suspended former Trump campaign adviser Roger Stone "after an expletive-filled tweetstorm late Friday attacking CNN and some of the network's on-air personalities." Stone "lashed out with vulgarities at anchors Don Lemon and Jake Tapper, among others." The New York Times (10/29, Fortin) says Stone's tweets, which were "littered with expletives," appeared to be "in response to reports that a federal grand jury had approved charges in the continuing investigation into the Trump campaign's possible connections to Russia."

NYTimes Analysis: Warner Leading Critic Of Tech Firms In Russia Investigation. The New York Times (10/29, Kang) reports on ranking member of the Senate Intelligence Committee Sen. Mark Warner's (D-VA) role in the Senate investigation into Russian involvement in the 2016 elections, and particularly "how some of the biggest American technology companies, like Facebook, Google and Twitter, were used to spread foreign propaganda." Executives from those companies will testify before the committee this week. Warner is described as "among the harshest" critics of the companies, after having "built a fortune...as a technology and telecommunications investor and executive." The companies are arguing against regulation or legislation to compel them to disclose information about political ads, particularly a bill by Sens. Warner, Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), and John McCain (R-AZ). The Times says that the committee chairman, Sen. Richard Burr "has been more reserved than Mr. Warner" and Republicans "have been reluctant to regulate the rapidly evolving industry."

Mattis Threatens "Massive" Military Response From US Should North Korea Use Nuclear Weapons.

Defense Secretary Mattis during a visit to Seoul on Saturday denounced North Korea's "outlaw behavior" and vowed the US would have a "massive military response" to any nuclear attack. While the network newscasts did not provide coverage, the major print dailies and wires highlighted that the Defense Secretary's remarks came a day after he visited the demilitarized zone and ahead of President Trump's visit to the region.

The New York Times (10/28, Cooper) reports Mattis, speaking at the South Korean Ministry of National Defense, "accused North Korea of accelerating the threat of nuclear war through its series of nuclear and ballistic missile tests." He also "characterized Pyongyang's behavior as threatening and said that the United States would do everything in its power to protect its allies in the region." According to the Washington Post (10/28, Taylor), he "offered unequivocal support for American allies in the face of threats from North Korea." Mattis told reporters, "any attack on the United States or our allies will be defeated, and any use of nuclear weapons by the North will be met with a massive military response that is effective and overwhelming." In addition, the Defense Secretary "reiterated that the military options being considered were 'designed to buttress diplomats' efforts to maintain a deterrent stance and denuclearize the peninsula.'" The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Cheng, Lubold) reports Mattis acknowledged that although "diplomacy remains our preferred course of action in dealing with North Korea," he asserted, "I cannot imagine a condition under which the U.S. would accept North Korea as a nuclear power."

However, the AP (10/28, Burns) says Mattis "did not mention that...Trump has ratcheted up his own rhetoric." The AP notes the President in August "warned the North not to make any more threats against the United States, and said that if it did, it would be met with 'fire and fury like the world has never seen.'" Reuters (10/28, Stewart) reports "tension between North Korea and the United States has been building after a series of nuclear and missile tests by Pyongyang and bellicose verbal exchanges between North Korean leader Kim Jong Un and...Trump."

AFP (10/28) highlights that "Mattis' trip comes ahead of Trump's first presidential visit to South Korea next month as part of his Asia tour which also includes Japan, China, Vietnam and the Philippines." AFP adds that "all eyes will be on Trump's message to the North and Kim," as the President "is expected to deliver a speech at the South's parliament and to visit an US military base during a November 7-8 trip to Seoul."

NYTimes A1: Asian States Reconsidering Nuclear Weapons Amid Threat From North Korea. The New York Times (10/28, A1, Sanger, Sang-Hun, Rich) reports on its front-page that "as North Korea races to build a weapon that for the first time could threaten American cities, its neighbors are debating whether they need their own nuclear arsenals." The Times says that "for the first time in recent memory, there is a daily argument raging in both South Korea and Japan – sometimes in public, more often in private – about the nuclear option, driven by worry that the United States might hesitate to defend the countries if doing so might provoke a missile launched from the North at Los Angeles or Washington."

UN Special Rapporteur Warns Sanctions Could Punish North Korean Populace. The Wall Street

Journal (10/27, Fassihi) reported Tomas Ojea Quintana, the UN special rapporteur for human rights in North Korea, in his annual report to the UN General Assembly on the state of human rights in the country on Thursday warned tough new economic sanctions against North Korean government could backfire on the population. At a press conference on Friday, Quintana said, "I don't want to see the U.N. putting the government of North Korea [in a position] to choose between nuclearization and the economy."

Masterminds Behind Kim Jong Nam Murder Remain At Large. The AP (10/28, Talmadge) reports that during the ongoing "trial that could send two Southeast Asian women to the gallows, Malaysian prosecutors are shining a light on several men at large they say masterminded and played crucial roles in carrying out the assassination of North Korean leader Kim Jong's Un's estranged half brother," Kim Jong Nam. The AP says that since the trial of Siti Aisyah, 25, of Indonesia and Doan Thi Huong, 29, of Vietnam began on Oct. 2, "the alleged role of the four missing suspects has come to dominate the proceedings." The AP recaps "what's come out so far about the missing men, who are referred to officially in court only by their aliases, and what's known about their actions."

Mattis, Pence Deliver New Warning To North Korea Over Nuclear Weapons.

Defense Secretary Mattis arrived in the demilitarized zone on Friday to demand North Korea abandon its nuclear weapons ambitions while Vice President Pence told airmen at Minot Air Force Base that they should "be ready" to act in the event of an emergency. Although just one of the network newscasts provided coverage, reporting considered how their warnings could escalate tensions ahead of President Trump's visit to the region next week.

Richard Engel of NBC Nightly News (10/27, story 4, 2:10, Holt) reported that Mattis "flew right to North Korea's doorstep...and looked out on to the very hills where North Korea has hundreds of rockets and artillery pieces ready to fire in the event of a war." Along the demilitarized zone, "Mattis came within yards of North Korean soldiers as, in a bizarre scene in this tense place, tourists in the North looked on." The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Lubold, Cheng) reports Mattis said, "North Korean provocations continue to threaten regional and global security despite unanimous condemnation by the United Nations Security Council." USA Today (10/27, Onyanga-Omara) reports Mattis also denounced North Korea as "an oppressive regime that shackles its people, denying their freedom, their welfare and their human dignity in pursuit of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery in order to threaten others with catastrophe."

However, AFP (10/27) reports Mattis said, "As the US Secretary of State Tillerson made clear, our goal is not war but rather the complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearisation of the Korean peninsula." AFP adds Mattis asserted he and South Korean Defense Minister Song Young-Moo "made clear our mutual commitment to a diplomatic solution to address North Korea's reckless, outlaw behavior." The Hill (10/27, Manchester) reports Mattis continued, "We're doing everything we can to solve this diplomatically, everything we can. But ultimately our diplomats have to be backed up by strong soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines."

The AP (10/27, Macpherson) reports Vice President Pence during a Friday "visit to one of America's most potent nuclear bases," also "vowed...the U.S. will keep up economic and diplomatic pressure on North Korea to abandon its nuclear and ballistic missile programs." Speaking at Minot Air Force Base, Pence told about 250 airmen "there is no greater force for peace in this world" than the US nuclear arsenal. Pence asserted, "Under President Trump's leadership, we will make sure that our nuclear deterrent is stronger than ever before – modern, robust, flexible, resilient, and ready to confront any and all enemies of peace with a rapid, effective and overwhelming response." Politico (10/27, Nussbaum) reports Pence said, "Our enemies should never doubt the capabilities of the Armed Forces of the United States of America." He continued, "Anyone who would threaten our nation should know that America always seeks peace, but if we are forced to defend ourselves or our allies, we will do so with military power that is effective and overwhelming." Pence added, "Now, more than ever, your commander in chief is depending on you to be ready."

Reuters (10/27, Stewart) reports Gen. Joseph Dunford, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, on Friday also "met with his South Korean counterpart, General Kyeong Doo Jeong, a U.S. military statement said," and he "renewed U.S. warnings of retaliation to further provocations." The statement said Dunford "reaffirmed that any attack by North Korea would be met with a response that will be overwhelming and effective, using the full range of U.S. military capabilities."

In an interview with the AP (10/27, Pennington), Joseph Yun, the US envoy to North Korea, suggested that with China proving unhelpful in reining in North Korea, "Russia could play a useful diplomatic role.” Yun added, “If Russia delivers a unified message with the U.S., China, South Korea and Japan that the U.S. is not interested in regime change but rather we want to resolve the WMD issue, they can help better than anyone else to convince them of that.” According to the AP, “Yun said he and...Tillerson want Moscow to support the international pressure campaign against North Korea by implementing U.N sanctions, and to urge the isolated, often inscrutable government to engage in diplomatic efforts.” The AP notes National Security Adviser McMaster last week “addressed Russia’s importance with North Korea, saying it maintained ‘considerable influence’” and “urged Moscow to help ‘convince Kim Jong Un and his regime to move toward denuclearization of the peninsula as really a last chance to avoid severe consequences.’”

According to the New York Times (10/27, Cooper), Mattis’ visit to the DMZ “highlighted the central contradiction in the Trump administration’s rhetoric on North Korea: that for all the talk of military options, there really aren’t any – at least, none that wouldn’t put the sprawling city of Seoul, with its population of 10 million, in the cross hairs of thousands of Pyongyang’s artillery installations.” While Song “seemed at times to be giving his American counterpart a guided tour of how a strike against North Korea’s nuclear facilities would quickly trigger retaliation,” American defense officials acknowledge that North Korea has “a significant retaliatory capability, including chemical, biological and nuclear weapons as well as conventional forces. It would be virtually impossible, the officials said, to destroy all of North Korea’s offensive capabilities before it could strike Seoul.”

Meanwhile, CNN’s Situation Room (10/27, 5:52 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) correspondent Will Ripley reported “North Korea has been uncharacteristically quiet. No missile launches in a month and a half. No nuclear tests, at least not yet.” However, Ripley added that throughout North Korea, propaganda posters depict anti-Trump messages, “and the rhetoric has revved up.” He said a senior North Korean diplomat told him that the world must take literally Pyongyang’s “threat to conduct an above-ground nuclear test,” and so “the big question on everybody’s mind” is whether “it will happen when President Trump is in the region, and what would be the result – and the response – from the US.”

Bloomberg News (10/27, Kong, Cho) says that “while a Trump visit to the DMZ hasn’t been ruled out by the White House, it could be seen as provocative – North and South Korean soldiers stand feet part on either side of a line that marks the heavily fortified border.” Nonetheless, CNBC (10/27, Daniels) reports on its website that “North Korea stepped up its defiant rhetoric against the U.S. on Friday and said the U.S. is making ‘criminal moves for igniting a war of aggression,’ according to a state-run outlet.”

UK Blames The “WannaCry” Cyberattack On North Korea. The New York Times (10/27, Bilefsky) reports UK Minister of Security Ben Wallace told the BBC on Friday that the British government “believes ‘quite strongly’ that North Korea was behind the ‘WannaCry’ cyberattack in May that wreaked havoc on the National Health Service’s computer systems and spread to more than 150 countries.” He asserted, “This attack, we believe quite strongly, came from a foreign state. North Korea was the state that we believe was involved this worldwide attack.” However, Wallace “declined to elaborate on the evidence that had led to the conclusion. ‘I can’t obviously go into the detailed intelligence, but it is widely believed in the community and across a number of countries that North Korea had taken this role,’ he said.”

Federal Grand Jury Approves First Criminal Charges In Russia Investigation.

In the lead story for the CBS Weekend News (10/28, lead story, 2:05, Ninan), correspondent Reena Ninan reported, “Sources tell CBS News a federal grand jury has approved Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s first charges” in the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. Justice reporter Paula Reid said the “charges have been filed under seal, but they could become public as early as Monday, marking the most significant development of the special counsel investigation so far.” Reid added that the target of the indictment is unclear, but “the grand jury has heard testimony from several business associates of former Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort. Investigators also serve a warrant on Manafort’s home over the summer where they obtained documents and other physical evidence. So most of what has been publicly presented to the grand jury has been connected to Manafort. But we also know that Mueller is also looking into former national security adviser Mike Flynn’s lobbying payments to Turkey.”

Meanwhile, Errol Barnett of the CBS Weekend News (10/28, story 2, 1:35, Ninan) said Trump on Saturday “refrain[ed] from directly responding to news...Mueller has obtained his first indictment, choosing instead to tweet about the GDP and compliments from President Carter.” He added that “despite repeated efforts, the White House is not commenting on the record about what these pending charges from the special counsel could mean,” focusing instead on Trump’s upcoming visit to Asia. Barnett noted Trump “has long maintained his innocence and that of his campaign team during and after the election, claiming the Department of Justice probe is really motivated by political opponents,” and he and White House press secretary Sarah Sanders “have claimed Hillary Clinton colluded with Russia.”

However, Politico (10/28, Samuelsohn) reports the White House and personal lawyers “scrambled” on Saturday in anticipation of where Mueller’s Russia investigation could lead. Attorneys close to the case “said their cellphones have been ringing nonstop as they connected with each other, and with reporters,” and “said they wouldn’t be surprised if the charges were targeting Flynn or Manafort family members, or a longtime accountant or lawyer.”

Cobb: Trump Not Concerned About What Former Aides Will Tell Mueller. White House lawyer Ty Cobb told the New York Times (10/28, Apuzzo) that President Trump is confident that neither Flynn nor Manafort has damaging information about him to give prosecutors. In an interview on Thursday for The Times’ podcast “The New Washington,” Cobb also “said none of the White House documents turned over to Mr. Mueller showed evidence that that anyone colluded with Russia, or that Mr. Trump tried to obstruct justice.”

Trump Team Trains Rage On Clinton, Leaks Following Report Of First Charges In Russia Probe. In an analysis, Politico (10/28, Karni) reports that despite anticipating for months that Mueller would file criminal charges in his Russia probe, Trump, his lawyers, and senior officials “were all caught off guard” by reports a federal grand jury had approved the first indictment in the investigation. Politico says the resulting lack of information on the case that could have major consequences on the Administration “left many current and former Trump advisers livid, focusing their rage on how the information leaked and on a forever target: Hillary Clinton.”

The Hill (10/28, Manchester) reports White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Saturday the evidence of Clinton campaign’s collusion with Russian during the 2016 president election is “indisputable.” Sanders tweeted: “Clinton spokesman just said he’s ‘damn glad’ Clinton campaign colluded w/ Russia to spread disinformation about @POTUS & influence election.” The Hill observes that Sanders’ tweet “appeared to reference comments [former Clinton spokesman Brian] Fallon made to The Washington Post on Friday.” In another tweet that linked to an article from The Federalist, Sanders wrote, “The evidence Clinton campaign, DNC & Russia colluded to influence the election is indisputable.”

The Hill (10/28, Carter) “Briefing Room” blog reports former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said Saturday that focus should be kept on the “continued lies of the Clinton administration.” During an interview on Fox News’ Fox & Friends, Lewandowski argued that the “speculation is so insane right now” and that focus must center on the “Clinton administration” and “the continued fallacies that they perpetuate.”

House Intelligence Committee Reaches Agreement Over Fusion GPS Bank Records. Reuters (10/28, Volz, Hosenball) reports the House Intelligence Committee announced Saturday it had reached an agreement over its subpoena of Fusion GPS’ bank records as part of the panel’s investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election. The announcement “came a day after a federal judge had given an unnamed bank more time to respond to the congressional panel’s subpoena to Fusion GPS.”

CNN Failed To Disclose Ties To Fusion GPS Operatives. The Daily Caller (10/28, Ross, Hasson) says CNN’s reporting on the so-called Russia dossier compiled by Fusion GPS “has left out at least one crucial fact: the close ties between the network and the opposition research firm at the center of the dossier controversy.” The Daily Caller states that CNN’s justice correspondent Evan Perez, who led the reporting, has a “personal closeness” with Fusion GPS operatives, as evidenced by Facebook photos of Perez and Fusion GPS partners Neil King and Peter Fritsch appearing together at different public and private events. The Daily Caller adds that “at no point in Perez’s reporting did he disclose his close ties to the Fusion GPS operatives.”

Ex-Trump Aides Say Comey’s “Coordination” Testimony Offers New Context On Clinton Campaign’s Dossier Funding. The Washington Times (10/28, Scarborough) reports that former FBI Director James Comey’s statement during congressional testimony last March that his agents were investigating “whether there was any coordination between the [Trump] campaign and Russia’s efforts” would fit the Hillary Clinton campaign and Democrats today, according to ex-Trump aides. Former Trump campaign communications adviser Michael Caputo said, “If there was enough Russia collusion evidence to warrant a special counsel for the president, there’s far more now on the Clinton campaign’s connection to a foreign spy ring that included Russians. ... That, coupled with the stymied investigation into the Russian bribery plot and donations directed to the Clinton Foundation, are grounds for a special counsel.”

WPost A1: While Trump Is Eager Salesman On Tax Reform, Congress Crafting Policy.

In a front-page analysis, the Washington Post (10/27, A1, Paletta, Costa, Rucker) reports that amid the ongoing debates over tax policy, President Trump “has emerged as a relentless salesman, proclaiming one promise after another. ... But for all the bustle emanating from the White House, most of the policy action is at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, in the Capitol, as Republicans try to rush through a sweeping tax cut package by the end of the year.” The Post highlights Republicans after to craft tax legislation, some of the policy items under debate, and Trump’s support for the package, as long as it benefits the middle class and cuts the corporate tax rate.

White House Report Predicts Faster Economic Growth From Corporate Tax Cuts. The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Sparshott) reports that a new report released Friday by the White House Council of Economic of Economic Advisers says that reducing the corporate tax rate to 20 percent and permitting companies to write-off the cost of their capital spending would increase business investment, spur faster economic expansion, and raise household income. The Journal adds that the study is meant to bolster the case for cutting corporate taxes and highlights several specific policies.

McConnell Criticized For Locking Democrats Out Of Tax Reform. The Wall Street Journal (10/27, Andrews) reports some Republicans are criticizing Senate Majority Leader McConnell for keeping Democrats out of the tax reform process, despite their interest in engaging with the GOP. Among them, Rep. Mark Walker warns that the “secrecy and trying to force feed it and all of the sudden” will cause the legislation to fail. Similarly, Rep. Richard Neal says that “for this to succeed, you’re going to need Democratic input.” Despite calls for bipartisanship and President Trump’s push for bipartisanship, the Journal notes that no Democrats have seen the bill ahead of its public release.

Brady: Republicans Want To Increase Retirement Contributions. The Washington Times (10/27, Persons) reports House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady in an appearance on Fox News said on Friday that contrary to prior reporting, Republicans “want to increase the amount that you can give to your 401(k) or IRA.” Brady added that he has spoken to President Trump about incentivizing people to “save more and save sooner.”

Governors Criticize Tax Plan’s Proposed Removal Of SALT Deduction. Reuters (10/27, Kearney) reports the governors of New York and California said on Friday that the tax plan’s proposed elimination of the state and local tax deductions on federal income tax is “an attack” on high-tax states and a “gross manipulation of our tax code.” They went on to argue that the plan would actually make their residents pay more, with New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo’s office claiming that his state’s taxpayers would pay an additional $5,300 in federal income taxes on average. The AP (10/27, Ronayne) reports California Gov. Jerry Brown also warned that some California Republicans would lose their seats if they voted for the provision.

WSJournal: Republicans Should Not Flirt With “Millionaire Tax.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/27) writes that Republican considerations of raising the top income tax rate to potentially 42 to 44 percent would signify a capitulation to pressure from redistributionists and would cut back on potential economic gains. The Journal concludes that the point of tax reform is to eliminate subsidies and loopholes that distort economic decisions in favor of lower rates, and that maintaining high rates for millionaires will encourage tax lobbyists and Congress to create more loopholes.

Schumer: Trump Tax Plan Is “Absolute Catastrophe.” In a USA Today (10/27) op-ed, Senate Minority Leader Schumer criticizes President Trump’s tax plan, arguing that it differs from former president Reagan’s plan in “three major ways:” it hurts the middle class, it would “explode the deficit,” and it hasn’t had any Democrat input. Schumer goes on to detail the plan’s benefits for wealthy taxpayers, and argues that it “will add between $3 trillion and $5 trillion to the deficit.” He concludes that the plan is an “absolute catastrophe.”

Marcus: Trump Tax Cuts Are “Dangerous,” Will Explode National Debt. Ruth Marcus writes in her Washington Post (10/27, Marcus) column that the US “doesn’t need a tax cut,” and that President Trump’s tax reform is “dangerous” because it will “add trillions to the national debt at a point when it is already dangerously large as a share of the economy” at 77 percent. Marcus goes on the argue that Republicans are “desperate for a legislative win,” and are willing to pass a “reckless” bill in order to appeal to voters next year.

Brady Announces Republican Tax Plan Will Preserve Itemized Property Tax Deduction.

Bloomberg News (10/28, Brody) reports House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady said in a statement Saturday that the Republican tax plan will preserve the “itemized property tax deduction to help taxpayers with local tax burdens,” after pressure from lawmakers. The move was aimed at resolving an impasse between leadership and Republicans from high-tax states over state and local income tax deductions that “threatened the bill’s prospects in the House.”

House Republicans Concerned About Tax Bill “Secrecy.” Politico (10/28, Lorenzo, Kim) reports “House Republicans are increasingly alarmed by the secrecy” around the party’s tax bill, and the feeling “extends to their tax aides, who’ve been excluded from a recent series of hours-long member meetings.” According to Politico, the House approach “stands in stark contrast to the other end of the Capitol, where top Senate Republicans want to ensure all GOP senators feel they have buy-in from the start” in order to avoid problems the party experienced with attempting to pass Obamacare repeal earlier this year.

WPost Analysis: Failure To Pass Tax Reform Could Be Paul Ryan’s Downfall. In an analysis, the Washington Post (10/28, Kane) suggests the upcoming tax reform bill is House Speaker Ryan’s “last, best chance” for a “signature achievement.” According to the Post, failure to pass the bill “would be crippling,” and could result in a “political bloodbath” during the 2018 midterms “that drops the GOP into the minority and boots Ryan off the dais.” The piece goes on to detail obstacles Ryan faces, noting that the party’s “moderate wing is a big part of Ryan’s challenge.”

NYTimes Profiles Mnuchin Aide Justin Muzinich, “Central Player” In Tax Reform. The New York Times (10/28, Rappeport) profiles Justin Muzinich, a top aide to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin that “has emerged as a central player in the Trump administration’s tax overhaul effort.” According to congressional aides, Muzinich “has the authority to speak on behalf of the secretary.” The piece goes on to detail his past work, which focused heavily on tax policy, and his “reputation for pragmatism over ideology.”

NYTimes A1: Experts Divided On Impact Of Proposed 401(k) Contribution Cap. In a front-page article, the New York Times (10/28, A1, Cohen) examines the controversy around a Republican proposal to cap 401(k) contributions. Despite concerns, both President Trump and Rep. Kevin Brady have said they do not want to undermine retirement savings. The Times explains the change may be critical in paying for the Republican tax plan, which must “have no impact on the budget at the end of 10 years” if passed via the reconciliation process. The move has drawn criticism from many, including former economic adviser to President George H.W. Bush William Gale, who calls it “an enormous budget gimmick” that uses “future revenues to pay for current tax cuts.” However, others say it “makes little difference whether they pay taxes on retirement savings now or in the future.” Similarly, James Choi, a finance professor at the Yale School of Management, found in a study that the “tax deduction was a pretty minor force” in impacting retirement savings.

National Association of Home Builders To Oppose GOP Tax Bill.

The Wall Street Journal (10/28, Rubin) reports the National Association of Home Builders has announced it will oppose the House Republicans’ soon-to-be-released tax reform bill after GOP leadership decided not to replace mortgage interest and property tax deductions with a new tax credit and instead said they would include an itemized deduction for property taxes. However, the Journal acknowledges details of the legislation remain elusive.

Despite Paris Accord Withdrawal, US To Attend Global Climate Change Talks.

Reuters (10/28, Doyle, Chestney) reports a US delegation led by Under Secretary for Political Affairs Thomas Shannon will attend next month’s climate talks in Germany centered on drafting a “rule book” for implementing the 2015 Paris climate accord. In June, President Trump withdrew the US from the agreement; however, the US “retains its place in the talks because the Paris pact stipulates” it cannot formally withdraw until 2020. The US presence comes “to the dismay of some nations that want Washington sidelined.” Many American allies, “including France, Canada and Britain, hope to coax Trump to end up staying in the pact,” although other delegates expect some US officials to “contribute to clear, enforceable rules that will be in U.S. interests whether it is in or out of the deal.” Reuters predicts the treatment if the US delegation “is likely to hinge on whether Washington limits itself to technical details of the rule book or promotes Trump’s pro-coal political agenda.”

Gore: “Zero Chance” Trump And Pruitt Will Change Their Minds On Climate Change.

The Chicago Sun-Times (10/29, Dudek) reports that during a Friday appearance at the Chicago Humanities Festival, former Vice President Al Gore said that he does not expect President Trump and EPA Administration Pruitt to change their positions on climate change. Gore said, “I tried to convince Donald Trump. I’ve had many conversations with him after the election, after he went into the White House, and I thought he would come to his senses, but I was wrong.” Regarding

Trump and Pruitt, Gore said, "There's zero chance, in my opinion, of changing their minds."

USA Today Weighs Administration's Approach To Clean Power Plan.

USA Today (10/29) editorializes that the Trump Administration's recent focus on "gutting the Clean Power Plan...demonstrates sheer contempt for laws governing clean air and the benefits of environmental regulation." The editorial board describes the advances that the renewable energy industry has made recently, even in the wake of President Trump's decision to remove the US from the Paris climate agreement. USA Today asserts that, while the Clean Power Plan or something similar could still survive the attempted dismantling, it "might take years or bureaucratic and legal wrangling" while our planet continues to grow warmer.

Karen Harbert, CEO of the US Chamber of Commerce's Global Energy Institute, asserts in USA Today (10/29) that the "fundamental flaw" of the Clean Power Plan "was that it would have intentionally raised the cost of energy without regard to the impact on families and businesses." Harbert opines that we should be seeking to make every form of energy more affordable and cleaner, rather than relying on mandates from Washington. Harbert does concede that "the US Chamber of Commerce believes that the climate is changing, and that man is contributing to these changes."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Insect Armageddon." The New York Times (10/29) editorializes that "the fate of the world's insects is inseparable from our own," and that "there is alarming new evidence that insect populations are in rapid decline." The Times describes a new study co-authored by the University of Sussex's Prof. Dave Goulson, which found that the biomass of insects collected in German nature preserves declined by 76 percent in 25 years. The Times opines that insects are necessary "for pollinating our food" and providing a source of food to other animals. Therefore, humanity must take steps immediately to stop their decline, including reducing pesticide and herbicide use and creating buffer zones surrounding single-crop fields.

"Phil Murphy For Governor Of New Jersey." The New York Times (10/29) editorializes that voters should choose Phil Murphy for governor of New Jersey because he "guarantees voters an end to the Chris Christie era." The Times asserts that "New Jersey can't afford another four years of Christie-inspired chaos," and that the Republican candidate in the election, Kim Guadagno, would offer an agenda that is too similar to that of the incumbent governor's. The Times opines that Murphy's experience at Goldman Sachs and within the Democratic Party makes up for concerns about his lack of "political experience in the state," and agrees with his campaign trail assertion that "he sees New Jersey as America's best opportunity for a turnaround."

"Abandoned In Calais." A New York Times (10/27) editorial recalls a now-shuttered refugee camp near Calais, dubbed the "Jungle," that became "a symbol of Europe's failure on migrants." The Times says French President Emmanuel Macron's government and local authorities "are making life as miserable as possible for migrants" to prevent another camp like the "Jungle" from erecting. "The result is inhumane conditions for the some 700 migrants" that are so bad even the United Nations condemned them last week. The Times argues while "French authorities need to provide them with proper shelter now, along with better sanitation, food and medical care," Britain, which "has resettled less than half of the 480 unaccompanied child migrants it promised," can also greatly assist in the crisis.

Washington Post.

"Trump Needs To Say Something – And Do Something – About The Assault On The Rohingya." The Washington Post (10/29) editorializes that the Burmese Rohingya community is being subjected to "the biggest and most ruthless campaign of ethnic cleansing the world has seen in years." The Post asserts that the Muslim Rohingya are a hated minority in majority-Buddhist Burma, and that individuals both in Burma and in the United States have offered insufficient support for members of the community in their time of crisis. The Post opines that the Trump Administration should use President Trump's upcoming trip to Asia to speak out against the crisis, and that the State Department should formally use the term "ethnic cleansing" to refer to the forced movement of the Rohingya from Burma to Bangladesh.

"A Trump Tax Idea That Might Actually Do Some Good." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/29) expresses hope that National Economic Council Director Cohn's reported floating of a gas tax increase in a recent meeting with members of Congress could lead to this smart policy being enacted. The Post writes, "The tax has idled at 18.4 cents per gallon for a quarter-century. Faced with infrastructure spending needs, many states...have recently upped their state-level gas taxes. A reasonable Congress would share their rationality."

"Chevy Chase Populism In Maryland." The Washington Post (10/29) editorializes that Maryland gubernatorial candidate Ben Jealous' stated goal to provide "free tuition for Marylanders who attend public universities, colleges and community colleges" is a craven political strategy and will be a potentially reckless piece of legislation if it ever advances to that stage. The Post calls Jealous "irresponsible" for floating the idea when a similar bill to provide free community college for 40,000 Maryland students failed this year because it was considered to be unaffordable, even though Jealous' proposal would likely cost hundreds of millions of dollars more annually if it came to fruition. The Post goes on to assert that Jealous' proposal could "amount to a gigantic giveaway for thousands of well-off families" with children who attend one of the state's expensive four-year universities. The Post argues that the money that would be earmarked for this "giveaway" could be better spent on "K-12 schools, parks or mental-health care."

Wall Street Journal.

"Game Of Healthcare Thrones." The Wall Street Journal (10/29) says in an editorial that with the Affordable Care Act appearing to be here to stay, health sector firms are looking for new ways to be profitable in the face of stricter federal regulation. The Journal considers the possible CVS-Aetna deal as an example.

"Toomey's 'Guidance' Repeal Guide." The Wall Street Journal (10/29) editorializes that congressional Republicans should utilize the Congressional Review Act to reverse a lending guidance that the Obama Administration issued in 2013 that focused on leveraged lending. The Journal opines that policy grounds justify the overriding of the guidance because it has increased costs and cut off lending since it was issued.

"How To Kill American Solar." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/29) says that it opposes tariffs on foreign solar panels that could hurt the US solar sector. The tariffs are being sought by US solar-panel makers Suniva and Solar World, which argue that importation of panel parts are undercutting US business. But the Journal argues that the future of the US solar sector is in innovation, not in component manufacture, and that the tariffs would impede advances.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GOP Plan For A Speedy Tax Overhaul Faces Uncertain Road

Mueller Set To Act On Charges

Why Are Markets Rising Everywhere? Investors Can't Stop Buying Every Dip

Foreign Companies In China Get A New Partner: The Communist Party

New York Times:

Russia Uses Its Oil Giant, Rosneft, As A Foreign Policy Tool

Sexual Misconduct In California's Capitol Is Difficult To Escape

Five Years After Sandy, Are We Better Prepared?

2 Navy SEALs Under Suspicion In Strangling Of Green Beret In Mali

'Bedlam Out Here In Arizona' After Jeff Flake Departs Senate Race

Trump Tries To Shift Focus As First Charges Reportedly Loom In Russia Case

'I Don't Want An Independent Catalonia': Rally Backs Unified Spain

Washington Post:

Puerto Rico Canceling Controversial Contract

Setback Clouds Tax Bill's Release

Facing Heat On Russia, Trump Hits At Clinton

Pelosi Stakes Hopeful Place At Center Of 2018 Fight

Nursing Home Death Prompts New Questions For UMC For Troubled United Medical Center

Financial Times:

Spain Faces Test Of Authority In Catalonia Under Direct Rule
Powell Leading In Trump's Fed Chair Reality-TV Spectacle
Customs Teams In EU27 Unprepared For Hard Brexit

Washington Times:

CBO Defends Powers Amid Republican Criticism Over Bad Budget Forecasts
Corker To Use Power, Alliance With Flake To Question Trump On Foreign Policy
Mueller Investigation Enters New Phase: Criminal Charges
Nunes' Investigating Digs Up Trove Of Democrat Connections To Russia Dossier
George Washington's Church To Tear Down Memorial Honoring First President

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Severe Weather; Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; Navy SEAL-Training Death Investigation; Afghanistan US Casualty; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy; Spain-Catalonia Independence; Weinstein Sexual Harassment Scandal; Halloween Costume Warning; Airline-Windshield Crack; Airline-Bird Strike; UK Royal Family-Possible Security Breach; Baseball World Series; Veteran Uncle.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; Russia Meddling Investigation-Expert Comment; Severe Weather; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy; Hurricane Sandy Recovery; NFL-Kneeling Protests; Persian Gulf Diplomatic Crisis; Wild Horse Protection; James Madison Plantation.

NBC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy; Severe Weather; Weather Forecast; Obamacare Impacts; Spain-Catalonia Independence; NFL News; Sexual Harassment Prevention; Virginia State Election Candidate; Airline-Bird Strike; Space Rock Flyby; High School Marching Band.

Network TV At A Glance:

Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel – 9 minutes, 45 seconds
Severe Weather – 8 minutes, 5 seconds
Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy – 6 minutes, 45 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Navy SEAL-Training Death Investigation; Student Loan Debt Policy; Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy; Severe Weather; Baseball World Series; NFL-Kneeling Protests; Spain-Catalonia Independence.

FOX: Russia Meddling Investigation-Special Counsel; White House-Coming Agendas; Baseball World Series.

NPR: Tax Reform Plan; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery-Controversy; UK Royal Family-Possible Security Breach; Baseball World Series.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson; has lunch with Vice President Mike Pence and Attorney General Jeff Sessions; meets with Secretary of Defense James Mattis; will participate in Halloween at the White House.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President for lunch with Attorney General Jeff Sessions; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for Steve King as U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic.

US Senate: 3:00 PM Senate votes on district judge nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Trevor McFadden to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Columbia, with agenda including confirmation vote * Motion to invoke cloture on the nomination passed by 85 votes to 12 last week

Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

4:15 PM Sen. Coons 'Pen and Pad' session on AUMF, U.S. operations in Africa – U.S. Senator Chris Coons (D-Del.), a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, will hold an on-the-record "Pen and Pad" session in the Senate Press Gallery to discuss both the Authorization for Use of Military Force (AUMF) hearing with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and Secretary of Defense James Mattis and U.S. military operations in Africa.

Location: Senate Press Gallery (S-316) coons.senate.gov
<https://twitter.com/SenCoonsOffice>

5:00 PM Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis testify to Senate Foreign Relations Committee on AUMFs – Hearing on 'The Authorizations for the Use of Military Force: Administration Perspective', with testimony from Secretary of State Rex Tillerson; and Secretary of Defense James Mattis

Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 419, Washington, DC
<http://foreign.senate.gov/>

5:30 PM Senate Governmental Affairs Committee votes on nominee for GSA head – Business Meeting, with agenda including consideration of nomination of Emily Murphy to be General Services Administration Administrator

Location: U.S. Capitol, S-216, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

US House: 1:30 PM Field hearing on 'Examining Physical Security and Cybersecurity at Our Nation's Ports'

Location: Port of Los Angeles, 425 S Palos Verdes St, San Pedro, CA homeland.house.gov
<https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

Other: No relevant event scheduled.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

No late-night talk show aired on Sunday night.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Monday, September 11, 2017
Date: Monday, September 11, 2017 7:02:10 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Washington Examiner: Republicans Reject 1 Percent Cut To Interior Department.
- Allentown (PA) Morning Call: Trump To Visit The Pentagon, Pence Shanksville On Sept. 11 Anniversary.
- McClatchy: Trump Administration Mulls Oil And Gas Exploration On Eastern Seaboard.
- Brainerd (MN) Daily Dispatch: 101.6 Million Americans Participated In Hunting, Fishing And Wildlife Activities In 2016, Report Says.
- Washington Examiner: GAO To Investigate Ryan Zinke's Alleged Threats Against Lisa Murkowski For Obamacare Vote.
- Washington Post: Trump Wants More Infrastructure. So Interior Aims To Speed Up Environmental Reviews.

- Washington Post: Interior Faulted For Subsidy To Firm Once Tied To David Bernhardt, Now Deputy Secretary.
- USA Today: Sonny Perdue Vows To Solve 'Fire Borrowing' To Fight Wildfires.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Cheney Bill Seeks To Put Oil And Gas Development In State Hands.
- Associated Press: Trump To Welcome Cabinet At Camp David.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- 2 Tribes Add To Applications To Put Land Into Trust.
- DOI, Nooksack Reach Deal On Tribal Election, Disenrollment.
- Red Lake Courts Awarded Grants.
- Surveillance Photo Of Fire Fuels Tensions Between Ranchers, Yakama Nation.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: BLM Move Still In Play.
- Bozeman (MT) Daily Chronicle: BLM, Forest Service In Talks About Speeding Mining Ban Analysis.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: US Agency To Proceed With Sale Of GarCo, Mesa Leases.
- Virginia (MN) Mesabi Daily Tribune: Emmer-Nolan Amendment Passes U.S. House.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Recreation Generates Millions On BLM Land In Southwest Wyoming, New Study Shows.
- Palm Springs (CA) Desert Sun: Sia Tweets Support For CA Bill Targeting Mojave Desert Water Project.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Additional Coverage: N.M. Leaders Urge Feds To Protect Chaco From Oil And Gas Encroachment.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Regulation Streamlining Debated.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- US Misuses Taxpayer Cash For California Water Project.
- 40-year Water Conflict Nears Its Conclusion.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Arizona Daily Sun: Biologists, Wildlife Managers Divided On Basics Of Wolf Recovery.
- Baton Rouge (LA) Advocate: Frog Habitat Case Pending At U.S.
- Del Rio (TX) News Herald: Regional Bunchgrass Designated Endangered Species.
- Washington Times: Invasive Species At Wildlife Refuge Being Removed.
- Associated Press: Dominion And Partners Push For Quick Federal Action On Proposed Pipeline.
- ABC News: Nesting Sea Turtles Are On Florida's Frontlines As Irma Nears.
- U.S. News & World Report: Youth Crew Work At Canaan Valley National Wildlife Refuge.
- Tuscaloosa (AL) News: The Least Understood Program Of The USFWS.
- Charleston (WV) Gazette-Mail: John McCoy: Wolf Ruling Might Be A Blessing In Disguise.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Oral Histories: New Orleans Civil Rights Leaders, Activists.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Plan To Grow Las Vegas Includes Monument Protection.
- U.S. News & World Report: Officials: Man Pointed BB Gun At Rangers Before He Was Shot.
- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Glacier Park Temporarily Suspends Issuing New Backcountry Permits.
- Albany (NY) Times Union: Commentary: Repair National Parks, Preserve Their History.
- Fresno (CA) Bee: Identity Theft By Trademark Tramples Yosemite's History.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- NBC: Caribbean Islands Face Hard Road To Recovery In Wake Of Irma.
- NBC: Caribbean Islands "Ripped To Shreds" By Hurricane Irma.
- Reuters: Irma Hammers Cuba, Bahamas, Other Caribbean Nations En Route For Florida.
- Washington Post: Hurricane Katia Strikes Mexico As Jose Largely Misses Caribbean Islands Hit By Irma.
- Politico Europe: NATO Chief: North Korea's "Reckless Behavior" Demands "Global Response."
- Fox News: North Korea Denounces Haley's Remarks Ahead Of UN Security Council Vote On Sanctions.
- Associated Press: Diplomats: US Seeks Quick Security Council Action On Proposed North Korea

Sanctions.

- Marianas Variety: US, FSM Hold Annual Joint Economic Management Committee Meeting.

Office Of Surface Mining

- DMME Receives Award For Environmental Excellence.
- "Trump Says He Cares About People In Coal Country. So Why Halt A Study On Their Health?"
- Bill Lepp: On Unnecessary Hillbillies And Mountaintop Removal.
- The War On Coal Communities: Strip Mining.

US Geological Survey

- CBS: At Least 60 Dead From Magnitude 8.1 Earthquake In Mexico As Country Braces For Hurricane Katia.
- Washington Times: Nevada Panel Reviewing Name Change For Jeff Davis Peak.
- Associated Press: 4 Small Earthquakes Recorded Across Northern Oklahoma.

Top National News

- CBS: Trump Approves Irma Disaster Declaration As Florida Officials Laud Federal Response.
- New York Times: Administration Monitoring Irma As Hurricane Approaches Florida.
- USA Today: Trump Signs $15 Billion Disaster Funding Bill That Raises Debt Ceiling.
- The Hill: Trump Calls For Republicans To Take Action On Tax Reform.
- New York Times: Media Analyses: Disaster Aid, Debt Ceiling Deal Shows Trump's Political Positions Remain Unpredictable.
- The Hill: The Hill Analysis: Trump Appoints Climate Skeptics To EPA, DOE.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "9/11: Finding Answers In Ashes 16 Years Later."
 - "Cambodia's Democracy Betrayed."
 - "Kris Kobach And His 5,313 Fraudulent Voters."
- Washington Post.
 - "Trump's Travel Ban May Expire Before It Reaches The Supreme Court."
 - "Trump Says He Cares About People In Coal Country. So Why Halt A Study On Their Health?"
 - "A New Cancer Drug May Be The First In A Line Of Revolutionary Treatments."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump's Hurricane Rebuilding Job."
 - "It Is Chilling To Hear."
 - "Trial Lawyers And Breitbart Unite."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Republicans Reject 1 Percent Cut To Interior Department.

The Washington Examiner (9/8, Kasperowicz) reports that "dozens of House Republicans on Friday voted down language that would have imposed a 1 percent cut on funding for the Department of the Interior, forcing the proposal to fail." According to the article, "68 Republicans opposed it, prompting it to fail 156-248."

House Muddles Through EPA-Interior Amendments. Politico Morning Energy (9/8, Adragna) reports that "House lawmakers churned through about 70 of the 80 amendments related to EPA and Interior during a debate on a spending package H.R. 3354 (115) Thursday evening." The article provides highlights, including an "amendment adding $9.7 million to address" the maintenance backlog at national parks, which was supported by lawmakers in a voice vote. Also, a "bipartisan push to block offshore drilling in a host of Atlantic sites came up short on a voice vote."

Additional coverage was provided by the Houston Chronicle (9/8, Osborne).

Trump To Visit The Pentagon, Pence Shanksville On Sept. 11 Anniversary.

The Allentown \(PA\) Morning Call (9/10, Pleffer) reports that Vice President Pence will visit Shanksville, Pennsylvania on Monday to "give keynote remarks at the September 11 Observance Ceremony held at the Flight 93 National Memorial." After the ceremony, Pence "will tour the Flight 93 National Memorial Visitors Center and participate in a wreath laying ceremony with the friends and family of the fallen."

The AP (9/10) reports the event will begin at 9:45 a.m. with a "somber ritual that includes the tolling of bells and a reading of the victims' names." WFXP-TV Erie (PA)'s WJET-TV Erie, PA (9/10) reported that Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke also will attend, and the AP (9/10) reports "thousands" are expected.

Additional coverage was provided by the Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (9/10, Wardle), the Johnstown \(PA\) Tribune-Democrat (9/10, Hurst), Westmoreland \(PA\) (9/10, Signorini), the Somerset County \(PA\) Daily American (9/10, Toth), and the Somerset County \(PA\) Daily American (9/10, Ganassi).

Trump Administration Mulls Oil And Gas Exploration On Eastern Seaboard.

McClatchy (9/8, Pugh) reports the Trump Administration is considering approval of testing for fossil fuel deposits "along the Eastern seaboard that would mark a significant step toward offshore drilling." Environmentalists warn that "long-term exposure to the noise" caused by testing "could cause hearing loss and impair breeding, feeding, foraging and communication activity among dolphins, endangered whales, other marine mammals and sea turtles," while others warn of possible economic impacts on local fishing activity. However, a bill being voted on next week would all but eliminate protections for marine mammals.

SC Develop Offshore Energy Resources. In a letter to the Greenville \(SC\) News (9/8, Loomis), South Carolina Petroleum Council Executive Director Bonnie Loomis wrote that "South Carolina should not miss out on our opportunity to expand our economy through safe development of our offshore resources." Loomis adds that the US is leading the world in reducing "carbon emissions, which have reached 30-year lows in the power sector." The EPA found that although energy consumption increased from 1970 through 2016, "combined emissions of six key air pollutants dropped 73 percent" over that time.

President Trump, Offshore Drilling Is Not Welcome Here. Columbia \(SC\) State (9/9, Martin) editorializes that offshore exploration and drilling is opposed, with much bipartisan support, throughout the US Atlantic Coast, which includes South Carolina. South Carolina Governor Henry McMaster, along with, "Republican governors of Maryland and New Jersey and Democratic governors of North Carolina and Delaware" oppose the Trump Administration's effort "to expand drilling and testing." According to the American Petroleum Institute (API), more production throughout the Atlantic, Eastern Gulf of Mexico and the Arctic Ocean will aid national security, create more employment and boost governmental revenue. The editorial states that, "The fact is, the nation has more oil and natural gas than was imagined only a few years ago. Across the nation, including areas of South Carolina, more electricity is being produced from the sun and the wind."

101.6 Million Americans Participated In Hunting, Fishing And Wildlife Activities In 2016, Report Says.

The Brainerd \(MN\) Daily Dispatch (9/10) reports that the Interior Department announced a new report by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service which shows that "101.6 million Americans—40 percent of the U.S. population 16 years old and older—participated in wildlife-related activities in 2016, such as hunting, fishing and wildlife-watching." The report "illustrates gains in wildlife watching—particularly around the home—and fishing, with moderate declines in the number of hunters nationally." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said in a news release, "This report absolutely underscores the need to increase public access to public lands across the United States. Hunting and fishing are a part of the American heritage. As a kid who grew up hunting and fishing on public lands who later took my own kids out on the same land, I know how important it is to expand access for future generations. Many folks east of the Mississippi River rely on friends with large acreages or pay high rates for hunting and fishing clubs. This makes access to wildlife refuges and other public lands more important.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (9/9, Frye) and Guns (9/8, Eger).

GAO To Investigate Ryan Zinke’s Alleged Threats Against Lisa Murkowski For Obamacare Vote.

The Washington Examiner (9/8, Leonard) reported that the Government Accountability Office has decided to investigate “whether Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke violated anti-lobbying laws for allegedly threatening repercussions against Alaska after GOP Sen. Lisa Murkowski voted against a Republican plan to partially repeal Obamacare.” The article said Reps. Raul Grijalva (D-AZ) and Frank Pallone (D-NJ) asked the GAO to look into the matter.

Also reporting are the Alaska Dispatch News (9/8, Martinson) and Newsmax (9/8, Burke).

Trump Wants More Infrastructure. So Interior Aims To Speed Up Environmental Reviews.

The Washington Post (9/8, Grandon) reports that the Trump Administration, “aiming to rebuild ailing U.S. infrastructure as quickly as possible, wants to cap how long such environmental impact statements (EIS) run.” In a recently issued memo, the Interior Department “directed its agencies to limit environmental impact statements to 150 pages ‘or 300 pages for unusually complex projects, with exceptions being granted only by higher-ups within the department.” However, “environmental groups criticized the decision, signed by Interior Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt, arguing that arbitrary time and length limits undercut the public’s ability to weigh in on how major projects like oil pipelines and drilling rigs are built on federal lands.”

The Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (9/10) editorializes that “federally mandated environmental impact statements have become so inefficient they compromise public safety and render everyone to make due with crumbling roads, bridges and pipelines.” The paper finds hope in Bernhardt’s recent order. According to the article, “a year should be adequate to ensure projects don’t cause preventable harm to air, water, wildlife, flora and fauna.”

Interior Faulted For Subsidy To Firm Once Tied To David Bernhardt, Now Deputy Secretary.

The Washington Post (9/8, Eilperin, Gillum) reports the Bureau of Reclamation (USBR) “improperly provided millions of dollars in subsidies to contractors in California, according to an inspector general’s report, including to” the “major” Westlands Water District that David Bernhardt, a lobbyist who is now the Interior Department’s deputy secretary, once represented. According to the IG, the USBR “didn’t fully disclose to Congress and others the $84 million cost of its Bay Delta Conservation Plan in California. It also said the bureau couldn’t provide paperwork for why the water contractors didn’t have to pay back $50 million in federal funding.” However, an Interior Department spokeswoman “said in an email that Bernhardt played no role in the matter either in forging the initial agreement, which was signed about three months after he left his post in January 2009 as Interior’s solicitor, or while working in the private sector.”

Sonny Perdue Vows To Solve ‘Fire Borrowing’ To Fight Wildfires.

USA Today (9/8, Sullivan) reports Agriculture Secretary Perdue said Friday at the swearing in of Tony Tooke as the new Chief of the US Forest Service that “he is making the case to Congress and the White House ‘to fix the fire-borrowing problem once and for all.’” With 82 large wildfires now underway in 10 states, Perdue highlighted that “fire suppression spending now exceeds 55% of the U.S. Forest Service budget and may reach $2 billion this year,” which has forced the USDA “to borrow funds to fight fires from accounts that are supposed to be used to manage the fuel load on forest floors. That ends up increasing the number and intensity of fires and the cost of fighting them.” Perdue stated that while the media attention is limited, “if you’re out there in those rural areas of the Northwest and the Northern Rockies, you see the devastation and damage there first hand.”

Additional coverage of wildfires was provided by the Washington Post (9/8, Guarino, Craig), the Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (9/10, Darling), the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (9/10), the Albany \(OR\) Democrat-Herald (9/10, McNally), and the Idaho State Journal (9/10, Wuerthner).

Cheney Bill Seeks To Put Oil And Gas Development In State Hands.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/10, Richards) reports that Rep. Liz Cheney is “co-sponsoring a bill that would hand more control of oil and gas development on federal lands to the states, stoking fears from environmental groups that the range of access and protections from federal agencies is narrowing." The Federal Land Freedom Act "allows states to prove they have the enforcement muscle and regulatory infrastructure to oversee oil and gas permitting, leasing and production on available federal land." The bill would "still prohibit oil and gas development in national parks or wilderness areas and would allow development on land determined by federal agencies' land management plans as open to drilling."

Trump To Welcome Cabinet At Camp David.

The AP (9/8) reported President Trump and First Lady Melania Trump traveled to Camp David on Friday for a Cabinet meeting focused on Hurricane Irma, according to White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

2 Tribes Add To Applications To Put Land Into Trust.

The Alaska Dispatch News (9/8, DeMarban) reports that "two more tribes are asking the federal government to put land into trust, including one that seeks to remove a 2.5-acre parcel from the Kenai Peninsula Borough's property tax rolls as the tribe prepares to launch commercial transit service." According to the state of Alaska "tribal organizations in Ninilchik and Fort Yukon made separate requests to put land into trust with the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

DOI, Nooksack Reach Deal On Tribal Election, Disenrollment.

Law360 (9/8, Westney) reports that the Interior Department has "reached a deal with Washington state's Nooksack Indian Tribe to hold a council election that could resolve a long-running dispute over tribal government and membership, despite some members' worries that they won't get a fair shake in the balloting."

Red Lake Courts Awarded Grants.

The Bemidji \(MN\) Pioneer (9/8) reports that "Red Lake Nation Tribal Courts received $360,000 in grant money Thursday from the Bureau of Indian Affairs." The BIA "awarded the court system $60,000, which will be used to fund a clerk position." According to a news release, "the new clerk will work on domestic violence cases."

Surveillance Photo Of Fire Fuels Tensions Between Ranchers, Yakama Nation.

The Seattle Times (9/10) reports from Glenwood, Klickitat County, Washington, on a photograph of "what appears to be a Yakama Nation official setting fire to [a] wooden irrigation gate." The photo was posted by "a small irrigation company that sends water from tribal lands to ranches outside the reservation. Company leaders had been concerned that someone this summer had been trying to sabotage the structure that funnels water from Cougar Creek, where they hold water rights, into a canal. So they set up the camera." According to the Times, "Other photos include images of the man stacking wood by the water-diversion gate and the blaze starting as he walks away, according to ranchers and the Yakima County Sheriff's Office, which plans to forward the case to the FBI."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Move Still In Play.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/9, Harmon) reports that "the proposed move of the Bureau of Land Management headquarters to Grand Junction is still possible, despite reports that the agency might settle in Denver, U.S. Sen. Cory Gardner, R-Colo., said." Gardner discussed the BLM's possible move "during an interview with The Daily Sentinel before his town hall on Friday at Colorado Mesa University." According to Gardner, "Denver's Federal Center could maintain the agency temporarily while suitable quarters can be arranged in Grand Junction."

BLM, Forest Service In Talks About Speeding Mining Ban Analysis.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (9/9, Wright) reports that "federal officials are working out how exactly they can speed up the review of a potential ban on new mining claims in an area north of Yellowstone National Park after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urged that it move faster in a letter late last month." Zinke spokeswoman Heather Swift "said in an email that she didn't know when the BLM employees would start work on the project or where they would be coming from or whether they would be full or part-time." But she added, "Protecting the Paradise Valley and Yellowstone was a project the secretary brought to the office on day one."

Additional coverage was provided by Yellowstone Insider (9/9, Reichard).

US Agency To Proceed With Sale Of GarCo, Mesa Leases.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/9, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "on Friday said it will proceed with a Dec. 7 oil and gas lease sale involving nearly 27,300 acres in Mesa and Garfield counties." It all, "28 parcels will be offered." The article notes that "all but one parcel are within the 700,000 acres of the Shale Ridges and Canyons master leasing plan, created in the resource management plan adopted by the BLM's Grand Junction Field Office in 2015."

Emmer-Nolan Amendment Passes U.S. House.

The Virginia \(MN\) Mesabi Daily Tribune (9/8, Burnes) reports that "an amendment to halt a 234,000 acre mining ban in Superior National Forest was passed by the U.S. House late Thursday night, moving the effort to effectively reversing the Obama administration decision a step closer." Reps. Rick Nolan and Tom Emmer "introduced the amendment to the omnibus 2018 federal spending package, which would strike down funding to be used on the land withdrawal action put in place in the final weeks of President Barack Obama's term."

Also reporting are the Hibbing \(MN\) Daily Tribune (9/9, Burnes), and the Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/9, Rao).

Recreation Generates Millions On BLM Land In Southwest Wyoming, New Study Shows.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/9, Peterson) reports that a new ECONNorthwest report, which was commissioned by the Pew Charitable Trusts, found that "Outdoor enthusiasts generated more than $27 million in spending on 'quiet recreation' on Bureau of Land Management land in 2015 in southwest Wyoming." The survey covered activities that did not include "significant motorized activity" accounting for roughly 57 percent of all area recreation visits. The reported $27 million in spending resulted "in $12.4 million in employees' salaries, wages and benefits."

Sia Tweets Support For CA Bill Targeting Mojave Desert Water Project.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (9/10, Roth) reports that pop star Sia Furler, "who owns a home in Palm Springs and got married here a few years ago, tweeted Friday night at California Senate leader Kevin de León and another senator, urging them to 'Please #preserveCA and let the CAleg vote on #AB1000.'" The bill would "require a state environmental review of Cadiz Inc.'s plan to pump as much as 16.3 million acres of groundwater per year in the middle of the desert, just outside Mojave Trails National Monument, and sell it to Southern California cities.

Cadiz Water Project Should Be Nixed. In an op-ed for the Barstow \(CA\) Desert Dispatch (9/11, Hansen), Davis Hansen calls for the rejection of the Cadiz water project. He warns that "if this water extraction project proceeds, it could contribute to an environmental disaster for our Mojave Desert which depends on the underground aquifers and springs."

Additional Coverage: N.M. Leaders Urge Feds To Protect Chaco From Oil And Gas Encroachment.

Additional coverage that "New Mexico's Democratic congressional delegates are urging Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to refrain from allowing oil and gas extraction on culturally sensitive lands in the Chaco Canyon area" was provided by the Santa Fe New Mexican (9/8, Moss).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Regulation Streamlining Debated.

The Houma \(LA\) Courier (9/10, Boudreaux) reports that legislation co-sponsored by Rep. Garret Graves "would make it easier for oil companies and coastal restoration projects to get environmental approval, but critics say it could harm to sea life." Supporters of the bill say the Streamlining Environmental Approvals Act "will cut away red tape and allow for much needed oil exploration and major projects to get off the ground despite concerns about seismic airgun technology." The bill has been referred to the House Subcommittee on Water, Power and Oceans.

Bureau Of Reclamation

US Misuses Taxpayer Cash For California Water Project.

The AP (9/8, Knickmeyer) reports that the Interior Department “improperly contributed $85 million in taxpayer funds to help pay for a giant California water project backed Gov. Jerry Brown, despite pledges from Brown and other state and federal authorities that local water districts would bear all the costs, a federal audit said Friday.” The audit said that “federal authorities did not fully disclose to Congress or the public that it was supplying $84.8 million for the project planning, and waived reimbursement for $50 million of it.” The Bureau of Reclamation “also did not disclose the arrangement in its certified financial reports, the audit said.”

The Los Angeles Times (9/8, Boxall) reports that “in a response attached to the report, the reclamation bureau disagreed with the inspector general’s findings, saying the decision to assign the planning expenditures to non-reimbursable accounts was ‘suitable and appropriate’ and made ‘in good faith.’”

The AP (9/8) reports that Westlands Water District, an “influential California water district,” is “defending” the funding. Westlands Water District general manager Thomas Birmingham “said Friday that he knew of nothing about the arrangement that was inconsistent with state or federal law.”

Also reporting are the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/8, Sabalow, Kasler), the Elk Grove News \(CA\) (9/10, Bacher), and the Central Valley \(CA\) Business Times (9/8).

Delta Tunnel WaterFix Vote Pushed With No Details. In an editorial, the San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (9/10) says that “Gov. Jerry Brown is trying to force California water agencies, including the Santa Clara Valley Water District, to vote in the next month on whether they will pay for building his $17 billion ‘WaterFix’ Delta tunnels project.” The paper criticizes it as “an arbitrary, outrageous and irresponsible deadline.” It notes that “there is no formal agreement on how the project will be financed, how it will be governed or how the water will be allocated: none of the information a responsible water board needs to know for an informed decision.”

40-year Water Conflict Nears Its Conclusion.

The Ellensburg \(WA\) Daily Record (9/9, Lester) reports that “the biggest, longest, most expensive legal battle in Washington state history is finally drawing toward a conclusion.” According to the article, “dating to 1977, the case grew out of a potentially catastrophic drought that threatened thousands of Yakima Valley farm families and further endangered the region’s iconic, but ailing, salmon runs.” Yakima County Judge James Gavin “recently signed a proposed final order that will conclude the case next year after the thousands of parties involved have a chance to file challenges to the final report.” The article says that “when complete, as early as April, every water user will know the amount of their right to water and where that right stands in relation to all others.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Biologists, Wildlife Managers Divided On Basics Of Wolf Recovery.

The Arizona Daily Sun (9/10, Cowan) reports that “a recently released federal recovery plan for the endangered Mexican gray wolf has received harsh criticism from three of the biologists the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service pulled together six years ago in an unsuccessful attempt to draft the same type of recovery document.” According to the article, “overoptimistic assumptions,’ ‘flawed’ and ‘impractical’ were among the words used in the biologists’ comments on the federal plan.” The scientists were “part of a nine-member science advisory group that in 2012 concluded more than double that number of wolves spread out over a much larger range would be needed to establish a self-sustaining population in the Southwest.” The article notes that “their feedback stands in stark contrast to comments submitted by the Arizona Game and Fish Department, which complimented the federal recovery plan, saying it includes the ‘most current and best available data’ and establishes ‘practical and achievable recovery criteria.’”

Frog Habitat Case Pending At U.S.

Supreme Court Draws Interest From St. Tammany To Utah. The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (9/10, ROBERTS, PAGONES) reports that the battle over dusky gopher frogs is “now before the U.S. Supreme Court, and it has drawn a host of ‘amicus curiae,’ or ‘friend of the court,’ briefs from outside parties, including St. Tammany Parish, 18 states, private property rights groups and San Juan County.” The high court “hasn’t agreed to hear the case, but many of those intervenors hope the broad interest from outside groups will spur the nine justices to accept the case and then sharply curtail the federal government's ability to designate private land as critical habitat."

Regional Bunchgrass Designated Endangered Species.

The Del Rio \(TX\) News Herald (9/10, Cantú) reports that "the Guadalupe fescue, a type of bunchgrass, was added to the federal list of endangered species last week." The decision "protected 7,815 acres of the fescue's last U.S. location, in the Big Bend National Park, Texas, as 'critical habitat.'"

Invasive Species At Wildlife Refuge Being Removed.

The AP (9/8, Winkler) reports that "substantial tracts of autumn olive, an exotic invasive species, are being removed" at Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge. Meanwhile, "other areas of the refuge are being transformed by the planting of native grasses." Crab Orchard manager Rick Speer said, "We're trying to move forward in enhancing our habitats and doing it where people can enjoy viewing wildlife a little more."

Dominion And Partners Push For Quick Federal Action On Proposed Pipeline.

The AP (9/8, Press) reports Dominion Energy, Duke Energy, and Southern Company sent a letter to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on Thursday asking the agency to approve the proposed Atlantic Coast Pipeline this month so that construction can begin in November. The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (9/8, Martz) reports Dominion requested action "at the earliest possible time." The Times-Dispatch adds, "The commission's timely issuance of the order...is essential to meeting our contract obligations, ensuring customers realize the energy savings, providing manufacturing access to needed supplies of natural gas, and offering enhanced energy security and reliability to the region."

WHSV-TV Harrisonburg, VA (9/8, Kline) also reports.

Nesting Sea Turtles Are On Florida's Frontlines As Irma Nears.

ABC News (9/8, NESTEL) reports that Hurricane Irma has "displaced and devastated habitats and various species including turtles, parrots and iguanas, multiple experts and a federal government official told ABC News." According to the article, "a record high 19,000 turtle nests laid this year along an almost 10-mile stretch of beach may not survive Irma's powerful winds and surging tides."

Youth Crew Work At Canaan Valley National Wildlife Refuge.

The AP (9/9) reports that "each year as funding is available," Canaan Valley National Wildlife Refuge "reaches out to local schools to recruit four to five members, between ages 15 and 18, to participate during the summer months." This year, each crew members participated in "biological surveys, invasive plant removal, trail work, building five bridges on a trail, boardwalk rehab, servicing vehicles, removing fence posts and creating plant signs for the native garden." According to the article, "their signature project was completion of 300 feet of new trail, 10 foot by 12 foot overlook, and installation of split-rail fence, that they stamped they name on, YCC 2017."

The Least Understood Program Of The USFWS.

In an op-ed for the Tuscaloosa \(AL\) News (9/10, Gibbons), Whit Gibbons, professor emeritus of ecology, University of Georgia, writes that "efforts to control injurious wildlife may be one of the least understood programs of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." As a result, "the public is unaware of how critical the program is for protecting against potential invasive species that are known to be detrimental to human interests and healthy environments." Gibbons suggests that "being a poorly understood program may also explain why lawmakers have not strengthened or even effectively supported the injurious wildlife program."

John McCoy: Wolf Ruling Might Be A Blessing In Disguise.

In his column for the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (9/9, McCoy), John McCoy writes that "the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals' recent ruling that wolves in the western Great Lakes states should not be taken off the federal Endangered Species List" is not really a victory for animal-rights groups. He notes that "provisions within the court's ruling...appear to give the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service a clear future blueprint for de-listing endangered populations." McCoy says that "the message to the USFWS seems clear: It's OK to de-list distinct regional populations of a species as long as biologists can prove that population has sufficiently recovered, and recovery across the species' entire historic range is not required."

National Park Service

Oral Histories: New Orleans Civil Rights Leaders, Activists.

The AP (9/9, McCONNAUGHEY) reports that "a new oral history project is looking at the civil rights era in New Orleans, including boycotted shopping districts and a restaurant that provided a meeting place for black and white activists." The Historic New Orleans Collection has "begun interviewing leaders and activists who participated in the civil rights movement from 1950 through 1976, and will create a set of lesson plans using the oral histories it gathers." The National Park Service "provided $23,000 to gather 30 to 50 hours of oral histories about 11 locations, organizations and events including the city's first major civil rights campaign — a boycott of white-owned stores that sold to African-Americans but wouldn't hire them as clerks or cashiers."

Plan To Grow Las Vegas Includes Monument Protection.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/8, Munks) reports that "Las Vegas officials have a new vision for developing a unique piece of land surrounded by sensitive land packed with environmental and cultural resources." The plan lays out "out expectations for future development of 1,000 acres situated between the Tule Springs Fossil Beds National Monument, Paiute tribal lands and the Las Vegas Wash, a channel that drains water from the valley into Lake Mead." The article notes that "the city's team engaged representatives from the BLM, the Las Vegas Paiute Tribe, the National Park Service and Protectors of Tule Springs in creating the new vision plan."

Officials: Man Pointed BB Gun At Rangers Before He Was Shot.

The AP (9/8) reports that "officials say a man who was fatally shot by park rangers in northern Arkansas had pointed a BB gun that resembled a handgun at the officers while 'verbally challenging' them." Buffalo National River officials "say 34-year-old Jonathan Bolger of Branson, Missouri, had an air pistol that did not have an orange tip on the barrel to indicate that it wasn't a real weapon." According to a press release issued last week, "National Park Service rangers fatally shot Bolger on Aug. 20 after Bolger pointed the BB gun directly at them."

Glacier Park Temporarily Suspends Issuing New Backcountry Permits.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (9/8) reports that the National Park Service has "temporarily stopped issuing new overnight backcountry permits in Glacier National Park due to fire weather conditions." The NPS "wants to reduce the number of people overnighting in the backcountry, according to Glacier Park spokesperson Lauren Alley."

Commentary: Repair National Parks, Preserve Their History.

In an op-ed for the Albany \(NY\) Times Union (9/9, Bystryn), Marcia Bystryn, president of the New York League of Conservation Voters, draws attention to the $11.3 billion maintenance backlog at national parks. Bystryn raises concerns that "without repairing the infrastructure that keeps our national parks running, we risk losing the vital benefits they bring to our state." Bystryn urges support for the National Park Service Legacy Act, which "dedicates an annual stream of federal funding to address deferred maintenance."

Identity Theft By Trademark Tramples Yosemite's History.

In an op-ed for the Fresno \(CA\) Bee (9/10, Rose), Gene Rose writes that "the current controversy over the Yosemite place names is a disgrace to many of our national institutions, especially to the National Park Service, the Patent and Trademark office and the courts." Rose decries that "the current dispute is all about money." He asserts that "our national parks were never intended to serve as cash cows for the commercial world."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Caribbean Islands Face Hard Road To Recovery In Wake Of Irma.

NBC Nightly News (9/10, story 11, 2:00, Holt) said Hurricane Irma "left a lot of damage and death in the Caribbean in its wake," particularly in Barbuda, where "at least" 95 percent of the property is "damaged or destroyed." In Cuba, Irma "turned roads into obstacle courses with hurdles made of toppled power poles," while the storm in Haiti "reduced possessions to what could be carried in plastic bags through riding floodwater."

Reuters (9/10, Acosta) reports that "from Cuba to Antigua, Caribbean islanders began counting the cost of Hurricane Irma on Sunday after the brutal storm left a trail of death, destruction and chaos that could take the tourist-dependent region years to recover from." The Category 5 storm, which killed "at least 28 people across the region, devastated housing, power supplies and communications, leaving some small islands almost cut off from the world." European nations sent military reinforcements "to keep order amid looting while the damage was expected to total billions of dollars." President Trump on Sunday issued a disaster declaration for Puerto Rico and "expanded federal funds available to the US Virgin Islands."

The New York Times (9/10, Ferré-sadurní) reports that while Puerto Rico "had largely been spared the 185-mile-an-hour gusts that had flattened its smaller island neighbors, hundreds of residents still lost their homes, at least three people died and almost 70 percent of households were plunged into darkness." Still, another New York Times (9/10, Ferré-sadurní) report says the island has become "an impromptu emergency hub for its Caribbean neighbors that were left devastated by the storm's wrath." Government-led missions have also been evacuating people from the islands to Puerto Rico, including "some 1,200 mostly American citizens" from Saint Martin and Saint Thomas in six C130 aircraft, officials said.

The Washington Post (9/10, Faiola) reports European governments "came under fire as critics accused them of being slow to respond to crises on their overseas Caribbean territories, where massive damage left thousands homeless as looting broke out on the streets." On Sunday, the French government announced that President Emmanuel Macron would travel to the Saint Martin on Tuesday, where the evacuation of US citizens resumed on Sunday, according to State Department spokesperson Heather Nauert, after being suspended in anticipation of Hurricane Jose.

The Wall Street Journal (9/10, Althaus) reports the storm's damage comes just a few months before the beginning of the busy winter tourism season. "For the countries that are badly affected, it will take some time to get back on their feet," said Hugh Riley, an official with Caribbean Tourism Organization.

Storm Surge Floods Havana, Damages US Embassy Even As Irma Moves North. The AP (9/10, Rodriguez, Boylan) reports that "powerful waves and storm surge from Hurricane Irma topped Havana's iconic Malecon seawall and left thousands of homes, businesses and hotels swamped Sunday, even as the storm moved away from the island." The high waters and winds "also damaged the seaside US Embassy, tossing around shipping containers that sit on the compound, smashing parts of its black perimeter fence, ripping exterior panels from the building and breaking windows and doors." USA Today (9/10, Jervis) reports the Cuban provinces of Matanzas, Villa Clara, Camaguey and Sancti Spiritus "took the brunt of the storm, with collapsed homes and streets clogged with debris."

Caribbean Islands "Ripped To Shreds" By Hurricane Irma.

NBC Nightly News (9/9, 2:29, Holt) reported islands from Cuba to St. Thomas "took punishing blows" from Hurricane Irma, and the Florida Keys are now "being hammered" by the storm. Correspondent Miguel Almaguer said Irma has "carved up the Caribbean," with "the US Virgin Islands, French West Indies and the Bahamas ripped to shreds" while American tourists caught by the storm remain stranded. According to the AP (9/9, Boylan), Irma "collapsed buildings and battered Cuba with deafening winds and relentless rain Saturday, while a second hurricane, Jose, threatened to lash already-reeling islands elsewhere in the Caribbean."

CNN International (9/9, Smith-Spark, Oppmann) reports, "Cuba's meteorological agency reported that Irma struck the archipelago north of Cuba's Camaguey and Ciego de Avila provinces with gusts so strong they destroyed the instrument used to measure wind." The Washington Post (9/9, Miroff) reports Cuba "appears to have been spared the devastation that Irma unleashed on the Leeward Islands to its east, where mass destruction has been reported, especially on the island of Barbuda, which was essentially obliterated."

Meanwhile, the Miami Herald (9/9, Rosenberg) reports Irma left Guantánamo Bay Navy base "relatively unscathed," according to Navy Capt. Dave Culpepper, "but for a few downed trees and power lines."

Although the Wall Street Journal (9/9, Whelan) reported no deaths caused by the storm were recorded in Cuba, the New York Times (9/9, Ahmed) said "five deaths were reported from the British Virgin Islands, raising the toll across the Caribbean to 25 people as the islands braced for yet another storm set to strike as early as Saturday afternoon."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (9/7), the AP (9/6, Coto Anika Kentish |, Ap), and the New York Daily News (9/7, Cullen).

FEMA Aids US Virgin Islands As Residents Worry They Will Be Forgotten Once Irma Strikes Florida. In a piece highlighting preparations in the Caribbean for Hurricane Jose, USA Today (9/9, Hjelmggaard) reports that "in the U.S. Virgin Islands, where four people died, U.S. military and the Federal Emergency Management Agency were providing relief on the ground but utilities remain badly affected and the roof of the only hospital in St. Thomas was blown away."

However, in a separate article, USA Today (9/9, Schouten) reports that "as Hurricane Irma bore down on Florida, current and former residents of the Caribbean islands already battered by the powerful storm had a message for the rest of the world Saturday: Remember us." In a Players' Tribune essay, former San Antonio Spurs player Tim Duncan, who was raised on St. Croix, said, "Islands like ours tend to get forgotten after storms. ... We're remote, which makes it hard to deliver supplies quickly, cheaply and adequately." Duncan also announced "a personal $250,000 donation to hurricane relief effort and a crowdfunding page to raise more money. He promised to match up to $1 million in donations." Meanwhile, country music star Kenny Chesney announced he has "established the Love for Love City Foundation to benefit St. John and the neighboring British Virgin Islands. Chesney has a home on St. John, which is nicknamed Love City."

President Trump spoke with Gov. Kenneth Mapp of the U.S. Virgin Islands "to express his support for the Governor and the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands as the territory prepares for Hurricane Irma and to acknowledge the territory's experience in responding to hurricanes." Trump "confirmed that the Federal Government has been actively readying for the Hurricane Irma response even as the Government continues to support the States of Texas and Louisiana following Hurricane Harvey." FEMA will "continue to coordinate with the emergency management staff of the U.S. Virgin Islands and will work with other Federal partners to help support the territory's efforts."

The St. Thomas Source (9/8, Kossler) reports that "the number of confirmed fatalities on St. Thomas and St. John in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma has risen to four and 'it should not be unexpected that we will find more,' Gov. Kenneth Mapp said at a press conference shortly before 6 p.m. Thursday evening." According to the article, "a later report from Government House indicated all four were on St. Thomas." Mapp "said that while the toll will probably rise, it does not look like it will be a much larger number."

US Evacuates American Citizens From St. Maarten. ABC News (9/9, Martinez) reports "American citizens evacuated from St. Maarten by U.S. military aircraft are telling desperate stories of survival as Hurricane Irma ravaged the island and left a precarious security situation in its wake." State Department spokesperson Heather Nauert said, "Over the last 24 hours, Department of State has worked in close coordination with the Department of Defense to assist over 1,200 American citizens with air evacuations from St. Maarten, beginning with those needing urgent medical care." However, Nauert stated, "Evacuation flights for Saturday are suspended due to weather. ... We intend to resume efforts to get U.S. Citizens out of Saint Maarten as soon as it safe to do so."

Cruise Lines Send Ships To Help Evacuate St. Thomas. Bloomberg News (9/9, Palmeri) reports Royal Caribbean Cruises Ltd. and Norwegian Cruise Line Holdings Ltd. "are sending some of their empty ships to the Caribbean to help evacuate stranded tourists and bring much-needed supplies to islands severely damaged by Hurricane Irma." USA Today (9/9, Sloan) reports Norwegian Cruise Line said it is sending its 2,004-passenger Norwegian Sky to St. Thomas "with the goal of retrieving as many as 2,000 vacationers who were unable to leave before Hurricane Irma hit on Wednesday" while Royal Caribbean "said it was redirecting its 2,350-passenger Majesty of the Seas to the island to similarly evacuate several thousand travelers and also to drop water, food, ice and other provisions that are needed." In addition, USA Today says Royal Caribbean "plans to redirect its 3,114-passenger Adventure of the Seas to the hard-hit island of St. Martin on Sunday for an unscheduled stop to drop relief supplies."

Communication With Some Caribbean Islands Remains Down After Irma. In the days since Irma "roared through the Caribbean, leveling entire islands and claiming at least 20 lives, officials still haven't heard from some areas hit by the storm or fully assessed the damage," the Miami Herald (9/9, Charles, Harris) reports, and "U.S. officials haven't been able to reach St. Martin, where a reported 70 percent of homes were destroyed, and instead are relying on the Dutch and French government to aid the U.S. citizens trapped there." According to the Herald, "British troops landed in Barbados Friday evening for relief efforts in the islands torn up by Hurricane Irma." Meanwhile, 1,000 Marines and 11 US Marine Corps aircraft were deployed to "the Caribbean, and U.S. Northern Command is providing urban search-and-rescue capabilities in the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico." In addition, US officials "stationed the USS Wasp near the Virgin Islands to medically evaluate patients and do damage assessments."

French Reinsurance Firm Predicts Irma To Cost $1.44 Billion For Saint Martin, Saint Barth

Recovery. Reuters (9/9, Blamont) reports French state-owned reinsurance group Caisse Centrale de Reassurance projected Saturday that Hurricane Irma will cost "at least 1.2 billion euros ($1.44 billion) in Saint Martin and Saint Barthelemy" and "said Irma would go down as one of the most damaging disasters in decades on French territory."

Irma Hammers Cuba, Bahamas, Other Caribbean Nations En Route For Florida.

Reuters (9/8, Frank) reports Hurricane Irma on Friday "lashed Cuba and the Bahamas as it drove toward Florida...after hitting the eastern Caribbean with its devastatingly high winds, killing 21 people and leaving catastrophic destruction in its wake." CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 5:40 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported Hurricane Irma is approaching the Bahamas and Cuba as an "extremely dangerous Category Four" storm, and is expected to become a Category Five storm when it hits the Florida Keys. National Weather Service Director Dr. Louis Uccellini told CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 5:46 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), "This is a historic storm in terms of its intensity and its size."

In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Wolf Blitzer reported Hurricane Irma, "the monster storm which has already killed at least two dozen people and devastated entire islands, is not finished with the Caribbean. Cuba and the Bahamas are being battered right now. Florida is bracing for a catastrophic direct hit." On Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/8, 8:29 p.m. EDT, Carlson), Steve Harrigan reported that in the state, Irma "has people's attention," and "there is not the usual tough, tough mentality about it. There is instead a real sense of fear about this one." In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room's (9/8, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) second hour, Blitzer said Irma is "leaving a trail of death and widespread devastation across the Caribbean." Blitzer added that over the evening, CNN is "getting a grim new sense of Irma's destruction in the Caribbean, where the storm is blamed for at least two dozen deaths. The islands of Antigua, Barbuda, and St. Maarten are among the hardest hit, and now they're under a new hurricane watch for Jose, another Category Four storm."

Reporting from Cuba, correspondent Patrick Oppman of CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 5:32 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported, "We're starting to see the first bands from Hurricane Irma come into the area where I am. Gusts of rain, increased wind, some pretty big waves off the coast. Further east of us, they've been getting battered all day long. Thousands are without power. The government of Cuba are monitoring people all throughout the storm. We had officials coming by with loudspeakers saying if you want to get out, now is the time. Many have done that, putting their belongings sometimes on horse and carts and going to government shelters, caves or bunkers from the cold war just to get out of this area, which is expected to flood. Others are hunkering down," and have said "they don't want to leave their homes and they're going to ride it out. But as weather conditions get worse here, it's going to be a long night."

Oppman said on CNN's Situation Room's (9/8, 6:16 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) second hour that since he last reported, "the first major squall has come in," but that "the worst of it will be early tomorrow morning." The Cuban government said "hundreds of thousands of people" already evacuated, including "tens of thousands of tourists" who were relocated "to other parts of the island or to airports where they can fly home early." Some Cuban residents "have gone to stay with relatives," but others stayed behind to "try to protect their belongings." Cuba "is a very poor country. So, when a storm comes to Cuba the way this storm is coming, it can have a devastating impact." Meanwhile, troops and prisoners at the US Naval base in Guantanamo Bay "are hunkering down. The storm is going to miss them." US diplomats have also voluntarily evacuated. "They didn't have to evacuate, but the State Department said if diplomats wanted to leave from the embassy in Havana, they could do so. Many people took them up on that offer."

Twenty minutes later, Oppman of CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 6:40 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said that the wind is "not blowing hard, there's no rain," evidencing "how quickly these things can come out of nowhere." He stressed Irma "is passing off the coast" of Cuba, which is "on the weak side of the storm. The storm is not expected to make direct land fall here." While "Cuba is actually missing a bullet here," Altman said, for a "brief moment there, it felt like a jet engine. I could not get the jacket on. I was having trouble standing. Just goes to show how quickly conditions change, how dangerous a hurricane can be."

The AP (9/8, Boylan, Fox) reports Irma also "battered the Turks and Caicos Islands early Friday" and the British territory's communications "went down as the storm slammed into the islands, and the extent of the devastation was unclear." Rehema Ellis of NBC Nightly News (9/8, 1:38, Holt) reported, "Early this morning hurricane Irma slammed into the southern Bahamas. Authorities say those evacuated may have nothing to do back to. In the Turks and Caicos powerful winds snapped utility poles and crushed cars. The storm has already been deadly in the US Virgin Islands. Today catastrophic images are coming out of St. John. Heartbreak also on the island of Barbuda." Ellis continued, "Authorities now warning people to get out because another category 4 storm, Jose, is on its way."

CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 6:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) national correspondent Miguel Marques reported the British Virgin Islands was "also hit hard. What used to be homes, now just frames and debris. Trees snapped in half and an airport in rubble." The Washington Post (9/9, Bever, Wootson) reports "Irma cut electricity throughout the islands and knocked out other vital communications infrastructure, essentially leaving the British Virgin Islands' 35,000 residents largely isolated not only from each other but also from the rest of the world." British Virgin Islands Gov. Gus Jaspert "acknowledged in a message on Facebook there was a frustrating vacuum of information because communications infrastructure was down across the islands."

CNN's Situation Room's (9/8, 5:07 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Brian Todd reported Florida authorities are now "trying to avoid the devastation, the loss of life, that just occurred in the Caribbean. Entire hillsides wiped out," including one in the British Virgin Islands. "Roofs blown off, coastal building shredded – this devastation in the Caribbean is what Florida could be facing as soon as Saturday. In the Dominican Republic, residents looked shell shocked with the destruction. In Barbuda, one hid her family of seven." Additionally, coastal flooding has posed "a problem on islands like St. Barts," and in St. Maartin, "cars are overturned and streets are blocked with debris."

On ABC World News Tonight (9/8, 2:05, Muir), James Longman reported, "French and Dutch military part of an international aid operation. Turks and Caicos, St. John's, the pictures are apocalyptic." Meanwhile, the Prime Minister of Barbuda has expressed concerns about Jose, which "is nearly a category four" and may strike "after the island was nearly completely destroyed." On the CBS Evening News (9/8, 1:46, Glor, Mason), the BBC News' Laura Bicker reported "Irma has reduced [Barbuda] to rubble. The ruins lie scattered, torn, and ripped apart." Bicker added that "the sheer horrifying scale of the devastation here means that barely a building is salvageable."

CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 6:12 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast video footage from Barbuda, which "was basically devastated" while Leyla Santiago of CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 6:48 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said that in Barbuda, "we certainly saw devastation." On the ground, "you not only see the devastation, you feel the desperation of the people there, people who are trying to still get out at this hour, actually, many of them evacuating to where we are right now in Antigua." Now, she added, "the next question is, what will Jose do?" She continued, "Most people left Barbuda with just one bag because their things were destroyed. Their homes were, were on the ground. Their lives just kind of scattered out onto the roads. If you could tell that some of them were road – some of them were flooded. when you see it, it is pure devastation. And this is among people who will tell you, we are used to hurricanes, but we have never seen anything like this."

The Washington Post (9/8, Faiola, Bever, Degrandpre) reports "about 95 percent of the islands of Barbuda and St. Martin sustained some damage or were outright destroyed, officials and local residents said." The Post adds "Irma's death toll has reached at least 22, according to the Associated Press, a figure expected to rise as its punishing winds moved over Cuba and begin a potentially disastrous assault on the Bahamas and Florida." While the US has deployed ships to Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands, "as of Thursday night, no other countries had asked for the U.S. military's help, one official said, but Defense Department planners were preparing as though such requests may come." John Cornelio, a spokesman for Northern Command, told the Post, "It's safe to say things may progress. I don't want to get ahead of ourselves, but one of the things DOD can provide is capacity."

In addition, the Miami Herald (9/8, Gurney) reports US authorities "were unable to reach St. Martin on Friday as Hurricane Jose approached and instead are relying on the Netherlands and France to assist U.S. citizens, the State Department said." However, the US Navy has "sent ships to the Virgin Islands, and French, British and Dutch rescuers also sent rescuers to their territories." US Transportation Command is also "providing a C-17 Globemaster aircraft and the USS WASP is providing two MH-60 helicopters to assist with the relocation of hospital patients from the U.S. Virgin Islands." Homeland Security Adviser Bossert told CNN's Situation Room (9/8, 6:07 p.m. EDT, Baier) that "life-saving and life-sustaining operations" are ongoing in the US

Virgin Islands, and “we have US military men and women down there removing and moving patients” to hospitals elsewhere. He added, “we are also moving US citizens from other islands, like St. Maartin and St. Martin, into safe spaces, upwards of thousands of US citizens there.”

Bloomberg News (9/8, Fieser) reports Irma “is already the most expensive storm in the Caribbean’s history, according to” Germany-based “disaster risk assessor” Center for Disaster Management and Risk Reduction Technology at the Karlsruhe Institute of Technology, which said the storm so far has “caused around $10 billion in damages as it leveled homes and destroyed infrastructure in places like Saint Martin, the US Virgin Islands and Antigua and Barbuda.” In an interview, James Daniell, a senior risk analyst at the center, said, “This is the worst ever in terms of damages. ... We’re at $10.4 billion now and we’re probably going to be at $13 billion by the time it’s finished with the Caribbean.”

However, the New York Times (9/7, Robles, Semple, Yee) reports “not all the news was awful.” The Times states that “despite the loss of power to most of the island, damage and loss of life on Puerto Rico was far less than feared.” The Times adds that “Haiti and the Dominican Republic, which share the island of Hispaniola, were also spared direct hits.”

In addition, reporting from Nassau in the Bahamas, correspondent Cyril Vanier of CNN’s Situation Room (9/8, 5:21 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said he likely has “one of the rare encouraging reports, or at least the most encouraging that you’re probably going to hear all night long.” First, the islands “on the southernmost tip of the Bahamas, which are on the front line of this storm, have now weathered the hurricane, and as far as the authorities have told us, there are no known fatalities.” Weaker structures suffered some damage, but “by and large, the houses and structure buildings made of concrete and cement have withstood the storm.” Second, since the storm moved westward, so the capital city of Nassau is “not going to get the hurricane force winds we thought we would less than 24 hours ago.”

Trump Expresses Condolences, Offers US Support To Macron For St. Barthelemy, St. Martin.

Reuters (9/8, Beech) reports President Trump “spoke on Friday with French President Emmanuel Macron to extend his condolences on the devastation to the French territories of St. Barthelemy and St. Martin due to Hurricane Irma, and to offer U.S. support to the French government, the White House said in a statement.”

French Minister Implies Trump Is Erroneously Ignoring Man-Made Climate Change. Reuters (9/8) reports French Environment Minister Nicolas Hulot, during a Friday interview with France 2 TV centered on Hurricane Irma, implied that Trump is ignoring the reality of man-made climate change responsible for extreme weather conditions. When asked if the series of hurricanes this summer may compel Trump to reconsider his policy on climate change, Hulon responded, “What will change in the United States are the federal states, the cities, a whole section of society. I think that is what will make up for the reservations of the American president on the links between cause and effect.”

Hurricanes Jose And Katia Could Make Landfall This Weekend. The Washington Post (9/9, Samenow, McNoldy) reports that Hurricanes Jose and Katia are forecast to strengthen and could impact land areas this weekend. While Hurricane Jose is expected to turn to the north out to sea “well before reaching the United States,” it could pass “very close to the northern Leeward Islands as a major hurricane Saturday.” Hurricane Katia “is forecast to track westward toward Mexico and make landfall as a hurricane on Friday night in the state of Veracruz.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Althaus, Whelan) reports that Jose was upgraded early Friday to a Category 4 hurricane with winds of 150 miles per hour. Irma was downgraded to Category 4, with similar wind speeds to Jose, according to the National Hurricane Center. Katia is a Category 2 with sustained winds of 100 miles an hour.

Only Hospital On St. Thomas Crippled By Hurricane Irma. As Hurricane Irma continues to roar through the Atlantic, USA Today (9/7, Schouten) reports on the impact to the US Virgin Islands. Roofs have been torn off, and according to the report, the hurricane has crippled the only hospital on St. Thomas, the Roy Schneider Medical Center. Virgin Islands’ delegate to Congress Rep. Stacey Paskett told USA Today, “St. Thomas and St. John are pretty devastated. ... We’ve had houses slamming into other houses.” The article notes that authorities were working yesterday to evacuate patients from Roy Schneider. No fatalities were reported. Paskett also discussed the economic impact Irma will have on St. Thomas, noting it would likely take years to rebuild.

Hurricane Katia Strikes Mexico As Jose Largely Misses Caribbean Islands Hit By Irma.

The Washington Post (9/9, Samenow, McNoldy) reports Hurricane Katia made landfall north of Tecolutla, Mexico late Friday night, though the Los Angeles Times (9/9, Linthicum) reports “the hurricane quickly lost strength after hitting land and was downgraded to a tropical storm.”

Reuters (9/9) reports local officials are concerned heavy rains may produce landslides and flooding.

Meanwhile, Reuters (9/9, Graham) reports “the powerful Hurricane Jose was moving away from the northern Leeward Islands on Saturday, the National Hurricane Center (NHC) said, giving some relief to the Caribbean archipelago battered by the massive storm Irma earlier this week.” After Barbuda’s “near-annihilation...by Hurricane Irma, its 1,700 evacuated residents took shelter on its sister island of Antigua, hunkering down in government buildings and residential homes as Hurricane Jose approached,” the Washington Post (9/9, Faiola, Bever, Degrandpre, Phillips) reports, “but the island nation caught a lucky break as Jose turned and missed both islands, Sir Ronald Sanders, ambassador to the United States from Antigua and Barbuda, said Saturday.” According to Sanders, a strike by Jose “would have only added to the debris. ... There’s no one there now. It’s like a scene from winter without snow. No grass. No trees. It is just rubble. We now have refugees from Barbuda in Antigua, and will have to sustain their lives for months, probably years, as we rebuild.”

In addition, the Miami Herald (9/9, Charles) reports Haiti was spared by Jose, but Irma managed to destroy “what little produce...farmers in the region had managed to grow.”

NATO Chief: North Korea’s “Reckless Behavior” Demands “Global Response.”

Politico Europe (9/10, Collis) reports NATO chief Jens Stoltenberg, in an interview with BBC’s Andrew Marr show on Sunday, called North Korea’s provocative actions a “global threat” mandating a “global response,” which he said “of course also includes NATO.” Describing Pyongyang’s activities as “reckless behavior,” Stoltenberg added, “We are now totally focused on how can we contribute to a peaceful solution of the conflict.” Earlier this week, President Trump, French President Emmanuel Macron, and other global leaders spoke with Chinese President Xi Jinping about “the growing nuclear threat from Pyongyang.”

McCain Discusses North Korean Nuclear Threat. The Washington Times (9/10, Richardson) reports that on Sunday, Sen. John McCain told CNN’s State Of The Union that the South Korean defense minister recently “called for nuclear weapons to be redeployed,” and that the US “had them once in South Korea.” When asked whether the US should pursue that option, McCain responded, “I think it ought to be seriously considered,” as should an overall expansion of US missile defense capabilities in both South Korea and Japan. McCain continued, “Obviously China can put the brakes on Kim Jong-un,” but thus far, “they have not. In fact, in some ways, they have increased their assistance.” While North Korean leader Kim Jong-un “is not rational,” McCain warned, “he’s rational to the degree that he wants to confront the United States of America. But I think, more importantly, if you allow him to have nuclear weapons and South Korea and Japan and others, who are under our ‘nuclear umbrella,’ don’t, I think that’s not balanced.”

Rogin: With Or Without China, US Must Address North Korean Threat. Washington Post (9/10) columnist Josh Rogin argues the US must “acknowledge that its policy of trying to induce North Korea’s friends” – namely, China – “to rein in Pyongyang has failed.” He adds that if the United Nations Security Council rejects the Administration’s call for tougher sanctions, as expected because of “Russian and Chinese resistance,” then “there will be no more excuse for the United States not to move forward with allies Japan and South Korea with crippling sanctions aimed at the regime, its institutions and its elite supporters.” He concludes in saying that “moving forward without China and Russia on maximum pressure is the right move,” in part because doing so “may also be the last chance to avoid a binary choice between a nuclear North Korea that can blackmail the world or war.”

North Korea Denounces Haley’s Remarks Ahead Of UN Security Council Vote On Sanctions.

Fox News’ Special Report (9/8, 6:25 p.m. EDT, Baier) senior foreign affairs correspondent Greg Palkot reported that Ambassador Haley’s “strong appeal” this week is “apparently getting under the skin of the regime of Kim Jong-un,” with official media describing Haley’s comment as “a hysterical fit from a political prostitute.” Noting Haley accused North Korean leader Kim Jong-un this week of “begging for war,” Reuters (9/8, Kim) reports North Korea’s state-run KNCA news agency wrote, “Even if Nikki Haley is blind, she must use her mouth correctly. The United States administration will pay for not being able to control the mouth of their U.N. representative.”

Bloomberg News (9/8, Talev, Epstein, Tweed) says Pyongyang’s response to Haley’s comments reflects how tensions are “again ratcheting up” ahead of world leaders’ consideration of “a fresh round of sanctions” against the nation over its nuclear program. A draft resolution that the US is circulating at the UN “would bar crude oil shipments to North Korea, ban the nation’s exports of textiles and prohibit employment of its guest workers by other countries, according to a diplomat at the world body." It "also calls for freezing the assets of the North Korean leader." According to a Security Council diplomat, the US is seemingly "willing to risk a veto of its proposal rather than see it watered down."

Reuters (9/8) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said at a news conference on Friday that it is too early to decide on the final form of such a resolution. In a second article, Reuters (9/8) reports a senior US official "expressed skepticism" that either China or Russia "would accept anything more stringent than a ban on imports of North Korean textiles." According to a statement from the US Mission to the United Nations, the US notified the Security Council that it will call for a vote on the measure in a meeting on Monday.

Mexico Recalls Ambassador Ahead Of North Korean Holiday. The AP (9/8, Tong-Hyung) reports South Korean Unification Ministry spokeswoman Eugene Lee warned Friday that North Korea may conduct its next intercontinental ballistic missile test as soon as Saturday, when the nation celebrates its founding anniversary, or around Oct. 10, which marks another North Korean holiday commemorating the founding of the ruling party. "North Korea has previously marked key dates with displays of military power," the AP says, "but now its tests appear to be driven by the need to improve missile capabilities." Also on Friday, the Swedish Foreign urged citizens "to refrain from unnecessary trips to North Korea." Just hours earlier, "Mexico's government said it declared North Korean Ambassador Kim Hyong Gil as persona non grata and ordered him to leave the country within 72 hours in response to Sunday's nuke test."

Mexico's Foreign Ministry said in a statement, "With this diplomatic step, Mexico expresses to the North Korean government its categorical repudiation of its recent nuclear activity, which is an increasingly brazen violation of international law," reports the Wall Street Journal (9/8, Cheng), which says the latest diplomatic setback for North Korea comes amid Secretary of State Tillerson's call to other nations to terminate or greatly reduce their relations with Pyongyang. The Journal calls Mexico's move unusual because the nation has historically engaged in a policy of noninterference, although in recent years it has grown more assertive on the international stage.

Trade Data Suggests North Korea Facing Cash Shortage. "Even as China sells more goods to North Korea, it is buying less from there, according to trade data and experts on the relationship between the two," reports the New York Times (9/8, Bradsher), which says this worsening trade imbalance "appears to be deepening North Korea's need for credit from China or for cold, hard cash from somewhere else." Furthermore, it potentially signals "why economic sanctions have had little effect on North Korea," because while the sanctions may slash "North Korea's export income, it can still procure goods to keep its urban elites happy with a little help from Beijing" with trade credits. If true, the Times says, North Korea's increasing dependence on Chinese trade credits "could present a potential weak point that the Trump administration and others could exploit, if China is willing to go along, as they look for ways to persuade North Korea to give up its nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles."

Von Drehle: China Is Key To De-Escalating North Korean Crisis. Washington Post (9/8, Von Drehle) columnist David Von Drehle argues President Trump's "gut-based leadership style" may have drawbacks, but his instincts on several goings-on this week – most notably, the North Korean threat – proved correct. "Unfortunately," Von Drehle says, "Trump has clouded that message and alarmed the world with blustery talk about unleashing 'fire and fury' that is 'locked and loaded.'" He explains Trump's tone "could not be more wrong" because his comments "steer attention away from China while lowering the president to the level of Kim Jong Un." Meanwhile, "Secretary of State Rex Tillerson is hard at work below the radar prodding and encouraging China's leaders to shoulder the responsibility they claim to seek." Von Drehle urges Trump to continue focusing on China as the solution to the crisis, because "a stronger China is inevitable" regardless of its involvement in de-escalating the crisis.

Diplomats: US Seeks Quick Security Council Action On Proposed North Korea Sanctions.

On condition of anonymity, several diplomats told the AP (9/9, Lederer) that on Friday, all 15 United Nations Security Council members discussed a draft resolution proposed by the US "that would impose the toughest-ever sanctions on North Korea, a move that could lead to a showdown with the country's biggest trading partner China and its neighbor Russia." The Administration circulated the draft on Tuesday and called for a vote on Monday, a strategy that the diplomats said "was aimed at putting maximum pressure on China and reflected Washington's escalating concern over North Korea's latest nuclear test, which its leaders touted as a hydrogen bomb, and its recent ballistic missile launch over Japan." Pennsylvania State University professor Joseph DeThomas, who previously served as a US ambassador and State Department official, similarly said the US demand for such quick council action on the draft signals "how the administration thinks time has run out.”

Trump Discusses North Korean Threat With France’s Macron, Japan’s Abe. Reuters (9/9, Rose) reports President Trump, French President Emmanuel Macron, and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe “discussed increased pressure and sanctions on North Korea on the telephone” Saturday, according to France’s presidential office. The leaders emphasized the need for a “united and firm” international response to Pyongyang’s provocations, which the French presidential office described as “repeated” and threatening “to peace and international security.”

US, Japan Conduct Joint Military Air Exercise Above East China Sea. Reuters (9/9, Funakoshi) reports Japan’s Air Self Defense Force said Japan and the US conducted joint air exercises above the East China Sea on Saturday. The joint military exercise “comes as South Korea braces for a possible further missile test by North Korea as it marked its founding anniversary, just days after its sixth and largest nuclear test rattled global financial markets and further escalated tensions in the region.”

North Korea’s Kim Jong Un Celebrates Nation’s Founding Without “Fresh Provocations.” Reuters (9/9) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong Un celebrated the 69th anniversary of the country’s founding on Saturday by congratulating “his nuclear scientists and technicians who steered the country’s sixth and largest nuclear test a week ago, its official news agency said on Sunday.” The US and its allies, including South Korea, “had been bracing for another long-range missile launch in time for the” celebration, “but no fresh provocations were spotted while the North held numerous events to mark the holiday.”

WPost A1: North Korean Defectors Recall Escape To Seoul. On its front page, the Washington Post (9/9, Fifield) provides the accounts of 11 North Korean defectors in Seoul who escaped from Kim Jong Un’s regime. The defectors said they first passed “through China, Vietnam and Laos, where they must be on the alert for police who might arrest them and send them back the way they came – to certain and brutal punishment in North Korea,” after which they crossed “a fourth frontier from Laos into Thailand,” where “they are finally safe.” Once in Thailand, North Korean defectors face only “a minor immigration violation.” Meanwhile, the South Korean Embassy in Bangkok begins “the process of transferring them to Seoul – not far from where many started their journey,” but a place where they can “start a new life, one of constant Internet connectivity and white rice every day.”

NATO’s Stoltenberg: North Korea’s “Reckless Behavior” Demands Global Response. Reuters (9/10) reports NATO head Jens Stoltenberg, in a Sunday interview with BBC television, warned, “The reckless behavior of North Korea is a global threat and requires a global response and that of course also includes NATO.” On whether an attack on Guam would trigger NATO’s Article 5 and require member-states to respond, Stoltenberg commented, “I will not speculate about whether Article 5 will be applied in such a situation.” He also stressed the importance of working towards a “political solution, continue to press also the economic sanctions.” British defense minister Michael Fallon similarly stressed the need to strive for “a diplomatic solution,” but he added that the US “is fully entitled to defend its own territory, to defend its bases and to look after its people but this involves us, London is closer to North Korea and its missiles than Los Angeles.”

US, FSM Hold Annual Joint Economic Management Committee Meeting.

Marianas Variety (9/10) reports that “the Federated States of Micronesia and the United States bilateral Joint Economic Management Committee annual meeting took place Wednesday, Aug. 30, 2017, in Honolulu, Hawaii.” The committee members “jointly allocated $61 million for the sectors of health, education, public sector capacity building, private sector development, environment and public sector infrastructure as identified under the Compact of Free Association, as amended, for the benefit of the people of the FSM.” JEMCO Chairman and acting Assistant Interior Secretary for Insular Areas Nik Pula said, “The JEMCO meetings this year were productive. I am especially pleased to see the FSM and the Army Corps of Engineers collaborating to strengthen the infrastructure program and project management practices.”

Office Of Surface Mining

DMME Receives Award For Environmental Excellence.

The Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/8) reported the Virginia Department of Mines, Minerals and Energy’s Hurricane Fork Gob Pile Project has received an award for environmental excellence from the Office of Surface Mining and Enforcement. Gobco was contracted to remove the gob pile, which was transferred to Dominion Energy Virginia’s City Hybrid Energy Center and burned for electricity production. Gobco co-owner and manager Walk Crickmer said, "Hurricane Fork was one of the projects where there was a lot of positive environmental results. ... Working with DMME and Dominion Power to remove the one million tons of waste coal that was polluting the Clinch River makes this project one of the most memorable we have completed."

"Trump Says He Cares About People In Coal Country. So Why Halt A Study On Their Health?"

In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/10) writes that the Interior Department's recent decision to halt a study on the side effects of mountaintop-removal coal mining on people living in surrounding areas raises questions about the Administration's supposed support for people in "coal country." The Post highlights research about negative health and environmental side effects of such mountaintop landscape stripping and argues that the study should be restarted.

Bil Lepp: On Unnecessary Hillbillies And Mountaintop Removal.

In an op-ed for the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (9/9, Lepp), Bil Lepp criticizes the order "to cease research on the possible health effects of mountaintop removal." According to Lepp, "stopping this study and ignoring the ill effects of mountaintop removal may well increase coal production, but it doesn't, ultimately, help the people the president has championed." Lepp claims that "halting this study might help the coal bosses at the top of the chain while hurting the miners and their families."

The War On Coal Communities: Strip Mining.

In an op-ed for the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (9/10, Doyle), Jack Doyle writes that President Trump is "now aiding and abetting the continuing assault on coal communities, proposing, for example: to cut $111 million from the Office of Surface Mining budget; open up public lands to coal leasing and strip mining; eliminate the $89 million Abandoned Mine Land Economic Development Pilot program; eliminate the Appalachian Regional Commission (95 percent of its 420 counties voted for Trump); shut down a National Academy of Sciences study investigating cancer rates near mountain-top removal sites; severely cut the economic revitalization POWER grants for coal communities; and give government subsidies to failing coal companies." Doyle urges Trump to "end the 'war on coal' rhetoric, reverse his evisceration of environmental laws and community assistance programs, and empower his agencies to uphold the promises repeatedly made to coalfield citizens over the last 40 years."

US Geological Survey

At Least 60 Dead From Magnitude 8.1 Earthquake In Mexico As Country Braces For Hurricane Katia.

CBS Evening News (9/8, 0:35, Glor, Mason) reported Mexico experienced its "most powerful earthquake in decades" overnight. The 8.1-magnitude quake struck the southwest coast, but "shook buildings and knocked out power in Mexico City more than 600 miles away." The quake came as "Mexico is also bracing for Hurricane Katia, a category two storm. It's expected to bring floods, landslides and devastating winds to Mexico's Gulf Coast Saturday morning."

According to the US Geological Survey, "Five aftershocks with a preliminary magnitude 4.9 or stronger hit in the hour following the initial quake," the New York Times (9/8, Malkin, Ramzy) reports. The AP (9/8) reports the US Tsunami Warning System cautioned that hazardous tsunami waves reaching heights 9.8 feet above the tide level "were possible on the Pacific coasts of several Central American countries, including Guatemala, El Salvador, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Panama and Honduras, within three hours."

NBC Nightly News (9/8, 0:26, Holt) and ABC World News Tonight (9/8, 0:21, Muir) described it as the most powerful earthquake to strike Mexico in a century. ABC News added that at least 60 people were killed, with the death toll expected to rise. The Washington Post (9/8, Partlow) reports the town of Juchitan appeared to be one of the worst hit "with 31 people reported dead, according to the Mexican daily El Universal." Three deaths were reported "in Tabasco state, including an infant who perished when hospital electricity failed and a ventilator shut off, authorities said." The Post notes that in 1985, only one earthquake sensor in Mexico was in operation when "the calamitous 1985 earthquake that killed at least 5,000 people here and left a quarter-million homeless" struck; currently, there are now "about 100 solar-powered sensors throughout the country" that "send automatic alerts to a network of 8,000 alarms, intended to provide about a minute of warning before the shock waves reach Mexico City.”

Nevada Panel Reviewing Name Change For Jeff Davis Peak.

The AP (9/8, Sonner) reports that “a far-off mountain peak in Nevada’s Great Basin National Park is getting more attention since deadly race-based violence in Virginia last month sparked new calls for the removal of Confederate monuments.” Nevada’s state Board of Geographic Names is “reviewing a pair of proposals to change the name of the remote peak near the Utah line named after Confederate leader Jefferson Davis, and a federal panel that would have the final say about re-designating Jeff Davis Peak already is researching one of the ideas.” That proposal would designate the mountain as Smalls Peak, “in honor of U.S. Rep. Robert Smalls – a South Carolina slave who escaped in 1862 and fought for the Union army before he was elected to Congress from South Carolina during Reconstruction.” The U.S. Geological Survey’s Board on Geographic Names “intends to prepare a case brief on the Smalls proposal it received Aug. 28 and add it to the panel’s next quarterly review list expected to be released at the end of this month, board research staffer Jennifer Runyon said Friday.”

4 Small Earthquakes Recorded Across Northern Oklahoma.

The AP (9/9) reported the USGS recorded four small earthquakes across northern Oklahoma. Covington reported a 3.1 and 3.0 quake Friday evening, while Hunter had a 2.7 quake and Aline reported a 2.5 magnitude quake.

Top National News

Trump Approves Irma Disaster Declaration As Florida Officials Laud Federal Response.

President Trump spoke briefly to reporters Sunday afternoon as he returned to the White House from Camp David, where he received an update on Hurricane Irma. The CBS Weekend News (9/10, story 11, 0:50, Glor) noted that the President on Sunday also “declared a major disaster in Florida that will open up federal aid to assist in the cleanup from Hurricane Irma.” The Miami Herald (9/10, Bousquet) likewise says Trump approved a major disaster declaration for Hurricane Irma “hours after Gov. Rick Scott requested it.” The governor’s office said the declaration will authorize federal funding “to flow to areas affected by the storm and will reimburse cities and counties and the state for costs of response and recovery.”

The Hill (9/10, Manchester) reports Florida Sens. Marco Rubio and Bill Nelson wrote a letter to Trump, “supporting Scott’s request,” and the Washington Post (9/10, Costa, Parker) reports Florida officials said Sunday that they “are so far pleased with the federal response to Hurricane Irma and expect Congress to consider an emergency relief package in the coming weeks with the full support of President Trump.” Scott told Fox News Sunday that he has spoken several times with Trump. “The president said, ‘Look, I will provide whatever resources you need’ when I talked to him. I pretty much talk to him every day,” Scott said.

Scott told CBS’ Face The Nation (9/10, Dickerson) that he’s spoken to the President, FEMA Administrator Long and acting DHS Secretary Duke. Scott added that all three had committed federal resources. Asked about his conversations with the President, Scott said, “I’ve talked to him almost every day, almost every cabinet member called me once a day from the Administration just making sure we have all the resources.”

Nelson, the Washington Examiner (9/10, Lim) reports, “praised the Trump administration and the rest of the federal government Sunday for ‘seamless’ preparations for Hurricane Irma.” Nelson told CBS’ “Face the Nation.” “It’s been very good. And there is the cooperation between the federal level, the state, and the locals. That has been seamless cooperation, unlike 25 years ago in Hurricane Andrew, when you did not have that cooperation.”

Kristen Welker said on NBC Nightly News (9/10, story 10, 1:10, Holt) that the “Administration is throwing the full weight of its resources behind Irma: some 13,000 federal workers already committed, nearly 2,000 pre-positioned throughout the affected area, and supplies – more than seven million meals, 10 million liters of water, generators, tents and medical equipment.”

Speaking to reporters at the White House on Sunday, Reuters (9/10, Lynch) reports Trump called Hurricane Irma “some big monster” as it battered the Florida coast, “saying he wants to go to the state very soon and praising emergency officials for their efforts to protect people.” Said the President, “The bad news is that this is some big monster. ... I hope there aren’t too many people in the path. You don’t want to be in that path.”

The AP (9/10, Superville) reports Trump said that “we may have been a little bit lucky” after Hurricane Irma veered from its original course and headed along Florida’s west coast, instead of east. Speaking to reporters at the White House after returning from Camp David, the President said, “We may have been a little bit lucky in that it went on the west and it may not have been quite as destructive, but we’re going to see. It’s going to play out over the next five or six hours.” According to the AP, Trump “deflected questions” federal aid, saying “right now we’re worried about lives, not cost.”

USA Today (9/10, Jackson, King) reports Trump also “praised the cooperation of state and federal officials and urged residents to stay out of the way of the deadly storm.” The Washington Examiner (9/10, Lim) quotes the President as saying, “The Coast Guard has been amazing already. You’ve been hearing what they’re doing right in the middle of the storm. FEMA has been incredible. We’re working very well with the governor and the other governors in the surrounding states.” The Hill (9/10, Manchester) reports Trump also told reporters that he would make a trip to south Florida “very soon.”

Earlier on Sunday, the AP (9/11) reports the White House said the President received a “comprehensive update” on Hurricane Irma. Trump, Vice President Pence and “several Cabinet members” participated in the briefing from Camp David, where Trump “spent the weekend monitoring the storm.” The White House also said Trump has spoken with the governors of Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Breitbart (9/10, Spiering) reports Trump said after meeting with his Cabinet, “We’re not playing politics, we’re just doing what’s right. I tell that to everybody at this table, do what’s right, don’t play politics.” The President also “thanked government officials working ‘around the clock’ to respond to the storm and urged all Americans to listen to local officials.”

After returning to Washington on Sunday afternoon, USA Today (9/10, Jackson, King) reports Vice President Pence and “other administration officials” visited FEMA headquarters. Acting FEMA Deputy Administrator Kathleen Fox “said that as of Sunday more than 13,000 people from a variety of federal agencies are positioned in and around Florida.”

The Fox News (9/10, Weber) website reports Pence said the President has “great concern” and that wherever the storm goes, “we’ll be there first.” Speaking to reporters, Pence said, “Wherever Hurricane Irma goes, we’ll be there first [with] the resources and support to save lives and to help and recover. This is a very dangerous storm, life-threatening. ... The people of Florida need to know that our hearts and prayers and all of our efforts will be with them until this storm passes.” According to Fox, the Cabinet members joining Pence were acting DHS Secretary Duke, HHS Secretary Price, Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, Energy Secretary Perry and EPA Administrator Pruitt.

The Hill (9/10, Shelbourne) reports Pence on Sunday “urged Floridians to listen to local officials” as Irma impacts the state. “It’s important to remember that this is and continues to be a very dangerous storm,” Pence said during the visit to FEMA. “And we urge everyone...to heed the warnings of local officials, whether that be to shelter in place or if in the farthest northern parts of the state, there’s still an opportunity, according to local officials, to move out of the way and to evacuate to a safe shelter.”

The New York Times (9/10), meanwhile, reports Irma is expected to “rake the state’s west coast – a change from earlier predictions that left some residents and officials scrambling to find shelter. The new track could expose St. Petersburg – rather than Miami or Tampa – to a direct hit.” NBC Nightly News (9/10, story 5, 2:20, Holt) reported that the Tampa Bay area is “bracing for what could be the first direct hit by a major hurricane in nearly a century,” and the CBS Weekend News (9/10, story 7, 1:50, Glor) reported the area is “very vulnerable” to storm surge. ABC World News Tonight (9/10, story 6, 1:35, Muir) likewise said the Tampa-St. Petersburg area “has been called the most vulnerable in the country to flooding damage. ... The city will flood at just three feet of storm surge. The storm surge from Irma could more than double” that. On its front page, the Wall Street Journal (9/10, A1, Kusisto, Friedman) also reports on Tampa’s vulnerability to storm-surge flooding.

Reuters (9/10, Chiacu) reports FEMA Administrator Long told “Fox News Sunday” that Irma’s track “posed a severe threat to Florida’s west coast and the Florida Keys.” Said Long, “This is a worst case scenario for Monroe County, the Florida Keys and the west coast of Florida. Any time you’re in that northeast quadrant as the storm is moving forward, that’s where the maximum radius winds are that define the intensity of the storm.”

Asked on Fox News Sunday (9/10, Wallace) whether the more “proactive” stance of FEMA might have created a problem as the original path of the storm was more to the east, Long said, “Not at all.” Asked if his agency had the money needed to address the damage anticipated from this hurricane, Long said, "Congress did its due diligence and passed the supplemental to allow us to keep moving and as I've been saying, paperwork and money should not get in the way of saving lives and I believe the Congress recognizes that." He said that he currently had the "authority from the President that I need to be able to move forward as well."

Acting Homeland Security Secretary Duke said on Fox News (9/10), "Gov. Scott is leading the response for Florida and FEMA is positioned to provide all the necessary response the Florida requests. We have people, we have equipment, and we have supplies." Duke added that people who did not evacuate must "follow the directions of the local officials. In certain counties there is the ability to evacuate still. If it's too late, listen to your local officials and shelter in place. Response will not be immediate. A person should not expect an immediate response if they have chosen to stay back contrary to evacuation orders."

Duke said on MSNBC (9/10) that resources are positioned "in various locations in Florida and around Florida. A lot of it is at military bases but it is important to note that until it is safe and until the Governor requests it, we will not be moving in supplies. So, those that shelter in place should be ready to sustain themselves for a period of time." Duke added, "The shelters are well stocked at this point. The American Red Cross and other shelter providers are used to this level of storm. Our biggest concern is search and rescue, especially in the Keys. There's no place to land. The winds are still high. We cannot go in with search and rescue at this time, it is not safe."

The Sarasota \(FL\) Herald-Tribune (9/10, Brooks), meanwhile, reports that the 82nd Airborne Division will deploy "nearly 300 paratroopers and more than 80 military vehicles" to Florida to help in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma. Lt. Col. Joe Buccino, a spokesman with the 82nd Airborne Division, said soldiers were notified Saturday and put on "prepare to deploy" orders early Sunday morning.

First Lady Thanks Irma First Responders. The Hill (9/10, Manchester) reports First Lady Melania Trump on Sunday thanked first responders in the areas affected by Hurricane Irma. The First Lady tweeted, "Today's video conference #HurricaneIrma briefing by @Fema at Camp David. Thank you to 1st responders! Stay safe!"

Scavino Tweets, Deletes Inaccurate Hurricane Irma Video. The Hill (9/10, Beavers) reports White House social media director Dan Scavino Jr. "shared and then deleted an inaccurate video he claimed was of Hurricane Irma on Sunday." Scavino tweeted, "Sharing [Hurricane Irma] on social media with [President Trump] and [Vice President Pence] hourly. Here is Miami International Airport. STAY SAFE!!" However, he "later deleted the tweet from his account after Miami International Airport commented that the video was not of Hurricane Irma hitting Miami International Airport." The White House "did not immediately respond to a request for comment about the deleted video."

WSJournal: Congress Should Approve More Visas For Construction Workers To Aid In Recovery. On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (9/10) says that in the wake of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma, the urgent need for more construction workers ought to get the President's attention. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported 225,000 construction job openings in June, up 30% in the last year and 125% since 2012, and the National Association of Home Builders estimates that up to 20,000 workers will be needed to rebuild homes after Harvey. The Journal calls on Congress to authorize more guest-worker visas for construction as part of the Irma relief bill, and any undocumented worker who assists with rebuilding should receive one.

Arizona Republic Columnist: Storms Won't Help US Economy. Arizona Republic (9/10) columnist Jon Gabriel writes that the economic impact of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma "could be felt for years, but many economists and financial experts think there's a silver lining." Gabriel, however, argues that the "only economic good" to come from the storms "would be a remedial course in basic common sense. Instead of looking for disasters to fix our economy, economists and politicians should stop the unnatural disasters they inflict on American consumers and job creators every single day. By eliminating red tape, silly regulations and unnecessary taxes, each of us will be free to actually grow our economy instead of passing around the dwindling dollars we already have."

Politico Analysis: Back-To-Back Natural Disasters Pose Federal Aid Challenge. Politico (9/10, Woellert) reports that "more than a decade of budget cutting and a rash of government job vacancies are taxing Washington's ability to cope with a one-two punch of epic storms." Over the weekend, "federal first responders were decamping from the Hurricane Harvey havoc in Texas to head for Florida." The two storms "could be a breaking point" for the federal government, but White House Homeland Security Adviser Bossert told reporters Friday, "The federal government should be able to walk and chew gum at the same time. I'm pretty comfortable in our ability and capacity as leaders and also as institutions.”

Administration Monitoring Irma As Hurricane Approaches Florida.

President Trump on Saturday held a cabinet meeting at Camp David focused on Hurricane Irma as the Category 4 storm advanced on Florida. While only a handful of media outlets highlighted the meeting, media coverage emphasized other aspects of the Administration's preparations as well as warnings from Federal Emergency Management Agency Administrator Long, Florida Gov. Rick Scott, and other lawmakers. Reporting additionally focused on the latest developments in advance of the storm's arrival.

The New York Times (9/9, Shear) reports Trump “monitored the impact of Hurricane Irma from the presidential retreat at Camp David on Saturday as he held the fourth full cabinet meeting of his presidency to discuss how to advance his administration's priorities during the balance of his first year in office.” The Times adds that “aides said Mr. Trump would receive hurricane briefings throughout the day” and “after remaining largely silent on Twitter through much of the day, [he] issued a warning about the hurricane in the evening.” The President asserted, “This is a storm of enormous destructive power, and I ask everyone in the storm's path to heed ALL instructions from government officials.” The AP (9/9, Superville) reports that in a video of his remarks from Camp David that accompanied the tweet, Trump also “caution[ed] people in Irma's path to ‘get out of its way’ and not worry about their possessions.”

The Hill (9/9, Bowden) reports Trump in his opening remarks “expressed condolences for the victims of Irma and Harvey, which struck Texas and Louisiana earlier this month.” The President said, “All of America continues, I must say, to pray for the families affected by Hurricane Harvey, Hurricane Irma, which looks like it's going to be a really bad one, but we're prepared. ... We're as prepared as you can be for such an event, that I can say.” He added, “All of America grieves for those who have already lost their lives.” Fox News (9/10) reports Trump on Saturday night later tweeted, “The U.S. Coast Guard, FEMA and all Federal and State brave people are ready. Here comes Irma. God bless everyone!”

Meanwhile, according to The Hill (9/9, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog, FEMA Administrator Long “issued a dire warning on Saturday for people choosing to stay in the Florida Keys as Hurricane Irma makes landfall.” In an interview with CNN, Long warned residents are “on your own until we can actually get in there, and it's safe for our teams to support local and state efforts.” Long added, “The message has been clear – the Keys are going to be impacted, there is no safe area within the Keys, and you put your life in your own hands by not evacuating.”

The New York Times (9/9, Times) reports that as the storm “churned toward Florida on Saturday,” Scott similarly warned residents of the Keys, “once the storm starts, law enforcement cannot save you.” He noted, “If we lose one bridge, everything south of the bridge, everybody's going to be stranded. It's going to take us a while to get back in there to try to provide services.” The Washington Post (9/9, A1, Achenbach, Zezima, Stein) in a front-page article also reports Scott “sounded dire warnings” about Irma, which he said “is a deadly storm and our state has never seen anything like it,” while the AP (9/9, Kay) says that he advised Florida residents that the storm surge “will cover your house. ... It flows in fast, very fast. You will not survive all this storm surge.”

In a more than 2,500-word article, the Washington Post (9/9, Shapiro, Berman, Zezima) reports Scott therefore “implored people living in evacuation zones to leave their homes, telling people on in the southwest part of the state to leave their homes by noon for a shelter or elsewhere.” He issued a plea for nurses to volunteer at the state's special needs shelters and said Trump and Long “have guaranteed all necessary federal resources.”

The Hill (9/9, Manchester) reports Sen. Marco Rubio on Saturday similarly “stressed the seriousness of Hurricane Irma, urging people in Florida to listen to officials as the storm barrels toward the state.” Rubio emphasized the storm will be accompanied by “serious winds” as he “urged residents to not play amateur meteorologist and warned against people leaving their homes during the storm.”

In addition, USA Today (9/9, Hughes) reports local officials are also “begging residents of the Florida Keys to evacuate” as they “worry there won't be enough time for residents to make what can be a three-hour-plus drive from Key West to the mainland.” The Miami Herald (9/9, Koh) reports several cities in southern Florida have imposed curfews, though Miami-Dade County Mayor Carlos Gimenez told reporters Saturday morning he has “declined to order residents off of the roads” even as he “warned against taking the storm lightly.”

As Irma “shifted track Saturday, elevating the risk of severe damage in Tampa, a city that's grown rapidly as high-paying jobs moved to the region,” Bloomberg News (9/9, Levin, Fieser, Schatzker) reports the city's residents “woke up to the new forecast.” However, in an interview with Bloomberg Television, Tampa Mayor Bob Buckhorn said, “structurally, I think [the major corporations that call the city home are] going to be fine,” though they could struggle with “getting their employees back in here to do what they need to do.”

FEMA Launches Irma Rumor-Debunking Website. The South Florida Sun Sentinel (9/9, Sweeney) reports that FEMA has started a website to “debunk rumors regarding Hurricane Irma,” offering such information as hotels’ obligations under federal law and fuel shortage issues. The website, which went live September 5, “has already been a big hit,” according to FEMA. The agency said in an email, “FEMA’s latest tweets promoting the page have been re-tweeted more than 9,000 times and the Hurricane Irma Rumor Control page has received [more than] 45,000 page views since we created the page.”

About 7,000 National Guard Troops To Deploy To Florida. Maj. General Mark Bartman, the Ohio National Guard’s adjutant general, told the AP (9/9, Gillispie) on Saturday that “a contingent totaling around 7,000 soldiers from National Guard units in” Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin “will be sent to Florida to help the state with the aftermath of Hurricane Irma.”

“Hurricane Hunters” Provide Data On Irma. In an exclusive, Reuters (9/9, Stewart) on Friday and Saturday “accompanied the Air Force Reserves’ ‘Hurricane Hunters,’ whose hard-won data taken directly from the center of storms like Hurricane Irma are critical to U.S. forecasts that save lives.” Rick Knabb, a hurricane expert at the Weather Channel and a former director the National Hurricane Center, said, “We can estimate by satellite what the strength and size of a hurricane is. But only if you go into the hurricane can you really get an accurate measure of its exact center location, the structure, the maximum winds.”

Meanwhile, The Hill (9/9, Delk) reports in its “Briefing Room” blog that Rep. Dennis Ross announced Friday that he “flew on the NOAA’s Hurricane Hunter WP-3D Orion aircraft across the storm four times on Friday as part of the crew’s mission to fly through the storm at least twice a day until it arrives in Florida to gather data, local newspaper The Ledger reported.” In a statement, Ross said, “On this flight, I witnessed first-hand the selflessness and dedication of the NOAA employees who risk their lives to gather this life-saving information.” He also “said on the flight that Irma is ‘unlike anything you’ve ever seen. People need to evacuate if they’re going to be in the eye of this thing.’”

First Responders Face Back-To-Back Major Storms. CNN (9/9, Marsh, Graef, Wallace) “made a rare visit” to FEMA’s National Response Coordination Center, which is currently “fully staffed with employees who will work 12 hour shifts for seven days straight before getting seven days off.” CNN says “FEMA leadership described it as a ‘historic time’ because never before had this central command worked two massive back to back storms at the same time like Harvey and Irma, with Hurricane Jose also brewing.” FEMA Administrator Long stated, “Not only are we moving commodities, but we’ve moved search and rescue teams, emergency power crews.” Long added, “We’re going to have to have a ton of inspectors to come in to back-fill state and locals’ ability to make sure how do the roadway systems hold up.”

NPR (9/9, Rott) reports on the “many storm-weary emergency response units that are bracing for the one-two punch of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma.” Officials aid the storms, as well as wildfires in the western US, “are straining the nation’s first responders.” The Coast Guard “has redeployed resources” from Texas to Florida, and one officer said, “It’s just unfortunate that it’s happening so quick – you know, one after the other – but our guys are ready to go.” Former FEMA chief of staff Jason McNamara said, “There is no doubt in my mind that they are extremely stretched...and that folks are starting to get tired,” still he said that those who need help will receive it.

Meanwhile, NBC Nightly News (9/9, 1:39, Holt) Lester Holt highlighted how first responders are responding to the shift in Irma’s trajectory toward western Florida.

US Southern Command Transfers Operations From Miami To Tucson. The Miami Herald (9/9, Rosenberg) reports US Southern Command “shifted operations to a subsidiary in Arizona on Saturday, shutting down the Pentagon’s suburban Miami outpost overseeing military operations in Latin America and the Caribbean more than 12 hours before Hurricane Irma’s anticipated landfall in the southernmost tip of Florida.” Army Col. Lisa Garcia “said Southcom’s Doral, Florida, headquarters closed at 3 p.m. on Saturday and that a small team was ‘assuming the Southcom watch responsibilities’ at the Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Tucson – more than 2,200 miles away from South Florida.”

Thousands Already Without Power As Irma Rolls Toward Florida. “Large and extremely powerful, Hurricane Irma is sweeping toward Florida, its outer rainbands and strong winds already lashing the Keys and southern peninsula with gusts up to 70 mph,” the Washington Post (9/10, Samenow, Porter) reports, and “at 7 p.m. Saturday, Irma was positioned about 105 miles southeast of Key West, chugging along to the west-northwest at 9 mph." According to the Post, "the Keys are poised to take a direct and devastating hit from Irma" while "the current forecast track has Irma making her final landfall in between Naples and St. Petersburg."

However, the Miami Herald (9/9, Dahlberg) reports that Irma's winds have already begun striking Florida, and as of 6 p.m. "in Miami-Dade County, 57,170 homes and businesses were without power, according to" Florida Power & Light (FPL), which represents "about 5 percent of its 1.1 million customers. Service to another 70,170 customers was impacted but had been restored." The Herald says "in Broward County, 25,890 homes and businesses were without power at 6 p.m., nearly 3 percent of FPL's customer base, and power had been restored to 10,780 properties. FPL has 933,300 customers in Broward, where a tornado touched down in Oakland Park early Saturday evening." The Herald adds "in Palm Beach County, 3,260 of its 739,000 customers were experiencing an outage. An additional 7,170 customers had outages, but their power has been restored."

FEMA Administrator Long told CNN (9/9, Green, Marsh), "We could see millions of people without power in Florida for multiple days in some areas, maybe weeks, and so I think it's very important to set the expectations of citizens." Long said, "This is why we ask and plead with people to be ready for multiple days, and unfortunately this is coming into reality." Long added, "it's hard to speculate, but some of the estimates could be 5 million people without power based on this, you know, south-to-north trajectory, and it's not just Florida; it's going to be moving into Georgia as well ... over the next five days." Acting Homeland Security Secretary Elaine Duke told CNN, "Electrical outages are going to be extremely, extremely broad and probably long-lived. It will take a long time to put the electrical grid back together. And that's going to be a hard recovery for those survivors in Florida."

Meanwhile, Reuters (9/9, Thevenot) reports "thousands of line workers [were] racing through the night to stage their trucks and tools for Hurricane Irma, a monstrous storm expected to knock out power to half of the nation's third most-populous state." According to Reuters, they have been "told to expect to work at least a month of straight 16-hour days, with no breaks, trying to restore power to millions of homes." Reuters says Irma represents "a far bigger threat to the electric grid than Hurricane Harvey in Texas, [as it] threatens to knock out power to more than 4.1 million homes and businesses served by Florida Power & Light, affecting about 9 million people."

Florida Power & Light Shuts Down Nuclear Reactor At Turkey Point. The Miami Herald (9/9, Dahlberg) reports that Florida Power & Light (FPL) announced that as of early Saturday morning, it has shut down one of the two nuclear reactors at its Turkey Point nuclear plants. The decision "was anticipated and didn't impact power to customers, contrary to false reports circulating on social media on Friday."

Reuters (9/9, DiSavino, Gardner) calls Hurricane Irma "the toughest test yet for U.S. nuclear power plants since reactors strengthened their defenses against natural disasters following the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear accident in Japan in 2011," as Irma moves closer to impacting Florida – the home to four coastal nuclear reactors. In addition to saying it will shut down the Turkey Point plant before hurricane-strength winds reach it, FPL "said it will also shut the other nuclear plant in Florida at St Lucie, which also has two reactors on a barrier island on the state's east coast." FPL Chief Executive Silagy told a news conference, "We will shut the reactors down 24 hours before Category 1 force winds are forecast to hit."

Some Florida Residents Refusing To Evacuate. On NBC Nightly News (9/9, 2:38, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported from a "massive shelter" in Estero that "is almost at capacity, [as] for many of these evacuees it was a desperate scramble once they realized Irma was on its way and they had few options." According to Gutierrez, officials have ordered more than six million Floridians to evacuate and at least 54,000 people will be temporarily housed in 320 shelters located across the state. NBC Nightly News (9/9, 2:09, Holt) Kerry Sanders reported from Naples, Florida that state officials now "say it's too late to move any distance safely. Those who decided not to leave need to get into position and ride it out."

The New York Times (9/9, Fountain, Stevens) reports that over the past day and a half, "residents of southwest Florida went from worried observers of Irma to its primary target for destruction." According to the Times, "the slight westward shift in the storm's trajectory prompted a flurry of last-minute evacuation orders" in numerous counties that had not been expecting to bear the brunt of the storm, "leaving little time for residents to pack up and find refuge."

The Wall Street Journal (9/9, Campo-Flores, Bernstein) reports on the Floridians who refused to evacuate, as does the Miami Herald (9/9, Ovalle), which says that "a ride south into the Keys certainly felt desolate." Although officials "beseeched more than 6 million people in Florida and Georgia to evacuate," the AP (9/9, Dearen, Lush) similarly says "some around Florida are choosing to stay, a rite of passage for many in the state who boast about the storms they weathered: Camille, Andrew, Katrina and others." However, the Miami Herald (9/9, Ovalle) reports "the storm nevertheless scattered the homeless men who vowed to ride out Irma in the storefronts of Duval Street."

Monroe County Sheriff Discovers Man Killed In Keys Car Accident. "A Middle Keys woman took to Facebook Saturday afternoon, distraught after finding a truck had crashed into a tree and a dead man was inside at 98th Street, oceanside, in Marathon," the Miami Herald (9/9, Atkins) reports, but when she called 911, "no one answered, which Monroe County officials warned would happen in the wake of a mandatory evacuation order it issued in anticipation of Hurricane Irma." A spokeswoman for the Monroe County Sheriff's Office said deputies were eventually "able to find a tow truck, which quickly removed the truck and body for safe keeping."

WPost A1: Mass Evacuation Of Florida's Seniors Has Unique Risks. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (9/9, A1, Davis, Somashekhar, Sullivan, Stein) reports on the evacuation efforts in Florida's nursing homes ahead of Hurricane Irma's landfall, with more than 150 assisted-living facilities and nursing homes evacuated across the state by Friday afternoon. Experts have said that by Sunday, it "will probably become the nation's largest-ever emergency evacuation of licensed facilities for senior care, with 13,000 or more residents relocated to points across Florida and the greater Southeast, from Georgia to Louisiana." The Post highlights some of the "unique risks" involved in evacuating the elderly, such as transporting those with cognitive disabilities such as Alzheimer's and dementia and moving those in wheelchairs and beds.

NBC Nightly News (9/9, 1:46, Holt) reported on the Miami Jewish health complex, where 700 senior residents "will not evacuate." Staff say supplies are stocked.

Immigrants In Florida's Orange County Nervous About Seeking Shelter. Reuters (9/9, Trotta) reports undocumented immigrants in Orange County, Florida said they are "nervous" about seeking shelter and reporting to authorities – fearing the possibility of arrest. Fear among immigrants in the area was "heightened in recent days after the sheriff in neighboring Polk County pledged to check criminal records of people seeking shelter."

WPost A1: Fear Pervasive Ahead Of Irma's Arrival. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (9/9, A1, Fisher, Stein) reports "fear" of the storm this week "dominated Floridians' Facebook feeds – telegraphic reports and play-by-play accounts from friends and family who were packing up, hauling out or hunkering down." According to the Post, "Fear is in the water these days, spread with a new and viral efficiency on social media, into everyone's homes and everyone's pockets at all hours, every day." The Post adds that with "so many fears and faux fears making people jittery...it has taken a special effort to get some Americans to pay proper attention to Irma, a storm whose danger is obvious to the naked eye." The Post also emphasizes that in Florida, "anxiety over Irma has created instant community, bringing strangers, neighbors and families together in common concern and common flight."

Trump Signs $15 Billion Disaster Funding Bill That Raises Debt Ceiling.

President Trump on Friday signed legislation passed by Congress earlier in the day that allocates $15.25 billion in additional disaster relief funds while also raising the debt ceiling. While media coverage was largely favorable toward Trump for signing the funding package, reporting highlighted that Congressional Republicans were furious with the President for striking a deal with Democrats to pass the legislation.

USA Today (9/8, Korte, Jackson) reports that after Trump arrived at Camp David on Friday for "a weekend huddling with his cabinet and monitoring the federal response to hurricanes Harvey and Irma," the President "signed a bill to provide $15.25 billion in additional disaster relief funds, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said." According to USA Today, the Administration's response is "increasingly complicated as the federal government fights what is essentially a three-front war: Recovery in Texas and Louisiana, life-saving efforts in Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, and preparation and evacuation in Florida, Georgia and South Carolina." Bloomberg News (9/8, Wasson) reports Sanders tweeted H.R. 601 would provide "much needed support for storm survivors. Our thoughts and prayers are with all impacted."

The Washington Times (9/8, Miller) reports Sanders additionally argued Trump was "not concerned that he angered some Capitol Hill Republicans by striking a deal with Democrats to quickly pass emergency disaster relief" because "it was more important to break the gridlock in Congress." Sanders said, "The biggest message is we are a lot less focused on what makes Congress happy and [instead on] what makes Americans better and stronger." She continued,

"He's going to continue working with whoever is interested in moving the ball forward to help the American people." Reuters (9/8, Rampton, Zargham) reports Sanders added, "I certainly think that the goal is to have bipartisan efforts and certainly legislation where you've got Republicans and Democrats both working towards it. ... And I certainly would expect to continue to see that."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (9/8, Radnofsky) reports Trump defended his decision on Friday and the New York Times (9/8, Baker) reports he also "rejected Republican complaints about his decision to work with Democrats on fiscal and immigration issues" in several tweets "chiding his own party for failing to advance major legislation and calling on congressional leaders to begin overhauling the tax code immediately." In two posts, the President said, "Republicans, sorry, but I've been hearing about Repeal & Replace for 7 years, didn't happen! Even worse, the Senate Filibuster Rule will never allow the Republicans to pass even great legislation. 8 Dems control – will rarely get 60 (vs. 51) votes. It is a Repub Death Wish!" He continued, "Republicans must start the Tax Reform/Tax Cut legislation ASAP. Don't wait until the end of September. Needed now more than ever. Hurry!" However, the AP (9/8) says that Trump's tweet "ignores the fact that Senate Republicans trying to pass the health care bill were working under rules that required a simple majority, not 60 votes."

In addition, the Washington Times (9/8, Persons) reports Office of Management and Budget Director Mulvaney on Fox News "said Friday that President Trump proved he can govern in his deal with Democrats this week." Mulvaney asserted, "Let's look at it from this perspective, what did the president do in addition to clearing the decks by cutting this deal with the Democrats earlier this week? He proved that he can govern. He proved that he can run the country and prioritize what's most important at the appropriate times." Mulvaney added, "I think he's looking at that debt ceiling saying, look, that might impede my ability to effectively govern the country, so is there a way to deal with this in a different way?"

Conservative Lawmakers Boo, Hiss As Bill Passes. The AP (9/8, Taylor) reports "the House voted 316-90 for the measure that would refill depleted emergency accounts as Florida braces for the impact of Hurricane Irma and Texas picks up the pieces after the devastation of the Harvey storm" and raise the debt ceiling, but "all 90 votes in opposition were cast by Republicans, many of whom seethed after Trump cut the disaster-and-debt deal with Democratic leaders with no offsetting budget cuts." The New York Times (9/8, Kaplan, Shear) reports conservatives lawmakers "vented" at Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and Mulvaney during a closed-door meeting that had "sought to drum up more Republican support for the legislation" and the Wall Street Journal (9/8, Peterson, Hughes) reports House Republicans were surprised by the appeal from Mulvaney, given his former opposition to raising the debt limit during his tenure in the House. The AP (9/8, Daly) reports the lawmakers "hissed and booed" both Mnuchin, who asked Republicans to "vote for the debt ceiling for me," and Mulvaney, "though at least one lawmaker said the booing was largely good-natured."

According to the Washington Post (9/8, Debonis, Snell), "to many GOP members, the administration's messengers were poorly chosen: Mnuchin is a New York financier known for his past as a Democratic fundraiser. Mulvaney is a former House conservative who spent much of his legislative career browbeating GOP leaders over the national debt and budget deficits." Rep. Ryan Costello asserted, "There were probably a lot of members in there in disbelief. ... I do know that there is a lot of frustration with the deal that was cut by the president, and I think it's a very difficult pill for many in there to swallow." Politico (9/8, Bade, Cheney) similarly says "the huddle quickly went off the rails when Rep. Tim Walberg stood up to say...Trump needed to play more with the team" while "more than a dozen lawmakers...echoed that same sentiment, according to sources in the room."

Meanwhile, Politico (9/8, Scholtes) in a separate article reports "several Republicans pressed the Cabinet officials to commit to a strategy for handling deficit spending the next time Congress must vote to raise the debt limit, according to lawmakers who attended the meeting." Rep. Jeff Duncan said that he told Mnuchin, "Show us a plan. ... We can't just keep borrowing money. We're going to be $22 trillion in debt."

Ultimately, McClatchy (9/8, Dumain) reports "more than two dozen congressional Republicans from storm-vulnerable states Friday voted against authorizing $15.25 billion in disaster relief funds." McClatchy says that although they appeared "insensitive," the conservative lawmakers "insisted constituents would understand their votes." In a separate article, McClatchy (9/8, Daugherty) reports Reps. Matt Gaetz and Ted Yoho voted against the bill, with Gaetz condemning the funding package as "generational theft." Bloomberg News (9/8, Wasson) reports that in an interview after the meeting, Yoho "responded to Mnuchin's comments by saying: 'He's not one of my constituents!'" In addition, Rep. Dave Brat of Virginia said: "The comments from the Treasury secretary today were not helpful. I found them to be intellectually insulting."

Trump Calls For Churches To Receive FEMA Relief Funds. Reuters (9/8, Beech) reports Trump on Friday tweeted, "Churches in Texas should be entitled to reimbursement from FEMA Relief Funds for helping victims of Hurricane Harvey (just like others)." According to The Hill, the President's comments come after "three Texas churches severely damaged by the hurricane sued FEMA on Monday, saying the agency has a ban on providing relief where at least half a building's space is used for religious purposes."

Lawmakers Introduce Hurricane Preparedness Bill. The Hill (9/8, Henry) reports Reps. Scott Peters, Elise Stefanik, and a dozen other House lawmakers "introduced legislation to help states and localities prepare for natural disasters like hurricanes and wildfires." According to The Hill, "the legislation would create a clearinghouse designed to help communities lay the groundwork for disasters like hurricanes, including information on planning and response techniques that have been successful in past incidents." In a statement, Peters said, "We can't keep waiting for the next Harvey, or the next Irma, or the next big fire to finally have a national vision for strengthening community resiliency in the face of these increasing extreme weather events." Stefanik added, "Natural disasters should be prepared for in advance to better ensure families, businesses and communities are ready when they strike."

Pelosi Refuses To Apologize For Reaching Agreement With Trump. The Washington Post (9/8, Snell) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi "isn't apologizing to Democrats and liberal activists for cutting a deal with President Trump on spending and the debt limit." In an interview on Friday, Pelosi asserted, "I make no apology for doing that with the person who is going to sign the bill. ... It gives you great leverage." The AP (9/8, Werner) reports she also "predicted on Friday that Democrats will have increased leverage on immigration and other issues, after a debt and disaster aid deal they cut with... Trump passed the House on the strength of Democratic votes." Pelosi told reporters that if legislation depends "on Democratic votes, it increases our leverage. ... It gives us a possibility for passing the DREAM Act" as an amendment to spending legislation.

Although Pelosi and other Democratic leaders "have been running victory laps in the days since they struck a deal with President Trump, over Republican objections, to extend the nation's borrowing limit and keep the government open for three months," the Washington Post (9/8, Sullivan, Gearan) warns, "a growing number of Democratic lawmakers and activists are voicing worries about getting too close to Trump, whom they have held up as the opposite of what they stand for on issues of race, immigration, the environment and the economy – and whom they hope to campaign against in next year's midterm elections."

Meadows: Trump Deal With Democrats A "One Off" Occurrence Due To Hurricane. The Washington Times (9/8, Persons) reports House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows insisted Friday on MSNBC that Trump's deal with Democrats was a "one off" occurrence and not a trend. He asserted, "Because of [the] hurricane relief, there wasn't a whole lot of options. When you look at this you either had an 18-month clean debt limit, or you had what was agreed to, a three-month clean debt limit. When given two bad options, you can't be too critical of anybody, but I can tell you what it was. Our grassroots are very confused."

Former Presidents Launch Fund For Hurricane Relief Aid. The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Radnofsky) reports former Presidents Barack Obama, George W. Bush, Bill Clinton, George H.W. Bush, and Jimmy Carter in a 30-second ad that aired during the opening National Football League game on Thursday night kicked off an appeal to Americans for hurricane relief funding. The New York Times (9/7, Haag) says "the campaign, One America Appeal, began with [the] public service announcement" in what "was a rare showing of unity in American politics, and President Trump, who has disregarded traditional presidential decorum and has criticized some of his predecessors, endorsed their effort." Trump tweeted, "We will confront ANY challenge, no matter how strong the winds or high the water. I'm proud to stand with Presidents for #OneAmericaAppeal."

Long Facing Key Test As FEMA "Burning Through" Disaster Funds. The New York Times (9/8, Nixon) reports that while Federal Emergency Management Agency Administrator Long "received widespread praise for his handling of the federal response to Hurricane Harvey, the first major natural disaster faced by the Trump administration," he now "faces an even bigger test: FEMA is burning through money as it continues its recovery efforts in storm-battered Texas and ramps up assistance for the anticipated damage from Hurricane Irma, which expected to hit South Florida on Saturday." The Times adds that "even before Hurricane Harvey barreled into Texas and Louisiana, the agency was already responding to natural disasters in 20 states, from wildfires in the West to severe storms in Michigan and West Virginia. And more is likely to come: The hurricane season runs through the end of November." In an interview, Long vowed, "We're not going to let paperwork and money get in the way of saving lives."

NYTimes Analysis Examines Cruz's Changing Focus Amid Harvey Aftermath. In an analysis, the New York Times (9/8, Flegenheimer) observes that as Sen. Ted Cruz is advocating for billions in federal aid for hurricane relief in Texas in the aftermath of Hurricane Harvey, he is shifting a political approach that during his Senate career has “often focused on cutting spending and building a national following as an avatar of unbending dogma.” The Times highlights Cruz’s opposition to a 2012 aid package for Hurricane Sandy relief and subsequent observations by colleagues and others who say Cruz in recent months has emerged as “an unlikely consensus builder among hard-right and moderate Republicans.”

Trump Calls For Republicans To Take Action On Tax Reform.

