Bernhardt Faces Opposition As Nominee For Top Interior Spot.

The Washington Examiner (5/17) reports that, in "an eleventh-hour push," more than 100 environmental groups sent a letter to all senators calling for them to not support the confirmation of David Bernhardt as Interior Department deputy secretary. The groups argue that "Bernhardt's representation of oil, coal and mining companies during his career in private legal practice as a major conflict of interest that will jeopardize the nation's federal lands." In the letter, the groups argue Bernhardt "should not seek, accept or be granted any exemptions from issues that he may have a conflict." The Hill (5/17, Henry) predicts "a contentious confirmation hearing," with opponents "gearing up to scrutinize his professional history and the role he intends to play in a Trump Interior Department that had already ruffled feathers among greens and conservationists." Critics say that Bernhardt's lobbying makes him a "walking conflict of interest."

The Los Angeles Times (5/17, Boxall) reports Bernhardt has a history of doing "lobbying and doing legal work to elude or undermine Interior Department policies and protections." As a partner in the lobbying-law firm of Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck, Bernhardt "represented major players in oil, mining and western water – all areas that fall under the purview of Interior agencies that Bernhardt would oversee if confirmed." Environmentalists argue that Bernhardt either "would be unable to do his job" due to the many important issues he would have to recuse himself on or "will receive administration waivers to deal with them despite his history of representing department adversaries." Bernhardt's potential conflicts of interest are "likely to be a major focus of Bernhardt's confirmation hearing Thursday before the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources."

The Denver \(CO\) Post (5/17, Matthews), EcoWatch (5/17), and another Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (5/17, Boxall) article also cover this story.

Zinke: National Bison Range To Remain Under FWS Management.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (5/17, Chaney) reports Interior Secretary confirmed his intention to keep the National Bison Range under US Fish and Wildlife Service management. FWS was "on track to transfer Bison Range management to" the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes (CSKT) "until the end of President Barack Obama's administration." Zinke said in a Wednesday press release, "As secretary, my job is to look 100 years forward at all of Interior's resources. I recognize the Bison Range is a critical part of our past, present and future, which is why I have changed course." Zinke announced April 12 his intention to revisit the transfer plan "and restart the Bison Ridge's comprehensive conservation plan," and Wednesday's announcement "expanded on that."

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (5/17, Chaney) reports the Interior Department said in its news release that the agency "is committed to evaluating a range of options that include opportunities for the CSKT to take part in the future management."

Zinke: No Decisions Made On National Monuments.

The Lake Powell \(AZ\) Chronicle (5/17, Law) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was in Kanab, Arizona, last Wednesday after touring portions of the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument with Kane and Garfield county commissioners. Zinke met with reporters in Kanab and emphasize that neither the Trump Administration nor the department had reached a conclusion on the possibility of rescinding or shrinking 27 of America's national monuments. He told reporters, "These are absolutely places that need to be protected, and that is our ultimate goal, to make sure the land is managed well." Zinke added, "Everyone wants to protect their culture and traditions. There are a lot of things we can do better." According to the article, Zinke "emphasized that he and the Department of the Interior are considering input from all parties involved from local governments."

Murkowski To Have Cabinet Members In Front Of Her Committees Soon.

The "Morning Energy" blog of Politico (5/17, Adragna) reported Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski "says she looks forward to hearing from the trio of relevant Cabinet members in front of her committees in the next few weeks." Murkowski "said Tuesday afternoon that she has penciled in days to bring Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt up to Capitol Hill." Murkowski has "found the pace of nominations coming out of the White House 'problematic'" and "even people officially nominated aren't moving all that fast." At the Energy Department, "Trump announced Dan Brouillette as his pick for deputy energy secretary more than six weeks ago – but the White House did not officially send his nomination to the Senate until Tuesday." E&E Daily (5/17) also provides coverage.

Opinion: Trump's Budget Cuts Will Hurt Interior Department.

In the Wilmington \(DE\) News Journal (5/17, Hoff), Dr. Samuel B. Hoff, George Washington Distinguished Professor of History and Political Science and Law Studies Director at Delaware State University, writes that the Trump Administration's proposed budget cuts to the Department of the Interior "will impact national parks, conservation initiatives, and even national monuments on land and water." Over the objections of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Trump has outlined a 12 percent cut in the department's budget, approximately $1.6 billion in lost funds. Hoff argues there is "no logical rationale for diminishing a department, which, through its supervision of natural resources, produces revenue for the federal government." Hoff also calls relaxing rules on energy exploration for federally protected lands "problematic for several reasons." The budget cuts will also "endanger national monuments."

National Park Service

Washington Monument To Display Plaque From Ireland.

The AP (5/18) reports the National Park Service on Thursday "will accept a plaque from the people of Ireland that will be hung in the staircase of the monument." The plaque "highlights the connection between the 2016 centennials of the park service and Ireland's Easter Rising." The monument's stairwell "has scores of commemorative stones, most of which were received in the mid-19th century," and the NPS says news donations are accepted "only in very rare circumstances."

Glacier National Park May Lose Glaciers In Upcoming Decades, Study Says.

Forbes (5/17, Nace) contributor Trevor Nace writes recent studies "present strong evidence that in the coming decades" Glacier National Park in Montana "will have none of the glaciers from which the park is named after." A United States Geological Survey and Portland State University study examined how 39 glaciers in the park have been impacted by warming temperatures in the previous decades. Since the monitoring began in 1966, "the glaciers have on average declined 39% with some glaciers declining as much as 85% of their previous extent." The study further estimates "that the contiguous United States will lose its glaciers by mid-century, impacting seasonal runoff from glaciers, streams, ecological systems, and biodiversity." The loss of the glaciers will "impact the park's tourism and thus its budget and conservation effort."

National Park Service Reflects On Fallen Rangers During Police Week.

RV Daily Report (5/17) reports the National Park Service and the United States Park Police are remembering the service and sacrifice of 41 law enforcement rangers and 13 police officers who have fallen in the line of duty for Police Week. Charles Cuvelier, NPS Law Enforcement, Security, and Emergency Services (LESES) Division chief, said, "Our rangers face risk every day as they protect the nation's most treasured natural and cultural resources. Those who have fallen while honorably serving our country will not be forgotten." According to the article, there are approximately 2,300 National Park Service Law Enforcement rangers and United States Park Police officers "responsible for securing and protecting more than 84 million acres across 417 National Park Service locations."

Rockford, Texas Resident Has Photo Featured On National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass.

The Rockport \(TX\) Pilot (5/17, Woolston) reports Rockport resident Craig McIntyre's photo taken at the Arkansas National Wildlife Refuge was "chosen out of more than 16,500 entries as the grand prize winner" in the Department of the Interior's 2016 Share the Experience photography contest. McIntyre initially thought his victory "was a scam," but now his photo of a frog will be featured on the National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands pass.

Additional Coverage: Yellowstone Offers Reward For Information About Shooting Of Rare White Wolf.

Country Living (5/17, Matthews) reports in additional coverage that Yellowstone National Park is offering a $5,000 award for information leading to the arrest of the people responsible for mortally wounding one of the park's "most recognizable white wolves."

Low-Income Families Invited To Grand Teton National Park.

The AP (5/17) reports low-income families were invited to Grand Teton National Park's National Junior Ranger Day through the "Roll Into Readiness" program, which is part of a "six-organization community outreach effort that includes Teton Literacy Center and the Children's Learning Center." Programming for the event was provided in Spanish and English. Millie Jimenez, community engagement and volunteer coordinator for Grand Teton, said the event helps community members feel welcome in the park.

Garland County Historical Society Pays Tribute To First NPS Ranger Killed While On Duty.

The Hot Springs \(AR\) Sentinel-Record (5/17, Bryan) reports the Garland County Historical Society paid tribute on Tuesday to Hot Springs National Park Ranger James Alexander Cary, the first NPS ranger killed while on duty. Cary was killed by bootleggers on March 12, 1927. NPS Ranger Zach Summerlin gave a presentation about Cary, and "gave context to the shooting by pointing out that Raymond Hunt, arguably the most egregious offender in Ranger Cary's death, had been arrested by the park ranger prior to the incident." Hunt vowed that Cary would "never be able to testify" against him, and subsequently, he and four other bootleggers "met Ranger Cary on West Mountain and shot him following an altercation." Summerlin said the arrest of 35 suspects following the shooting "was the result of the loyalty and brotherhood among law enforcement."

Fish and Wildlife Service

Activist Groups File Lawsuit To Block Construction Of Rock Flats Visitor Center.

The Denver Post (5/17) reports community and activist groups filed a federal lawsuit on Wednesday to "block trail-building and construction of a visitor center at the Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge, claiming that government officials have not adequately analyzed the environmental risks of opening the former nuclear weapons manufacturing site to the public." The groups allege that the US Fish and Wildlife Service has not "complied with the National Environmental Policy Act in moving forward with plans to begin building a visitor center at the 6,200-acre property 16 miles northwest of Denver as early as next month." David Lucas, refuge manager for FWS, "responded to the lawsuit by saying that construction of the visitor's center wasn't planned to start in June and that it hasn't been fully designed"

The Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (5/17, Brennan) reports Randall Weiner, a Boulder environmental law specialist who represents the plaintiffs in the suit, said, "Federal agencies have to comply with environmental statutes before they engage in significant actions that impact the public." Mark Squillace, a professor specializing in environmental law at the University of Colorado School of Law and a former Department of Interior special assistant, said, "In my mind, there is little doubt they (Fish and Wildlife) at a minimum have to prepare an environmental assessment before they go ahead, and they have to engage the public."

Hawaiian Plant Extinction Prevention Program Faces Budget Cuts.

The Verge (5/17, Potenza) reports on Hawaii's Plant Extinction Prevention Program (PEPP), which "focuses on protecting Hawaiian plants that only have fewer than 50 individuals left in the wild." The future of the program is in peril because the bulk of its funding comes from the US Fish and Wildlife Service, and in the past year, "the FWS funding has been cut by 50 percent, to about $500,000." When the new fiscal year comes in October, even more cuts are expected. The cuts started in the previous administration, but "President Donald Trump is requesting a 12 percent cut to the Interior Department." Miel Corbett, FWS deputy assistant regional director of external affairs, said, "Our federal funding levels are decreasing and so our ability to continue to provide financial support to our partners is shrinking as federal budgets shrink," adding that it is "a reflection of the overall budget situation at the federal level."

Port Louisa National Wildlife Refuge Hosting Bird Festival.

KWPC-AM Muscatine, IA (5/17, Mason) reports on its website that the Port Louisa National Wildlife Refuge Bird Festival will take place Saturday, May 20. A refuge biologist and trained volunteers will use mist-nets to capture songbirds, which will be banded and released.

Bureau of Land Management

BLM, Conservation Groups Settle Utah Land Use Plans.

Law360 (5/17, Sieniuc) reports the Bureau of Land Management and conservation groups challenging six land use and travel management plans "on about 10 million acres in Utah administered by BLM asked a federal court on Tuesday to approve their deal to resolve the long-standing litigation, which includes new travel plans for site-specific areas."

Ex-BLM Head Tells US House Committee National Monuments Hurt Local Economies.

The Lake Powell Life (5/17) reports former BLM head Kathleen Clarke appeared before a US House committee and "blasted national monuments for harming local economies and communities' way of life." She told the committee, "Monuments have had significant and negative impacts on the traditional uses of these lands and on the lives and livelihoods of local populations." She added, "Landscapes don't disappear, but jobs do." The article mentions her position "contradicts the findings of two recent studies into the effects of monument creation."

Council Members, Senators Upset By Interior's Suspension Of Resource Advisory Councils.

The Deming \(NM\) Headlight (5/17, D'Ammassa) reports the US Department of Interior last week "abruptly suspended the activity of 200 natural resource advisory councils and national park committees that provide local input into federal management of public lands." The department explained in a statement, "To maximize feedback from these boards and ensure their compliance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act and the president's recent executive orders, the department is currently reviewing the charter and charge of each board/advisory committee." Council members were surprised by the suspensions of RACs. Randy Gray of Hillsboro, vice chairman of the Las Cruces District RAC, said, "We were just getting steam for making good recommendations, and now there is this hiatus. That was disappointing to me." New Mexico's US Sens. Martin Heinrich and Tom Udall "were among eight Democratic senators who signed a letter on May 11 to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke calling for reinstatement of RAC activity."

US Geological Survey

Idaho USGS Researchers Measure Flow Of Boise River.

On its website, KBOI-TV Boise, ID (5/17, Osumi) explains how the United States Geological Survey measures the flow of the Boise River. A hydrographer places a device in the water that "transmits how many cubic feet per second the water is traveling." To make sure the gauge is accurate, "crews have to make manual measurements, a task that isn't as easy as it may sound."

The data the USGS gathers “is used to make sure the permanent steam gage is accurate because so many people rely on the numbers it transmits.” Tim Merrick, Idaho USGS spokesperson, said, “The Army Corps of Engineers, the Bureau of Reclamation are using data from this gage to make decisions about releases from Lucky Peak.”

Securing America’s Energy Future

Offshore Energy Development

Panetta: Trump’s Offshore Order Attacking Legacy Of Protecting Marine Sanctuaries.

Rep. Jimmy Panetta writes in the Congress Blog for The Hill (5/17, Panetta) saying that President Trump’s executive order to expand offshore drilling is “attacking a legacy of laws, leaders, and local communities that have long fought to prevent any attempts to drill for oil in our treasured marine sanctuaries.” Marine sanctuaries were designed to protect important and unique areas of the ocean, so there must be more than an “executive order by President Trump to turn back the clock on the incredible work done to establish these treasures.” Panetta says that for California, “it would take an act of Congress to open them up for oil exploration and exploitation.” He promises to “fight not only for our marine sanctuaries in California and across our nation, but also to preserve the many benefits that our oceans bestow upon our communities, country, and future generations.”

Onshore Energy Development

BLM Looking For Ways To Speed Up Application Process.

Fuel Fix \(TX\) (5/17, Osborne) reports that a drilling application backlog is hampering new oil and gas drilling on federal lands, as more than 3,000 applications for drilling permits are awaiting review at the Bureau of Land Management, according to E&E News. Acting Director Mike Nedd said the agency is working on several strategies to speed up the application process. He said, “It may be a strike team. It may be shifting the workload to a different office.” Neal Kirby, spokesman for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said, “Every day that goes by while independent producers — companies with an average of 12 employees — wait for their permits to be approved means more money out of their own pockets.”

Alaska Seeks Revised Rules For National Petroleum Reserve From Interior Department.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (5/17, Bradner) reports Alaska officials will urge Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “for a revamp of Obama administration rules restricting oil and gas development in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, state Natural Resources Commissioner Andy Mack said May 12.” Mack said in an interview, “We believe we can help BLM (Bureau of Land Management) in developing a new plan that is balanced,” between resource development and environmental protection. BLM would develop the new plan, as it manages the 23-million-acre petroleum reserve, “but Mack said the state hopes to be heavily involved.” The current management plan “was implemented in 2013 and placed large parts of the reserve into special conservation areas, effectively putting large areas off-limits to petroleum exploration and development.”

Groups Ask FERC To Halt Construction Of Rover Pipeline.

The “Morning Energy” blog of Politico (5/17, Adragna) reported that more than 110 organizations released a letter yesterday “morning asking FERC to halt all construction on the Rover Pipeline and reopen the project’s environmental impact statement in light of the recent spill of 2 million gallons of drilling fluid.” The letter “also asks FERC to review...its horizontal drilling regulations in general and pause all pipeline projects in its docket while undertaking that action.”

New Natural Gas Pipeline To Cross Arkansas River.

The Arkansas Democrat Gazette (5/17) reports Enbridge Inc. said “a new pipeline to transport natural gas is scheduled to be installed under the Arkansas River between Little Rock and North Little Rock, near the site where a similar pipeline ruptured nearly two years ago.” The pipeline industry says that using a horizontal directional drill process to bury the pipeline well under the riverbed “will result in a safer natural-gas transportation and storage system, protecting it from the turbulence of the river as opposed to the existing pipelines, which are on the river floor.”

Lack Of Fracking Crews May Push Oil Production Increases To 2018.

Bloomberg News (5/17, Carroll, Wethe) reports the shale explorers that have been expanding oil production are struggling to find enough hydraulic fracturing crews after thousands were dismissed during the market downturn. Infill Thinking LLC said independent US drillers underspent their first quarter budgets by $2.5 billion because many could not find crews to handle all the planned work. Infill's founder Joseph Triepke said that if the struggle to find workers continues, the output increases planned for the summer may be pushed into 2018, which could create an unanticipated production bulge. Some workers are even paying early termination fees to take higher paying jobs at other fields. EQT Corp CEO Steven Schlotterbeck said, "So we will get some penalty fees but that obviously is far less than the value of having the wells fracked on the schedule that we would have liked."

Renewable Energy

US Less Attractive For Renewable Energy Investment.

Fuel Fix \(TX\) (5/17) reports that accounting firm Ernst and Young says Administration plans to undo the Clean Power Plan and the possibility of dropping out of the Paris climate accords "could push renewable energy investors away from the United States." The US's Renewable Energy Country Attractiveness Index has fallen below that of China and India.

Philadelphia Seeks To Add More Rooftop Solar.

NPR (5/17, Phillips) reports new employment is growing in the solar industry, and "Philadelphia has a plan to take advantage of this trend, and get young people without college degrees into the field." As part of a city plan to create 10,000 green jobs in the next ten years, the nonprofit Philadelphia Energy Authority is seeking "proposals from solar companies to install panels on 500 rooftops in the city by the end of 2018." The Solarize Philly plan seeks to take advantage of economies of scale and "negotiate deals with equipment manufacturers to bring down the cost enough to allow moderate income homeowners to participate."

GAO Report Criticizes Bureau Of Indian Education.

The Seventy Four (5/17, Phenicie) reports the Government Accountability Office has released its biennial report on fraud, waste, and mismanagement in federal programs, and this iteration "includes the federal government's management of Indian education, primarily its mismanagement of spending and facilities." The report says the Bureau of Indian Education "doesn't have appropriate policies for overseeing school spending, and officials charged with that task often don't have the requisite training."

Bureau Of Reclamation Says South Dakota Tribe Repaid $54K In Questionable Costs.

The AP (5/17) reports the US Bureau of Reclamation said Wednesday that a South Dakota Native American tribe "has repaid roughly $54,000 in costs questioned by auditors" and agreed to "increase oversight of financial reporting and agreements." The bureau's decision "came after an audit found the tribe claimed $1.44 million in costs for the operation and maintenance of a water system that was unsupported, unallowable or unreasonable." Reclamation's Great Plains Regional Director, Michael Ryan, "says the bureau made the decision after a careful review of the audit findings."

SCOTUS Denies Challenge To New York Land Trust Decision.

The Rome \(NY\) Sentinel (5/17) reports the US Supreme Court on Monday denied a petition from a group of plaintiffs challenging "a New York federal judge's March 2015 ruling that Interior had reasonably decided to take thousands of acres in Oneida and Madison counties, including the Turning Stone Resort Casino in Verona and the Oneidas' 32 acres of reservation land in Madison County, into trust for the Oneidas." Interior placed the land into a trust "following the 2013 agreement with the state, Oneidas, and Oneida and Madison counties that settled trust land and tax issues."

Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Testifies Before US House Appropriations Subcommittee.

The Muskogee \(OK\) Phoenix (5/17) reports Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker testified before the US House Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, environment, and related agencies as “part of a tribal leaders’ panel invited to deliver comments on funding for American Indian/Alaska Native programs.” Baker discussed the “effect the budget cuts to the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of the Interior” and called for “a Bureau of Indian Education program equivalent to the Indian Health Service Joint Venture Construction Program.”

Tackling America’s Water Challenges

Federal Government Approves $400 Million Northern Colorado Reservoir.

The AP (5/17, Elliott) reports the US government gave final approval Wednesday “for a $400 million dam and reservoir in northern Colorado where 13 cities and water districts will store water from the other side of the Continental Divide.” According to the AP, the Army Corps of Engineers “issued a permit for construction of the Chimney Hollow Reservoir in the foothills about 50 miles (80 kilometers) north of Denver.” A spokesman for the Northern Colorado Water Conservancy District said it was the last approval the reservoir needs, and “construction could start in early 2019, after the district refines the plans, hires a project manager and awards contracts.”

Utah Town Seeks Restriction Of Popular Hiking Trail Due To Drinking Water Concerns.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (5/17, Maffly) reports town leaders of Kanarrville, the home of one of Utah’s busiest hiking destinations, “fear the recreational traffic could degrade the drinking water, which comes from a spring on a state trust section” located near waterfalls and is piped to tanks at Kanarra Creek canyon’s mouth. The Utah town is seeking a leasing deal with the Utah School and Institutional Trust Lands Administration “that would enable officials to severely limit the number of people hiking the scenic canyon, even though the trail crosses public lands.” However, the proposal concerns public access advocates, “especially if it’s approved without first exploring other options that don’t restrict access and figuring out whether recreational use is actually hurting the town’s water.”

DOJ Names Mueller As Special Counsel To Investigate Russian Interference In Election.

The Justice Department announced late Wednesday that Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein appointed former FBI Director Robert Mueller as special counsel to lead the investigation into Russian interference in the presidential election. Media coverage overwhelmingly characterizes the announcement as a defeat for President Trump, while taking a favorable view of the selection of Mueller for the role. Indicative of the overall reporting, the Washington Post (5/17, Barrett, Horwitz, Zapotosky) characterizes the move as “a concession by the Trump administration to Democratic demands for the investigation to be run independently of the Justice Department.”

The Washington Times (5/17, Noble) reports Trump issued a statement about 90 minutes after the announcement in which he said, “As I have stated many times, a thorough investigation will confirm what we already know – there was no collusion between my campaign and any foreign entity.” The President added, “I look forward to this matter concluding quickly. In the meantime, I will never stop fighting for the people and the issues that matter most to the future of our country.”

ABC World News Tonight (5/17, lead story, 4:00, Muir) reported the White House was “blindsided” by the “bombshell announcement,” and Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 2, 0:40, Muir) that “they were completely taken off guard by this.” Karl added, “I’m told the senior staff of the White House didn’t get word of this until about 30 minutes before the news was shared with the news media.” Pamela Brown said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that Rosenstein “wanted to make sure he didn’t give a long advance warning to the White House and to the Attorney General, Jeff Sessions, about this decision to appoint Bob Mueller as special counsel.”

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, A1, Wilber, Viswanatha) says Rosenstein had previously indicated he did not see a need for a special counsel and indicated he felt the individuals currently involved in the probe were independent enough. The CBS Evening News (5/17, lead story, 4:00, Pelley) said “the tipping point came yesterday when it was revealed” that former FBI Director Comey allegedly wrote in a memo that Trump asked him to stop investigating former National Security Adviser Flynn. CNN's Situation Room (5/17) reported that "Mueller was at the Department of Justice last week" and that he met with Rosenstein a day after the Comey firing. CNN said Rosenstein was not ready to have a special counsel at that point, but that "clearly changed" after the reports regarding Comey's memo.

John Roberts said on Fox News The Story (5/17) that Trump's statement after the announcement made it seem "that he is completely comfortable with this, that he shows no worry about the fact that this has gone into the hands of the special prosecutor as opposed to the Deputy Attorney General at the Department of Justice." David Axelrod said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that "if the President truly believes in his statement that his campaign and his associates and he will be cleared by such an investigation, then he should welcome this." Paul Begala said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that the sentence missing from Trump's statement was, "I and my staff and my campaign will cooperate fully." Begala added, "He is making a huge mistake...by not volunteering that he will cooperate fully. ... The fact that he has not tells me something."

Roberts also said on Fox News The Story (5/17) that "for the White House, this is kind of a two-edged sword." Roberts said the decision "gets Democrats off their back," but "just three months into his presidency, a special prosecutor has been named to look into a lot of the dealings surrounding the Trump campaign." Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (5/17) that "one thing we are going to have to be watching for is whether the President can show any restraint. Does he go after Bob Mueller if there is a day in the news he doesn't like?"

The New York Times (5/17, Ruiz) says that a special counsel "would remain ultimately answerable to Mr. Rosenstein – and by extension, the president," but he would "have greater autonomy to run an investigation than a United States attorney." NBC Nightly News (5/17, lead story, 2:50, Holt) reported that while Mueller will need to "get permission" from Rosenstein to "expand the investigation," it "seems like, at this point, if Mueller asks for something, he's going to get it."

Rosenstein said in a statement, according to The Hill (5/17, Williams), "In my capacity as acting attorney general I determined that it is in the public interest for me to exercise my authority and appoint a special counsel to assume responsibility for the matter." Politico (5/17, Gerstein) reports Rosenstein "stressed that the move to appoint a special prosecutor did not mean anyone involved acted illegally." Rosenstein said, "My decision is not a finding that crimes have been committed or that any prosecution is warranted."

The AP (5/17, Tucker, Gurman) and Roll Call (5/17, Ruger) indicate Rosenstein explained, "What I have determined is that based upon the unique circumstances, the public interest requires me to place this investigation into the authority of a person who exercises a degree of independence from the normal chain of command." The New York Daily News (5/17, Joseph) quotes Rosenstein as saying, "A special counsel is necessary in order for the American people to have full confidence in the outcome. Our nation is grounded on the rule of law, and the public must be assured that government officials administer the law fairly."

Steve Hayes said on Fox News' Special Report (5/17) that "there are several reasons why Rosenstein had to take the step." Hayes added that Rosenstein "presumably" has seen Comey's memos. In addition, Hayes said Rosenstein "knows the status of the investigation more broadly and thought that this was the next logical step." Dana Bash said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that according to "a senior Republican source," Rosenstein "was more and more agitated with the White House's actions and being put in the position that he had been put in, to the point where he was so angry, according to the source who was in contact with Rosenstein, that he was ready to, quote, pack his bags, last week."

In his Washington Post (5/17) column, Dana Milbank says Rosenstein's decision to appoint Mueller "redeemed his reputation, preserved the justice system, pulled American politics back from the brink – and, just possibly, saved the Republican Party and President Trump from themselves." Milbank says the first months of the Trump Administration "have tested the strength of America's democratic institutions," but "the good news is it appears those institutions are holding." However, the Wall Street Journal (5/17) editorializes that Rosenstein bowed to pressure from Democrats and the media.

The Washington Post (5/17, Gold, Helderman, Hamburger) reports Mueller "brings to his new role as special counsel a proven willingness to take on a sitting president." Reuters (5/17, Rascoe, Cowan) quotes Mueller as saying in a statement – tweeted by CBS News – "I accept this responsibility and will discharge it to the best of my ability."

The New York Post (5/17, Tacopino) says the appointment as special counsel means

Mueller, who will resign from the law firm WilmerHale, “has all powers of a federal prosecutor, including subpoena power.” The Los Angeles Times (5/17, Tanfani) reports he will have authority to hire a staff and request a budget from the Justice Department, while Townhall (5/17, Vespa) says Mueller “will take command of the prosecutors and FBI agents who are working on the far reaching Russia investigation.”

ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 4, 1:25, Muir) reported Mueller could decide to “start over” with the investigation. ABC added that Mueller “can now decide what he wants to do with all that information.” Breitbart (5/17, Mason) cites the order of appointment giving Mueller authority over the probe into “any links and/or coordination between the Russian government and individuals associated with the campaign of President Donald Trump,” “any matters that arose or may arise directly from the investigation,” and “any other matters within the scope of 28 C.F.R. §600.4(a).” Breitbart says 28 C.F.R. §600.4(a) “expands a special counsel’s jurisdiction to all crimes, such as perjury or obstruction of justice, that interfere with his original named responsibility.” According to the CBS Evening News (5/17, story 10, 0:50, Pelley), a probe into “all other matters that arise from that case” includes Trump’s “dismissal last week of FBI Director James Comey.”

Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) that Mueller “is an absolutely brilliant choice. There is no more respected figure in American law enforcement than Bob Mueller.” Mueller is, Toobin added, “someone of what unquestioned integrity. Extreme confidence.” Brit Hume said on Fox News The Story (5/17) that Mueller “is universally respected. His reputation as a totally straight shooter is widely recognized. He is the kind of grown-up who, in that job, may not feel compelled, as some previous special prosecutors have, to find a crime, whether one turns up at first or not.” The New York Times (5/17) editorializes that Rosenstein “has done the nation a service in choosing Mr. Mueller, one of the few people with the experience, stature and reputation to see the job through.”

The Washington Post (5/17, Sullivan, O’Keefe, Viebeck, Debonis) reports the approval of Mueller was “a rare moment of bipartisanship on Capitol Hill over a politically charged issue.” USA Today (5/17, Johnson) reports “key” Republican lawmakers and Democratic Senators “welcomed” the news. The CBS Evening News (5/17, story 4, 2:30, Pelley) similarly said “Democrats are hailing the appointment of a special prosecutor as a victory and a good first step, and the move will be welcomed by small but growing number of Republicans.”

Rep. Jackie Speier told CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) that the decision of Rosenstein “to identify a special counsel and name Robert Mueller is remarkable.” Speier added, “It took a lot of guts for him to make this decision and place someone with sterling credentials to take over this position.” Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) that the appointment of a special counsel is a “very solid and significant step.” Blumenthal added, “Bob Mueller is someone with a history of expertise and experience with the guts and backbone to stand up and speak out against any kind of political influence.” Sen. Chris Coons told CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that he was “encouraged” by the appointment. Coons added that Mueller’s “long record of service as a senior federal prosecutor and as former FBI Director, suggests that he’s exactly the sort of person that many of us hoped would be named for special counsel.”

Bloomberg Politics (5/17, McLaughlin, Harris) reports Rep. Jason Chaffetz tweeted that Mueller “is a great selection” with “impeccable credentials” and he “should be widely accepted.” The CBS Evening News (5/17, story 3, 2:25, Pelley) showed Chaffetz saying Mueller will “provide a great deal of comfort on both sides of the aisle. He’s a real professional. People will have great trust in him.” However, Chaffetz said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (5/17) that while Mueller is a good choice, “I also agree that I don’t think they actually should have appointed somebody.”

Rep. Adam Kinzinger said on Fox News The Story (5/17) that “this is the right thing.” Kinzinger said he “changed [his] mind” about the need for a special counsel when the information about Comey’s memo came out and he “saw this partisan hysteria.” Kinzinger added that he “came to the realization that an independent counsel, a special counsel, can take the heat off of this, can detox the partisanship of it.” Sen. James Lankford told CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) that the appointment is “positive” because “everyone wants to get to an answer” and “no one wants to see it drag on.” Lankford said on Fox News’ Special Report (5/17) that he thinks “the decision was made to say we’ve got to have someone who is a prime mover and decision-maker that is unequivocally neutral and nonpartisan.”

However, the Los Angeles Times (5/17, Mascaro, Halper) reports some Republicans – who have “preferred to keep the investigation relegated to congressional committees” – were “less enthused and slower to react." Senate Majority Leader McConnell said the appointment "confirms that the investigation into Russian intervention into our election will continue." House Speaker Ryan said his "priority has been to ensure thorough and independent investigations are allowed to follow the facts wherever they may lead" and the "addition of Robert Mueller as special counsel is consistent with this goal."

The Washington Post (5/17) editorializes that the appointment of a special prosecutor is "a much-needed shot of good news," but it "does not let Congress off the hook." The Post says that a special counsel's role "is only to look for criminal behavior" and prosecute it, as opposed to "inform the public or to pass judgment on actions that may have been unwise, inappropriate or unethical."

Reuters: Trump Campaign Had At Least 18 Previously Undisclosed Contacts With Russia.

Reuters (5/18, Parker, Landay, Strobel) reports in an exclusive this morning that "Michael Flynn and other advisers to Donald Trump's campaign were in contact with Russian officials and others with Kremlin ties in at least 18 calls and emails during the last seven months of the 2016 presidential race. ... The previously undisclosed interactions form part of the record now being reviewed by FBI and congressional investigators."

Putin Offers To Provide Transcript Of Russian Officials' Meeting With Trump. Russian President Vladimir Putin on Wednesday said he would be willing to provide Congress with a record of Trump's Oval Office meeting with Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov and Russia's ambassador to the United States if the request comes from the Trump Administration. The Washington Times (5/17, Miller) says Putin "mocked the news media furor in the US over alleged intelligence sharing." According to a report in RT, Putin "said no secrets were shared at the meeting," and said, "We are seeing in the US a developing political schizophrenia. ... There is no other way I can explain the accusations against the acting US president that he gave away some secrets to Lavrov." USA Today (5/17, Stanglin) quotes Putin as saying, "If the US administration considers it possible, we are ready to submit a transcript of Lavrov's talk with Trump to the US Senate and Congress, if, of course, the US administration would want this."

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Grove) reports that Putin said that Lavrov did not pass on any US secrets following the meeting, and joked that he would have to admonish him for not handing such secrets over to the Kremlin or intelligence services. The Journal cites the joke as evidence that Putin enjoys the turmoil gripping the US.

The New York Times (5/17, Higgins) reports that "the offer left everyone guessing about what kind of 'record' Mr. Putin has of his diplomats' meeting with Mr. Trump. Intentionally or otherwise, Mr. Putin muddied the waters by using a Russian word that can mean both audio recording and a written account." Reuters (5/17, Pinchuk, Osborn) reports, Kremlin aide Yuri Ushakov, "told reporters that Moscow had a written record of the conversation, not an audio recording." The Washington Post (5/17, Roth) calls the Kremlin's offer "provocative" and says "the tactic may have more to do with attempts to sow further chaos in Washington than assuage suspicions about the talks." The New York Times (5/17, Higgins) likewise says that Putin's offer "suggested less an effort to create clarity over what Mr. Trump actually said in the Oval Office last Wednesday than a headline-grabbing assertion of his own authority and a reminder that he should not be ignored." In a separate story, the Washington Post (5/17, Wang) says lawmakers from both sides of the aisle "quickly brushed off — even laughed off" — Putin's offer.

Rubio: Person In Meeting Says Trump Didn't Compromise Intelligence. The Washington Times (5/17, Persons) reports that in an interview with Fox News' Fox & Friends on Wednesday, Sen. Marco Rubio said that "he spoke with a person in the meeting between President Trump and Russian officials who said Mr. Trump didn't compromise intelligence information." Rubio said, "I didn't just speak to the White House, I spoke to one of the people that was in that meeting, and they vehemently and repeatedly denied that the president said or did anything that would've compromised US intelligence, its sources, its methods or our intelligence relationships around the world." Rubio added, "There are no transcripts of the meeting. There are notes, and I would imagine at some point here fairly soon the White House should make those notes available to the appropriate committees."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump "Far Less Forgiving" Of Other Recent Leaks. In an analysis, the New York Times (5/17, Qiu) says that while President Trump asserted his "'absolute right' to reveal highly classified information to Russian officials and defended his disclosure as a way to collaborate against terrorism," that stance "contradict[s] earlier positions on leaks." The Times describes Trump as "far less forgiving of recent leaks of government secrets," adding that he has offered "scathing assessments and suggesting harsh punishments."

In a piece for USA Today (5/17), James S. Robbins decries leaks and argues that "if anyone was placing sources and methods in danger it was the anonymous intelligence official who put a neon sign on the key bit of information that ISIS should be paying attention to. Good job.” Robbins adds that “it is clear that some people are in the wrong line of work. Those who feel that it is their duty to criminally reveal secret information in the interests of hobbling the president should reexamine their priorities and their commitment to public service.”

In 2016, McCarthy Told Colleagues “I Think Putin Pays” Trump. The Washington Post (5/17, A1, Entous) reports that in a “private conversation on Capitol Hill with his fellow GOP leaders” a month before President Trump secured the GOP presidential nomination, House Majority Leader McCarthy “made a politically explosive assertion” that “Trump could be the beneficiary of payments from Russian President Vladimir Putin.” According to a recording of the June 15, 2016 conversation, McCarthy said, “There’s two people I think Putin pays: [Rep. Dana] Rohrabacher and Trump.” At that point, House Speaker Ryan “immediately interjected, stopping the conversation from further exploring McCarthy’s assertion, and swore the Republicans present to secrecy.” Ryan said, “No leaks...This is how we know we’re a real family here.” To the Post, the conversation provides a look at “the internal views of GOP leaders who now find themselves under mounting pressure over the conduct of President Trump.”

White House correspondent Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 2, 1:20, Holt) that the Post report on McCarthy’s comment is potentially “explosive” and “could do some real damage between the relationship between President Trump and Republican leaders.” Jackson added that “McCarthy told NBC News, it’s a bad attempt at a joke” and a spokesman for Ryan “echoed that, telling us tonight, ‘This entire year-old exchange was clearly an attempt at humor.’”

Flynn Told Trump’s Transition Team He Was Under Investigation. The New York Times (5/17, A1, Rosenberg, Mazzetti) cites “two people familiar with the case” who say former National Security Adviser Flynn “told President Trump’s transition team weeks before the inauguration that he was under federal investigation for secretly working as a paid lobbyist for Turkey during the campaign.” Flynn first disclosed the information to transition team attorney and now White House counsel Donald McGahn, and his lawyers told transition lawyers two days later. This, the Times adds, “shows that the Trump team knew about the investigation of Mr. Flynn far earlier than has been previously reported.”

Report: Flynn Stopped Attack On ISIS Opposed By Turkey. According to McClatchy (5/17, Bergengruen), one of the Trump Administration’s “first decisions about the fight against the Islamic State was made by Michael Flynn weeks before he was fired – and it conformed to the wishes of Turkey, whose interests, unbeknownst to anyone in Washington, he’d been paid more than $500,000 to represent.” The decision, McClatchy says, came 10 days before Trump was sworn in during a conversation with Flynn’s predecessor, Susan Rice, who had explained the Pentagon’s plan to retake Raqqa with Syrian Kurdish forces. The Obama Administration “decided to ask for Trump’s sign-off, since the plan would all but certainly be executed after Trump had become president,” but according to “timelines distributed by members of Congress in the weeks since, Flynn told Rice to hold off, a move that would delay the military operation for months.”

Morrell Sees Three Lessons From Scandal. In a Washington Post (5/17) op-ed, former Deputy CIA Director Michael Morrell writes that the scandal provides “three lessons.” First, Trump “is actually paying attention to the intelligence community,” because he was “evidently able to recite to the Russians the Islamic State-related threat intelligence on which he had been briefed with a significant level of detail.” Second, National Security Adviser McMaster and his staff “are not succeeding in persuading Trump to work off of a set of carefully written and coordinated talking points when meeting with foreign officials” and are “not always willing or able to redirect the conversation between the president and foreign officials when it is heading into inappropriate areas.” Finally, “the leaks that led to The Post’s article on the issue have made matters worse.” As a result of the leaks, ISIS “may now be narrowing its search for the source or method of the intelligence on its attack plans.”

Trump Tells USCG Graduates “No Politician In History” Has Been Treated As Unfairly.

Coverage of President Trump’s commencement address at the US Coast Guard Academy focuses mainly on the President’s comments about how he is being treated unfairly by the media – remarks that are being criticized as self-pitying. USA Today (5/17, Jackson) reports, “On a brief escape from the political firestorm brewing in Washington, President Trump protested the media coverage of his four-month-old administration” in his address. Trump said, “No politician in history, and I say this with great surety, has been treated worse or more unfairly.” Trump “did not make specific references to the problems awaiting him back at the White House, but they are multiplying.”

The New York Times (5/17, Haberman, Thrush) says that the “embattled” President signaled with his remarks that he “will hunker down for a lengthy fight.” The Washington Post (5/17, Nakamura) says Trump “was clearly eager to address the controversies, using the second half of his commencement address to express his frustration in rhetoric just loosely cloaked as ‘advice’ for the new cadets.” He said, “Over the course of your life, you’ll find things are not always fair. Things happen to you that you do not deserve and are not always warranted, but you have to put your head down and fight, fight, fight. Never, ever give up. Things will work out just fine.”

On ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 3, 3:20, Muir), Mary Bruce said the President was “venting to the Coast Guard graduation class.” The Los Angeles Times (5/17, Bierman) writes that while the speech “contained much of the traditional praise for the new graduates, and ceremonial pardons of their ‘oversights or slight violations,’ it was also laced with Trump’s hallmark defiance and boastfulness that put himself at the center.” NPR’s All Things Considered (5/17) reported, “The Coast Guard is famous for rescues at sea. President Trump used a graduation speech at the Coast Guard Academy today to try to right his own listing Administration.” The New York Daily News (5/17, Edelman) says Trump used the speech “to toot his own horn and complain about how he’s treated by the media.”

Gail Collins writes in her New York Times (5/17) column, “Wow, Donald Trump can’t even give a commencement speech to the military without making it all about him.” Sen. Tim Kaine referenced the song “You’re So Vain,” tweeting, “You probably think this graduation is about you...” Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted, “Pathetic. What contempt they must have for this whining.” A Daily Intelligencer (5/17, Raymond) piece is headlined “Trump Keeps The Focus On Himself In Coast Guard Commencement Address,” while a story in the Guardian is headlined “Trump To Coast Guard: It’s Rough Out There... For Me.” The Washington Times (5/17, Miller) also covers the President’s remarks.

Multiple Committees Seek Comey Testimony; Two GOP House Members Raise Impeachment.

Several congressional committees are now seeking testimony and documents from former FBI Director Comey, and Republicans are vocally joining Democrats in seeking a complete investigation into President Trump’s interactions with Comey regarding former National Security Adviser Flynn and the FBI’s Russia probe. Coverage is extensive and highly negative toward the President, with many reports including speculation over impeachment. A major component of the coverage deals with the Republican reaction – GOP legislators have been reticent to defend Trump, and two have said that impeachment may be on the table.

NBC Nightly News (5/17, story 3, 3:05, Holt) reported that “congressional committees [are] anxious to put James Comey under oath to hear from him whether President Trump did, in fact, ask him to back off the Michael Flynn part of the Russia investigation.” House Oversight Chairman Jason Chaffetz wants a hearing next week while “three different congressional committees now demanding memos, recordings and clarity about the President’s conversations with” Comey. ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 3, 3:20, Muir) reported both Democrats and Republicans want “Comey on the Hill testifying before the American people about what he wrote about his meetings with the President.” The CBS Evening News (5/17, story 4, 2:30, Pelley) reported that Sen. Lisa Murkowski “put out a statement saying that these White House crisis are eroding public trust, and that ‘it may be that we need the look to an independent commission or special prosecutor to regain that credibility.’”

The New York Times (5/17) reports that the Senate Intelligence Committee has invited Comey “to testify in both open and closed-door hearings, offering him the opportunity to address reports Mr. Trump asked him to scuttle the investigation into Mr. Flynn.” Ranking Democrat Mark Warner said, “I don’t think I know any member that I’ve talked to, publicly or privately, Democrat or Republican, that doesn’t think that Jim Comey deserves a chance to tell his side of the story.” CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) showed Warner saying, “I want to see the documents, I want to hear from Director Comey, and I want the FBI to come forward with any other relevant materials and then we can continue in a bipartisan way. We’ll follow the intel and the facts.” The Los Angeles Times (5/17, Mascaro) reports, “The committee hopes to have a response from the FBI within 72 hours, and expects to hear from Comey soon, possibly next week.”

McClatchy (5/17, Goldstein, Wise) reports, “Washington went into full-blown crisis mode Wednesday as the controversies surrounding” Trump “ballooned into questions about whether the president might be guilty of obstruction of justice. ... With Trump scheduled to embark on his first foreign trip Friday, fears were high that another shoe might drop. Some experts suggested the president cancel his travels, but there was no indication such a dramatic step was even being considered." The Washington Post (5/17, Weigel, DeBonis) reports, "For much of a frenzied day, Democrats and Republicans were asked not just whether there needed to be further investigations of the president, but whether impeachment...was on their minds."

The Washington Post (5/17, Viebeck, Sullivan, DeBonis, Kane) reports that congressional Republicans "are increasing pressure on the administration to produce records related to the latest string of controversies involving President Trump, amid flagging confidence in the White House and a growing sense that scandal is overtaking the presidency." The Senate Judiciary Committee has "also asked the White House to provide any records of interactions between Trump officials and Comey, including audio recordings." Chairman Charles Grassley told Politico (5/17, Wright, Kim), "We need all those memos. We're going to try to get not just the Comey memo as you heard in my letter, but all memos, all communications between everybody – Comey, and other people in the hierarchy – and throughout the organization, wherever we have to, and over a long period of time."

The Wall Street Journal (5/17, Tau, Andrews, Epstein) reports that Republican leaders are playing active roles in all of these inquiries, and USA Today (5/17, Kelly, Collins) says congressional Republicans "appeared to be digging in Wednesday for a long investigation of President Trump." House Speaker Ryan said, "Now is the time to gather all of the pertinent information. Our job is to be responsible, sober and concentrate on gathering the facts." The Washington Times (5/17, Dinan) reports that Ryan "said the House will pursue its investigation 'regardless of which party is in the White House.'" Amber Phillips writes in the Washington Post (5/17) "The Fix" that Republicans "face a difficult choice: Do they keep giving the president the benefit of the doubt that he's done nothing improper? Or do they take concrete steps to get more evidence, wherever it may lead?"

The Washington Times (5/17, Noble) reports that "following explosive reports" on the Comey memo, "members of Congress are now seeking records kept by the former director about his communications with the president. Given Mr. Comey's penchant for documenting what he considered to be controversial conversations or requests, there might be a lot to turn over." The New York Times (5/17, Ruiz) writes that "for law enforcement officials like Mr. Comey, who was fired last week as the director of the FBI, documenting sensitive conversations is a reflex – and in keeping with the habits of diligent lawyers." Charles Lane of the Washington Post (5/17) writes, "Today's lesson in How Washington Really Works begins with the 11th Commandment: 'Thou shalt retain documentation of all communications with the boss.' If anyone understands that, it's James B. Comey." USA Today (5/17, Johnson, Jackson) writes that "by firing the FBI director...Trump has unleashed a formidable rival who may finally outdo him. An untethered James Comey is now the single greatest threat to his young administration."

House Intelligence Committee ranking Democrat Adam Schiff told CNN's Situation Room (5/17) that we "don't know enough yet to conclude" whether Trump obstructed justice. He said, "The very best evidence, if it exists, would be any tape recorded conversations as the President threatened he had. The next best evidence would be any memoranda that Director Comey produced and his own testimony." Schiff said on ABC's Good Morning America (5/17), "We don't really know what took place here and we need to find out." Schiff said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/17), "I think there are questions that go to a legal standard which will mostly revolve around what the President's intent was. ... But then as a very practical question and that is in the context of, you know, a potential removal from office, would the country, would the Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, view the President's conduct as so serious to be disqualifying?"

Sen. Tim Kaine was asked on CBS This Morning (5/17) if Trump's actions are close to obstruction of justice. Kaine said, "If the facts are as they are alleged, yes it would get close to obstruction of justice." Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse told CNN's Situation Room (5/17) that Trump's actions are "a textbook prima facie case of attempted obstruction." Sen. Joe Manchin said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/17), "The Intel Committee will get the facts. We'll get the facts and go from there. I'm not going to speculate until I see the facts."

Sen. Susan Collins said on CNN's New Day (5/17) that the Senate Intelligence Committee "is vigorously pursuing all of the allegations involving Russian influence on the campaign, including the vital question of whether there was collaboration between any member of the Trump campaign and the Russians." Sen. Marco Rubio said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (5/17) that it is "inevitable" and "inescapable" that Comey "will have to testify before the Congress. I imagine before the Judiciary Committee, and he's going to have to turn over these notes and anything else that he kept, and we'll go from there."

The Wall Street Journal (5/17) says in an editorial that both Comey and the White House should release any records or tapes, and says it was foolish of Trump to discuss the Russia investigation with Comey.

Amash, Curbelo Become First Republicans To Mention Impeachment. On ABC World News Tonight (5/17, story 3, 3:20, Muir), Mary Bruce reported that Rep. Justin Amash became the first Republican to say that “if the allegations in the Comey memo are true, it could be an impeachable offense.” USA Today (5/17, Kelly, Collins) says Amash “was the first Republican lawmaker to raise impeachment publicly,” though The Week (5/17) reports that GOP Rep. Carlos Curbelo’s spokeswoman “made a point of reaching out to Mother Jones to clarify that Curbelo was ‘the first Republican to mention impeachment.’” The magazine’s editor then tweeted, “This correction we just ran makes clear how bad it’s gotten for Trump.”

Brian Todd said on CNN’s Situation Room (5/17) that “a huge question tonight is whether Congress, with both houses led by Republicans, is going to have the political will to establish a commission to investigate the President or to push impeachment proceedings in the months ahead.” Nancy Cordes said on CBS This Morning (5/17) that the Comey memo “does seem to be a turning point for some Republicans whose instinct until now has been to stand by the President or minimize his mistakes.” Legal analyst Dan Abrams said on ABC’s Good Morning America (5/17), “When we’re talking about impeachment, it’s not about the definition of the statute. It’s about the fact that Fox News at 6:00 [Tuesday] night couldn’t get a single Republican to come on to defend Donald Trump. That should be a bigger concern than the legal statue.”

Dana Bash said on CNN’s Wolf (5/17) that this situation is “being received differently. It is being taken seriously in a way that we have not seen from the many, many other self-inflicted wounds, crises that have been manufactured from the Oval Office.” “The Art Of The Deal” co-author Tony Schwartz said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (5/17) that Trump “is in pure terror that he is going to lose. And, by the way, he is going to lose. I surely believe that at some point over the next period of time, he is going to have to figure out a way to resign.”

The New York Times (5/17, Hulse) writes that Republicans “are acutely aware that if they turn on Mr. Trump, they run the real risk of alienating the voters who made him president, voters the Republican Party is going to badly need in the midterm elections.” However, the Washington Post (5/17, Fisher) writes that “within the president’s party this week, what had been a fairly solid wall of support has suddenly developed cracks.” David Leonhardt of the New York Times (5/17) notes that “well into 1974, most Republicans stayed loyal to Richard Nixon,” which “is actually a reason for optimism. Why? Because the minority of Republicans willing to back an honest investigation of the president four decades ago was enough to make the difference.”

As for other party, Dan Balz of the Washington Post (5/17) writes, “Democrats were at the barricades over the conduct and policies of President Trump long before the blockbuster developments of the past week. One question now is whether they can step back enough to let events play out slowly, deliberately and without prejudice, whatever the ultimate outcome.”

Philip Bump of the Washington Post (5/17) writes that “life for 101 Republicans and Democrats on Capitol Hill may be about to get rather sticky. Those Republicans, you see, voted to impeach [President] Clinton for obstruction of justice 17 years ago, and they would need to decide whether to cast a similar vote against Trump. The Democrats declined to impeach Clinton on that charge – and would similarly need to develop a new rationale.”

Stone: Trump’s Foes To Claim He Has Alzheimer’s To Invoke 25th Amendment. The New York Times (5/17, Peters) reports that Trump’s “most fervent supporters are building alternative narratives to run alongside the ‘establishment’ media account – from relatively benign diversions to more bizarre conspiracies.” Roger Stone, “the president’s friend and longtime associate,” said, “They’re going to say that Donald Trump has Alzheimer’s. This is the game plan. Watch carefully.” The Times writes, “With varying degrees of credibility and credulity, conservatives have fed stories that Mr. Trump is the victim of sabotage by an adversarial intelligence community full of Trojan horse holdovers from the Obama administration.” The Washington Times (5/17, Blake) also reports on Stone’s prediction that claims that Trump has “become incapacitated by Alzheimer’s disease” will be used to remove Trump via the 25th Amendment.

More Commentary. E.J. Dionne writes in his Washington Post (5/17) column, “There is really only one issue in American politics at this moment: Will we accelerate our way to the end of the Trump story, or will our government remain mired in scandal, misdirection and paralysis for many more months – or even years? ... It shows how far along we are that fears are already being voiced of a political backlash from his supporters if Trump is railroaded out of office. But delaying the process of getting to the truth will harm our country far more. And Republicans who throw up roadblocks will be hurt most of all.”

Karl Rove writes in his Wall Street Journal (5/17) column that while Trump has not committed any crime, his actions have crippled his presidency, and a staff shake-up will not fix the problem. Rove says either Trump himself must change, or his presidency will fail.

USA Today (5/17) contributor Christian Schneider compares Trump's current woes to the 2005 "Access Hollywood" tape, which "gave us a glimpse into the mind of a delusional old man using his fame to have sex with a married woman whether or not she consented." He writes that the tape exposed Trump's "core belief that as long as you're an A-lister, there are no rules worth obeying. ... Because when you're a star, they let you do it."

Elizabeth Price Foley of Florida International University College of Law writes in the New York Times (5/17) that "as distasteful as the president's statements may be, they do not constitute an obstruction of justice. Indeed, if they did, virtually every communication between criminal defense lawyers and investigators would be a crime." Andrew McCarthy of National Review (5/17) similarly writes, "On its face, the statement does not amount to obstruction of justice. Trump could be said to be putting pressure on his subordinate. ... It is not frivolous to infer that Trump's statement to Comey was a veiled order. If that is your interpretation, though, you cannot avoid the conclusion" that President Obama's statements last year "were also veiled orders not to indict" Hillary Clinton. Guy Benson of Townhall (5/17) also cites this alleged Obama parallel.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Special Counsel America Needs." The New York Times (5/17) editorializes that Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein "has done the nation a service in choosing [as special counsel Robert] Mueller, one of the few people with the experience, stature and reputation to see the job through."

"China's Trillion-Dollar Foreign Policy." A New York Times (5/18) editorial says that "to hear the world leaders who gathered in Beijing last weekend boast about China's ambitious plans to spend more than $1 trillion on roads, ports, energy and other major projects in 60 countries, linking Asia, Europe and Africa, is to be reminded how America's vision and influence have shrunk under President Trump." The Times says that while Trump "pushes an America First agenda of isolationism and protectionism and embroils himself in controversies that raise doubts about his competence," President Xi Jinping "exudes purpose and confidence as he tries to remake the global economic and political order and lure nations into Beijing's orbit."

Washington Post.

"Trump's Commission On Voter Fraud Is, Well, Fraudulent." The Washington Post (5/17) argues in an editorial that the commission impaneled by President Trump "to investigate voter fraud" is "the real fraud." Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, who will head the commission with Vice President Pence, "is notorious for erecting impediments to the ballot box – specifically, ones that would disproportionately discourage and deter minority and other Democratic-leaning voters." His presence "makes a farce of the idea that the commission's work will be dispassionate, fair and clear-eyed."

"A Note To Erdogan And His Thugs: You Can't Beat Up Protestors Here." In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/17) says after President Trump "laid out the welcome mat" for Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, "the strongman apparently felt so much at home he thought it okay for his thugs to beat up peaceful demonstrators." The Post argues that "there need to be consequences," and that while the State Department "issued a relatively strong statement" condemning the attack on protesters outside the Turkish embassy in Washington, "it is not enough."

"A Special Counsel Is Essential. But Congress Isn't Off The Hook." The Washington Post editorializes that the appointment of a special counsel to investigate Russian attempts to influence the 2016 presidential election is "a much-needed shot of good news," but it "does not let Congress off the hook." The Post says that a special counsel's role "is only to look for criminal behavior" and prosecute it, as opposed to "inform the public or to pass judgment on actions that may have been unwise, inappropriate or unethical."

Wall Street Journal.

"Release The Comey Tapes." The Wall Street Journal (5/17) says in an editorial that both former FBI Director Comey and the White House should release any records or tapes, and says it was foolish of Trump to discuss the Russia investigation with Comey.

“The Special Counsel Mistake.” The Wall Street Journal (5/17) editorializes that in appointing a special counsel to investigate attempts by Russia to influence the 2016 presidential election, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein bowed to pressure from Democrats and the media.

“West Coast Natural Gas Coup.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/17) praises the decision of 75 percent of Coos County, Oregon voters on Tuesday to reject a referendum looking to block the Jordan Cove liquefied natural gas terminal and a connecting 231-mile pipeline. As the nation’s first West Coast terminal, Jordan Cove would provide Rocky Mountain gas field producers access to fast-growing Asian markets. The $7.5 billion project also would prompt economic growth in the region via job growth: 240 new permanent jobs and 4,000 construction jobs would have an average salary of $85,000.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “The temperature was higher than Sean Spicer’s blood pressure today in Washington, DC.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “By the way, betting odds, you bet on this sort of thing, betting odds on Donald Trump being impeached are close to 50-50, close to even. At this point, Melania is looking pretty smart for not moving out of New York, you know.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “This explains why the Russian ambassador insisted Donald Trump speak directly into the flowers he brought him. Can you imagine a former KGB agent, Vladimir Putin, offering to vouch for our President’s credibility? What a love story this is. It is like ‘The Notebook 2.’”

Jimmy Kimmel: “All Trump said is, ‘I hope you can let it go.’ Maybe he was singing the song from ‘Frozen,’ we don’t know.”

Stephen Colbert: “There’s a huge scandal out of the White House. No, not that scandal. Or the one before that, or the one tomorrow.”

Stephen Colbert: “Right now, [NATO is] frantically trying to Trump-proof the President’s first visit. Now, ‘Trump-proofing’ traditionally means locking the door to the Miss USA dressing room.”

Stephen Colbert: “As one anonymous source put it, ‘It’s like they’re preparing to deal with a child.’ Yeah, with Trump around, you’ve got to put the hook on the cabinets, bumpers on the coffee table, and put one of one of those twisty caps to child-proof the nuclear button.”

Stephen Colbert: “ I suppose we should have seen [Trump’s] anti-exercise thing coming. After all, one of the first things Trump did was replace Michelle Obama’s ‘Let’s Move’ campaign with his own, ‘Let’s Not.’”

Trevor Noah: “People are talking about President Trump being in real trouble this time, which means for Trump, it’s a normal Wednesday.”

Trevor Noah: “Last week, it was firing FBI Director James Comey, who was coincidentally investigating Trump’s ties to Russia. Then Monday, we found out that Trump revealed national security secrets, coincidentally, to the Russians. And then last night, to complete the trilogy, yet another Trump scandal drops.”

Trevor Noah: “First, he helps Trump get elected, and now, he could be the reason that Trump gets kicked out. Comey reminds me of every black mother. I brought you into this world, and child, I can take you out of it.”

Trevor Noah: “Obstruction of justice to impeachment is what that funky robot voice is to Daft Punk. It’s the key ingredient.”

Trevor Noah: “Anyway, the point is, this is by far the biggest Trump scandal until the next one.”

Trevor Noah: “Last night, I realized why Donald Trump loves Fox News so much. They are basically his SnapChat filter, all right. Because whatever the reality is, they will always make him look better than he is. And just like a snap, we are all hoping that he disappears soon.”

Jimmy Fallon: “Some say that what Trump told Comey could be considered obstruction of justice and could land Trump in serious trouble. You can tell Trump’s worried because today he frantically signed an executive order to make all prisons super-nice.”

Jimmy Fallon: “In an op-ed, the New York Times argued that Trump should be declared unfit and removed from office via the 25th amendment. Well, when he heard that, Trump said, ‘Wait, there are 25 amendments?’”

Jimmy Fallon: “A reporter from Politico says that when she asked Republican Congressman Darrell Issa about the Flynn scandal, he gave her the middle finger and kept walking. Then Sean Spicer said, ‘Hang on, we’re allowed to do that to reporters? I would have done that four months ago.’”

Seth Meyers: “During his commencement speech at the Coast Guard Academy today, President Trump said that no politician in history has been treated worse or more unfairly by the media than he has. And when Hillary Clinton heard that, she laughed so loud the moon cracked.”

Seth Meyers: "Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said today that he would have no way of knowing if the Russians installed a listening device in the Oval Office during their recent meeting with President Trump. And why would they need to? They already installed a talking device."

Seth Meyers: [Referring to President Trump's speech at Coast Guard Academy Commencement] "No politician has been treated worse? Need I remind you about Lincoln? There were only 20,000 people at his inauguration, and none of the TV stations covered it."

Seth Meyers: "Even Fox News can't get Republicans to come on [TV]. That's E! not being able to book a Kardashian."

Interior Sued For Documents On Monument Designations.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (5/24, Burr) reports that "a government watchdog group is suing the Interior Department for any records relating to five national monuments named under President Barack Obama, arguing the public deserves to see just how much the Obama administration solicited input on the designations despite what Republicans are saying now." The Western Values Project filed suit Wednesday in the federal court for the District of Columbia, "asking a judge to force Interior to turn over a slew of documents the group had requested in January but that Interior has yet to produce." The Montana-based group "says Republicans have been pushing the false narrative that the Obama administration didn't invite public input into the designation of Bears Ears National Monument and four others, and the documents will prove that the Interior department under Obama asked for and received a deluge of comments."

Additional coverage was provided by Law360 (5/24, Powell).

Size Of Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument A Concern For Ranchers.

The AP (5/24, Gibbs) reports the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument has "become a point of pride for some and a bone of contention for others." In April, the New Mexico Cattle Growers' Association urged President Trump "to eliminate certain large-scale national monuments, including the OMDP." Rep. Steve Pearce "said he has heard those concerns and believes the monument area around the Organ Mountains should be maintained at the roughly 60,000-acre footprint originally proposed."

Plans For RFK Memorial Move Forward.

The Washington Business Journal (5/24, Goff) reports that "Events D.C. and the family of Robert F. Kennedy are moving forward on plans for a memorial honoring the late senator, which will stand on the site of the current, but aging, stadium bearing his name." Mayor Muriel Bower, Events D.C. and "members of the Kennedy family met in the District on Wednesday to discuss the memorial and announce a newly formed memorial committee." Bowser was also "scheduled to meet Wednesday afternoon with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." The mayor sent a letter to President Trump "in March requesting that RFK and two other NPS-controlled properties be transferred to D.C."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Post (5/24, Ruane).

Secretary Zinke Asked To Ban Recreational Shooting In Wake Of Gate Fire.

KGTV-TV San Diego (5/24, Horn) reports that San Diego County Supervisor Dianne Jacob on Wednesday asked the Interior Department "to ban recreational shooting on federal land in East County where the Gate Fire started Saturday." In a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Jacob noted that Bureau of Land Management officials "had failed to act on her previous requests to prohibit year-round shooting on the property near Dulzura, despite the high risk of wildfire."

Additional coverage was provided by KNSD-TV San Diego (5/24, Pollock).

Study: Presidents Can't Undo National Monuments.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (5/24, Maffly) reports that "as Utah political leaders continue predicting President Donald Trump will shrink or even erase the new Bears Ears National Monument, a soon-to-be published legal analysis concludes that presidents have no authority to mess with monuments established by a predecessor." According to Sean Hecht, a law professor at the University of California, Los Angeles, "such moves would defeat the purpose of the Antiquities Act." Hecht, co-executive director of UCLA's Emmett Institute on Climate Change and the Environment, said, "If you look at both the original Antiquities Act in context of other statutes of its time and the Federal Land Policy and Management Act that overhauled public land management in 1976, the evidence is clear Congress intended this to be a one-way designation. It can be proclaimed, but not revoked or reduced."

Supporters Of Katahdin Woods And Waters National Monument Hang Sign.

The AP (5/24) reports that Maine Gov. Paul LePage is "refusing to allow road signs to be installed for a new national monument, so supporters of the park are taking matters into their own hands." Fans of Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument "hung a banner advertising the park from a highway overpass above Interstate 95." According to the article, "the sign appears to be written on a bed sheet or piece of canvas," and "it says 'KWW Exit 264'."

Conservationist Buys Needles Outpost In Bears Ears For $2.5M.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (5/24, O'Donoghue) reports that "in a bidding war Wednesday with a venture capital company," conservationist and millionaire Jennifer Speers "paid about $1.5 million above the starting bid for 640 acres within Bears Ears National Monument – a spot called the Needles Outpost, which includes an old landing strip, a commercial campground, convenience store and the only gas station around for about 45 miles." Speers' real estate agent, Tom Shellenberger "said Speers plans to hold onto the property as is and will not 'escalate' it to some pricey resort development." He said, "In the short term, that is the plan. The campground provides overflow camping for the Needles District next to Canyonlands National Park. It is good news for conservationists."

Judge Dismisses North Shore Road Case.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (5/24, Stone) reports that "a federal judge has dismissed Swain County's breach of contract lawsuit against the U.S. Department of Interior to collect $39.2 million owed to the county from the 2010 North Shore Road settlement agreement." The federal government "filed a motion to dismiss the county's claim on April 27 for 'lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.'" The county plans to file its claim again in federal court.

Additional Coverage Of White House Budget Proposal.

Additional coverage of the White House budget proposal for the Interior Department was provided by E&E Publishing (5/24, King), the Washington \(DC\) Post (5/24, Grandoni), the Alaska Dispatch News (5/23, Martinson), CNBC (5/24), Natural Gas Intelligence (5/24, Passut), Offshore Engineer (5/24), Energy Business Review (5/24), World Oil (5/24), the Sunbury \(PA\) Daily Item (5/24, Murakami), the Sun Prairie \(WI\) Star (5/24, Romano), and Hatch Magazine (5/24, Shmukler) .

Additional Coverage Of Secretary Zinke's Official Calendar.

Additional coverage of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's schedule of meetings was provided by the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (5/25).

Suspension Of Resource Advisory Councils Criticized.

In an editorial, the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (5/24) criticizes the suspension of Resource Advisory Councils. The paper says such a move raises questions about the sincerity of the Trump Administration's pledge to hear public input, especially as it reviews national monument designations. The editorial concludes: "If the Trump administration is truly interested in hearing from people who live near monuments, it will reactivate the groups with the most intimate knowledge of the issues surrounding them. Anything less is just lip service."

Additional coverage of the suspension of advisory bodies was provided by the Arizona Daily Sun (5/24, Cowan) and the New Mexico Political Report (5/24, Paskus).

Op-Ed: Federal Land Transfers Steal From Public.

In a piece for the Logan \(UT\) Herald Journal (5/23, Box), Thad Box writes about attending "a discussion of the study 'An Analysis of a Transfer of Federal Lands to the State of Utah' by economists from the University of Utah, Utah State University and Weber State University." Utah's representatives "arranged the town hall meeting last Thursday to get input on a report by economists hired to study whether the public lands could produce funds for their management plus a reliable income stream for the state." Box emphasizes that "land transfer affects its owners: the people." He hopes "the people of the United States will not allow 1 percent of Americans who live in Utah steal land from the other 99 percent of co-owners."

Trump Administration Urged To Rescind Bears Ears Designation.

In an op-ed for the Logan \(UT\) Herald Journal (5/24, Anderson), Matthew Anderson, a policy analyst for the Coalition for Self-Government in the West, writes that the Obama Administration, when it designated the Bears Ears National Monument, "ignored those most impacted by his decision – turning a deaf ear to San Juan County residents' fears that the monument will restrict access, weaken the economy, and corrode their community." According to Anderson, "these concerns are not unfounded, as locals have seen firsthand how grazing, woodcutting, outdoor recreation and other traditional uses of the land have been constrained – and, in some cases, eliminated – by national monuments." Anderson argues that by rescinding the monument, the Trump Administration "can usher in a new age of land management that will heed local voices, protect antiquities and restore the American dream to San Juan County."

Support Urged For Carrizo Plain National Monument.

In an op-ed for the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) New Times (5/24, Kuyper, Baker), Los Padres ForestWatch Executive Director Jeff Kuyper and Conservation Director Bryant Baker, call for support of the Carrizo Plain National Monument. They write that "after a thorough public process including hearings and thousands of comments, a comprehensive land management plan was adopted for the Carrizo Plain." According to the authors, "that plan is hailed as a model for public land management in the 21st century, and it continues to enjoy widespread community and stakeholder support." But President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "review is unraveling this delicate balance that has been built over the course of the last three decades."

National Park Service

NPS Assets At Risk From Rising Sea Levels.

In an article titled "Saving The Statue Of Liberty From Climate Change," Bloomberg News (5/24, Clark) reports that "there'll be plenty of demand in the years ahead for those with experience moving or protecting vulnerable coastal structures." The article notes that "more than $40 billion in National Park assets are located along coasts deemed 'high exposure' risks, according to a 2015 survey published by the agency."

Investigators Say Employee Of USS Arizona Memorial Took Improper Gifts.

The AP (5/24, McAvoy) reports from Honolulu that "a National Park Service employee at the USS Arizona Memorial accepted gifts from tour operators in violation of ethics regulations, U.S. Department of Interior investigators said Wednesday." According to the AP, "the gifts included a $50 jacket and golf course green fees valued at about $85, the department's inspector general said in a three-paragraph summary of their report on the case." Investigators "didn't release their full report for privacy reasons and because it contained law enforcement information." The AP adds that "the report says the U.S. Attorney's Office in Hawaii declined to prosecute."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\), Philly \(PA\) (5/24, McAVOY), the Seattle \(WA\) Times (5/24, McAVOY), U.S. News & World Report (5/24, McAVOY), the Washington \(DC\) Post (5/24, McAvoy), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (5/24, McAVOY), and the Daily Mail (5/24).

Legislation Filed To Expand Little Rock Central High Site's Boundaries.

The AP (5/24) reports that "lawmakers in Washington have filed legislation that would expand the boundaries of the Little Rock Central High School National Historic Site." The measure filed Tuesday "would add seven homes to Central High's national historic site, which is operated by the National Park Service."

Installation Of Yosemite's Half Dome Cables Delayed.

The Los Angeles Times (5/24, Parvini) reports that "hikers hoping to scale Yosemite National Park's Half Dome will have to wait until June instead of summiting over Memorial Day weekend." Park officials have "delayed installing the Half Dome cables until at least June 2 because of the heavy snowpack and other hazardous conditions on the trail." The cables were originally scheduled for installment Friday.

Officials Working To Legalize Mountain Bike Riding At Whiskeytown Recreation Area.

The Redding \(CA\) Record-Searchlight (5/24, Arthur) reports that National Park Service officials at Whiskeytown National Recreation Area want to make "it legal to ride mountain bikes on trails around the lake." Jim Milestone, superintendent at Whiskeytown, said, "The National Park Service has allowed mountain biking since the '70s, but it was never officially legalized. Within national parks you can't ride mountain bikes on backcountry trails." Whiskeytown officials are "going through the process to close that technical loophole and make it legal to ride mountain bikes on trails in the recreation area."

Repairs Planned For Herring Cove Beach Parking Lot.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (5/24, Bragg) reports that "a storm-battered Cape Cod National Seashore beach parking area – known for its drive-up convenience and dramatic sunsets – will undergo $420,000 in short-term repairs after an extensive lobbying effort." In addition, the National Park Service "authorized $5.3 million to design and ultimately move the parking area away from the immediate reach of winter storm surges." According to Seashore Acting Superintendent Kathy Tevyaw, "the contract for the design could be awarded this summer, with construction scheduled to begin next year."

NPS Has New Float Plane At Lake Mead.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (5/24, Brean) reports that the National Park Service has "a faster way to respond to emergency calls on Lake Mead, just in time for the start of the busy summer season." The park service "recently upgraded to an airplane that can land on the water and quickly render assistance even in the park's most remote coves." Park pilot Scott Taylor "said he can reach just about any part of the 1.5 million-acre Lake Mead National Recreation Area in 30 minutes or less."

Additional Coverage: Video Shows Grand Canyon Filled With Ocean Of Clouds.

Additional coverage of a video that "shows the Grand Canyon filled with oceanlike clouds" was provided by the Arizona Republic (5/24, White) and USA Today (5/25, White).

Petition To UNESCO World Heritage Committee Seeks To Stop Border Wall.

USA Today (5/24, Nández) reports that "the latest attempt to stymie President Trump's planned border wall has united Tohono O'odham tribal members and conservation groups in an international plea to protect jaguar, pronghorn and other endangered species along the Arizona-Mexico border." The Center for Biological Diversity, Greenpeace Mexico and the Tohono O'odham tribe in Sonora, Mexico, "filed a joint petition Tuesday with the UNESCO World Heritage Committee." The petition "asks that the El Pinacate and Gran Desierto de Altar Biosphere Reserve, a World Heritage Site in Mexico, be granted 'in danger' status."

Lawsuit Filed To Block Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge.

The Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (5/17, Brennan) reports that "a coalition of communities united around their opposition to the planned Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge filed a federal lawsuit on Wednesday in Denver seeking to block its opening until it has complied with a series of environmental laws to ensure its safety." The lawsuit "seeks full compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act, commonly known as NEPA, which requires public involvement to review decisions that might impact the environment."

Snowy Plover Chick Hatches On Oregon Beach.

The AP (5/24, Flaccus) reports that "a Western snowy plover chick that hatched on an Oregon beach this spring is the first of its species to emerge successfully in that area in more than 50 years and provides hope that a management plan for the federally threatened species is working, wildlife officials said Wednesday." Biologists spotted the chick "around the Nehalem Spit using a viewing scope but have had a hard time getting a good picture because the tiny, fluffy chick is roughly the size of two cotton balls." According to Chris Havel, a spokesman for the Oregon Parks and Recreation Department, "the news is a sign that a recovery plan developed by state wildlife officials and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is making headway in its goal to return the tiny birds to their habitat along the length of the Oregon coast without banning humans from the beaches."

Students Adopt Snails To Release Into Loxahatchee Wildlife Refuge.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (5/24, Engoren) reports that "through a partnership with the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation, Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge, Harbor Branch Oceanographic Institute, the Florida Atlantic University Pine Jog Environmental Education Center and Grassy Waters Preserve, students at Palm Beach Day Academy, a private school in Palm Beach, are raising native Florida apple snails in their classrooms and will eventually release them in natural wetland areas in which their population has been declining." The article adds that "Palm Beach Day Academy second-graders, accompanied by teacher Wendy Bieneman, will also come out to help participate in restoration of the environment along with the fourth-graders to release the snails and help plant 200 bald cypress seedlings."

Opinion: Illicit Mining Devastates Wildlife.

In a piece for National Geographic (5/24, Ruggiero), Richard Ruggiero, the chief of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Division of International Conservation, writes about "the social upheaval caused by illegal sourcing of minerals and metals from Central Africa." According to Ruggiero, "illicit mining has been a sustaining force, and sometimes the initial catalyst, for violent armed conflicts and human rights abuses across the region." Ruggiero highlights the "less known...devastating effect illegal mining can have on wildlife, including species the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has a legal mandate to protect and conserve, such as African elephants and great apes."

Sen Feinstein Asks Trump Administration To Protect Mojave Desert Water.

The San Bernardino \(CA\) Sun (5/24, Danelski) reports that Sen. Dianne Feinstein on Wednesday called on the Trump Administration "to continue rules that now prevent the use of a Mojave Desert railroad right-of-way for a water extraction project." In a May 23 letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Feinstein "asked the government to uphold the Bureau of Land Management's 2015 determination that Cadiz cannot use an existing the Mojave Desert without further federal environmental reviews." Feinstein said in a statement, "If Cadiz is successful in building its project, a major aquifer that sustains life in California's Mojave Desert will be destroyed. This would be a terrible legacy for this administration to allow the destruction of all that we've done to preserve this amazing desert for posterity."

Sen Feinstein Opposes Cadiz Water Extraction Project. In an op-ed for the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (5/24, Feinstein), Sen. Dianne Feinstein writes in opposition to that the Cadiz water extraction project because it is "a particularly destructive project in California's Mojave Desert." According to Feinstein, "this project places a big emphasis on corporate profit at the expense of the broader public, which in this case harms our irreplaceable public lands." Feinstein is also troubled by the involvement of David Bernhardt, "who recently nominated to be the deputy secretary of the interior, the very department that oversees the federal permitting process for Cadiz."

Groups Say White House Budget Proposal Would Lead To Horse Slaughter.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (5/24) reports that the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was among the "groups denouncing the Trump administration's proposed federal budget proposal regarding wild horses, saying it will open the door 'for tens of thousands of horses to be immediately killed or sent to slaughter.'" The Wild Horse and Burro Program "would allow wild horses to be sold to the highest bidder, and would strip language prohibiting the killing of healthy wild horses, the group stated." Matt Bershadker, ASPCA President and CEO, said, "This proposal represents a dereliction of the Interior Department's responsibility to protect our nation's wild horses and an affront to public opinion and our shared values. Wild horses can and should be humanely managed on-range using simple fertility control, yet the BLM would rather make these innocent animals pay for draconian budget cuts with their very lives."

BLM Proposing Marysville-area Forestry Project.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (5/24, Kuglin) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is seeking public comment and will "hold a public meeting on proposed thinning and prescribed burning on about 5,000 acres near Marysville." On Tuesday, the BLM "released an environmental assessment, asking the public to weigh in on work for about 5,000 acres." BLM documents say, "Action is needed in the Marysville PA to address the previously described conifer encroachment, declining forest health, and the high fuels concentrations and associated wildland fire danger to the public and to firefighter safety. Forest, woodland, riparian, and sagebrush/grasslands communities have departed from desired conditions in terms of ecosystem process and function, composition, structure and density, and providing native wildlife habitats."

Munitions Cleanup To Close Fort Ord Trails.

The Monterey County \(CA\) Herald (5/24, Herrera) reports that "prescribed burns and trail access were the hot topics at a public kickoff meeting on Tuesday for the munitions cleanup in the northern portion of the Fort Ord National Monument." According to officials, "five prescribed burns could happen if all conditions are met between July 1 and Dec. 31, and that trails would be periodically closed during work and then possibly rerouted afterward." Bill Collins, Base Realignment and Closure environmental coordinator, said, "Field work will start the first week of June with trail closures probably happening the second week. The prescribed burn units will be ready to go probably in mid-September."

Boise BLM Wild Horse Adoptions On Hold Due To Equine Distemper.

KBOI-TV Boise, ID (5/24) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "temporarily suspended wild horse and burro adoptions at the Boise BLM Wild Horse Corrals due to strangles, or equine distemper, in several horses." According to the article, "while the symptomatic horses are quarantined and being treated by a veterinarian, the BLM has decided to close the corrals to adoptions and public visitors as a precaution until further notice." Raul Trevino, BLM Boise Corral Manager, said, "Our priority is the safety of the horses at our facility and the potential of the disease being transmitted to privately-owned horses. We just don't want to take any chances while we wait for the disease to run its course. As soon as it is safe to do so, we will resume adoptions."

Debate Over Trump Plan To Sell Half Of Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The Wall Street Journal (5/24, Sider, Ailworth) reports President Trump’s proposal to help fund his budget by selling an additional 270 million barrels of oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) has reignited the debate over the stockpile’s usefulness. Critics argue that rising domestic production makes it unnecessary and its role as an emergency reserve is undercut by the time it takes for released oil to get to market. However, proponents argue the reserve continues to protect against sudden price spikes in the event of supply disruptions or crises.

In a blog on Forbes (5/24), contributor Robert Rapier writes that selling so much of the SPR “is a risk” With the US dependent on OPEC for 40 percent of its imports, “a significant supply disruption in the Middle East, Venezuela, or Nigeria could quickly remind us of the SPR’s importance.” Additionally GOP Administrations tend to increase the SPR, suggesting Trump may face resistance from his own party.

BOEM Releases High Resolution Maps Of Ocean Floor.

Gizmodo (5/24, Mandelbaum) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has “released a new set of super high-resolution bathymetry data of the Northern Gulf of Mexico for anyone with a computer to enjoy.” According to the article, “it uses 90,000 square miles worth of 3D seismic data to increase the resolution of the regional maps 10 to 50 fold.” The article says that “it’s made up of 1.4 billion 40x40 foot pixels, according to the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management website, which is incredibly high resolution compared with what we had before.”

BOEM To Help Dare County In Rebuilding Coastal Shoreline.

Dredging Today (5/24) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has “announced that they will aid Dare County, North Carolina, in rebuilding its coastal shoreline in several locations over coming months.” The Town of Southern Shores “plans to conduct a small beach nourishment project at the southern portion of the town in late May, rebuilding about 2,500 feet of shoreline.” According to the article, “the project has been incorporated into the agreement that BOEM and Dare County signed in September 2016, adding 120,000 cubic yards of offshore sand for Southern Shores coastal restoration.”

Administration Unlikely To Revive Coal Industry And West Virginia With It.

U.S. News & World Report (5/25, Leins) reports on West Virginia’s declining economy and falling population, “which saw the largest percentage drop in the nation in 2016.” While many residents “have counted on President Donald Trump’s promises to revive the coal industry,” regulations are not the only obstacles coal faces. It “is threatened by alternative forms of energy like wind and solar energy, but mainly by cheap and abundant natural gas.” Also, with China’s “economy is growing at a much slower pace than around 2012,” demand has fallen in the world’s largest consumer of coal. Meanwhile, “West Virginia’s largely uneducated population prevents it from switching to a knowledge-based economy that doesn’t rely on coal.”

Environmental Groups Seek To Block BLM Oil And Gas Lease Auction In Central Nevada.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (5/24, Brean) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “scheduled a June 13 auction for new oil and gas leases across almost 196,000 acres in central Nevada." According to the article, "a coalition of environmental groups will file an administrative protest Thursday in hopes of blocking the online auction and any future fossil fuel development, which they say could contaminate land, air and water in Nevada while contributing to global warming." The article says that "the Center for Biological Diversity, Great Basin Resource Watch, the Progressive Leadership Alliance of Nevada, the Sierra Club and the Western Watersheds Project teamed up to submit the protest." Meanwhile, "two other conservation groups, the Wilderness Society and WildEarth Guardians, are planning their own administrative protests of BLM's upcoming auction."

BIA Inspectors Recognized.

The Pawhuska \(OK\) Journal-Capital (5/24) reports that the Oklahoma Energy Resources Board "recognized the work of Bureau of Indian Affairs field inspectors as essential to the environmental restoration of 1,000 abandoned well sites in Osage County." The agencies "celebrated the milestone restoration with a ribbon-cutting ceremony to break ground on construction of the site on May 17." OERB Executive Director Mindy Stitt said, "The work the BIA has done on behalf of our restoration program has been absolutely vital to its success in Osage County. Without their dedicated service we would not have been able to reach 1,000 restorations."

More Than 3,000 Yakamas Receive Land Buyback Offers.

The Yakima \(WA\) Herald-Republic (5/24, Ferolito) reports that the Interior Department extended land buyback offers to "nearly 3,600 tribal landowners with fractionated interests on the Yakama reservation." Landowners have "until June 19 to accept purchase offers."

Swinomish Indian Tribe Proposes To Broaden Jurisdiction.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (5/24, Jenkins) reports that the Swinomish Indian tribe "announced Wednesday that its members have approved amending the tribe's constitution to erase references to reservation boundaries set in 1873." The tribe "proposes that its jurisdiction extend beyond its 7,000-acre reservation to the 'tribe's usual and accustomed fishing grounds and stations and all open and unclaimed lands.'" The Bureau of Indian Affairs "approved the wording of the constitutional change, which still must be approved by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." Skagit County Commissioners, "who say the tribe is apparently trying to extend political control over much of the county, have pledged to challenge the tribe all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary."

Schaghticoke Tribal Nation Threatens To Sue Over Third Casino.

The AP (5/24, Haigh) reports that the Connecticut Senate "passed a bill early Wednesday allowing a new satellite casino to be built by two Native American tribes in East Windsor, but it's doubtful it will clear the House of Representatives." On Wednesday, the Schaghticoke Tribal Nation, "which wants to open its own casino, announced it 'will have no alternative' but to sue the state if the legislation allowing the two federally recognized tribes to open the $200 million-to-$300 million East Windsor facility prevails."

Guam's Bordallo Slams White House Budget Proposal.

Marianas Variety (5/25) reports that U.S. Congresswoman Madeleine Z. Bordallo issued a statement regarding President Trump's budget proposal for fiscal year 2018. Bordallo said, "The president's budget is particularly concerning for Guam and the other territories as it decimates critical programs administered by the Office of Insular Affairs. The president's budget eliminates $3 million in discretionary funding for Compact impact, $800,000 in technical assistance, and $650,000 in Brown Tree Snake Control programs. I am encouraged, though, that funding was included to execute the Palau Compact. While this funding is critical to strengthening our relationships in the region, I am concerned about the management of the program under OIA and believe that it may be more appropriately administered under the State Department or other appropriate agency. We have heard the concerns raised by the Freely Associated States about execution of the Compacts. If Interior is unable to come up with the funding it is appropriate for Congress to look carefully at how this program is operating.”

Media Analyses: Trump, Pope Francis Set Aside Past Differences For Brief Meeting.

Coverage of President Trump’s brief meeting with Pope Francis at the Vatican on Wednesday morning focuses on the past tension between the two men. The AP (5/24, Lemire, Winfield, Pace) reports, “Setting aside past differences and rude comments aside,” the President and the Pope “put a determinedly positive face on their first meeting Wednesday at the Vatican.” The two, “vastly different in temperament and views of the world, talked seriously and extensively in a 30-minute private meeting about terrorism, the radicalization of young people, immigration and climate change,” according to officials.

NBC Nightly News (5/24, story 5, 2:05, Holt) reported that a “deferential” Trump met with the Pope for “a visit that seemed impossible just 15 months ago when the President blasted the Pope for criticizing those who build walls and not bridges.” The CBS Evening News (5/24, story 10, 1:30, Pelley) also reported that “Trump spent 30 minutes with Pope Francis at the Vatican, and introduced him to First Lady Melania and daughter Ivanka.” Meanwhile, the President tweeted that it was “an honor of a lifetime that renewed his commitment to peace.” ABC World News Tonight (5/24, story 7, 2:25, Muir) reported the President “promised to consider the Pope’s request not to drop out of the Paris climate accord.” CNN’s Situation Room (5/24) called it “a cordial first meeting after a contentious long-distance relationship.”

The New York Times (5/24, Landler, Horowitz) reports that the Pope was “by turns dour and smiling” as he “welcomed a more effusive president. ... The two stuck mainly to protocol, avoiding a public reprise of the barbs they aimed at each other during Mr. Trump’s presidential campaign or the pope’s thinly veiled critiques of Mr. Trump as a symbol of a dangerously reinvigorated nationalism.” However, “there appeared to be a message in the gifts the pope gave to his guest. They included a copy of his influential essay on the importance of saving the environment,” as well as “a medallion engraved with the image of an olive tree – ‘a symbol of peace,' he explained."

USA Today (5/24, Lyman) reports that Trump "gave the pope a first-edition set of writings from Martin Luther King Jr., including five books. He also gifted the pontiff a piece of granite from the Martin Luther King. Jr. Memorial in Washington." The Washington Times (5/24, Boyer) reports that the President said later, "He is something. We had a fantastic meeting. We're liking Italy very, very much and it was an honor to be with the Pope."

The Wall Street Journal (5/24, Lee, Rocca) reports that Secretary of State Tillerson later told reporters that he did not know if the President and the Pope had discussed climate change. Tillerson said they had "extensive conversations around extreme terrorist threats and extremism, radicalization of young people."

The New York Post (5/24, Moore, Brown) reports that the Pope and the First Lady "appeared to mock President Trump's weight on Wednesday – giggling over the portly president indulging in high-calorie Slovenian sweets. ... 'What do you give him to eat, potizza?' the Pope asked the svelte ex-model." Melania Trump at first "appeared to think he said, 'pizza' and looked at him quizzically – but then she laughed and said, 'Potizza. Yes.' The pontiff then turned to the president and gave him a wide grin." Trump "also laughed – but it wasn't clear if he got the joke."

Politico (5/24, Karni) reports that press secretary Sean Spicer, "a devout Catholic who told reporters earlier this year that he gave up alcohol for Lent," was not among the "an array of staffers" taken on the visit. Jim Acosta reported at CNN's Situation Room (5/24) reported "a source close to the White House" said that "was a slight." BBC News \(UK\) (5/24) also covers the meeting.

First Lady Wore Head Covering For Papal Meeting, But Not In Saudi Arabia. The AP (5/24, Superville) reports, "Melania Trump wore a veil to the Vatican on Wednesday to meet the pope, but no head covering a few days earlier to meet the king of Saudi Arabia. ... Why the difference? The answer is a complicated mix of personal preference, diplomatic protocol and religious dictates." The First Lady's spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham "said Mrs. Trump's decision to wear a black lace veil known as a mantilla followed Vatican protocol," and that the Saudi government did not request that the First Lady wear a head covering. In addition, the First Lady is Catholic, "which likely made accompanying" the President "all the more meaningful to her."

Italian PM Urges Trump To Admit More Migrants To US. USA Today (5/24, Lyman) reports, "Italian Prime Minister Paolo Gentiloni lobbied President Trump on Wednesday to make a dramatic about-face and open the United States border to more migrants." It was the second meeting between the two "in just over a month, following the Italian leader's state visit to Washington April 20." According to Gentiloni's office, they "focused their conversation on migration. Italy is second only to Greece as a European landing point for migrants" from Africa and the Middle East.

Donor Heart Located For Boy Who Met First Lady At Rome Hospital. The Washington Times (5/24, Boyer) reports, "A donor heart was located for a hospitalized young boy in Rome Wednesday, just hours after first lady Melania Trump visited him" at Bambino Gesù Children's Hospital. The First Lady "chatted in Italian with some of the 600 young patients, who greeted her in unison with 'Ciao, Melania!'" Upon arrival in Brussels several hours later, she "learned that a donor heart had been found for the boy."

White House, DOJ Miss Senate Judiciary Committee Deadline On Comey Requests.

USA Today (5/24, Johnson) reports that the White House and the Justice Department have missed the Senate Judiciary Committee's Wednesday deadline "to turn over any records detailing conversations between President Trump and James Comey before the FBI director's abrupt firing earlier this month, instead requesting more time to respond to lawmakers' demands." In a statement, the committee said, "We are still awaiting official responses from both the Justice Department and White House. The committee is seeking a broad set of material, some of which may be related to the special counsel's investigation, but some of it certainly is not."

Elise Labott reported on CNN's Situation Room (5/24) that House Oversight Chairman Jason Chaffetz said earlier that Comey "owes him paperwork by the end of the day, including memos about his meetings with President Trump." Chaffetz told CNN's Situation Room (5/24) that the FBI yesterday sent an "email, just two lines...telling us that they would not provide those documents given the fact there was a special counsel in place." Chaffetz said he also spoke Tuesday with Comey, who "said he wanted to speak to [special counsel Robert] Mueller before committing to any sort of public testimony."

Sen. Ben Sasse told Fox News Special Report (5/24), "We need to have Director Comey testify. This Russia thing, there are a number of things we failed to get right." Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-IL) told CNN's Situation Room (5/24) that he'd like to see congressional investigators have access to the memos. He said, "The American people deserve the bottom-line answer. Whatever happened, we deserve to know, and that's how you restore faith in the democracy in the long run."

Russians Bragged About Being Able To Use Flynn And Manafort To Influence Trump. Pierre Thomas reported on ABC World News Tonight (5/24, story 5, 1:30, Muir), "The New York Times is reporting that US intelligence officials allegedly obtained evidence [of] Russians bragging about the fact that they can use [President Trump's] advisers...as a way to influence Donald Trump's views on Russia. According to the Times, that intelligence apparently played a role in the decision to launch an FBI investigation into whether there was collusion between Trump campaign officials and Russia." The New York Times (5/24, Rosenberg, Goldman, Apuzzo) reports that the conversations focused on Gen. Michael Flynn and then-Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort. Both men "had indirect ties to Russian officials, who appeared confident that each could be used to help shape Mr. Trump's opinions on Russia."

Schiff Says House Intelligence Committee Will Subpoena Flynn. The New York Times (5/24, Huetteman) reports that House Intelligence Committee ranking member Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) said Monday that the panel will issue subpoenas to Flynn. Schiff said at a Christian Science Monitor breakfast, "Those subpoenas will be designed to maximize our chance of getting the information that we need. And I think we need to use whatever compulsory methods are necessary to get the information that he possesses." McClatchy (5/24, Cockerham) reports that the subpoenas "would be the first by the House panel targeting Flynn." Politico (5/24, Wright) reports that Flynn's attorney declined to comment. USA Today (5/24, Kelly) reports that Schiff also said the committee "will take the time it needs to do a thorough investigation."

Senate Minority Whip Durbin was asked on CNN's The Lead (5/24) if Flynn should be held in contempt of Congress. Durbin said, "I'm told that the Fifth Amendment does not apply to documents that already exist, and so he couldn't use the Fifth Amendment as his excuse for not complying with the subpoena that's been issued by the committee. If he wants to plead the Fifth Amendment in terms of his personal testimony, that's his right to do, but when it comes to documents, those already in existence, that would not apply."

Page Says He Will Appear Before House Intelligence Committee. USA Today (5/24, Kelly, Johnson) reports that ex-Trump campaign adviser Carter Page said Wednesday that he "plans to testify publicly before the House Intelligence Committee in June." He told USA Today, "I am an open book. Compared to the incomplete lies that defined me in the secret criminal justice system and the rest of the [intelligence community] last year, any actual facts and truths I can illuminate will be a giant leap in the right direction." Politico (5/24, Wright, Cheney) reports that while Page initially said he would appear on June 6, he later "backtracked," saying that "the hearing date was not yet finalized."

DOJ Says Sessions Did Not Disclose Meetings With Russian Officials. Manu Raju reported on CNN's Situation Room (5/24) that Justice Department officials have said Attorney General Sessions "did not disclose meetings he had last year with Russian officials when he applied for security clearance." CNN said, "This is the latest example of Sessions not listing contacts he had with Russian officials earlier this year." CNN's Collin Perez "was told initially Sessions had security clearance and he and an employee who filled out the form were told he did not have to list what happened." But, CNN said "a legal expert, an attorney here in Washington, regularly assisting officials and filling out forms...said Senators quote would still have to reveal the appropriate foreign government contacts assuming they were not at a foreign conference."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN's Situation Room (5/24) that he is "deeply troubled by his failure to testify, apparently truthfully, before the Committee hearings and possibly in other ways to fail to be completely truthful in connection with his confirmation and I think that it bears intense and immediate investigation."

Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/24), "It is something. I don't know how big a deal it is. He says he got some guidance from the FBI that the form does not mean what the form says. The form could not be clearer. First of all, it would be interesting to know if he got the guidance. The more interesting part of the story is, it's yet another example of Sessions and a Trump campaign official not disclosing all of their contacts with the Russian government. That is suspicious. It's important. There needs to be an explanation why."

House Democrats Ask Deutsche Bank If Trump Accounts Have Any Links To Russia. Reuters (5/24) reports Democrats on the House Financial Services Committee on Wednesday announced that they had written to Deutsche Bank Chief Executive Officer John Cryan requesting information as to "whether any accounts connected to...Trump have ties to Russia." They wrote, "Congress remains in the dark on whether loans Deutsche Bank made to President Trump were guaranteed by the Russian government, or were in any way connected to Russia." The bank has not yet replied and a spokeswoman did not comment.

Fox News Poll: More Voters Now Believe Russia Aided Trump In Election. The Washington Examiner (5/24, Giaritelli) reports that a Fox News poll found that "an increasing number of registered voters believe Russian hackers helped President Trump win last year's election." The survey "found 44 percent of people think Russia attempted to influence the presidential election to help Trump. ... Last December, fewer than one-third of respondents said the Russians tipped the scales in Trump's favor. Forty-nine percent said Russia had no effect on the race, down 10 percentage points from 59 percent in December." Fox News Special Report (5/24) reported on the poll.

McCaskill: Evidence Of Russian Collusion Does Not Yet Exist. Townhall (5/24, Vespa) reports that Sen. Claire McCaskill said on MSNBC's Morning Joe on Wednesday that "the reporting on the conversations Trump had with the FBI and the intelligence community is nothing more than poor judgment at this point," and "that as of now, there's really no evidence of Russian collusion."

Most Republicans Questioned By WPost Decline To Say If They Trust Trump's Judgment. The Washington Post (5/24, Sullivan) looks at how Republicans are responding to questions about whether they "trust President Trump's judgment on major decisions?" Sen. Jeff Flake said, "I'm not answering questions like that. That's ah..." The Post says Flake "trailed off as he walked toward an elevator." The "easygoing Arizonan" is a frequent Trump critic, but other Republicans also "weren't eager to address the subject head-on." When asked, "they diverted and demurred," and "some grew visibly uncomfortable." Of the "dozen Republicans from across the ideological spectrum" questioned by the Post, only Rep. Tom Cole (R-OK) "offered an unqualified yes regarding Trump himself."

Kasowitz "A Fiercely Loyal Defender" Of Trump. Bloomberg Politics (5/24, Van Voris, Hurtado) profiles Marc Kasowitz, President Trump's "go-to lawyer," who will now be defending Trump "in an investigation that could make or break the presidency." Kasowitz is "not a criminal defense lawyer" and is "not attuned to the ways of Washington." But he "is a bare-knuckled litigator [and] a fiercely loyal defender" of the President.

Senate Minority Whip Durbin said on CNN's The Lead (5/24) that Trump is "finally going lawyer up and take it seriously. ... I don't think he's taken this whole obstruction of justice issue seriously. The conversations he's had with Mr. Comey as well as the leaders in our intelligence agencies about stopping their investigation of Russian interference in our election are truly troubling."

William Cohen: Republicans Must Act On Russia As GOP Did On Watergate. The Washington Post (5/24, Kane) speaks with ex-Defense Secretary William Cohen, then a Republican congressman from Maine, about "the challenge of bucking his own party's president" during the Watergate scandal in 1973. Cohen, who "was a 33-year-old freshman on the House Judiciary Committee" at the time, "says that today's members of Congress must dedicate themselves in similar fashion to the task of learning what happened in the 2016 election – and whether any crimes, or high crimes, were committed."

Woodward: Media "Smug" About Trump. Breitbart (5/24, Key) reports that during an interview with Axios on Wednesday, Bob Woodward "said the press has a 'kind of smugness'" about President Trump. Woodward said, "On television particularly, you will see a White House correspondent deliver a report and then say, 'The Trump White House said...'" and then there's a kind of smug smile, which is the correspondent undermining what the White House says. And there may be grounds for that, but it should be reported. It should be straight." Woodward also said of Trump, "Odds are he is probably going to be president for a full term, four years and maybe even more."

FBI Investigation Of Clinton Emails Possibly Influenced By Fake Russian Document. The CBS Evening News (5/24, story 6, 2:10, Pelley) reported, "The FBI investigation of Hillary Clinton's emails may have been influenced by a document that turned out to be a fake, possibly from the Russians." CBS' Julianna Goldman reported, "Sources say the FBI obtained the potentially game-changing document in the spring of 2016. It cited a purported email saying that then Attorney General Loretta Lynch assured Hillary Clinton's campaign that she wouldn't let the investigation into her private email server get too far." But the Washington Post now reports "that the document was unreliable, possibly a fake product of Russian intelligence." The Washington Post (5/24, Demirjian, Barrett) reports, "According to the FBI's own assessment, the document was bad intelligence – and according to people familiar with its contents, possibly even a fake sent to confuse the bureau." Americans mentioned in the document "insist they do not know each other, do not speak to each other and never had any conversations remotely like the ones described in the document.”

Clinton Special Counsel Offers Advice To “Defuse” Russia Crisis. In the Washington Post (5/24), Jane Sherburne, special counsel to President Clinton in his first term, offers “Seven Steps To Help Trump Defuse The Russia Crisis,” including designating a special White House counsel as the scandal manager, installing a process “to ensure consistent and accurate communication about the facts,” developing “the capacity to respond to subpoenas and requests for information generated by prosecutors and congressional investigators,” taking the initiative on disclosing bad facts, avoiding “stonewalling subpoenas and other requests for information,” establishing “a protocol for communicating with the personal counsel of White House officials caught up in the probe,” and, “Finally, tell the truth.”

Kerry Advises Harvard Graduates To “Learn Russian.” The Washington Times (5/24, Chasmar) reports, “Former Secretary of State John Kerry blasted the Trump administration during a commencement speech Wednesday at Harvard’s John F. Kennedy School of Government, advising graduates to learn to speak Russian in light of collusion allegations.” Kerry said, “I’m often asked what the secret is...to having a real impact on government. ... I used to say, ‘Either run for office or get a degree from Harvard Kennedy School.’ With this White House, I’d say, ‘Buy Rosetta Stone and learn Russian.’”

Tea Party Patriots Co-Founder Seeks Inquiry Into Leaks, Unmasking. The Washington Free Beacon (5/24, Crabtree) reports that Tea Party Patriots co-founder Jenny Beth Martin has sent a letter to the heads of the House and Senate intelligence committees urging them “to investigate illegal Trump administration leaks and the Obama administration’s unmasking of US officials and other citizens during the presidential campaign and transition.”

Fox News Reportedly Did Not Pressure Hannity On Seth Rich Story. The CBS Evening News (5/24, story 7, 2:05, Pelley) reported, “Yesterday, the Fox News Channel retracted a story that said a Democratic National Committee staffer may have leaked sensitive emails before he was murdered last year. Well, there’s no evidence of this, but...several conservative commentators are still peddling this sensational conspiracy theory.” CBS’ Chip Reid: “Most of official Washington believes that Russia was behind the hacking of Democratic National Committee emails. But some supporters of President Trump have been pushing an alternate theory that Seth Rich, a DNC employee, stole the emails and gave them to WikiLeaks, and for doing so, became the victim of an unsolved murder. Fox host Sean Hannity, a fervent Trump supporter, has become a driving force behind the story.” NBC Nightly News (5/24, story 6, 2:10, Holt) reported, “Fox News has now disavowed its role in spreading those theories, but still they are feeling the fallout. Some companies have begun pulling ads” off Hannity’s show.

Politico (5/24, Gold) reports that while Fox News retracted its own article on the Rich theory, the network did not pressure Hannity to do the same, according to “a person with direct knowledge of the situation.” Hannity “is considered an opinion host at the channel, separate from the news division, and therefore not subject to the same editorial standards, the network has said in the past.” Jim Rutenberg of the New York Times (5/24) writes that while on Tuesday, Hannity said he had “retracted nothing,” something – “like a reminder that he is under lucrative contract – must have changed in the hours that followed because Mr. Hannity said on his prime-time show on Fox that he would not be ‘discussing the matter at this time’ out of ‘respect for the family’s wishes.’ Astute listeners picked up on two other words in his statement: ‘For now.’” The Los Angeles Times (5/24, Shalby) details how Rich’s death during “a botched robbery” became fodder for the conspiracy theory.

NYTimes Criticizes Administration For Challenging OGE. The New York Times (5/25) editorializes, “It takes a serious commitment to incompetence and deception to spawn as many ethical and legal concerns as the Trump administration has in just four months. The misbehavior by White House officials in the past few days has been impressive even by Trumpian standards.” For the first time, a White House is working against the Office of Government Ethics, and the Times asks if the President will “fire another independent official for excess loyalty to the law.”

Media Analyses: CBO Report Will Hinder GOP Effort To Repeal, Replace ACA.

Media coverage widely portrays the CBO analysis of the House-passed healthcare bill as an impediment to efforts by the Administration and congressional Republicans to repeal and replace the ACA. The tone of the coverage is very negative toward the Republican bill, with many outlets highlighting the CBO’s prediction that 23 million fewer people will have health insurance by 2026 as part of their headline and at the top of their story, while the CBO’s finding that the plan would reduce the federal deficit by $119 billion over the next 10 years appears much later if at all.

For example, on NBC Nightly News (5/24, story 4, 1:15) Lester Holt began his report saying the CBO reported that “the plan would leave 23 million more Americans uninsured by 2026.” Mary Bruce said on ABC World News Tonight (5/24, story 6, 2:35, Muir) that the CBO report said that some will see their premiums “skyrocket,” and warned that over time, “it would ‘become more difficult’ for people with [preexisting] conditions to purchase insurance because their premiums would ‘continue to increase rapidly.’” The Hill (5/24, Sullivan) reports that the CBO predicted “that a substantial number of people would live in states that took advantage of the new waivers for ObamaCare regulations.” According to the CBO, “one-sixth of the population would live in states that took full advantage and waived both rules,” and individuals “with pre-existing conditions in those states would have difficulty affording coverage.”

Bloomberg News (5/24, Edney, Tracer) reports that while the CBO projects the number of uninsured is about one million less than an earlier version of the bill, “the coverage they get under the GOP law will be less comprehensive than they have now.” Moreover, changes to the legislation will “destabilize insurance markets for about a sixth of the US population” because “states will be able use waivers to change insurance rules, freeing plans to charge sick people more and eliminate certain benefits.” According to the New York Post (5/24, Morrongiello), the CBO also said the bill “would reduce the federal deficit by $119 billion” over the next 10 years, a figure “fiscal conservatives in the Senate...are likely to embrace...as they begin negotiations on the legislation.”

Politico (5/24, Cancryn) says the CBO’s “prediction of coverage losses is expected to add more fuel to Democratic arguments that the people who signed up for coverage under Obamacare would be much worse off under the GOP bill,” while the New York Times (5/24, A1, Pear) calls the CBO finding “another blow to Republican efforts to undo President Barack Obama’s signature domestic achievement.”

A Washington Post (5/24) editorial says Republicans sold their bill “with a number of untruths, chief among them that Obamacare is collapsing and the GOP effort is nothing short of a rescue plan,” and the CBO “found Wednesday that the Republicans’ bill is no such thing.” In that same vein, USA Today (5/24) argues in an editorial that the CBO numbers are the reason “House Republicans were so quick to ram through an Obamacare repeal-and-replace bill last month, not waiting for an estimate of its impact or holding any public hearings.”

The Los Angeles Times (5/24, Levey) says the CBO report “further undermines claims by President Trump and House Republicans that their campaign to repeal and replace the current healthcare law...will protect all Americans’ access to healthcare” and “cast a new shadow over the controversial legislation and likely will complicate Republican efforts to get the bill through the Senate, where it already faces difficult prospects.” A brief report on the CBS Evening News (5/24, story 5, 0:30, Pelley) said Senate Republicans “are starting over writing their own version.”

Both the Wall Street Journal (5/24, A1, Armour, Peterson) and the Washington Post (5/24, A1, Eilperin, Snell) predict the CBO report will “complicate” efforts by Senate Republican efforts to pass legislation in that chamber, while Reuters (5/24, Abutaleb) says the report “raises the stakes for Republican senators now working on their own version of the legislation.” Senate Majority Leader McConnell “told Reuters on Wednesday he does not yet know how Republicans will have the necessary votes.”

Politico (5/24, Demko, Haberkorn) says the CBO report “reinforced” the “reality” that efforts to repeal the ACA are “in trouble in the Senate.” Politico adds that “within minutes of the release of the report,” two Senate Republicans “blasted the estimate and the House bill, underscoring just how much the legislation will have to change to get through the upper chamber.” Sen. Dean Heller, who is “expected to face a tough re-election contest next year, said the House bill ‘does not do enough to address Nevada’s Medicaid population or protect Nevadans with pre-existing conditions,’” while Sen. Bill Cassidy “criticized the House bill for failing to adequately protect Americans with pre-existing medical conditions.” According to Politico, Senate Republicans “clearly see the peril of passing a bill that’s projected to lead to 23 million fewer Americans having coverage.”

The Hill (5/24, Carney) reports GOP senators “quickly distanced themselves” from the plan. Sen. Ben Sasse said on Fox News’ Special Report (5/24), “The House bill was not going to be the bill we were going to vote on in the Senate either way. So, the House passed something that created a reset moment for the Senate to tackle repeal and replace.” Sasse added that “the reality is Obamacare exacerbated more problems than it mitigated but it’s not sufficient for Republicans to just say what’s wrong with Obamacare. We need to admit there were structural problems in American health care before Obamacare.”

Nonetheless, the Washington Times (5/24, Howell) reports that House Speaker Ryan “saw validation in the numbers.” Ryan said, “This CBO report again confirms that the American Health Care Act achieves our mission: lowering premiums and lowering the deficit. It is another positive step toward keeping our promise to repeal and replace Obamacare.” McClatchy (5/24, Pugh, Clark) says Ryan had “delayed sending the bill to the Senate before the CBO report was released, fearing it wouldn’t meet Senate guidelines for reconciliation,” under which “the health care legislation can only be considered if it reduces the deficit by at least $2 billion over 10 years.”

Rep. Adam Kinzinger argued on CNN’s Situation Room (5/24), “The top line numbers are actually pretty similar to what we saw in the last iteration before the bill was passed. I think there’s an improvement of about a million people but a significant number of those 23 million that the CBO predicts are folks that basically choose not to have health insurance coverage. We believe philosophically that the government shouldn’t compel somebody to buy insurance, so there are going to be people – as there are now under Obamacare – they choose to pay the penalty instead of the coverage, that will choose not to take it. So, you know, that’s a top line score. I want to get in and read the details.”

USA Today (5/24, Collins) says that the Administration “attempted some counter-programming ahead of the CBO release Wednesday morning,” including a tweet from the President which read, “New @HHSgov report shows premiums increased 105% under #Obamacare. Not good! #RepealAndReplace this disaster,” and provided “a link to a Health and Human Services report that showed premiums had increased under Obamacare.” However, backers of the ACA “some of the issues with the law are caused by Republican policies,” arguing that the Trump Administration “has weakened the ACA with a series of actions...that led to much higher premiums and insurers’ withdrawals in several states.” The Washington Times (5/24, Boyer) says the White House “hit back,” saying that “the CBO is unreliable in evaluating health-care legislation.” The Times quotes a “White House official” as saying, “History has proven the CBO to be totally incapable of accurately predicting how healthcare legislation will impact health insurance coverage.” The official went on to cite the HHS report highlighted in the President’s tweet as “more alarming.”

A Wall Street Journal (5/24) editorial downplays the CBO report as speculation and says the HHS report highlighted by Trump in his tweet, and the decision by Blue CrossBlue Shield of Kansas City to withdraw its ObamaCare plans for 2018 in Kansas and Missouri are more significant.

Following the CBO release, HHS secretary Price “slammed” the CBO score as “wrong again,” The Hill (5/24, Hellmann) reports. In a statement released “minutes after” the CBO report was publicized, Price “dismiss[ed] the conclusion that it would substantially raise premiums for sick people.” Price said in the statement, “The CBO was wrong when they analyzed ObamaCare’s effect on cost and coverage, and they are wrong again. ... In reality, Americans are paying more for fewer healthcare choices because of Obamacare, and that’s why the Trump Administration is committed to reforming healthcare.”

CNN (5/24, Walsh, Producer) reports on its website that Rep. Tom MacArthur., who co-authored “a key amendment” to the House bill, also “said he disagrees” with the CBO report. MacArthur said, “I’ll put my knowledge of the insurance market against CBO’s knowledge of the insurance market. ... I respect the CBO’s role but just because a group of auditors down the block has created a model that has a lot of ‘if’s,’ ‘ands’ and ‘maybes’ looking out 10 years doesn’t make that the gospel. That is somebody’s opinion at CBO. I have a different opinion.” He continued, “It does not destabilize markets when you cover people with pre-existing conditions on the much broader shoulders of the taxpayer, and then you allow the rest of people to have lower premiums and an insurance market that actually works for them.”

On Fox News’ Special Report (5/24), Charles Krauthammer also took issue with the numbers, saying, “I am unimpressed with the CBO and the sanctity CBO numbers. ... Of course you’re going to get an increase in the number of uninsured when you abolish the provision that requires people – especially young people who are compelled to buy health insurance – that abolishes the compulsion to buy health insurance that is completely uneconomical and unnecessary. So, if you abolish that compulsion, you’re going to get fewer people who purchase health insurance. That’s not a calamity. That’s a rational economic decision.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The White House’s Aversion To Ethical Scrutiny.” The New York Times (5/25) editorializes, “It takes a serious commitment to incompetence and deception to spawn as many ethical and legal concerns as the Trump administration has in just four months. The misbehavior by White House officials in the past few days has been impressive even by Trumpian standards.” For the first time, a White House is working against the Office of Government Ethics, and the Times asks if the President will “fire another independent official for excess loyalty to the law.”

“Will President Trump Help Save Yemen?” The New York Times (5/25, Board) editorializes, “President Trump could have used his trip to Saudi Arabia this week to spotlight the humanitarian catastrophe in Yemen and push for a political solution to the conflict.” He instead “basked in the adulation of King Salman and his court, uncritically embraced the country’s foreign and domestic policies, and then sold the Saudis $110 billion in arms.” The Times says that Trump’s “failure to apply pressure, combined with the giant arms sale, is raising fears that he may give the Saudis a green light to escalate the fighting, as well as find other ways to beef up America’s own support for Riyadh.”

“As Statues Fall, The Specter Of The Noose Rises.” The New York Times (5/25) says in an editorial that the “bloody sacrifice to white supremacy” of lynchings and other violence against blacks in Mississippi “sprang immediately to mind over the weekend” when state Rep. Karl Oliver “railed in a Facebook post that elected officials in New Orleans deserved to be ‘lynched’ for arranging to have four Confederate memorials removed from the city.” While he “finally apologized” Monday, “citizens and elected officials were still appalled that such a comment would come from a lawmaker in Mississippi – the epicenter of racial terror during the lynching period.” The Times says Mississippi should “finally dispatch the Confederate emblem from the state flag.”

Washington Post.

“The CBO Report Proves The GOP Healthcare Bill Is No Rescue Plan.” A Washington Post (5/24) says Republicans sold their healthcare bill “with a number of untruths, chief among them that Obamacare is collapsing and the GOP effort is nothing short of a rescue plan,” and the CBO “found Wednesday that the Republicans’ bill is no such thing.”

“The Supreme Court Issues A Welcome Ruling For Voting Rights.” The Washington Post (5/24) in an editorial on the Supreme Court’s ruling striking down North Carolina’s 2010 congressional redistricting, approves of the court’s ruling, because it limits the legislatures’ “shuffling minority voters in or out of political boundaries,” and because it offered “those challenging district maps...several ways of substantiating their claims.” The Post says that North Carolina is now “the poster child for voter-suppression laws and absurd gerrymandering.”

“This Purple Line Ruling Would Be Laughable – If The Consequences Weren’t So Dire.” The Washington Post (5/24) in an editorial on the Purple Line light-rail project faults US District Judge Richard J. Leon’s recent ruling as “specious” for saying that “federal and state transit officials” failed to take the effort to, as the Post writes, “divine Metro’s ridership levels a decade or two from now.” The Post says Judge Leon “swallowed spurious arguments” from the line’s detractors, and in so doing “has ensured a delay, meaning spiraling costs, and further jeopardized nearly $1 billion in federal funding,” regarded as essential to the project.

Wall Street Journal.

“How To Read An ObamaCare Prediction.” A Wall Street Journal (5/24) editorial downplays as speculation the CBO report showing that under the House- passed healthcare plan, insurance premiums more than doubled on average since 2013, says an HHS report highlighted by President Trump in a tweet Wednesday morning, and the decision by Blue CrossBlue Shield of Kansas City to withdraw its ObamaCare plans for 2018 in Kansas and Missouri are more significant.

“Acosta’s Fiduciary Duty.” The Wall Street Journal (5/24) in an editorial approves the recent decision by Labor Secretary Acosta to allow the fiduciary rule approved under the Obama Administration to take effect on June 9, while the department holds a public review. It supports Acosta’s finding that the Administrative Procedure Act sets forth procedures to be followed and that he is acting as it requires.

“North Korea’s Missile Advances.” A Wall Street Journal (5/24) editorial warns that advances in North Korea’s missile program are increasingly putting the US mainland at risk. The Journal warns that if the US and its allies fail to stop North Korea, it may soon have a nuclear weapon.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump felt very at home at the Vatican. He said it reminded him of one of the bathrooms at his house."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Pope made it clear he would like our President to join him in promoting peace, giving aid to the poor, and protecting our environment. The Pope is very persuasive. Unfortunately, Trump is only in year 70 of his 100-year deal with the devil right now. And he's got a no-trade clause."

Jimmy Kimmel: "So after their meeting, Trump said he would never forget what the Pope told him. Then he immediately forgot what the Pope told him."

Stephen Colbert: "President Trump is still on his semester abroad, getting his extra credits. And he might want to stay over there for a while until firemen can put out his budget proposal. Because not only does nobody like it, but it turns out it has a huge mistake in it. Not the part about cutting funding for cancer research. That's one of his passion projects. It turns out that the entire budget is based on a $2 trillion math error. Yes, that's trillion, with a 't.' Now, there's a simple explanation for how this happened: Donald Trump is an idiot."

Stephen Colbert: "Here's a basic math lesson for Donald Trump. If a train leaves Washington, DC, traveling at 40 miles an hour, please get on it."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump visited the Vatican. That's exciting. It's one of the few places on Earth with more old men than his cabinet."

Stephen Colbert: "When asked for his impression of the Pope, Trump said, 'He is something.' That is true. Hard to argue with that. The Pope is, indeed, something. As Jesus himself said, 'Blessed are the vague for they shall inherit, you know, stuff.'"

James Corden: "[President Trump] met with the Pope today in Rome. It was a good meeting, but it got awkward when the Pope asked Trump if he wanted to confess, and Trump was like, 'I don't know anything about Russia.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump met with the Pope. It got weird when Trump was like, 'Jesus only had 12 followers? Sad! His tweets must have been terrible.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "In that photo, Trump looks like a guy who just flew on Air Force One, and the Pope looks like a guy who just flew United."

Seth Meyers: "Pope Francis met with President Trump today at the Vatican. 'Bless you my child,' said the Pope to the driver that took Trump away."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump was at the Vatican meeting with Pope Francis. The world leader who believes himself God on Earth said he's a big fan of the Pope."

Conan O'Brien: "During her visit to the Vatican this morning, Melania Trump wore a black dress and black veil. According to experts, that means she and Donald Trump had sex last night."

Conan O'Brien: "Big news from Washington: According to the Senate, President Trump's budget is dead on arrival. That's what they said. In other words, Trump's budget is covered by Trump's healthcare plan."

BIRTHDAY OF THE DAY: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.

Politico (11/1, Lippman) interviewed Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for a piece on his birthday. When asked about President Trump, Zinke responded, "The President is delivering on his campaign promises and is draining the swamp every day. Unemployment is down; the stock market is up. It's not easy or even popular, at times, draining the swamp, but the work needs to be done to make America great again. I have never worked for someone with so much energy and instincts than President Trump, and I am honored to be part of his team." Zinke also highlighted "a return to multiple use of our public lands." He said, "At Interior we are working to better manage our land at the ecosystem level to ensure the long-term health of the land. We are also expanding Americans' access to public lands. It's a mission worth fighting for."

Murkowski: Full Confidence In Zinke.

Politico Morning Energy (11/1, Adragna) reports that "concerns over his non-commercial travel, the controversial $300 million Whitefish Energy contract and various campaign activities haven't shaken" Sen. Lisa Murkowski's "faith in Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." She said, "What I can tell you is [that on] the issues that we have been working with him on, he is dogged, he is focused. We're good."

Udall Having Second Thoughts On Vote For Zinke. The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (11/1, Coleman) reports that Sen. Tom Udall "seems to be having second thoughts about his vote to confirm Ryan Zinke as interior secretary earlier this year." Udall "said Wednesday that Zinke, a former U.S. representative from Montana, misrepresented himself during his confirmation hearing and in meetings with him before the vote." Speaking of Zinke, Udall said, "He represented, both in the committee when he testified and represented himself to me personally, as a Teddy Roosevelt Republican, so I'm very disappointed about how he's performed. I thought that the best thing to do in terms of working with him after those representations was to show good faith and vote for him." Udall continued, "That's water under the bridge. I'm moving forward, and we're going to try to hold him accountable on the things he's said."

Championing 'American Energy Dominance,' Feds To Scrap Master Plans For Leasing Public Lands.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/1, Maffly) reports that Interior Department Secretary Ryan Zinke has released a new 44-page report, which is "aimed at lifting barriers to development on public lands." Commenting on President Trump's leadership, Zinke said that the "Interior is fostering domestic energy production by streamlining permitting and revising and repealing Obama-era job killing regulations" while being environmentally responsible. The programs that may be removed or altered include "the Bureau of Land Management's master leasing process; its methane flaring and venting rule; hydraulic fracturing regulations; and its coal leasing program."

Additional coverage was provided by the Southwest Colorado Journal (11/1, Mimiaga).

House Passes Wildfire Reform Bill.

The Hill (11/1, Henry) reports that the House on Wednesday passed legislation "designed to help prevent future wildfires following a string of devastating fires in the West." The legislation "would make it easier for officials to prepare federal forests for potential fires by easing regulations governing forest management activities like controlled burns and clearing away brush that acts as wildfire fuel." It also seeks "to provide more funding for wildfire relief operations by establishing a wildfire-specific account within the Federal Emergency Management Agency."

The AP (11/1, Daly) reports that Republicans "say proactive management of forests — including prescribed burns, salvage logging of dead trees and projects to cut small trees and underbrush — reduces the risk of wildfires and lessens the severity of fires that occur." On the other hand, "Democrats say they support responsible projects to prevent fires, but accuse Republicans of using the current fires as an excuse to undermine the National Environmental Policy Act, Endangered Species Act and other laws."

Wyden And Merkley Still In The Dark On Plan To Shrink Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument.

The Oregonian (11/1, Theen) reports that "more than a month after a draft plan from the Trump administration to shrink the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument leaked, Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley said they have yet to be briefed about the plan." They "blasted the draft report from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke obtained by The Oregonian/OregonLive on Sept. 18 as inaccurate and misleading and said they were "disappointed" to still be waiting for more details." The two "addressed a letter to President Donald Trump's chief of staff, Gen. John Kelly, on Tuesday expressing their frustration with the process."

KOB-TV Medford, OR (11/1) reports that the senators wrote, "We are disappointed to learn of the Department of the Interior's recommendations to diminish boundaries and protections for national monuments, including the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in our home state. We still have not received a briefing from the Department of the Interior regarding the proposed changes even though Secretary Zinke pledged to work directly with us. Instead, we learned about the report through the news." They added, "We are also concerned about the numerous factual errors in the report and the role they played in recommending changes to Cascade-Siskiyou. Had we been appropriately consulted, we could have easily addressed these errors prior to the report being sent to the President."

An Alaska Senator Wants To Fight Climate Change And Drill For Oil, Too.

The New York Times (11/1, Friedman) reports that Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska declared both her belief that "climate change is real" and her belief that drilling for oil in her state's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is important for US national security and the economic health of Alaska. Murkowski said in an interview that she thinks "for anybody who has spent any time in Alaska, there is an awareness that we all have that we are seeing the impacts of climate change perhaps more readily than in other parts of the country because of our Arctic environment...but we're also a place where we recognize that in order to stay warm, we have to have a resource that can keep us warm, and oil has been a mainstay for us."

Renewed Optimism Under Zinke's Interior Department For King Cove.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (11/1, Klouda) reports that “proponents of a road from King Cove to Cold Bay feel renewed hope under discussions with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s administration for a different land swap than was proposed in the past.” King Cove Mayor Henry Mack “said the application for the road is back before the U.S. Department of the Interior.” According to the article, “discussions involve setting up a federal lands appraisal process on 200 to 300 acres owned by the King Cove Corp. that could be swapped with the federal government for land to complete the road with an 11-mile connection through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge to reach Cold Bay and its all-weather airport.”

As Wyoming Prepares Change To Coal Bonding Rules, Feds Announce Walk Back.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (11/1, Richards) reports that “proposed Wyoming rules for coal mining may fill a void in the Cowboy State created by the Trump administration’s push for deregulation within the industry.” The Trump Administration is “considering whether to halt proposed Obama-era rules that discourage self-bonding.” Meanwhile, the state’s Department of Environmental Quality is “nearly finished with a preliminary update to state regulations, including self-bonding, said Keith Guille, spokesman for the department.”

Trump To Reconsider Grand Canyon Uranium Mining Ban.

The Hill (11/1, Cama) reports that the Trump Administration is “targeting for review a uranium mining ban that former President Barack Obama instituted in the watershed of the Grand Canyon.” The Forest Service, “which owns some of the more than 1 million acres of land subject to the uranium ban in Arizona, put the withdrawal on a list of policies released Wednesday that it says inhibit the production and use of domestic energy.” The previous administration “instituted the ban in 2012 amid fears by American Indian tribes and environmentalists that uranium mining would pollute the Colorado River and the nearby Grand Canyon.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (11/1, Davenport) and Reuters (11/1, Valdmanis).

Forest Service Fire Experts Blocked From Attending Major Fire Conference.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (11/1, Chaney) reports that “several of Missoula’s top federal fire scientists have been denied permission to attend the International Fire Congress later this month, leading conference organizers to suspect censorship of climate-related research.” Association for Fire Ecology President and University of Idaho professor Leda Kobziar “raised the issue in an Oct. 9 letter to Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.” Kobziar “noted that more than 100 federal fire experts hadn’t received approval to attend the Orlando conference.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Trump Administration Ends Funding For Blackfeet Range Rider Program.

Montana Public Radio (11/1, Hegyi) reports that the Trump Administration has “cancelled funding for the Blackfeet Nation’s range rider program.” The Bureau of Indian Affairs “stopped funding the tribe’s range rider program on October 5th.” Blackfeet tribal chairman Harry Barnes “says the move means those range riders and support staff could lose their jobs on the reservation.” He added, “We didn’t get a notice, we didn’t get consultation, none of that. We get a letter saying all that three percent is now going to treasury. So we lose it.”

Chumash, County Camp 4 Land Deal Signed.

The Santa Barbara \(CA\) Independent (11/1, Brugger) reports that “after years of contentious public and private negotiations, the County Board of Supervisors formalized on Tuesday an agreement with the Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians.” The agreement, “in short, requires the Chumash to pay the county $178,500 annually and adhere to certain development restrictions when building homes and a tribal center.” The article adds that “no gaming is allowed” and “the county would also drop its formal opposition to the tribe’s Bureau of Indian Affairs petition to annex Camp 4.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Rep. Labrador Spoke To Sessions About Idaho Bundy Defendants.

The Idaho Statesman (11/1, Barker) reports that Rep. Raul Labrador “talked to Attorney General Jeff Sessions about looking into the prosecution, bail and sentences of four Idahoans caught up in the 2014 standoff between federal law enforcement officers, a Nevada rancher and 1,000 private militia members.” According to the Statesman, “the conversation came after the Idaho Republican wrote Sessions in support of a separate letter signed by more than 50 Idaho lawmakers that urged Sessions to stop the third trial of two men whose earlier trials ended in acquittals or deadlocked juries.” Labrador “suggested ‘a strong possibility that a miscarriage of justice is being committed.’” The Statesman adds that “following Labrador’s talk with Sessions, Parker and Drexler accepted a plea bargain deal with acting U.S. Attorney Steven Myhre, dropping their felony charges down to a misdemeanor charge of obstruction of a court order.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Oceana: Most Of Offshore Virginia Can’t Handle Both Drilling And DOD Training.

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (11/1, Dietrich) reports that “a new analysis of military training conducted off Virginia finds that nearly all of the Outer Continental Shelf in that area is incompatible with offshore drilling now being pushed by members of Congress and the Trump administration.” The advocacy group Oceana “said Wednesday that its review of U.S. Defense Department planning assessments found that 94 percent of the waters off Virginia are vital to an array of military operations that would conflict with offshore oil and gas development.” Oceana’s campaign director Diane Hoskins said, “There’s little room to drill off Virginia’s coast. 94 percent (of the area) has longstanding DOD operations critical to national security and military readiness. There’s too much at stake.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Senate Energy Gears Up For Alaska Drilling Fight.

Roll Call (11/1, Dillon) reports that at a Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee on Thursday, Republicans in favor of opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration are expected to argue “improvements in drilling technology over the past decade will minimize potential damage to the environment.” The assertion may “rile committee Democrats” who plan to raise the specter of oil spills as a reason not to allow drilling in the reserve. Erik Milito, director with the American Petroleum Institute, said that “the natural gas and oil industry’s long record of production on the Alaska North Slope demonstrates that resources at ANWR could be developed in an environmentally responsible way,” concluding, “opening it would be an important step toward increasing American competitiveness and securing our nation’s energy future.”

Canada Sees ANWR Drilling Threat To Border-Crossing Caribou. Roll Call (11/2, Dillon) reports that the Canadian government has “come out against the U.S. proposal to open a portion of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration, citing the feared impact on a caribou herd that migrates across the shared border.” Canadian Embassy spokesperson Christine Constantin said, “Canada opposes opening the Arctic Refuge and the 1002 area to resource development and supports continued conservation of the Porcupine Caribou herd’s habitat. We have long advocated for the permanent protection of the Arctic Refuge and have made strides to protect this herd through the establishment of important habitat areas, including two national parks, Ivvavik and Vuntut.”

US Rethinks Protections For Fly Imperiled By Climate Change.

The AP (11/1) reports that “U.S. officials are reconsidering whether federal protections are needed for a rare, cold-water insect after scientists confirmed its presence in previously-unknown locations in Wyoming and Montana.” Government biologist Jim Boyd “said Wednesday that climate change remains a concern for the western glacier stonefly despite the new findings.” The stonefly was “proposed for protections under the Endangered Species Act last year by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service” and “a decision on whether protections still are warranted is expected in early 2018.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (11/1, Reilly).

Reeds Beach Restoration Aims To Improve Water Flow, Reduce Flooding.

Shore News Today \(NJ\) (11/1, Benson) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “began a marsh restoration project at Cape May National Wildlife Refuge Wednesday, Nov. 1 that officials said will improve water flow in salt marsh north of Reeds Beach Road to benefit wildlife and reduce flooding.” The project is “part of a $15 million project to restore marshes along 60 miles of coastal New Jersey that is supported by federal funding for Hurricane Sandy recovery and resilience.” Refuge manager Brian Braudis said, “This project will benefit both wildlife and human communities. A naturally functioning salt marsh offers resting and breeding habitat for species like the salt marsh sparrow and black duck, while helping protect private property from the effects of severe storms and sea-level rise.”

FWS Looks To Dodge Suit Over Endangered Texas Bird.

Law360 (11/1, Reddan) reports that “the federal government, on behalf of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is looking to trim a Texas state agency’s lawsuit seeking to delist the golden-cheeked warbler as an endangered species, claiming in Texas federal court Tuesday that the suit is untimely.”

National Park Service

What’s In A Name? At Yosemite, Maybe It’s Money.

E&E Publishing (11/1, Doyle) reports that Justice Department lawyers are “pushing hard — and facing renewed resistance this week — as they probe how a major concessions company placed a dollar value on trademarked names at Yosemite National Park.” According to the article, “a former Yosemite concessionaire urged a judge yesterday to reject the government’s demand for depositions and documents concerning an intellectual property assessment.” For now, “neither side appears willing to give an inch,” and “the two sides are now grinding through discovery, which is scheduled to end next June.”

Group Cries Foul Over Cell Service Expansion In National Parks.

Courthouse News (11/1, Reese) reports that cellphone towers are propagating “around the country in the last frontier of cell coverage: national parks and national forests.” A recently filed complaint filed with the Interior Department’s Office of Inspector General “claims national parks across the United States are allowing cell coverage to spread into wild backcountry areas without public involvement, without getting paid and sometimes without knowing who owns the towers.” Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility “said in its Oct. 30 letter to Mary Kendall, deputy inspector general for the U.S. Department of Interior, that Yosemite National Park is the latest national park in America to allow cellphone towers to be built without adequate government or public oversight.”

House Approves Visclosky’s Indiana Dunes National Park Act.

The Michigan City \(IN\) News Dispatch (11/1) reports that the House on Wednesday approved Rep. Pete Visclosky’s legislation to designate the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore as a National Park. H.R. 1488, the Indiana Dunes National Park Act, was approved by unanimous consent. The measure is now awaiting consideration by the Senate.

Want To Go To Arches? You May Soon Need A Reservation, Under A New Park Service Plan.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/1, Maffly) reports that Arches National Park on Wednesday “unveiled a proposal for a reservation system that it hopes will reduce the crush of visitors, but may irritate some who are unable to plan ahead.” The plan would “limit park entries during certain three-hour windows between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. over the March-through-October high season.” According to the article, “park officials emphasized the point of the plan is not to limit the number of visitors, but to spread visitation out during the course of the day and throughout the year.”

Two Iconic Gumbo Limbo Trees To Be Removed From De Soto National Memorial.

The Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (11/1, Callihan) reports that “the largest gumbo limbo tree in the country will be removed from De Soto National Memorial.” The National Park Service “announced Wednesday that two gumbo limbo trees that sustained damage from Hurricane Irma, including one that holds the title of American Forests Champion Tree for being the nation's largest tree of the species, will be removed from the park Monday and Tuesday." Park officials pointed to "safety concerns as the reason for the removal." De Soto National Memorial Superintendent Nathan Souder said, "Like many others, we love these trees. Ultimately our responsibility as public servants is to put the safety of our visitors first. The demise of these two trees is imminent and their location coupled with the amount of weight that will come down when they fall pose an unacceptable risk to visitors. This is a very difficult decision, but the most viable option."

Park Staff Explains Potentilla Project.

The Half Moon Bay \(CA\) Review (11/1, Hayden) reports that Rep. Jackie Speier has "called for a temporary stop to the removal of beloved trees at Rancho Corral de Tierra in Montara pending further discussion with National Park Service staff." According to the article, "a 'town hall' meeting that will focus on the Golden Gate National Recreation Area's Potentilla Protection Project is scheduled for 2 p.m. on Nov. 12."

Muir NHS Completes Gravesite Plan.

The Martinez \(CA\) News-Gazette (11/1, Weilenman) reports that "in its latest step in handling the Strentzel-Muir gravesites, the John Muir National Historic Site has completed its plans for the place where the legendary environmentalist John Muir is buried." Park superintendent Tom Leatherman said, "I am pleased that we have completed our planning process and are now able to provide an opportunity for the public to visit and pay respects at Muir's final resting place." According to the article, "that plan has been approved by Laura E. Joss, redirector of the Pacific West Region of the National Park Service, and the initial phase of the plan that allows limited visitor access to the graves will be put into place after Dec. 1."

Dogs Harassing Assateague Pony Photo Brings About Investigation.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (11/1, Moore) reports that the National Park Service is "investigating recent photographs depicting two dogs running toward a wild pony on Assateague Island in Maryland." Liz Davis, public information officer of Assateague Island National Seashore, "confirmed officials are investigating the incident, but did not have any further details Tuesday." She "also confirmed the pony featured in the photographs is Susi Sole, or N2BHS-M."

Park Service Looking For Company Operate New Ferries.

The Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (11/1) reports that Gulf Islands National Seashore is "looking for a company to operate two ferries expected to carry passengers from Fort Pickens to Pensacola Beach and downtown Pensacola starting this spring." The National Park Service "said proposals from ferry operators will be accepted through Jan. 10."

Longtime VNP Employee Retires.

The International Falls \(MN\) Daily Journal (11/1, Degross) reports that "after working with the National Park Service for 29 years, Voyageurs National Park Facility Manager Bill Carlson retired Tuesday." Looking back on his career, "Carlson stated that he is most proud of his efforts to improve sustainability at the park and in lowering the overall costs of maintaining the park's facilities." Carlson "regularly recognizes that his career success was made possible through the expertise and professionalism of the facilities team that he has had the privilege to work with over the years."

Bath Farm Makes Register.

The Roanoke \(VA\) Recorder (11/2, Adams) reports that the Wilderness farm in northern Bath County has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.

Pula: Bank Reimburses All $$.

The Marshall Islands Journal (11/3) reports that “the Chairman of the Trust Fund for the People of the Republic of the Marshall Islands said Friday that money compromised by cyber attacks at State Street Financial Services Company have been fully restored and diligence stepped up after the discovery of fraudulent withdrawals of nearly $700,000.” Trust Fund Chairman Nikolao Pula said, “Trust Fund staff first detected irregularities in early July 2017 and alerted custodian State Street leading to the discovery of fraudulent activity in the Trust Fund. All Trust Fund members and staff have been collaborating closely with State Street in monitoring and resolving the situation with the RMI Attorney General, RMI Auditor, and other officials from the Marshall Islands, Taiwan, and US governments.” He continued, “Together we will continue to protect and maintain the integrity of the Trust Fund for the People of the RMI.”

DoD Official Says Seeing NMI Worth Long Trip.

Marianas Variety (11/2, Villahermosa) reports that U.S. Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Basing Allison Sands “said travelling to the CNMI from Washington, D.C. is quite a long trip, but seeing the islands was worth it.” According to the article, “Sands and the CNMI officials discussed the divert airfield project on Tinian and the islands’ workforce issues.” Sands said in an interview, “It is important for us to come here and listen to the people who live here so we’ll know what are the important issues for them and what is the impact of us coming here. We want to make sure that our coming here is beneficial to everyone.”

Governor: HR 339 Not Good For Economy.

Marianas Variety (11/2, Villahermosa) reports that Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres “said he supported H.R. 339’s objective to increase the number of CWs, but it was never the administration’s intent to ‘ban’ construction workers.” Torres “on Wednesday said there could have been a better way to protect the hospital’s workforce without damaging the local economy.” He said, “From the crafting of H.R. 339, it was the intent of the congressional office and my office to increase the total CW allotment for FY 2017 to 15,000 [from 12,998]. The ban on construction workers was intended to occur after FY 2018 to allow construction companies to adjust to the new arrangements....”

Kilili Thanks Governor For Support Of HR 339.

Marianas Variety (11/2) reports that U.S. Congressman Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan “on Wednesday released his letter of thanks to Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres for the Governor’s support of Sablan’s bill, H.R. 339, increasing the number of CW permits available for the Marianas in 2017.” Kilili wrote to the governor, “It was not easy to get a bill dealing with foreign labor issues enacted in this Congress. Your letter of support for the legislation and your participation in the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing held in April contributed significantly to our success.”

A Mysterious Ancient City Discovered In The Middle Of The Ocean.

Ary News \(PAK\) (10/31) reports that “a mysterious ancient city has just been found some time ago off the coast of the tiny nation of Micronesia.” According to the article, a “massive stone tomb buried beneath foliage in the long-abandoned city Nan Madol may have been built for the first chief of the island of Pohnpei.”

Awaiting Trump’s Coal Comeback, Miners Reject Retraining.

Reuters (11/1, Volcovici) reports “despite broad consensus” about the “bleak future” of coal, “a years-long effort to diversify the economy of this hard-hit region away from mining is stumbling, with Obama-era jobs retraining classes undersubscribed and future programs at risk under President Donald Trump’s proposed 2018 budget.” The current president “has promised to revive coal by rolling back environmental regulations and moved to repeal Obama-era curbs on carbon emissions from power plants.” Reuters adds “what many experts call false hopes for a coal resurgence have mired economic development efforts here in a catch-22: Coal miners are resisting retraining without ready jobs from new industries, but new companies are unlikely to move here without a trained workforce. The stalled diversification push leaves some of the nation's poorest areas with no clear path to prosperity."

USGS Reports Small Earthquakes Continue In Central Oklahoma.

The AP (11/1) reports that the US Geological Society announced that seven earthquakes hit an area northwest of Oklahoma city since Tuesday. The most severe earthquake had a magnitude of 4.1 and occurred at 4:50 am on Tuesday. Oklahoma has seen "thousands of earthquake...in recent years" with "many linked to the underground injection of wastewater from oil and natural gas production operations."

Female Focused Science Event Engages Young Women.

The Topeka \(KS\) Washburn Review (11/1, Rankin) reports that Washburn University held its annual Women in Science Day on October 31. According to the article, the event "brought over 250 seventh-grade students from around Topeka and northeast Kansas to learn from female scientists." The article says that "by seeing women like science professors from Washburn and the University of Kansas, scientists from the U.S. Geological Survey and the National Weather Service, the hope is to encourage girls to enroll in science classes that interest them."

How To Help National Parks Without Soaking American Families.

In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (11/2, Anderson), Matthew Anderson, director of the Coalition for Self-Government in the West, writes that "if the National Park Service moves ahead with its latest proposal to drastically increase entrance fees, countless American families will be locked out of the natural beauty and grandeur of our national parks." Anderson argues that "our national parks should be within reach of every citizen." He asserts that "we cannot allow these natural wonders to become another economic divide, where hardworking Americans are once again left on the outside looking in while only the wealthy get to experience our national treasures."

Time Is Right To Open A Slice Of ANWR To Drilling.

In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (11/1, Murkowski), Sen. Lisa Murkowski supports "the responsible development of a small portion of the 1002 Area in ANWR." Murkowski argues that "the economic benefits of limited development will be substantial." She also points out "how imperceptible our physical footprint will be." The plan is to "develop no more than 2,000 surface acres in the 1002 Area – about one ten-thousandth of all of ANWR."

After Hurricane Sandy, Wetlands, Restoration Help Protect Coast.

In an op-ed for the Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (11/1, Weber), U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Northeast Regional Director Wendi Weber writes that "the destruction caused by Hurricane Sandy presented an opportunity to focus science and resources on building a stronger coast through natural infrastructure." She says that "the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and numerous partners in government, universities and nonprofits have been working hard...and five years after Hurricane Sandy some incredible work has been done — beaches restored, dams removed, river miles opened up, living shorelines built and marshes restored." According to Weber, "hoping for a solution that prevents damage entirely is foolhardy, but developing strategies that minimize the damage is necessary and possible." She concludes that "protecting and restoring natural infrastructure — alone or combined with hybrid and gray infrastructure — can help reduce the impacts of storms and sea level rise and help communities recover more quickly."

When Horses Go Wild.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (11/1, O'Toole), Sharon O'Toole, a rancher near Savery, Wyoming, writes that the wild horse issue, "which dominates the Western United States as more than 70,000 excess horses damage the landscape, will be front and center in Washington when the Senate Appropriations Committee debates the Interior appropriations bill." O'Toole urges Congress to "support the sale of wild horses without restriction." She argues that "the current situation, in which taxpayers support at least 70,000 excess horses, leaves us with no end in sight — not in numbers, not in funding, not in ecological damage."

How Will Louisiana Repair The Coast With Only Half The Money?.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (11/1) editorializes that the Interior Department has said that Louisiana will be receiving half of the $140 million of oil and gas royalties to fund coastal restoration efforts. If the amounts remain at roughly half, Louisiana "would have to scale back restoration and hurricane protection projects planned for 2019." Sen. Bill Cassidy's (R-LA) staff is double checking the Interior Department's calculations. Cassidy said "we're trying to do our own individual verification of those numbers." Cassidy added, "I'm not saying they're wrong. I'm not saying they're right."

In Wake Of New York Attack, Trump Calls For End To Diversity Visa Lottery.

Tuesday's truck attack in New York City continued to dominate the network broadcasts Wednesday evening with more than 33 minutes of combined coverage. The attack was also the main topic of discussion on cable last night and receives extensive print and online coverage. Much of the coverage focuses on President Trump's comments Wednesday, in which he called the justice system's handling of terror suspects "a joke" and "a laughingstock," called for terminating the Diversity Visa Lottery program, for which he blamed Senate Minority Leader Schumer, and indicated a willingness to send accused attacker Sayfullo Saipov to the US military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. The tone of the coverage is generally negative for the President, with a number of reports describing a "contrast" between his comments Wednesday and his reaction to last month's shooting massacre in Las Vegas.

Brian Ross reported on ABC World News Tonight (11/1, story 2, 2:35, Muir) that Trump "revealed Saipov had helped bring many other Uzbeks to the US." Trump: "He was the point of contact, the primary point of contact for, and this is preliminarily, 23 people that came in or potentially came in with him. And that's not acceptable." Breitbart (11/1, Moons) says Trump "clarified that 23 is a preliminary number." The Washington Post (11/1, Rucker) quotes Trump as saying, "Diversity lottery – sounds nice. It's not nice. ... It's not good. It's not good. It hasn't been good. We've been against it." Trump added, "I am today starting the process of terminating the diversity lottery program. I am going to ask Congress to immediately initiate work to get rid of this program." The Hill (11/1, Fabian) reports that Trump supports "a Republican bill that would end the program as part of a sweeping overhaul of the U.S. visa system," but his "initial response to the attacks could make it difficult for him to attract congressional support."

The New York Times (11/1, Jordan) reports that the program was “under scrutiny even before the terrorist attack.” Critics say it “poses security risks, brings in low-skilled immigrants and is unfair because it enables people with no connection to the United States to enter more easily than others.” However, the program does have supporters including “members of the Congressional Black Caucus, who highlight that it helps Africans who otherwise would not have the opportunity to come to the United States.” The Wall Street Journal (11/1, Caldwell, Meckler) says Trump’s call to end the program was denounced by the ACLU, which said doing so would have a disproportionate impact on Africans and Muslims trying to enter the US. Reuters (11/1) also briefly reports on Trump’s comments about the program.

The Los Angeles Times (11/1, Decker) says Trump turned “overtly to politics” in the wake of the attack, “assail[ing] Democrats in general and New York’s senior senator, Charles E. Schumer, in particular for blocking his proposals to restrict immigration.” Trump tweeted, “The terrorist came into our country through what is called the ‘Diversity Visa Lottery Program,’ a Chuck Schumer beauty. I want merit based.” In another tweet, Trump wrote, “We are fighting hard for Merit Based immigration, no more Democrat Lottery Systems. We must get MUCH tougher (and smarter).”

Roll Call (11/1, Bennett) says Trump began the day “not by offering consoling words to the families of the victims or giving the New York area a presidential pep talk or even vowing to wipe ISIS off the planet,” but by “erod[ing] the ‘buck stops here’ role of the presidency and deflect blame for the attack away from his administration.” Trump appeared to be “watching the Fox News Channel morning show” because he “quoted retired Army Lt. Col. Anthony Shaffer in one tweet, who appeared on the show criticizing the minority leader around the time Trump posted his Schumer-blaming tweets.”

Politico (11/1, Nelson) says Trump “laid the blame for the deadly attack at the feet of Schumer,” who responded with a statement in which he “accused the president of politicizing Tuesday’s attack and urged him to push for more anti-terrorism funding from Congress.” Schumer said, “I have always believed and continue to believe that immigration is good for America. President Trump, instead of politicizing and dividing America, which he always seems to do at times of national tragedy, should be focusing on the real solution – anti-terrorism funding – which he proposed cutting in his most recent budget. ... I’m calling on the President to immediately rescind his proposed cuts to this vital anti-terrorism funding.” Schumer also “took to Twitter to criticize the president in a series of posts by drawing a contrast between Trump’s handling of the attack and former President George W. Bush’s response in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.”

The Hill (11/1, Fabian) reports that despite Trump’s tweets, the White House said Wednesday that he does not blame Schumer for the attack. Sanders told reporters, “Let me be really clear: The president did not blame Sen. Schumer and doesn’t feel that the senator is responsible for the attack.” The Administration, she added, believes “very strongly that the individual who carried out the attack is responsible and no one else.” Sanders said Trump’s tweets about Schumer were not political, the New York Post (11/1, Fredericks) reports. Sanders said, “Look, this wasn’t going [the] political route. This is something the president has been talking about for a new policy. this isn’t a new policy or conversation. ... The president has been talking about extreme vetting and the need for that for the purpose of protecting the citizens of this country long before he was a president. This isn’t a new argument or position. And this wasn’t new for the president to speak about it.”

Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (11/1, story 4, 2:30, Muir) that Trump’s comments were a “stark contrast to his response to the shooting in Las Vegas last month, when the White House, for days said it was inappropriate to talk about politics or policy.” Similarly, Jeff Glor said on the CBS Evening News (11/1, story 5, 2:00, Mason) that Trump’s response “was in sharp contrast to what he did after the massacre in Las Vegas.” Nancy Cordes added, “The conflicting reactions to two tragedies angered some Muslim American leaders,” and on NBC Nightly News (11/1, story 3, 2:05, Holt), Welker called Trump’s “call for action a sharp contrast to his response to the Las Vegas massacre,” when he “said it was too soon to talk about gun control. So what’s the difference now?” Sanders: “I said it wasn’t appropriate to politicize the conversation, which I don’t believe we are. We’re talking about protecting American lives.” The Washington Examiner (11/1, Morrongiello) reports that the White House “defended” Trump, who “has come under fire for his noticeably different reactions to the New York terror attack and the deadly Las Vegas shooting.”

Wednesday’s editorial pages were generally critical of Trump’s call to end the Diversity Visa program. A USA Today (11/1) editorial says that while “moving toward more of a merit-based immigration system is a worthy idea...engaging in collective guilt for the actions of one Muslim immigrant (whom authorities say was radicalized after coming to America) is not only an ugly, insulting message to many citizens but also a counterproductive one." The Wall Street Journal (11/1) says in an editorial that Trump exploited immigration fears and argues that although improved vetting of immigrants and monitoring of terror risks are good ideas, a radicalized American citizen could have carried out Tuesday's attack.

A Washington Post (11/1) editorial describes Trump's reaction to the attack as "downright dispiriting," and says that rather than offering "a harangue about immigration" and an attack on Schumer, the Administration should make "a serious attempt to investigate and learn from this latest attack." A second Washington Post (11/1) editorial describes Trump as "ever prone to seek out scapegoats." Trump's tweet "made it appear that his overriding interest in an assault allegedly backed by the Islamic State is to use it to assail immigration."

Lawmakers Disagree About Trump's Calls To End Visa Program. The Washington Times (11/1, Dinan) says Republicans "sensed a shift in the immigration debate in the wake of the attack." Sen. Lindsey Graham "said he now thinks canceling the diversity lottery should be part of any Dream Act bill that clears Congress." House Homeland Security Committee Chairman Mike McCaul said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/1) that Trump is right about the need for more strict vetting of people entering the US, adding, "You know, Giuliani, and Judge Mukasey and I wrote a memo to then-candidate Trump calling for higher vetting in high threat areas and eventually the travel ban came out of that but, what we meant was, why aren't we scrutinizing people over there before they can even get into the country with a higher vetting system, putting ICS agents over in consulate and embassy offices? This case again kind of cries out for that legislation, but, also that policy. And I think it's high time that we do this."

Two conservative commentators were also critical of the program. Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (11/1), "The President's right, the Diversity Visa lottery program was Chuck Schumer's stupid idea and the Department of Homeland Security has confirmed that the radical Islamist in fact use that program to enter our country in 2010." Hannity added, "We would be a safer country if it weren't for this program. Maybe those people would be alive today." Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (11/1), "Saipov was an Islamic radical from Uzbekistan who worked as an Uber driver. He wasn't a physician or an exceptional scientific mind or a business magnet. He was doing a job literally anybody could do in a country where we have to this day a severe shortage of low skill jobs for the poor in our working class. Why was this man even in our country? He was here because this country's leaders have decided that diversity in and of itself is of greater importance than the well-being of this country's people."

However, Trump's call to end the program drew fire from Democrats. Rep. Adam Schiff, ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/1), "It's far more likely, given the passage of time between his immigration here and the attack, that he was radicalized while he was here. ... It's hard to see how you can vet against that, or people that are second generation. ... I understand the President wants to say something, that he's taking some action but it's really too early to say." Rep. Jerry Nadler said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/1), "It's not at all clear that this person had extremist leanings when he came here. He came here seven years ago. ... He may very well have been perfectly fine not to radicalize, nothing to see with extreme vetting or any other vetting." Nadler added, "The President, as usual, went off half-cocked without waiting for the facts."

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/1), "I think the first question is are they factual is normally the first question on the President's tweets. But I don't think this is the time to get political. We had a policy, an immigration policy in place in the '90s. It was a bipartisan policy, signed by a Republican President. There's no doubt that we have to be smarter and have more intelligence, but there's also no doubt that this is not the time to play politics."

USA Today (11/1, Korte) reports that Trump also "criticized a justice system that he said moves too slowly on terror cases," saying, "We also have to come up with punishment that's far quicker and far greater than the punishment these animals are getting right now. ... Because what we have right now is a joke and it's a laughingstock." Trump "even said he was considering sending the suspect to the US military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba," saying, "Send him to Gitmo — I would certainly consider that, yes." Noting that no one arrested on US soil has ever been sent to Gitmo, the New York Times (11/1, A1, Baker) says transferring Saipov from New York "would raise a host of thorny constitutional and legal issues, and it was not at all clear that Mr. Trump would actually follow through on the idea since his comment was a spontaneous reaction to a question rather than part of his prepared remarks."

The Washington Times (11/1, Boyer, Noble) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders told reporters, "I believe we would consider this person to be an enemy combatant, yes. ... I think the actions that he took certainly justify that." Politico (11/1, McCaskill) quotes Sanders as saying, "The point he was making is that he supports or would support that, but he wasn't necessarily advocating for it. ... But he certainly would support it if he felt like that was the best move."

Kristen Welker said on NBC Nightly News (11/1, story 3, 2:05, Holt) that the move is "seemingly backed by some on Capitol Hill." Graham: "If you act like a terrorist, and you say you're a terrorist, that's enough for me. We ought to treat you as a terrorist." Sen. John McCain: "Because he's an enemy combatant. He killed Americans."

That sentiment is not universal among lawmakers, however. McCaul was asked on CNN's Situation Room (11/1) if he agrees with Trump's assertion that the US justice system for terror suspects is a "laughing stock." McCaul replied, "Well, we do have Guantanamo to deal with terrorists caught on the battlefield, but I would say that our criminal justice system is based on the constitution, and due process. This individual, like it or not, came into the United States legally, is a lawful permanent resident and has rights under the constitution." Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (11/1, story 4, 2:40, Mason) that "the White House said the President was merely venting his frustration and will not be proposing new ways to prosecute terrorism cases."

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (11/1), Stephen I. Vladeck, a law professor at the University of Texas and co-editor of the online forum Just Security, writes that it is "hard to imagine a worse idea" than sending Saipov to Gitmo. Vladeck argues that doing so "would simply be unwise" because while there have been successful prosecutions in civilian courts "in post-Sept. 11 terrorism cases, the military commissions at Guantanamo have produced only eight convictions in 15 years, three of which were thrown out on appeal." Vladeck adds that the goal "should not be to score political points" but to "serve justice – not only for the victims of Tuesday's horrific attack but for its perpetrator, as well."

Saipov Charged With Terrorism Offenses. The AP (11/1, Miller, Lardner) reports that prosecutors in New York then "filed charges in federal court accusing Saipov with providing material support to a terrorist group and committing violence and destruction of motor vehicles." Another AP (11/1, Long, Peltz) story says Saipov could face the death penalty.

Reuters (11/1, Cherelus, Goldberg) reports that according to the complaint, Saipov "waived his rights to remain silent and avoid self-incrimination in agreeing to speak to investigators without an attorney present." USA Today (11/1, McCoy, James) says that Saipov "told investigators he 'felt good'" about the attacks and "asked to display flags of the ISIS terrorist group in his hospital room, according to a criminal complaint filed Wednesday." Saipov also told investigators "that he was inspired to carry out an attack in the U.S. by ISIS videos he watched on his cell phone and began planning the attack approximately one year ago, the complaint said."

According to the Washington Post (11/1, Merle, Barrett, Berman), the charging document says Saipov "decided to use a truck in order to inflict maximum damage against civilians." He "chose Halloween for the attack, federal authorities say, because he thought more civilians would be on the streets." Authorities added that he "left notes pledging his allegiance" to ISIS.

Savannah Guthrie said on NBC Nightly News (11/1, story 2, 3:55, Holt) that one of the notes found in the truck read, "ISIS lives forever."

Jeff Glor reported in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (11/1, lead story, 3:00, Mason) that on one of Saipov's cellphones, "authorities found 90 ISIS-related propaganda videos and 3,800 propaganda images." According to "sources," police also "recovered knives from the truck and 10 to 15 pieces of paper which give ISIS credit for the attack, saying ISIS will live forever." However, the New York Times (11/1, Callimachi) reports that ISIS has "has not claimed attacks when a surviving recruit falls into the hands of the authorities." With few exceptions, the group "has followed this practice regardless of whether the attacker was directly dispatched or inspired remotely through online tutorials."

Gio Benitez reported in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (11/1, lead story, 4:10, Muir) that according to authorities, "Saipov had been planning the rampage for weeks, conducting prior reconnaissance of the very spot where he would drive onto the jogging path." Investigators say that if Saipov had not crashed the truck "he was set to target the Brooklyn Bridge." The Wall Street Journal (11/1, West, Kanno-Youngs, Gay, Vilensky) reports that officials said Saipov "almost exactly" followed a blueprint provided by ISIS on social media. However Justice correspondent Pete Williams said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (11/1, lead story, 2:40, Holt) that the FBI "found no evidence of contact with terrorists overseas and say he was not on any list of terror suspects." New York City Police Commissioner James O'Neill was asked on ABC World News Tonight (11/1, story 3, 2:40, Muir) if Saipov might have had help in the US. O'Neill said, "Don't know. That's part of the investigation." Asked if Saipov was on the NYPD's radar. O'Neill said, "He might have been connected to some people that we were looking at."

The New York Times (11/1, Barker, Goldstein, Schwirtz) describes Saipov's path to radicalization, reporting that he came to the US "as a moderate Muslim with dreams of making it," but "life did not work out the way Mr. Saipov had wanted. He could not find a job in the hotel business, in which he had worked back home. He developed a violent temper. He lost jobs. An imam in Florida worried that Mr. Saipov increasingly misinterpreted Islam." CBS homeland security correspondent Jeff Pegues reported on the CBS Evening News (11/1, story 2, 2:30, Mason) before Tuesday's attack, Saipov "was not someone investigators seemed to view as capable of mass murder or even a threat," but while he "wasn't himself the subject of a law enforcement investigation, an intelligence source tells CBS News he had some contact with individuals who were considered radicalized extremists, and at least one of whom was from his native Uzbekistan."

ABC News (11/1, Margolin) reports on its website that a "federal official" told ABC that Saipov was listed as a "point of contact" for two men who were listed on a DHS counterterrorism database and later overstayed their tourist visas. One of the men "was flagged after arriving from a so-called 'threat country.'" The other "vanished and was being actively sought by federal agents as a 'suspected terrorist,'" but an official "told ABC News that the FBI has since located him and he is not believed to have been involved in Tuesday's attack."

The Washington Times (11/1, Morton) says investigators called Mukhammadzoi Kadirov a "person of interest" in Tuesday's attack, "only to back off within an hour." The New York Times (11/1, Mueller, Schwirtz, Goldman) says the FBI had "released an alert saying they were seeking information about" Kadirov "in connection with the attack."

ABC World News Tonight (11/1, story 10, 1:10, Muir) reported on NYPD officer Ryan Nash, the "hero who stopped" Saipov by shooting him when he "would not drop those fake weapons." Nash: "Although I feel that we were just doing our job, like thousands of officers do every day, I understand the importance of yesterday's events and the role we played, and I'm grateful for the recognition." The CBS Evening News (11/1, story 3, 1:50, Glor), New York Times (11/1, Ransom, Nir, Barron), Washington Post (11/1, Radwin, Faiola, Schmidt, Wang), and the New York Post (11/1, Brown) all report on the victims of the attack.

Trump: Saipov Should Get The Death Penalty. The New York Times (11/1, A1, Baker) reports on its front page that "shortly before midnight," the President posted tweeted that Saipov, should be executed. "NYC terrorist was happy as he asked to hang ISIS flag in his hospital room. He killed 8 people, badly injured 12. SHOULD GET DEATH PENALTY!" he wrote. The Times says presidents "are typically advised never to weigh in on pending criminal cases because such comments can be used by defense lawyers to argue that their clients cannot get a fair trial," but Trump "has disregarded such advice in other instances, as well."

Grassley Asks State, DHS For Details On Saipov. The Washington Free Beacon (11/1, Crabtree) reports that Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley has asked the State Department and DHS "to confirm key immigration details" about Saipov and "whether he previously showed up on a government database that tracks travel records for immigration and anti-terrorism enforcement."

ISIS Followers Increasingly Choosing To Commit "Terrorism By Vehicle." The Washington Post (11/1, Warrick) that with ISIS "all but finished as a military force in Iraq and Syria, terrorism by vehicle is now firmly entrenched as the preferred choice for the group's scattered followers and sympathizers outside the war zones of the Middle East." According to terrorism experts, the tactic "requires no special skill or instruction, or formal membership in a terrorist group. And it is nearly impossible to prevent or stop." McCaul said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/1) that the New York attack "was the new sort of chapter of terrorism that we're seeing in the United States. I think fortunately, we haven't seen as many in the United States as we've seen in Europe, but tragically what happened yesterday was a horrible event that we need to take time to mourn and respect what happened and then we'll deal with the policy issues I think later."

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/1), "We're seeing an evolution in the tactics of the jihad. We saw it in 1993 was the first one with the world trade center bombing in New York. That was almost 35 years. And they've now evolved with the global platform through the Internet through a simple device, which is rent a car, rent a truck and create terror."

In an editorial, the New York Times (11/1) says that while “federal and local authorities in the United States and Europe have made considerable progress in the struggle with terrorism,” the “hard fact is that it is not possible, and never will be, to anticipate every attack, to make cities teeming with life immune to the desperate acts of men seething with resentments, especially when final preparations are as banal as renting a truck.”

Saipov Attack Highlights Rise Of Extremism In Central Asia. The Washington Post (11/1, Filipov, Roth) reports that Saipov’s attack “casts a new spotlight on” Uzbekistan, a “tumultuous republic in Central Asia that has been a prominent source of fighters for the extremist Islamic State group.” The country is “one of five predominantly Muslim former Soviet republics in Central Asia that overnight became independent countries in 1991.” The region, which is “racked by poverty and corruption and ruled by autocratic leaders,” has “seen a growth of conservative versions of Islam and the recruitment of hundreds of militants to fight for the Islamic State.”

Muslim Writer Laments Terrorists’ Use Of Phrase “Allahu Akbar.” In an op-ed for the New York Times (11/1) attorney and writer Wajahat Ali writes that while “an overwhelming majority of Muslims, have never uttered “Allahu akbar” before or after committing a violent act,” terrorists “like ISIS and Al Qaeda and their sympathizers, who represent a tiny fraction of Muslims, have,” which “has given the phrase meaning that’s impossible to square with what it represents in my daily life.”

De Blasio: Trump Administration Threatening Anti-Terror Funds For New York City. New York City Mayor Bill De Blasio said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (11/1), “We know we’re the number one...terror target in the United States of America. And we understand we have to be in a ready position. We have to be strong. We added 2,000 more police officers in the last two years largely so we could have that additional visible presence. We do bear a lot of that cost. Now, we do expect some of that to be taken over by Washington and that’s historically been the case. You know in recent months some of that funding has been threatened for other political and policy reasons by the Trump Administration. My message has been consistently how on earth are you going to take away anti-terrorism funding from the number one terror target in America? ... You would think the federal government would with see it as a national priority to protect our biggest city.”

NYTimes Analysis Questions Why Vegas Attack Was Not Labeled “Terrorism.” A New York Times (11/1, Fisher, Taub) analysis considers “a debate that has become a vessel for some of the most contentious questions dividing an increasingly polarized society: When is an attack terrorism?” The Times says the Las Vegas massacre “was not broadly branded an act of terrorism,” but “that label was immediately attached to the attack on Tuesday.” According to the Times, terrorism “is often in the eye of the beholder, determined as much by the attacker as by the community that is targeted,” and defining it “has become another way of debating who belongs and whose concerns matter.”

Vespa: Media Puts Facts Through A “Politically Correct Wash.” Matt Vespa writes for Townhall (11/1) that while Saipov is reported to have yelled “Allahu Akbar” – Arabic for “God is great” – during the attack, there is an “allergic reaction to call things what they are on the Left.” While CBS reported that Saipov yelled the phrase, “CNN decided to go the old Associated Press route and say Saipov yelled ‘God is great’ in Arabic.” Vespa adds that the media “laments how no one trusts them. Well, maybe it’s because they put what actually happens in the news through a politically correct wash that’s just unbelievable to anyone with cognitive function.”

Trump: “I’m Not Under Investigation.”

The New York Times (11/1, Haberman, Baker) reports that President Trump “projected an air of calm on Wednesday...insisting to The New York Times that he was not ‘angry at anybody’ and that investigations into his campaign’s links to Russia had not come near him personally.” In a brief telephone call to the newspaper, Trump said, “I’m not under investigation, as you know. And even if you look at [the Paul Manafort indictment], there’s not even a mention of Trump in there.”

Reuters (11/1) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Wednesday that the President does not recall the March 2016 meeting with his foreign policy advisers when George Papadopoulos “suggested he could arrange a meeting between candidate Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin.”

Vanity Fair: Those Close To Trump Now See Impeachment As Real Possibility. Vanity Fair (10/31, Sherman) reports that the first charges in Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation “have kindled talk of what the endgame for Trump looks like, according to conversations with a half-dozen advisers and friends of the president. For the first time since the investigation began, the prospect of impeachment is being considered as a realistic outcome and not just a liberal fever dream." One source said that "advisers in the West Wing are on edge and doing whatever they can not to be ensnared." Breitbart (11/1, House) reports that according to Vanity Fair, on a phone call with Steve Bannon, President Trump "blamed Jared Kushner" for the investigation, specifically Kushner's advising that then-FBI Director James Comey and then-National Security Adviser Michael Flynn be fired.

Gutiérrez Plans New Articles Of Impeachment; Pelosi Reluctant. The Hill (11/1, Lillis) reports that Rep. Luis Gutiérrez (D-IL) said on Wednesday that "a group of Democrats will file new articles of impeachment against President Trump before Thanksgiving." Gutiérrez said, "It is clear to us that he is unfit to be president of the United States of America." While it is "unclear which Democrats will join Gutiérrez in the effort," one aide named Rep. Steve Cohen (D-TN) as likely.

Politico (11/1, Caygle) reports that House Minority Leader Pelosi has been "urging members to avoid talk of impeachment." Pelosi "is eager to show her party can govern – in contrast to the chaos surrounding Trump – and believes that a reputation as the 'No Drama Democrats' is key to taking back the House in 2018 and whisking her backing into the speaker's chair."

Breitbart (11/1, Nazarian) reported that billionaire activist Tom Steyer, who has launched a $10 million national ad campaign calling for Trump's impeachment, stood outside the district office of Rep. Darrell Issa (R-CA) on Tuesday to promote the effort. Steyer said, "This president is a danger to the American people, and I know the majority of Americans agree with me."

Greenfield: Trump Can Survive If He Maintains GOP Support. Jeff Greenfield writes in Politico Magazine (11/1) that "there is one rule in politics that approaches scientific certainty: A president, no matter how beleaguered, can survive if he retains significant support within his party." Lyndon Johnson chose to retire and Richard Nixon to resign after losing their party's support; Bill Clinton survived impeachment due to continued Democratic support. Greenfield writes, "Maybe there is a breaking point, somewhere down the road, where Trump could act in so blatant a way that a critical mass of GOP office-holders – and not just a few retiring RINOs – would say 'enough.' ... But right now, I don't see it happening."

Fusion GPS Paid Steele Firm $168,000 For Dossier Work. Reuters (11/1, Hosenball) reports that Fusion GPS said in a Wednesday statement that it paid ex-British spy Christopher Steele's company "$168,000 for work on a dossier outlining Russian financial and personal links" to Trump's 2016 campaign. While it was "public knowledge that Fusion GPS paid for the work, the amount had not been disclosed." The Washington Examiner (11/1, Correll) has a report based on the Reuters story.

Clinton Defends Campaign's Role In Dossier Research. Politico (11/1, Jackson) reports that Hillary Clinton, appearing on Comedy Central's The Daily Show, defended campaign attorney Marc Elias' "decision to pay for research that showed up in [the] salacious dossier." Clinton said, "It was research that started [with] a Republican donor during the primary, and when Trump got the nomination for the Republican Party, the people doing it came to my campaign lawyer."

Politico Cited Fusion GPS Employee In Article Criticizing WSJournal. Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist (11/1) writes, "On Monday, Politico ran a story criticizing the Wall Street Journal for failing to adopt the political groupthink that pervades most of the media elite." The Politico piece cites "former staffers" of the Journal criticizing the Journal's conservative editorial page, but the individual cited now works for Fusion GPS.

FBI Agent Reportedly Patted Down Manafort's Wife During Raid. The Washington Times (11/1, Scarborough) reports under the headline "FBI Agents Manhandled Manafort And His Wife During Pre-Dawn Raid In Intimidation Effort" that while "it has been reported that the agents checked Mr. Manafort and wife Kathleen for guns as they broke into" their Virginia home in July, "a source familiar with the case" now says that "an agent patted down Mrs. Manafort before she was allowed to get out of bed."

Manafort's Roots In Connecticut City Examined. The New York Times (11/1, Yee) looks at Manafort's roots in New Britain, Connecticut, an industrial city of 73,000.

Tony Podesta's Link To Manafort Examined. USA Today (11/1, Przybyla) examines why Mueller is investigating Tony Podesta and his firm the Podesta Group: the firm worked with Manafort, "helping Manafort's company on behalf of a group called the European Centre for a Modern Ukraine."

Social Media Representatives Again On Capitol Hill; Some Russian-Bought Ads Disclosed. The CBS Evening News (11/1, story 6, 2:05, Mason) reported that lawmakers on Wednesday released several of the Russia-backed ads that appeared on social media platforms during the presidential campaign as Congress "grilled" representatives of Facebook, Twitter, and Google.

CBS' Julianna Goldman added that the ads "focused on divisive issues, including immigration, guns, and black political activism, and targeted information to specific audiences." Sen. Dianne Feinstein: "What we're talking about is the beginning of cyber warfare." The New York Times (11/1, Kang, Fandos) reports that the Senate Intelligence Committee hearing was "the second of three in two days for the executives."

NBC Nightly News (11/1, story 4, 1:55, Holt) reported that Facebook admitted that "150 million Americans, far more than previously disclosed, were exposed to Russian content in the two years before the election," while Twitter revealed it found 37,000 automated accounts linked to Russian entities in the two months before the election. Senate Intelligence Vice Chairman Mark Warner noted one Russia-backed account "was a fake Tennessee Republican account." NBC's Jo Ling Ken added that during the campaign, that fake account's posts "were re-tweeted by then-campaign manager Kellyanne Conway and Donald Trump Jr. Another Kremlin-backed account was re-tweeted by President Trump himself." Rep. Jim Himes (D-CT): "Trump's campaign, in effect, whether knowingly or unknowingly, helped spread legitimize and spread the Russian disinformation."

On ABC World News Tonight (11/1, story 5, 2:40, Muir), Dan Harris reported on a Russian "troll factory" where "dozens of Internet trolls are hard at work, trying to exploit America's divisions." Harris said that one of the trolls, Alan Beskaev, told "an independent, liberal Russian TV station" that he worked in the unit that specifically targeted America. "One minute," he said, "you needed to be a red neck from Kentucky, and then later, you had to be some kind of white dude from Minnesota. And then, in 15 minutes, you need to be from New York, writing something in black slang."

USA Today (11/1, Kelly) reports that as "angry senators warned attorneys for Facebook, Twitter and Google on Wednesday that they must do more to prevent Russian manipulation of their social media platforms or Congress will be forced to impose new rules to help readers identify malicious content," House Intelligence Committee Democrats "publicly released a sampling of ads and other content that Facebook, Instagram and Twitter have linked to Russian actors and turned over to the committee." The ads "focus on such issues as the black lives matter movement, illegal immigration, Islam, LGBT issues, Christianity, state pride, and Democratic presidential candidates Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders."

The Washington Post (11/1, Timberg, Dwoskin, Entous, Demirjian) reports that the ads "made visceral appeals to voters upset about illegal immigration, black political activism, the declining economic fortunes of coal miners, gun ownership, African American political activism, the rising prominence of Muslims in some US communities and many other issues." Many of the ads "were bought in Russian rubles." The Washington Times (11/1, Boylan) says the effort "was extensive and ambitious, but it wasn't particularly sophisticated." Politico (11/1) offers "a sampling" of the ads "purchased by Russian-linked accounts and aimed at US Facebook and Instagram users."

The Wall Street Journal (11/1, Wells, Seetharaman) reports that lawmakers also released the Twitter account names for 2,752 accounts linked to the so-called Russian troll farm Internet Research Agency. Many of the handles appeared to impersonate political figures and parties, and news agencies, such as @_GeorgeSchultz_, @NewYorkDem, @TheTimesOfLondon, and @tpartynews.

The Washington Examiner (11/1, Correll) reports that President Trump retweeted content from @10_gop, a "fake account affiliated with Russia," on September 19. The account "tweeted 'We love you, Mr. President,' and Trump retweeted the post saying 'So nice, thank you!' on Sept. 19."

Twitter Hid Tweets Related To Hacked Democratic Emails. The Daily Caller (11/1, Hasson) writes that Twitter "buried significant portions of tweets related to hacked emails from the Democratic National Committee and Clinton campaign chair John Podesta in the last two months of the 2016 presidential campaign." According to Twitter general counsel Sean Edgett's written testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Twitter's systems hid 48% of tweets using the #DNCLeak hashtag and 25% of tweets using #PodestaEmails.

Krastev: Mueller Will Not Discover Full Extent Of Russian Meddling. Ivan Krastev of the Center for Liberal Studies writes in the New York Times (11/1) that Mueller "will never get to the bottom" of the full extent of "Russia's meddling. ... The Kremlin's official position – that Russia never messed with the American politics – means that hardly anyone on the Russian side is willing to discuss the issue," and "those who actually do know what Russia did and why are extraordinarily few in number – and none are particularly talkative."

Trump To Push Xi To Rein In North Korea.

Reuters (11/1, Holland, Walcott) reports President Trump will “further pressure” Chinese President Xi Jinping in talks next week to take tougher measures against North Korea. Senior Administration officials say Trump will “try to convince Xi when they meet in Beijing to squeeze North Korea with steps such as limits on oil exports, coal imports and financial transactions.” Two Administration officials said the threat of additional UN and other economic sanctions on North Korea is “another option to solicit greater cooperation from China, by playing on Beijing’s concerns that deeper poverty in North Korea could prompt an exodus of refugees across its border.”

The Washington Times (11/1, A1, Taylor) reports that the North Korean nuclear threat “threatens to overshadow a large and diverse agenda” for the President’s trip to the region. The Times says that “warm receptions at the start of the trip in Japan and South Korea may provide respite from the political strife and sagging polls that Mr. Trump faces in Washington, but the president will be navigating the most delicate diplomatic challenge of his tenure when he arrives Wednesday in Beijing.”

As Trump prepares to travel to the region, Bloomberg News (11/1, Sharp) reports, Xi “called for stable China-North Korea ties in a message to Kim Jong Un.” According to North Korea state media, Xi “sent the note after Kim congratulated him last week on a second term as general secretary of the Communist Party.” Reuters (11/1) quotes Xi’s note as saying, “I wish that under the new situation, the Chinese side would make efforts with the DPRK side to promote relations between the two parties and the two countries to sustainable soundness and stable development and thus make a positive contribution to...defending regional peace and stability and common prosperity.”

Abe Urges Pressure On North Korea Ahead Trump Visit. The AP (11/1, Yamaguchi) reports Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe called Wednesday for pressure to be increased on North Korea “to convince it to begin talks on ending its nuclear and missile programs.” Ahead of President Trump’s arrival Saturday, Abe “reiterated his full backing of Trump’s policy of putting all options, including military ones, on the table in dealing with North Korea.”

Defector Warns North Korea Would Retaliate If US Strikes. The AP (11/1, Pennington) reports that a “high-ranking North Korean defector” warned US lawmakers Wednesday that a pre-emptive US military strike on the country would trigger “automatic retaliation, with the North unleashing artillery and short-range missile fire on South Korea.” The AP says the testimony from Thae Yong Ho, former deputy chief of mission at the North Korean Embassy in London, “underscored the high risk in using military force against North Korea,” which the Administration “has said...is among its options in stopping leader Kim Jong Un from perfecting a nuclear-tipped missile that could strike the United States.”

NYTimes Analysis: China “Abruptly Changed Course” On South Korea Amid Threat From North. The New York Times (11/1, Perlez, Choe) reports that “for more than a year, China has been railing against South Korea, recently encouraging boycotts of its products over a decision to let the United States deploy an antimissile system that Beijing fears threatens its own security. But on Tuesday, China abruptly changed course, essentially saying ‘never mind,’ as the two countries agreed to end their dispute” about the threat from North Korea.

Trump: Repeal Obamacare Individual Mandate To Help Fund Tax Cuts.

USA Today (11/1, Groppe) reports, “As Republicans struggle to overhaul the tax code and as the Obamacare health exchanges opened for 2018 enrollment Wednesday, President Trump threw out a suggestion.” USA Today quotes Trump as saying in two tweets, “Wouldn’t it be great to Repeal the very unfair and unpopular Individual Mandate in ObamaCare and use those savings for further Tax Cuts for the Middle Class. The House and Senate should consider ASAP as the process of final approval moves along. Push Biggest Tax Cuts EVER.”

Under the headline “Trump Throws Curveball In Tax Talks, Says Bill Should Include Obamacare Changes,” the Washington Post (11/1, Paletta) reports, “The idea had already been rejected one day earlier by House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady (R-Tex.), who had said it risked bogging down the process.” However, with his tweets, Trump “pushed the idea, which has gained currency with some Senate Republicans.” The Post adds, “It could not be learned whether Trump’s Twitter posts were simply a musing or an official change in administration policy. The posts came just a few minutes after Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) talked about the exact same idea during an appearance on Fox News Channel.”

Politico (11/1, McCaskill) reported that Trump’s “position represents a bit of a reversal from the White House. Asked about the individual mandate at Tuesday’s press briefing, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters, ‘I don’t believe it has to be part of tax reform, but the child care tax credit is something he'd certainly like to see." The Wall Street Journal (11/1, Armour, Peterson) reports that a number of Republicans support the idea of repealing the individual mandate, because doing so would generate $300 billion in revenue.

GOP Pledges Thursday Tax Bill Rollout.

Bloomberg News (11/1, Basu, Wasson) reports White House Legislative Affairs Director Marc Short and House Budget Chairman Diane Black said that while the House GOP tax bill's rollout has been delayed to Thursday, it will not be pushed back further. Late Tuesday "GOP lawmakers and tax lobbyists remained confused" about parts of the bill, including possible changes to tax-deferred retirement savings accounts, individuals' deduction for state and local taxes, the estate tax, and the schedule for dropping the corporate tax rate to 20 percent from 35 percent. Short said, "Everything is on track," but acknowledged continuing discussions on the state and local tax deduction.

The New York Times (11/1, Tankersley, Kaplan, Rappoport) reports that the GOP delay in releasing its tax bill was due to "a math problem" caused by President Trump's insistence on "massive" tax cuts while also cutting taxes for the middle class. In attempting to offset the lost revenue the House GOP is "running into political challenges," seeing "continuing struggles to reach agreement on how to pay for everything lawmakers want to include." Efforts to find money by cutting "popular individual tax breaks" – such as limiting pretax dollars for 401(k) retirement plans and deductions for state and local taxes paid – are seeing push-back from "rank-and-file Republicans." A possible "bandage solution" would have the plan phasing in some rate cuts and making others temporary, giving the GOP "time to figure out the hard math" on revenue-raisers, which industry groups familiar with the discussions say would be put in the bill prior to the House vote on it. However, President Trump has "resisted" such a move.

The AP (11/1, Gordon, Taylor) casts the House GOP as "scrambl[ing]" to finish the bill, and talks on the deduction for state and local taxes "seemed to have broken off for now as Brady and other key Republicans scrambled to find offsetting tax revenues to help finance rate cuts." While on Wednesday President Trump tweeted in favor of the bill removing the ACA's individual mandate, such a move "was dismissed by key GOP leaders," in the AP's words, as additional "political complications to an already difficult task."

Politico (11/1, Faler, Bade) similarly reports "House Republicans are scrambling to release their tax bill on Thursday." A source familiar with the talks said that tensions are "very high," and the GOP tax writers' raised voices could be heard "during a more than two-hour meeting at the Capitol Tuesday night." The plan has faced resistance from Republicans representing Democratic states and sources say rank-and-file members "feel the plan has been written largely by party leaders without their input." People in both the executive and legislative branches "are growing impatient." On Wednesday, White House Economic Adviser Gary Cohn told GOP senators the house tax bill needs to be released by Friday and "and conservative leaders in the House, who have not been part of the closed-door deliberations, started to draw parallels to their botched health care effort."

Ip: Tax Plan Focused On Helping Corporations. Greg Ip, in his column in the Wall Street Journal (11/1), writes that while the GOP tax plan will benefit the rich, its leaving the top personal incomes tax rate alone in favor of reducing the corporate tax rate indicates the GOP has caught up with the rest of the world in concluding that taxing people is better than taxing capital. Ip explains this is because profit can be shifted easily to avoid taxes, while people are less mobile. Ip also warns that if there are any individual tax cuts, they are likely to be temporary. Historically tax increases follow tax cuts and, despite GOP claims – lacking historical or empirical bases – that the cuts will pay for themselves, the budget deficit will continue to rise and Ip predicts politicians will find personal taxes the most attractive way to address the issue.

Trump Signs Repeal Of CFPB Class-Action Regulation.

The AP (11/1, Thomas) reports that President Trump signed off on the repeal of a Consumer Financial Protection Bureau regulation "that would have allowed consumers to join together to sue their bank or credit card company to resolve financial disputes." CFPB Director Richard Cordray opined in a statement that the president's action "signed away consumers' right to their day in court." As a result of the repeal, customers at banks will continue to be subject to mandatory arbitration clauses.

Senators Continue To Work Toward Bipartisan Regulatory Reform Bill.

Reuters (11/1, Schroeder) reports that senior Democratic and Republican Senators said on Wednesday that they will continue to attempt to come to a bi-partisan deal regarding rolling back certain financial regulations introduced following the financial crisis of 2008. This revelation comes despite the fact that “the leading Democrat on the Senate Banking Committee,” Sen. Sherrrod Brown, announced Wednesday that he will exit months-long negotiations with Sen. Mike Crapo, the Republican chair of the Committee, regarding rolling back parts of the 2010 Dodd Frank law. Crapo told reporters on Wednesday that he will renew efforts to come to a bipartisan consensus on a regulatory reform bill.

EPA To Bar Researchers Who Received Agency Grants From Science Boards.

Politico Morning Energy (11/1, Adragna) reports that science advocates and Democrats are slamming EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt’s decision to bar scientists who receive EPA research grants from serving on its advisory boards. “At least five of the 47 current Science Advisory Board members” have received funding from EPA grants in the past, and ultimately, Pruitt may be “able to replace more than half the members of SAB.”

Vanity Fair (11/1, Kosoff) reports that “the move will effectively purge the boards of top academic researchers, including experts on environmental science, clearing the way for industry representatives to take their place.” The article notes that Tony Cox – who has previously worked for the American Petroleum Institute and “once suggested that rising global temperatures would prevent the death of the elderly” – will lead the Clean Air Scientific Advisory Committee. In addition, Michael Honeycutt, the head of the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality’s toxicology division, will serve as the head of the Science Advisory Board. Honeycutt previously downplayed concerns over ozone standards and said “most people are indoors for 90 percent of the time.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“About John Kelly’s Racist History Lesson.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/1) says, “Many Americans projected their own feelings of disgust as they watched the White House chief of staff, John Kelly, seem to grimace while President Trump spoke in August of the ‘very fine people’ on both sides of white nationalist demonstrations to preserve Confederate monuments, in which a counterdemonstrator was murdered.” However, the Times says that with Kelly having recently called Robert E. Lee “an honorable man” and having “said that in the Civil War ‘men and women of good faith on both sides made their stand where their conscience had them make their stand,’” he “has provided sickening clarification of what this presidency stands for.”

“After The Terror.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/1) says that while “federal and local authorities in the United States and Europe have made considerable progress in the struggle with terrorism,” the “hard fact is that it is not possible, and never will be, to anticipate every attack, to make cities teeming with life immune to the desperate acts of men seething with resentments, especially when final preparations are as banal as renting a truck.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Response To The New York Attack Was Downright Dispiriting.” A Washington Post (11/1) editorial describes President Trump’s reaction to the New York City attack as “downright dispiriting,” and says that rather than offering “a harangue about immigration” and an attack on Senate Minority Leader Schumer, the Administration should make “a serious attempt to investigate and learn from this latest attack.”

“For Trump, New York’s Tragedy Means A New Attack On Immigration.” A Washington Post (11/1) editorial describes President Trump as “ever prone to seek out scapegoats.” Trump’s call to end the Diversity Visa program “made it appear that his overriding interest in an assault allegedly backed by the Islamic State is to use it to assail immigration.”

“Ed Gillespie Has A Recipe For Metro Disaster.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/1) says, “Metro’s financial prospects are dire, as is its long-term outlook for adequate maintenance, dependable service and basic safety, without a major infusion of steady new revenue. Despite that fact, Virginia Republican gubernatorial candidate Ed Gillespie is dodging, ducking and deflecting questions of how to put Metro on a firm financial footing.” The Posts that with Paul Wiedefeld, “Metro’s respected general manager,” having warned “that service, safety and reliability will deteriorate rapidly without an additional $500 million annually in capital revenue, Mr. Gillespie is looking for every excuse to perpetuate the very underfunding that led to Metro’s

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s Immigration Scapegoat.” The Wall Street Journal (11/1) says in an editorial that in his comments Wednesday, President Trump exploited immigration fears and argues that although improved vetting of immigrants and monitoring of terror risks are good ideas, a radicalized American citizen could have carried out Tuesday’s attack.

“High On Incentives.” The Wall Street Journal (11/1) editorializes that a report from Fitch Ratings makes a convincing argument that taxes on legal marijuana are too high in California. The Journal opines that business within the legal marijuana industry could exit the state in search of a market with lower taxes if the economics don’t change.

“Keeping Scott Pruitt Safe.” The Wall Street Journal (11/1) editorializes that the high number of credible threats that have been made against Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt justify the more extensive security detail that the EPA has provided for him. The Journal asserts that the expenditures being made on the additional security are necessary to protect American democracy.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "Last night, the President tweeted about the [New York] attack. Last night, he shared his thoughts and condolences. This morning, it was time for politics. 'The terrorist came into our country through what is called the 'Diversity Visa Lottery Program,' a Chuck Schumer beauty. I want merit based.' We all want merit-based, sir, but you're still the President."

Stephen Colbert: "The Republicans have been having trouble finalizing the [tax reform] bill. It was supposed to come out today, but they delayed it till tomorrow. And now we know why. Because Trump and leaders can't agree on a name for the bill. Apparently, calling it 'The Koch Brothers' All-American, Up-Tricklin', Cash-Grab-A-Rama' was a little on the nose."

Stephen Colbert: "Ladies and gentlemen, I give you the actual name our President proposed for his tax bill: 'The Cut, Cut, Cut Act. That name truly sucks, sucks, sucks."

Stephen Colbert: "Last night, Don Jr. tweeted a picture of his young daughter holding her candy bucket and said, 'I'm going to take half of her candy tonight and give it to some kid who sat at home. It's never too early to teach her about socialism.' Yes, it's never too early to teach kids the dangers of sharing."

James Corden: "On Twitter last night, Donald Trump Jr. used Halloween as an opportunity to take a shot at liberals. I don't know if you saw this. He posted a picture of his daughter with her Halloween candy that read, 'I'm going to take half of Chloe's candy tonight and give it to some kid who stayed at home. It's never too early to teach her about socialism.' Yeah. Here's what I am going to do. I'm going to take that tweet. I will show it to my daughter because it's never too early to teach her that 'too early' is spelled with two o's, not one."

Trevor Noah: "So when it was a Nazi, Trump needed more facts. When it was a Muslim, that was the only fact that he needed. And now, the President is still pretty new to politics, so other than being a fundamentally dishonest person, where did he learn to do this? Well, from the same place that he learns everything, the Trump intelligence briefing, a.k.a., Fox News."

Jimmy Fallon: "Here's what people are talking about. I saw that President Trump was talking to members of Congress about his tax reform bill today and says he wants to call it 'the Cut, Cut, Cut Act.' I guess that beats the name for his immigration bill, 'the Bye, Bye, Bye Act.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "This is a pretty big story. It came out that thousands of Americans actually attended a political rally that was organized by Russia. The rally was called Trump's inauguration."

Seth Meyers: "According to reports, President Trump wanted to call the upcoming Republican tax bill the 'Cut, Cut, Cut Act,' which is terrible name. But it is a lot shorter than calling it the 'I Cut Your Taxes, Will You Forget About My Treason Act.'"

Seth Meyers: "A former radioactive waste site off the coast of San Francisco is being turned into a $5 billion housing development project. Residents are already giving it three thumbs up."

Conan O'Brien: "Today, President Trump's Press Secretary, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, said that no one in President Trump's Administration supports slavery. To put that in perspective, the last press secretary who had to make that statement worked for Ulysses S. Grant."

Veterans Day Activities Begin With Reading Of Vietnam Memorial Wall Names.

GrayDC (11/8, Zampa) reports that the annual reading of names at the Vietnam Memorial Wall was underway as Veterans Day approached. One visitor "who waited in line to read names" was Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. Zinke, "a former Navy Seal says the country has gotten better since Vietnam when it comes to respecting our veterans." Zinke said, "A lot of what I received when I came home is a result of the Vietnam veterans that came before me." For Veterans Day weekend, Zinke "says he's visiting the Civil War battlefield at Manassas, Arlington Cemetery," and returning to DC "to wash the memorial wall."

Durbin Blocks Interior Nominees From Confirmation.

The Hill (11/8, Cama) reports Sen. Dick Durbin has halted the confirmation process for "four pending Interior Department nominees over the Trump administration's plans to potentially shrink multiple national monuments." Durbin disclosed his actions "in a letter to the Interior Department, after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke sent a public letter complaining about the confirmation process." Before Durbin wrote his letter on Wednesday, Zinke had "demanded 'immediate action' from Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and Minority Leader Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) on four pending nominees."

House Panel Passes Bill To Boost Drilling On Federal Land, Offshore.

The Hill (11/8, Cama) reports the House Natural Resources Committee passed the SECURE American Energy Act on a strict party line vote. The legislation will allow Alaska and Atlantic Coast states to take revenue from offshore drilling, and will end the president's authority to withdraw offshore areas for drilling. The measure also requires all planned offshore drilling rights sales to occur. Rep. Paul Gosar said, "The SECURE American Energy Act provides a multifaceted approach to improving access and management of our nation's valuable energy sources."

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (11/8, Stole) reports Democrats and environmentalists opposed the measure, calling it a giveaway to the fossil fuel industry. Rep. Raul Grijalva said, "It's the same polluter-industry wish list they've presented for years dressed up in yesterday's talking points." The bill's sponsor, Rep. Steve Scalise said, "The SECURE American Energy Act will create good jobs in communities all across our country, empower states, optimize onshore resource management and raise revenue-sharing caps that dedicate critical funds to Louisiana's

Wyden, Merkley Urge Full Funding For Invasive Weed Program.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (11/9) reports that Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley “urged federal officials Wednesday to provide full funding for a successful 40-year program that conserves and restores healthy landscapes and waterways threatened by invasive weeds.” Their letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “notes that full funding in 2018 for the decades-old Strategic Integrated Noxious Weed Management partnership between the Bureau of Land Management and Oregon Department of Agriculture would be $290,000.” However, “the current agreement calls for just $70,000 – less than one-quarter full funding for assistance with weed control on federal lands, including education and outreach, prevention, physical and mechanical treatments, biological agents, herbicides, cultural methods including targeted grazing, and replanting.”

Acoma Pueblo Still Awaits Return Of Tribal Shield.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (11/8, Coleman) reports that “it’s been 18 months since a sacred tribal shield belonging to Acoma Pueblo turned up on a Paris auction block.” The foreign auction house halted the sale, “but Acoma Pueblo Gov. Kurt Riley told Congress Wednesday the shield still hasn’t been returned to New Mexico.” At a hearing of the Indian Affairs Committee on Wednesday, John Tahsuda, principal deputy assistant secretary for Indian Affairs at the Interior Department, “said the agency is being deliberate.” Tahsuda said, “We need to get this right. The full responsibility isn’t just in our hands – the Department of Justice and the State Department have a role in this. We need to do it the right way so that our actions are defensible and we can proceed with prosecutions.”

FBI Investigation Of Cherokee BIA Official Extends Beyond Marriage Fraud.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (11/8, Kays) reports that “the FBI’s investigation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs Cherokee Agency’s deputy superintendent Ruth Marie Sequoyah McCoy goes far deeper than the charges of marriage fraud that she and 11 others are currently facing, according to recently filed court documents.” The document “doesn’t provide any further details as to what that broader investigation entails.” However, the article notes that “the statement as to the existence of a broader investigation is the first time that rumor to that effect has been confirmed in an official, public document.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Settlement Reached In Lawsuit Against Bureau Of Land Management.

KAUZ-TV Wichita Falls, TX (11/8, Forester) reports that Commissioner George P. Bush on Wednesday announced that a settlement has been reached in the lawsuit filed by Red River property owners against the Bureau of Land Management. The agreement “protects both private property rights and the mineral rights of the school children of Texas according to the Texas Land Office.” Under the settlement, the BLM has “agreed the boundary once in dispute is governed by the opinion of the Supreme Court in Oklahoma v. Texas in 1923.”

Thousands Comment On Proposed Methane Rule Suspension.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (11/9, Moss) reports that “environmental advocates in New Mexico hand-delivered to five of the state’s Bureau of Land Management field offices this week more than 4,000 letters voicing objections to the federal government’s proposal to suspend Obama-era methane regulations for two years.” Many commenters “said the methane regulations were designed to provide crucial climate and health protections for state residents and asked that the BLM not overturn them.” Proponents of the delay also submitted comments. Ryan Flynn, director of the Oil and Gas Association, wrote that the stay “would allow for operators to continue to voluntarily reduce emissions, while at the same time greatly reducing regulatory impediments to the development of federal oil and gas resources.”

Motion To Dismiss Federal Case Against Cliven Bundy, Sons Denied.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (11/8, Lochhead) reports that “a judge denied a motion to dismiss the federal case against Bunkerville rancher Cliven Bundy, two of his sons and Montana independent militia man Ryan Payne.” Defense lawyers “in the case had filed the motion after previously undisclosed video surveillance of the Bundy home surfaced during a separate testimony last week.” Judge Gloria Navarro “did grant the defense more time to discover evidence pertaining to surveillance of the Bundy ranch and residence.”

BLM Proposes To Open Otero Mesa For Gas And Oil Development.

The Alamogordo \(NM\) Daily News (11/8, Devine) reports that a proposal by the Bureau of Land Management “has some people concerned with the region of the Otero Mesa as the proposal seeks to open up the area for oil and gas development. BLM drafts a plan for the area.” The BLM is “currently drafting a Resource Management Plan (RMP) for the area that has important consequences for all these valuable assets, as well as for Otero County’s economy.” The plan is “due for public comment in spring 2018.”

New Mexico Land Managers To Address Overgrown Brush.

The AP (11/9) reports that “federal land managers in southern New Mexico say creosote is getting out of hand in some areas.” The Bureau of Land Management is “working with a local soil and water conservation district and the Natural Resources Conservation Service to treat about 11,000 acres (4,452 hectares) of the desert shrub.” According to the article, “herbicide pellets will be used to control the creosote so native grasses, forbs and other vegetation have a chance to grow.”

BLM Winnemucca District’s Black Rock Field Office to Begin Emergency Horse Gather.

KTVN-TV Reno, NV (11/8) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management Winnemucca District’s Black Rock Field Office will begin an emergency gather of approximately 200 wild horses on November 15 from a portion of the Fox and Lake Range Herd Management Area, which was recently burned by wildfire.”

Shell Enchilada Oil Platform In Gulf Of Mexico Shut After Fire.

Reuters (11/8, Verma, Prasad) reports Shell shuts its Enchilada platform in the Gulf of Mexico after a fire broke out, causing injuries to two people. The Coast Guard said associated production was stopped and that the fire was reduced to a small flame from a pipeline on the platform. The crew of 46 were evacuated to a nearby platform. Shell said that it also shut the Salsa and Auger platforms and nearby fields, along with a 30-inch gas export pipeline.

The AP (11/8) reports the Coast Guard said a “light sheen” was spotted in the water north of the platform after the fire started. Shell spokesman Philip Robinson said the workers were safely evacuated. The company released a statement saying, “No harm to people or the environment is ever acceptable and Shell deeply regrets that this incident occurred.” The Coast Guard and BSEE are investigating the cause of the fire.

The Houston Chronicle (11/8) reports a 54-year-old man suffered flash burns, while a 29-year-old man had a concussion and sprained wrist. Both were sent by helicopter to the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (11/8, Wells) reports a Shell spokesman said the fire broke out at 1:30 am on Wednesday and that the company had identified the source of the fire and was “actively responding to the situation.” The spokesman said, “An early morning U.S. Coast Guard overflight is complete and there were no signs of oil on the water at that time.” Argus Media (11/8) reports a spokesman for Shell Midstream Partners said, “For safety reasons, we have chosen not to extinguish the fire while the pipeline is safely depressurized.”

Murkowski Bill Directs At Least 2 Major Lease Sales In Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The Washington Post (11/8, Eilperin) reports that on Wednesday, Sen. Lisa Murkowski released a budget measure “that would open Alaska’s Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas drilling for the first time in a generation.” The legislation “directs federal officials to auction off mineral rights in areas encompassing at least 400,000 acres each in the refuge’s coastal plain, which is also known as its ‘1002 area.’” It requires that revenues be split evenly between Alaska and the federal government, and requires a royalty rate of at least 16.67. A markup on the bill is scheduled for November 15.

Native Plant Nursery In South Texas Concentrates On Seeds.

The AP (11/8) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s Native Plant Nursery “this year will produce 80,000 native herbaceous plants, shrubs and trees for restoration efforts on federal lands.” Kim Wahl, a plant biologist for the USFWS, said, “We do everything from the very start of seed collection, seed processing, filling the growing containers – what we call plant bands – filling them with soil mix, propagating the seeds and growing them out. We do that for 80,000 plants here.” The agency also contracts “with native plant growers for even more seedlings to ensure each restoration acre planted receives the right mix of species.”

130-Foot-Tall Cell Tower Coming To Naperville Golf Course.

The Chicago Daily Herald (11/8, Wilson) reports that the Naperville City Council approved a new cell tower Tuesday night. According to the article, “opposition to the cell tower came from residents and two council members who are concerned with aesthetics at the 1,800-acre Springbrook Prairie Forest Preserve and with the health of birds migrating through the area.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “reviewed the proposal and determined it will have no effect on endangered species because it will not remove native vegetation or any animal habitat.”

Lines Are Drawn Over Design For A National World War I Memorial.

The New York Times (11/8, Cochrane) reports that a groundbreaking ceremony for the new national World War I memorial is scheduled for Thursday, “but some members of Washington’s architecture community have lingering concerns because its design is not yet final.” According to the article, “the current redesign for Pershing Park – which has received concept approval from the Commission of Fine Arts, National Park Service and the National Capital Planning Commission – features an estimated 65-foot-long sculptural wall with soldiers poised in battle and a smaller, more contained water feature.”

Honoring Eisenhower At Long Last.

Roll Call (11/9, Akin) reports that “a memorial to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, mired in controversy for more than 17 years, is the newest monument under construction on the National Mall.” According to the article, “until the Nov. 2 groundbreaking, some of the most stalwart detractors still hoped that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke would withhold the last approval required before construction could begin.” However, “those hopes were dashed at the last minute when the National Park Service quietly issued a construction permit three days before a groundbreaking ceremony.”

Official National Park Account: There’s ‘Overwhelming Consensus’ On Climate Change.

The Hill (11/8, Savransky) reports that on Wednesday the “official account of Joshua Tree National Park” tweeted out “that there’s an ‘overwhelming consensus’ that human activity is the driving force behind climate change.” The account tweeted, “An overwhelming consensus – over 97% – of climate scientists agree that human activity is the driving force behind today’s rate of global temperature increase.” The article adds “the tweets come after an extensive report was published earlier this month by the federal government that said humans are the primary drivers of climate change, causing higher temperatures, sea level rise and agriculture problems.”

Historic Tax Credits On Chopping Block In House GOP Tax Plan.

The Memphis \(TN\) Commercial Appeal (11/8, Risher) reports that “the House GOP tax plan released last week would eliminate investment tax credits for historic preservation projects as part of an effort to simplify the tax code.” In response, historic preservation advocates are “pushing back. They contend the program levels the playing field for projects that save historic treasures and generates 20-25 percent more federal income than it costs.”

Higher Fares Sought For Ferryboat Rides To Isle Royale Park.

The U.S. News & World Report (11/8) reports that “federal officials are proposing higher fares for trips to Isle Royale National Park aboard the Ranger III, the ferryboat that carries passengers between Houghton on the Michigan mainland and the park in northwestern Lake Superior.” The National Park Service “says raising prices for the first time since 2013 would help maintain the vessel, pay staffing costs and provide services to the public.” Under the proposal, “the cost of a one-way, low-season ticket for an adult would be $55 next season, up from $53 this year.” Also, “the one-way, high-season adult fare would rise to $70 from the current $63.”

2.4 Million Trees Are Dead In Yosemite National Park.

The San Francisco Chronicle (11/8, Graff) reports that “there are 2.4 million dead trees within about 131,000 acres” of Yosemite National Park, “according the latest fall count, says park spokesperson Scott Gediman.” Gediman says, “As long as these things have been tracked, it’s the most dead trees we’ve seen in the park.”

Wyoming Proposes Stronger Rules For Coal Cleanup.

The AP (11/8) reports that “Wyoming regulators are proposing changes to how coal companies secure the cost of cleaning up any of their mines that close in the state.” The state’s self-bonding rules have been “criticized by some as being inadequate, potentially leaving the state to pick up the expensive cost of cleaning up shuttered mines.” According to the article, “the state’s proposed changes don’t end self-bonding, but they do make it harder to qualify.”

US Geological Survey

Preliminary Magnitude 3.7 Earthquake In Central Oklahoma.

The AP (11/8) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey “reports an earthquake with a preliminary magnitude of 3.7 has been recorded in central Oklahoma.” The article notes that “the quake struck about 30 miles (48 kilometers) northeast of where a series of about a dozen earthquakes, including one of magnitude 4.1, have occurred since Oct. 31.”

Opinion Pieces

Charging More For National Parks Is Not A Bad Idea.

In a piece for the Chicago Tribune (11/8, Chapman), Steve Chapman, a member of the Tribune Editorial Board, supports the Trump Administration’s proposal to raise entrance fees at 17 popular national parks. Chapman calls the fee increase a “minimal burden” for a family that would also be spending on transportation, lodging, food, and souvenirs. Chapman argues that it’s fair to ask those who visit national parks “to kick in a bit more.”

Don't Overturn Sage Grouse Habitat Management Plans Before They Have A Chance To Work.

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/8, Rait), Ken Rait, director of The Pew Charitable Trusts' western lands initiative, warns that “plans to save the sage grouse and its habitat are under threat: The Interior Department is reconsidering the 2015 sage grouse management plans designed to reduce habitat loss and recover grouse populations.” Rait writes that “those habitat management plans grew out of a collaborative, science-based process, with significant opportunities for public involvement.” He adds that “the process sought – and achieved – a compromise among stakeholders, including sportsmen, Western governors and other elected officials, industry representatives, and conservationists.” Furthermore, “the plans allow for energy development while furnishing protections for the sage steppe landscape, and provide for tailored approaches by individual states to balance those needs.” As a result, Rait says that “the plans had helped federal agencies avoid the need to list the greater sage grouse under the Endangered Species Act, which could have triggered more restrictive land use policies across the region.”

America's Security And Economy Depend On ANWR.

In an op-ed for the Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/8, Woolston), Kristina Woolston, an Athabaskan Indian from Naknek, Alaska, writes that the 1002 area of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is “not designated as wilderness, and today, it is the largest unexplored, potentially productive onshore basin on the continent.” Woolston cites U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) estimates and says that “the resource could rival or even exceed the initial reserves at Prudhoe Bay, the largest existing oil field in the country.” Furthermore, “development would create tens of thousands of jobs nationwide in a diverse set of fields such as engineering, construction, machinery contracting, shipbuilding, manufacturing and many more.” For these reasons, Woolston sees exploring the ANWR as “a no-brainer for America.”

Ahead Of Trump-Xi Talks, US And Chinese Companies Sign Deals Worth Billions.

President Trump began a two-day visit to Beijing Wednesday for talks expected to focus on trade and North Korea. As he arrived, USA Today (11/8, Jackson, Hjelmggaard) reports, US and Chinese companies signed “more than a dozen deals worth $9 billion” at a ceremony attended by Commerce Secretary Ross and Vice Premier Wang Yang. No details “were immediately released, but such business contracts are a common fixture of visits by foreign leaders to China.” The Wall Street Journal (11/8, A1, Dou, Page) indicates that among the deals announced by Ross were agreements by General Electric, DowDuPont, and Smithfield Foods with Chinese counterparts.

Bloomberg News (11/8) reports, meanwhile, that in total, the White House expects to announce “upwards of $250 billion in business deals in China this week, an administration official said – exactly the sort of US jobs-based diplomacy that...Trump likes to deliver when traveling abroad.” Ross “boasted of that number in a meeting with chief executives in China on Wednesday, but offered few details, according to two people who attended the meeting.”

The New York Times (11/8, Bradsher, Swanson) reports Trump arrived in Beijing “accompanied by the chiefs of some of the most ambitious and influential American companies: Boeing, Goldman Sachs, Westinghouse Electric and Qualcomm, among others.” However, the Times say that “not much” is expected to come from Trump's meeting with Xi, “to the frustration of some American business executives.” The Administration, it adds, “has been stretched thin on trade," and trade has been "supplanted by North Korea as the most talked-about issue" so far on the President's trip.

Business Insider (11/8) writes that while Trump "made the debate over free trade one of the central topics of his campaign...aside from leaving the TPP, he has delivered little on the trade front in the year since his election." The article attributes the lack of action "at least partially" to the on-going North Korea crisis, in which the US needs the support of China and South Korea.

CNBC (11/8, DiChristopher) reports Trump's "entourage" on the trip includes "a pair of natural gas executives, a sign that the White House is eager to build on progress earlier this year to ship more of the fuel to China." CNBC notes that natural gas demand in China is "rising and poised to boom in coming years," and the Administration is "making it a priority to assure US companies scoop up a significant share of the business." Wall Street Journal (11/8) columnist Nathaniel Taplin, however, contends that the deals announced Wednesday will only make a small dent in the US trade deficit with China.

Trumps Afforded Lavish Welcome Ahead Of Tough Talks. Media coverage of the President's arrival in Beijing cast his initial meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping as an exchange of pleasantries ahead of what are expected to be tough talks. ABC World News Tonight (11/8, story 4, 2:10, Karl), for example, referred to "a lavish red carpet welcome for...Trump complete with honor guards," and added that "on the motorcade route," there were "excited school children waving American and Chinese flags." The AP (11/9, Lemire, Colvin), meanwhile, says Trump's two-day visit "opened with diplomatic niceties aplenty," though "thorny issues await the two world leaders behind closed doors, including potential tensions" over trade and North Korea.

NBC Nightly News (11/8, story 4, 1:15, Jackson) also said "China has really been rolling out the red carpet so far, with plenty of public displays of political affection between these two leaders." NBC added that "at one point...Trump showed President Xi Jinping a video of Ivanka's daughter singing in Mandarin. The grandparent in chief hoping that warm personal relationship will pay off on the policy front."

Reuters (11/8, Wen, Holland) also says Xi greeted Trump with "lavish pageantry and an uncharacteristic personal flourish," ahead of talks that are expected to be dominated by North Korea and trade. In what Reuters calls a "break from precedent, Xi himself gave the Trumps a tour of the imperial treasures of the Forbidden City." The Daily Caller (11/8, Pickrell) reports the President and First Lady were also treated to "a rare dinner at the Forbidden City, an honor that has not been bestowed on a foreign leader since the founding of the People's Republic of China 68 years ago."

The Washington Post (11/8, Nakamura, Parker) reports Trump "lavished praise" on Xi, touting the "great chemistry" between them and declaring their relationship a "great one." USA Today (11/8, Jackson) says Trump "has been full of praise for Xi and China on what is probably the most important stop of his Asia tour," in contrast from the presidential campaign, "when Trump constantly argued that China stole jobs from the United States."

On the issue of North Korea, the New York Times (11/8, Landler, Perlez) reports Trump arrived "primed to ask...Xi...to step up Chinese pressure on North Korea over its nuclear and ballistic missile programs. But Mr. Trump's latest foray into personal diplomacy may end in frustration," as the Chinese leader "either cannot, or does not want to, do the job." Trump, a senior Administration official said, "plans to call on the Chinese leader to cut off oil exports to North Korea, at least temporarily; to close down North Korean bank accounts in China; and to send home tens of thousands of North Koreans who work in China."

The CBS Evening News (11/8, story 6, 2:20, Tracy) reported that "imports of North Korean seafood, textiles, and coal are now banned" in China, "but just days before the sanctions took effect, China purchased 1.6 million tons of North Korean coal worth nearly $140 million. Traders here in Dandong, say that some items banned by the UN are still being imported from North Korea, and that's because it's right here." The Chinese government, however, "says it is strictly enforcing the sanctions and that its imports from North Korea have fallen nearly 40 percent. But it's unclear if that's having impact on deterring North Korea from advancing its nuclear weapons program."

The Washington Post (11/8, Fifield) reports that during a speech earlier on Wednesday in Seoul, the President "did not mince his words" about North Korea, saying it is "a country ruled as a cult. At the center of this military cult is a deranged belief in the leader's destiny to rule." USA Today (11/8, Durando) reports North Korea "shot back" at Trump's "rough rhetoric by saying the United States should oust him" from power "to get rid of the abyss of doom," state-run media said. North Korean state media referred to Trump as a "lunatic old man."

North Korea Says Sanctions Hurting Women, Children. Reuters (11/8, Nebehay) reports North Korea said Wednesday it was “working to uphold women’s rights and gender equality,” but that international sanctions are “taking a toll on vulnerable families.” North Korea’s Ambassador to the UN in Geneva, Han Tae Song, also urged South Korea to return 12 waitresses “kidnapped” while working in China in April 2016, calling it a “crime against humanity.”

Despite Security Concerns, Trump Tweets From China. Bloomberg News (11/8, Sink) reports on concerns over whether the President should use Twitter during his visit to China. The White House convened “internal discussions and tapped US counterintelligence officials to consult on the matter before the President left for Asia last week,” according to sources. Administration officials, however, said Trump would tweet during his visit, “even at the risk of flouting the privilege in a nation that generally denies Western social media to its own people.”

The Washington Post (11/8, Nakamura) reports Trump is “expected to continue his daily dose of high-octane missives” on Twitter over the visit, “but it’s what he might chose not to say that could send a more subtle but equally important message.” In fact, Trump tweeted Wednesday from Beijing, “Looking forward to a full day of meetings with President Xi and our delegations tomorrow. THANK YOU for the beautiful welcome China! @FLOTUS Melania and I will never forget it!”

Coons “Encouraged By The Tone And Tenor Of The Trip.” Sen. Chris Coons said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (11/8), “I am encouraged by the tone and tenor of the trip, obviously, the self promotion notwithstanding, to have President Trump move towards a more diplomatic tone after some early bluster. Now that we have pre-positioned three aircraft carrier groups, the nuclear subs, the personnel and material in the region, I think President Trump is striking the right balance between having previously been overly threatening and now pursuing a diplomatic alternative. This has to be an off-ramp for North Korea to be consider taking. He is going to have to be to be strong with Xi Jinping. The next couple of days are going to be crucial. But, all of us that worry about America’s security and about the human consequences of a potential confrontation with North Korea going wrong have to be encouraged by President Trump’s tone.”

Congress Proposes Tougher Reviews Of Foreign Investments. The New York Times (11/8, Swanson) reports that a group of bipartisan lawmakers introduced legislation Wednesday “that would subject Chinese investments to greater scrutiny through a significant expansion of the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States, or Cfius.” The legislation is aimed at “preventing China from taking advantage of the United States’ open approach to foreign investment while refusing to fully open its own markets.”

China’s Tencent Buys 12 Percent Stake In Snap. Chinese Internet giant Tencent has become one of the largest shareholders in Snap, the Wall Street Journal (11/8, Russolillo, Vaishampayan, Farrell) reports, purchasing a 12 percent stake worth at least $2 billion.

UCLA Basketball Players Arrested For Shoplifting In China. ABC World News Tonight (11/8, story 9, 0:15, Muir) reported, “Three American basketball players are facing possible charges in China. The UCLA players were arrested for allegedly shoplifting days before their season opener in Shanghai. They are under house arrest in their hotel tonight.”

Kremlin: Putin And Trump Likely To Meet In Vietnam. The AP (11/8, Isachenkov) reports the Kremlin said Wednesday that President Vladimir Putin and President Trump “have a full agenda for their likely encounter” on the sidelines of the APEC leaders’ summit later this week in Vietnam. Putin’s foreign affairs adviser, Yuri Ushakov, said the two leaders may have an “extensive” one-on-one meeting, although a specific time has not been set. “There are things to discuss and we are ready for it,” Ushakov said. The Washington Times (11/8, Blake) likewise reports that it is “very likely” Trump will meet “face-to-face” with Putin at the summit.

Duterte Urges Trump To “Lay Off” Human Rights During Visit. Breitbart (11/8, Martel) reports Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte told reporters Wednesday that he is prepared to tell President Trump to “lay off” if the US leader “challenged him on reports that his administration is violating the human rights of its citizens.” Asked what he would tell Trump if he mentioned human rights concerns, Duterte replied, “Lay off. That is not your business. That is my business. I take care of my country and I will nurture my country to health.”

Storey: By Battling ISIS In Philippines, Trump Proved Commitment To Security In Asia. Ian J. Storey, a senior fellow at the ISEAS-Yusof Ishak Institute in Singapore, writes an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (11/8) which highlights the US’s assistance to the Philippine army when ISIS took over the city of Marawi. He writes that by honoring the US alliance with the Philippines despite President Rodrigo Duterte’s anti-US rhetoric, President Trump demonstrated that the US commitment to regional security remains strong.

Trump’s Choice Of Hamburger Sparks “Twitter Firestorm” In Japan. Fox News (11/8) reports that while visiting Japan, President Trump ate a hamburger, "setting off a Twitter firestorm of those both praising and criticizing the choice."

Media Analyses: Election Results "Rebuke" Of Trump, Ominous Sign For GOP.

In the wake of Democrats' successes in Tuesday elections, particularly Gov.-elect Ralph Northam's win in Virginia's gubernatorial election and big Democratic gains in that state's House of Delegates, media coverage – including reports on all three major network newscasts – frames the results as a rebuke of President Trump and an ominous sign for the GOP heading into next year's midterm elections.

On ABC World News Tonight (11/8, story 5, 2:00, Muir), Mary Bruce reported, "Less than 30 minutes after Virginia voters delivered President Trump a resounding rebuke, the President took to Twitter, declaring the Republican's defeat had nothing to do with him. Instead, he blamed the candidate, Ed Gillespie, tweeting, he 'did not embrace me or what I stand for.' A complete 180. Trump had urged supporters to back Gillespie." Bruce added that "Northam's win was fueled by anti-Trump backlash. One-third of Virginia voters say they cast their ballot to protest the President. ... Democrats are now dreaming of a wave in the midterms."

In the lead story for the CBS Evening News (11/8, lead story, 2:40), Anthony Mason reported that in the wake of Tuesday's victories in the New Jersey and Virginia gubernatorial races, Democrats are "suddenly feeling very good about next year's midterm elections." CBS' Nancy Cordes added, "In exit polls, 34 percent of Virginians said their vote was, at least in part, a vote against Trump. A surge in Democratic turnout handed the party at least 14 new seats in Virginia's House of Delegates." University of Virginia political scientist Larry Sabato was shown saying, "It was totally stunning to everybody who follows politics here."

On NBC Nightly News (11/8, story 3, 2:15, Holt), Kasie Hunt reported on the Democratic wins in Virginia, and added, "Some congressional Republicans say it's a wake-up call." Rep. Scott Taylor (R-VA) was shown saying, "I think it's important for Republicans to self-reflect, starting from the top all the way down." Hunt: "Was it a referendum on Donald Trump?" Taylor: "I do believe so." And Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) was shown saying, "Voters sent a strong message, especially in Virginia, that these nativist, divisive campaigns don't work in most parts of the country." Hunt added, "The White House tonight is down playing last night's election results, saying that 2018 is 'long ways away.' But it's putting even more pressure on Republicans in Congress to show they're capable of governing, as Republicans race to try to pass their tax reform plan before the end of the year."

The Washington Post (11/8, Kane) reports that Democratic candidates successes on Tuesday, "particularly in key suburban battlegrounds across the nation, validates a strategy that Democrats on Capitol Hill had embraced earlier this year: trying to win back the majority by riding a wave of liberal resentment toward President Trump while also promising rational governance to centrist swing voters."

Reuters (11/8, Stein, Ax) reports Democrats on Tuesday "claimed historic gains in Virginia's statehouse and flipped Republican-held seats in other local races across the" US. The party "also held onto the Virginia governor's mansion and celebrated coast-to-coast victories in off-year elections that could foreshadow the mood of the national electorate heading into the November 2018 elections, when control of the US Congress will be at stake."

The Los Angeles Times (11/8, Decker) reports, "Republicans awoke Wednesday facing a tortuous road ahead for their candidates in the 2018 elections, particularly in suburban areas where animosity toward...Trump overwhelmed his party in Tuesday's elections." The Times adds, "The view from the suburbs is key because it points to the central problem for Republicans in 2018: Control of the House will be decided in large part in districts similar to those that retaliated against Trump on Tuesday." In 2018, the GOP "will face the same conundrum that befell the losing Virginia gubernatorial candidate, Ed Gillespie: The racially tinged, culture war themes that appeal to Trump loyalists provoked a giant backlash among moderate suburbanites and nonwhite voters."

The New York Times (11/8, Burns, Martin) reports that US "suburbs appear to be in revolt against...Trump after a muscular coalition of college-educated voters and racial and ethnic minorities on Tuesday dealt the" GOP "a thumping rejection and propelled a diverse class of Democrats into office." The Times adds, "Leaders in both parties said the elections amounted to an earsplitting alarm bell for Republicans ahead of the 2018 elections, when the party's grip on the House of Representatives may hinge on the socially moderate, multiethnic communities surrounding major cities."

Under the headline "Republicans Have A Serious Suburban Problem In 2018," Politico (11/8, Bland) highlighted Northam's large margins of victory over Gillespie in Virginia's suburbs, and added that GOP "strategists described Gillespie's 9-point loss and other election results around the country as a massive early-warning signal for the 2018 elections, when House Republicans must defend 23 mostly suburban districts that Trump lost last year." The Wall Street Journal (11/8, De Avila, Vilensky) reports that Democratic candidates in the suburbs of New York City rode anti-Trump sentiment to big wins.

The Washington Post (11/8, Vozzella) quotes Northam as saying in a Wednesday interview, "I don't think there's any question that there are some policies coming out of Washington that are concerning to Virginia and perhaps a detriment to Virginians. But I think the message is, the divisiveness, the hatred, the divisive politics that is tearing this country apart, I think people...want to do things the Virginia way. Focus on the economy, focus on Virginians having a job, focusing on education...access to affordable and quality healthcare."

Bloomberg News (11/8, Dopp, John) reports, "Democrats won a sweeping statewide victory in Virginia by energizing the coalition that was supposed to carry them into the future but failed them in 2016: young voters and women." Bloomberg News says Northam "won women by 22 percentage points on Tuesday, outmatching Hillary Clinton a year earlier, when women backed her over Trump, 56 percent to 39 percent, according to NBC News exit polls. Among voters 18-29, Northam beat Gillespie, 69 percent to 30 percent, a margin that doubled Clinton's performance a year earlier." Bloomberg News adds that Northam also racked up huge margins in Virginia's suburbs.

Writing for the Wall Street Journal (11/8), Gerald Seib says that Democrats in Virginia were boosted to victory by strong support from wealthy whites, young voters, minorities, women who live in the suburbs, and unmarried women. The New York Times (11/8, Tackett, Gabriel, Johnson) reports, "If the 2016 presidential election reflected a primal roar from disaffected white working class voters that delivered for President Trump and Republicans, Tuesday's results showed the potential of a rising coalition of women, minorities, and gay and transgender people who are solidly aligning with Democrats."

The Washington Times (11/8, Dinan) reports, "Gun-control activists, Obamacare supporters, immigrant-rights advocates, environmentalists, gay rights activists – every part of the Democratic coalition – claimed momentum Wednesday in the wake of stunning victories in the off-year elections." The Times adds that "the fallout could reach deep into Capitol Hill, where Democrats said they're newly energized in their battle against the GOP's tax-cut bill, and warned Republicans to heed the signs out of Virginia." The Post adds that a number of the Democratic wins across the country were scored in "suburban areas that make up the key battlegrounds where next year's mid-term congressional elections are likely to be fought."

McClatchy (11/8, Glueck) reports that Tuesday's "rout of Republican candidates" across the country "triggered alarm bells in Republican circles that a deteriorating political environment could set in motion a Democratic wave in the 2018 midterm elections." McClatchy adds, "For Republicans," the outcomes of the elections "were a reminder that Democrats are, in fact, capable of translating liberal anti-Trump energy into actual votes. It was evidence of the environmental perils that often await a president's party in the midterm elections – especially when that president has historically low approval ratings."

The AP (11/8, Peoples) reports that Tuesday's elections "left little doubt that Trump's dismal approval ratings can drag down Republican allies, particularly those serving in states he lost last November. And even if his ratings show signs of improvement, history suggests that the first midterm elections for any new president often lead to major gains for the opposing party."

The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (11/8, Moomaw) reports, "To many observers on the right, the explanation for why so many suburban Virginia voters suddenly seemed allergic to voting Republican was simple. They were all itching to vote against Trump's party. Tucker Martin, a GOP strategist and adviser to...Gillespie, said Gillespie's unsuccessful campaign for governor was swamped by a wave of anti-Trump Virginians eager to cast a 'proxy vote' against the president in a state Trump lost last year."

The Washington Post (11/8, Schneider) reports, "The sweeping gains won by Democrats in Tuesday's elections complete Virginia's transformation into the only blue state of the old Confederacy. ... Change has been coming to the increasingly diverse state for years, but the evolution was turbocharged by the provocative influence of...Trump," whose "victory last fall and subsequent knife-twisting tweets inspired a surge of Democratic candidates to run for office and pushed many voters to the polls. 'This election, more than anything else, was a Trump-effect election,' said Stephen Farnsworth, a political scientist at the University of Mary Washington."

The Washington Post (11/8, Jordan, Tumulty, Chandler) reports, "Women racked up victories across the country on Tuesday, and are being credited with the Democrats' big night overall. It is a testament to the remarkable explosion of women candidates who have entered the political stage since...Trump was elected president one year ago. The wave is likely to continue" next year, when "40 women are already planning to run for governor. Dozens more are considering congressional and other statewide office bids. And Tuesday's result has already become a rallying cry for activists seeking to draw even more women into the public square."

Under the headline "GOP Faces Wrenching Call: Running With Or Away From Trump," Politico (11/8, Isenstadt) reported that Tuesday's election setbacks "have exacerbated a growing rift inside the GOP over whether the party's candidates should embrace...Trump in next year's midterms — or make a clean break. With Trump's approval ratings cratering in swing states across the country, some senior party strategists are imploring lawmakers to abandon the president. Others argue that shunning Trump and his populist base is simply out of the question and that anything other than a full embrace of the president would spell electoral disaster."

The Washington Post (11/8, Costa, Rucker) reports that Tuesday's "wave of Democratic victories ignited a ferocious debate across the Republican Party on Wednesday over whether...Trump's unorthodox behavior and polarizing agenda is jeopardizing the GOP's firm grip on power in Congress, governors' mansions and state legislatures." In the wake of Tuesday's results, "Republicans are increasingly uncertain about keeping their majorities on Capitol Hill and are worried about how damaging Trump's jagged brand of politics may become to the party." The Post adds, "The unease was palpable among vulnerable lawmakers, especially in suburban districts with the kind of voters who roundly rejected...Gillespie."

On its website, CNN (11/8, Bradner) reported, "The blue wave that crashed Virginia's suburbs on Tuesday could also — if it extends into the 2018 midterm elections — carry Democrats into control of the House." CNN said that Northam won Rep. Barbara Comstock's (R-VA) "northern Virginia district...by 13 percentage points" and also carried Rep. Scott Taylor's (R-VA) "Norfolk-based district. In those districts, Democrats see mirror images of some of their top House targets" across the US next year. Dave Wasserman, "the House editor for the nonpartisan Cook Political Report, which closely tracks each race," said Tuesday on Twitter, "You can't really look at tonight's results and conclude that Democrats are anything other than the current favorites to pick up the U.S. House in 2018."

Politico (11/8, Schneider) reported, "Virginia's elections set off a wave of panic inside the House GOP Tuesday night, increasing worries that the party's majority is in jeopardy in 2018 and that more incumbents may decide to retire rather than run for reelection next year." Politico added, "Data points out of Virginia confirm Republicans' fears that bubbled under the surface all year, which special election victories in safely red seats 'glazed over,' said a senior GOP aide. But 'now there's [electoral] evidence that there's reason to really worry.' Swing voters in suburban counties outside Washington and Richmond soured on Republicans up and down the Virginia ballot, an ominous sign for dozens of suburban Republicans in Congress."

The New York Times (11/8, Foderaro, McKinley) reports that after all the work New Jersey and New York Democrats did to turn out the vote ahead of Tuesday's elections, "there was always the nagging doubt: What if this wasn't enough? What if all this suburban anger toward...Trump still couldn't unseat Republicans in the New York suburbs? On Wednesday, after a nearly clean sweep of races from Long Island to northern New Jersey, doubt among local Democrats had been replaced wholesale by optimism. Now nearly nothing is off the table in the 2018 midterm elections. Republican congressional seats once thought to be almost unassailable are now being probed for signs of vulnerability, with their ties to Trump-backed policies a telling guide."

McClatchy (11/8, Roarty) reports, "Democratic leaders say this week's surprise" wins "are making them reconsider the 2018 midterm elections, convinced the party should grow more ambitious amid what they now see as a broad and deep backlash to...Trump. Not only are party strategists planning to replicate this year's winning strategies; they're dead-set on making sure the party continues to find and recruit new candidates in races once viewed as too Republican — confident that Tuesday's results prove Democrats can win almost anywhere."

In his Wall Street Journal (11/8, Rove) column, Karl Rove says that turnout in Tuesday's election was up significantly from 2013, with most of that increase coming from independent whites and suburban Democrats who were driven to the polls by anti-Trump sentiment. Rove says that Trump's low poll numbers pose serious risk to GOP congressional majorities in 2018.

However, writing in "The Upshot" on the website of the New York Times (11/8), Nate Cohn says Democrats on Tuesday "won big in Virginia, took full control of state government in New Jersey and Washington State, prevailed on an important ballot measure in Maine, and generally posted strong results across the nation." However, "the biggest difference between Tuesday's Democratic wins and the earlier Republican [special election] wins is deceptively simple: This time, elections were held on neutral or even Democratic-leaning terrain. For that reason, it is not obvious that Tuesday's performance represents a significant improvement over the Democrats' showings earlier in the year. ... To take the House next November, they might have to do even better than they did on Tuesday."

And writing for The Federalist (11/8, Harsanyi), David Harsanyi said that "Trump may well obliterate the GOP's prospects for the coming decade or longer," but "big Republican losses in Virginia yesterday do not prove this contention. There's really nothing unprecedented about cyclical pushbacks in politics. And if every election were really imbued with the kind of game-changing importance that political pundits claim, it would mean Americans were going through massive ideological fluctuations every year, which seems unlikely."

Even so, the Washington Times (11/8, Dinan) reports, House Minority Leader Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "said Tuesday's massive victories for their party were a rejection of...Trump and predicted a wave election next year that could even switch control of the US House." Said Pelosi, "The door is certainly open for us."

Writing Tuesday night for the National Review (11/7), Jim Geraghty said, "Right now, the Republican party's brand in Virginia is dirt. Throw in the failure to make New Jersey even remotely competitive, and tonight is about as bad as it can get for the GOP – a sense of déjà vu from the results across the country 2006 and 2008."

DNC chief Tom Perez said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/8), "Donald Trump was undeniably on the ballot in a number of races because he is trying to divide America. People are so sick of these Twitter tirades. They want leaders they can be proud of. That's why people like Phil Murphy and Ralph Northam were able to win because they are sane. They're people who are speaking to the issues that people care about. They actually care about facts. ... They're not playing the politics of division. When we do that and when we organize, when we make those relationships, when we're running candidates, then when the false news comes out, if you've organized and built those relationships with people, that false news doesn't penetrate."

In an editorial titled "The Anti-Trump Wave," the Wall Street Journal (11/8) says that Democrats turned out in scores in opposition to Trump, and Republican losses were heavy enough to indicate that the GOP may have a difficult time retaining its majorities in Congress in the midterm elections. The Journal says that if the GOP is to avoid bid losses next year, Republicans need to score legislative victories on issues such as tax reform.

In his Washington Post (11/8) column, E.J. Dionne says, "Tuesday's Democratic sweep obliterated a series of outdated story lines in American politics and opened a new era." It's apparent, says Dionne, "from Virginia and New Jersey to Washington state, Georgia, New York, Connecticut and Maine, that the energy Trump has unleashed among those who loathe him has the potential to realign the country."

Under the heading "Voters Repudiate Not Just Trump But The White-supremacist Hatred Seen In Charlottesville," Petula Dvorak writes in her Washington Post (11/8) column says, "This election wasn't just a repudiation of President Trump. It was a repudiation of white-nationalist leader Richard Spencer, the 'alt-right' and the violence and bigotry they are peddling."

In an editorial, the New York Times (11/8) says, "From Washington to Maine, New Jersey to North Carolina, Trumpist ugliness was met and vanquished, sometimes by the very targets of right-wing scorn. ... Tuesday was the strongest sign yet that the politics of division can be rejected."

Media Analyses: Tuesday's Results A Victory For ACA. Politico (11/8, Pradhan) reported, "Obamacare made a comeback in Tuesday's elections, its strongest show of support since...Trump was elected and the GOP spent months on a futile effort to repeal it. In the governor's race in Virginia and a ballot initiative in Maine, the Affordable Care Act buoyed Democrats, a remarkable reversal from how Trump and congressional Republicans won elections excoriating the 'failed' and 'doomed' law." Politico added, "As Democrats now look to the 2018 midterms," the party "can begin to more confidently embrace the" ACA.

The AP (11/8, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports, "Emboldened by election wins, Democrats are starting to see a political edge in health care, particularly widening Medicaid access for more low-income people." The AP adds that Northam "promised a vigorous push as governor to expand Medicaid. Voters who said health care was important went decisively for Northam, according to political analysts. In Maine, voters defied Republican Gov. Paul LePage's determined opposition by passing a referendum to expand Medicaid to cover an estimated 70,000 more residents."

The Los Angeles Times (11/8, Levey) quotes Robert Blendon, "an expert on public opinion about healthcare at Harvard's Kennedy School," as saying, "There has been a major change here. Democrats for years wouldn't talk about healthcare. ... Now, the implication is that if you are a Democrat running in 2018, you can talk about protecting healthcare for millions of Americans." Citing congressional aides, the Wall Street Journal (11/8, Armour, Peterson) reports that Democratic victories on Tuesday make it more unlikely that Republicans, as part of their tax-reform bill, will attempt to repeal the ACA's individual mandate.

The New York Times (11/8, Goodnough, Sanger-Katz) reports, "The election results in Maine and Virginia have energized supporters of expanding Medicaid under the" ACA "in several holdout states. After months of battling Republican efforts to repeal the law, they now see political consensus shifting in their direction. Groups in Idaho and Utah are already working through the process of getting Medicaid expansion initiatives on next year's ballots." Meanwhile, "the outlook for legislative approval has brightened in Virginia" in the wake of Tuesday's gains in the House of Delegates. The Times adds, "Advocacy groups are also hoping the decisive victory in Maine, and exit polls suggesting health care was the top issue in Virginia, will add momentum to efforts in Kansas and North Carolina."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/8) says, "There's a long list of issues on which the Trump administration, and Republicans generally, are out of step with most Americans, yet on few of them is the chasm so broad or so deep as on health care. On Tuesday, voters made that clear in a pair of purple states, Virginia and Maine, while for the past week Americans across the country have been surging to sign up for health-care coverage under the" ACA, "which the White House and congressional Republicans have tried to repeal and, failing that, sabotage."

Media Analyses: White House, Trump Allies Deflecting Blame. The Hill (11/8, Easley, Fabian) reported, "The White House was in damage control mode on Wednesday as it sought to deflect blame for Tuesday's sweeping electoral losses and reassure Republicans who fear...Trump's unpopularity will cost them at the polls in 2018." The Hill said, "A person familiar with the president's political operation dismissed the notion that an anti-Trump wave is building, arguing that Democrats had merely held on in states they were expected to win" and chalking "up GOP losses to history, noting that the party that controls the White House typically struggles in off-year gubernatorial races. ... 'This is not about the president,' the person said."

The Washington Examiner (11/8, Westwood) reports, "White House aides instructed allies on Wednesday to blame" Gillespie's loss on his "lukewarm support for President Trump. 'Gillespie's wavering support for the President resulted in depressed turnout among Republicans, which led to disappointing down-ballot results,' the White House wrote in talking points distributed to allies" on Wednesday. The Examiner adds that "a person familiar with the president's political operation told reporters on Wednesday that 'local dynamics' and 'history' prevented Gillespie and" New Jersey's GOP gubernatorial nominee "from prevailing in Tuesday night's elections."

Breitbart (11/8, Hayward) reported that during a Wednesday interview with Breitbart News Daily, ex-White House strategist Steve Bannon "said the lesson from...Gillespie's defeat on Tuesday night is that 'if you're going to win, you've got to embrace the entire Trump agenda, and you've got to do it early, and you've got to be dedicated to it.'" Bannon added, "You can't phone it in. You've got to do rallies. You've got to get the president out with you. You've got to go all-in on this. I just think campaigning with people like President Bush and Marco Rubio during these type of economic times sends the wrong signal."

On Fox News' Hannity (11/8), Bannon denied that Tuesday's election was a referendum on Trump, saying, "What we had is an establishment candidate, Ed Gillespie, won a primary, very hard fought primary, versus Corey Stewart, and then really didn't try to embrace President Trump or really the Trump program until very late, where he just kind of basically talked about some of the issues, which I thought he should try to do more of. He never invited President Trump [to campaign with him]. ... I think there are a lot of things that Gillespie could have done and in hindsight he wishes he had done to generate more enthusiasm out there, more of the Trump faithful to turn out."

The AP (11/8, Beaumont, Eggert) reports that Trump's "fiercest advocates offered different approaches Wednesday for the Republican Party's way forward after some tough losses Tuesday." Speaking at the Iowa GOP's annual Reagan Dinner in Des Moines, RNC chief Ronna Romney McDaniel and ex-White House press secretary Sean Spicer "called on Republicans to come together." Meanwhile, Bannon – during an appearance in Michigan – "maintained an aggressive tone toward any Republicans who would stand in the president's way." Bannon, for instance, "grouped Gillespie – a lobbyist, former RNC chairman and adviser to former President George W. Bush – with the GOP forces of old, not new outsiders who can help Trump." Spicer, meanwhile, "lamented Republicans in Virginia who decided not to" back "Gillespie because he didn't pass their 'litmus tests.'"

The Sioux City \(IA\) Journal (11/8, Murphy, Boshart) reports that McDaniel "noted previous special elections this year in Congressional districts that stayed in Republican hands, and said Virginia is a state that has been trending to favor Democrats and that the New Jersey gubernatorial election was not a surprise given how unpopular Republican Gov. Chris Christie had become there. 'It means that we're at the status quo, and I think it means that we're going to go into a very competitive 2018,' McDaniel said. 'Those races were very state specific. I don't think you can put everything at the president's feet when it comes to these elections.'"

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (11/8), "Democrats scored predictable victories that Donald Trump didn't win in 2016. New Jersey, shocker, New York, the Commonwealth of Virginia, Washington State. It was not a rebuke of the White House, not even really surprising." Hannity added, "You want to look at a President that had a tough time? Look at Obama. While he was in the Oval Office, Democrats lost the presidency, 13 US Senate seats, 64 US House seats, 13 governorships, and 33 statehouses. That is an electoral title wave. What happened last night was not. No matter how the left-wing media tries to spin it."

In Seeming Break With Trump, RNC Chief Says Gillespie Embraced President. Politico (11/8, Lima) reported that RNC chief Ronna Romney McDaniel "said Wednesday she thought...Gillespie sufficiently embraced...Trump while campaigning, despite the president's words to the contrary. After Trump swiped at Gillespie on Twitter Tuesday following his electoral defeat, writing that the candidate 'worked hard but did not embrace me or what I stand for,' the RNC chair was asked to reconcile the president's words with Gillespie's actions." Appearing on Fox News, McDaniel said, "Ed [Gillespie] did work with the president. I absolutely think any candidate should be embracing the president...and I think Ed did."

Democratic, GOP Lawmakers Weigh In On Election Results. Sen. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) said on CNN's The Lead (11/8), "I think we've seen the limits of how we can drill down on the base. We've got to play addition rather than subtraction and I think that that's the message that we ought to take. ... I do think that we do better with a more inclusive message. So I think that that is something that we can learn from last night." Flake added, "You can rile up the base and win an election here or there, but in the end you've got to...appeal to a broader electorate. ... I don't think we are right now at least not the administration."

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-IL) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/8), "This was a big deal. I talked to [Democratic Virginia Sens.] Tim Kaine and Mark Warner earlier in the evening and I said it's about more than Virginia. This is about our country and it's about the future of issues in Congress. Let me be specific. If Gillespie had prevailed with his message, which really was a negative message, talking about illegal immigrants, talking about Northam supporting pedophiles, talking about restoring and saving Confederate statues, where would we be this morning in terms of our agenda and moving forward? Instead, I hope more Republicans got the message last night that Americans are looking for us to work together and solve problems. That's a good message and a timely one for Congress."

Rep. Joaquin Castro (D-TX) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/8), "I think it's clear that Donald Trump has been toxic for the Republican party so far. Whatever Midas touch the President had in the 2016 elections didn't carry over to many elected officials or politicians in his party. It's not uncommon. We've seen that in many midterms where a President's party get beaten very badly. But, this looks like a very strong way of getting ready for 2018."

Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA) said on CNN's Situation Room (11/8) that "the independent swing voters in the United States are open to the Democratic message and gives us a big opportunity in 2018."

Tuesday's Election Results May Bode Ill For GOP Rep. Comstock's Reelection Hopes. The Washington Post (11/8, Portnoy) reports that in her 2018 reelection race, Rep. Barbara Comstock (R-VA) must "figure out how to protect herself from her constituents' disdain for President Trump, borne out by a blue wave across Virginia during Tuesday's elections. The only northern Virginia Republican in Congress," Comstock "could do everything right and still lose at the hands of Democratic voters bent on defeating anyone who shares a party affiliation with Trump." The Comstock camp, however, "points to her 6-point win last year while sharing a ballot with Trump as evidence of her staying power. She also won more votes in 2016 in precincts that overlap with six of her losing House of Delegates colleagues than they did on Tuesday, according to her campaign."

Democratic Rep. Lieu Asks Trump If He'll Endorse His Challenger. The Hill (11/8, Bowden) reported that in a Wednesday tweet, Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) "mocked" Trump in the wake of Gillespie's loss. On Twitter, Lieu "noted that the Trump-backed [Gillespie] lost on Tuesday while the Trump-endorsed candidate Sen. Luther Strange (R) also failed to win the GOP Senate primary in Alabama in September. 'Dear failing @realDonaldTrump: Since you have a habit of endorsing losers like Gillespie & Strange, can you also endorse my congressional opponent? Thanks,' Lieu wrote on Twitter."

Democrats Score Big Gains Virginia House Of Delegates. The Washington Post (11/7, Nirappil) reports, "The Democratic wave in Virginia on Tuesday wiped out the Republican majority in the state House of Delegates, throwing control of the chamber in play for the first time since 2000 and putting Republicans in blue-tinged districts across the country on alert for next year's elections. Democrats snared at least 15 seats in an upset that stunned members of both parties and arrived with national implications." The Post adds, "Four other races were so close that they qualify for a recount, and the outcome will determine control of the chamber. The results marked the most sweeping shift in control of the legislature since Reconstruction."

Virginia's Roem To Become US' First Openly Transgender State Legislator. The Washington Post (11/7, Olivo) reports, "Virginia's most socially conservative state lawmaker was ousted from office on Tuesday by Danica Roem, a Democrat who is poised to become the nation's first openly transgender state lawmaker." Roem's race against Del. Robert Marshall (R) "focused on traffic and other local issues in suburban Prince William County but also exposed the nation's fault lines over gender identity. It pitted a 33-year-old former journalist, who began her physical gender transition four years ago, against a 13-term incumbent who called himself Virginia's 'chief homophobe' and earlier this year introduced a 'bathroom bill' that died in committee."

On the CBS Evening News (11/8, story 2, 2:20), Anthony Mason reported, "Across the country" on Tuesday, "the 2017 elections saw big wins for a highly diverse group of candidates." CBS' Chip Reid went on to highlight some of the election winners, including, among others, Roem; Virginia state Del.-elect Chris Hurst (D), who "was a TV news anchor in southwest Virginia two years ago when his reporter girlfriend was fatally shot by a former station employee during an outdoor live broadcast"; Ravinder Bhalla (D), "a Sikh [who] won the race for mayor in Hoboken, New Jersey, despite racist fliers that said, 'Don't let terrorism take over our town,'" and Jenny Durkan (D), who "will be Seattle's first lesbian mayor."

NYTimes Profiles New Jersey Gov-Elect Murphy. Meanwhile, the New York Times (11/8, Corasaniti) offers a positive profile of Gov.-elect Phil Murphy (D-NJ), who on Tuesday easily defeated Lt. Gov. Kim Guadagno (R-NJ) in the race to succeed term-limited Gov. Chris Christie (R-NJ). The Times says Murphy, a former Goldman Sachs executive, has "progressive, working-class roots."

CBO: Repealing Individual Mandate Will Save $338 Billion Over 10 Years.

The Washington Times (11/8, Howell) reports that a CBO analysis expected Wednesday says repealing the ACA's individual mandate "would save taxpayers $338 billion over the coming decade" because "fewer people would seek coverage and draw taxpayer-funded subsidies that defray their premiums." The Times says the CBO analysis "could alter the GOP's push to overhaul the tax code" as President Trump is urging Republicans to repeal the mandate "to get a head start on scrapping the 2010 law and free up money to usher in deeper tax cuts."

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on Bloomberg TV Bloomberg Markets Americas (11/8), "The President would like" to see the elimination of the individual mandate as part of a tax reform bill. He added, "That is something he encouraged them to look at. I was at a press conference yesterday at the Senate. Senator Cruz gave a compelling pitch for that, but we will see. That will be one of the things that is talked about and will be considered."

CBO Says Republican Tax Plan Would Add $1.7 Trillion To National Debt.

The Hill (11/8, Elis) reports that a CBO analysis says the Republican tax bill "would add $1.7 trillion to the national debt over the course of a decade, and increase the country's debt-to-GDP ratio by 5.9 percentage points." Citing The Hill report, the Washington Times (11/8, Persons) says the CBO "determined that the debt-to-GDP ratio would rise to 97.1 percent." David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (11/8, story 6, 0:25) that the $1.7 trillion figure is "$200 billion more than Republicans have accounted for."

Amendment Leaves GOP Tax Bill With $74 Billion Revenue Gap. The Wall Street Journal (11/8, Rubin) reports that as a result of an amendment to the Republican tax plan that would cut an excise tax on multinational corporations, the bill now has a $74 billion revenue gap. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, the amendment removed 95% of the provision, which left the bill outside its budget target. Republicans have not indicated how they will address the issue.

Senate Tax Bill "Sharply Diverges" From House GOP Plan.

Politico (11/8, Kim, Dawsey) reports that Senate Republicans' tax plan "sharply diverges from the House GOP's plan, including by not fully repealing the estate tax." Politico cites "two sources" who said Republican leaders brief Republicans on their plan Thursday morning in a session "meant to walk senators who are not on the tax-writing Finance Committee through the intricacies of the GOP's tax bill before unveiling it to the public." The New York Times (11/8, Tankersley, Rappeport, Kaplan) says the emerging Senate bill "suggests party leaders are less concerned with the potential fallout of eliminating breaks that benefit upper-middle-class taxpayers in high-tax states such as New York and California."

Sen. Chris Coons was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/8) about President Trump's call to Democratic senators about the tax bill. Coons said, "The President said a number of things and I, frankly, just appreciated the opportunity to sit down with some of his chief advisers and that he took the time from his trip to Asia to call in. It was an interesting conversation. He touched on a number of different topics, but if there was one theme from our side, it was we should have been included and consulted earlier. We've got ideas, we want to work across the aisle to strengthen the middle class, to support manufacturing, to make our country more competitive, and the folks on the other side of the table, including the President calling in from Asia said, just wait, you are going to see a different tax bill in the Senate than the House, we're at the beginning of a process, not at the end."

Pruitt: New Climate Report Won't Deter Roll Back Of Clean Power Plan.

USA Today (11/8, King) reports EPA Administrator Pruitt said in an interview that despite "a newly released government report that lays most of the blame for the rise of global temperatures to human activity," he will continue "to roll back the Obama-era Clean Power Plan, a major rule aimed at combating climate change." Pruitt said, "We're taking the very necessary step to evaluate our authority under the Clean Air Act and we'll take steps that are required to issue a subsequent rule. That's our focus. ... Does this report have any bearing on that? No it doesn't. It doesn't impact the withdrawal and it doesn't impact the replacement." USA Today says that although Pruitt's stance "is not surprising given his steadfast opposition to the Clean Power Plan," in "the wake of what environmentalists see as powerful evidence of human-caused climate change [it] is disappointing to critics of the administration."

Senators Criticize White For Climate Change Writings At Confirmation Hearing.

The New York Times (11/8, Friedman) reports that Democrat Senators expressed frustration during a Senate hearing for Kathleen Hartnett White and Andrew Wheeler, two of President Trump's nominees for "two top environmental posts," on Wednesday. Senators criticized White, who as been nominated to head "the White House Council on Environmental Quality," for "her past writings on climate change, including articles in which she called carbon dioxide 'the gas of life' and described renewable energy as parasitic." Wheeler, the nominee for the position of "deputy administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency," faced lighter questioning.

The AP (11/8, Biesecker) reports White "said Wednesday that she is unconvinced by a new U.S. government assessment reaffirming that man-made carbon emissions are the primary cause of climate change." As Democrats pressed White "about the specific evidence linking carbon emissions to global warming, White grew visibly flustered."

The Washington Post (11/8, Mooney) reports that White said, "I'm not a scientist, but in my personal capacity, I have many questions that remain unanswered by current climate policy...I think we indeed need to have more precise explanations of the human role and the natural role."

Climate Change Advocates Win Key Races Tuesday.

Reuters (11/8) reports US voters on Tuesday "picked climate change advocates in a handful of gubernatorial and state legislature races" providing "a potential boost to state-level efforts to fight global warming through carbon trading schemes." State and local governments in Democratic states "have already promised to act as a counterweight to the administration of President Donald Trump, which is seeking to unwind climate change regulations it deems too costly, and remove the United States from a global pact to reduce emissions." Democrat Phil Murphy, who won the race to become New Jersey's next governor, "ran on a platform that included a pledge to 'immediately restore New Jersey's place in the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative (RGGI),' a northeast carbon market from which" Gov. Chris Christie withdrew in 2011.

Senators "Grill" Nielsen On Climate Change During Confirmation Hearing.

USA Today (11/8, Slack) reports that during DHS Secretary nominee Kirstjen Nielsen's confirmation hearing, Senators "grilled her about climate change, port security, deferring deportation for children brought to the country illegally, and combating violent extremism, including by white supremacists." On climate change, Nielsen "declined to say she believes humans caused it.”

The Washington Examiner (11/8, Giaritelli) reports, “Two Democratic senators questioned President Trump’s nominee for Department of Homeland Security secretary about the cause of climate change during a Wednesday hearing that otherwise focused on her credentials and views on national security.” Nielsen said, “I do absolutely believe that the climate is changing. I can’t unequivocally state it’s only caused by humans,” later adding, “I believe that climate change exists, I’m not prepared to determine causation.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Want Kids, A Degree Or A Home? The Tax Bill Would Cost You.” A New York Times (11/8) editorial says that Republicans are “cutting billions of dollars in tax benefits to people trying to raise children, pay for college, buy a home or invest in renewable energy” to “pass their immense tax giveaway to the rich.” As a result, “taxes would go up for about 45 percent of middle-class taxpayers by 2026 under the House bill, according to an analysis by The Times,” while “the people in the top 1 percent of income will get an average tax cut of $64,720 a year by 2027, according to the Institute on Taxation and Economic Policy.” The Times says Republicans “should stop pretending that this terrible proposal is a favor to average Americans, when many of them in fact will be left a good deal poorer.”

“Berlusconi On The Horizon Again In Italy.” The New York Times (11/8) editorializes on Italy’s “four-time former Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi,” who “looks on track” to become “Italy’s political comeback kid.” The Times notes “Nello Musumeci, the candidate representing a coalition of parties cobbled together by Mr. Berlusconi, won the most votes on Sunday in regional elections in Sicily,” and if that was “a preview of Italian politics to come, then Italy and the European Union are in for a rough ride.” The Times concludes that “effective politicians have been in short supply” in Italy and the EU.

“Britain Gets Shaken Up As Tory Women Say ‘Me Too.’” The New York Times (11/8) editorializes with Theresa May’s government already roiled by Brexit, “the sort of sexual harassment accusations that have stirred the media, entertainment industry and politics in the United States have driven one of her ministers from office and rocked her Conservative Party.” In addition to the resignation of defense secretary Michael Fallon after “a series of allegations of sexual misconduct,” a “list of more than 30 lawmakers in Mrs. May’s Conservative Party – with names redacted – has been circulated online with anonymous charges of sexual misconduct.” Already, “the seriousness of the official response is already in doubt,” and “if America’s recent experience is any indication, though, women themselves will keep the issue alive.”

“The Saudi Round Up At The Ritz.” The New York Times (11/8) editorializes that officials in both Saudi Arabia and the US should counsel Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman of Saudi Arabia to avoid pushing too strongly for a war with Iran. The Times writes that bin Salman’s “wholesale arrests in Saudi Arabia have been seen as fundamentally a power play to cement his internal control over the kingdom. But his aggressive moves to reshape both his country and the Middle East are likely to have wider consequences, further destabilizing a region already in turmoil while increasing the chances of a Saudi war with Iran.” The Times criticizes what they perceive to be Jared Kushner’s tacit approval of the mass arrests, based on his failure to comment on them after spending some time recently in Saudi Arabia.

Washington Post.

“Voters Just Sent A Message: Republicans Are Way Out Of Step On Healthcare.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/8) says, “There’s a long list of issues on which the Trump administration, and Republicans generally, are out of step with most Americans, yet on few of them is the chasm so broad or so deep as on health care. On Tuesday, voters made that clear in a pair of purple states, Virginia and Maine, while for the past week Americans across the country have been surging to sign up for health-care coverage under the” ACA, “which the White House and congressional Republicans have tried to repeal and, failing that, sabotage.”

“Saudi Arabia’s Blockade Could Starve Sick Children In Yemen.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/8) criticizes Saudi Arabia’s reaction of the missile launched toward Riyadh, charging that its aim is “to besiege some of the world’s most desperate people 00 the cholera-stricken and literally famished civilian population of Yemen.” To the Post, “the press of multiple international crises and President Trump’s monopolization of media attention have helped obscure the severity of the humanitarian emergency in Yemen." Moreover, the Saudis have "offered no proof of the rocket's origin, and experts point out that Yemen is known to have imported Scud missiles from North Korea before the war."

"Many Of Trump's Judicial Nominees May Be Unfit. The Senate Is rushing Them Through Anyway." The Washington Post (11/8) says in an editorial that the Senate's "rush" to confirm President Trump's judicial nominees risks "giving too little scrutiny to potential judges whom the American Bar Association has rated unqualified for the job." Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley "has promised to hear testimony from ABA representatives next week," and the Post urges members of the panel to "take the opportunity to ask serious questions about the concerns raised over [nominee to the US Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit Leonard Steven] Grasz's temperament," and "slow down and ask more questions about" US District Court nominees Brett Talley and Holly Lou Teeter "before endorsing them for lifetime appointments to the bench."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Anti-Trump Wave." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/8) says that Democrats turned out in scores in opposition to President Trump on Tuesday, and Republican losses were heavy enough to indicate that the GOP may have a difficult time retaining its majorities in Congress in the midterm elections. The Journal says that if the GOP is to avoid bid losses next year, Republicans need to score legislative victories on issues such as tax reform.

"The College Tax Reform Tantrum." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/8) argues that while colleges are unhappy that the Republican tax plan will reduce subsidies to higher education, cutting the subsidies may make students and parents cognizant of costs and force colleges to reduce unnecessary spending.

"New York's Not So Finest." A Wall Street Journal (11/8) editorial says the Department of Education is now forcing schools to hire teachers from its Absent Teacher Reserve (ATR), ensuring that bad teachers are back in New York classrooms full-time. At the same time, the United Federation of Teachers, in a bid to prevent competition with public schools from charters are trying to block teacher certification standards for charters that would allow 179 schools to make nontraditional hires, thereby keeping good teachers out of New York's schools.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Today is the one-year anniversary of Donald Trump becoming President. ... So much has happened over the past year. Not in Congress, nothing has happened there."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump gave a major foreign policy speech yesterday in South Korea, during which he described living in North Korea as 'a hell no person deserves' and warned North Korea not to try us. That's right, don't try us. If you do, you're going to like us."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, this is what President Obama is up to. President Obama had jury duty today. He reported for jury duty this morning in Chicago. You see he shook hands with some of the people there, he said hello to the other prospective jurors, then was not selected. He was dismissed. Of course he was dismissed. In order to serve on a jury, you have to be born in the United States, right?"

Stephen Colbert: "So, Democrats have their swagger back. ... They also made major gains in Virginia's House of Delegates, winning at least 15 seats in an upset that stunned members of both parties. Both parties? So, even the Democrats didn't believe they could win. 'What? No, people hate us. I demand a recount!'"

James Corden: "This was a big occasion, ladies and gentlemen. Today was the one-year anniversary of Donald Trump winning the presidency. ... Now, the traditional one-year anniversary gift is paper. So if you want to get Trump something, you can't go wrong with a federal indictment."

James Corden: "Trump said that [Virginia Republican candidate for governor Ed] Gillespie never embraced him. The problem is not that Ed Gillespie never embraced Trump – the problem is that Trump's father never embraced Donald Trump."

Trevor Noah: "What a night for Democrats, or as a wise man once said, so much winning. Yeah, how do you like that, Republicans? You may control the presidency, Congress, and the Supreme Court, but the Democrats got the Virginia House of Delegates, maybe. Yeah!"

Trevor Noah: [Referring to Trump's tweet on Ed Gillespie's defeat] "Trump does not play games with how fast he will abandon you. Like, he quit the guy out of nowhere. One day when the US economy crashes, I bet Trump will be like, 'What a loser economy. I've never even heard of America.'"

Trevor Noah: "Karma was all over America. In Helena, Montana, the mayor who did not want to host refugees in his city lost his re-election bid to a Liberian refugee."

Trevor Noah: "So America now says good-bye to its favorite least favorite governor. Like, if this was 'Fast and the Furious,' this would be the moment when [Gov. Chris] Christie would be in Paul Walker's car driving away into the sunset until he hits a traffic jam that he started to make a point."

Seth Meyers: "Democrats last night won the governorships in Virginia and New Jersey. Or as Fox News reported, are emojis turning kids gay?"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump arrived in China today. 'It's so great to be home,' said his tie."

Conan O'Brien: "Big change for Twitter yesterday. They've officially doubled the maximum length of a tweet to 280 characters. In a related story, President Trump's thumbs have been rushed to intensive care."

U.S. Senate Panel Advances Quest For Oil In Arctic Refuge.

Reuters (11/15, Gardiner) reports that oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge "moved a step closer to reality on Wednesday after the US Senate energy and natural resources panel voted 13-10 to open part of the reserve coveted by conservationists." Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R), a supporter of the measure and Chair of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which has jurisdiction on the issue, "says drilling in the refuge is needed to provide jobs and boost the country's resource base," adding that drilling on the reserve will be done "the right way."

The AP (11/15, Daly) reports that "opening the remote refuge to oil and gas drilling is a longtime Republican priority." It quotes Murkowski saying that allowing drilling on the refuge "will help keep energy affordable, saving families and businesses money every time they pay for fuel — essentially an energy tax cut."

Bloomberg News (11/15, Dlouhy) reports that "the estimated $1.1 billion in federal revenue it will generate over the next decade offsets proposed tax cuts, binding it to the Republicans' high-priority overhaul effort and setting it up to pass the Senate on a simple majority vote." The Houston Chronicle (11/15, Dlouhy) reports drilling could provide a new source of oil for the Trans Alaska Pipeline System, helping to sustain its economic viability as production on the North Slope declines. However, it is not clear if energy companies are eager to move into the Arctic. The high cost of operations in the remote region discourage drilling as cheap shale projects in Texas and North Dakota provide a surge of oil. The Alaska Dispatch News (11/15, Herz) reports Alaska would get half the proceeds from the federal leasing program, which the CBO estimates could total $1.1 billion over the next decade.

The Washington Examiner (11/15, Siegel) reports a number of Democratic amendments to the bill failed, as Sen. Maria Cantwell challenged the purpose and process of the legislation. Cantwell said, "It really does turn regular order on its head. ... We are being asked to consider legislation that is different than previous bills [that tried to allow drilling in ANWR], and has not been subject to single hearing. At its core, the [bill] would change current law and turn the refuge into a petroleum reserve." However, Murkowski said, "When [the refuge] was created, it specifically said this area right here [the 1002 area] is recognized for its potential and if Congress authorizes it, the coastal plane can be developed for oil and gas. We don't change the purpose for which ANWR itself was created." The Huffington Post (11/15, D'Angelo) reports Sen. Bernie Sanders said future generations will look at the hearings and say "what world was the United States Senate living in" as it pushed for fossil fuel development "at a time of devastating damage done by climate change." Sanders said, "You're talking about raising a billion dollars here. ... I'm talking about the United States government spending hundreds of billions of dollars repairing damage, which, to a significant degree, not totally, had to do with climate change. And the scientists tell us the worst is yet to come."

Trophies From Elephant Hunts In Zimbabwe Were Banned In The U.S. Trump Just Reversed That.

The Washington Post (11/15, Fears, Eilperin) reports the Trump Administration reversed an import ban on the remains of elephants legally hunted in Zimbabwe and Zambia. The Post adds that African elephants are listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. The US Fish and Wildlife Service previously determined that Zimbabwe “had failed to prove that its management of elephants enhanced the population.” In its new statement, the agency “did not specify what had changed in that country.” The move follows Interior Secretary Zinke’s establishment of an International Wildlife Conservation Council to advise him on how to increase Americans’ public awareness of conservation, wildlife enforcement and the “economic benefits that result from U.S. citizens traveling abroad to hunt.”

The Hill (11/15, Cama) reports that the FWS “said it has determined that hunting African elephants in Zimbabwe and Zambia ‘will enhance the survival of the species in the wild,’ which is the standard by which officials judge whether to allow imports of parts – known as trophies – of the animals.” An FWS spokesman said in a statement late Wednesday, “Legal, well-regulated sport hunting as part of a sound management program can benefit the conservation of certain species by providing incentives to local communities to conserve the species and by putting much-needed revenue back into conservation.”

Also reporting are the Washington Examiner (11/15, Siciliano), CNN International (11/15, Wallace), Newsweek (11/15, Meza), the Huffington Post (11/15, D’Angelo), ABC News (11/15, Ebbs), WIMS-AM South Shore \(IN\) South Shore, IN (11/15), UPI (11/16, Downs), and Gizmodo (11/15, McKay).

This Group Thinks Trump Hasn’t Done Enough To Unravel Environmental Rules.

Here’s Its Wish List. The Washington Post (11/15, Eilperin, Dennis) reports that at a private meeting last week sponsored by the Heartland Institute, activists were “giddy” about “much of what the Trump administration had done to roll back Obama-era environmental regulations,” but also “grumpy” that “it wasn’t nearly enough.” The article notes that while Interior Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt could not “make the meeting in person,” Interior energy policy counselor Vincent DeVito did speak to the gathering. Asked this week why DeVito had chosen to address the group, Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said in an email, “The summit was an opportunity to communicate the progress the department has made on energy and restoring multiple-use and access to federal lands, as well as share ideas and perspectives on how to achieve energy dominance.” The Post continues that “the institute’s scorecard on energy issues, Swift added, reflected that Interior ‘is making incredible progress on restoring traditional multiple uses and access to public lands and toward cutting costly and job-killing regulations on responsible energy development.’”

New Outdoor Advisory Panel Draws Mixed Reviews.

The Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (11/15, Barker) reports that “representatives of outdoor recreation and conservation groups see both potential and peril” in Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s new “Made in America” recreation advisory committee. For instance, Sandra Mitchell of the Idaho Recreation Council “embraced the idea and said the committee could help ensure all user groups, both motorized and non-motorized, are treated equally.” On the other hand, “Paul Sanford, national director of recreation policy for the Wilderness Society at Washington, D.C., said he doesn’t object to the committee, but doesn’t want it to be overpopulated with people who represent recreational vehicles and motorized recreation.”

Secretary Zinke Questions His Department’s Loyalty (VIDEO).

Newsy (11/15, Miller) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “at odds with his own department about loyalty to the Trump administration.” According to the article, “since taking over the department, Zinke has restructured many of the senior positions,” and “a handful of career officials have resigned over these changes.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Gaming Panel Approves Tribe’s Plan For Casino Near Omaha.

The AP (11/15, Funk, Press) reports that the National Indian Gaming Commission has “again approved the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska’s plan to build a casino near Omaha, but after a decade of court hearings, the project’s future remains uncertain.” The commission’s decision “this week came nearly 10 years after it first approved the proposed casino in Carter Lake, Iowa.” Ponca Tribal Chairman Larry Wright Jr. lauded “the latest decision because building the casino would give the tribe significant new resources to help its members.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (11/16, Duggan, Moring).

Blackfeet Tribal Members In Federal Court Over Water Rights.

KRTV-TV Great Falls, MT (11/15, DeMarco) reports that “members of the Blackfeet tribe were in federal court in Great Falls on Tuesday requesting legal ownership of tribal natural resources.” In October 2015, “enrolled members of the Blackfeet Tribe filed a complaint against the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.” Judge John Johnston has “granted an extension in the case so the enrolled members of the Blackfeet Tribe can find a lawyer to help represent them on the complaint.”

Leech Lake Band Seeks To Recover 11,000 Acres Of “Allotted Lands” In The Chip.

The Walker \(MN\) Pilot-Independent (11/15, DeBoer) reports that “an error by the Bureau of Indian Affairs back in the 1940s or 1950s resulted in about 11,000 acres of ‘allotted lands’ that rightly belonged to the Leech Lake Band of Ojibwe, being wrongly transferred to the Chippewa National Forest.” For the last “two to three years, the Leech Lake Band has been working to get the allotted acres transferred back to Band ownership through ‘secretarial transfers.’”

Nooksack Can’t Get Second Look At Toss Of Funding Suit.

Law360 (11/15, Westney) reports that “a Washington federal judge rejected a bid Tuesday to reconsider his dismissal of a lawsuit by the Nooksack Indian Tribe’s purported council that claimed the Bureau of Indian Affairs wrongly refused funding to the tribe, saying the dismissal appropriately deferred to the agency’s finding that the council wasn’t allowed to bring the case.”

Enviros Urge 9th Circ. To Revive Wind Farm Challenge.

Law360 (11/15, Westney) reports that “a conservation group has asked the Ninth Circuit to overturn a lower court decision tossing claims that the Bureau of Indian Affairs violated environmental law in approving a lease between a wind farm developer and a California tribe, saying the agency failed to do enough to protect golden eagles and other birds.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Oregon Lawmakers Demand Answers From Interior On Chemawa.

KUOW-FM Seattle (11/15, Manning) reports that “the six Democrats in Oregon’s congressional delegation released a letter Wednesday pressing a top official in the Interior Department to answer questions about the Chemawa Indian School in Salem.” The letter “comes in response to a series of stories from OPB that found health, safety and academic problems at the school. Staff have also complained to OPB that administrators would retaliate against anyone who raised concerns about how the school was managed.” The letter specifies four “areas it wants Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs John Tahsuda to look into: student safety and health, academic failings and high enrollment fluctuations, whistleblower protections, and overall transparency in decision making.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Three Years After Nevada Ranch Standoff, Bundy Federal Trial Begins In Las Vegas.

The Washington Post (11/15, Sottile) reports that “more than three years after Nevada rancher Cliven Bundy and hundreds of militiamen faced off with federal law enforcement officers who had repossessed Bundy’s cattle, the 71-year-old is finally seeing his battle reach a courtroom.” Bundy; “two of his sons, Ryan and Ammon; and militia leader Ryan Payne are facing federal trial here on charges of conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States, conspiracy to impede and injure a federal officer, and extortion, among other charges that, if they result in convictions, could lead to life sentences." According to the article, "prosecutors argued in opening statements this week that the standoff was an attack on the government; attorneys representing the Bundys say the gathering was an exercise of the family's right to protest."

The AP (11/15, Ritter) reports that Ryan Bundy "told a federal jury on Wednesday he believes protesters and self-styled militia members saved his life when they arrived in April 2014 after government agents used dogs and stun guns against his family members ahead of a gunpoint showdown that ended a cattle roundup." Bundy, "who is serving as his own lawyer in the trial in Las Vegas, spent more than an hour speaking with a projected image of his wife and eight children on the courtroom screen." Bundy "told his family history, declared his belief in states' rights over limited federal government, and professed his love of family, the land, God, Americans, liberty and freedom."

Also reporting are the AP (11/15, Ritter), Reuters (11/15, Smith), and the Daily Mail (11/15, Miller)/

Here's Why Cadiz Company Says It's Taking 'a Little Pause' From Its Desert Water Project.

The San Bernardino \(CA\) Sun (11/15, Steinberg) reports that after recently receiving "the long-sought federal approval for its massive desert water project, Scott Slater, Cadiz president and CEO, said it's time for the project to 'slow down' a bit." Slater explained, "We are going to take a little pause...and double our effort to allow people to understand this project. We believe people should support an innovative project like ours." However, "one environmentalist who has studied and followed the project for years, said pausing at this point strikes an odd note." David Lamfrom, California Desert and National Wildlife Programs director with the National Parks Conservation Association, "said he believes the pause is really because the California Lands Commission has recently surfaced as a possible stumbling block to the project." But "Cadiz downplays that notion."

BLM Seeking Public Feedback On Proposal To Expand Research Into Cosmic Rays.

KSTU-TV Salt Lake City (11/15, Steinbrecher) reports that the Bureau of Land Management seeks input "from the public on a proposal that would quadruple the size of an international scientific study happening near Delta." According to the article, "using clusters of telescopes and surface detectors on the ground, researchers from the University of Utah and around the world are studying cosmic rays, particularly a phenomenon called the 'Oh-My-God Particle.'" Researchers propose "to quadruple the size of the project to 750,000 acres, which would allow them to place more detectors on the ground." The article says that "many of the detectors would go on BLM land, and the Millard County Commission is concerned that will mean less public land is available for other uses like grazing, recreation or economic development."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Walden Hydro Bill Would Lower Farmers' Power Costs.

The Ripon Advance (11/15) reports that Rep. Greg Walden "on Friday introduced the Klamath Infrastructure Improvement Act, legislation that would serve Klamath County irrigators needing affordable water rates." H.R. 4329 would "amend the Klamath Basin Water Supply Enhancement Act of 2000 and would bring Klamath Basin hydropower costs in line with those for Bureau of Reclamation projects in other Pacific Northwest areas." Walden said, "We have 1,000 farms in Klamath County. We have 650,000 acres of farmland in the county. Combined crop and livestock sales annually reach approximately $200 million. Agriculture is essential not only to the lifeblood of Klamath County, and frankly to our entire district."

Timeline Moved Up On Irrigation Pipeline Project; Southwest Bend Piping Project To Begin Around The End Of The Year.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (11/16, Hamway) reports that "after talk of major delays last week, a project that would replace a section of canal near the southern edge of Bend with a 3,000-foot irrigation pipeline is back on track to begin around the end of the year." Craig Horrell, general manager of Central Oregon Irrigation District, "said a $5 million piping project is expected to break ground in December or January, pending the results of a federal environmental analysis." Edna Rey-Vizgirdas, spokeswoman for the Bureau of Reclamation, said, "We're trying to accommodate their timeline."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

BSEE Director Discusses Gulf Of Mexico E&P Opportunities At Deepwater Operations.

Offshore Magazine (11/15) reports that at the Deepwater Operations Conference & Exhibition, BSEE director Scott Angelle emphasized the importance of deepwater Gulf of Mexico E&P. During his keynote presentation, Angelle said, "The offshore oil and gas industry has demonstrated that when faced with challenges in deepwater whether market-based or technology, it continues to innovate and accelerate. ... BSEE must work to ensure that the outer continental shelf is attractive for investment and that all operations are conducted safely and are environmentally sustainable." World Oil (11/15) reports conference director David Paganie said, "Director Angelle's remarks at Deepwater Operations were an encouraging reminder that offshore oil and gas has advocates in Washington that seek to galvanize the industry in this challenging market."

About 75,000 Barrels Per Day Of Gulf Oil Output Still Shut After Shell Fire.

Reuters (11/15, Sims) reports a combined 75,206 bpd of oil and 215,122 mcf of natural gas production remain offline at four platforms in the Gulf of Mexico in the wake of a fire on Shell's Enchilada platform. The BSEE said production has been shut in for Shell's Enchilada, Salsa and Augers platforms, along with Hess' Baldpate platform and Conger field. Shell said a plan to repair the damage caused by the fire is underway, while Hess is helping the oil major determine when production can resume.

Fish And Wildlife Service

New Medicine Lake Blind Wheelchair Accessible.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (11/14) reports that a new accessible blind was dedicated in Ducks Unlimited volunteer Pat Nolan's honor in Medicine Lake National Wildlife Refuge. According to the article, "construction of the blind was led by DU volunteer Steve Cunningham, and completed by two sons and five grandsons of Nolan's, with assistance from refuge staff." Sean Lofgren, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service project leader at Medicine Lake, "said the blind will be used for hunting, wildlife observation and wildlife photography."

National Park Service

Public Comment Period On Raising Fees At 17 National Parks Closing Soon.

KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (11/15, Miller) reports that the comment period for a proposal to raise fees at 17 popular national parks "will be closing in just about a week." Due to concerns that the 30-day comment period is not enough time, Sen. Steve Daines on Wednesday "sent a letter to the acting director of the National Park Service asking for an extension of the public comment period." A spokesman with the National Park Service "says the 30-day comment period isn't unusual."

Why You May Not Have That Lifetime National Parks Pass You Ordered Yet.

WSB-TV Atlanta (11/15, Johnson) reports that senior citizens can expect their lifetime passes to national parks to be mailed out "sometime in the next 30 days, according to the AARP." The National Park Service had "said that seniors rushing to beat a steep price increase on lifetime passes created a logjam so severe that it delayed the processing of the requests."

Backers Hope Route 66 'Historic Trail' Designation Can Drive Tourism.

Cronkite News (11/15, Windes) reports that lawmakers are considering "a bill that would put Route 66 on the road to becoming a National Historic Trail." The bill, "heard Wednesday by a House Natural Resources subcommittee, would put the more-than-2,400-mile road under the care of the National Park Service, returning signage to the road and letting it appear on maps as a historic road, among other changes."

U.S. Steel Dumps More Toxic Chromium Near Lake Michigan, Faces Lawsuit.

The Chicago Tribune (11/14, Hawthorne) reports that "six months after U.S. Steel dumped a plume of toxic metal into a Lake Michigan tributary, the company quietly reported another spill at the same northwest Indiana plant and asked state environmental regulators to keep it secret, according to newly released documents." According to the article, "the 56.7 pounds of chromium released in late October by the company's Midwest Plant was 89 percent higher than its water pollution permit allows over 24 hours, U.S. Steel revealed in a letter sent to the Indiana Department of Environmental Management."

The Northwest Indiana Post-Tribune (11/16, Lavalley) reports that officials with the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore and Indiana American Water Company said they weren't told about the October leak. Bruce Rowe, public information officer and supervisory ranger in charge at the national lakeshore, said, "Our chief of resource management contacted IDEM (Wednesday) morning to learn more about this, and is going to contact other agencies. We obviously want to protect our resources and our visitors just like that spill six months ago, so we're taking this very seriously and looking into it."

Glacier Park Visitation Up In October.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (11/15) reports that "monthly visitation in Glacier National Park grew once again in October after a dip due to wildfires." According to the National Park Service, "an estimated 84,000 people visited the park last month, roughly 9,000 more people than a year ago."

Graffiti In Active Volcano At Death Valley Erased By Park Service.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (11/15, Brea) reports that "National Park Service employees had to roll out about 600 feet of hose to erase the latest graffiti at Death Valley." In late October, unidentified "vandals scratched large letters and symbols into the mud bottom of Ubehebe Crater, at the northern end of the national park about 180 miles northwest of Las Vegas." After receiving "complaints from visitors about the graffiti, the park dispatched a water tanker and team of seven park employees to the crater Nov. 7."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Wildlife Agencies Meet On Guam To Discuss Brown Tree Snakes.

The AP (11/15) reports that "wildlife agencies are meeting this week on Guam to provide updates on numerous projects targeting the invasive brown tree snake, which has proved detrimental to Guam's native bird population." The meetings will focus on "increased inspections, awareness programs and effective baiting methods." The article notes that "approximately $2.8 million from the Office of Insular Affairs is anticipated to carry out the brown tree snake eradication and control projects for the fiscal year."

Office Of Surface Mining

Omar's Pine Creek 2 Mine Receives Award.

The Williamson \(WV\) Daily News (11/15) reports that "Arch Coal's Coal-Mac LLC Pine Creek 2 Surface Mine, located in Omar, received the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement 2017 Excellence in Surface Coal Mining Reclamation Award." The award was presented at the National Mining Association's awards ceremony in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 6. The mine was recognized for "the development and use of multiple techniques to control threats to water quality, such as selenium pollution, total dissolved solids and conductivity."

US Geological Survey

USGS: Uranium Has Been Found Near Big Spring.

The Midland \(TX\) Reporter-Telegram (11/16, Hawes) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey announced the discovery of uranium in West Texas this week. The USGS "released preliminary information about the discovery northwest of Big Spring." According to the article, "the uranium itself is part of a new mineral called finchite, named after longtime USGS uranium scientist Warren Finch."

Aviat Networks Awarded $3.0 Million Project With USGS.

Reuters (11/15) reports that Aviat Networks Inc. has been awarded a $3.0 million project with the U.S. Geological Survey. The new system is “to be used by earthquake science center to transport geophysical, seismographic data, security video to/from various sites.”

Former Oklahoma Seismologist Testifies In Earthquake Lawsuit.

The AP (11/15) reports that former Oklahoma seismologist Austin Holland, who said he was “pressured by an official at the University of Oklahoma to not link the state’s surge in earthquakes to oil and gas production” gave sworn testimony in a lawsuit filed by residents against oil companies for a 2011 earthquake. Accord to the lawsuit, the earthquake that affected Kansas, Arkansas, Tennessee allegedly caused the residents to sustain damages. Holland testified that he was reprimanded for assisting in publishing a journal article on how to handle man-made earthquakes.

Opinion Pieces

Has Congress Already Forgotten Our Last Oil Spill Disaster?

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/15, Super), David A. Super, a professor of law at Georgetown Law, criticizes the proposed SECURE American Energy Act (H.R. 4239). The legislation “would transfer to states the authority to authorize oil and gas drilling on public lands,” but it would not “provide states with any resources to perform this work, which currently costs the Bureau of Land Management well over $100 million a year.” Super claims that “the legislation’s only real effect would be to tie the hands of future Congresses that might wish to reassert the balance between extractive, other economic, recreational, and environmental interests that historically has guided our natural resources policy.”

We’re Not Paying Our Fair Share To Visit National Parks.

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/15, WatkinsOpinion Contributor —), Tate Watkins, a research fellow at the Property and Environment Research Center, defends the Interior Department’s proposal to raise fees at 17 popular national parks. Watkins argues that “if our parks, forests, and wilderness areas are truly national treasures, then outdoor recreationists should have no qualms paying to enjoy — and support — them.” But Watkins also suggests that “managers should have flexibility to set pricing structures that work best for each site—whether that includes peak-season fees, annual passes, day rates, or surcharges for visitors from abroad.”

Trump Touts Success Of His Asia Trip, Says It Shows “America Is Back.”

To widespread media skepticism, the President yesterday celebrated his accomplishments in Asia, claiming credit for crafting a unified front against North Korea and for trade deals worth billions of dollars. Two major network newscasts reported Trump's remarks. In its story about "what he sees as" the trip's "accomplishments," NBC Nightly News (11/15, story 3, 1:30, Welker) said Trump "took a victory lap," and described him as "clearly frustrated by headlines that suggested he didn't secure any concrete results." The CBS Evening News (11/15, story 8, 0:45, Mason), meanwhile, quipped that it "appeared for a time" that Trump's "account of his Asia trip...might run as long as the 12-day journey itself." In his speech, USA Today (11/15, Jackson, Korte) reports, "Trump outlined his efforts in a country-by-country rundown," and "some commentators on Twitter likened" his "methodical recitation to someone showing slides of their summer vacation."

More favorable toward Trump was the Washington Times (11/15, Miller) account, which quotes him as saying, "My fellow citizens, America is back and the future has never looked brighter. ... I swore that in every decision and with every action I would put the best interest of the American people first. ... That is exactly what I have done." Politico (11/15, Lima), however, says Trump touted the success of his trip "despite a dearth of marquee victories for the White House," which "seemingly did not draw any major diplomatic concessions from the nations it visited on major issues like North Korea's nuclear efforts, new trade pacts or human rights."

Townhall (11/15, O'Brien) reported that "trade and commerce" were the issues Trump "spent the most time discussing, clearly enthused by his recent meetings." But Bloomberg News (11/15, Wayne, Pettypiece) says the trade deals touted by Trump "aren't contracts and might not be fulfilled. And while the president railed against what he regards as systemic flaws in US trade relationships, he neither publicly requested or received specific assurances by foreign leaders to reduce imbalances or address issues such as market access by US companies and intellectual property theft."

The Washington Post (11/15, Gearan) casts Trump as chafing "at criticism that he did not notch any major accomplishments," and USA Today (11/15, Jackson, Korte) says he "gave the speech at the White House in the wake of criticism of the trip by some analysts and political foes." The Los Angeles Times (11/15, Bennett) similarly indicates Trump's "message was undermined by the lack of significant accomplishments he could point to from the trip," and the New York Times (11/15, Qiu) runs a "Fact Check" analysis under the headline "Trump's 'Tremendous Success' Abroad Is Overstated."

Another New York Times (11/15, Shear) story similarly describes the trip as having brought "few concrete achievements," and adds "Trump made no significant announcements in a speech that he had hyped on Twitter as 'a major statement' to be delivered upon his return." The Times goes on to report that "critics say Mr. Trump has abandoned the United States' status as a global superpower by retreating from trade agreements and backing out of the Paris climate accord." Trump's "political rivals accuse him of straining relationships with allies in NATO and elsewhere while embracing despots." The Wall Street Journal (11/15, Ballhaus) runs a similar story this morning.

Jonah Goldberg of National Review said on Fox News' Special Report (11/15), "This was no major announcement. He had teased this as a major announcement – tune in for major announcement. There was no major announcement. At the same time, I'm not sure it matters. The press was mad about it. I'm not sure that matters." Goldberg added that "it sounded like a successful trip. It looked like a successful trip. He came back and talked about it like a successful trip and just because the reporters in the room didn't like it, well, welcome to the era of Trump. Reporters in the room often don't like what he does, but he was reaching out to his audience beyond that and I thought it was probably going to be effective for him."

Trump's Search For Water Bottle Featured Across News Coverage. A significant topic across the coverage of the President's remarks were the two occasions in which he paused to drink water. The Hill (11/15, Fabian), for example, said "the speech might be remembered for Trump's two awkward-looking water breaks," and the New York Times (11/15, Qiu) that the President was "deterred only by a struggle to quench his thirst."

While the subject is mentioned in virtually every story on Trump's remarks, the CBS Evening News (11/15, story 8, 0:45, Mason) devoted all but one sentence of its 45-second report to explain that the President's "mouth got so dry he had to stop and search for a bottle of water to quench his thirst. A few minutes later, it happened again." Added CBS, "You'll recall Mr. Trump, on the campaign trail, mocked then-rival Marco Rubio for taking a water break as he delivered the GOP response to a state of the union address." Rubio weighed in on Twitter, writing, "Needs work on his form. Has to be done in one single motion, and eyes should never leave the camera, but not bad for his first time."

The AP (11/15, Thomas) also indicates that “during the 2016 campaign, Trump frequently skewered Rubio...for needing to quench his thirst during speeches,” and USA Today (11/15, Estepa) reports, “Sometimes, you really just need a drink of water. Sen. Marco Rubio knows this.”

Trump: Xi Agrees “Freeze-For-Freeze” Is Unacceptable. The AP (11/15, Pennington) reports Trump said “the US and China agree that North Korea cannot just freeze its nuclear weapons program in exchange for concessions and that it must eliminate its arsenal.” Trump “was restating a long-standing US position but suggested that China now concurred with Washington that a ‘freeze-for-freeze’ agreement was unacceptable.” Said Trump, “President Xi recognizes that a nuclear North Korea is a grave threat to China, and we agreed that we would not accept a so-called freeze for freeze agreement, like those that have consistently failed in the past.”

Following Trump Visit, China To Send High-Level Envoy To North Korea. The AP (11/14, Bodeen) reports that “following...Trump’s visit to Beijing, China said Wednesday that it would send a high-level special envoy to North Korea amid an extended chill in relations between the neighbors over Pyongyang’s nuclear weapons and missile programs.” Song Tao, “the head of China’s ruling Communist Party’s International Department, will travel to Pyongyang on Friday to report on outcomes of the party’s national congress held last month, the official Xinhua News Agency said.” The Washington Post (11/15, Denyer) says “it is not clear whether this trip has anything to do with” Trump’s visit, as “Beijing routinely undertakes such trips to fellow Communist states.”

North Korean Editorial: Trump Should Be Sentenced To Death For Kim Insults. The Washington Post (11/15, Erickson) reports “the ever-escalating war of words between the United States and North Korea got dialed up to 11 on Wednesday, when an editorial in a state-run newspaper called...Trump a coward who deserved the death penalty.” The Post adds that “Rodong Sinmun, a mouthpiece for Kim’s ruling Workers’ Party of Korea, took aim at Trump,” writing, “The worst crime for which he can never be pardoned is that he dared [to] malignantly hurt the dignity of the supreme leadership. ... He should know that he is just a hideous criminal sentenced to death by the Korean people.”

Murphy: Restraining Trump’s Nuclear Authority Won’t Signal Weakness To North Korea. Sen. Chris Murphy, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said on CNN’s Situation Room (11/15) that he’s not “alone” in being concerned about President Trump’s ability to pre-emptively launch nuclear weapons at North Korea, arguing that “it’s not a coincidence that the first major hearing that we’ve had on the decision-making process regarding the launch of a nuclear weapon happens at the exact same moment that President Trump is suggesting through his Twitter feed that he might use a nuclear weapon against North Korea without consulting with Congress.” When asked if restraining the President’s nuclear authority signals a “weakness to regimes like North Korea,” Murphy said that’s “nonsense,” adding that no president can engage in a pre-emptive military strike without authorization from Congress. Murphy said he’s “introduced legislation that would clarify that.”

In an editorial headlined “The President’s Power To Launch Nukes,” the New York Times (11/15) says “Trump and North Korea have prompted Congress to do something it hasn’t done in more than four decades: formally consider changes to the law that gives American presidents the sole authority to launch nuclear weapons.” The US President “is engaged in a dangerous game of chicken with Kim Jong-un,” and while “the Republican-led Congress, which has shown few signs of pushing back against presidential powers, may end up taking no action...there are hard questions to be addressed, especially now that the American people have been alerted to the scope and potential peril of Mr. Trump’s powers.”

Sen. Jeanne Shaheen said on CNN’s The Lead (11/15), “I thought this was a great opportunity to try and further engage Russia in what’s going on with North Korea. One of the things we need to do with North Korea, which is a rogue nation, is to get the international community in support of further sanctions, of keeping pressure on the North Korean regime and Russia is a key player there and he missed that opportunity to engage Putin on that issue.” Shaheen added, “We need to build an international coalition as President Obama did on Iran to get people united in working and keeping the pressure on North Korea. What we don’t need is inconsistent messages on Twitter that...are open to interpretation by Kim Jong-un, who is a very irrational and radical leader. So I think that’s the kind of consistent, stable diplomacy that we need to continue and I think, unfortunately, this administration has fallen short in that score.”

UCLA Basketball Players Thank Trump For Intervening With China To Win Their Release. NBC Nightly News (11/15, story 5, 1:50, Holt) reported three UCLA men’s basketball players are back in the US “after being caught up in a legal drama in China which led...Trump to intervene when they were caught shoplifting and faced up to a decade in prison." Trump was shown saying, "What they did was unfortunate, and you know you're talking about very long prison sentences. They do not play games." The White House says Trump's words with Chinese President Xi Jinping, "along with diplomatic efforts by the State Department, led to a reduction in charges."

On Wednesday morning, Trump tweeted, "Do you think the three UCLA basketball players will say, 'thank you, President Trump' they were headed for ten years in jail." The CBS Evening News (11/15, story 7, 0:35, Mason) reported the three players apologized on Wednesday for shoplifting, and ABC World News Tonight (11/15, story 8, 1:15, Muir) that the three thanked Trump for his efforts.

Fox News' Special Report (11/15) showed footage of the players thanking the President and the US government. USA Today (11/15, Peter), Reuters (11/15, Carroll), the Washington Post (11/15, Bontemps), Politico (11/15, Lima, Nelson) and the Los Angeles Times (11/15, Bolch), among other news outlets, also report the story.

In Japan, Bannon Warns Against China's Plans To "Dominate" World Economy. The Washington Times (11/15, Taylor) reports that Steve Bannon "railed against China's 'hegemonic' ambitions Wednesday, telling a crowd in Tokyo that the West and its Asian allies must wake up to communist Beijing's plan to 'dominate' the world economy." Bannon said "American 'elites' have long believed a 'false premise' that China would become more of a liberal democracy and a free market economy as its economy grew," yet "the exact opposite has happened. ... The Chinese leadership had no intention ever of joining the rules-based international order. They had their own plan, and they executed that plan very rigorously."

Trump Takes To Twitter To Blast "Naïve (Or Dumb)" NYTimes, CNN. The Washington Times (11/15, Miller) reports that earlier Wednesday, Trump "took to Twitter with a vengeance... to blast his critics in the news media." Trump "labeled CNN as 'Loser!' and skewered the 'failing' New York Times for being 'naïve (or dumb)' on foreign policy." Trump said of the Times, "The failing @nytimes hates the fact that I have developed a great relationship with World leaders like Xi Jinping, President of China. ... They should realize that these relationships are a good thing, not a bad thing. The U.S. is being respected again. Watch Trade!"

Politico (11/15, Lima) says "it was unclear what specific Times article the president was responding to," though "earlier Wednesday Times foreign affairs columnist Thomas Friedman penned a piece criticizing" him "for allowing himself to be manipulated by Xi on trade, an issue the president has made a priority in his overseas diplomatic talks." Under the headline "China Could Sell Trump the Brooklyn Bridge," Friedman writes in the New York Times (11/14, Friedman) that "Xi has been brilliant at playing Trump, plying him with flattery and short-term trade concessions and deflecting him from the real structural trade imbalances with China."

As House Prepares To Vote On Tax Bill, Johnson Says He Opposes Senate Version.

With the House set to vote on its tax cut plan Thursday, President Trump tweeted Wednesday evening, "Big vote tomorrow in the House. Tax cuts are getting close!" However, coverage on the network news broadcasts and in print this morning focuses on the Senate bill, suggesting the measure could be in trouble after Sen. Ron Johnson said he will not support it and Sen. Susan Collins said the decision to include a repeal of the ACA's individual mandate was a mistake.

Anthony Mason reported on The CBS Evening News (11/15, story 2, 2:40, Mason) that House Republicans "are set to pass a massive package of corporate and individual tax cuts" Thursday. Chief congressional correspondent Nancy Cordes added that the House plan would "eliminate the deduction for state and local taxes," which "has angered a handful of GOP House members from high-tax states, but there probably aren't enough of them to prevent passage in the House."

However, much of the media coverage highlights Johnson's opposition to the Senate bill as well as the inclusion of the individual mandate repeal and Collins' criticism of that decision. Johnson told the Wall Street Journal (11/15, Hughes) Wednesday that he opposes the Senate Republican tax bill, arguing that the measure benefits corporations more than other businesses. Johnson told the Journal, "If they can pass it without me, let them. ... I'm not going to vote for this tax package." The Washington Times (11/15, Sherfinski) reports that in a statement Johnson "said...that it's important to strike a proper competitive balance between larger corporations and smaller 'pass-through' companies that file their taxes as individuals and are often taxed at levels higher than the 35 percent corporate rate." Said Johnson, "These businesses truly are the engines of innovation and job creation throughout our economy, and they should not be left behind. ... Unfortunately, neither the House nor Senate bill provide fair treatment, so I do not support either in their current versions."

The Washington Examiner (11/15, Lawler) says Johnson is “the first Republican senator to express opposition to the GOP tax bill,” and the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (11/15, Glauber) says his opposition “could prove important since Republicans have only 52 seats in the Senate.”

Rove: Differences Between House, Senate Bills Can Be Used To Craft A Better Final Version.

Karl Rove writes in the Wall Street Journal (11/15) that while much has been made of the differences between the House and Senate bills, their goals are similar, and the areas where they differ can be used to craft a better final bill. Rove adds that Republicans, and President Trump in particular, need to persuade Americans that the corporate tax changes will create jobs and raise incomes, which will help the economy grow.

Democrats Introduce Articles Of Impeachment Against Trump.

In what the AP (11/15, Freking) describes as “a long-shot effort that stands little chance in the Republican-led House,” six House Democrats have introduced articles of impeachment against President Trump, “accusing him of obstruction of justice and other offenses.” The AP adds that “the large majority of Democrats seem intent on having nothing to do with the effort either as lawmakers await the results of special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation,” and “Democratic leaders have argued that the impeachment campaign riles up Trump’s GOP base, a critical bloc in next year’s midterm elections.” The Washington Times (11/15, Dinan) reports that the Democrats, led by Rep. Steve Cohen, say Trump “has obstructed justice in his dealings with then-FBI Director James Comey, and his businesses are taking money that is illegal under two separate parts of the Constitution.” In addition they say Trump “has undermined the judiciary by using his pardon powers on former Sheriff Joe Arpaio, and that he’s undermined the press corps covering him by berating news outlets or calling them ‘fake.’”

Podesta: Trump Wants To Run The Justice System “Like A Banana Republic.” In an op-ed for the Washington Post (11/15), John Podesta, who served as chair of Hillary Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign, writes that reports that “Sessions — in an apparent effort to appease Trump — is considering appointing a special counsel to investigate Clinton’s role in approving the purchase of Uranium One” is proof that Trump “wants to upend 230 years of constitutional history and principle to run the U.S. justice system like a banana republic, or perhaps more aptly like what now passes for the rule of law in the country he aspires to emulate, the Russian Federation.” Podesta argues that “authoritarians and tyrants” use “the instruments of state power, particularly the wrath of the prosecutor, to rain opprobrium down upon citizens with whom they disagree.”

Sessions To Be Interviewed By House Intelligence Committee. Reuters (11/15) reports a DOJ spokesman said Wednesday that Attorney General Sessions will be interviewed in a closed door session with the House intelligence committee on Nov. 30. The committee is one of several, “along with the Department of Justice’s special counsel Robert Mueller, investigating alleged Russian interference in the 2016 presidential campaign and potential collusion by President Donald Trump’s campaign.”

Firm Mentioned In Trump Dossier Linked To Internet Pirates. McClatchy (11/15, Hall) reports that the co-called Trump Dossier “got a lot right,” but “the accusation that a company called XBT and its US subsidiary Webzilla hacked the emails of Democratic Party leaders” is “still vexing investigators.” XBT and Webzilla “have long been the targets of lawyers who fight Internet piracy.” McClatchy adds that its review of “more than 1,000 pages of court documents” found that “Webzilla employees were linked through litigation and regulatory filings to two companies accused of large-scale copyright violations involving Hollywood movies and subscription pornography.”

The Daily Caller (11/15, Ross) cites “a source familiar” with Glenn Simpson’s testimony to the House Intelligence Committee who said the Fusion GPS founder “acknowledged...that he did not verify information in the uncorroborated and salacious dossier before briefing reporters on its contents during the campaign.” Bloomberg News (11/15, House) reports that “people familiar with his testimony” say Simpson “defended [the dossier’s] credibility” during his testimony.

Judge Calls For Greater Transparency In Legal Fight Over Fusion Bank Records. Politico (11/15, Gerstein) reports that following “a brief hearing in US District Court in Washington, Judge Richard Leon” told lawyers involved in the legal fight between the House Intelligence Committee and Fusion GPS that the dispute over the committee’s demands for Fusion’s bank records “is of major public significance and needs to be handled with greater transparency.” Leon said, “If there were ever a case where [public access] is in the best interest of all concerned, this is one. ... This is not the kind of case, in my judgment, where there should be much if any time behind the [closed] door, unless it’s necessary. ... I think the arguments can be made in open court on the nonconfidential, discrete legal questions.”

Schiff: Parts Of Trump Dossier Have Turned Out To Be True. In an interview with the Wall Street Journal (11/15, Tau) Wednesday, Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking Democrat on the house intelligence Committee rejected attempts by Republicans to discredit the Dossier, arguing that its claims that Russia sought to help elect Trump proved to be true.

Bonn Conference Trying To Make Headway Despite US Stance On Paris Deal.

The New York Times (11/15, Friedman, Plumer) reports that “few at United Nations climate talks” in Bonn, Germany “are openly showing” any anger they feel at the United States for rejecting the Paris climate change agreement. In private negotiating sessions, career State Department staffers are “making headway on technical issues to strengthen the Paris accord”; many of them “are familiar players in these negotiations and are continuing to pursue longstanding objectives, like greater transparency on emissions cuts from developing countries.” George David Banks, a senior energy adviser to President Trump, said that because the US has “the best negotiating team in the world,” the “other delegations are very supportive of making sure the US delegation is as involved as possible.” However, the State Department official originally leading the talks, Thomas A. Shannon Jr., canceled at the last minute, “leaving the negotiations largely in the hands of lower-ranking colleagues,” and Banks “refers most questions to the State Department.”

In contrast, Fox News' Special Report (11/15) reported that at the conference, “the US is taking heavy criticism over President Trump’s decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Accord.” One American energy executive “infuriated participants when he said it’s naïve to suggest poor countries can escape poverty through wind and solar when fossil fuel remains a cheaper...alternative.” That remark came as scientists at the conference say they’re anticipating a 2 percent rise in global CO2 emissions for 2017, with Corinne Le Quere of the University of East Anglia shown saying that the CO2 increase is “driven primarily by what’s happening in China with the renewed use of coal.” Meanwhile, a separate American delegation expressed support for the Accord. Washington Gov. Jay Inslee was shown saying, “Donald Trump cannot stop us. This is the most important thing we wanted the world to know.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Mr. Trump Casts A Shadow Over The AT&T-Time Warner Deal.” The New York Times (11/15) editorializes that “President Trump’s hostility toward the news media, and CNN in particular, has been so extreme that it is calling into doubt whether his appointees at the Department of Justice can fairly evaluate a merger involving the cable news channel’s parent company, Time Warner, and AT&T.” The Justice Department’s Antitrust Division “has reportedly asked AT&T to sell the Turner Broadcasting division of Time Warner, a unit that includes CNN, or sell its DirecTV unit to gain approval for the deal.” While the Times notes that “on its face, this is not an unreasonable request,” it argues that “given Mr. Trump’s repeated attacks on CNN, there’s ample cause to suspect that the Justice Department scheme is a ploy to force a sale of the news organization to owners that will strip away its editorial independence and turn it into a house organ of the Trump administration.”

“The Senate Questions The President’s Power To Launch Nukes.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/15) says President Trump and North Korea “have prompted Congress to do something it hasn’t done in more than four decades: formally consider changes to the law that gives American presidents the sole authority to launch nuclear weapons.” The US President “us engaged in a dangerous game of chicken with Kim Jong-un,” and while “the Republican-led Congress, which has shown few signs of pushing back against presidential powers, may end up taking no action...there are hard questions to be addressed, especially now that the American people have been alerted to the scope and potential peril of Mr. Trump’s powers.”

Washington Post.

“Republicans Turn Their Irresponsible Tax Bill Into Monumentally Unwise Social Policy.” A Washington Post (11/15) editorial says by including a provision to repeal the ACA’s individual mandate in their tax bill, Senate Republicans “remade their tax bill into an Obamacare repeal bill.” The provision, the Post argues, “turned a fiscally irresponsible tax plan into a monumentally unwise piece of social policy that would do much more than widen the deficit.” The Post argues that if Republicans believe repealing the mandate “is good health-care policy, they should seek to pass it on its own, with hearings, markups and debate.”

“What Happens In Zimbabwe Without Mugabe In Power?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/15) writes that the “prospects don’t look good” for Zimbabwe. President Mugabe’s “horrific record” did not inspire the coup and Mnangagwa has “a history of brutal behavior” and could lose a fair vote to the opposition leader. However, the Post warns that “a genuine popular mandate” is needed for reforms to revive the economy. The Post calls on the US and other Western governments to “insist on a prompt restoration of constitutional order and a firm commitment by the military to holding internationally supervised elections next year.” The Post concludes this is “a fragile opportunity to rescue” Zimbabwe, should the situation “not lead to the installation of another strongman.”

“Don’t Be Relieved Only Five People Died In California. Be Enraged.” The Washington Post (11/15) editorializes that observers should not be comforted by the fact that “only” five people died in Tuesday’s shooting at an elementary school. The Post asserts that “what ought to be foremost is rage at the refusal of lawmakers to take action that might prevent these needless tragedies — and a renewed demand for sensible gun-control regulations, including a ban on assault weapons and comprehensive background checks with better enforcement.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Appeal Of Mandate Repeal.” A Wall Street Journal (11/15) editorial praises Senate Republicans’ decision to include a repeal of the ACA’s individual mandate in their tax bill and argues that Democrats should explain, why, if ACA insurance provides quality coverage at affordable prices, do people have to be coerced into buying it.

“Zimbabwe’s Coup By Any Other Name.” The Wall Street Journal (11/15) warns in an editorial that Zimbabwe’s coup is motivated by a political power struggle within the ruling Zanu-PF party and not the suffering of the country’s people. The Journal predicts the coup will not lead to improvements, which would require a total overhaul of its governance.

“Adios, Richard Cordray.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/15, Journal) expresses pleasure at Consumer Financial Protection Bureau director Richard Cordray’s exit, writing that he overstepped the mandate of CFPB and went after industries unpopular with progressives.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “The President hasn’t weighed in on the biggest story of the week, Roy Moore. Donald Trump’s in a real bind. On one hand, he doesn’t want to support an accused pedophile for Senate. His other hand is grabbing a woman by the...you know what I'm saying."

James Corden: "Trump said he accomplished a lot of things on his trip, but North Korea seems to have a different opinion, because yesterday, North Korea state media published a scathing review of President Trump's trip to Asia. They said Trump displayed his 'true colors as an old lunatic, mean trickster, and human reject.' Now you listen here, North Korea, we may not like him either, but that is the President of the United States you're accurately describing."

James Corden: "I can't believe Trump and Kim Jong-Un are still going back and forth like this. Like the two of them have literally become the characters in every rom-com you have ever seen. They've written insulting each other so much you just know they'll actually end up together. You know what I mean? They're like, 'You are an old trickster.' 'You a crazy rocket man.' 'Yeah, well you, you're the love of my life.'"

Trevor Noah: [Referring to the military coup in Zimbabwe] "I think the news is being dramatic here, all right. You don't overthrow a 93-year-old man, okay? You just don't wake him up. The generals are probably in the room like, 'We're now in power, we rule.' 'Shhhh!' You know how it's funny how back in the day, Americans would have seen this news and been like, 'Man, I'm glad that doesn't happen here.' And now people are like, 'Man, wish that happened here.'"

Trevor Noah: "Oh, and speaking of African dictators, President Trump is back from Asia."

Trevor Noah: "Let's move on to Congress, because people say that Congress never gets anything done. But yesterday, they got more nothing done than I have ever seen before. First, Attorney General Jeff Sessions flew in from the North Pole to explain to the House Judiciary Committee why his memory is perfect. Except when it comes to remembering Russians, he couldn't remember them at all."

Trevor Noah: "Out of nowhere, it came out that the Senate Republican tax plan will now include repealing Obamacare's individual mandate, which would mean 13 million fewer Americans having health insurance. You've got to admit, this is super sneaky. Like, they couldn't repeal Obamacare outright, so now they're just going to try to Bill Cosby it. You know, they just slip it into something else so America wakes up the next day like, 'Wait, what the hell happened to our healthcare?' 'What healthcare? You don't have a plan, and now you're going to die.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that Congress is debating if President Trump should have the power to order a nuclear strike. I guess right now, it's an even split between 'no' and 'hell no.' ... They have a good plan, though. They're going to replace the red button on his desk with the one that orders office supplies from Staples."

Seth Meyers: "Former White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci is reportedly in talks with publishers about a book chronicling his tenure in the White House. A book? You were there for ten days. At best, you could release a fortune cookie."

Seth Meyers: "North Korean state media today called President Trump a coward for canceling his visit to the Demilitarized Zone during his trip to Asia. Listen, President Trump is a lot of things, but a coward is just one of those things."

Seth Meyers: "Republicans are reportedly hoping that President Trump will pressure Alabama senator candidate Roy Moore to drop out of the race. Roy Moore still might not drop out, but at least he'll know what it's like to be pressured by an older man."

Pechanga Band Celebrates Execution Of First Water Settlement In The Trump Era.

The Nation Sun News (11/29) reports that "the first tribal water rights settlement" of the Trump Administration has been executed by the Interior Department. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "signed the agreement with Marc Macarro, the chairman of the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians, in Washington, D.C., on Wednesday afternoon." Zinke said in a press release after the signing ceremony, "The federal government has a critical responsibility to uphold our trust responsibilities, especially tribal water rights. This is why we are continuing to work on Indian water settlements with tribes, states, and all water users to ensure there is certainty for all and an opportunity for economic development in local communities."

Oil Drilling In Alaska Refuge Hits Snag Over Budget Protocol.

Bloomberg News (11/29, Natter, Wasson) reports the GOP's move to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling faces a potential snag over a budget protocol, which may mean the measure would not be included in the tax overhaul legislation. Senate Democrats say the provision opening the region violates the Byrd Rule, which limits budget procedures to measures that are mainly fiscal in nature. The Senate parliamentarian ruled the ANWR provision, as it is written now, can be subject to a point of order which would require 60 votes to waive. Republicans are now working with the parliamentarian to find a way around the rule.

Roll Call (11/29, Lesniewski) reports Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski said changes are being worked out to make the provision compliant with the Byrd rule. She said, "We are finishing up the last of that and expect to have a curative amendment if you will as part of the process going forward. ... I can tell you that with anything when you're working within the reconciliation you've got to have it so that you're either raising revenue or the matters are not extraneous in any way." The Washington Examiner (11/29, Siegel) reports a Democratic source said the ANWR legislation, as written, must follow the National Environmental Policy Act, which is under the jurisdiction of the Environment and Public Works Committee, rather than the Energy and Natural Resources panel that considered the provision. If that is true, the Interior Department must write its own rules of leases in the region.

The New York Times (11/29, Friedman) reports the debate over ANWR drilling centers on a single question, "What is more important: the environment or economic development?" Mark Myers, former USGS director, said, "Is this too sacred a ground to be disturbed by oil and gas drilling? It's a question of what we are willing to accept as a society." Even if the measure passes the Senate, the bill would have to be reconciled with the House version that does not currently have the drilling provision. Drilling advocates worry that moderate Republicans could stall the effort.

Arizona Coal Plant To Stay Open Through 2019.

The Hill (11/29, Cama) reports “the coal-fired Navajo Generating Station has obtained the approval it needs to stay open through 2019.” The Salt River Project “announced Wednesday that the federal Bureau of Reclamation and Bureau of Indian Affairs had completed their environmental review of the lease extension.” The owners of the plant “lease the plant’s land from the Navajo Nation.” Originally, they had planned “to close it this year, but the Trump administration and the Navajo Nation pushed for a renewal, and the other utilities involved agreed to it.”

The AP (11/29) reports the Navajo Nation “and most owners of the Navajo Generating Station near Page signed off on it earlier this year,” but the agreement “also needed the OK from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation and a former owner in the power plant. Those approvals came ahead of Friday’s deadline.”

Trump To Announce Reductions To Two National Monuments: Reports.

The Washington Times (11/29, Morton) cites a report from the Salt Lake Tribune which said that during a visit to Utah next week, President Trump will “announce his approval of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s recommendation that two national monuments be shrunk.” The Tribune cited “sources familiar with the trip,” who said Trump “will reduce the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments.”

Also reporting are the Las Vegas Review-Journal (11/29, Brean), the Independent \(UK\) (11/29, Embury-Dennis), and KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (11/29, Roche).

Mineral Exploration Sector To Host Meeting.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (11/29) reports that the American Exploration & Mining Association’s 123rd annual meeting will open Dec. 4 at the Nugget Casino Resort in Sparks. Casey Hammond, deputy assistant secretary for Land & Minerals Management at the Interior Department will speak at the Welcoming Keynote Luncheon.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Connecticut, Tribes Sue Feds Over Stalled Action On Compact.

The AP (11/29) reports that Connecticut and the Mashantucket Pequot and Mohegan tribes are “suing the federal government for failing to act on compact changes needed before a new casino can be built to compete with the MGM casino in Springfield, Massachusetts.” Because the Interior Department “did not act on the compact amendments” Gov. Dannel P. Malloy “reached with the tribes within 45 days of their submission, as required, the lawsuit claims the amendments should now be deemed as having been approved.”

Also reporting are the Connecticut Post (11/29, Lockhart), the New London \(CT\) Day (11/29, Hallenbeck), the Torrington \(CT\) Register Citizen (11/30, Lockhart), the Connecticut Mirror (11/29, Pazniokas), the Hartford \(CT\) Courant (11/29, Gosselin), and WWLP-TV Springfield \(MA\) Springfield, MA (11/29, Davis).

Additional Coverage: Woman Settles Suit Against Haskell, US Over Alleged Rape.

Additional coverage that “a woman who sued Haskell Indian Nations University after she said she was raped by two students in a dorm on the Kansas campus has settled her lawsuit” was provided by the AP (11/29).

Bureau Of Land Management

Ranchers Make ‘Good Arguments’ For Ownership – BLM Dandidate.

E&E Publishing (11/29, Yachnin) reports that “Wyoming-based attorney Karen Budd-Falen, who is vying to lead the Bureau of Land Management, recently suggested that ranchers who believe federal grazing permits give them ownership of the land make 'good arguments,' but she stopped short of endorsing the concept pushed by Cliven Bundy and others." Budd-Falen "made the remarks at a recent forum in Hamilton, Mont., that focused on land-use planning in Ravalli County, Mont." Budd-Falen said, "I know that there are scholars that argue that your grazing use on your grazing allotment is private property. I've heard the arguments." The article notes that "Budd-Falen declined to say whether she agrees, however, noting that no federal court has ruled to date on the question of whether grazing permits translate to private property rights."

Ruling Preventing Idaho Horse Herd Sterilization Is Appealed.

The AP (11/29, Ridler) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "appealing a federal court ruling preventing the sterilizing of a herd of wild horses in southwestern Idaho that opponents of the plan fear could set a precedent." The notice filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Idaho "challenges a ruling in September ordering the BLM to revise its 2015 plan." The plan "calls for sterilizing the herd and replenishing it with wild horses captured elsewhere to maintain a herd of 50 to 200 horses."

US House Delays Vote On Minn. Mining Bill.

The Bemidji \(MN\) Pioneer (11/29, Myers) reports that "the U.S. House on Wednesday debated legislation that would reopen areas near the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness in northern Minnesota to copper-nickel exploration and potential mining, but stopped short of taking any vote." Members "hotly debated the bill that would end an Obama-administration ban on exploration and mining near the federal wilderness." However, "a memo from the House whip said a final vote was postponed until Thursday, Nov. 30."

Quagga Mussels Cause Stir Among State, Federal Agencies.

The Havasu \(AZ\) News-Herald (11/30, Messick) reports that "multiple state and federal agencies are expected to meet next Wednesday in Lake Havasu City to address the growing threat posed by" the spread of quagga mussels. According to BLM spokeswoman Stephanie Carman, "the meeting is intended to bring federal, state, tribal and local agencies together with stakeholders to develop and draft a Lower Colorado River strategy to contain invasive mussels." Carman "said she expects a coordinated, area-wide containment effort by all parties, focusing on inspection and decontamination of long-term watercraft including outreach, education and inspection."

BLM Announces Proposed $6-Per-Vehicle Fee For Guffey Gorge Area And More.

The Canon City \(CO\) Daily Record (11/29) reports that "to provide much needed infrastructure and services to accommodate current visitation, the Bureau of Land Management is proposing a new $6-per-vehicle fee for a day-use pass at Guffey Gorge, also known as Paradise Cove, located in Park County." The fee would "specifically go to installing lavatories and a paved parking lot to improve the experience for the increasing number of visitors that are drawn to Guffey Gorge for its scenic value and unique, water-based recreation opportunities." The fee would be implemented "May 15 to Sept. 30 from dawn to dusk."

Montana Official Says Downed Line Might Have Sparked Wildfire.

The AP (11/30) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "states a fire that burned about 12 acres (5 hectares) of its land along the banks of the Clarks Fork of the Yellowstone River might have started after high winds downed a power line." BLM spokeswoman Sarah Holm "says the fire was contained as of noon Wednesday, but crews are expected to continue mopping up the fire for a couple of days due to lingering hot spots."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Cape Wind Opponents Appeal Federal Decision Upholding Lease.

The AP (11/29, Press) reports opponents of the Cape Wind project "are appealing a federal agency's decision to leave in place the long-stalled project's ocean lease." The Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound has "filed a notice of appeal...with the Department of the Interior's Board of Land Appeals along with the town of Barnstable, the Massachusetts Fishermen's Partnership, the Aquinnah Wampanoag tribe and local other organizations." According to opponents of the project, "federal officials should have taken into consideration that the project is no longer viable. Cape Wind officials didn't immediately comment."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Italian Oil Company Given Drilling Permit In Alaska.

UPI (11/29, Graeber) reports in continuing coverage that the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement has approved Eni's application to drill from an artificial island in the Beaufort Sea starting next month. The agency predicts Eni's preliminary effort could lead to 20,000 bpd in production. Mark Fesmire, BSEE director in Alaska, said, "Exploration must be conducted safely and responsibly in relation to the Arctic environment and we will continue to engage Eni as they move forward with drilling its exploratory well." The Daily Caller (11/29, Bastasch) reports BSEE Director Scott Angelle said, "Responsible resource development in the Arctic is a critical component to achieving American energy dominance. ... BSEE is committed to working with our Alaskan Native and Industry partners by taking a thoughtful and balanced approach to oil and gas exploration, development and production in the Arctic."

Offshore Energy Today (11/29) also provided coverage.

Fish And Wildlife Service

US Adopts Recovery Plan For Mexican Wolves, Lawsuit Planned.

The AP (11/29, Bryan) reports that "after decades of legal challenges and political battles that have pitted states against the federal government, U.S. wildlife managers on Wednesday finally adopted a plan to guide the recovery of a wolf that once roamed parts of the American Southwest and northern Mexico." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "considered tens of thousands of public comments — from state lawmakers and business groups to independent scientists and environmentalists — as it worked to meet a court-ordered deadline to craft the recovery plan." Sherry Barrett, the Mexican wolf recovery coordinator, said, "This plan really provides us a roadmap for where we need to go to get this species recovered and delisted and get its management turned back over to the states and tribes."

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (11/29, Hayden) reports that "the target number of wolves required for downlisting the species from 'endangered' to 'threatened' — an average of at least 320 individuals in the U.S. over a four-year period — remains the same, although the threshold for the Mexican population was increased from 170 to 200 individuals." The article notes that "to be delisted entirely, the U.S. population located in New Mexico and Arizona must average at least 320 wolves over an eight-year period."

The AP (11/29) reports that "environmental groups say they intend to sue the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over its plan for recovering the endangered Mexican gray wolf in the American Southwest and northern Mexico." The groups claim "the plan contains shortcomings that will hinder recovery of the predator and could threaten to lead to the extinction of the wolves."

Also reporting are Reuters (11/29, Zuckerman), the Santa Fe New Mexican (11/29, Moss), the Santa Fe \(NM\) Reporter (11/29, Miller), the Silver City \(NM\) Sun-News (11/29), and KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (11/29).

Grizzly Managers Face Hurdles On Way To Delisting.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (11/29, Chaney) reports that bear managers met Wednesday "to finish their strategy for moving grizzlies from federal to state control by next summer." According to the article, "that would give the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee the scientific and policy research it needs to propose a delisting rule to the federal government."

Courthouse News (11/29, Lundquist) reports that "around 70 people crowded into a Missoula conference room to hear Hilary Cooley, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Recovery Coordinator, clarify the three tasks remaining before the agency could remove the Continental Divide grizzly bears from the endangered species list." Cooley said, "We are required to evaluate whether recovery goals are met and also to evaluate the threats. So we've started a process to do just that and it's kind of long."

Meanwhile, the AP (11/29, Freedman) reports that "in this year when the Greater Yellowstone grizzly was delisted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service from federal protection under the Endangered Species Act and their management returned to Wyoming, Montana and Idaho, there have been 13 bear-human conflicts in the demographic monitoring area, injuries to four people and seven bears shot."

National Park Service

National Park Fee Hike Will Hurt Gateway Communities, Study Says.

Montana Public Radio (11/29) reports that “a proposed national park fee increase from $30 to $70 for a seven-day pass likely will negatively affect the gateway communities near the parks, according to a new study by the University of Montana.” The study “says that Yellowstone National Park gateway communities can expect to see an estimated loss of $3.4 million in spending in Yellowstone’s gateway communities as a result of higher park entrance fees.” UM’s Institute for Tourism and Recreation Research “says it expects reduced tourist revenues in gateway communities for other national parks as well.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Missoula Current \(MT\) (11/29).

The National Christmas Tree Lighting Is Thursday.

Prepare For A Dreadful Commute. The Washington Post (11/29, Lazo) reports that the annual lighting of the National Christmas Tree will take place Thursday. The event is expected “to disrupt traffic at the height of the afternoon rush.”

GV Expo: Mathew John Shares Four Steps To Creating Low-Budget Video.

TV Technology (11/29, Balderston) reports that Mathew John, the audiovisual production specialist for the National Park Service addressed the 2017 Government Video Expo crowd about creating “the most-watched video in the history of the National Park Service.” He did this without being given a “budget for the project.” According to the article, “to achieve this, John told the GV Expo audience, he employed four key methods for creating impactful videos: Trust your vision; take it all in; be creative; and give sincere credit.”

Why Cutting Historic Preservation Tax Credits Won’t Be Easy.

The Huffington Post (11/29) reports that “as Republicans in Congress contemplate scrapping the federal historic preservation tax credit, recent experience in several states shows that it may not be easy.” The article notes that “efforts to roll back similar tax credits in a handful of states have run into opposition from preservation advocates, small town mayors, commercial developers and builders, all of whom depend on the credits to fund the reconstruction and revitalization of historic downtowns and rural buildings — and argue the credits more than cover their costs by generating jobs and tax revenue.” Meanwhile, “supporters of the historic preservation tax credit are gearing up for what they expect to be a struggle to protect it.”

Muir Woods’ Neighbors Question Planned Parking System.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (11/29, Prado) reports that the National Park Service held meeting Tuesday night on the Muir Woods parking reservation system. According to the article, “residents who live around Muir Woods are taking a wait-and-see approach to a new parking reservation system that debuts in January, some voicing concern that confused tourists may flood their neighborhoods if they are turned away from the national monument.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Los Angeles Times (11/29, Forgione).

Officials Drafting Document To Guide Freedom Riders Monument.

The Anniston \(AL\) Star (11/29, Gaddy) reports that “more than a dozen local and federal officials met at McClellan on Wednesday to start the process of writing down what makes Anniston’s Freedom Riders National Monument special to the country and how leaders will best care for it.” According to the article, “Park Service staff and local leaders on Wednesday were on the second of a three-day workshop to create the first draft of what the agency calls a foundational document.” Ben West, chief planning officer for the southeast region of the National Park Service, said, “This document and the information we’re working on becomes the foundation for how the park will be managed in the future.”

Officials Plan To Cull At Least 600 Yellowstone Bison.

The AP (11/29) reports that “bison managers expect between 600 and 900 of the animals at Yellowstone National Park to be culled this winter by hunting or slaughter.” Federal, state and tribal officials met in Montana on Tuesday to discuss “the details for a winter management plan for the bison herds, agreeing the population should be decreased or stabilized.” According to park biologists, “the removal of 600 bison would keep the population relatively stable.”

Conservation Groups Sue Over Fire Island Deer Culling Plan.

Newsday \(NY\) (11/29, Dowdy) reports that "two environmental conservation organizations have filed a federal lawsuit against the Fire Island National Seashore and National Park Service to block a plan that would allow the hunting of white-tailed deer on Fire Island." According to the article, "Newark-based Wildlife Preserves and Washington-based Animal Welfare Institute filed the suit Wednesday in the U.S. District Court's Eastern District, which includes Long Island." The groups are "protesting provisions of a plan released in December 2015, which seeks to control the deer population, since they have no natural predators on the barrier island."

Gauthier Named Nez Perce National Historical Park Superintendent.

The Clearwater \(ID\) Tribune (11/29) reports that the National Park Service has named Mike Gauthier to be the next superintendent of Nez Perce National Historical Park. Gauthier succeeds Tami DeGrosky who retired in April.

Ellis Squires House Added To National Register Of Historic Places.

The East Hampton \(NY\) Press (11/29, Gordon) reports that the Ellis Squires Jr. House has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.

Office Of Insular Affairs

Bernie Sanders Introduces $146 Billion Bill To Rebuild And Modernize Infrastructure Of U.S.

Virgin Islands And Puerto Rico. The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (11/28) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders "on Tuesday introduced a massive bill in the U.S. Senate that would rebuild and modernize the infrastructures of the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, a measure costing $146 billion." The bill "would transform the territories' energy, housing, education, agriculture, transportation and health care systems." The legislation's "total sum of $146 billion would be segmented into three main categories: $62 billion would be granted to the governments of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands to address their fiscal challenges; $51 billion for economic development and $27 billion for infrastructure projects, according to a summary of the bill, seen here."

US Geological Survey

Culprit In Texas Quakes Likely Wastewater Injection, Say Researchers.

Natural Gas Intelligence (11/29, Passut) reports that researchers from Southern Methodist University and the U.S. Geological Survey published a report which says "seismic activity within two geologic regions in Texas supports the assertion that a series of earthquakes that has struck the area since 2009 were caused by human activity." The researchers analyzed fault displacements in the Forth Worth Basin and the northern Mississippi Embayment. According to the researchers, the most significant discovery is that seismic reflection data "found no evidence of active faults for the past 300 million years in the" Forth Worth Basin, but the northern Mississippi Embayment "has had active faults for the past 65 million years."

USGS Issues New Map Of Region.

The Leadville \(CO\) Herald Democrat (11/29) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey has "released a geologic map and companion pamphlet featuring the Arkansas River Valley region in north-central Colorado." According to the article, "in addition to new field work, the map's authors used the latest technology to create this compilation, including airborne laser technology, to visually display the landscape at a very high resolution. It captures mineral deposits and some previously unknown fault systems." USGS scientist Karl Kellogg, the first author of the map, said, "Hikers and river runners can access the ages and types of rocks they are seeing, including granites and metamorphic rocks over on and a half billion years old and gravels that are still being formed today. This publication will likely be the authoritative source for understanding the geology of the Upper Arkansas Valley for minerals and water resources, as well as landslide and earthquake hazards, for years to come."

Opinion Pieces

Cleaning Up At Interior.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (11/29, Bishop), Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources, writes that the Interior Department is facing a "crucial juncture and an opportunity to shed its bloated, antiquated and bureaucratic ways." According to Bishop, "despite the importance of the department's work, its ever-expanding missions have fueled a decline in its ability to provide efficient, effective and transparent service to the American public." Bishop claims that "costly and duplicative bureaucratic policies have slowed resources development, leading to an $8 billion decline in royalties during the past four years," and "this inefficiency ultimately shortchanges the American taxpayer." Bishop argues that "as Congress and the department consider reforms to address problems within the agency, the first step should be to bring decision-making and leadership back to the communities where Interior's policies and work impacts citizens the most — the western United States." Bishop asserts that "a shift away from the current Washington-centric management system toward a contemporary decentralized model that prioritizes accountability, transparency and service to the American people must occur. A primary responsibility of Congress is to conduct oversight of the executive branch."

Lack Of Transparency In National Monuments Review A Disservice To Americans.

For the "Congress" blog of The Hill (11/29), Sen. Dick Durbin criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for not making his recommendations on the Interior Department's review of recent national monument designations public. Durbin asserts that the Trump Administration's "effort to shrink our monuments is widely unpopular." He laments that "the lack of transparency throughout this process coupled with strong opposition isn't just frustrating for members of Congress, it's frustrating for every American who believes these public lands deserve protection for future generations."

Bill Would Streamline USBR, BIA Water Projects.

In an op-ed for the Star of Grand Coulee \(WA\) (11/29, Newhouse), Rep. Dan Newhouse writes that he has introduced H.R. 4419, Bureau of Reclamation and Bureau of Indian Affairs Water Project Streamlining Act, "to improve the Bureau of Reclamation and the Bureau of Indian Affairs' environmental planning and study process for new water projects." According to Newhouse, "this legislation would simply apply the same efficient processes that are now used by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to other federal agencies that oversee water infrastructure development." He claims that "this bill would speed up federal agencies' feasibility studies and develop a schedule for their completion."

Trump Talks Up GOP Senate Hopeful Hawley In Missouri Speech Touting Tax Plan.

Coverage of President Trump's speech in the St. Louis suburb of St. Charles, Missouri, intended to focus on tax cuts, highlights the President's attacks on Sen. Claire McCaskill and seeming endorsement of one of her potential Republican rivals in 2018. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (11/29, McDermott) reports that Trump "traveled to Missouri to whip up support for the Republican tax plan," and "in a speech that appeared to be a mix of prepared remarks and ad libs, Trump several times expressed his support Missouri Attorney General Josh Hawley in the state's Republican Senate primary next year." Though "at least three other Republicans are seeking the nomination," Trump "called Hawley 'our next senator.'"

The Kansas City \(MO\) Star (11/29, Hancock, Lowry) reports that Trump contrasted Hawley with McCaskill, saying, "He wants to see a big tax cut. ... Your current senator does not want a tax cut. That's not good." The Star says the comment had "the dual effect of pressuring McCaskill ahead of the vote and effectively functioning as an endorsement of Hawley over the other GOP candidates seeking the nomination."

The Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (11/29, Schmitt) reports that in his remarks before the crowd of about 1,000, Trump "said his focus was on helping 'the plumbers and the carpenters, the cops and the teachers, the truck drivers and the pipe fitters.'" He said, "It is not enough for the middle class to keep getting by. We want them to start getting ahead." Politico (11/29, McCaskill) reports that Trump "said 'the eyes of the world' are now on the Senate, where he said a successful vote 'will bring us one giant step closer to delivering an incredible victory for the American people: massive tax cuts and reform.'"

KSDK-TV St. Louis (11/29, 5:06 p.m. CST) reported Trump's "message was clear." Trump: "A vote to cut taxes is a vote to put America first again. ... It's time to take care of workers, to protect our communities, to rebuild our great country." KSDK added that the event was "less policy and more campaign-like." KMOV-TV St. Louis (11/29, 5:06 p.m. CST) reported that Trump was "trying to win over small-business owners who were invited here, as well as his supporters. ... The President plans to cut taxes, especially the corporate tax rate, down to 20% to try and spark economic growth."

The Washington Times (11/29, Miller) reports Trump "described the tax cut and tax reform legislation, which would reduce individual rates and slash corporate tax rates, as part of his 'America First' agenda." The New York Times (11/29, Tankersley, Appelbaum) reports that while Trump said the tax cuts will "'be rocket fuel' for the American economy...some economists question whether rocket fuel is needed at this point in the economic recovery and say that too much stimulus could ultimately backfire."

The AP (11/29) reports the President "appeared to give up on winning Democratic support," as he took aim at McCaskill, "a chief Republican target" in 2018, "and repeatedly boosting her rival." Trump said of McCaskill, "She wants your taxes to go up, she's weak on crime, she's weak on borders, she's weak on illegal immigration and she's weak on the military." The Hill (11/29, Jagoda) reports that Trump carried Missouri by 18 points in 2016, "and McCaskill's seat is thought to be one of the most vulnerable." Trump "has also given tax speeches in North Dakota, Indiana and Pennsylvania – all states with Democratic senators seeking reelection next year in states Trump carried."

The New York Times (11/29, Qiu) runs a fact-check piece on the President's Wednesday comments under the headline "Trump Sells Tax Plan With False Claims," writing that Trump "insisted that the tax bill is 'not good for me' or the wealthy." He said, "I keep hearing [Senate Minority Leader] Schumer, 'This is for the wealthy!' If it is, my friends don't know about it." However, the Times writes, "that is not supported by most analyses of the tax plans being considered in Congress." On ABC World News Tonight (11/29, story 4, 0:45, Muir), Jonathan Karl said that though the President is "insisting the Republican plan will actually hurt the rich...most independent analysts project the wealthy will benefit most." KTVI-TV St. Louis (11/29, 6:00 p.m. CST) reported Trump said that "Americans are going to see the largest tax cut in history, which he continues to reiterate even though some Republicans even conclude that that claim is not entirely true."

USA Today Analysis: Trump In Need Of A Win. In an analysis, USA Today (11/29, Jackson) writes that "for a man who centered his campaign for the White House around the promise of 'winning,' President Trump faces what may be a make-or-break political moment" with the tax bill. Republican political strategist Bruce Haynes said, "His brand was winning, and he needs a win.”

Hawley GOP Rival Praises Trump And Moore In Video. The Kansas City \(MO\) Star (11/29, Londberg) reports that one of Hawley’s GOP rivals, ex-congressional aide Courtland Sykes, “released a 40-minute ‘mini-documentary’ Tuesday in which he rails against the Washington Post, which reported sex assault allegations” against Alabama GOP Senate candidate Roy Moore. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (11/29, McDermott) reports that in the video, Sykes “lionizes” Trump and praises Moore.

Trump Promises New North Korea Sanctions After Latest Missile Test.

USA Today (11/29, Korte) reports President Trump on Wednesday promised “additional major sanctions” against North Korea in response to the regime’s latest missile test. “Just spoke to President XI JINPING of China concerning the provocative actions of North Korea,” Trump tweeted. “Additional major sanctions will be imposed on North Korea today. This situation will be handled!” Trump also spoke with the leaders of Japan and South Korea, but “didn’t immediately say who would be imposing the sanctions, or what they would entail.” White House deputy press secretary Raj Shah “declined to discuss the specific measures that Trump was talking about.” The AP (11/29, Pennington, Tong-Hyung), however, reports Secretary of State Tillerson “said the US could target financial institutions doing business with the North.”

The Washington Times (11/29, Boyer) reports that during the call with Xi, Trump urged the Chinese leader to use “all available levers” to pressure North Korea to halt its “provocations,” the White House said. “President Trump emphasized the need for China to use all available levers to convince North Korea to end its provocations and return to the path of denuclearization,” it added.

According to another Washington Times (11/29, Taylor) report, “sources close to the White House” say Trump’s “top aides have advised him to tread with ‘extreme caution’ toward” imposing “broad new sanctions against Chinese banks suspected of laundering money” for Kim’s regime. “We’ve got the Goldman Sachs faction that’s still pretty strong around the President, and they say if you start sanctioning Chinese banks, there will be ripple effects and it will damage the global economy,” one source told the Times.

Brian Todd reported on CNN’s Situation Room (11/29) that while Trump has vowed to retaliate with tougher sanctions, “Kim [Jong-un]’s regime is emboldened. A North Korean official telling CNN they are not interested in diplomacy with the US until they have demonstrated their full nuclear capabilities.”

Also yesterday, USA Today (11/29, Durando) reports Trump “took another dig” at Kim, calling him “a sick puppy.” During an appearance in Missouri to discuss tax reform, he “digressed and took an impromptu shot” at “Little Rocket Man.” Wolf Blitzer reported on CNN’s Situation Room (11/29) that Trump initially responded to North Korea’s latest launch with “restraint” on Twitter, but in Missouri on Wednesday the President “revived his attack” against Kim Jong-un. CNN showed Trump saying, “Little Rocket Man. ... He is a sick puppy.”

Bloomberg News (11/29, Tweed) says Trump has “sent mixed signals toward North Korea over the past month, at one point calling for Kim to make a deal and then slapping him for being a state sponsor of terrorism.” A Wall Street Journal (11/29) editorial says the US and China have yet to impose the toughest sanctions possible against Pyongyang. The Journal concedes that while more pressure may not work in the end, the alternatives are either acquiescence or go to war.

NBC Nightly News (11/29, story 6, 0:25, Holt), meanwhile, reported that in an emergency UN Security Council meeting Wednesday, Ambassador Haley “said North Korea’s missile launch Tuesday brings the US closer to a war it doesn’t want. But if it comes, Haley warned, the regime will be ‘utterly destroyed.’” Noting that Tillerson “says he still wants to give peace a chance,” Fox News’ Special Report (11/29) showed Haley saying, “We have never sought war with North Korea and still today we do not seek it. If war does come, it will be because of continued acts of aggression like we witnessed yesterday. And if war comes, make no mistake, the North Korean regime will be utterly destroyed.”

Reuters (11/29, Nichols, Kim) reports Haley said the US “has asked China to cut off oil supply to North Korea,” and the Washington Examiner (11/29, Gehrke) reports she “also said that the UN should punish North Korea diplomatically.” Said Haley, “We should continue to treat North Korea as the international pariah it has become by taking its UN rights and privileges away, including its voting powers.”

Greg Palkot reported on Fox News’ Special Report (11/29) that South Korea responded to the North’s test by staging its own missile drill. Fox showed South Korean President Moon Jae-in saying the latest test “not only increase[s] tension on the Korean peninsula, but gravely endangers the international peace and security.” Palkot added that even “allies of Kim Jong-un showed concern.” Russia “condemn[ed] the launch,” and Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Geng Shuang was shown saying, “China is gravely concerned about and strongly opposed” to the latest test. The Washington Times (11/29, Taylor) says China “reacted cautiously” Wednesday to the latest North Korean missile test.

ABC World News Tonight (11/29, story 6, 0:30, Muir) reported that new images released Wednesday night show Kim Jong-un and North Korean military officials “cheering” after the launch of a “new type of rocket, nuclear ready and able to reach anywhere in the mainland United States.”

A Washington Post (11/29, Taylor) analysis says this week’s missile test “quickly raised a number of questions for the United States and its allies,” but for “many observers – particularly those in East Asia — a more immediate query sprang to mind: Why would Pyongyang test a ballistic missile in the middle of a bitterly cold night?” The Post says “late tests may serve a broader strategy instead – perhaps showing that North Korea can launch a missile at anytime and anywhere with little warning, as they would have to in a real wartime scenario.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/29, Jeong, Cheng), meanwhile, says the latest test appeared to be designed to avoid crossing red lines that could provoke military action by the US, while demonstrating a technical advance.

David E. Sanger writes in the New York Times (11/29) that when Defense Secretary Mattis declared Tuesday that North Korea now had the missile capability to “threaten everywhere in the world, basically,” he “hinted at a long-running debate inside the United States government: Can the same strategy that worked against the Soviet Union – mutually assured destruction – also work against a far smaller adversary?” Sanger says, “The answer is yes, of course it can, if the problem is defined as keeping Pyongyang from unleashing a surprise attack on the continental United States. Or no, it probably can’t, if the problem of containing North Korea is more complex than simply protecting Los Angeles and Washington.”

A front-page story in the Washington Post (11/29, A1, Fifield), meanwhile, says that “beyond the bluster and the boasting, some analysts see a tiny glimmer of hope. Counterintuitive as it may seem, could the regime – with its pronouncement that it has completed its missile development – now be more open to talks with the United States?” North Korea’s “claims to have the entire United States in range do appear to be justified, experts said,” but it has “not proved that North Korea has the ability to attach a warhead to the missile and have it survive reentry into Earth’s atmosphere, let alone deliver it to a target.”

The New York Times (11/29) editorializes similarly says that this week’s test “paradoxically...could signal a chance for a new diplomatic opening.” While acknowledging that there are “many reasons to be skeptical of the North and pessimistic about the prospects for solving the crisis,” the Times says that “with regional tensions and the risk of miscalculation so acute, the United States and others, including China, Russia, South Korea and Japan, need to exhaust all avenues in the search for ways to limit the North Korean program.”

USA Today Urges Congress To Explore Limiting Trump’s “First-Strike” Authority. A USA Today (11/29) editorial says Trump’s “bombastic rhetoric, combined with his continuing barrage of seemingly unhinged tweets, has raised considerable angst about the president’s sole authority to unleash the Pentagon’s 1,800 deployed nuclear weapons – a reality that cries out for some kind of reassurance that an impulsive president cannot simply wreak havoc on a whim.” It says a “valuable public debate is unfolding on steps that might be taken to limit first-strike authority,” and argues that “exploring what new protocols might be appropriate, is one of Congress’ most urgent tasks.”

Brian P. McKeon, who served as principal deputy undersecretary of Defense for policy during the Obama Administration, writes in USA Today (11/29) that while “several senators are understandably concerned that Trump’s mercurial behavior could lead to nuclear war with North Korea...nonetheless, it would be a mistake to alter the system for authorizing nuclear weapons use.”

Trump Roundly Condemned For Retweeting Anti-Muslim Videos.

President Trump’s retweeting of three anti-Muslim videos posted by a leader of a far-right British political party gets wide and universally negative coverage, with reports saying that at least one of the videos has been discredited and several outlets reporting that Trump’s action was lauded by ex-KKK leader David Duke. Newspaper editorials argue that the President is encouraging anti-Muslim extremism, with the New York Daily News (11/29) directly stating that Trump is “mentally unwell and viciously lashing out.”

ABC World News Tonight (11/29, story 3, 1:50, Muir) reported that Trump retweeted three “inflammatory videos, one proven false, and the White House [is] saying whether the videos are real or not, it doesn’t matter.” ABC’s Jonathan Karl: “The President today avoided questions about the extremist videos he re-tweeted, videos that have provoked an international backlash. ... The White House insists this is about strong borders. One of the videos claims to show a Muslim migrant in the Netherlands beating a Dutch boy. But tonight, the Embassy of the Netherlands says that’s not true. They say the attacker was actually Dutch, tweeting, ‘Facts do matter.’ Still, the White House says it doesn’t matter if videos the President tweets are accurate.” White House press secretary Sarah Sanders: “Look, again, whether it’s a real video, the threat is real and that is what the President is talking about.” Karl: “Tonight, KKK leader David Duke tweeted, ‘Thank God for Trump. That’s why we love him.’”

The CBS Evening News (11/29, story 6, 2:40, Mason) reported that the “re-tweets were widely condemned, even by the President’s political allies, British Prime Minister Theresa May, and television host Piers Morgan, who won Mr. Trump’s ‘Celebrity Apprentice.’” CBS’ Mark Phillips reported that Trump “re-tweeted three old, largely discredited videos.” One purportedly “shows extremists throwing somebody off a roof. It turned out to be a fight between rival political factions in Egypt, and a crime for which the perpetrators were sentenced to death. Another showed a jihadist fighter destroying a Christian statue, and a third claimed to show an Islamic immigrant in the Netherlands attacking a Dutch boy on crutches. It turns out both the attacker and victim were born and bred in Holland.” Politico (11/29, Nelson) reports that Morgan “reacted to Trump’s retweets with shock, writing on Twitter on Wednesday: ‘What the hell are you doing retweeting a bunch of unverified videos by Britain First, a bunch of disgustingly racist far-right extremists?’”

On NBC Nightly News (11/29, story 4, 2:25, Holt), Kristen Welker reported that the “backlash [was] immediate on Capitol Hill.” Sen. Lindsey Graham: “It empowers fringe elements on the right who had been associated with religious bigotry.” Rep. Keith Ellison (D-MN): “I think they are also a part of his continuing hatred against Muslims, but what he’s really trying to do is to divide Americans.” Welker: “Former KKK leader David Duke praised the President’s re-tweets. ... Graham firing back, saying anything that makes David Duke happy is probably a bad thing.” Sen. Cory Gardner said on CNN’s Situation Room (11/29), “I don’t agree with the President on this.”

USA Today (11/29, Jackson, Onyanga-Omara) reports that the retweets “earned the president rebukes from the British and Dutch governments, Muslim groups, and some Republican lawmakers.” The New York Times (11/29, A1, Sullivan, Bilefsky) writes, “It is unusual to see an American president promote this type of content. But the videos are consistent with how Mr. Trump has approached Islam, particularly during the 2016 presidential campaign, when he said, ‘Islam hates us’ and called for a ‘total and complete shutdown’ of Muslims coming to the United States.” The Times also reports that Trump’s “tweets were welcomed” by Duke.

The AP (11/30, Lucey, Lawless) reports that Sanders “said Trump was simply promoting border security and suggested that verifying the content was not a top concern.” Dana Bash said on CNN’s Situation Room (11/29), “Sarah Huckabee Sanders found herself in the very familiar position of having to defend the indefensible today. I don’t know how she does it, but, you know, she did what she needed to do and there wasn’t a whole lot else she could say, I think, except maybe if she wanted to quit.” Michael Gerson of the Washington Post tweeted, “The White House that complains almost daily about ‘fake news’ doesn’t care if these videos are fake news as long they serve real purposes. Sanders just tacitly endorsed the concept of propaganda, and she said it out loud.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/29, Nicholas, Douglas) reports that White House staffers were reportedly caught off guard by the retweets. One official said that Trump was simply scrolling through social media and “just hit the retweet button.” Roll Call (11/29, Bennett) reports that the President shared the tweets “without comment, and without explaining the context of each video.”

Anderson Cooper said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (11/29) that by retweeting “hate propaganda from a far-right extremist group,” Trump “embraced the message of racist, bigoted bullies.” Former State Department spokesman John Kirby said on CNN’s Situation Room (11/29), “This feeds into the narrative of ISIS. They see this as a clash of cultures between the East and West, between Islam and Christianity and Judaism and this feeds right into it. So it’s going to probably encourage, if not incite, more violence by some of these extremist groups.”

Rep. Lloyd Doggett (D-TX) tweeted, “Our Nation deserves so much more from our leaders than this untruthful, shameful fear-mongering.” Rep. Raúl Grijalva (D-AZ) tweeted, “First his failed #MuslimBan, now retweeting anti-Muslim videos. Trump is showing his true colors." Rep. Hank Johnson (D-GA) tweeted, "Shameful that President Trump uses his position to promote inflammatory attacks on all Muslims by validating propaganda of one extremist organization."

Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-CA) tweeted, "Spreading hate, lies and disinformation to 44 million followers isn't Presidential, it's dangerous and emboldens violence." Rep. Grace Napolitano (D-CA) tweeted, "President Trump's tweets this morning are anti-Muslim, anti-human and anti-American." Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) tweeted, "Hate crimes are on the rise, so what does @POTUS do? Spends the morning stoking fear of Muslims with videos from a hate group. America is better than this, even if our President is not."

The Los Angeles Times (11/29) editorializes, "Another day, another bizarre and irresponsible tweet by the president of the United States. ... But President Trump's retweeting early Wednesday of a series of anti-Muslim videos posted by a far-right figure in Britain is worthy of comment – and condemnation." The retweeting "continues – indeed, escalates – Trump's demonization of Muslims," and Trump "also has given aid and comfort to anti-Muslim bigots."

The Washington Post (11/29) editorializes, "Trump's promotion of vicious propaganda risks encouraging further violence and emboldening those who seek to drum up hate. That includes figures such as former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke, who crowed over Mr. Trump's refusal to condemn far-right violence in Charlottesville and wrote in response to the president's Wednesday tweets, 'Thank God for Trump!'"

The New York Daily News (11/29) editorializes, "After his latest spasm of deranged tweets, only those completely under his spell can deny what growing numbers of Americans have long suspected: The President of the United States is profoundly unstable. He is mad. He is, by any honest layman's definition, mentally unwell and viciously lashing out."

Carl Bildt of the Council on Foreign Relations tweeted, "It truly defies belief that the President of the United States of America starts his day by scanning extreme anti-Muslim social media and then retweets them to the entire world."

The New York Times (11/29, A1, Bilefsky, Castle) profiles Britain First, "a fringe group that insists that white Christian civilization is under threat from Muslims," under the headline "British Far-Right Group Exults Over Attention From Trump." Bloomberg News (11/29, Hunter, Talev) and The Hill (11/29, Fabian) also have reports.

Ellison: Trump A "Racist." The Guardian \(UK\) (11/29, Siddiqui) reports that Rep. Ellison said in an interview, "The president is racist. There's no doubt about that in my mind. ... He is a politician who is cynically trying to divide people along racial and religious lines."

AP Fact Check: Dutch Perpetrator Not An Immigrant. In a fact-check piece, the AP (11/29, Woodward) writes, "Trump's penchant for sharing doctored images and making false statements on Twitter means that content tweeted or retweeted by the president should be viewed skeptically." The New York Times (11/29, Specia) reports, "The first video was of a teenager attacking another boy, and was presented in the tweet as footage of a 'Muslim migrant' attacking a Dutch boy. But according to local officials, both boys are Dutch, and neither is a migrant." The Washington Times (11/29, Shepherd) reports, "Shortly before 2:30 p.m. EST, the Dutch embassy's Twitter account responded to Mr. Trump's retweet, saying, 'Facts do matter. The perpetrator of the violent act in this video was born and raised in the Netherlands. He received and completed his sentence under Dutch law.'" But Breitbart (11/29, Munro) criticizes "progressives who focused on the process, not the message."

Trump Responds To May, Tells Her To Focus On "Radical Islamic Terrorism" In UK. The Washington Post (11/29, A1, Booth, Adam) reports, "In a sharp personal rebuke, the British government told President Trump he was 'wrong' to retweet" the videos. The Washington Times (11/29, Boyer) reports that White House spokesman Raj Shah "told reporters that the president 'has the greatest respect for the British people and for Prime Minister May.'" However, Bloomberg News (11/29, Hunter, Olorunnipa, Talev) reports that Trump "escalated [the] trans-Atlantic spat" by tweeting, ".@Theresa_May, don't focus on me, focus on the destructive Radical Islamic Terrorism that is taking place within the United Kingdom. We are doing just fine!"

Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse said on CNN's Situation Room (11/29), "Remember for a minute that he holds the office that was held by Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and that the Prime Minister holds the office that was once held by Winston Churchill. ... And now think of an American President who is retweeting what are probably false, and certainly racist, tweets from a foreign extremist group drawing a rebuke from the UK Prime Minister. The degree to which this relationship and our leadership has been degraded against what we saw in the days of World War II is just really unthinkable and unfathomable."

WPost A1 Analysis: Trump "Acting Emboldened" Despite Regular Condemnation. The

Washington Post (11/29, A1, Rucker, Parker) writes on its front page, "Trump this week disseminated on social media three inflammatory and unverified anti-Muslim videos, took glee in the firing of a news anchor for sexual harassment allegations despite facing more than a dozen of his own accusers and used a ceremony honoring Navajo war heroes to malign a senator with a derogatory nickname, 'Pocahontas.'" But "despite the now-routine condemnations, the president is acting emboldened." The Post writes that "people close to" the President say that he "has internalized the belief that he can largely operate with impunity."

White House Not Expecting A Government Shutdown.

Reuters (11/29) reports the White House said Wednesday that while it is not expecting a government shutdown next month, it "has contingency plans in place if the US Congress fails to reach a deal on funding the government by a Dec. 8 deadline." Traveling with the President on Air Force One, White House spokesman Raj Shah told reporters, "We are not anticipating a shutdown. We think that we'll be able to work together. But the developments of the last 24 hours are discouraging. ... There are always contingencies in place. We hope it doesn't get to that."

As Senate Votes To Start Tax Cut Debate, Pence Dines With Wavering Republicans.

Politico (11/29, Nussbaum) reports that a "senior administration official" said Vice President Pence was to host four Republican senators at his residence for dinner Wednesday. Pence's guests were to include Sens. James Lankford, David Perdue, and Steve Daines, as well as Jeff Flake, "who has clashed fiercely and publicly with President Donald Trump." The meeting comes ahead of an expected Senate vote on "a major tax cut, the administration's top legislative priority." Flake and Lankford "are among a group of Republican senators who have raised concerns about how much the tax cut could add to the national debt."

Meanwhile, the Senate voted 52-48 Wednesday to begin debate on the tax measure. The Washington Post (11/29, Werner, Paletta, Debonis) says the "party-line vote was an important victory for Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and President Trump," but "it was not a guarantee of ultimate success, as several Republican lawmakers agreed to open debate on the bill so they could pursue amendments and have not yet committed to voting for final passage." USA Today (11/29, Shesgreen, Collins) says the vote paved the way "for a contentious floor fight even as GOP negotiators were still haggling over major changes behind closed doors." Some Republicans who voted to begin debate "are not yet committed to supporting the final measure." McConnell said on Fox News' The Ingraham Angle (11/29), "There will be plenty of amendments both on the Republican side and the Democratic side. But what I think we have 100 percent agreement on is that we want to do comprehensive tax reform for the first time since the second Reagan Administration. You know, the dials may twist a little bit as we go along, but the core is middle class tax relief and making our businesses more competitive against other businesses around the world and to keep our jobs here in this country."

Republican leaders "still lack firm commitments from enough of their members to ensure passage later in the week," the New York Times (11/29, Kaplan, Rappeport) reports. As GOP leaders try to secure sufficient votes to pass the measure, changes under consideration include an idea floated by Sens. Marco Rubio and Mike Lee to "nudge the corporate tax rate from the proposed 20 percent rate to 22 percent," which "would still result in a large cut from the current top rate of 35 percent, but would give lawmakers" additional funds to use for an expanded child tax credit. However, "the White House was not receptive." Rubio said on Fox News' The Ingraham Angle (11/29), "A lot of people, because they make $40,000 a year, they don't get to fully benefit from the child tax credit because they don't have a lot of income tax liability but they pay payroll tax. They are the working people in this country that have been ignored and forgotten. They are the people that elected President Trump because they have been not just ignored but disrespected. All this says is you are going to keep more of your own money. That's what the amendment does."

The Wall Street Journal (11/29, A1, Hughes, Rubin) quotes White House spokesman Raj Shah as saying that President Trump "would not support raising the corporate rate as outlined" in the amendment. Shah added, "We do support the child tax credit. ... We also think it's important to make businesses more competitive." In an editorial the Wall Street Journal (11/29) blasts the Rubio-Lee amendment, saying the proposal to increase the corporate tax rate would be destructive and the plan to make the increase the child tax credit would create a disincentive to work.

The Washington Examiner (11/29, Ferrechio) says Senate passage "is not yet assured" as "several Republicans remain undecided, including Sens. John McCain" and Flake. In addition, Sen. Bob Corker "said he is seeking a language that would raise taxes or impose spending cuts if the tax reductions that are part of the legislation lead to an increase in the deficit," and Sens. Ron Johnson Steve Daines "are seeking an expansion of tax cuts for small businesses in exchange for their support." Sen. Susan Collins "said she has filed a list of amendments, including one that would restore a deduction for state and local property taxes but install a $10,000 cap."

In his column for the Wall Street Journal (11/29), Karl Rove writes that Trump has not made a convincing case for tax cuts. Rove argues that occasional rallies promising "big, beautiful tax cut" will not to win over wavering Republicans, particularly when coupled with Twitter attacks on senators whose votes he needs. Politico (11/29, Kim) takes a more optimistic view, reporting that "the GOP holdouts...are falling into place for Republican leadership." Lankford "said Wednesday morning that he would support the overhaul, particularly with a backstop measure meant to help guard against a ballooning deficit," and "another wavering GOP senator," Sen. Jerry Moran "said he would back the bill, too." Johnson and Corker, Politico adds, "voted in favor of the measure in the Senate Budget Committee on Tuesday after threatening to withhold their votes." However, Politico says McCain and Flake are "still wildcards for the GOP." The Hill (11/29, Shelbourne) cites an MSNBC reporter who said Sen. Lisa Murkowski "will vote for the tax legislation."

Democratic Sen. Chris Coons said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/29), "A number of real fiscal conservatives who continue to be concerned about deficits and debt like Senator Corker, are trying to add into this bill some sort of trigger mechanism that would roll back some of the bigger tax cuts if the growth that's promised doesn't materialize and deficits soar. That might be too little, too late to fix the hole in our annual budget that would be caused by this bill but I at least commend Sen. Corker for trying to slow down this hurtling train and look at it and try to fix it. I'm still struck by the difference between what Donald Trump campaigned on and what this bill is actually delivering, which will be significant cuts that will harm lots of middle class Americans by eliminating all sorts of things on which they rely and giving permanent tax cuts to America's corporations."

The President later tweeted, "Funny to hear the Democrats talking about the National Debt when President Obama doubled it in only 8 years!"

The New York Times (11/29, Stolberg)says while Senate Republicans "entered the final stages of the health care push earlier this year," with the proposal "clearly on its last legs," on the tax measure, Republicans "are approaching the finish line in a fundamentally different posture: confident, cooperative, even cocky." However, in his column for the New York Times (11/29, Rosenthal) Andrew Rosenthal questions wavering GOP senators' claim that Trump "assured them over lunch that he's going to fix the bill," arguing that "no one can rely on anything Trump says."

NYTimes: Trump Sought Larger Tax Cut For Rich While Ivanka Wanted Expanded Child Tax Credit. The New York Times (11/29, Tankersley) reports that Trump in "a suggestion that pitted his priorities against his daughter and Republican senators intent on helping the middle class," urged senators to repeal the ACA's individual mandate "and use the proceeds to slash the top tax rate paid by the richest Americans." Ultimately, he "accepted only a partial victory," getting the repeal of the individual mandate, but giving up on "an income tax rate cut that would have directly benefited him personally. Instead, Ivanka Trump and her allies in the Senate prevailed in their push to include an expanded child tax credit." The Times cites "two White House officials" who disputed that "Ms. Trump had split with her father." According to the officials, "middle-income tax relief was one of the president's priorities and that Ms. Trump worked in lock step with the administration on all aspects of tax reform."

NBC: Tax Bill Could Make College Less Affordable. NBC Nightly News (11/29, story 5, 2:05, Holt) examined the potential impact of the Republican tax plans on college education, reporting that the House bill "would do away with many deductions that lower and middle class families rely on to make college more afford." NBC (Costello) added that across the country Wednesday, there were "walkouts and protests at Republican plans to target college students." Twelve million Americans would "no longer allowed to deduct student loan interest from their taxes." Tuition waivers for graduate students would be treated "as income, hitting them with a 400 percent tax increase, yet little income to pay for it." NBC added that while "the President insists tax reform is good for the country overall," there is "concern that a plan which cuts taxes on corporations and the rich could make college less affordable for millions of families."

NYTimes Analysis: Johnson, Daines Are Wrong About Taxation Of Pass-Throughs. A New York Times (11/29, Cohen) analysis says that while Johnson and Daines "say they are withholding their support to stick up for Main Street” because “big corporations...are being given preferential treatment compared with smaller businesses that are organized differently and known as pass-throughs,” the “David-and-Goliath story” they “are spinning...is wrong.” Pass-throughs bear a lower tax burden than corporations and would continue to under both the House and Senate versions of the bill.

“Trigger” Proposal Draws Criticism. Reuters (11/29, Morgan, Cornwell) reports that Corker’s “trigger proposal has become a target of growing criticism among conservative Republicans and lobbyists, including interest groups aligned with the billionaire industrialists Charles and David Koch, who say the prospect of tax hikes could undermine future economic growth.” A Washington Post (11/29) editorial argues that while GOP leaders have been considering a trigger to “mollify” Corker and others, “the trigger ideas floating around the Senate fall short.” While “a good trigger would require tax adjustments large enough to fully offset any revenue shortfall the bill created,” the versions being discussed “reportedly would cover only $350 billion worth of shortfalls over 10 years.” The Post argues that a “weak trigger provision...would make the tax bill only somewhat less grotesque.”

Simpson, Bowles: Senators Face “Moment Of Truth” For Country’s Fiscal Future. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (11/29), former Sen. Alan Simpson, and former White House chief of staff Erskine Bowles, who co-chaired the National Commission on Fiscal Responsibility and Reform, write that the GOP tax plan “reads as if it were developed for a country whose debt problems have been solved, when in reality debt is the highest it has ever been other than around World War II.” They argue that lawmakers who care about “our nation’s fiscal future” face a “moment of truth” in which they “can return to the era of deficit denial, or they can stand up for future generations.”

WSJournal Analysis: US Economy Reaches Its Potential Output For First Time In Decade.

The US economy is running at full potential for the first time in over a decade, the Wall Street Journal (11/29, Leubsdorf) reports, as actual output of goods and services is equal to the supply of workers and productive inputs. S&P Global Ratings Chief US Economist Beth Ann Bovino said, “It’s the sweet spot. We’d like to be there for some time, but let’s see how long it lasts.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Senate Is Rushing To Pass Its Tax Bill Because It Stinks.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/29) argues that Senate Republicans’ objective with the tax bill is “speed and bowling over the opposition in hopes of claiming a partisan victory.” The Times adds that the nation should be “dismayed by the way senators...appear to be backing away from their principled objections based on half-measures promised by President Trump and the majority leader, Mitch McConnell, that will not address its big flaws.” The Times lists several provisions that “deserve to be called out,” saying they were “smuggled into the bill to please big Republican donors,” and “would never survive a more transparent process.”

“Is North Korea’s Nuclear Test A Sign Of Hope?” The New York Times (11/29) editorializes that North Korea’s missile test this week “paradoxically...could signal a chance for a new diplomatic opening.” While acknowledging that there are “many reasons to be skeptical of the North and pessimistic about the prospects for solving the crisis,” the Times says that “with regional tensions and the risk of miscalculation so acute, the United States and others, including China, Russia, South Korea and Japan, need to exhaust all avenues in the search for ways to limit the North Korean program.”

“Justice Long Delayed For Nazi Collaborator.” The New York Times (11/29) editorializes that 94-year-old Jakiw Palij, a man living in Queens who was a guard at “a Nazi camp that trained men who carried out orders to round up Jews for extermination” in his youth, should not have been allowed into this country at all, and should ideally be deported. The US government has had difficulty deporting Palij for two reasons: first, “he is not subject to American jurisprudence because the crimes were committed abroad and he is no longer a United States citizen;” second, “no country wants him.” The Times notes that it is not yet apparent if Rex Tillerson will take a new request to try to find another destination for Palij to heart.

Washington Post.

“Trump Retweets Hate.” The Washington Post (11/29) editorializes, “Trump’s promotion of vicious propaganda risks encouraging further violence and emboldening those who seek to drum up hate. That includes figures such as former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke, who crowed over Mr. Trump's refusal to condemn far-right violence in Charlottesville and wrote in response to the president's Wednesday tweets, 'Thank God for Trump!'"

"Republicans May Add A 'Trigger' To Their Tax Bill. It Won't Work." A Washington Post (11/29) editorial argues that while GOP leaders have been considering a trigger that would raise taxes if growth doesn't generate as much revenue as expected to "mollify" Sen. Bob Corker and others, "the trigger ideas floating around the Senate fall short." While "a good trigger would require tax adjustments large enough to fully offset any revenue shortfall the bill created," the versions being discussed "reportedly would cover only $350 billion worth of shortfalls over 10 years." The Post argues that a "weak trigger provision...would make the tax bill only somewhat less grotesque."

"Congress Must Do Right By Victims Of Harassment." The Washington Post (11/29) editorializes that in order to offer justice to victims of sexual harassment, the Congressional Office of Compliance must release more specific data regarding how harassment cases have been resolved in the past. This is also necessary to inform taxpayers of how much of their money was spent settling harassment complaints. The Post opines that House and Senate leadership must investigate the alleged misconduct of both Rep. John Conyers and Sen. Al Franken, respectively.

Wall Street Journal.

"Maximum Pressure On North Korea." A Wall Street Journal (11/29) editorial says the US and China have yet to impose the toughest sanctions possible against Pyongyang. The Journal concedes that while more pressure may not work in the end, the alternatives are either acquiescence or go to war.

"The Law Is What It Says." The Wall Street Journal (11/29) editorializes that the Supreme Court Justices' responses to oral arguments in Digital Realty Trust, Inc. v. Somers were an encouraging counter to an argument from Somers that would seek to rewrite Dodd-Frank based on a questionable interpretation of Congressional intent. Even the liberal Justices of the Court were able to recognize the clear language of the law that directly contradicted Somers' interpretation of it. The Journal opines that the responses invoked the spirit of Antonin Scalia.

"The Rubio-Schumer Amendment." In an editorial the Wall Street Journal (11/29) blasts an amendment from Sens. Marco Rubio and Mike Lee to increase the Senate tax bill's from the proposed 20 percent rate to 22 percent to pay for an expanded child tax credit, saying the proposal to increase the corporate tax rate would be destructive and the plan to make the increase the child tax credit would create a disincentive to work.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: [Referring to firing of Matt Lauer for sexual misconduct] “As far as Matt Lauer goes, what happens now? Does he have to do an emotional sit-down interview with himself?”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Meanwhile, North Korea launched another missile yesterday. Apparently, now they can reach every part of the mainland of the United States, which is scary, of course. And I know it sounds terrible, but speaking for those of us who live here on the West Coast, there’s something comforting about the fact that it’s not just us who have to worry about this anymore. Now we’re all in it together. Congratulations.”

Stephen Colbert: “Welcome to the Late Show. I’m your host, Stephen Colbert. I am one of the few men still allowed on television because today, Matt Lauer was let go from NBC’s morning show, the Today show, this morning today. According to the chairman of NBC News, Lauer was fired due to ‘inappropriate sexual behavior in the workplace,’ not to be confused with ‘appropriate’ sexual behavior the workplace. Because that does not exist.”

James Corden: “The Christmas season is upon us, which means this is the first time that Melania Trump gets to decorate the White House for the holidays. Not everyone is loving it. Take a look at one of the hallways she decorated for Christmas. [Corden shows his audience a picture of a shadowy, dimly lit hallway lined with trees casting shadows everywhere.] Look at that. No wonder Pelosi and Schumer didn’t show up for that meeting. Would you walk down that hallway? That hallway doesn’t say ‘Merry Christmas 2017’ as much as it says, ‘Stranger Things: Season

Three.”

Trevor Noah: “First, let’s start our show the same way that the Today show did, by telling you that Matt Lauer got fired.”

Trevor Noah: “Now North Korea has a missile that can hit anywhere in the US, which is really scary. I mean, that means Kim Jong-Un could even hit Toledo, Ohio, America’s favorite and most important city, where America keeps all of the weapons and money and jewels.”

Jimmy Fallon: “There is a big story today. NBC has fired Matt Lauer from the Today show after he was accused of inappropriate sexual behavior. So, if you’re wondering where in the world is Matt Lauer, he’s probably at a bar with Charlie Rose.”

Jimmy Fallon: “President Trump tweeted about Matt Lauer being fired and went on to attack NBC News executives and Joe Scarborough. Then Kim Jong-Un was like, ‘Uh, did you guys not see that missile yesterday or, I mean, I know you’re busy, but I can re-launch it or something. Are you kidding me here?’”

Jimmy Fallon: “Yesterday, Trump left two seats empty at the White House to symbolize Chuck Schumer and Nancy Pelosi skipping their meeting. ... But it backfired when those empty seats reminded him of his inauguration.”

Seth Meyers: “Former President Obama will meet with the leaders of China and India during an upcoming trip abroad, while President Trump will meet with who he thinks are leaders of China and India.”

Seth Meyers: “According to recent analysis, the FCC received more than a million fake comments in favor of repealing net neutrality. It’s the most fake comments ever found outside a high school reunion. ‘Oh, my God, you look great!’”

Seth Meyers: “According to reports, Disney’s Hall of Presidents is scheduled to debut their Donald Trump statue some time before Christmas. Until then, they’re keeping him in the Haunted Mansion.”

Conan O’Brien: “Former Prairie Home Companion host Garrison Keillor has been fired by Minnesota Public Radio over allegations of sexually inappropriate behavior. Keillor issued an apology to his three living fans.”

Conan O’Brien: “Two properties associated with Donald Trump have decided to remove his name from their buildings. Sadly, neither one is the White House.”

Interior Secretary Zinke To Visit Florida This Week.

The Tampa Bay \(FL\) Times (10/4, Leary) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will travel to Florida on Thursday to "conduct on-the-ground assessments of hurricane damage at National Park Service locations and to receive a briefing on Everglades Restoration," according to a release. On Thursday, Zinke will receive "a briefing on infrastructure upgrades and Everglades restoration at Lake Okeechobee." On Friday, Zinke will assess "hurricane damage and clean-up at Big Cypress National Preserve." And Saturday, Zinke will "hold a media event with Sen. Marco Rubio and members of the congressional delegation."

Additional coverage was provided by the Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (10/4, Bennett) and WJXT-TV Jacksonville, FL (10/4).

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Visits Okefenokee Swamp. The Florida Times-Union (10/4, Dickson) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke visited Okefenokee National Wildlife and held "closed door talks with the refuge management." The Okefenokee Swamp is "a watery field right now after the persistent late spring and early summer rain that extinguished the enormous West Mims Fire and more recently a dousing from Tropical Storm Irma." Zinke "had said he will concentrate on restoring revenue streams that could meet a lot of shortages in the National Park Service and others."

House GOP Wants To Compare Interior's Ryan Zinke's Travel With Predecessors.

The Washington Examiner (10/4, Ferrechio) reports that "House Republicans want to compare the travel records of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke with those of the department heads during President Obama's administration." House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Rob Bishop "asked Zinke to provide records on the use of private, chartered, rented, and government-owned aircraft by secretaries of the interior dating back to Obama's first day in office." Bishop is looking "to compare non-commercial aircraft use by Obama Interior Secretaries Ken Salazar (2009-2013) and Sally Jewell (2013-2017) to that of Zinke, who is under investigation by the department's inspector general for using chartered and military planes for official travel that was also mixed with political business.”

Also reporting are Roll Call (10/4), the AP (10/4), Politico Morning Energy (10/4, Adragna), and Law360 (10/4, Westney).

Interior Chief Dismisses Criticism Of Travel With Vulgarity. The AP (10/4, DALY, BYNUM) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Wednesday “strongly defended his use of private charter flights for government business, calling criticism of his taxpayer-financed travel ‘complete and utter bull----’ and driven by politics.” Zinke dismissed “news reports that he took at least three private flights costing taxpayers a total of $20,000 since taking office in March, saying all his travel is ‘legal, ethical. All the trips went through absolute due diligence.’” Zinke “said that in his job, everything he does ‘goes through absolute legal review.’”

Investigations Opened Into Zinke’s Meeting With Golden Knights Hockey Team. CNN (10/4, Green) reports that “a summer visit that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke made to the Vegas Golden Knights hockey team is now under two investigations by federal watchdogs.” The Interior Department’s inspector general has “added concerns about Zinke’s meeting with the new NHL team and use of a private jet from Las Vegas to an investigation it opened Friday looking into the secretary’s travel, an IG spokesperson confirmed to CNN Wednesday.” The Office of Special Counsel has “also opened a Hatch Act investigation into Zinke’s meeting with the hockey team.”

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (10/4, Thomsen).

Interior Secretary Draws Flak For Mixing Politics, Official Travel. Politico (10/5, Lefebvre, Whieldon) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is drawing scrutiny over his “habit of mixing official government business with political activism.” According to ethics watchdogs, “Zinke is combining politics with his Interior duties so frequently that he risks tripping over the prohibitions against using government resources for partisan activity, even though his appearance at the Virgin Islands event seems to have been legal.” they say Zinke’s attendance at a fundraiser in the U.S. Virgin Islands “during his first month as secretary is not in line with past administrations’ conduct, even if he crossed no legal red lines.”

Expense-ive Error: Would Ryan Zinke Make The Same Mistake Twice? In a piece for the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (10/5, Brooks), Dan Brooks writes that “to believe Zinke was abusing his travel privileges, you’d have to believe he was making the same mistake twice.” Brooks notes that “in the 1990s, back when he was an officer on SEAL Team 6, Zinke was cited for improperly billing the Navy for travel to Montana.” Brooks asks, “Why would a man whose Navy career was marked by improper billing of travel expenses go on to improperly bill travel expenses as a member of Donald Trump’s cabinet?”

House Democrats Demand More Transparency In National Monument Review.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/5, Burr) reports that Democrats in the House on Wednesday “introduced a resolution to require more transparency of the Interior Department’s review of national monuments, a move that could force a vote of the chamber.” The resolution “demands action within 14 legislative days by the House Natural Resources Committee or, under House rules, the Democrats could take their challenge to the House floor.” According to the article, “should the resolution come before the full House, the likely outcome of a vote would be a rejection, given the partisan breakdown of the GOP-controlled Congress.”

Critics Continue Push For Monument Changes. The Deseret \(UT\) News (10/4, O’Donoghue) reports that “critics of monument designations in Utah and elsewhere in the country are not letting up with their pressure on the Trump administration to reduce boundaries and right the ‘wrongs’ of past U.S. presidents.” According to the article, “in a joint event Wednesday hosted by Utah’s Sutherland Institute and the Heritage Foundation in Washington, D.C., speakers and panelists also pressed for a drastic overhaul” of the Antiquities Act. The event included remarks by Rep. Rob Bishop and Sen. Mike Lee, “who have been at the forefront of Utah’s political leaders jockeying for key policy changes in the public lands arena.”

The President Is Quietly Taking Aim At Our National Monuments. For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (10/4, Grijalva), Rep. Raúl M. Grijalva claims that the Trump Administration, “urged on by well-funded ideologues and fossil fuel interests, is engaged in an unprecedented effort to destroy our country’s system of public lands.” Grijalva warns that “if President Trump, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and their allies on Capitol Hill have their way, few monuments – whether they protect historic Native American sites, iconic natural wonders or world-class wildlife habitats – will be safe over the long haul.” Grijalva criticizes Zinke’s handling of the review of national monuments, as well as his recommendation to shrink four monuments.

Interior Secretary Poses Danger To Parks, Monuments. In his column for the Knoxville \(TN\)

News Sentinel (10/4, Harmon), Mark Harmon, a professor of journalism and electronic media at the University of Tennessee, and a member of the Tennessee Democratic Party Executive Committee, claims that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “conducted a sham ‘review’ of national monuments.” Moreover, he notes that “the Interior Department’s 60-day public comment period yielded more than 2.8 million comments,” and “analysis by the Center for Western Priorities found 98 percent favored maintaining or expanding existing monuments.” But Zinke “nevertheless recommended that President Donald Trump shrink the borders of four national monuments and open six others to mining, drilling, commercial fishing and logging — often endangering Native American cultural artifacts.”

Court Blocks Trump’s ‘Unlawful’ Delay Of Obama Methane Leak Rule.

The Hill (10/4, Cama) reports that “late Wednesday” Judge Elizabeth Laporte of the District Court for the Northern District of California ruled “that the Trump administration broke the law when it tried this summer to delay an Obama administration rule related to greenhouse gas released through oil and natural gas drilling.” Laporte “said the Interior Department cannot use a provision in the Administrative Procedure Act to delay the rule on methane emissions on federal land, as it tried to do in June.” The judge’s decision “represents another bump in the road on the Trump administration’s deregulatory agenda,” and “it means that for now, the January 2018 compliance date for the rule is in effect.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/4, Halper) reports “the ruling came at the behest of California and other states, which charged the administration’s is required by law to enforce the new rules intended to cut the release of 175,000 tons of the potent greenhouse gas annually, as well as reduce the emission of associated toxic pollutants.” E&E Publishing (10/4) reports “the court’s decision revives the standards, meaning any oil and gas companies not already in compliance will have to scramble to catch up.”

The AP (10/4, Daly) also provides coverage.

Interior Moves To Delay Obama-era Rule On Methane Emissions. The AP (10/4, Daly) reports that the Interior is attempting to delay a regulation that is meant to restrict methane emissions on federal lands coming from oil and gas production. The department hopes to delay the Obama-era rule, which was finalized last November, until January 2019. The AP states “the Interior Department said in a notice to be published Thursday in the Federal Register that an analysis conducted during the Obama administration may have underestimated costs and overestimated benefits.”

The Hill (10/4, Cama) reports that the Department of the Interior’s notice said “the BLM is currently reviewing the 2016 final rule and wants to avoid imposing temporary or permanent compliance costs on operators for requirements that may be rescinded or significantly revised in the near future.” American Petroleum Institute Director of Upstream Operations Erik Milito said “we welcome BLM’s efforts to get this right and encourage the agency to develop an achievable rule in the months ahead that serves to prevent waste and conserve resources while encouraging energy production on federal lands.”

Natural Gas Intelligence (10/4, Passut) reports that Bureau of Land Management Acting Director Michael Nedd said “as we strengthen America’s energy independence, we intend to evaluate regulations to determine if they unnecessarily encumber energy production, constrain economic growth, or prevent job creation.” Nedd also said, “our proposal would give the BLM sufficient time to review the 2016 final rule and consider revising or rescinding its requirements.”

Also reporting are Reuters (10/4, Gardner), the Washington Post (10/4, Grandoni), the Forum of Fargo-Moorhead \(ND\) (10/4), Wyoming Public Radio (10/4, McKim), the San Francisco Chronicle (10/5, Egelko), MarketWatch (10/4, Murphy), CNBC (10/4, DiChristopher), Natural Gas Intelligence (10/4, Shelor), and Law360.

Interior Department Whistleblower Resigns, Calling Ryan Zinke’s Leadership A Failure.

The Washington Post (10/4, Fears) reports that “an Interior Department executive turned whistleblower who claimed the Trump administration retaliated against him for publicly disclosing how climate change affects Native Alaskan communities resigned Wednesday.” The Hill (10/4, Cama) reports that in a resignation letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Joel Clement “said he objected to his June reassignment out of a climate change role.” Clement “also cited ‘poor leadership’ by Zinke, climate change skepticism and wasted tax money.”

Also reporting are the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/5, Halper), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (10/4, Woodard) and the Huffington Post (10/4, D’Angelo).

Ryan Zinke Focuses On Energy Development On Public Lands As New Committee Starts.

The Washington Examiner (10/4, Siciliano) reports that the Interior Department held the first meeting for its new Royalty Policy Committee Wednesday. The department's Energy Policy Counselor Vincent DeVito said the committee's creation represents the start of a more heightened prioritization for energy instead of a "sleepy portfolio." DeVito said "this is a business committee, this is our board, our shareholders are the American people."

Wyoming Governor Concerned By Anticipated Sage Grouse Changes.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/4, Richards) reports that Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead expressed concern over the potential federal alterations to sage grouse protections Friday and also restated that Western states should be consulted on potential changes. Gov. Mead said, "I just can't overemphasize how important it is to have that state input." Mead added that "if it was a state-by-state listing decision, that'd be one thing. But the way we are with the law right now, if one state gets listed, we all are going to get listed." Meanwhile, Western Watersheds Project wildlife biologist Erik Molvar argued, "the existing federal sage-grouse protections already are far too weak to sustain sage grouse populations in the face of commercial uses that are being approved on public lands in many areas."

A Rising Tide Of Outdoor Recreation.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (10/4, Scott) reports that "in many ways, America is in the midst of an outdoor recreation renaissance, a trend driven by innovation, awareness and sheer growth in the number of people exploring nature." According to the article, "outdoor-rich states such as Colorado, Washington and Utah have also identified outdoor recreation as a tangible industry that deserves its own governmental office, similar to agriculture and manufacturing, devoted to protecting the resources and building on the associated economic benefits."

Work Still Left For Wild And Scenic Rivers.

In an op-ed for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (10/4, Palmer, Carlman), author Tim Palmer, and Len Carlman, the executive director of the Snake River Fund, write in support of the National Wild and Scenic River program. They say that "our great expanses of public land and our lifelines of rivers — owned by every citizen — are indispensable and irreplaceable natural features." As they look forward to 2018, when the Wild and Scenic program will celebrate its golden anniversary, they note that "dozens of rivers across the West and in Wyoming still deserve protection from damming, from desiccating withdrawals, from the ravages of fracking and poorly regulated fossil fuel development and from other threats that have rendered all but 2 percent of the nation's waterways unfit for this prestigious initiative, according to the Nationwide Rivers Inventory by the National Park Service."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Spirit Lake Reservation Landowners Get Land Buyback Offers.

The AP (10/4) reports that "thousands of landowners on the Spirit Lake Indian Reservation have been sent purchase offers through a federal program to return land on reservations to tribal control." The Interior Department "says 5,041 Spirit Lake landowners have been sent offers. They have about two months to consider them."

Duwamish Tribe Keeps Fighting For Federal Recognition.

The Redmond \(WA\) Reporter (10/4, Kunkler) reports that "despite a lengthy process that has seen the federal government flop on its position, the Duwamish tribe of Puget Sound is continuing its legal challenge to be officially recognized." The Duwamish has "filed an appeal which is working its way through the Interior Board of Indian Appeals." Bart Freedman, an attorney who has represented the tribe in court pro bono in recent years, is "contending that the evaluation criteria the Department of Interior used to make their most recent decision was based on outdated guidelines from 1994, which was updated in 2015."

Bill To Provide Educational Opportunities For Native Students Gets Committee Approval.

KSWO-TV Lawton, OK (10/4, Poolaw) reports that the Johnson O'Malley Supplemental Indian Education Program Modernization Act would call on the Interior Department "to update its severely outdated count of Native students in a timely manner by using existing public information from the US Census Bureau and the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) to identify underserved students who are potentially eligible for the program." Sen. James Lankford said, "The Johnson O'Malley Act is a critical program that provides cultural and academic assistance to American Indian students and opens the door to a number of valuable resources. I applaud the Committee's progress today to update decades-old data which will allow American Indian students to have access to quality education. I look forward to a vote on the Senate floor in the days ahead."

Crow Agency Warns Residents To Not Drink Town's Water.

KULR-TV Billings, MT (10/4, Adams) reports that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is "warning residents in the town of Crow Agency to not drink their water." According to the Crow Reservation, "one of the two water plants on the reservation was vandalized." The BIA has "experts at the plant...to determine the extent of the damage and repairs needed."

Additional coverage was provided by the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/4, Kordenbrock).

Bureau Of Land Management

Utahn Brian Steed To Be Deputy Director Of The Bureau Of Land Management.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/4, Burr) reports that Brian Steed, who previously served as Rep. Chris Stewart's chief of staff, has been appointed the deputy director of the Bureau of Land Management. Stewart said in a statement, "I always say he's the best chief of staff on the Hill. I consider him a brother and will miss him greatly. He has a huge opportunity to serve the American people at the Bureau of Land and Management and I know he'll have great success."

Additional coverage was provided by the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/4, O'Donoghue) and Utah Policy (10/4, Schott).

Land Office Swap Of National Monument Land To BLM Back On Track.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/4) reports that the Interior Department approved an "agreement to initiate" on a land exchange between the Bureau of Land Management and the New Mexico State Land Office. The land exchange will "consolidate holdings within the Rio Grande del Norte National Monument and the Sabinoso Wilderness Area under federal control." Bureau of Land Management acting New Mexico State Director Aden Seidlitz said, "we look forward to working with Commissioner Dunn and the State Land Office on the proposed land exchange, which will benefit both agencies and, most importantly, the public."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (10/4, Lee).

Wild Horses And The Inmates Who 'Gentle' Them.

The New York Times (10/5, Kurutz) reports that a program the Northern Nevada Correctional Center allows inmates to work with wild horses. The Wild Horse Program at the prison is "one of the ways the Bureau of Land Management is dealing with a population of mustangs and wild burros in the Western states that, after the 2017 foal crop, could be as high as 86,000."

Rep. Emmer Pitches New Pro-mining Legislation.

The St. Cloud \(MN\) Times (10/4, Hertel) reports that Twin Metals Minnesota "could get its mineral licenses back and resume exploration in the Superior National Forest if a new bill from U.S. Rep. Tom Emmer becomes law." Emmer's proposal would "give Congress the authority to approve mineral withdrawals in Minnesota's national forest land — a task currently under the U.S. Forest Service's purview." The legislation "also gives Congress, rather than the president, authority to designate national monuments on federal forest land in Minnesota."

Cliven Bundy Supporter Wants Las Vegas Trial Postponed.

The Daily Mail (10/4, Pleasance) reports that "a protester accused of getting into an armed standoff with police while guarding the Bundy ranch has asked for his trial to be postponed after the Vegas shooting." Ryan Payne, "who allegedly helped mobilize an armed militia to defend the ranch of Cliven Bundy from federal agents in a dispute over grazing rights back in 2014, claims it will not be possible to get a fair trial in the current climate." Attorneys Brenda Weksler and Ryan Norwood said the "unprecedented act of violence will prevent the defendants from having a fair trial in this city one week from now."

Thomas Mitchell: Lawsuit Falsely Claims Fracking Will Be Devastating.

In a column for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/4, Mitchell) Thomas Mitchell states that two "self-styled environmental groups," the Center for Biological Diversity and the Sierra Club, "have filed a lawsuit...in an attempt to block oil and gas leases on tracts on Bureau of Land Management public land, claiming hydraulic fracturing...might somehow jeopardize aquifers and all manner of wildlife." The lawsuit references a US Environmental Protection Agency 2016 study, which it says "concluded that fracking can and has resulted in adverse effects on drinking water resources." However, Mitchell writes, "the suit fails to mention the EPA reported that fracking 'can impact drinking water resources under some circumstances,' but 'the scientific evidence is insufficient to support estimates of the frequency of contamination.'"

Editorial: BLM Blocks Disclosure, Again.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (10/4) criticizes the Bureau of Land Management for not releasing "crucial information" on "a private home built on public land near Prineville." The Bulletin has "made a Freedom of Information Act request for the public comments about the BLM's possible plans for the property," but "the BLM's responded twice with different answers and again blocked critical information." It concludes: "The Freedom of Information Act is supposed to be the law that keeps citizens in the know about their government. It's not working here."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Federal Judge Dismisses Suit Against BOR For 2001 Water Shutoff.

The Siskiyou \(CA\) Daily News (10/4, Smith) reports that "despite laying claim to one victory in a years-long battle, Klamath Project irrigators were denied their claims in a ruling filed on Sept. 29." Judge Marian Blank Horn "ultimately concludes that, due to the tribes' senior rights, no compensation is due junior water rights holders, as their water was withheld to protect ESA listed fish and, as such, that action protected the tribes' water rights."

Tropical Depression Raises Hurricane Threat For U.S. Gulf Coast.

Bloomberg News (10/4, Sullivan, Perez) reports a tropical depression developing off the Nicaraguan coast could grow into a hurricane and is forecast to hit the US Gulf Coast late Sunday, potentially shutting down offshore oil and gas rigs. Eric Blake, a specialist at the National Hurricane Center, said the storm "could affect portions of the northern Gulf Coast as a hurricane this weekend, with direct impacts from wind, storm surge, and heavy rainfall."

25 Species, Including Pacific Walrus, Denied Endangered Protection By Trump Administration.

USA Today (10/4, Rice) reports that the Trump Administration on Wednesday "declined to list 25 species as endangered, noting that extra protection 'is not warranted at this time.'" USA Today says environmental groups are particularly concerned about the Pacific walrus, but the US Fish and Wildlife Service "reported that it can't say with certainty that the Pacific walrus is likely to become endangered, despite an extensive loss of Arctic Sea ice due to global warming." The decision that was "applauded" by Alaska's Republican congressional delegation.

The AP (10/4, Joling) reports that the decision on the walrus "likely will be challenged in court, said Shaye Wolf, climate science director for the Center for Biological Diversity, who wrote the listing petition filed in 2008." Wolf "called the decision a misrepresentation of science to reach a predetermined conclusion."

Also reporting are the Washington Examiner (10/4, Siciliano), the Washington Times (10/4, Richardson), The Guardian \(UK\) (10/4, Milman) and KTUU-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (10/4, Mackintosh).

Federal Agency Denies Protections For Small, Fanged Predator. The AP (10/4) reports that the Trump Administration "included the Northern Rockies fisher among 25 species that officials said do not merit protection under the Endangered Species Act." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “last year agreed to consider new protections after wildlife advocates documented at least 66 fishers accidentally killed by trappers in Idaho.” The FWS “says a months-long review found no evidence fisher populations were in decline because of trapping, climate change, logging or other potential threats.”

New England Thrush Species Will Not Be Listed Endangered. The AP (10/4) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services says the Bicknell’s thrush will not be listed under the Endangered Species Act. The agency said a review suggests populations of the species are likely to “persist for the foreseeable future.”

ANWR Takes Tiny Step Down Rocky Senate Road.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (10/4, Ruskin) reports that “the effort to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling made a baby step forward in the Senate” yesterday, “with the debut of a Republican budget plan in a committee.” The plan is “a non-binding resolution but it contains the seeds of what could become a law that allows oil development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.”

GUEST COMMENTARY: Time To Say ‘Yes’ To ANWR Drilling. In an op-ed for the Alaska Journal of Commerce (10/4, Rexford), Matthew Rexford, the president of Kaktovik Iñupiat Corp., writes in support of opening up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling. According to Rexford, “the wishes of the people who live in and around the refuge’s coastal plain are frequently drowned out by people who live hundreds and even thousands of miles away.” He notes that Voice of the Arctic Iñupiat, “an organization with 21 members from across the Arctic Slope region — including members from Kaktovik located inside ANWR — have voted unanimously to pass a resolution supporting oil and gas development in the 1002 area.”

Uneven Impacts Seen In Oregon Spotted Frog Settlement.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/4, Perkowski) reports that “a legal settlement intended to upgrade conditions for the Oregon spotted frog is having uneven impacts on the threatened species’ habitat, according to federal biologists.” The deal was “struck last year to resolve a lawsuit between environmental groups, irrigation districts and the federal government over the operation of several dams in the region.” According to a recent “biological opinion” from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, “while conditions for the spotted frog improved in portions of the basin during certain seasons, they were degraded in other locations and times under the deal.”

Stonewall Jackson Monument Vandalized At Manassas Park.

The AP (10/4) reports that the National Park Service “says it is making repairs to a Stonewall Jackson monument that was vandalized at Manassas National Battlefield.” The NPS “says the vandalism at the monument depicting the Confederate general was discovered early Wednesday morning and occurred overnight.” According to the article, “white paint was splashed on the granite base of the monument, and the word ‘Dead!’ was added in gold spray paint.”

Also reporting are the Washington Post (10/4, Moyer, Olivo), the Washington Times (10/4, Harper), and the Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (10/4).

Dunes National Park Effort Moves Forward.

Inside INdiana Business (10/4, Brown) reports that “a bill that would designate the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore as a national park is heading to the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives.” The House Committee on Natural Resources “unanimously approved the bill which would create the first national park in Indiana.” Rep. Pete Visclosky, who introduced the bill, said, “I thank Chairman Rob Bishop, Ranking Member Raul Grijalva, and all the members of the Natural Resources Committee, for their leadership to bring forward and advance this legislation. I hope that the full House considers this important legislation as soon as possible so that we can quickly begin to harness this national recognition of the Indiana Dunes and attract new visitors and economic activity to our region.”

Enviros Hit FAA With Suit Over Air Tours In National Parks.

Law360 (10/4, Hanson) reports Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility and the Hawaii Island Coalition Malama Pono filed suit against the FAA in DC federal court Wednesday, “seeking to limit air tour operations in national parks, including the Great Smoky Mountains and the Hawaii

Volcanoes, due to noise and disruption from excessive flights." The AP (10/4, McAvoy) reports the lawsuit "asks the court to order the FAA to draft either air tour plans or voluntary agreements governing air tours for seven parks within two years." According to the AP, "FAA spokesman Ian Gregor said the agency doesn't comment on pending litigation."

Delta State Receives Prestigious National Park Service Award.

The Mississippi Business Journal (10/4) reports that "the Delta Center for Culture and Learning at Delta State University and the Mississippi Delta National Heritage Area recently received 2016 National Park Service Centennial Awards for creating the Delta Jewels Oral History Partnership." According to the article, "the cultural heritage interpretation project has honored the lives of unsung Mississippi Delta church mothers featured in Alysia Burton Steele's book, 'Delta Jewels: In Search of My Grandmother's Wisdom.'" Chris Abbett, associate regional director of partnerships, interpretation and education at the National Park Service Southeast Regional Office, said, "The Mississippi Delta National Heritage Area and the Delta Center demonstrated exceptional leadership and creativity in organizing 15 community gatherings with Alysia Burton Steele and several of the Delta Jewels featured in the book. The programs throughout Mississippi, as well as the Smithsonian Anacostia Community Museum in Washington, D.C., connected with and helped to create the next generation of visitors, supporters and advocates for the National Park Service."

Admission Fees Waived At Steamtown National Historic Site.

WNEP-TV Scranton, PA (10/4, Lange) reports that the National Park Service "decided to waive entrance fees for the Steamtown National Historic Site." According to the article, "until this week, the entrance fee for visitors at Steamtown was $7 for ages 16 and up." The NPS says it's removing "that fee in hopes of bringing more people to the attraction."

Park Counts Down To Reopening Of Trail Closed By Gatlinburg Wildfire.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (10/4, Lakin) reports that "after months of work, the popular Chimney Tops Trail in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park reopens to hikers Friday with some new additions." However, "the whole trail won't be open, even after Friday." According to the article, "the last quarter-mile of the 2-mile trail leading toward the peaks, or Pinnacles as they're known, remains closed due to fallen trees and unstable footing."

Padre Island National Seashore Beaches Close Because Of High Water.

The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (10/4, Lopez) reports that "both North and South beaches at Padre Island National Seashore have been closed by the National Park Service because of high water." Seashore Public Information Officer Patrick Gamman "said the closure of the beaches is for the public's safety." He said, "At this time the waves are splashing against the dunes, creating a situation where there is no place to drive on the beach. As park rangers, we monitor natural conditions to hopefully close beaches before anyone goes out and finds themselves stuck down island with no way out."

Bandelier Seeks Concession Proposals.

The Los Alamos \(NM\) Monitor (10/4) reports that the National Park Service "announced Tuesday the release of two prospectuses for the award of two new concession contracts in Bandelier National Monument." The park service is "looking to revitalize the Bandelier National Historical Landmark District in Frijoles Canyon by increasing visitor services through these two concessions."

Oceana Neighborhood Gets Added To National Register Of Historic Places.

Administration Appears To Walk Back Trump Comments On Puerto Rico's Debt.

President Trump's claim in an interview that aired Tuesday night on Fox News' Hannity and again Wednesday morning on Fox News' Fox & Friends that "we have to look at [Puerto Rico's] whole debt structure. They owe a lot of money to your friends on Wall Street. We will have to wipe that out," sparked concern on Wall Street on Wednesday, sending Puerto Rican bonds lower and seemingly prompting the Administration to walk back the statements.

Politico (10/4, White, Wilhelm) reports that Wall Street "freaked out" over Trump's comments, "sending Puerto Rican bonds into a tailspin." The Wall Street Journal (10/4, Gillers) says Puerto Rico's general obligation bonds were trading at a record low of 30 cents on the dollar Wednesday. The New York Times (10/4, Walsh) says "investors who hold Puerto Rico's debt and their advisers said they were taken aback and unwilling to comment."

Politico (10/4, White, Wilhelm) says the White House "move[d] swiftly to clean up Trump's seemingly offhand remarks." The Administration "indicated it has no current plans to take the unprecedented, politically dangerous and probably illegal step of wiping out the owners of Puerto Rico's bonds in the wake of Hurricane Maria's devastation." The New York Times (10/4, Buerkle) reports in its "DealBook" column that Trump "doesn't even have the authority to abrogate debts, something the budget director, Mick Mulvaney, seemed to recognize Wednesday when he said the president's comments shouldn't be taken literally." Anthony Mason reported on the CBS Evening News (10/4, story 7, 2:00) that Mulvaney said Wednesday that "there will be no bailout for Puerto Rico after the President suggested there might be."

Fox News' Special Report (10/4) showed Mulvaney saying, "I think what you saw there was the President focusing on the reality that in order to get its long-term fiscal operation back in order, Puerto Rico is going to have to figure out a way to restructure its debt." Bloomberg News (10/4, Sink, Epstein) reports that Mulvaney "said Wednesday that the administration is devising an aid package to send to Congress that will deal with rebuilding and repair." Mulvaney said, "We are not going to bail them out. ... We are not going to pay off those debts. We are not going to bail out those bond holders."

Meanwhile, USA Today (10/4, Bomey) reports in an analysis that while "Trump's proposal to slash all of Puerto Rico's liabilities may not be financially or politically realistic, it's increasingly likely that financiers and individuals who lent money to Puerto Rico will suffer huge losses as political momentum mounts for action."

Cardona: Puerto Rico Visit Was An Exercise In Propping Up Trump's Ego. In an op-ed for The Hill (10/4), Democratic strategist Maria Cardona, a principal at the Dewey Square Group, calls Trump's visit to Puerto Rico "an exercise in shoring up Trump's massive, fragile ego that had been bruised by critics who know what an afterthought in planning and preparation Puerto Rico actually was for this administration." Trump showed "zero humility, empathy, humanity and not one iota of understanding of what his fellow Americans were going through." Cardona adds that if the recovery of Puerto Rico does not happen quickly, "there will be a massive exodus of hundreds of thousands of American citizens who are immediately eligible to register and vote when they settle into states like Texas and Florida," which will not "bode well for Trump or Republicans in 2018 or 2020."

Milbank "Excerpts" Fictional Book Calling Natural Disasters "Inconvenient" For Narcissists. In his Washington Post (10/4) column, Dana Milbank sarcastically "excerpts" a fictional book titled "The Me-Driven Life: A Narcissist's Guide to Helping Others Understand It Is All About You," by John Barron, which is the name Trump reportedly used when masquerading as his own spokesman. In the "excerpt," Milbank writes that natural disasters "are frustrating, and inconvenient, because they tend to cause those people to think about their own problems," which is "harmful because it distracts them from their more pressing obligation to think about you."

Puerto Rico's Death Toll More Than Doubles To 34.

The New York Times (10/4, Ferré-sadurní) reports that Puerto Rico's Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said Wednesday that the island's official death toll has "more than doubled from 16 to 34 two weeks after the storm as a result of a full accounting intended to add up the piecemeal reports from around the island." Rosselló said, "We were not able to aggregate this complete set of data before. ... We were getting little bits of certified data, but after yesterday's effort, we have a more complete picture of what has occurred in terms of direct deaths due to the storm and indirect as well." While the new count "may still not be complete...it offers the clearest picture yet of the death toll and how people died during and after Maria, he said." Dr. Jon LaPook said on The CBS Evening News (10/4, story 7, 2:00) that many of the dead "are from the island's rural interior, where most people are still without water, without power, and aid is arriving very slowly. Estimates are, it will take months to restore electricity," which is "at odds with the President's upbeat remark about power to a selected crowd in a church." Trump: "Flashlights! You don't need them anymore. You don't need them anymore."

Reuters (10/4, Brown, Respaut, Resnick-Ault) reports that "less than 10 percent of Puerto Rico's 3.4 million people have seen power restored – and many will wait months." While restoring the grid "would be a monumental task even for a well-run utility," it "will be much harder for the chronically underfunded Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (PREPA), which went bankrupt in July amid mounting maintenance problems, years-long battles with creditors, a shrinking workforce and frequent management turnover." The Wall Street Journal (10/4, Hernandez) reports that many Puerto Ricans are facing health problems as they still lack access to clean water, medical supplies, and healthcare.

A front-page story in the Washington Post (10/4, A1, Hernandez) reports that during his visit to Puerto Rico, Trump took a "walking tour of a neighborhood, where high-speed winds had blown out some second-story windows and knocked over a few trees – but where life seemed to be returning to normal, thanks to assistance from the government." Had he "traveled a little deeper into the island, to the communities that sustained some of the heaviest damage, he would have witnessed a very different Puerto Rico." In the city of Caguas, "hills were stripped naked by Maria's malicious winds, leaving the trees without leaves and fruit, their bare branches contorted in painful postures." Houses "were blown off their foundations and destroyed by toppled vegetation," and "twisted metal roofs landed in creeks all over the once-lush region."

Concerns Rise About Drug, Medical Device Shortages. The New York Times (10/4, A1, Thomas, Kaplan) reports federal officials, as well as manufacturers of pharmaceuticals and medical devices, are concerned about potential shortages following the devastation caused by a hurricane to Puerto Rico, which is a major manufacturer of both types of products. The Times reports that there are over 80 plants in Puerto Rico that manufacture pharmaceuticals or medical devices, but that manufacturers are facing many problems, including unreliable electricity and transportation issues. FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb told Congress this week, "Some of these products are critical to Americans. A loss of access could have significant public health consequences."

Contributions For Maria Victims Small Compared To Harvey, Irma Donations. USA Today (10/4, Cava) reports that "as contributions soar to homegrown fundraising efforts for victims of Sunday's Las Vegas shooting, those devastated by Maria have seen comparatively small donations especially when compared to money raised for those affected by hurricanes Harvey and Irma, according to groups contacted by USA TODAY." According to fundraisers, "a prime reason for lower Maria numbers has to do with its damage coming after devastating storms hit the US mainland in Texas and Florida, which means donors are more apt to be either financially or even emotionally tapped out." In addition, media attention is "a huge factor in generating contributions, and the supersaturated coverage that greeted Harvey and Irma tapered for Maria."

White House Seeks $29 Billion For Hurricane Aid.

The White House on Wednesday asked Congress "to approve $29 billion in additional hurricane relief and debt forgiveness, seeking to help Puerto Rico and other battered areas and to shore up the troubled federal program that provides flood insurance to homes and small businesses," the New York Times (10/4, Kaplan, Walsh) reports. The request "seeks $12.8 billion for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to stay current with the nearly $200 million a day the agency is spending on recovery work." In addition, it asks lawmakers "to wipe out $16 billion in debt that the National Flood Insurance Program owes to the Treasury and has no immediate way to repay." The White House also seeks "$577 million in response to wildfires that have been prevalent this year in Western states, and is calling for efforts to limit the cost and devastation of wildfires."

Reporter Describes Recovery Efforts On St Thomas.

In a piece for the New York Times (10/4), reporter Jeremy W. Peters describes recovery efforts on St. Thomas in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Maria. Peters writes that the power grid is "mostly flattened, its wires lying across roads or tangled in trees, its poles snapped in half, its transformers sitting in puddles of stagnant floodwater. It will take months to fully restore." This "has knocked out cell towers and internet service, creating a cascade of breakdowns that hampers the most basic daily necessities." Peters adds that doctors say the aftereffects of the hurricanes "are starting to show in people who are hurting themselves while cleaning out what remains of their houses or letting wounds go untreated because they cannot get to a clinic.”

US Spy Planes Kept Eye On Chinese Scientists During Research Expedition Near Guam.

The South China Morning Post \(HKG\) (10/4, Chen) reports that “China’s most advanced research vessel recently spent nearly a month operating in the backyard of the largest US military base in Asia-Pacific waters ‘under the nose of US spy planes’, according to a marine scientist leading the expedition.” The researcher said that “the Kexue oceanographic ship had regular low flyovers from US Navy P3-Orion surveillance aircraft while investigating a seamount southeast of Guam between August 5 and September 5.” Xu Kuidong, “a lead researcher with the mission who is affiliated with the Institute of Oceanology, Chinese Academy of Sciences in Qingdao, Shandong, said the scientists on board were ‘well aware’ of the area’s sensitivity.”

Governor Addresses UN Committee.

The Guam Daily Post (10/3) reports that Gov. Eddie Calvo was scheduled to deliver a “speech to a United Nations committee that hears pleas on decolonization concerns.” Following his speech, Calvo was to set to meet “with permanent missions from various countries, to include the Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Nauru and Solomon Islands, according to his office.”

U.S. Virgin Islands Need Help Rebuilding Hospitals ‘from The Ground Up’.

On Nebraska Public Radio (9/28), U.S. Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp discussed the recovery effort following two hurricanes. Mapp said, “We have received tremendous provisions and support from the federal partners. We’re now talking about and beginning the process of covering and sheltering folks in homes that lost roofs. We have cleared a good bit of debris out of the road system and we’re working on getting the power distribution system up.”

Additional coverage of the recovery effort was provided by WIVB-TV Buffalo, NY (9/29).

House Approves LaHood Bill To Advance Mine Reclamation Efforts.

The Ripon Advance (10/4) reports that the House approved legislation on Monday that Rep. Darin LaHood “introduced to empower states to partner with non-governmental organizations (NGO) to reclaim abandoned mines and to address related water pollution issues.” The Community Reclamation Partnerships Act, H.R. 2937 “would advance mine reclamation by allowing states to assume legal and regulatory liability on behalf of NGOs willing to take part in state reclamation programs.” LaHood said on the House floor, “This bill empowers state and local community leaders who want to assist in abandoned mine cleanup efforts so that future development can occur in these areas. No group should be punished for wanting to help out their local community in a responsible way.”

Trump Lauds Bravery Of First Responders And Victims In Las Vegas.

Coverage of President Trump’s Wednesday visit to Las Vegas is straightforward and respectful, focusing primarily on the President’s remarks to law enforcement personnel, first responders, and victims. Coverage also notes that the President was asked about possible gun control legislation, but declined to comment.

ABC World News Tonight (10/4, story 3, 2:20, Muir) reported that it was “the first time he's had to visit the scene of a mass shooting." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "In Las Vegas today, President Trump, in a new role, comforter in chief. With the First Lady by his side. Their first stop: the hospital treating dozens of patients, still fighting for their lives." Trump: "Some were very, very badly wounded, and they were badly wounded because they refused to leave. They wanted to help others because they saw people going down all over. And it's an incredible thing to see. That's tremendous bravery."

On the CBS Evening News (10/4, story 3, 2:00, Mason), Major Garrett reported, "At University Medical Center, the hospital that received 100 victims, the President thanked doctors and nurses. The President also toured the Las Vegas police command center and hailed the bravery of officers and civilians who faced the terror head on." Trump: "In the depths of horror, we will always find hope in the men and women who risk their lives for ours." NBC Nightly News (10/4, story 4, 0:35, Holt) ran a 35-second brief item on the visit.

KVVU-TV Las Vegas (10/4, 6:05 p.m. PDT) reported that Trump was at UMC "longer than he originally planned to be, visiting with doctors and patients." KSNV-TV Las Vegas (10/4, 6:08 p.m. PDT) reported that Trump's visit "lasted just roughly four hours – four very necessary hours for Las Vegas and for Nevada." KLAS-TV Las Vegas (10/4, 6:03 p.m. PDT) reported that "Trump visited several victims at the hospital and meeting with doctors and medical staff. The President offered his condolences to the community and the victims' families."

The President later tweeted a 54-second video about the visit, writing, "On behalf of a GRATEFUL NATION, THANK YOU to all of the First Responders (HEROES) who saved countless lives in Las Vegas on Sunday night," and followed with a tweet of a two-minute-and-20-second video, writing, "WE LOVE YOU LAS VEGAS!"

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (10/4), "The White House took great pains to keep the President's trip here more subdued and more scripted than other official visits in recent days." Acosta added, "One topic the President is taking on during his visit is gun control. ... The White House is steering clear of the issue."

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (10/4, Erickson) reports that Trump "noted that many of the wounded were heroes themselves, saying 'they were badly wounded because they refused to leave. They wanted to help others because they saw people going down all over.'" The AP (10/4, Lucey, Colvin) reports that Trump "waved off questions about the availability of firearms – the shooter had a veritable arsenal of weapons – saying this is not the time to discuss the possibility of further restrictions."

USA Today (10/4, Jackson) reports, "Unlike Tuesday's visit with hurricane victims in Puerto Rico – where he made a joke about the cost of the federal relief efforts and told locals they could be proud that only 16 people had died versus the 'literally thousands' who were killed Hurricane Katrina in 2005 – Trump stayed very much on script in Las Vegas." The President said, "Our souls are stricken with grief. We know your sorrow feels endless. ... We will endure the pain together. We will overcome it together as Americans." Breitbart (10/4, Spiering) reports that Trump "delivered a somber statement" after meeting with law enforcement officials, and Townhall (10/4, Pavlich) reports that the President was accompanied by the First Lady "throughout the day and also visited wounded victims in a local hospital."

The New York Times (10/4, Landler) says that Trump "has been uncharacteristically subdued about the Las Vegas shooting. ... He has tweeted little about it and deflected questions about the killer's motives, in contrast with previous mass shootings, which have drawn quick, furious reactions from him, particularly when the perpetrators were Muslim." For Trump, "the political subtext of Las Vegas has more to do with gun laws, which he campaigned against in 2016." The Wall Street Journal (10/4, Nicholas) reports that the White House has indicated that the President has not changed his stance.

The New York Post (10/4, Fredericks) reports that the President called shooter Stephen Paddock "'a very sick man, a very demented person,' but would not address a possible motive." The Washington Times (10/4, Miller) reports that Trump said, "He was a very demented person and we haven't seen [a motive] yet but we will know very soon if we find something. We are looking very hard." Politico (10/4, Nelson) and The Hill (10/4, Easley) have brief reports on the President's remarks.

Legislators Of Both Parties Seem Open To "Bump Stock" Ban. USA Today (10/4, Gaudiano, Collins) reports, "Some key Republicans are showing interest in a narrowly written Democratic gun-control bill to ban 'bump stock' rifle attachments that enable rapid firing." Sen. John Thune "said some of his colleagues are 'at least interested' in learning more about 'that narrow issue,'" and Senate Majority Whip Cornyn "told reporters Wednesday that trigger accelerators are 'something that I think bears looking into.'" Cornyn said that he has raised the issue with Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley.

The New York Times (10/4, Stolberg, Hsu) reports that House Freedom Caucus head Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) "said he would be open to considering a bill," and moderate Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) "said he was drafting bipartisan legislation" mirroring Sen. Dianne Feinstein's Senate version. Rep. Dina Titus (D-NV) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/4) that she is co-sponsoring another bill with Rep. David Cicilline (D-RI) to make bump stocks illegal "because they will change a regular gun into an automatic weapon that can fire 400-600 times in a minute. We don't need that for recreation."

Rep. Tom Cole (R-OK) was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/4) if lawmakers should consider outlawing the "bump stock" used by the Las Vegas gunman. Cole said, "I think there's no question we ought to look into that. Automatic weapons – when I saw the clips and heard the fire, I just assumed he had an automatic weapon. I did not know that there was technology capable that cheaply of transforming a semi-automatic into an automatic weapon. Yeah, I don't think there's any question we ought to look at that."

The Wall Street Journal (10/4) says in an editorial that outlawing bump stocks would not halt the practice, since "bumping" can be done with a finger, and also argues that past bans on certain types of rifles have proven ineffective in preventing mass murder. Politico (10/4, Bresnahan, Kim, Everett) also reports on the bump stock legislation.

Las Vegas Sheriff Believes Paddock Had Help "At Some Point." The New York Post (10/4, Li) reports that Clark County Sheriff Joseph Lombardo said Wednesday that he "believes Paddock must have had some help along the way." Lombardo said, "You look at the weapon obtaining the different amounts of Tannerite [explosives] available, do you think this was all accomplished on his own? You got to make the assumption he had to have help some help at some point."

FBI Questioning Shooter's Girlfriend In Los Angeles. The New York Times (10/4) reports that Paddock's girlfriend Marilou Danley, now back in the US from the Philippines, is being questioned at the FBI building in Los Angeles. FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe said that the FBI "is trying to reconstruct the actions of the gunman, including finding and interviewing 'everyone and anyone who crossed his path in recent weeks.'" The Washington Post (10/4) reports that "so far...few clues have emerged to help investigators understand" Paddock or his motives.

NBC Nightly News (10/4, story 2, 2:35, Holt) reported that Danley was questioned "for hours" on Wednesday. Her attorney read a statement in which she said that Paddock "never said anything to me or took any action that I was aware of that I understood in any way to be a warning that something horrible like this was going to happen." According to the lead story for the CBS Evening News (10/4, lead story, 3:25, Mason), Danley's statement also explained that the "thousands of dollars he wired to her in the Philippines...was meant for her to buy a home there. Danley thought Paddock was planning on breaking up with her." ABC World News Tonight (10/4, story 2, 2:30, Muir) reported that one of Danley's sisters said Paddock "sent her away" so he could plan for the attack.

"Senior Jihadist" Claims Paddock Was An ISIS Recruit. Breitbart (10/4, Klein, Waked) reports in an "exclusive" that Abu Baker al-Maqqdisi, "a senior jihadist associated with the Islamic State (ISIS) in the Gaza Strip, insists his terrorist organization was responsible for the Las Vegas massacre." Al-Maqqdisi told Breitbart Jerusalem that Paddock "was recruited by ISIS when he converted to Islam several months ago. There is no evidence of any such conversion." Al-Maqqdisi said, "Even the weapons he used in this assault were purchased with Islamic State funds." However, Breitbart reports, he offered no proof.

Republicans Hammer Murphy For Fundraising Off Las Vegas Shooting. The Connecticut Post (10/4, Vigdor) reports that Sen. Chris Murphy "is using his national profile to prime the pump for gun control groups after the Las Vegas massacre" – a move that "is being condemned by Republicans for pairing that effort with a request for re-election campaign contributions." The Murphy camp issued "an email blast Tuesday night to supporters urging them to give money to a trio of gun control groups" aligned with him, or to Murphy's re-election campaign. The Hill (10/4, Greenwood) reported that small-business owner Matthew Corey, one of the Republicans seeking the GOP nomination to challenge Murphy in 2018, said that Murphy "should donate contributions his campaign received from the email to the victims of the Las Vegas attack."

Tillerson Says He Never Weighed Resigning, Does Not Directly Deny "Moron" Remark.

Coverage of Secretary of State Tillerson's appearance Wednesday to reaffirm his commitment to his job – and to deny an NBC report that he called President Trump a "moron" several months ago – stresses that Tillerson did not actually deny the comment (though a spokesperson did). Reports also state that the public appearance was unusual for Tillerson. There is also speculation over how long Tillerson, described by multiple sources as frequently at odds with the President, will stay in his post.

Martha Raddatz reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/4, story 5, 2:15, Muir) that Tillerson made "a rare impromptu appearance" on Wednesday to address the "report rocketing around Washington" that Tillerson "had called Trump a 'moron' last July, after a national security team meeting and was then on the verge of resigning." Tillerson: "The Vice President has never had to persuade me to remain as secretary of state, because I have never considered leaving this post." Raddatz: "And that report of calling the President a moron?" Tillerson: "I'm not going to deal with petty stuff like that. I'm just not going to be a part of this effort to divide this Administration." Raddatz: "Not a flat-out denial, but his spokesperson later, more definitive." State Department spokesperson Heather Nauert: "He did not say that." Kaitlin Collins reported on CNN's Situation Room (10/4) that Tillerson "insisted he never threatened to resign, but it's notable he didn't take the opportunity to deny the reports that he called the President of the United States a 'moron.'"

The CBS Evening News (10/4, story 5, 2:10, Mason) reported that Tillerson "made an extraordinary appearance before cameras at the State Department today to refute reports that he had disparaged the President and had to be talked out of quitting." CBS' Margaret Brennan: "The press-averse Secretary of State declared that he never considered quitting his job but did not deny having referred to the President as a 'moron.' ... The President was told Tillerson made the remark after this July meeting at the Pentagon. Days earlier, the President had blown up at Tillerson over sharply differing views on the Iran nuclear deal. Tillerson himself was frustrated. He'd been undermined on other key issues including Venezuela and a Mideast dispute," and the "lifelong Boy Scout was dismayed by Mr. Trump's comments at a Boy Scout gathering."

On NBC Nightly News (10/4, story 5, 2:30, Holt), Andrea Mitchell also reported that Tillerson "stopp[ed] short of a full denial."

The AP (10/4, Lee, Klapper) reports that "the normally camera-shy Tillerson sought to rebut" the "widely disseminated" story that Vice President Pence had to talk him out of resigning. The AP says that Trump "has at times appeared to undercut Tillerson's message on some of America's most sensitive national security challenges, including Iran and North Korea. Tillerson also has publicly complained about the White House blocking him from making key appointments."

USA Today (10/4, Fair) reports that Pence's former press secretary, Marc Lotter, said that Pence did speak to Tillerson, but that the conversation was "about the need to come together and make sure that everyone is moving forward with the message in the framework that is echoing what [Trump] wants to have communicated." On Wednesday, the New York Times (10/4, Sullivan, Harris) reports, Tillerson "gave a full-throated defense of Mr. Trump's foreign policy."

Jake Sullivan, former director of the State Department's policy planning office, said on CNN's The Lead (10/4), "The spectacle today was striking with Rex Tillerson feeling the need to come out and basically say he likes the job, he gets along with the President, and he's planning on sticking around. I can't think of a secretary in state in memory who's had to do something like that." The Los Angeles Times (10/4, Wilkinson) calls Tillerson's remarks "an unusual statement."

The Wall Street Journal (10/4, Schwartz) also reports that Tillerson said he has never considered resigning, while The Hill (10/4, Fabian) refers to "the bombshell report." Roll Call (10/4, Bennett) headlines its story "Tillerson Doesn't Deny Calling Trump A 'Moron.'" The New York Post (10/4, Moore, Fredericks) is one of the few sources to report that NBC actually reported that Tillerson had "referred to the president as a 'f---ing moron.'"

Max Boot of USA Today (10/4) writes, "This is a classic Washington gaffe, defined by journalist Michael Kinsley as what happens 'when a politician tells the truth – some obvious truth he isn't supposed to say.' ... The real scandal isn't that Trump's secretary of State called him a moron. It's that his job performance lends so much credence to that description." Boot tweeted, "Trump's handling of Hurricane Maria lends credence to Tillerson's disparaging assessment of his mental capability." Preet Bharara tweeted, "At the risk of controversy, I disagree with Tillerson. I don't think Trump is a moron. To say he is lets him off the hook way way too much."

Matt Flegenheimer of the New York Times (10/4) looks at how, in stating that "[in] the places I come from, we don't deal with that kind of petty nonsense," Tillerson joined in the long-standing tradition of political figures attacking Washington. The Washington Times (10/4, Persons), BuzzFeed (10/4), and Politico (10/4, Nelson) also report on Tillerson's remarks.

Trump: NBC Story "Totally Phony," "Made Up," Asks For Apology. On NBC Nightly News (10/4, story 5, 2:30, Holt), Mitchell reported, "The President in Las Vegas today labeling the NBC report fake news." President Trump: "It was a totally phony story. Thank you very much. It was made up. It was made up by NBC. Total confidence in Rex. I have total confidence." The President tweeted, "The @NBCNews story has just been totally refuted by Sec. Tillerson and @VP Pence. It is #FakeNews. They should issue an apology to AMERICA!"

WPost A1 Analysis: Tillerson Expected To Leave Job Relatively Soon. The Washington Post (10/4, A1, Gearan, Rucker, Parker) writes on its front page that "Tillerson's move on Wednesday to reassure Trump of his convictions may well be too little and too late for the long term, according to the accounts of 19 current and former senior administration officials and Capitol Hill aides." The "already tense relationship between the two headstrong men...has ruptured into what some White House officials call an irreparable breach that will inevitably lead to Tillerson's departure, whether immediately or not." A "former senior official" said, "The White House thinking is unequivocal that he's going to be gone soon, but the assumption is that he's going to quit on his own so Trump can say, 'Thank you for your year of service.'"

New York Times financial columnist Ron Lieber tweeted, "Treated like a trophy. Eye-rolling. Profoundly uncomfortable. Calls the president a moron. Does he last the month?" Politico's Blake Hounshell tweeted, "Post leans into the idea that Tillerson isn't gonna be around too long."

Tillerson, Mattis, And Mnuchin Reportedly Have Resignation "Suicide Pact." The Washington Examiner (10/4, Quinn) reports that Tillerson, Defense Secretary Mattis, and Treasury Secretary Mnuchin "reportedly have forged a 'suicide pact' in which all three members of President Trump's Cabinet would leave if one of them became a target of the president." USA Today's Jill Lawrence tweeted, "So maybe 'suicide pact' is why Tillerson could say he never considered leaving his post?"

Politico (10/4, Lima) reports that Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Bob Corker "offered a blunt assessment" of the Trump Administration on Wednesday, saying, "I think Secretary Tillerson, Secretary Mattis and Chief of Staff Kelly are those people that help separate our country from chaos."

Ex-Counselor To UN Ambassador Says Tillerson Is Hurting State Department. Nik Steinberg, a senior adviser to the president of Columbia University and former counselor to then-UN Ambassador Samantha Power, writes in Politico Magazine (10/4) that Tillerson is leading good veteran staff members to leave the State Department: "None of them have served a president like this before – and that includes the most seasoned hands, who have spent decades in the department." The President is "proposing to slash roughly a third of the State Department's budget, a cut" that Tillerson "has embraced," and "experts on complex issues and regions have repeatedly found themselves left out of policy debates and drafting processes. ... When career public servants are not given a seat at the table, not only are mistakes made and policies worse off, but opportunities are missed." And "as more people leave, fewer are coming in."

House Panel Approves $10 Billion Payment For Border Wall.

The Washington Times (10/4, Dinan) reports that in an 18-12 party-line vote Wednesday, the House Homeland Security Committee "gave first approval to the broad scope of President Trump's border wall...clearing a bill that would authorize $10 billion in new infrastructure spending, new waivers to speed up construction and 10,000 more border agents and officers to patrol the US-Mexico line." Democrats argued that "the wall was a boondoggle and the fact that US taxpayers will fund it violates the president's campaign pledge to make Mexico foot the bill," while Republicans said "it was time to get a handle on the border."

Cruz Challenger O'Rourke's Bill Seeks To Protect Landowners From "Trump Wall." The Houston Chronicle (10/4, Diaz) reports that Rep. Beto O'Rourke, who is mounting a 2018 challenge to Sen. Ted Cruz, on Wednesday introduced a bill aimed at "protect[ing] landowners from 'Trump's wall.'" The issue is likely to become a flashpoint in O'Rourke's bid to unseat Cruz, "an immigration hard-liner who supports President Donald Trump's plan to build a border wall." The Chronicle says, "Two-thirds of the land along the southwest border is private or state-owned. Most of that falls within Texas. The Protecting the Property Rights of Border Landowners Act would amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to block the government from using eminent domain to acquire land to build a wall along the US-Mexico border." Said O'Rourke, "We do not need a border wall that raids the land of private citizens, ransacks the businesses and ranches of hard-working Texans, and strips property rights away from Americans."

Administration To Propose Repealing Clean Power Plan.

Citing "a person familiar with the deliberations," Bloomberg News (10/4, Dlouhy) reports that in a proposal that could be released this week or next, the Administration will propose repealing the Clean Power Plan, "former President Barack Obama's signature plan for combating climate change by asserting that its expansive approach to addressing carbon emissions exceeds legal limits." In addition, the EPA will "issue a formal request for the public to offer ideas for a replacement to the Clean Power Plan that could be more modest in scope." The New York Times (10/4, Friedman) cites an internal EPA document, which states, "The agency is issuing a proposal to repeal the rule," but does not explain how it "will justify to the courts the decision to eliminate the regulation."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Donald Trump's Foreign Policy Circus." A New York Times (10/5) editorial says, "Another day, another embarrassing foreign policy circus in the nation's capital that can only further erode trust in American leadership at home and abroad." The Times argues that the "conflicts are numerous and mounting," and "to say the least, all of this has made matters difficult for Mr. Tillerson, while confusing American foreign policy. Secretaries of state must be seen as having the president's personal trust and the clout to represent him authoritatively all over the world."

"Michael Grimm, New York's Next Zombie Candidate." The New York Times (10/5, Board) editorializes, "Some New York politicians are in a separate class: They're incapable of blushing. These are people, whether ethically suspect or downright criminal, whose sense of decency has gone haywire." The Times says Michael Grimm, "a former congressman from Staten Island who spent seven months in a federal prison for felony tax fraud" and announced this week that he would try to recapture his seat, is among this class of politicians. It argues that "there's no compelling reason for Mr. Grimm to run," and urges him to "find something other than a taxpayer-financed position to fill his days."

"Would You Buy A Condo From The Trumps?" In an editorial, the New York Times (10/5, Board) writes, "Until their father's personal lawyer intervened, Ivanka and Donald Trump Jr. were under criminal investigation by Manhattan prosecutors for possibly defrauding buyers of units in the Trump SoHo development, according to an investigation by ProPublica, WNYC and The New Yorker." Chief of Staff Kelly, it adds, "appears to recognize that Mr. Kushner and Ms. Trump are a drag on a White House already plagued by problems. Let's also hope that he can persuade the Trump family members to deal more forthrightly with the American public than they did with their investors."

Washington Post.

"This GOP Tax Reform Proposal Isn't Fair. Here's What Would Be." The Washington Post (10/4) argues in an editorial that National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn's claim that the Administration is "trying to get rid of all of the loopholes and all of the deductions that mostly wealthy people use," is "not the case." The Post says the plan targets the state and local tax deduction, which "wealthy people in mostly Democratic states use disproportionately," and leaves others, including the deductions for home mortgage interest and for charitable giving, "hardly touched." The Post argues that a "fairer way" would be to "close loopholes without singling out one tax break, one area of the country or one set of wealthy people."

"The Senate's Russia Probe Is Still Far From Over." The Washington Post (10/4), editorializes that Wednesday's news conference by Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr and ranking Democrat Mark Warner "raised more questions than it answered on the state of the committee's probe into Russian election interference. But it did make one thing clear: The investigation is far from over." The Post asserts, "Importantly, we learned that the committee continues to study whether collusion took place between the Kremlin and the Trump campaign."

"Let The Rohingya Return To Burma – Immediately." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/4) writes that Rohingya who have fled Burma amid attacks from the military must be allowed to return immediately. The Post argues that the UN Security Council "must move beyond mere discussion and forcefully express the world's disgust and support new sanctions," and that the Administration should "impose targeted sanctions on military commanders and others who supported the Rohingya atrocities." The Post concludes, "Failing to respond to their plight and persecution would compound the crime of their expulsion."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Gun Control Mirage." The Wall Street Journal (10/4) says in an editorial that outlawing bump stocks would not halt the practice, since "bumping" can be done with a finger, and also argues that past bans on certain types of rifles have proven ineffective in preventing mass murder.

“Russian Reality Check.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/4) discusses the remarks made by Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr and ranking Democrat Mark Warner at a Wednesday news conference, saying that the lawmakers’ comments boiled down to this: Russia interfered in the 2016 presidential election; the threat of future Russian meddling in US elections remains a very serious concern; and there has apparently yet to be any evidence uncovered of collusion between Russia and the Trump camp.

“Brussels On The Amazon.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/4) writes that Wednesday’s ruling by European Union’s antitrust division, which ordered the collection of $294 million in back taxes from Amazon, serves as a reminder to companies of why they need tax reform in the United States. If implemented, US tax reform would encourage companies such as Amazon to repatriate profits and reinvest them in the US – a more positive model of growth than that pursued by EU officials Wednesday.

Jimmy Kimmel: "By the way, if Trump is upset Rex Tillerson called him a moron, wait till he finds out what the rest of the country has been calling him."

Stephen Colbert: "Hold on there, Tillerson! Nobody calls our President a moron except me!"

Stephen Colbert: "Here's the deal. Why would Tillerson say such a vicious, accurate thing about his boss?"

James Corden: "It was reported that Tillerson had called Trump a moron. So I guess Tillerson isn't so much Secretary of State as he is secretary of stating the obvious. "

Trevor Noah: "In addition to North Korea, it turns out Rex Tillerson may now need to negotiate peace between his boss and himself."

Trevor Noah: "So Facebook has fake news. Google has fake news. Twitter has fake news. Who would have thought we would be living in a world where Snapchat is our only legitimate source of news?"

Trevor Noah: "Now, it would already be bad if all the fake news coming out from the inside of the White House was the only thing we had to deal with. But as we've learned, the Russians are also involved. And if there is one guaranteed way to make any situation worse, just sprinkle a little Russia over it."

Jimmy Fallon: "It just came out that Secretary of State Rex Tillerson called President Trump a moron and threatened to quit. You can tell the situation's a mess because Trump started throwing paper towels at it."

Jimmy Fallon: "After it came out that Tillerson called Trump a moron, Tillerson held a press conference and called the President smart. Then he said, 'Do you think the moron bought it?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "It turns out that Trump's son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner had a third private email account that he used for government business. And if you all listen closely, you can hear Hillary backstage laughing."

Seth Meyers: "Former First Lady Michelle Obama yesterday criticized the lack of diversity in Congress. Said Congress, 'Not true. We have white men from 50 different states!'"

House Panel Approves Bill To Overhaul Presidential Monuments Power.

The Hill (10/11, Henry) reports the House Natural Resources Committee approved a bill reforming the Antiquities Act, sending the measure to the floor for consideration. The bill will likely cause a fight over the future of the president's power to declare national monuments. The legislation would set limits on the president's ability to unilaterally preserve federal land and would institute more public input on potential designations. The bill's author, Rep. Bob Bishop, said, "Congress never intended to give one individual the power to unilaterally dictate the manner in which Americans may enjoy enormous swathes of our nation's public lands. ... Overreach in recent administrations have brought us to this point and it's Congress' duty to clarify the law and end the abuse."

The AP (10/11, Daly) reports that Rep. Raul Grijalva "called Bishop's bill a tacit admission by the GOP that President Donald Trump does not have legal authority to reduce or abolish existing national monuments." Grijalva also claimed that the bill was "thrown together at the last minute with only one special interest group in mind: the oil and gas industry." In addition, "environmental groups and the outdoor recreation industry condemned the GOP bill."

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (10/11, 7:13 p.m. PT) reported that "the bill comes after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommended four large national monuments in the West be reduced in size."

Also reporting are the Washington Times (10/11, Wolfgang), the Washington Examiner (10/11, Siegel), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/11, Burr), the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/11, O'Donoghue), the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (10/11, Daly), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/11, Daly), and the Washington Examiner (10/11, Siciliano, Seigel).

Restore The Antiquities Act's Noble Vision. In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (10/11, Bishop), Rep. Rob Bishop writes that the provisions of his bill "ensure consultation with locals and robust scientific evaluation through public processes that would be required by law." He adds that "it strengthens the president's authority to protect actual antiquities without the threat of disenfranchising people." Bishop writes that "if my Democratic colleagues are serious about their calls for accountability, they will support this bill."

California Wildfires Continue To Rage As Death Toll Rises To 21.

NBC Nightly News (10/11, lead story, 2:30, Holt) reported that three days have passed with "still no control" of the 22 wildfires burning across California, which have resulted in at least 21 dead and 3,500 businesses and homes destroyed, especially in the wine country north of San Francisco. Winds were "picking up once again" Wednesday night, as new evacuations were underway and 8,000 firefighters battled the fires. Authorities "are dealing with hundreds of missing persons reports, complicated by destroyed cell towers," and officials "are seeing the worst air quality ever recorded in parts of the Bay Area."

ABC World News Tonight (10/11, lead story, 3:40, Muir) reported that whole neighborhoods have "turned to ashes" as firefighters race to contain the damage. Cal Fire

Director Ken Pimlott described the fires as “literally burning faster than firefighters can run.” As of Wednesday night, fires have burned through 170,000 acres, and new evacuation orders in Sonoma and Napa Counties were declared. At least 73 cell towers have been destroyed, and winds around Santa Rosa were forecast to gust up to 40 miles per hour.

The CBS Evening News (10/11, lead story, 2:40, Mason) reported Pimlott called the fires “a serious, critical, catastrophic event.” Cal Fire Battalion Chief Jonathan Cox praised firefighters’ efforts and their “real sense of purpose and mission,” but expressed concern that the fires could be “pushed in other directions.” Nearly 400 people have been reported missing.

The Los Angeles Times (10/11, Willon) reports that officials “fear that strong winds forecast for Wednesday evening and Thursday morning will spread embers from the deadly Tubbs fire to populated areas of Santa Rosa and Calistoga that have so far been spared the flames.”

The New York Times (10/11, A1, Fuller, Pérez-Peña, Bromwich) reports that survivors have “told of narrow escapes from walls of flame that seemed to erupt from nowhere on Sunday night and Monday morning, forcing them to run even before text messages and other alerts were sent out by emergency warning systems.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Lazo, Ailworth, Lovett) reports that California Gov. Jerry Brown said Wednesday that the cost of the fires will reach “tens of billions” of dollars, and that the wildfires were “one of the biggest” in the state’s history. More than 60,000 people have fled their homes.

Zinke’s Mix Of Fundraisers, Government Work Raises New Ethics Concerns.

Rochester \(NY\) Spectrum News (10/11, 4:55 p.m. ET) reported that “a growing number of [President Trump’s] Cabinet members are facing questions about using taxpayer money to take private or government jets instead of commercial flights. ... At least five Cabinet members are now under investigation by their department’s inspectors general: [Energy Secretary Rick] Perry, [Treasury Secretary Steven] Mnuchin, EPA Secretary Scott Pruitt, VA Secretary David Shulkin, and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.”

KHNL-TV Honolulu (10/11, 6:06 a.m. HT) reported, “The new travel scandal is Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. He attended political events while pretending to travel on official business. Zinke initially did not disclose that a so-called business trip included a $3,000-per-person skiing trip fundraiser. He also flew on official business to a political fundraiser in St. Croix.”

Additional coverage of the concerns raised over Zinke’s attendance of fundraisers while on government business trips was provided by USA Today (10/11), Talking Points Memo (10/11, Macneal), MSNBC (10/11), and WCPO-TV Cincinnati Cincinnati (10/11, Pulse, Biek).

Also reporting are CNN (10/11, Marsh, Wallace), CNN (10/12), the Daily Caller (10/11, Pearce), MSNBC (10/11), and MSNBC (10/11).

Trump’s Cabinet Can’t Seem To Stop Taking Private Planes. In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/11) criticizes Trump Cabinet members for what the Post describes as private travel at “exorbitant expense to taxpayers.” The Post particularly criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for “spending $12,375 on a charter flight from Las Vegas, where he spoke at the behest of a political patron, to his home state of Montana in June.” The Post adds that Energy Secretary Perry, Veterans Affairs Secretary Shulkin, and Treasury Secretary Mnuchin “are among at least seven Cabinet-level officials who have shunned the plebeian confines of readily available commercial planes in favor of private jets and military flights at public expense, sometimes to smart destinations in Europe and sometimes accompanied by their spouses – all at a total cost of millions of dollars.”

Secretary Of The Interior Visits Okefenokee Wildlife Refuge.

The Charlton County \(GA\) Herald (10/11) reports that on October 4, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke visited the Okefenokee Wildlife Refuge. During his visit, “Zinke met with refuge and other local leaders from Charlton County.”

Keys Weekly \(FL\) (10/11, Sanchez) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke also visited Everglades National Park. Pedro Ramos, superintendent of Everglades and Dry Tortugas national parks, said, “Secretary Zinke came to personally assess the damage caused by Hurricane Irma and ensure the well being of his NPS team in South Florida.”

Local TV coverage was provided by WBBH-TV Fort Myers, FL (10/6), WINK-TV Fort Myers, FL (10/6), and WPBF-TV West Palm Beach, FL (10/5).

Scott, Putnam Make Pitch For Federal Aid After Hurricane Irma. The Sunshine State \(FL\) News (10/11, Nielsen) reports that Florida Gov. Rick Scott and Commissioner of Agriculture Adam Putnam visited Washington, D.C. on Wednesday “to make the case for federal aid in the Sunshine

State after Hurricane Irma swept through the state, causing extensive damage last month." According to the article, "meetings with FEMA agents, Department of the Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke [and] U.S. Department of Energy Secretary Rick Perry were all on tap for the governor on Wednesday."

Local TV coverage was provided by WBBH-TV Fort Myers, FL (10/11, 5:05 p.m. ET).

Zinke Violated Ethics Regs, Watchdog Says.

The Daily Caller (10/11, Pearce) reports that "a government watchdog group is calling for an ethics investigation into Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke after an endorsement Zinke made as a congressman two years ago was found on a fundraising firm's website." Campaign for Accountability "filed a request for investigation with the Office of Government Ethics Wednesday, claiming Zinke broke federal ethics regulations by using his office as secretary of the Interior to endorse a private business." ForthRight Strategy, "a fundraising firm hired by Zinke during his 2014 congressional race, featured an endorsement from Zinke on the front page of its website, according to CfA." However, the statement predates "when Zinke was nominated to serve as secretary of the Interior."

Bennet Asks Feds To Pay Counties Drilling Royalties.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (10/12, Harmon) reports that "the federal government should move quickly to pay millions of dollars to four northwest Colorado counties, U.S. Sen. Michael Bennet, D-Colo., wrote to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." Bennet wrote to Zinke. "Colorado and its counties have been owed these royalties for far too long and we must resolve this issue. I ask you to take all available steps to ensure that this money, which rightfully belongs to the state of Colorado, is distributed as soon as possible. I also ask that you explore any options to deliver the funds directly to the relevant counties in order to avoid further delays or reductions in the funds."

Op-Ed: Utah Delegation Needs A Clear Message About Our Monuments.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/11, Boling), Josh Boling, a teacher and naturalist, criticizes the review of recently designated national monuments. Boling claims that "this monument review was never about democratic process; if it were, it would have taken more than a few scant months to complete. It wasn't about inclusivity; if it were, Zinke would have at least sat down at a table with the tribes, even if he had no intention of actually doing anything with their information. And it certainly wasn't about transparency, or Zinke would have held at least a press conference to inform the public of what we already knew."

Save The Bird, Save The Herd.

In an op-ed for the Montana Standard (10/12, Hadley), Kathy Hadley a board member of Montana Wildlife Federation, and board chair of the National Wildlife Federation, urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to support the sage-grouse conservation plans developed by the people who live in the West and know the land." She also urges Zinke "to commit to working with all the governors from the west to implement science-based conservation plans and practices on our public lands that will protect sage-grouse habitats." Hadley argues that "the sage grouse plans are the gold standard when it comes to conservation."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Homeland Hero.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (10/11, Scott) reports that "dozens" of "Native American veterans and active-duty members" have petitioned Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to defend the Badger-Two Medicine. Tribal members, "as well as numerous conservation groups, are seeking to furnish the wild and sacred Badger-Two Medicine with permanent protections from oil and gas drilling." Jesse DesRosier's, a Pikuni (or Blackfeet) warrior and veteran of the United States Marines Corps, said, "The Badger-Two Medicine is our Vatican. It's a temple for us, and it remains under attack."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Family Sues Indian Boarding School In Pierre For Wrongful Death.

The Sioux Falls \(SD\) Argus Leader (10/11, Hult) reports that “the family of a girl who died after a suicide attempt at a federal Indian boarding school has filed a wrongful death lawsuit against the federal government.” Emerson Little Elk claims “the Pierre Indian Learning Center’s staff failed to adequately monitor his granddaughter, who had a history of depression and threats of suicide, and that the center’s staff was slow to respond when they were informed of her suicide attempt in October 2015.” According to the article, “the girl was 14 years old when the incident took place at the Pierre boarding school, which is overseen by the Department of Interior’s Bureau of Indian Education.”

Bureau Of Land Management

US Government Halts Wyoming Wild Horse Roundup Amid Dispute.

The AP (10/11, Gruver) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “agreed to halt a Wyoming wild horse roundup amid a legal dispute over whether it should count foals toward the roundup quota.” The BLM and “roundup opponents agreed in a court filing Tuesday the roundup would stop at 1,560 horses of all ages, a number the BLM was set to reach Wednesday.” Meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Nancy Freudenthal in Cheyenne was set to decide “within days whether to allow the roundup to resume while a lawsuit filed by the opponents moves ahead.”

BLM Has Gathered 1,062 Horses & 269 Foals So Far; 12 Deaths.

SweetwaterNOW \(WY\) (10/11, Glennemeier) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management Rock Springs and Rawlins field offices have been working on gathering wild horses out of the Adobe Town, Salt Wells Creek, and Great Divide Basin areas.” According to the article, “in total so far as of October 10, the project has gathered 1,062 adults horses, 269 foals, and returned 4 animals to the range.” Also, “twelve horses been euthanized, all categorized as having chronic or pre-existing conditions diagnosed with a prognosis of ‘hopeless for recovery’ by a veterinarian.”

Nevada’s Heller, Laxalt Join Sandoval In Supporting Sage Grouse Decision.

Nevada Appeal (10/11) reports that Sen. Dean Heller and Nevada Attorney General Adam Laxalt have joined Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval in “applauding the BLM decision to cancel withdrawal of federal lands in six western states.” Laxalt said, “I am gratified that the BLM has accepted our basic argument, which is that we can balance conservation of the sage grouse without injuring the economic lifeblood of Nevada’s local communities.”

BLM Crew Clears Graffiti Off Black Cliffs.

KTVB-TV Boise, ID (10/11, Parris) reports that Bureau of Land Management crews are “working to restore a popular rock climbing spot that was tagged with graffiti earlier this year.” Vandals hit “the Black Cliffs climbing area near Lucky Peak in March, leaving behind purple, red, and white spray paint all over the cliff face.” Workers “used pressure washers and environmentally-friendly chemicals to strip the paint off the rocks Wednesday.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

U.S. Mulls “Astro Act” For Offshore Oil And Gas.

Maritime Executive (10/11) reports that a House subcommittee met on Wednesday to review a draft bill that aims to ease offshore drilling in federal waters while also steering revenues to certain coastal states, known as the “Accessing Strategic Resources Offshore Act,” or “ASTRO Act.” The legislation “establishes revenue sharing for states in the Mid and Southern Atlantic planning areas, in an attempt to fairly compensate the qualifying producing states, and to ensure disbursement certainty into the future.” In addition, it “adds flexibility to the national oil and gas leasing process by giving the Secretary of the Interior the authority to conduct lease sales in areas excluded from approved 5 Year Plans.” The act “also limits the president’s authority to withdraw OCS areas from leasing and to combine the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) and the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement (BSEE).”

In an op-ed for Marine Link (10/11, Luthi), National Ocean Industries Association (NOIA) president Randall Luthi supports the ASTRO Act. According to Luthi, “the ASTRO Act provides a path towards the multi-generational American energy dominance that the U.S. and the world needs.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

250 Years After Washington Drained It, Feds Soak A Swamp.

The AP (10/11, Finley) reports that “the U.S. government is trying to undo the damage from two centuries of logging at the Great Dismal Swamp.” According to the article, “a years-long project is under way to make the swamp wet again” in the refuge, “where ditches dug to reach lumber dried out the peat, releasing climate-changing carbon and making wildfires more frequent.”

Additional coverage was provided by WCAV-TV Charlottesville, VA (10/11, Finley) and WUNC-FM Chapel Hill, NC (10/11, Michaels).

The Battle Over Alaska Refuge Oil Reignites Under Trump.

The High Country \(CO\) News (10/11, Worby) reports that “on Oct. 5, the House of Representatives passed a budget resolution that includes a push to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge’s coastal plain to drilling.” Following the House vote, the Senate Budget Committee “passed a similar bill, with a vote expected in the Senate later this month.” Meanwhile, the Trump Administration has “renewed efforts to allow drilling for oil and gas in the Arctic Refuge as part of a larger push for American energy independence.”

GOP’s Hunt For Revenue Revives Longtime Fight Over Arctic Oil Drilling.

National Journal (10/11, Plautz) reports the GOP’s hunt for new sources of revenue has restarted the partisan debate over oil and gas drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Both chambers’ budget directed that natural resources committees to produce legislation increasing federal revenue to offset tax reform cuts. However, Democrats and some Republicans have opposed opening the ANWR as a revenue source, citing the potential environmental damage to the region. Franz Matzner, deputy director of the NRDC, said, “The scale is a drop in the bucket of the broader budget and tax-reform process. ... There’s only one excuse to look at our remaining natural resources for development, and that is ideological.”

Gov. Baker Issues Support For Chatham In Monomoy Dispute.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) News (10/11, Merchant) reports that “the Town of Chatham recently received the support of Governor Charlie Baker in its effort to regain control of about 4,000 acres of submerged lands and waters taken last year by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” Baker sent a letter to the House Committee on Natural Resources endorsing a bill filed by Rep. William Keating “which would solve the disputed western boundary of the Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge.” The governor’s endorsement “comes after he received a petition this summer from the town with more than 1,000 signatures seeking support.”

Another Victim Of Hurricane Maria: Puerto Rico’s Treasured Rainforest.

The New York Times (10/11, Ferré-sadurní) reports that Hurricane Maria “obliterated” El Yunque National Forest, “the only tropical rain forest in the United States forest system.” The forest “has been an enormous source of pride in Puerto Rico and one of the main drivers of the island’s tourism industry.” Also, “the livelihood of the Puerto Rican parrot, an endangered species living in El Yunque and Río Abajo State Forest, is of special concern.” Marisel López, leader of the Puerto Rican Parrot Recovery Program of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, said, “The Puerto Rican parrot is an iconic species of the island. It’s our legacy.”

Martha Stewart Boasts She ‘Always’ Carries Shawl That May Be Made From Endangered Species When She Travels.

CNBC (10/11, Mangan) reports that Martha Stewart “boasted in an interview published Wednesday of ‘always’ traveling with ‘a very comfortable shawl’ – a shawl that, if it is what she originally said it is, is illegal for Americans to own or travel with because it is made from the hair of slaughtered endangered Tibetan antelopes.” Stewart included the “shahtoosh” in a New York Times story entitled “What Martha Stewart Can’t Travel Without.” But when told about article, “a top official at the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, said that if, in fact, Stewart owns an shawl that is actually made from shahtoosh: ‘That would be an issue.’” In response to a request for comment, Stewart said, “I should have said shahtoosh-like, which is what I meant.”

Feeding Endangered Key Deer Could Kill Them, Federal Wildlife Managers Say.

The Miami Herald (10/11, Staletovich) reports that federal wildlife managers in the Florida Keys are asking residents to refrain from “feeding the endangered deer.” According to the article, “since Irma washed over Cudjoe Key Sept. 10, pushing a storm surge that submerged much of the Lower Keys including the National Key Deer Refuge on Big Pine, residents who have long tended to the deer like beloved pets began putting out water and food, fearful that saltwater contaminated foraging grounds.” Officials are concerned “that putting out dog food or grains not naturally in the deer’s diet could bring more harm and in recent weeks have repeated warnings about feeding them.”

Wildlife Officials Asking Oklahomans To Help Protect Bats From Deadly Disease.

KFOR-TV Oklahoma City (10/11) reports that “wildlife officials are warning Oklahomans to take precautions and protect bats from a deadly disease.” Earlier this year, scientists with the U.S. Geological Survey “confirmed that a tricolored bat in Delaware County tested positive for white-nose syndrome.” National White-nose Syndrome Coordinator Jeremy Coleman of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said, “It’s troubling that white-nose syndrome continues to push west and threatens the Ozark Plateau, a stronghold for bat conservation. We are focused on finding solutions and helping bats survive. We’re committed to working with Oklahoma and other partners across the country to closely monitor bats and fight this devastating disease.”

National Park Service

Rainbow Flag Flies At US Monument, But Not On Federal Land.

The AP (10/11) reports that “gay rights activists who worked to get a rainbow flag installed permanently at the newly created Stonewall National Monument are upset the National Park Service says the flag isn’t actually on federal land but on property owned by the city.” To the group that had pushed for the flag to be added to the site, the NPS’ “surprise announcement that the city, not the federal government, would be maintaining the flag and its pole seemed like a betrayal.” The NPS “denied that any slight was intended, but the dispute threatened to dim the mood at the dedication ceremony, in Manhattan’s Greenwich Village.”

Also reporting are the Washington Post (10/11, Eilperin, Fears), the New York Daily News (10/11, Blau), and WCBS-TV New York New York (10/11).

Indiana Awards $275,000 To Boost 7 Preservation Projects.

The AP (10/11) reports that Indiana is “awarding more than $275,000 to give a boost to seven preservation projects around the state.” The state Department of Natural Resources “says the grants from the National Park Service will be matched by $249,000 in local and private funds.”

Trump’s Pro-Coal Agenda Is A Blow For Clean Air Efforts At Texas’ Big Bend Park.

The Guardian \(UK\) (10/11, Dart) reports that environmental advocates are concerned that the Trump Administration’s “pro-coal agenda will derail the prospects” of improving the air quality at Big Bend National Park. The article notes that “Tuesday’s announcement that the EPA plans to abandon the 2015 Clean Power Plan to reduce carbon emissions came less than two weeks after the agency revealed a revised plan to combat regional haze in Texas and Oklahoma that critics say will do little to cut pollution.”

Oldest Buildings In Hartford’s Colt Complex Will Be Donated For Park Visitor Center.

The Hartford \(CT\) Courant (10/10, Gosselin) reports that “the developers of the former Colt manufacturing complex have reached an agreement that clears the way for donating two brownstone sheds for a visitor center for a new national park in the city.” The agreement with the National Park Service is expected to be signed Wednesday. However, “perhaps as much as a year’s worth of work is still needed before the Coltsville National Historical Park will officially open.”

Residents Talk With RMNP Superintendent During Mayor’s Chat.

The Estes Park \(CO\) Trail-Gazette (10/11, Clemens) reports that “the monthly mayor’s chat was held at Latitude 105 last Friday morning, where special guest Darla Sidles, Superintendent of Rocky Mountain National Park (RMNP) was there to talk with Estes Park residents and answer any questions they had.” Much of the conversation “centered about the growing number of visitors to RMNP each year, with about a 40 percent increase in visits from just a few years ago.” Sidles said, “The Park has done a great job at finding short-term solution. But the overcrowding is our

no. 1 issue, and it is affecting our visitor experience." She added, "We have to set visitor expectations, and continue to get the word out that planning is the best option to have a positive experience."

Yellowstone Visitation Down During Snowy September.

The AP (10/11) reports that "an early shot of winter weather depressed recreational visits in Yellowstone National Park during the month of September." According to the National Park Service, "just over 640,000 people visited Yellowstone in September." The figure was "down about 8.8 percent from September 2016, when the park recorded more than 700,000 recreational visits." Still, the NPS "says Yellowstone saw its third busiest September on record in the park."

Trump Says He's "Tougher" On North Korea Than Other Officials.

The Washington Times (10/11, Boyer) reports President Trump said Wednesday that he is taking a "tougher" approach on North Korea than some of his advisers." Perhaps I feel stronger and tougher on that subject than other people," Trump told reporters in the Oval Office. "I listen to everybody, but ultimately my attitude is the one that matters." He added, "Ultimately, I will do what's right for the United States and really what's right for the world," the president said. "That's really a world problem. And it's a problem that has to be solved."

Reuters (10/11) reports Trump yesterday also "appeared to confirm he had North Korea in mind last week when he described a gathering of military leaders as 'the calm before the storm.'" In an interview with Fox News, Trump was asked what he meant with the cryptic phrase. Trump told Fox News' Hannity (10/11), "We can't let this go on. We just can't. You can say what you want. That should have been handled 25 years ago, and 10 years ago, and five years ago. It should have been handled by numerous, not just Obama, but certainly President Obama should have taken care of that. Now it's at a point where it's very, very far advanced. Something has to be done. We can't allow this to happen."

North Korea: Trump Has "Lit The Wick Of War." Wolf Blitzer reported on CNN's Situation Room (10/11) that North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho "said President Trump has 'lit the wick of war,'" and that Trump's speech at the UN was "bellicose and insane." Blitzer added that Ri "said any sanction resolution, any additional sanctions, is equivalent to an act of aggression and war...and they will do what is necessary." Ri, USA Today (10/11, Durando) reports, also said North Korea's forces have "inexhaustible power that won't leave aggressor state America unpunished."

Sen. Ed Markey said on CNN's Situation Room (10/11) that Americans "should all be very concerned" as the rhetoric between Trump and North Korea escalates. He argues such talk is "moving us towards a situation where there could be an accidental war that gets triggered, potentially by Kim, who has a paranoia about our desire to...decapitate his regime." Markey said "there is no military option" – "the only option that we have is to impose much tougher trade sanctions" – and "yet the President just seems to have dismissed it. He insults Tillerson" and "anyone else who talks about diplomacy."

Rep. Ted Yoho said on CNN's Situation Room (10/11), "I don't believe President Trump lit the wick for this." He argued that North Korea has always been the "aggressor," and that dating back to the Clinton Administration, "diplomacy was tried and repeatedly failed." Despite that assessment, Yoho also said the goal "is to put sanctions on North Korea, have the world buy into it...and get that diplomatic end to this."

Rep. Adam Kinzinger, however, said on CNN's The Lead (10/11), "I think the way [Trump's] handling North Korea is actually really good because you finally have a stick being shown, a stick option to back up the potential for a carrot and get a diplomatic solution to this thing."

US Flies Bombers Over Korean Peninsula. Reuters (10/11, Kim, Beech) reports the US military flew two strategic bombers over the Korean Peninsula "in a show of force late on Tuesday," as President Trump met top defense officials to discuss "how to respond to any threat from North Korea." The White House said in a statement that Trump was briefed by Defense Secretary Mattis and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunford at a national security team meeting.

Hurricane: Pence Pledges A Bigger, Better US Virgin Islands.

The St. Kitts & Nevis Observer (10/9, Ehrlich) reports that during his visit to the US Virgin Islands, Vice President Pence said “that the White House is committed to assisting in rebuilding the US territory ‘bigger and better’ in the wake of two devastating hurricanes.” Gov. Kenneth Mapp “welcomed Pence, his wife, Karen, and other Cabinet members, including Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao, to St Croix prior to an official briefing at the Henry E. Rohlsen Airport.” Mapp “said the assistance of the federal government has made it possible for schools to plan reopening and the private sector to begin to get back on its feet just two weeks after Hurricane Maria and 30 days after Hurricane Irma.”

AXA Financial Extends Grace Periods On Policies.

InsuranceNewsNet (10/9, Tuohy) reports that “four AXA Financial insurers have relaxed the premium payment grace period for life, health and disability policyholders throughout Florida, U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico in the wake of hurricanes Irma and Maria.” According to AXA, “premium payments toward contracts underwritten by AXA Equitable Life, (formerly The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the U.S.), AXA Equitable Life and Annuity Co. (formerly The Equitable of Colorado), MONY Life and U.S. Financial Life are eligible for the grace period.”

16 Graduate From Inaugural Conservation Academy.

The Guam Daily Post (10/9) reports that “sixteen individuals graduated from the first Guam Community College Regional Marine & Terrestrial Conservation Law Enforcement Academy, trained in ways to protect the environment and combat human trafficking.” The graduates were “recognized for completing the nearly three-month training during a special ceremony on Oct. 6 at the Pacific Star Hotel in Tumon.” The article notes that “funding for this first-of-its-kind academy was obtained from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, U.S. Department of the Interior Office of Insular Affairs, U.S. Forest Service’s PIPTIEM Program, USAID’s Project Ready Program, the FSM Congress and the Raymond James Asia Pacific Group, through the Micronesian Conservation Trust, according to a press release from GCC.”

Fire Island Breach Stable 5 Years After Sandy, Study Finds.

The Long Island \(NY\) Press (10/11, Bolger) reports that “five years after Sandy breached Fire Island, the new channel between the Atlantic and Great South Bay is shifting, but stable and unlikely to increase bay-front storm flooding, a new study found.” The U.S. Geological Survey “made the findings in what the federal agency billed as one of the most detailed scientific studies ever conducted of the early stages in the life of a barrier island breach.” Cheryl Hapke, “a USGS oceanographer, FI erosion expert and lead author of the report released last month,” said, “Storm strikes are the force that drives the geomorphology – the geologic shape and evolution – of barrier islands along the Northeast coast. But until this event, no one ever had the opportunity to watch a breach open and evolve, and to study that process in depth.”

USGS Evaluates Withlacoochee High Water Marks.

The Hernando \(FL\) Sun (10/11) reports that “eight USGS field crews traveled around the Jacksonville, Tampa and Fort Myers areas last week looking for evidence that tell scientists how high the flood waters and storm surge from Hurricane Irma reached.” One crew was “able to make it to Hernando County to evaluate the Withlacoochee River.” The USGS said, “High water mark data collected from Hurricane Irma will allow FEMA to revise its current maps for the affected areas.”

Media Analyses: Trump Threatens Free Press With Reaction To NBC Report.

All three broadcast networks covered President Trump's criticism of an NBC report (10/11, Kube) stating that he called for a tenfold increase in the size of the US nuclear arsenal during a July meeting, and the President's seeming suggestion that media outlets should face the loss of broadcast licenses for such reporting. The latter thread of the story gets the most attention and it is universally negative, with multiple outlets comparing Trump's words to President Nixon's abuse of power against the media, questioning Trump's commitment to the First Amendment, and noting that federal broadcast licenses do not exist.

NBC Nightly News (10/11, story 3, 2:40, Holt) reported that Trump made comments "about the size of the US nuclear arsenal...that stunned a top secret meeting shortly before the Secretary of State called him a 'moron.' The President dismissed our reporting, saying it's not true and that our sources are made up. Those sources, however, do exist. In fact, three of them were in the room when the President talked about dramatically increasing the number of US nukes." Trump: "No, I never discussed increasing it. We won't need an increase. But I want modernization, and I want total rehabilitation. It's got to be in tip-top shape." NBC's Kristen Welker: "But three officials present in the room say the [July 20] meeting was at times tense, including when the President was shown a chart of the history of the nuclear arsenal peaking in the late 1960s at more than 32,000 weapons. The President told his team he wanted the US to have that many. The current number stands at 4,000. ... In disputing the NBC News report, the President took the extraordinary step of appearing to attack the First Amendment, tweeting about NBC and the networks, 'At what point is it appropriate to challenge their license?'" Ten hours after that initial tweet, Trump tweeted, "Network news has become so partisan, distorted and fake that licenses must be challenged and, if appropriate, revoked. Not fair to public!"

On ABC World News Tonight (10/11, story 6, 2:10, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported that the President's Wednesday comment was "actually a change from December, when he tweeted, 'The United States must greatly strengthen and expand its nuclear capability until such time as the world comes to its senses regarding nukes.' Today, the President didn't just dispute the NBC report, but went so far as to question their right to report it." Trump: "And it's frankly disgusting the way the press is able to write whatever they want to write. And people should look into it." Karl: "And on Twitter, he seemed to make a threat: 'With all of the fake new coming out of NBC and the networks, at what point is it appropriate to challenge their license? Bad for country!'" In a 30-second item, the CBS Evening News (10/11, story 4, 0:30, Mason) called those comments "a page out of the Nixon playbook, which included license challenges and threats of antitrust suits against the networks."

USA Today (10/11, Estepa) reports, "Angry over a story that said he wanted to increase the country's nuclear arsenal, President Trump charged on Wednesday that NBC and other news networks should have their licenses challenged." The Washington Post (10/11, Nakamura) reports that the President "threatened NBC over a news report he called 'pure fiction.'" The President "has previously challenged NBC's reporting on the meeting, including a revelation" that Tillerson "referred to the president as a 'moron' after the meeting and considered resigning from the Cabinet."

The New York Times (10/11, Baker, Kang) reports that the President "threatened" NBC, drawing "criticism that the president was using his office to undermine First Amendment guarantees of free speech and free press. And, in fact, the networks themselves – and their news departments – do not hold federal licenses, though individual affiliates do." Like CBS, the Times also compared Trump to Nixon, who "told advisers to make it difficult for The Washington Post to renew the F.C.C. license for a Florida television station it owned." The Los Angeles Times (10/11, Bierman, Bennett) similarly writes that Trump "has threatened press freedoms before, but on Wednesday, he went a step further: suggesting that television networks lose their federal broadcast licenses for what he considers 'fake news.'" The Times also says the threat "recall[ed] for many the threats of President Richard M. Nixon."

Politico (10/11, Nelson, McGill) reports, "Trump lashed out at NBC, appearing to make a threat that is not even possible, given that the Federal Communications Commission doesn't directly license networks." The Daily Caller (10/11, Ross) says that "any attempt to take NBC News or other networks off the air would be nearly impossible," and Bloomberg News (10/11, Shields) says that Trump can "probably not" do that, "in part because the NBC network he attacked has no licenses (which are issued to TV stations) and in part because the federal government cannot legally police political speech.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Bender) also reports that Trump denied calling for the massive increase in the nuclear arsenal. Reuters (10/11), the Washington Times (10/11, Boyer, Persons), and The Hill (10/11, Easley) have straightforward accounts of the President’s remarks.

Mattis Calls NBC Report “False” And “Erroneous.” The Washington Examiner (10/11, Brown) reports that Defense Secretary Mattis also challenged the report, saying, “Recent reports that the President called for an increase in the US nuclear arsenal are absolutely false. This kind of erroneous reporting is irresponsible.” The Daily Caller (10/11, Pickrell) and Townhall (10/11, Brown) also cover Mattis’ statement.

Sasse Asks If Trump Is “Recanting” Oath To Defend First Amendment. The Washington Examiner (10/11, Correll) reports that Sen. Ben Sasse “is questioning whether President Trump is still committed to preserving the First Amendment after he repeatedly floated retribution against the media for publishing stories he doesn’t like.” In a statement, Sasse said, “Mr. President: Words spoken by the President of the United States matter. Are you tonight recanting of the oath you took on January 20th to preserve, protect, and defend the First Amendment?”

White House Says Trump’s Relations With Tillerson Are Fine. Sara Murray reported on CNN’s Situation Room (10/11) that Trump on Wednesday “downplayed any talk of tension between himself and his Secretary of State as old news, something that happened last week.” Murray continued: “In fact, the White House does say the President had lunch with Secretary Tillerson yesterday.” Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ America’s Newsroom (10/11) that the President “has confidence in his secretary of state and his entire Cabinet. They met yesterday for lunch and they are in touch very closely as you can imagine as any president and secretary of state are.”

NYTimes Says Congress Should Limit Trump’s Ability To Launch Nuclear Attack. The New York Times (10/11) editorializes, “The broad debate over President Trump’s fitness for the difficult and demanding office he holds has recently been reframed in a more pointed and urgent way: Does he understand, and can he responsibly manage, the most destructive nuclear arsenal on earth?” The Times writes that “Congress has been sufficiently alarmed to consider legislation that would bar the president from launching a first nuclear strike without a declaration of war by Congress,” which is “a sound idea [that] could be made stronger with a requirement that the secretaries of defense and state also approve any such decision.”

Trump Pitches Tax Plan To Truckers In Pennsylvania.

Coverage of President Trump’s stop outside Harrisburg, PA to promote his tax reform plan is heaviest in print and local media, with only one broadcast network airing a brief report. Reports stress the President’s pitch to truck drivers as he tries to portray the plan as beneficial to the middle class – and not a boon for the wealthiest. Some reports also say that Trump chose Pennsylvania hoping to put pressure on Democratic Sen. Bob Casey, who is up for re-election next year in a state Trump carried in 2016.

ABC World News Tonight (10/11, story 8, 0:50, Muir) reported that the President was in Pennsylvania “talking about his proposed tax plan, and making some new promises about how much middle class families would save under the plan.” ABC’s Cecilia Vega: “President Trump says the typical American family will save $4,000 – a ‘pay raise,’ he is calling this. He is claiming this will come from cuts to the corporate tax rate. But this is a tax reform plan...with few details right now. Some experts say it’s actually the top one percent of income earners who will earn and win the most out of this plan, and it will add trillions to the federal deficit.”

The Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (10/11) reports that after the “tax reform plan initially was skewered by critics as a boon for the wealthy,” the President “took a deliberate blue-collar approach to present his proposed tax cuts in the Harrisburg area.” At an airport stop near Harrisburg, “he invited groups of truckers, staged rigs as a backdrop and presented his framework for an overhaul of the country’s tax code in terms of how it would affect truckers.” Trump said, “Our framework ensures that the benefits of tax reform go to the middle class, not to the highest earners. It’s a middle-class bill.”

The Allentown \(PA\) Morning Call (10/11, Olson) reports that the President promoted the plan “as a proposal that will benefit Pennsylvania truckers and trucking company officials seeking to pass on their businesses to their children.” He told a crowd of about 1,000, “When your trucks are moving, America is growing.” Transport Topics (10/11, Lamb) reports that “representatives from trucking companies, many of which are family-owned, expressed enthusiasm at the prospect of ending the estate tax,” saying that would make it easier to keep businesses in their families.

WPMT-TV Harrisburg, PA (10/11, 10:05 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump “focused on the trucking industry, which he called a critical partner in keeping the American economy running and competing with other countries.” WHTM-TV Harrisburg, PA (10/11, 11:02 p.m. EDT) reported, “You could say the President was preaching to the choir. a thousand invited guests, mostly pro-business. He was warmly received as he talked taxes, trucks and truckers.” WGAL-TV Lancaster, PA (10/11, 11:01 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump “rebuffed critics who claim his plan is a big win for the wealthy.”

The AP (10/11, Lucey, Boak) reports, “Trump has left it up to Congress to fill in many specifics of his plan, which omits details such as the income levels for his new tax brackets. The outreach to truckers in Pennsylvania is an attempt to give a blue-collar appeal to a framework that outside tax analysts say would largely favor the wealthy.” The President told the truckers, “You’re going to make more money. You’re going to do better than ever before. And we truly admire you. You are our heroes, believe me. You are our heroes.” Charles Hurt of the Washington Times said on Fox News Special Report (10/11), “This is by far the most populist presidency we’ve had in modern times. I don’t ever remember a president campaigning or hosting an event with long-haul truck drivers.”

Philly \(PA\) (10/11, Whelan) reports that Trump stuck “mostly to the words on a TelePrompter,” and “stayed away from the distractions that have muddled his message in recent days: the fight over NFL players kneeling in protest during the national anthem, for instance; the dispute with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, who had called the president a “moron,” over the two men’s respective IQs; and his Twitter-sniping with ESPN.”

The Washington Post (10/11, Paletta, Wagner) reports that the speech “came just one week before Senate Republicans must decide whether to pave the way for his tax plan.” With Sen. Rand Paul “expected to oppose the budget resolution, as he has traditionally voted against any budget that doesn’t eliminate the deficit,” the Administration will need near-unanimity among other Senate Republicans, or some Democratic support. The Hill (10/11, Fabian, Jagoda) reports that Sen. Bob Corker has also “pledged not to vote for a tax bill if it adds to the deficit.”

The Washington Times (10/11, Miller) reports that the Pennsylvania venue was chosen “in part to put pressure” on Casey. Politico (10/11, Nussbaum) says the speech “did not include any sustained appeal to Democrats,” but the New York Times (10/11, Baker) headlines its report “In Pennsylvania, Trump Hunts For Democratic Support For Tax Plan,” writing that the President “took his campaign for tax cuts to another key battleground state on Wednesday in search of elusive Democratic votes” as he argued that the plan “would benefit middle-class Americans, like truck drivers, more than it would help his fellow business tycoons.” Casey, however, posted dozens of tweets Wednesday that were critical of the plan. The Washington Examiner (10/11, Weaver) reports that Trump touted Rep. Lou Barletta (R-PA), who is challenging Casey, saying, “He’s going to win. You’re going to win big.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/11, Mascaro, Puzanghera) reports that as the President “hit the road Wednesday to promote the plan, Republicans in Congress were quietly discussing scaling back key provisions in an effort to deliver the top White House priority. There’s already talk that the cornerstone of the GOP proposal – a dramatically reduced 20% corporate tax rate that Trump has called a ‘red line’ – may slip to 22% or 23%,” with Republicans reporting “resistance from lawmakers and lobbyists who want to preserve deductions and loopholes that were targeted for elimination” to offset “the massive corporate cut from the current 35% rate.”

House Republicans from Pennsylvania were on hand for the speech. Rep. Patrick Meehan (R-PA) tweeted, “Pleased to be on hand for @POTUS speech on #TaxReform in PA – strong focus on what tax reform means for middle class & small business jobs”. Rep. Lloyd Smucker (R-PA) tweeted, “Great to be in Harrisburg for #taxreform today. @realDonaldTrump is right: make tax code simple, honest, and fair for all Americans.”

USA Today (10/11, Shannon, Lee, Machcinski, Long, Heisey) reports, “Before the event, a group of about 20 protesters had been parked in a private parking lot just outside the fencing of Harrisburg International Airport.” They “were asked by airport police to move their vehicles to a location about a half-mile from the staging area” and “moved their vehicles peacefully, but only two returned for when President Trump landed at the airport.” Bloomberg News (10/11, Olorunnipa, Epstein) also reports on the speech.

Trump: “It’s A Massive Tax Cut.” Trump said on Fox News’ Hannity (10/11), “First of all, it’s a massive tax cut. ... When we first introduced it, for years they talked about tax reform. The problem with the word ‘reform,’ nobody understands what it means. It could mean you raise taxes. This is the largest tax cut in the history of our country.”

CEA Chairman: Trump Tax Cut Could Lift Wages By $4,000 Per Year. The Washington Free

Beacon (10/11, Meyer) reports that Council of Economic Advisers Chairman Kevin Hassett, speaking at a Washington event on tax reform, said “a tax cut like the one President Trump is proposing could potentially lift wages by about $4,000.” Hassett said, “Over the last eight years the average real income growth was only about 0.6% per year. That’s just not fast enough. ... What President Trump wants the team to do is come up with a plan that fixes that.”

Politico Analysis: Tax Cuts That Do Not Benefit Wealthiest Hard To Craft. Politico (10/11, Faler) reports that while Trump “has promised that wealthy Americans won’t get a massive tax cut as part of Republicans’ plans to rewrite the tax code,” that is hard to achieve, since “higher earners already shoulder most of the tax burden while average Americans pay a relatively small share of income taxes.” That makes it “increasingly difficult to cut taxes, particularly tax rates, without favoring the rich.”

Reuters (10/11, Becker, Morgan) reports that “about three-quarters of Americans say they believe the wealthiest people should pay more in taxes, Reuters/Ipsos polling shows.” The survey found that 53% of adults “strongly agree” that the wealthiest Americans should pay higher tax rates,” while another 23% “somewhat agree.”

Cruz, Sanders To Debate Trump Tax Plan On CNN Next Week. CNN (10/11) reports that Sens. Ted Cruz and Bernie Sanders will debate Trump’s efforts to overhaul the nation’s tax code on CNN on October 18 at 9 pm ET. The debate will be moderated by Dana Bash and Jake Tapper.

Trump Says He’ll Sign Measure Allowing Healthcare Purchases Across State Lines.

Breitbart (10/11, Poor) report that President Trump “offered a preview of his forthcoming action on health care” during an interview on Fox News’ Hannity Wednesday. Trump said, “We are going to have great health across state lines. ... It will cost the government nothing. Private insurance – incredible health care. I tell you what, this will take it and I can sign it myself, I don’t need anybody. I would have done it earlier, except I was hoping they were going to put this through and we would have it in the bill. We are signing tomorrow a health care package that will cover – people say 30 percent or 25 percent in some people say 50 percent. It will cover a large percentage of people.”

The New York Times (10/11, A1, Pear, Abelson) reports that Trump is expected to sign an executive order Thursday “to relax health care standards on small businesses that band together to buy health insurance and may take steps to allow the sale of other health plans that skirt the health law’s requirements.” While he “has been telegraphing his intentions for more than a week, Democrats and some state regulators are now greeting the move with increasing alarm, calling it another attempt to undermine” the ACA. The Wall Street Journal (10/11, Radnofsky, Armour, Mathews) says in a front-page story that while it will take months for the changes in the executive order to take effect, it is the biggest change to healthcare since Trump was elected.

Trump: “We Have To Get Something In Return” For DACA Deal.

President Trump said on Fox News’ Hannity (10/11), “We have 800,000 people. They are not necessarily young. A lot of people think they are children. They average from 16 to 39 or so. A lot of these people are in the military. They have jobs. I fully understand it, but if we are going to do something, we have to get something in return. What I want is tremendous border regulation, I want the wall, and we are going to get other things. We are going to see if we can work something out. Whether or not we do, I don’t know. It would be wonderful to solve the DACA problem.”

Trump Could Have Direct Role In Selecting Border Wall Winner.

The Washington Times (10/11, Dinan) reports that a spokesman for DHS said Wednesday that the President may have a direct role in selecting the winning border wall prototype from among eight contenders currently being constructed and tested by the Department. Trump “was prohibited by contracting law from being involved in the selection of the eight finalists,” but “he could be involved in picking the final best designs – though it’s not year clear what role he will play, said David Lapan, the spokesman.” Axios (10/11, Britzky) shows pictures of four border wall prototypes that were tweeted Wednesday by the San Diego division of Customs and Border Protection.

Samuelson: Build Wall To Prevent Deportation Of Dreamers. Robert Samuelson writes in the Washington Post (10/11) that the wall should be built “and, in doing so, prevent an estimated 690,000 DACA ‘dreamers’ from being deported from the United States.” Samuelson argues that if Trump is to go back on a campaign promise to eliminate the DACA program, “he needs something big in return. This could be the wall.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Mr. Trump Alone Can Order A Nuclear Strike. Congress Can Change That.” The New York Times (10/11) editorializes, “The broad debate over President Trump’s fitness for the difficult and demanding office he holds has recently been reframed in a more pointed and urgent way: Does he understand, and can he responsibly manage, the most destructive nuclear arsenal on earth?” The Times writes that “Congress has been sufficiently alarmed to consider legislation that would bar the president from launching a first nuclear strike without a declaration of war by Congress,” which is “a sound idea [that] could be made stronger with a requirement that the secretaries of defense and state also approve any such decision.”

“Biggest Loser At New York Mayoral Debate? The Voters.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/11) writes that Tuesday night’s debate among the three candidates for New York mayor offered few policy specifics, was by “loud and obnoxious” spectators and “endless audience shouting,” and resulted in no indisputable winner. The Times concludes that the biggest loser from the debate was the voters of New York.

Washington Post.

“The Culture Of Complicity Protecting Harvey Weinsteins Everywhere.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/11) says that while “the details of Mr. Weinstein’s actions are grotesque enough,” the “fact that his systematic abuse of power seems to have been an open secret” is “just as shocking.” The Post laments the “complicity” that “protects many Harvey Weinsteins in many industries,” and says the stories from Weinstein’s alleged victims “make clear the crucial role that those in positions of responsibility must play by denouncing misconduct when they see it and demanding accountability, rather than remaining quietly complicit.”

“The EPA Rips Up The Clean Power Plan.” In an editorial, Washington Post (10/11) criticizes EPA Administrator Pruitt’s decision to repeal the Clean Power Plan and argues that the rule’s elimination not only bypasses the fact that many, including the Supreme Court, had viewed the policy as legal, but also likely will lead to much fewer limits on carbon emissions. The Post describes Pruitt’s approach as “anti-scientific,” “ideological,” and “a betrayal of his office.”

“Trump’s Cabinet Can’t Seem To Stop Taking Private Planes.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/11) criticizes Trump Cabinet members for what the Post describes as private travel at “exorbitant expense to taxpayers.” The Post particularly criticizes Interior Secretary Zinke for “spending $12,375 on a charter flight from Las Vegas, where he spoke at the behest of a political patron, to his home state of Montana in June.” The Post adds that Energy Secretary Perry, Veterans Affairs Secretary Shulkin, and Treasury Secretary Mnuchin “are among at least seven Cabinet-level officials who have shunned the plebeian confines of readily available commercial planes in favor of private jets and military flights at public expense, sometimes to smart destinations in Europe and sometimes accompanied by their spouses – all at a total cost of millions of dollars.”

Wall Street Journal.

“An Air Traffic Winner.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/11) writes that House Republicans’ current plan to convert Federal Aviation Administration air-traffic control into an operation run by airlines, pilots, controllers, and other industry experts would help improve both the economy and travelers’ experience. The Journal argues that Republicans should seize the opportunity to pass the legislation while they have a President who wants reform as part of his infrastructure improvement plan.

“Senate Blue Slip Bluster.” A Wall Street Journal (10/11) editorial praises Senate Majority Leader McConnell’s decision to move forward on judicial nominees even if home-state Democratic senators don’t return the so-called ‘blue slips’ to the Judiciary Committee, arguing that Minority Leader Schumer is using the “blue slip” process, which is a courtesy, for political purposes.

“The Boy-Girl Scouts Of America.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/11) writes that the Boy Scouts of America’s decision to allow girls to join the organization in the future represented a compromise that prevents total gender integration in the group while addressing growing pressure to allow girls to join and the BSA’s flagging membership. The Journal says the question remains as to if the decision will satisfy the progressive movement’s concerns about gender differences, but concludes by expressing hope that BSA will succeed in its new policy.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "The big story out of the BET show was Eminem launching a five-minute freestyle attack on Donald Trump. It was very well done. He found a way to rhyme the word 'orange,' which previously had been thought impossible."

Jimmy Kimmel: "According to the story in Vanity Fair, John Kelly is miserable in his job, only staying in it out of a sense of duty to keep Trump from making a disastrous decision. But publicly, they say he's very happy. Sure he is, you can see how happy he is right there. He always looks like he's in one of those 'Wanna Get Away' Southwest Airlines commercials."

Stephen Colbert: "Over the summer, Trump met with top military officials and said he wanted a nearly ten-fold increase in the US nuclear arsenal. A ten-fold increase? Excuse me while I one-fold into the fetal position. He knows we can already end all life on Earth, right? The cockroaches will survive, which is good news for Steve Bannon."

Stephen Colbert: "Speaking of staffing issues, last night, around 9:00, Trump tweeted, 'The fake news is at it again, this time trying to hurt one of the finest people I know, General John Kelly, by saying he will soon be..... fired. This story is totally made up by the dishonest media. The chief is doing a fantastic job for me and, more importantly, for the USA!' Yes, very important you clear up that John Kelly works for the USA, because so much of Trump's staff works for Russia."

James Corden: "An article today revealed that during a national security meeting last summer, Donald Trump said that he wanted to increase the number of America's nuclear weapons by ten fold. Trump would have gone higher than ten fold, but he ran out of fingers to count them on."

James Corden: "Eminem's lyrics were politically charged. He defended the NFL players who have been kneeling during the national anthem, and later Donald Trump responded with his own rap that went, 'Will the NFL players please stand up, please stand up, please stand up.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump said it's disgusting that the press is able to write whatever it wants to write. When asked about the First Amendment, he said, 'Is that the one that says not to talk about fight club?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night at the BET awards, Eminem did a four-minute freestyle rap criticizing Trump. ... Trump was mad, but he was also a little confused. Today, he told people to boycott the M&M store."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump this morning tweeted, quote, 'With all the fake news coming out of NBC and the networks, at what point is it appropriate to challenge their license?' You're coming after NBC? They didn't take our license after that monkey hospital show, they're not going to take it for you."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump said today, quote, 'It's frankly disgusting the way the press is able to write whatever they want to write, and people should look into it.' Hey man, are you having trouble reading the First Amendment?"

Republicans See New Chance For Oil Drilling In Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The Los Angeles Times (10/18, Schneider) reports that Republicans are intent on opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration at a time when the U.S. oil production was at a record high, imports are at the lowest level since the mid-1990s and prices are less than half of what they were a decade ago. Rather than arguing there is a need for new oil supplies, the Republican strategy is to "say opening the refuges 1.5 million-acre coastal plain to exploration would generate enough revenue from oil leases and royalties to help reduce America's budget deficit." Meanwhile, Democrats have "vowed to block any bill that contains provisions that threaten the refuge."

Editorial: The White House Sees Only Dollar Signs In The Arctic. In an editorial, the New York Times (10/18) writes that Interior Secretary Zinke's decisions to relax restrictions on Arctic oil drilling – coupled with the Administration's support for a Senate bill that would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge's oil-rich coastal plain for drilling – show that the White House views the Arctic region in terms of "commercial exploitation." The Times argues that Senate Democrats, with the help of a few Republicans, must stop the Senate's bill, which the Times describes as "a budget scam that puts the wildest place left in America at risk."

Joel Connelly also provides coverage in the Seattle \(WA\) Post-Intelligencer (10/19, Connelly).

States Sue Over Scuttled Royalties Rule.

E&E Publishing (10/18) reports the attorneys general for California and New Mexico are suing the Trump Administration to keep an Obama-era rule on how royalties are calculated for federal fossil fuels. Xavier Becerra and Hector Balderas are suing after the Interior Department repealed a valuation rule that affected royalties from oil, gas and coal production on public and tribal lands. The lawsuit says the Interior Department violated the Administrative Procedure Act by not offering a reasoning for the change.

Additional coverage was provided by the Santa Clarita Valley \(CA\) News (10/18, Iovino) and Law360 (10/18, Koenig).

Senators McCain & Flake File Amendment To Fully Fund Wildfire Management.

The Prescott \(AZ\) E-News (10/18, Tarallo) reports that Sens. John McCain and Jeff Flake have "filed an amendment to the Senate Budget Resolution that would require Congress to fully fund the U.S. Forest Service's cash-strapped wildfire management account as catastrophic wildfires grow in frequency and intensity." The amendment would "allow senators to invoke a budget point of order against the Interior Appropriations Bill if it fails to provide sufficient funding for wildfire suppression using the federal government's most accurate wildfire budget forecast, called the FLAME Act estimate." McCain said, "Year after year, Congress wrestles over how to fully fund Forest Service wildfire operations. The hard truth is that the Forest Service has become the Fire Service, and we have yet to effectively address fire-borrowing or reduce hazardous fuels in order to lower the cost of fighting wildfires. This amendment would incentivize appropriators and the authorizing committees to compromise on a long-overdue solution to prevent and fight wildfires, which continue to devastate communities in Arizona, California, and across the arid West."

A Mining Proposal Near The North Fork Smith River Could Get New Life.

The Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (10/18, Urness) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop, the House Natural Resources committee chair, "asked in a letter to Agriculture Secretary Sonny Purdue and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for a complete review of 'mineral withdrawals,' or mining bans, from the last eight years." According to the article, "his request could reignite a British mining company's effort to build a nickel mine near the headwaters of the North Fork Smith River, a stream known for recreation, unique habitat and drinking water on the Oregon and California state line."

National Parks For All: That's A Populist Cry We Need.

In a piece for The Guardian \(UK\) (10/18, Tobias), Jimmy Tobias calls for a "populist agenda for our public lands." He argues that such an agenda would "put people to work" and "seek to make our public lands accessible to all." Tobias concludes that "if the parks are America's best idea, then idealism should shape their future."

Wisconsin Public Radio (10/18, Quirnbach) reports that "Native American leaders meeting in Milwaukee this week at the convention of the National Congress of American Indians are asking the Trump administration to do more to combat climate change." According to the article, "tribal leaders speaking at the conference say recent wildfires and hurricanes that have destroyed housing and other resources are a sign of rising global temperatures, and that federal action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is needed." Interior Department official John Tahsuda "said federal agencies are still trying to get their hands around the science of climate change." Tahsuda told the audience, "What is the science of it, what's going on, because if we don't understand the science, then we don't know how to address it adequately."

DOI Reaches Land Buyback Deal With Oregon Tribe.

Law360 (10/18, Westney) reports that the Interior Department "said Tuesday that it has reached a deal with the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs in Oregon to take part in the $1.9 billion Cobell land buyback program, the first such agreement under the department's revised buyback policy."

Minnesota Residents Concerned Tribe Will Use Land For Casino.

The AP (10/18) reports that "a Native American tribe has asked that a large swath of land in eastern Minnesota be placed into a federal trust, saying the land will likely be used for housing." However, "some nearby residents fear it could eventually become a casino." Prairie Island Indian Community leaders "told the St. Paul Pioneer Press there are no specific plans for the property but the tribe's main priority is housing." The tribe is asking the Interior Department "to put the land into the Land Trust Program, which would make development immune to local land use and zoning ordinances." West Lakeland Township officials "say cheaper land could be used for housing and that the area the tribe is seeking is better suited for commercial use."

Guilty Pleas Entered In Sweeping Indian-Art Fraud Probe.

The AP (10/18, Lee) reports that "a New Mexico art gallery owner and a jewelry supplier have pleaded guilty in federal court to criminal charges in the sale of fake Native American jewelry that was manufactured in the Philippines, representing the first conviction in a sweeping international investigation." Art gallery owner Nael Ali "pleaded guilty Wednesday to misrepresenting fake Indian-produced goods in violation of the Indian Arts and Craft Act, The U.S. Attorney's Office in Albuquerque confirmed Wednesday." According to the article, "his conviction followed an earlier guilty plea by jewelry supplier Mohammad Manasra on less severe charges under the Indian Arts and Craft Act."

Mining Exploration Proposed In The Ruby Mountains.

The Montana Standard (10/18) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "considering a plan for mining exploration in the southwest Ruby Mountains in Beaverhead County." According to BLM Dillon field office manager Cornelia Hudson, "a company called Ruby Graphite, LLC, has applied for the mining exploration activity."

California Officials Must Maintain Pressure On Cadiz Aquifer Project.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (10/19) editorializes that the Cadiz Inc. Mojave Desert aquifer project "must be subject to extreme scrutiny." At the very least, the paper asserts, "the State Lands Commission should use any leverage it has to bring about new, independent studies of the aquifer's natural recharge rate and the potential effects of the Cadiz project." The editorial says that "this would go far in easing concerns many have about the future for the nearby, recently created, national monument." In addition, it reiterates "our call to the State Water Resources Control Board that it use all of the power it has under the landmark 2014 groundwater regulatory law to govern this process and ensure that the project, if it proceeds, has strict oversight throughout its lifetime."

Additional coverage of the project was provided by the Washington Post (10/18, Grandoni) and Courthouse News (10/18, Renda).

Oil Company Proposes Arctic Drilling From Artificial Island.

The AP (10/19, Joling) reports that "federal regulators are taking comments on a draft environmental statement for the Liberty Project, a proposal by a subsidiary of Houston-based Hilcorp to create an artificial gravel island that would hold production wells, a processing facility and the start of an undersea pipeline carrying oil to shore and connections to the trans-Alaska pipeline." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management will "collect comment on its draft environmental review until Nov. 18."

Louisiana Faces Unexpected Shortfall In Major Source Of Funding For Coastal Protection.

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (10/18, Hasselle) reports Louisiana's Coastal Protection and Restoration Authority is warning that an unexpected shortfall in the state's offshore royalties may cause delays or cancellation in restoration projects. Officials said revenue from next year's Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act will be roughly half of what had been expected. Louisiana had anticipated $175 million, of which $140 million goes to the coastal restoration authority. Now, the agency is expecting to receive $60-70 million. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/18, Schleifstein) reports Chip Kline, deputy director of the Governor's Office of Coastal Activities said the lower amount will require fewer coastal restoration and hurricane protections projects in the 2019 fiscal year unless the money is obtained elsewhere.

Bureau Of Reclamation

400K Award To Help Strengthen Water Flows In The Deschutes.

The Cascade \(OR\) Business News (10/18) reports that "the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation announced that it has awarded a $400,000 grant to the Central Oregon Irrigation District (COID)." Together with the Deschutes River Conservancy, "the funds will help finance the development of a WaterSMART marketing strategy, an innovative water transactions program that will facilitate the trading of water between irrigation districts and benefit stream flows in the Deschutes River." The article notes that "the $400,000 award will cover half of the $800,000 total projected cost."

Officials Push For Permanent Solution To Refuge Boundary Dispute.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Chronicle (10/18, Wood) reports that "hoping to impress upon federal officials the need for a permanent solution to the dispute over the Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge's western boundary, town officials traveled to Washington, D.C. Monday and met U.S. Department of the Interior officials." The article adds that "Selectman Shareen Davis, Natural Resources Director Robert Duncanson and Town Manager Jill Goldsmith also met with staff from the House Natural Resources Committee for an update on the status of legislation that sets the western boundary of the refuge at low water." According to Davis, "the meeting with Aurelia Skipwith, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks, and Benjamin Cassidy, Senior Deputy Director for External and Intergovernmental Affairs, both from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's office, was 'very straightforward and productive.'" Davis added that staff members were "extremely interested in the facts of our case."

Analysis: Shearwaters, Hawaiian Petrels Could Be Wiped Out In 30.

KGMB-TV Honolulu (10/18, Mendoza) reports that "the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service released an analysis that estimates 1,800 endangered seabirds on Kauai are killed by collisions with power lines every year." Most of the birds are Newell's Shearwaters. The study "forecasts at the present death rate, Kauai's Shearwater and Hawaiian Petrel populations will be wiped out in about 30 years unless more preventive measures are adopted."

Rim Of The Valley: New Plan Emerges To Add Nearly 191K Acres To Santa Monica Mountains Recreation Area.

The Los Angeles Daily News (10/18, Scauzillo) reports that Rep. Adam Schiff is reintroducing legislation “that would more than double the size of the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area by adding almost 200,000 acres of wild lands, parks and historical sites.” Schiff said the Rim of the Valley Corridor Preservation Act “may find more support in the U.S. Senate this time, with co-author Dianne Feinstein, who will introduce a companion bill on Thursday.” The article says that “despite moves by the Trump Administration to trim recreation areas, specifically national monuments, and open some up to oil and gas exploration, Schiff said he felt optimistic about his bill’s chances this time around.”

Activists Hang Pride Flag On Undisputed Federal Land At Stonewall.

WCBS-TV New York (10/18) reports that “last week, the National Park Service disowned the flagpole at the Stonewall National Monument, claiming it was city property even though it had been willingly maintaining it and flying its own flag there for a year.” On Tuesday, activist Michael Petrelis “zip tied a second Pride flag on undisputed federal land in the middle of the monument on Tuesday.” Joshua Laird, the National Parks Commissioner for New York, “who sources say was on board with original ceremony, told WCBS 880 that while the agency doesn’t encourage people to do such things, there is no plan to immediately remove the flag.”

Memorial Set For US Site Where British Surrendered In 1777.

The AP (10/18) reports that “work is expected to begin next year on a memorial to be built on the exact spot where a British general turned over his sword to his American counterpart after the Battles of Saratoga during the American Revolution.” A ceremonial ground breaking was held “just outside the village of Schuylerville on Tuesday, the 240th anniversary of the British surrender on Oct. 17, 1777.” According to the article, “the $1 million memorial is set for the site where British Gen. John Burgoyne surrendered his sword to American Gen. Horatio Gates following the history-changing battles fought nearby.” The property will “be turned over to the National Park Service and become part of Saratoga National Historical Park, which operates the nearby battlefield and related sites.”

Indiana Quarter Featuring George Rogers Clark To Be Released In Vincennes Next Month.

The Washington \(IN\) Times-Herald (10/18) reports that George Rogers Clark National Historical Park “in cooperation with the United States Mint will host the release of the Indiana quarter on Nov. 14.” The ceremony will “involve music, representatives from the National Park Service and United States Mint, Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch, and a coin pour which officially welcomes the new currency into circulation.”

3D Imaging Helps Preserve St. Augustine Historical Sites.

WTLV-TV Jacksonville, FL (10/18, Dryer) reports that “a team from the University of South Florida is working with the National Park Service to use 3D imaging to help protect and preserve

Castillo de San Marcos and Fort Matanzas." Lori Collins, Ph.D., said. Collins is a research associate professor and director at USF Libraries, "said the team used scanners and lasers to create 3D images of the interior and exteriors of the structures." She said, "We will be able to work with the Park Service on how they can protect what is left and how they can better conserve what is here."

Point Reyes Ranch Plan Options Get Public Airing.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (10/18, Prado) reports that "offering 20-year leases to ranchers in the Point Reyes National Seashore is among the alternatives National Park Service officials will consider as they look at addressing the future of agriculture in West Marin." According to the article, "a 30-day comment period on the alternatives will run through Nov. 15, with public hearings set for Point Reyes and Sausalito next week."

Rocky Mountain National Park's Crater Trail Is A Social Trail.

The Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (10/17, Sylte) reports that Rocky Mountain National Park wants to close the one-mile Crater Trail in Rocky Mountain National Park. The trail "threatens a prehistoric archaeological site and has caused serious concerns for the surrounding landscape." The trail is "what's known as a 'social trail,' something that was created by people over time rather than intentionally by the National Park Service, according to RMNP spokesperson Kyle Patterson."

Remains Found In Yosemite Identified As Missing Sailor.

The AP (10/18) reports that "human remains found in Yosemite National Park during the summer have been identified as a U.S. Navy sailor who was reported missing while visiting last spring." USVI Budget Deficit Could Widen To $325 Million Post-Hurricanes Irma And Maria; Hospitals In Urgent Need Of Funds For Operations.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/16) reports that "members of the 32nd Legislature met on Friday with Governor Kenneth Mapp's financial team, as well as officials from the territory's two hospitals, for updates on the USVI government's financial condition, as well as the state of its medical facilities, following the passage of Hurricanes Irma and Maria, which wreaked havoc on the entire territory, with Irma devastating the St. Thomas-St. John District, and Maria badly damaging St. Croix." The hurricanes "placed the USVI in a severe hole, according to Office of Management and Budget Director Nellon Bowry." Bowry said, "The indicated $80.9 million gaps would obviously be widened significantly by the expected revenue loss and additional unreimbursed expenditures resulting from the Hurricanes. The fiscal year 2018 budget gap could widen to as much as $325 million. Disaster-induced budget gaps will continue into fiscal year 2019 and fiscal year 2020."

Mapp Names Hurricane Recovery Task Force.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (10/17, O'CONNOR) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp "announced a 18-member hurricane task force at a news conference at WICO on Monday." The panel, "chaired by current WICO CEO and former Sen. Robert Graham, contains a mix of local and federal officials, business and community leaders, and disaster experts." Mapp said, "We're bringing together experts from many disciplines to help the U.S. Virgin Islands build back as fast and smart as possible, to enhance the long-term resiliency of our islands while protecting our island from future storms."

White House Rejects Claims That Trump Was Disrespectful To Soldier's Widow.

A Florida congresswoman's claim that President Trump disrespected the widow of Sgt. La David T. Johnson, who was killed in Niger earlier this month, and the President's response that she "totally fabricated what I said," received nearly nine minutes of coverage on the broadcast network newscasts. While the print and TV coverage focuses on the back-and-forth, reports lean toward the Johnson family's side, sounding a decidedly skeptical note on the President's denial and White House accusations of politicization.

ABC World News Tonight (10/18, story 2, 4:00, Muir) called it "an angry war of words...over one of the most solemn duties of the President." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "Myeshia Johnson was there receive her husband's remains, their six-year-old daughter by her side...just moments before, that phone call from President Trump. Myeshia Johnson answered in the car and listening on speakerphone, her local congresswoman, Democrat Frederica Wilson." Wilson: "I heard him say, 'Well, I guess you know he knew what he was signing up for, but it still hurts.' And I couldn't believe that he said that." Vega: "But today, President Trump disputes that. ... Trump started the firestorm himself with the false claim that past presidents, including President Obama, did not personally call the grieving families of fallen soldiers. ... He said he's called nearly every family, [but] here have been families that have since come forward...who say they have not heard from the White House in any capacity."

On NBC Nightly News (10/18, story 2, 2:40), Lester Holt said that the "public back-and-forth...has injected politics into something normally seen as deeply personal and solemn." The CBS Evening News (10/18, story 2, 2:15, Mason) reported, "The President called the families of all four soldiers" killed earlier this month in Niger, and "he is denying accusations he was less than respectful to one of them." CBS' Major Garrett reported that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "said she did not have a recording of the conversation, but did not specifically deny Congresswoman Wilson's charges. Sanders did question the congresswoman's motives."

The AP (10/18, Lemire, Woodward) reports that Johnson's mother, Cowanda Jones-Johnson, said that Trump "showed 'disrespect' to the soldier's loved ones." Referring to Wilson's claim that Trump "told the widow that Johnson 'knew what he signed up for,'" Jones-Johnson said, "Yes the statement is true. I was in the car and I heard the full conversation." USA Today (10/18, Bacon, Ventura) reports that the President "denied" that, tweeting, "Democrat Congresswoman totally fabricated what I said to the wife of a soldier who died in action (and I have proof). Sad!" The New York Times (10/18, Alcindor, Landler, Sullivan) reports that Trump also said on Wednesday, "I had a very nice conversation with the woman, with the wife, who sounded like a wonderful woman. I didn't say what that congresswoman said. Didn't say it at all, she knows it." Wilson tweeted in reply, "I still stand by my account of the call b/t @realDonaldTrump and Myeshia Johnson. That is her name, Mr. Trump. Not 'the woman' or 'the wife.'"

The Washington Post (10/18, Gearan, Phillips) reports that Wilson "said that the Johnson family was 'astonished' by Trump's remarks." During an appearance on MSNBC, Wilson, referring to Johnson's widow, said, "She was crying the whole time, and when she hung up the phone, she looked at me and said, 'He didn't even remember his name.' That's the hurting part." In an interview with MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/18), Wilson said that Trump's tone was "almost like joking" and "matter-of-fact." The Los Angeles Times (10/18, Santos) reports that Wilson told CNN that "several other people who were in the car also heard Trump's remark." Politico (10/18, Nelson) quotes her saying, "I don't know what kind of proof he could be talking about. I'm not the only person that was in the car. And I have proof too. This man is a sick man. He's cold-hearted and he feels no pity or sympathy for anyone."

The Wall Street Journal (10/18, Ballhaus) reports that the President did not answer a question about what his proof was, replying, "Let her make her statement again." The New York Post (10/18, Fredericks) reports that the White House said Wednesday that "there were other people present" when Trump made the call, "and that that was the 'proof' that refuted" Wilson's claim. Sanders said, "There were several people in the room from the Administration that were on the call, including Chief of Staff Gen. John Kelly." The Washington Times (10/18, Miller) reports that Sanders also "said it was a 'disgrace' that [Wilson] and the news media had politicized" the call. Sanders said, "It is appalling what the congresswoman has done in politicizing this issue." The Washington Examiner (10/18, Quinn) reports that Sanders said that there are no recordings of the call.

The Washington Post (10/18) editorializes, "Having failed to publicly acknowledge the deaths for 12 days, Mr. Trump on Monday boasted about reaching out to family members of slain military personnel while falsely accusing his predecessors of not doing so." He then "allegedly told one widow her husband 'must have known what he signed up for' – underscored his cluelessness about being commander in chief."

The Los Angeles Times (10/18) editorializes, "Over the past nine months, the nation has seen evidence accrue that the man it elected president entered office ill-prepared for the job, and whose core personality – vain, venal and vengeful – made him ill-suited for work that requires tact, humility and compassion. What the nation learned this week is that the man it elected president is so unsuited for the job, he can't even get a condolence call right."

Rep. Jared Huffman (D-CA) tweeted, "Stating the obvious: Trump has never cared about anyone but himself. No surprise as POTUS, doesn't care about fallen soldiers or widows." ABC News political analyst Matthew Dowd tweeted, "The media's and voters assumption should be if there is a dispute on who is telling the truth between Pres. Trump and anyone, Believe anyone." Harvard's Laurence Tribe tweeted, "I wouldn't put it past Trump to blame the fallen for dying. Recall his comment on John McCain: 'I like people who weren't captured, okay?'"

Joel Pollak of Breitbart (10/18) writes, "If Trump said anything like what he is being accused of having said – and he and his staff deny it – then it is far more likely that he was expressing admiration for the soldier rather than admonishing his family." Johnson "knew the risks of what he was undertaking, and he faced them bravely in a way that few others would." Amanda Terkel of the Huffington Post tweeted, "Trump tried to look compassionate. Instead, he looked like a jerk."

The Washington Post (10/18, Phillips) has a feature on Sgt. Johnson's life, while the Miami Herald (10/18, Daugherty) has a positive piece on Wilson, writing that she has "helped people for years" in her Miami-area district. Bloomberg News (10/18, Olorunnipa), The Hill (10/18, Fabian) and the Daily Caller (10/18, Pfeiffer) also have reports on the back-and-forth between the White House and Wilson. The New York Times (10/18, Cooper, Blinder, Gibbons-Neff) has a feature on how families of fallen soldiers have handled presidential condolence calls dating back to the Carter Administration, conversations that ranged "from sympathy and sincerity...to awkward distances."

Gold Star Families Offer Differing Accounts Of Trump's Response. On CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (10/18, 8:05 p.m. EDT, lead story), Whitney Hunter, whose husband Sgt. Jonathon Hunter was killed in action in Afghanistan in August, said she did not receive a call from Trump. Hunter said she was told to be prepared for the call, but the call never came, nor did a letter of condolence. Hunter said, "Hearing from the President...I'm kinda neutral on it. It's not going to go either way for me as far as making me feel better. I feel it would be an honor hearing from the President," but "I've had such a phenomenal support system."

However, on Fox News' Hannity (10/18), Karen Vaughn, mother of fallen US Navy Seal Aaron Vaughn, said Trump was "extremely empathetic" after her son's death. Vaughn said, "I've not only met [Trump] once, I've met him twice. We sat with him as Gold Star families met with him before the election and then he also invited our family to the White House for a Gold Star families dinner and ceremony," which is "a ceremony that he plans to continue, I understand."

Kelly Reportedly Not Aware Trump Would Say That Obama Never Called Him. The Washington

Examiner (10/18, Correll) reports that Chief of Staff Kelly “was unaware President Trump would publicly disclose that former President Barack Obama never called him after his son was killed in Afghanistan,” CNN reported on Wednesday. The Washington Free Beacon (10/18, Rutz) reports White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said, “I think that Gen. Kelly is disgusted by the way that this has been politicized and that the focus has become on the process, and not the fact that American lives were lost, I think he’s disgusted and frustrated by that.”

Trump Sends $25,000 To Fallen Soldier’s Father Several Months After Promising To Do So. ABC News (10/18) reports on its website that Trump has sent a $25,000 check to Chris Baldridge of Zebulon, North Carolina, the father of a 22-year-old Army corporal who was killed in Afghanistan in June, “several months after first making the pledge during a personal phone call with the family.” Baldridge told the Washington Post that “he appreciated the president’s call and was stunned by his generosity,” but said that “the only thing he subsequently received from the White House was a letter of condolence; no check.”

The Washington Post (10/18, Lamothe, Bever, Rosenberg) reports that White House spokeswoman Lindsay Walters said on Wednesday, “The check has been sent. It’s disgusting that the media is taking something that should be recognized as a generous and sincere gesture, made privately by the President, and using it to advance the media’s biased agenda.”

Appearing on CNN’s Situation Room (10/18, 6:16 p.m. EDT), Rep. Joaquin Castro (D-TX) called the timing of the $25,000 check “suspicious,” saying, “It sounds like the President got called out on something and so he had to follow through.” Castro said Trump was “over-promising and under-delivering.” The Washington Post’s Glenn Kessler tweeted, “It took all day to get a comment, which in effect was: ‘The check’s in the mail.’”

Peter Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (10/18, story 2, 2:40), “The White House confirms President Trump recently sent a check for $25,000 to another grieving military father after his son, a soldier, was killed in Syria in June. Officials here say it was a generous gesture made privately by the President. Tonight, that father tells NBC News that he’s yet to receive the payment.”

NSC Staff Drafted Niger Statement For Trump, But It Was Never Issued. Politico (10/18, Toosi) reports that National Security Council staff members “drafted and circulated a statement of condolence” for Trump to make just one day after the October 4 ambush in Niger, “but Trump never publicly issued the statement.” NSC spokesman Michael Anton “declined to comment,” and “the NSC staffer who apparently wrote the original draft and emailed it out to others at 10:01 a.m. on Oct. 5 hung up on a Politico reporter when called to ask about it.”

Trump Meets With Senate Finance Committee Members On Tax Reform.

The Washington Times (10/18, Miller) reports, “President Trump looked for Democratic buy-in for tax reform Wednesday at a meeting with bipartisan members of the Senate’s tax-writing committee, three Republican senators said after the meeting.” Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn (R-TX) described the President’s meeting with Senate Finance Committee members saying, “It was enormously productive. The president made clear his preference for a bipartisan bill.”

The Hill (10/18, Carney) reports Cornyn said that at the meeting, “President Trump floated the idea that senators should start a bipartisan working group on tax reform.” However, “Cornyn appeared skeptical that a separate working group was needed, signaling it would be redundant with the role of the Finance Committee.” Regarding the likelihood of passing a tax reform measure, Cornyn said Monday that lawmakers have “all the tools we need in order to come up with a consensus bill if Democrats will participate.”

USA Today (10/18, Jackson) quotes Trump as saying before the meeting, “This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity in my opinion. I have had people on both sides, that I promise not to mention...but a lot of people are liking this very much and I think we’ll have tremendous support.” The article also quotes several Senators discussing the bill, highlighting Democrats’ opposition to the tax reform measure’s proposed tax cuts for the wealthy. Senate Minority Leader Schumer said at a news conference Wednesday, “Our Republican friends are trying to hide it, they don’t want to discuss what’s in the bill. You ever hear them talk about cutting Medicare or Medicaid? Ever hear them talk about tax breaks for the wealthiest people in America? They don’t mention it. They don’t want people to know.”

The Washington Post (10/18, Wagner, Paletta) reports that “after the meeting, the White House released a statement that said, ‘The Administration looks forward to continued opportunities to reach across the aisle in an effort to provide tangible quality of life improvements for the American people.’” The Post says, “Wednesday afternoon’s conciliatory tone contrasted with Trump’s posts on Twitter early Wednesday morning.” Trump had tweeted, “The Democrats will only vote for Tax Increases. Hopefully, all Senate Republicans will vote for the largest Tax Cuts in US history." Meanwhile, at a briefing on Wednesday afternoon, White House Press Secretary Sarah "Sanders told reporters the strategy is 'pretty simple': to get enough votes to pass a bill." Sanders said, "We don't know why any Democrat would want to be against providing tax relief and tax cuts specifically to middle-class America. I don't know why anybody wouldn't want to get on board with that."

Dionne Accuses Trump Of "Misleading" Claims On Tax Reform Bill. Washington Post (10/18) columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. warns against "the degradation of politics in the Trump era," alleging President Trump "has thrown our government into chaos and our country into tumult precisely because his disrespect for politics," as Trump "offers a torrent of lies" and "willfully tries to tear the country apart." Dionne cites Trump's Wednesday morning tweet opposing NFL players kneeling as an example of "his eagerness to polarize." Dionne continues, "Many of Trump's lies are hideously personal," citing "his false charge that President Barack Obama failed to phone or speak to the families of members of the armed services killed in the line of duty." Dionne further argued Trump and the GOP are "offering misleading claims that their" tax reform "bill is designed primarily to help ordinary Americans when in fact its largest benefits will flow to the very wealthy."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The White House Sees Only Dollar Signs in the Arctic." In an editorial, the New York Times (10/18) writes that Interior Secretary Zinke's decisions to relax restrictions on Arctic oil drilling – coupled with the Administration's support for a Senate bill that would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge's oil-rich coastal plain for drilling – show that the White House views the Arctic region in terms of "commercial exploitation." The Times argues that Senate Democrats, with the help of a few Republicans, must stop the Senate's bill, which the Times describes as "a budget scam that puts the wildest place left in America at risk."

"Congress, End the Health Care Chaos. You Have 9 Million Kids to Protect." In an editorial, the New York Times (10/18) writes that Congress should end what the Times describes as the "chaos to the American health care system" that was brought by their failure to reauthorize the Children's Health Insurance Program and pass the Alexander-Murray bill. The Times argues that the Alexander-Murray plan "represents real progress" by addressing ACA insurance payments and "also advances two Republican health care ideas: giving states more flexibility to make changes to the A.C.A. and letting more people sign up for high-deductible health care policies."

Washington Post.

"China's President Just Laid Out A Worrying Vision For The World." A Washington Post (10/18) editorial says Chinese President Xi Jinping's vision laid out in Wednesday's address "ought to concern the world's democratic nations." While the US and other Western nations have urged China to become a global "stakeholder," the Post says the "superpower that Mr. Xi intends to lead doesn't look like the cooperative partner and gradually liberalizing society they imagined." While it is unclear whether Xi "can succeed in making China the world's leading power," the Post says Xi "does have one big advantage. Thanks to the disarray of the US political system and the retreat by two successive presidents from America's global role, an ambitious regime may find a vacuum to fill."

"If Republicans Kill This Health-Care Bill, They'll Prove Their Cowardice." The Washington Post (10/18) editorializes that "House conservatives attacked" the Alexander-Murray healthcare proposal, and Trump, "who initially sounded a favorable note, soon flip-flopped." Speaker Ryan and Senate Majority Leader McConnell "face a test: Will they cower in the face of this irrational opposition, preventing their chambers even from voting on a plan that, polls indicate, would be broadly popular?" The Post adds that "killing this deal would provide more evidence the GOP has become...the stupid party, simplistic in its policy views, cowardly in its fear of the base, toddler-like in the tantrums it throws when it does not get its way."

"Trump Trivializes The Deaths Of Four Soldiers." The Washington Post (10/18) editorializes, "Having failed to publicly acknowledge the deaths" of military service members "for 12 days, Mr. Trump on Monday boasted about reaching out to family members of slain military personnel while falsely accusing his predecessors of not doing so." He then "allegedly told one widow her husband 'must have known what he signed up for' – underscor[ing] his cluelessness about being

Wall Street Journal.

“Stopping Sue And Settle.” The Wall Street Journal (10/18) editorializes in favor of a decision by EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to no longer commit the agency to specific policy outcomes in settlements with outside parties, and instead agreeing only to review rules or provisions. The Journal argues that bureaucrats and environmental groups have too often been the beneficiaries of EPA settlements, and applauds Pruitt for his efforts to reform the settlement process.

“Rand Paul’s Alternative Reality.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/18) criticizes Sen. Rand Paul for his opposition to Senate Republicans’ budget resolution, which the Journal describes as essential for tax reform. The Journal argues that Sen. Paul is living in an alternative political reality and is deceiving voters and perhaps himself by saying that limiting defense spending will balance the budget.

“More Freedom For More Money.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/18, Board) strenuously asserts Republicans should not support the Alexander-Murray healthcare proposal, mocking the contention that the bill is bipartisan as it stands. To the Journal, Republicans should push for the inclusion of strong market-oriented reforms before considering support for the measure.

Feds Outline Ways Policy Hampers Energy Development, A Longstanding Gripe In Wyoming.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/25, Richards) reports that in a report released Wednesday, the Interior Department identified "federal policies that impede energy development." Some "key western issues its officers say may need reform" include "sage grouse management, the permitting of oil and gas wells by the BLM and a proposed end or limitation on self-bonding for coal companies from the Office of Surface Mining, Reclamation and Enforcement." Kathleen Sgamma of the Western Energy Alliance "said the Interior report was a positive sign of what the agencies are doing to ease bureaucratic hurdles to energy exploration and production."

KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (10/25) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Developing our energy resources to grow our economy and protecting the environment are not mutually exclusive. However, while conducting the review outlined in the Executive Order, we found that several costly and burdensome regulations from the past threaten that balance by hampering the production or transmission of our domestic energy. Our public lands are meant to be managed for the benefit of the people. That means a multiple-use approach where appropriate and making sure that multiple-use includes energy development under reasonable regulations. Following President Trump's leadership, Interior is fostering domestic energy production by streamlining permitting and revising and repealing Obama-era job killing regulations – all while doing so in an environmentally responsible way."

Additional coverage was provided by Law360 (10/25, Daniels).

U.S. Offers Record Lease Sale In Alaska Reserve To Oil, Gas Drillers.

Reuters (10/25, Gardner) reports the Interior Department is planning to hold a lease sale on December 6 for 900 tracts in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska. The Alaska Dispatch News (10/25, DeMarban) reports the tracts contain 10.3 million acres, about half of the total reserve. The BLM said the size of the offering is the largest ever. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "(The) unprecedented sale in Alaska will help achieve our goal of American energy dominance."

No Mention Of Climate Change In Interior's Draft Strategic Plan.

The Hill (10/25, Cama) reports a "draft version" of the five-year strategic plan for the Interior Department "does not mention anything about climate change, including whether the agency plans to fight it or how it will adapt." The draft "focuses heavily on plans to produce more fossil fuels and other forms of energy on public lands and the nation's outer continental shelf."

Nancy Pelosi Demands Probe Into Montana Firm's 'Highly Suspect' Contract To Repair Puerto Rico.

The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) reports House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi yesterday "demanded an investigation into how a small Montana-based firm with ties to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke struck a $300 million deal to repair Puerto Rico's shattered electricity grid." Whitefish Energy agreed to a $300 million contract with PREPA "to rebuild 100 miles of power infrastructure across the island." In a statement Pelosi said, "All Americans should be concerned about the highly suspect Whitefish contract and the circumstances under which it was negotiated. ... Democrats demand Congress and the appropriate Inspectors General exercise their oversight role to get to the bottom of this suspicious agreement and hold this administration accountable for its dangerous lack of transparency in spending taxpayer money." The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siciliano) reports the Sierra Club also is "calling for probes of the contract in both the Senate and the House."

The Daily Caller (10/25, Bastasch) reports "Utah Republican Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources, is heading to Puerto Rico this week to personally survey the desperate situation on the island." Committee spokesman Parish Braden said, "The size and unknown details of this contract raises numerous questions."

San Juan Mayor Calls To 'Void' Contract Awarded To Tiny Montana Company. The Hill (10/25, Henry) reports San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulín Cruz said the contract is "alarming." She told Yahoo News, "The contract should be voided right away and a proper process which is clear, transparent, legal, moral and ethical should take place."

Interior Department Proposes Doubling The Cost Of Visiting National Parks.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Traywick) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "wants to more than double the cost of visiting 17 of the most popular U.S. national parks when demand for them is the highest." Under the proposal, "visitors to the Grand Canyon, Zion, Yosemite, and 14 other national parks could be paying $70 during peak seasons instead of $30." Zinke "said his plan will raise $70 million in much-needed revenue for the National Park Service, which already suffers from a multibillion-dollar maintenance backlog." He said in a statement, "The infrastructure of our national parks is aging and in need of renovation and restoration. Targeted fee increases at some of our most-visited parks will help ensure that they are protected and preserved in perpetuity."

U.S. News & World Report (10/25, Trimble) reports that the National Park Service "said a park-specific annual pass for any of the 17 parks would be available for $75, while the cost of the annual yearlong pass, which provides entrance to all federal lands, would remain $80." However, "motorcycles and per person entrance fees could also see increases."

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/25, Alexander) reports that the plan is "meeting resistance from a number of Democrats, conservationists and social-justice advocates." Opponents argue the proposal will "price out visitors and deny many the opportunity to experience the nation's most coveted landmarks, from the Grand Canyon to Mount Denali to Old Faithful." Critics also claimed that "the proposal would hit minority groups particularly hard."

Interior Department Clarifies, Says It Will Continue To Work On Delta Tunnels Project.

The Los Angeles Times (10/25, Boxall) reports that “after several hours of confusion over the Trump administration’s position on a massive water delivery project, the Interior Department said Wednesday it would continue to work with the state on California WaterFix.” California officials were “scratching their heads over a department statement that the Trump administration does not support the project, which the federal government has helped plan.” Russell Newell, the department’s deputy communications director, told the AP (10/25, Knickmeyer): “The Trump administration did not fund the project and chose to not move forward with it.” According to the article, “it was initially unclear whether Newell was reiterating the reclamation agency’s previous funding position or making a broader statement that the administration was withdrawing any participation in planning and environmental reviews.” In a statement released Wednesday afternoon, Interior said its position had not changed. The department said, “While the Department of the Interior shares the goals of the state of California to deliver water with more certainty, eliminating risks to the California water supply, and improving the environment, at this time, the Department under the current state proposal does not expect to participate in the construction or funding of the CA WaterFix. The Department and Reclamation will continue to work with the state and stakeholders as the project is further developed.”

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/25, Lochhead) reports that Lisa Lien-Mager, a spokeswoman for the tunnel project, said the late-Wednesday statement “confirms what the state and its water project partners already knew; while the federal government does not intend to fund the construction costs of the project they will continue working with the state and stakeholders to facilitate and permit WaterFix.”

States Urge Revamp On Sage Grouse Management.

Scientists Question Proposed Plans To Manage Sage Grouse. The Idaho Mountain Express (10/25, Moore) reports that “seventeen scientists involved in revisions of federal sage grouse-management plans throughout the West two years ago are warning Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke of potential harm to the species if the BLM follows through on a proposal to change those plans.” In a letter to Zinke, the scientists wrote, “We are concerned that following many of the Reports’ recommendations will lead to an overall loss of sage-grouse habitat quantity and quality which in turn may result in additional population declines. We are concerned that the current focus on amending the [land-use plans] will detract from the critical task of building from those plans to realize enhanced conditions in currently designated priority and general habitats and stabilized or increasing sage-grouse populations.”

Western Voices Are Ignored In Zinke’s Interior Department. In an op-ed for The Hill (10/25, O’Neill), Jayson O’Neill, deputy director of the Western Values Project, warns against “undoing BLM’s sage-grouse plans.” O’Neill writes that “instead of working to appease corporate donors and putting forth solutions that would benefit a few wealthy people, politicians in Washington should instead be working with folks on the ground to implement and build on the success of the 2015 sage-grouse plans.” He says that “Westerners are sick and tired of having Washington meddling in their business.” O’Neill urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Rep. Rob Bishop to “support their efforts to make sure the sagebrush landscape works for everyone out West.”

Campaigns Continue To Remind Alaskan Ivory Products Are Legal.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (10/25, Klouda) reports that “fossilized ivory and walrus ivory carvings created by Alaska Natives are the focus of a renewed public relations campaign to stress to other states that there is no ban on legally obtained Alaska ivory artifacts and art pieces.” The article says that “at the Alaska Federation of Natives convention in Anchorage in a recorded message played Oct. 19, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke used part of his address to reassure delegates.” Zinke said, “On the policy side, we are protecting your right to sell walrus ivory. It is different from banned elephant ivory and it’s important to make that distinction.”

New Attitude, New Hope For Struggling Energy Industry.

The Lafayette \(LA\) Daily Advertiser (10/25, Stickney) reports that Randal Luthi, president of the National Ocean Industries Association, “told a 2017 Louisiana Gulf Coast Oil and Gas Exposition audience Wednesday that the Trump administration has made important appointments and taken decisive, needed steps to reverse the perceived bias in Washington against fossil fuels.” According to Luthi, “Trump appointments like Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Bureau of Safety and Environment Enforcement Director Scott Angelle of Breaux Bridge, who spoke to LAGCOE on Tuesday, are working with the energy industry, not fighting it.” He said, “Personnel is policy.”

Trump Asked About Changing Denali’s Name Back To Mt. McKinley.

The New York Post (10/25, Fredericks) reports that according to a story in Tuesday’s Alaska Dispatch News, President Trump “was so determined to reverse his predecessor’s legacy that he asked Alaska’s two senators,” Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, “if he should change the name of the US’ largest mountain back to Mt. McKinley from the Native American name it had been called for 10,000 years.” The Obama Administration “had changed the name to Denali – its name in the indigenous Athabaskan language – in recognition of Native Americans’ heritage as the original residents of North America.” Sullivan said he and Murkowski “jumped over the desk, we said, ‘No! No! Don’t want to reverse that.’”

Ryan Zinke’s Silly Flag-Flying Ritual Violates Agency Rules.

The Huffington Post (10/25, D’Angelo) reports that “a military tradition” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “revived at Interior Department headquarters in Washington appears to violate the agency’s policy for displaying and flying flags.” The problem, according to the article, is the flag that is flown for deputy secretary David Bernhardt when Zinke isn’t in office. The article notes that “the Interior Department’s manual — specifically Part 310, Chapter 5 — spells out which flags are allowed to be flown outdoors.” That is, “At the Secretary’s direction, [the secretary’s flag] may be flown over DOI-controlled buildings in which the Secretary is present.” The deputy secretary’s ceremonial flag, however, “is for indoor display only, in the immediate office of the Deputy Secretary, and at official functions and ceremonies at which the Deputy Secretary is the principal speaker.”

Navajo Nation Lawmaker Implores Trump To Protect Monuments.

The AP (10/26) reports that “in a television advertisement airing Thursday, a Navajo Nation lawmaker implores President Donald Trump to protect national monuments.” The 30-second spot “shows Davis Filfred walking in Bears Ears National Monument in southern Utah.” As the ad closes, Filfred says: “Mr. President. Not all monuments divide us. Some bring us together.” Filfred “tells The Associated Press the ad is his way of trying to get attention from officials he says haven’t listened to tribal concerns.”

Enviros Sue DOI For Emails From Oil, Hunting Groups.

Law360 (10/25, Macagnone) reports that “an environmental group has alleged the Interior Department unlawfully held back communications it has had with oil and natural gas lobbying groups, suing the agency Monday to have it release emails and other documents related to its communications with the energy and hunting industries.” The Western Values Project, “which describes itself as advocating balanced energy development on public lands, claims the Interior Department has for months delayed complying with a Freedom of Information Act request for emails.”

U.S. Marine Sanctuary Oil Drilling Report Sent To Trump, Not Public.

Reuters (10/25, Volcovici) reports Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross sent a report to the White House on Wednesday including recommendations on whether to change the boundaries of 11 marine sanctuaries to allow for more oil and gas drilling. Commerce reviewed the sanctuaries, with more than 425 million acres of coral reefs, habitats and beaches, as part of the Administration's move to open more areas to oil and gas drilling. The report was not made public, and oil industry executives say there is little desire for more drilling in the marine sanctuaries because of costs and public opposition.

This Land Is No Longer Your Land.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Reel) reports that while the fight over national monuments is grabbing the most attention, the "disputed trails leading into the Crazy Mountains represent another front in the escalating battle over control of federal territory, and the fighting here is just as contentious as over the monuments."

Release Final Monuments Report Now.

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (10/25, Gangloff), Deborah Gangloff, the president and CEO of Crow Canyon Archaeological Center in Cortez, raises concerns about the future of the national monuments as recommended in Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's report to President Trump. Gangloff argues that "opening these areas up to what the administration refers to as 'traditional uses' (i.e., mining, timbering, and grazing) would actually threaten the long-term economic well-being of surrounding communities." From Gangloff's point of view, "not to protect this rich and valuable connection to our shared American history that doubles as an economic engine is not only selfish and short-sighted, but robs people forever of their heritage."

Navajo, Other Tribes Call Land-Use Bill A Step In The Right Direction.

Cronkite News (10/25, Windes) reports that "tribal leaders backed a House bill Wednesday that would give tribes the ability to control more of their land, instead of having to get federal approval for virtually any use." The American Indian Empowerment Act would allow "tribes shift federally controlled trust land to 'restricted fee land,' a move that could save millions of dollars that tribes now spend on 'burdensome regulation,' while restoring a level of tribal sovereignty." The article adds that "while they called the bill a step in the right direction, however, witnesses said they are concerned about ambiguities in the thin, three-page bill that 'could allow state or local governments to implement property taxes on tribal land,' among other issues." However, "with slight changes, witnesses said at a hearing of House Natural Resources subcommittee, the bill would greatly benefit Indian Country."

10th Circ. Wrongly Put Wind Farm Ruling On Hold, Tribe Says.

Law360 (10/25, Lidgett) reports that "the Osage Minerals Council told the Tenth Circuit Tuesday that it shouldn't have stayed the mandate of a panel decision that said wind farm developers should have obtained a mineral lease from the Osage Nation and Bureau of Indian Affairs approval before starting surface construction for an Oklahoma wind farm."

BIA Fatally Shoots Suspect On Standing Rock Reservation.

The AP (10/25) reports that "the FBI says a suspect was shot dead after a confrontation with officers of the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation." The FBI's Minneapolis Division, "BIA officers assigned to the reservation responded to a call of shots fired at a gas station Monday," and "after a short vehicle chase, BIA officers tried to take the suspect into custody." The article says that "during the incident, the BIA shot and killed the suspect."

Pawnee National Grassland Looking At Gas Well Plan.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (10/25) reports the Pawnee National Grassland "is analyzing the proposed Wildwood Federal No. 1 Oil and Gas Well Project, located approximately 4.5 miles north of Briggsdale." US Forest Service spokeswoman Reghan Cloudman said in a press release that the public can comment on the proposal to build and maintain an oil and gas well and production facility on Pawnee National Grassland. "The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management are working together to analyze the proposed action," she said.

The Sterling \(CO\) Journal-Advocate (10/25, Rice) reports that Cloudman said, "We'll be going through the environmental analysis where specialists will look at possible impacts on resources we have out on the grasslands. The BLM is the one to ultimately give permission for the lease to drill."

Conservation Groups Challenge BLM Approval Of Drilling Plan In North Fork Valley.

The Denver Post (10/25, Svaldi) reports Colorado and national conservation groups "have filed a legal challenge to force the Bureau of Land Management to reconsider an oil and gas development plan approved this month in the North Fork Valley near Paonia." The complaint "seeks to have the BLM reconsider its approval of the Bull Mountain Unit Master Development Plan sought by Houston-based SG Interests." According to the Post, the BLM approval, "issued Oct. 4, allows for the construction of 33 well pads, 146 natural gas wells and four wastewater disposal wells across 19,670 acres of mineral estate."

NV Geothermal Lease Auctions Total $78,444.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/25) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "received bids on geothermal leases in Nevada that brought in $78,444 in total receipts during an online auction held Oct. 23." According to the article, "twenty parcels totaling 38,308.46 acres were offered during the lease sale," and "all parcels sold for $2 an acre." Marci Todd, Acting BLM Nevada State Director, said, "By providing opportunities for energy development, the BLM is supporting job creation and the economy of local communities."

Rebuild Planned For Utah's Historic — And Hellish — Hole-in-the-Rock Road.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/25, Maffly) reports that Utah's Hole in the Rock road is Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument's most traveled road, but "many visitors aren't pleased with the famous road's sorry, channel-like condition that turns the drive from Escalante to Glen Canyon into a three-hour ordeal, on a good day." Now, Garfield County "has the money to rebuild Garfield's 16-mile stretch of the road and is seeking the Bureau of Land Management's permission to proceed." County officials "say they plan to repair past flood damage, narrow the roadway, shore up culverts and make it easier to maintain and drive on."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Anglers' NY Wind Farm Challenge Is Premature, Agency Says.

Law360 (10/25, Goldberg) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management "on Tuesday told a D.C. federal judge that seafood industry groups, companies and several towns can't seek to block a $42.5 million lease awarded to Statoil Wind for a wind farm off the coast of New York because the company hasn't even proposed a project yet."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Now Leading Offshore Safety Bureau, Angelle Promises To Be Industry 'Partner' On Federal Level.

KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (10/25) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement director Scott Angelle on Tuesday said his agency is "focused on undoing or amending three Obama administration policies." In a keynote address at an industry event in Lafayette, Angelle "said his mandate within the Trump administration is to eliminate 'unnecessary regulatory burdens' that discourage capital investment in the Gulf, while also remaining mindful of safety requirements and environmental safeguards." Angelle also "told industry professionals gathered at the Cajundome for the Louisiana Gulf Coast Oil Exposition they will enjoy warmer relations with the Trump administration than they did with the previous one."

Fish And Wildlife To Reconsider Kenai Refuge Rules.

The Kenai \(AK\) Peninsula Clarion (10/25, Earl) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "planning to revise some of the rules on the Kenai National Wildlife Refuge, including some controversial hunting restrictions.” The agency “published a notice of intent in the federal register on Oct. 2 to start a process to reconsider rules finalized on the refuge in May 2016.” The rules, “which took more than a year to finalize after a lengthy public process, include provisions about plane, boat and motorized vehicle access, camping, firearm use and personal-use gathering of edible plants and shed antlers as well as a number of hunting provisions.”

Reward Offered For Info On Wolf-Killing Poacher In Oregon.

The AP (10/25) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and “five conservation groups have teamed up to offer $15,500 for information about the illegal poaching of a federally protected gray wolf that was shot dead in a national forest in southern Oregon.” The wolf, “known as OR-33, was being tracked by authorities and is one of at least eight that have been poached or died under mysterious circumstances in the state since 2015, the conservation groups said.” The FWS is “offering $5,000 for information about the poaching and the conservation groups are offering an additional $10,500 combined.”

Two Fed Supplemental Appropriations Are Good News For USVI.

The St. Thomas Source (10/25, Kossler) reports that "the U.S. Senate overwhelmingly approved a $36.5 billion supplemental appropriation for disaster relief Tuesday, including potentially hundreds of millions of dollars or more to aid the U.S. Virgin Islands recovery from Hurricanes Irma and Maria." The measure, passed by the U.S. House of Representatives earlier this month, now goes to President Trump to be signed. In addition, "another supplemental appropriation with Medicaid funding that is crucial for the territory is also working its way through Congress, Delegate Stacey Plaskett told the Source Tuesday."

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/25) reports that in a statement, Gov. Kenneth Mapp "said the territory would not receive less than $800 million in low-interest loans from the $4.9 billion allocated for Puerto Rico and the USVI." Mapp said, "The $4.9 billion dollars has been set aside for revenue losses for the United States Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. Of that amount, the Virgin Islands will receive not less than $800 million."

Power Restoration Moves Forward In US Virgin Islands.

Caribbean News Now! (10/24) reports that "about a third of the power on the island of St Thomas has been restored, US Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp said on Monday." Mapp told reporters "that the Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority (WAPA) reports that St Thomas had 32 percent of its power restored while 15 percent of electricity has been restored in St Croix." Mapp "expects Cruz Bay, St John to be energized by Wednesday, which will bring power restoration on that island up to 25 percent."

Maryland Governor Sends National Guard To US Virgin Islands.

The AP (10/23) reports that Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan is "sending 100 soldiers from the Maryland National Guard to the U.S. Virgin Islands." Hogan "said Monday they will help with ongoing recovery efforts from Hurricane Irma at the request" of U.S. Virgin Islands. Gov. Kenneth Mapp. According to the article, "members of the 200th Military Police Company from Catonsville will be deployed for up to 30 days to help with local law enforcement and to guard infrastructure."

Study Offers More Evidence Linking Earthquakes To Wastewater Injection Wells.

The AP (10/25, Elliott) reports a study published last week by University of Colorado researchers linked the increase of earthquakes on the Colorado-New Mexico border since 2001 to wastewater injection wells, “similar to human-caused quakes in Oklahoma and other states.” The study “concluded that the wastewater caused a big enough increase in underground pressure to make rock formations slip along fault lines.” According to the US Geological Service, earthquakes in the Raton Basin of northern New Mexico and southern California started to increase in 2001, “about two years after large-scale wastewater injection began.” A 2014 paper by the USGS “blamed injection wells for the area’s quakes,” but the new UC study “went further, using computer models and records of wastewater injection to conclude that enough pressure built up to cause the quakes.”

USGS Reports 3 Small Earthquakes Recorded In Oklahoma.

The AP (10/25) reports that “the U.S Geological Survey reports three small earthquakes in Oklahoma.” The two largest quakes each have a preliminary magnitude of 3.1. The third was a preliminary magnitude 2.5 quake.

Trump: Democrats’ Role In Russia Dossier Creation “A Disgrace.”

Coverage of the news that elements of the Democratic Party helped to fund the Fusion GPS dossier on then-candidate Donald Trump focuses mainly on negative aspects for the Democrats. The President’s comments on the news get some attention, but much more is given to how much Hillary Clinton and her campaign knew, and who authorized the payments. Also at issue – particularly in conservative media – is the FBI’s role in the affair.

NBC Nightly News (10/25, story 3, 2:10, Holt) reported that Trump “[tore] into Democrats and former rival Hillary Clinton over reports that the Clinton campaign and the Democratic National Committee helped fund opposition research that wound up in a dossier, containing salacious and unverified allegations about him.” Trump: “They were embarrassed by

it. I think it's a disgrace. It's just really, it's a very sad, it's a very sad commentary on politics in this country."

The AP (10/25, Tucker) reports, "Trump and fellow Republicans latched onto revelations tying" the Clinton campaign to the dossier, and Politico (10/25, Cheney) reports that Republicans "mounted a counterattack this week against the drumbeat from multiple investigations into Moscow's meddling...in a dizzying 24 hours." Trump said on Fox Business' Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/25), "Don't forget Hillary Clinton totally denied this. She didn't know anything. She knew nothing all of a sudden they found out. What I was amazed at it's almost $6 million that they paid and it's totally discredited. It's a total phony. I call it fake news. It's disgraceful." The New York Post (10/25, Moore) reports that the President also tweeted, "'Clinton campaign & DNC paid for research that led to the anti-Trump Fake News Dossier. The victim here is the President.' @FoxNews".

Politico (10/25, McCaskill) reports that when asked by reporters about which Republican might have initially funded it, Trump said, "If I were to guess, I have one name in mind. It'll probably be revealed. I'd rather not say, but you'll be surprised. You'll be surprised." Breitbart (10/25, Spiering) also runs that quote from the President in a brief item.

The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that Trump also told reporters that "given the revelations about the dossier and fresh investigations into a uranium deal with a Russian firm approved by the Obama administration, the Russia controversy has 'turned around' on the Democrats." Trump said, "This was the Democrats coming up with an excuse for losing an election. They lost it very badly. They didn't know what to say, so they made up the whole Russia hoax. Now it's turning out that the whole hoax is turned around." However, in Politico Magazine (10/25), Jack Shafer calls that "a valiant stab at magical thinking by Baby Donald, but the dossier is only a slice of the evidentiary pie being thrown at him. As the anti-Trump Republican operative Rick Wilson tweeted, even if the dossier was 'a farrago of utter fantasy,' other US government and foreign intelligence findings point to Trump's Kremlin entanglements."

Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) tweeted, "Crooked Hillary has been behind Russian collusion allegations all along! Shame on her for wasting officials' time!" Rep. Ken Calvert (R-CA) tweeted, "Hillary Clinton & the DNC lied to Americans about paying for the development of the false Trump dossier." Rep. Pete Olson (R-TX) tweeted, "The corrupt DNC and Clinton camp paid for a fake Russian dossier about our president! Democrats can't be trusted."

Conservative commentators are weighing in. David French of National Review (10/25) writes, "We don't know what role the Russia dossier has played or is playing in the Russia investigation. ... But we did learn a bit more last night, and what we learned undermines the dossier, indicts the Clinton campaign, and helps Donald Trump." Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist (10/25) writes, "Here we have the realization that the Clinton campaign, the DNC, and the FBI all worked wittingly or unwittingly with Russians to affect the results of the 2016 election. ... These efforts perverted our justice system by forcing the attorney general to recuse himself for the crime of having attended meetings with Russian diplomats and spawning a massive, sprawling, limitless probe over Russia." Matt Vespa of Townhall (10/25) writes, "My, oh my – how the tables have turned."

Clinton Camp "Largely Silent"; Current DNC Leadership Says It Was Not Involved. On ABC World News Tonight (10/25, story 3, 2:20, Muir), Brian Ross reported, "Until now, Hillary Clinton and her campaign team would not admit any connection to the Trump dossier," which "was produced for a Washington-based firm called Fusion GPS, which had actually started digging up dirt on Trump for an unknown Republican during the primaries. After several Republican candidates dropped out, the Clinton campaign and the Democrats secretly paid Fusion GPS to continue their research efforts. ... Former Clinton campaign spokesperson Brian Fallon said the Democrats did nothing wrong." Fallon: "I think it's important to remember that opposition research happens all the time in campaigns."

On the CBS Evening News (10/25, story 6, 2:00, Mason), Jeff Pagues reported, "The 35-page dossier details some of the most explosive allegations now under investigation by special counsel Robert Mueller. ... Until now, some top Clinton campaign officials have denied knowing who was behind the effort to dig up dirt." Fallon: "I'm sure that there's a small group of folks that were aware of the nature of the decision to hire Fusion back in the spring of 2016. But it was kept for reasons that I understand to a very select group, given the sensitive nature of who they hired."

The Washington Post (10/25, Hamburger, Helderman) reports that "Clinton and top officials of her presidential campaign were largely silent" on Wednesday "in response to the revelation that the campaign and the Democratic National Committee had paid for research that resulted" in the dossier. Fallon "said he didn't know about the research at the time but called it 'money well spent' if it provided information useful to the special counsel now investigating Russia's involvement." The Daily Mail (10/25, Earle) reports that Fallon told CNN that Clinton "'may have' known about her campaign's funding of the infamous dossier." He told CNN, "I haven't spoken to her, no. ... She may have known. The degree of exactly what she knew is beyond my knowledge."

Becket Adams of the Washington Examiner (10/25) writes that either Clinton "knew nothing about her campaign's role in financing the dossier" and "is guilty of nothing worse than ignorance" but was deceived by her staff, or that she "has known about the dossier this entire time, and she has been misrepresenting what she knows. Any way you cut it, it doesn't reflect well on Clinton or her team."

The Hill (10/25, Easley) reports that Democratic National Committee representatives said that Chairman Tom Perez, "who only became the Democratic leader in April, had nothing to do with the arrangement," and Rep. Keith Ellison (D-MN), the DNC's deputy chairman, "emphasized that both he and Perez came to the DNC long after the contract with Fusion GPS had ended." Ellison said, "Tom and me, we weren't even there at the time. I know as much about it as you guys who have reported it." A spokesman for Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-FL), who was DNC chair at the time, said, "She was not aware of anything related to this research arrangement." The Daily Caller (10/25, Hasson) reports that the DNC "released a carefully-worded statement meant to distance current party leader from the dossier." The Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorializes that it appears that the Democrats paid for Russian operatives to compile the dossier, which is a form of collusion in itself.

Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MD), ranking member on the House Oversight Committee, said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/25), "All of this, to me, is unfortunately a distraction from the things that we need to be doing. ... But I think the American people need to understand the whole role that Russia is now playing in our elections and will continue to play and they need to keep in mind that the highest ranking law enforcement person in the country has said basically – and that is Attorney General Sessions – that there is no investigation from his office's standpoint."

The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that the Campaign Legal Center has filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission alleging that Clinton's campaign and the DNC violated campaign finance law by failing to disclose payments for the dossier.

FBI's Role Now Under Scrutiny. Byron York of the Washington Examiner (10/25) writes, "Knowing that the Clinton campaign [and] the DNC...supported the dossier is not the end of the story. The most important next step is the FBI." According to the Washington Post, dossier compiler Christopher Steele "'reached an agreement with the FBI a few weeks before the election for the bureau to pay him to continue his work.' It was an astonishing turn: the nation's top federal law enforcement agency agreeing to fund an ongoing opposition research project being conducted by one of the candidates in the midst of a presidential election."

House Intelligence Chairman Devin Nunes said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/25), "I think the next focus is going to be on whether or not did the FBI use this dossier to get any warrants, did they use it to open a counter intelligence investigation. And if they did, if they're using unverified information to open up inquiries into American citizens, I think we have a big problem." David Harsanyi of The Federalist (10/25) asks, "How often did the FBI use the dossier as a pretext for FISA warrants? Seems like a reasonable question."

Newsday \(NY\) (10/25, Goldschlag) reports that though "the question of who paid for the 'Russia dossier' on Trump is now partly answered, still open is the question of who might pay, in the form of legal jeopardy, if some of its more explosive but unverified contents are found credible" by Mueller.

Max Boot of the Council on Foreign Relations tweeted, "And before that it was paid for by anti-Trump GOPer. So what? Doesn't affect whether it's true. And it's not reason for Mueller probe." ABC political analyst Matthew Dowd tweeted, "Mueller's investigation has little to do with dossier. Much bigger issues." Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted that the news is "a nothing burger just to give Fox something to cover all day."

Judge Gives Fusion GPS Until Thursday To Answer Congressional Subpoena. Reuters (10/25, Hosenball) reports that US District Court Judge Tanya Chutkan has given Fusion GPS "until Thursday to reach an agreement with Congress over a subpoena for the firm's bank records." The House Intelligence Committee has "subpoenaed an unidentified bank for the last two years of records of the accounts of Fusion GPS."

Trump: Uranium One Deal Is Modern-Day "Watergate." The Hill (10/25, Beavers) reports

Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley tweeted that he is seeking the appointment of a special counsel “to investigate the Uranium One deal that gave a Russian-owned company partial control of US atomic energy resources in 2010” – a deal that the President compared to Watergate on Wednesday. The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) reports that Trump told reporters, “I think the uranium sale to Russia and the way it was done so underhanded, with tremendous amounts of money being passed, I actually think that’s ‘Watergate,’ modern age.”

USA Today (10/25, Johnson) reports that the DOJ has “lifted a gag order on an FBI informant to provide testimony to Congress” about the Uranium One deal. The Hill (10/25, Solomon) reports, “Multiple congressional committees have been seeking to interview the informant, whose name has not been released publicly.”

Assange Says He Rejected Help Offer From Cambridge Analytica. The New York Times (10/25, Confessore) reports that WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange said on Wednesday “that he had rebuffed a request for help last year” from the head of Cambridge Analytica, a data firm that worked for Trump. Assange “did not disclose what kind of help [was] sought, only that he had declined the request.” Assange tweeted, “I can confirm an approach by Cambridge Analytica [prior to November last year] and can confirm that it was rejected by WikiLeaks.”

The Hill (10/25, Chalfant) reports that the Trump campaign “appeared to distance itself” from Cambridge Analytica on Wednesday after it was reported that CEO Alexander Nix sought contact with Assange over Clinton’s emails. The Daily Beast (10/25) reports that Assange told Nix “that he didn’t want his help, and preferred to do the work on his own.” In related news, Politico (10/25, Gerstein) reports that the Trump campaign argued in a court filing that WikiLeaks’ publication of hacked DNC emails “was legal and specifically protected by federal law.”

Rove: Impeachment Push Could Hurt Democrats. Karl Rove writes in his Wall Street Journal (10/25) column that billionaire Tom Steyer’s injection of $10 million into a push to impeach the President moves the matter beyond the back benches of the House, but could ultimately hurt the Democratic Party by resulting in a focus on Trump rather than on an electoral strategy.

Trump Attends Harvey Recovery Briefing Before Dallas GOP Fundraising Event.

Coverage of President Trump’s visit to Texas for a briefing on hurricane recovery efforts and a Republican fundraiser is negative, with reports saying that the briefing was added to justify the cost of a political trip, and that Trump praised his own efforts at the briefing. The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (10/25, Moritz) reports that the President “arrived in Dallas on Wednesday to a cheering welcome, and later by sign-carrying protesters assailing his truthfulness, where he met with Texas Gov. Greg Abbott for an update on the Hurricane Harvey recovery effort as a prelude to an afternoon of politicking.” During remarks at the briefing, Trump “said he looked forward to seeing plans to address flooding in Houston ‘on a more permanent basis.’”

The Washington Post (10/25, Phillips) reports that Trump also “praise[d]...himself and his government...then suggested that Houston recovery officials take a look at a special kind of sheet rock that could prevent another Harvey.” Trump said, “They use it in bathtubs and showers, and water has no impact on it.” The Hill (10/25, Greenwood) reports that Trump said that it “is the same material used around bathtubs and other areas exposed to moisture. Greenboard is a water-resistant drywall.”

The Dallas Morning News (10/25, Gillman) reports that though “adoring fans cheered him at Love Field and 200 well-heeled donors rubbed elbows with him downtown,” if Trump “was hoping for a respite from the venomous atmosphere in Washington, his day trip to Dallas offered little. Catcalls from hundreds of protesters filtered into the swank fund-raiser. ‘Go home Cheeto!’ they yelled, holding signs that read ‘Liar liar’ and ‘shame.’”

The Los Angeles Times (10/25, Bennett) reports that Trump was in Dallas “for a Republican fundraiser and political reception,” and had “added a brief meeting about hurricane recovery efforts continuing on the Gulf Coast about 250 miles away.” Newsweek (10/25) reports that the briefing was added in “an apparent effort to have the political visit subsidized by taxpayer dollars.” The event “cost attendees $2,700 a ticket and an extra $35,000 to take a photo with Trump.” The AP (10/25) reports that the event was “expected to raise $4 million.”

Politico’s Alex Isenstadt tweeted, “Trump raised $4.5 mil for 2020 reelection tonight in Dallas. Big donors present included Andy Beale, Harold Hamm, Tom Hicks Sr.” Mark Knoller of CBS News tweeted that “tickets range[d] from $2700 to $100,000 per person.” The Washington Times (10/25, Boyer) and the WFAA-TV Dallas (10/25) website also have brief reports.

Trump: Tax Cuts Will Create “So Many Jobs.”

Asked about tax reform on Fox Business’ Lou Dobbs Tonight (10/25), President Trump said, “I think we're going to get [tax cuts]. I think the senators are going to come together. I think the House is looking really good." Trump also said that "we're bringing the corporate rate down to 20 percent from 35 percent. This will be the biggest tax cut in history in the history of our country and that's great and we need it because right now our country is about the highest taxed or certainly one of the highest taxed in the world and we can't have that." Trump added, "We are going to have so many jobs created by what we're doing and you know we're going to have companies that aren't leaving our country any more."

Senate Panel Approves EPA Nominees Over Democrats' Objections.

Reuters (10/25) reports the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee yesterday "approved four nominees to key posts at the Environmental Protection Agency, including one appointee with ties to the chemical industry who will head the agency's office of chemical safety." Sen. Tom Carper "said two of the nominees were of 'grave concern': Bill Wehrum, nominated for assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation, and Michael Dourson to head up the Office of Chemical Safety and Pollution Prevention." Carper "called Dourson 'one of the most troubling nominees I have ever considered during my time on this committee.'" The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/25, Eaton) indicates "the 11-10 vote to advance Dourson's nomination was approved along party lines." Likewise, says Automotive News (10/25, Kulisch), "all 10 Democrats opposed Wehrum's nomination because of concern that he is too close to industry and taking a lax approach to regulating emissions while at EPA under the Bush administration."

The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) notes the committee also "advanced the nominations of Matthew Leopold, President Trump's nominee to be assistant administrator for the Office of General Counsel; and David Ross, chosen to be assistant administrator for the Office of Water." After the votes, "Democrats gave lengthy speeches denouncing Dourson and Wehrum." Sen. Ed Markey "called the committee's approval of Dourson and Wehrum 'one of the low points of my entire career,'" and Sen. Tammy Duckworth "called Dourson the 'absolute worst person I can think of to be in charge of chemical safety in this country.'"

The Intercept (10/25, Lerner) reports "powerless Democrats watched in anger as their Republican colleagues...voted along party lines to advance" Dourson's nomination, and USA Today (10/25, Shesgreen) that Dourson "has sparked intense opposition from Senate Democrats and environmental groups, who have blasted him for engaging in 'fake pseudo-science,' referring to his research funded in part by the chemical industry." Dourson's "findings have generally endorsed high levels of chemicals and pesticides in drinking water and other consumer products." The AP (10/25, Smith) notes that it "reported last month that Dourson, a toxicologist, has for years accepted payments from chemical companies to write papers pushing back against peer-reviewed studies raising health concerns about his clients' products." The AP adds that "past corporate clients include Dow Chemical Co., Koch Industries Inc. and Chevron Corp."

On the other hand, the AP (10/25, Biesecker) reports, "committee Chairman John Barrasso called Trump's nominees well-qualified and experienced." The Washington Examiner (10/25, Siegel) notes that EPA Administrator Pruitt "commended Republicans for advancing the nominations," saying, "These top leaders in their fields will bring positive change to EPA's mission to protect human health and the environment. We look forward to a full Senate vote on these highly-qualified leaders." The Washington Times (10/25, Wolfgang), among other news outlets, runs a similar report this morning.

WSJournal Analysis: Trump Team Seeks To Foster Economic Growth By Removing Regulations.

The Wall Street Journal (10/25, Ip) reports the Trump Administration is trying to spur economic growth by removing regulations that stop innovation.

EPA Prepares To Place Two-Year Delay On Methane Regulations.

The Daily Caller (10/25, White) reports that the EPA is expected to place a two-year delay on Obama-era regulations on methane emissions from oil and gas operations as a means to "buy time for a plan replacing the rule." The oil and gas industry claims the rule is "unnecessary and duplicative of already existing laws," and critics claimed that the rule "was a regulation in search of a problem, pointing to research showing that methane emissions from oil and gas drilling have plummeted, despite a huge increase drilling operations."

Clean Power Plan Repeal Includes Plan To Alter Social Cost Of Carbon.

E&E Publishing (10/25) reports that the Trump administration's plans to repeal the Clean Power

Plan also includes a proposal to dramatically alter the social cost of carbon used under the Obama administration, which was placed at about $42 per ton by 2020. The new EPA document “significantly lowers that estimate, placing it between $1 and $6 per ton.” The current proposal also “considers only the domestic social cost of carbon, rather than its cost at a global scale.” The controversial shift requires a deep consideration of “our values as a society,” warned Frances Moore, a professor at the University of California, Davis.

EPA To Review Whether Clean Air, Water Laws Affect Energy Sector Jobs Losses.

Reuters (10/25, Volcovici) reports that the EPA said Wednesday it will examine how “bedrock laws like the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act affect energy industry job losses” as part of President Trump’s executive order to “reduce unnecessary regulatory burdens” on businesses. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, Energy Secretary Rick Perry and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke have all outlined separate lists of measures for review under the order.

The Hill (10/25, Henry) reports that one of the EPA’s new initiatives will create a task force to review the permitting process for new sources of air pollution under the Clean Air Act, called the New Source Review (NSR.) The EPA argued in a 15-page report on its regulations, “In some circumstances, the NSR process discourages the construction of new facilities or modifications of existing ones that could result in greater environmental improvements.”

DOE Releases Report Highlighting Programs For Repeal, Reform. E&E Publishing (10/25) reports the Energy Department yesterday “released its long-awaited report” on “policies that are ripe for repeal or reform because they hinder energy production.” Energy Secretary Perry in the report “calls for reviewing National Environmental Policy Act guidelines, streamlining liquefied natural gas exports and reassessing national laboratory policies.” The document “is the first sign of the agency’s response to a high-profile executive order the White House issued earlier this year to scrap red tape and promote ‘energy independence.’”

The Daily Caller (10/25, Bastasch) reports in a statement on the release of the report, Perry said, “Through our ongoing efforts, we will promote job creation and economic growth, unleash American energy dominance, and advance the energy security of our international trading partners.”

EPA Chief Says He’s No Ally To Polluters.

Bloomberg News (10/25, Dlouhy, Jacobs) reports that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt dismissed critics who say he has been too cozy with the industries he is in charge of regulation, and vowed to “do enforcement, to go after bad actors and go after polluters.” The watchdog group Environmental Integrity Project reported in August that in the first six months of the Trump administration, “civil penalties paid for environmental violations were 60 percent smaller on average than for comparable periods” in the past three administrations.

Author Likens Climate Change Debate To Acid Rain Scare Of 1970s-80s.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Darwall), Rupert Darwall, author of “Green Tyranny: Exposing the Totalitarian Roots of the Climate Industrial Complex,” likens the current debate over climate change to the acid-rain scare of the 1970s and 80s, citing the acid-rain alarm, which was proved to be based on faulty science as evidence that the scientific consensus is not a guarantee that the consensus is correct.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Real Reason For Republicans’ Silence On Donald Trump.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/25) says, “It’s less striking that a few Republican congressmen have publicly denounced” President Trump’s “conduct than that most of their colleagues have not. Their fellow legislators have silently accepted his outrages in exchange for policies they’ve always wanted,” such as “transferring power to Wall Street, fossil fuel companies, the chemical industry and other special interests,” while “stoking an anti-populist bonfire to incinerate protections for consumers and workers.”

“The Last Thing Australia And Our Planet Need.” The New York Times (10/25, Board) editorializes that “while global demand for coal is falling as the nations of the world have committed themselves to slashing carbon emissions,” Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull “wants to help a powerful Indian conglomerate build an enormous system of coal mines in a remote stretch of Queensland.” The Times argues that “burning the estimated 66 million tons of coal a year that the Adani Group aims to produce” from the mine “can only make it harder for the world to meet its aspirations under the Paris climate agreement.”

“Scrapping MetroCards Isn’t Vital, But Any Subway Fix Will Do.” A New York Times (10/25) editorial.

Washington Post.

“Finally, A Healthcare Proposal That Actually Pays Off.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/25) argues that in light of a CBO study which found that the Alexander-Murray healthcare bill would reduce federal budget deficits and not impact the number of people without coverage, the measure “now officially falls into the category of ‘so obvious it should pass immediately.’”

“The Catalan Crisis Is All Thanks To Two Inflexible Leaders.” A Washington Post (10/25) editorial says Spain is facing “its worst political crisis since its return to democracy 40 years ago, thanks to the inflexibility of two key leaders” – Catalan President Carles Puigdemont and Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy. The Post says Puigdemont and his followers “badly overestimated their ability to mobilize support for their separatist cause,” while Rajoy’s “hard-line actions risk driving more voters into the separatist camp. He should refrain from more repression and push for a political solution.”

“Trump Crosses Another Line.” The Washington Post (10/25) editorializes that President Trump’s “disdain for the integrity of the Justice Department may no longer surprise a weary public,” but “it is nevertheless shocking to learn that Mr. Trump has breached tradition to personally interview two candidates for U.S. attorney – both of whom would have the power to investigate him in the future.” Politico and CNN reported that Trump “met with Geoffrey Berman and Ed McNally, whom the administration is considering for the roles of U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York and the Eastern District of New York, respectively.” The Post argues that “any presidential interview of a U.S. attorney candidate would cross the line,” but “it is particularly concerning that Mr. Trump chose to speak with the men and women who could lead investigations into his business in New York.” The Post concludes that “this threat to the impartial administration of justice cannot go unchallenged.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Democrats, Russians, And The FBI.” The Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorializes that it appears that the Democrats paid for Russian operatives to compile the dossier on then-candidate Trump, which is a form of collusion in itself.

“McConnell 1, Cordray 0.” A Wall Street Journal (10/25) editorial calls Tuesday’s Senate vote to overturn the CFPB’s arbitration rule a victory for the economy and the leadership of Senate Majority Leader McConnell.

“Jeff Flake’s Public Service.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/25, Board) says that Sen. Jeff Flake’s decision not to seek reelection improves the GOP’s odds of retaining his seat in 2018. The Journal adds that Flake was correct in charging that a great deal of Trump’s rhetoric lacks dignity and is untrue.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Of course, there's a reason why Jeff Flake and Bob Corker are able to criticize the President so openly, because neither one of them is trying to get re-elected. Like when you and your girlfriend break up, on the way out the door she tells me, 'None of my orgasms were real!'"

Stephen Colbert: "A reporter overheard a member of Trump's Secret Service saying that Trump ate rice and two pieces of cherry pie, took a few sips of his drink, and that, quote, 'He loves rice.' Well, of course he loves rice. It's the same reason he loves Mike Pence – bland and white."

James Corden: "Trump said his meeting with senators was a love fest, to which Mike Pence said, 'That is a sin. Repent.'"

James Corden: "Two slices of cherry pie and rice. Trump managed to show how to eat like a spoiled toddler and a death-row inmate at the same time."

Trevor Noah: "A senator trolling the President of the United States is not normal. It's funny, but it's not normal. It's like Trump is dragging the entire federal government into trash social media."

You know, you realize there going to be emojis in history books now. Like in three years, there won't even be a Capitol Building. Senators will just vote on Instagram stories."

Trevor Noah: "You see, [Steve] Bannon wants all Republicans who go against Trump to quit, so that he can replace them with Trump loyalists. That is really what he wants. Bannon even said he plans to challenge every single Republican politician except Ted Cruz, which is so sad for Ted Cruz. He even gets left out of threats."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump was tweeting again today. He said that his big meeting with Republican senators was a love fest with multiple standing ovations. Yep, they were mostly people getting up to leave, but still, that counts as standing ovation."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump sent three tweets about how the senators gave him a standing ovation. It's a big deal for Trump. He hasn't seen 50 people cheering him on since his inauguration."

Seth Meyers: "Housing Secretary Ben Carson said today that rebuilding Puerto Rico after Hurricane Maria could take anywhere between one and 100 years. And that's just the kind of precision you expect from a brain surgeon."

Seth Meyers: "A new poll has found that 51 percent of Democrats now have a favorable view of former President George W. Bush, and that makes sense. I'd also have a favorable view of the flu if I suddenly found myself with the plague."

Seth Meyers: "Trump is an old billionaire with a young, beautiful wife who just became President. Why would he ever think, 'I've got to change my ways?' That would be like Larry King going, 'You know what, I'm going to start wearing belts.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Joe Biden made an announcement today. When asked about the 2020 election, Joe Biden said, 'I haven't decided to run, but I've decided I'm not going to decide not to run.'"

Conan O'Brien: "In a late-night vote yesterday, the Senate made it illegal to sue a bank, which is why today Harvey Weinstein petitioned to become a bank."

Conan O'Brien: "In the past week, several prominent men have been fired for sexual harassment. It's called the Harvey effect. Of course, none of them will see any jail time. That's being called the Cosby effect."

US West's Wildfires Spark Calls To Thin Tree-Choked Forests.

The AP (9/13, Selsky) reports that "wildfires that are blackening the American West in one of the nation's worst fire seasons have ignited calls, including from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, to thin forests that have become so choked with trees that they are at 'powder keg levels.'" According to the article, "the destruction has exposed old frictions between environmentalists and those who want to see logging accelerated, and it's triggered a push to reassess how lands should be managed to prevent severe wildfires." Zinke's order "Tuesday for department managers and superintendents to aggressively prevent wildfires was welcomed by Ed Waldron, fire management officer at Crater Lake National Park in Oregon." However, Oregon Wild, "which campaigns for conservation of roadless areas, suspects" logging is "an ulterior motive behind the order from Zinke."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/13, Selsky), the Daily Mail (9/13, Selsky), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/31, Selsky), Philly \(PA\) (9/13, Selsky), the Washington Times (9/13, Selsky), the Washington Post (9/13, Andrew Selsky |, Ap), ABC News (9/13, Selsky), Fox Business (9/13, Selsky), and Santa Fe New Mexican (9/13, Selsky).

Also reporting are the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (9/13), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (9/13, Devlin), CBS News (9/13), and the Daily Caller (9/13, Pearce).

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage of wildfires was provided by the New York Times (9/13, Price) and the AP (9/13).

Here's How The U.S. Dept. Of Interior And Federal Government Have Been Helping USVI Post Irma.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/13) reports that the Interior Department is "expediting all possible support and assistance to the government of the U.S. Virgin Islands and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (F.E.M.A.) in the wake of destruction from Hurricane Irma, D.O.I. announced Tuesday." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "The Department of the Interior actions in the USVI are part of our responsibility for federal policy related to the U.S. territories. We commend the cooperative actions of the White House, USVI government, FEMA and the whole federal family to provide urgent relief to the Virgin Islands."

Member Of Oklahoma's Kiowa Tribe Named To Interior Post.

The AP (9/13) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announced Wednesday that John Tahsuda III, a member of the Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma, has been appointed the principal deputy assistant secretary for Indian Affairs. Tahsuda will be "the top assistant and principal adviser to the assistant secretary of Indian Affairs."

Also reporting are the Oklahoman (9/14, Wingerter), the Native American Times (9/13) and Law360 (9/13, Rodriguez).

Donald Trump's Administration Denies Climate Change Exists, But Americans Are Concerned.

Newsweek (9/13, Marcin) reports a poll by Morning Consult/Politico released yesterday "found most Americans are concerned about climate change," a "stark contrast with the public views of many folks who President Donald Trump has selected to lead the country." Roughly "two-thirds of registered voters – 67 percent – expressed some level of concern about climate change," and 41 percent "said they were 'very concerned' about the taboo subject in the Trump-led White House." Newsweek notes that top official in the Trump Administration, "like Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Vice President Mike Pence," have "expressed at least skepticism about climate change."

On Tap For Thursday.

The Hill (9/13, Weixel) reports the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee will meet on Thursday "to consider a number of President Trump's regulatory nominees, including Joseph Balash for Assistant Secretary of the Interior; Richard Glick and Kevin McIntyre for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission; David Jonas for Energy Department general counsel; and Ryan Nelson for Interior Department solicitor."

Additional Coverage: Swain Leaders Travel To D.C. For $4 Million Payment.

Additional coverage that the Interior Department has made a $4 million payment to Swain County as part of the North Shore Road settlement agreement was provided by the Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (9/13, Stone).

Interior Secretary Zinke Is Coming, Raising Fear Of Public Land Loss.

In an op-ed for the San Francisco Chronicle (9/13, Newsom), Gavin Newsom, the lieutenant governor of California, writes that "natural wonders in California – along with others across the state and nation – are under threat" by the review of national monuments. Newsom claims that "the threat posed to these lands' future represents an affront to diverse communities throughout our state and nation." Newsom vows to "stand behind California's efforts to protect our public lands."

Op-ed: National Monuments Debate Isn't New.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/13, Straka), Thomas J. Straka, a professor of forestry and environmental resources at Clemson University, writes that "if the courts allow revision of the national monuments, the public lands remain federal, and Secretary Zinke has indicated he wants them to stay that way." But "there is no assurance the process won't lead to state, or even private, control of the lands." Straka says that "it isn't hard to see the current tale of public lands concluding with the same type of natural resource profiteering that took place in the early 20th century."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Panel Embraces Evidence On Social And Emotional Learning.

Politico Morning Education (9/13, Hefling) reports that Tony Dearman, the director of the Bureau of Indian Education, was scheduled to testify yesterday before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. According to the article, “committee members want to know what steps the historically troubled agency, which oversees more than 170 schools for Native American children, has made to follow Government Accountability Office recommendations to improve the safety and financial oversight of the schools.”

Justices Asked To Back Toss Of Tribal Casino Challenge.

Law360 (9/13, Lidgett) reports that “the federal government and the Match-E-Be-Nash-She-Wish band of Pottawatomi Indians on Monday urged the U.S. Supreme Court to uphold a D.C. Circuit decision that backed a law that blocked a Michigan man’s challenge to the tribe’s casino project.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Feds Get Just $15K For Auction Of Controversial Oil And Gas Leases On Sage Grouse Habitat.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/13) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management’s attempt on Tuesday to auction nine parcels in Utah’s West Desert for oil and gas development was a bust, with just three parcels attracting the minimum bid of $2 an acre, netting the federal agency a grand total of $14,837.” The auction, “which targeted nearly 15,000 acres west of Nephi, was controversial because the lands are home to Utah’s most imperiled population of greater sage grouse.” The article notes that “four of the parcels overlapped ‘priority habitat management areas’ outlined under the BLM’s sage grouse land-use plans, now under review by the Trump administration.”

20,000+ Fossils Preserved Thanks To BLM, Local Museum Partnership.

KKCO-TV Grand Junction, CO (9/12, Prechtl) reports that “more than 20,000 fossil specimens and 19,000 historical artifacts found in the valley have been restored thanks to a 40-year-old partnership between the Museums of Western Colorado and the Bureau of Land Management (BLM).” Peter Booth, the executive director of the museum, said, “Without this partnership, much of what we have here (Museum of the West) and at Dinosaur Journey most likely would be lost. Parts and stories that are connected with our past and our community’s past would be lost.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

U.S. Starts Working On Offshore Wind Standards.

Offshore Wind (9/13) reports that “an initiative to create offshore wind standards in the U.S. has been launched by key leaders of the American industry, as the country prepares for the imminent development of large scale offshore wind energy projects.” The effort is “expected to be a three-year process and collaboration between the U.S. Dept. of Energy, the National Renewable Energy Laboratory, U.S. Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, Business Network for Offshore Wind, and the American Wind Energy Association.” An Offshore Wind Technical Advisory Panel “consisting of industry stakeholders has been formed and will guide the scope of activities for a group of new technical sub-working groups whose end goal is to develop a set of unambiguous national standards and guidelines for offshore wind that is recognised by the American National Standards Institute.”

BOEM To Hold New York Intergovernmental Renewable Energy Task Force Meeting.

Offshore Wind (9/13) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management will “hold an Intergovernmental Renewable Energy Task Force Meeting on 3 October in Riverhead, New York.” The meeting is “being held to continue stakeholder engagement related to the development of offshore wind resources on the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) offshore New York.” BOEM will “update the Task Force and stakeholders on its recent leasing activities on the Outer Continental Shelf, as well as introduce its Request for Feedback and discuss the Path Forward for future leasing activities on the Atlantic.”

Anglers Seek Quick Win In Bid To Block $43M NY Wind Farm.

Law360 (9/13, Rodriguez) reports that “seafood industry groups, companies and several towns asked a D.C. federal judge Tuesday to block a $42.5 million lease awarded by the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management to Statoil Wind for a wind farm off the coast of New York." The site, "13 miles off the coast of Long Island, is an important habitat for a wide range of fish and other marine life, including North Atlantic right whales and sea turtles, the plaintiffs said in a motion for summary judgment."

South Carolina Editorial Roundup.

The AP (9/13) provides excerpts from recent editorials from South Carolina newspapers, including a piece from the Sun News of Myrtle Beach on offshore drilling. The Sun News says that offshore oil drilling and exploration "is overwhelmingly opposed along the U.S. Atlantic Coast, including off South Carolina, and the opposition has become increasingly bipartisan." SC Gov. Henry McMaster "joined fellow Republican governors of Maryland and New Jersey and Democratic governors of North Carolina and Delaware in opposing the Trump administration's efforts to expand drilling and testing." The Sun News adds, "The American Petroleum Institute claims more production in the Atlantic, eastern Gulf of Mexico and the [Arctic] will strengthen national security, as well as create more domestic energy, jobs and government revenue. The fact is, the nation has more oil and natural gas than was imagined only a few years ago."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Welsh Tourist Fined For Dangerous Hoover Dam Swim.

The AP (9/13) reports that "authorities say a Welsh tourist was ticketed for swimming across the iconic Hoover Dam near Las Vegas." The Bureau of Reclamation's Regional Special Agent Ian Canaan "says 28-year-old Arron Hughes of Wales was arrested and cited a $330 fine for the August incident."

Walrus In Alaska May Have Died In Stampede.

The AP (9/13, Joling) reports that "thousands of Pacific walrus are coming to Alaska's northwest shore again in the absence of summer sea ice and not all are surviving." According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "a survey Monday of a mile of coastline near the Inupiaq Eskimo village of Point Lay found 64 dead walrus." Agency spokeswoman Andrea Medeiros said that "the cause of death is not known...but stampedes – set off when startled walrus rush to the sea, crushing smaller animals – are a likely suspect."

USFWS Believes Bering Sea Seabirds Died From Starvation.

The Alaska Native News (9/13) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service says "that at least 800 carcasses of seabirds, that include Northern Fulmars, Kittiwakes, Shearwaters, Murres and Auklets have been observed on the beaches throughout The Bering Sea and Bering Straits since early August of this year." According to the article, "although the cause of the starvation is currently unknown, it is suspected that this most recent die-off, like those of previous years, is connected to unusually warmer waters that are encroaching ever-further north."

West Palm Beach Sues Federal Gov't Over Road Extension.

Law360 (9/13, Arluck) reports that "four federal agencies improperly gave the green light to an 8.5-mile Florida road extension project that will harm wildlife in the Everglades and compromise drinking water, the city of West Palm Beach alleged in D.C. federal court on Tuesday." The city "accused the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the Federal Highway Administration and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers of improperly vetting an 8.5-mile extension of an existing state road in Palm Beach County."

Whooping Cranes Return To Texas Next Month — So What Did Harvey Leave Them?

The Dallas Morning News (9/13, Smith, Writer) reports that at Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, Hurricane Harvey has "placed the lone wintering ground for one of world's most famous endangered species, the whooping crane, under threat." The Victoria \(TX\) Advocate (9/13, Priest) reports that Wade Harrell, "who is coordinating the endangered species' recovery for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, got his first look at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge on Wednesday after Category 4 Hurricane Harvey made landfall Aug. 25." According to the article, "the challenge the service faces in its cleanup effort is the refuge is not contiguous.”

Cooperation Cuts Costs For Habitat Protection.

The Kearney \(NE\) Hub (9/13, Potter) reports that “meeting habitat needs for threatened and endangered species, primarily in Nebraska’s Central Platte River Valley, with a basinwide program will cost an estimated $421 million less than without the program.” George Oamek, “an economist on the Platte River Recovery Implementation Program executive director’s staff in Kearney, said Tuesday that complying with the federal Endangered Species Act will cost an estimated $700 million from 2007-2032 with the program. That compares to possible costs of $1.1 billion without it.”

National Christmas Tree Lighting: When You Can Get 2017 Lottery Tickets.

WTOP-FM Washington (9/13, Hensley) reports that the National Park Service is “gearing up for the ticket giveaway for the annual National Christmas Tree Lighting outside the White House.” The NPS announced Wednesday that “the lottery for free tickets to the 2017 event opens Oct. 12 at 10 a.m. EDT.” The lottery winners will be notified Oct. 30, the park service said.

A Downside To D.C.’s Population Growth? The Growing Number Of Rats.

The Washington Post (9/13, Chason) reports that the rodent problem has “reached record levels in the nation’s capital, driven by a combination of factors.” The article notes that “the rat problem was especially bad in the 23 parks controlled by the National Park Service before it reached an agreement with the city last fall that enabled the D.C. Health Department to inspect and treat the federally controlled parks.”

White House Takes Up 11-year-old On Offer To Mow Rose Garden Lawn.

ABC News (9/13, Kelsey) reports that “earlier this year, Frank, an 11-year-old from Virginia, wrote to President Donald Trump to tout his burgeoning neighborhood lawn-mowing business and offer to travel to Washington, D.C. to work on the White House grass.” Press secretary Sarah Sanders “revealed Wednesday that Frank will be visiting to work with the White House groundskeeping team and will assist with landscaping work in the Rose Garden.” Sanders said, “The president is committed to keeping the American Dream alive for kids like Frank and we’re all looking forward to having him here.”

Little Rock Central High Bill Clears U.S. House; Historic Site’s Expansion Heads To Senate After 390-0 Vote.

The Arkansas Democrat Gazette (9/13, Lockwood) reports that “the U.S. House of Representatives voted Tuesday evening to expand the boundaries of the Little Rock Central High School National Historic Site, pausing for 20 minutes to highlight the significance of the 1957 desegregation struggle.” According to the article, “under the legislation, seven South Park Street houses sitting on roughly 1.5 acres would be placed within the boundaries.” The legislation “would also empower the secretary of the Interior Department to reach ‘cooperative agreements’ with the homeowners to help preserve the site.”

George Washington Carver Bust Back On Display At Monument.

The AP (9/13) reports that “a bust of agriculture pioneer George Washington” has been reinstalled at the George Washington Carver National Monument. The bust was returned Friday “after undergoing a two-month, $6,500 restoration.”

Federal Government Looks To Keep $20K Obtained In Drug Bust.

The AP (9/13) reports that “the federal government is looking to keep over $20,000 seized during a drug bust in Yellowstone National Park.” Assistant U.S. Attorney Stephanie Hambrick “filed a civil forfeiture complaint Sept. 6 seeking to obtain the $20,337 currently in the hands of the Drug Enforcement Administration.”

Reamer Map Returns To Yellowstone National Park After Cleanup.

The Yellowstone Insider (9/13, Kearney) reports that the large wooden map by architect Robert Reamer “of the lower United States that hangs in the Map Room of the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel in Yellowstone National Park” has returned. According to the article, “when park officials secured funding two years ago to renovate the hotel in which the map resides, they decided it would be a good time to send the map away—not only to get the Reamer map out of the way of construction dust and mayhem but for it to undergo its own cleanup and conservation.”

Denali National Park Celebrates Its 100th Anniversary.

USA Today (9/13, Cerbin) reports that Denali National Park and Preserve is celebrating “100 years since it was established.” The park “kicked off its Centennial Summer on June 10 with music, birthday cake, children’s activities and more.”

Deferred Repairs At Our Nation’s Parks And Monuments Put Them All At Risk.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (9/13) editorializes that “the National Park Service budget has not been adequate for all its needs for many years, and there is no reason to believe that will change, especially with federal disaster-response needs growing daily.” It adds that “just catching up on deferred maintenance doesn’t move parks forward; it simply prevents them from falling farther behind.” The paper wants to “tackle the problem openly and consider the full range of available solutions for taking care of the public’s most irreplaceable property.”

In an op-ed for the Naples \(FL\) Daily News (9/13, Horton), Malinda J. Horton, Executive Director Florida Association of Museums, urges support for the National Park Service Legacy Act. The legislation “would provide dedicated annual funding to address deferred maintenance needs.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Here’s How The U.S. Dept. Of Interior And Federal Government Have Been Helping USVI Post Irma.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/13) reports that the Interior Department is “expediting all possible support and assistance to the government of the U.S. Virgin Islands and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (F.E.M.A.) in the wake of destruction from Hurricane Irma, D.O.I. announced Tuesday.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula “applauded and expressed support for President Donald Trump and his White House for their efforts in ensuring the U.S. Virgin Islanders receive the assistance and support needed to recover from Hurricane Irma.” They have “also personally pledged their support to Governor Kenneth Mapp of the U.S Virgin Islands towards recovery efforts.”

U.S. Virgin Islands Governor Says Trump Will Visit In ‘Next Six Or Seven Days’. The Washington Examiner (9/12, Giaritelli) reports that President Trump will “travel to the U.S. Virgin Islands ‘within the next six or seven days’ to see the devastation Hurricane Irma left behind, Gov. Kenneth Mapp said during a press conference late Monday.” The White House has “not announced the trip to the Caribbean island, but Mapp said he spoke with Trump earlier in the day, and that Trump told him he will visit the U.S. territory.” Mapp said Trump wants “to see firsthand the damages of the territory, and to get on-ground reports of the federal operation, to ensure that the people of the Virgin Islands are receiving recovery as fast as humanly possible, and that the assets of the federal government were being appropriately deployed.”

Hurricane Irma Turned This Tiny Island Into A Wasteland. The New York Post (9/13, Eustachewich) reports that St. John is “now a tattered wasteland” after Hurricane Irma hit the island a week ago. Six days after the storm, St. John “was designated an active disaster zone, with National Guard now patrolling the streets and FEMA shuttling in aid, including food, water, blue tarps and infant and toddler kits.” Virgin Islands Gov. Kenneth Mapp said it could take “months, months, months” until power is restored.

□ NBC Nightly News (9/13, story 3, 1:10, Holt) reported that a cruise ship “set sail for San Juan, Puerto Rico with yet another group of tourists and evacuees off St. Thomas before heading back to hard-hit St. Maarten to do the same.”

Sen. Bill Nelson said on □ CNN's Situation Room (9/13), “I just got off the phone with the Secretary of Veterans’ Affairs. I thanked him for taking the poor people on St. John and putting them in the VA hospital in Puerto Rico.”

Unprecedented Mobilization Under Way To Help Florida, Caribbean. Voice of America (9/11, Herman) reports that “an unprecedented rescue and relief response by the United States is under way not only in Florida, but also in the Caribbean following Hurricane Irma, according to the Trump administration.” It is “the largest-ever mobilization of our military in a naval and marine operation,” for relief operations, White House Homeland Security Advisor Thomas Bossert said Monday. Notably, an “amphibious assault ship, the USS Kearsarge, and a dock landing ship, the USS Oak Hill are in the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, moving people and supplies to the islands.”

Official Website To Donate For Hurricane Irma Relief Announced; More Relief Effort Updates Inside. The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/13) reports that “Governor Kenneth Mapp announced at his daily Hurricane Irma press briefing on Tuesday something that many have been calling for: an official portal through which donations for Hurricane Irma relief can be accepted.” The government “teamed up with the Community Foundation of the Virgin Islands, a longstanding nonprofit organization, which will manage the funds.”

Additional Food, Water Distribution Could Open On St. Thomas This Week. The Virgin Islands Daily News (9/13, O’CONNOR) reports that “Gov. Kenneth Mapp says he is considering expanding the amount of time that St. Thomas residents have on the streets to accomplish necessary business.” Mapp said, “We do have under consideration a plan, a recommendation to shrink the curfew on St. Thomas further to give folks more time. We’re gonna make a decision about that tomorrow morning, and then regarding that decision, we’ll make an announcement at tomorrow’s briefing.”

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage of Irma’s devastation was provided by the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/13), the Washington Post (9/12, A1, Faiola), and WMGT-TV Macon, GA (9/12).

North Korea Nuclear Test May Have Been Twice As Strong As First Thought.

The Washington Post (9/13, Lee) reports a new analysis by US monitoring think tank 38 North found that North Korea’s Sept. 3 nuclear test “may have been even stronger than first reported,” with a yield of about 250 kilotons. The figure is “much higher than initial estimates from U.S. intelligence sources and allies”: 140 kilotons for the United States intelligence assessment, 160 kilotons by Japan, and 50 kilotons by South Korea. However, a US intelligence official “said the 38 North analysis is consistent with the range of estimates by the intelligence community,” citing the Air Force Technical Applications Center’s early estimate of a range of 70 to 280 kilotons.

North Korea Threatens To Use Nuclear Weapon On Japan. Bloomberg News (9/13, Sharp) reports North Korea’s state-run news said that Japan “should be sunken into the sea by” a nuclear weapon, “in remarks that further crank up heightened tensions in North Asia.”

CNN Analysis: Pyongyang Defiant Following Latest Sanctions. In Pyongyang, Will Ripley reported on CNN's Situation Room □ (9/13) that North Korean officials are condemning the latest UN sanctions, “using terms like vicious and evil and threatening the United States with unbearable consequences.” New propaganda posters there also “show a pair of hands ripping up” the UN resolution. Ripley said that behind the North’s “defiant message” is their view that the nuclear weapons are “vital to their national survival.” Ripley continued: “In fact, they say, these sanctions are only going to speed up their testing of nuclear weapons. ... So...really, what this means is that [the UN resolution] threatens to escalate an already dangerous situation even further.”

Mnuchin: “Nobody” Off The Table As US Weighs Trade Sanctions. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on Fox News’ Special Report □ (9/13) that he spoke with President Trump on Wednesday about North Korea, adding, “As I have suggested, I worked on an executive order that’s ready if the President wants to use it. We can stop trade with any country that does business with North Korea.” When asked if that included China, Mnuchin replied, “Nobody would be off the table.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Montana Mine Warns Of Layoffs After Judge Blocks Expansion.

The AP (9/13, Brown) reports that “more than 80 miners could be laid off from a central Montana coal mine in coming months after environmentalists successfully sued to halt its expansion, according to mine owner Signal Peak Energy.” U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy “last month blocked the company’s plans to mine a 176-million-ton federal coal reserve adjacent to the mine.” Signal Peak President Bradley Hanson “said in a court affidavit filed Monday that about 30 employees at the Bull Mountain mine north of Billings could run out of work by the end of October and another 50 workers could run out of work by next March.”

In Appalachian Coal Country, Trump Administration Puts Coal Industry Profits Before People’s Health.

The Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (9/13) editorializes that “budget concerns” was a the Trump Administration’s “bogus excuse for halting a study into the health effects of surface coal mining in Appalachia.” The paper decries that “protecting coal industry profits almost always gets top priority among the government agencies that are supposed to protect the public from the effects of mining.”

Schumer, Pelosi Say They Have Reached A Deal With Trump On DACA.

Following a dinner with President Trump at the White House on Wednesday evening, Senate Minority Leader Schumer and House Minority Leader Pelosi announced that they had reached an agreement with the President to protect so-called DREAMers. However, media reports vary on how firm the agreement is and on what specifically was agreed to. In particular, several reports highlight that while the Democratic leaders stressed that the President's proposed border wall was not part of the agreement, White House press secretary Sarah Sanders tweeted that excluding the wall had not been part of the deal.

Reuters (9/13, Cowan, Holland) says Trump and Democratic leaders "have agreed to work together on legislation to protect 'Dreamers,'" although "a dispute erupted over exactly what had been agreed," while the New York Times (9/13, Haberman, Alcindor) reports that Pelosi and Schumer said Wednesday night that they have reached a deal with Trump "to quickly extend protections for young undocumented immigrants and to finalize a border security package that does not include the president's proposed wall." The Democratic leaders said in a joint statement, "We agreed to enshrine the protections of DACA into law quickly, and to work out a package of border security, excluding the wall, that's acceptable to both sides."

The Wall Street Journal (9/13, Meckler, Peterson) says Schumer and Pelosi said they had reached agreement with the President on the outlines of a deal, while Politico (9/13, Everett, Dawsey, Bade, Caygle) says Trump and the Democratic leaders "have reached a tentative agreement to beef up border security in exchange for providing a pathway to citizenship" for the DREAMers. The White House "did not immediately confirm Democrats' account of the deal," but the AP (9/13, Werner, Colvin) cites "a person briefed on the meeting," who "said the deal specifies bipartisan legislation called the DREAM Act that provides eventual citizenship for the young immigrants."

The New York Times (9/13, Haberman, Alcindor) also says the White House issued a "far more muted" statement, "mentioning DACA as merely one of several issues that were discussed, including tax reform and infrastructure," and calling the meeting "a positive step toward the president's strong commitment to bipartisan solutions." The Washington Post (9/13, O'Keefe, Nakamura) says the White House statement "described the meeting as 'constructive' and that it focused on 'tax reform, border security, DACA, infrastructure and trade.'" It added, "The Administration looks forward to continuing these conversations with leadership on both sides of the aisle."

USA Today (9/13, Eversley) says White House press secretary Sarah Sanders posted a tweet Wednesday night saying, "While DACA and border security were both discussed, excluding the wall was certainly not agreed to." Bloomberg News (9/13, John, Litvan) reports that another person who attended the dinner "also said that Trump didn't agree to exclude the border wall from the legislation."

The Washington Times (9/13, Dinan) says that if the deal "comes to fruition," it "would be the second major bargain Mr. Trump has cut directly with the two Democratic leaders, undercutting the negotiating position of his own party's leaders in Congress." The Los Angeles Times (9/13, Mascaro, Bierman) takes a more positive view, saying the deal "could provide further momentum to a budding movement toward bipartisanship that began last week when Trump reached a fiscal agreement with Democrats to temporarily keep the government open and pay the nation's debts."

The reaction from conservatives was decidedly negative, however. The New York Post (9/13, Schultz) says the announcement of the agreement "drew instant criticism from conservatives against the plan." Rep. Steve King tweeted, "If AP is correct, Trump base is blown up, destroyed, irreparable, and disillusioned beyond repair. No promise is credible." Breitbart (9/13, Binder) also offers a harsh assessment, saying Trump "signaled a full-fledged cave on the issue of giving amnesty to nearly 800,000 illegal aliens." Jonathan Swan writes on Axios (9/14, Swan) that if the reports are accurate, Trump "is risking a revolt from elements in his base. Many of his most hardcore supporters voted for him based on his hardline immigration policies."

Maddow Skeptical Of Deal. The Washington Examiner (9/13, Chaitin) reports that MSNBC host Rachel Maddow was “skeptical,” and suggested “that perhaps Pelosi and Schumer used tricky wording and meant they had agreed among themselves, and not with Trump, ‘in which case that’s not much news.’” While she admitted, “this could potentially be a big deal,” Maddow “cautioned: ‘I am disinclined to believe anything that Donald Trump says about his own future behavior or that anybody else says that Donald Trump has committed to anything about his own future behavior until I actually see the behavior.’”

Cuellar: Trump Not Insisting Border Wall As Part Of DACA Legislation. Fox News' Special Report (9/13) briefly reported that after a meeting at the White House earlier Wednesday, Rep. Henry Cuellar, “said the President did not insist on linking border wall funding to new DACA legislation.” According to Fox’s John Roberts, Cuellar “did say that the President wanted some border security attached but that the wall could be added somewhere else.”

Ryan: Deporting DREAMers Is “Not In Our Nation’s Interest.” In an interview with the AP (9/13, Colvin) Wednesday, House Speaker Ryan “said deporting hundreds of thousands of young immigrants brought into the country illegally is ‘not in our nation’s interest.’” Ryan said the President “made the right call” in giving Congress six months to determine what to do with DACA for dismantling the program. Ryan said, “I wanted him to give us time. I didn’t want this to be rescinded on Day One and create chaos,” adding that Congress will have time to “come up with the right kind of consensus and compromise to fix this problem.” Ryan was to meet with House Minority Leader Pelosi on Wednesday evening before Pelosi was to meet at the White House with Trump and Senate Minority Leader Schumer to discuss, among other things, DACA. The Hill (9/13, Bernal) says the meeting was “expected to yield specifics in terms of what border security measures Republicans want in exchange for providing permanent relief for Dreamers, whose title comes from the not-yet-passed DREAM Act.”

Breitbart: Short Previously Worked Alongside “Pro-Mass Immigration” Koch Brothers. Breitbart (9/13, Binder) reports that White House director of legislative affairs Marc Short, who “insinuated” during a Christian Science Monitor breakfast that the Trump Administration “would not demand any pro-American immigration reforms in exchange for amnesty for nearly 800,000 illegal aliens given temporary protected status,” has “a long history opposing the president and his agenda, as well as working alongside the Koch brothers, two pro-mass immigration billionaires who are major donors to the Republican establishment, as the director of the group Freedom Partners.” Breitbart details Short’s “past efforts to defeat Trump,” before he “waged his way into the president’s White House,” and started “making headlines for his push for DACA amnesty without any cuts to legal immigration or mandatory E-Verify for businesses.”

Kobach Says Tying DACA To Tax Cuts Is “The Ultimate Bad Deal-Making.” Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach told Breitbart (9/13, Binder) that the Trump Administration plan to “trade amnesty for nearly 800,000 illegal aliens for tax cuts ‘is the ultimate bad deal making.’” Kobach, who Breitbart describes as “an immigration expert who has previously met with Trump on plans to end illegal immigration,” said, “Tying DACA to tax cuts is the ultimate bad deal-making. ... I cannot believe President Trump would ever agree to such an obvious bad deal.” He said the deal would be a “betrayal’ of Trump’s ‘America First’ agenda, which promised to build a border wall while never giving into amnesty for illegal aliens.” Kobach added, “[The deal] also renders the tax cuts less likely to occur because a DACA amnesty passed by Congress is bad policy. ... The American people have spoken against the DREAM Act before.”

King: Rewarding DACA Recipients Will Encourage “More Fraud.” Rep. Steve King said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/13) that “to grant amnesty is a pardon. Amnesty is a pardon for immigration lawbreakers and it’s coupled with the reward of the objective of their crime. If they cross the border, that’s a crime and that makes them criminals. If they used false documents to get a job and work illegally, that also makes them criminals. If you reward them with the objective of that crime, that’s amnesty, and for the DACA recipients, they been granted an unconstitutional quasi-legal status in America, however temporary it is, along with a work permit. That’s Barack Obama violating the Constitution, and that’s why Donald Trump promised that he would end the DACA program. If we reward them, then there will be more of them and there will be more fraud.”

McCarthy Blasts Gutierrez Over Comments On Kelly. House Majority Leader McCarthy blasted Rep. Luis Gutierrez on Wednesday “for his personal attack” on White House chief of staff Kelly, Politico (9/13, Cheney) reports. Gutierrez called Kelly a “disgrace to the uniform he used to wear for standing by while Trump rescinded protections for undocumented immigrants who arrived as minors.” McCarthy said, “What is disgraceful is to attack the character of an honorable man. ... I believe Rep. Gutiérrez owes Gen. Kelly and his family an apology.”

Professor: Schneiderman’s Challenge To Trump’s DACA Action Is Legally Unsound. In an op-

ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/13, Blackman), Josh Blackman, a constitutional law professor at the South Texas College of Law in Houston, and an adjunct scholar at the Cato Institute, writes that New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman is arguing in a legal challenge that President Trump does not have the authority to revoke DACA because of his past statements about Mexicans, which show he is a racist. Blackman argues that Schneiderman's claim is not legally sound and poses a threat to the Constitution's separation of powers.

As He Woos Democrats, Trump Says He's Open To Higher Taxes On Wealthy.

To mostly favorable media reviews, the President yesterday continued his outreach to Democrats on the issue of tax reform, telling reporters he is willing to consider higher taxes for the wealthy. ABC World News Tonight (9/13, story 4, 1:50, Bruce) reported "the Republican President sounded a lot like a Democrat," and NBC Nightly News (9/13, story 6, 1:50, Holt) that he is "reaching across the aisle, inviting congressional Democratic leaders to join him for dinner at the White House" – where GOP leaders are "not getting a spot at the table." Under the headline "Democrats Cautious But Encouraged By Trump's Outreach," meanwhile, the Washington Post (9/13, Parker, Costa) reports that "Trump's outreach suggested that an unexpected deal he reached last week with Democrats may not have been an aberration," and that Trump could "be signaling the return of a recently bygone era when lawmakers of both parties dining – and working – with the president was hardly abnormal."

USA Today (9/13, Jackson) casts Trump as "once again trying his hand at bipartisanship – even suggesting on Wednesday that rich people may be taxed higher under a plan he would negotiate with congressional Democrats," Roll Call (9/13, Bennett) says he "expressed a willingness to raise taxes on the wealthiest Americans," and Reuters (9/13, Holland, Morgan) that he said "the rich might see a hike in taxes."

Politico (9/13, McCaskill) notes that "ahead of a meeting with a bipartisan group of House members at the White House," Trump said, "The rich will not be gaining at all with this plan." ABC World News Tonight (9/13, story 4, 1:50, Bruce) showed Trump saying of taxes for wealthy Americans, "If they have to go higher, they'll go higher, frankly." Townhall (9/13, Pavlich) quoted him as saying, "The rich will not be gaining at all with this plan. We are looking for the middle class and we are looking for jobs, jobs being the economy. So we're looking at middle class and we're looking at jobs. ... I think the wealthy will be pretty much where they are, pretty much where they are."

The Washington Times (9/13, Miller) reports that "if Mr. Trump denies a tax cut to the top 1 percent of earners as part of a bipartisan deal on tax reform, it would be a concession to one of the Democrats' top demands." At any rate, "it was unclear whether Mr. Trump was promising not to lower the tax rate on the very wealthy or to keep their effective tax rate the same by a combination of lowering rates and eliminating deductions." In his comments yesterday, the President also "insisted that conservatives shouldn't be skeptical of his attempt at bipartisan deal-making," saying, "I'm a conservative and I'll tell you, I'm not skeptical."

Sen. Joe Manchin said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/13) that during Tuesday's White House dinner, Trump "was adamant from the get go, this is not a tax cut for the rich." Manchin added that "any tax overhaul...has to be geared toward job creation, the economy, competitiveness. ... We have not changed this tax code for many, many, many years. You've to compete in the marketplace and we're in the global market. ... They want to do something that is competitive, that gives a purge to the economy. We have not seen the details. We'll have to wait to see the details, but I made it very clear that I cannot look at my ten babies, my wonderful grandchildren and everyone else's children and say, 'Look at what we left you.'" Townhall (9/13, O'Brien), meanwhile, reported that Manchin, who "was one of three Democratic senators to attend a dinner meeting with...Trump to discuss tax reform Tuesday evening," also told CBS News yesterday morning that "it was a very 'open' and 'engaging' discussion." Added Manchin, "I think they're very aggressive on this – they want it done. ... They want it in a bipartisan way. I thought it was very good for them to reach out to us."

Rep. Kurt Schrader said on CNBC's Closing Bell (9/13) that he agrees with the President "the middle class ought to be the beneficiaries." Schrader added that during a White House meeting Wednesday, Trump "did talk about the wealthy not getting anything out of this at the end of the day. We'll see. The devil's always in the details. He's talking about he would be open to an infrastructure link discussion, but definitely tax reform is his laser focus at this point in time. He wants to get the rates down substantially. I think he's going to have a tough time getting him down to the numbers he's been talking about. I made a pitch to him that he's got to have bipartisan support to get any of the numbers down anywhere close to where he wants to be because it's going to mean a lot of tax breaks and tax deductions for a lot of groups."

The Washington Examiner (9/13, Nelson) cautions, however, that "tax hikes on higher-income Americans" are "highly unlikely to pass in the Republican-controlled Congress," and Bloomberg News (9/13, Wasson, Kapur) that "achieving bipartisan support in the Senate may be difficult," as "earlier this year, 45 of the 48 Democratic senators signed a letter that set three conditions for supporting tax legislation: that it not add to the deficit, that it not increase the burden on the middle class and that it go through the regular order process in Congress." Meanwhile, "on the House side, at least one member's initial response to Wednesday's news was less than enthusiastic." Said Rep. Richard Neal, top Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee, "Unfortunately the Republican tax principles we have seen so far have been largely vacuous, and I fear their updated framework to be released later this month will only be more of the same."

Senate Republican Conference Chairman John Thune said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/13), "The President has made it very clear this has to be about middle income taxpayers and that high income earners, although they may get some rate reduction, they are going to lose a lot of deductions and therefore probably net, net come out...without any sort of tax relief, and he indicated that some may end up paying more. I think the point is the President has made very clear the bill he wants to sign into law has to be about cutting taxes for middle income families in this country and giving the American people a break." Asked about Tuesday night's dinner with senators from both parties at the White House, Thune said that "part of the purpose last night was to hearing out these Democrats. What kind of a tax reform bill could they support? ... I think the President realizes that doing big, doing consequential things is better if you have broad bipartisan support." Thune said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/13), "I think that most Democrats, when they talk about tax reform, they want to see more revenue, so they can spend it. We're going to find the Democrats who are actually interested in tax reform that generates economic growth. ... The question is are there Democrats out there who would support tax reform that meets those objectives and not tax reform that actually is about generating additional revenue for the government to spend."

Sen. Pat Toomey said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/13) that the focus of Tuesday night's dinner "was the need for tax reform, and he talked about having a competitive tax system so that American business can compete. You know, Secretary Mnuchin was there, everyone was pitching in ideas. It was a really good conversation."

Trump Makes Case For 15% Corporate Rate. The New York Post (9/13, Moore) reports Trump also "signaled that he's willing to stick with his desire to lower the corporate tax rate to 15 percent, even though Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin has been skeptical that it could go that low." The President "said the rate needs to be that low so the US can be competitive," telling reporters, "It would bring us to the level where China and other countries are. And we will be able to compete with anybody – nobody will be able to touch us. So we would like to see 15 percent." The Washington Post (9/13, Paletta, Snell, Debonis) indicates, however, that "House GOP leaders believe a rate in the low- to mid-20s is more politically viable."

Mnuchin was asked on Fox News' Special Report (9/13) about his statement that the 15 percent corporate tax rate may not happen. Mnuchin said, "What I said was it's been the President's objective since the campaign to get to a 15 percent rate and that's ideally where he would like to be. As we go through the budget process, as we go through the process of reconciliation or whether we go through the full Senate, we are going to work on it. But that is the President's objective and as we are striving for." Mnuchin added, "This isn't just about cutting taxes. This is about tax reform. This is about changing the system and going from a worldwide system to a territorial system to make us competitive. That alone is going to create literally tens of thousands of jobs and have trillions of dollars invested here."

White House: Trump's Bipartisan Efforts "In Eight Days" Larger Than Obama's Entire Tenure. The Washington Post (9/13, Gearan) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders yesterday "dismissed the notion that the president has found Democrats to be better friends than members of his own party." Said Sanders, "The president is a Republican." Sanders "claimed that Trump's willingness to work across the aisle, as with a short-term deal last week to extend government funding and raise the debt limit, represents nothing more than a desire to get things done." The Washington Times (9/13, Miller), meanwhile, notes Sanders said "Trump's recent outreach to Democrats is what voters want and why they elected him." Sanders also credited him "with doing more to forge bipartisanship in Washington than President Obama ever did." NBC Nightly News (9/13, story 6. 1:50, Holt) showed Sanders saying, "This President's done more for bipartisan in the last eight days than Obama did in eight years."

NBC News: Trump Emulating Obama In Seeking Bipartisan Deal. On NBC Nightly News (9/13, story 6. 1:50, Holt), Hallie Jackson said "former President Obama did cut several big deals across the aisle, and now it seems the self-styled deal-maker-in-chief wants one of his own."

Trump Says Tax Cuts More Urgent After Irma And Harvey "Devastation." Business Insider (9/13, Bryan) reports that the Republican plan "to slash corporate and personal income taxes has finally begun moving forward in Congress," and Trump "wants lawmakers to act with haste." In a tweet Wednesday, Trump urged Republicans to "move fast" on what he said would be a massive tax cut. Trump wrote, "The approval process for the biggest Tax Cut & Tax Reform package in the history of our country will soon begin." Trump also tweeted, "With Irma and Harvey devastation, Tax Cuts and Tax Reform is needed more than ever before." The Insider added that "it's unclear how tax reform would directly impact clean up efforts, but Trump has repeatedly said that tax cuts will lead to greater economic growth which could theoretically boost the long-term recovery."

The Washington Post (9/13, Gearan, Paletta) says Trump "goaded" Congress on Wednesday to "move fast" on what he called the "biggest Tax Cut & Tax Reform package in the history of our country," a "swipe at Republicans divided over the scope and mechanics of a deal still in the works." The Hill (9/13, Delk) similarly reports that Trump "pushed Congress to act on tax reform in a tweet Wednesday"

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin was asked on Fox News' Special Report (9/13) if the hurricanes make it more difficult to get tax reform without busting the budget. Mnuchin said, "I don't think so. First of all, these two hurricanes, these were back-to-back. This is a horrible situation, and our number one focus is to make sure we get the money to the states to rebuild."

Administration, GOP Leaders To Release Framework Of Their Plan During Week Of Sept. 25. The New York Times (9/13, Rappeport) reports the Administration "and Republican leaders of Congress will jointly release a detailed framework of their plan to overhaul the tax code during the week of Sept. 25, with legislation ready for congressional committee action in the second half of October, Republican tax writers said Wednesday." Rep. Kevin Brady, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, "briefed House Republicans on the ambitious timeline on Wednesday, offering the most explicit map to enact a tax plan after months of broad principles and missed deadlines." An unnamed source quoted Brady as saying, "The stakes are higher than ever that we deliver this year."

The Washington Post (9/13, Paletta, Snell, Debonis) says Brady also said Republicans "needed to unify with their GOP colleagues or the effort to cut taxes could fail, according to two people in the room." That comment "was a nod to the GOP's aborted fight to replace parts of the Affordable Care Act earlier this year, during which the House and Senate tried to pass competing health-care bills, splitting the party and culminating in the effort's failure." The Wall Street Journal (9/13, Rubin) runs a similar report this morning.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/13) writes that Congress should abandon budget neutrality rules – or at least extend the budget window – in order to pass tax reform. The Journal argues that the rules mandating revenue neutrality serve to defeat good policy and that well-crafted tax reform legislation would help spur the economic expansion necessary to pay for lost government revenue.

In a Wall Street Journal (9/13) column, Karl Rove writes that although a big obstacle to Republicans passing tax reform is crafting the right budget resolution in order to use the Senate's reconciliation process, the biggest obstacle to passing tax reform is the House Freedom Caucus, which has threatened to vote with Democrats against the GOP budget resolution unless they approve of each tax reform provision. Rove argues that the Freedom Caucus could delay tax reform until 2018 or upend it entirely.

Ryan Wants Reform Enacted By Year's End, Won't Commit To Plan Being Revenue Neutral. The AP (9/13, Fram) reports House Speaker Ryan "declined Wednesday to say the evolving Republican tax cut plan won't add to the nation's already mammoth budget deficits," saying in an AP Newsmaker interview that "a chief goal of the effort will be to spark economic growth." Ryan "said the GOP's goal is to enact tax overhaul into law by the end of this year, not simply push it through the heavily Republican House, 'so that we start 2018 in a new tax system.'"

Cruz Releases His Plan, Warns About Making Tax Reform Revenue Neutral. McClatchy (9/13, Drusch) reports Sen. Ted Cruz yesterday "unveiled a plan to overhaul the nation's tax code that features a single, flat income tax rate and a simpler system for filing taxes." Cruz "offered ideas similar in many respects to the plans he offered during his 2016 presidential race, when he proposed collapsing the current seven income tax rates into a single 10 percent rate." However, "there were important changes," as he "did not offer a specific rate this time, and said that he understood the GOP-controlled Congress could accept a reduction to three tax rates." Said Cruz,

"If we don't have the votes for that...moving from seven brackets to three is a good start."

Cruz said on CNN (9/13), "I think we need to focus on growth and jobs. A number of pieces that I think are very important. Number one, let's simplify the tax code. Let's let everyone fill out their taxes on a postcard. ... Another big thing I'm urging is what's called immediate expensing. What that means is that businesses, farmers, ranchers, if you spend money on a capital investment, you can immediately expense that and deduct it from what you are paying taxes on." Asked what he would consider a victory, Cruz said, "As a practical matter, it is going to be whatever can get 50 votes in the Senate. We have a very narrow majority."

Cruz said on Fox News' Hannity (9/13), "The President said today he wants a big, big tax cut. There's some Republicans in Congress that are talking about making tax reform revenue neutral. Revenue neutral means they are not cutting taxes. They are just moving money around from one bucket to another. We don't need revenue neutral. We need a big tax cut on you, on families who are struggling, on small businesses. We need a Reaganesque tax cut that unleashes incredible growth."

Hannity Goes After McConnell. In his opening monologue on Fox News' Hannity (9/13), Sean Hannity said that Senate Majority Leader McConnell "is now saying tax reform may have to wait until the next year. This is pathetic. It is inexcusable. It's unacceptable. Why did we elect you? It's time for an ultimatum. Sen. McConnell, other Republicans, if you don't get the urgency to work for the American people and you don't pass tax reform by the end of this year, you need to resign, go home, play golf, and get out of the way and let's get people in those positions that can serve the American people. I'm tired of the complacency and business as usual."

NFIB President: Cut Taxes For Small Businesses. In a Wall Street Journal (9/13) op-ed, National Federation of Independent Business President Juanita D. Duggan writes that Congress should cut the top federal income tax rate – a rate that three quarters of American small businesses may be subject to as individual tax filers. She argues such a tax cut would spur economic growth by reducing costs – both in man-hours and lost income – for small businesses, which employ 48 percent of the workforce.

Trump Applauds Latest ACA Repeal Legislation.

President Trump on Wednesday praised, but stopped short of endorsing a last-ditch effort to repeal the ACA by Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy. Bloomberg News (9/13, Edney, Litvan) reports that Trump let the senators know "he is rooting for them, without explicitly supporting the legislation." Graham and Cassidy introduced a bill Wednesday to repeal the ACA and "replace it with block grants to states, who would determine how to help people pay for health care." Trump said in a statement, "I applaud the Senate for continuing to work toward a solution to relieve the disastrous Obamacare burden on the American people. ... As I have continued to say, inaction is not an option, and I sincerely hope that Senators Graham and Cassidy have found a way to address the Obamacare crisis." The Los Angeles Times (9/13) and Reuters (9/13) also report on Trump's statement.

The Washington Post (9/13, Weigel, Goldstein) says Graham and Cassidy along with Sens. Dean Heller and Ron Johnson introduced the legislation Wednesday "with just 17 days left for Republicans to repeal the Affordable Care Act on a party-line vote" Graham described the measure as "conservatives' last shot at reform," saying at a morning new conference, "It should have been our first bill to repeal and replace Obamacare, but it is now our last. ... To those in the Republican Party who feel like we have not fought as hard as we could, you're right." Politico (9/13, Haberkorn) also says the senators framed the bill "as the last, best hope to fulfill the GOP's promise to undo the health law." Politico adds that the measure "faces long odds" as even some of its GOP supporters "say it would be almost impossible to get a massive rewrite of the health care system through the Senate within 17 days."

Breitbart (9/13, Moran) reports that in exclusive interviews, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, Utah Gov. Gary Herbert, Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin, and Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds all endorsed the plan. Herbert called the measure a "vast improvement over the Affordable Care Act."

Sanders Unveils "Medicare For All" Plan.

Sen. Bernie Sanders, who made support for universal healthcare coverage a central part of 2016 presidential campaign, on Wednesday unveiled the Medicare for All Act of 2017, his plan to expand the Medicare program to cover all Americans. Media coverage focuses on the number of Democrats – particularly potential 2020 presidential candidates – supporting Sanders' bill and almost universally says the measure has no chance of passage in a Republican Congress.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (9/13, A27) makes a case for his proposal, arguing that the nation must “join the rest of the industrialized world and guarantee comprehensive health care to every person as a human right.” Sanders writes that under his legislation, “every family in America would receive comprehensive coverage, and middle-class families would save thousands of dollars a year by eliminating their private insurance costs as we move to a publicly funded program.” While “there will be huge opposition to this legislation from the powerful special interests that profit from the current wasteful system,” he adds, “they are on the wrong side of history.”

The Los Angeles Times (9/13, Decker) reports that Sanders “cast his measure as a moral and economic issue.” With Democrats “scrambling to support single-payer health insurance,” in recent days, “Democrats as ideologically diverse as liberal Sen. Kamala Harris of California and conservative Sen. Joe Manchin of West Virginia expressed support” for Sanders’ effort. Most of the potential 2020 Democratic presidential candidates “have now endorsed the single-payer idea, including Sanders, Harris, Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey, Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand and Minnesota Sen. Al Franken.” According to the Times, the support reflects “a significant shift within the Democratic party, driven by multiple developments: a belief that the window has closed on Republican efforts to repeal Obamacare; a surge in support for government-run insurance among younger, more activist Democrats; and looming 2018 and 2020 contests that demand clarity on what Democrats support – not just whom they oppose.”

The Washington Post (9/13, Weigel) says Sanders’ legislation has “a record level of support for an idea that had been relegated to the fringes during the last Democratic presidency,” but it “has no chance of passage in a Republican-run Congress.” Bloomberg News (9/13, John) puts the number of Democratic senators backing Sanders plan at 16, saying it represents “a shift within the party on what was once viewed as a politically treacherous issue that attracted little support from lawmakers.” In 2013, Sanders “attracted no co-sponsors.” However, Bloomberg also says that the “new support from Democrats for Sanders’s measure...doesn’t mean it stands a chance of passage.” The New York Times (9/13, Park, Andrews) says that while the bill “has no chance of becoming law anytime soon,” it “could serve as a political manifesto and a possible campaign platform for progressive candidates.” The Times adds that about 60 percent of house Democrats “have endorsed a ‘Medicare for all’ bill” in that chamber.

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Wednesday that President Trump thinks Sanders’ plan is a “horrible idea,” Politico (9/13, Nelson) reports. Sanders said, “I think that the president as well as the majority of the country knows that the single payer system that the Democrats are proposing is a horrible idea. ... I can’t think of anything worse than having the government be more involved in your health care instead of less involved.”

The Washington Times (9/13, Howell) says the plan would “cost trillions, forcing Mr. Sanders to explain how he plans to pay for it.” While Sanders “offered few details Wednesday,” he “pledged that higher taxes would be offset by zeroing out what Americans pay private insurers today.” The Wall Street Journal (9/13, Hackman) reports that Sanders’ bill includes no means to pay for the plan. A Sanders spokesman said a cost estimate was not available but Sanders plans to release a white paper on ways to pay for it.

In an analysis, the New York Times (9/13, Pear) says the introduction of Sanders’ plan alongside Wednesday’s introduction of a plan from Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy to repeal the ACA “signaled a resumption of the health care wars on Capitol Hill, as lawmakers tried — for opposite reasons — to move beyond President Barack Obama’s health care law, either building on it or tearing it down.” The Wall Street Journal (9/13) argues in an editorial that the Republican failure to repeal and replace the ACA assures the law’s continuing decline which creates an opportunity for Democrats to advocate for greater government control, such as the Sanders plan.

A USA Today (9/13, Gaudiano) analysis focuses on the details of Sanders’ plan, including what would be covered, how much it would cost consumers, how much it would cost taxpayers, whether it has public support, and whether it can pass Congress, which USA Today says it cannot.

Milbank: Support For Socialized Medicine Could Hurt Democrats. Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (9/13, Milbank) column cites Sanders’ introduction of his plan with 16 co-sponsors as evidence that “Democrats have become socialists.” Milbank argues that “this development is a bad thing for Democrats” as “the single-payer issue highlights Democratic divisions and united Republicans.” While the “socialized-medicine bill is popular with the Democratic base” it is “a liability for Democratic candidates in the swing districts and Republican states that Democrats need to win to retake the House and Senate.”

Murphy Says His Plan Would Allow Americans To Buy Into Medicare. Sen. Chris Murphy said

on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/13), "I've always said if I were to design the American healthcare system from scratch I would design single-payer system. It makes absolutely no sense logically to tie peoples' health insurance to their employer. I think we are having a really important conversation how we get there." Murphy said that he would "take a hard look" at Sanders' legislation and added that he has "introduced a different concept which is to allow every American to be able to buy into Medicare and essentially allow consumers to decide whether they want private insurance or Medicare. My belief is that given that choice, consumers would choose Medicare and it would allow for a more natural transition into a single-payer system."

Mulvaney Says Trump Wants To Depoliticize The Debt Ceiling.

OMB Director Mulvaney said on CNN's The Lead (9/13) that the President is "asking me to figure out a way to dial down the temperature, depoliticize the debt ceiling, find a way to deal with it in a business-like fashion and not allow it to be this leverage point that one party or the other can sort of bring things to a precipice in the markets and so forth. We are going to continue to look at that. Looks now like we'll have at least until February to have to raise the debt ceiling again or deal with the debt ceiling. So, here's plenty of time to research that issue, lay out options for the President and see which way he wants to go."

House Votes To Block EPA Methane Rule For Oil, Gas Industry.

The Hill (9/13, Henry) reports that on Wednesday, the House voted 218-195 to block implementation of an EPA rule meant to limit emissions from new oil and gas drilling sites. At the debate on the rule last week, Rep. Markwayne Mullin (R-Okla.) said it was a "job-killing regulation estimated to cost the U.S. economy $530 million annually." Meanwhile, Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz.) said "The free market has provided an incentive to reduce methane release on its own. There is no further need for EPA to impose costly bureaucratic hurdles on these sensitive industries."

The Oklahoman (9/14, Wingerter) reports the US House of Representatives on Wednesday "approved two amendments introduced by U.S. Rep. Markwayne Mullin that would roll back environmental procedures put in place by former President Barack Obama." In a 218-195 vote, the House voted "in favor of an amendment that prohibits funds from being used to enforce the Environmental Protection Agency's methane rule." The House "also voted 225-186 in favor of an amendment that prohibits funds from being used to implement rules based on the social cost of carbon, a metric that calculates the economic effects of carbon pollution."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Women's Voice Remains Faint In Politics." The New York Times (9/13, Board) says in an editorial that while women "have led New York's City Council — two of them in a row as speaker — for almost 12 years," they "are sliding backward," and members of the Council's women's caucus warned "in a report last month that 'we face a systemic crisis of representation.'"

Follow Kenya's Lead On Plastic Bags. In an editorial, the New York Times (9/14) urges the rest of the world, and New York state in particular, to follow Kenya and more than 40 other countries that "have taxed, limited or banned plastic bags." The Times notes that such bags are "clogging storm drains, stuffing landfills, killing animals that eat them and contributing to the eight million metric tons of plastic" annually added to the oceans.

Washington Post.

"The Senate Finally Does What It Failed To Do For A Decade And A Half." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/13) hails the Senate vote on a "proposal to withdraw congressional authorization for U.S. military operations abroad," arguing "the Senate did what it had previously failed to do for the past decade and a half: vote on authorizing the use of force against US enemies." While the legislation "failed — as it should have...the debate was an important first step toward the legislative branch's taking responsibility for the nation's wars." The Post concludes that "now that the vote on Mr. Paul's amendment has opened the door for a bipartisan effort to reform the authorization, there is no excuse not to walk through it."

"The Justice Department Goes Out Of Its Way To Side Against A Gay Couple." The Washington Post (9/13) editorializes that the Supreme Court "will soon hear arguments over the conduct of" a Colorado baker, who claims he has "the right to turn away a gay couple seeking a custom wedding cake if he disapproves of their upcoming marriage." The Justice Department "has made a point of weighing in on the side of Jack Phillips, the ‘cake artist’ in question. The Post adds that the Justice Department’s “legal brief has – rightly – faced criticism from civil rights groups appalled by the government’s argument that Mr. Phillips’s religious beliefs grant him a constitutional right to discriminate against gay customers, despite a Colorado public-accommodations law prohibiting unequal treatment on the basis of sexual orientation.” The Post calls the brief “a dispiriting signal of Attorney General Jeff Sessions’s priorities,” and notes that the department “has been quiet on any number of other significant cases before the Supreme Court this term.”

“Should Assaulting A Metrobus Driver Be A Felony?” The Washington Post (9/13) editorializes that “just days after a woman walked out of a D.C. courtroom after being charged with dousing a Metrobus driver with a cup of urine, another driver was spat on by a passenger,” and it notes that “the incidents are among a rising number of assaults on Metrobus operators that have raised questions about whether enough is being done to combat the problem.” According to the Post, “the issue demands attention because an assault on a bus driver puts not only the victim at risk but also everyone else on the bus.” The Post wonders whether stiffer punishment for such incidents might be an effective deterrent.

Wall Street Journal.

“Escaping The Tax-Reform Budget Trap.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/13) writes that Congress should abandon budget neutrality rules – or at least extend the budget window – in order to pass tax reform. The Journal argues that the rules mandating revenue neutrality serve to defeat good policy and that good tax reform legislation would help spur the economic expansion necessary to pay for lost government revenue.

“Bernie’s Socialism Goes Mainstream.” The Wall Street Journal (9/13) argues in an editorial that the Republican failure to repeal and replace the ACA assures the law’s continuing decline which creates an opportunity for Democrats to advocate for greater government control, such as the “Medicare for all Plan” offered Wednesday by Sen. Bernie Sanders.

“Americans Get Richer.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/13) writes that a new Census report offers the encouraging news that, last year, real media household income rose 3.2 percent – lifting 2.5 million Americans out of poverty across income groups and especially benefiting minorities, with 2015-2016 median income for blacks and Hispanics climbing 5.7 percent and 4.3 percent respectively. The Journal argues that the data offers a rebuke to liberals’ touting of welfare programs, and adds that in order for incomes to continue rising, Congress should pass tax reform to encourage greater business investment and productivity.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Olympics will be in Paris in 2024, L.A. in 2028, which is very exciting. President Kid Rock himself will be here for the opening ceremonies."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The UN Security Council this week approved a new round of sanctions against North Korea, and they're severe. They're taking Kim Jong-Un's iPad away for a week."

Jimmy Kimmel: "But in response to the sanctions, North Korea's threatened to cause the United States 'the greatest pain and suffering it has gone through in its entire history.' I hate to break it to you, we already kind of did that to ourselves back in November."

James Corden: "This morning, Donald Trump tweeted urging Congress to pass his tax reform plan. Here's what he wrote. He wrote, 'With Irma and Harvey devastation, tax cuts and tax reform is needed more than ever before. Go, Congress, go!' They are senators, not Forrest Gump. In another tweet, Trump added, 'Move fast, Congress.' Now, how can you tell Congress to move fast when the Senate majority leader is literally a tortoise?"

Trevor Noah: "I think Hope Hicks will be perfect for this job because who better to communicate a message of nothing than a person who knows nothing herself? A match made in heaven. I love it."

Trevor Noah: "Myanmar is the kind of country – it's not like America – it's the kind of country where the President does not control the military. So [Burmese leader Aung San] Suu Kyi, some people would say, there's nothing she can do about this. But a leader with this kind of moral standing, I think New York Subway rules should apply: If you see something, say something."

Jimmy Fallon: "In her book, Hillary said that she took a nap as the results were coming in on election night. And while she did that, Bill gathered a month's worth of clothes and got the hell out of there. 'This is going to be rough.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that Ted Cruz is launching an investigation to figure out who was responsible for liking a porn video from his Twitter account. He promised to get to the bottom of it, even if it means spending every night in his office on his computer alone."

Seth Meyers: "White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said today that 'President Trump has done more for bipartisanship in the past eight days than President Obama did in eight years.' Catch more of Sarah's comedy in her new Netflix special, 'Chucklebee.'"

Seth Meyers: "Former White House Press Secretary Sean Spicer was named a 'visiting fellow' at Harvard University today, which is pretty much what he was at the White House."

Conan O'Brien: "You know, it's not a good sign for your presidency when the best things that happen to you is two hurricanes."

Conan O'Brien: "A few days after being accused of liking a porn tweet on Twitter, Sen. Ted Cruz dismissed the claim, saying the left is obsessed with sex. Cruz then said, 'If they want to call me, I can recommend some great websites.'"

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Swims With The Sharks At Wonders Of Wildlife.

The Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (9/20, Zhu) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "went scuba diving with sharks Wednesday at Wonders of Wildlife." Zinke also "fielded questions from more than 40 students seated in front of the tank." Zinke encouraged the group of fifth-grade students "to continue learning about and practicing conservation." He said, "I've been to 60 or 70 countries and nobody has the treasures that we have here in the United States. We should be proud."

Additional coverage was provided by the Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (9/20, Johnson, Schmitt), the Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (9/20), the Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (9/20), KTTS-AM Springfield, MO (9/21, Snider), and KOLR-TV Springfield, MO (9/20, Lingo).

Western Lawmakers: Wildfire Funding Fix Needs To Be Top Priority.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (9/20) reports that a bipartisan group of Western lawmakers have introduced "an updated version of their bipartisan wildfire funding solution that would protect desperately needed funding for fire prevention and treat wildfires as the natural disasters they are." The Wildfire Disaster Funding Act of 2017 would "end the destructive cycle of borrowing from fire prevention accounts to put out fires and stop the erosion of the Forest Service's budget by reforming the way the federal government funds wildfires." The legislation "would fund wildfires as natural disasters and protect the agencies' fire prevention budgets by putting a freeze on the rising budget costs of the 10-year average." It would also "end 'fire borrowing' by allowing the agencies to fund any fire suppression spending needed above the frozen average through disaster funding just like other agencies can access disaster funding for tornadoes, hurricanes and floods."

Additional coverage was provided by the Idaho Falls \(ID\) Post Register (9/20, Clark) and KMGH-TV Denver (9/20, Miller).

Lawmaker Laments Forest Management In Wake Of Brian Head Fire. The Deseret \(UT\) News (9/20, O'Donoghue) reports that "environmental groups launched legal assaults decades ago to protect forests from timber harvests but instead transformed them into tinderboxes, a group of critics charged Wednesday." In a video that will be presented to U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Purdue, Rep. Mike Noel and "others blasted failed management practices of federal agencies held hostage to lawsuits and protests by environmental groups." The video, which was produced under the direction of Noel, "debuted before the Legislature's Natural Resources, Agriculture and Environment Interim Committee, featuring retired foresters."

The American West Is Burning. In a Washington Post (9/20) op-ed, Sen. Steve Daines writes that environmental lawsuits and excessive regulations "have become barriers to responsible forest management" in the western United States, costing states millions of acres of land lost to forest fires that could have been better contained. Daines argues that forest management reforms should be passed, certain environmental rules should be cut, and the Forest Service budget should be maintained.

Democrat Raises Concerns Over Accuracy Of Zinke's Report.

Politico Morning Energy (9/20, Adragna) reports that a BLM official said during an Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing Tuesday that "the agency did not fact check Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's report on national monuments before it went to the White House for review." Sen. Martin Heinrich "originally raised questions about 'more than a few simple factual errors included' in Zinke's analysis." John Ruhs, BLM's acting deputy director of operations, "then said his agency was 'not part of the writing of the reports' but 'did answer questions and provide data as necessary.'"

Memo: Consider Civil Rights Home For National Monument.

The AP (9/20, Pettus) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke suggested in a leaked memo to President Trump that "Mississippi civil rights sites, including the home of slain leader Medgar Evers, should be considered for national monument designation." In February, the National Park Service designated the Evers home a national historic landmark. According to the article, "if the modest ranch-style home becomes a national monument, the federal government will take it over from Tougaloo College, bringing more money for preservation."

Frustrated Tribal Leaders Wonder If Bears Ears Is A National Monument In Name Only.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/20, Maffly) reports that "nine months after President Barack Obama enshrined the 1.3 million acres encircling Utah's Bears Ears Buttes as a protected landscape, federal agencies have done little to manage the lands as outlined in the monument proclamation." The Bureau of Land Management and Manti-La Sal National Forest have "moved to protect high-visibility archaeological sites, but planning efforts remain stuck in limbo while uncertainty surrounding the monument's future persists." The article says that "under pressure from local and state officials, the BLM has suspended all management planning, drawing the ire of tribal governments that sought the monument designation under the Antiquities Act."

VA, Interior Detail Workforce Reductions And Consolidations Under Gov't Reorganization.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (9/20, Ogrysko) reports that "lawmakers interested in moving some federal entities out of the Washington, D.C. area may already get their wish — without much heated public debate." The departments of Veterans Affairs and Interior are "already moving some federal employees with customer-facing jobs out of D.C. and to consolidated offices in the field." The article says that "many of the Interior Department's proposed actions for reorganization will require congressional approval, but the agency also sees employee reassignments and relocations as a key aspect of its plan." Interior has "asked the Office of Personnel Management and OMB for a 'very broad' VERA/VSIP authority in effort to shrink the size of its workforce and move more people from their positions in Washington out to field offices."

Agencies Steer Clear Of RIFs In Reorg Plans.

Federal Computer Week (9/20, Gunter) reports that "agencies say they can meet White House government reorganization principles and fall in line with their fiscal year 2018 budgets by reducing the workforce through attrition and reclassifying employees, rather than layoffs." Raymond Limon, deputy chief human capital officer at the Interior Department, "said his agency isn't going into the reorganization with the mindset of cutting personnel, 'but we're always going to work to our budget, no doubt about it.'" He said, "Numerically, we don't have necessarily have a target, but it's kind of that expectation that if work can be performed in the field, we should do it."

Op-ed: The Antiquities Act Is An Antiquity Itself.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/20, Lofthouse), Jordan Lofthouse, a Ph.D. fellow at Strata, argues that the Antiquities Act and national monuments, "often serve as political tools for presidents to accomplish their selfish goals, and not as a mechanism to protect and conserve the land." According to Lofthouse, the Trump Administration's "national monument review and the decisions that will come from it are excellent opportunities to evaluate how much power the president has under the Antiquities Act and analyze when and why he uses that power." Lofthouse suggests that "it may be time to retire the Antiquities Act and allow Congress to fulfill its constitutional duty of managing federal lands."

Jay Evensen: Why A Trump 'Bears Ears' Decision Won't Be The Last Word.

In his column for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/20, Evensen), Jay Evensen writes that the problem with the Antiquities Act is that it "gives one politician, the president, unfettered power." Evensen points out that "whether it's Obama declaring 1.35 million acres or Trump declaring something much less, it is still one man making a declaration." Evensen suggests amending the Antiquities Act "to require Congress to ratify or alter a president's action after a period of time." He believes that "only a compromise, passed by the people's representatives through a deliberative process, can put these land issues to rest for good."

Monuments In Danger.

The Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (9/20) editorializes that "news that the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in Southern Oregon is one of four being targeted for reduction by the Trump administration is bad news not just for Oregonians, but for Americans beyond the state's borders." The paper claims that "by proposing major reductions in national monuments across the country," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "prioritizing the few over the many." The editorial asserts that "national monument status is intended to protect and preserve special places that have value for all Americans." But "removing existing protections for these lands for the financial profit of the few, such as miners and logging companies, is shortsighted."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

House Panel To Take Up Lumbee Recognition.

The St. Pauls \(NC\) Review (9/20) reports that "the House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Indian, Insular, and Alaska Native Affairs has scheduled a Tuesday hearing on Lumbee Recognition Act." The legislation, sponsored by Rep. Robert Pittenger, "would grant the Lumbee Tribe full federal recognition." Pittenger said, "This is the next step in bringing Lumbee recognition up for a vote. The Lumbee Tribe has sought full federal recognition since 1888. We are working closely with the Lumbee Tribe and other leaders to ensure a strong showing next Tuesday."

Also reporting are Robesonian \(NC\) (9/20, Shiles) and the Cherokee \(NC\) One Feather (9/20, SCOTT MCKIE B.P.).

Letter From Indian Gaming Regulators Clouds Future Of East Windsor Casino.

The Hartford \(CT\) Courant (9/19, Gosselin) reports that Bureau of Indian Affairs regulators have "thrown a potential roadblock in front of opening the state's first casino off tribal lands, and questions are being raised about just how quickly expansion might get underway." According to the article, "the state law enacted this year that allows the tribal operators of Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun to jointly open a satellite casino in East Windsor required federal approvals that the revenue-sharing agreements with the state wouldn't be affected by the new casino agreement." Previously, the Mohegan and Mashantucket Pequot tribes had "produced letters of non-binding guidance from the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs throughout a series of legislative hearings on the East Windsor casino." The bureau "indicated it didn't anticipate problems, but when the BIA's letter was issued Friday, it didn't explicitly approve or disapprove."

Additional coverage was provided by the New London \(CT\) Day (9/20, Hallenbeck).

FBI, BIA Investigating Alleged Lame Deer Assault.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (9/20) reports that "the FBI and Bureau of Indian Affairs responded Sunday morning to a report of a Lame Deer man who had been assaulted and was unresponsive, according to a press release issued Wednesday by FBI spokesman Travis Burrows."

Climate Change Ruling Could Affect Other Fossil Fuel Projects.

Bloomberg BNA (9/21) reports that energy experts says the decision by an appeals court ordering the federal government to "rethink the climate change impacts of two giant coal mines" establishes "an argument that could be tested nationwide in other courts to challenge any fossil fuel-related project that might have climate change effects." Although the order applied to a pair of Wyoming coal mines, experts say natural gas pipelines, oil sand pipelines, coal railroads, and coal export terminals could all face renewed scrutiny in the future.

Settlement In The Works To End Red River Land Dispute.

The Wichita Falls \(TX\) Times Record News (9/20, Ingle) reports that "after years of back and forth over who owns what land in a 116-mile stretch of the Red River, it appears a settlement is in the works to end the land dispute roughly a week before a trial was to begin." The article points to an entry in the Public Access to Court Electronic Records, or PACER, system on Wednesday, which notified that "the bench trial of Aderholt et al v. Bureau of Land Management et al has been canceled pending a settlement between the plaintiffs and the defendants."

SunZia Transmission Project Moves To Pre-construction Phase.

The San Pedro Valley \(AZ\) News-Sun (9/20, Neff) reports that SouthWestern Power Group, which is "planning to build two high voltage transmission lines across southeast Arizona that will end near the Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station," has begun "securing right-of-way leases in Cochise, Graham, and Greenlee counties." When complete, the "SunZia Southwest Transmission Project will stretch more than 515 miles, enabling New Mexico wind energy to become electricity in California." The U.S. Bureau of Land Management "recently signed agreements allowing SunZia to be built across 50 miles of federal lands in Arizona and 134 miles in New Mexico."

Bureau Of Land Management To Build Parking For Sutey Ranch.

The Aspen Public Radio \(CO\) (9/20, Stewart-Severy) reports that "hikers and hunters will soon be able to access public land acquired in a controversial land exchange earlier this year." The Bureau of Land Management is "scheduled to start construction this week of a small parking area at the entrance to Sutey Ranch outside of Carbondale." Sutey Ranch was "part of a land exchange with billionaire Leslie Wexner."

Conservation Group Opposes Development In Red Desert.

Wyoming Public Radio (9/20, McKim) reports that the Wilderness Society has "designated the northern Red Desert as one of 15 wildland areas most at-risk of energy development on public lands." The Red Desert is "home to several hundred wildlife species and numerous wilderness study areas, and up till now, has avoided significant energy development." However, the Bureau of Land Management is "reconsidering its management plan, which could result in renewed oil and gas drilling." The Wilderness Society is "hoping to prevent that by emphasizing the area's ecological, economic and cultural importance."

Long Island Advocates Urge Congress To Spare Wild Horses.

The Long Island \(NY\) Press (9/20, Bolger) reports that CANA Foundation, a nonprofit horse rescue group, is "calling on Congressional lawmakers to drop a controversial proposal that would authorize euthanizing thousands of mustangs that were rounded up on federal land in the West." The group "condemned the proposal as inhumane." Rep. Tom Suozzi, speaking at "a news conference Tuesday outside CANA's stable of 12 rescued horses before riding off on one," said "he is exploring how to block the proposal in Congress, where the Republican majority has advanced the measure."

Unadopted Devil's Garden Wild Horses To Return To Territory.

The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (9/20) reports that "one year ago the Modoc National Forest conducted the first wild horse gather in more than 10 years from the Devil's Garden Plateau Wild Horse Territory." According to the article, "two hundred and twenty one horses were sent to the BLM Litchfield holding facility from tribal and private lands near the territory." The Modoc Mustang Training Program "developed by volunteers, partners and employees in the spring of 2017 has led to 41 adoptions with 19 additional horses still in training." The article says that "horses not yet adopted or otherwise placed for training are scheduled to be returned to the territory after the agreed-upon holding period ends Sept. 25."

BLM Reopens Helena's North Hills To Shooting.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (9/20) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "reopening Helena's North Hills to shooting as fire danger decreases." The BLM had "temporarily closed its public lands in the North Hills to recreational shooting in July due to hot weather conditions and a shooting-related fire that started in the area over the July Fourth holiday." The bureau "lifted the order at 12:01 a.m. on Sept. 19."

Let's Balance Wilderness And Recreation.

In an op-ed for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (9/20, Combs), Jesse Combs, president of Advocates for Multi-Use of Public Lands (AMPL), writes that that AMPL was formed, in part, "in response to the Wyoming County Commissioners Association's decision to develop the Wyoming Public Lands Initiative, which seeks to advance federal legislation that will remove some of Wyoming's wilderness study areas from limbo by designating them as wilderness or returning them to regular management by the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management." Combs hopes the Wyoming Public Lands Initiative "can offer our communities an opportunity for input and local control over the fate of recreation on public lands in our area." He sees the Wyoming Public Lands Initiative as "an opportunity for all the stakeholders and community members engaged to leave a legacy of stewardship and an enduring invitation for future generations to connect to the natural wonders that are all around us."

Delta Tunnels Project Imperiled After Westlands Rejection.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/21, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that "shellshocked by an influential farm irrigation district's refusal to help pay for the Delta tunnels, advocates of the $17.1-billion project were scrambling Wednesday to salvage it or conjure up a Plan B." According to the article, "three possible options were floated by California water policymakers for reviving the proposal." However, "all of them face substantial hurdles of their own."

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/20) editorializes that "without some version of the California WaterFix, the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta, a rich and vastly re-engineered resource, will continue to decline and diminishing fisheries will dwindle further." It urges California Gov. Jerry Brown to "look for alternatives."

Interior Official Says Trump Administration Has The 'Guts' To Allow Oil Exploration In ANWR.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (9/20, Harball) reports that during a speech in Anchorage yesterday, Vincent DeVito, the Interior Department's Counselor for Energy Policy "said kick-starting oil development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, or ANWR, is a priority for the Trump administration." DeVito told a conference for ocean researchers in Anchorage, "The untapped potential of ANWR is significant. But it is the Trump administration that had the guts to step up to the plate and facilitate production." DeVito "also talked about increasing oil development in a different swath of federal land in the Arctic — the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, or NPR-A."

Sonoyta Mud Turtle In Danger Of Extinction.

KVOA-TV Tucson, AZ (9/19, Kinney) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "determined the Sonoyta mud turtle as an endangered species." Steve Spangle, the Service's Arizona Field Supervisor, said, "The Sonoyta mud turtle is clearly in danger of extinction. Protecting it under the Endangered Species Act will marshal increased attention and the resources needed by our U.S. and Mexican conservation partners to improve and expand its dwindling habitat and populations." The listing is set to go into effect October 20, 2017.

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Star (9/20, Windes) and Arizona Public Media (9/20, Paniagua).

Mexico Quakes Rattle Nevada's Endangered Devils Hole Pupfish.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/20, Brean) reports that "two deadly earthquakes in Mexico this month also left their mark on a water-filled cavern in Nevada that is home to one of world's most endangered fish." According to the article, "shockwaves from the quakes traveled more than 1,500 miles to churn the water inside the only known habitat of the Devils Hole pupfish." Kevin Wilson, a Death Valley aquatic ecologist for the National Park Service, said that "the pupfish seem to be reacting to the earthquakes the way they have in the past: with an increase in mating and spawning behavior."

Will There Be Lights?

The Kaua'i \(HI\) Garden Island News (9/20, Else) reports that "stadium lights could once again come to life for a few night football games on Kauai this season, if the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service signs off." On Monday, Kauai County Mayor Bernard Carvalho Jr. "signed a memorandum of understanding between the County of Kauai and USFWS regarding the reinstatement of night football games." However, no names from the FWS "have landed on the dotted lines." FWS spokeswoman Holly Richards said, "The service continues to work with the county to develop a MOU that meets the conservation needs of seabirds while recognizing the importance of football to local communities." Richards cited "due process" for the agency's lack of signatures.

Environmentalists, Ranchers Trade Barbs In Killing Of Mexican Gray Wolf.

Cronkite News (9/20, Windes) reports that "environmentalists and livestock owners are pointing fingers after government agents killed an endangered Mexican gray wolf last month for preying on cattle, the first wolf killed for depredation in 10 years." According to the article, "a Fish and Wildlife Service memo justifying the 'lethal control' of the wolf found one calf had been 'killed by wolves, one was probably killed by wolves, and a third (cow) died of natural causes' on Aug. 2." The article says that "ranchers welcomed the action, saying Fish and Wildlife 'was finally making a good decision.'" However, "environmentalists say ranchers are at least partly to blame for failing to remove the carcass of the cow that died of natural causes, attracting wolves from the 'Diamond pack' that would otherwise have kept their distance."

Hydrological Models Scrutinized In Bottling-plant Hearing.

The Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (9/20, Reilly) reports that "the Montana Artesian Water Company's water-use permit hearing turned technical in its second day." Lawyers "from both sides spent Wednesday cross-examining scientists from Montana's Water Rights Bureau, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and elsewhere on the hydrology of the region near Creston where Flathead resident Lew Weaver's firm seeks to withdraw groundwater for bottling." According to the article, "the location and spacing of test wells, the underground rock layers' ability to hold and carry water, connections between aquifer and surface, and other hydrological details drew close scrutiny at the hearing in Kalispell."

Tusk-Smuggling Case Ends In Prison For Canadian Ex-Mountie: U.S. Judge.

The Reuters (9/20, Stempel) reports that "a retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer was sentenced on Wednesday by a U.S. judge to five years and two months in prison, after pleading guilty to 10 money laundering charges related to a scheme to smuggle Arctic narwhal tusks." Gregory Logan "had been accused by U.S. prosecutors of smuggling more than 250 tusks from 2000 to 2010 into the United States from Canada, in a scheme to sell tusks to collectors and send proceeds back to Canada." Logan, "who retired as a Canadian mountie in 2003, had been a target of a narwhal tusk-smuggling probe, dubbed 'Operation Longtooth,' by a Canadian government agency now known as Environment and Climate Change Canada."

Also reporting are the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (9/20, Harrison) and BBC News \(UK\) (9/20).

Washington Man Sentenced For Trafficking Whale Tusks.

The AP (9/20) reports that "a Brinnon, Washington man was sentenced to six months in prison and fined $25,000 for trafficking ivory from protected species." U.S. Attorney Annette Hayes "says David L. Boone took part in an operation between 2006 and 2008 that smuggled narwhal tusks from Canada into the U.S." Boone "pleaded guilty to money laundering and was sentenced Wednesday in federal court in Maine to more than five years in prison."

The Daily Caller (9/20, Phippen) reports that "the latest 'doodle-like sketch' design for a massive tapestry in the proposed Eisenhower Memorial is one step closer to becoming a reality." The U.S. Commission of Fine Arts "hung a small sample of the massive tapestry that will be the focal point of the four-acre memorial park Wednesday, providing a preview of the final product."

Whitney Lofts Project In Downtown Syracuse Needs Feds' OK To Uncover Windows.

The Syracuse \(NY\) Post-Standard (9/20, Moriarty) reports that Sen. Charles Schumer on Wednesday urged the National Park Service "to quickly approve a development group's plans to turn the upper floors of two historic downtown Syracuse buildings into apartments." Schumer "said the Park Service's approval is needed for the $4.2 million project to receive federal historic preservation tax credits, worth up to 20 percent of the cost of the renovations."

Sequoia National Park Wants To Raise Annual Fee.

The Visalia \(CA\) Times-Delta (9/20, Cederlof) reports that Sequoia and Kings Canyon national parks have "proposed an increase of the park-specific annual pass from $50 to $60." According to the article, "the $10 increase would put the park in line with the service-wide pricing guidelines for park-specific annual passes." The article says that "if adopted, the new price would go into effect on Jan. 1."

The St. Paul \(MN\) Pioneer Press (9/20, Magan) reports that "the marching band from Henry Sibley High School in Mendota Heights has been picked to represent Minnesota in next year's Independence Day parade in Washington, D.C." The invitation from the National Independence Day Committee, the Interior Department, and the National Park Service was announced Wednesday.

National Park Service Working To Restore Historic Homes Near Central High.

KTHV-TV Little Rock, AR (9/20, Perkins) reports that "as Little Rock prepares to celebrate 60 years of an integrated Central High School, the National Park Service is working to make homes in front of the school apart of its history." The NPS is "attempting to restore the homes, while also keeping history alive."

Online 'Walk 93' Registration Deadline Is Friday.

The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (9/20, Huba) reports that "the public has until Friday to register for the third annual 'Walk 93,' a noncompetitive walk in honor of the 40 passengers and crew who died on United Flight 93." The article says that "proceeds from the immersive walk, sponsored by the nonprofit Friends of Flight 93 National Memorial, will support the design and construction of the Temporary Memorial Trail in 2018." National Park Service interpretive rangers will lead the walk.

Docks, Marinas Get Repaired After Microburst On Lake Powell.

The AP (9/20) reports that "authorities say repairs are nearly finished to property in the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area that was damaged by last week's microburst along the Arizona-Utah border." According to the article, "a sudden, powerful downward gust of wind swamped or sank dozens of powerboats and jet skis last Thursday on Lake Powell and resulted in damages to the park's docks and marinas." Also, "at the Wahweap Marina, water, power and sewer weren't available and the dock was damaged." National Park Service officials "say most of the pairs and docks have been repaired as of Tuesday and the Wahweap Marina should be reopened soon."

Infant Who Died In Lake Powell Boat Accident Identified.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/19, Mims) reports that "Arizona authorities have identified an infant who died of injuries sustained in a weekend houseboat accident on Lake Powell." The Coconino County Sheriff's Office "said Tuesday that 6-month-old William Garner had passed away Monday, the day after he suffered 'major head trauma' 5:20 p.m. Sunday when the houseboat struck a beach near Navajo Canyon."

All Of Puerto Rico Without Power As Hurricane Maria Makes Landfall.

Hurricane Maria made landfall in Puerto Rico Wednesday causing extensive damage. All three network news broadcasts led with the story Wednesday evening and it garners heavy print coverage this morning. Much of the coverage focuses on the devastation in Puerto Rico, but damage to Dominica and the storm's path towards the Dominican Republic and Turks and Caicos also garner coverage.

NBC Nightly News (9/20, lead story, 3:15, Holt) reported in its lead story that in Puerto Rico "hundreds of homes are damaged or destroyed, streets are flooded, and 100 percent of that US island is without power after Hurricane Maria slammed ashore with 155-mile-an-hour winds." In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (9/20, lead story, 2:25, Mason) reported that Maria made landfall "as a Category 4 and touched off catastrophic flooding. The storm is moving away from Puerto Rico tonight, toward the Dominican Republic, and tomorrow, the Bahamas." CBS (Begnaud) added that "despite the devastation, no deaths or injuries have been reported, so far." Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rossello "is telling people to stay calm, but he's warning that the island is on the verge of losing communication." Rossello "is asking for generators to be shipped from the mainland here to the island to help restore power as a dusk-to-dawn curfew has just gone into effect."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, lead story, 2:55, Oquendo) reported in its lead story that Puerto Rico's emergency management director says "the entire island is destroyed." Many homes on the island were "not built to withstand any hurricane, let alone a Category 4." According to officials, "many areas will be uninhabitable for weeks, maybe even months." Rossello said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/20), "The damage is very extensive. It is nothing short of a major disaster. We have a lot of flooding, a lot of infrastructure damage. Our tell communications system is partially down. Our energy infrastructure is completely down."

The New York Times (9/20) reports that while Rossello said "more than 500 shelters had been opened...he could not vouch for the storm-worthiness of all of those structures." In what the Wall Street Journal (9/20, De Córdoba, De Avila) calls an apparent effort to prevent looting, Rossello announced via tweet that he is imposing a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew from Wednesday to Saturday. Rossello wrote, "I am making a call for calm, understanding and prudence during these difficult days for Puerto Rico."

The Los Angeles Times (9/20, Hennessy-Fiske, Lee) reports that a statement from the White House said "that President Trump is continuing to monitor the situation and that he and First Lady Melania Trump 'send their thoughts and prayers to all those in harm's way.'" White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/20), "FEMA Director Brock Long has been working alongside all the state and local officials really trying to make sure we put as many resources in place as possible. Thanks to technology we have a lot more leeway on the front end of a lot of these storms that are allowing us to preposition resources. The federal government is doing all we can to help people in both, you know, Puerto Rico, the US Virgin Islands and other surrounding islands as these storms are moving in."

The Washington Post (9/20, Schmidt) says recovery efforts "could be hampered by long-standing financial problems that led the territorial government to file for a form of bankruptcy in May." Puerto Rican Rep. Jennifer Gonzalez-Colon expressed a similar concern on CNN's The Lead (9/20), saying, "I spoke last night with Vice President Mike Pence and FEMA Director Brock Long and other members of cabinet regarding how are we going to put Puerto Rico back on track considering the financial situation Puerto Rico got in the recent years. And, thank God, Vice President Pence conveyed the message of the President of the United States and the whole government is going to be helping out the island. As a matter of fact, there are more than 400 rescue teams and federal employees from all over the nation waiting until it is safe to go outside and begin the search and rescue already on the island."

The Washington Post (9/20, Faiola) reports that a "direct hit" by Maria "caused massive damage to homes and buildings, washed out roads, upended water pipelines and left at least seven people dead" in Dominica. According to official estimates, "70 to 80 percent of Dominica's structures sustained storm damage, ranging from ripped-off roofs to near-total destruction." The Post adds that "intact public buildings were being converted into emergency shelters for scores of homeless residents."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 2, 0:55, Muir) reported that Maria's center is currently about 75 miles east of the Dominican Republic. While it's a category two storm, it "may very well strengthen" as it heads to Turks and Caicos. Al Roker said on NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 3, 1:00, Holt) that the Dominican Republic will get "four to six feet of surge, 8 to 16 inches of rain." Turks and Caicos, meanwhile, "may be the next really big devastated area with 125 mph winds, a storm surge of nine to 12 feet and nine to 16 inches."

Japan And South Korea Praise Trump's Korea Remarks, Germany Criticizes Them.

The AP (9/20, Pennington) reports Japan called for "international unity Wednesday in pressuring North Korea to give up its nuclear weapons, even as another key US ally pushed back" against President Trump's threat to "totally destroy" the rogue nation if it attacked. Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "devoted his entire speech" at the General Assembly to North Korea, warning that the "gravity of this threat is unprecedented." Meanwhile, German Chancellor Angela Merkel told German broadcaster Deutsche Welle that she "clearly" disagrees with Trump's threat to destroy North Korea. Instead, "she offered help in negotiating a solution with North Korea, noting that Germany played a role in talks with Iran to limit its nuclear program."

Greg Palkot reported on Fox News Special Report (9/20) that South Korea cast Trump's threat as a "firm and concrete stance for peace and safety." In addition, Fox showed Yoshihide Suga, Japan's chief cabinet secretary, saying, "I highly appreciated the position that all options are on the table."

China, Russia Also Critical Of Trump. Palkot also reported on Fox News Special Report (9/20) that North Korea's other neighbors "were not so pleased." Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Lu Kang was shown saying, "All Security Council resolutions call on all parties to stay committed to peacefully resolving the Korean Peninsula issue through a political and diplomatic approach." Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov was shown stating, "We don't doubt the United States has the capacity to do something very destructive, but I paid attention to another part of [President Trump's] speech when he said he respects sovereignty and equality in international relations."

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 6, 0:20, Muir), meanwhile, reported North Korea's foreign minister, Ri Yong-ho, described Trump's comments as "the sound of a dog barking," and said "North Korea is not scared."

Experts: North Korea Likely To Fire More Missiles After Trump's Speech. The Washington Post (9/20, Fifield) reports that Kim Jong-un's regime "tells the North Korean people every day that the United States wants to destroy them and their country. Now, they will hear it from another source: from the president of the United States himself." Trump's words Tuesday, analysts say,

“feed right into that narrative.” Jung H. Pak, chair of Korea studies at the Brookings Institution, warned that Trump’s “demonizing” of Kim personally “would inflame the situation.” The Post notes that previous personal attacks on Kim “have elicited an outsized response from North Korea.”

WPost Analysis: Lack Of US Ambassador In Seoul A “Glaring Omission.” The Washington Post (9/20, Nakamura) reports that while President Trump and his top aides “say they’re doing everything in their power to pursue a diplomatic and peaceful resolution to the North Korea nuclear threat. But eight months into Trump’s tenure, he has yet to nominate a US ambassador to South Korea, a glaring omission as the White House tries to formulate a coherent policy to confront Pyongyang.” The vacancy, says the Post, has “left President Moon Jae-in’s new government without a prestigious and powerful partner from the Trump administration on the ground in Seoul at a time of escalating anxiety in East Asia – and without someone to help decode the president’s rhetorical bombast.”

Reuters: Russia Supplying North Korea With Fuel. According to Reuters (9/20, Nikolskaya), “At least eight North Korean ships that left Russia with a cargo of fuel this year headed for their homeland despite declaring other destinations, a ploy that US officials say is often used to undermine sanctions.” Reuters says it “has no evidence of wrongdoing by the vessels,” but US officials “say that changing destination mid-voyage is a hallmark of North Korean state tactics to circumvent” international sanctions. Both the Treasury and State Departments “declined to answer questions about Reuters’ findings.”

Fellow Calls For UN To Expel North Korea. Claudia Rosett, a foreign policy fellow with the Independent Women’s Forum, writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/20) that the UN should expel North Korea. While no nation has ever been expelled, Rosett argues that the UN charter does, however, provide for eviction: “A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.”

Los Angeles Officials Prepare For Potential Big Earthquake.

NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 6, 2:00, Holt) reported that a study from the US Geological Survey found that the chance of an earthquake magnitude eight or larger near Los Angeles in the next 30 years “has doubled since 2008” – bolstering the city’s concern for and desire to prepare for the next large earthquake. Experts “say a major quake along the San Andreas in Southern California fault could kill 1,800 people, injure 53,000, destroy 1,500 buildings, and damage 300,000 more,” and a serious quake “could also cripple the city’s water supply and take as long as six months to repair.” City officials have spent $14 billion on seismic upgrades to transportation infrastructure, and Mayor Eric Garcetti has received a new “preparedness plan.”

Sensors Deployed To Measure Effects Of Jose On New England.

The AP (9/20) reports that “federal scientists have installed 17 storm-tide sensors along the coast of southern New England to measure the effects of Tropical Storm Jose.” The U.S. Geological Survey “said Wednesday that the sensors — seven in Connecticut, seven in Massachusetts and three in Rhode Island — were placed in areas likely to receive large waves and storm surge from Jose.” The agency “says data collected can help quantify wave heights, forces, and speeds, under various storm conditions, topographies, ecologies, and land uses.”

Frogs In Minnesota, Across U.S. Dying Of Little-known Disease, Scientists Find.

The St. Paul \(MN\) Pioneer Press (9/20, Myers) reports that “a previously little-known infectious disease has emerged as a major killer of frogs in Minnesota and nine other states, according to a study by the U.S. Geological Survey recently published in the journal Nature.” Researchers “studied 247 frog die-offs in 43 states from 1999 through 2015 and found that severe Perkinsea infections, or SPI, caused 21 major mortality events in 10 states total.”

Sources: Trump “Leaning Against” Re-Certifying Iran Deal.

NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 8, 0:30, Holt) reported, “President Trump says he’s made up his mind about the Iran nuclear deal, but he’s not saying if the US will stay in the agreement.” However, four sources tell NBC News that Trump is “leaning against re-certifying Iran’s compliance with the deal.” On its website, NBC News (9/20) reports such a move would put “the decision of whether the US will withdraw from the accord in the hands of Congress, according to four sources – including one senior administration official.” NBC says that “such a move would come prior to an Oct. 15 deadline and would trigger a 60-day window for lawmakers to determine whether to reimpose sanctions.” Still, “several of the sources caution the president could change his mind over the next three weeks.”

On Wednesday, the New York Times (9/20, Baker, Sengupta) reports President Trump said that he has made a decision on the future of the Iran deal, “but declined to tell reporters what it was.” Speaking to reporters, Trump said, “I have decided,” repeating the phrase “three times.” Pressed by reporters, he added: “I’ll let you know. I’ll let you know.” The Times notes that while Trump has already certified Iran’s compliance twice, he “has made clear that he is reluctant to certify compliance a third time, citing destabilizing activities by Iran that are not directly covered by the agreement.”

The Washington Times (9/20, Boyer) and Politico (9/20, Nelson) also report briefly on Trump’s remarks, while USA Today (9/20, Jackson) says Iranian President Hassan Rouhani, in his remarks to the UN General Assembly on Wednesday, “said Trump is the one threatening to violate the agreement – and that the former New York businessman is making unfounded accusations.” Said Rouhani, “It will be a great pity if this agreement were to be destroyed by ‘rogue’ newcomers to the world of politics: the world will have lost a great opportunity.”

Another USA Today (9/20, Michaels, Dorell) report notes that Rouhani “did not mention Trump by name...but his remarks were clearly directed at the US president,” and the AP (9/20, Peltz, Lederer) too says the remarks were “clearly directed” at Trump. Bloomberg News (9/20, Foroohar, Nasser) says the Iranian leader “rejected any US-led effort to alter the 2015 nuclear agreement,” and the Washington Post (9/20, Morello) reports Rouhani “blasted” Trump for his “ignorant, absurd and hateful” speech before the General Assembly a day earlier.

The AP (9/20, Lee) says the “jabbing” between Trump and Rouhani “set the stage for a contentious meeting of the nuclear accord’s parties” on Wednesday on the sidelines of the General Assembly, including Secretary of State Tillerson and Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif. The AP says that “a year ago, such a get-together would have been considered routine,” but “in the current environment, it is anything but ordinary.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Stokols, Schwartz, Peker) reports Tillerson said late Tuesday that the US would remain a part of the agreement only if it is modified to tighten restrictions on Iran’s nuclear program that loosen after the year 2025 under the deal. Reuters (9/20, Hafezi, Holland) reports that a “source familiar with the US discussions” said the Administration is “also considering ways to leave the agreement intact, sanction Iran for its missile tests and support for extremist groups, and then seek to strengthen the pact.”

The Washington Times (9/20, Persons) reports White House press secretary Sarah Sanders “hinted” Wednesday that Trump “might make changes to the Iran nuclear deal soon.” When asked what type of announcement Trump may be planning, Sanders told Fox News that “plans may change” for the current deal, and that Trump will take “actions” to “fix the mistakes of being part of that deal on the front end.” She did not, however, say when an announcement with his plans could be expected.

“Sources” To Free Beacon: Tillerson, Haley “At Odds” Over Deal. In what the Washington Free Beacon (9/20, Kredo) calls a “sign of the ongoing internal dissent over ending” the agreement, “multiple sources” told the Free Beacon that Tillerson and Ambassador Haley “have been at odds over the deal,” with Haley “privately expressing dismay with Tillerson over his continued efforts to preserve the nuclear agreement.” Tillerson and Haley “held a private powwow Wednesday with international leaders regarding the future of the nuclear deal, a sign of Haley’s vital role” in the issue.

After Wednesday's meeting, the Washington Examiner (9/20, Morrongiello) reports Tillerson told reporters, "We had a very open and candid exchange with all of the parties to the agreement. We clearly have significant issues with the agreement." He also confirmed that Trump has reached a decision on recertifying Iran's compliance with the agreement, but "declined to disclose the details of it."

Paul Wants US To Stay In Agreement. In an interview with Politico (9/20, Kim) Wednesday, Sen. Rand Paul, who opposed the nuclear deal with Iran two years ago, said he wants the US to stay in the agreement because he believes evidence shows that Iran has been complying with its terms. "Most of the complaints about Iran don't have anything to do with the agreement. They complain about ballistic missiles and other things, but that's not part of the agreement," Paul told Politico. "I think while the agreement's not perfect, my main concern has always been compliance. But if they're complying with it, I think we should stay in it."

Panetta Defends Deal, Rice Blasts Trump. Former CIA Director Leon Panetta said on CNN's Situation Room (9/20) the concerns about the Iran nuclear deal are "understandable," but "the fact is we do have an agreement" that has "been effective at preventing Iran from developing a nuclear weapon," and "we have evidence that Iran has abided by that agreement." Panetta said that if Trump withdraws, "he has to think seriously about the fact that at some point down the road he will bear responsibility for Iran getting a nuclear weapon."

The Daily Caller (9/20) reports former national security advisor Susan Rice "didn't mince words" Wednesday when criticizing Trump's speech at the UN. Rice was "especially unhappy" with Trump's insistence that the Iran nuclear deal is a "one-sided deal" and "an embarrassment" to the US. Said Rice, "We could begin a process of dialogue on what comes next after the deal. But we can't do that when hurling threats, when threatening to walk out, when acting like a spoiled child at the dinner table."

EU Official: Iran Deal "Working." The AP (9/20) reports EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini said Wednesday that all parties to the Iran nuclear deal "agree that the accord is being implemented as planned and US complaints about other Iranian behavior should be discussed outside the context of the agreement." Speaking to reporters in New York, Mogherini said the deal "is working and is delivering for its purpose."

Macron: If US Scraps Deal, World Could Face Another North Korea Crisis. USA Today (9/20, Ullmann) reports French President Emmanuel Macron urged President Trump Wednesday "to stick with the Iran nuclear deal" because "what else do we have? We would be put in the North Korea situation." Macron told a group of editors and reporters in New York that without the current agreement, Tehran "would be able to rush ahead with a nuclear weapons program the way North Korean Leader Kim Jong Un is, creating a new international crisis."

Media Analyses: Trump's Criticism Of Iran Deal Poses Problems For North Korea Strategy. An AP (9/20, Pennington) analysis says Trump's threat "to obliterate North Korea left no doubt about his determination to stop the communist country's nuclear weapons buildup," and "his disparagement of the Iran nuclear deal in the same speech offered Pyongyang little hope of a negotiated solution." While Trump said, "It is time for North Korea to realize that the denuclearization is its only acceptable future," the AP says he "offered no path toward making that future a reality."

David Sanger similarly writes in a New York Times (9/20) analysis that the "dynamics" of the two cases "are entirely different, but they are also oddly interdependent. If Mr. Trump makes good on his threat to pull out of the 2015 nuclear agreement with Iran, how will he then convince the North Korean leader, Kim Jong-un, that America will honor the commitment to integrate North Korea into the world community if only it disarms – the demand Mr. Trump made from the podium of the United Nations."

Security Firm: US Aviation, Energy Companies Targeted By Iranian Hackers. USA Today (9/20, Weise) reports that a "suspected Iranian hacking group has been targeting aviation and energy companies in the United States, Saudi Arabia and South Korea since 2013," computer security company FireEye said in a report released Wednesday. The group "seems largely to have engaged in stealth spying to give Iranian military and corporate interests information about possible enemies and competition." However, the researchers also found "signs of links to malicious software called SHAPESHIFT capable of destroying data within a company's network." FireEye cautioned that it had "not directly observed the hackers carry out any destructive operations, but the capability appears to be present."

Media Analyses: Mueller's Latest Steps Indicate Trump Himself Under Scrutiny.

ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 4, 2:10, Muir) reported on "new steps" by special counsel

Robert Mueller “suggesting President Trump’s own actions are now under scrutiny, including his firing of FBI Director James Comey and the meeting with Russian officials in the Oval Office the very next day.” ABC’s Jonathan Karl: “Tonight, the clearest indication yet [that] Mueller is looking at the actions of President Trump himself.” The CBS Evening News (9/20, story 3, 2:20, Mason) reported, “Mueller has been bombarding the White House with requests for documents.”

The AP (9/20, Tucker) reports that Mueller’s office “has requested a large batch of documents from the White House and is expected to interview at least a half dozen current and former aides in the coming weeks.” A person familiar with the investigation said investigators “want information on, among other topics, a June 2016 meeting at Trump Tower that Donald Trump Jr. attended with a Russian lawyer and the administration’s response to it,” as well as “what White House officials including Trump knew about the Justice Department’s investigation” into ex-National Security Adviser Michael Flynn.

The Washington Post (9/20, Leonnig, Helderman) reports, “White House lawyers are now working to turn over internal documents that span 13 categories investigators for the special counsel have identified as critical to their probe.” USA Today (9/20, Jackson, Johnson, Heath) reports that officials speaking under condition of anonymity said that the White House “has been cooperating with Mueller’s requests for the past several weeks, in part to avoid subpoenas for individual testimony. The officials said they were not sure when the White House would finish turning over documents.”

The New York Times (9/20, Schmidt) says that the “document requests provide the most details to date about the breadth of Mr. Mueller’s investigation, and show that several aspects of his inquiry are focused squarely on Mr. Trump’s behavior in the White House.” However, the Los Angeles Times (9/20, Bierman) reports that John Dowd, an attorney for the President, said, “There’s nothing remarkable or unusual about his requests. ... It’s not like something’s about to happen. It’s just a routine inquiry by Bob [Mueller].”

David Gergen said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (9/20), “As soon as I heard there were 13 different categories in which Mueller was asking for information or demanding information from the White House, you immediately thought this probe has widened way beyond what we or understood and it has clearly deepened.” Gergen added, “I think this deepens the sense that they’re doing everything they can to see what evidence there is of obstruction of justice.”

Grassley: Senate Preparing Subpoenas For Two Top FBI Officials. CNN (9/20, Herb, Raju) reports on its website that Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley said Tuesday that the Senate legal counsel “is preparing subpoenas for two senior FBI officials the Justice Department is preventing the committee from interviewing.” Grassley and ranking member Sen. Dianne Feinstein “have repeatedly asked the two senior FBI officials – Carl Ghattas and James Rybicki – to sit down for a transcribed interview to discuss the Comey firing.”

Manafort Offered “Private Briefings” On Campaign To Russian Billionaire. The Washington Post (9/20, Hamburger, Helderman, Leonnig, Entous) reports that “less than two weeks before Donald Trump accepted the Republican presidential nomination,” then-campaign chairman Paul Manafort “offered to provide briefings on the race” to Oleg Deripaska, “a Russian billionaire closely aligned with the Kremlin.” In a July 7, 2016 email, Manafort wrote, “If he needs private briefings we can accommodate.” The emails “are among tens of thousands of documents that have been turned over” to Mueller and to congressional investigators. The Post says that the documents show no evidence “that Deripaska received Manafort’s offer or that any briefings took place.”

Leon Panetta said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/20) that the fact Manafort “would offer a briefing on a political campaign to a Russian billionaire, someone obviously related to an adversary of the United States, raises some serious questions about just how much effort was made to try to get the Russians to participate in this last election campaign.” But on the CBS Evening News (9/20, story 3, 2:20, Mason), Jeff Pegues reported, “Manafort’s attorney did not deny the authenticity of the email but called the message ‘innocuous,’ and said, ‘It’s no secret Mr. Manafort was owed money by past clients,’ implying it was an attempt to collect.”

Ben Domenech of The Federalist (9/20) offers “13 Questions About The Wiretapping Of Paul Manafort,” dealing with why Manafort was wiretapped, when the surveillance took place, and if the wiretap covered Trump Tower. Former CIA case officer Phil Giraldi asks at the Daily Caller (9/20), “Will anyone running for high office in the future want to be confronted by executive power acting secretly through the law enforcement and intelligence services to discredit him or her as well as a large and widening group of family and associates? ... Manafort, who has fully cooperated with the multiple investigations being conducted around Russiagate, is innocent until proven guilty.”

Manafort Used Trump Campaign Email To Contact “Ukrainian Political Operative.” Politico

(9/20, Dawsey) reports that Manafort “used his presidential campaign email account to correspond with a Ukrainian political operative with suspected Russian ties, according to people familiar with the correspondence.” In emails to Konstantin Kilimnik, Manafort sought “repayment for previous work he did in Ukraine” and proposed discussing “potential new opportunities in the country.”

Clapper: “It’s Possible” That Wiretap Picked Up Trump. The Washington Examiner (9/20, Chaitin) reports, “Former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper suggested on Wednesday that ‘it’s possible’ that President Trump’s voice was picked up in a wiretap” as he spoke with Manafort. Clapper said on CNN, “It’s certainly conceivable. ... I wouldn’t want to go there, but I will say it’s possible.”

Facebook Facing Increasing Scrutiny Over Russia’s Attempts At Influence. Bloomberg News (9/20, Litvan) reports that Facebook “is facing growing pressure from Congress over Russia’s use of social media” to influence the 2016 election. In a Wednesday letter to the Federal Election Commission, Sens. Martin Heinrich and Ron Wyden, and Reps. John Conyers (D-MI), Elijah Cummings (D-MD), and John Sarbanes (D-MD) wrote, “We must address the threat posed by foreign citizens, companies, or organizations who aim to interfere with our political process.” Sarbanes is seeking “new rules requiring disclosure for political ads on social media outlets...so they are as transparent as broadcast ads.”

Senate Intelligence Vice Chairman Mark Warner said on CNN’s The Lead (9/20) that “the level of some of the sophistication on the social media side and the level of targeting really leaves me with a lot of questions we are going to want Facebook to answer in public.”

Media Matters: Drudge Report Has Become “Pipeline For Russian Propaganda.” Matt Gertz of Media Matters (9/20) writes about “How Matt Drudge Became The Pipeline For Russian Propaganda,” stating that Drudge “has for years used his site as a web traffic pipeline for Russian propaganda sites, directing his massive audience to nearly 400 stories from RT.com and fellow Russian-government-run English-language news sites SputnikNews.com and TASS.com since the beginning of 2012.” The Daily Caller (9/20) covers the Media Matters piece under the headline “Pro-Clinton Group Tries To Link Drudge Report,” writing, “Despite the...bombastic claims,” the Media Matters study “lacks context about how The Drudge Report operates. ... Drudge typically removes and adds links throughout the day, linking to hundreds of websites on any given day.”

Dershowitz Says It Is Hard To Say If President Can Expect AG’s Loyalty. Alan Dershowitz writes in the Washington Examiner (9/20) that it is hard to say whether a president can expect loyalty from an attorney general, since under the US system, the AG serves both as “an advisor to the chief executive” and as “chief prosecutor.” Dershowitz says “the system should be changed,” but that there is “no perfect cure for the mistake made by our founders in merging the two incompatible goals of the current attorney general: that of political advisor to the president; and that of independent chief prosecutor.”

Trump: Graham-Cassidy “At 47 Or 48” Senate Votes Right Now.

The AP (9/20, Werner) reports that President Trump said Wednesday that “the Republicans’ last-resort ‘Obamacare’ repeal effort remains two or three votes short, forecasting days of furious lobbying ahead with a crucial deadline looming next week.” Trump told reporters that “by his reckoning, ‘we’re at 47 or 48 already, senators, and a lot of others are looking at it very positively.’” Reuters (9/20, Mason) reports that Trump also said, “I thought that when I won, I would go to the Oval Office, sit down at my desk, and there would be a healthcare bill on my desk, to be honest. And it hasn’t worked out that way. And I think a lot of Republicans are embarrassed by it.”

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/20) that “we have to have a program that actually works and we know that that’s not Obamacare. It’s simply not sustainable. It’s collapsing. There’s many markets where they don’t even have providers anymore. We have got to get a system in place that actually works for all Americans.”

The Washington Times (9/20, Howell) reports that a vote will take place next week, according to a spokesman for Senate Majority Leader McConnell. Politico (9/20, Everett) reports, “The bill does not yet have the public support of 50 senators, but GOP insiders are growing more confident it will pass.” Sen. John Thune said on Fox News Special Report (9/20), “We are a handful of votes short of having the 50 that we need. ... I think we’re going to be working very hard over the course of the next few days to try and get to 50 so we can get this across the finish line.” Karl Rove writes in his Wall Street Journal (9/20) column that the bill could reach 50 votes, making GOP repeal promises a reality.

The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Peterson, Radnofsky) reports that Trump urged Republicans to back the measure, tweeting, "I hope Republican Senators will vote for Graham-Cassidy and fulfill their promise to Repeal & Replace ObamaCare. Money direct to States!" He also criticized Sen. Rand Paul, an opponent of the bill, tweeting, "Rand Paul is a friend of mine but he is such a negative force when it comes to fixing healthcare. Graham-Cassidy Bill is GREAT! Ends Ocare!"

Trump also tweeted, "I would not sign Graham-Cassidy if it did not include coverage of pre-existing conditions. It does! A great Bill. Repeal & Replace." However, Axios (9/20, Owens) reports that the bill "does allow states to waive the ACA's ban on charging people with pre-existing conditions higher premiums than healthy people."

On the CBS Evening News (9/20, story 4, 2:05, Mason), Nancy Cordes reported, "Republicans Bill Cassidy and Lindsey Graham sprinted from meeting to meeting today...trying to close the sale on the party's last, best shot at replacing Obamacare." The Graham-Cassidy bill "would keep Obamacare's taxes in place, but turn most of the revenues over to the states to come up with their own healthcare systems." The AP (9/20, Woodward) reports that Graham called the bill he co-authored "a 'historic opportunity' and asserted: 'We're going to vote. Everyone will be held accountable.'" Roll Call (9/20, McIntire) says the measure "would dramatically restructure the individual health insurance market by giving states block grants to fund health insurance coverage," and would "transition traditional Medicaid, which is an entitlement, to a system that gives states a capped amount of funding based on their Medicaid population."

Roll Call (9/20, Williams) reports, "Republican senators face the prospect of retreating from their previous public stances in order to support [the] fast-moving legislation." The Hill (9/20, Carney), the Washington Examiner (9/20, Weaver), and Breitbart (9/20, Moran) briefly report on the announcement of the upcoming vote.

Murkowski Again In Spotlight As Vote Approaches. The Washington Post (9/20, A1, Sullivan) reports that Sen. Lisa Murkowski is again the spotlight as "one of at least four Republicans who remain unsure whether to support" the bill. Murkowski "regularly breaks with her party – yet she is also willing to play ball. 'The problem last time was process and substance,' Murkowski said Tuesday...explaining why she might be willing to support the current measure despite voting against the last one in July. 'Nobody knew what we were really looking to in voting on.'"

Congressional correspondent Phil Mattingly said on CNN's Situation Room (9/20) that GOP leaders are "gathering information and specific asks from specific senators that will change this bill in an effort to try and get them on board. Most notably though they're targeting Lisa Murkowski." Murkowski met Wednesday with Graham and Cassidy "to figure out exactly what this bill would do to Alaska and what Republican leaders and Administration officials can do to make sure the state is not disproportionately affected by this massive change in the US healthcare system."

Johnson: Bill Would Shift Power To States. Sen. Ron Johnson writes in USA Today (9/20), "Obamacare was never designed to be patient-friendly. In fact, one of the key tenets of Obamacare is taking power away from patients and local officials. Obamacare gives this decision-making power to the federal government." Graham-Cassidy "would change that by block-granting Obamacare spending to states, empowering those closest to their communities to provide effective solutions."

Lanhee Chen of the Hoover Institution writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/20) that the bill's federalism is its most appealing component. However, Avik Roy of the Foundation for Research on Equal Opportunity, a former policy adviser to several GOP presidential candidates, writes in the Washington Post (9/20), "Cassidy-Graham, in its current form, would put a heavy Washington hand on the federalism steering wheel. The bill would make it relatively easy for blue states to expand the role of single-payer health care, while making it rather difficult for red states to achieve market-oriented reforms."

Schumer, Pelosi Working To Defeat Measure. The New York Times (9/20, Stolberg) looks at how Senate Minority Leader Schumer and House Minority Leader Pelosi, who "have forged what may be the most surprisingly potent partnership in Mr. Trump's Washington," are now attempting to kill Graham-Cassidy. But both said Trump "was noncommittal."

Christie Opposes Bill. Politico (9/20, Jennings) reports that Gov. Chris Christie said Wednesday, "I oppose Graham-Cassidy because it is too injurious to the people of New Jersey. I'm certainly not going to support a bill that takes nearly $4 billion from people in the state."

BCBS Association, AHIP Announce Opposition. The New York Times (9/20, Pear) reports that "the two major trade groups for insurers," the Blue Cross Blue Shield Association and America's Health Insurance Plans, "came out forcefully" against the bill on Wednesday, "suggesting that its state-by-state block grants could create health care chaos in the short term" and a Balkanized, uncertain insurance market.”

Avalere Health Analysis: 34 States Would Lose Federal Funding. The Washington Post (9/20, Goldstein, Eilperin) reports that an analysis by Avalere Health concludes that Graham-Cassidy “would sharply reduce federal spending on health insurance and cause 34 states to lose such funding. ... States with relatively low medical costs, skimpy Medicaid benefits and no program expansion would win out. Texas would gain more than any state – $35 billion from 2020 through 2026.”

Cassidy Says Kimmel “Does Not Fully Grasp The Bill.” The New York Times (9/20, Rogers) reports, “Hours after Jimmy Kimmel unleashed a monologue attacking” Graham-Cassidy, the two senators “spent Wednesday morning defending the legislation against the late-night host, who in recent months has become an unlikely – and increasingly impassioned – critic.” Kimmel “delivered an earnest monologue on Tuesday evening,” accusing Cassidy “of failing to deliver on several key issues, including lowering premiums, expanding coverage, banning lifetime caps and not discriminating based on pre-existing conditions.” Cassidy told Fox News that “Kimmel did not fully grasp the bill.” Graham said on the same network, “I understand the emotional nature of having a sick child. ... I bet he looked at some liberal talking point, bought it hook, line and sinker, and went after Bill Cassidy without talking to him.” Cassidy said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (9/20), “There will be more people covered...than are under status quo and we protect those with pre-existing conditions.” Graham said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/20), “Our bill requires preexisting illnesses to be covered in the block grant.”

On ABC World News Tonight (9/20, story 5, 2:05, Muir), Mary Bruce reported, “Cassidy promised he would defend protections for people with preexisting conditions. But now, Kimmel says he’s not living up to his word.” Politico (9/20, Diamond) writes, “In the war of words between Jimmy Kimmel and Sen. Bill Cassidy, the late-night host has the better grasp of health policy, health care analysts say.” Experts say “that Kimmel’s assessment was basically accurate because of the flexibility the bill gives states to set up their own health care systems.” NBC Nightly News (9/20, story 7, 2:10, Holt) and Bloomberg News (9/20, Dennis, Tracer) also report on Kimmel’s remarks and Cassidy’s response.

Obama: “50th Or 60th” ACA Repeal Effort Is “Aggravating.” USA Today (9/20, Estepa) reports that former President Obama, addressing the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation on Wednesday, said, “When I see people trying to undo that progress for the 50th or 60th time, with bills that would raise costs or reduce coverage, or rollback protections for older Americans or pre-existing conditions – the cancer survivor, the expecting mom or the child with autism or asthma, for whom coverage would once again be almost unattainable – it is aggravating. And all of this being done without any economic or actuarial or plain common sense rationale.” The Hill (9/20, Carney) reports that Graham replied, “It’s no surprise President Obama opposes sending money and power back to the states and closer to where the patients live. Obamacare was designed with the exact opposite goal in mind – which is to consolidate healthcare power and decision-making in Washington.”

USA Today: Graham-Cassidy “Would Be Poison.” USA Today (9/20) runs an editorial headlined “Last-Ditch Obamacare Repeal Would Be Poison,” writing, “This measure would strip tens of millions of people of their health coverage. It would gut Medicaid,” and would “allow insurers in some states to deny coverage based on a previous medical condition. And it would allow insurers to skip coverage of essential services, including maternity care. That’s all bad enough, but the Graham-Cassidy measure adds a new level of cynicism...with states that vote largely Republican faring far better than Democratic ones.”

Number Of DACA Denials Has Doubled Under Trump.

The Washington Times (9/20, Dinan) reports that numbers released Wednesday show that DHS “has doubled the rate of denials of Dreamers’ amnesty applications,” suggesting that “the administration had been taking a harder line even before President Trump’s announcement this month that he would phase out the DACA program altogether.” From April to June, “32 percent applications for DACA status that were decided...were rejected,” which is “twice the 16 percent rate of the last months of the Obama administration.”

Pelosi: Dreamers’ Parents “Did A Great Thing” For The Country. The Washington Times (9/20, Dinan) reports that in comments that “strike a dissonant note from many analysts, who while saying the Dreamers are sympathetic since they had no say in the decision, say the parents do deserve blame for creating the problem,” House Minority Leader Pelosi said Wednesday that “parents who brought their children to the US in defiance of the law ‘did a great thing,’ giving the country an infusion of successful young people.”

Politico Analysis: Senate GOP Will Not “Fall In Line Behind” Trump’s Tax Plan.

Politico (9/20, Faler) reports that while House leaders and Trump Administration officials have worked for months to ensure “a smooth rollout” of tax reform legislation, Senate Republicans “are making it clear they’re not going to fall in line behind” Trump’s plan. Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch “warned” that the “Big Six” proposal “will only be advisory,” and Senate Republicans “are following that up with plans to seek a $1.5 trillion tax cut, putting them at odds with the House, where Speaker Paul Ryan, another Big Six member, wants permanent changes that don’t add to the deficit.”

WSJournal: Corker-Toomey Deal Creates More Room For Tax Cuts. A Wall Street Journal (9/20) editorial says the budget deal struck between Sens. Bob Corker and Pat Toomey creates additional space for cutting taxes and calls on Republicans to follow their lead and make good on their promise to pass tax reform.

Fed Leaves Rates Unchanged, Says It Will Reduce Its Bond Holdings.

The Federal Reserve on Wednesday said the US economy is “finally sturdy enough...to withdraw the extraordinary support it has provided it since the depths of the recession and financial crisis,” USA Today (9/20, Davidson) reports. In a move USA Today said could “nudge consumer borrowing costs higher,” the Fed agreed “to begin gradually shedding much of the roughly $3.5 trillion in bonds it snapped up during and after the downturn to lower long-term interest rates.” Fed Chair Yellen told a news conference, “We’re working down our balance sheet because we think in some sense it’s no longer needed. ... We feel the US economy is performing well.” The Wall Street Journal (9/20, Timiraos) says the Fed has been signaling the move for months. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/20) says it supports the Fed’s decision to reduce its bond holdings, but adds that it should have begun sooner and should be happening faster.

The New York Times (9/20, Appelbaum) says the Fed “left its benchmark interest rate unchanged.” While “most Fed officials predicted in a new round of economic forecasts that the Fed would increase rates later this year,” officials “once again reduced their expectations for future rate hikes.” The median prediction now holds that “the benchmark rate will stabilize at 2.8 percent, down from a median estimate of 3 percent in June.”

Economists Blame “Start-Up Slump” For Slow Economic Expansion. The New York Times (9/20, Casselman) reports that economists say the “tame” economic expansion since the recession is due, in part, to “a start-up slump – a decline in the creation of new businesses – and a growing understanding of what’s behind it.” According to the Census Bureau, “414,000 businesses were formed in 2015.” While that is “a slight increase from the previous year,” it is “well below the 558,000 companies given birth in 2006, the year before the recession set in.” Many economists attribute the slump to “the rising power of the biggest corporations, which they argue is stifling entrepreneurship by making it easier for incumbent businesses to swat away challengers – or else to swallow them before they become a serious threat.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Tax Cuts For The Rich By Another Name.” The New York Times (9/21, Board) editorializes that Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee “violated their supposedly sacrosanct principles of fiscal hawkishness this week, by saying that it would be just fine with them to add $1.5 trillion to the deficit over 10 years in order to cut taxes.” The Times says they “justify this hypocrisy by asserting what has been disproved time and again — that tax cuts spur the economy and compensate for any lost revenue” — while, “in fact, these cuts could hurt the very people they purport to help — small-business owners, middle-class professionals and working-class Americans.”

“Moscow’s Monument To Murder.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/21) writes that “like many a statue in the United States that we have struggled over of late, the towering monument to Mikhail Kalashnikov, unveiled in a highly visible spot in Moscow on Tuesday, seems to have been put up for mostly the wrong reasons. The statue was promoted by the Russian culture minister, Vladimir Medinsky, a nationalist who spends much of his time glorifying Russian military history.” However, the Times says that “shortly before his death” in 2013 Kalashnikov wrote that “if his automatic weapon deprived people of life...was he not ‘guilty of people’s deaths, even enemies?’” The Times says “hopefully” the statue will “lead some viewers past Mr. Putin’s nationalistic intentions and to the painful questions that the inventor of the world’s most abundant weapon wrestled with.”

Washington Post.

“The White House’s Preposterous Policy Analysis On Refugees.” A Washington Post (9/20) editorial says that “xenophobes seeking an upper hand in the Trump administration have covered up” a report showing refugees’ revenue contributions to federal, state, and local governments. A report ordered by the President in March “concluded that refugees had delivered $63 billion more in federal, state and local tax revenue than they had cost in federal benefits through the decade ending in 2014.” However, according to the New York Times, the fact that refugees “pay more in taxes than they draw in benefits...was suppressed by Stephen Miller, Mr. Trump’s nativist senior policy adviser.” The Post argues that “it would be not just callous for Washington to turn its back on” refugees, it would be “an act of national redefinition and an abdication of leadership.”

“The ‘New’ Saudi Arabia Is Still A Dungeon.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/20) writes that despite the “lofty rhetoric” of Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman’s “Vision 2030” declaration, Salman “increasingly resembles an earlier generation of leaders with authoritarian methods.” The Post highlights the Saudi government’s recent “wide-ranging crackdown” on clerics, journalists, and activists – many of whom were jailed with little explanation.

“DC Moves Toward A Safer Strategy For Youth Rehabilitation.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/20) applauds the District of Columbia Council for offering a “comprehensive” and “thoughtful” overhaul of the city’s Youth Rehabilitation Act. The new legislation “preserves the worthwhile goal of rehabilitation for defendants 21 or younger” but also tempers “this leniency with common-sense protections for public safety,” such as making offensive actions like sexual assault ineligible for the act.

Wall Street Journal.

“Tax Reform Progress.” A Wall Street Journal (9/20) editorial says the budget deal struck between Sens. Bob Corker and Pat Toomey creates additional space for cutting taxes and calls on Republicans to follow their lead and make good on their promise to pass tax reform.

“The Slow And Steady Fed.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/20) says it supports the Fed’s decision to reduce its bond holdings, but adds that it should have begun sooner and should be happening faster.

“Afternoon In Germany.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/20) writes that German Chancellor Angela Merkel is heading toward a comfortable win in Germany’s upcoming election, in what the Journal describes as a campaign built upon a mood of public complacency. The Journal argues that despite her win, Merkel will likely not provide the leadership necessary to launch the reforms the country needs to meet manufacturing competition from China or the challenge of Brexit, and may not have the determination to face threats from Vladimir Putin.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: " I don't want to turn this into a Kanye and Taylor Swift-type situation, but when Senator Cassidy was on my show in May, he told me that he believed that every American family, regardless of income, should be able to get quality healthcare. And I believed he was sincere. Sadly, the bill he unveiled last week with Senator Lindsey Graham indicates that he was not sincere."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Imagine Donald Trump trying to read a healthcare bill. It's like trying to imagine a dog doing your taxes, it doesn't compute. I don't blame him, I did more homework this week than all my years of college combined. This healthcare bill is confusing, especially for those not experts in the field."

Stephen Colbert: "Republicans are trying to repeal and replace Obamacare, again. This is beyond beating a dead horse. This is getting damn close to bestiality."

Stephen Colbert: "Before the vote, Republicans have set aside 90 seconds of debate. In other words, they're going to kill Obamacare in roughly the amount of time it takes to microwave a frozen burrito. Both will kill you."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump economic adviser Stephen Moore explained what's driving the latest Republican push to repeal Obamacare. 'People want insurance for their own families, not for other people's families.' What a compassionate man. It's all summed up in his new line of greeting cards. 'Happy birthday, grandma. If we weren't related, I'd leave you to die.' Based on a true story."

James Corden: "It was revealed today that Donald Trump is using campaign donations and money from the Republican National Committee to help pay for his legal fees tied to the Russia investigation. ... Trump using the campaign funds is not illegal, but an unprecedented move by a sitting President, and we all know how Trump feels about anything unprecedented. He feels it's hard to spell."

Trevor Noah: "I don't know if you've ever driven from Maryland to Pennsylvania, but it's like, 'Nice road. We're in a new state, we're in a new state, honey.' Now imagine instead of car, that's your kidney. Like seriously, the states are going to control it. What if you live in New Jersey? Now Chris Christie is controlling your access to healthcare, the same guy who wouldn't even give people access to the beach."

Trevor Noah: "What kind of hole puncher thinks maternity care isn't essential? Every human being at some point needed maternity care. We were all born, even Ted Cruz, all of us."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, today is the third day of the UN General Assembly, or as Trump calls it, boring Epcot. There's no rides. No monorail."

Jimmy Fallon: "During a speech today, Trump mispronounced the African nation of Namibia, and instead called it Nambia. Then Trump corrected himself, and said, 'Sorry, I meant Narnia.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "President Trump also talked about the possibility of peace in the Middle East, and said that stranger things have happened. He said, 'For example, me.'"

Seth Meyers: "During Melania Trump's UN speech today, she spoke out against bullying, and then her husband took the stage to give the rebuttal."

Seth Meyers: "During the same speech, Melania Trump encouraged the next generation to live by the golden rule, which I think she and Donald take literally."

Seth Meyers: "In a new interview, former Secretary of State John Kerry did not rule out running for President in 2020, because who better to lose to our worst President than the guy who lost to our old worst President?"

Conan O'Brien: "Not everyone having a good time right now. Trump had a little misstep in his speech today. ... During a speech to African leaders today, President Trump accidentally made up the Nambia. Even worse, he promised to help Nambia in their war with Narnia."

Conan O'Brien: "Yesterday. Attorney General Jeff Sessions visited Portland, Oregon. After his visit, Sessions said, 'You know, dreadlocks aren't so scary when they're on a white guy.'"

Three Trump Cabinet Secretaries To Visit Pennsylvania This Week.

The AP (9/27) reports that "the heads of the Interior, Labor and Energy departments under President Donald Trump are coming to Pennsylvania this week for a trio of unrelated events." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will "visit Valley Forge National Historical Park in King of Prussia on Thursday to learn about the facility and meet staff." Also on Thursday, Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta will "tour Signature Building Systems in Moosic to see the modular home builder while Energy Secretary Rick Perry will tour the Jeddo coal mine in Ebervale."

Zinke, Pruitt Welcome Aggregates Industry To DC.

Aggregate Research Industries (9/27) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt "welcomed the aggregates industry to Washington, DC during the National Stone, Sand and Gravel Association's Legislative & Policy Forum/Fall Board Meeting." Both officials commented "on the burden of over-regulation facing businesses in the country." Zinke said, "If I didn't think that it could be done, I wouldn't be the Secretary. We have good people and we have great plans and great assets. We need to put them together and allow industry to innovate, think out of the box and get the job done. That's not too much to ask for a great country like ours."

Interior Officials Ready A Big Fashion Statement.

E&E Publishing (9/27, Doyle) reports that officials at the Interior Department are "now tailoring a lucrative uniform contract to help park rangers and other employees dress for success." According to the article, "the new uniform contract for eight different agencies could button up the business for the next five years and be worth an estimated $60 million to the winning vendor." Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift said, "Getting new uniforms for field personnel is actually a topic that is frequently brought up. The secretary and deputy secretary are both motivated to get this done for the [Interior] team." The article says that "the new uniform issue has become one of the pressing topics repeatedly cited by career employees on Interior's electronic 'ideas box,' established about a month ago (Greenwire, Sept. 25)."

New Mexico Gets $1.1M For Outdoor Recreation Projects.

The AP (9/27) reports that the US Department of the Interior announced $1.1 million in federal grants from the Land and Water Conservation Fund for New Mexico to use on outdoor recreation and conservation projects. All 50 states are obtaining a portion of the $93 million set for distribution from the fund. Sen. Martin Heinrich (D-NM) "said the fund in the past has protected places such as Ute Mountain near New Mexico's northern border and Valles Caldera in the Jemez Mountains."

The Dickinson County \(IA\) News (9/27) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "recently announced that $1,231,917 will be distributed to the state of Iowa for outdoor recreation and conservation projects from the Land and Water Conservation Fund."

The Newark \(OH\) Advocate (9/27, Martin) reports that Zinke also "announced that $2,782,023 will be distributed to the state of Ohio for outdoor recreation and conservation projects from the Land and Water Conservation Fund."

The Big Horn Radio Network (9/27) reports that Zinke "announced last week that $831,216 will be distributed to Wyoming from the Land and Water Conservation Fund."

Zinke Says His Workers Are Disloyal. They Say His Personnel Moves Break The Law.

The Washington Post (9/27, Fears) reports that according to a spokesperson, Department of the Interior Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall is attempting to "to determine if the U.S. Department of the Interior followed appropriate guidelines and best practices in the reassignment of Senior Executive Service employees." According to reassigned climate scientist Joel Clement's lawyer Katherine Atkinson, Clements "believes...that the administration targeted him because he was speaking out about the danger [of climate change] to Alaska Native Communities." Atkinson added that "as a result, they labeled him as a climate guy." The Post adds that Clement was moved to a position for which he had no experience.

Four NM Federal Lawmakers Decry Inaccuracies In Zinke Report.

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (9/27, Soular) reports that "four of five members of New Mexico's congressional delegation sent a letter this week to President Donald Trump's administration, urging officials to reject changes to national monuments as recommended by Interior Department Secretary Ryan Zinke." According to the article, "in particular, the Democrats in the state's delegation have taken aim at what they say are inaccuracies in Zinke's recently leaked report, which reviewed more than two dozen monuments across the country for possible changes." The group "notes, accurately, that Zinke's report recommends changes to monument management plans — formal documents used by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management to guide its oversight of the lands in question — that don't exist."

Federal Fire Suppression Memo Gets Mixed Response; Forestry Experts, Managers Praise Intent, Criticize Approach.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/27, Hamway) reports that "near the peak of one of the most disruptive fire seasons in recent memory across the Western United States, Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke called for more aggressive fire suppression efforts." But "forestry experts and forest managers in Central Oregon said that while the memo had some good ideas, some of its approaches were too broad for the region's complex ecosystem, and limited without being accompanied by funding."

Interior Dept. Sued For Petroleum Institute Meeting Records.

Law360 (9/27, Lidgett) reports in a paywall only article, "A nonprofit government watchdog group on Wednesday hit the U.S. Department of the Interior with a federal lawsuit for allegedly refusing to hand over various records pertaining to a meeting that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had with the board of directors of the American Petroleum Institute."

Burgum: Goal Of Doubling Oil Production In North Dakota 'May Be Too Low'.

The Jamestown \(ND\) Sun (9/27, Baumgarten) reports the annual North Dakota Petroleum Council meeting was held on Wednesday. Vincent DeVito, counselor on energy policy for the Interior Department, was among the speakers. DeVito said, "The Department of Interior being a better business partner for investors, those that want to develop on federal land, is the key to our strategy to energy dominance."

Additional coverage was provided by the Dickinson \(ND\) Press (9/27, Baumgarten).

EPA Chief Flew On Private And Military Aircraft For Official Business: Report.

The Hill (9/27, Greenwood) reports that Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Scott Pruitt "used both private and military aircraft for official travel over the summer." Pruitt flew from Cincinnati to JFK Airport on an Air Force plane on June 7 before boarding a commercial flight to Italy for the Group of Seven environment summit. An EPA spokesman told CNN that use of the military plane had been necessary "due to logistical obstacles and the need to schedule meetings with the Vatican before the G7 Summit." Both flights were "reportedly cleared by the agency's ethics council."

The Washington Post (9/27, Dennis, Eilperin) reports that "on July 27, records show, Pruitt and six staff members arranged a flight on a Department of Interior plane from Tulsa to the tiny outpost of Guymon, Okla., at a cost of $14,434.50."

Trump's Most (and Least) Popular Cabinet Members.

Politico (9/27) reports that in a poll on the popularity of Cabinet members, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke scored: "22% favorable, 22% unfavorable, 22% have no opinion of him, and 34% haven't heard of him."

Also reporting are The Hill (9/27, Bowden) and UPI (9/27, Shayanian).

Yes, Trump Can Revoke National Monuments.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (9/27, Wood), Jonathan Wood, an attorney at Pacific Legal Foundation and an adjunct fellow at the Property and Environment Research Center, argues that "nothing in the Antiquities Act forbids the president from revoking or shrinking a national monument." For support, Wood points to history: "Seven presidents have shrunk national monuments, including President William Howard Taft, who reduced the Navajo National Monument by nearly 90 percent." Furthermore, Wood argues that "there is a reason we allow presidents to undo the actions of their predecessors. A president who could unilaterally set policy forever would have far too much power and be free of political checks and balances."

Experts Assess Interior Secretary Zinke's Proposals.

In a piece for the Conversation \(UK\) (9/27), four experts analyze Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendations on national monuments. Robert B. Keiter, Professor of Law at the University of Utah, writes that if a legal challenge is filed, "the case will likely turn on whether authority to modify national monuments can be inferred from the Antiquities Act's silence." Anthony Moffa, Professor of Law at the University of Maine; and Sarah Schindler Professor of Law at the University of Maine, write that Katahdin Woods and Waters is "already specially regulated to allow hunting and snowmobiling – activities that typically are prohibited in national parks and monuments." They argue that "Zinke's recommendation to add timber harvesting would violate the terms of the agreement and the careful balance between uses that the landowners sought." Syma A. Ebbin, Professor of Agricultural and Resource Economics at the University of Connecticut, writes that closing "monuments to high-impact and industrial fishing practices could help protect or restore the habitats, species and other important environmental features that the monuments were created to safeguard."

Don't Let Fake Narrative Block Monuments Review.

In an op-ed for the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (9/27, Denowh), Chuck Denowh, the policy director of United Property Owners of Montana, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "made an admirable attempt to solicit input from Montanans about how national monuments have affected our state." Denowh is dismayed "that effort has been drowned out by fake advertisements aimed at misleading Montanans and funded by out-of-state environmental groups." Denowh dismisses the claim that the monuments review will "result in the federal government selling federal land to private entities" as "ridiculous."

Op-Ed: We Must Protect Wild Utah.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/27, Abdo), Mike Abdo writes that the Antiquities Act was "rightfully and appropriately invoked in the creation" of the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument and the Bears Ears National Monument. Abdo calls on citizens to speak out against Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's plan "to eviscerate and exploit our national monuments."

Thomas Mitchell: Zinke's National Monument Modifications Too Modest.

In his column for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (9/27, Mitchell), Thomas Mitchell calls Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendations on national monuments "far too modest." He notes that "Zinke recommended unspecified changes to the Gold Butte boundaries but totally ignored the massive 700,000-acre Basin and Range National Monument that straddles the border between Nye and Lincoln counties, even though members of the Congressional Western Caucus recommended reducing it to 2,500 acres – ‘the smallest area compatible,’ as the law says, to protect the Indian petroglyphs there.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Obama-Era Fracking Rule May Soon Go Back Into Effect, Or Not.

Wyoming Public Radio (9/27, McKim) reports that after a federal appellate court vacated a 2015 decision which stopped an Obama Administration Bureau of Land Management (BLM) fracking rule, the March 2015 rule may go into effect.

The Sublette \(WY\) Examiner (9/27, Ufford) reports that Wyoming, among other states, challenged the March 2015 BLM rule by “arguing the BLM does not have regulatory authority over fracking on public lands and that states’ regulations provide sufficient guidance.” Comments regarding the fracking rule were due to the BLM by Monday, Sept. 25.

Independent Oil, Gas Producers Push For The Withdrawal Of Hydraulic Fracturing Rule.

DailyEnergyInsider (9/27, Randolph) reports that Monday the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA), and the Western Energy Alliance presented the Bureau of Land Management with comments urging the end of its March 2015 hydraulic fracturing rule on Native American and federal lands. According to the comments, rescinding the rule would allow the industry to save more than $220 million each year. The comments come after the BLM’s recent proposal to retract the March 2015 rule. The comments also said, “the Associations are grateful that BLM now realizes that the one-size-fits-all solution the agency issued in 2015 was not an appropriate mechanism to address unsubstantiated public concern about hydraulic fracturing.”

Senate Bill Could Trigger Mass Slaughter Of Wild Mustang.

CBS News (9/27) reports that “the fate of thousands of wild horses hangs in the balance as the Senate considers an amendment to a spending bill that would allow euthanasia of mustangs and burros roaming free on land owned by the federal government.” The amendment would allow the Bureau of Land Management “to sell excess wild horses without an assurance they wouldn’t be slaughtered.” According to the article, “the matter will eventually be settled in negotiations between the Senate and the House.”

It’s A No Brainer: Republicans Should Be Opposed To Horse Slaughter. For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (9/27, Horowitz), author David Horowitz writes that congressional Republicans will “commit political suicide” if they “legalize the slaughter of America’s wild horses.” Horowitz points to polls which “show that 80 percent of men, 90 percent of women and 86 percent of Trump supporters oppose horse slaughter.” He claims that “the push to slaughter wild horses is coming from a narrow – but powerful – special interest lobby in the D.C. swamp made up of millionaire and billionaire cattle ranchers on America’s federal lands.” Horowitz urges Republican leaders in the Senate “to come out forcefully against the House bill.” He also wants President Trump to say “that he will veto any legislation to legalize the slaughter of America’s horses.”

Tribes Ask Feds To Halt Drilling Leases In Chaco Region.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (9/28, Moss) reports that “leaders of a dozen New Mexico pueblos are asking the federal government to stop all new oil and gas development near sacred sites surrounding the Chaco Culture National Historical Park, following the recent announcement of a preliminary plan by the Bureau of Land Management to lease thousands of acres in the region in early 2018.” The All Pueblo Council of Governors, “in a resolution signed last week, said it is asking the BLM and Bureau of Indian Affairs to halt any further drilling leases and permits in northwestern New Mexico’s Greater Chaco Region, generally defined as the land lying within at least a 10-mile radius of the national park, as well as other areas holding cultural significance between the tiny Navajo communities of White Rock and Nageezi in San Juan County.” According to the resolution, the moratorium is necessary “to preserve sacred archaeological sites, protect views and maintain the darkness of the night sky at Chaco, deemed a UNESCO World Heritage Site for its vast collection of ancient ruins.”

Fracking Protesters: Our Concerns Are Being Ignored.

WOUB-FM Athens, OH (9/27, Niemeyer) reports that “environmental activist groups say a federal agency is ignoring their concerns and protests over the leasing of land for oil and gas development in the Wayne National Forest.” Bureau of Land Management officials “held a third lease auction of the Wayne National Forest on Thursday, leasing another 141 acres to develop 'oil and gas reserves' in Monroe County." Local activist groups "protested in front of the Wayne National Forest's Marietta office on Sept. 9, but many of these protesters feel their efforts are brushed aside."

Game And Fish Open To BLM Land Transfers.

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (9/27, Gross) reports that Wyoming Game and Fish is "re-evaluating whether it wants to take on ownership of several riparian parcels scattered along the Snake River in Teton County." More than a decade ago the Bureau of Land Management "announced it wished to dispose of 24 parcels from the Snake's confluence with the Gros Ventre River to South Park."

Judge Rejects Cliven Bundy's Request To Represent Himself.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/27, Ferrara) reports that "a judge on Wednesday denied Bunkerville rancher Cliven Bundy's request to represent himself at trial next month on charges related to a 2014 standoff with the Bureau of Land Management." U.S. Magistrate Judge Peggy Leen "asked Bundy a series of questions in order to determine whether he could act as his own lawyer in what is expected to be a lengthy trial with six other defendants." In the end, the judge decided defense attorney Bret Whipple "should remain as the trial attorney."

BLM Needs To Answer Questions.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/27) questions when the Bureau of Land Management will "start being open about a private home built on 18 acres of public land near Prineville." The paper says that "the BLM needs to answer questions" since it is "the public's land that we are talking about, after all, and the public deserves to know how its disposition is being handled."

Common Sense Protection For Crooked River Ranch.

In an op-ed for the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/27, Walden), Rep. Greg Walden writes that in response to the wildfire threat, residents of Crooked River Ranch have "done their part by thinning and trimming junipers to create defensible space around their homes." However, "encumbered by the red tape of a Wilderness Study Area (WSA), the federal government on the adjacent Bureau of Land Management-managed land has not done its part, leaving the community in harm's way." Walden has introduced legislation — the Crooked River Ranch Fire Protection Act — that "makes very targeted, common sense changes to allow for practical management of the fire fuels that surround Crooked River Ranch." According to Walden, "this legislation simply moves the WSA boundary a few hundred yards back to the canyon rim, giving firefighters the defensive space they need to help save the Crooked River Ranch community from the potential of a devastating wildfire."

Bureau Of Reclamation

US, Mexico Reach Deal To Conserve Colorado River Water.

The AP (9/27, Lee, Elliott) reports that "the United States and Mexico unveiled an agreement Wednesday to preserve the overtaxed Colorado River, including spending millions of dollars on conservation and environmental projects and drawing up plans to deal with any shortages amid drought and climate change." The United States "pledged to invest $31.5 million in water conservation projects in Mexico, such as lining irrigation ditches with concrete to reduce leaks and upgrading irrigation equipment to use less water." The nine-year agreement is "an amendment to a 1944 treaty that governs how the U.S. and Mexico share and manage the river, which flows through both nations. It expands on a 2012 amendment that expires at the end of this year."

US Fish And Wildlife Service Approved Delta Pumping Increase.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/27, Sabalow) reports that "federal fisheries regulators have approved a controversial plan opposed by environmental groups that would allow for more pumping from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta this fall." On Wednesday, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "signed off on a proposal championed by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation and south state California water interests to ramp up Delta pumping starting next week." Paul Souza, the wildlife services regional director in Sacramento, said in a prepared statement, "We believe this modification will help strike a balance between this year's water needs for wildlife, agriculture and municipalities."

US Agency To Decide If Pacific Walrus Is Threatened Species.

The AP (9/27, Joling) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "faces a deadline this week to decide whether the iconic Pacific walrus will join the polar bear on the threatened species list." The agency "under a court settlement has until Saturday to decide whether the Pacific walrus should be put on the list because of threats to its sea ice habitat due to climate change."

Enviros Sound The Alarm On ANWR.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (9/27, Ruskin) reports that "environmentalists are warning that the Republican plan to cut taxes could include a move that would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling." A draft of the Senate budget plan for 2018 is "likely to emerge next week." Although "no one expects the document to mention the Arctic Refuge by name," Lydia Weiss of The Wilderness Society "said she's concerned it will include vague instructions to the Senate Energy Committee to find a billion dollars or more in revenues." Weiss said, "There is no doubt that that is an invitation to Sen. Murkowski to attach an Arctic Refuge drilling rider."

James River Wildlife Refuge Opens To Public For A Day.

The Chesterfield \(VA\) Observer (9/27, Griset) reports that the Presquile National Wildlife Refuge will "open to the public this Saturday for its fifth annual field day." According to the article, "visitors to the refuge will have the opportunity to traverse the island's boardwalks, interior creeks and 3.5 miles of wildlife observation trails."

Man Smuggles Live Corals Inside Pringles Potato Chip Containers At LAX, Authorities Say.

The Los Angeles Times (9/27, Service) reports that "two Southern California men and representatives of two local companies are facing federal charges of illegally trading in live corals that are protected by an international treaty but frequently are used to decorate aquariums." Jose Torres is "charged with unlawfully attempting to export to Mexico some 20 varieties of live corals protected by the Convention on the International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora — known as CITES — according to the U.S. attorney's office." In a second indictment, Jorge Vazquez is "charged with unlawfully attempting to export live, CITES-protected corals."

Two Florida Men Plead Guilty To Tying Up Endangered Key Deer.

The AP (9/27) reports that "two Florida men have pleaded guilty to violating the U.S. Endangered Species Act for tying up three tiny Key deer in the back of a car in July." According to the article, "18-year-old Erik Yosany Damas Acosta of Miami Gardens and 23-year-old Tumani Anthony Younge of Tamara each face up to a year in federal prison after signing plea agreements Monday in Fort Lauderdale federal court." Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas Watts-Fitzgerald "said prosecutors would ask for leniency at their Oct. 30 sentencing in Key West federal court."

National Park Service

National Parks Struggle With A Mounting Crisis: Too Many Visitors.

The New York Times (9/27, Turkewitz) reports that the number of national park visitors has "reached an unprecedented level, leaving many tourists frustrated and many environmentalists concerned about the toll of overcrowding." In 2016, the National Park Service "tracked a record 331 million visits, and after a busy summer, the system is likely to surpass that number this year." The article notes that "the crowding problem comes as the system faces the dual threat of a funding shortage and climate change."

U.S. Rep. Smith Confident About National Park Legislation.

The Ste. Genevieve \(MO\) Herald (9/27) reports that during his Farm Tour visit to Loida Ag, Rep. Jason Smith "expressed confidence that the legislation to establish a National Park Service unit in Ste. Genevieve, introduced in June, will pass through the House." He said, "I've spoken to the chairman of Natural Resources and got a very good response. He's very open to the idea. I've been working with Senator [Roy] Blunt, and I'm very hopeful." The legislation has "been introduced in both a stand-alone bill and a portion of a bigger energy bill."

Giant Naked Woman Sculpture Planned For National Mall.

WJLA-TV Washington (9/27, Carter-Conneen) reports that "this fall, National Mall visitors might be surprised to find a giant sculpture of a naked woman near the Washington Monument." For a third year, organizers of Catharsis on the Mall "plan to bring music, art and activism to the National Mall over Veteran's Day weekend." If their "permit is approved, the sculpture would become a temporary fixture, allowed to stand there for four months." National Park Service spokesperson Mike Litterst said, "They do have the requirement of having at least one person with it at all times. You can't abandon structures or property as part of the vigil."

23 From 13 Countries Took The Oath Of Allegiance In Morristown.

The Morristown \(NJ\) Daily Record (9/27, Wright) reports that 33 people from 13 countries "took the oath of allegiance during a naturalization ceremony in Washington's Headquarters Museum Auditorium within Morristown National Historical Park." The ceremony was hosted by United States Citizenship and Immigration Services and the National Park Service. The article notes that "it was the ninth time the National Park Service and USCIS partnered on a naturalization ceremony at a national landmark."

NPS Reopening Cape Lookout Friday.

The Carteret County \(NC\) News-Times (9/27) reports that the National Park Service "announced Wednesday that Cape Lookout National Seashore will reopen on North Core, South Core, and Shackleford Banks at 8 a.m. Friday." According to the park service, "based on current weather models, Hurricane Maria is down to 75 mph and her forecast track is to begin to move northeast of the park out into the Atlantic Ocean." The park "remains under a storm surge warning, with an estimated 2-4-foot surge continuing to pound southern Outer Banks beaches."

Comment Period Extended On Olympics Mountain Goat Plan.

The AP (9/27) reports that Olympic National Park officials are "giving people more time to weigh in on their plan to remove non-native mountain goats from the park." The Peninsula \(WA\) Daily News (9/27, Leach) reports that "the comment period, originally set to end Tuesday, has been extended to Oct. 10."

Park Service Superintendent Donahue To Retire.

The Pocono \(PA\) News (9/28) reports that Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area Superintendent John Donahue will "retire from the National Park Service on December 3, 2017, capping off a 38-year federal career that took him to numerous national park units in several different roles."

Ranger: Yosemite Rock Fall Kills 1, Injures Another.

The AP (9/27, Press) reports that "a rock fall Wednesday on the granite face of El Capitan in Yosemite National Park killed one person and injured another at the height of climbing season, an official said." The injured person was transported to a hospital near the park. The article says that "officials didn't provide details on the size of the rock fall, but climbers posted pictures on social media from hundreds of feet up the wall showing billowing white dust moments after the crash."

Also reporting are the New York Times (9/27, Haag), the Washington Post (9/27, Chason), the Los Angeles Times (9/27, Tchekmedyan), the New York Daily News (9/28, Elizalde), NPR (9/27, Campbell), the Huffington Post (9/27, Visser), and Reuters (9/27, Whitcomb).

East Stroudsburg Man Convicted Of Striking Park Ranger With Car.

The Allentown \(PA\) Morning Call (9/27, Hall) reports that "a federal jury in Scranton convicted a Monroe County man Tuesday of assault and fleeing law enforcement for striking a ranger with his car in a hit and run at Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area last year." Damari Roulhac "faces a maximum of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine when he is sentenced Jan. 30."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump Says He Is “Thinking About” Jones Act Waiver For Puerto Rico.

The Hill (9/27, Bowden) reports that President Trump “said Wednesday that he is ‘thinking about’ lifting the rule barring foreign-flagged vessels from delivering goods between American ports to help hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico.” Trump told reporters, “Well, we’re thinking about [temporarily lifting the Jones Act], but we have a lot of shippers, and a lot of people, and a lot of people who work in the shipping industry that don’t want the Jones Act lifted.”

On ABC World News Tonight (9/27, story 3, 2:20, Muir), Eva Pilgrim said, “For Hurricanes Harvey and Irma, a waiver of that act was granted. The President says he’s considering the same for Hurricane Maria, but that a lot of shippers and people who work in the shipping industry don’t want it waived. The President is planning to visit Puerto Rico on Tuesday.”

McClatchy (9/27, Daugherty, Ordoñez) reports that both Republicans and Democrats are telling Trump that Puerto Rico “is now a humanitarian crisis.” But the Administration has not yet waived the Jones Act, even though it “was waived in Texas after Hurricane Harvey and in Florida after Hurricane Irma to allow for more efficient fuel delivery.” Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said that “he expects the Trump administration to eventually waive the law.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/27, Andrews, Page) reports that Sen. John McCain, who has long sought repeal of the Jones Act, wrote in a letter to DHS, “It is unacceptable to force the people of Puerto Rico to pay at least twice as much for food, clean drinking water, supplies and infrastructure due to Jones Act requirements as they work to recover from this disaster. Now, more than ever, it is time to realize the devastating effect of this policy and implement a full repeal of this archaic and burdensome Act.”

Seven House Democrats also signed a letter calling for a Jones Act suspension, and the Washington Examiner (9/27, Tritten) reports that a group of 145 House Democrats is urging Trump to send an aircraft carrier to Puerto Rico. In a Wednesday letter, they wrote, “To fulfill DOD’s mission, we believe the aircraft carrier, USS Abraham Lincoln, should be sent to the region, similar to its deployment to Miami following Hurricane Irma.” Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MD) said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (9/27), “I’m saying to President Trump, you need to quadruple your efforts and have a coordinated Department of Defense response to this. It’s estimated we need at least about 50,000 troops there, even after Haiti we had 20,000.”

The Washington Post (9/27, A1, Hernández, Lamothe, O’Keefe, Achenbach) reports the Administration “is rushing military hardware and personnel to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands as it becomes increasingly clear” that the federal response so far “has been inadequate and overmatched by the scale of the disaster.” However, the AP (9/27, Fox, Coto) reports that many on the island are “waiting for help from anyone from the federal or Puerto Rican government. But the scope of the devastation is so broad, and the relief effort so concentrated in San Juan, that many people from outside the capital say they have received little to no help.” The Los Angeles Times (9/27, Vives, Hennessy-Fiske, Etehad) reports that “for many in Puerto Rico, Hurricane Maria’s aftermath has been even more harrowing than the mighty storm itself.” But FEMA has been stressed by communications issues on the island, as well as by the attention still needed in the aftermath of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma.

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (9/27, lead story, 2:35) by reporting, “One week after Hurricane Maria invaded Puerto Rico, frustration is growing. Relief supplies are arriving on the island, but getting them to the nearly 3.5 million people in desperate need is close to impossible. Power is still out, and the FCC said today more than 91 percent of the cell phone sites are out of service.” On NBC Nightly News (9/27, lead story, 2:55, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported, “Across the island, supplies still aren’t getting where they’re supposed to. ... The agonizing lines for gas begin before dawn, stretching for blocks in the sweltering heat. ... They tell you the federal help is coming, but you haven’t seen it.” Unidentified speaker: “No, we haven’t seen anything.” The CBS Evening News (9/27, story 2, 2:10, Mason) had a report on how the island’s lack of electricity is exacerbating the growing health crisis.

Rosselló Praises Trump’s Response To Maria. Reuters (9/27, Respaut, DiSavino) reports that Rosselló “has strongly praised” Trump’s response, “defending the Republican administration against complaints of being slow to act and showing too little concern.” In an interview with the New York Times (9/27, Robles), Rosselló said, “I have spoken to him at least five times. ... He has been acting proactively. He issued two pre-landfall emergency declarations for Puerto Rico. That had never been done before. He declared Puerto Rico a disaster area practically while the storm was still hitting Puerto Rico.”

The New York Times (9/27, Nixon, Stevens) writes that while “some lawmakers have accused President Trump of failing to respond adequately to the crisis in Puerto Rico,” an analysis of his actions “paints a more complicated picture.” Trump “approved major disaster declarations and ordered federal aid for the states of Texas and Florida, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico equally quickly – in each case, on the day the hurricane made landfall.” But “he was not equally quick to visit each place in the storms’ aftermath.”

Puerto Rico Bondholders Offer $1 Billion Loan, Cancellation Of Power Company’s Debt. The New York Times (9/27, Walsh) reports that the “investors holding the island power company’s defaulted bonds...have offered to lend Puerto Rico $1 billion to pay for urgent repairs and to cancel $150 million of the power company’s outstanding debt in the process.” The loan “would not be enough to replace the island’s aged electrical system,” but the bondholders say that their offer “would allow Puerto Rico to apply for federal grants for long-term rebuilding that would not have to be repaid.”

Federal Judge Warns That Exodus From Puerto Rico Would Have Lasting Impact. Second Circuit US Court of Appeals Judge José Cabranes, who was born in Puerto Rico, writes in the Washington Post (9/27), “A vast internal migration of US citizens is likely in the months ahead, as tens of thousands of Puerto Ricans, possibly 1 million or more over time, choose to move to the US mainland.” This would be “an additional, slow-motion disaster inflicted on an island that can ill afford to lose any more of its best and brightest,” and it would “accelerate and deepen the social and economic crisis in Puerto Rico.”

Maria Returns To Hurricane Status, But No Longer Threatens Land. ABC World News Tonight (9/27, story 4, 0:20, Muir) and NBC Nightly News (9/27, story 3, 0:20, Holt) both briefly reported that Maria has returned to Category 1 hurricane status, no longer threatening land but causing dangers along the coast off North Carolina.

Storms Amplified USVI’s Economic Crisis.

The New York Times (9/27, A1, Peters) reports that “the one-two punch of Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Maria 14 days later” severely hurt the US Virgin Islands, which even before the storms “had barely enough cash to keep the government funded for three days” and a debt “so large that Wall Street stopped lending it money.” As the islands’ 103,000 residents “wait for doctors, medicine, fuel and manpower to rebuild the flattened communications and power grid, the economic toll from the storms is only starting to come to light.”

80 Student Leaders Participate In Youth Summit.

Marianas Variety (9/28, Lirio) reports that “policy proposals to address concerns regarding the economy, the budget, health, welfare, education and the environment were presented to lawmakers by 80 high school students who participated in this year’s Close Up Youth Summit held at Saipan World Resort on Sept. 20, 21 and 22.” The event was sponsored by the Close Up Insular Areas Program which is funded by a grant from the Office of Insular Affairs.

Marshalls Trust Fund Panel Meets In Hawaii.

Marianas Variety (9/28) reports that “the Trust Fund Committee of the Trust Fund for the People of the Republic of the Marshall Islands conducted its fiscal year 2017 fourth quarter meetings Aug. 31 in Honolulu, Hawaii.” The article notes that “as of Sept. 30, 2016, assets of the Trust Fund for the People of the Marshall Islands were valued at $294,545,533.”

FSM Trust Fund Panel Meets In Hawaii.

Marianas Variety (9/28) reports that “the Trust Fund Committee of the Trust Fund for the People of the Federated States of Micronesia conducted its fiscal year 2017 fourth quarter meetings on Sept. 1 in Honolulu, Hawaii.” The article notes that “as of Sept. 30, 2016, assets of the Trust Fund for the People of the Federated States of Micronesia were valued at $466,938,730.”

Moab Watershed Study Completed.

The Moab \(UT\) Sun News (9/27, Trenbeath) reports that "findings from a completed U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) watershed study for Moab and Spanish Valley were presented on Thursday, Sept. 21, at the Grand Center to an assembled crowd of about 75 people." The three-year study, commenced in 2014, was "spearheaded by the Utah Division of Water Rights (DWRI), to determine the rate of recharge for the Glen Canyon Group and Valley-Fill aquifers in order to arrive at a water budget for Moab and Spanish Valley." The DWRI "plans to use the study's findings to aid in the development of a groundwater management plan to guide future development in both the Grand and San Juan County portions of the valley."

Trump Touts Tax Cut Plan In Indianapolis.

During a speech in Indianapolis on Wednesday, President Trump pitched the tax cut plan negotiated by the Administration and the Republican leadership in both chambers. Media coverage of the plan is heavy, but noticeably lighter than recent coverage of the President's comments criticizing the NFL. While the coverage almost universally highlights Trump's call for large cuts to individual and corporate tax rates, much of it is negative in tone, saying the plan leaves many questions unanswered and questioning Trump's assertion that the wealthy will not benefit.

WISH-TV Indianapolis (9/27, 5:01 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump "wasted very little time talking about how his tax plan could benefit the state and the country." Trump: "Americans waste so much money, billions and billions of dollars and many hours each year with our ridiculous tax code. More than 90 percent of Americans use assistance to prepare their taxes. Under our framework, the vast majority of Americans will be able to file their taxes on a single sheet of paper."

WTHR-TV Indianapolis (9/27, 5:04 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump "called on Americans to support his plan to bring back American jobs, wealth and the American dream." Trump: "If you demand it, the politicians will listen. They will answer, and they will act and, someday, many years from now, our children and our grandchildren will remember this moment in history as the time when ordinary Americans took control of their destiny and chose a future of American patriotism, prosperity and pride." In an exclusive interview, WTHR asked Trump how he squares raising the lowest individual tax and lowering the corporate tax. Trump said, "We're bringing the corporate tax down to a level where the companies that are leaving this country – they're going to be hiring a lot of people. It's all about jobs. So we're lowering the working people's – I call it the working people's tax way down. We're bringing the corporate tax down so that corporations won't leave the country and they'll hire a lot of people."

To the AP (9/27, Thomas), the President was in "full salesman mode" as he presented the plan, which "seeks to slash the corporate rate from 35 percent to 20 percent and create three individual tax brackets with rates of 12 percent, 25 percent and 35 percent, with a recommended surcharge on the very wealthy." Townhall (9/27, Pavlich) reports that Trump "urged voters to call their congressmen in support," saying, "Call your congressmen, call your senators, let them know you are watching. Let them know you're waiting. Tell them that today is the day for decision. That now is the time to heal this self-inflicted economic [wound] and that with their action, the future would belong to all of us. ... If you demand it, the politicians will listen. They will answer and they will act."

The Washington Times (9/27, Miller) reports that Trump “said tax reform hasn’t been a partisan issue in Washington in the past, and it shouldn’t be divisive this time, either.” Trump said, “There is no reason that Democrats and Republicans in Congress should not come together to deliver this giant win for the American people and begin the ‘middle-class miracle’ once again.” Pointing to Democratic Sen. Joe Donnelly, who traveled with him on Air Force One, Trump said, “If Sen. Donnelly doesn’t approve it – you know he’s on the other side – we will come here and campaign against him.” The Indianapolis Star (9/27) reports that Donnelly has called for “a bipartisan effort that will give working and middle-class families greater economic security.”

Other coverage is more negative in tone. For example, USA Today (9/27, Groppe) says Trump is “seeking a much-needed win as he recovers from Republicans’ failure to repeal Obamacare and the loss of Luther Strange, Trump’s chosen candidate in the Alabama Senate primary on Tuesday.” USA Today adds that “many details are still to be worked out, including how much the changes would add to the deficit.” Likewise, the Los Angeles Times (9/27, Puzanghera, Mascaro) also says the plan leaves “a lot of unanswered questions.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/27, Rubin) also points out the political stakes for the White House and congressional Republicans in the wake of their unsuccessful push to repeal the ACA. Republicans, the Journal says, are anxious to post a legislative victory in advance of the 2018 elections. Similarly, the New York Times (9/27, Davis, Rappeport) says Trump, who is “smarting from the latest defeat” of his efforts to repeal the ACA, “began a full-throttle push to slash taxes and salvage what is left of his foundering legislative agenda in Congress, proposing a politically challenging array of tax cuts for individuals and businesses that would constitute the most sweeping changes to the federal tax code in decades.” The Times adds that Trump “offered few details about how working people might benefit from a plan that has explicit and substantial rewards for wealthy people and corporations.” In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/27), David Ricks, chairman and CEO of Eli Lilly & Co., praises the plan, arguing that it will help repair the current tax code which puts American companies at a disadvantage on the world market.

On NBC Nightly News (9/27, story 4, 2:15), Lester Holt said Trump was “short on specifics on how middle class families would benefit.” Peter Alexander added that “the long-awaited roll-out is lacking key details, leaving many questions unanswered,” and Democrats are “not buying it.” Senate Minority Leader Schumer: “He ain’t walking the walk. This is aimed at the wealthiest people in America. They do far and away the best.” Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (9/27, story 3, 2:30, Mason) that Republicans “made a show of unity today, even as analysts warned the plan could reduce government revenue by $2 trillion or more over the next 10 years.” Reuters (9/27, Morgan, Cowan) highlights criticism that the plan “could add trillions of dollars to the deficit,” citing warnings from analysts that “huge tax cuts would balloon the federal deficit and debt if economic growth projected by Republicans to offset the costs fails to materialize amid rising interest rates.”

The Houston Chronicle (9/27, Diaz) reports that House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady, who will lead the tax reform effort in the House, said the framework is a “starting point for negotiations.” The Chronicle adds that it “immediately came under fire from one of the top Democrats on the tax-writing committee, Lloyd Doggett,” who said, “The superlatives never match the specifics. ... What President Trump and his Republican cohorts say this plan is, it isn’t. The future of this bill depends upon how quickly the truth can catch up with the lie. From what we can already see, it is a blueprint for red ink.”

White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short said on Fox News Special Report (9/27), “We are confident in this framework. We think it is one that will work. We think it’s best for the American economy. It’s best for the American family providing them significant tax relief but also keeping jobs here in America which is something the last administration suffered through. ... We need to get the economy growing and Congress knows that, the American people know that, and we need tax relief.” Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/27), “The vision is to make it simpler. Americans spend over six billion man hours a year...just complying with the code. The code currently favors the wealthy and privileged and the connected who can hire attorneys and accountants that can help them navigate and take advantage of these deductions and credits, many of which go away in the Donald Trump legislative plan for tax overhaul.”

House Speaker Ryan said on Fox News’ Hannity (9/27) that tax reform is “one of the most important things we can do to help people in the country. ... This is about economic growth, about bigger paychecks, more jobs, it’s about a fairness system in our tax code so we’re really excited about this. That’s why we spent all this time working with the President and yes working with the Senate and House to make sure we’re on the same page so we work off the common framework to go from here to get this done.” Ryan added, “There are a lot of people in this country working paycheck to paycheck. A lot of people in the country because of the slow growth economy never got the raise. A lot of economic anxiety. It’s about them, letting those hard working taxpayers keep more of their own money and giving them a tax break.”

Roll Call (9/27, McPherson) provides more detail on the policies in the framework released by GOP leaders, many of which “are ones included in the House Republicans’ ‘A Better Way’ plan released last year.” Politico (9/27, Faler, Bade) says while the plan “is heavy on the GOP’s tax cut desires,” it is “light when it comes to explaining whose taxes will have to go up to help control costs.” Politico adds that the plan’s cost “would run in the trillions,” and GOP leaders “want to at least partially defray the cost with offsetting tax increases. But their plans for doing that, for the most part, are still a secret.” Republicans plan to “delay spelling out who would have to pay more under their plan, in order to give opponents as little opportunity as possible to mount a counteroffensive.”

The Washington Post (9/27, Paletta, Debonis, Johnson) similarly reports that the framework “left many key questions unanswered,” and adds that Republicans were “careful not to identify numerous tax breaks they might remove, focusing instead on promises to lower rates.” In Indianapolis, The Hill (9/27, Fabian, Jagoda) says Trump promised that the plan is “‘not good’ for wealthy individuals like himself.” He said that “the ‘wealthy and well-connected’ can beg him all they want for a more favorable tax plan, but that ‘it’s not going to help.’”

However, a USA Today (9/27, Przybyla) analysis says the plan “would eliminate the individual Alternative Minimum Tax and estate taxes” and “tax so-called ‘pass through’ businesses at 25%,” all of which “could greatly benefit Trump and his family’s business empire.” Likewise, a New York Times (9/27, Appelbaum) analysis reports that the plan “is a potentially huge windfall for the wealthiest Americans,” citing its call to “sharply reduce taxation of business income,” and eliminate the estate tax, “which affects just a few thousand uber-wealthy families each year, and the alternative minimum tax, a safety net designed to prevent tax avoidance.” A separate New York Times (9/27, Qiu) analysis says Trump and Republicans offered “several misleading and false claims to bolster their framework for the overhaul.” While Trump said the wealthy will not benefit, Roberton Williams, an analyst at the Tax Policy Center, said they “almost certainly” will as a result of the estate tax and alternative minimum tax repeals. The Times adds that lowering the top marginal income tax rate “would also benefit the wealthy, though the plan does not specify which income levels it would affect.”

In an op-ed for USA Today (9/27), Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch calls the framework “a major step forward for tax reform” and “a huge win for middle-class families and low-income taxpayers.” Sen. Cory Gardner said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/27), “I think there is a lot of merit to this plan. ... I think this is a significant advancement over the complex system we have today. So I like this. I believe I can support something like this. There is a lot of to do in this process yet, a lot of room to continue this debate.”

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (9/27, Mauriello) reports that Sen. Pat Toomey, a member of the Senate Finance Committee who helped develop the framework, told reporters, “The biggest thing people are going to see is a tax deduction for themselves, a simplification in terms of their filing, and I think they’re going to see a very strong economy. They’re going to see more job opportunities, upward pressure on wages, bigger job gains [and] fewer unemployed people.” Toomey “expects a Senate vote on the federal budget in the next two weeks, and that would clear a path for tax reform later this fall.” Toomey “hopes it to be signed into law by year’s end.” However, in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (9/27, lead story, 2:35, Muir), Jonathan Karl said that is “an extremely ambitious timeline. This will be a heavy lift even to get done by next year. That said, there is immense pressure on Republicans, both here at the White House and in Capitol Hill, to show that they can deliver on this.”

Thursday’s editorial pages are divided over the plan with traditionally conservative outlets voicing support and traditionally liberal outlets criticizing it. A Washington Examiner (9/27) editorial laments that it has taken Republicans so long to offer a plan after taking “unified control of the government” 11 months ago, but says it is “a great start” and expresses hope that it “quickly becomes legislation then law, and thus quickly fosters economic growth and new well-paid jobs.” The Wall Street Journal (9/27) says in an editorial that the plan could jump start the economic expansion and increase wages but Republicans must do a better job of promoting it than they did with their healthcare plan and resist special interests as it make its way through Congress.

A USA Today (9/27) editorial takes a different view, saying that the plan’s “call to reduce the top corporate tax rate from 35% to 20%...is sound and overdue,” as is “the effort to simplify what President Trump correctly called the ‘ridiculously complex’ individual income tax code,” but,

“a lack of fiscal restraint, plus two unwarranted giveaways to America’s financial elite, make this version unworthy of support.” The New York Times (9/27) also opposes the plan, arguing in an editorial that it would “greatly increase the federal deficit, would not turbocharge economic growth and could leave many middle-class families worse off by ending deductions they rely on.” Moreover, it “would do little or nothing to improve the lot of the working class, a group President Trump says he is fighting for” and would “instead provide a windfall to hedge fund managers, corporate executives, real estate developers and other members of the 1 percent.”

Home Builders Endorse Plan, Increasing Vulnerability Of The Mortgage-Interest Deduction.

Politico (9/27, Woellert) reports that while members of the housing industry “typically lock arms to defend the mortgage-interest tax deduction,” the National Association of Home Builders “split with industry allies” to endorse the plan, “increasing the vulnerability” of the deduction “that was once considered untouchable.” Politico adds that while many in the industry “publicly criticized the White House tax plan released Wednesday, many quietly admit they’re playing defense.”

Politico Analysis: Changing Top Rate Has No “Predictable Effect On Economic Growth.”

Reporting that the Tax Foundation “argued in its analysis of Trump’s 2016 campaign proposal that lowering the top income tax rate would lead to increased job opportunities,” a Politico (9/27) analysis examines “each time the country changed the top income tax rate and the following five years of GDP per capita growth rate” and found that “changing the top income tax rate does not have a predictable effect on economic growth.”

LATimes Analysis: Californians Face A “Big Financial Hit” Under GOP Plan. A Los Angeles Times (9/27, Puzanghera) analysis says the plan would be a “big financial hit” to many Californians due to its elimination of the federal deduction for state and local taxes, which Sen. Dianne Feinstein cited as “one reason the plan was a ‘non-starter’ for her.” The Times also says the plan’s “new limits on the deduction for home mortgage interest, which would have a greater effect on states with higher housing costs, such as California and New York,” leave “open the possibility of another big hit.”

Trump To Sign Order Allowing People To Buy Health Insurance Across State Lines.

The New York Post (9/27, Fredericks) reports that President Trump said Wednesday that he will sign a “very major” executive order “allowing people to buy health insurance across state lines – a move that would expand consumers’ options and possibly lower costs.” Trump said he will probably sign the order next week so that “people can go out across state lines, do lots of things, and buy their own healthcare.” Sen. Rand Paul revealed the plan Wednesday morning on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (9/27), saying, “I think there’s going to be big news from the White House in the next week or two, something they can do on their own.” Paul added that Trump “can legalize on his own the ability of individuals to join a group or a health association across state lines and buy insurance.”

The Washington Post (9/27, Eilperin, Cunningham) says conservatives have “long championed” allowing insurers to offer plans across state lines, arguing it “would lower premiums by fostering greater competition.” The Post adds that Administration officials “are confident that addressing this issue would make Paul more open to backing future health-care legislation.”

EPA Program Seeks To Engage Industry To Reduce Regulatory Burden.

The Washington Examiner (9/27, Siciliano) reports that the EPA is launching a new program called “Smart Sectors” to work more closely with the energy industry, with the “primary focus of reducing regulations.” The sectors the EPA will target includes oil and gas, iron and steel, and utilities and power generation. According the EPA, “Sectors were selected based on each sector’s potential to improve the environment and public health.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“A Boondoggle Masquerading As Tax Reform.” The New York Times (9/27) argues in an editorial that the Republican tax reform plan would “greatly increase the federal deficit, would not turbocharge economic growth and could leave many middle-class families worse off by ending deductions they rely on.” Moreover, it “would do little or nothing to improve the lot of the working class, a group President Trump says he is fighting for” and would “instead provide a windfall to hedge fund managers, corporate executives, real estate developers and other members of the 1 percent.”

“Saudi Women Behind The Wheel.” The New York Times (9/28, Board) editorializes in favor of Saudi Arabia allowing women to drive, commenting “it is the 21st century in most of the world, after all, and there’s not a single other country with so nonsensical a restriction.”

“The Corruption At The Heart Of March Madness.” The New York Times (9/28, Board) editorializes about college basketball, saying that it has “made much of its money by sleazy recruitment and exploitation of teenage stars.” It says college basketball “is supposed to be, but hasn’t been for some time, an innocent and amateur sport.”

Washington Post.

“Can’t We Get This One Thing Right?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/27) writes that Congress should pass legislation that ensures current DACA beneficiaries are safe from deportation. While acknowledging it is “fair to haggle over details of the dreamers’ long-term legal status,” the Post argues that dreamers “are regarded with nearly universal sympathy” and deserve to be granted legal status.

“Saudi Arabia Sheds An Ignoble Distinction.” The Washington Post (9/27) editorializes in favor of Saudi Arabia’s decision to lift its ban on women driving cars, even though it says it is “a bid to divert the world’s attention from the country’s other human rights abuses and its war in neighboring Yemen.” The Post adds that the change “doesn’t address the other restrictions under guardianship laws” but it “is a step in the right direction.”

“Tom Price Should Pay Taxpayers Back.” The Washington Post (9/27) editorializes that it is difficult “to think of someone in Washington these days who might rival [HHS Secretary] Price for brazen hypocrisy.” The Post points out, “This is the very same Mr. Price, remember, who, as a congressman from Georgia for the past 12 years, piously condemned the federal government’s ‘reckless spending.’” Now, according to the Post, “it turns out that Mr. Price is as spendthrift a swamp creature as you could find in Washington’s marshy environs.” The Post calls upon Price to “repay American taxpayers the funds...squandered on these jaunts” aboard private airplanes.

Wall Street Journal.

“Tax Reform, If You Can Keep It.” A Wall Street Journal (9/27) editorial says the Republican tax reform plan could jump start the economic expansion and increase wages but Republicans must do a better job of promoting it than they did with their healthcare plan and resist special interests as it make its way through Congress.

“Who Really Lost Alabama?” The Wall Street Journal (9/27) says in an editorial that Alabama Republicans’ frustrations over Senate Majority Leader McConnell’s inability to get ACA repeal through may have tipped the balance in the Senate primary runoff to Roy Moore.

“Jeremy Corbyn On The March.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/27) writes that British Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn is offering an economic program of higher personal and corporate taxes and rent control – a program that has been shown to be unsuccessful in the past and is a recipe for economic decline today. The Journal warns Corbyn is receiving greater political traction because of divisions among conservatives and conservatives’ failure to make the case against Corbyn’s policies.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “[Donald Trump] is right, no President has ever accomplished what he’s accomplished. After nine short months, we have more nuclear weapons pointed at us than ever before in the history of the United States.”

Stephen Colbert: “Here’s how Roy Moore describes our nation’s racial divide. ... Blacks, whites, reds, and yellows? I hope he’s talking about the Power Rangers.”

James Corden: "Yesterday, Twitter started testing a brand new feature to let some users post tweets with 280-character limits, which is twice the amount that is currently allowed. Yeah, 'cause that was the big problem with Twitter."

James Corden: "On Monday, it came out that Jared Kushner used private emails in his White House job. Today we learn he's registered in New York as a woman. Do you guys realize what this means? Jared Kushner is Hillary Clinton."

Trevor Noah: "Now, I don't know if you see what just happened [in Alabama]. But this is like what happened to Bernie Sanders last year. Remember, he said to his voters, 'Vote for Hillary.' And then a lot of them went, 'No. We're with Bernie.' And he said, 'Yeah, I'm Bernie. I'm telling you to vote for Hillary.' And they were like, 'That's not what Bernie would do. Sit down, old man. We're with Bernie!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "President Trump has finally addressed the situation in Puerto Rico. He said that he'll travel there on Tuesday. Trump said he's bringing lots of supplies in case he gets bored or hungry on the flight over."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump unveiled his new tax plan, and said that it would actually benefit people who pay the least taxes. Then Americans said, 'So, you?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Paul Ryan actually said that the tax plan will let people file their taxes on a postcard. 'Cause if there's one group you can count on to fix the IRS, it's the Post Office."

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that investigators could start interviewing White House staff as part of the Russia investigation as soon as this week. When Trump heard that, he was like, 'You know what? I better head to Puerto Rico right away.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Twitter is testing a 280-character limit for users. Twitter says that it will revolutionize the way that we start fights with North Korea."

Seth Meyers: "Twitter announced yesterday it will be increasing its character limit from 140 to 280 characters per tweet, on a trial basis. So we're now officially at war with at least 17 more countries."

Seth Meyers: "While discussing the corporate tax rate today, President Trump said that 20 is his ideal number and he is not negotiating that number, which is the same thing he says when he orders chicken McNuggets."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump introduced his new tax plan today. I know you're all excited about it. That was a really great reaction. That's what happens when like an air mattress deflates."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump says his new tax plan would greatly simplify the US tax code. It would divide everyone into two brackets: taxpayers and President Trump."

Conan O'Brien: "There are rumors that NFL legend Peyton Manning may run for Senate. Sure. Why not? Experts say there's no way mixing the NFL and politics could possibly go wrong."

Conan O'Brien: "It's been reported that morale is very low among the Taliban. You know things are bad when suicide bombers are too depressed to go to work."

DOI In The News

Ryan Zinke, Trump's Cowboy Enforcer, Is Ready For His Closeup.

GQ (7/31, Plott) published a profile on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who the article calls "a big player in Donald Trump's Washington." According to the piece, "if Zinke's track record is any indication, he has every intention of leveraging his new post on Team Trump into something much bigger." However, Zinke "waved off questions about the White House." He said, "I think the president is going to serve two terms." And "if that does indeed happen, he knows it'll be Pence's turn afterward, and he'll be supporting him."

Trump Cabinet Officials Make Fun Of Rick Perry's Ignorance About Nuclear Arsenal. Raw Story (7/31, Gettys) reports that "Rick Perry was surprised to learn that his job as secretary of energy would place him in charge of the U.S. nuclear arsenal, and his fellow cabinet members like to tease him about it." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "told GQ that he's become close friends with Perry while serving under President Donald Trump, and he's poked fun at his fellow Cabinet member's reported ignorance." Zinke said, "Secretary Perry is a wonderful guy. I think he thought his department was more about energy than ... science. Mostly, it's science and, of course, they also have responsibility of our nuclear arsenal." Zinke "said Perry apparently confused the Department of Energy with the Department of Interior when accepting the job." Zinke said, "Interior is the one that produces energy. We laugh a lot about it."

Nevada Democrats Fault Interior Chief Over Canceled Meetings.

The AP (7/31, Ritter) reports that "elected Democrats and an Indian tribal leader in Nevada criticized Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Monday for canceling meetings with advocates after his tour of two national monuments on a list of sites the Trump administration is considering cutting in size." Chris Giunchigliani, a Clark County commissioner, "said during a demonstration at the Las Vegas offices of several political advocacy groups that she felt Nevada had been 'disrespected.'" Also, Rep. Dina Titus "said she believed Zinke never wanted to meet with advocates." However, the Interior Department "fired back with a statement calling the critics' claims 'patently false.'" A statement provided by Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift "said Zinke did all he could after arriving in Nevada from New Mexico over the weekend to tour the monuments and meet with people on Sunday."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by McClatchy (7/31, Ritter), the U.S. News & World Report (7/31, Ritter), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/31, Ritter), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/31, Ritter), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/31, Ritter).

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (7/31, Rogers), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Sun (7/31, Gonzalez), and KLAS-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/31, Walker), KSNV-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/31, O'Neal), and KVVU-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (7/31, Hilt).

Zinke: 'Laughable' To Suggest He Threatened Alaska Senators.

The AP (7/31) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke responded to reports that he had threatened Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) and Dan Sullivan (R-AK), saying, "Ah, you know, the moon has been characterized as other things, too. So, I think it's laughable." The article explains that "the Alaska Dispatch News reported last week that Zinke called Murkowski and Sullivan and said Murkowski's vote against proceeding to debate on legislation to overhaul the federal health care law put Alaska's future with the administration in jeopardy."

The Hill (7/31, Henry) reports Zinke also said, "I talk to Sen. Murkowski and Sen. Sullivan all the time. A lot's been said about a lot of things. But I talk to them all the time. We get along well."

The Washington Examiner (7/31, Siciliano) reports Murkowski later said that Zinke had told her only that President Trump was not pleased with the way she voted.

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by U.S. News & World Report (7/31), the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (7/31), the Wichita \(KS\) Eagle (7/31), the Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (7/31), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/31), the Olean \(NY\) Times Herald (7/31), Philly \(PA\) (7/31), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/31), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/31), Bloomberg News (7/31), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/31, Press), the Daily Mail (7/31), and KTVA-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (7/31).

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (7/31, Cama, Henry), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/31, Oswald), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/31, Burns), the Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (8/1), Law360 (8/1, Goldberg), and the Talking Points Memo (7/31, Macneal).

Zinke Applauds Berwind Mine Operation.

West Virginia MetroNews (7/31, Jenkins) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "released a statement Monday remarking his approval of the "initial construction" of the Berwind coal property." According to the statement, "the site's developers, Ramaco Resources, expect the McDowell County mine to create 50 'good-paying' jobs and employ around 200 coal miners when operations reach the projected production level." The Berwind Mine will "produce 800,000 tons of coal a year and create jobs near the West Virginia-Virginia border." Zinke said, "Under President Trump's leadership, the Department of the Interior is dedicated to being a good partner with local communities. This administration is dedicated to streamlining permitting and approval processes, and empowering local employees to get work done on the front lines. The Berwind Mine is the first of many projects that demonstrate the Trump Administration's commitment to coal country and to good government."

The Interior Secretary Gave A Closed-door Speech To ALEC.

The High Country \(CO\) News (7/31, Smith) reports that "on July 20, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke spoke at a closed-door meeting of conservative state legislators and lobbyists, raising questions about his stated goals of transparency in federal government." Zinke "spoke in Denver at the annual meeting for the American Legislative Exchange Council." However, "because of the group's funding sources and its interest in states holding public lands, conservationists see Zinke's association with the group as problematic."

O&C Commissioners Met With Interior Secretary.

The Coos Bay \(OR\) World (7/31, Harrell) reports that "while Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was in Oregon earlier last month, he met with O&C county commissioners to discuss the expansion of the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument and the loss of timber revenue." The Association of O&C counties "spoke out against the expansion, arguing it would further restrict logging on lands that provide revenue for the cash-strapped counties." Tim Freeman, President of the Association of O&C counties, "said he was encouraged that the Trump administration is interested in rural Oregon."

Outdoor Recreation Becomes Top Money Generator For Montana.

The AP (7/31) reports that "a new report by the Outdoor Industry Association shows that the state's outdoor recreation has become one of its the top economic sectors." According to the association, "consumers spend $7.1 billion on recreational activities such as camping, fishing, skiing, boating and biking." The article notes "that money not only flows into the state's economy but also provides $2.2 billion in wages and salaries for 71,000 jobs, and $286 million in state and local taxes."

Not Protecting Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks Would Be an Irreplaceable Loss.

In an op-ed for the Morning Consult (7/31, Miller, Loendorf), Myles Miller, a principal investigator for Versar Inc., and Larry Loendorf, president of Sacred Sites Research Inc., find it "most unfortunate and nearly incomprehensible" that the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument "and other national monuments are now under review by the Department of the Interior for possible reduction or even total elimination." They want Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke of their "unequivocal conclusion that the immeasurable worth of the prehistoric and historic archaeological record of the Desert Peaks Complex merits full protection under the Antiquities Act, that the total parcel of public land protected by the monument is indeed the smallest possible to preserve the significant and irreplaceable cultural resources that tell more than 13,000 years worth of stories.”

Montana Rep: Time To Retire The Ridiculous Designation Of Wilderness Study Areas.

In an op-ed for the Fairfield \(MT\) Sun Times (7/31, Harris), Montana state Rep. Bill Harris urges Rep. Greg Gianforte and Sens. Steve Daines and Jon Tester to “retire the ridiculous designation of Wilderness Study Areas.” Harris argues that “the designation serves no purpose and has contributed a great deal to” the recent fire in Sandage Coulee. Harris thinks “the most effective way to make the changes needed is to flood Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke with our concerns. and urge a change in federal lands management.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Trump Administration Moves In New Direction With Cobell Buy-back Program.

The Nation Sun News (7/31) reports that “with just $540 million left to spend, the Trump administration is changing course when it comes to the Land Buy-Back Program for Tribal Nations.” In an announcement on Monday, the Interior Department “dramatically cut back the number of reservations where landowners can expect to receive offers for their fractional interests.” According to the article, “instead of the 70 or so that were on the list toward the end of the Obama administration, only 20 remain on the implementation schedule.” Jim Cason, the Associate Deputy Secretary at Interior, said in the announcement, “The revised strategy announced today maximizes the remaining dollars left for the implementation of the Buy-Back Program and seeks to achieve the greatest reduction of fractional interests, the largest number possible of landowners able to participate, and the most effective use of the department’s resources.”

Connecticut Senate OKs Changes Needed For New Tribal Casino.

The AP (7/31) reports that “the state Senate has approved amended agreements that could lead to Connecticut’s first casino on nontribal land.” The 27-8 vote in Monday “comes exactly one week after the House of Representatives voted in favor of the amended compacts and memoranda of understanding between the state and the two federally recognized tribes, the Mashantucket Pequot and the Mohegans.” The Bureau of Indian Affairs will now consider the changes.

Cayuga Nation Leadership Struggle Not Over Just Yet.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (7/31, Craig) reports that “though the federal government upheld a decision to recognize Clint Halftown and his council as leaders of the Cayuga Nation, an opposing faction is challenging the ruling.” Joseph Heath, a lawyer “for a Cayuga Nation group formerly known as the Unity Council, filed a motion on Friday questioning the validity of the Bureau of Indian Affairs’ decision to the Interior Board of Indian Appeals.” Heath claimed “that the latest decision, entered by Acting Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs Michael Black, is invalid because Black was removed from that post in June, prior to issuing his decision on July 14.”

NIGC Asks Judge To Rethink Ruling In Tribe’s Gambling Suit.

Law360 (7/31, Westney) reports that the National Indian Gaming Commission on Friday “urged a D.C. federal judge to dismiss several claims from a suit over the government’s rejection of the Fort Sill Apache Tribe’s gambling bid, contending that the judge had wrongly changed course by ruling that an NIGC letter could be challenged in court.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Burning Man Gets Permit, Officially Not Canceled.

USA Today (8/1, Kane) reports that “Burning Man received its 2017 permit on Sunday from the Bureau of Land Management, the federal agency that oversees the health, safety and security operations at the 68,000-person arts hoopla in the Black Rock Desert just two hours north of Reno.” According to the article, “up until a month ago, the desert playa was partially underwater due to flooding from this winter’s heavy precipitation.” It adds that “about a month ago, the Burning Man organization checked the playa's water table to ensure that the playa would be dry and firm enough to hold the dozens of large-scale art installations that will make their way to the playa this year."

Judge Hears Arguments In Las Vegas Water Pipeline Fight.

The AP (7/31, Ritter) reports that "momentum and mitigation were two questions mentioned by a federal judge who has to decide whether environmental studies need to be redone for a massive eastern Nevada water pipeline proposed to serve Las Vegas." U.S. District Judge Andrew Gordon "wondered at the end of arguments in Las Vegas whether he has authority to tell the federal Bureau of Land Management to fix shortcomings if he finds them in environmental reports that took eight years to develop, or if he'd have to tell everyone to start over." Gordon "said Monday it'll be several weeks before he issues a ruling."

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/31, Brean).

4 Ways Far-Right Groups Are Winning The Social Media Battle.

NPR (7/31, Siegler) reports that "in the rural West, the jailed rancher Cliven Bundy and his militia followers were early and savvy users of social media." Now, the article says, "as a series of federal trials has begun for the 2014 standoff near the Bundy ranch, his followers are regularly using Facebook Live to do their own reporting on the cases." The article lists "four ways the Bundys and others in his movement are gaining supporters and winning the PR battle on social media."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

State Offers New Momentum For Offshore Wind Power.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (7/30, Bragg) reports that "one of three companies with plans to build commercial wind farms south of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard has begun a formal analysis of their lease area." According to the article, "the start of Bay State Wind's site assessment process moves the company a step ahead of its competitors in the federal regulatory permitting process." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is "currently reviewing the site assessment plans of Vineyard Wind and Deepwater Wind for completeness."

Making An Impactful Public Comment In A Power Player-Dominated Debate.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (7/31, Davis), John W. Davis II, founder and CEO of N&C Inc., explains how people can "engage in the public notice and comment process" to "directly impact government." However, he says "too few people are aware of how the system works or how to influence it." As an example, he points to the "important questions involving national economic and security issues currently open for public comment on the Department of Interior's Bureau of Ocean Management proposed rule (BOEM-2017-0050-0001)." Davis advises that "if you want to submit an effective comment on an important issue such as drilling in the eastern Gulf, you need to research the facts and come up with a cogent argument." He says that "the mawin lines of debate have been drawn midway through the open comment period — which closes on August 17 — pitting the various major interest groups described above against one another," so to gain "BOEM's attention," commenters might need to "introduce a completely new line of argument to the mix."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Yellowstone Grizzlies Removed From Threatened Species List.

The AP (7/31, Volz) reports that "for the second time in a decade, the U.S. government has removed grizzly bears in the Yellowstone region from the threatened species list." The decision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "to remove federal protections from the approximately 700 bears living across 19,000 square miles in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming took effect Monday." However, "wildlife advocates, conservation groups and Native American tribes have already filed notice that they will sue to reinstate the protections."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/31), ABC News (7/31, Volz), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/31, Volz), Business Insider (7/31, Volz), the Chicago \(IL\) Tribune (7/31, Volz), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/30, Volz), Philly \(PA\)

(7/31, Volz), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/31, Matt Volz |, Ap), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/31, Volz), the Denver \(CO\) Post (7/31, Volz), WRC-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (7/31, Volz), and WTOP-FM Washington \(DC\) Washington (7/31).

Additional coverage was provided by the Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (7/31, Freedman) and the Daily Caller (7/31, Pearce).

So, Is Trump Gonna Build That Wall Or What?

Vice (7/30) reports that despite the inclusion of $1.6 billion in border wall funding in a defense spending package last week, "it remains unclear how the wall is going to be funded, and the battle over the money issue could drive Trump to desperation." Vice recounts that officials last week "finally admitted that, due to disputes over the bidding process, they would not be able to pick contractors or start construction on the prototypes funded by that initial $20 million afforded them until late October or early November at best." Vice adds that wall funding is "likely to be the center of some brutal fights in the Senate in the near future, and probably back in the House again once the Senate finishes its own process and loops back around." The Daily Caller (7/30) reports more optimistically by saying construction on the first part of Trump's "promised border wall is set to begin in South Texas in a few months." The Santa Ana National Wildlife Refuge in Texas is "expected to be the site of a three mile border wall, managed by U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP)."

Endangered Frog Habitat Sparks California Farm Lawsuit.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/31, KASLER, WILKE, SABALOW) reports that "the California Farm Bureau and two ranchers' associations sued the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Monday, challenging a year-old decision to designate more than 1.8 million acres of rural California as 'critical habitat' for three species of frogs and toads that are protected by the Endangered Species Act." The critical habitat designation subjects farmers "to substantial regulatory burdens that impose, among other things, study costs, risk assessments, mitigation fees, operational changes, permit fees, and consulting expenses," said the lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C. The species at issue are the Sierra Nevada yellow-legged frog, the mountain yellow-legged frog, and the Yosemite toad.

DuPont To Pay $42M To Settle South River Mercury Contamination, Does Not Specify Money For Waynesboro Projects.

The Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (7/31, Stuart) reports that "a federal judge on Friday approved the settlement for damages from DuPont's mercury contamination of the South River, but did not order any of the $42 million settlement be used for projects in Waynesboro, including a much-discussed trout grow-out facility." The Staunton \(VA\) News Leader (7/31, Cavallaro) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "announced the decision Monday, saying they 'look forward to working with interested stakeholders to implement the best projects to benefit the injured natural resources for the future enjoyment of the community.'" Anne Condon, a fish and wildlife biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Protect Alaska's Natural Treasures From Oil Drilling And Mining.

In an editorial, the Seattle Times (7/31) opposes drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and the National Petroleum Reserve. The paper argues that "the known environmental hazards of mining are a direct threat to one of Alaska's signature resources:" salmon. According to the editorial, "Alaska's wishful thinking about striking it rich again with oil and minerals from risky places does not diminish the known realities and hazards."

National Park Service

How A Surge In Visitors Is Overwhelming America's National Parks.

Yale University \(CT\) Environment 360 (7/31, Robbins) reports that "the growing crowds at U.S. National Parks have become unmanageable, jeopardizing the natural experience the parks were created to provide." Now, "with attendance this summer continuing to shatter records, officials are considering limiting use of the parks in order to save them."

Historic Site Awaits Its National Park Future.

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (7/31, Hubbard) reports that "representatives from the National Park Service will update the Gloucester Board of Supervisors Tuesday night on the planned park at the historic Werowocomoco site." The federal government acquired "the 264-acre Werowocomoco property off Ginny Hill Road in June 2016 for $7.1 million." The Werowocomoco site is "believed to be where Capt. John Smith described how his life was saved by Pocahontas after his capture."

Goose Meat Is Back On The Menu At A DC Food Kitchen.

WTOP-FM Washington (7/31, Hensley) reports that "meat from more than 100 geese captured in D.C. will help feed people around the area, the National Park Service announced Monday." D.C. Central Kitchen "— which prepares meals for homeless shelters, rehabilitation clinics and after-school programs — received about 100 pounds of breast meat from 116 Canada geese thanks to the efforts from the National Park Service and the D.C. Department of Energy and Environment." The geese were "captured at Anacostia Park and euthanized earlier this month as part of a population-management effort."

Construction Projects Underway At Mount Rainier.

KIMA-TV Yakima, WA (7/31, Schurk) reports that the National Park Service is "gearing up for various construction projects at Mount Rainier." According to the article, "road projects include road construction, Annex rehabilitation for the Paradise Inn and damage repair to rock walls." Work started "in July and is expected to continue through late September 2017."

Colorado-Based Team Takes You Under The Water In National Parks.

KUSA-TV Denver (7/31, Powell) reports on the Submerged Resources Center, which "works with any park unit across the country to explore the waters within it." The Lakewood, Colorado-based team "dives underwater to find, identify, study and preserve the pieces of national parks that are below ground – living pieces, like coral or invasive species, and non-living, like ships."

Heights Theater, River Oaks Mansion Added To National Register Of Historic Places.

The Houston Chronicle (7/31, Hlavaty) reports that "two Houston properties, one a popular music venue and the other a mansion in the city's poshest neighborhood, were recently added to the National Register of Historic Places." According to the article, "the newly-restored Heights Theater along 19th Street and The Charles W. and Mary Duncan House on Inverness Drive in River Oaks are now on the lengthy list of historic places worthy of preservation."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Tri Marine Seeks To Remove Fishing Restriction Within Pac Monument.

Samoa News (7/12, Sagapolutele) reports that "Tri Marine Group has recommended that the federal government begin a rule making process to remove commercial fishing restriction for tuna in certain area of waters around the Pacific Islands Remote Marine National Monument (PIRMNM)." But "there has been strong opposition from conservationists and environmentalist groups as well as others living in the US to any changes to the PIRMNM, which was first established in January 2009 by then President George Bush. With the marine monument designation, commercial fishing is prohibited within boundaries of the monument."

StarKist Co. Addresses Expansion Of Pac Remote Islands Marine Natl Monument.

Samoa News (7/15, Sagapolutele) reports that "StarKist Co. is willing to work with the Trump Administration to find more effective ways to protect the ocean and US waters, but it must be done in a way 'that is science based and does not unfairly hurt the American Samoan economy and our US fishermen,' according to the company's Seafood Procurement director, Cary Gann in a July 3rd letter." Gann's letter, addressed to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "was in response to the federal agency's request for public comments following President Trump's executive order earlier this year in May, calling for a review of land and marine monument designations by former US presidents, going back to 1996."

American Tunaboat Association Opposed To Fishing Restrictions.

The Guam Daily Post (7/20) reports that "U.S.-based American Tunaboat Association (ATA) has argued that the 2014 expansion of the Pacific Remote Islands Marine National Monument (PRIMNM) by former President Barack Obama 'had a particularly detrimental impact on the U.S.

fishermen ... and on the economy and prosperity of the American Samoa,' whose economy is 80 percent dependent on the canneries." ATA Executive Director Brian Hallman wrote in a letter last Friday to the Interior Department, "ATA strongly supports removing all fishing restrictions in all Marine National Monuments, thus restoring the conservation and management processes for highly migratory fish stocks established by U.S. law."

DMWR Argues Marine Monument Expansion Not Based On Science.

Samoa News (7/18, Sagapolutele) reports that "Department of Marine and Wildlife Resources (DMWR) Chief Fisheries Biologist, Domingo Ochavillo has shared concerns with US Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, over the designation of Rose Atoll as a marine monument; and also argues that expansion of the Pacific Remote Islands National Marine Monument was not based on science 'but more on political legacy considerations.'" Ochavillo said, "There is a need to review these national monument designations so that they are based on the best available science, and adequate cultural and economic considerations."

Marshall Islands Tackles Health Problems.

The Marianas Variety (7/25) reports that "the number one killer of Marshallese is non-communicable diseases or NCDs." According to the article, "thanks to funding from the Marshalls' international partners — U.S. Department of the Interior, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Pacific Community and the World Health Organization — the Marshalls Ministry of Health can update its NCD report." MOH "joined with the Economic Policy Planning and Statistics Office, and the Marshall Islands Epidemiology and Prevention Initiative or MIEPI for the Marshall Islands NCD Hybrid Survey Training that opened Monday last week at the Marshall Islands Resort." The article says that "the one-week training is preparing 30 selected individuals for the survey. MIEPI is the main driver for the training and the six-month survey that is expected to start next week."

Kelly Becomes New White House Chief Of Staff, Immediately Fires Scaramucci.

Anthony Scaramucci's dismissal from his White House post generated extensive media attention, including the lead stories on all three major network newscasts. The coverage cast Scaramucci's exit as another sign of a White House in deep disarray, though the development is also seen as Chief of Staff John Kelly's first step toward establishing his authority and restoring order. NBC Nightly News (7/31, lead story, 3:25, Holt), for example, said "Kelly's first order of business" was "apparently fixing what many insiders saw as a big mistake by the President in his hiring of Scaramucci," and the CBS Evening News (7/31, lead story, 2:50, Mason) led its broadcast reporting that "Kelly reported for duty...and left no doubt that he is in command." Along similar lines, the Washington Post (7/31, Phillip, Paletta) says "the abrupt decision signals that Kelly is moving quickly to assert control over the West Wing," Breitbart (7/31, Spiering) that Kelly "wanted to set a new tone after taking his new position, using Scaramucci as an example," and The Hill (7/31, Fabian) that the ousting is "a sign that Kelly could have more power in the chief of staff role than his predecessor, Reince Priebus, ever did."

Meanwhile, a "senior aide" tells Politico (7/31, Palmeri) "there was 'no way' Scaramucci could work with Kelly," and that "Kelly is already changing the culture here." Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (7/31) that she "was told by a source close to the White House that...Kelly made this decision two to three days ago," and that this "source" indicated that "the days of tolerating BS in this White House are over."

Bloomberg News (7/31, Olorunnipa, Talev), which reports Kelly faces "the Herculean task of restoring order to a crisis-ridden presidency," believes "he'll have one advantage former chief of staff Reince Priebus never did: the backing of Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner." According to "an administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity," the two "supported Kelly's selection...after losing confidence in Priebus." ABC World News Tonight (7/31, lead story, 3:45, Vega), in fact, referred to "a stunning shift in the chain of command," as "everyone, including the President's own daughter and son-in-law" now "report to...Kelly."

The Washington Examiner (7/31, Kasperowicz) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "confirmed Monday that Kelly is free to run" the White House "as he likes," telling reporters, "Gen. Kelly has the full authority to operate within the White House, and all staff will report to him." Asked whether "all access to Trump will be controlled through Kelly," she added, "The president's given full authority to Gen. Kelly, and he'll make those determinations." White House correspondent Kaitlin Collins said on CNN's The Lead (7/31) that Scaramucci's departure "really shows how much weight...Kelly truly does have right now in this White House," and Charles Krauthammer, on Fox News' Special Report (7/31), referred to "an obvious signal from the President and Kelly that he is in charge."

Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist, also on Fox News' Special Report (7/31), said that "getting rid of Scaramucci" and "having Kelly in should help tamp things down." Hemingway added that with Priebus, "you couldn't get a more establishment Republican-type person. Obviously, things didn't go so well, so Trump wants to change direction and you can hope things will go better with someone who is more to his liking." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/31) praises Kelly's move, which it sees as setting a new tone and clearly establishing that he's in charge.

The new Chief of Staff had officially assumed his new position yesterday morning. Citing "a person close to White House" as its source, the Los Angeles Times (7/31, Bennett, Bierman) reports he proceeded to tell "Scaramucci around 9:30 a.m. EDT that he was going to be replaced." Business Insider (7/31, Smith) notes a tweet by April Ryan, the White House correspondent for American Urban Radio Networks, who wrote, "A source says @Scaramucci said I don't report to you and the General said your gone and he is." According to "administration officials...under condition of anonymity," USA Today (7/31, Jackson) reports, "the two men agreed their relationship would not work."

The New York Times (7/31, Haberman, Shear, Thrush), which broke the story yesterday citing "three people close to the decision," also said Scaramucci "had boasted about reporting directly to the president, not the chief of staff," while the Washington Examiner (7/31, Lovelace) refers to "reports that Scaramucci was escorted out of the White House on Monday soon after...Kelly told him he was out." At any rate, the AP (7/31, Lucey) reports, "as the Scaramucci news spread, Kelly was in the East Room smiling and taking pictures with guests who were gathering for a Medal of Honor presentation."

Wall Street Journal reporter Michael Bender, on Twitter, reported that "WH comms team was given 15mins to report to Sanders' office for Mooch news. Also in press sec's office: SEAN SPICER." Those facts are also included in the Wall Street Journal (7/31, Ballhaus, Bender) report this morning.

Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (7/31), "It was a fall of biblical proportions. Huge! Like, bigger than Jericho falling to Joshua. ... Much too soon, The Mooch is gone. As the Good Book says: What the &@%$#? Those &@%$# can go &@%$# themselves with a &@%$#."

McClatchy (7/31, Irby, Welsh) notes Sanders, meanwhile, "declined to say whether Scaramucci had resigned or was fired." Reuters (7/31) notes the White House said in a statement, "Mr. Scaramucci felt it was best to give Chief of Staff John Kelly a clean slate and the ability to build his own team." In the afternoon, NPR (7/31, Bennett) reported, Sanders "told reporters she would not elaborate on whether Scaramucci was fired or willfully resigned, but she said the former Wall Street financier would not retain another role on the White House staff 'at this time.'"

Jim Acosta said on CNN's The Lead (7/31) that Sanders "did not want to acknowledge there was chaos in the White House. That seems akin to denying that the sky is blue. Obviously, the chaos is here at the White House. She said if you want to see chaos, you can come see how my kids play at the house. My suspicion is perhaps her children behave better than some of the officials do inside this White House when they're engaging in some of the factional bickering we see all the time."

Bloomberg News (7/31, Jacobs, Talev) reports "Scaramucci's departure raises new questions about his plans to sell his stake in Skybridge to China's HNA Group Co. and little-known investment firm RON Transatlantic." Bloomberg adds that "the proposed transaction is being scrutinized by the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States, which vets sales of American assets to foreign buyers to protect national security."

Trump Praises Kelly, Dismisses Talk Of White House "Chaos." The New York Post (7/31, Fredericks) reports "the dramatic move came just hours after Trump crowed on Twitter that there was no chaos in the White House, and days after the man known as the Mooch launched an obscenity-laced rant against then-chief of staff Reince Priebus and Trump adviser Steve Bannon." Wrote Trump, "Highest Stock Market EVER, best economic numbers in years, unemployment lowest in 17 years, wages raising, border secure, S.C.: No WH chaos!"

After Kelly's wearing-in, Bloomberg News (7/31, Jacobs, Talev, Olorunnipa) reports, the President lavished praise on his new top aide, saying, "He will do a spectacular job, I have no doubt, as chief of staff." In a Cabinet meeting later Monday, Trump also "said that Kelly's work as Homeland Security secretary – where he vigorously implemented the president's promised crackdown on undocumented immigration – 'is nothing short of miraculous.'" The President took to Twitter later in the day, writing, "A great day at the White House!"

Eric Trump: Kelly "An Amazing Human Being." Eric Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (7/31) that Kelly "is an amazing human being. ... He will operate that place so incredibly well, and listen, my father has so many great people by his side. The whole Cabinet – he has one of the most impressive cabinets there, but in terms of organization, you can give it to a military guy, I think is going to do an incredible, incredible job for the Trump Administration."

Bossie: "New Sheriff In Town." Former Trump deputy campaign manager David Bossie said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (7/31), "There is a new sheriff in town. I think that Gen. Kelly's first day on the job, he put a stamp on his reign here at the White House, and I think he is someone who is coming in there with a strong position. He is going to be a commander of men and women, has been all of his life, and people follow him and that is what he is expecting from everyone on the White House staff, for them to follow his lead. I think that the days of these clashes between staff are going to be over, and I look forward to it."

"Source Close" To President: Scaramucci Fired Over New Yorker Interview. The Washington Times (7/31, Boyer) reports that according to "a source close to Mr. Trump," he "fired Mr. Scaramucci because of the profanity-laced tirade in a phone call to a New Yorker magazine writer," which "embarrassed Mr. Trump and his family."

The Washington Examiner (7/31, Lovelace) notes Sanders also said the President "found Scaramucci's profanity-laden comments in a New Yorker interview last week were 'inappropriate,' but declined to talk in more detail about whether Scaramucci quit or whether he was fired."

Breitbart (7/31, Spiering) similarly indicated that "the New Yorker article was fatal to Scaramucci's White House career, as the profane nature of the conversation upset and embarrassed many Trump staffers."

Spicer Upon Encountering Group Of Reporters Yesterday: "Is This A Surprise Party?" The Los Angeles Times (7/31, Bennett, Bierman) reports that "after word spread of Scaramucci's ouster, Spicer, who resigned when Scaramucci took over but was still working in the White House, walked out of his office to a throng of reporters" and asked, "Is this a surprise party?" The Washington Examiner (7/31, Quinn) notes, at any rate, that "Sanders said she wasn't aware of any changes to Spicer's plans," who "is on track to leave the White House by mid-August."

Scaramucci Reportedly Asking To Return To Ex-Im Bank; CNN Won't Hire Him. John Roberts said on Fox News Your World (7/31), "One source told me" Scaramucci "asked to go back to the Ex-Im Bank and that the President granted that wish. But at this moment, we're getting conflicting reports about that," with "Sanders saying that he's not a member of this administration in any way, shape or form."

The Hill (7/31, Concha) reported, meanwhile, that in a tweet yesterday, BuzzFeed's Steven Perlberg wrote, "A CNN spokesperson tells me that the network will not seek to hire Anthony Scaramucci as a contributor."

Attorney For Scaramucci's Wife: Divorce "Has Nothing To Do With Trump." The New York Times (7/31, Rogers) reports that "on Friday, whispers began that a third person – President Trump – had come between Mr. Scaramucci and his wife, Deidre Ball, causing her to file for divorce." That report was "published in The New York Post's Page Six column" and credited "unnamed sources." However, "at least according to Jill Stone, who is representing Ms. Ball in the divorce...the Trump-Scaramucci political union did not cause Ms. Ball to file for divorce." Said Ms. Stone, "It has nothing to do with Trump. ... Honestly, it's a private matter, and she's hoping that it just dies down."

Scaramucci Got Into "Epic Email Clash" With Fake Priebus. The New York Post (7/31, Tacopino) reports, "Trump's ousted communications director had an epic email clash with someone he thought was archenemy Reince Priebus – but it was just some internet troll." Anthony Scaramucci received a critical email from reince.priebus@mail.com and "responded with indignation" as well as "a veiled threat to destroy Priebus Shakespearean-style." Scaramucci wrote, "Read Shakespeare. Particularly Othello. You are right there. My family is fine by the way and will thrive. I know what you did. No more replies from me."

Pfeiffer Mocks Length Of Scaramucci's Tenure. The Hollywood Reporter (7/31, Barr) noted that "Dan Pfeiffer, who served as communications director during President Obama's administration, teased Scaramucci on Twitter after the news broke," writing, "Unfortunately for the Mooch, the minimum tenure to get invited to the annual WH Comms Directors Reunion is 3 weeks.”

Podesta To Kelly: “Don’t Take The Job.” Former White House Chief of Staff and Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta writes in the Washington Post (7/31), “As a former White House chief of staff, the best advice I could have given...Kelly has been overtaken by events: Don’t take the job.” Kelly “just signed up for what may truly be an impossible mission” and “walking into a White House that looks more like a cock fight than an episode of ‘The West Wing.’ (See Mooch, you can use that word without being profane.)” Podesta adds, however, that Kelly “does have a strong hand to play” in that “the president needs Kelly more than Kelly needs him. Trump simply cannot afford to have Kelly walk without disastrous consequences.”

Some Democratic lawmakers also weighed in. Sen. Jack Reed said on CNN’s Situation Room (7/31), “I think Gen. Kelly will establish more stricter guidelines, he’ll try to control the access to the President, not exclude people but make sure it is an orderly process. But ultimately it’s the President and his attitude and his approach to these issues. That’s the key factor. I think you can bring in new staff, but you have to have the President willing to listen to the staff, willing to change some of his behaviors. Some of the tweets that he puts out are not helpful strategically, and I think that’s going to be the test.”

Rep. Jim Himes said on CNN’s Situation Room (7/31) that Kelly, “a Marine, [is] well respected. If anyone can bring order to what has been a chaotic White House operation, I would expect to be a four-star Marine. I think he’s respected around town, around Washington, and I think he’s going to be respected within the White House and hopefully he will tame some of the crazy that has prevailed there in the last couple months.”

Trump Again Threatens Lawmakers’ Health Coverage.

Roll Call (7/31, Bennett) reports that President Trump “kicked off Monday by again threatening lawmakers’ health insurance.” He tweeted, “If ObamaCare is hurting people, & it is, why shouldn’t it hurt the insurance companies & why should Congress not be paying what public pays?” The Daily Caller (7/31, Donachie) reports that Trump “threatened members of Congress Saturday, promising lawmakers that if they fail to pass a bill to repeal and replace Obamacare he would quickly put an end to federal funding for Obamacare subsidies.”

The Los Angeles Times (7/31, Mascaro) looks at whether the President can act on those threats, writing that they “are not empty. The administration could simply stop the payments – which are provided to Capitol Hill lawmakers and staff much the way many employers help pay employees’ monthly insurance premiums – by dashing off new federal regulation.”

The Washington Times (7/31, Dinan, Howell) reports that “several congressional Republicans said they will work on Capitol Hill to change the law and force lawmakers to fully abide” by the ACA. But Sen. Ron Johnson “acknowledged that his plan to cancel the taxpayer subsidy was ‘probably not wildly popular’ among fellow senators.” Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-FL) said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/31), “I decline the subsidy. It’s not right, and I don’t take it because I don’t think it’s lawful. I think the President would be absolutely within his rights to cancel the Obama rule that conferred this subsidy on Congress.”

Politico (7/31, Demko) reports that the President could also “at any time could make good on a threat to scrap crucial Obamacare payments to insurers – a decision that could raise Obamacare customers’ costs and potentially leave tens of thousands more without any coverage options next year.” On the CBS Evening News (7/31, story 2, 2:20, Mason), Nancy Cordes reported, “President Trump went this weekend from saying Obamacare should fail to saying he might give it a shove. ‘If a new HealthCare Bill is not approved quickly,’ he wrote, ‘BAILOUTS for Insurance Companies and BAILOUTS for Members of Congress will end very soon!’ He appeared to be referring to a major Obamacare provision, allocating federal funds to insurers in order to bring down premiums for lower-income relief.” Cordes said, “This is not an abstract debate. Insurance companies have just a few more weeks to finalize their coverage plans and their rates for 2018. If the President does yank that $7 billion, they will have to move quickly to raise rates, pull out, or sue the Administration.”

Paul: Trump May Take Executive Action On Healthcare. Breitbart (7/31, Moran) reports that Sen. Rand Paul said he spoke with the President on Monday, and “told reporters that Trump will consider taking executive action to address the many problems with the healthcare system.” Paul “has long advocated for Association Health Plans (AHPs) or plans that would allow small businesses and individuals to group together across state lines through their membership in a trade or professional association to purchase health coverage for their families and employees at a lower costs.”

Cassidy Meets With Price, Other Officials. Politico (7/31, Everett, Dawsey) reports under the headline “White House Not Letting Go Of Obamacare Repeal” that the White House “is trying to rebuild momentum for Obamacare repeal after it stalled, yet again, in the GOP Senate last week,” with Sen. Bill Cassidy meeting with HHS Secretary Price and other top officials on Monday. The Hill (7/31, Carney) reports that the Cassidy meeting follows the President’s Friday meeting with Sen. Lindsey Graham. Cassidy, Graham, and Sen. Dean Heller are drafting a proposal “that would transfer decision-making authority back to state governments.” Townhall (7/31, Benson) reports that White House officials “also met with House Freedom Caucus chairman Mark Meadows (R-NC) to brainstorm how to make the idea palatable to conservatives, according to two sources familiar with the meeting.”

Townhall (7/31, Pavlich) reports “the White House is reminding the GOP that giving up on the issue isn’t an option and pushing lawmakers to keep working until they fulfill their long stated promise to get rid of the government run legislation.” White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/31), “Obamacare has crushed the American people. ... The American people are hurting with this. We can’t just let it go. It is a promise Republicans made helped them to claim the House of Representatives in 2010. It helped Republicans win the Senate in 2014. It’s a consistent promise we have made to the voter that we are going to repeal and replace Obamacare. We are one vote short at this point. We are not going to give up on our effort to make sure that this promise is delivered upon.”

USA Today (7/31, Jackson) reports that the bipartisan House Problem Solvers Caucus, co-chaired by Reps. Josh Gottheimer (D-NJ) and Tom Reed (R-NY), has put forth a proposal that “would abandon any pretense of repealing the Affordable Care Act...while boosting spending, repealing one tax, and relaxing regulations.” It would “provide mandatory funding for ‘cost sharing reduction’ payments to insurance companies,” “create a stability fund that states can use to reduce premiums and limit insurer losses,” and “repeal the 2.3% sales tax on medical devices,” among other things. The Washington Post (7/31) praises the effort in an editorial headlined “Finally, A Real Plan To Fix Obamacare,” writing, “The caucus’s plan is not the only conceivable Obamacare fix, but it is a serious, generally sensible proposal.”

Politico (7/31, Vielkind) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer “said Monday he has heard from 10 of his Republican colleagues in response to his call for a bipartisan approach to health care legislation.” However, the AP (7/31, Fram) writes that though “Republican, Democratic and even bipartisan plans for reshaping parts of the Obama health care law are proliferating in Congress,” they have “iffy prospects at best, and there were no signs Monday that GOP leaders have chosen a fresh pathway.”

Reuters (7/31, Cornwell) reports that Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch said in an interview “that senators for now are too divided to keep working on healthcare overhaul legislation and that he and other senior Republicans will take that message to the White House.” The Washington Post (7/31, Sullivan) reports that other Senate GOP leaders also “signaled Monday that they intend to move on from health care to other legislative priorities.” Sen. John Thune said, “We’ve had our vote, and we’re moving on to tax reform.” Sen. Roy Blunt similarly said, “I think it’s time to move on to something else. Come back to healthcare when we’ve had more time to get beyond the moment we’re in – see if we can’t put some wins on the board.” Thune and Blunt are both part of the leadership.

WTimes Analysis: McCain Now A “Hero” To “Leftists.” The Washington Times (7/31, Richardson) writes, “Not long ago, Sen. John McCain was reviled by leftists as a war-mongering hothead, but now he’s their hero, thanks to his vote to preserve” the ACA.

LePage Criticized Collins At Weekend Event. The Washington Times (7/31, Persons) reports that Maine Gov. Paul LePage “rallied against Sen. Susan Collins, a fellow Republican, at a pig roast over the weekend.” LePage said, “If the Republican base – which is the 290,000 people that voted for me [in 2014] tell her, ‘We don’t want you; you’re not winning the primary,’ she’ll back down.” LePage “is term-limited and cannot run in 2018. Ms. Collins has not formally declared her intention to run for governor, but expressed interest in a possible run. She said she’d make a decision this fall.”

Lieberman: Failure To Seek Bipartisan Support Killed 1993 Clinton Healthcare Plan. Ex-Sen. Joe Lieberman argues in a Wall Street Journal (7/31) op-ed that in 1993, he and Sen. Patrick Moynihan urged President Clinton and Hillary Clinton to take a bipartisan approach on healthcare, but they chose to seek passage with only Democratic support. Lieberman writes that Moynihan proved that big reforms can only happen with bipartisan support.

Short: Trump Will Travel To Make Case For Tax Reform.

Reuters (7/31, Gibson) reports that President Trump, “who has been criticized for not doing enough to help pass health care legislation, will do more traveling to try to drum up support for tax legislation,” according to White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short. The President “could travel to some Midwest states like Michigan and Wisconsin that he won during the 2016 presidential campaign but are still represented by Democrats in Congress.”

Short said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/31), “We need to get this economy going and the principles of our tax reform are three. One is it needs to be simpler and more fair... Two, we need to provide middle class tax relief. ... Third is a corporate section of tax relief. That is that too many companies have left America because the corporate tax rates are too high here. We want to save jobs. We want to keep jobs here in America. ... We need to lower that rate so we can make sure jobs are protected in America.”

Bloomberg News (7/31, Mohsin, Sink) reports Short said at an Americans For Prosperity event that the White House has “an aggressive schedule” on tax reform aimed at House passage in October and Senate passage in November. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said at the event that the Administration and GOP congressional leaders were in a “heavy drive toward tax reform.”

Politico (7/31, Lorenzo) says that “Short’s ambitious timeline is the most specific laid out by the White House or Congress in recent months. It tracks with a joint statement issued by administration and congressional negotiators last week, which said, ‘Our expectation is for this legislation to move through the committees this fall, under regular order, followed by consideration on the House and Senate floors.’”

The New York Times (7/31, Peters, Rappeport) says that the event at which Short and Mnuchin spoke was “a show of unity with one of the Republican Party’s biggest financial backers,” writing that Americans For Prosperity is “the political network funded by Charles G. and David H. Koch.”

Short: Bannon’s Proposed Tax Increase Not “On The Table Right Now.” Bloomberg News (7/31, Epstein) reports Short said that Steve Bannon’s proposed “top income-tax rate of 44 percent for Americans earning more than $5 million per year isn’t under consideration.” Short told Fox News, “I don’t think that that’s on the table right now, to be honest with you. We don’t believe that raising taxes is the way to encourage growth.”

Hatch: 15 Percent Corporate Tax Rate “Very Unlikely.” Reuters (7/31, Morgan) reports Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch said in an interview that the Administration will face a challenge in reducing the US corporate income tax rate, even though he supports the effort. Hatch said, “The President said he wants to get it down to 15 percent. That’s very unlikely. In fact, it would be kind of miraculous if we could get it down to 25 percent or less. I’d like to get it down to around 20 percent. I’d love to get it at 15 percent if we could.”

Brady: “Tax Reform Needs To Be Permanent.” House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (7/31) that “the key is permanence. Whatever we do on tax reform, we really want businesses to make a long-term investment, decisions that drive jobs and drive paychecks in a big way. My view is tax reform needs to be permanent. To do that, it has to balance within the budget.”

WTimes Analysis: EPA Would Face Tough Fight To Reverse Greenhouse Gas Endangerment Finding.

The Washington Times (7/31, Wolfgang) reports that the Trump Administration’s EPA has not begun “reversing the agency’s 2009 endangerment finding on greenhouse gases,” a task that “would be its toughest fight,” and which “specialists” say would be “an uphill climb” that would “start an unprecedented legal war with environmentalists, states and a host of other litigants.” EPA Administrator Pruitt “hasn’t said one way or the other whether he plans to go after the endangerment finding, which provided the legal underpinning for much of the Obama administration’s agenda inside the EPA.” The Times adds that doing so “could prove a futile exercise” and “sources familiar with the debate inside the EPA say the administrator believes the massive fight to kill the endangerment finding wouldn’t be worth the trouble.”

Klobuchar: Nation Needs Bipartisan Infrastructure Plan.

In an op-ed for USA Today (7/31), Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) argues that Republican and Democratic lawmakers must work together to pass a national infrastructure investment plan, recalling her own experience of having a bridge near her home collapse for lack of repairs, killing 13 and injuring 145. She also points to the American Society of Civil Engineers’ “D+” grading of American infrastructure and asserts, “If our deteriorating infrastructure goes unaddressed, it will cost our economy nearly $4 trillion by 2025, leading to the loss of 2.5 million jobs.” She concludes that an infrastructure plan, such as that offered by Senate Democrats, would offer critical renovations and create millions of jobs.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Police See Through Trump’s Tough Talk.” A New York Times (7/31) editorial says that the “backlash” from law enforcement against President Trump’s speech in which he “urg[ed] police officers to rough up suspects arrested in their campaign against MS-13,” says “something about how forward-looking police officials think about their responsibilities.” Many have found that “enforcement strategies based in brutality make it difficult to solve crimes – because they alienate communities from the law, making it harder for officers to do their jobs.” Trump, the Times argues, “might bear this in mind the next time he opens his mouth on this subject.”

“Drop The Bluster On North Korea.” A New York Times (8/1, Board) editorial says President Trump “needs to face the reality that he cannot solve” the North Korean nuclear threat “by proxy, that he must intervene directly and that he should do so soon,” even if China does not participate. The Times says “Trump should drop the bluster and dispatch Secretary of State Rex Tillerson or some other high-level envoy to Pyongyang to explore whether there is any basis for negotiations” without preconditions. The Times concedes whether Pyongyang would even agree to such talks is unclear, but its willingness will never be known “unless someone goes and asks them.”

Washington Post.

“We’re On The Road To A New Cold War.” A Washington Post (7/31) editorial says the US and Russia have “descended to a new low point in relations, with waves of sanctions and escalating retaliation.” The Post argues that the current tension is “a response to bad choices” taken “deliberately” by President Vladimir Putin, perhaps for his “own reasons of domestic politics and foreign policy.” While it is “important for both Washington and Moscow to keep talking,” the Post says Putin “should not expect the West to suddenly forgive or forget his bad choices.”

“Police Brutality Is No Joke, Mr. President.” The Washington Post (7/31) argues in an editorial that President Trump’s “remarks encouraging police to use excessive force,” threaten to “do greater damage” than any of the other “irresponsible things” he has said, “and there have been far too many.” The Post says it was “heartening” that “police officials from across the country distance[d] themselves from – with many firmly denouncing – the president’s comments giving a seeming wink and nod to police brutality,” and concludes that Trump’s “paean to gratuitous use of force sends the wrong message to police and to the communities they serve.”

“Finally, A Real Plan To Fix Obamacare.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/31) praises a healthcare proposal from the House Problem Solvers Caucus, writing, “The caucus’s plan is not the only conceivable Obamacare fix, but it is a serious, generally sensible proposal.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Government Opioid Abuse.” A Wall Street Journal (7/31) editorial faults state and local governments for filing lawsuits against prescription opioid makers alleging fraud and deceptive marketing practices, arguing that the suits are an effort to pad state budgets that have been decimated by skyrocketing labor and pension costs.

“Kelly Sends A Message.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/31) praises new White House Chief of Staff Kelly’s move to oust Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci, which it sees as setting a new tone and clearly establishing that he’s in charge.

“Venezuela’s Mocked Election.” A Wall Street Journal (7/31) editorial urges the US to sanction Venezuelan oil exports, which it says are crucial to President Nicolás Maduro’s survival.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Since we went away for vacation, Sean Spicer's out, Reince Priebus is out. Trumpcare is dead. And Kim Jong-Un has a missile that can reach New York. And weirdly, I don't feel tired from all the winning yet. I really don't."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President has been very busy repealing and replacing his staff."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, Donald Trump tweeted about Reince Priebus, who he fired. He wrote, 'We accomplished a lot together, and I am proud of him,' which that's two lies in one sentence."

Stephen Colbert: "Yes, the Mooch is toast. The front-stabber has been back-stabbed. He said he was going to fire everybody, and you got to admit, he delivered."

Stephen Colbert: "According to White House sources, Kelly let the Mooch go because he wanted 'more structure, less of 'Game Of Thrones.'" That's not a fair comparison. With 'Game of Thrones,' you have to wait a whole week for a new beheading."

Stephen Colbert: "At 8:30 a.m. this morning, Trump tweeted that there was no White House chaos. And then, six hours later, Scaramucci was out. Evidently, 'no chaos' wasn't bragging; it was complaining."

Stephen Colbert: "Previous North Korean missiles had the range to reach Hawaii and Alaska, but this new missile has 'the range to hit Chicago.' But I lived in Chicago for years, and I have a hard time believing Chicagoans would be scared by this. For Pete's sake, the Cubs won the World Series, they know the end is near."

Trevor Noah: "Wait, what? Scaramucci out? He just got here! I just bought the Scaramucci 2017 jersey!"

Trevor Noah: "People are fired so quickly that the White House ghost has no idea who to haunt."

Trevor Noah: "Some of the critics of the President are concerned Trump seems to be surrounding himself with generals. General John Kelly, General Mattis, General McMaster and, of course, general anesthesia."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, President Trump officially removed Anthony Scaramucci as his communications director. And this is a little awkward: When Scaramucci called an Uber to pick him up at the White House, Sean Spicer was driving."

Jimmy Fallon: "And get this, Scaramucci's official start date was supposed to be August 15, or as Trump put it, 'See, we're setting so many records. He's the first person to ever get fired before they start working.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Scaramucci actually missed the birth of his son last week because he was with Trump. So he, this is real, he texted his wife congratulations. Trump was like, 'You don't text your wife after she has your baby. You tweet her.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to the New York Times, Trump removed Scaramucci at the request of incoming Chief of Staff John Kelly. And when he heard that, Reince Priebus laughed for the first time in 18 months.”

Seth Meyers: “After North Korea tested a new intercontinental ballistic missile on Friday, Kim Jong-Un issued a statement saying the whole US mainland is within his reach. Still not within his reach: the top shelf.”

Seth Meyers: “New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie was caught on video this weekend confronting a Chicago Cubs fan at a baseball game in Milwaukee. I don’t know. If you want to shock me, catch him on video governing in New Jersey.”

Seth Meyers: “A new report found that Montauk is the most expensive beach destination in the country. Though there’s one in Jersey that will cost you your whole career.”

Seth Meyers: “But just think about that. Scaramucci got Priebus fired, and then, he got fired two days later. That’s like telling someone, ‘See you in hell,’ and then literally showing up in hell the next day.”

Lawmakers Urge Feds To Bar Atlantic, Eastern Gulf Drilling.

Law360 (8/14, Lidgett) reports that "a bipartisan coalition of more than 60 U.S. House of Representatives members told the federal government on Friday to make the Atlantic Ocean and the eastern Gulf of Mexico off-limits for oil and gas leasing." Rep. Frank Pallone Jr. and Rep. Frank A. LoBiondo "led a group of lawmakers in sending a letter to Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke saying that the two areas should not be included in the National Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program."

NJ Spotlight (8/15, Johnson) reports that in a letter, New Jersey's congressional delegation wrote, "The reopening of this process not only endangers New Jersey's coastal economy, but also ignores the will of the local communities that would be most impacted by oil drilling – including over 120 municipalities, 1,200 elected officials, 41,000 businesses, and 500,000 fishing families from up and down the Atlantic coast who have all voiced their opposition to oil and gas activities." The Trump Administration will "close comments on Thursday on the first step to develop a new program for oil and gas exploration on the outer continental shelf along virtually the entire nation's coasts."

Connelly: Savoring America's Public Lands, Appreciating The National Park Service.

In his column for the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (8/14, Connelly), Joel Connelly writes that "public lands belong to us, and we ought defend them." Connelly criticizes President Trump, who – "unlike visionary predecessors – Republican presidents who designated monuments in Utah that became great national parks --" has "ordered a 'review' of national monuments created by his three predecessors." Connelly concludes that "Trump is threatening to become a Teddy Roosevelt in reverse."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Officials Schedule Closed-Door Meetings For Roadway Disputes.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (8/14, Stelnicki) reports that "more closed-door meetings are scheduled this week between Santa Fe County, four pueblos and the U.S. Department of the Interior regarding roadway disputes that threaten to impede funding for a regional water system planned in the Pojoaque Basin." According to the article, "the meetings Wednesday and Thursday at the state Capitol concern county roads said by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to trespass on tribal land." The article notes that "the discussions being closed to the public has drawn criticism, notably from the New Mexico Foundation for Open Government and Brian Egolf, speaker of the state House of Representatives."

Newtok Village Holds Ribbon Cutting At Mertarvik.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (8/14, Trudeau) reports that a ribbon cutting was held in Mertarvik last Thursday following “a decade-long project to move the village of Newtok.” According to the article, “the new community is safely above the rising water, which threatens village of Newtok.” However, “the biggest uncertainty threatening continued progress at Metarvik is what kind of federal funding will be available.” Lynn Polacca, the Bureau of Indian Affairs Acting Regional Director, “said Newtok is only one of many villages at risk from climate change.” Polacca “said the BIA is able to help fund roads but does not have as much money available for housing.” He said, “Anything tied to transportation, that’s what we fund for BIA, and we’ve got limited funding for housing but you know, we try to help out where we can.”

Federal Government Halts Drilling At North Dakota Well Site.

The AP (8/14) reports that “the federal government has halted the drilling of oil wells near a North Dakota resort boat ramp at the request of the Three Affiliated Tribes.” Tribal Chairman Mark Fox “says the tribe appealed the federal permit of the drilling site because it violates tribal setback requirements from the lake.” The Interior Board of Land Appeals has “delayed the project in response to the tribe’s appeal last week.”

Wash. Tribal Group Can Offer Gambling, 9th Circ. Told.

Law360 (8/14, Westney) reports that “Frank’s Landing Indian Community has urged the Ninth Circuit to overturn a Washington district judge’s ruling that the tribal group can’t conduct gambling, saying that it has the right to do so under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act even though it’s not fully recognized by the federal government.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Judge’s Rulings Lead To Tense Moments In Bundy Case In Vegas.

The AP (8/14, Ritter) reports that “restrictions placed by a federal judge on what defendants can say about being at Cliven Bundy’s ranch in April 2014 are leading to tense moments in the Las Vegas retrial of four men accused of wielding assault-style weapons to stop federal agents from rounding up cattle belonging to the anti-government figure.” Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro “refused Monday to order a mistrial sought by the defense attorney for Eric Parker, a defendant who Navarro ordered off the witness stand last week before telling the jury to disregard his testimony.” According to Las Vegas lawyer Robert Draskovich, “such a dramatic step involving a defendant in the presence of a jury is unusual and might draw scrutiny from the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Republic (8/14, Anglen, Thomas) and the Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/14, Ferrara).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Greens, Industry Upset About Gulf Exploration Rules.

E&E Publishing (8/14, Gronewold) reports on the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management’s programmatic environmental impact statement on “geophysical exploration for oil and gas in the Gulf of Mexico.” The agency “generally concluded that allowing more seismic testing in the Gulf poses minimal risk to marine habitats.” It is recommending “some restrictions” and critics say the proposed rules “don’t go far enough in protecting marine life.” Meanwhile, the International Association of Geophysical Contractors said that the rules “are unscientific” and put “energy exploration at risk.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

A Nearly $17-billion Water Project Is Being Planned For California. What Will It Cost The Southland?

The Los Angeles Times (8/14, Boxall) reports that “decision time is approaching for the agencies that will have to pick up the nearly $17-billion tab for building two massive water tunnels under the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta, the heart of the state’s water works.” According to the article, “the board of the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California commits to paying roughly a quarter of the bill could make or break the project." At a Monday meeting, "speakers representing business and labor endorsed the project, saying it was needed to maintain reliable water supplies for the state's most populous region." However, "opponents predicted that MWD would wind up paying far more than the staff estimate, and argued the money would be better spent developing local supplies."

Hydropower Project To Begin.

The La Junta \(CO\) Tribune-Democrat (8/14, Woodka) reports that "construction of a hydroelectric generation plant at Pueblo Dam will begin in September after an agreement between the Southeastern Colorado Water Conservancy District and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation was signed on Friday." The Lease of Power Privilege "clears the way for the hydropower plant to connect to Pueblo Dam, a federally owned structure." The plant is expected to be online by spring of 2018.

Additional coverage was provided by Hydroworld (8/13) and Stars And Stripes (8/14, Swanson).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Oilfield Suppliers Encroaching On Threatened West Texas Lizard.

The Texas Tribune (8/14) reports that "a voluntary plan the state of Texas crafted to protect a tiny West Texas reptile — and avoid its listing as an endangered species — is facing a significant threat from companies that mine the fine-grain sand oil producers use for hydraulic fracturing," according to a letter Texas Comptroller Glenn Hegar's office sent late last week to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "updating the federal agency on the status of the so-called 'Texas Conservation Plan' for the dunes sagebrush lizard." In a letter to the FWS on Thursday, Robert Gulley — the head of the comptroller's Division of Economic Growth and Endangered Species Management — "said that more than a dozen 'frac-sand' companies are planning mining operations in four West Texas counties that are home to prime dune sagebrush lizard habitat." According to the article, "while most of the 15 companies that have begun or are currently planning to mine sand in the area have expressed a willingness to revise operations to help protect the threatened reptile — and four have taken major measures to do so — the letter says that 11 still are planning to excavate in areas where several lizards have been sighted."

75 Years After WWII Internment, St.

George Island Receives Apology From USFWS. KUCB-FM Unalaska, AK (8/14, Kraegel) reports that "seventy-five years after supervising the Unangan internment during World War II, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has finally apologized to the people of St. George Island." Visiting the island last month, Wes Kuhns said the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "is ready to take responsibility for its actions." Kuhns, acting captain of a USFWS research vessel, said, "I'm here to deliver a long overdue apology for the tragedies that befell the Aleut people on our watch."

Maine Voices: Protect The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Because It's God's Creation.

In an op-ed for the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (8/15, Killmer), the Rev. Richard Killmer makes the religious argument for protecting the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge from drilling. According to Killmer, "As people of faith, we are called to protect and celebrate God's creation," and "there is perhaps no place where that calling is more important to live out than the Arctic Refuge." He also says that "as people of faith, we are also called to care for God's people — especially the most vulnerable," and "a clear way to manifest our calling to care for our neighbor is to protect the Gwich'in people and their way of life."

National Park Service

Total Solar Eclipse Expected To Send 'Record Crowds' To U.S.

National Parks, Say Officials. Fox News (8/14) reports that the National Park Service is "expecting hordes of skyward-gazing visitors to descend upon its grounds" for the total solar eclipse on August 21. Brian Carlstrom, Deputy Director of Natural Resources for National Park Service, said, "With all the hype, with all the attention that's being directed towards the Eclipse, we are really anticipating near or at record crowds for the parks across the country." The NPS isn't "exactly sure how many people are planning to pop by, but they're beefing up security and staff accordingly." Carlstrom said, "We're expecting huge crowds. No idea of exactly how many, but we know they're going to be big."

National Park Service's Birthday Means A Freebie Gift For Everyone.

The New York Daily News (8/14, Scotti) reports that the National Park Service is "turning 101 years old and is celebrating by offering free admission to each of its gorgeous locations on Friday, Aug. 25." Admission will "also be waived on National Public Lands Day on Sept. 30 and during Veterans Day weekend, Nov. 11 and 12."

Additional coverage was provided by Tucson News Now \(AZ\) (8/14, Walton).

Inside The Beltway: TLC: Iwo Jima Memorial Gets $5 Million Upgrade.

The Washington Times (8/14, Harper) reports that "the revered U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial — often referred to as the Iwo Jima Memorial — will get new gilding on its engravings and pedestal, plus a meticulous cleaning and wax of its five immense 32-foot bronze figures, a 60-foot flagpole and granite base." Also planned are "updated lighting, new landscaping for the surrounding parkland and improved infrastructure, according to the National Park Service." The project was "made possible through a $5.4 million donation from businessman and philanthropist David M. Rubenstein, a man who believes in what he calls 'patriotic philanthropy.'"

Baltimore Mayor Pugh Pledges To Remove Confederate Monuments.

The Baltimore Sun (8/14, Broadwater) reports that Baltimore Mayor Catherine Pugh "pledged to Monday take down Confederate-era monuments in Baltimore — and said she has asked contractors for estimates on how much it will cost." Former Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake "appointed a commission of academics and officials to review Baltimore's four Confederate monuments in 2015 after the shooting deaths of nine African-Americans in a historically black South Carolina church by a white man who had posted photographs of himself with the Confederate battle flag." The memorials include the Confederate Soldiers and Sailors Monument, the Confederate Women's Monument, the Roger B. Taney Monument, and the Robert E. Lee and Thomas. J. "Stonewall" Jackson Monument. The commission appointed by Rawlings-Blake "suggested the Lee and Jackson statue be offered to the National Park Service to place in Chancellorsville, Va., where the two Confederate generals last met in 1863."

Additional coverage was provided by the Baltimore \(MD\) Sun (8/13, Broadwater) and the Baltimore \(MD\) Sun (8/14, Rodricks).

Gettysburg Park Hasn't Received Complaints About Confederate Monuments, Won't Remove Any Statues.

The Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (8/14, Robinson) reports that "in the wake of white supremacist rally and ensuing violence in Charlottesville, Virginia, Gettysburg National Military Park has not received any new complaints about its Confederate monuments at the park, said spokeswoman Katie Lawhon." According to the article, "more than 1,300 monuments, markers and plaques are housed at the park to memorialize the historic battle, including a statue of Confederate General Robert E. Lee and a Confederate flag on display in the museum." The park "maintains that the memorials are important to the cultural landscape and has no plans to remove any monuments or statues."

City Hears NPS Idea For Land Donation.

The Yankton \(SD\) Press & Dakotan (8/14, Nielsen) reports that "the City of Yankton may be giving a portion of city-owned land to the National Park Service (NPS) for additional access to the Missouri National Recreation River (MNRR)." During a regular meeting of the Yankton City Commission on Monday, "the board discussed a proposal to draft an agreement to transfer 34 acres of land on the Nebraska side of the Missouri River to the NPS." MNRR Superintendent Rick Clark "said that getting the land could be a huge boost to the park's ability to obtain funding for trail improvements."

River Deaths, Millions In Damage During '17 Wyoming Flooding.

The AP (8/14, Moen) reports that "the high volume of water that poured down Wyoming rivers and streams from a melting record mountain snowpack this year is being blamed for several river deaths and causing tens of millions of dollars in damage to roads, recreation sites and other infrastructure, according to initial estimates." Notably, in Grand Teton National Park, the National Park Service has “spent about $600,000 to reopen a paved road that was washed out by the Gros Ventre River, park spokeswoman Denise Germann said.” However, “Germann said visitors coming to the park for the eclipse, which passes right over Grand Teton, shouldn’t be impeded by anything associated with the earlier flooding.”

No Date Set For Release Of Chimney Tops 2 Fire Review.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (8/14, Ahillen) reports that “the much awaited Chimney Tops 2 fire review has been seven months in the making and now the National Park Service is not saying when it will be finally released.” Bill Kaage, chief of the NPS’s Division of Fire and Aviation Management, said, “We are aware that there is significant interest in this report and we are just as eager to learn from it as the general public. Given the complexity of the review, we can’t rush it, but we won’t delay either. The report is in the final stages and we plan to release shortly.”

Interns Find Tiny Crustaceans In Arkansas National Park.

The AP (8/14) reports that interns at Hot Springs National Park have “discovered species of a crustacean that hadn’t before been documented in the park’s waters.” Interns Paul Solis and Meg O’Connor “found new species of Ostracod in the park’s thermal waters.” They “discovered at least five species that hadn’t previously been seen in the park and rediscovered two species.”

National Park Service Considering Improvements To Roosevelt Island.

The ARLnow \(VA\) (8/14, Teale) reports that the National Park Service is “studying several improvements to Roosevelt Island, including a proposal to combat the invasive emerald ash borer that killed trees at the site earlier this year.” the article notes that “among a number of issues being examined by NPS for the island, located off the George Washington Memorial Parkway near Rosslyn, is a plan for the future of the hundreds of ash trees.” The park service “closed the island in June to remove diseased trees after the ash borer came through, and is now considering if the trees should be replaced with more ash trees or another species.”

Public Gets More Time To Comment On Zion Reservation Plan.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/14, Brean) reports that the National Park Service is “giving people a few extra days to comment on a plan to require reservations to get into Zion National Park.” The initial public comment period “for Zion’s conceptual visitor-use plan was set to end Monday, but the park service extended the deadline through Friday because the website for submissions was down for maintenance over the weekend.” The public will have “one more chance to weigh in on efforts to address overcrowding at Zion in the fall of 2018, when the park service is slated to release its completed visitor management plan.”

Bellingham Climber’s Body Recovered From Glacier.

The AP (8/14) reports that “the body of a 61-year-old Bellingham woman and mountaineer has been recovered from a glacier in North Cascades National Park.” According to North Cascades National Park Service spokeswoman Denise Shultz, “search and rescue personnel from North Cascades and Mount Rainier national parks recovered Susan Bennett’s body Saturday.”

8 Kentucky Sites Added To National Register.

The AP (8/14) reports that “Kentucky officials say the National Park Service has added eight sites around the state to the National Register of Historic Places.” The sites include “a Jewish cemetery in Middlesboro, a wholesale grocery warehouse in Richmond, a Victorian home school for girls in Louisville, a motel near Cave City, a church in Paducah and homes in Highland heights, Greensburg and Georgetown.”

Downtown Redmond Canal Named To National Historic Register.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (8/14) reports that “the Pilot Butte Canal: Downtown Redmond Segment Historic District is among Oregon’s latest entries in the National Register of Historic Places, state officials said Monday.”

Another Leap For The Great Falls.

The North Jersey \(NJ\) Media Group (8/14) editorializes that “the next phase of the Great Falls national park – a $3.2 million project slated to include the creation of an amphitheater on an embankment facing the waterfall – may soon be getting under way.” The paper says that “the greater development of the park is seen by many as an economic driver for the city, which is in desperate need of ratables." Funding and investments for the park "represent vision and hope for Paterson's future, which, like the past, is linked inextricably with the Great Falls."

North Korea Backs Off Threat To Hit Guam.

The Los Angeles Times (8/14, Hennigan, Kaiman) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un has "decided not to launch missiles toward Guam, Pyongyang's state media reported Tuesday, easing the immediate threat of an attack." The North Korean statement, however, warned that Kim could change his mind "if the Yankees persist in their extremely dangerous reckless actions," in which case the country's artillerymen would "wring the windpipes of the Yankees and point daggers at their necks." The Times says announcement appeared shortly after Defense Secretary Mattis warned that an attack could quickly escalate to war, "although it's unclear if the developments were linked." Breitbart (8/14, Pollak) calls North Korea's decision to "back down" a "major victory for the United States, as it was achieved – apparently – with no concessions to the regime, and after a sustained 'Twitter war' of words" with Trump. The Washington Examiner (8/14, Siegel) says the "change in course" by Pyongyang comes after Trump threatened it last week with "fire and fury."

The Washington Post (8/14, Fifield) reports Kim "appeared to take a step back from the brink of nuclear war," but, "as is often the case with North Korea, the message was mixed: Kim was inspecting the missile unit tasked with preparing to strike near Guam, and photos released by state media showed a large satellite image of Andersen Air Force Base on Guam on the screen beside the leader."

The AP (8/14) reported hours earlier that North Korea said its military presented leader Kim with plans to launch intermediate-range missiles into waters near Guam. NBC Nightly News (8/14, story 6, 2:05, Holt) reported that while Kim is said to be "reviewing plans for the missile strike to launch toward...Guam," if North Korea "actually goes through with it, Defense Secretary Mattis promised swift military action." Andrea Mitchell said Mattis "confidently [told] reporters the US would know within moments if a North Korean missile is fired at Guam, and we'll take it out, adding if they fire at the US, it could escalate very quickly." Reuters (8/14) quotes Mattis as saying, "If they fire at the United States, it could escalate into war very quickly."

The AP (8/14, Burns) reports that when asked how the US would respond, Mattis "initially declined to say," but when pressed, "he said that if US radars and other detection and tracking systems determine that a missile was going to fall into the sea, short of Guam, then the matter would be taken to President Donald Trump for a decision on how to respond."

Meanwhile, ABC World News Tonight (8/14, story 5, 0:40, Muir) reported Gen. Joseph Dunford traveling in the region on Monday warned that US is prepared to use "the full range of its capabilities if North Korea follows through on its threats of force." Dunford told ABC's Martha Raddatz that the US military "is ready in case diplomacy fails." The CBS Evening News (8/14, story 5, 1:50, Mason) reported Dunford began a tour of Asia, seeking to "reassure South Korea's president, Moon Jae-In. Dunford says the US still prefers diplomacy to force, but that the US is ready to use the full range of its capabilities to respond to any attack." The US staged joint military exercises with Japan on Monday and "will go ahead with exercises in South Korea next week, something both China and North Korea oppose."

The New York Times (8/14, Choe) reports both Dunford and Moon "said on Monday that they hoped to avoid armed conflict with North Korea, as China vowed to enforce new United Nations penalties." The Times says the developments "suggested that officials of the United States, South Korea and China are seeking to emphasize a message in Asia of lowering tensions after President Trump's apocalyptic threats last week." Also reporting Dunford's remarks, USA Today (8/14, Onyanga-Omara) notes that both National Security Adviser McMaster and CIA Director Pompeo insisted Sunday that "the US is not on the brink of nuclear war with North Korea, despite President Trump's recent rhetoric."

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (8/14), "I happen to believe Kim Jong-un is not irrational. He's reckless, pushing it, extremely ambitious, but extremely smart. ... I find it hard to believe he would actually launch at Guam. But if he does, we are looking at something extremely serious and I would imagine that the US military is quite prepared with plans for a massive attack where that happen."

WSJournal Analysis: Development Follows Chinese Imports Ban Announcement. The Wall Street Journal (8/14, Wong, Cheng, Schlesinger) reports North Korea's announcement came hours after China said it would ban imports of North Korean coal, iron, and seafood, starting Tuesday. The Journal says the move by China followed a phone call over the weekend between President Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Seib: Mattis, Tillerson Engaged In Good-Cop-Bad-Cop Approach. Wall Street Journal (8/14) columnist Gerald F. Seib writes that while some have accused Defense Secretary Mattis and Secretary of State Tillerson of sending mixed messages on North Korea, they are engaged in a classic good-cop-bad-cop approach. Seib says their joint op-ed in the Journal on Monday was further evidence.

Analysts: US Missile Defense System "Effective But Not Foolproof." USA Today (8/14, Michaels) reports that if North Korea fires a missile toward Guam, "there is a good chance that the US military or an ally will be able to shoot it down." The US and its allies in the Pacific "have an effective, though not foolproof, defense against a North Korea missile launch in the region, analysts say." Thomas Karako of the Center for Strategic and International Studies said, "We have an important but limited degree of protection. Nobody thinks that this is a perfect shield."

Study Links North Korea Missile Program To Engines From Ukrainian Plant. The New York Times (8/14, Broad, Sanger) reports North Korea's recent successful intercontinental ballistic missile tests were "made possible by black-market purchases of powerful rocket engines probably from a Ukrainian factory with historical ties to Russia's missile program, according to an expert analysis being published Monday and classified assessments by American intelligence agencies." After a series of failures, North Korea "changed designs and suppliers in the past two years, according to a new study" by Michael Elleman, a missile expert at the International Institute for Strategic Studies. The information, says the Times, "may solve the mystery of how North Korea began succeeding so suddenly after a string of fiery missile failures." According to the Times, Elleman's "detailed analysis is public confirmation of what intelligence officials have been saying privately for some time: The new missiles are based on a technology so complex that it would have been impossible for the North Koreans to have switched gears so quickly themselves."

Mattis, Tillerson: US, Allies Are Holding Pyongyang Accountable.

Defense Secretary Mattis and Secretary of State Tillerson write in the Wall Street Journal (8/13) that North Korea's recent ballistic missile and ICBM tests have escalated tensions to levels not experienced since the Korean War. In response, they say, the US and its allies are applying diplomatic and economic pressure on North Korea to achieve denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. North Korea, they argue, now faces a choice: take a new path toward peace or continue further down the path of isolation.

McMaster, Pompeo: War With North Korea Not "Imminent." National Security Adviser McMaster and CIA Director Pompeo appeared on the Sunday morning shows, where they played down the risk of war with North Korea. The Washington Times (8/13, Boylan) says their remarks "came after a week of significantly heightened rhetoric between Pyongyang and Washington over North Korea's nuclear ambitions." On Sunday, the Times says, McMaster "appeared to take a cooler line of rhetoric." The officials, USA Today (8/13, Wolf) reports, "sought to assure Americans on Sunday that the nation is not on the brink of nuclear war with North Korea, despite the president's recent threats." McMaster and Pompeo "said an attack by North Korea does not appear imminent, and that the threat of war is no closer today than it was last week."

NBC Nightly News (8/13, story 5, 2:30, Snow) reported that while Guam "remains on edge," McMaster "said today the US is no closer to war now than it was a week ago." On ABC's This Week (8/13), McMaster said, "I think we're not closer to war than a week ago, but we are closer to war than we were a decade ago. The danger is much greater and is growing every day...so what we can no longer do is afford to procrastinate." On CBS' Face The Nation (8/13, Dickerson), Pompeo said he does not believe there is an imminent threat and that "the American people should know that this Administration is doing everything within its power." The Washington Post (8/13, Wagner) reports McMaster said Trump last week "made clear that the United States will not tolerate our citizens or our allies being threatened by this rogue regime."

The AP (8/13, Lardner) reports that while the officials said a military confrontation with North Korea's is not imminent, "they cautioned that the possibility of war is greater than it was a decade ago." Still, both McMaster and Pompeo "tried to provide assurances that a conflict is avoidable, while also supporting Trump's tough talk." McMaster stressed that the US is pursuing "a very determined diplomatic effort" led by Secretary of State Tillerson, but at the same time, "the US military is locked and loaded every day." Meanwhile, Pompeo said the US has a "pretty good idea" of North Korea's intentions, but he "declined to provide specifics."

The Los Angeles Times (8/13, King) reports Pompeo said Trump would consider it

“unacceptable” for North Korea to possess a nuclear-armed ballistic missile capable of striking the United States. Speaking on CBS, Pompeo said Trump had “made very clear that the United States finds it unacceptable for a rogue leader like Kim Jong Un to have the capacity of a ballistic missile with a warhead that is integrated and fully deliverable to the United States and hold America and the world at risk. He’s simply not going to permit it to happen.”

Bossert: Trump Has Not Drawn A “Red Line.” Asked on CNN’s Situation Room (8/13, Tapper) whether Trump had drawn a “red line,” White House Homeland Security Advisor Bossert said, “I think President Trump has wisely not drawn red lines” but that “I think what’s clear is the President wants to match his rhetoric with his actions and be as measured as possible. And also, I can’t stress this enough...any escalation, any conflict that” Kim Jong-un “would try to pick with the United States or its allies would lead to his rapid and immediate defeat.”

WTimes Analysis: Tillerson “Managing Fallout” From Trump’s “Rhetorical Brinkmanship.” The Washington Times (8/13, Taylor) reports that while President Trump “is in front of the rhetorical brinkmanship with North Korea,” Secretary of State Tillerson has “the tough behind-the-scenes role of managing fallout from the administration’s first genuine international crisis.” The Times calls the standoff a “defining moment” for Tillerson, who has “built a reputation for cool nonchalance under pressure that supporters say is exactly what is needed to provide a foundation of calm behind a president bent on confronting North Korea.”

Lawmakers, Former US Officials Weigh In On Threat. Sen. Lindsey Graham said on Fox News Sunday (8/13, Wallace), “I don’t think military action is imminent, but we are on a collision course with North Korea.”

Rep. Mac Thornberry cautioned on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (8/13, Bartiromo) that at some point we will have to “take what [the North Koreans] say seriously.” He said the “whole government has been surprised at the progress North Korea’s missile program has made” and that as a result of underfunded missile defense “now we’re playing catch-up” to “meet the threat.”

Former DNI James Clapper said on CNN’s State Of The Union (8/13, Tapper) that North Korea had no incentive to denuclearize and that while he would love to see that happen, he didn’t believe it is “in the cards.”

Former CIA Director Leon Panetta said on CBS’ Face The Nation (8/13, Dickerson) that he thinks “the entire country is looking to see whether or not this President has the capability to provide strong leadership for our country at a moment of crisis. ... The most important thing right now is to find a way to ensure that we do not get into a war.”

Bloomberg Analysis: Sanctions Ineffective Unless They Target Oil Supply. Bloomberg News (8/13, Curran, Lee) reports that the latest round of sanctions imposed against North Korea “will cut deep,” but “aren’t likely to deter Kim Jong Un from his ambition of developing an arsenal of nuclear-tipped missiles. That’s because Kim, who’s banking on military power to survive, has a web of illicit channels to skirt sanctions and the new curbs leave out the vital ingredient of oil.” Dennis Wilder, former senior director for Asia at the National Security Council during the George W. Bush Administration, said, “North Korea’s dependency on Chinese fuel is China’s choke hold on Pyongyang. If this goes, the North Korean air force can’t fly jets and their electricity system can’t function.”

Another Bloomberg News (8/13) report says it is “getting harder for Chinese President Xi Jinping to maintain support” for North Korea. The “prospect of nuclear war has sparked a debate” in Beijing about maintaining support for Kim.

Congressional Aide: North Korea Satellites Could Be Used For “Surprise” EMP Attack. Breitbart (8/13, Klein) reports that an “expert warned on Sunday that we are ignoring two North Korea satellites currently orbiting the US that could be used to carry out a devastating electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack.” Dr. Peter Vincent Pry, executive director of the Congressional Task Force on National and Homeland Security and chief of staff of the Congressional EMP Commission, warned, “We should not be tolerating the North Korean satellites that are orbiting over our country. There are two of them. And the intelligence community is still silent about those.”

Palau President Confident US Can Protect Pacific Region. Marianas Variety (8/14) reports that Palau President Tommy Remengesau “said he had faith that the United States ‘will do all it can to protect everyone in the region with the same commitment they have for the mainland U.S.’” Remengesau said Palau stands “with the people of Guam and the region in our concern for the well-being of everyone.”

CW Bill Going To White House For Signature.

Marianas Variety (8/12) reports that “in a special pro forma session Friday, the U.S. House of Representatives passed U.S. Congressman Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan’s bill aimed at the problem caused by Chinese construction workers using up CW permits in 2016 and 2017.” The Northern Marianas Economic Expansion Act “now goes to President Trump, who is expected to sign it into law as early as this week.” Sablan said, “Local businesses and the hospital will now be protected from another surge of new, foreign construction workers taking the limited CW permits that are needed for long-term workers in the Marianas. The 1,500 or so construction workers, who have been in the Marianas since before October 2015, and the local companies that employ them will not be affected by my bill. They can still renew their CW permits.”

Vanuatu Bans Single-Use Plastic Bottles And Bags.

The Lady Freethinker (8/11, Cunningham) reports that “the South Pacific nation of Vanuatu is making a bold push to permanently ban single-use plastic bags and bottles.” According to the article, “joining other Pacific Island countries such as the Northern Marianas, American Samoa, and the Marshall Islands, the ban will cease the import of all single-use plastics to the small island nation.”

Palau Tackles IUU Fishing With Innovative Technologies And Partnerships.

Seafood Source (8/11, Orlowski) reports that the Pacific island nation of Palau is “on the front lines of the fight against illegal, unreported and unregulated (IUU) fishing, but the small country has only one patrol boat – with two more on the way – to cover hundreds of thousands of square miles of ocean.” So Palau has “turned to innovative partnerships, including working with groups that track illegal fishing using satellite-based ship location data.” In an interview, Caleb Otto, Palau’s ambassador to the United Nations, talked about “Palau’s efforts to combat IUU fishing and the country’s decision in establishing a marine sanctuary twice the size of Mexico in 2015 that forbids nearly all fishing.”

US Sees Puerto Rico As Reservation With Nothing To Reserve.

Inter American University of Puerto Rico School of Law Professor Andrés L. Córdova writes in an op-ed in The Hill (8/14, Cordova) that, after the Puerto Rico v Sanchez Valle case and implementation of PROMESA and the financial oversight board, the US government has “put to bed the argument that claimed any kind of uniqueness to the political relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States” and that “it is clear that Puerto Rico is a territory under the plenary powers of Congress ...without limitation or reservation.” In the Sanchez Valle case, the Supreme Court noted the similarities between Puerto Rico and Native American nations, “specifically the former’s lack of inherent or original sovereignty.” Córdova proceeds to elaborate on a variety of cases that make clear the limitations of power and self-rule for Native American nations whether living on a reservation or not, and that, despite what many in Puerto Rico hope, “acquisition of territories does not necessarily imply that they are destined to become states, or that they have the full protection of the Constitution.”

Caltech And Others Get $4.9 Million For Earthquake Warning System.

The Los Angeles Daily Breeze (8/14) reports that “Caltech and six other institutions were awarded a total of $4.9 million in funds by the U.S. Geological Survey” yesterday “for the development of an earthquake-warning system on the West Coast.” Caltech was “awarded funds along with Central Washington University, UC Berkeley, the universities of Oregon, Washington and Nevada-Reno, and UNAVCO, a geological-science research nonprofit.” The USGS “also announced the purchase of about $1 million in sensor equipment to be used in the ShakeAlert system, which is designed to give residents several seconds of advance warning of an earthquake, allowing them to quickly seek shelter or take precautionary actions to limit damage.”

Pitkin County Issues Highly Detailed Topographic Maps For Public Use.

The Aspen \(CO\) Daily News (8/14, Fayhee) reports that Pitkin County government “recently made available a series of topographic maps that boast contours intervals of only two feet — making them about as detailed as those types of maps can be.” According to Mary Lackner, “GIS and application development manager for Pitkin County, the maps, which cover about a third of the county's total of 973 square miles, are part of a much larger effort spearheaded by the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS)."

Media Analyses: Trump's Monday Comments On Charlottesville Too Little, Too Late.

Coverage of President Trump's response to the weekend violence in Charlottesville, Virginia continues to be negative despite the President's more explicit condemnation of white supremacists on Monday. Trump is being criticized for both the tone and the timing of the statement, with critics saying that it was a measured and unemotional statement that came too late. Some contrast it with Trump's more emotional response to the decision of Merck's CEO to resign from an advisory council, which drew heat from Trump on Twitter. Trump also continues to be accused by several commentators of intentionally maintaining somewhat cordial relations with the so-called "alt-right."

ABC World News Tonight (8/14, lead story, 4:00, Muir) reported that Trump, "aware of the increasing pressure, for the first time since Saturday condemning hate groups by name." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "Nearly 48 hours after that car plowed into pedestrians on the streets of Charlottesville, President Trump today finally stepping before the cameras to give that hate a name." Trump: "Racism is evil. And those who cause violence in its name are criminals and thugs, including the KKK, neo-Nazis, white supremacists and other hate groups that are repugnant to everything we hold dear as Americans." NBC Nightly News (8/14, lead story, 3:20, Holt) reported, "After what, to many, came off as a tone deaf response to this weekend's racist-fueled violence in Charlottesville, President Trump today tried to find the right notes as he took to the podium again to address the tragedy." NBC's Hallie Jackson: "In unscheduled remarks, the President explicitly condemning those groups after he didn't on Saturday."

Anthony Mason said in opening the CBS Evening News (8/14, lead story, 4:00), "Two days after this domestic terror attack, and after meeting with the Attorney General and the FBI Director, the President finally condemned the hate groups by name. ... The President took a lot of heat for failing to call out white supremacists immediately after the attack." CBS' Major Garrett: "The leader of the free world, President Trump, was behind his daughter, attorney general, and vice president in denouncing white supremacists and neo-Nazis by name. On Saturday, the President implied counter-protesters and armed shield-wielding white supremacists were equally to blame."

The New York Times (8/14, Thrush) reports, "Trump bowed on Monday to overwhelming pressure that he personally condemn white supremacists...yet even Mr. Trump's allies worried that his measured remarks, delivered two days after dozens of public figures issued more forceful denunciations, came too late to reverse the self-inflicted damage on his moral standing as president." The Washington Post (8/14, Nakamura) says that Trump's "remarks, which were not on his daily public schedule, appeared hastily arranged in a bid to move the White House past the backlash to his performance over the weekend."

The Los Angeles Times (8/14, Bierman) reports, "Once he came to the lectern with the presidential seal, the president first took some time to extol his administration as he often does for various economic gains. After segueing to roughly two minutes of remarks denouncing the hate groups, Trump pivoted and left." The AP (8/14, Lemire) reports that the President left "without acknowledging reporters' shouted questions. At an event on trade later in the day, he was asked why it took two days for him to offer an explicit denunciation of the hate groups. 'They have been condemned,' Trump responded before offering a fresh criticism of some media as 'fake news.'"

The Washington Times (8/14, Boyer) reports, "Some advisers had pressed the president to give a specific condemnation of white nationalist groups, as Vice President Mike Pence had done earlier." Politico (8/14, Johnson) says Trump "caved to pressure from his senior advisers," and Townhall (8/14, Pavlich) says the remarks came "after days of harsh criticism." Breitbart (8/14, Pollak) says the "condemnation did not satisfy the mainstream media, some of whom rushed to criticize Trump for not delivering that explicit condemnation as quickly or as passionately as they believe he ought to have done."

Julie Pace of the AP (8/14) calls it a "carefully worded statement" of the kind "Americans have come to expect from their presidents after racially charged incidents." Politico (8/14, Samuelsohn, Nussbaum) writes, "Trump has mastered the art of the swaggering politician, but when tragedy strikes, he has struggled to find his footing."

Congressional Black Caucus Chairman Cedric Richmond said on CNN's Situation Room (8/14) that Trump's comments Monday afternoon were "a dollar late, and a dollar short. Had this come on Friday, it would have been a pretty strong response, but he still throws words out there to that base, that law-and-order rhetoric that he uses, is that same rhetoric during the campaign that was aimed at minorities and urban communities."

The New York Post (8/14, Jaeger) reports that the mother of Heather Heyer, who was killed in Charlottesville, "thanked President Trump Monday for finally condemning the violence that led to her daughter's death." She said in a statement, "Thank you, President Trump, for those words of comfort and for denouncing those who promote violence and hatred." But Richard Cohen writes in his Washington Post (8/14) column that Heyer "may not be the last to be killed by hate. Others may follow because the president of the United States winks at hatred and responds to a hate march with a pudding of a statement." ABC World News Tonight (8/14, story 3, 1:55, Muir) and CBS Evening News (8/14, story 2, 2:55, Mason) had features on some of the victims.

On CNN's Situation Room (8/14), Jim Acosta called Trump's comments "forceful but scripted." Acosta added that Trump "seemed defensive when asked about the comments here at the White House where he finally condemned white supremacists, something he failed to do by name over the weekend." Sara Murray said on CNN's The Lead (8/14) that this is "clearly an issue [Trump] is not comfortable talking about. There's a reason that when people look at what he said Saturday, essentially condemning violence on both sides, suggesting both sides are culpable, then you have a lag period and they don't necessarily believe the words coming out of the President's mouth, they're skeptical of it."

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (8/14), "What's shocking is that the President of the United States did not have the instinctive, reflexive automatic response you would expect of any American leader. What we saw across the spectrum in American leadership and among the American populace in being utterly revolted by these right-wing white supremacists neo-Nazi groups. If the President did not do what was absolutely natural, that's what makes it a story."

USA Today (8/14) editorializes, "Denouncing neo-Nazis, the Ku Klux Klan and other hate groups ought to be the easiest task in American politics. ... The inadequacy of the president's initial remarks was widely denounced, and not just by Democrats. Nothing reflected his abdication more than the praise he received on the Daily Stormer, a neo-Nazi website." USA Today calls on Trump to "purge his administration of figures associated with the 'alt-right,' such as aides Steve Bannon and Sebastian Gorka."

The New York Times (8/14) editorializes, "On Monday, Mr. Trump found his way to something resembling a presidential response. ... His aides reportedly urged him to express that straightforward sentiment on Saturday. Yet even as he now managed to get some of the right words out he could not bring himself to assign blame for Ms. Heyer's death, saying only that she 'was tragically killed.' Contrast that with his eager invocations of Kathryn Steinle...after she 'was gunned down in SF by an illegal immigrant.'"

The Washington Post (8/14) asks, "What punch do the right words pack when they are so obviously begrudging, belated and bestowed under the weight of overwhelming pressure? Will white supremacists such as Richard Spencer, who gleefully noted that Mr. Trump's initial statement blamed the violence on 'many sides,' while saying nothing about racists, really feel the sting of rebuke? Or will the apostles of intolerance be heartened anew, as they have been by Mr. Trump's ascent over the course of two years?"

The Los Angeles Times (8/14) says in an editorial that "Trump – who initially seemed to see no difference between the racists and Nazis who had called the march and the counterdemonstrators opposing them – finally denounced the hard-right for what it is. Unfortunately, the time for that statement was Saturday afternoon when the rest of the civilized world spoke up."

Mary Mitchell of the Chicago Sun-Times (8/14) writes, "Trump changed his tune on Monday, after being swamped by criticism for giving hate groups a pass for inciting the violence. ... It took Trump's communication advisers two whole days to craft that 'heart-felt' expression for a grieving nation, and it was pure bull." Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (8/14) column, "No one should have been surprised to see President Trump playing footsie with racists. He's been doing it for years."

The Washington Post's Catherine Rampell tweeted, "Trump's most lasting legacy will be that he's emboldened an entirely new generation of racists and bigots." CNN's Juana Summers tweeted, "@POTUS failed to reject the political support he receives from white supremacists, KKK, neo-Nazis." Kenneth Roth of Human Rights Watch tweeted, "After finally denouncing the white supremacists, Trump should now abandon the white supremacist policies.”

Reuters (8/14), Bloomberg News (8/14, Sink, Talev, John), the Wall Street Journal (8/14, Nicholas, Stokols, Kesling), and The Hill (8/14, Fabian) also report on the President’s remarks.

Trump: “Bad People” In Media “Will Never Be Satisfied.” Trump tweeted at 6:29 p.m., “Made additional remarks on Charlottesville and realize once again that the #Fake News Media will never be satisfied...truly bad people!” CNN’s Dylan Byers tweeted in response, “And I thought it was going to take Trump 3 days to condemn the media...”

Donald Trump Jr. tweeted, “Unfortunately, it will never be enough. That is the sad reality of the game today.” Greg Sargent of the Washington Post tweeted in response, “To be clear, their actual argument is that Trump is not getting enough credit for belatedly condemning Nazis and white supremacists.”

Manigault-Newman: Trump Statement “Very Clear And Very Decisive.” Assistant to the President Omarosa Manigault-Newman said on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight (8/14), “When the shooting happened at the Charleston church, President Barack Obama did not come out in his first statement and condemn all white supremacists. In fact, he specifically said I’m going to exercise great caution while the investigation takes place. When the Black Lives Matter officer went and started shooting five police officers...Obama did not come out and condemn Black Lives Matter by name. ... President Trump, he said that he condemned the acts. He knew that they were disgusting and loathsome. But he did not come out until the facts were known about the investigation. And today he made a statement that was very clear and very decisive about where he stood on these acts.”

Fallon: Trump’s Delay In Explicit Denunciation “Shameful.” Jimmy Fallon said on NBC’s Tonight Show (8/14), “As kids grow up, they need people to look up to, and to show them what’s right and good. They need parents and teachers, and they need leaders who appeal to the best in us. The fact that it took the President two days to come out and clearly denounce racists and white supremacists is shameful. And I think he finally spoke out because people everywhere stood up and said something.”

WPost Analysis: On Twitter, Trump Has Accused Blacks Of Racism Three Times As Often As Whites. The Washington Post (8/14, Ingraham) reports that in the eight years since he joined Twitter, “Trump has used the word ‘racist’ or ‘racism’ at least 56 times. ... In two-thirds of those Tweets, Trump levied accusations of racism at individuals or groups of people. And those accusations followed a very clear pattern: Trump has directed accusations of racism toward black people three times as often as he has done so against whites.”

Trump Blasts Merck CEO After He Resigns From Manufacturing Council; Two Other CEOs Also Quit. USA Today (8/14, Yu, Jackson) reports, “Merck’s CEO Ken Frazier quit Monday President Trump’s manufacturing business council, dissatisfied with Trump’s lackluster response” to the Charlottesville violence, prompting “an angry response from Trump on Twitter.” Trump tweeted, “Now that Ken Frazier of Merck Pharma has resigned from President’s Manufacturing Council, he will have more time to LOWER RIPOFF DRUG PRICES!”

On ABC World News Tonight (8/14, lead story, 4:00, Muir), Cecilia Vega reported, “The President responded to the resignation hours before he called out those racists by name.” Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (8/14, lead story, 4:00) that Trump “derided Mr. Frazier on Twitter” four hours after he resigned, “a shorter time than he took to denounce white supremacists.” Hallie Jackson of NBC Nightly News (8/14, lead story, 3:20, Holt) similarly said, “The President attacked Frazier on Twitter within minutes. His response to Charlottesville took longer to evolve.”

The Washington Post (8/14, McGregor) reports that in a statement, Frazier, “one of the few African American CEOs in the Fortune 500,” said, “I feel a responsibility to take a stand against intolerance and extremism. ... Our country’s strength stems from its diversity and the contributions made by men and women of different faiths, races, sexual orientations and political beliefs.”

The New York Times (8/14, Gelles, Thomas) reports, “Of the dozens of chief executives who have agreed to advise Mr. Trump, none other than Mr. Frazier criticized the president’s initial response to the ugly episode, and none came to Mr. Frazier’s defense after the president attacked him on Twitter.” Andrew Ross Sorkin of the New York Times (8/14) writes, “At what point do the C.E.O.s of the largest companies in the United States tell President Trump that enough is enough? Not yet, apparently.” Dan Diamond of Politico (8/14) writes, “It took three weeks for Merck CEO Kenneth Frazier to go from a ‘business genius’ to a ‘ripoff’ drug executive – at least in the eyes of President Donald Trump.”

The Wall Street Journal (8/14, Loftus) and Los Angeles Times (8/14, Puzanghera) also report on Frazier's exit and Trump's tweet, while the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/14, Welsh) reports that Under Armour CEO Kevin Plank became the "second CEO to resign from the council on Monday, but did not directly blame" the President for his decision. Plank said, "I joined the American Manufacturing Council because I believed it was important for Under Armour to have an active seat at the table and represent our industry. However, Under Armour engages in innovation and sports, not politics."

USA Today (8/15, Yu) reports that Intel CEO Brian Krzanich also stepped down late Monday. He said, "I have already made clear my abhorrence at the recent hate-spawned violence in Charlottesville, and earlier today I called on all leaders to condemn the white supremacists and their ilk who marched and committed violence. I resigned because I want to make progress."

Sessions Says Car Attack Meets "Definition Of Domestic Terrorism." The AP (8/14) reports that Attorney General Sessions said Monday morning that Heyer's death "does meet the definition of domestic terrorism in our statute." Sessions told ABC, "You can be sure we will charge and advance the investigation towards the most serious charges that can be brought, because this is an unequivocally unacceptable and evil attack that cannot be accepted in America."

The New York Times (8/14, Sullivan) reports, "Sessions appeared on several morning news shows on Monday, condemning the violent demonstrations over the removal of a Confederate monument and defending President Trump's response." The Washington Post (8/14, Horwitz) reports that Sessions said of Trump's weekend comments, "His initial statement on this roundly and unequivocally condemned hatred and violence and bigotry. He called on our people to work together in community and love and affection and not in hatred and violence."

The CBS Evening News (8/14, story 3, 2:05, Mason) reported that suspect James Fields "is being held without bail and is waiting for the court to appoint an attorney to represent him." On NBC Nightly News (8/14, story 4, 2:15, Holt), Tom Costello reported that during his arraignment, "Fields said he understood the charges against him: second-degree murder, malicious wounding and hit and run." ABC World News Tonight (8/14, story 2, 2:40, Muir) also reported on the legal proceedings. The Washington Post (8/14, Berman) reports that it remains unclear whether Fields will ultimately face federal charges of domestic terrorism, a hate crime, or both, and looks at the legal distinctions.

The Washington Post (8/14, Gillum, Higdon) reports that Fields "allegedly threatened or assaulted his wheelchair-bound mother so violently as a young teenager that she twice called 911, police records show," while the Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (8/14, McKenzie) reports that the attorney assigned to defend Fields "is a former Republican city council candidate and a plaintiff in the lawsuit against the city regarding the removal of Confederate statues."

The New York Times (8/14, Stack) runs "a list of recent killings that law enforcement officials have linked to suspects with a history of racist and anti-immigrant views or affiliation with white supremacist groups." The Washington Post (8/14) runs a timeline of how the violence unfurled over the weekend.

Pelosi Says Trump Should Fire "Alt-Right White Supremacist Sympathizer" Bannon. The Washington Times (8/14, Dinan) reports that House Minority Leader Pelosi said that Steve Bannon should be fired, blaming him "for what she said was President Trump's weak initial response" to the Charlottesville violence. Pelosi said, "The President's statement on Saturday was a direct reflection of the fact that his chief strategist, Steve Bannon, is an alt-right white supremacist sympathizer and a shameless enforcer of those un-American beliefs."

Several other House Democrats agreed. Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-NY) tweeted, "Now, more than ever, we need to get the alt-right & white supremacists out of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. Starting with Bannon." Rep. Susan Davis (D-CA) tweeted, "Actions louder than words, Mr. President. If you believe the words you spoke, purge Bannon & other white supremacist sympathizers from WH." Rep. Mark Pocan (D-WI) tweeted, "Now that @realDonaldTrump has called out these groups (2 days late), he needs to remove Gorka and Bannon from the WH."

Scott Calls For Unity, "Swift Justice For A Terrorist." Sen. Tim Scott writes in USA Today (8/14), "There is nothing 'right' about racism and hate. It's a learned disease, and the best antidote is unity. ... The people of South Carolina know this type of domestic terrorism all too well. Our response to the events in Charlottesville, Va., should mirror our response to the murders at Mother Emanuel Church in Charleston. Condemnation of racism. Swift justice for a terrorist. And unity for the community that grieves."

Cuccinelli Criticized For Telling Commentator To "Shut Up" During CNN Charlottesville Segment. The Washington Post (8/14, Vozzella) reports that ex-Virginia attorney general Ken Cuccinelli faced online criticism for "telling CNN political commentator Symone Sanders to 'shut up'...during a heated discussion about President Trump's response" to Charlottesville. After Sanders interrupted Cuccinelli, he said, "Can I finish, Symone? Will you just shut up for a minute and let me finish? God bless America!" She replied, "Pardon me, sir. You don't get to tell me to shut up on national television. ... Under no circumstances do you get to speak to me in that manner. You should exhibit some decorum."

Online Activists "Name And Shame" Charlottesville Marchers. The Washington Post (8/14, Selk) reports on the "campaign to name and shame people who marched" in Charlottesville, with the Twitter account @YesYoureRacist a focus point for identifying and outing participants. The New York Times (8/14, Victor) reports that such efforts "sometimes misfire" with a false identification. NBC Nightly News (8/14, story 5, 1:45, Holt) also reported on such efforts.

White Supremacists Plot Next Steps. The New York Times (8/14, Feuer) reports under the headline "Far Right Plans Its Next Moves With A New Energy" that following the weekend violence, some of "the white supremacists and right-wing extremists" who participated "were making arrangements to appear at future marches. Some were planning to run for public office."

Daily Caller: "Far-Left Agitators" Planning "Escalation In Tactics." The Daily Caller (8/14, Hasson) reports, "Far-left agitators are calling for an escalation in tactics following this weekend's violence. ... Many of the same groups that have organized violent demonstrations in Berkeley, California and elsewhere are now calling for an aggressive response to the violence in Charlottesville." In related news, Townhall (8/14, Vespa) reports that "an anti-racism demonstrator" assaulted a local news reporter who was filming in Richmond, Virginia.

Durham, North Carolina Protesters Tear Down Confederate Memorial Statue. The Washington Times (8/14, Morton) reports, "Protesters in North Carolina posted a video Monday of their tearing down a Confederate memorial, calling it a response to the weekend violence in Charlottesville, Virginia. The clip shows a group of at least several dozen in Durham pulling down a statue in front of the local government building."

WPost "Wonkblog": "War On Whites" Is A Myth. Christopher Ingraham and Heather Long of the Washington Post (8/14) "Wonkblog" write, "The 'war on whites' is a core concern of Trump's base, but it isn't true. White people, especially white males, still have a huge advantage in American society." Whites "are far more likely to get hired and are paid more than nonwhites," and "white families on average have 14 times more wealth than black families and nearly 11 times more than Hispanic families."

World Leaders React To Charlottesville Violence. USA Today (8/14, Jervis) reports on the reaction from world leaders. German Chancellor Angela Merkel said via a spokesperson, "The scenes at the right-wing extremist march were absolutely repulsive – naked racism, antisemitism and hate in their most evil form were on display," while British Prime Minister Theresa May tweeted, "Our thoughts and prayers are with #Charlottesville. The UK stands with the US against racism, hatred and violence." Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau tweeted, "We know Canada isn't immune to racist violence & hate. We condemn it in all its forms & send support to the victims in Charlottesville."

The Washington Post (8/14, Stanley-Becker, McAuley) reports that "in countries such as Germany and France that have adopted strict codes policing hateful speech, there were also questions about why people carrying guns were allowed to assemble and propagate a message targeting racial and religious minorities," and "a front-page headline in the French daily Libération blared, 'The White House,' suggesting that the center of racial animus was the executive branch of the American government."

Amid North Korea Tensions, Trump Orders Probe Of China's Trade Practices.

Media coverage of President Trump's executive order Monday seeking an investigation of Chinese trade practices casts the move as likely to jeopardize Beijing's cooperation on North Korea. The CBS Evening News (8/14, story 5, 1:50, Mason) – the only network to cover the story last night – reported that while the US "needs China's help with North Korea," the President "signed an executive memo today that's sure to anger the Chinese" and USA Today (8/14, Korte) says that with the move, the President "escalat[ed] his trade dispute with China even as he seeks its help in resolving the North Korean crisis." CNBC (8/14, Novak) reports that "after a weekend filled with a series of conciliatory statements from China, some of them downright surprising, the situation with North Korea seems to be less tense right now, which could be construed as a major win for the Trump team."

In fact, while many media reports cast the President's announcement as likely to put China's cooperation on North Korea at risk, the South China Morning Post (8/14, Jiangtao) reports China announced "sweeping sanctions" against Pyongyang on Monday, "extending an import ban to iron, iron ore and seafood." The ban, which also covered coal, would take effect

Tuesday. The Washington Post (8/14, Denyer) reports the move came as Beijing seeks to “implement a package of sanctions put together by the UN Security Council.” But at the same time, Beijing “warned the Trump administration not to split the international coalition over North Korea by provoking a trade war between China and the United States.” Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said, “It is obviously improper to use one thing as a tool to imposing pressure on another thing.”

The New York Times (8/14, Landler), meanwhile, paints the move as part of a greater effort by the Administration to ease tensions in the region. The Times says that after “days of bellicose threats toward North Korea and jitters about a looming trade war with China,” Trump moved “on several fronts Monday to ease tensions in East Asia, after making the region a flash point for his administration.” As he launched a “long-awaited” trade action against China, Trump used “uncharacteristically restrained language and a multistep bureaucratic process that will likely put off punitive steps against Beijing for months, if ever.” On North Korea, “several of the president’s top advisers tried to tamp down fears of a clash” after his threat to rain “fire and fury” on the regime there.

The AP (8/14, Lemire, Boak) similarly writes that “even as he seeks Beijing’s help on North Korea...Trump asked his trade office on Monday to consider investigating China for the alleged theft of American technology and intellectual property.” In a phone call Friday, Trump told Chinese President Xi Jinping about the move, according to “two US officials familiar with that conversation.” In an editorial Monday, the China Daily “linked Trump’s trade announcement...to his disappointment over China’s purported failure to rein in North Korea.” The newspaper warned the probe would “poison” US-China relations. Reuters (8/14, Ernst) quotes the editorial as saying, “Instead of advancing the United States’ interests, politicizing trade will only acerbate the country’s economic woes, and poison the overall China-US relationship.”

The Washington Post (8/14, Swanson) says the probe “could eventually result in a wide range of penalties,” but “senior White House officials said in a call with reporters Saturday that the investigation could take up to a year to conclude and that it was premature to say whether it would result in tariffs against China, a negotiated settlement or another outcome.” Reuters (8/14, Wroughton, Mason) similarly says the investigation is “unlikely to prompt near-term change,” but warns it is “likely to cast a shadow over relations with China...just as Trump is asking Beijing to step up pressure against Pyongyang.”

The Hill (8/14, Fabian) says the move comes as the Administration “is seeking China’s help to pressure North Korea to stop its nuclear weapons program,” but Trump “brushed aside those concerns.” The President, Breitbart (8/14, Spiering) reports, told reporters at the White House, “For too long, this wealth has been drained from our country while Washington has done nothing. They have never done anything about it. But Washington will turn a blind eye no longer.” He went on to describe his actions “as a fulfillment of his campaign promises to defend the American worker,” Breitbart says. The New York Post (8/14, Fredericks) reports Trump also “suggested that additional steps would be taken against China,” saying, “This is just the beginning.”

Peter Navarro, director of the White House National Trade Council, writes in USA Today (8/14) that President Trump is “firmly committed to pursuing trade and investment relationships that are both fair and reciprocal and that promote America’s leading role in global innovation.” The Administration, however, “will not tolerate the forced transfer and theft of America’s IP and technologies.” With his action Monday, Navarro says the President “is signaling to the world that protecting American IP and technologies is one of his highest national priorities.” Breitbart (8/14, Carney) reprints Navarro’s piece.

Politico (8/14, Palmer) calls Monday’s executive action “a step toward a potential showdown with China,” while a Wall Street Journal (8/14) editorial cautions that Trump’s move could backfire by harming US efforts to open markets to American goods. A New York Times (8/14, Hernández) analysis says Trump announced “the opening salvo in what could become a far-reaching investigation into Chinese trade practices,” but his “demands on Chinese trade practices are likely to be met with deep skepticism in Beijing,” which “takes conflicting positions on intellectual property, ignoring it in some cases while upholding it in others.”

The AP (8/14) reports China “criticized” Trump’s order, which it said violates international trade agreements, and vowed to “resolutely safeguard” Chinese interests.

The Washington Times (8/14, Boyer) reports Senate Minority Leader Schumer “said the president’s move was toothless.” Said Schumer, “President Trump’s pattern continues: Tough talk on China, but weaker action than anyone could ever imagine.” The Wall Street Journal (8/14, Schlesinger) says Monday’s move is part of a complex diplomatic strategy as the Administration seeks to balance the desire for more cooperation on North Korea against its desire to curb the $347 billion bilateral trade deficit.

Chinese Automaker Reportedly Bids For Fiat Chrysler. USA Today (8/14, Bomey, Snavely) says a Chinese automaker has “reportedly made a quiet bid to acquire Fiat Chrysler Automobiles, raising the distinct possibility that the traditional member of the Detroit Three that was bailed out by US taxpayers could wind up with Chinese ownership.” According to Automotive News, the Italian-American automaker “recently rejected an acquisition bid by an unidentified Chinese company,” but “multiple Chinese automakers are weighing a similar bid” for the automaker. A Fiat Chrysler spokeswoman declined to comment Monday on the report. The Detroit News (8/14) also reports the company declined to comment.

The Detroit Free Press (8/14, Snavely) says Fiat Chrysler, “facing the need to catch up to its rivals on both electric vehicles and self-driving car technology, could turn to a Chinese buyer to solve its problems because it has few other alternatives.”

NYTimes Says World Must Demand That China Respect Hong Kong. The New York Times (8/15) editorializes that if Hong Kong jails its first political prisoners this week as “looks likely,” the event “will be a watershed in Hong Kong’s modern history and should set off further alarms about China’s intentions for the territory.” Three democracy activists face prison, and “the question is whether the United States, Britain and other nations will back up these young democrats who insist that their hometown maintain its commitments to the rule of law and political freedom.”

Trump To Sign Executive Order On Infrastructure Projects.

The White House said Monday that President Trump on Tuesday will sign an executive order “establishing discipline and accountability in the environmental review and permitting process for infrastructure projects,” Reuters (8/15) reports. Trump will “participate in a discussion on infrastructure and give a statement on the subject at 3:45 p.m.”

“Problem Solvers Caucus” Drafting Proposals To Avoid Government Shutdown, Debt Default.

USA Today (8/14, Gaudio) reports that members of the bipartisan Problem Solvers Caucus are crafting a proposal “to address the most urgent issue facing Congress when it returns in September: how to keep the government open and avoid the first-ever default on the nation’s debt.” Caucus co-chairman Rep. Tom Reed said members of the caucus “are drafting proposals to present to the entire 43-member caucus when Congress returns after Labor Day.” Reed said, “I’m very optimistic that the caucus can come together on a consensus basis to put a proposal out in order to get through the shutdown, debt ceiling debate in a way that keeps the government open and we honor our debts.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“How Mr. Trump Could Face Up To White Supremacists.” The New York Times (8/14) editorializes, “On Monday, Mr. Trump found his way to something resembling a presidential response. ... His aides reportedly urged him to express that straightforward sentiment on Saturday. Yet even as he now managed to get some of the right words out he could not bring himself to assign blame for Ms. Heyer’s death, saying only that she ‘was tragically killed.’ Contrast that with his eager invocations of Kathryn Steinle...after she ‘was gunned down in SF by an illegal immigrant.’”

“Before You Rip Up That Iran Deal...” The New York Times (8/14) editorializes that while concerns that the Iran nuclear deal “doesn’t address the nefarious ways in which Iran is expanding its influence and further destabilizing the Middle East” are “valid,” they “are no reason to blow up the agreement, as President Trump is recklessly trying to do.” The deal “was intended to keep Iran from producing a nuclear weapon, a crucial and necessary goal.” And the deal “is working, as the International Atomic Energy Agency, which rigorously monitors Iran’s activities, and even [President] Trump’s own State Department have certified.”

“Three Young Voices Versus A Superpower.” The New York Times (8/15) editorializes that if Hong Kong jails its first political prisoners this week as “looks likely,” the event “will be a watershed in Hong Kong’s modern history and should set off further alarms about China’s intentions for the territory.” Three democracy activists face prison, and “the question is whether the United States, Britain and other nations will back up these young democrats who insist that their hometown maintain its commitments to the rule of law and political freedom.”

Washington Post.

“The One Thing Americans Should Be Proud Of After Charlottesville.” The Washington Post (8/14) asks in an editorial, “What punch do the right words pack when they are so obviously begrudging, belated and bestowed under the weight of overwhelming pressure? Will white supremacists such as Richard Spencer, who gleefully noted that Mr. Trump’s initial statement blamed the violence on ‘many sides,’ while saying nothing about racists, really feel the sting of rebuke? Or will the apostles of intolerance be heartened anew, as they have been by Mr. Trump’s ascent over the course of two years?”

“Kenya May Have Had Its Fairest Election Yet. The Winner Shouldn’t Tarnish It.” A Washington Post (8/14) editorial acknowledges Kenya’s most recent presidential election appears to be “one of the fairest and most transparent” in the nation’s – and continent’s – history, but cautions “Kenya has nevertheless been teetering on the brink of crisis, largely because” re-elected incumbent Uhuru Kenyatta’s defeated rival, Raila Odinga, is refusing “to accept the results or even the established legal process for challenging them.” The Post adds that while Kenyatta’s victory appears legitimate, “he should not tarnish it with repression.” Specifically, the Post says, Kenyatta must address allegations of excessive police force against the media and nongovernmental organizations, and thoroughly investigate and prosecute the killing of an election official.

“A Promising Young Woman’s Life, Suddenly Cut Short.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/14) highlights the story of Jamahri Sydnor, a 17-year-old college-bound graduate of DC’s Woodrow Wilson High School who passed away Saturday after being wounded fatally by a stray bullet from two gunmen in a crossfire incident. The Post concludes, “At this point, it is not known who fired the guns, nor why. But we do know that Ms. Sydnor was a promising young woman on the threshold of a new chapter in life, and that her death is intolerable.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s China Trade Sally.” A Wall Street Journal (8/14) editorial cautions that Trump’s plan could backfire by harming US efforts to open markets to American goods.

“A Short-Term ObamaCare Fix.” A Wall Street Journal (8/14, Board) editorial argues that despite Congress’ failure to repeal and replace the ACA, the Trump Administration is obliged to help Americans faced with increasing premiums and decreased choices. The Journal calls on HHS to rescind an Obama-era regulation on temporary health insurance plans which limits the duration of such policies to 90 days, restore the duration to a year, and permit the plans to meet the coverage mandate.

“Can The VA Fire Anyone?” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/14) writes that Congress’ passage in June of the VA Accountability and Whistleblower Protection Act offers an important reform to veteran healthcare by allowing easier dismissal of bad employees. The Journal argues that the need for such reform is highlighted by the recent case of Brian Hawkins, the former director of the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Washington, DC who was dismissed in April after an IG investigation found hospital conditions to be so poor that patients lives were endangered.

Zinke Slated This Week To Advise Trump On Fate Of 21 National Monuments.

The McClatchy (8/21, Leavenworth) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is expected to advise President Trump this week on plans for potentially shrinking or revoking the status of 21 national monuments, "setting the stage for a years-long legal battle that could pit the White House against Indian tribes, environmentalists and some western states." Supporters say that certain monument designations should be reversed, calling them federal "land grabs," but critics argue that the monuments "help protect important landscapes and objects of history, including Native American antiquities." Zinke's deadline to make final recommendations is August 24.

Additional coverage was provided by the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/21, Sambides) and UPI (8/21, Xu).

New Mexico Delegates Make Plea For 2 National Monuments. The AP (8/21, Bryan) reports that "Democratic members of New Mexico's congressional delegation on Monday issued a last-ditch plea to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to keep intact two national monuments on a list of sites being reviewed by the Trump administration." In a letter to Zinke, Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich and Reps. Ben Ray Lujan and Michelle Lujan Grisham said "thousands of New Mexicans support the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument near Las Cruces and the Rio Grande del Norte monument outside of Taos." They wrote, "The voices of New Mexicans could not be clearer — our national monuments are vitally important to our history and are part of the living culture of local tribes and pueblos. Our local communities worked for decades to ensure that permanent protections for our national monuments would be in place for the use and enjoyment of future generations."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/21), the Houston Chronicle (8/21, Bryan, Press), the Washington Times (8/21, Bryan), the Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (8/21, Bryan), the Idaho Statesman (8/21, Bryan), and KOAT-TV Albuquerque \(NM\) Albuquerque, NM (8/21).

The Antiquities Act Has Become A Tool For Oppressing The West. For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (8/21, Anderson, Cooke, Contributors), Matthew Anderson, director of the Coalition for Self-Government in the West, and Amy Oliver Cooke, the executive vice president and director of the Energy and Environmental Policy Center for the Independence Institute, write that "checks and balances are lacking in federal lands policy, and that absence has opened up the West to a host of devastating consequences." They argue that while the intentions of the Antiquities Act in 1906 "were pure, such unchecked, concentrated power has exposed the Act to widespread abuses from presidents of both political parties." The authors assert that "the designation process should include meaningful input and approval from state representatives and Congress." In conclusion, Anderson and Cooke call for the creation of "a transparent process that prevents presidential abuses and respects the original intentions of the Antiquities Act."

We Might Lose Giant Sequoia National Monument This Week. For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill

(8/21, Moffitt, Contributor), Lena Moffitt, the senior director of the Sierra Club's Our Wild America campaign, claims that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke review of national monuments is "a thinly veiled step towards selling out some of our country's best wild places and historic sites." In Moffitt's view, the notion "that Zinke would even consider giving all this away is a nod to the power of the extractive industry's influence over the Trump administration." She hopes that when Zinke issues his final recommendations, "Zinke will remember that nobody looks back with regret on the decision to protect the Grand Canyon or to save the Giant Sequoias."

'You're Fired' May Be Harder Than Trump Thinks When It Comes To Federal Workers.

In an analysis, the Washington Post (8/21, Rein) reports that although the Trump Administration has sought to reduce the federal workforce by removing "poor performers" – an initiative that the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Homeland Security, Commerce, and Interior all have begun – the initiative "is meeting resistance from powerful federal employee unions and finding that maneuvering around long-guaranteed civil service protections is not easy." The Post highlights several examples of such push-back, such as a case at the US Patent and Trademark Office that took three years of investigation to resolve and still is being disputed by the National Treasury Employees Union.

Beautiful Night Sky Viewings On Public Lands.

USA Today (8/21, Today) reports that the Interior Department "shared some of their favorite photos of beautiful night skies at various national parks and other public lands." The article highlights "some of the most beautiful national Park pictures from the Department of the Interior's Instagram account."

Additional Coverage: Hunters, Anglers May Be Getting More Land Access.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "last week proposed expanded access for hunters and anglers on 10 wildlife refuges" was provided by the Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (8/22, Theen).

Interior Secretary Zinke Has Turned His Back On The American West.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (8/21, Saeger, Contributor), Chris Saeger, the director of Western Values Project, claims that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "silencing the voices of Westerners by attempting to roll back more than a decade of collaborative work with his recent recommended changes to protecting a native bird called the sage-grouse and its sagebrush habitat, which is vitally important to the West." According to Saeger, "Zinke's proposed changes, like forcing states to substitute population targets for conservation targets and prioritizing oil and gas development in areas the conservation plans set aside for sagebrush, undermine the integrity of the plans in place, and their proven success across sagebrush landscape." Going forward Saeger urges Zinke to "make a concerted effort to include stakeholders from across the West in decisions made about sage-grouse conservation — if he does not, the alternative looks bleak for the sage-grouse and Western communities."

The Scheme To Pump Desert Water To L.A. Could Destroy The Mojave. California's Legislature Needs To Block It.

In an op-ed for the Los Angeles Times (8/21, Feinstein, Friedman), Sen. Dianne Feinstein and Assemblywoman Laura Friedman writes that California's Mojave Desert is threatened by "the Cadiz water extraction project, a scheme that would drain vital aquifers in the Fenner, Bristol and Cadiz valleys — the heart of the Mojave." Cadiz is "proposing to drain 50,000 acre-feet of water every year for 50 years — more than five times the aquifer's natural recharge rate, according to an independent analysis by the U.S. Geological Survey." They urge California's Legislature to pass Assembly Bill 1000, the California Desert Protection Act, which "would help protect the Mojave from projects like Cadiz by bolstering state reviews and requiring the California State Lands Commission, in consultation with the California Department of Fish and Wildlife, to ensure that any transfers of desert groundwater do not adversely affect the region's natural or cultural resources."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Standing Rock Tribe Completes Rural Water Supply Pipeline.

The AP (8/21) reports that the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe has “completed a pipeline connecting the North Dakota and South Dakota portions of a rural water delivery system.” The tribe completed the pipeline with assistance from the Bureau of Reclamation. The pipeline is part of the Standing Rock Rural Water Supply System. Bureau of Reclamation area manager Arden Freitag “says the project will stabilize the water supply for communities on the northern part of the reservation.”

Calif. Tribe’s Challenge Of DOI Casino Approval Tossed.

Law360 (8/21, Hanson) reports that “a California federal court has denied the Picayune Rancheria of Chukchansi Indians’ suit challenging a U.S. Department of the Interior decision to authorize another tribe to conduct gambling at an off-reservation site and has given the green light to the other tribe’s bid to toss the suit.” Senior U.S. District Judge Anthony W. Ishii “on Thursday signed an order denying the Picayune Tribe’s motion for summary judgment and granted the Interior Department’s summary judgment cross-motion.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Utah State University Hosts Wild Horse Summit, But Excludes Key Advocates And The Public.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/21, Maffly) reports that “critics of a national conference on wild horses, opening this week in Salt Lake City, assert its state organizers have closed the event to the public and excluded key figures in the horse-advocacy community.” Utah State University is “hosting the three-day event starting Tuesday in an effort to provide participants ‘with the best available science, to help them make informed decisions about the issues,’ concerning the management of wild horses on the West’s public lands, according to organizer Terry Messmer, a USU professor of wildland resources.” However, “leading pro-horse advocates counter that Utah officials are using the summit to promote a policy shift toward lethal measures for managing the West’s bands of federally protected, free-roaming horses and burros.” The article notes that “speakers include Utah Gov. Gary Herbert; Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior Aurelia Skipwith; Nevada State Veterinarian J. J. Goicoechea; members of Utah and Nevada’s congressional delegations; Utah Rep. Chris Stewart’s chief of staff, Brian Steed; John Ruhs, the BLM’s Nevada state director; and Utah Department of Natural Resources Executive Director Mike Styler.”

Reporters Sue Feds For Info On FBI’s Bundy Ranch Infiltration With Fake Film Crew.

The Washington Times (8/21, Noble) reports that the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press “filed a lawsuit Monday against the Justice Department and FBI in an effort to pry loose documents related to the FBI’s prior impersonation of documentary filmmakers.” The FBI has “admitted to sending undercover agents to Nevada in 2014 to act as a film crew and interview supporters of rancher Cliven Bundy amid an armed standoff with the federal government.” According to the article, “the reporter’s committee sought through Freedom of Information Act requests to obtain FBI records regarding the bogus film crew as well as any records on the bureau’s use of the tactic dating back to 2010.”

County OKs Letter Supporting Project.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/22, Ashby) reports that “Mesa County commissioners didn’t alter their support Monday for a project to drill 108 oil wells in the Whitewater area, but they do have some conditions.” In a letter of support for the Fram Operating LLC project in the Whitewater Basin, “the commissioners said they have a number of things they’d like to see, not the least of which are assurances that air and groundwater quality will not be adversely impacted.” The letter is “meant to help the Bureau of Land Management, on whose land part of the project would be built, determine in an amended environmental assessment if it violates any health, safety or welfare issues.”

Viewing The Eclipse Through An X-ray? Not Recommended.

The Arizona Republic (8/21, Altavena) reports that “a tweet from the Bureau of Land Management in Arizona suggested a ‘creative way to view the eclipse,’ with the photo of an employee using what appears to be an X-ray to look up at the sun.” But National Geographic “points out that using X-ray film to view an eclipse is ‘dangerous and should be avoided completely.” The BLM later tweeted that it was “not a recommended viewing medium.”

Las Cienegas National Conservation Area Complete Opening Post Sawmill Fire.

The Willcox \(AZ\) Range News (8/21, Lowery) reports that the Bureau of Land Management Gila District is “re-opening all areas within the Las Cienegas National Conservation Area (NCA), after a partial and emergency temporary closure due to the Sawmill Fire and related Emergency Stabilization and Rehabilitation efforts.” Las Cienegas Manager Karen Simms said, “The BLM removed a total of 45 dangerous and burned cottonwood trees in Empire Gulch and Cienega Creek that posed a significant safety risk to the public. We are pleased to re-open the area to safe public access for recreational activities and are continuing to work with our permittees affected by the fire.”

Printmaker Gabriella Banegas Named Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks Artist In Residence.

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (8/21) reports that “the soon-to-be Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument Artist in Residence is a printmaker from The Netherlands.” Gabriella Banegas said, “I’m super excited to return to New Mexico to be the fall Artist in Residence. I have always been very inspired by the Organ Mountains but I have always painted them from my studio on the other side of the world. I am very curious to see what kind of magical transformation will happen to my artwork once I get the chance to work in the New Mexican landscape.” Banegas will be the OMDP Artist in Residence from Sept. 1-30.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Congress Picks Sides On Trump Plan To Expand Offshore Drilling.

Courthouse News (8/21, Langford) reports that President Trump’s plan to expand offshore drilling prompted separate letters from members of Congress last week, 118 writing a letter saying the plan is critical for US energy security, while 69 others doubt the plan. The Interior received nearly 18,000 letters of public comment, most of them opposing the expansion in drilling.

Atlantic Governors Seek Continued Federal Oil And Gas Leasing Ban.

Bloomberg BNA (8/21, Ballard) reports that “all governors in the mid-Atlantic region for the Interior Department’s Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM)—a region which along with North Carolina includes Maryland, Virginia and Delaware—have said they oppose Atlantic drilling.” However, Georgia Gov. Nathan Deal (R) and Florida Gov. Rick Scott (R) “have not expressed a position.”

The “Morning Energy” blog of Politico (8/21, Adragna) reported “four governors on the Outer Continental Shelf Governors Coalition — Maine’s Paul LePage, Mississippi’s Phil Bryant, Alabama’s Kay Ivey and Alaska’s Bill Walker — released a letter Friday urging” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “to include all possible areas as the agency develops its five-year offshore drilling plan.” The governors wrote, “Access to offshore energy resources will allow coastal states and communities to realize great economic opportunities.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Nevada Water Authority To Fund Conservation Work In Mexico.

The AP (8/21) reports that the Southern Nevada Water Authority is “making deals with Arizona and Mexico to ensure enough H2O in the years to come for the Las Vegas area.” Member also “approved a sweeping water-sharing agreement the U.S. and Mexico are expected to sign next month.” Under the agreement, “the authority, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation and water agencies in Arizona and California would provide $31.5 million for water efficiency improvements in Mexico through 2026”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Frogs Found Only On Mississippi Coast Could Go To US Supreme Court.

The Biloxi \(MS\) Sun Herald (8/21, Pagones) reports that the Pacific Legal Foundation “filed a petition last week asking the Supreme Court to review the decision to designate the 1,500 acres as critical habitat" for the dusky gopher frog. property rights advocates claim "the federal government has overstepped in efforts to save the amphibian, and what's really endangered are the rights of anyone in the United States who owns land." The Fish and Wildlife Service "says a network of shallow ponds makes the 1,500-acre tract the only potential breeding ground outside Mississippi for the dusky gopher frogs."

Enviros Look To Win Bi-State Sage Grouse Protection Battle.

Law360 (8/21, Powell) reports that "four environmental groups pressed a California federal court Friday to rule in their favor by holding that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service flouted the Endangered Species Act by reversing course on a plan to designate the bi-state sage grouse as a threatened species."

National Park Service

'It Was A 10,' Bill Nye Says After Viewing Eclipse At Homestead National Monument.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (8/21, Konnath, Hammel) reports that solar eclipse viewers at Homestead National Monument of America "erupted in cheers" on Monday "as the moon slid in front of the sun." Bill Nye the Science Guy said to the estimated crowd of about 13,000: "Look at that, everybody. You may never see this again in your life."

The Los Angeles Times (8/21, Kaplan) reports that "after totality has passed," Nye was to "help lead attendees through the National Park Service's new Eclipse Junior Ranger Program."

Additional coverage was provided by the Beatrice \(NE\) Daily Sun (8/21, Koperski), the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (8/21), the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (8/21, Konnath), the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (8/21, Konnath, Hammel), and the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (8/21).

Also providing coverage of the eclipse are CNN (8/21, Jones), the Oak Ridge \(TN\) Today (8/21, Huotari), and the Salem \(MA\) News (8/21, MacNeill).

The National Park Service Raises Prices For Seniors.

U.S. News & World Report (8/21, Brandon) reports that "the price of the senior pass to National Parks will increase from $10 to $80 on August 28, 2017." The price hike is "the result of legislation passed by congress on December 16, 2016." The National Park Service "says the price increase will be used to enhance the visitor experience in parks."

The Washington Post (8/21, Silver) reports that "across the country, park personnel are working hard to keep up with demand." The NPS "says that it has received more than 250,000 requests for passes this year." according to the article, "that's more than seven times its previous record of 33,000 requests."

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Republic (8/20, Jespersen), the Salem \(MA\) News (8/21, Shea), the Chicago Tribune (8/21), and Money (8/21, Calfas).

San Francisco Officials To Learn As Early As Tuesday Decision On Right Wing Rally At Crissy Field.

KGO-TV San Francisco (8/21, Tyler) reports that "San Francisco city officials will find out as early as Tuesday if a planned right wing rally at Crissy Field will go on." The National Park Service and Golden Gate National Recreation Area have "approved a permit for the Patriot Prayer organization, but it has not been issued yet." According to the article, "the city is in daily meetings along with public safety officials and the Park Service to try to come up with restrictions for the rally should that permit be issued."

In an editorial, the San Francisco Chronicle (8/21) says that "it's certainly concerning that the National Park Service appears to have issued a preliminary permit for the rally without first coordinating with local law enforcement about a security plan."

Great Sand Dunes National Park Proposes Entrance Fee Increase.

The Pagosa \(CO\) Daily Post (8/21) reports that Great Sand Dunes National Park is "proposing a change to its fee rates to align with the new National Park Service rate schedule." The proposal will "increase the cost of per person entry (for visitors bicycling or walking through the Entrance Station); the annual Great Sand Dunes Pass; as well as the cost for per vehicle entry, non-commercial (family) vehicles; and an increase in fees for motorcycles."

Park Looks To Lease Blue Duck.

The Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (8/21, Broom) reports that the National Park Service is “looking to lease the historic Blue Duck Ships Store building on Islesford (Little Cranberry Island) to someone who will use it in a way that is ‘compatible with respect to preservation, protection and visitor enjoyment of the park area.’” Acadia Superintendent Kevin Schneider said, “We see this as an opportunity to reopen a building that has been closed for many years and ... to preserve an important historical building on Islesford.” The building will be open on Friday “from 9-11 a.m. for prospective lessees who would like to visit before submitting a proposal.”

Additional Coverage: State, Reservations Receive Federal Historic Preservation Grants.

Additional coverage of the distribution of historic preservation grants was provided by the Brainerd \(MN\) Daily Dispatch (8/21).

Additional Coverage: Jefferson Memorial Exhibit Update Will Acknowledge Slavery Record.

Additional coverage that “an exhibit alongside the nation’s chief memorial to Thomas Jefferson will receive an update that reflects ‘the complexity’ of his status as a founder of the United States and a slaveholder” was provided by Fox News (8/21, Gehrke) and Fox News (8/21, Singman).

Office Of Insular Affairs

Joint US-South Korea Military Drills Spur Fears Of North’s Retaliation.

William La Jeunesse reported on Fox News’ Special Report (8/21) that North Korea is “on edge” over US-South Korean joint military drills. Some Japanese cities are holding evacuation drills in case Kim Jong-un retaliates. La Jeunesse said “history suggests Kim will not stay silent” – last year during the annual drills, the North “fired a submarine missile followed by a nuclear test.” However, “few believe [Kim] will test the US by firing at Guam.”

The Los Angeles Times (8/21, Stiles) similarly says the “large-scale theoretical exercise aimed at protecting democratic South Korea,” dubbed Ulchi-Freedom Guardian, is conducted annually, but North Korea said the exercise launched Monday was “like pouring oil over fire” and “aggravating” already-high tensions on the Korean peninsula. The Times says this year’s drill comes “at a time when Washington and Pyongyang have seemed perhaps on the verge of an actual war over the North Korean government’s rapidly advancing nuclear and missile programs and the bellicose language traded by leaders on both sides.” While China and Russia recently suggested that the US and South Korea halt the exercises “as part of a potential deal to get nuclear concessions from Pyongyang,” the proposal “has been a non-starter in Washington.”

Interior, Census Launch 2018 Enumeration Of Compact Migrants.

Marianas Variety (8/18) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula has “signed a Statement of Work with the U.S. Census Bureau to carry out the next 5-year enumeration of migrants from the Freely Associated States in Hawaii, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and American Samoa, as required by the Compact of Free Association Amendments Act of 2003 (Public Law 108-188).” The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/18) reports that the next census will “occur in fiscal year 2018 and be completed by December 2018.”

NMI To Get $42K Historic Preservation Grant.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/21) reports that the Interior Department, with the National Park Service, “announced Friday that it is awarding $42,488 in historic preservation grants to the Northern Mariana Islands.” Also, “a total of $184,478 will be awarded to the Federated States of Micronesia; $106,914 to Palau; $172,372 to Hawaii; $41,139 to Guam; and $30,959 to American Samoa.”

Over 80 Teachers Resign During 2016-17 School Year; 151 Teaching Vacancies Available.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (8/21) reports that “the Virgin Islands Department of Education suffered a reduction of over $10 million in its budget between fiscal years 2017-2018, according to testimony given by Sharon McCollum, D.O.E. commissioner, during a budget hearing on Friday.” According to McCollum, “the drop is largely due to the government’s poor financial state, adding that D.O.E. is willing to do its part in burdening cutbacks.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Trump Administration Halts Research On Mountaintop Removal Coal Mining.

The Hill (8/21, Cama) reports the Trump Administration “has ordered researchers to stop work on an independent evaluation of potential health effects from mountaintop removal coal mining.” Last year, the Interior Department’s Office of Surface Mining, “under then-President Obama, had commissioned the research into the possible connections between certain health risks and living near current or former surface mining sites in Appalachia.” The office “committed $1 million to the two-year effort after West Virginia officials requested it in 2015.” But on Friday “the agency sent a letter...to the National Academy of Sciences, which it had contracted to do the independent review, asking it to stop its work immediately.” In a statement Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said, “The Trump administration is dedicated to responsibly using taxpayer dollars and that includes the billions of dollars in grants that are doled out every year by the Department of the Interior.”

The AP (8/21, Virtanen) reports that “the Interior Department’s Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement, which announced last year it was funding the $1 million study, said in an Aug. 18 letter that the department has begun reviewing grants over $100,000 largely for budget reasons.” Spokesman William Kearney said, “The National Academies believes this is an important study and we stand ready to resume it as soon as the Department of the Interior review is completed.”

The Washington Post (8/21, Fears) reports, “President Trump proposed to cut $1.6 billion at Interior in 2018, including 4,000 staff positions.” The cuts were supported by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke during a Senate hearing, where Zinke said, “This is what a balanced budget looks like.”

The New York \(NY\) Times (8/21, Friedman, Plumer) reports that Democrats and environmental groups “sharply criticized the Interior Department decision.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (8/21, Siciliano), the Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (8/21, Estep), and the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (8/21, Ward).

US Geological Survey

Federal Geologists Launch Efforts To Update Oil Potential In ANWR And NPR-A.

The Alaska Dispatch News (8/21, DeMarban) reports that “spurred by a president who wants oil companies to drill in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, federal geologists have begun poking around the controversial Alaska coastal plain, collecting oil-soaked rocks to help update the area’s petroleum potential.” According to the article, “the recent fieldwork adds to studies already underway by the U.S. Geological Survey.” The USGS has “collected about 40 oil samples from companies that have drilled large sections of the North Slope.”

Top National News

Media Analyses: Trump Reverses Afghanistan Stance In Speech With Few Specifics.

Coverage of President Trump’s Monday evening address announcing an expanded troop commitment in Afghanistan is uniform in stressing the lack of specifics in the speech, as well as the reversal in Trump’s stance since taking office. Some reports say that despite Administration assertions to the contrary, the policy is not recognizably different from those of Presidents Bush and Obama.

The AP (8/21, Lederman, Burns), for example, reports, “Reversing his past calls for a speedy exit,” Trump renewed the US commitment to the war in Afghanistan, “declaring that US troops must ‘fight to win.’ He pointedly declined to disclose how many more troops might be sent,” and said the US “would shift away from a ‘time-based’ approach, instead linking its assistance to results and to cooperation from the beleaguered Afghan government, Pakistan and others.” But Trump “offered few details about how progress would be measured” and did not “explain how his approach would differ substantively” from that of Presidents Bush and Obama.

McClatchy (8/21, Ordoñez) reports, “Less than a week after controversial strategist Steve Bannon left the White House, President Donald Trump is already signaling a shift toward a more traditional Republican foreign policy.” Breitbart (8/21, Spiering) is critical, headlining its report “Donald Trump Echoes Obama ‘Blank Check’ Rhetoric In Afghanistan Speech” and writing that Trump’s speech “specifically echoed his predecessor’s 2009 speech, after acknowledging that the war had gone on too long." Jenna Johnson of the Washington Post (8/21, Johnson) also says the strategy "was remarkably similar to that of his predecessor."

Reuters (8/21, Holland, Walcott) writes that Trump, "who has repeatedly criticized the Afghanistan strategies of his predecessors, now inherits the same challenges." Susan Page of USA Today (8/21) writes, "In Afghanistan, there are no easy exits." Bush and Obama "discovered that Afghanistan was a conflict they couldn't manage to win but couldn't afford to lose," and now Trump, "who as a candidate called for pulling out US troops, as a president is learning that same hard lesson." Page says it is also "a test of the willingness of his core supporters to follow him from the 'America First' banner of his campaign."

The New York Times (8/21, Davis, Landler) reports that the "long-awaited strategy" did not "specify either the number of troops that would be committed, or the conditions" by which success would be measured. Trump said, "My original instinct was to pull out, and historically I like following my instincts. But all my life, I've heard that decisions are much different when you sit behind the desk in the Oval Office – in other words, when you're president of the United States. So I studied Afghanistan in great detail and from every conceivable angle."

The Washington Post (8/21, Nakamura, Phillip) similarly reports that Trump "outlined a revised vision for the US war in Afghanistan" but "provided few specifics about his policy and how much the US military commitment in the region would increase as a result." His decision "reflects a significant shift in his approach to Afghanistan since taking office." The Wall Street Journal (8/21, Lubold, Stokols, Nicholas) reports that Trump said, "From now on, victory will have a clear definition." But like other publications, the Journal says few details were included.

The Los Angeles Times (8/21, Bennett, Bierman) similarly reports, "Trump, reading from a teleprompter in sober tones, did not provide details for increased involvement there, saying he would publicize neither troop levels nor timetables for deployment. But his military advisors are seeking 4,000 more troops, a 50% increase, and stepped-up counter-terrorism operations." Likewise, the New York Post (8/21, Fredericks) says that "though his speech was billed as an announcement of his updated Afghanistan policy, Trump offered few specifics about what it would entail." The Washington Times (8/21, Miller, Muñoz) reports that Trump "asked the American people Monday to trust him in sending more troops to Afghanistan."

Politico (8/21, Nussbaum) reports, "America's longest war is about to get longer." Trump "pledged a new strategy in Afghanistan, while refusing to divulge troop numbers, as he said the office of the president had changed his instincts to pull out of the nearly 16-year-long war." Townhall (8/21, Pavlich) headlines its report "President Trump Decries Nation Building, Vows America Will Handily Defeat 'Loser' Terrorists."

Prior to the speech, ABC World News Tonight (8/21, story 4, 2:45, Mason) reported that the President intended to follow "the advice of his generals, who argue [that] the only way to ultimately beat back the Taliban and ISIS is with more American boots on the ground." The CBS Evening News (8/21, story 6, 2:20, Mason) reported that Trump "has been pulled in two directions" on the strategy. While the military "has pushed for more special operations fighters...ousted White House Chief Strategist Steve Bannon pushed for a complete US pullout." A third option "was briefly considered: sending private mercenaries to battle insurgents." However, "fearing a battlefield and diplomatic disaster, the Pentagon and State Department shot that idea down." On NBC Nightly News (8/21, story 4, 2:20, Holt), Kristen Welker reported that the President was not expected to "get specific about troop levels."

Bloomberg News (8/21, Olorunnipa, Wadhams, Pettypiece), the Washington Examiner (8/21, Westwood), The Hill (8/21, Fabian), and Roll Call (8/21, Bennett) also report on the speech.

WPost, NYTimes Analyses: Trump "Angry" In Run-Up To Decision. A couple of stories on Trump's decision-making process, meanwhile, paint him as angry and frustrated. The Washington Post (8/21, Rucker, Costa) writes that a "frustrated and fuming" Trump "lashed out at his national security team over the Afghanistan war" last month. His "private deliberations...revealed a president unattached to any particular foreign-policy doctrine, but willing to be persuaded so long as he could be seen as a strong and decisive leader." The New York Times (8/21, Landler, Haberman) writes under the headline "Angry Trump Grilled His Generals About Troop Increase, Then Gave In" that his "skepticism about America's involvement in Afghanistan was no secret to his staff," but national security officials "were still taken aback" at the July, "when an angry Mr. Trump began ripping apart" their proposal.

Pence: Trump "Has Reversed" Obama Policy. Vice President Pence writes in USA Today (8/21) op-ed, "America must prevent terrorists from regaining a foothold in Afghanistan. ... Yet the previous administration publicly placed an arbitrary end date on military operations in Afghanistan." Trump "has reversed that policy. And important, he has ensured that our armed forces will have the resources and authorization they need in order to succeed."

Tillerson Praises New Strategy. The Washington Examiner (8/21, Giaritelli) reports that Secretary of State Tillerson praised the strategy in a statement, saying, "Our new strategy breaks from previous approaches that set artificial calendar-based deadlines. We are making clear to the Taliban that they will not win on the battlefield. The Taliban has a path to peace and political legitimacy through a negotiated political settlement to end the war."

Ryan: "I'm Pleased With The Decision." House Speaker Ryan said during a CNN (8/21) town hall, "I'm pleased with the decision. I'm actually pleased with the way he went about making this decision. ... I think it's high time we had a more comprehensive strategy. ... And I think we've learned some good lessons in Mosul, in Syria, lessons that are being applied right now. And I think they're carrying over those lessons learned to Afghanistan."

The Washington Times (8/21, Dinan) reports that Ryan said Trump's "speech represented a rejection of both the Bush and Obama practice of jumping from one-year strategy to one-year strategy, replacing those with something comprehensive. He also said it was the right move to reject giving a certain end-date for the American commitment."

McCain, Rubio Defend New Strategy. The AP (8/21) reports that Sen. John McCain "is commending" the strategy, but "says the president needs to start conducting himself as a 'wartime commander in chief,'" while Townhall (8/21, O'Brien) reports that Sen. Marco Rubio "criticized the press for being so quick to condemn Trump's new Afghanistan strategy before even hearing him out."

Before the speech, Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Situation Room (8/21) said any strategy for Afghanistan "has to be more than just military force, it has to include diplomacy and international aide to reconstruct the economy, to make the Afghanistan government more capable and less corrupt, more stable and secure." Sen. Susan Collins said on MSNBC Live (8/21, Jackson), "In the past 16 years, our efforts in Afghanistan, which have cost the lives of so many troops, have lacked focus."

WPost Reviews Expensive Failures Of Afghanistan War. The Washington Post (8/21, Degrandpre, Horton) reviews "six costly failures" from the war, including $6 million for "the purchase and transport of nine rare Italian goats to breed with those native to Afghanistan" and $36 million for an unused command center.

Taliban Overruns District Government Headquarters. The New York Times (8/21, Nordland, Abed) reports that Taliban insurgents overran the government headquarters of Khamab District in northern Afghanistan on Monday, "the latest in a string of losses for Kabul, just hours before President Trump was to unveil his long-delayed strategic plan. ... It was the sixth place in Afghanistan to fall to the Taliban in the past month."

Rocket Strikes Kabul Government Area. Reuters (8/21) reports, "A rocket struck the heart of Kabul's government and diplomatic area on Monday night, setting off alarms and sirens at foreign embassies, but there were no immediate reports of casualties."

AP Analysis: Trump Returns To Arizona "In Need Of Another Big Moment."

The AP (8/21, Hoffner) reports that early in his run for president, Donald Trump traveled "to Phoenix for a speech that ended up being a bigger moment in his campaign than most people realized at the time." With Trump returning to Phoenix today "in need of another big moment, he will find a place where his agenda and unconventional leadership style have consumed the political landscape and elevated the state's status in the national fight for control of power in Washington in 2018." The AP says Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) "cast the vote that derailed Trump's effort to repeal the Affordable Care Act, Sen. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) "has become the poster child for Republicans who buck the president's agenda," and Trump "has also revived the immigration debate and infuriated Latinos here with his talk of pardoning former Sheriff Joe Arpaio over his recent conviction for breaking the law with his signature immigration patrols."

In another report, the AP says, "The nation's political split over...Trump is expected to be on full display Tuesday as hard-core backers of the Republican president flood into the Phoenix Convention Center and police brace for protests from opponents outside." For Trump, adds the AP, the event "will also be a test of the president's support among his base and elected Arizona Republicans, some of whom won't show up because of the possible damage he can do to their own political standing."

Poll: 50% Of Arizonans Oppose Idea Of Trump Pardoning Arpaio. The Arizona Republic (8/21, Cassidy) reports that in a Phoenix-based OH Predictive Insights poll of 1,065 Arizonans, taken Aug. 18-20, 50% of those surveyed said Trump "should not announce a pardon for...Arpaio at a Tuesday rally," while 21% "said it would be a good move"; 29% "said they weren't sure or didn't know."

Democratic Rep. Gallego: Trump Would Pardon Arpaio With Eye On Pardoning His Own Family.

The Washington Times (8/21, McLaughlin) reports that Democrats on Monday blasted the possibility of Trump pardoning Arpaio, "saying it would mark a win for 'white supremacy' and set the stage for the" President "to use his constitutional power to keep his family out of legal trouble." Speaking with reporters, Rep. Ruben Gallego (D-AZ) said, "I would not be surprised if the president does this that it actually has nothing to do with Arpaio, but actually has to do with him setting the standard of pardons, so he can eventually start pardoning his family and all of the people within his campaign that helped collaborate with the Russians." Gallego added, "He is going to want to pardon his sons at one point or another."

DNC CEO: "A Pardon For Joe Arpaio Is A Pardon For White Supremacy." The Hill (8/21, Kamisar) also reported on the remarks of Gallego, who "joined Democratic National Committee CEO Jess O'Connell and Arizona Democratic Party Chair Alexis Tameron at [a] Monday press conference, which served as a preview of the party response to Trump's rally. During her comments, O'Connell blasted Trump's decision to hold a political rally shortly after the tragedy in Charlottesville," telling reporters, "A pardon for Joe Arpaio is a pardon for white supremacy."

WPost, USA Today Warn Trump Against Pardoning Arpaio. In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/21, Board) warns against Trump pardoning Arpaio, saying that doing so "now would throw a bone to the president's partisans on the racist alt-right just days after Mr. Trump fed them a juicy steak by explicitly equating the neo-Nazis, anti-Semites and Ku Klux Klansmen in Charlottesville with those who marched against them. If Mr. Trump wants to further inflame and divide America, there would be few more effective ways to do it than by granting clemency to a man whose political career was based on contempt for Latinos generally and Hispanic undocumented immigrants specifically." The Post adds that giving Arpaio a pardon "would be a travesty of justice that would further discredit a presidency already stained by Mr. Trump's words and conduct."

USA Today (8/21, Board) similarly advises against Trump pardoning "a man who systematically persecuted people of color. Invoking the presidential pardon power for [Arpaio] at this time would further shred whatever semblance of moral authority the president retains, not to mention Republican hopes of making inroads among Hispanic voters." It "would also have a potentially chilling effect on special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation by signaling targets of that inquiry that the president might let them off the hook, even if they refuse to cooperate."

In Op-Ed, Democratic Phoenix Mayor Rips Trump, Urges Him To Delay Visit. In a Washington Post (8/21, Stanton) op-ed, Phoenix Mayor Greg Stanton writes that Trump's "response to Charlottesville reminds us that the words and actions of our political leaders in the wake of tragic events matter. America is hurting. And it is hurting largely because Trump has doused racial tensions with gasoline. With his planned visit to Phoenix on Tuesday, I fear the president may be looking to light a match. That's why I asked the president to delay his visit." Stanton adds, "A pardon of Arpaio can be viewed only as a presidential endorsement of the lawlessness and discrimination that terrorized Phoenix's Latino community. Choosing to announce it in Phoenix – especially in the wake of Charlottesville – would add insult to very serious injury and would reveal that the president's true intent is to further divide our nation."

Gov. Ducey To Greet Trump At Airport, Won't Attend Rally. The AP (8/21) reports that a spokesperson for Gov. Doug Ducey (R-AZ) says the Republican "he will not attend a rally at the Phoenix Convention Center with...Trump." Rather, Ducey is slated to "meet the president when Air Force One lands at Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport Tuesday afternoon." The spokesperson says Ducey is "focused on working with law enforcement to ensure a safe event in downtown Phoenix for all involved."

The Hill (8/21, Manchester) reported that Ducey's "decision to sit out the rally comes amid the president's strained relationship with the state's two Republican senators." The Hill said Flake "condemned Trump in his new book, 'Conscience of a Conservative,' which encourages other Republicans to stand up to the president for the good of the country." Trump, in turn, blasted "Flake last week on Twitter, calling him 'toxic' and promoting his primary" challenger, ex-state Sen. Kelli Ward (R-AZ). McCain, meanwhile, "famously helped kill the Senate's ObamaCare repeal-and-replace bill last month, drawing Trump's fury."

Flake On Trump Criticism: "I Don't Worry About It At All." Meanwhile, CNN (8/21, Bradner) reported on its website that Flake "was eager to talk about anything but the President on Monday, one day before Trump visits Arizona for a campaign-style rally. After an East Valley

Chambers of Commerce breakfast, Flake deflected reporters' questions about Trump's tweets that he is 'a non-factor in the Senate' and 'toxic!' 'I don't worry about it at all,' he said. Flake also wouldn't directly answer questions about whether Trump is right to seemingly endorse his primary" foe, Ward, telling reporters, "That's not my realm. That's somebody else's. I just – I'm running my own campaign."

Drawing from the CNN story, The Hill (8/21, Bolton) also reported on Flake's remarks, and added that there is "speculation that Trump may endorse Arizona Treasurer Jeff DeWitt, who served as his Arizona campaign chairman in the 2016 presidential race, to run in the primary against Flake."

The Los Angeles Times (8/21, Lee) also reports on Flake's Monday remarks, saying his "ability to blithely brush aside further insult may be sorely tested Tuesday, when the president swoops into Phoenix for a political rally that could offer more of Trump's caustic critique." Under the headline "Jeff Flake Draws Trump's Ire, Complicating His Re-Election Bid," the Wall Street Journal (8/21, Hughes) also reports on the Flake-Trump feud, and says that during his Tuesday visit to Phoenix, the President is likely to stir up more negative sentiment about the GOP lawmaker. The Journal adds that Flake's criticism of Trump is already rankling some Arizona Republicans who backed the President in November's election.

The Washington Post (8/21, Sullivan, O'Keefe) reports that at today's rally, "some expect" Trump "to expand on his support for Ward and searing criticism of Flake – and perhaps even make a formal endorsement. That possibility has unnerved Republicans inside and outside the White House. Some worry about straining" Trump's "already tenuous relations with congressional Republicans at a time when they face several key challenges this fall: raising the debt ceiling, passing a spending bill and tackling their top policy objective of new tax legislation. Others looking ahead to next year's midterm elections think Trump may even be putting the Senate GOP majority at risk."

Politico Analysis: "Loyalty To Trump" Emerges As Key Issue In GOP Senate Primaries. And in a story headlined "The New GOP Primary Litmus Test: Loyalty To Trump," Politico (8/21, Robillard) reported that "the most potent new litmus test in Republican primaries" is turning out to be "allegiance to...Trump." Politico added, "Loyalty to Trump has quickly become the most potent issue for the Republican base, according to a dozen candidates and strategists immersed in 2018 races. It has already put...Flake and GOP Nevada Sen.] Dean Heller under pressure in their states, sparked bickering between GOP candidates in two of Republicans' top 2018 targets, Indiana and West Virginia, and sunk one candidate running for Alabama's open Senate seat."

Ward On Flake: Arizona Doesn't "Have A Senator Who Supports The President At All." The Washington Times (8/21, Persons) reports that Ward on Monday said "Arizona doesn't have a senator that supports...Trump. 'We don't have a senator who supports the president at all, and so 2018 is time for a change,' Ms. Ward...said on Fox News."

The Daily Caller (8/21, Givas) reported that during her appearance on Fox News, Ward blasted Flake as "weak on immigration, wanting 'amnesty' and 'open borders.'" 'He [Jeff Flake] believes in open borders and amnesty and I believe in building the wall and stopping illegal immigration. I think we do need a physical border. I think we do need to mix the mortar to fix the border. And that means a wall,' Ward" said. She added, "Unfortunately for us in Arizona, we don't have a conservative Republican senator. We don't have a senator who supports the president at all. And so 2018, it's time for a change to get someone in office who is going to support that America first agenda, and move this country in the right direction."

Politico Analysis: Trump Already Preparing For 2020 Reelection Race.

Politico (8/21, Isenstadt) reported that President Trump "is methodically building a 2020 reelection campaign machine, shunting aside doubts about his viability for a second term as controversy consumes the early months of his" presidency. Trump is planning "a fall fundraising tour that is expected to" raise "tens of millions of dollars. His team has tracked dozens of potential Democratic rivals," ranging "from Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren to Facebook co-founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg." Trump also "has received political advice from a top campaign pollster from his 2016 campaign, who has urged the president to keep up his attacks on the mainstream media." Politico added that Team Trump – "rankled by reports that other Republicans are preparing to run in 2020 if the president falters – is proceeding on the assumption" Trump "will seek reelection."

Sen. Collins: "It's Too Difficult To Say" Whether Trump Will Be 2020 GOP Nominee. The Hill (8/21, Easley) reported that during a Monday interview with MSNBC, Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) "said she's unsure whether...Trump will be the Republican Party's presidential nominee in 2020." Collins, "who wrote in Speaker Paul Ryan's (R-Wis.) name for president in 2016, said it's 'too early to tell' whether Trump will seek a second term. Asked if she believes Trump will be the party's 2020 nominee, Collins responded: 'It's too difficult to say.'

Freddoso: Trump's Approval Ratings In Rust Belt States Little Changed Since Election Day.

Writing for the Washington Examiner (8/21, Freddoso), David Freddoso discussed the results of recent NBC/Marist polls in Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, saying that the surveys "in Rust Belt states over the weekend had some stark news for President Donald Trump: His job approval was under 40%. Only about a quarter said they were proud of him. Broad majorities said they were embarrassed." However, said Freddoso, Trump's "favorable ratings" remained "basically the same as what they were on Election Day."

BlackRock, State Street Press Companies On Climate, Diversity, But Not Pay.

Reuters (8/21, Reuters) reports that "even as top U.S. asset managers BlackRock Inc and State Street Corp pressed companies on climate and diversity issues this year, they made few waves on another area of corporate governance: CEO pay." Reuters adds, "Researcher Proxy Insight estimates BlackRock supported management in advisory 'Say on Pay' votes at S&P 500 companies 97 percent of the time during the proxy season ended June 30, one percentage point lower than in the previous year, based on a review of voting tallies by eight outside funds that are voted by BlackRock." Reuters adds that "funds voted by a unit of State Street supported executive pay 94 percent of the time this year, also one percentage point lower than in the previous season, based on a similar review of early tallies." The article states that "the continued strong support helps explain how CEO pay keeps rising, part of a broader debate over inequality, even as large corporations changed their stances on climate and social issues under pressure from investors."

Environmental Group Launches Campaign Against Regulation Reform.

The Hill (8/21, Cama) reports Clean Air Moms Action has "launched an advertising campaign" in opposition of "a pair of bills meant to make it more difficult for federal agencies to write regulations." The environmental group "is running the digital video ad in five states with closely watched or competitive Senate races next year: Missouri, Indiana, Montana, Florida and Virginia." The "Morning Energy" blog of Politico (8/21, Adragna) also provided coverage of this story.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Why Is The Fed So Scared Of Inflation?" The New York Times (8/22) says in an editorial that as the Federal Reserve tries to "make sense of how low unemployment, which should drive up wages and prices, persists side by side with low inflation, most simply assume that inflation will rise by next year as labor demand lifts wages and higher wages lead to rising prices." This has led to two interest rate increases this year. The Times says the Fed "should acknowledge the weakness in the job market and keep rates low until clear signs of wage and price increases emerge."

"Kurds' Risky Dream Of Independence." The New York Times (8/22) editorializes, "After yearning for independence for generations, Kurds in Iraq are scheduled to take a major step in that direction with a nonbinding referendum" in late September. But "the vote, expected to endorse a separate state, would be a mistake, increasing turmoil in a part of the world roiled by the fight against the Islamic State and further threatening Iraq's territorial integrity. Postponement makes better sense." While "in many ways, independence is a logical next step," he Kurds must "first ensure that Kurdistan's democratic institutions are functioning, the economy is strong and they have support from Iraq and other countries before striking out alone."

Washington Post.

"Navy Ships Keep Getting Into Accidents. Time To Find Out Why." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/21) says that Navy ship collisions "happened twice in two months to the Asia-based 7th Fleet, with the tragic loss of up to 17 lives," suggesting "broader and deeper maladies in the fleet and perhaps in the Navy more generally." The upside of Monday's collision, the Post says, "is that senior commanders appear to recognize the severity of their problem," in part because "the Navy will be more hard-pressed than ever in the Pacific in the coming months with two of the 7th Fleet's destroyers out of action." That fact, the Post concludes, "makes it vital that commanders act quickly to identify and remedy the problems in personnel and operations that have enabled these tragic accidents."

"This Would Be A Travesty Of Justice." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/21, Board) warns against President Trump pardoning Joe Arpaio, saying that doing so "now would throw a bone to the president's partisans on the racist alt-right just days after Mr. Trump fed them a juicy steak by explicitly equating the neo-Nazis, anti-Semites and Ku Klux Klansmen in Charlottesville with those who marched against them. If Mr. Trump wants to further inflame and divide America, there would be few more effective ways to do it than by granting clemency to a man whose political career was based on contempt for Latinos generally and Hispanic undocumented immigrants specifically." The Post adds that giving Arpaio a pardon "would be a travesty of justice that would further discredit a presidency already stained by Mr. Trump's words and conduct."

"China's Desperate Desire To Keep Its People In The Dark." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/21) writes that despite years of engagement with the West, China "is actively resisting Western influences and pushing back on digital battlefields" through censorship under a "paternalistic state" that determines "what people can know and what they can say." The Post argues that should China follow through on a recent threat to censor a list of articles and book reviews deemed sensitive to the ruling party, "the impact on China's people would be, once again, to keep them in the dark about their own history and their government's policy. This is the real 'China way.'"

Wall Street Journal.

"Lighthizer's Economics Deficit." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/21) writes that US Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer's goal in the NAFTA renegotiations to reduce US trade deficits with Mexico and Canada incorrectly assesses NAFTA's impact on US trade and is dangerous to US prosperity. The Journal argues that NAFTA has fostered new American export markets and enhanced competitiveness and that Lighthizer's proposals would in fact hurt US manufacturers.

"(Still) Seeking IRS Accountability." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/21, Board) writes that last week's decision by a federal judge ordering the IRS to answer a series of questions about the agency's role in delaying the approval of conservative nonprofit applications offered an important next step to holding the IRS accountable for its actions and, in the words of American Center for Law and Justice attorney Carly Gammill, means that "the IRS must finally acknowledge its wrongdoing (and the reasons for it) in the context of a judicial proceeding in which the agency may be held legally accountable for its misconduct." The Journal adds that Attorney General Sessions should order government attorneys to comply quickly and fully with the judge's order.

"The Navy's McCain Moment." A Wall Street Journal editorial supports Chief of Naval Operations Admiral John Richardson's call for a broader review of the US Navy's operations in the Pacific because of the multiple incidents that have occurred his year, and laments the Navy has been conducting operations with fewer ships and less funding. The Journal suggests these reductions have translated into less prepared sailors, less reliable equipment, and tactical challenges that can be lethal during dangerous missions.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "First, people all over America gathered to watch the first total solar eclipse in 30 years. I don't know about you, but I went out, had a great time. Everybody in the building enjoyed it. But I think it's safe to say nobody in America enjoyed it more than Fox News' Shep Smith. ... That's the joy of a news anchor that gets to cover a story that doesn't involve Donald Trump."

Trevor Noah: "And today really felt like a special day in America. I don't know if you felt it, but everyone came together. We were all just doing the same thing and we were happy about it. People in the streets. Kids came out of school. They were even watching at the White House. And can I just say, look at Jeff Sessions. He looks so adorable! It's like he's watching Santa ride off into the sky with all the toys he helped make!"

Trevor Noah: "I mean, Donald Trump and Melania were watching together? Which surprised me because, I mean, two minutes of total darkness? That should have been her chance to escape."

Trevor Noah: "And apparently, the President's aides were really worried about him. So they told him not to look directly into the sun. And Donald Trump was, like, 'Don't worry about me. That's my policy, every day. Don't look at the sun. Don't talk to the sun.'"

Trump Ramping Up For Texas Trip As Flooding Ravages Houston.

Politico (8/28, McCaskill, Nelson) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said Monday morning that the federal government's response to Harvey's devastating impact on Texas has been 'very much like a military operation,' praising the leadership of White House chief of staff John Kelly." Zinke "said Interior Department resources involved in storm response include emergency response teams from the U.S. Geological Survey, which have monitored flooding and sought to model how it will progress; and swift water rescue teams and assets from national parks and wildlife refuges."

Zinke said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/28) that "it's amazing to see the Cabinet under the Chief of Staff Gen. Kelly. This is very much like a military operation by the numbers, making sure the assets are surged forward, making sure we have communication with our assets and make sure all the secretaries are engaged."

Additional coverage was provided by Fox News (8/28), Fox News (8/28), and Newsmax (8/28, Fitzgerald).

US Interior Secretary Urges Mining Ban Near Yellowstone.

The AP (8/28, Brown) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "wants to speed up a proposal to block new gold mining claims on forested public lands in Montana near Yellowstone National Park and will also consider blocking other types of mining, agency officials said Monday." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift "said Monday that Zinke wants to move forward as quickly as possible with a proposed 20-year withdrawal of future mining claims in the area north of the park, known as Paradise Valley." The review of "that withdrawal was scheduled to be completed by the U.S. Forest Service and Interior's Bureau of Land Management by November, 2018." Swift said, "He is fully in the corner of protecting the Paradise Valley and is putting forward Interior Department assets to support the U.S. Forest Service in that mission. Some places are too precious to mine...This is very much a final decision."

The Missoula Current \(MT\) (8/28, Kidston) reports that Sen. Jon Tester said in a statement Monday, "An administrative withdrawal would be a step in the right direction, but we have no guarantee that the current review will even recommend a withdrawal. And even the best-case scenario means a mine could threaten the doorstep to Yellowstone 20 years from now, sticking our kids with a fight they shouldn't have to fight."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington Times (8/28, Brown), the Houston Chronicle (8/28, Brown, Press), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/26, Brown), the Idaho Statesman (8/28, Brown), Philly \(PA\) (8/28, Brown), the Washington Post (8/28, Matthew Brown |, Ap), the San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (8/28, Brown), the San Gabriel Valley \(CA\) Tribune (8/28, Brown), ABC News (8/28, Brown), the Baytown \(TX\) Sun (8/28, Brown), the Belleville \(IL\) News-Democrat (8/28, Brown), the Coeur d'Alene \(ID\) Press (8/28, Brown), the Columbia Basin \(WA\) Herald (8/28, Brown), the Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (8/28, Brown), the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (8/28, Brown), the St. Joseph \(MO\) News-Press (8/28, Brown), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (8/28, Brown), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/28, Brown), the Boston Herald (8/28, Brown), the Daily Mail (8/28, Brown), Fox Business (8/28, Brown), and KTAR-FM Glendale \(AZ\) Glendale, AZ (8/28, Brown).

Maine Monument Supporter 'Optimistic' After Chat With Zinke.

The AP (8/28, Sharp) reports that Lucas St. Clair, who led "the successful effort to get the federal government to protect land near Maine's tallest mountain says he's feeling optimistic after a telephone chat with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." After receiving a telephone briefing Monday from Zinke, St. Clair "came away from the conversation reassured that Zinke wants the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument to be managed for conservation and recreation by the National Park Service." St. Clair said, "I'm feeling very optimistic."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (8/28, Sharp), ABC News (8/28, Sharp), the Daily Mail (8/28), the Houston Chronicle (8/28, Sharp, Press), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/26, Sharp), Philly \(PA\) (8/28, Sharp), the Washington Times (8/28, Sharp), the Washington Post (8/28, David Sharp |, Ap), the Idaho Statesman (8/28, Sharp), the Los Angeles Times (8/28, Sharp), the Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (8/28, Sharp), the Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (8/28, Sharp), the Westport \(CT\) News (8/28, Sharp), KTAR-FM Glendale \(AZ\) Glendale, AZ (8/28), and WTOP-FM Washington Washington (8/28).

Changes Coming To Nevada Monuments, Heller Confirms. The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/28, Lochhead) reports that Sen. Dean Heller "said Monday that 'minor' changes are coming for two of Nevada's national monuments, Gold Butte and Basin and Range." Heller said he was notified "about the changes Friday during a phone call with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." Heller said, "There will be some adjustments to both of those monuments, but they will be minor. You're not going to see wholesale changes in those monuments."

The President Can Make Monuments – But He Can't Take Them Away. For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (8/28, Molvar, Contributor), Erik Molvar, executive director of Western Watersheds Project, claims that Interior Secretary Zinke's recommendation to the White House last week "that national monument lands protected by past presidents be removed from their protected status" is "apparently a scheme to make way for oil and gas drilling and other destructive land uses that threaten the sacred lands, fragile archaeological sites and scientific values for which these national monuments were designated." Molvar calls the move "a breathtaking overreach by an administration that clearly doesn't understand that a president's powers are limited by the Constitution." He notes that "legal scholars correctly point out that the 1906 Antiquities Act, adopted when Theodore Roosevelt was president, gives the White House power to create National Monuments — but only Congress can alter or rescind them." Molvar adds that "in addition to being unlawful, Zinke's recommendations plainly ignore the will of the majority."

Why Trump's Upcoming Decision On Federal Lands Matters. In commentary for the Daily Signal (8/28, Tubb), Katie Tubb, a policy analyst for the Thomas A. Roe Institute for Economic Policy Studies at The Heritage Foundation, claims that "reducing the size of a national monument or even rescinding its status does not open up the federal land to be overrun by oil interests or clear cut by the foresting industry." She notes that "federal lands are managed by a web of laws determining who can do what and when." Tubb suggests that "if Congress doesn't like what the Trump administration is doing, it ought to act to clarify" the Antiquities Act. She says that "at the very least, Congress ought to amend the law to give states more say in the matter." Tubb concludes that "shifting more control from Washington to those with direct knowledge of the land in question and a clear stake in the outcome of decisions would be a step in the right direction."

Our View: Bringing Balance To The Antiquities Act. The Salem \(MA\) News (8/28) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "unwillingness to be transparent about his review and its results all but guarantees a legal quagmire." With regards to the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine Monument, the paper says that "all sides are already threatening lawsuits, so no matter the outcome, the issue will likely not be settled for years." The paper argues that "if anything, the debate over Canyons and Seamounts shows the need for Congress to update the outdated Antiquities Act, which allows presidential administrations to designate and reshape national monuments with little or no oversight."

Who Deserves Praise And Criticism This Week In Utah? The editorial board of the Ogden \(UT\) Standard-Examiner (8/28) gives Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke mixed reviews for his recommendation on the Bears Ears National Monument. Zinke receives a "thumbs up" for "keeping Bears Ears' designation as a national monument." But he is also given a "thumbs down" for "not being more transparent about how Bears Ears and other monuments might change."

Under Obama, A Gold Mining Firm Was Fine With A Mojave Desert Monument. Under Trump, An About-face.

The Los Angeles Times (8/28, Sahagun) reports that gold mining firm Newcastle Gold Ltd. has changed its position on the creation of the Castle Mountains National Monument. The designation was "hailed as a compromise that served the goals of conservationists and the mining industry." So, conservationists said, "they were caught off guard to learn Newcastle's position shifted after the Trump administration moved to roll back federal protections on many of the monuments created by previous administrations." Newcastle and Rep. Paul Cook "have told Zinke the designation was made without adequate public outreach or input from the company." The company "recommended solution: Reduce the size of Castle Mountains National Monument by

National Park Campgrounds Need Work. Is Zinke’s Privatization Pitch The Answer?

Colorado Public Radio (8/28, Hood) reports that in the face of a $11.3 billion backlog in deferred maintenance at national parks, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “thinks private companies could provide campground upgrades.” The Interior Department “doesn’t have a formal proposal,” but Zinke has “mentioned expansion of public-private partnerships for campground management multiple times, including a conference call with reporters and at a Recreational Vehicle Industry Association meeting.” The proposal has the support of Derrick Crandall, counselor for the National Parks Hospitality Association and president of the American Recreation Coalition. He “explained that companies can provide much needed upgrades to park campgrounds while adding amenities like food stores, Wi-Fi, and tent rentals.”

How A Mosquito-Borne Disease May Impact An Imperiled Idaho Species.

KBSC-FM Boise, ID (8/28, Barnhill) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has identified the West Nile Virus as a threat to the greater sage grouse. During his visit to Boise in June, Zinke “said he wanted to take the mosquito-borne disease into consideration as part of his sage grouse management strategy.” In recommendations since that visit, Zinke “outlined changes to the previous administration’s plan that’s friendlier to mining and oil and gas companies.”

Buttrey Discusses Long Quest For Pending Interior Job.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (8/28, Drake) reports that Montana state Sen. Ed Buttrey is up for a job as an assistant secretary with the Interior Department. According to the article, “it was known toward the end of the 2017 legislative session that Buttrey was up for the job.” Buttrey said he and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “have the same vision and that Zinke was looking for people who he could rely on, trust and make the department look great.”

House Natural Resources Chairman Pledges To Retire After Next Term.

The Hill (8/28, Henry) reports that “House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Rob Bishop (R-UT) intends to retire after his next term in office, he told constituents last week.” The Hill says that “at a town hall event in Layton, Utah, on Friday, Bishop said he won’t run for reelection to the House in 2020, assuming he wins reelection next year to the House seat he’s held since 2003.” The Hill adds that “Bishop is in his second term as chairman of the Natural Resources Committee, a panel that gives him oversight of the Interior Department, energy and natural resources development, public lands policy, and Puerto Rico.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (8/28).

Additional Coverage: Zinke’s Daughter Slams Trump’s “Inexcusable” Transgender Military Policy.

Additional coverage that Jennifer Detlefsen, the daughter of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, “slammed” President’s Trump’s “policy banning transgender people from serving in any capacity in the military” was provided by CNN (8/28, Klein) and E&E Publishing (8/28, Yachnin).

The Rush To Develop Oil And Gas We Don’t Need.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (8/28, Lyons), Jim Lyons, a research scholar at Yale, criticizes President Trump for moving forward with oil and gas development on public lands. Lyons argues that Trump’s “misguided move to increase production in a soft energy market is bad for government revenues, not necessary for national security and likely to damage natural resources that millions of Americans use and enjoy.” Lyons suggests that “a better approach would be to develop an overall strategy to guide energy development to places where conflicts with water, wildlife and recreation are fewer.”

Commentary: US And Utah Need To Stop Coddling Domestic Extremists.

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/29, Summers), Ian Summers, a graduate research fellow in the University of Utah’s Department of Communication and special advisor to Alliance for a Better Utah, draws attention to “a pattern of state and federal officials excusing extremist antigovernment rhetoric that fosters violent zealots against the public servants they are supposed to protect.” Summers adds that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “declined to speak up in defense of his employees when asked about the Bunkerville standoff.” Summers warns that “the longer Zinke stays silent on this form of domestic terrorism, the more likely a tragic attack will occur – at the expense of the men and women who serve under him.”

Bureau Of Land Management

New Path Sought For High-Voltage Transmission Lines In Idaho.

The AP (8/28, Ridler) reports that “federal officials on Monday reopened public comments on proposed routes for two high-voltage transmission lines in southwestern Idaho intended to modernize the Pacific Northwest’s energy grid.” The Bureau of Land Management “announced it will take comments through Sept. 27 for two segments of the Gateway West project proposed by Idaho Power and Rocky Mountain Power.” The BLM in January “approved routes for the two 500-kilovolt transmission lines on public land in Idaho’s Gooding, Elmore, Owyhee, Cassia and Twin Falls counties.” However, “legislation by Idaho Republican Rep. Mike Simpson signed into law in May by President Donald Trump mandates segments not connected to those routes.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/28, Ridler), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/28, Ridler), the Washington Times (8/28, Ridler), the Houston Chronicle (8/28, Ridler, Press), and the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (8/28, Ridler).

Person Who Caused Big Wyoming Wildfire Could Be Told To Pay.

The AP (8/28) reports that “the person who caused a wildfire that destroyed a home and threatened several others east of Yellowstone National Park could be ordered to pay millions to cover firefighting costs.” Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman Sarah Beckwith said “the federal agency seeks to recoup the cost of wildfires caused by people.” According to Beckwith, “the fire cost the BLM roughly $1.4 million and several agencies were involved in fighting the fire.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Powell \(WY\) Tribune (8/28, Baker).

Bringing Pot To Burning Man? It’s Still Illegal On US Land.

The AP (8/28) reports that “Nevada has legalized recreational marijuana, but it’s still not OK for tens of thousands of Burning Man fans to light up this year.” According to the article, “consumption is allowed only in private and even possession remains illegal on federal lands, including the stretch of Black Rock Desert managed by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management where the counter-culture festival began Sunday and continues through the weekend about 100 miles (161 kilometers) north of Reno.” BLM officials “say a pot possession arrest can result in a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.” However, “federal agents made no arrests for any crimes last year at Burning Man, or the year before.”

Lawmakers Frustrated By BLM, Wyoming Gets EPA Grant For Leaky Petroleum Tanks Ruffatto Sentencing Delayed.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (8/28, Richards) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management’s consideration of viewshed impacts from Native American historic sites has some lawmakers and a number of oil and gas operators frustrated.” The Select Federal Natural Resource Committee meets in Casper next week, “and the viewshed is on the agenda.”

Throwing Away Years Of Public Cooperation In The Arctic Would Be A Mistake.

In an op-ed for the Juneau \(AK\) Empire (8/28), Debbie S. Miller opposes opening up more of the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska to drilling. According to Miller, “given the size of the Reserve, there is plenty of room to protect significant natural values and the subsistence interests of the Inupiat.” She says that the BLM has “created a management plan that, while not perfect, has set aside five areas of exceptional wildlife and subsistence values while still allowing oil development to move forward in the Reserve.”

Euthanizing Wild Horses Is Nice Way To Say Killing: Suzanne Roy.

In an op-ed for the Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (8/28, Roy), Suzanne Roy, executive director of the American Wild Horse Campaign, criticizes “the Trump Administration’s budget request to slaughter tens of thousands of healthy wild horses and burros.” Instead of slaughter, Roy urges Congress to “look where the National Academy of Sciences directed the BLM to go: managing the wild horse population with fertility control.” She argues that “there is still time for Congress to wise up, reject the inhumanity of mass slaughter, and call for publicly-supported, scientifically-recommended, and long-term solutions for our wild horses.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Study: Seismic Blasting In Gulf Of Mexico Hurts Dolphins, Whales.

The Tampa Bay \(FL\) Times (8/28, Pittman) reports, “For the past six months, a battle has raged over a proposal to allow oil and gas companies to perform seismic testing to search for deposits of petroleum off the nation’s Atlantic coast.” The federal government issued 22 permits for seismic tests in the Gulf of Mexico last year, and has so far issued 11 this year. A federal environmental impact study released this month “says the blasts of sound used to detect the presence of oil and gas have likely been harming whales and dolphins” in the Gulf of Mexico. But “an industry spokesman contended that there’s no evidence that any marine life has ever been harmed by its seismic testing.” API’s Erik Millito said, “The oil and natural gas industry has been operating safely and successfully in the Gulf of Mexico for decades without injuries to marine life.”

Carney Launches Effort To Explore Offshore Wind In Delaware.

The Wilmington \(DE\) News Journal (8/28, Goss) reports that “Delaware this week took its first major step toward encouraging the development of an offshore wind farm in nearly a decade.” Gov. John Carney on Monday “signed an executive order to create a ‘working group’ that will examine the potential costs and benefits of generating electricity from such a project.” According to the article, “one of the first questions the 17-member working group will need to answer is how to avoid the missteps that caused the undoing of Delaware’s previous attempt to foster an offshore wind project under Carney’s predecessor, former Gov. Jack Markell.”

Also reporting are North American Windpower (8/28, Lillian).

Bureau Of Reclamation

Boat Ramp To Close After Labor Day Weekend.

The Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (8/29) reports that “American Falls Reservoir’s west-side boat ramp construction will resume after Labor Day weekend, the Bureau of Reclamation announced.” According to the article, “the ramp will close to the public, including all boater and angler traffic, beginning Sept. 5 and will re-open in mid-October following construction.” Upper Snake Field Office manager Ryan Newman said in a release, “Our contractors have a small window of opportunity to access a portion of the ramp. The goal is to remove and replace up to 150 feet of the ramp before the water rises in mid-October.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

More Rain And Rescues As Harvey Lashes Texas For Another Day.

The New York Times (8/28) reports Tropical Storm Harvey continues to unleash rain and flooding in Houston, leading the city’s mayor Sylvester Turner to defend his decision not to evacuate. Turner said an evacuation order would have been chaotic and put more people’s lives in danger.

A second New York Times (8/28, Dougherty) reports the storm is likely to be one of the nation’s costliest disasters, with tens of billions in economic activity and property damage lost in an area crucial for the energy, chemical and shipping industries. Economists say the region will recover quickly and continue growing, but the storm is forcing businesses to focus on damage assessment and rebuilding. Brett Ryan, senior US economist at Deutsche Bank, said, “Since the Port Arthur refining complex is the largest in the U.S. and the second largest in the world, this will no doubt impact gasoline and chemicals prices.” The storm forced eight refineries in Texas to shut down, sparking concern for increases in gasoline prices. The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Zumbun) reports the financial toll will largely depend on the extend of flooding in upcoming days. While refiners outside the region may be able to offset some of the negative effects, Gulf Coast producers still have to evaluate whether the plants and ports sustained major damage from the flood before restarting operations. Moody’s expects the biggest damage will be to insurers and property owners, with an estimated $30-40 billion in damage from the storm. The Los Angeles Times (8/28, Masunaga) reports major ports in Corpus Christi and Houston are closed to vessel traffic, which is expected to delay imports and exports of crude and refined products, according to S&P Global Platts. Beacon Economics economist Robert Kleinhenz said there is a “good chance” of a “slight but measurable impact” on the US GDP this quarter because of the storm. USA Today (8/28, Davidson, Bomey) reports the region is responsible for about 2.4 percent of the US’ economy, with a projected gross output of $441 billion this year. It is a top three center for oil refineries, and is the largest concentration of chemical production. It also contains the second busiest shipping port and two of the country’s busiest airports. Kevin Simmons, an economics professor at Austin College, writes in the Dallas Morning News (8/28, Simmons) that Harvey could break a record for financial damage by a storm.

Refiner Stocks Rise As Harvey Disrupts Fuel Production. The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Sider) reports shares of refiners rallied Monday as investors look to benefit from the plants that are still online and producing. Harvey has knocked out more than 2 million bpd in refining capacity, causing gasoline and diesel prices to spike on concerns that supplies will tighten. However, the reduced demand from refiners has also depressed oil prices. USA Today (8/28, Bomey) reports that long term damage will be limited, but short term outages at refineries are causing gasoline price spikes. The national average was $2.36 on Monday, up 4 cents from a week ago and 15.4 cents year-over-year, according to AAA. GasBuddy.com petroleum analyst Patrick DeHaan expects retail increases of 10-25 cents in the Gulf Coast, 10-25 cents in the upper Midwest, 10-20 cents in the Northeast, 5-15 cents in the Plains and 5-15 cents in the Rockies and West. DeHaan said, “I think the worst of the impact is going to start trickling down to the retail level in the next couple of days. ... The storm is going to be dumping rain for days yet, so we don’t necessarily have a full comprehension of the amount of damage that’s taking place.” The Miami Herald (8/28, Neal) reports DeHaan said, “The impact could linger for several weeks or longer, depending on how long it takes Texas refiners to return to normal operations. In addition, the situation could worsen should more shutdowns or outages happen in the coming week as Harvey continues to drop feet of rain on already flooded Texas.” Reuters (8/28, Seba) reports US fuel prices surged on Monday as two more Gulf Coast refiners cut output and considered reducing a third, leaving more than 13 percent of the nation’s refining capacity offline. Marathon’s Galveston Bay refinery cut production by half, while Lyondell Basell Industries’ Houston refinery also reduced output by 50 percent to conserve supply. Motiva Enterprises is also considering shutting in its Port Arthur refinery because of high water and plant grounds and running with only essential personnel. Gasoline for immediate delivery in the Gulf Coast hit five-year highs, while US gasoline futures jumped as much as 7 percent. Robert Rapier writes a contributing piece for Forbes (8/28, Rapier) saying that the US will have a considerable draw on gasoline inventories this week, and for the foreseeable future. The extent of the draws will depend on the damage to the facilities and infrastructure. Rapier expects offshore production to resume quickly, but Eagle Ford operations to take longer to resume.

Reuters (8/28, Scheyder) reports BP said its offshore oil platforms in the US Gulf of Mexico and its Texas City chemical plant are still online despite Tropical Storm Harvey. BP decided to close its US headquarters in Houston and is asking its 5,000 employees to work remotely. The office will only reopen once conditions approve, according to spokesman Jason Ryan.

Fox Business (8/28, Rocco) reports some oil production in the Gulf of Mexico started to return on Monday as companies recover from Hurricane Harvey. About 18.9 percent of the Gulf’s 1.75 million bpd capacity was still offline, down from Sunday’s estimate of 22 percent, according to the BSEE. The agency said 98 platforms remain evacuated, while seven resumed operations. Natural gas production also improved from 25.7 percent offline to 18.1 percent.

Gaurav Sharma writes a contributing piece for Forbes (8/28, Sharma) reports that the storm could move towards Louisiana and cause widespread damage at their refining facilities. In total, “The shutdowns include ExxonMobil Baytown (560,500 bpd), and Valero (293,000 bpd), Citgo (157,500 bpd), Flint Hills (296,470 bpd), Magellan (50,000 bpd), Buckeye (50,000 bpd) – all in Corpus Christi. Shell Deer Park (340,000 bpd), Pasadena (112,229 bpd), Phillips66 Sweeny (247,000 bpd) and Valero Three Rivers (89,000 bpd) facilities have also been temporarily closed.”

Bloomberg News (8/28, Spalding, Carroll) reports Harvey has drifted back into the Gulf of Mexico, where it is gaining strength before coming ashore again. It is expected to hit the Texas-Louisiana border.

Harvey’s Lessons For America’s Stretched Energy Infrastructure. The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Jakab) reports Hurricane Harvey is providing an important reminder that the infrastructure that processes and delivers oil is vital for the US’ energy security. The US imports 25 percent less oil than a decade ago and exports over a million bpd. The US also relies on fewer facilities, that are now run closer to their physical limits. The storm in the Gulf Coast, where many refineries are concentrated, also affects the pipeline infrastructure that delivers product to customers. The Colonial Pipeline carries over 2.5 million bpd, about half the refined product used along the entire east coast. In Breakingviews, Reuters (8/28, Laughlin) says that the storm exposes the flaws in making the US a dominant fuel exporter by promoting coal and opening federal lands for oil drilling. Instead, "Tackling climate change and hardening energy infrastructure should take priority over Trump's pet projects." While oil and gas supplies are plentiful, the resources are little good if the necessary infrastructure is not working.

9th Circuit Rules Against Endangered Status For Sonoran Desert Bald Eagles.

The Arizona Daily Star (8/28, Fischer) reports that the 9th US Circuit Court of Appeals "rebuffed a bid to have the Sonoran Desert area bald eagle listed as endangered, saying, in essence, that if they all are eradicated it wouldn't make a real difference to eagle populations as a whole." The appeals court "agreed Monday with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service that while the eagles are different than others, they are not 'ecologically or biologically significant.'" According to the article, "with bald eagles as a whole no longer endangered, the judges said there was no justification for providing that status for this group alone, even if they disappear from the Southwest."

Business Leaders Want Mexican Wolves In Grand Canyon Area.

The AP (8/29) reports that "more than 60 business leaders have urged the federal government to release endangered Mexican gray wolves into the Grand Canyon area in northern Arizona and eastern Utah." The business leaders are "submitting their request in a joint letter to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." They claim "the wolf-recovery efforts will have economic and environmental benefits."

Feds Will Help With Wetlands Restoration At Bailey Point.

The Elk River \(MN\) Star News (8/28) reports that the US Fish and Wildlife Service is "going to help with wetland restoration at Bailey Point Nature Preserve in Elk River." The Elk River City Council agreed "to enter into a contract with the service Monday night." Under the contract, the federal government will "pay $2,500 to restore an acre of wetland and 15 acres of prairie and oak savanna in the park." The project will "provide habitat for migratory birds and native pollinators, like bees, and give the city technical expertise, while the city agreed to hire the contract that does the work."

Refuge Occupier Jason Blomgren Sentenced To Probation.

The AP (8/28, Dubois) reports that "a federal judge sentenced a North Carolina man on Monday to two years on probation for his role in last year's takeover of a national wildlife refuge in Oregon." US District Judge Robert Jones also "ordered Jason Blomgren to pay $3,000 restitution." Blomgren is also "required to participate in mental health treatment."

This 'Endangered Species' Story Was Government-Sponsored Fake News.

In commentary for the Daily Signal (8/28, Gordon), Rob Gordon, a senior research fellow at The Heritage Foundation criticizes the federal government for its decision to delist the Johnston's frankenia. According to Gordon, "the species did not recover – it never was endangered in the first place." Gordon also claims that it took the Fish and Wildlife Service "decades to correct this mistake, and when it finally did, it was dishonest."

Homestead To Welcome Visitor Aiming To See Every National Park.

The Beatrice \(NE\) Daily Sun (8/28) reports that Homestead National Monument of America will be "welcoming Mikah Meyer to the park on Monday, Sept. 4, 2017, from 1-2 p.m. at the Education Center." Meyer is "on a mission to set a world record for national park trips." Meyer will "discuss his epic quest to be the youngest person to stamp his national park passport book in all 417 units of the National Park System."

Growing Maintenance Backlog Hurting Our National Parks.

In an op-ed for the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (8/28, Beck), Tom Beck, a former legislator from Deer Lodge, writes that the deferred maintenance backlogs at national parks is “a big problem” for the National Park Service, “as it can’t keep up with the roughly $11.3 billion in maintenance repairs that are needed system-wide.” Beck warns that “the maintenance backlog means that tourism in Montana could take a hit.” Furthermore, he says that “the more we defer park maintenance needs, the more expensive they can become.” Beck supports the National Park Service Legacy Act, “bipartisan congressional legislation that would provide a fiscally sustainable path forward to address deferred maintenance problems in our national parks.”

Cash-strapped Park Service Eyes Help From ‘Friends’.

The Johnstown \(PA\) Tribune-Democrat (8/29) editorializes that “because federal dollars for national parks are limited, and more than 400 other national historic sites are cash-strapped as well, rangers at the Johnstown Flood National Memorial started looking elsewhere for funds to help pay for improvements.” The rangers “want to adopt a program that has been successful at other national park sites across the country.” The rangers “hope to establish a Friends of the Johnstown Flood National Memorial group.” The paper encourages “anyone interested in preserving the region’s rich heritage and history to lend a hand.”

North Korea Fires Unidentified Projectile, US Says.

The Los Angeles Times (8/28, Stiles) reports North Korea on Tuesday launched a missile that “apparently traveled hundreds of miles over Sea of Japan and Hokkaido, an island prefecture in northern Japan,” according to Army Col. Rob Manning, a Pentagon spokesman. Manning said military officials are evaluating the launch and will report their findings later. ABC World News Tonight (8/28, story 7, 1:10, Llamas) called the ballistic missile launch “another serious escalation,” and noted “President Trump has threatened to confront new signs of aggression from North Korea with, quote, ‘fire and fury.’ No response yet from the White House to today’s launch.” NBC Nightly News (8/28, story 8, 0:30, Holt) said the early Tuesday morning launch “was the first time a North Korean projectile crossed over Japan in nearly a decade” and “the second launch from the North in four days. Defiant moves in the face of President Trump’s threats of fire and fury.”

The New York Times (8/28, Sang-Hun, Sanger) similarly calls the move “a direct challenge to President Trump,” and notes the launch came shortly after Secretary of State Tillerson said he was “pleased to see that the regime in Pyongyang has certainly demonstrated some level of restraint that we have not seen in the past.” While the missile’s flight “landed harmlessly in the sea,” the propaganda value “was considerable,” as public television programs “were interrupted with a rare warning screen announcing the missile’s flight over the country,” bullet train lines halted operations, and the government used “unusually dire terms” to discuss the incident. Said Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, “A missile passing over Japan is an unprecedented, grave and serious threat,” Bloomberg News (8/28, Nonomiya, Sharp, Keatinge) reports, adding that Abe demanded an emergency United Nations Security Council meeting. Abe told reporters “that he agreed with Trump to increase pressure on North Korea following a 40-minute phone call on Tuesday morning,” and also “urged China and Russia to join in taking action against Kim Jong Un’s regime.”

The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Cheng, Landers) reports the Anderson Air Force Base in Guam announced US authorities detected the launch “in real time,” but determined the missile did not pose a threat to the island. Meanwhile, according to a statement from Seoul’s Blue House, National Security Adviser McMaster and his counterpart from Seoul, Chung Eui-yong discussed an expanded deployment of “strategic assets,” which the Journal says may include nuclear weapons, aircraft carriers, or stealth bombers, to South Korea.

Trump To Visit Texas As Rain Continues To Fall And Relief Efforts Continue.

President Trump addressed Tropical Storm Harvey and the continuing rains in Texas on Monday, vowing long-term federal recovery assistance. The President and First Lady plan to visit Texas Tuesday, and may return to the region again this weekend. Coverage portrays the response as running smoothly so far, but with much remaining to be seen amid ongoing rains and a massive number of displaced people. The Dallas Morning News (8/28, Gillman) reports under the headline "Trump's Texas Flood Tour Will Project Compassion, High-Level Engagement" that the White House has tried to project an image of Trump as "an engaged consoler in chief," but the Washington Post (8/28, Parker) says the visit "is not without its own possible political peril, especially because rain may still be falling when he heads to Texas."

The story dominated the network newscasts, which devoted more than 46 minutes of combined coverage to Harvey. On the CBS Evening News (8/28, story 7, 0:30, O'Donnell), Anthony Mason reported, "President Trump will fly to the disaster zone tomorrow, and possibly again next weekend. No decision has been announced on which towns the President will visit." NBC Nightly News (8/28, story 5, 0:40, Holt) reported, "President Trump is preparing to head here to the storm zone tomorrow to monitor this situation on the ground. This natural disaster [is] a major test for how his Administration will respond." On ABC World News Tonight (8/28, story 6, 1:50, Llamas), Jonathan Karl reported, "The President was upbeat about recovery efforts, saying the Texas governor is doing a fantastic job, calling his FEMA administrator 'outstanding in so many ways,' and predicting a swift recovery."

USA Today (8/28, Korte) reports that Trump said Monday "that he may visit the Gulf Coast two or three times this week – with stops in Texas and possibly Louisiana – to survey the damage caused by Hurricane Harvey." During remarks at the White House after his meeting with President Sauli Niinistö of Finland, the President "expressed amazement at the magnitude of the disaster but promised a swift and long-term federal government response." Trump said, "I've heard the words 'epic,' I've heard 'historic.' That's what it is. It's like Texas. It's really like Texas, if you think about it. But it is a historic amount of water." Politico (8/28, McCaskill, Nelson) reports that the President and First Lady are "expected to sidestep Houston" on Tuesday "so as not to interrupt evacuations and emergency responses to the devastating flooding in that area."

The New York Times (8/28, Davis, Thrush) reports that Trump "pledged the federal government's full support to residents of Texas and Louisiana...saying that 'we are 100 percent with you' and promising quick delivery of a multibillion-dollar aid package." Trump said, "Recovery will be a long and difficult road, and the federal government stands ready, willing and able to support that effort." The Los Angeles Times (8/28) reports that Trump "cautioned that the extent of the disaster is still unknown."

The New York Post (8/28, Fredericks) reports that Trump "also praised people who were going out of their way to help out their fellow citizens." The President said, "Tragic times such as these bring out the best in America's character. Strength, charity and resilience are those characters. We see neighbor helping neighbor, friend helping friend and stranger helping stranger." The Washington Times (8/28, Boyer) reports that he said "the nation is hoping for 'strength and courage' for those affected by epic flooding and other storm damage, with much of the rainfall still coming."

Politico (8/28, Nussbaum) says the President "has deployed his knack for marketing as Hurricane Harvey has ravaged Texas, calling the storm 'epic,' 'historic' and the 'biggest ever.' ... But Trump's showmanship is about to collide with the devastation on the ground as he heads to Texas on Tuesday, and while natural disasters usually call for a certain presidential demeanor, Trump's response so far has been distinctly his own." Politico writes that "even while he has pledged quick financial assistance from the federal government, he has appeared unable to stop himself from marveling at the strength and size of the storm."

Energy Secretary Perry said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/28), "The President's really engaged in this. ... This President is as engaged in a personal way as any president that I had the privilege to work with. He wants to come to Texas." He "wants to be around some people, let them know that the federal government is a partner in this. We recognize, we respect the state's role in this effort that they're leading this, we're assisting them. We're leaning forward as far as we can in this. But the President is very, very engaged, he knows exactly what's going on."

Perry later said on Fox News' Hannity (8/28), "The President has put a Cabinet together that is really focused on this. The President has been leaning into this disaster from before it ever started, clearly giving the authority to the state of Texas to move and move quickly. So I feel confident that both the state and the federal government."

Interior Secretary Zinke said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/28) that "it's amazing to see the Cabinet under the Chief of Staff Gen. Kelly. This is very much like a military operation by the numbers, making sure the assets are surged forward, making sure we have communication with our assets and make sure all the secretaries are engaged."

Bill Kristol was asked on CNN's The Lead (8/28) about the Trump Administration's response. Kristol said, "It's hard to tell, obviously, and we'll know much more later. I do think we want to remember that John Kelly, the very capable chief of staff, was secretary of homeland security. ... So John Kelly knows more about this than the typical White House chief of staff and he was a four-star Marine general and is probably pretty good at getting things organized and happening on time."

Some analyses look at the political ramifications of how the President handles the storm. The AP (8/28, Pace) writes, "George W. Bush never recovered from his flyover of Hurricane Katrina's devastation. Barack Obama got a bipartisan boost late in his re-election campaign for his handling of Superstorm Sandy." Now Trump "confronts the political risks and potential gains that come with leading the federal government's response to a deadly and destructive natural disaster." The White House "has sought to paint Trump as eagerly engaged in the initial response," and the President's "advisers are well-aware that the hurricane poses a significant test for the White House, which has largely been mired in crises of its own making during Trump's first seven months in office."

The Washington Post (8/28, Debonis, Paletta) says the storm "will pose an immediate test for the White House and Congress, pressing policymakers to approve billions of dollars in recovery funds even though they haven't agreed on much else this year." Harvey "poses President Trump's first test in emergency assistance, potentially revealing whether he can overcome Congress's deep divisions over spending and the budget to prioritize aid. It will also test whether Trump can suspend his adversarial governing style and even postpone his own agenda...to assemble a major – and costly – package that could be directed to law enforcement, emergency relief, schools, infrastructure, hospitals, food banks and several other entities."

USA Today (8/28) says in an editorial, "Everything President Trump needs to know about how not to handle Hurricane Harvey's devastation in Texas, he can learn" from handling of Katrina. "Key lessons: No flyovers. No amateurs running the Federal Emergency Management Agency. No premature compliments for disaster relief efforts. And definitely nothing like 'Brownie, you're doing a heck of a job.' ... Trump will ultimately be judged by his leadership, his empathy and the strength of his administration's efforts to support state, local and private relief efforts."

The President did not tweet during the day on Monday, but retweeted four items – just one of them, from Texas Gov. Greg Abbott, about the storm. Bloomberg News (8/28, Epstein, Jacobs) also reports on the President's Monday remarks.

Pence Says Adequate Funding Exists To Address Crisis. Roll Call (8/28, Bennett) reports that Vice President Pence said Monday that the federal government "has adequate funding on hand to deal with the historic flooding and damage done by Hurricane Harvey, possibly looking to tamp down concerns that Congress could get into a spending fight over the cost of the storm's aftermath." Pence said, "We truly believe that we have the reserves to address the financial burden of this crisis."

Pence told KHOU-TV Houston (8/28, Lewis), "We actually anticipate that as many as a half a million people in Texas will be eligible for and applying for financial disaster assistance, and we remain very confident that with the reserves and with the support in the Congress, we'll have the resources that we need. But right now, as you know very well, the focus now is on rescue, on getting people out of harm's way. ... The President and I could not be more grateful for the efforts of state and local officials in Texas. But it's so important that Texans continue to do what people have been doing, and that is listening to local emergency management officials and making sure that they and their families stay safe."

Pence said on KTRH-AM Houston (8/28), "I think that the what you're going to see is that the national government, and we anticipate the Congress, are going to make the resources of available to see Texas through the rescue operation, through the recovery. But there is simply no question when you look at...the magnitude of the flooding that's taken place in the fourth largest city in the United States that we anticipate it will be years coming back but Houston and Texas are strong. ... We know we will be there to rebuild and the American people are with you."

Pence said on KTSA-AM San Antonio (8/28) that "when the rain comes down and beats against the house and the flood waters rise and the wind blows, states are in the lead and your local first responders and local emergency managers but the federal government has a vital role in providing support and from even before landfall, President Trump directed the full resources of the Federal government to support the people of Texas and as of this morning the people of Louisiana in the midst of this storm. As I speak to you we have some eight thousand federal officials working through FEMA on the ground in Texas and Louisiana. We have but dozens of fixed wing and helicopter aircraft with the Coast Guard that are supporting National Guard efforts."

Pence said on the Rush Limbaugh Show (8/28), "I think the American people can be very proud of the effort the Gov. Abbott in Texas and local first responders are making and I am very proud of the strong leadership President Trump has provided for our entire Administration." Pence added that "once the floodwaters subside, then the real work of recovery will begin in earnest and we're going to be making sure that that upwards to a half a million Americans that may be eligible for disaster assistance know that that we are with them, we support them and we'll see Houston and southeast Texas all the way through this crisis."

Pence was also interviewed on KSEV-AM and KTRK-TV.

Lawmakers Hope To Avoid Fight Over Disaster Aid. USA Today (8/28, King, Jackson) reports that officials are hoping "to avoid the political squall over disaster aid that followed Superstorm Sandy in 2012. ... Lawmakers from New York and New Jersey took to Twitter to make clear they were ready to support disaster aid for the battered Gulf Coast, even though many of their colleagues from that region opposed the aid package approved after Sandy struck the Northeast nearly five years ago." However, "some conservatives are warning Congress not to fill a relief bill with pork-barrel spending." House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) said, "Sadly and far too often, relief packages become a vehicle for all kinds of special interest and pet projects that have nothing to do with the devastation. Narrowly focused relief packages would get conservative support."

The New York Times (8/28, Kaplan, Martin) says that "the prospect of a disaster aid package is also reviving raw emotions from after Hurricane Sandy, when Northeastern Republicans found themselves pitted against conservative colleagues from other regions – including most of the Texas delegation – who objected to the roughly $50 billion relief package," and it "will add another pressing issue to an already tense fiscal showdown that faces Congress as lawmakers return next week from a monthlong recess." Politico (8/28, Scholtes, Wright) reports under the headline "Hurricane Aid Adds To GOP's Dreadful September" that Senate Majority Leader McConnell and House Speaker Ryan "already face a daunting September, with deadlines looming to avoid a government shutdown and debt default," and "now they'll likely have to add a multibillion-dollar aid package" to the mix.

Politico (8/28, Cheney) reports that Sen. Ted Cruz and other Texas Republicans are now being "accused of hypocrisy on Harvey aid." Gov. Chris Christie, referring to Sandy, told reporters Monday, "The congressional members in Texas are hypocrites, and I said back in 2012 they'd be proven to be hypocrites. It was just a matter of time. We were the disaster that was the longest in waiting in terms of federal aid, and I hope that's not what happens to the folks in Texas." Other northeastern Republicans "also vented their frustration at how Texas Republicans handled Sandy aid – even as they said they wouldn't repeat history in return."

Several Texas lawmakers of both parties weighed in on the storm response. Rep. Al Green (D-TX) said on CNN's Situation Room (8/28), "I think that we have to prepare ourselves for a circumstance similar to what we had with Katrina. ... We will have a long-term recovery process, and it's going to require funding from the government. Only the Federal government can step in with the resources necessary to take care of the people after this horrific event. My hope is that we will be amenable to working together, I think we will, and making sure we provide the resources for the recovery that will be long term."

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-TX) was asked on CNN's Situation Room (8/28) if she is confident Congress will pass an aid package for Texas. Jackson Lee said, "This is a statement about America and whether we will build infrastructure and housing and we'll restore people's lives. I believe the Speaker and certainly my Democratic leadership that has called me already to move an aid package, I think the real question is if the President of the United States has to be part of that leadership with a commitment not to shut this government down."

Rep. Pete Sessions (R-TX) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (8/28), "Congress is going to have to deal with this appropriately as we have had to do over the last 20 years of big floods and tornadoes. I would offer some bit of advice to the Administration...and to the United States Senate. They need to finish 100 percent of the confirmations. They need to finish doing their work rather than the games that have been going on. We need real live people who will be accountable and responsible for what happens for several years from the Administration across the board, and I encourage the Administration to finish off its business."

AP Analysis: FEMA's Long Brings Experience To Handling Of Storm. The AP (8/28, Kellman) writes that FEMA Administrator Brock Long, "a veteran of disaster management in government and the private sector," is "facing a new scale of problems to solve in the historic devastation of the nation's fourth-largest city. And if the past is any indication, political storms could loom on the horizon." Long said Monday, "We have not seen an event like this. You could not draw this forecast up." Harvey "is far from Long's first time managing disaster response, but it's shaping up to be one of the nation's most devastating storms."

The Texas Tribune (8/28, Livingston) reports that Long was in Corpus Christi and San Antonio on Monday. Long said on Fox News Special Report (8/28), "I was with Gov. Abbott in Corpus Christi today. ... It was good because we were able to sit down with the Mayor and some county judges there to reconfirm any gaps that there may be. I also put eyes on commodities that were moving forward." Long added, "Unfortunately, this is going to call for urban planning, city officials, different things to rethink the way we redesign Houston after this. We already asking for a new normal."

The New York Times (8/28, Sullivan) reports that FEMA "is calling on Americans to help with the response to Hurricane Harvey through financial donations or by assisting with search and rescue efforts." Acting DHS Secretary Elaine Duke said, "People need help, and we are working to provide it. Harvey is still a dangerous and historic storm."

The Houston Chronicle (8/28, Osborne, Diaz) reports that for now, FEMA "remains focused on assisting local authorities in rescue efforts and distributing emergency supplies. ... For an agency that many still remember for its struggles to manage Hurricane Katrina in 2005, the bigger test will come in managing the rebuilding efforts, experts say. But so far, the agency is winning early praise."

FEMA: 30,000 Expected To Need Shelter In Texas. USA Today (8/28, Jervis, Bacon) reports that "more than 5,500" Texans sought refuge in Houston's convention center and other shelters Monday "as local, state and federal officials warned that the human crisis in southeast Texas was just beginning." Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner said he expects the number of people seeking shelter "to rise sharply by Tuesday," and Long "said more than 30,000 people ultimately could need shelter." Said Long, "The sheltering mission is going to be a very heavy lift." The New York Times (8/28, Healy) reports that most of those seeking refuge in shelters "have few clothes, no cars or way home, and are living in a haze of uncertainty, searching for answers from home as to what – and who – survived."

The CBS Evening News (8/28, story 2, 3:00, O'Donnell) reported, "FEMA estimates 30,000 evacuees would need shelter within a couple of days. More of Houston's flood survivors left rooftops in a basket today: 20 Coast Guard helicopters have plucked more than 300 Harvey victims to safety. But officials admit there aren't enough helicopters, boats, or high water vehicles to reach everyone. Emergency systems were overwhelmed. By this morning, 75,000 people had called 911, desperate for help." ABC World News Tonight (8/28, story 3, 2:10, Llamas) spoke with some of the evacuees. ABC World News Tonight (8/28, story 8, 1:50, Llamas) also spoke with some evacuated families whose homes were destroyed.

Michael Brown: Harvey "Worse Than Katrina" In Several Ways. The Houston Chronicle (8/28, Hlavaty) reports that ex-FEMA Director Michael Brown said in a Monday interview "that the devastation Houston is suffering from Hurricane Harvey was worse in his eyes than what was seen during Katrina." Brown said, "There are several factors that make it worse than Katrina. For one there is the scope of the flooding. ... Also, the amount of damages will continue to grow. There will be mold and structural damages adding up. ... This will be easily the most expensive natural disaster in American history."

Coast Guard Playing "Major Role" In Search And Rescue Operations. The CBS Evening News (8/28, story 10, 1:40, O'Donnell) reported that the US Coast Guard is playing "a major role in search and rescue operations" in Texas with 150 Guard members "flown in from all over the country and more are on the way." In addition, "15 to 20 aircraft are up in the air at any given time."

Army Corps Of Engineers Releasing Water From Reservoirs To Prevent Additional Flooding. The CBS Evening News (8/28, story 4, 2:20, O'Donnell) reported that the Army Corps of Engineers has begun releasing water from two reservoirs to prevent additional flooding in downtown Houston, "but that ended up sending flood waters pouring into some neighborhoods." ABC World News Tonight (8/28, story 2, 1:35, Llamas) likewise reported that the Corps "released some of water, hoping the keep it under control, but tens of thousands of homes are under threat because of it." ABC's Clayton Sandell reported that residents of Houston's Fleetwood neighborhood were "caught off-guard by rising floods overnight, supercharged when officials say they were forced to release water from the nearby Addicks and Barker Reservoirs.”

Filing Insurance Claims After Friday Could Cost Texans Due To New Law. The Texas Tribune (8/28, Rocha) reports that a new Texas law intended “to crack down on frivolous insurance lawsuits” is set to take effect on Friday. The measure “also reduces the penalty interest rate insurance companies face for late payments if the policyholder files a lawsuit,” so for those affected by Harvey, “waiting to submit a claim past Friday could cost them big.”

Gulf Coast Property Damage Could Reach $40 Billion. The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Zumbrun) reports that the Texas Gulf Coast is expected to suffer tens of billions of dollars in property damage. Reuters (8/28) reports, “Wall Street analysts estimated insured losses of up to $20 billion, making Harvey one of the costliest storms in history for US insurers.” USA Today (8/28, Davidson, Bomey) reports that Moody’s Analytics “estimates the storm will result in $30 billion to $40 billion in property damage and about $7 billion in lost economic output.” The region “plays an outsize role in the US economy. Its projected gross output of $441 billion this year represents about 2.4% of the nation’s economy,” and it is “among the top three hubs for oil refineries.”

The Wall Street Journal (8/28, Page, Baskin) additionally reports that freight companies are working to reroute cargo and set up alternate supply lines in the wake of the storm.

Trump Stands By Threat To Shut Down Government Over Border Wall.

During a White House press conference with Finnish President Sauli Niinisto on Monday, President Trump stood by his threat to shut down the government if congressional Democrats block funds for a wall along the US-Mexico border. The Washington Times (8/28, Miller) reports that Trump “said he hoped a shutdown wouldn’t be necessary.” Politico (8/28, Conway) quotes Trump as saying, “I hope that’s not necessary. If it’s necessary, we’ll have to see, but I hope it’s not necessary.”

CNN senior congressional reporter Manu Raju said on CNN’s Situation Room (8/28), “I can tell you, almost certainly...funding for the wall will not get approved in the United States Senate. The Democrats are almost universally opposed to this. A lot of Republicans opposed to it so what does the President do? A lot of Republicans think he will back down, but if he doesn’t, then we can have a stand-off, but we’ll see. He may be forced to back down given the situation in Texas.”

Trump Insists Mexico Will Pay For The Wall. Reuters (8/28) says Trump “also said Mexico may pay for the wall by reimbursement. Mexico has adamantly said it will not pay for the wall.” Said Trump, “One way or the other Mexico is going to pay for the wall.” USA Today (8/28, Estepa) reports that the comment came after Mexico’s foreign ministry released a statement Sunday saying, “As the Mexican government has always stated, our country will not pay, under any circumstances, for a wall or physical barrier built on U.S. territory along the Mexican border. ... This statement is not part of a Mexican negotiating strategy, but rather a principle of national sovereignty and dignity.”

Trump To Promote Tax Reform In Missouri Wednesday.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (8/28, Raasch) reports that the White House announced Monday that President Trump will speak Wednesday at the Loren Cook Company in Springfield, Missouri. During a speech “aimed at promoting tax reform,” Trump “is expected to exhort Congress to move forward on cutting tax rates and simplifying the tax code, a top campaign promise of the president’s when he was elected in 2016.” The Dispatch adds that Trump will make the speech “at the company of a major Republican campaign donor.” According to Federal records, “since 2008, someone identified as Loren Cook or Loren Cook II and affiliated with the company has given more than $24,000, individually, to GOP candidates, including Trump, who got $2,800, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.”

EPA Watchdog To Investigate Pruitt’s Travel.

The Hill (8/28, Cama) reports the Environmental Protection Agency’s Office of the Inspector General “is launching a probe into Administrator Scott Pruitt’s ‘frequent’ travel to his home state of Oklahoma.” Officials with the office “notified agency leadership about the audit Monday, weeks after an environmental group said Pruitt was in Oklahoma or en route there for nearly half of his first three months in office, often using taxpayer funds.” According to the notification “auditors will examine the EPA’s ‘adherence to policies, procedures and oversight controls’ related to Pruitt’s travel.” E&E Publishing (8/28) reports the auditors wrote, “This assignment is being initiated based on congressional requests and a hotline complaint, all of which expressed concerns about administrator Pruitt's travel — primarily his frequent travel to and from his home state of Oklahoma at taxpayer expense."

The Oklahoman (8/28, Wingerter) reports the IG's office "has three objectives for its investigation: determining 'the frequency, cost and extent' of Pruitt's travel to Oklahoma; determining whether EPA travel rules were followed by Pruitt and his staff; and determining whether existing EPA travel policies 'are sufficiently designed to prevent fraud, waste and abuse.'"

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"As Harvey Rains Down Devastation, Houston Stands Together." A New York Times (8/28) editorial says that "there are lessons to be learned, as there always are after disasters like this. Some of those lessons — like how unchecked urban sprawl and paving over of wetlands and prairies have increased the risk posed by floods in Houston and other cities — were evident long before Harvey and ought to become more urgent in the storm's wake." The Times argues that "when calamity strikes, this country always seems to be looking in the rearview mirror, lamenting its failure to heed long-ago warnings."

"The President Speaks For Himself." A New York Times (8/29, Board) editorial quotes Secretary of State Tillerson, who on Sunday said President Trump "speaks for himself," and laments, "That disturbing truth was nowhere more evident than in Mr. Trump's pardon, late Friday night, of the former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio, which he issued, in his cowardly way, as the nation was riveted to the impending landfall of Hurricane Harvey." The Times argues that the move coincides with "Trump's broader attitude toward law enforcement," and concludes in saying the President's "distorted understanding of justice is cleaving the nation between the majority who support the principles of American democracy and those who support only him."

Washington Post.

"Harvey's Heroes – The Inspiring Response To A Terrible Storm." A Washington Post (8/28) editorial says that in "all the misfortune and misery of this storm, one positive note stands out: the stories of how first responders, neighbors, strangers and just plain folks threw their all into the rescue effort." The storm, it says, "will also raise questions that deserve answers after such a disaster. One of the most consequential is to what degree superstorms are being made even more frequent and ferocious by global climate change." Superstorms like Harvey, Sandy and Katrina "may be remembered as the wake-up calls of our age," and "they must be heeded."

"The Arpaio Pardon Displays Trumps Disdain For The Rule Of Law." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/28) says that the pardon of former Sheriff Joe Arpaio "is not only a mark of Mr. Trump's inclination to inflame rather than bind up the nation's wounds. It is also a warning of his lack of respect for the independence of the courts and of law enforcement in a country governed by the rule of law – a worrying characteristic in a president facing an ongoing special counsel investigation. But Mr. Trump should take the outraged response to Mr. Arpaio's pardon from across the political spectrum as a warning, too: a sign of the resistance he will encounter if he chooses to issue further pardons, particularly in the Russia affair, on the basis of political concerns rather than those of justice."

"The Purple Line Rises From The Dead." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/28) writes that despite an initial "rolling battery of existential threats," the DC Metro's Purple Line is now much closer to realization, as highlighted by a groundbreaking ceremony on Monday attended by Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan and Transportation Secretary Chao. The Post argues that, should the Purple Line move on past current considering in a federal appeals court, its construction "would be a striking success story, a rare example of broad cooperation across party lines, and among federal, state and local government partners in coordination with the private sector."

Wall Street Journal.

"Our Political Central Bankers." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/28) writes that Federal Reserve officials demonstrated a markedly political tone during their recent Jackson Hole retreat by speaking out in defense of post-2008 financial crisis regulation. The Journal argues that the Fed holds tightly, and foolishly, to the notion that its current regulatory regime can prevent the next crisis while overlooking the costs of intervention, and the Journal concludes that the Federal Reserve needs a less political leader when Janet Yellen's term expires in February.

“Behind The Bedlam In Berkeley.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/28) writes that politically charged street fights prompted by Antifa activists that resulted in 13 arrested in Berkeley on Sunday highlight an increasingly violent element among the radical left that has received far less media coverage and criticism than has the far right violence in Charlottesville. The Journal argues that the mainstream left must denounce Antifa as the right should denounce white nationalists.

“Labour’s Brexit Pains.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/28) writes that the recent proposal by Britain’s Labour Party to support a so-called soft Brexit under which Britain would remain within the single market and customs union after March 2019 has demonstrated that the Labour Party is beginning to reconcile the competing tensions in its ranks and present a potentially effective opposition to Theresa May’s government. The Journal warns that Britain’s Conservatives should take the proposal as a warning that they should craft a Brexit that offers greater free trade and economic reform.

Trump Reduces Size Of Grand Staircase, Bears Ears Monuments.

During a visit To Utah Monday, President Trump announced that he has reduced the size of Bears Ears National Monument by 85% and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument by about half. Media coverage is somewhat mixed, highlighting both the positive response from officials and Utahans who see the move as an economic win for the state as well as the negative reaction from protesters and tribal and environmental groups who have vowed to mount a legal challenge.

NBC Nightly News (12/4, story 4, 0:25, Holt) reported that Trump is "dramatically scaling back" the sites, and Breitbart (12/4, Spiering) says he took "the unusual step...despite an outcry from leftist environmental groups." Trump said, "With the action I'm taking today, we will not only give back your voice over the use of this land, we will also restore your access and your enjoyment. ... Public lands will once again be for public use."

The Washington Post (12/4, Dawsey, Eilperin) reports that Trump said he came to Utah to "reverse federal overreach" and took action "because some people think that the natural resources of Utah should be controlled by a small handful of very distant bureaucrats located in Washington. And guess what? They're wrong." The Washington Times (12/4, Wolfgang) says Trump "said previous presidents have greatly abused their power under the century-old Antiquities Act, and stretched the law past its limits in cordoning off millions of acres of land and placing them under government control." A brief report on ABC World News Tonight (12/4, story 14, 0:20, Muir) said the sites cover "several million acres that contain large amounts of oil, gas and coal."

Axios (12/4, Pandey) says Trump's move "received mixed reviews, with Utah Sens. Orrin Hatch and Mike Lee cheering alongside the audience at Trump's Salt Lake City rally and protesters opposing the decision in Utah and outside the White House." Similarly, the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/4) says Trump was met by "thousands" of protesters outside the state Capitol, "most decrying the anticipated announcement," while the inside of the Capitol was "packed with Trump supporters who celebrated Trump's declaration as an economic victory for rural Utahans who depend on mineral development and ranching, activities they say were stifled by the sprawling monuments." The Washington Examiner (12/4, Quinn) reports that protesters shouted, "F--- you, Trump" as his motorcade passed.

The New York Times (12/4, Turkewitz) reports that the reduction of the Bears Ears Monument "is expected to trigger a legal battle that could alter the course of American land conservation, putting dozens of other monuments at risk and possibly opening millions of preserved public acres to oil and gas extraction, mining, logging and other commercial activities." The AP (12/5, Lucey, Superville) says tribal and environmental groups opposed to the decision "began filing lawsuits Monday in a bid to stop Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." They argue the designations "are needed to protect important archaeological and cultural resources." Reuters (12/4, Volcovici, Rampton) reports leaders representing the Navajo, Hopi, Pueblo of Zuni, Ute Mountain and Ute Indian tribes, which "pushed for the creation of the Bears Ears monument and who now manage it, said they will take the Trump administration to court." Natalie Landreth, attorney for the Native American Rights Fund, said, "We will be fighting back immediately. All five tribes will be standing together united to defend Bears Ears." The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/4) says the Tribes argue that Trump "does not have the legal authority to shrink the designation." Courts have not addressed the issue since the passage of the Antiquities Act 111 years ago. While Presidents are authorized under the law "to unilaterally set aside public lands to protect 'objects of historic and scientific interest,'" a court ruling "would determine the Antiquities Act's future use – whether it allows a president to revoke or modify a monument or just to designate one." The Washington Examiner (12/4, Siegel) reports that the Administration and congressional Republicans "say previous presidents abused their authority" under the Act, "setting aside larger and larger swaths of public land, limiting development opportunities and stifling local control."

Ad Age (12/4, Pasquarelli) reports that California-based outdoor retailer Patagonia also plans to sue the Administration. CEO Rose Marcario said in a statement, "Americans have overwhelmingly spoken out against the Trump Administration's unprecedented attempt to shut down our national monuments. ... We've fought to protect these places since we were founded and now we'll continue that fight in the courts." Jamie Yuccas reported on the CBS Evening News (12/4, story 11, 2:30, Glor) that "native tribes and environmental groups say it could be years of a legal fight before it is resolved."

Local television reports were largely positive for Trump. For example, on its website, KSL-TV Salt Lake City (12/4) said Trump's announcement drew "cheers that reverberated throughout the Capitol rotunda Monday." Trump told those gathered that his decision means "public lands will once again be for public use." KTVX-TV Salt Lake City (12/4, 5:00 p.m. MST) said Trump "made an unprecedented move," announcing "major reductions" to the national monuments. KUTV-TV Salt Lake City (12/4, 5:02 p.m. MST) reported that Trump "ma[de] good on his promise" to shrink the monuments. KUTV added that Trump announced the decision to "rousing applause."

Also reporting are the AP (12/5, PRICE, MCCOMBS), the New York Times (12/4), the Washington Post (12/5, Andrews), the Washington Post (12/4, Dawsey, Eilperin), the Washington Post (12/4), the Washington Post (12/4), the Washington Post (12/4), the Washington Examiner (12/4, Siciliano), The Hill (12/4, Thomsen), Politico (12/4, Lefebvre), Roll Call (12/4, Bennett), the Los Angeles Times (12/4, Finnegan), the Los Angeles Times (12/4, Schneider), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/4, Maffly), the San Francisco Chronicle (12/4, Turkewitz), the New York Post (12/4, Fredericks), the Orange County \(CA\) Register (12/4, Scauzillo), the Oregonian (12/4, Theen), the Denver Post (12/4, Lucey), the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (12/5, Webb), the Arizona Republic (12/4, Korte), the Boston Herald (12/4), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (12/4, Kidston), BBC News \(UK\) (12/4), The Guardian \(UK\) (12/4, Smardon), The Guardian \(UK\) (12/4, Smith, Milman), the Daily Mail (12/4, Martosko), RT (12/4), and Sputnik News (12/4).

Also reporting are USA Today (12/4), USA Today (12/4, Demille), TIME (12/5), Bloomberg News (12/4, Blumberg), Bloomberg News (12/4, Dlouhy, Sink), CNN (12/4, Merica), CNN (12/4, Weir), ABC News (12/4, Ebbs, Stracqualursi), ABC News (12/4, Ebbs, Mallin), NBC News (12/4, Vitali), Fox News (12/4, Chakraborty), CBS News (12/4), CBS News (12/4, Guild), CBS News (12/4, Guild), NPR (12/4), NPR (12/4, GONZALES, Siegler, DWYER), NPR (12/4), PBS NewsHour (12/4, Holmes), USA Today (12/4, Korte), USA Today (12/4, Cummings), TIME (12/4, Lucey, Superville), TIME (12/4), TIME (12/5, Steinmetz), Newsweek (12/4, Pereira), Fortune (12/4, Detrick), MarketWatch (12/4, Murphy), the Huffington Post (12/4, Madani), the Huffington Post (12/4, D'Angelo), Slate (12/4, Cummins), Montana Public Radio (12/4, Kreimer), Montana Public Radio (12/4, Hegyi), Moyers & Company (12/4, Miller), Outside (12/4), KSTU-TV Salt Lake City (12/4), KUER-FM Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (12/5, Fabrizio), and KTLA-TV Los Angeles Los Angeles (12/4).

Bears Ears, Grand Staircase Escalante Decision By Trump Prompts Strong Reaction From Colorado Democrats. The decision also drew criticism from "Colorado's top Democrats," the Denver Post (12/4, Paul) reports. Gov. John Hickenlooper said in a statement, "Preserving and expanding our national monuments is keeping in the best traditions of our country. ... In Colorado, we value our lands because they are part of our fabric and they strengthen local economies. We hope our leaders can find a way to let monuments remain and return their focus to more pressing issues facing our country." Rep. Diana DeGette (D-CO), called Trump's decision a raid of "public lands for private gain," Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D-CO) called it an "unprecedented attack." Sen. Michael Bennet said the decision was "in lock-step with a small number of Washington special interests."

New Mexicans Asking President To Leave State's Monuments Alone. The Alamogordo \(NM\) Daily News (12/4) reports that following President Trump's decision to shrink Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments, "New Mexicans are reasserting their support for Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks and Río Grande del Norte National Monuments, and imploring President Trump to leave the Land of Enchantment's national monuments alone, according to a New Mexico Wildlife and Las Cruces Green Chamber press release." Alamogordo public lands sportsman Rod Sims stated in the release, "Sportsmen have been on the front lines of conserving wildlife habitat like Bears Ears, Grand Staircase-Escalante, Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks and Río Grande del Norte. Hunting and fishing is a time-tested tradition in the United States, and we need vast backcountry to support healthy wildlife populations. Shrinking, breaking apart, or changing the management of national monuments can fragment habitat and harm wildlife migrations and populations."

Oregon Leaders Vow To Fight For Cascade-Siskiyou After Utah Monument Reductions. KGW-TV Portland, OR (12/4, Roth) reports that after President Trump announced two national monuments in Utah will “shrink significantly, top Oregon Democrats decried the action amid questions of whether Oregon’s Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument would be next.” Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments were “among four national monuments Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke previously advised Trump to shrink.” The article notes that “also on list was Oregon’s Cascade-Siskiyou, which covers 112,000 acres in southern Oregon.” According to the article, “while Trump has yet to announce whether he will heed Zinke’s recommendation to shrink the Cascade-Siskiyou, Democratic Oregon lawmakers spoke out Monday in support of preserving the biologically diverse land.”

Rockefeller And The Secret Land Deals That Created Grand Teton National Park. The Washington Post (12/4, Lednicer) reports on “the audacious plan” hatched in the 1920s, whereby John D. Rockefeller Jr. “agreed to surreptitiously acquire thousands of acres of breathtaking scenery around Jackson Hole, Wyo., and donate them to the federal government for a national park.” According to the article, “by 1930, a year after Congress had established Grand Teton National Park, word had gotten out about the purchases, and Wyoming residents were furious.” The paper says that the “controversy surrounding” President Trump’s decision to shrink Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante “shows that the fight over the size of national parks and monuments, which reached its apex in the fight over Jackson Hole, continues to this day.”

Interior Department Nomination Hearing Begins Tuesday For Hill Staffer With Idaho Ties.

KBSC-FM Boise, ID (12/4, Barnhill) reports that Tuesday morning, a Senate committee will hear the nomination of Tim Petty to be the assistant Interior secretary for water and science. Petty has “worked for the Interior Department before – under then-Secretary and former Idaho governor Dirk Kempthorne.”

Feds’ Move To End Trinity River Watchdog Group Scrutinized.

The Eureka \(CA\) Times Standard (12/4, Houston) reports that the Interior Department’s Press Secretary Heather Swift told the Times-Standard last week that it disbanded the Trinity River Adaptive Management Working Group “because the group did not submit a short justification memo on why the department should continue funding its $100,000 annual budget.” However, “the group’s chairman said to the Times-Standard on Monday that he was told on multiple times this year by U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials that the paperwork had been filed.” Stokely said, “There is some kind of bureaucratic mixup here. I suggest they give us another chance.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribal Membership, Federal Dollars And A Casino On The Line With Nooksack Election.

KUOW-FM Seattle (12/4, Fox) reports that early results from Saturday’s Nooksack election “show all incumbents won their seats.” Hinging on the results are “tribal membership, tens of millions of federal dollars and a casino.” According to the article, “when the tribe agreed to hold an election a few months ago, interim federal money started flowing back to the tribe and so did operation of its casino,” but “that could all go away again if the Bureau of Indian Affairs does not certify this election by December 23.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Congress Fights Over Whether To Allow Interior To Kill Wild Horses.

The Washington Examiner (12/5, Siegel) reports that to manage the overpopulation of wild horses, John Ruhs, the Bureau of Land Management’s director in Nevada, “wants Congress to lift restrictions on his agency to give it more flexibility to euthanize horses — not just when they’re old and sick — and sell more of them for private use, without dictating what the buyer can or cannot do with the animals.” The Senate “introduced a fiscal 2018 Interior-Environmental Protection Agency spending bill last month that includes language prohibiting BLM from selling without restriction tens of thousands of excess horses on federal rangelands and banning the agency from euthanizing animals that have been unsuccessfully offered for adoption more than three times.” However, the House’s fiscal 2018 Interior appropriations legislation “contains a section that would lift restrictions on BLM to sell or, in specific circumstances, euthanize excess wild horses.”

Agency Targets Trash, Lawlessness At Shooting Range.

The AP (12/4) reports that an area 7 miles outside the Las Vegas Valley “that has been used for target practice for at least the past 20 years” is “littered with broken glass and tens of thousands of spent shotgun shells and bullet casings.” The Bureau of Land Management has “launched a new effort to address the growing trash and safety problem at Southern Nevada’s most popular spot for target shooters.” The BLM has “hosted a pair of volunteer cleanups at the site, one in May with the National Rifle Association and another in early November.” The bureau “also has teamed with the Metropolitan Police Department and the Nevada Highway Patrol to step up patrols in the area.”

Additional coverage was provided by KNPR-FM Las Vegas (12/4).

Fence Improvement Project Benefits Pronghorn Migration.

The Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (12/4) reports that the Bureau of Land Management Cody Field Office “recently collaborated with the Wyoming Department of Transportation, Wyoming Game and Fish Department and Friends of a Legacy to modify a stretch of fence east of Cody for the benefit of migrating pronghorn.” They “came together to replace the bottom strand of barbed wire with smooth, wildlife-friendly wire on about three miles of fence along WYO 32 on the eastern edge of the McCullough Peaks Wild Horse Herd Management Area.” According to the article, “the bottom wire was also raised to 16 inches off the ground to allow pronghorn to pass easily under it.” BLM wildlife biologist Destin Harrell, who organized the project, said, “Last year, thousands of pronghorn were stacked up along this fence, unable to cross. Thanks to the commitment of groups like FOAL, WYDOT and G&F to making BLM fences more wildlife-friendly, the migrating Carter Mountain pronghorn herd now has better access to its crucial winter range and an improved chance of surviving harsh winters.”

Judge Releases 4 More Bunkerville Standoff Defendants.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/4, Ferrara) reports that “a judge ordered four more Bunkerville standoff defendants freed from federal detention on Monday, less than a week after rancher Cliven Bundy rejected the conditions of his own release.” U.S. Magistrate Judge Peggy Leen ordered the pretrial release of four men, “whom prosecutors have described as ‘mid-tier’ defendants in the April 2014 armed standoff.” They include Bundy’s sons Melvin and David.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Bill Could Make Drilling Off N.C. Coast More Likely.

The Jacksonville \(NC\) Daily News (12/4, Wagner) reports that the SECURE American Energy Act would make drilling off North Carolina more likely. The measure was passed by the House Committee on Natural Resources, but it has not yet received a vote from the full chamber. The bill would grant Congress the sole power to establish moratoriums on offshore drilling and create National Marine Monuments. Gov. Roy Cooper has opposed offshore exploration, saying it risks the state’s coastal economies.

Company Pulls Plug On Massachusetts’ Cape Wind Offshore Wind Farm.

In continuing coverage the Washington Examiner (12/4, Siciliano) reports the company the Cape Wind wind farm proposed off the coast of “Massachusetts has officially given up on the nearly two-decade fight to bring it to life, saying it is better off developing other forms of energy elsewhere.” Cape Wind and Energy Management CEO Jim Gordon said in a statement, “During Cape Wind’s development period we successfully developed over a billion dollars of renewable solar and biomass energy projects and, although we were unable to bring Cape Wind to fruition, we are proud of the catalyzing and pioneering effort we devoted to bringing offshore wind to the United States.” The wind project “faced sustained opposition and court challenges orchestrated by wealthy land owners on Nantucket Sound and the fossil energy industry, Gordon said.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Navajo-Gallup Water Project Gains Pipeline Contract.

The Southwest Colorado Journal (12/4, Mimiaga) reports that “Navajo and Jicarilla-Apache Nation communities in New Mexico are one step closer to receiving domestic and commercial water supplies as part of a $1.13 billion federal construction project." Construction began on the Navajo-Gallup Water Supply project "in 2013 with completion estimated for 2024." The article notes that "it is being built by the Bureau of Reclamation, city of Gallup, Navajo Nation and Indian Health Service."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Hunt Elephants To Save Them? Some Countries See No Other Choice.

In continuing coverage of the controversy over the decision by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service last month "to allow hunters to bring home trophies from elephants killed in Zimbabwe and Zambia," the New York Times (12/4, Nuwer) reports that "whether the proceeds from big-game hunting should be used to protect threatened and endangered species is a difficult question to answer." The article notes that "in some areas, including in Namibia and Zimbabwe, the strategy has helped revive wildlife populations." However, "in others, including Tanzania, hunting has fed corruption and decimated species."

Vern Buchanan Urges Donald Trump To Ban African Lion Trophies. The Sunshine State \(FL\) News (12/4, Derby) reports that Rep. Vern Buchanan, co-chairman of the Animal Protection Caucus in Congress, is urging President Trump "to restore the ban on allowing African lion trophies to be brought into the United States." Buchanan said, "Allowing lion heads to be brought into the U.S. as trophies will only encourage the slaughter of these magnificent animals. President Trump should reverse his Interior secretary's decision and keep the ban on African lion trophies."

Fish And Wildlife Service Plan Calls For Release Of 12 Newborn Wolf Pups.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (12/4, Moss) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "proposing to release 12 newborn Mexican wolf pups in New Mexico and Arizona over the coming year as part of its strategy to recover an endangered species that suffers from severe inbreeding and weak genetics." In 2018, "a dozen captive pups will be matched with wild litters that have been born at roughly the same time as the domestic-bred pups, according to a plan released by the service Monday." The plan also "outlines temporarily removing an adult female wolf from the Panther Creek Pack in Arizona, to avoid direct inter-sibling breeding, and allowing her to instead mate with an adult male from captivity."

National Park Service

Park Service Nearing Decision On Isle Royale Wolves.

The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (12/4, Myers) reports that the National Park Service is "getting closer to announcing its final decision on reintroducing wolves to Isle Royale National Park." According to the article, "wolf researchers for Michigan Technological University say the island may be down to its very last wolf based on analysis of trail camera data gathered over the summer and through September."

Research Continues On Elevated Mercury Levels In Some Non-migratory Fish In Southwest Alaska.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (12/4, Lill) reports that the National Park Service and the United States Geological Survey are "among the agencies that study mercury levels in southwest Alaska's lakes in order to better understand mercury's effect on ecosystems and how it gets there." In 2005, the National Park Service started "monitoring mercury levels in non-migratory lake fish in Katmai National Park and Preserve and the Lake Clark National Park Preserve." Krista Bartz, an aquatic ecologist with the NPS' Southwest Alaska Network inventory and monitoring program, said, "Since then we've collected around 400 fish samples, representing nine species from 20 lakes. We've found that filets from long-lived predator species, like lake trout and northern pike, can have elevated concentrations of mercury and they tend to increase with fish age." Bartz "anticipates that the NPS will publish results from the past three years of study on resident lake fish in Katmai and Lake Clark in 2018."

Little Bighorn Plan Would Create New Visitor Center, Make Room For Artifacts Currently In Arizona.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (12/4, Ferguson) reports that “a plan for the future of the Little Bighorn Battlefield National Monument includes the National Park Service’s preference for building a new 10,600-square-foot visitor center on the footprint of the current center and bringing back some if not all of the tens of thousands of battlefield artifacts now being stored for safekeeping in Tucson, Arizona.” Park officials are accepting input on the Little Bighorn Battlefield National Monument General Management Plan Amendment and Environmental Assessment through Jan. 4, 2018. Wayne Challoner, superintendent at the Little Bighorn Battlefield monument, said, “Right now we are in the information-gathering stage. We want to hear anything we may or may not be aware of. We are trying to see if we can go in and rebuild in the same footprint with a new and better-designed facility. Getting those artifacts back has always been the goal.”

Keeler Building Added To National Register, Paves Way For Redevelopment.

MLive \(MI\) (12/4, Harger) reports that “the 106-year-old Keeler Building has been added to the National Register of Historic Places, a key step towards redevelopment of a downtown landmark that has been mostly vacant for more than 20 years.” The article notes that “the designation by the National Parks Service last month means the West Michigan Housing Alliance qualifies for about $20 million in state tax credits needed to get a $42.5 million affordable housing project underway, according to Jeff Dombrowski, the alliance’s founder.”

US Geological Survey

Underwater Volcano Eruptions Sound Like Gunshots And Can Travel 10,000 Miles Through The Ocean.

Newsweek (12/4, Hignett) reports that “using hydrophones – special microphones designed for use underwater—scientists from the Alaska Volcano Observatory (AVO) and the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) recorded the sounds of two volcanos erupting.” According to the article, “presenting their findings at the 174th Meeting of the Acoustical Society of America in New Orleans, the team, led by Gabrielle Tepp, from the AVO, show how different eruptions sound drastically different – while some explosions lasted hours, others ripped through the sea like gunshots.” Researchers “recorded vastly different sounds from the Ayhi eruption and from the 2015 and 2016 eruptions of Bogoslof, a volcano near Alaska.”

USGS Proposes $260,400 Plan To Study White River Algae Problem.

The Rio Blanco \(CO\) Herald Times (12/4, Turner) reports that “the White River Algae Task Force heard a proposal to study and identify the recurring algal bloom in the White River from United States Geological Survey (USGS) hydrologist Mike Stevens and western Colorado office chief Ken Leib on Wednesday, Nov. 22.” The purposes of the study are “to determine what conditions on the river are contributing to the algae bloom that has caused problems with aesthetics and recreational use of the river.” The USGS “plans to compile historical data on the river’s streamflow, nutrient levels, sediment and more.”

USGS Posts New Annotated Map Of Pu’u O’o Crater.

The Big Island \(HI\) Video News (12/4) reports that the USGS Hawaiian Volcano Observatory posted a new map of the Pu’u O’o Crater on November 22, “with labels of the crater’s main features.” According to scientists, “no significant changes are evident at Pu’u O’o.” However, the article adds, “there have been enough changes over the last few years at the vent to warrant a new annotated map of the active crater on Kilauea Volcano’s East Rift Zone.”

Opinion Pieces

President Trump, Don’t Decimate The Bears Ears National Monument.

In an op-ed for The Guardian \(UK\) (12/4, Jewell), former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell writes that the action to establish the Bears Ears national monument “built upon decades of local efforts.” But President Trump’s move will “ignore the 2.8 million Americans who have spoken out in defense of these public lands, and will undercut the jobs and revenues they bring to local economies from outdoor recreation and tourism.” More fundamentally, Jewell writes, “it will break the promise to these tribes – and to the American people – that, once established, national monuments are protected in perpetuity.”

National Park Lovers Should Applaud Trump’s Monument Decision.

In an op-ed on the Fox News (12/4) website, ex-Rep. Jason Chaffetz praises President Trump’s decision to reduce the size of the Bears Ears and Staircase-Escalante National Monuments as “an example of his policies that will benefit every American who enjoys national parks and monuments.” Chaffetz argues that national monument designations “have strained land management budgets and limited public access to beautiful places.”

Trump Eviscerates Two National Monuments In The Name Of Political Back-scratching.

In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (12/4) says President Trump “eviscerated” the Bears Ears and Staircase-Escalante National Monuments, “proving once again that, to this president, the federal government’s promises to its own people mean nothing.” His decision, the Times adds, “senselessly imperils stunningly beautiful natural areas and geological masterworks, as well as tens of thousands of Native American sacred sites and key wildlife habitats.”

Trump Says He Feels “Badly” For Flynn As Lawyer Says A President Cannot Obstruct Justice.

President Trump’s remarks Monday that he feels “badly” for former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn and stating that Hillary Clinton “lied many times to the FBI” without consequences led two broadcast network newscasts. In addition to ongoing coverage of whether the President’s weekend tweets might indicate obstruction of justice, several sources also point out that the FBI never suggested that Clinton was not truthful when she was interviewed during the investigation of her email server. Reports also look at a Trump attorney’s claim that a president cannot obstruct justice, expressing skepticism.

On ABC World News Tonight (12/4, lead story, 3:20, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported, “At the White House today, the President offered words of sympathy” for Flynn. Trump: “Well, I feel badly for Gen. Flynn. I feel very badly. He’s led a very strong life.” Karl: “Flynn’s plea bargain is a big red flag for the White House.” Sen. Dianne Feinstein: “I think what we’re beginning to see is the putting together of a case of obstruction of justice.” Karl: “The President seems determined to undermine that case, by slamming the FBI, tweeting that its reputation is ‘in tatters, worst in history.” Trump: “I will say this, Hillary Clinton lied many times to the FBI. Nothing happened to her. Flynn lied and they destroyed his life. I think it’s a shame.”

The AP (12/4, Thomas) reports that the President “tried to contrast Flynn’s treatment with that of...Clinton, who he said ‘lied many times to the FBI and nothing happened.’” But the FBI “didn’t conclude that Clinton lied to agents.” USA Today (12/4, Jackson) reports that the DOJ “did not bring charges against Clinton over her use of a private email server while she was secretary of State, and law enforcement officials have said they do not believe Clinton misled investigators.” Reuters (12/4) also writes that “there was never any indication from the FBI that Clinton did not tell the truth.” The New York Times (12/4, Sullivan) reports that the President “did not cite specifically what Mrs. Clinton said that he considered a lie.” The Washington Post (12/4, Rucker) reports that Trump “told reporters Monday morning that Flynn’s undoing was ‘a shame’ and ‘very unfair.’” Bloomberg News (12/4, Sink) and the Washington Times (12/4, Persons) also cover the President’s remarks.

Meanwhile, the AP (12/5, Lemire, Tucker) reports that Trump’s weekend tweets “revived questions about whether the president may have obstructed [the] ongoing investigation.” NBC Nightly News (12/4, lead story, 2:50, Holt) asked, “Has President Trump tweeted himself into legal trouble? That question had Washington abuzz today. ... In a tweet over the weekend, the President for the first time publicly said he fired Flynn in part because he lied to the feds. If that’s true, it frames an intriguing new timeline that some tonight argue puts Mr. Trump in some legal jeopardy of his own.” NBC’s Hallie Jackson: “Setting aside that James Comey testified [that] Hillary Clinton didn’t lie to the FBI, the focus now, did President Trump obstruct justice? And could this tweet be used against him? ‘I had to fire General Flynn because he lied to the Vice President and the FBI.’ The problem: If the President knew Flynn lied to the FBI and if he did later ask Comey to lay off Flynn – like Comey says but which the President denies – he could open himself up to accusations of obstruction of justice.” On the CBS Evening News (12/4, story 5, 1:45, Glor), Major Garrett similarly reported that “the tweet sparked new questions about whether the President has obstructed justice.”

The Washington Post (12/4, Horwitz, Rucker) reports that Trump lawyer John Dowd offered a “brazen assertion” on Monday: “that a president cannot be found guilty of obstruction of justice.” Dowd “sought to excuse the president’s tweet in part by telling Axios and NBC News Monday that the ‘president cannot obstruct justice because he is the chief law enforcement officer under [the Constitution’s Article II] and has every right to express his view of any case.’”

Axios (12/4, Allen) calls it “a new and highly controversial defense/theory,” and Politico (12/4, Cheney) reminds readers that “more than 40 current GOP members of Congress voted for the impeachment or removal” of President Clinton “from office for obstruction of justice. ... In all, 17 sitting senators supported the obstruction of justice charge against Clinton in 1998 and 1999.” The Los Angeles Times (12/4, Megerian, Tanfani) also reports on Dowd’s argument.

Sen. Joe Manchin was asked on CNN’s The Lead (12/4) about Dowd’s claim that the President cannot obstruct justice. Manchin said, “I don’t agree. I just think the rule of law means the rule of law. It means we’re all held accountable and there are not two systems for two different types of people.” Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA), ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (12/4), “Yes, I believe the President is no more above the law than any other American. It would be an absurd result to say that the President could interfere with investigations involving himself or others potentially and that he is immune from any repercussion.”

The New York Times (12/4) says in an editorial, “You know you have a problem when you’ve been president for less than 11 months and you’re already relying on Richard Nixon’s definition of what’s legal. ... Trump’s tireless spinners and sophists are working to convince the American public that it’s all no big deal. This is an embarrassing and unpersuasive argument, but it’s not surprising. At this point, they have nothing else to work with.”

Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (12/4) column, “We know that Trump has apparently obstructed justice to try to halt investigation into what happened. What we don’t know is whether Congress, in the end, will do its sworn duty to protect the Constitution. ... But let’s not lose sight of the big picture. ... If nothing wrong happened with Russia during the campaign, why is Trump so desperate to cover it up?”

Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (12/4), “As details of campaign contacts with Russia piled up, Trump and his officials instead said there had been ‘no collusion,’” then “retreated to another line of defense: Trump himself didn’t collude. ... Now, with four Trump campaign officials indicted and two of them, including Trump’s former national security adviser, pleading guilty, even that distinction no longer seems safe.”

John Yoo of the American Enterprise Institute and Saikrishna Prakash of the University of Virginia write in the New York Times (12/4), "Even if the facts rose to the level of obstruction, most legal scholars agree that prosecutors cannot bring charges against a sitting president." But "the House and Senate can make their own judgments – political as well as legal. ... Congress should not wait on a special counsel to perform its most fundamental constitutional duty of investigating and, if necessary, removing a corrupt president."

Daniel Hemel and Eric Posner of the University of Chicago Law School write in the New York Times (12/4) that Flynn's admissions "leave little doubt that he also violated a federal criminal statute known as the Logan Act," which prohibits individuals from attempting to influence foreign policy "in a dispute with the United States or 'to defeat the measures of the United States.'" And "if Mr. Flynn violated the Logan Act, then so did the 'very senior' official who directed his actions." However, James Robbins writes in his USA Today (12/4) column, "Flynn was fully in his rights making the call to Kislyak. Despite the best efforts of the anti-Trumpers, it is still not illegal to talk to Russians."

Those In Pence's Circle Say He Was Out Of The Loop. Politico (12/4, Nussbaum) reports that "people close to" Vice President Pence "are trying to make clear" that Pence "knew nothing at all." Pence's aides "have maintained for months that their man was out of the loop, blissfully ignorant to contacts between the Trump campaign and various foreign actors." But while "their story has been consistent," it has "left outside observers wondering how Trump's running mate and transition head could have known so little."

McFarland Email Appears To Contradict Testimony. The New York Times (12/4, Schmidt, Lafraniere) reports that an email sent during the transition period by K.T. McFarland, who would briefly become Trump's deputy national security adviser, "appears to contradict testimony she gave to Congress over the summer about contacts between the Russian ambassador" and Flynn. In a December 29 email, McFarland "told another transition official that Mr. Flynn would be talking to the Russian ambassador that evening."

Russians Say Flynn Did Not Influence Kremlin Policy. The New York Times (12/4, Nechepurenko) reports that Kremlin spokesman Dmitri Peskov "said on Monday that it was 'absurd' to suggest that President Vladimir V. Putin was influenced in any way by a request from the Trump transition last December to refrain from retaliating against sanctions" imposed by President Obama. Peskov said, "The President makes his own decisions, guided solely by Russia's national interests." The Washington Post (12/4, Roth) reports that Peskov also said that "the Kremlin does not know anything about the talks with Flynn because they were conducted by the Foreign Ministry."

Russian Ambassador to the US Anatoly Antonov told the CBS Evening News (12/4, story 6, 2:05, Glor), "It's very difficult to try to find a black cat in a dark room where there is not any cat at all." CBS' Margaret Brennan: "You're saying there is no story there?" Antonov: "There is not any proof regarding Russian interference into your election."

Wray Defends FBI In Message To Agents And Staff. The New York Times (12/4, Goldman, Savage) reports that FBI Director Wray "defended his work force in an email on Monday, a day after President Trump said on Twitter that the agency's standing was the 'worst in History' and its reputation was in 'Tatters.'" In a message to 35,000 agents and support staff, Wray "said that he was 'inspired by example after example of professionalism and dedication to justice demonstrated around the bureau. It is truly an honor to represent you.'" He did not mention the President by name.

Trump Jr., Ex-Trump Business Associate To Appear Before House Intelligence Committee. Reuters (12/4) reports that Donald Trump Jr. and Felix Sater, a "former business associate of the president," will appear before the House Intelligence Committee later this week. Both sessions will be closed to the public.

Mueller's Office Says Manafort Drafted Op-Ed With Colleague With Russian Ties. The AP (12/4, Day, Tucker) reports, "While facing several felony charges, Donald Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort has been working on an op-ed essay with a longtime colleague 'assessed to have ties' to a Russian intelligence service," according to court papers filed by prosecutors working for Special Counsel Robert Mueller.

The Los Angeles Times (12/4, Megerian) reports that Mueller's office "said Manafort helped draft the editorial in recent days, working with a Russian who has ties to that country's intelligence services. That writing violated a Nov. 8 court order 'prohibiting such out-of-court statements in order to protect the fairness of the upcoming trial,' the court filing said."

Reuters (12/4, Lynch) has a similar report. Sen. Chris Coons said on CNN's Situation Room (12/4), "Clearly he's not listening to his lawyers, or he's more afraid of the Russians than he is of federal prosecution in the United States. ... That's an enormous risk for him to take and will almost certainly lead to the re-imposition of a different arrangement for his freedom in advance of his facing trial."

FBI Agent Pulled From Probe Had Role In Drafting Comey's Clinton Announcement. ABC World News Tonight (12/4, story 3, 0:40, Muir) reported on the "veteran FBI agent who was removed from the Russia investigation. ... Mueller removed Peter Strzok back in August after learning he had sent potentially anti-Trump text messages." Strzok "played a key role in how then FBI Director James Comey announced the results of the Hillary Clinton email investigation, recommending that Comey describe Clinton's actions as 'extremely careless' rather than 'grossly negligent.' The significance is that it's a felony to mishandle classified information in a grossly negligent way."

CNN (12/4, Jarrett, Perez) reports on its website that "the drafting process was a team effort, CNN is told, with a handful of people reviewing the language as edits were made, according to another US official familiar with the matter." The New York Post (12/4, Fredericks) reports that Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley "questioned the change last month, but the name of the agent who made the change was not known until now."

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (12/4), "It's so disturbing and troubling because...he was at the heart of the investigation into Hillary Clinton. We know that she lied numerous times. We know that she...deleted 33,000 e-mails. ... This is what frustrates people, and now this revelation that a decidedly, definitively anti-Trump FBI investigator was involved in the Hillary Clinton interviews, as the President says is now starting to make a lot of sense."

Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-SC) said on Fox News Special Report (12/4), "I think from a perception standpoint, it's incredibly serious. He was one of the agents [on] Secretary Clinton's investigation. ... He is anti-Trump, perhaps pro-Clinton texts. People have the right to assume the people that are investigating them are objective and have not already made up their mind."

The Wall Street Journal (12/4) says in an editorial that while no Trump/Russia collusion has been proven, the Strzok case suggests a political motive behind the investigation. Hugh Hewitt writes in the Washington Post (12/4), "This is a blockbuster revelation, carrying the possibility of shattering public confidence."

Mueller's Office To Soon Release Expenditure Report. The Washington Times (12/4, Noble) reports that Mueller's office "is preparing to release a statement of expenditures in the coming days providing a first look at what the probe is costing taxpayers – and depending on how funds have been spent, the disclosures could open up the controversial probe to additional criticism."

Papadopoulos' July Arrest Recounted. Politico (12/4, Gerstein) recounts ex-Trump campaign foreign policy adviser George Papadopoulos' arrest and long interview with the FBI last July.

Supreme Court Allows Third Version Of Travel Ban To Take Effect While Challenges Proceed.

Coverage of the Supreme Court's order permitting the third iteration of the Trump Administration's travel ban to be in force while challenges to it move forward is primarily straightforward, though most sources agree that the decision is a rare victory for the White House, even if it is not a total one. The version of the ban in questions deals with Chad, Iran, Libya, North Korea, Syria, Somalia, Venezuela, and Yemen.

NBC Nightly News (12/4, story 3, 0:50, Holt) called it "a victory at the Supreme Court for the Trump White House." NBC's Pete Williams: "This means that overseas family members of people in the US who were exempt from the travel ban are now subject to it. ... Lower courts said it could not be applied against people who have family members here, but tonight the Court has lifted that exemption." Only Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor dissented, "so this could be a sign that the latest version of the travel ban will survive a Supreme Court challenge when it gets here early next year." ABC World News Tonight (12/4, story 6, 0:25, Muir) said the decision "clear[s] the way for President Trump's travel ban, even as it is being challenged in federal courts."

The AP (12/4, Sherman) similarly writes that though "this is not a final ruling on the travel ban...the action indicates that the high court might eventually approve the latest version of the ban." Critics "of this and previous versions of the ban say they show a bias against Muslims." Omar Jadwat of the American Civil Liberties Union said, "President Trump's anti-Muslim prejudice is no secret. He has repeatedly confirmed it, including just last week on Twitter. It's unfortunate that the full ban can move forward for now, but this order does not address the merits of our claims."

The New York Times (12/4, Liptak) calls the decision “a victory for the administration after its mixed success before the court over the summer, when justices considered and eventually dismissed disputes over the second version.” USA Today (12/4, Wolf) reports that the “unsigned orders issued Monday urge two federal appeals courts with oral arguments scheduled later this week to render decisions ‘with appropriate dispatch.’” The Washington Post (12/4, Barnes) reports that “judges in two judicial circuits – the US Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit in Richmond and the US Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit in San Francisco – had cast doubt on Trump’s third executive order banning almost all travel from certain countries. Oral arguments are scheduled for soon” in both courts.

The Los Angeles Times (12/4, Savage) calls it “a significant victory” for the President. Attorney General Sessions “called the court’s decision a ‘substantial victory for the safety and security of the American people.’” (Breitbart (12/4, Mason) quotes Sessions at greater length.) In its front-page report, the Wall Street Journal (12/4, Kendall) quotes White House spokesman Hogan Gidley saying, “We are not surprised by today’s Supreme Court decision permitting immediate enforcement of the President’s proclamation limiting travel from countries presenting heightened risks of terrorism. The proclamation is lawful and essential to protecting our homeland. We look forward to presenting a fuller defense.”

The Washington Times (12/4, Noble) says the court “doled out a victory for the Trump administration.” Eamon Javers similarly said on CNBC’s Closing Bell (12/4) that the ruling “will be viewed as a win for the Trump Administration and some welcome news at the White House.” The Wall Street Journal (12/4) editorializes in favor of the ruling, calling the court’s action an important moment for the rule of law, arguing that although it disagrees with the ban as policy, opposition to policy is no justification for courts to ignore the law. Reuters (12/4, Hurley), Bloomberg News (12/4, Stohr), and Politico (12/4, Gerstein) also report the court’s ruling.

Trump, Congressional Leaders To Hold Budget Talks Thursday.

The Washington Post (12/4, O’Keefe, Debonis, Werner) report that with a Dec. 8 deadline looming, President Trump and congressional leaders will meet Thursday “to discuss enacting a year-end spending agreement in hopes of averting a government shutdown.” The Post says the meeting the night before government funding is set run out “puts significant pressure on GOP leaders to shore up support in their own ranks ahead of a vote on a plan to keep the government operating two more weeks as talks continue.” Bloomberg News (12/4, Wasson) says Trump and congressional leaders are “set to discuss a potential deal to raise defense and non-defense budget caps” as well as “other year-end matters, including protection” for so-called “Dreamers.” Politico (12/4, Ferris, Scholtes, Kim) reports that while funding is set to run out Friday at midnight, “Republican leaders believe they have the votes to push back that deadline until just before Christmas.”

Reuters (12/4, Cornwell) reports that Democratic leaders have accepted an invitation to meet with the President and GOP leaders for “talks to avert a government shutdown this week.” Senate Minority Leader Schumer and House Minority Leader Pelosi “said Monday they hoped the president would remain open-minded about reaching a deal with Democrats.” The Washington Times (12/4, Howell) says that while the Democrats “refused to show up to a White House meeting on Nov. 28, after Mr. Trump said that given Democrats’ demands, there wasn’t a path to agreement,” on Monday they “said they would give it another try, though they will bring a list of demands” including funding for “rural infrastructure, provid[ing] more hurricane relief to Texas, Florida and Puerto Rico and renew[ing] the Children’s Health Insurance Program, among other things.”

GOP Leaders “Confident” Differences In Tax Bills Can Be Overcome.

While there are “significant differences” between the house and Senate tax bills, the AP (12/4, Ohlemacher, Gordon) reports that “Republican leaders are confident none is insurmountable.” The AP goes on to explain “the differences and how each issue is likely to play out.” David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (12/4, story 5, 3:05, Muir) that while there is “no pressing deadline,” Republicans “are furiously working to get this done before Christmas, as the President has asked.”

House Majority Leader McCarthy was asked on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (12/4) about the House bill’s 39% top rate versus the Senate’s top rate of 38%. McCarthy said, “I would actually like to go lower on a personal basis. I don’t think you should punish people for being successful. But they have seven rates. We have four. We’ll work that out. I would always go to a lower rate.” Asked about the alternative minimum tax, McCarthy said, “In the House, you eliminate it. ... If you're in California or if you're in New York, that's a real punishment as you go forward. ... I think that has to be repealed out of it. But the Senate also put it in when it came to corporations. That would also eliminate if you kept it in there the research and development benefit that you're getting on the tax credit going forward. So I think the AMT has to be eliminated all together."

Bloomberg News (12/4) says President Trump on Saturday "introduced uncertainty over a provision that could mean a difference of about $200 billion over 10 years," telling reporters that the corporate tax rate, which both the House and Senate bills reduce to 20%, "could be 22" in the final bill. Bloomberg News says those comments "imposed an air of unpredictability over congressional negotiations."

The Wall Street Journal (12/4, Davidson, Jamerson) examines last-minute changes inserted by Senate Republicans that benefit oil and gas companies, cruise-ship operators, auto dealers, universities and mortgage bankers. The Journal says the question is whether the changes will survive the House-Senate conference. Nancy Cordes said in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (12/4, lead story, 2:30, Glor) that Republican leaders "predict it will take them about a week to iron out key differences between the two bills."

Kasie Hunt reported on NBC Nightly News (12/4, story 6, 2:15, Holt) that "most American families will see their individual tax rate go down" under the bill, but "whether your family wins or loses depends on your circumstances." Among those who could do better are "families with children, wealthy Americans who will avoid the estate tax if the House has its way." On the other hand, "those who could lose out," are "Americans in high tax states who will likely lose their state and local income tax deduction, graduate students who could owe the IRS thousands more, and Americans who could see their health insurance premiums go up if the Senate's repeal of the individual mandate stays in the final bill." CBS News business analyst Jill Schlesinger said on the CBS Evening News (12/4, story 2, 1:35, Glor) that "88% of people would see a tax reduction, 10% would see an increase, and the rest would actually stay the same."

The Washington Post (12/4) argues in an editorial that while neither the House nor the Senate bill "is an improvement over the status quo," there are ways to craft "a less-bad agreement." The Post says lawmakers should remove "extraneous provisions tacked onto one bill or the other in order to pay off a particular lawmaker or to satisfy narrow ideological preoccupations." In addition, they "should reduce the impact on the debt by scaling back the most unjustifiable giveaways to the wealthy," and "take up President Trump on his willingness to drop the 35 percent corporate tax rate to 22 percent," rather than 20%. Also, "instead of chopping away at the deduction for state and local taxes," they "should reduce tax breaks in a fairer way, perhaps by further limiting the home mortgage deduction."

Pelosi Says Tax Bill Is Worst On Congressional History. The Hill (12/4, Marcos) reports that House Minority Leader Pelosi argued on the House floor Monday that the Republican tax bill is "the worst bill in the history of the United States Congress." Pelosi said, "Now, how can I make that claim? Well, because it involves more money, hurts more people, increases the deficit by so much more, and just because everything is bigger in our country, the consequences of this bill, a multi-trillion dollar economy being addressed by a bill that had no hearings, no expert testimony."

Republicans Sought To Discredit JCT Ahead Of Senate Vote. The New York Times (12/4, Tankersley) reports that a change to congressional budget rules implemented by Republicans in 2015 which requires that "Congress consider the full cost of major legislation threatened to derail the party's $1.5 trillion tax rewrite last week," so "lawmakers went on the offensive to discredit" the Joint Committee on Taxation, which performed the analysis. Hours before last week's Senate vote, Senate Republicans "opened an assault" on the JCT and its analysis, "which showed the Senate plan would not, as lawmakers contended, pay for itself but would add $1 trillion to the federal budget deficit." The Times cites "public statements and messaging documents" which "show a concerted push by Republican lawmakers to discredit a nonpartisan agency they had long praised." The Times says the "swift backlash helped defuse concerns about the deficit impact long enough for the bill to pass by a vote of 51 to 49."

Companies Lobby To Eliminate Corporate AMT. The Wall Street Journal (12/4, Francis, Rubin) reports in a front-page story that the Senate's last-minute decision to keep a corporate alternative minimum tax took CEOs and business groups by surprise and on Monday, they launched a lobbying effort to eliminate or alter the provision. Citing the provision, the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (12/4, Levitz) says Republicans "accidentally nullified all of their corporate donors' favorite deductions." With their "blunder" Republicans accomplished "the unthinkable: They've written a giant corporate tax cut that many of their corporate donors do not like."

CEO Says Senate Bill Will Raise Murray Energy's Taxes $60 Million. Murray Energy CEO Robert

Murray said on CNBC's Closing Bell (12/4), "The Senate's legislation, in fact, is a huge tax increase on capital intensive, highly leveraged businesses. The result comes from leaving the alternative minimum tax in their plan, and then deleting the deduction for net interest expense as a cost of business." Murray added that "for Murray energy, alone, this will raise our taxes $60 million a year notwithstanding the other so-called benefits that the Senate has proposed."

Democratic Governors Vow To Fight Tax Bill. Politico (12/4, Vielkind) reports that three Democratic governors – California Gov. Jerry Brown, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, and New Jersey Gov.-elect Phil Murphy – vowed Monday "to do everything they can to stop the emerging federal tax overhaul – even sue." During a conference call with reporters, the Governors "denounced the bill" as "dangerous," "fraudulent," "nefarious," "a scam" and "trickle down on steroids." They take issue in particular with "the bill's curtailment of the federal deduction for state and local taxes."

A front-page analysis in the New York Times (12/4, Casselman, McGeehan) calls the bill "an economic dagger aimed at high-tax, high-cost and generally Democratic-leaning areas – most notably New York City and its neighbors." According to the Times, the bill "could send home prices tumbling 10 percent or more in parts of the New York area, according to one economic analysis." In addition, it could "increase the regional tax burden, complicating companies' efforts to attract skilled workers," and "make it harder for state and local governments to pay for upgrades to the transit system and other infrastructure." Moreover, "it could force cuts in federal programs that help immigrants, the elderly and other low-income residents afford the region's high cost of living."

WSJournal: Conference Should Adopt House Bill Provision On Attorney Contingency Fees. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/4) says Sen. Lindsey Graham removed a provision from the Senate tax bill to eliminate a contingency-fee carve-out for California plaintiff attorneys. The Journal adds that a provision in the House bill would create equality across the country and urges the conference committee to adopt it.

North Korea: US-South Korea Air Drills Put Peninsula At "Brink Of Nuclear War."

All three networks reported on the size and scope of joint US-South Korean war drills currently taking place in the Korean Peninsula. Outlets said the drills, which follow North Korea's recent ICBM test, have escalated tensions. ABC World News Tonight (12/4, story 10, 0:20, Muir) reported the US and South Korea are conducting simulated war drills involving hundreds of aircraft in a "massive show of force" days after North Korea launched its "most powerful missile yet." Pyongyang argues the air drills are bringing the peninsula "to the brink of nuclear war."

The New York Times (12/4, Mullany) reports that "such drills have drawn vigorous criticism from North Korea, whose state news media said Sunday" that Pyongyang would "seriously consider" countermeasures against the drill and warned the US and Seoul would "pay dearly for their provocations." North Korea, the Washington Post (12/4, Fifield) reports, denounced the exercises as dangerous "when insane President Trump is running wild," while "analysts warned that they sharply increase the chances of miscalculation and accidental conflict."

NBC Nightly News (12/4, story 8, 2:50, Holt) said the US "is making a major show of force to North Korea with hundreds of planes, including two dozen radar-evading stealth jets, taking part in war games with South Korea." The CBS Evening News (12/4, story 3, 2:20, Glor), which called the drills "one of the largest combined Air Force exercises in history," showed Air Force Col. Scott Jobe, commander at the Misawa Air Base in Japan, saying "We want diplomacy to take its course. We want that to be the primary mechanism, but if needed and if called on, we're ready to go, and we're ready to go right now, 100%."

New US Weapon Could Stop North Korean Missiles. US government officials tell NBC Nightly News (12/4, story 8, 2:50, Holt) "that White House officials have been informed about a sophisticated weapon advocates believe could stop North Korean missiles." Sen. Martin Heinrich described the technology: "Think about like when you put something in your microwave that actually has some metal on it. You know how badly that can go. Imagine directing those microwaves at someone's electronics." Mary Lou Robinson, the chief of high-powered electromagnetics at the Air Force research laboratory in New Mexico who supervised a series of tests, said "this technology absolutely works." Proponents of the technology point out that it doesn't harm humans. They "say while it is not currently operational, it could be quickly. Tonight, no official comment from the White House."

Senior UN Official To Visit North Korea This Week. Reuters (12/4, Nichols) reports UN political affairs chief will visit North Korea this week, "making the highest-level visit by a UN official in more than six years." Jeffrey Feltman, a former senior State Department official, will visit from

Tuesday to Friday and meet with officials to discuss “issues of mutual interest and concern,” the UN said. Spokesman Stephane Dujarric said Feltman will meet with North Korea Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho and Vice Minister Pak Myong Guk during the visit. The Washington Post (12/4, Taylor) reports Feltman’s trip was arranged “after the United Nations received an invitation from North Korea.”

Civilian Airline Saw Latest North Korean Missile Re-Entry. Brian Todd reported on CNN’s Situation Room (12/4) that officials at a Hong Kong-based airline say the crew of one of their passenger planes “spotted the attempted re-entry of that North Korean long-range missile last week.” The flight was “far away” from the missile, “but if that missile broke up on re-entry and there was debris flying around, that flight could have conceivably been in danger.” The Washington Post (12/4, Selk) reports Cathay Pacific said in a statement that the San Francisco-to-Hong Kong flight was “far from the event location” and that the airline “does not plan to change its flight routes, even as North Korea seems intent on testing ever more technologically advanced missiles.”

US Mayors Set To Sign Climate Agreement In Chicago.

USA Today (12/4, Madhani) reports that “dozens of U.S. mayors are set to sign their own climate accord vowing to do their part in cutting the nation’s greenhouse emissions.” The agreement is called the “Chicago Charter” and is expected to be signed by representatives of at least 36 US cities on “Tuesday at the North American Climate Summit in Chicago.” The charter “lays out the framework for how some of the country’s municipalities plan to reach goals to reduce greenhouse emission and monitor each others progress — objectives similar to what the Paris international climate pact strives to achieve.”

The Chicago Tribune (12/4, Byrne, Ruthhart) reports former President Barack Obama will address the summit. Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel said, “President Obama helped lead the fight against climate change with bold and decisive action, and we are honored he will be joining the North American Climate Summit where local leaders from around the world will make meaningful commitments to climate solutions.”

The Tampa Bay \(FL\) Times (12/4, Frago) reports St. Petersburg, Florida Mayor Rick Kriseman will be at the summit “to trade ideas with more than 40 other mayors from around the world, including Buenos Aires, Dar Es Salaam, Copenhagen and Paris.” The Times adds “the three days of panels and break-out discussions should give mayors plenty of time to compare and contrast their cities’ challenges, the mayor said.”

The AP (12/4) also provides brief coverage.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Yes, The President Can Obstruct Justice.” The New York Times (12/4) says in an editorial, “You know you have a problem when you’ve been president for less than 11 months and you’re already relying on Richard Nixon’s definition of what’s legal. ... Trump’s tireless spinners and sophists are working to convince the American public that it’s all no big deal. This is an embarrassing and unpersuasive argument, but it’s not surprising. At this point, they have nothing else to work with.”

“With Death Of Ali Abdullah Saleh, Need for Yemen Peace Grows.” A New York Times (12/4) editorial says the “best hope for Yemen lies in a cease-fire, an end to the Saudi blockade, a negotiated withdrawal of the Houthis from the capital and another attempt at national dialogue, this time on a more realistic basis.” The absence of former Yemeni president Ali Abdullah Saleh, who was killed Monday, “could make that easier as well.”

Washington Post.

“Is A Senate Seat Really Worth This?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/4) says that while Alabama Republican Senate candidate Roy Moore has denied the allegations of sexual misconduct, “he does not outright deny dating teenage girls as an older man. Many other women allege that he preyed on them as teenagers. None of them have reason now to lie. This is the man Mr. Trump has decided he needs in the Senate. Alabama voters must decide if they agree. Is it so important to have a senator who will vote the president’s way on tax cuts or judicial appointments that they are willing to be represented by a person who would do such abhorrent things to young girls?”

“How To Move The Tax Bill From Worse To Bad.” The Washington Post (12/4) argues in an editorial that while the neither the House nor the Senate tax bill “is an improvement over the status quo,” there are ways to craft “a less-bad agreement.” The Post says lawmakers should remove “extraneous provisions tacked onto one bill or the other in order to pay off a particular lawmaker or to satisfy narrow ideological preoccupations.” In addition, they “should reduce the impact on the debt by scaling back the most unjustifiable giveaways to the wealthy,” and “take up President Trump on his willingness to drop the 35 percent corporate tax rate to 22 percent,” rather than 20%. Also, “instead of chopping away at the deduction for state and local taxes,” they “should reduce tax breaks in a fairer way, perhaps by further limiting the home mortgage deduction.”

“The District Has A Chance To Address Homelessness With Reason, Not Emotion.” The Washington Post (12/4) editorializes that the District of Columbia Council should give its final approval to an overhaul of the District’s “law governing homeless services in the city.” The Post opines that money that used to be spent on housing families in motels on cold nights “would be better spent on increasing affordable housing or helping families become more stable.” The Post also indicates that the changes already appear to have resulted in “a decrease in the number of families requiring shelter.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Mueller’s Credibility Problem.” The Wall Street Journal (12/4) says in an editorial that while no Trump/Russia collusion has been proven, the Peter Strzok case suggests a political motive behind the investigation.

“Supreme Rebuke For The Judiciary.” The Wall Street Journal (12/4) editorializes in favor of the ruling by the Supreme Court on Monday allowing the Trump Administration’s travel ban to take effect. The 7-2 order (with Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor dissenting) granted the Administration’s request to block the stay of the ban issued by federal judges in Hawaii and Maryland. The Journal calls the court’s action an important moment for the rule of law, arguing that although it disagrees with the ban as policy, opposition to policy is no justification for courts to ignore the law.

“The Trial Bar’s Tax Break.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/4) says Sen. Lindsey Graham removed a provision from the Senate tax bill to eliminate a contingency-fee carve-out for California plaintiff attorneys. The Journal adds that a provision in the House bill would create equality across the country and urges the conference committee to adopt it.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: “Well, it feels like Christmas is here, courtesy of Robert Mueller coming down the White House chimney with a sack full of subpoenas.”

Stephen Colbert: “So they’re saying Trump’s lawyer wrote a tweet in the voice of his client, without the client’s permission or knowledge, a tweet in which the client indicts himself for obstruction of justice. That is malpractice. I certainly hope John Dowd has a lawyer that’s way better than John Dowd.”

James Corden: “Donald Trump spent the entire weekend furiously lashing out at the FBI on Twitter over the Russia investigation. Don’t worry, I’m sure he still got to play golf, too, but that was mostly what he was doing.”

James Corden: “When reporters questioned the story, Trump took his usual approach, blaming Hillary. He said, quote, ‘Hillary Clinton lied many times to the FBI, and nothing happened to her.’ Nothing happened to her? She lost a presidential election to Donald Trump. ... She wrote an entire book called ‘What Happened.’”

James Corden: “According to Donald Trump’s former campaign manager, Trump’s usual McDonald’s order, and this is just for one meal, is two Big Macs, two Filet-O-Fish and a chocolate milkshake. Yeah, that’s not a meal order – that is an assassination attempt.”

Trevor Noah: “First on Friday at 2 a.m. while you were on the dance floor, Republicans were on the Senate floor really burning down the house. And we’re going to get into that later in the show. But before that, it turns out we may all be saying ‘Merry Christmas’ again because Robert Mueller bought America a gift.”

Trevor Noah: "Normally, you don't think of Congress getting a lot done on Friday night, or Friday afternoon, or any time on Friday, or really any other day of the week. But this past Friday was different because Republicans finally had a chance to pass a sweeping tax bill that would make all those clenched smiles next to Trump totally worth it."

Jimmy Fallon: "What a crazy weekend in Washington. First, former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn cut a plea deal with Robert Mueller and then the Senate passed the GOP tax bill. I tried to follow it on the news, but all the anchors have been fired for sexual harassment, so I didn't see anything."

Jimmy Fallon: "Michael Flynn agreed to a plea deal with Robert Mueller, and it came out that the FBI is investigating everyone in the White House, all the way to the top. Trump was like, 'Oh my God, they're investigating Putin?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "The [Senate tax] bill's drawn lots of criticism. Experts say it will ruin healthcare, cause problems for the elderly, and add over $1 trillion to the deficit. Trump's cabinet was like, 'Phew, thank God we're going to jail. I mean, could you imagine if we had to live in this world?'"

Seth Meyers: "The Senate passed a Republican tax bill just before 2:00 a.m. on Saturday, and if you're wondering if that's a good thing, try to remember the last time anything good happened to you at 2:00 a.m. on a Saturday."

Seth Meyers: "A new poll has found that 48 percent of Roy Moore's supporters plan to vote for him because he's the best person for the job. What's the job? Male stripper for nursing homes?"

Seth Meyers: "Former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn on Friday pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about contacts with the Russian ambassador. And if that's what he pleaded to, you know whatever he did was worse. It's like if OJ had pleaded guilty to changing lanes without signaling."

Conan O'Brien: "This morning, President Trump endorsed Republican Senate candidate Roy Moore, despite the fact that Moore has been accused of molesting minors. When asked why he endorsed Moore, Trump said, 'Us gross guys got to stick together.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Time magazine has published short list of nominees for person of the year, and it includes Colin Kaepernick, Donald Trump and Robert Mueller. And if it's a three-way tie, that's going to be one awkward photo shoot."

Jordan Klepper: "Obstruction of justice because of a tweet? If anything on Twitter mattered, we'd have already started a hashtag war with North Korea."

Jordan Klepper: "So why would we cover the President's potential crimes when we haven't even investigated a failed candidate's potential crimes yet? We need to focus on the real criminal: a private citizen who isn't in power! Trump gets it!"

Jordan Klepper: "As the deadline drew near, [GOP senators] filled the margins [of the tax bill] with handwritten notes, a personal touch the ungrateful Democrats failed to appreciate."

Jordan Klepper: "Republicans love this bill. Even Santa loves this bill, and why wouldn't he? He lives in a red state and runs a global corporation fueled by cheap labor."

Zinke, House GOP Escalate Feud With Patagonia Over Monuments.

The AP (12/11, Daly) reports that Interior Secretary Zinke and House Republicans have stepped up their feud with outdoor retailer Patagonia after the company told Americans that President Trump "stole your land" by shrinking two national monuments in Utah. The House Natural Resources Committee said in a tweet that Patagonia is "lying" and seeking "to sell more products to wealthy elitist urban dwellers from New York to San Francisco." The committee also sent an email with the subject line, "Patagonia: don't buy it." According to a spokesman, the email "was not urging a boycott of Patagonia, but rather was telling consumers, 'Don't buy the lies' about Trump's plan." Zinke said the company is lying about Trump's action and "re-tweeted the committee post on his official account." Rep. Ruben Gallego (D-AZ), a member of the committee, "said Republicans were spending taxpayer money to attack a private company that criticized Trump."

The Huffington Post (12/11, Kaufman, D'Angelo) reports that Patagonia dismissed "Zinke's efforts to knock the company as 'Patagonia made in China' on Monday, saying the Trump administration is trying to deflect from its unpopular decision to open up huge chunks of protected land to potential industrial development, including uranium mining." Patagonia encourages "anyone who is interested in how our clothing is sourced to visit our website, where we thoroughly demonstrate our ethical standards," Patagonia spokeswoman Corley Kenna said.

Tribes: Monument Co-Management Proposal Is Slap In The Face.

The AP (12/11, Fonseca) reports that President Trump's decision to shrink Bears Ears National Monument "wasn't the only blow Native American tribes say they were dealt last week." The proclamation "also contained a little-known plan that changes the makeup of a tribal advisory commission for the remote monument filled with canyons, plateaus, rivers and rust-colored rock formations." According to the article, "it adds a county commissioner who is among the minority of Navajos to support Republicans in peeling back protections for the land."

By Renaming New Utah Monument Shash Jaa, Is Trump Trying To Divide Native American Tribes?

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/11, Maffly) reports that while reducing the Bears Ears National Monument, President Trump also renamed it "with the Navajo-language term for Bears Ears, a gesture that could be courting trouble with many Native Americans." Trump Administration officials "say renaming one of two new smaller monuments Shash Jaa reflects tribal spiritual and ancestral ties to that part of southern Utah's San Juan County, where Bears Ears Buttes rise over the landscape like twin beacons." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Looking at the historical relevance, we thought that choosing a tribal name was important, and it's local. We consulted with Navajo that live in Utah and they asked for it. Certainly, I don't think anyone would object to having a native name rather than Bears Ears as the name of the monument." However, "according to Navajo Nation Attorney General Ethel Branch, who is leading the multiple tribe-backed lawsuit to halt the action, the Interior did not consult Navajo tribal officers about any aspect of Trump's proclamation establishing a diminished and renamed monument."

Week Ahead: House Jumps Into National Monuments Fight.

The Hill (12/11, Henry) reports that the House Natural Resources Committee will hold a hearing on Thursday to consider Rep. Chris Stewart's bill to turn the Grand-Staircase Escalante National Monument into a national park. Stewart's legislation "would turn part of the monument, which Trump formally shrank last Monday, into the Escalante Canyons Park and Preserve." The bill has the support of Rep. Rob Bishop, who chairs the Natural Resources Committee.

On Tap For Tuesday.

The Hill (12/11, Elis) reports that the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee will hold a hearing Tuesday "on the permitting process at the Interior Department and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for energy and resource infrastructure projects."

A Sudden Change In Ryan Zinke's Travel Plans Cost Taxpayers Nearly $2,000, Documents Show.

The Washington Post (12/11, Eilperin) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "decision in April to change his travel plans for a fact-finding trip to Channel Islands National Park in California added nearly $2,000 in costs when he left from Santa Barbara, Calif., where his wife owns a second home, according to emails sent among Interior Department officials." The emails, "obtained by the advocacy group Western Values Project under the Freedom of Information Act, show the extent to which National Park Service staff had to rearrange transportation to accommodate Zinke." In an interview Monday, Western Values Project Executive Director Chris Saeger "said the fact that government employees had to go to such lengths and that taxpayers incurred a higher bill suggests a broader problem at Interior." Saeger said, "This pattern of behavior is not just a problem for the people who are making the schedule changes. The influence they're exerting over leadership decisions at Interior is sloppy and ethically deficient."

California Wildfires Continue To Threaten Homes.

The CBS Evening News (12/11, story 5, 0:20, Glor) reported that "18,000 homes are threatened by the Thomas fire in Ventura County," California, as over 230,000 acres have already burned. NBC Nightly News (12/11, story 3, 2:15, Holt) reported that flames are "getting closer to million dollar mansions" owned by celebrities such as Ellen DeGeneres and Oprah. Helicopters are flying a constant rotation to drop water on the flames. Some firefighters said that Monday was the first day that they felt like they made some progress.

ABC World News Tonight (12/11, story 7, 1:45, Muir) reported that the area threatened by the Thomas fire hasn't had significant rainfall in more than 250 days, making lots of shrub in the area highly flammable. The fire has burned "more than 350 square miles in seven days." The Wall Street Journal (12/11, Carlton, Lazo) reports that the Santa Ana wind conditions are projected to end on or before Friday, which could aid firefighting efforts.

The Los Angeles Times (12/11, Tchekmedyian, Wilkens) reports that evacuation orders for large parts of Fallbrook and Bonsall were lifted by Sunday night as containment of the Lilac fire hit 75%. "Turning a corner would be a good way to put it," said Capt. Jon Heggie of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection. "It didn't grow at all today." Additionally, "all residents displaced by the Skirball fire...were allowed to return home."

Sage Grouse Leaders Say Debate Over The Bird Is Improving.

The AP (12/11) reports that Wyoming sage grouse leaders say discussions with the Interior Department are "improving after the announced review of the bird's protections caused dissonance." At a meeting last week, members of the state's Sage Grouse Implementation Team "say the discord is giving way to a collaborative approach." Team Chairman Bob Budd "says the federal plans can be improved, and the resulting hysteria was overblown."

A Look At Ryan Zinke's First Year As Interior Secretary.

In a review of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's first year in the Cabinet, the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (12/11, Lutey) highlights notable stories.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Meeting Focuses On Navajo Nation's Economic Future.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (12/11, Smith) reports that "a public meeting on Tuesday will focus on economic development strategies for communities dependent on coal production on the Navajo Nation." According to the article, "changes include the future closure of the Navajo Generating Station in Page, Ariz., and the reduction in coal production at Navajo Mine." Comments "about the strategies will be collected to help improve the strategies and recommendations for possible implementation, meeting organizers say."

Bureau Of Land Management

U.S. Judge Warns Of Mistrial In Nevada Rancher Bundy's Trial.

Reuters (12/11) reports that on Monday, U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro "warned that prosecutors' failure to produce documents that could support defense arguments may lead to a mistrial" in the "criminal conspiracy trial of Nevada rancher Cliven Bundy and three other men." Navarro "read a lengthy list of documents previously undisclosed by prosecutors that could be used to impeach government witnesses or otherwise bolster defense attorneys' arguments that their clients felt surrounded by government snipers prior to the standoff. Navarro then sent jurors home until Dec. 20 while the evidence issues are addressed." Navarro pointed out that "some of the prosecution's documents were produced so late they violated the federal evidence discovery rules...and as a result could lead her to strike witness testimony, call for a continuance or order a mistrial."

Also reporting are the Washington Times (12/11, Richardson), the Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/11, Ferrara), and KLAS-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (12/11, Murphy).

Two Dems Join Bill To Move BLM To West.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (12/12, Harmon) reports that Reps. Ed Perlmutter and Jared Polis have "thrown support behind legislation that would move the headquarters of the Bureau of Land Management to a Western state — and ultimately in Grand Junction." The lawmakers "signed on as cosponsors of the bill by Rep. Scott Tipton, a Cortez Republican, that would require the BLM to move its offices to one of the states in which it manages vast swaths of land." Perlmutter said, "Relocating BLM headquarters to the West would be a natural fit with the agency's mission and purview, and allow agency officials to be closer to the land and minerals they oversee. I believe Colorado is well-positioned to house the BLM headquarters as Coloradans value our public lands and outdoor recreation.”

Officials Dedicate 2 Large Solar Electric Generating Plants.

The AP (12/11) reports that “two large solar-powered generating plants built near Las Vegas to power the operations of commercial data company Switch in northern and southern Nevada were dedicated Monday by elected, company and business officials.” Former Sen. Harry Reid was “among officials marking the occasion along with federal land managers, local elected officials, plant owner EDF Renewable Energy and builder First Solar Inc.” John Ruhs, director of the Bureau of Land Management in Nevada, noted that “the plants are the first utility-scale solar power plants to be built” in a BLM “Solar Energy Zone.”

Feds OK West Elk Coal Lease Expansion.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (12/12, Webb) reports that “the U.S. Forest Service has consented to two federal coal lease expansions that would let Arch Coal mine beneath about 1,700 acres in the Sunset Roadless Area in the upper North Fork Valley.” The decision, released Monday, “opens the door for the Bureau of Land Management to decide whether to modify the leases.” The bureau also is “evaluating whether to permit exploration on the leases if they are issued.”

Nevada’s Ash Springs Remains Closed As BLM Ponders Its Fate.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/11, Brean) reports that four years since shutting down the Ash Springs Recreation Site, the Bureau of Land Management still hasn’t decided on its fate. The BLM “cited concerns about public safety and environmental damage when it shut down the spring-fed swimming hole,” and “since then, public meetings have been held and plans have been floated to reopen the Ash Springs Recreation Site, but no one has been allowed back into the water.” Shirley Johnson, an assistant field manager for the bureau’s Caliente field office, “said the BLM is nearly finished with a draft environmental assessment for the site, though she declined to predict when the document might be released for public review.” According to the article, “the latest hang-up involves a privately owned parcel between the recreation site and U.S. 93.” Johnson “said the parcel turned out to be larger than the BLM initially thought, complicating the agency’s plan to build a new access road from the highway to the federally owned portion of the spring area.”

Mining Rights Group Fights BLM Road Closure In California.

The Canada Free Press (12/11, Jones) reports on the “fight for mineral rights on public lands in the western Mojave Desert.” The article notes, “Mineral development is an important land use within the BLM’s multiple-use mandate. In communities across the country, mining provides jobs, economic activity and important commodities that are essential to maintain a high quality of life.” According to the article, “In an alleged attempt to illegally block small-scale gold miners from accessing their mining claims, the Bureau of Land Management has erected ‘ROUTE CLOSED’ signs near Barstow, Calif.” Over the last several year, the BLM “has been under court order to re-evaluate route closures on public lands in the WEMO planning area,” or the West Mojave Plan, which is a “BLM Travel and Transportation Management plan covering 9.24 million acres in the West Mojave area of the California desert, of which 3.1 million acres are public lands managed by the BLM.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Trump To Open The Door For Oil Drilling Off U.S.’s East Coast.

Bloomberg News (12/11, Dlouhy) cites “people familiar with the plan” who said that the Administration “is preparing to unveil as soon as this week an expansive offshore oil plan that would open the door to selling new drilling rights in Atlantic waters.” President Trump ordered the Interior Department “to write the new blueprint with the aim of auctioning oil and gas drilling rights off the U.S. East Coast.” The “coming draft proposal...dovetails with the oil industry’s push for new places to drill, said the people, who asked not to be identified before a formal announcement.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Progress On New Binational Drought Plan In Colorado Basin Slow Going.

Cronkite News (12/11, Windes) reports that “states, federal and Mexican officials hailed a binational agreement this fall that they said could lead to a radical shift in how the region prepares for and responds to drought.” However, “three months later, they appear no closer to a drought contingency plan, as negotiations have pitted states and water districts against one another, as the U.S. tries to hammer out details of the plan.” According to the article, “disagreements between states, namely Arizona and California over who would take cuts, as well as conflicts within the states have stalled any draft from moving forward.”

Negotiations Begin For ‘Water Exchange’ Key To The Lake Powell Pipeline.

KSL-TV Salt Lake City (12/11, Kessler) reports that “negotiations between state and federal officials began Monday at the Dixie Center St. George looking to give Utah access to water from Lake Powell in exchange for some of its existing access to Colorado River water via the Green River in Wyoming.” Representatives of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, Utah Division of Water Resources and Washington County Water Conservancy District “gathered at the Dixie Center for the first of a series of meetings focused on hashing out what they called a water exchange contract.” The objective of “the exchange is to allow Utah the ability to draw water directly from Lake Powell for the Lake Powell Pipeline rather than drawing it from the Green River below the Flaming Gorge Dam.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Scott Angelle Outlines Path To Oil Industry Recovery.

The Houma \(LA\) Courier (12/11, Boudreaux) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement director Scott Angelle spoke Monday “in Gray about what the Trump administration is doing to jump start Gulf of Mexico drilling.” At a joint meeting of the Bayou Industrial Group and the South Central Industrial Association, “Angelle described the administration’s ‘six-step path’ to revitalizing the nation’s offshore oil industry through a mix of streamlining regulations and creating a partnership between the federal government and the industry.” He said, “We’ve gone from an era of scarcity to an era of abundance pretty quick like for any generation of Americans. We have to move from the 1980s goal of energy independence to the 2017 goal and beyond of something called energy dominance. ... We’ve gotta follow the path toward that goal.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

FWS Seeks Input On Montana Grizzly Bear Habitat.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (12/11, Puckett) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Monday “published draft habitat criteria for the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem (NCDE) grizzly bear.” The FWS is “seeking information from state, tribal, and federal partners, the scientific community, non-governmental organizations and members of the public on the proposed habitat criteria to ensure that the agency is using the best available science to recover the NCDE grizzly bear, the agency announced.” The public has until Jan. 26 to comment.

Controlled Burn To Be Conducted Tuesday In Refuge Near Lacombe.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (12/11, Chatelain) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Tuesday will “conduct a controlled burn of about 60 acres of the Big Branch National Wildlife Refuge near Lacombe to remove invasive plants and help restore native marsh grass.” The area to be burned is located on the east end of Lake Road.

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (12/12) and WGNO-TV New Orleans (12/11).

Trees Could Die At Higher Rates In West As World Warms.

The New York Times (12/11, Robbins) reports that new projections indicate that “ponderosa pine and pinyon forests in the American West will die at an increasing rate as the world grows warmer, becoming less and less resilient when they are weakened by higher temperatures.” “Long droughts are what it takes to kill trees,” said Dr. Henry Adams, a plant biologist at Oklahoma State University. “As you crank up the heat though, the time it takes to kill trees is less and less.”

Reward Boosted To $20K In Search For Killer Of Two Washington Wolves.

The San Juan \(WA\) Islander (12/11) reports that the Center for Biological Diversity and Cascadia Wildlands on Monday "increased a reward to $20,000 for information leading to conviction in the killing of two wolves last month in northeast Washington." The groups also called on the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "to step up its law enforcement efforts to investigate poaching incidents in both Washington and Oregon."

National Park Service

Schumer Backs Historic Status For East Side Redevelopment.

The Buffalo \(NY\) News (12/11, Zremski) reports that Sen. Charles E. Schumer on Monday called on the National Park Service "to approve the former Niagara Machine and Tool Works Factory on Buffalo's East Side as a historic property so that the Northland Corridor Redevelopment Project can cash in on a key tax break before it is curtailed or rescinded." Pacing the factory on the National Register of Historic Places "would qualify it for $16 million in historic preservation tax credits, which, Schumer said, would spur the property's redevelopment into a job training center." Schumer also "noted that the tax credit may be eliminated in the pending tax reform bill, meaning the National Park Service would have to approve new historic designations by the end of the year for them to qualify for the tax credit."

Tax Breaks Sought For Whitney Lofts Project In Syracuse.

The Syracuse \(NY\) Post-Standard (12/11, Moriarty) reports that "developers are seeking tax breaks for a $4.3 million transformation of two downtown Syracuse buildings into apartments and a 'speakeasy'-style bar." Both buildings were "built in 1855 as part of a group of five buildings known as the Washington Stores and were added to the National Register of Historic Places in 2009." With the support of Sen. Charles Schumer, the developers are "seeking permission from the National Park Service to return the exterior facade of 321 S. Salina St. to its 1930s' look, which included large front windows on the upper three floors."

2017 Eclipse Showered Wyoming With Visitors And Money.

The AP (12/11, Moen) reports that "nearly 192,000 people traveled to Wyoming to view last summer's total solar eclipse, boosting the state's economy by an estimated $63.5 million, according to an analysis released Monday by the state Tourism Office." Grand Teton National Park spokeswoman Denise Germann noted that "the eclipse was a record-breaking event" for the park, "where the weekend preceding the Aug. 21 eclipse and the day of the eclipse resulted in the 'busiest weekend in the history of the park.'"

Additional coverage was provided by Skift (12/11, Moen).

Flagler College To Lead Study Of Little-known Chapter In Castillo's History.

The St. Augustine \(FL\) Record (12/12, Jones) reports that the National Park Service, "in cooperation with Flagler College, has been allotted $50,000 to study the tribal heritage of the Castillo." According to a news release from the Interior Department, the park service, along with Flagler College professors and students, will conduct "much needed research on tribal perspectives of the imprisonments, develop collaborative interpretive and scholarly programs for the general public, and develop opportunities to use Native American art as a way to present these tribal perspectives."

Steamtown Stamp Featured In 2018 Edition Of National Park Collectors' Series.

The Scranton \(PA\) Times Tribune (12/11, Bolus) reports that "for the first time in the Steamtown National Historic Site's 32 years, the park will appear on collectors' stamps sold across the National Park System." The Passport To Your National Parks 2018 Regional Stamp Set "now features Steamtown as its 2018 Mid-Atlantic Regional Stamp." Steamtown Superintendent Debbie Conway said, "It brings more awareness. There are a lot of people who definitely have their national park passport wherever they go."

Upgrades To Devils Tower Will Improve Visitor Experience, Park Officials Say.

The Rapid City \(SD\) Journal (12/11, Nesbitt) reports that the National Park Service "announced last week that it is planning a number of upgrades to Devils Tower National Monument that will improve accessibility and visitor experience." The article notes that "the most significant is a new accessible approach to the 1.3-mile-long Tower Trail, which winds around the base of the tower." Additional improvements "include new interpretive exhibits along the Tower Trail, an interpretive plaza and accessible walkways to the trailhead and visitor center."

Asphalt Removal Project Cleans Up Gulf Islands National Seashore.

The Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (12/11, Gabriel) reports that workers on Monday cleaned up asphalt debris from the sands at Gulf Islands National Seashore. According to the article, a 37-worker crew is "tasked with clearing miles of weathered road and parking lot debris from the national park." The article notes that "the multi-year project is being funded with $10.85 million in environmental restitution money paid by oil giant BP in the aftermath of the 2010 Gulf Coast oil spill."

Bighorn Sheep Captured By Helicopter In Zion To Be Moved Out Of The Park.

The St. George \(UT\) News (12/11, Witham) reports that "in November, 17 bighorn sheep were captured and GPS-collared in Zion National Park to monitor population density." It was part of "an effort to reduce the risk of a catastrophic pneumonia outbreak." According to the article, "a number of sheep from the herd in Zion will be captured beginning Tuesday and transplanted to the San Juan County area to bolster the sheep herd there, while also reducing density of the Zion herd and promoting genetic diversity of animals throughout the state."

Yellowstone Bighorns Disfigured By Virus.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (12/11) reports that "some bighorn sheep in Yellowstone National Park may be frightening visitors with their freakishly scabbed lips blamed on an outbreak of sore mouth disease, but wildlife biologists aren't too worried." According to the article, "also known as contagious ecthyma, the outbreak is caused by the parapoxvirus." The virus is "transmittable to humans who have direct contact with infected sheep, so the National Park Service is reminding people not to approach or touch any wildlife."

Leader Named For Knife River Indian Villages Historic Site.

The AP (12/11) reports that the National Park Service has named Brenda Todd as the new superintendent for the Knife River Indian Villages National Historic Site. Todd, a 10-year veteran of the park service, is currently the program manager at the Public Lands History Center at Colorado State University. She starts her new duties Feb. 4.

Buffalo National River Superintendent Kevin Cheri Announces Retirement.

The Harrison \(AR\) Daily Times (12/11) reports that Buffalo National River Superintendent Kevin Cheri is "being recognized for exceptional leadership in the National Park Service and will be presented with the Regional Director's Award for Outstanding Service." The NPS will hold a ceremony at the Durand Center on Tuesday, Dec. 12.

Office Of Insular Affairs

Interior Gives Bikini Leaders Powers Over Resettlement Trust Fund.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (12/4) reports that Interior assistant secretary for Insular Areas Doug Domenech has "authorized full decision-making powers for the mayor and Council of the Kili-Bikini-Ejit local government in the Republic of the Marshall Islands over the annual budget of the Bikini Resettlement Trust Fund for and on behalf of the people of Kili, Bikini, and Ejit atolls." Domenech said, "One of Interior Secretary Zinke's priorities is to restore trust and ensure that sovereignty means something. Today, we recognize the leadership role and responsibility for which the people of Bikini have elected the mayor and council leaders and henceforth, will defer to them to fully assume a decision-making role over the Resettlement Trust Fund. It is appropriate that decision-making for the well-being of the people of Bikini be transferred to people of Bikini, rather than be dependent upon policy makers in Washington, D.C. However, our decision today in no way precludes any future consultations between our offices, as partners, for the benefit of the people of Bikini."

Marianas Variety (12/5, Johnson) reports that in a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Sen. Lisa Murkowski "rebuked Interior for the unilateral decision to wash its hands of trust fund management that she said she learned of 'via a press release.'" According to the article, Murkowski has "already drafted legislation that she said will be introduced into the U.S. Senate in January to 'provide a reasonable limit on withdrawals from the Fund each year.'" Murkowski told Zinke she was concerned "that the department will not meet its legal and fiduciary obligations with respect to the expenditure of U.S. taxpayer dollars from the Fund for the rehabilitation and resettlement of Bikini Atoll for the benefit of its people."

Earthquake Strikes Near Micronesia And US Guam: Massive Quake Rocks Ring Of Fire.

The Daily Express \(UK\) (12/7, Stinson) reports that "a massive 6.6 magnitude earthquake has struck near the coast of the US territory of Guam, along the Pacific's Ring Fire, according to the US Geological Survey (USGS)." The quake "occurred near the Yap Trench between the Philippines and the US' Mariana Islands with a depth of 45km at 12.22am GMT." No damage or casualties were reported.

Pallone Holds Roundtable After Trip To Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands.

My Central Jersey (12/4) reports that Rep. Frank Pallone Jr. "met with local advocates and leaders Monday in the city to discuss his Energy and Commerce Committee Delegation weekend trip to Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands." Pallone also sought comments "from the advocates on the ongoing post-Hurricane Maria recovery." According to the article, "Pallone's concerns include access to clean drinking water, the restoration of reliable power and the rebuilding of the electric grid, access to healthcare, and ensuring proper use of government funds."

Mapp: Virgin Islanders Deserve Same Aid As Other Americans.

The St. Thomas Source (12/5, Leonard) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp "said Monday that he urged visiting members of the U.S. House Committee on Energy and Commerce to treat residents of the U.S. Virgin Islands and other U.S. territories the same as all other American citizens." Mapp said "the visit will motivate Congress to increase the $20 million per fiscal year cap placed on the emergency fund allocated to the territories of Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and the U.S. Virgin Islands cumulatively."

Governor, Senate Remain On Collision Course Over Burning Debris.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (12/7, O'Connor) reports that "elected officials remain at odds over how to dispose of thousands of cubic yards of trees, plants, shrubs, and other detritus strewn about by the 2017 hurricanes." Gov. Kenneth Mapp "issued a statement Wednesday afternoon saying he would stay the course for burning some of what officials have labeled vegetative debris, echoing statements made at his Monday press conference." Meanwhile, "senators voted 10-2 on Friday to ban the burning of vegetative debris in the territory."

Employee Health Insurance Cost-Share To Remain Unchanged At 35 Percent, But Premiums Will Increase.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (12/11) reports that "the percentage of employee contributions to the V.I. government's health insurance contract with Cigna will remain the same at 65/35 cost-share, thanks to Hurricanes Irma and Maria, which forestalled contract negotiations, Senator Kurt Vialet said during a Committee on Finance hearing on Wednesday, where the committee received testimony from Cigna officials." Governor Kenneth Mapp's "2018 budget had called for a 60/40 split." But Vialet said, "As a result of the hurricanes and a rollover budget, the cost-share has remained the same."

New Military Office Reaches Out To Community.

Marianas Variety (12/6, Lirio) reports that "Northern Marianas College students were introduced last week to the CNMI Joint Region Marianas Coordination Office or CJCO headed by Randel Sablan." He told students, "The CNMI area is in the Mariana Islands Range Complex which means training activities happen here. So it is important that we coordinate with the local government and the local community."

$4 Million ADB Grant.

The Fiji Times (12/9) reports that "the Asian Development Bank (ADB) is providing a $US2 million ($F4m) grant to help reduce the Marshall Islands' consumption of fossil fuels and increase renewable electricity generation in the country." The Majuro Power Network Strengthening Project will be "financed by an ADB-supported Pacific Renewable Energy Investment Facility approved in June."

Peace Corps To Phase Out Of The Federated States Of Micronesia And The Republic Of Palau.

The Peace Corps (12/11) "announced it is officially phasing out of the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM) and Republic of Palau after many years of partnership." The phase out is "due to operational and infrastructure challenges in areas ranging from vast geographic distances, medical care and transportation, and recurring staff vacancies."

Egypt-sponsored UN Resolutions Deny Israeli Ties To Jerusalem.

Egypt Today (12/6, Maguid) reports that "the United Nations General Assembly voted overwhelmingly in favor of two Egyptian draft resolutions submitted to the UN Security Council, declaring Israel's actions in the Syrian Golan and East Jerusalem 'null and void.'" The article notes that "the Assembly issued the resolution with 151 votes in favor, while six members, including Canada, Federated States of Micronesia, Marshall Islands, Nauru, United States, and Israel itself rejected it." Meanwhile, "nine member states abstained, including Australia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Honduras, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, South Sudan and Togo."

BSCC And NEC Announce The Completion Of A New Submarine Cable Linking The Republic Of Palau.

On ACN Newswire (12/8), Belau Submarine Cable Corporation and NEC Corporation announced "that the construction of a new submarine cable linking the Republic of Palau has been completed and is now ready for commercial service." The Palau Spur "interconnects with the existing SEA-US submarine cable (which connects the Philippines and Indonesia to the west coast of the United States via Guam and Hawaii) from a branching unit located between the Philippines and Guam."

The Palau Pledge: Pacific Island Forces Visitors To Sign Eco-promise.

The South China Morning Post \(HKG\) (12/8) reports that visitors to Palau are "being made to sign a promise to respect the environment, in an innovative move that authorities hope will curb ecological damage caused by the booming number of tourists." The "Palau Pledge" is "stamped onto visitors' passports and must be signed upon arrival in the country."

President Moon Calls For Enhanced Ties With Pacific Island Nations.

The Korea Herald (12/5) reports that South Korean President Moon Jae-in "called for efforts to expand his country's cooperation with Pacific island countries Tuesday to jointly tackle climate change and other various global issues." Moon "had a brief meeting with foreign ministers from 13 Pacific island countries, including Papua New Guinea, Tuvalu, Nauru and Vanuatu, at the presidential office Cheong Wa Dae." Moon also "called for increased high-level dialogue between South Korea and the countries."

Office Of Surface Mining

Trump's Chosen Regulator An Unabashed Coal Booster.

E&E Publishing (12/11, Brown) reports that "Kentucky mining engineer Steven Gardner, who holds strong pro-coal views, has been nominated to lead the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement." Gardner "believes mountaintop mining is good because it creates flat land," and "he questions humans' role in climate change and has said there is 'no such thing as renewable energy.'" Gardner likely will be confirmed, "but environmentalists are fighting what they call a 'fox to guard the henhouse' with other Trump picks like U.S. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt."

US Geological Survey

Federal Geologists To Reevaluate North Dakota Oil Potential.

The AP (12/11, MacPherson) reports that, according to Sen. John Hoeven, federal geologists with the US Geological Survey agreed on Monday to reevaluate the volumes of recoverable crude oil within the state of North Dakota. Hoeven and officials in the industry "requested the new assessment...saying it would likely attract investment by showing stronger production potential." The aim for Hoeven and the industry officials is for "the USGS to take into account 17 other formations in western North Dakota's oil patch that could be exploited using technology developed for the Bakken and the Three Forks directly beneath it."

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (12/11, Holdman) reports that the USGS "will conduct a new resource estimate for the Williston Basin." Acting USGS Director William Werkheiser traveled to Bismarck in August, which is when Hoeven pushed for the reevaluation. Meanwhile, the "USGS is operating with funding under a continuing resolution from Congress" and "Walter Guidroz, program coordinator for the USGS Energy Resources Program, said the timeline for the re-assessment is" unclear.

Opinion Pieces

Trump Is Being Sued To Stop Him From Shrinking Bears Ears National Monument By 85 Percent.

Who Will Win? In an op-ed for the Washington Post (12/11, Curry, Reid), Todd A. Curry, an assistant professor of political science at University of Texas at El Paso, and Rebecca A. Reid, an assistant professor of political science at the University of Texas at El Paso, analyze the lawsuit filed by five tribes over the reduction in Bears Ears National Monument. The authors point out that "legal studies show that when two parties face off in court, the one with the most financial resources and experience is more likely to win." By using "text analysis software to identify all judicial cases involving indigenous people in state supreme courts between 1995 and 2010," they found that "in the 16 that dealt with environmental issues, the tribes prevailed about 50 percent of the time." The authors note that "tribes vary in their likelihood of prevailing in court based on what kind of opponents they faced — and what kind of resources those opponents had." According to the authors, "indigenous groups fared well against individuals and businesses, with relatively little disparity in resources between the parties." However, "when they faced government parties, indigenous peoples lost the majority of the time."

Trump's Destruction Of National Monuments Is Unethical And Short-Sighted.

In an op-ed for the Huffington Post (12/11, Cohen), Steven Cohen, Executive Director of Columbia University's Earth Institute, believes that "in the long run, many of the Trump Administration's policies will be reversed since they do not reflect mainstream America's culture and values." However, Cohen warns that "Trump's effort to open up lands preserved as national monuments, on the other hand, may well be irreversible." While "Trump and his allies" only value "money, the economy, and jobs," Cohen asserts that "preservation of these lands is a moral issue, not a political, legal or economic issue."

White House Says Stricter Immigration Policies Would Lessen Odds Of Domestic Attacks.

The White House linked the immigration reform debate to the failed Monday morning suicide bombing in Manhattan, arguing that the restrictions that President Trump has championed would reduce the chances of such attacks. Fox News Special Report (12/11) reported that suspect Akayed Ullah came to the US from Bangladesh in 2011 on a family visa and "benefited from the extended family chain migration program...a practice the Trump Administration has been critical of." USA Today (12/11, Jackson) reports that the White House "called for tighter restrictions on immigration." Press Secretary Sarah Sanders said, "We must protect our borders, we must ensure that individuals entering our country are not coming to do harm to people, and we must move to a merit-based immigration system."

The AP (12/12, Hajela) reports that the President later said in a statement, "America must fix its lax immigration system, which allows far too many dangerous, inadequately vetted people to access our country. Today's terror suspect entered our country through extended-family chain migration, which is incompatible with national security." Ullah came from Bangladesh in February 2011 with an F-43 family immigrant visa and is now a legal permanent resident. The Los Angeles Times (12/11, Bennett, Bierman) reports that the President called the F-43 policy "incompatible with national security."

The Washington Examiner (12/11, Quinn) reports that Attorney General Sessions also weighed in, saying, "The President is exactly correct about the changes we need to our immigration system. We have now seen two terrorist attacks in New York City in less than two months carried out by people who came here as a result of our failed immigration policies that do not serve the national interest – the diversity lottery and chain migration."

House Homeland Security Chairman Mike McCaul said on Fox News Special Report (12/11) that the attack "makes us realize" that while "we defeated ISIS in Iraq and Afghanistan...they have lived elsewhere." But Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-MS), the ranking Democrat on the House Homeland Security Committee, said on CNN's Situation Room (12/11) that the US already has a "robust immigration system." He also addressed chain migration, saying that "part of that...is family unification. ... We are trying to keep families together, not separate" them.

The Washington Times (12/11, Dinan) reports, "It's the second attack on New York in recent weeks involving someone who entered under an immigration program the president and some Republicans have proposed trimming. The man accused of running down eight people on a bicycle path in October was admitted under the Diversity Visa Lottery." Reuters (12/11), Bloomberg News (12/11, Epstein), Politico (12/11, McCaskill), and The Hill (12/11, Easley) also report on the statements by Trump and Sanders.

Attacker Says He Was Inspired By ISIS. All three broadcast networks opened their newscasts with the attack. ABC World News Tonight (12/11, lead story, 4:00, Muir) reported that Ullah struck "a Times Square subway tunnel at the height of the commute," leading to "a massive police and fire response shutting down Times Square." ABC's Gio Benitez: "The attack striking the heart of New York City in the middle of this morning's rush hour. A law enforcement source tells ABC News the suspect had been on the train for some time, the bomb strapped to him the whole time from Brooklyn to Manhattan." The CBS Evening News (12/11, lead story, 3:15, Glor) reported, "Police say that a bomb strapped to a would-be suicide bomber blew up in a pedestrian walkway at the biggest transit hub in the city." CBS' DeMarco Morgan: "Authorities say at 7:20 a.m., the terror suspect, 27-year-old Akayed Ullah, set off the bomb in an underground pedestrian tunnel just two blocks from New York's Times Square." NYPD Commissioner James O'Neill: "A preliminary investigation at the scene of the case indicates, this male was wearing an improvised, low-tech explosive device attached to his body. He intentionally detonated that device." On NBC Nightly News (12/11, lead story, 2:45, Holt), Stephanie Gosk reported, "Moments after the blast, the would-be suicide bomber could be seen on the ground, burns to his body. Commuters scattered for cover between Times Square and the bustling Port Authority bus station."

The New York Times (12/11, Bromwich, Rosenthal) reports, "Soon after the explosion was reported, New Yorkers' work day exploded into chaos. The Metropolitan Transportation Authority reported that 1, 2, 3, A, C, E, N, Q, R, W and 7 trains were skipping 42nd Street." The AP (12/11, Long) reports that "in the end, the only serious wounds were to" Ullah, though "three people suffered headaches and ringing ears from the first bomb blast in the subway in more than two decades." Mayor Bill de Blasio said, "This was an attempted terrorist attack. Thank God the perpetrator did not achieve his ultimate goals." The Washington Post (12/11, Berman, Bever, Wang, Barrett) reports that Ullah "sustained burns and lacerations to his hands and abdomen, authorities said. Police said he was taken to Bellevue Hospital for treatment and then taken into custody."

USA Today (12/11, Johnson, Bacon, McCoy) reports that according to "a law enforcement official," Ullah "told investigators that he specifically timed the assault to coincide with the Christmas season for the greatest possible impact – lashing out in the name of" ISIS. The New York Post (12/11) reports that Ullah "told authorities he was trying to exact vengeance for decades of violence against Muslims in Gaza, Syria and Iraq. ... He told cops he was inspired by ISIS, but police don't believe he had any direct contact with the group." The New York Daily News (12/11) reports that Ullah "told police he detonated the bomb after seeing a Christmas poster."

On ABC World News Tonight (12/11, story 2, 1:50, Muir), Linsey Davis reported that Ullah "did not say specifically why he chose Times Square but indicated to authorities he had consumed ISIS and Al Qaeda propaganda, which mentioned Times Square as a possible venue for attack. ISIS releasing this chilling image just a few weeks ago. A picture of Santa standing next to a box of dynamite in Times Square, and a threat: 'We meet at Christmas in New York soon.'" On the CBS Evening News (12/11, story 2, 1:45, Glor), Jeff Pegues reported that "investigators are trying to determine who else might have known about Ullah's plan to detonate a bomb this morning."

The New York Times (12/11, Feuer) reports, "On the surface, Akayed Ullah seemed to be an ordinary member of a Bangladeshi enclave in Brooklyn," and his actions left behind "a trail of mystery that baffled those who knew him." Mohammad Yousuf, who prayed at the same mosque as Ullah, said, "He was a good guy. I can't believe he would do anything like this."

The Wall Street Journal (12/11, Kanno-Youngs, West, Berger) headlines its report "Botched Suicide Bombing Jolts New York Rush Hour, Injures Four." Reuters (12/11) and Bloomberg News (12/11, Goldman, Holman) also report on the attack.

Ullah's Family Criticizes Law Enforcement Tactics. The New York Post (12/11) reports that Ullah's family "said they were 'heartbroken' by the attack on Monday and blasted law enforcement agencies for what they claimed were heavy-handed tactics by investigators." In a statement, the family said, "We are heartbroken by the violence that was targeted at our city today and by the allegations being made against a member of our family. But we're also outraged by the behavior of the law enforcement officials who held children as small as 4 years old out in the cold and who pulled a teenager out of high school classes to interrogate him without lawyer, without his parents."

New York Has Largely Been Spared Successful "Lone Wolf" Attacks. USA Today (12/11, Tate) reports that "though authorities have become more adept at identifying and preventing potential terrorist attacks in the years since 2001, lone individuals continue to be one of the most vexing security threats." The story notes that "in other cities around the world, terrorists have successfully detonated explosive devices in subways, train stations and on buses. At least so far, no terrorist attack on the scale of Madrid in 2004 or London in 2005 has been accomplished in New York since 2001." But "just six weeks ago...a 29-year-old Uzbek national drove a rented truck at high speed down a recreational path in lower Manhattan, killing eight people," and in May, "a man drove a car into a crowd of people in Times Square, killing one person."

The Wall Street Journal (12/11) says in an editorial that New York has simply been lucky that none of these attacks have been worse, and that surveillance must be expanded. On NBC Nightly News (12/11, story 2, 1:50, Holt), ex-NYPD Commissioner Bill Bratton said, "Being quite honest with you, I'm surprised we don't have more of those lone wolf types of attacks."

New Yorkers Carried On With Day As Usual. On its front page, the New York Times (12/11, A1, Dwyer) looks at how the city carried on with its usual business on Monday morning, and the New York Times (12/11) says in an editorial that "the city barely blinked after the morning rush-hour blast. ... No doubt, the communal reaction would have been more frantic had the toll been higher. But the normal rhythms of the city paused only briefly. New Yorkers have become quite adept at keeping their composure."

Three Women Who Have Accused Trump Of Sexual Misconduct Make Joint Appearances.

All three broadcast networks reported on the first joint public appearance of several of the women who have accused President Trump of sexual harassment and assault in the years before his election. The AP (12/11, Miller) and Reuters (12/11) report that the three appeared in a lengthy segment on NBC's Megyn Kelly Today before appearing at a news conference. The networks showed clips of their allegations in detail. While the White House calls the allegations "false" and says they have already been addressed, five senators are now calling on Trump to resign.

ABC World News Tonight (12/11, story 4, 3:30, Muir) reported that "amid the national conversation about sexual misconduct, President Trump's accusers are now demanding that Congress act, arguing that the President should not be immune." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "They say no one cared the first time. So today, three women accusing President Trump of sexual misconduct went public once again, hoping, this time, Congress will investigate. Rachel Crooks was a Trump Tower receptionist when she says, 12 years ago, she introduced herself to the billionaire businessman and he began kissing her." Crooks: "Mr. Trump repeatedly kissed my cheeks, and ultimately my lips in an encounter that has since impacted my life well beyond the initial occurrence." Vega: "Jessica Leeds says she was on a first class flight to New York back in the 1980s when he groped her. ... And Samantha Holvey says Donald Trump inappropriately inspected Miss USA contestants before a 2006 pageant." Holvey: "These dreams never included a man coming into the backstage, hair and makeup area, while I sat naked under a robe, as he walked around, looking at us like we were his property." Vega: "And she points to his own words to Howard Stern." Trump in 2005: "I tell you, the funniest is that I'll go backstage before a show, and everyone's getting dressed and ready and everything else, and, you know, no men are anywhere, and I'm allowed to go in, because I'm the owner of the pageant, and therefore, I'm inspecting it, 'Is everybody okay?' And you see these incredible-looking women, and so I sort of get away with things like that."

On the CBS Evening News (12/11, story 9, 2:00, Glor), Jim Axelrod reported, "They have all told their stories before. ... But hoping to find more traction in the #Me Too moment...they're telling them again in a new documentary '16 Women And Donald Trump.' What's the consequence you would like to see?" Crooks: "I believe that they would find enough proof to show that he had had this misconduct, and he's not fit for office, quite frankly." However, NBC Nightly News (12/11, story 4, 2:10, Holt) reported that "the White House says it's all political theater." White House Press Secretary Sarah Sanders: "Look, the President has addressed these accusations directly and denied all of these allegations. And this took place long before he was elected to be president, and the people of this country had a decisive election, supported President Trump." Crooks: "I don't understand that. Does that mean they're admitting, yeah, he might have done it, but it doesn't matter because the voters decided?"

The New York Times (12/11, Shear) reports that their effort "to attract new attention to the allegations comes amid rapidly shifting attitudes in American society about the need to hold men accountable for their treatment of women, even for acts perpetrated long ago." USA Today (12/11, Przybyla) writes that "in the immediate aftermath" of Sen. Al Franken's announcement that he would resign, "Democrats began to draw a contrast with the GOP and Trump in particular. Republicans may also soon be welcoming to their conference Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore, who is accused by nine women of inappropriate touching or misconduct."

The Wall Street Journal (12/11, Ballhaus) reports that the White House responded in a statement, saying, "These false claims, totally disputed in most cases by eyewitness accounts, were addressed at length during last year's campaign, and the American people voiced their judgment by delivering a decisive victory. The timing and absurdity of these false claims speaks volumes, and the publicity tour that has begun only further confirms the political motives behind them." The Huffington Post (12/11, Frej, Vagianos, Miller) reports that Crooks "called the statement 'laughable.'" Politico (12/11, Nelson, Lima) also covers the White House statement.

Jonathan Lemire of the AP (12/11) writes, "With each day seeming to bring new headlines that force men from positions of power, the movement to expose sexual harassment has forced an unwelcome conversation on the White House." To the President's "accusers, the rising #MeToo movement is an occasion to ensure he is at last held accountable." The Washington Post (12/11, Parker, Berman, Sellers) reports that "some outside Republicans close to the president said they are increasingly uneasy about his ability to withstand a revived spotlight on his behavior toward women," and "a number of Trump associates are also wary of the potential political costs if the president goes on a sustained attack against his accusers."

Matt Viser of the Boston Globe tweeted, "President Trump has great empathy for any female accusers. Unless those accusers are the more than a dozen accusing him. In which case they are liars."

Trump Reportedly "Infuriated" By Haley Statement. Axios (12/11, Lawler) reports that according to the AP, Trump "was 'infuriated' by UN Ambassador Nikki Haley's remark Sunday that the women accusing him of sexual assault and harassment 'should be heard'...White House advisers were 'stunned' by Haley's statement."

Gillibrand Becomes Fifth Senator To Call On Trump To Resign. Politico (12/11, Lima) reports that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand became the fifth senator to call for Trump's resignation, telling CNN on Monday, "President Trump should resign. These allegations are credible; they are numerous. I've heard these women's testimony, and many of them are heartbreaking." Sens. Cory Booker, Jeff Merkley, Bernie Sanders, and Ron Wyden have also called for Trump's resignation. The Hill (12/11, Beavers) reports that 56 female Democratic female lawmakers are also "calling on the House Oversight Committee to open an investigation" into the allegations.

Gillibrand tweeted, "President Trump should resign. But, of course, he won't hold himself accountable. Therefore, Congress should investigate the multiple sexual harassment and assault allegations against him."

Merkley said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (12/11), "You have more than 40 senators who have called on Al Franken to step down. And when you think about that and compare his conduct with the President, the President has grabbed women's butts, he has grabbed their breasts, he has grabbed them on their genitals, he has bragged about doing so, he has pushed them up against walls, he walked in on multiple women when they were in various states of undress. And you combine these multiple stories that now I think there are more than 18 such stories, these are very, very consistent."

Trump To Pitch Tax Plan In Speech Wednesday.

Reuters (12/11) reports that the White House said Monday that President will deliver a speech Wednesday on the tax plan. Deputy Press Secretary Lindsay Walters said, "As we work with Congress to achieve historic tax cuts, the President plans to speak Wednesday to the American people on how tax reform will lead to a brighter future for them and their families." The AP (12/11, Gordon) says Trump "will try to sell the American people" on the "unpopular" plan.

Trump's planned speech comes as a Reuters/Ipsos poll released Monday found that "nearly half of Americans" still oppose the plan, Reuters (12/11) reports. According to the poll, 49% of adults who are aware of the plan "said they were opposed to it, a sentiment that has not changed much in the past few weeks." Meanwhile, "31 percent said they supported it and 20 percent said they 'don't know,' according to the online opinion poll of 1,499 adults conducted Dec. 3 to 7, with 1,138 adults saying they were aware of the tax legislation."

Bloomberg Analysis: Administration Overstates Its Record On Deregulation.

Bloomberg News (12/11, Levin, Hamilton) reports in an analysis that White House officials are "touting cuts to regulations as one of their top achievements." Bloomberg says "only a handful of regulations have actually been taken off the books," due to "laws that keep government policies from wildly swinging back and forth every time moving trucks show up at the White House." The Administration's claim is "based almost entirely on stopping proposed rules that haven't yet made their way through the machinery of government," but "a Bloomberg News review has found even those claims are exaggerated," as "hundreds of the pending regulations had been effectively shelved before Trump took office." Others "are actually still being developed by federal agencies," and some "were moot because the actions sought in a pending rule were already in effect." Bloomberg says the "findings undercut one of the signature assertions of an administration that has struggled to show progress on its major campaign promises."

Appeals Court Judges Skeptical Of Request To Dismiss Children's Climate Lawsuit.

The Washington Post (12/11, Dennis) reports that a three-judge panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals on Monday "expressed skepticism over the Trump administration's request to halt a high-profile climate change lawsuit brought by 21 children, which had been scheduled to begin early next year." An attorney for the federal government asked the judges "to effectively dismiss the lawsuit, claiming that the discovery requests in the case were 'burdensome' and that litigating the case could distract the executive branch from carrying out 'its constitutional duties.'" According to the Post, "the landmark lawsuit, initially filed in 2015 against the Obama administration, argues that the government's failure to act more aggressively to combat the effects of global warming amounts to a violation of the young plaintiffs' constitutional right to a clean environment."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Mr. Mnuchin’s Magical Math On Taxes.” Citing a Treasury Department analysis which says the GOP tax plan would pay for itself, the New York Times (12/11) says in an editorial that the “analytical support for a $1.5 trillion, nearly 500-page piece of legislation is a 400-word note that boils down to ‘trust us.’”

“New Yorkers Don’t Scare Easily.” The New York Times (12/11) says in an editorial that “the city barely blinked” after Monday’s failed terror attack. The Times adds, “No doubt, the communal reaction would have been more frantic had the toll been higher. But the normal rhythms of the city paused only briefly. New Yorkers have become quite adept at keeping their composure.”

Washington Post.

“Susan Collins Is Wrong About The Tax Bill And Obamacare.” A Washington Post (12/11, Board) editorial calls the votes of Sens. Susan Collins, John McCain, and Lisa Murkowski for the tax bill “puzzling” since they “killed an Obamacare repeal bill last summer because it was hastily drafted and poorly designed.” Nonetheless, they “endorsed a tax bill that contains a hastily drafted and poorly designed repeal of a key piece of Obamacare.” Collins on Sunday “insisted that repealing the mandate would not damage health-care markets, in large part because she received assurances from congressional leaders and the White House that two bipartisan fix-Obamacare bills would come up next.” But the Post says she “is wrong in her certainty that these bills, if passed, would fill the gap that repealing the individual mandate would leave.”

“Poland’s Autocratic Counterrevolution Draws Nearer.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/11) raises concerns that over the last couple days as Poland’s “right-wing nationalist government has struck major blows against judicial independence and independent media,” it increasingly appears “neither the European Union nor the United States has the means or will to hold it accountable.” The Post warned that as long as President Trump remains silent on the matter, Poland’s participation in “a counterrevolution that would dismantle the core institutions of a free society” will continue unabated.

“A Mexican Journalist’s Life Hangs In The Balance.” The Washington Post (12/11) editorializes about the bid for asylum in the US by Emilio Gutierrez, a Mexican journalist “who, with his then-teenage son, crossed into the United States in 2008 after writing critical stories about abuses committed against civilians by the Mexican army in prosecuting its war on drugs in Chihuahua, then Mexico’s most violent state.” Gutierrez’s “hurried departure was prompted by the news” that “a military officer had ordered him killed.” According to the Post, “after years of pleadings and postponements, this past summer a federal immigration judge denied his asylum claim; an appeal was rejected in November.” Last week, “he seemed on the verge of deportation when an 11th-hour stay was issued by the Board of Immigration Appeals.” The Post argues that “it seems cavalier to dismiss the threat Mr. Gutierrez faces should he be deported to Mexico. He should be granted asylum.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The GOP’s Capital Gains Tax Hike.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/11) criticizes a provision in the Senate tax bill that would require investors who sell stock to sell their oldest shares first. The Journal argues the provision amounts to a capital gains tax increase and calls on Republicans to eliminate it.

“Macron’s Polling Revival.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/11) says the latest rise in approval ratings for French President Emmanuel Macron from their lows in late summer reflected a rare political opening that Macron should use to call for reforms to rejuvenate the French economy.

“New York Gets Lucky Again.” The Wall Street Journal (12/11) says in an editorial that New York has simply been lucky that none of these attacks have been worse, and that surveillance must be expanded.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: [Referring to the special Senate election in Alabama] "President Trump is supporting the alleged child molester in this race because, of course he is. Although he wasn't President Trump's first choice for senator of Alabama. Then he found out Jared from Subway was still in jail."

Stephen Colbert: [Referring to the NYC bombing attempt] "The suspect, who was Bangladeshi, is 27 and lives in Brooklyn, so he used only locally sourced handmade artisan bomb parts."

Stephen Colbert: "But I've got something to say to this guy. Seriously? You tried to terrorize New York subway commuters? Nice try. ... And the MTA does that just fine without your help."

James Corden: "I don't want to say Trump watches too much TV, but he just asked Congress for a $10 million budget increase for the NCIS team."

James Corden: "Kingdom of Saudi Arabia has announced that, for the first time in 35 years, they will allow their citizens to go to movie theaters. ... The last time you could see a movie in Saudi Arabia, they were showing things like 'Superman,' 'Batman,' 'Blade Runner,' 'Star Wars.' Okay, yeah, they haven't missed anything."

Trevor Noah: "Can I tell you I love living in New York? Yeah, because in New York City, it's even hard to make it as a terrorist."

Jimmy Fallon: "The New York Times says each day, President Trump watches eight hours of TV and drinks 12 diet cokes. Sounds less like the President, more like a college kid who just got home for winter break."

Seth Meyers: "The Alabama special election for Senate is tomorrow between Doug Jones of the Democratic Party, and Roy Moore, who is not allowed at parties."

Seth Meyers: "According to the New York Times, President Trump sometimes watches MSNBC's Morning Joe because it fires him up for the day. It's the same reason he watches Dora."

Seth Meyers: "According to a Gallup poll, 80 percent of Russians approve of Vladimir Putin's leadership, while the other 20 percent are missing."

Conan O'Brien: "In this new article on President Trump, it says he views each work day like an episode of a TV show. Yes! Like a TV show. And in a way, Trump's right. Because with his low ratings, people are wondering why he hasn't been canceled yet."

Jordan Klepper: "This morning, there was a terror attack at US Port Authority bus terminal. Thankfully, there were no major injuries. New York is strong. Clearly this man has never been to the Port Authority. It's already a lawless dungeon."

Interior To Revise ESA Listing Rules.

E&E Publishing (12/18, Doyle) reports that the Interior Department is working on proposed changes to the Endangered Species Act regulations, "in a move that alarms environmentalists but could gratify Westerners and others unhappy with the current law." The article says that "while the details and timing remain under wraps, Interior officials made public their general intentions as part of the Trump administration's Unified Agenda issued Thursday." The department also announced "that it will 'clarify and improve' the so-called Section 7 consultations with other federal agencies when endangered species are involved."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Report: Lame Deer Jail Regularly At Over-Capacity.

The AP (12/18) reports that a recent report says the Lame Deer jail has "been overcrowded since 1999." The Lame Deer jail was "built to hold just 19 inmates, but a recent Bureau of Justice Statistics' annual report found that it regularly houses 45 inmates."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Federal Investigation Finds Only Westerhuses Responsible For Fraud.

KELO-TV Sioux Falls, SD (12/18, Kennecke) reports that the Interior Department's Inspector General has "issued a report involving Bureau of Indian Education Schools and fraud regarding federal monies." The watchdog "finds that the American Indian Institute for Innovation billed more than $100,000 for office space to get BIA funding, even though the tribal school provided the space for free." However, "the inspector general finds that only Scott and Nicole Westerhuis were responsible for the fraudulent over billing." According to the report, the IG ended its investigation "because the responsible subjects are deceased and we did not identify additional subjects."

Ammon Bundy: Not Surprised Prosecutors Under Fire In Nevada Standoff Case.

The Oregonian (12/18, Bernstein) reports that Ammon Bundy said Monday he is "now at peace as he awaits a judge's ruling on whether the stalled federal conspiracy trial against him, his father, older brother and a friend will proceed." Bundy "said he was buoyed by a new memo from a U.S. Bureau of Land Management whistleblower that alleged misdeeds by federal agents during the investigation" of the 2014 Bunkerville standoff. He added that "the government made a mistake by locking up his family for so long because it gave them a lot of uninterrupted time to pore over evidence and learn about the law." Bundy said, "We've been locked away for the last two years with discovery that's been sealed. We've done our due diligence going through every file, trying to understand every video, trying to understand every body cam, every dash cam. We have understood that this has been coming on, but we haven't been able to tell the public. So the fact that it has come out doesn't surprise us at all."

10th Circ. Lets Enviros Into Oil Group's BLM Auction Suit.

Law360 (12/18, Phillis) reports that "a split Tenth Circuit panel overturned a lower court Monday and said environmental groups had the right to intervene in Western Energy Alliance's suit alleging the Bureau of Land Management wasn't conducting enough lease sales, ruling the Trump administration's policy shifts showed it wouldn't necessarily represent environmentalists' views."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Florence Civic Center Holds 2017 South Carolina Energy Forum.

WBTW-TV Florence-Myrtle Beach, SC (12/18) reports that the Consumer Energy Alliance met in Florence on Monday "to discuss federal efforts to develop offshore leasing program and its impact to the Carolina's." Acting assistant Interior secretary for land and minerals Kate MacGregor and "other public policy leaders and members of the business community discussed how the program can impact South Carolina's economy, jobs and energy security."

The Florence \(SC\) Morning News (12/18, Lloyd) reports that McGregor said, "This is critical to put the nation on a strong and lasting path toward a promising energy future that keeps prices affordable and stable for families and businesses so we can further grow our economy."

Florida Commission Proposes Constitutional Ban On Offshore Drilling.

WGCU-FM Fort Myers, FL (12/15, Hatter) reports that Florida's Constitution Revision Commission approved a proposal to ban oil drilling off Florida's coasts last week. If voters approve the proposal, it would add language banning offshore drilling into the state constitution, going above and beyond the offshore drilling moratorium already in place. Florida Petroleum Council's Executive Director David Mica "argue[d] the proposed ban would hurt the oil and natural gas industry, and Mica points out that's where the gas to power cars and heat buildings come from."

After 16 Years, Hopes For Cape Cod Wind Farm Float Away.

The New York Times (12/19, Seelye) reports on the demise of the Cape Wind offshore wind project. But while Cape Wind has been terminated, "the offshore wind industry in this country looks more promising than ever." According to the article "with concerns about climate change intensifying, states like Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island and Virginia are all looking to offshore wind to meet renewable energy goals."

Delta Tunnels Bonds Challenged By Valley Farmers.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (12/18, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that "already short of funding, Gov. Jerry Brown's Delta tunnels project is being challenged in court by a bloc of San Joaquin Valley farmers insisting they shouldn't be forced to help foot the $17.1-billion price tag." The farmers, "located mainly in Kern and Kings counties, voiced their objections in a Sacramento court filing opposing the Brown administration's plan to issue bonds to pay for the tunnels." The article explains that "in general, farmers who grow high-value tree crops such as almonds and pistachios are more inclined to support WaterFix," but "row-crop farmers, whose revenues aren't as high, are resisting."

Oil And Gas Plumes Found At Site Of 13-Year-Old Leak In Gulf.

The AP (12/18, Kunzelman) reports that new evidence has been found evidencing an "ongoing oil release" in the Gulf of Mexico where there are constant sheens of oil stretching miles along the coast of Louisiana. Lawyers with the Department of Justice filed documents on Friday, which "said recent scientific surveys revealed two plumes of oil and gas flowing from where an underwater mudslide during Hurricane Ivan in 2004 toppled an offshore platform and buried the cluster of wells owned by Taylor Energy Corp." The company has maintained that there is no evidence revealing that oil is leaking from the seafloor's unplugged wells.

Oil Workers Sue Shell Over Gulf Of Mexico Platform Fire.

Reuters (12/18, McWilliams) reports in continuing coverage that the three workers injured during the fire on Shell's Enchilada platform have filed a lawsuit against the oil major and Enbridge, looking for $1 million in damages for the injuries received. A Shell spokesman declined to comment, citing the lawsuit and ongoing investigation into the fire by the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement.

Week Ahead: Arctic Drilling Measure Nears Finish Line.

The Hill (12/18, Cama) reports Congress is expected to vote in the coming week on the GOP tax reform bill, which would also open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling. Since the bill is being considered under budget reconciliation rules, it requires only 51 votes to pass. While some House Republicans expressed concern about ANWR drilling, many have said its inclusion in the final bill will not prompt a no vote. The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (12/18, Byrd) reports Rep. Mark Sanford said he will vote for the tax plan despite his opposition to ANWR drilling. Sanford said, "I'm disappointed. ... It's a classic case of buying votes at the end of one of these, you know, countdowns." He called the provision a bartering tool for the GOP, to "trade this marble for that marble, to pick up a vote."

Bloomberg News (12/18, Kapur) reports GOP incumbents will use the ANWR drilling provision as a point of emphasis in the 2018 midterm elections. However, Democrats will also seek to capitalize on public opinion polls showing how unpopular the legislative push has been.

Imperiled Glacier Stone Fly Found In Wyoming.

Wyoming Public Radio (12/18, Edwards) reports that scientists at the University of Wyoming have discovered the glacier stonefly, which was "thought to be extinct in the region in four streams in the Tetons." According to UW Invertebrate Zoologist Lusha Tronstad, "the discovery has put the decision-making process on hold over whether to list the species." Tronstad said "This was a large range extension. And so they extended their time to make the decision so they could investigate what does this mean because the species is known 500 miles away from where we previously thought it was restricted to." As a result of the discovery, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has extended the comment period for listing the glacier stonefly.

Statue Of Liberty's Light To Be A Little Dim This Week.

The AP (12/18) reports that the National Park Service says the Statue of Liberty's "exterior lights will be turned off from Monday evening through Thursday." NJ News (12/18, Villanova) reports that "the lights on the statue's torch, crown, and pedestal colonnade will remain illuminated, drawing power from a small emergency back-up generator located within the monument, the NPS said in a statement." The outages are necessary for work to Liberty Island's electrical system.

The Price Of A National Park Fee Hike (Who Should Pay For Public Lands?).

The High Country \(CO\) News (12/14, Langlois), reports that the proposal "to dramatically raise entrance fees at 17 popular national parks" is raising concerns with conservationists who "see it as simply another example of a dangerous trend: federal lands run less like a public resource and more like a commercial enterprise." On the other hand, other argue that "only Americans who actually use these lands should pay for them, and that public lands would be more efficient if they were managed like private businesses."

To Build A Bridge For Mountain Lions, Wildlife Activists Need $60 Million.

The Los Angeles Times (12/18, Sahagun) reports that "a dozen conservationists and fundraisers gathered this week" in Los Angeles to plan an overpass over a busy freeway for mountain lions. Scientists say the bridge "would provide safe crossing for wildlife, helping diversify the gene pool among the small, isolated populations of mountain lions remaining in the Santa Monica Mountains south of the freeway as well as in the Simi Hills and Santa Susana Mountains to the north." Advocacy groups "admit it will require one of the most ambitious fundraising campaigns ever held on behalf of local wildlife — a total of $60 million by 2020."

You're Gonna Pay A Lot More To Get Into Cabrillo National Monument Come Jan.

1. The San Diego Union-Tribune (12/18) reports that "the cost to enter Cabrillo National Monument will increase by as much as 50 percent beginning Jan. 1." The article notes that "eighty percent of the entrance fees collected at Cabrillo stay at the park, according to the NPS, which uses the funds for natural resource preservation, improvement of visitor facilities and educational programming." Projects in the pipeline "include 38 new wayside exhibits, repair of the damaged Bayside Trail, production of a film, improved accessibility to park structures and resources and an upgrade of informational displays about the war bunkers on the site."

Ideas Offered To Improve Three Denham Springs Parks.

The Livingston Parish News \(LA\) (12/18, Fambrough) reports that "a host of ideas on how to improve city parks are under review by the National Park Service, according to Jeanette Clark, community recovery coordinator for Denham Strong." Russell Clark, an official with the National Park Service's Rivers, Trails and Conservation Assistance Program "attended a public meeting hosted by Denham Strong to get suggestions from the public." Clark is "tasked with compiling the ideas offered, and then reporting back to Denham Strong on what are feasible projects."

Art Deco-style Tenney Building Added To National Register Of Historic Places.

The Wisconsin State Journal (12/18, Novak) reports that Madison's Tenney Building has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.

Compact Agreement For Palau Approved By Congress.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (12/14, Sablan) reports that "the Palau Compact Review Agreement was approved by Congress as part of the fiscal 2018 National Defense Authorization Act," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announced in a release. Zinke thanked President Trump, and "commended the U.S. Congress for including the provision in the bill, which authorizes the strategic agreement signed between Palau and the U.S. in 2010, the release states." Zinke said in the release, "The U.S. Insular Areas are on the front lines of North Korean aggression and are an important part of the strategic defense for our nation. Authorizing full funding for the agreement is an important element of the Pacific national security strategy to maintain stability in the Western Pacific Region and we look forward to continuing our work with Congress to get this job done. President Trump's strong support for the agreement, the Department's budget request, and Congress' support for it all point to the strategic importance of our U.S. Territories and the Freely Associated States. I have served with a number of warriors from the islands and I look forward to visiting the people of Palau in my role as Secretary."

NMBAC Member On HR 339: 'We Feel Misled'.

Marianas Variety (12/19) reports that "on the third day of Northern Marianas Business Alliance Corp.'s trip to Washington, D.C., Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres and the Northern Marianas Business Alliance Corp.'s officers and board members met with senior officials from the Department of Homeland Security and USCIS." Torres and Alex Sablan "presented a very detailed report to the officials and provided up to date information on the immediate impacts of the 3,000 reduction in CW1 visas for FY 2018." According to the article, "every member of the NMBAC spoke about the hardships the denials were having on the economy, federal funded infrastructure projects, and families." Although the officials from USCIS "continually expressed their understanding of our plight," they "stated they were bound by the laws passed by Congress." NMBAC member Perry Inos Jr. stated after the meeting "Clearly we were shocked that our argument about the original intent as presented to us was completely wrong. We feel misled."

UN General Assembly Votes For Palestinians.

Global Research (12/10, Gerald) reports that on December 6, President Trump "declared Jerusalem the capital of Israel and announced the U.S. intention to move its embassy to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv." Following Trump's announcement the UN's General Assembly on December 7th "passed nine draft resolutions assuring some protection to the lives and rights of Palestinians, and with such large majorities in favour of Palestine that the world's nations have indicated an overwhelming opposition to the U.S. president's decision." When voting on resolutions, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, Nauru, and Palau, sided with the US on reaffirming "the right of displaced persons to go back to their homes and former residences."

Operation Christmas Drop Volunteers Pack Bundles.

Stars And Stripes (12/11, Torres) reports that "hundreds of volunteers gathered to fill nearly 140 supply bundles for the start of the 66th Operation Christmas Drop, Dec. 9, 2017, at Andersen Air Force Base, Guam." Boxes were filled with "critical supplies that mean so much to the islanders throughout the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, Federated State of Micronesia, and Republic of Palau." According to the article, "the teamwork demonstrated during the bundle build is a representation of how Airmen and the community from across the region come together to lend a helping hand to our partners and allies in the Pacific."

US Geological Survey

New NPR-A Assessment To Spark Debate Over Expanded Drilling.

E&E Publishing (12/18) reports the U.S. Geological Survey is set to release a new assessment on how much oil and gas is in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska. The new report, set to come out this week, will be based on three recent oil discoveries, suggesting the region could hold more than the USGS predicted seven years ago. The 2010 report found that there were 900 million barrels of technically recoverable oil in the reserve, but Armstrong Energy, Caelus Energy and ConocoPhillips have each announced new oil discoveries in or near the NPR-A. When combined, the plays contain at least 3.5 billion barrels of recoverable oil.

Oregon Earthquake Punctuates Need For Early Warning System.

Government Technology (12/18, Williams) reports that an early warning earthquake system along the West Coast is "still in development," according to the U.S. Geological Survey, "but has already detected two earthquakes that caused damage." According to the USGS, "the system will need significant investment from government agencies on local, state and federal levels as well as from private companies and the public before it comes fully operational." The USGS "estimated it will cost more than $38 million to finish the early-detection system and create a public alert." Also, "annual operations and maintenance cost for the detection system could exceed $16 million."

Interior Department's Return To The 'Robber Baron' Years (Interior's Return To The 'Crazy Years').

In a piece for the High Country \(CO\) News (12/8, Thompson), Jonathan Thompson writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "likes to compare himself" to President Theodore Roosevelt, but "he far more closely resembles" former Interior Secretary Albert Bacon Fall, who once said, "All natural resources should be made as easy of access as possible to the present generation." According to Thompson, "Fall's easy-access creed is reflected in Zinke's systematic evisceration of environmental protections, a crusade clearly laid out in the Interior Department's recently leaked four-year strategic plan, and in its 'review' of department actions that allegedly 'burden domestic energy.'" But Thompson points out that "what Zinke has failed to realize is that every 'burden' removed from industry ends up falling on the backs of the country's land, air, water, wildlife — and people."

Politics And The Profits Of One Sector Cannot Be Allowed To Trump Science.

In an editorial, the Durango \(CO\) Herald (12/18) criticizes the Interior Department for postponing implementation of the second portion of the Bureau of Land Management's methane rule for another year. According to the paper, “the methane hot spot looming over the Four Corners – the continent’s largest – is the result of the activities the rule is designed to prevent,” and “atmospheric methane is a significant contributor to climate change, with the potential to trap far more heat than carbon dioxide traps.” The editorial urges the Trump Administration to “look more carefully at all sides of this issue and consider factors beyond the short-term profit of one economic sector.”

Fight Damaging Wildfires With Your Support: Palma.

In an op-ed for the Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (12/18, Palma), Juan Palma, the state director for The Nature Conservancy in Nevada, writes that “as fire suppression takes up more funds, agencies are borrowing money from programs that support recreation and restoration to make up budget shortfalls.” He notes that “this means they’re also delaying and terminating planned projects, such as restoring forests and removing hazardous fuels, that would have improved forest health and helped reduce the risk of fire in the first place.” Palma supports legislation in Congress that “would address the fire funding issue.” He also notes that The Nature Conservancy is “committed to tackling the underlying challenge of thinning our overgrown forests, which will help prevent extraordinarily costly fires from happening — and save money in the long run.”

Column: Congress Must Pass Funding Solution For Fighting Wildfires.

In an op-ed for the Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (12/18, Whelan), Will Whelan, the director of government relations for the Idaho chapter of The Nature Conservancy, warns that “the cost of fighting fires continues to grow.” However, “there is no dedicated source of funding to fight these fires.” He urges Congress to pass legislation that “would allow the public lands agencies to access disaster funding in the most severe fire seasons and help protect their land stewardship budgets from the ever-escalating cost of fire suppression.”

Trump Lays Out “America First” National Security Strategy.

Media reports of President Trump’s unveiling Monday of his nation security strategy nearly universally cast it as a reflection of his “America First” policy. Analyses of the strategy say the President links economic prosperity and national security. Also widely noted are the strategy’s labeling of China and Russia as “revisionist powers” and the lack of reference by the President to Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election.

The President’s speech was mentioned only briefly by the networks last night. The CBS

Evening News (12/18, story 4, 2:20, Glor) said the strategy “emphasizes peace through strength” and ABC World News Tonight (12/18, story 7, 0:40, Muir) called it an “America First approach” that “focused on two global rivals” – Russia and China. To Politico (12/18, Samuelsohn, Crowley), it “reflects the most inward-focused vision of American foreign policy in recent memory,” and the AP (12/18, Lemire, Yen) says it “echo[es]” the “America First” message of Trump’s 2016 campaign. The President “faulted previous US leaders for failing to look out for the nation’s citizens,” and vowed the US “will stand up for ourselves and we will stand up for our country like we have never stood up before.” The AP warns that the strategy “could sharply alter US international relationships if fully implemented.” Trump, the Washington Post (12/18, Gearan) reports, “cast his election as a pivot from failed economic policies and shortsighted negotiating strategies.” The Post similarly says Trump “used the rollout to reiterate his commitment to an ‘America First’ doctrine.”

The Los Angeles Times (12/18, Bennett) reports the President himself “described his approach to national security as one that ‘puts America first’ and relies on a ‘clear-eyed’ assessment of US interests, reflecting that he sees the United States locked in a global competition in which America’s economic prosperity and national security are closely linked.” The Times says the strategy is based on “four pillars: Protecting the homeland by restricting immigration, pressuring trading partners, building up the military and otherwise increasing US influence globally.” Also noting the four pillars, USA Today (12/18, Korte) says the “result is a doctrine that attempts to balance competing objectives: Emphasizing political and economic competition with countries like Russia and China while also enlisting their help with security challenges like North Korea’s nuclear program.”

Reuters (12/18) reports Trump said Washington had “no choice” but to deal with the challenge posed by North Korea, and Townhall (12/18, Pavlich) says he “touted tough talk and sanctions as successful, but noted more has to be done to denuclearize the regime.” Said the President, “This situation should have been taken care of long before I got into office, when it was much easier to handle. But it will be taken care of. We have no choice.” The New York Post (12/18, Fredericks) says Trump “excoriated past administrations for failing to successfully deal with North Korea.”

Breitbart (12/18, Hayward) reports that “senior administration officials” who spoke to reporters ahead of Trump’s speech described the strategy as a statement of “principled realism” that takes “a clear-eyed view of the threats that we face and the fact that we live in an ever-competitive world” in which “the global balance of power has shifted in unfavorable manners to American interests.”

The Wall Street Journal (12/18, Bender) reports Trump, citing a year of stock-market gains and declines in unemployment, suggested his predecessors prioritized nation building over domestic economic growth. The Washington Examiner (12/18, McIntyre) reports the President also claimed in his speech that he “has already re-established US leadership in the world and renewed confidence in American at home and abroad.” Said Trump, “I am proud to report that the entire world has heard the news and has already seen the signs. America is coming back and America is coming back strong.”

The New York Times (12/18, Sanger, Landler) says the strategy “envisions a world in which the United States confronts two ‘revisionist’ powers – China and Russia – that are seeking to change the global status quo, often to the detriment of America’s interests.” The Times notes that while the strategy “outlines a detailed plan to push back against China’s global economic ambitions, it says little about dealing with the kind of cyber and information warfare techniques” used by Russia to try to influence the 2016 presidential election. NBC Nightly News (12/18, story 7, 2:20, Holt) similarly reported that “notably, the strategy says little about securing the country from the type of cyber tactics Russia used to meddle in the 2016 election.” According to Reuters (12/18), the strategy said “Russia interferes in the domestic political affairs of countries globally.” However, it “stopped short of accusing Moscow of meddling in the 2016 US election.”

ABC World News Tonight (12/18, story 7, 0:40, Muir) briefly noted that the President didn’t mention Russian interference during his speech. Likewise, Jim Acosta reported on CNN’s Situation Room (12/18) that in Trump’s 30-minute speech, “there was no mention of Russia’s meddling in the 2016 election, that’s despite the fact that there is a reference to Moscow’s interference included in the written version of the White House strategy.”

During an interview with NSC spokesman Michael Anton on CNN’s Situation Room (12/18), Wolf Blitzer asked: “Can you say flatly right now, speaking on behalf of the President, that he believes Russian trolls...were engaged in trying to influence the outcome of the US presidential election?” Anton responded, “Yes, he has said that. ... He’s also affirming a fact that the cyber problem is not simply a Russian problem.”

The Washington Times (12/18, Boyer) also notes that “despite the plan’s heavy emphasis on...tougher immigration policies and more robust border security, the document makes no mention of the wall that the president plans to build along the US-Mexico border.”

The Hill (12/18, Williams, Fabian) reports that Trump’s rhetoric Monday “diverged from the document’s tougher talk on Russia and China at times, raising questions about how significantly the strategy will reshape administration policy.” Bloomberg News (12/18, Mayeda, Mohsin) says the “new rhetoric” on China “contrasts with the more collaborative approach of former President Barack Obama, who courted China as an economic partner.”

Former NATO Supreme Allied Commander James Stavridis writes for Bloomberg View (12/18) that the strategy “is a pleasantly centrist document – essentially a well-written amalgam of mainstream foreign policy principles that could as easily have emerged from a Hillary Clinton White House.” He adds that the “four pillars” of the document “reflect traditional ideas of international relations and are hard to argue with: protect the homeland, promote American prosperity, preserve peace through strength, and advance US influence.”

Jerry Hendrix of the Center for a New American Security writes for the National Review (12/18) that Trump is “exceeding the expectations of the national-security community by producing a remarkably coherent NSS within his first twelve months in office.” President Obama, it notes, “took 16 months to present his vision, and President George W. Bush, dealing with the disturbance of 9/11 to his strategic considerations, took 20 months.”

Peter Hasson, writing for the Daily Caller (12/18), says Trump’s strategy is “a stark contrast” from Obama’s most recent strategy released in 2015. For example, he says Trump “places an emphasis on stopping Islamist terrorism and calls it out by name,” while Obama “prioritized climate change as a national security threat.”

Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich writes in an online piece for Fox News (12/18, Gingrich) that “four presidencies – Bush, Clinton, Bush, and Obama – built their strategic efforts around a system of global multilateralism defined by lawyers, diplomats, and elite media,” but those efforts failed, as “disasters in Venezuela, Libya, Crimea, Syria, and elsewhere have demonstrated. ... President Trump has now moved to replace the failed doctrine of the past.”

Also offering a positive assessment of the President’s strategy, the Wall Street Journal (12/18) editorializes that it rightly recognizes that the world is becoming a more dangerous place – a departure from what it says were upbeat assessments under President Obama.

NSC Spokesman Downplays Omission Of Term “Radical Islamic Terrorism.” NSC spokesman Michael Anton was asked on CNN’s Situation Room (12/18) about why Trump in his speech used the phrase “radical Islamic terrorism” when the strategy document makes no reference to that phrase, instead using “jihadist terrorists.” Anton replied, “This is a distinction without a difference. ... It is a violent movement inspired by a radical ideology that its adherents believe is inspired by religion.” According to the Daily Caller (12/18, Enjeti), National Security Adviser McMaster “has reportedly opposed usage of the phrase ‘radical Islamic’ by Trump in the past,” reportedly telling staffers “during his first weeks on the job that the phrase ‘radical Islamic’ is not helpful to US counter-terrorism partnerships with Muslim majority nations.”

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Inaccurately Claims Record Defense Spending. The New York Times (12/18, Qiu) reports that during Monday’s speech, Trump “sought to distinguish himself as a commander in chief who is breaking records and setting precedents.” Referring to the National Defense Authorization Act, Trump said, “We are once again investing in our defense – almost $700 billion – a record this coming year.” The Times, however, says “one does not need to look far for authorization bills that have been larger. President Barack Obama signed a defense authorization bill of $725 billion for the 2011 fiscal year.”

French FM: Trump’s Foreign Policy “Smacks Of Isolationism And Retreat.” USA Today (12/18, Dorell) reports French Foreign Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian “issued a blunt critique” of President Trump’s foreign policy Monday, “saying it smacks of isolationism and retreat.” In an interview with “a small group of reporters” during his first visit to Washington as foreign minister, Le Drian “referred to Trump’s repudiation of the Paris climate agreement, UNESCO, trade deals, the Iran nuclear deal and the broad international consensus that Jerusalem should not be recognized as Israel’s capital until its status is resolved by Israelis and Palestinians.” This, he said, “forces President Trump to have a position of retreat on most topics rather than making proposals.”

Trump: Washington Train Derailment Highlights Need For Infrastructure Plan.

Bloomberg News (12/18, Gallu) reports President Trump said an Amtrak passenger train derailment that killed at least six people in Washington state Monday “bolstered his case for investing in the nation's crumbling infrastructure." Trump tweeted, "The train accident that just occurred in DuPont, WA shows more than ever why our soon to be submitted infrastructure plan must be approved quickly. Seven trillion dollars spent in the Middle East while our roads, bridges, tunnels, railways (and more) crumble! Not for long!" Bloomberg notes that the President has said he will introduce a $1 trillion infrastructure proposal.

Reuters (12/18) and Breitbart (12/18, Hanchett) briefly report the tweet and Politico (12/18, Nelson, Wolfe) says that while Trump "immediately seized on a deadly train derailment in Washington state to stump for his long-promised package of infrastructure investments...it's not immediately clear his plan would have prevented the crash." Local news coverage said the train "may have struck something before derailing," but the President "wasted little time connecting Monday's accident to the $1 trillion infrastructure plan that the White House plans to roll out in January."

According to the Washington Times (12/18, Miller), "initial reports indicated that aging infrastructure may not have played a role" in Monday's accident because the "high-speed train was making its first run on newly constructed tracks." The National Transportation Safety Administration has launched an investigation.

An AP (12/18, Woodward) "Fact Check" says Trump "isn't waiting for the facts to emerge" from Monday's deadly derailment "before using the accident to plug his infrastructure plan." The AP writes that "from what's known, it's not at all clear his coming infrastructure plan is relevant. The accident did not happen on a crumbling railway but rather on a section of track that had just been upgraded as part of a $181 million project," and the train was "making its first run on newly constructed tracks when it derailed."

All three networks led their broadcasts Monday night with the accident and dedicated a total of just over 14 minutes to the story. None of them, however, mentioned the President's response. On NBC Nightly News (12/18, lead story, 2:55, Holt), Gadi Schwartz reported "the $180 million project had been the target of critics, raising concerns about safety that are now part of the investigation." Clayton Sandell reported on ABC World News Tonight (12/18, lead story, 3:25, Muir) that "long before today's crash, a local mayor in this area said he was concerned about high speed trains in this area, saying that he thought a potential fatal accident was almost inevitable." On the CBS Evening News (12/18, lead story, 2:40, Glor), John Blackstone said "investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board are now on the scene of this accident looking for an answer to that all important question: what caused this [accident] on a newly built set of tracks?"

In a second NBC Nightly News (12/18, story 2, 1:30, Holt) report, Tom Costello said investigators are looking into whether the train "was going way too fast when it approached the curve where it derailed," and the CBS Evening News (12/18, story 2, 1:20, Glor) examined whether something called "a positive train control system...might have made a difference." ABC World News Tonight (12/18, story 2, 2:20, Muir) spoke with a passenger on the train, Scott Claggett, who described the accident.

Reuters (12/18) writes that the effort promised by President Trump "to revitalize everything from airports to schools to toll roads keeps being pushed back," and it "will still be up in the air in 2018." Trump's infrastructure plan "was overtaken in 2017 by efforts to repeal his predecessor's healthcare law and cut taxes for companies," and with the tax reform "seemingly on track, Republicans are now looking to squeeze spending on welfare and healthcare rather than lay out more on transportation and the like."

Newsweek Analysis: Trump Sought Cuts To Amtrak. Newsweek (12/18, Goodkind), meanwhile, reports that while Trump "claims his infrastructure bill could have prevented Monday's deadly Amtrak incident," his Administration "sought to cut funding to the nation's rail system earlier this year." The Administration's transportation budget released in May "dramatically slashed federal aid to Amtrak by 13 percent."

Tax Reform Bill Set To Pass After Collins Announces Support.

Media reports suggest that passage of the Republican tax bill is now all but assured after Sen. Susan Collins offered her support for the measure on Monday. Bloomberg News (12/18, Edgerton, Litvan), for example, says that "with Collins's backing, the GOP has all but clinched the votes necessary to pass the legislation." Collins, it notes, "had said previously she wanted to review the final legislation before deciding."

On the CBS Evening News (12/18, story 5, 2:05, Glor), Nancy Cordes said, "There are now few obstacles standing between the $1.46 trillion tax plan and final passage." A "pair of GOP hold-outs declared their support today" after an independent analysis by the Tax Policy Center “found the bill could drive up taxes for only five percent of taxpayers next year, an improvement from previous versions” of the bill.

The Washington Times (12/18, Sherfinski) reports Collins’ support “now marks another ‘yes’ vote for increasingly confident Republican leaders as they look to pass the plan this week,” and Reuters (12/18) too says Congress “appeared all but certain to pass sweeping tax legislation this week” after Collins and Utah Sen. Mike Lee – two Senate Republican holdouts – backed the bill. Announcing her support on the Senate floor, Collins said, “The first major overhaul of our tax code since 1986, this legislation will provide tax relief to working families, encourage the creation of jobs right here in America and spur economic growth that will benefit all Americans.” Lee tweeted earlier Monday that he would “proudly” vote for the bill.

The Wall Street Journal (12/18, Hughes, Rubin) reports the House is now scheduled to vote Tuesday on the bill, and the Senate is expected to take up the measure later Tuesday or Wednesday. The House is expected to easily pass the bill, but the vote will be tighter in the Senate. The New York Times (12/18, Rappoport) reports that the bill’s “expected passage along party lines had Democrats scrambling over the weekend to try to pressure a late supporter of the legislation,” Sen. Bob Corker, to vote against the bill.

Bloomberg News (12/18, Talev) reports that Vice President Pence has postponed his trip to the Middle East until January in case he is needed to cast a tie-breaking vote in the Senate. The Washington Post (12/18, Johnson) quotes Pence press secretary Alyssa Farah as saying, “The largest tax cut in American history is a landmark accomplishment for President Trump and a relief to millions of hardworking Americans. The Vice President is committed to seeing the tax cut through to the finish line.”

NBC Nightly News (12/18, story 6, 1:50, Holt) reported that Republicans, however, “say they have the votes they need to pass the bill, even without Sen. John McCain, who is recovering in Arizona from complications from cancer treatments.” ABC World News Tonight (12/18, story 6, 3:00, Muir) said, “President Trump on the verge of victory” and “hopes to sign this bill into law before the end of the week.”

On Fox News’ Fox & Friends (12/18), Ivanka Trump said, “We’re going to deliver historic tax reforms, and it’s going to happen before Christmas. It is going to be the fulfillment of an enormous campaign promise, and it’s going to be something that’s tremendously important for the American people. We feel it. This is something the people of this country want. They want simplification. They want a tax code that they can understand. They want lower corporate taxes and understand the benefit if the companies they work for can invest in their workforces and invest in new equipment and ultimately lead to wage growth.”

House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy, asked on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (12/18) about Democrat claims that “the middle class is getting hosed” under the GOP bill, said, “If the median family of four makes $73,000, they’re going to save more than $2,000. The Tax Foundation just came out and scored this. The after tax of family is going to actually increase their income by 1.8 percent. This is a tax cut. If you’re a family of four making $55,000, you pay zero in federal tax. This is an advantage for all of America to get stronger and more competitive.”

Bossert: North Korea Behind WannaCry Cyberattack.

Assistant to the President for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism Thomas P. Bossert writes in the Wall Street Journal (12/18) that the US blames the massive “WannaCry” cyberattack in May on North Korea. North Korea, he says, is increasingly using cyberattacks to fund its reckless behavior and cause disruption across the world.

The Washington Post (12/18, Nakashima) reports that with Bossert’s op-ed, the US government is “publicly acknowledging that North Korea was behind the WannaCry computer worm that affected more than 230,000 computers in over 150 countries earlier this year.” As a result, the Administration will be calling on “all responsible states” to counter North Korea’s ability to conduct cyberattacks and to implement all “relevant” UN Security Council sanctions, “according to a US official familiar with the matter.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Tax Bill Lets Trump And Republicans Feather Their Own Nests.” A New York Times (12/18) editorial is critical of the Republican tax bill, which it says “would benefit President Trump and other property tycoons.” The says a provision in the bill would allow people – like Sen. Bob

Corker – “who make money from real estate to take a 20 percent deduction on income they earn through limited liability companies, partnerships and other so-called pass-through entities that do not pay the corporate tax.” The Times laments that “this bill is bad enough. No less revolting is the dishonest and sneaky way it was written.”

“Thought Control, Trump Style.” The New York Times (12/18) editorializes that the CDC instruction no to use certain terms in budget documents and efforts by EPA contractors to perform “opposition research for the Republican Party” are “two recent examples of this administration’s continuing effort to mute, censor and spy on employees in federal agencies whose words or views don’t sync with President Trump’s agenda.” The Times describes several more examples of what it considers to be efforts by the Administration to mislead Americans, including deleting two critical retweets from the Department of Interior’s Twitter feed and the EPA’s efforts to target “by name journalists whose coverage is critical of the agency.”

Washington Post.

“Seven Dirty Words, According To The Trump Administration.” The Washington Post (12/18) editorializes that that the CDC’s instruction “to avoid using certain words or phrases in official documents being drafted for next year’s budget...sounds like thought police at work.” The Post compares the instruction to what happens in China, where the government “routinely censors articles containing politically sensitive words such as ‘Taiwan,’ ‘Tibet’ and ‘cultural revolution’ from publications because it does not want its people to think about them.” The Post concludes by opining that “someone should tell the foolish thought police at HHS to stand down.”

“Bob Corker’s Suspicious Yes On The Tax Bill.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/18) says the controversy surrounding Corker’s announcement that he will support the Republican tax bill after a provision was included that would benefit him personally “underscores the unseemly way legislation of such consequence has been cobbled together behind closed doors and with Democrats completely shut out.” The Post says it is “hard to be sympathetic” to claims from GOP leaders “that Democratic partisanship is behind the questions about Mr. Corker’s vote switch. They are the ones who turned their backs on regular order, making a charade of lawmaking and thus inviting suspicion.”

“Yet Another Baseless Attack On Mueller’s Team.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/18) decries the “feigned outrage” from President Trump and his transition team over Mueller obtaining transition emails, calling it “just one more attempt by Mr. Trump’s allies to kick up dust around Mr. Mueller’s investigation.” The Post argues that transition lawyers could challenge Mueller in court if he “seeks to use privileged materials in legal proceedings,” or “they could act now by bringing the matter before the federal judge overseeing Mr. Mueller’s grand jury.” The fact they have “chosen instead to air its grievances before two congressional committees with no jurisdiction over Mr. Mueller suggests this letter is little more than a political stunt.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Trump Doctrine, In Theory.” Also offering a positive assessment of the President’s national security strategy, the Wall Street Journal (12/18) editorializes that it rightly recognizes that the world is becoming a more dangerous place — a departure from it says where upbeat assessments under President Obama.

“Kicking Bob Corker.” The Wall Street Journal (12/18) argues in an editorial that the claims that the inclusion in the tax bill of a provision that would benefit Sen. Bob Corker personally was an attempt to bribe him is an attempt to get him to vote no, or in the alternative, call into question his principles.

Public Comment Period Over For Review Of Katahdin, Monuments.

The AP (7/11) reports that the public comment period ended on Monday "for a federal review of more than two dozen national monuments." The Hill (7/10, Henry) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's report to President Trump is due in late August.

Additional coverage was provided by the High Country \(CO\) News (7/10, Benson) and WMTW-TV Portland, ME (7/10).

New Mexico AG Urges Feds To Protect National Monuments. The AP (7/10) reports that New Mexico Attorney General Hector Balderas on Monday sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "outlining his support for Rio Grande del Norte National Monument and the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument." Balderas says any effort to rescind the designation of the national monuments "would be short-sighted and reckless." Balderas adds "that in a state with high poverty and joblessness, the monuments help make up one bright spot in the economy."

Congressmen Favor Eliminating 4 Arizona National Monuments. The AP (7/10) reports that three Republican congressmen have sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke asking for the elimination of four Arizona national monuments. The letter signed by Rep. Trent Franks, Rep. Andy Biggs and Rep. Paul Gosar "targets the Grand Canyon-Parashant, Ironwood Forest, Sonoran Desert and Vermilion Cliffs national monuments." The letter states that the Antiquities Act has become a "tyrannical tool that presidents have manipulated to exercise unfettered land grabs to the detriment of state and local interests."

Trump’s Environmental Rollbacks Hitting Major Roadblocks.

The Los Angeles Times (7/11, Halper) reports that “as President Trump flouts international calls to act on climate change, his administration is finding the pressure at home tougher to ignore.” Plans by the White House “to scrap restrictions on the release of a potent greenhouse gas are getting stymied by the courts, by forceful public opposition and even by Republicans in Congress.” Meanwhile, “about 2.5 million Americans have submitted comments as Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke prepares to announce which public lands would lose protections.”

FBI Investigating After Marine Corps Plane Crashes In Mississippi, 16 Fatalities Confirmed.

ABC News (7/11, Allen, Martinez, Mclaughlin) reports that on Monday, a Marine Corps KC-130 crashed in Mississippi, “killing at least 16 people aboard.” CNN (7/10, Leblanc) reports that the plane went down in Leflore County, a “largely rural area in the western part of the state.” Interior Secretary and Navy SEAL Ryan Zinke tweeted his condolences saying: “Please join me in praying for or sending good thoughts to the families and unit of the Marines we lost tonight in the C 130 crash.”

Who Will Ensure, As Public Landowners, That We Have Access To Our Own Public Lands?

In an op-ed for the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (7/10, QannaYahu), Kathryn QannaYahu, the founder of Enhancing Montana’s Wildlife & Habitat, warns about “the machinations that were already under way to increase privatization of the Crazy Mountains and other public lands.” She writes that Sen. Steve Daines and Rep. Pete Sessions are “spearheading an effort to gain greater control of our federally managed public lands by cutting off access.” According to QannaYahu, if certain “directives were adopted” by the Interior and Agriculture Secretaries, “not only would the public have historical access cut off across the country, but this would also hamstring our federal agencies from the same historical public access, to properly manage our public lands.”

Report: No Evidence Of Money Theft On Wyoming Reservation.

The AP (7/10) reports that “the U.S. Inspector General’s office says it found no evidence of theft of federal funds on Wyoming’s Wind River Indian Reservation.” But “the office noted in a report released last week that poorly maintained accounting records and long-time commingling of various federal program funds made it impossible to determine if any money had been stolen.” As a result, investigators were not able “to determine the status or disposition of various federal and tribal funds.”

Federal Agency Approves Swinomish Amendment Vote.

The Skagit Valley \(WA\) Herald (7/10, Stone) reports that the Bureau of Indian Affairs “approved the Swinomish Indian Tribal Community’s constitutional amendment vote and addressed the uncertainty some have felt regarding the tribe’s borders.” The tribe views “the amendments as a move toward self-determination, removing extensive oversight by the BIA over day-to-day activities.” In a letter to the tribe dated July 7, BIA Northwest Regional Director Stanley Speaks “said the approval should in no way be read as approving an expansion of the tribe’s reservation, something that local governments were concerned about.”

Trump Administration Sued For Delaying Obama-Era Greenhouse Gas Rule.

The Huffington Post (7/10, D'angelo) reports environmental organizations filed a lawsuit against the Trump Administration for delaying a regulation on the release of methane from drilling operations on federal and tribal land. Earthjustice said delaying compliance is harming the public by allowing excessive air pollution and reducing royalty payments states, tribes and local governments should be receiving. Earthjustice attorney Robin Cooley said, "Trump and his administration cannot blatantly ignore the law just to benefit polluters at the expense of everyone else. ... Compliance with public health rules cannot be indefinitely delayed while the Trump Administration and bad actors within the industry try to undo them." Earthjustice is joined by the Sierra Club, Fort Berthold Protectors of Water & Earth Rights, Natural Resource Defense Council and The Wilderness Society in challenging the Interior Department's delay.

Dominion Energy To Build 2 Wind Turbines Off Virginia Coast.

The AP (7/10) reports Dominion Energy Virginia on Monday announced that it will partner with DONG Energy to build two wind turbines approximately 27 miles off the coast of Virginia Beach. Engineering and development work is expected to begin immediately with a targeted installation date of 2020. Dominion Energy spokeswoman Le-Ha Anderson said the project will cost an estimated $300 million, while previous bids went as high as $400 million and were open ended.

The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/10, Zullo) reports the project was announced by Dominion Energy Chairman, President, and CEO Thomas F. Farrell II during a ceremony on Monday at the Portsmouth Marine Terminal. Farrell said, "We have been working on this for a long time and it has been far from easy," referring to the complexities and economics of offshore wind technology. The Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (7/10, Mayfield) further quotes Farrell as saying, "Virginia is now positioned to be a leader in developing more renewable energy thanks to the Commonwealth's committed leadership and DONG's unrivaled expertise in building offshore wind farms ... While we have faced many technological challenges and even more doubters as we advanced this project, we have been steadfast in our commitment to our customers and the communities we serve." The article mentions that Dominion Energy has previously taken steps towards offshore wind, but in May 2016 lost a Department of Energy grant for a test offshore wind development. At that time, Dominion Energy spokesman David Botkins said, "The wind is not out of the sails." Meanwhile, the Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (7/10, Ress) reports Farrell said the project could be a precursor to a 2,000-megawatt project.

The Southside Daily \(VA\) (7/10, Poulter) reports Gov. Terry McAuliffe said, "Today marks the first step in what I expect to be the deployment of hundreds of wind turbines off Virginia's coast that will further diversify our energy production portfolio, create thousands of jobs, and reduce carbon emissions in the Commonwealth."

R.I. Council: Block Island Wind Farm Not To Blame For Whale Death.

North American Windpower (7/10, Lillian) reports that "in response to the whale carcass recently discovered on a beach in Jamestown, R.I., and the suggestion by local newspapers that the death of the creature may have been caused by the Block Island Wind Farm, the state's Coastal Resources Management Council (CRMC) is claiming there is no scientific evidence to prove the theory." The CRMC "cites information from the U.S. Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM), which says there has been no scientific evidence collected to date of any whales being injured or stranded due to offshore wind activities." According to the council, "BOEM reportedly plans to continue to monitor and assess potential impacts related to the construction and operation of wind farms on marine life, specifically whales, through the Environmental Studies Program and data collected from lessees and state and federal partners."

The Escanaba \(MI\) Daily Press (7/10) reports that "U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and Department of Fisheries and Oceans Canada personnel will apply lampricides to Valentine and Squaw creeks in Delta County to kill sea lamprey larvae burrowed in the stream bottom."

It's Too Soon To Strip Grizzlies Of Federal Protection.

In an op-ed for the Missoulian \(MT\) (7/10, Santarsiere), Andrea Santarsiere, a lawyer with the Center for Biological Diversity, criticizes the decision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to strip Yellowstone grizzlies from "federal endangered species protections, turning over management to state governments eager to declare open season on these American icons." According to Santarsiere, "grizzlies have regained barely a foothold in the lower 48 states, so any delisting is premature and could undermine 40 years of complex work to recover the species."

Congress To Consider Addition To Fort Scott National Historic Site.

The Lawrence \(KS\) Journal World (7/10, Hancock) reports that "the U.S. House is expected to vote Tuesday night on a bill that would authorize the Fort Scott National Historic Site to officially acquire a Civil War-era blockhouse that has been in private hands since the end of that war." The structure is "known as the Lunette Blair or, more familiarly, the western blockhouse." According to park superintendent, Betty Boyko, "when the old fort was designated as a National Historic Site in 1978, the enacting legislation specifically prohibited the National Park Service from acquiring it."

Advocates Shoot For Moon In Fight To Make Paoli Battlefield National Landmark.

Philly \(PA\) (7/10, Bond) reports that “supporters have uncovered fresh evidence to buttress their case for making the Main Line site of a Revolutionary War battle a national landmark, but ironically, a major victory they won two decades ago might have slowed progress.” According to the article, “to spare the land from bulldozers, in 1999 the Paoli Battlefield Preservation Fund purchased the 40-acre tract, where British forces killed at least 53 Americans and wounded more than 150 in 1777, and secured a place on the National Register of Historic Places as a site of ‘local’ significance.” The article says that “with development pressures building, pursuing that designation saved valuable time as opposed to the more-prolonged process of proving ‘national’ significance.” However, “after advocates applied two years ago to make the battlefield a National Historic Landmark, they found they had to overcome the federal government’s skepticism about so knighting Paoli when two decades before supporters had argued for its ‘local’ importance.”

52 More Acres Of Shepherdstown Battlefield Land Preserved.

The Hagerstown \(MD\) Herald-Mail Media (7/10, Umstead) reports that “advocates of preserving a Civil War battlefield near Shepherdstown now have protected about 52 acres from development.” The Jefferson County (W.Va.) Historic Landmarks Commission “announced last week that it took title to 26 more acres of battlefield land through the assistance of the Civil War Trust, a nonprofit battlefield-preservation group.” Sens. Joe Manchin and Shelley Moore Capito “announced Friday that an award of $44,525.95 in federal funding will help preserving more than 14 of the 26 acres.” The senators “voiced strong support for preservation of the Shepherdstown battlefield in their joint announcement.”

Lawmakers Want To Question Donald Trump Jr. About Meeting With Russian Lawyer.

Donald Trump Jr.'s June 2016 meeting with Russian lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya is the subject of extensive media coverage, most of which is negative for the Administration, questioning whether the encounter is evidence the Trump campaign sought to work with Russia to damage Hillary Clinton's campaign. That question was underscored by a front-page New York Times (7/10, A1, Apuzzo, Becker, Goldman, Haberman) story which says Trump Jr. was informed by email before he arranged the meeting that the information Veselnitskaya would provide was part of an effort by the Russian government to aid the Trump campaign. The AP also says the email, from music publicist Rob Goldstone, "is likely to be of keen interest to the Justice Department and congressional investigators, who are examining whether any of President Trump's associates colluded with the Russian government to disrupt last year's election."

Many reports focus on comments from lawmakers of both parties who are calling for Trump Jr. to testify about the meeting, while others portray Trump Jr. and the White House as being on defense as they sought to downplay the significance of the story. Other reports question whether Trump Jr. could now be in legal jeopardy, and highlight that he has retained a criminal defense lawyer. The Washington Post (7/10, Helderman, Hamburger) reports that Goldstone confirmed Monday that he requested the meeting "at the request of Emin Agalarov, a Russian pop star" he represents. Agalarov's "Kremlin-connected family has done business with President Trump in the past." The Post adds that the involvement of the Agalarovs "brings the meeting closer to both Trump's past business interests and to the Kremlin." A separate story in the New York Times (7/10, Eder, Twohey) says that the Agalarovs "appear to have a good relationship with [Russian President Vladimir] Putin."

Kevin Corke said on Fox News' Special Report (7/10) that the story is "either the most direct suggestion between the Trump campaign and Russian officials, or its simply a matter of a meeting that was set up under false pretenses that had nothing to do with the campaign itself." Regardless, said CNN's Situation Room (7/10), the meeting is "certainly raising fresh questions whether Trump's associates actively tried to work with Russians to hurt Clinton's campaign."

The Washington Times (7/10, Boylan) reports that members from both sides of the aisle are "clamoring" for Trump Jr.'s testimony, while USA Today (7/10, Johnson) says that "congressional leaders on Monday vowed to question" him about the meeting. Sen. Mark Warner, ranking Democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee said the committee "absolutely" wants to speak with Trump Jr. about the meeting. Warner, who described the meeting as "very troubling," said, "This was the first time the public has seen direct evidence that Trump campaign officials reached out...to agents of a foreign government to try to get damaging information on Hillary Clinton. ... Rest assured that Donald Trump Jr. will be somebody we want to talk to."

The Hill (7/10, Easley) says Warner "vented frustration...with what he described as a 'pattern of convenient forgetfulness' by Trump campaign officials over undisclosed meetings with Russians." Warner told reporters, "What continues to bother me is this pattern, and I think we're up to 20-plus examples, of senior-level officials, and even you could argue the president himself, continues to deny they've had any contacts with Russians until the proof comes out that there were contacts, multiple contacts. ... And then senior officials recant or amend their filings...a rational person would ask, why didn't they remember these meetings? I think these meetings were pretty important." Mara Liasson made a similar argument on Fox News' Special Report (7/10), saying, "I don't understand why so many people in the Trump Administration keep on forgetting they met with the Russians. ... They all seem to forget that they met with the Russians or they don't disclose it when they are required to." Charles Krauthammer agreed, saying on Fox News' Special Report (7/10), "There is a sort of epidemic of amnesia having to do with Russians, which is remarkable. There were three people in the meeting and not one of them remembered until being reminded now."

Sen. Amy Klobuchar said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10) that "three top people surrounding the President at that time, his campaign chairman, his son, his son-in-law, went to a meeting with someone whose purpose was to give them dirt on Hillary Clinton. And so what concerns me is that this has reached the highest levels now, and that is why we have a special prosecutor." Klobuchar added that "we are getting very close to a serious, serious matter."

Sen. Chris Coons said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10), "For a group of folks that have nothing to hide about their interactions with Russia, they certainly seem to have been hiding a lot. The idea that these three individuals, the President's son, the President's son-in-law, and the President's campaign manager organized a meeting in order to get the fruits of cyber hacking into their opponent's campaign is strongly suggestive of potentially criminal activity and the idea that they failed to previously report this despite being required to do so suggests that there may well be some inappropriate action, some conspiracy, or some obstruction." Coons said on CNN's Situation Room (7/10) said the revelations about Trump Jr.'s meeting are "part of a disturbing pattern where the Trump Administration – and I'll remind you this includes Attorney General Jeff Sessions, former National Security Adviser Mike Flynn, and now the president's own son, son-in-law, and campaign manager all conveniently forgot meetings with senior Russian officials, or in this case, a representative claiming that could mean a lot to seek information about the Trump campaign."

Sen. Ben Cardin said on CNN's The Lead (7/10), "The meeting with this lawyer, at the time that they met in June just about when the nomination of Mr. Trump was being locked up, is extremely concerning."

Such expressions of concern were not limited to Democrats, however. Sen. Susan Collins called for the Intelligence Committee to interview Trump Jr. and others who participated in the meeting, Politico (7/10, Wright) reports. Sen. Pat Toomey was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10) if it is "appropriate for a presidential campaign to solicit or accept negative information about arrival from a Russian national." Toomey said, "No, that doesn't strike me as appropriate.... It encourages countries to come in and undermine our democratic process. And these countries have great capabilities to do that sort of thing. I don't think we want to have that happen." Asked about Trump Jr.'s meeting, Toomey said, "This is breaking news. I think this came out over the weekend. How many people were in this meeting? I think we're going to find out what happened in this meeting. We're going to learn a lot more about it and we should."

By contrast, Rep. Ted Yoho said on CNN's Situation Room (7/10) said he thinks he "probably would have done the same thing" as Trump Jr., adding, "I mean, it's opposition research. Anybody that's been in an election, you're always looking to get the upper hand."

Jonathan Karl said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/10, lead story, 3:10, Muir) that it is "commonplace for a campaign official to meet with somebody offering negative information about an opponent," but it is "highly unusual for that meeting to be with somebody lobbying on behalf of Russian interest." On the CBS Evening News (7/10, story 3, 3:40, Mason), Major Garrett said the reason the meeting is different from opposition research on political opponents is that "most of that is done inside the United States, not from a foreign agent or someone who might be representing a foreign government." In addition, "shortly after this June 9 meeting with Don, Jr. and others, hacked [DNC] emails began to appear, first from Guccifer 2.0 and then WikiLeaks, all adding speculation to what that meeting was about and what it might have led to."

CNN's Situation Room (7/10) reported that Trump Jr.'s story "has shifted over time." The Los Angeles Times (7/10, Cloud, Memoli) says the "shifting stories about Russia contacts have frustrated the president's attempts to move beyond questions about Russia and the election" and these "latest disclosures...provide potential new avenues" for special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. Politico (7/10, Nussbaum, Dawsey) cites "White House veterans" who "warn that such shifting statements could dangerously erode the White House's already diminished credibility."

The AP (7/10, Day, Moody) reports that while Trump Jr. "acknowledged Monday he made time for the meeting hoping to get information about Democrat Hillary Clinton," he also "tried to brush off the significance of the meeting, tweeting sarcastically, 'Obviously I'm the first person on a campaign to ever take a meeting to hear info about an opponent ... went nowhere but had to listen.'" Later Monday, attorney Alan Futerfas "said he had been retained to represent" Trump Jr., who "said on Twitter he was willing to work with the Senate intelligence committee, one of the panels probing possible campaign collusion, 'to pass on what I know.'" The New York Post (7/10, Fredericks) describes Futerfas as "a high-powered white collar crime criminal defense lawyer," and quotes the website SuperLawyer.com as saying he "regularly defends white-collar professionals including corporate officers, directors and hedge fund principals, often in highly charged investigative settings." Politico (7/10, McCaskill) reports that Futerfas said Monday that Trump Jr. "did nothing wrong" by taking the meeting, and "dismissed the report as 'much ado about nothing.'"

In its lead story, NBC Nightly News (7/10, lead story, 2:50, Welker) said Trump Jr. is "the fourth person in the President's inner circle to seek legal representation as investigators probe possible connections with Russia," while the CBS Evening News (7/10, story 2, 3:20, Pegues) said he is "the fourth Trump campaign associate to admit with previously undisclosed contacts with Russian nationals."

Politico (7/10, Samuelsohn) says Trump Jr. "is in a legal danger zone," adding that "his statements put him potentially in legal crosshairs for violating federal criminal statutes prohibiting solicitation or acceptance of anything of value from a foreign national, as well as a conspiracy to defraud the United States." Politico cites "legal experts of both political parties" who said Trump Jr.'s "explanations may not fly if he's questioned under oath by Congress or Robert Mueller." In an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/10), Randall D. Eliason, who teaches white-collar criminal law at George Washington University Law School, writes that prosecutors in Mueller's office "are no doubt extremely interested in what happened" in the meeting. Eliason adds that while Trump campaign officials' willingness "to entertain the idea of accepting help from Russian nationals in a US presidential election," is "far from proof of a criminal conspiracy." For "prosecutors trying to build that wall of circumstantial evidence, it provides a pretty solid foundation."

However, the Wall Street Journal (7/10, Gershman, Hong) cites election law experts who say it is unclear whether Trump Jr.'s meeting was in violation of the law. While election law bars foreign nations and foreign governments from contributing or donating money or "anything of value," and prohibits a campaign or members of a campaign from knowingly and willfully soliciting, accepting or receiving a donation or "thing of value" from a foreign national, prosecutions under the law have generally deal with cash donations and experts say it could be difficult to assign a value to a promise to provide damaging information about Clinton.

The Washington Post (7/10) argues in an editorial that while federal prosecutors will "determine whether federal conspiracy laws or election laws barring campaigns from soliciting help from foreigners have been implicated," the "plausibility of the Trump camp's narrative, in which any underhanded Russian assistance came without the campaign's witting participation, is eroding." Trump associates, the Post adds, "must now explain interactions with Russians that they previously insisted never took place." Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (7/10) column in March, Trump Jr. said "that he had had no meetings with Russians 'that were set up...and certainly none that I was representing the campaign in any way, shape or form.'" Robinson asks, "Do you find it remotely believable that he somehow forgot a meeting that he set up, between a party-line Russian lawyer and the campaign? Neither do I."

On CNN's The Lead (7/10), Jeff Zeleny described the White House as being "on the defensive...insisting President Trump didn't know about the session in Trump Tower that came only two weeks after he clinched the nomination." CNN (7/10, Merica) reported on its website that deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said that the President only learned of the meeting "in the last couple of days." Reuters (7/10) reports the White House argued that "there was nothing inappropriate" about the meeting, "adding it was short and produced 'absolutely no follow-up.'" The Wall Street Journal (7/10, Radnofsky, Ballhaus) says Sanders argued that the only thing inappropriate about the meeting was the fact that it was leaked that the meeting took place.

Conway Derides Claims Of Collusion As "Wishful Thinking." Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/10), "He goes into the meeting. He says it was vague. It was ambiguous. It was very obvious almost immediately that there was no helpful or meaningful information and that the meeting quickly turned over to the matter of Russian adoption, which is probably the pretext for the entire meeting from the very beginning." Conway added, "I think what's important here is that we're at day 200 or so of no evidence of Russian collusion. People think they want to convert wishful thinking into hard evidence."

Politico (7/10, McCaskill) says Conway "toured the morning shows Monday to defend Trump Jr.," including an appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America," and "an often combative interview with CNN's Chris Cuomo," in which she "accused the host of trying to convince his viewers that the meeting 'was imbued with some type of seriousness' because three principals were involved." Said Conway, "That just simply is not true. This was standard operating procedure for the campaign. ... Let's focus on what did not happen in that meeting. No information provided that was meaningful. No action taken. Nothing." Becket Adams writes in the Washington Examiner (7/10) that the "showdown" between Conway and Cuomo produced "no winners," as both Cuomo and Conway "were interested only in feeding red meat to their respective bases. Put more plainly, the interview was embarrassing for both parties. They didn't even try to give the appearance of wanting to have an honest and truthful discussion on some of the White House's more nagging problems."

The Hill (7/10, Easley, Fabian, Williams) says that "current and former White House advisers" said privately that "they're not remotely unnerved by the development, even as they cast Trump Jr. as a clumsy political operative prone to stumbling into controversy." Under a headline declaring the story "A Giant Red Herring," Breitbart (7/10, Pollak) says it is sufficient for the left "that a member of the Trump family met with someone from Russia. That is enough to revive the failing Russia conspiracy theory, lighting up social media and setting the mainstream news agenda for the week." Arguing that there is "still no evidence of any collusion between the Trump campaign and the Russian government," Breitbart says the story "is a giant red herring – one that will ultimately hurt the media's credibility and the Democrats' prospects."

Brit Hume said on Fox News' Special Report (7/10), "When you step back a little bit and look at it, it looks kind of like a farcical episode in which...Donald Trump, Jr. was conned into holding a meeting with this Russian lawyer who had a cause to promote. ... To get him to have such a meeting, she hinted or indicated that she had some information on Hillary Clinton, possibly involving Hillary Clinton campaign connections to the Russians that she wanted to spill. They get in the meeting and she didn't have any information. ... The whole thing has the element of a farce." Hume added, "This meeting seems to be eminently forgettable, almost laughable."

Veselnitskaya Lobbied Against Magnitsky Act. The Washington Times (7/10, Noble) reports that Veselnitskaya "has drawn the attention of US investigators before – after she lobbied against a US law despised by Vladimir Putin and made a questionable reimbursement request to federal prosecutors." Veselnitskaya, a Moscow-based lawyer, "has represented state-owned Russian businesses and the son of a senior Russian rail official, whose company was among those accused by the Justice Department of laundering $230 million in fraudulently obtained tax refunds from the Russian government." In addition, she "has played a significant role in a Russian public relations offensive against the Magnitsky Act, named for Sergei Magnitsky, a lawyer who was arrested and died in a Russian prison after he discovered massive fraud by corrupt Russian officials." The law "lets US officials withhold visas and freeze financial assets of Russians suspected of human rights abuses."

The New York Times (7/10, Taub) reports that while Trump Jr. "initially defended" the meeting "by saying that it was primarily about adoption — a seemingly innocent humanitarian issue," whether he "and his associates knew it at the time or not, the issues of adoptions and sanctions are so inextricably linked as to be practically synonymous." The connection between the two issues "comes down to one word: leverage." Revoking the Magnitsky Act "became an important foreign policy priority for Mr. Putin's government" and Putin "identified adoptions as an area that seemed to offer a way to force the issue" because in the year before its passage, "about 1,000 Russian children were adopted by American families," and many more "were still pending, some for American parents who had already met the children they expected to take home. An adoption freeze would be a grievous loss for those families."

White House Criticizes Russia Sanctions Bill Now Stalled In The House.

The AP (7/10, Lardner) reports that new economic sanctions on Russia and Iran "are missing from the list of bills the House is scheduled to vote on this week," and Democrats and Republicans are blaming each other "for stalling passage of the popular measure." The AP notes that "it's been nearly a month since the Senate overwhelmingly backed the bill 98-2 and swift passage in the House had seemed likely." Reuters (7/10) reports Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Bob Corker said Monday that if the House does not pass the bill, "it is because members do not want to impose new sanctions, not because of a procedural issue." Wolf Blitzer reported on CNN's Situation Room (7/10) that Corker also "said the White House does not understand this bill if that's what they contend." Corker added that "the White House almost certainly will be overridden if...the President does veto this bill."

Another AP (7/10, Lardner) report says the White House on Monday said the bill "unacceptably constrains the President's authority." White House legislative director Marc Short told reporters that the Administration "backs the new sanctions on Russia and Iran," but "appeared to object to a key part of the legislation that would give Capitol Hill a much stronger hand in determining Russia sanctions policy." Said Short, "Our concern is that the legislation, we believe, sets an unusual precedent of delegating foreign policy to 535 members of Congress by not including certain national security waivers that have always been consistently part of sanctions bills in the past."

Rep. Ted Yoho said on CNN's Situation Room (7/10) that he "absolutely" supports the latest Russia sanctions bill. He said that if the legislation is in place, "I think it's a safeguard for our country's national security."

A Wall Street Journal (7/10) editorial says the Senate bill contains a provision that expands restrictions on how US energy firms can interact with Russian counterparts, and calls on the House to fix it.

White House: Trump Did Discuss Sanctions With Putin. The Los Angeles Times (7/10, Memoli) reports that the White House on Monday said President Trump's conversation with Russian President Vladimir Putin last week "did include discussion of sanctions applied by the Obama administration in response to the election meddling." Deputy White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders' statement, however, "seemed to contradict the President's own assertion on Twitter a day earlier." A "White House official," however, "insisted the two statements were not in conflict because Trump did not raise separate sanctions related to Russia's incursions into Ukraine."

USA Today (7/10, Jackson) similarly says that while the President "says he didn't talk about sanctions" during his meeting with Putin, "at least two administration officials have since contradicted him." Asked about the contradictions, Sanders said her understanding is that "the president's tweet was referencing sanctions regarding Ukraine and Syria."

Sen. Pat Toomey said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10) that the President's meeting with Putin "was a big disappointment. ... The biggest concern is Vladimir Putin needed to come away from that meeting understanding that he's going to have to pay a price for his aggression in Crimea, for his aggression in Ukraine, for his aggression in the American elections and that there is a President who let him know squarely, you're going to pay a price. ... And until your behavior changes, these things don't get reversed. That should have been the message."

Sen. Amy Klobuchar said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10), "We have always believed that you have to continue to meet with Russia and talk to Russia. That's not the issue. The issue here is that Vladimir Putin listens to power. And when the President comes in with mixed signals saying he wasn't sure, other countries have also done this, that's not the kind of message that we want to send to someone like Vladimir Putin."

Asked on CNN's Situation Room (7/10) about Trump's claim that he "strongly pressed" Putin on Russia's meddling during their meeting, Coons said "the Trump camp has a longstanding reputation of not standing up to President Putin," and Trump "would have been far more forceful" if Trump had signed into law the Russia sanctions bill that passed in the Senate 98-2 and then presented it to Putin at the meeting. Coons said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/10), "Trump stepped up to the plate and whiffed. The idea that we're going to simply agree to disagree and move on, I think, steps aside from confronting the very real challenge, which is that Vladimir Putin and his Russian intelligence agencies fully intend to interfere in our next election in 2018 and 2020." Coons added, "Imagine how much stronger that confrontation would have been if President Trump had presented Putin with a signed law that imposed tougher sanctions on Russia for their inappropriate and unacceptable interference in our election."

Siemens Says Russian Partner Violated Crimea Sanctions. The New York Times (7/10, Ewing, Kramer) reports Munich-based Siemens said Monday that it had become "an unwilling pawn in a scheme to evade sanctions against Russia and break a de facto blockade of electricity to the annexed territory Crimea." Siemens "said a Russian customer had illegally shipped two power plant turbines to Crimea instead of their intended destination in southern Russia." The Times says the incident "threatens to strain relations between the countries."

Trump Accuses Comey Of Illegally Leaking Classified Information.

Coverage and commentary on a Monday tweet from the President, in which he accused former FBI Director Comey of leaking classified information, is largely unfavorable toward Trump. The President wrote, "James Comey leaked CLASSIFIED INFORMATION to the media. That is so illegal!" Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway argued on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/10), "This is just a stunning story that really should be the news of the day so thanks for covering it." Under oath, Comey "said that these were his personal recollections. He said as a private citizen he really had to get this information out. So the Boy Scout choir boy defense doesn't hold up here. Because if it contains classified information, he is apparently violating at the very least what all members of the FBI sign." However, a number of reports – including several from left-leaning outlets – say Trump based the accusation on a story from Fox News' "Fox & Friends" which in turn mischaracterized a report in The Hill that said Comey's private memos about his meetings with Trump contained classified information.

The New York Daily News (7/10, Joseph) reports Trump's tweet accusing Comey followed an earlier one in which he "retweet[ed] his favorite morning echo chamber, Fox & Friends, which in turn was discussing (and misrepresenting)" The Hill report. While the Fox & Friends tweet claimed, "Report accuses material James Comey leaked to a friend contained top secret information," that "wasn't what The Hill's report said. Rather, it said that some of Comey's memos of his private meetings with Trump contained classified information – not that the one he leaked to a friend did."

The Washington Examiner (7/10, Shepherd) reports that Columbia University professor Daniel Richman, on whom Comey relied "to leak his memos to the press just after he was fired is disputing" The Hill report, calling it "a non-story." Richman told Fox News, "No memos were given to the press, and no memos were classified at the time I received them." NBC News (7/10, Dilanian) report on its website that according to Richman, "three of the memos were classified from the beginning, and were never shared with" him. Of the four remaining memos, "a small portion — much less than half — has been retroactively deemed classified, said a Congressional source familiar with the matter." Richman told NBC "that to his knowledge, nothing in the one memo that he described to reporters was or has been deemed classified."

Steve Benen, producer of The Rachel Maddow Show, writes on the MSNBC (7/10) website that Trump "took his contempt for Comey in a new direction," accusing him "of breaking the law by leaking classified information to the news media," but according to Richman, "that isn't true." According to The Hill, "some of the memos Comey wrote about his interactions included classified information. And while it's true that Comey ultimately shared one of his memos with his friend, Daniel Richman, that memo wasn't one of the classified ones." In a piece for National Review (7/10), Andrew C. McCarthy calls Trump's tweet "intemperate." The Hill report, he adds, "is based on leaks (which, I'd note, the president is not complaining about this time). The government has not taken a formal public position on the memos yet." Moreover, "if we assume the report is accurate (as I am inclined to do), it indicates that at least four of the seven memos contain classified information — not that all of them do."

Roll Call (7/10, Bennett) says that while The Hill's story "does not allege that the leaked document contained classified information," it "does suggest the former FBI chief broke his agency's own rules by not seeking permission before releasing information about ongoing investigations, as well as by telling lawmakers he considered his memos personal property." Eric Levitz writes in the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (7/10) that if the account in The Hill is true, "it would be fair to say that Comey was bizarrely sloppy in how he chose to go public." However, it is "difficult to see how the former FBI director's flouting of bureaucratic protocol is anywhere near as concerning as the president's concerted efforts to compromise the independence of federal law enforcement."

Under the headline, "Trump Accuses James Comey Of Breaking The Law – Based On A Misleading Fox News Report," Philip Bump writes in the Washington Post (7/10) that it is "obvious why Trump's team embraced this idea that Comey had leaked classified information to his friend: It reinforces the president's prior arguments that the man he fired was the real villain in their interactions." Bump argues that that this "is not the first time that Trump has seen a misleading bit of information on 'Fox and Friends' and made the problem worse," adding that it "appears that the opportunity to hammer his political opponents is often too urgent in his mind to ensure that he's doing so accurately." In a blog post for the Washington Post (7/10), Erik Wemple writes that Trump's "already well established" reliance on Fox & Friends "took on a bit more menace" with the Comey tweet. Wemple argues, "We've already seen the damage that can be done by Fox News in the Trump era. ... Left to its own devices, 'Fox & Friends' could do far more damage, unless it's killed."

Vanity Fair (7/10, Tracy) says Fox & Friends "mischaracterized" The Hill report, "leading Trump" to post the tweet. Vanity Fair adds that Benjamin Wittes, the editor of Lawfare "and a longtime friend of the former FBI. director, suggested that Trump may have defamed Comey," writing in a series of tweets, "If the tweet is false, it is also libelous. [Trump] usually stops short of libeling named individuals in his tweets. Not this time." However, Wittes also "not[ed] that Trump could claim immunity." Jarrett: Mueller Unlikely To Investigate, Prosecute Comey. In an op-ed on the Fox News (7/10) website, Fox News anchor Gregg Jarrett questions whether Comey will "escape prosecution, courtesy of his good friend, Robert Mueller." Jarrett argues that if Comey kept the four memos that, according to The Hill, "have been determined to contain classified information," in his personal possession, "it would appear that he committed multiple felonies under the Espionage Act." However, Jarrett adds that it is "doubtful" that Mueller will "investigate and, if warranted, prosecute his protégé."

Sanders Highlights DNC Coordination With Ukrainian Embassy. The Washington Times (7/10, Miller) reports that the White House argued Monday that "the real collusion with a foreign power during the campaign was between the Democratic National Committee and Ukraine." Deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters, "If you are looking for an example of a campaign coordinating with foreign country or a foreign source, look no further than the DNC which actually coordinated opposition research with the Ukrainian embassy." Citing "DNC operatives [work] with officials at the Ukraine embassy in an effort to spread dirt on Donald Trump during the campaign," Sanders said, "This is not an accusation. That is an on-the-record action that they took. ... No one in this room to my knowledge really had a problem with that."

Klobuchar Repeats Incorrect Claim 17 Agencies Have Agreed About Russian Meddling. The

Washington Times (7/10, Persons) reports that in an appearance on MSNBC Monday, Sen. Amy Klobuchar “reiterated the incorrect statistic...that 17 intelligence agencies all agreed Russia was the sole actor in hacking the 2016 elections.” Klobuchar said, “You’re saying 17 intelligence agencies have firmly established that Russia has been trying to hack us. We know they’ve been hacking on the private side as well. That’s why Congress, on a vote of 97-2 in the US senate, we put forward stronger sanctions.” The New York Times last week “issued a correction regarding the statistic saying Mr. Trump was correct that only four offices have determined Russia interfered, including the Central Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency, the FBI and the Director of National Intelligence Office.”

WSJournal Analysis: Bipartisan Reports On Russia Investigation Will Be Difficult. A Wall Street Journal (7/10, Tau) analysis says that while the Republican and Democratic leaders of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees have promised to produce one final report – rather than separate ones from Republican and Democratic members – on the findings of their investigation in to Russian interference in the 2-16 election, recent history indicates that a bipartisan conclusion will be difficult to reach. Nonetheless, lawmakers argue that interference by a foreign nation in US elections requires a unified response to ensure continued public faith in the democratic system.

Trump Calls For “Beautiful” Healthcare Bill As Senate GOP Struggles For Consensus Measure.

Coverage of the internal Republican healthcare debate contrasts President Trump’s call for a new bill before the August recess with the difficulties the Senate leadership is having in assembling a measure acceptable to at least 50 senators. On ABC World News Tonight (7/10, story 2, 2:20), David Muir said that Senate Republicans “can only afford to lose two Republicans,” and “the list is growing.” ABC’s Mary Bruce: “Senate Republicans today received a bruising welcome back to Capitol Hill: protesters taking over offices, blocking hallways, then hauled off and arrested. ... The GOP bill is on life support. ... At least 10 Republican senators are now a ‘no.’” Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (7/10, story 2, 2:20) that Republicans “remain sharply divided,” with “moderates and conservatives still fighting over how far to go in repealing and replacing” the Affordable Care Act. President Trump “tried to turn up the heat” on Monday. The CBS Evening News (7/10, story 4, 0:20, Mason) ran a brief 20-second update on the GOP efforts.

Politico (7/10, Tamborrino) reports that the President tweeted Monday morning, “I cannot imagine that Congress would dare to leave Washington without a beautiful new HealthCare bill fully approved and ready to go!” The New York Post (7/10, Morrongiello) reports that Senate Majority Whip Cornyn said a new bill will be unveiled this week. USA Today (7/10, Collins) reports that Cornyn is “bullish on the chances of a vote next week,” even though the leadership is “nowhere near having enough votes” to pass a measure. Reuters (7/10, Becker) says the Senate “remained sharply divided over how to keep down the costs” of the measure while still preventing “millions from losing coverage.”

The AP (7/10, Werner, Fram) reports, “Republican divisions over health care multiplied” Monday as the President “pressured GOP senators to act quickly,” and Vice President Pence “suggested they might have to revert to a straightforward ‘Obamacare’ repeal if they can’t agree on an alternative.” Pence said on Rush Limbaugh’s radio show, “The President’s made it very clear. We believe if they can’t pass this carefully crafted repeal and replace bill, do those two things simultaneously, we ought to just repeal only.”

Bloomberg News (7/10, Litvan) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell “has made little progress on winning over his party’s holdouts,” and he “has little time to make a deal. Republican leaders have said they need to move on to other issues, including a tax-code overhaul and next year’s spending bills, if they can’t agree on a health bill before a month-long August break.” Sen. Bill Cassidy said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/10), “The bill that was in draft form that Mitch McConnell first presented, 10 senators have come out against. He is trying to rework to get something that works that will pass, but the original version, 10 folks opposing, it’s not going to pass.”

Margot Sanger-Katz writes in the New York Times (7/10) “The Upshot” that Republicans “really do need to decide in the next few weeks whether their legislative effort will succeed or go back on the shelf,” both for political reasons and because the use of the reconciliation process impedes action on other priorities. Breitbart (7/10, Boyle) reports that Republican National Committee Chairwoman Ronna Romney McDaniel said in a statement that the recess should be cancelled if healthcare cannot be dealt with by the end of July.

The Washington Post (7/10, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) more optimistically writes that “while the prospect of a compromise between the two parties on overhauling the Affordable Care Act may prove daunting...the ongoing conversations among a handful of senators suggests some lawmakers are seeking a new path forward should the current bill collapse." Sen. Thomas Carper said that he called "'a couple dozen' Republican and Democratic senators and governors over the recess to say 'this is a good time for us to hit the pause button in the Senate, and step back and have some good heart-to-heart conversations'" about how to revise the ACA.

Flake Backs Cruz Amendment. The Arizona Republic (7/11, Nowicki) reports that Sen. Jeff Flake, "under intense pressure to oppose" the healthcare bill, has "signaled a right turn, saying he supports the more conservative 'Consumer Freedom Option' proposed by Sen. Ted Cruz." Politico reporter Seung Min Kim tweeted that Flake said he backed the Cruz amendment, and Flake's spokesman confirmed the exchange "but otherwise did not elaborate on Flake's position or thinking." The Hill (7/10, Sullivan) reports that the Cruz proposal is currently being analyzed by the Congressional Budget Office, and Sen. John Thune, who is third in the leadership, said the CBO score will determine whether the leadership will back the plan.

Toomey, Lawrence: GOP Bill Protects Medicaid. Sen. Pat Toomey and economist Lawrence Lindsey write in a USA Today (7/10) op-ed that the current Senate bill protects Medicaid but brings its cost – now "10% of the federal budget and growing" – in check. They write, "Under current policy, mathematical disaster is inevitable." With the Senate's "modest change, Medicaid can be available for future generations. Without it, it cannot be."

Kaine: Bill Would Undermine Medicaid. The Washington Post (7/10, Olivo) reports that Sen. Tim Kaine criticized the GOP bill's impact on Medicaid in a speech at Northern Virginia Community College on Monday. The 2016 Democratic vice presidential nominee said, "It's important that we share stories about what Medicaid really does. For many, Medicaid is about enabling them to live more independently, enabling them to be more successful in school."

NYTimes Analysis: GOP Secrecy Tops That Of Democrats In 2009. The New York Times (7/10, Carlsen, Park) contrasts GOP secrecy in crafting the current measure with how Democrats crafted the ACA in 2009, writing that while McConnell said then "that the Affordable Care Act was 'being written behind closed doors, without input from anyone,'" the GOP has had "just nine days of public activity on the repeal bill, compared with 43 for the Affordable Care Act during the same six-month period." McConnell also crafted the GOP bill mostly on his own, with even members of his working group saying they did not see the bill before its release.

Meadows: Conservatives Will Block Any Spending Bill That Excludes Border Wall Funding.

Breitbart (7/10, Boyle) reports that House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows (R-NC) told Breitbart News in a phone interview on Monday morning that "without a doubt" House conservatives will stop any spending bill that does not include border wall funding and that "there is nothing more critical that has to be funded." Meadows said the President could veto a spending bill that doesn't include the funding and added, "My conversations with the president have led me to believe that there is nothing less than a full and total commitment on his part to only sign into law a funding bill that actually allows for us to start construction of a border wall on our southern border." Breitbart reports that current government funding expires at the end of September and that Meadows suggests a government shutdown is possible should border wall funding fail to pass.

Brooks Says "Moderate Republican Big Business" Obstructing Trump's Border Wall. The Hill (7/10, Shelbourne) reported that Rep. Mo Brooks (R-AL), who is running in the Senate special election for the seat currently held by appointed Sen. Luther Strange (R-AL), on Monday "blamed entrenched Washington special interests" for delaying "the construction of President Trump's promised wall on the border with Mexico. In a fundraising email, Brooks said that moderate Democrats and 'Republican big business' interests" are attempting to wait out "Trump's time in office with an eye towards passing immigration amnesty in the future. 'The Wall is being held up because of a tacit deal that has existed for years between moderate Republican big business and Democratic Party,'" Brooks wrote. "The businesses, according to Brooks, get cheap labor out of the deal."

Short Says Tax Overhaul Plan To Come Before Recess, Contradicting Mnuchin.

Bloomberg News (7/10, Kapur) reports that White House legislative director Marc Short said Monday that Administration officials "hope to have a unified plan for overhauling the US tax code in place before Congress leaves Washington in August for a month-long recess," which "seemed to accelerate a schedule laid out" by other officials including Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, who said Sunday that the goal was to release the plan "'in the beginning of September' and pass it

'before the end of this year.'

Europe Forging Ahead On Climate Agenda Without US.

NBC News (7/10) reports Europe is pressing ahead on efforts to combat climate change without the aid of the US after President Trump withdrew from the Paris Climate Accords. The US was the only G20 country not to reaffirm support for the agreement, instead French President Emmanuel Macron took the lead, announcing plans for an international climate summit in December.

Germany To Hold Talks With Turkey On Paris Climate Accord. The AP (7/10) reports the German government is planning to hold talks with Turkey next month on the ratification of the Paris Climate Accord. While President Erdogan reaffirmed commitment to the agreement, he said Ankara would not ratify it "as long as promises that were made to us aren't kept." Erdogan said former French President Francois Hollande promised Turkey would not be treated as an industrialized country. German Environment Ministry spokesman Stephan Gabriel Haufe said Turkey will try to secure funds from the Green Climate Funds, which helps developing countries reduce emissions and adapt to climate change.

Climate Change Affecting All Industries.

As part of its "Future Now" coverage, BBC News \(UK\) (7/5, Ruggeri) reports on how climate change is "shaking up everything from finance to health." It is difficult to estimate how dramatic the effects of climate change will be, but "climate-related disasters like droughts and hurricanes, for example, are hitting pocketbooks and insurance premiums." Daniel Kreeger, executive director of the nonprofit Association of Climate Change Officers, warns that few companies are training employees "in incorporating climate patterns in their planning for the future." Kreeger says, for example, civil engineers have not been trained to deal with "monster inundations of rain, and then drought for six months." According to job listings search engine Indeed, there has a notable increase in job postings in the UK's renewable energy sector in the past few years, eventually eclipsing 50 percent of all energy sector job postings this year.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Culture Of Dishonesty." The New York Times (7/11, Board) says President Trump's "shifty statements" about Donald Trump Jr.'s meeting "with Natalia Veselnitskaya, a Kremlin-connected Russian lawyer who promised to share political dirt on Hillary Clinton," indicate "how freely" the President "and the people around the president contort the truth." The Times accuses Trump of having "compiled a record of dishonesty – ranging from casual misstatements to flat-out lies – without precedent in the modern presidency," and adds, "Equally disheartening is his team's willingness to share in his mendacity." The Times posits, "If a culture of dishonesty takes root in an administration, how can Americans believe anything its officials say?"

"Hong Kong's Future In Doubt." A New York Times (7/11, Board) editorial says "after 20 years as a semiautonomous Chinese city, there are more reasons than ever to worry whether" Hong Kong will "retain the special character that has been central to its" economic and democratic successes. The Times outlines how Chinese President Xi Jinping has worsened the situation for Hong Kong, resulting in "a cruel fate for a city with a storied past, especially since Britain and the United States guaranteed that its freedoms would be preserved." Because Britain and the US "have not made Hong Kong enough of a priority in recent years," the Times argues, China has "grown more economically and militarily powerful, more committed to repressive ways and less tolerant of places like Hong Kong that aim to set their own path."

"Spyware That Governments Can't Resist." In an editorial, the New York Times (7/11, Board) says "the shocking addendum that an international team charged with investigating the disappearance of 43 students in Mexico was also being watched" by Mexico's government through smartphone software raises questions about the government's abuse of "highly sophisticated and expensive cyberwarfare technology," and "whether commercial vendors of mass surveillance tools, however well intentioned, can really control what they are used for." The Times says the incident reveals that the "temptation for governments to misuse" potentially dangerous technologies "is intense, and the proscriptions of manufacturers like the NSO Group are obviously insufficient."

Washington Post.

“The Trump Campaign’s Attempted Collusion.” The Washington Post (7/10) argues in an editorial that while federal prosecutors will “determine whether federal conspiracy laws or election laws barring campaigns from soliciting help from foreigners have been implicated,” by Donald Trump Jr.’s meeting with a Russian lawyer, the “plausibility of the Trump camp’s narrative, in which any underhanded Russian assistance came without the campaign’s witting participation, is eroding.” Trump associates, the Post adds, “must now explain interactions with Russians that they previously insisted never took place.”

“A New Report Shows Just How Far DC Has Come In Fighting HIV/AIDS.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/10) writes that DC health officials’ Annual Epidemiology and Surveillance Report showed the number of newly diagnosed HIV cases “decreasing to 347 in 2016,” down from 720 cases in 2011 and 1,333 cases in 2007. Currently, 12,964 DC residents live with HIV, representing 1.9 percent of the population and “a dramatic improvement over the 3 percent of the population that was reported for 2008.” Although local leaders such as Mayor Muriel Bowser emphasize that more still needs to be done to combat the city’s HIV problem – according to the CDC “an American has a 1-in-99 chance of being diagnosed with HIV at some point in his or her life, but in the District the odds are 1 in 13” – the Post calls the new numbers “encouraging signs that the city is serious when it says it aims to end the HIV epidemic by 2020.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Running The Schumer Blockade.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/10) writes that Republican Senators need to change Senate rules to allow them to bypass what it calls a near total Democrat obstruction of the Trump Administration’s nominees, of whom only 46 out of 178 nominated appointees had been confirmed by the Senate as of June 28. The Journal argues that Senate Democrats have used several Senate rules to their advantage, such as pressing for cloture filings for every nominee, meaning a two-day waiting period and then another 30 hours of debate for each nominee, and that Senate Republicans should unilaterally alter Senate rules to their favor, such as limiting post-cloture debate to eight hours, a move that has been proposed by Sen. James Lankford.

“A Russia Sanctions Trap.” A Wall Street Journal (7/10) editorial says the Senate Russia sanctions bill contains a provision that expands restrictions on how US energy firms can interact with Russian counterparts, and calls on the House to fix it.

“Venezuela’s Symbol Of Hope.” A Wall Street Journal (7/10) editorial calls the release of Venezuelan opposition leader Leopoldo López to house arrest a victory and symbol of hope for the nation’s protesting opposition activists. The Journal concedes the international attention that Lopez’s case attained contributed in part to his release, but adds that the US and other Latin American nations can still do more to pressure President Nicolás Maduro and prevent the nation from sliding deeper into its crisis.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “At one point, Ivanka stepped in for Donald Trump [at the G20 meeting]. ... and of course Twitter went nuts. Of course, that’s the only thing he reads, so he got very defensive, and he wrote this morning, ‘If Chelsea Clinton held the seat for her mother, the fake news would say "Chelsea for prez,"" which is stupid because if Hillary Clinton was President, she wouldn't let anyone sit in that seat."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The bigly event this weekend, Donald Trump finally met his BFF, Russian President Vladimir Putin. They never met before and couldn't take their beautiful blue eyes off each other."

Jimmy Kimmel: "During the chat, Trump and Putin talked about teaming up for security units to stop hacking in future elections. It's a great idea. They already know our passwords, so why not? It's like hiring the guy who stole your car stereo to put it back in. It makes sense."

Jimmy Kimmel: "So Donald Trump Jr. recruited his brother-in-law and chairman of the campaign to meet with a complete stranger to get damaging information on Hillary Clinton. He said, instead, he got information about Russian adoptions. That makes sense. That's like telling the judge, 'I tried to rob the bank, but then I forgot they weren't open on Sunday, so I didn't rob the bank.' It's all very fishy."

Stephen Colbert: "I did not watch a lot of news over the Fourth of July week because I like to celebrate my love for this country by not watching what's happening to it."

Stephen Colbert: "The meeting took place at Trump Tower and included Jared Kushner, and then-Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort. And proves that at least some in the campaign were willing to accept Russian help. So it's not a smoking gun, but it is a gun meeting with a Russian bullet about their mutual desire to smoke."

Stephen Colbert: "Don Jr. has a good explanation. 'It was a short introductory meeting. I asked Jared and Paul to stop by. We primarily discussed a program about the adoption of Russian children.' Yes, I think they were talking about the adoption of little Timmy Kislyak."

Stephen Colbert: "Now, remember, Don Jr. was there to receive damaging information about Hillary Clinton, but he was disappointed by Natalia Veselnitskaya, saying her statements were vague, ambiguous, and made no sense. So, obviously, she was hired as a Trump speechwriter."

Stephen Colbert: "In fact, the White House was so unprepared [for the G20 summit] they waited too long to book accommodations, leaving him with no hotel room for the G20. Oh, Mr. Hotel-man without a hotel! How ironic! Just go to Airbnb! Almost like Mr. Billionaire repeatedly declaring bankruptcy. The city of Hamburg stepped up and graciously let Trump stay in its senate guesthouse because, unlike Trump, Germany is sympathetic to foreigners without a place to stay."

Stephen Colbert: "Of course, the most anticipated moment was President Trump's face-to-face meeting with Vladimir Putin. I think it was Trump's six-month performance review."

Stephen Colbert: "They hit it off. Evidently, [Trump and Putin] got along like a house on fire because it was supposed to be a half-hour meeting and turned into two hours and 15 minutes. It's like a date you expect to be awkward, then discover you have so much in common. 'Wait, you wanted me to be President, too? That's incredible!'"

Trevor Noah: "Yes, on his first talk in Europe, Donald Trump flawlessly delivered Steve Bannon's ideas, urging the West to band together defending itself against the invasion of the values of the people who don't really need the sunscreen. You know who I'm talking about."

Trevor Noah: "You know what Donald Trump did here was basically like someone going, 'Hey, guys, this is Joey. Joey stole my wallet and phone last week, so we're teaming up to stop muggings in the neighborhood. Isn't that right, Joey?' 'Whatever, man.' 'Yea, team!'"

Trevor Noah: "Now, back in Washington, President Trump immediately took a lot of heat from members of both parties for how easygoing he was with his BFF Putin, which is probably why Trump backed away from the cyber security proposal later that day. But you can understand why Trump was looking for a friend at the G20 because he sure didn't have any others there."

Trevor Noah: "The G20 voted 19-1 against the United States to keep fighting climate change. So I guess, in a way, Donald Trump got his answer because remember at the top of the trip, Donald Trump asked if the West has the will to survive, and they said, 'Yes, we do, which is why we're joining the rest of the world and standing up to you.'"

Conan O'Brien: "At this weekend's G20 summit, President Trump and Vladimir Putin had a private 2.5-hour meeting. Probably not a good sign that it ended with Putin handing Trump a single red rose."

Conan O'Brien: "On Saturday, President Trump had back-to-back meetings with the leaders of China and then Japan. There was an awkward moment when Trump asked the leader of Japan, 'Hey, didn't I just meet with you?'"

Made In America: Promoting The All-American Outdoor Experience.

In an op-ed for Fox News (7/17, Zinke), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke writes that for "Made in America Week," the Interior Department is "taking this opportunity to promote and strengthen America's tradition of outdoor recreation on public lands." Zinke says that "to highlight and expand on Made in America partnerships and products, this week Interior is hosting a roundtable with outdoor recreation industry leaders to brainstorm innovative ideas for how we can work together to build upon the outdoor experience on public lands." Zinke argues that "expanding partnerships will allow parks and public lands to deliver better services to more visitors, while allowing our rangers to focus on things like the health of the ecosystem, guided tours, educational services, and land management."

Secretary Zinke Hosts Outdoor Industry Event. Power Sports Business (7/17) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "members of Congress and senior members of the outdoor recreation industry will meet at the U.S. Department of the Interior July 18 for a discussion about using public-private partnerships to improve visitor experiences on public lands and waters and help reduce the Department's maintenance backlog." Following the meeting, Zinke will "lead the group outside to a showcase of American-made outdoor recreation equipment including boats, RVs, off-road vehicles and more."

Interior Secretary Ponders Fate Of Nat'l Monument In Oregon.

The AP (7/17, Selsky) reports that "after touring the 'unique' Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in Oregon and speaking to ranchers, loggers and environmentalists, U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke must next make a recommendation on whether it should be abolished or resized." According to the article, "it's going to require a lot of study, Zinke indicated, given that the monument was created – and expanded by former President Barack Obama – to protect biodiversity in an area where three mountain ranges converge, creating diverse habitats for species that would normally be living apart.” Zinke “said he wants to find out how the boundaries of the 112,000-acre (45,730-hectare) monument were made, explaining that it relates to the language of the Antiquities Act of 1906.” He “said he also wants to protect local traditions and ‘make sure the monument doesn’t have unintended consequences.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/17, Selsky), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/17, Selsky), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/17, Selsky), and KATU-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (7/17, Selsky).

Klamath Tribes Meet With Interior’s Zinke. The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (7/18, Dillemath) reports that “Klamath Tribes Chairman Don Gentry and a Klamath Tribes delegation voiced support for the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument expansion – among other topics – during their first meeting with U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke in Medford Sunday.” According to the article, “during an hour-long meeting at Medford’s Bureau of Land Management office, Gentry also invited Zinke to visit the Tribes homeland in the Klamath Basin, and requested action on the termination of Upper Klamath Basin Comprehensive Agreement.” Discussions “continued Monday with U.S. Bureau of Reclamation’s Deputy Commissioner Alan Mikkelsen, who met with Gentry and other local officials.”

Congress Should Be Part Of National Monument Selection. The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (7/17) editorializes that the debate over national monuments “could have been avoided if creating, or in this case, expanding, national monuments were not the sole prerogative of the president but had to be approved by Congress.” According to the paper, the legislative process would “serve to assure that public policy is not jerked from one extreme to the other. And it works to build consensus on what should be done with public lands, something that’s sorely missing in the case of the Cascade-Siskiyou.”

Week Ahead: House Panel Taking Up EPA, Interior Spending Bill.

The Hill (7/17, Henry) reports that “lawmakers will mark up the $31.4 billion spending bill for the Interior Department and Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) next week, the bill’s next step on its way to the House floor.” The House bill “cuts Interior Department spending by about 7 percent, lower than the 10.9 percent cut for which Trump was aiming.” Republicans are “likely to support the funding bill when it goes before the full Appropriations Committee on Tuesday.” However, Democrats “have indicated their opposition to the package, with Rep. Betty McCollum (D-Minn.), the ranking member on the Interior, EPA subpanel, saying the bill’s funding levels are ‘too low’ and ‘a step in the wrong direction.’”

E&E Publishing (7/17) reports that “for Interior, the bill would provide $11.9 billion.” The article notes that “that’s slightly more than the $11.7 billion the White House requested but less than the $12.3 billion Congress appropriated in the fiscal 2017 omnibus.”

Senate Moves Closer To Confirming Interior Deputy.

The Hill (7/17, Cama) reports that the Senate is “one step closer to a vote to confirm David Bernhardt to be deputy secretary of the Interior.” Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell “filed cloture on the nomination on Monday, putting the chamber on a path toward a likely procedural vote on Wednesday, followed by up to 30 hours of debate before a final vote.”

Interest Group Wrote Bears Ears Resolution, Says Green Group.

KUER-FM Salt Lake City (7/17, Fahys) reports that “an environmental group is raising new concerns about efforts to get the Bears Ears National Monument scrapped.” The Western Values Project “says it’s ‘cynical’ and ‘insincere’ the way state lawmakers developed their pitch asking President Trump to rescind the new national monument.” Chris Saeger, the group’s executive director, “says state records show that lawmakers relied on a resolution that was drafted by a conservative think tank, the Sutherland Institute, and not Utahns.” He says, “It shows the Department of Interior that this is not a sincere, ground up effort, that it is a pretty cynical political play that’s being carried out in concert with special interests.”

Can The Isolated Alaska Peninsula Town Of King Cove Get Its Road Under The Trump Administration?

The Alaska Dispatch News (7/17, Herz) reports that the fight over the King Cove road in Alaska is “taking a new turn under” the Trump Administration, “with emotions running so hot that...even supporters are fighting with each other over strategy.” The article points to a letter by Steve Wackowski, senior adviser for Alaska affairs at the Department of the Interior, “chastising Alaska Gov. Bill Walker’s communications director for sending a press release that revealed new plans to advance” the project. According to the article, “in the six months since Trump appointed former Montana Rep. Ryan Zinke as his interior secretary, the two sides have been quietly preparing for their next skirmish – with the message from Wackowski, Zinke’s Alaska adviser, showing how carefully the road’s backers are trying to avoid tipping their hand. ”

Mercyhurst University Graduate Student Receives Federal Honor For Heroism.

The Erie \(PA\) Times-News (7/17, Flowers) reports that Bryan Eisenberg, who was “one of several people who risked their own lives to help others after a tour helicopter crashed at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on Feb. 18, 2016,” was awarded a gold medal of valor from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke during a July 4 ceremony. According to the article, “at the time of the crash, Eisenberg was working as a federal police officer for the National Park Service in Hawaii.” Eisenberg said in a telephone interview Monday night, “It’s an honor to receive the award, but it’s bittersweet because one child didn’t make it. It was a big team effort. We did the best we could do that day.”

Former Montana U.S. Senator Conrad Burns Laid To Rest At Arlington National Cemetery.

KBZK-TV Butte, MT (7/17, Goare) reports that the late Sen. Conrad Burns was “laid to rest at Arlington National Cemetery on Monday.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “called Burns a ‘great Montanan’ and said he was proud to have him as a mentor and friend.” Zinke said in a prepared statement, “His example as a Marine and advocate for our state continues to inspire me every day to serve our nation with dedication. Like any good Marine, Conrad spoke his mind, stood for his beliefs, and served the American people. He was the very first person to call me the night I was elected to Congress. His advice was short and to the point, in his iconic style. Fair winds and following seas, Marine.”

Bill Frist To Congress: Stand Up For Nature. Don’t Starve EPA And Conservation Programs.

In an op-ed for USA Today (7/18, Frist), former Senate majority leader Bill Frist touts “the well-established connection between the physical, mental and emotional health of people and their natural environment.” However, he worries “about the health of our people, our natural resources and our government institutions.” Frist urges Congress and the Trump Administration “to fully support our diverse public lands and investments in our natural resources through effective conservation and science programs.”

Human Noise Pollution Is Disrupting Parks And Wild Places.

In a piece for the Conversation \(UK\) (7/17, Buxton), Rachel Buxton, a postdoctoral research fellow at Colorado State University, writes that in a recent study, her team “used millions of hours of acoustic recordings and sophisticated models to measure human-caused noise in protected areas.” They found that “noise pollution doubled sound energy in many U.S. protected areas, and that noise was encroaching into the furthest reaches of remote areas.” Buxton writes that their “approach can help protected area managers enhance recreation opportunities for visitors to enjoy natural sounds and protect sensitive species.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Federal Executive Dismisses Appeal Against Proposed EG Casino.

The Elk Grove \(CA\) Citizen (7/17, Armstrong) reports that the Wilton Rancheria’s chairman on July 17 “announced that a Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) executive dismissed an appeal that attempted to block the casino site’s land from being placed into a federal trust.” Michael S. Black, acting assistant secretary for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, “found that then-Acting Assistant Secretary Lawrence Roberts’ Jan. 19 record of decision for the tribe had been properly delegated and exercised with authority.”

Our View: Tribe Should Not Be Denied Land In Trust.

The New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (7/18) editorializes that “the Department of the Interior has suggested a path for the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe to work toward developing a casino on land in East Taunton across Route 140 from the Silver City Galleria, where a couple dozen residents stand in vehement opposition to the proposal.” The paper says that “if Congress is able to provide a prescription for the incongruities of the reorganization act, we would be pleased to see the Mashpee’s land-into-trust affirmed.” It concludes that “despite our opinion that casino gambling’s promises are far from a sure thing, we support the Mashpee Wampanoag right to use their land as they choose.”

A Colorado Ranch Widow Is Battling A ConocoPhillips Subsidiary Over Land Rights.

The Denver Post (7/17, Mitchell) reports that “ranch widow Susan Robinson is battling a ConocoPhillips subsidiary over rights to land her family has grazed for 100 years.” According to the article, “for 14 years, the Robinsons paid for a grazing permit from the Bureau of Land Management.” However, “in 1986, The Oil Shale Corp. of Midland, Texas (TOSCO), a ConocoPhillips subsidiary, acquired the 2,535 acres along with thousands of other acres of land.” Robinson said “that in the 31 years TOSCO claimed the land, she had never seen oilmen” and she refused to sign the lease and called an attorney”. Later, Robinson said, “she learned that TOSCO had acquired the land from the BLM through a controversial 1800s mining law for $2.50 an acre.” BLM spokesman Steven Hall “said he couldn’t confirm that the TOSCO land was acquired in 1986 along with tens of thousands of acres through the 1872 federal mining law, but added that it is ‘certainly likely.’”

Environmental Groups Challenge Silverton Heli-skiing Land Swap.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (7/17, Romeo) reports that “several groups are challenging a controversial expansion of helicopter skiing terrain near Silverton, calling the deal ‘veiled and illegal.’” Jimbo Buickerood of San Juan Citizens Alliance said in a prepared statement, “The Bureau of Land Management is legally responsible to serve the public interest, but in this process they discarded public input in order to reach what seems to be a predetermined outcome benefiting one commercial interest to the detriment of a diverse array of winter recreationists.” In May, the BLM’s Gunnison Office “approved a request from Silverton Guides, an arm of Silverton Mountain, to swap 5,556 acres for 16,250 acres for its heli-ski operation.”

Drones And Dams: A Better Way To Monitor And Update National Critical Infrastructure.

Commercial UAV News (7/17, Karpowicz) reports that nowadays, the Bureau of Reclamation is “not focused on building dams, but instead on maintaining them” and “tools like Revit and drones are changing the way things are done for the better.” The article says that “an ambitious project that is underway to create a 3D digital model of Glen Canyon Dam, one of the world’s largest concrete dams, are providing officials with the information they need to continue to manage facilities like this for the American public today and far into the future.” David Winslow, CAD manager and GIS coordinator in Reclamation’s Upper Colorado Regional Office in Salt Lake City, said, “Because the tools are so much more efficient, they’ve given us the ability to do more ‘what if?’ type scenarios. In the past, our tasks were as simple as ‘design this road’. Drawings were done with pen and ink by hand, and in a lot of ways that constrained what you could do. Today, with the different forms of CAD that we can use, we can take that same road and play around with moving something 20 feet to the left so that you bypass something that’s in the space. Now we can do our job more effectively because we can look at many more options.”

Trump Administration Is Looking At A Wildlife Refuge In Rio Grande Valley For Its First Portion Of Border Wall.

The Los Angeles Times (7/17, Jarvie, Bennett) reports that federal officials plan to build the first section of President Trump’s border wall in Texas’ Santa Ana National Wildlife Refuge, in a controversial move that has spurred opposition by environmentalists. Last week, the US Army Corps of Engineers “used a drilling rig to extract soil samples at the Rio Grande Valley refuge to prepare for the possibility of constructing three miles of concrete levee wall and fence,” according to a DHS official. The official said that the drilling was done in expectation that Congress will approve funding for the wall for the 2018 budget year.

States Get Grants As Disease Ravages Bat Populations.

The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (7/18, Myers) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Monday “announced more than $1 million in grants to keep fighting white-nose syndrome.” The grants are awarded “wildlife agencies in 37 states and the District of Columbia to help find ways to slow or prevent the spread of white-nose syndrome that has killed an estimated 7 million bats across the eastern U.S. and Canada.”

Report: Wolf And Livestock Deaths Hit Record High In Wyoming.

The AP (7/17, Moen) reports that “gray wolves killed a record number of livestock in Wyoming last year, and wildlife managers responded by killing a record number of wolves that were responsible, according to a new federal report.” The report released by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “found that wolves killed 243 livestock, including 154 cattle, 88 sheep and one horse, in 2016.” As a result, wildlife managers “killed 113 wolves that were confirmed to be attacking livestock.”

Facebook Founder Tours Glacier Park, Blackfeet Reservation.

The AP (7/17) reports that "Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg toured Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana over the weekend as part of his personal challenge to visit every state this year." Zuckerberg "noted the beauty of Glacier park while taking a ride on a red jammer bus on Saturday and visited the 'bark ranger' Gracie, a border collie who helps herd wildlife away from people at poplar areas, such as Logan Pass." Zuckerberg also "noted the park's dwindling numbers of glaciers."

Mic (7/17) reports that "a climate change expert at the United States Geological Survey was set to join" Zuckerberg "to discuss the impact of global warming at Glacier National Park, but two sources with knowledge of the matter say the scientist was pulled from the visit by the U.S. Department of Interior just days before the event." The action has "provoked suspicion from inside the USGS that the scientist's appearance was canceled to minimize attention to the issue of climate change, according to one source." The article says that "Daniel Fagre, a research ecologist at the USGS Northern Rocky Mountain Science Center and a specialist on the impact of climate change on mountain climates, and Facebook CEO Zuckerberg were expected to meet Saturday to discuss the negative toll climate change is having on the park's glaciers, both sources said."

Proposed WWI Memorial In D.C. Advances, Despite Questions On Its Design.

The Architects Newspaper (7/17, Gunts) reports that "the Nation's Capital came a step closer to gaining a World War I Memorial this month when a key federal panel approved a conceptual design for the project—even though panel members and others expressed concerns about the latest plan and its potential impact on the selected site." The National Capital Planning Commission "voted unanimously on July 13 to accept its executive director's recommendations for adding a memorial to Pershing Park, on Pennsylvania Avenue near the White House." The action "means the design team and its clients, the World War I Centennial Commission and the National Park Service, can now move to a second, more detailed stage of design work on the project, which is expected to cost $30 million to $32 million."

Public Forums Planned For Reconstruction Monument.

The Bluffton \(SC\) Today (7/17) reports that the National Park Service has "planned three public forums to begin establishing a framework to manage the planned Reconstruction Era National Monument in Beaufort County." Open house sessions are set "for July 24, 25 and 27 on St. Helena Island and in Port Royal and Beaufort." Monument superintendent Melissa English-Rias said, "The foundation document will be critical to helping the National Park Service map out management plans and priorities for the new park. We are inviting the public to play a role in shaping the park's future operations."

Zion National Park Considers Reservation System For Entry.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/17, Brea) reports that the National Park Service is "considering a year-round online reservation system for access" to Zion National Park's "most popular trails and attractions in response to a massive surge in visitation at the park." The article says that "under one of two 'preliminary alternative concepts' unveiled by park officials late last week, visitors would be required to get advance reservations to enter the park." The second, "more restrictive alternative also would require reservations to access specific trails and sites within the park."

Gridlock In Great Falls.

The Springfield \(VA\) Connection (7/17, Forbush) reports that "park popularity has been identified as the culprit behind congestion and gridlock issues in a rural area of Great Falls." According to the article, "the source of the problem is the entrance of the Great Falls Park that is located at the end of Old Dominion Drive, which can become backed up with traffic." At Great Falls Citizens Association Transportation Committee meetings held on June 6 and July 12, "local residents and staff from Supervisor John Foust's office met with representatives from the National Park Service and the U.S. Park Police to discuss the ongoing problem."

Local Education A World Away.

The Scottsbluff \(NE\) Star-Herald (7/17, North) reports that "Dan Morford, superintendent at the Scotts Bluff National Monument and Lesley Gaunt, lead interpreter and park ranger, and Justin Cawiezel, chief ranger, were at the Scotts Bluff National Monument at 5 a.m. Sunday, July 16 to meet students in Afghanistan via the internet." The event was "scheduled so early because of the time difference and park rangers meeting some cultural considerations in Afghanistan." According to the article, "more than 60 students from schools in Kabul, Jalalabad and Bamiyan asked questions about the National Park Service what it does and how it works." The article says that "the distance learning opportunity began about four months ago when the State Department requested a connection be made."

Tractor Used By The Nation's Last Homesteader Will Become Centerpiece Exhibit At Homestead Monument's Heritage Center.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (7/17, Hende) reports that on Monday, "the tractor used by the last person to receive free land under the federal Homestead Act of 1862 was briefly shown off in a shed at Homestead National Monument of America near Beatrice before it undergoes cleaning and a bit of restoration for permanent display later this year." Mark Engler, the monument's superintendent, said, "We think this tractor ... is going to be an excellent addition to the museum collection." The 1945 Allis-Chalmers Model C was "recovered from the wilderness of western interior Alaska in mid-June by a National Park Service team financed by the Friends of Homestead National Monument."

Interior Provides $4M To Help Island Territories Eradicate Invasive Species.

Marianas Variety (7/17) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula has "made available approximately $4 million for several invasive species prevention and control initiatives in the U.S. insular areas." Pula said, "Invasive species, of which the brown tree snake is the most widely known in the Pacific region, have had damaging effects on the fragile ecosystems in the islands. It is critical to protect, build resilience, and restore natural resources that provide the foundation for people's livelihood and stability in these islands."

In Landmark Move, GOP Congress Calls Climate Change 'Direct Threat' To Security.

Foreign Policy (7/14, Allen-Ebrahimian) reports that many U.S. military installations are "threatened by climate change around the world." The Pentagon has "been aware for years of the looming danger represented by climate change," but "partisan infighting in Congress, budget sequestration, and the toxic nature of the climate debate have hamstrung the Defense Dept. from taking steps to protect key assets — or even identifying which facilities face the most serious threats." However, the House has now "retained an amendment to the 2018 defense funding bill affirming that 'climate change is a direct threat to the national security of the United States.'" The legislation "orders defense officials to draw up a report laying out which facilities would be most affected."

US, Marshalls Concerned By Rise In Illegal Adoptions.

Marianas Variety (7/17, Johnson) reports that "the United States government has flagged as a 'concern' an apparent increase in illegal adoptions of Marshall Islands babies in the U.S." The Marshall Islands government also raised worries "about offshore adoptions that are not going through established legal processes in the Marshall Islands."
