The Hill (9/8, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports President Trump in his weekly address on Friday “focused his attention on tax reform, a campaign promise his administration has set its sight on accomplishing in the coming months.” The President asserted, “Our current burdensome tax code is a massive lead weight against the American economy. ... It costs us millions of jobs, trillions of dollars and billions and billions of hours wasted on paperwork and compliance.” He added, “My administration is working closely with Congress to develop a plan that will deliver more jobs, higher pay and lower taxes for businesses of all sizes and most importantly for middle-class families all across America.”

Reuters (9/8, Chiacu) reports Trump also “urged fellow Republicans on Friday to begin work on tax reform legislation immediately, exhorting them to hurry up after two days in which he stunned members of his party with overtures to opposition Democrats.” He tweeted, “Republicans must start the Tax Reform/Tax Cut legislation ASAP. Don’t wait until the end of September. Needed now more than ever. Hurry!”

Trump Campaign Ad Pledges Commitment To Tax Cut This Year. Breitbart (9/8, Hudson) reports Trump’s campaign has released a new 30-second ad titled “Finish the Job” that “boasts Trump administration accomplishments, including one million new jobs, a rising stock market, and companies investing millions in America,” while also promoting its “commitment to cut taxes this year.”

Corker Framing Senate Debate On Tax Reform. The Wall Street Journal (9/8, Rubin) reports Sen. Bob Corker, a member of the Senate Budget Committee, said Thursday that he would accept a tax reform blueprint that allows lawmakers to extend tax breaks on capital investment that are set to expire in 2019 without having to offset the costs in the form of new taxes. Corker told the Journal, “There’s an open discussion that’s taking place as to what is the appropriate amount of dynamic scoring. ... It would be helpful to us if [tax-bill writers] would sit down and tell us the kind of numbers they’re looking at.”

Meadows, Jordan Warn Mnuchin, Cohn, Short That They May Issue Separate Tax Reform Plan. Politico (9/8, Bade, Dawsey) reports House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows and Vice Chairman Jim Jordan on Thursday told Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, National Economic Director Cohn, and White House legislative liaison Marc Short, “that Republicans need to release a tax plan soon – or the conservative group may put out one of its own.” In an interview with Politico on Friday, Meadows “downplayed the possibility that the group would release its own legislation,” saying, “I’m not threatening my own tax bill if we don’t get our way,” but “if we don’t make decisions in the near term on what we’re going to do, [we might] put forth something.” According to Meadows, “Every day that goes by, there is less and less of a chance of getting it done before the end of the year. And so for us, it’s all about promoting real dialogue right away, and we’ve been assured real dialogue right away is forthcoming.”

Financial Advisers Adopt “Wait And See” Approach On Tax Reform. “With any tax plan, the devil is in the details. And with this one, the details have been few,” the New York Times (9/8, Sullivan) reports, which is why “wealth advisers [are] urging caution to clients” and telling them to “wait and see.”

Media Analyses: Disaster Aid, Debt Ceiling Deal Shows Trump’s Political Positions Remain Unpredictable.

In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (9/9, A1, Baker) reports President Trump’s deal with Democrats on relief aid and the debt ceiling “demonstrated...that he still imagines himself a solitary cowboy as he abandoned Republican congressional leaders to forge a short-term fiscal deal with Democrats.” According to the Times, Trump has shown “that he is, in many ways, the first independent to hold the presidency since the advent of the current two-party system around the time of the Civil War.” The Times adds “the more immediate question is whether he will continue to seek agreements with Democrats.”

Meanwhile, a front-page Washington Post (9/9, A1, Parker, Rucker) analysis contends that the deal “should come as no surprise to students of Trump’s long history of broken alliances and agreements.” The Post says that in his “business, his personal life, his campaign and now his presidency, Trump has sprung surprises on his allies with gusto. His dealings are frequently defined by freewheeling spontaneity, impulsive decisions and a desire to keep everyone guessing – especially those who assume they can control him.” The Post adds Trump “also repeatedly demonstrates that, while he demands absolutely loyalty from others, he is ultimately loyal to no one but himself.” However, the Post asserts that “what many Republicans saw as betrayal was, in the view of some Trump advisers, an exciting return to his campaign promise of being a populist dealmaker able to cut through the mores of Washington to get things done.”

Breitbart (9/9, Shaw) cites Axios in reporting “that Trump, who has spent much of his life seeking the adulation of Manhattan liberals, has fallen back on his weakness for flattery and desire to be loved.” A Trump adviser told Axios that the President “realized ‘people’ (presumably the elites he was so cozy with in his days as a real estate developer) don’t like him and he looked for a way to fix that,” culminating in the deal with Democrats, though “it is also possible that Trump is using the deal as a way of declaring his independence from the Republican leadership.”

The Hill Analysis: Trump Appoints Climate Skeptics To EPA, DOE.

The Hill (9/9, Henry) reports President Trump has appointed a large number of climate change skeptics to several agencies, most notably the EPA. The Hill details EPA Administrator Pruitt’s efforts to dismantle the Obama Administration’s environmental policies, adding that skepticism is “not confined to the EPA, either: Energy Secretary Rick Perry has parroted Pruitt’s disbelief in the role of carbon dioxide on warming.”

NYTimes: Trump Waging “War On Science.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/10, SR10) accuses the Trump Administration of waging a “war on science” by “appointing people with few scientific credentials to key positions, defunding programs that could lead to a cleaner and safer environment and a healthier population, and, most ominously, censoring scientific inquiry that could inform the public and government policy.” The Times goes on to say that the “unifying theme” of the Administration is opposition to climate change, criticizing efforts by EPA administrator Pruitt and Energy Secretary Perry to limit regulations. The piece concludes that as a result, “the future isn’t going to be nearly as promising for ordinary Americans as it should be.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“9/11: Finding Answers In Ashes 16 Years Later.” The New York Times (9/11, Board) editorializes that the offices of the New York City medical examiner have positively identified only 1,641 of the 2,753 victims of the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks – 60 percent – “mostly through DNA analysis.” Their “success rate is slightly better, 64 percent, in regard to the 405 firefighters, police officers and emergency medical workers who died at ground zero.” The Times says the task has grown more challenging over the years, but victims’ relatives have neither given up nor “told the medical examiner’s office that, after the passage of so much time, they no longer care about matching slivers of remains to their loved ones.”

“Cambodia’s Democracy Betrayed.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/11, Board) says Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen has “vowed to stay in power” and does not intend to lose in general elections next year or in “future ones to an opposition that did better than expected in the last vote in 2013,” even if it “means charging opposition leaders with treason.” The Times warns that unless Hun Sen drops the charges against opposition leader Kem Sokha; “permit(s) a credible political opposition; and allow(s) The Daily, radio stations and all news outlets to operate freely, the world will know that Cambodia is no longer a democracy.”

“Kris Kobach And His 5,313 Fraudulent Voters.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/11, Board) recalls “explosive claims” made by the vice chairman of President Trump’s electoral-integrity commission, Kris Kobach, that “large-scale illegal voting swung a pivotal Senate election in 2016.” The Times says Kobach’s claims that the scheme “had national implications” in that “the Senate failed to repeal Obamacare by one vote” evidence why “serious people don’t take him seriously.” Instead of admitting “his obvious biases,” the Times says, Kobach has blamed the mainstream media, but in fact “Kobach and his band of vote suppressors belittle themselves, and threaten voting rights nationwide, with their dishonesty.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Travel Ban May Expire Before It Reaches The Supreme Court.” The Washington Post (9/10) says in an editorial that it is “not clear what the Justice Department hopes to gain” by appealing to the Supreme Court the latest Federal court injunction against President Trump’s immigration order since the High Court “was already set to hear arguments on the ban’s legality on Oct. 10.” The Post points out that “a significant portion of the ban will likely have expired by that date – and the rest before the justices can even rule on the case,” and argues that “the government’s best option would be to allow time to run out on an executive order lacking in any security benefit to justify its cruelty.” The Post adds that by allowing the ban to expire, the Administration could “save face while avoiding the risk of a damaging Supreme Court decision that could not only strike down the order but also place lasting constraints on presidential power over immigration and national security.”

“Trump Says He Cares About People In Coal Country. So Why Halt A Study On Their Health?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/10) writes that the Interior Department’s recent decision to halt a study on the side effects of mountaintop-removal coal mining on people living in surrounding areas raises questions about the Administration’s supposed support for people in “coal country.” The Post highlights research about negative health and environmental side effects of such mountaintop landscape stripping and argues that the study should be restarted.

“A New Cancer Drug May Be The First In A Line Of Revolutionary Treatments.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/10) writes that a new drug recently approved by the FDA that treats acute lymphoblastic leukemia, called “Kymriah,” “might be only the first in a line of revolutionary new treatments,” as highlighted by FDA Commission Gottlieb’s statement that the drug could be “an inflection point in our ability to treat and even cure many intractable illnesses.” The Post acknowledges the difficulties of functioning immunotherapies and their high pharmaceutical costs, but concludes that new drugs in the vein of Kymriah “would nevertheless represent sorely needed progress.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s Hurricane Rebuilding Job.” On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (9/10) says that in the wake of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma, the urgent need for more construction workers ought to get the President’s attention. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported 225,000 construction job openings in June, up 30% in the last year and 125% since 2012, and the National Association of Home Builders estimates that up to 20,000 workers will be needed to rebuild homes after Harvey. The Journal calls on Congress to authorize more guest-worker visas for construction as part of the Irma relief bill, and any undocumented worker who assists with rebuilding should receive one.

“It Is Chilling To Hear.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/10) highlights a letter from University of Notre Dame president Father John Jenkins to Sen. Dianne Feinstein in which he criticizes her questioning the Catholic faith of Notre Dame law professor and judicial nominee Amy Barrett. In the letter, Jenkins writes that Feinstein’s line of questioning was “chilling to hear.”

“Trial Lawyers And Breitbart Unite.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/10, Board) says that while President Trump and Senate Majority Leader McConnell are supporting Sen. Luther Strange in the Alabama GOP Senate runoff, Steve Bannon-led Breitbart is backing Roy Moore in an effort to deal a blow to McConnell, who Bannon and his allies fault for the failure to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act, among other things. The Journal says that trial attorneys are also backing Moore, because his rulings have often benefited them and their firms. That Bannon is aligned with trial attorneys, adds the Journal, speaks to he and his allies’ lack of commitment to conservative ideals.

Trump Administration To Expand Hunting At National Monuments.

The Wall Street Journal (9/15, Carlton) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Friday signed an order to expand hunting, fishing, and target shooting at national monuments that previously had banned those activities. Zinke said, "The more people we can get outdoors, the better things will be for our public lands. ... Some of my best memories are hunting deer or reeling in rainbow trout back home in Montana, and I think every American should be able to have that experience."

The Hill (9/15, Manchester) reports that the order is "an extension of a previous order he signed aimed at restoring the 'American sportsmen conservation ethic.'" According to the article, "the move is likely to be welcomed by hunters and fishers and is the latest Trump effort to reach out to those groups.”

The Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (9/15) reports that “sportsmen’s and conservation groups across the country are applauding” the order. Chris Cox, executive director of the National Rifle Association, said, “In the past, management plans for federal lands have been put in place to ban hunting and shooting. Sportsmen and women can now breathe a sigh of relief that those days are over. This administration values access to public lands for sportsmen and we commend them for it.” The article notes that “other groups weighing in with support for the order included the National Wildlife Federation, the National Shooting Sports Foundation, Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation and the Congressional Sportsmen’s Caucus.”

However, the AP (9/15, Daly) reports that “environmentalists dismissed it as ‘a do-nothing order.’” Matt Lee-Ashley, a former Interior official who is now a senior fellow at the left-leaning Center for American Progress, said that “the public already has the right to hunt and fish on federal lands, and states have primary authority to regulate hunting and fishing in those areas.” Lee-Ashley said, “Secretary Zinke is trying desperately to create a distraction from his proposal to dramatically reduce the size of America’s national monuments, which would be the largest elimination of protections for wildlife habitat in U.S. history.”

Additional coverage was provided by CNN (9/15, Green), the Washington Examiner (9/15, Siciliano), the Arizona Daily Star (9/16, Davis), the Huffington Post (9/15, D’angelo), Courthouse News (9/15, Renda), the Boating Industry (9/15), AmmoLand (9/15, Evans), Scout (9/17, Young), KXLF-TV Butte, MT (9/15), and KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (9/16).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (9/15, Daly), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/15, Daly), the Daily Mail (9/15), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/1, Daly), the Topeka \(KS\) Capital-Journal (9/15, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (9/15, Daly), U.S. News & World Report (9/15, Daly), the Washington Post, and the Washington Times (9/15, Daly).

Commentary: Increasing Access To Hunting, Fishing And Recreation. In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/17, Bernhardt), David Bernhardt, Deputy Secretary of the Interior Department, writes that the Interior Department is “working with the nation’s leading wildlife conservation and outdoor recreation groups, as well as our state partners,” to look “for ways to increase hunting, fishing and recreational boating opportunities and access on public and private lands for all Americans.” Bernhardt asserts that “it’s vital that we find ways to connect new generations with these pursuits, because they’re not just part of who we are individually. They constitute the very foundations of the healthy lands and waters that sustain healthy societies.”

Interior Report Recommends Cuts Or Changes To Seven National Land Monuments.

The Wall Street Journal (9/17, Carlton) reports that according to a report sent to the White House, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has recommended reductions or other changes to almost half of the national monuments he reviewed at the President’s request. Among Zinke’s recommendations are condensing the boundaries of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante preserves in Utah, Nevada’s Gold Butte, Oregon’s Cascade-Siskiyou, and reopening hundreds of thousands of square miles of protected the Pacific and Atlantic oceans to commercial fishing.

The Washington Post (9/17, Eilperin) says that the White House “is reviewing the recommendations and has not reached a final decision on them.” If the changes recommended by Zinke are enacted, they “could test the legal boundaries of what powers a president holds under the 1906 Antiquities Act.”

The AP (9/17, Daly) reports that “if Trump adopts the recommendations, it would quiet some of the worst fears of his opponents, who warned that vast public lands and marine areas could be lost to states or private interests.” However, “significant reductions in the size of the monuments, especially those created by Obama, would mark the latest in a string of actions where Trump has sought to erode his Democratic predecessor’s legacy.”

Also reporting are The Hill (9/17, Seipel), the Washington Times (9/17, Morton), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (9/17, Coleman), the Oregonian (9/17, Kavanaugh), the San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (9/18, Rogers), and the Honolulu Star-Advertiser (9/17).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/18, Daly), the Charlottesville \(VA\) Daily Progress (9/18, Daly), the Daily Mail (9/18), the Fort Worth \(TX\) Star-Telegram (9/17, Daly), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/15, Daly), the New Orleans Times-Picayune (9/17), the New York Daily News (9/18), the Orange County \(CA\) Register (9/17, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (9/17, Daly), the Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (9/17, Daly), the Washington Post (9/18, Matthew Daly |, Ap), and KSNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (9/17, Daly).

Utah Quietly Tells Feds: Trim Bears Ears Monument By 90 Percent. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/17, Maffly) reports that Utah has submitted maps to the Interior Department detailing a reduction in the size of Bears Ears National Monument. Utah's "vision, shared with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, is to shrink Bears Ears to one-tenth its current 1.35 million acres, scaling the southeastern Utah monument down to about 120,000 acres surrounding Mule and Arch canyons west of Blanding, according to maps and other documents prepared by Gov. Gary Herbert's office and obtained by The Salt Lake Tribune through records requests." However, the state's plan was "immediately panned by Native American leaders, who say it disregards the wishes of the tribes that sought the monument in the first place."

Additional Commentary. Additional commentary appeared in the Woodland \(CA\) Daily Democrat (9/16, Saylor), the Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (9/16, Lien), and the Santa Fe New Mexican (9/16, Sedall).

Trump Administration Working Toward Renewed Drilling In Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The Washington Post (9/15, A1, Eilperin) reports in a front-page article that the Trump Administration is moving to permit energy exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for the first time in 30 years. In August, Fish and Wildlife Service acting director James W. Kurth ordered an update to "a rule that allowed exploratory drilling between Oct. 1, 1984, and May 31, 1986," by removing the dates to allow "applicants to [submit] requests for approval of new exploration plans." According to Fortune (9/15, Reiss), "tens of millions of dollars have been spent on the battle for ANWR" over the years. The piece extensively details past efforts to open up the area to drilling as well as current struggles, adding that Alaska's senators – Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan – believe "that 2018 will be the best chance for success that the pro-ANWR-drilling movement has had in 25 years."

This Season, Western Wildfires Are Close By And Running Free.

"Extreme fire behavior – difficult to predict and dangerous to fight – has been the watchword of the 2017 season across the West," the New York Times (9/16, Johnson) reports, as "more large, uncontrolled wildfires were burning in 10 Western states in early September than at any comparable time since 2006." The Times says "from California to Utah and Montana, thousands...have also been forced to flee, and evacuation orders were still in place late last week for 23 active fires in four states, with nearly 21,000 firefighters in the field across the region." However, "at least so far, the year is not a record, with 8.3 million acres burned as of mid-September" compared with "more than 10 million acres burned in 2015, the worst fire season in decades." The Times adds that "much of that land...was far from population centers" whereas "in stark contrast, this year's fires are licking at people's back doors or, in some cases, consuming the doors altogether."

Meanwhile, the New York Times (9/16, Griggs, Lai, Ashkenas, Patel) in a separate article reports the wildfires in the Pacific Northwest have led to "dangerous air quality throughout the region, and generated plumes of smoke that spread across vast swaths of North America." Colin Seftor, an atmospheric scientist at NASA, "said he believed that the smoke beyond the Western states was high enough in the atmosphere that there were no immediate health concerns for the rest of the country. But he said that such large clouds of particulates in the air could have broader impact, like a reduction in temperatures on the ground."

The CBS Weekend News (9/16, story 7, 0:15, Morgan) briefly reported snow fell in the mountains of Montana and Wyoming on Friday, which fire officials acknowledged "is slowing the spread of wildfires, but it won't bring an end to the fire season."

Diverse Foes Of Offshore Atlantic Drilling Hope To Halt Trump Plan.

McClatchy (9/15, Pugh) reports a bipartisan group of state and federal lawmakers have joined business leaders to convince President Trump to abandon plans to permit energy exploration in the Atlantic. Instead of making an environmental appeal, the group is "raising concerns about the economic effect that seismic testing and drilling could have on the multi-billion dollar coastal tourism and fishing industries." While oil producers argue Atlantic exploration would bring jobs and economic development to the coast, opponents claim that "restaurants, hotels and other businesses could be jeopardized by the possibility of a large oil spill.”

Hurricanes Present New Challenge To Trump’s Fast-track Permit Plan.

The Washington Examiner (9/18, Siegel) reports that the Trump Administration, “wanting to rebuild America’s infrastructure as quickly as possible, has issued several executive orders to streamline the permitting and environmental review process for federally funded projects.” For instance, the Interior Department “this month issued a memo directing its agencies to limit environmental impact statements to 150 pages ‘or 300 pages for unusually complex projects.” However, “environmentalists, legal experts, and some lawmakers are now questioning the wisdom of these measures in the wake of major flooding and destruction caused by Hurricanes Harvey and Irma.”

‘I’m Working In The ... Soviet Union.’ Interior Staff Eyed For Leaks.

E&E Publishing (9/15) reports the US EPA “intends to comply with a White House directive aimed at cracking down on leaks across the federal government, said agency spokeswoman Liz Bowman.” In an email, Bowman said, “We fully agree that government employees should do their part to protect classified information and control unclassified information. ... EPA is developing training to support the White House’s request.” Other officials in the government “are expected to get similar instructions after Trump’s national security adviser, H.R. McMaster, issued a memo earlier this month to the heads of agencies across government.” McMaster’s “directive comes as part of a broad effort by the Trump administration to crack down on leaks. The memo was sent to environmental and energy agency leaders, including EPA boss Scott Pruitt, Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and the chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality (a post that is currently vacant).” E&E adds “press offices at DOE and Interior did not respond to requests for comment about whether they plan to hold training sessions.”

After Massive Giveaways To Industry, Mining Executives Will Spend Big At Trump’s D.C. Hotel.

The Hill (9/15, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog cites the Intercept in reporting that the National Mining Association will hold a conference in October at the Trump International Hotel in Washington, DC. The event will “include strategic policy discussions, as well as speeches and meetings with members of the administration, including Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.” According to The Hill, “Zinke is considered to be a close ally of the coal industry, while the president has made repeated promises on the campaign trail and in his presidency to revamp the coal industry and bring jobs back to miners.” However, The Hill acknowledges that the venue “is likely to raise eyebrows, due to the president alleged business ties to the hotel, which he has frequented as president.”

Feds Announce $62 Million For Navajo Water Pipeline.

The AP (9/15) reports that the Interior Department “says it’s awarded a nearly $62 million contract for construction of a water pipeline between two northwestern New Mexico communities.” The pipeline is part of the greater Navajo-Gallup Water Supply project. It “aims to create a sustainable water supply for Navajo Nation and Jicarilla Apache residents and Gallup.”

Wyoming’s Sage Grouse Team Meets To Discuss Federal Shake Up Of Their Plan.

Wyoming Public Radio (9/15, McKim) reports that “the sage grouse implementation team met for the first time since the Department of Interior announced recommendations to a collaborative state and federal Obama era plan." At the meeting, the team talked about "changes they would like to see including fixing discrepancies between the state and federal maps that identify sage grouse lands that can be leased for energy development."

Op-ed: Non-producing Oil And Gas Leases Tie Up 1.7 Million Acres Of Land In Utah.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/17, Saeger), Chris Saeger, executive director of the Western Values Project, claims that "despite strong public support for protecting our outdoor heritage, since the start of the Trump administration the scale has been steadily tipping in favor of the special interests that threaten access to public lands." Saeger accuses Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and the Interior Department of "short-changing families, using loopholes to capitalize off of our public lands and unfairly diverting taxpayer money to a handful of elites." Saeger decries a system that "overwhelmingly favors oil and gas development over conservation, despite the economic benefits recreation also brings to communities."

Judge Nixes Challenge To Calif. Tribal Trust Land Decision.

Law360 (9/15, Westney) reports that "a California federal judge on Thursday tossed a suit by a community group seeking to block the Bureau of Indian Affairs from taking approximately 853 acres into trust for the Yocha Dehe Wintun Nation, saying the agency had properly evaluated the tribe's need for the land and potential jurisdictional and land use conflicts." The Capay Valley Coalition "filed a complaint in December 2015 claiming that the BIA and its officers violated the Administrative Procedure Act."

Environmentalists Get Win In US Coal-climate Change Lawsuit.

The AP (9/15, Gruver) reports the 10th US Circuit Court of Appeals on Friday ruled that the Bureau of Land Management did not provide enough information to support its argument that blocking specific coal "leases would have no net effect on climate change" because power plants could get the coal elsewhere. The AP calls the ruling a "major victory" for environmentalists, who say they will use it to fight other coal mining leases across the country. However, mining will continue at the leases while a lower court considers the new information.

US Agent Out At BLM After Burning Man Probe.

The AP (9/15, Whitehurst) reports that "a federal agent who had been scrutinized for his handling of rare evidence as well as behavior at the counterculture Burning Man festival is no longer an employee of the Bureau of Land Management, authorities said Friday." Daniel Love, "who played a command role in federal agents' 2014 standoff with Nevada rancher and states' rights figure Cliven Bundy, no longer works for the agency, spokeswoman Megan Crandall told the Associated Press." Crandall "did not answer questions about the timing or circumstances of his departure, citing federal privacy laws."

Lectures 'Bring Science And Nature' Into Prison.

The AP (9/17, Marrow) reports that "more than 20 inmates at the Snake River Correctional Institution minimum-security facility were given the chance to take part in some community education when two presenters from local wildlife and ecology groups visited to educate them about owls within the state of Oregon." According to the article, "Nancy DeWitt, from the Institute of Applied Ecology, along with Corrine Coffman, from the Bureau of Land Management operated Morley Nelson Snake River Birds of Prey National Conservation Area, were on hand to offer information about the number of species of owls within Oregon." The presentation is part of a lecture series by the Institute of Applied Ecology.

Lawsuit Opposes Wild Horse Birth Control.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (9/15, Perkowski) reports that "a lawsuit seeks to halt birth control treatments for wild horses in the West until the effects are better understood." The nonprofit animal rights group Friends of Animals has "filed a lawsuit seeking to stop the federal government from administering birth control to wild horses in the West." The group "claims the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency approved the birth control agent — porcine zona pellucida or PZP — without properly researching its impact on wild horses." In its complaint, the group "asked a federal judge to order EPA to suspend registration of PZP until it conducts a special review of the substance, which would effectively halt birth control treatments for wild horses."

Delta Tunnels Opponents Target WaterFix Money.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/15, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that "opponents of the Delta tunnels proposal, facing a long-shot bid to kill the controversial project on environmental grounds, are now trying to undermine the plan's financial structure." According to the article, "six environmental groups filed court papers late Thursday attempting to derail the state Department of Water Resources' plans to bankroll the tunnels with billions of dollars in bond financing." The groups claimed "bonds can't be issued because the tunnels violate California environmental laws and because the project has received illegal subsidies from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation."

How The Elsinore Water District Plans To Deal With Future Water Shortages.

The Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (9/17, Williams) reports on the Elsinore Valley Municipal Water District's proposed Drought Contingency Plan, which anticipates that customer demand will double by 2040 even as the water supply shrinks. The plan was financed by a $115,000 grant from the Bureau of Reclamation. Drought planning grants were also awarded to the Inland Empire Utilities Agency in Chino Hills, the City of Rialto, and Southern California Edison for Catalina Island.

Arizona Jaguar Turns Out To Be Another Male.

The Arizona Republic (9/15, Loomis) reports that “Arizona state biologists say a jaguar sighted in the Chiricahua Mountains this summer is not the state’s first female of the species in decades, as wildlife conservationists had hoped.” The Center for Biological Diversity on Thursday “released video of the jaguar — the seventh known to have prowled southern Arizona since the mid-1990s — with a note of hope that it could be the first female in that number.” On Friday, the Arizona Game and Fish Department “released a photo of a jaguar taken in the same mountains by a U.S. Bureau of Land Management camera in April.”

The Arizona Daily Star (9/15, Davis) reports that “shortly after the center released the video Thursday morning, an Arizona Game and Fish biologist disclosed in an email that the jaguar is a male.”

Activist Urges Walrus Rafts In Absence Of Arctic Sea Ice.

The AP (9/18, Joling) reports that “an environmental activist is calling on the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to reconsider placing anchored rafts in the ocean as resting platforms for walrus after stampedes killed 64 animals on Alaska’s northwest coast.” Rick Steiner, “an environmental consultant and former University of Alaska marine conservation professor, pitched the idea two years ago.” The FWS “concluded it didn’t have the money or manpower to provide artificial resting platforms that might give a few walrus relief but not benefit the population as a whole in the absence of ice in the Chukchi Sea.” Steiner said “he’s again asking the agency to take the lead in a raft pilot project because sea ice continues to diminish and artificial platforms could provide alternatives to huge herds gathering on the Alaska coast.”

How 230 Endangered Parrots Survived Hurricane Irma In Puerto Rico.

Newsweek (9/15, Bartels) reports that “when Hurricane Irma started barreling toward Puerto Rico,” the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service took steps to protect 230 endangered Puerto Rican parrots. According to the article, “that meant gathering all 230 of them into the so-called hurricane room, a process that takes at least a few hours and sometimes half a day.” Edwin Muniz, a field supervisor at the Caribbean Ecological Services Office of the FWS, said, “Our staff has been trained—they’ve done this many times.”

Weekend Of Juggalos, Trump Supporters, Counterprotesters Is Here. Get Ready For Street Closures And Police Presence.

The Washington Post (9/15, Stein) reported that Saturday will see 35 events across federal parks in DC, ranging from weddings and charity races to a pro-Trump rally (dubbed the Mother of All Rallies), a counter-rally, and an unrelated rally for fans of the music group Insane Clown Posse who are protesting a 2011 FBI classification of the group as a gang. Leaders from the latter and the pro-Trump rally have stated that they do not wish for, nor do they expect any violent clashes with outside groups. Confidence in the police to do their jobs effectively was communicated by Peter Boykin, president of Gays for Trump and a speaker at the conservative rally.

The Washington Post (9/16, Jamison, Stein, Soong, Sacchetti) reported demonstrations “got off to a peaceful start in the nation’s capital Saturday” alongside “notoriously rowdy” fans of the rap-metal group Insane Clown Posse known as “Juggalo.” The Post reports that “the Mall had an atmosphere more akin to a military zone than tourist magnet, with police and Secret Service agents swarming the area,” in anticipation of a pro-Trump event, as well as “the march of the Juggalos,” who were “protesting their designation as a criminal gang by the FBI.”

The CBS Weekend News (9/16, story 2, 2:15, Morgan) aired footage of both the pro-Trump “Mother Of All Rallies” event, and the Juggalo protest of its gang designation. CBS reported that the pro-Trump appeared to be smaller than the 5,000 predicted.

NBC Nightly News (9/16, story 8, 0:25, Welker) called the Juggalo protest “one of the most unusual rallies” the capital has seen, and commented that while the pro-Trump event was billed as “the Mother of All Rallies,” the turnout “didn’t quite match that description.” According to the New York Times (9/16, Baumgaertner), “Washingtonians had nothing to fear. New Bill Aims To Restore ‘Common-Sense’ Plastic Water Bottle Ban In National Parks.

EcoWatch (9/15, Chow) reports that Rep. Mike Quigley has introduced a bill to “address the issue of bottled water reduction in national parks.” The “Reducing Waste in National Parks Act” (HR 3768) “would allow National Park Service regional directors the discretion to implement the policy and encourages them to develop a visitor education strategy to explain the rationale for the program.” Quigley said in a statement, “President Trump and Interior Secretary Zinke’s decision to overturn the common-sense plastic water bottle ban in National Parks is a clear reminder that this Administration will continually bow to the agendas of profit-driven corporations at the expense of our National Parks, wildlife, and environment.”

Bill Introduced In Congress To Remove Robert E. Lee Statue From Antietam.

WTOP-FM Washington (9/15, Basch) reports that “a bill has been introduced in Congress calling for a statue of Robert E. Lee to be removed” from the Antietam National Battlefield near Sharpsburg, Maryland. The article notes that “the statue is widely considered historically inaccurate because it depicts the general on his horse, even though Lee was brought to Antietam in an ambulance.” In a statement, the National Park Service “said its policy is to make no changes to Civil War monuments, even when they are considered inaccurate, unless directed to through legislation.”

Irma Stirs Fear Of Setback To $16 Billion Everglades Restoration.

Bloomberg News (9/18, Natter) reports that since Hurricane Irma “swung up through the Florida Keys and the state’s western coast, federal officials have struggled to access the 1.5 million acre Everglades National Park and assess the damage.” Scientists are “anxious” to see “Irma’s lashing winds and surging seas had setback what progress there has been.”

Parts Of Blue Ridge Parkway Reopen Following Irma.

The AP (9/15) reports that some sections of the Blue Ridge Parkway in North Carolina remained closed. The National Parks Service said that over 300 miles of the route had “downed trees and storm damage” and that “while some sections have reopened, others require more in-depth and technical cleanup.”

Fort Sumter Still Closed After Being Inundated With Water During Tropical Storm Irma.

The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (9/15, Behre) reports that Fort Sumter is “expected to remain closed for at least a few more days while the National Park Service works to dry out its interior and repair its tour boat dock.” Dawn Davis was “among the National Park Service employees who toured the fort two days after Tropical Storm Irma hit.” Davis said “there appears to be little or no damage to the historic fabric of the 19th century fort.”

Lead Carver Of Mount Rushmore Honored With Plaque.

The AP (9/16) reports that “the chief carver of Mount Rushmore who was responsible for refining the expressions on the faces of the monument’s four presidents was honored Saturday with a plaque that recognizes his work.” Luigi Del Bianco was “an Italian immigrant and stone carver whose job included the challenging tasks of sculpting Jefferson’s lips and Lincoln’s life-like eyes.” With the assistance of Del Bianco’s descendants, the National Park Service “unveiled a bronze plaque Saturday in his honor.”

U.S. Rushes Hurricane Irma Aid To Caribbean Islands, But Not To Cuba.

USA Today (9/15, Stanglin) reports that in the 24 hours Hurricane Irma spent beating the northern parts of Cuba it damaged "more than 4,000 homes, inundating downtown Havana with knee-high floods and destroying thousands of acres of cane sugar," and disrupted water service for 3.1 million people – a quarter of the island's population – as "Small beach towns also were destroyed on the northern coast." At least 10 were killed. Despite this damage and the assistance being poured into neighboring islands, no US aid has been directed to Cuba. USA Today explains, "The guidelines for U.S. assistance include a requirement, not surprising, that a host country must request help, which Cuba — a proud adversary in a decades long battle with its superpower neighbor — is not inclined to do." The article says the tense relations are "compounded by President Trump's announced plan in June to roll back steps by President Barack Obama to normalize ties."

NBC Nightly News (9/15, story 7, 1:35, Holt) correspondent Stephanie Ruhle said in St. John, the hurricane "completely destroyed" much of the island. "Officials say schools could be closed for a year. One of the things that's the most stunning – the vegetation gone. A week ago, this was lush and green. Now it looks completely burnt out. It truly looks like a war zone." As of Friday, she added, "many are left without a livelihood on an island where tourism is critical," but residents "told us they're determined to help each other rebuild."

Cuomo To Tour Virgin Islands. NY1-TV New York (9/15) reports New York Governor Andrew Cuomo "will visit the U.S. Virgin Islands Friday to check out damage from Hurricane Irma." The state's national guard is in St. John and St. Thomas, having also sent crews to Texas after Harvey. Cuomo will tour the islands with Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp, who was born in Brooklyn, New York.

Tourism-Dependent Caribbean Islands Face Long Post-Irma Recoveries. The New York Times (9/15, Rosenbloom) reports that Hurricane Irma has left major cities, and in some cases entire Islands, in ruins in the Caribbean, setting the stage for a long road to recovery for many of the region's tourism-dependent communities. St. Martin and St. John are among the hardest hit while St. Kitts and Nevis, Anguilla, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, the Bahamas, and Sint Eustatius were able to emerge "mostly unscathed." The Times says instead of tourism, governments "were still struggling — and continue to struggle — to ensure people's health and safety and evacuate stranded visitors." The disparity in damage is reportedly drastic as "Barbuda, where Hurricane Irma made landfall, is devastated, while Puerto Rico is not only open to tourists, it's a hub for relief efforts, and is welcoming hundreds of people to its shores from battered neighboring islands." The article provides an island-by-island breakdown of damage and outlook.

Irma Destroyed Paradise Of US Virgin Islands. A piece in the New York Times (9/15, Ferrésadurni) provides a narrative description of the damage left behind in the US Virgin Islands by Hurricane Irma. The author describes small groups "huddled together to try to communicate with family abroad...Or to arrange to flee the island," on hilltops where cellphone service could be found. The story explains that "Ice was the most sought-after commodity, to quench children's thirst and to preserve perishable foods." The author explains, "The United States Virgin Islands no longer has the air of paradise."

More Than A Week After Irma, St. Martin Is Still Trying To Survive. The New York Times (9/15, Ahmed) reports that over a week after facing Irma, St. Martin is still one of the Caribbean islands' hardest hit spots. While "a delicate order has been restored," residual issues from the damage are pervasive as the article explains: "there is still almost no fuel or electricity, and food delivery, for now, remains erratic. A near total communication blackout throttles the island. Almost all of the schools are destroyed and will be closed for months, at best." Rampant looting is also detailed in the damaged and evacuated areas where the lawlessness has "shattered the image many residents had of their island." The island is reportedly split into two French and Dutch sides. The French side has reported a death toll of 11, but the Times says many find this much too low given the damage and the storm's power when it hit. Some officials reportedly estimate the number will reach over 100.

St. Martin Residents Face Existential Question Of Whether To Rebuild. The Miami Herald (9/16, Wyss) reports that "ten days after Hurricane Irma turned St. Martin into a jigsaw of ripped metal and shattered wood, residents were still struggling with an existential question: Should they cling to an island that can barely support life or start over elsewhere?" According to the Herald, the hurricane has transformed "the picturesque tourist haven into a sweltering trash heap without power, water or communications. What the hurricane didn't steal, looters often did." While some locals expressed interest in rebuilding, "St. Martin's economic lifeblood, tourism, doesn't seem like it will be pumping anytime soon. Streets remain choked with garbage, and hotels and rental properties have been cracked open like dollhouses with their façades removed."

Residents "Marooned" On British Virgin Islands, But Not Giving Up. "Hurricane Irma's winds annihilated many of the homes here on Jost Van Dyke, one of the British Virgin Islands," the New York Times (9/16, Ferré-Sadurni) reports, and "without electricity, running water or telephone lines, the island's 298 inhabitants have been marooned, forced to survive with what they salvaged: a satellite phone, a chain saw, a week's worth of food." According to the Times, "Many residents said the British government in London, which oversees the islands, has been sluggish to attend to their dire situation, so residents have had to band together."

Escaped British Virgin Islands Prisoners Rounded Up By Police, British Royal Marines. The Wall Street Journal (9/15, Gross) reports that after prisoners escaped from Basam Ghut prison on the British Virgin Islands, one of the worst-struck locations in the path of Hurricane Irma, a joint force of British Royal Marines, Police from the UK, local police, and Cayman Island police recaptured over 100 escapees in the storm's wake. Alan Duncan, a minister in Britain's Foreign Office, reportedly said over 180 troops were dispatched by Britain to aid in the effort. The WSJ reports various European governments have sent police and military forces to aid in distribution of resources and restoration of order in their Caribbean territories. The report adds that rumors which had circulated in St. Martin of escaped prisoners roaming the island armed with guns turned out to be false after authorities responded.

Barbuda Has No People For First Time In 300 Years. CNN International (9/15, Sterling, Santiago) reports according to Ronald Sanders, the Antigua and Barbuda ambassador to the US, "For the first time in 300 years, there's not a single living person on the island of Barbuda." Meanwhile, CNN says that "Antigua received minimal damage." Barbuda had about 3 percent of the nation's population. The Washington Post (9/15, Degrandpre) reports Sanders told PRI's the Takeaway, "The damage is complete." He added, "A civilization that has existed on that island for over 300 years has now been extinguished." According to the Post, "a local broadcaster in Barbuda summarized the situation thus: The island's history will now be described in two epochs. Before Irma and after Irma."

Barbuda "Uninhabitable" After Hurricane Irma. NBC Nightly News (9/16, story 3, 0:35, Welker) reported on "new images" revealing "the devastation in Barbuda, the small island that was perhaps hardest hit" by Hurricane Irma one week ago. "Ninety-five percent of the buildings on Barbuda were destroyed," and its "entire population has evacuated." It is now being "described as uninhabitable." Meanwhile, tropical storm "Maria could affect some of the same areas of the Caribbean that were hit hard by Irma."

Hurricane Maria Moving Toward Caribbean.

The CBS Weekend News (9/17, story 2, 0:20, Quijano) reported, "Hurricane Jose continues to rumble towards the East Coast" but is "not expected to make landfall." However, "a potentially larger threat, Hurricane Maria, is strengthening in the Atlantic, targeting Caribbean islands, still reeling from Hurricane Irma."

In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (9/17, lead story, 2:05, Llamas) reported Maria's current path "looks similar to Irma," but computer models "hint" Maria "may go out to sea" instead of crossing over the Caribbean islands like Irma did. By contrast, NBC Nightly News (9/17, story 4, 1:40, Snow) said Maria "could cause more damage in already-hit-hard parts of the Caribbean." It is currently "strengthening as it heads for Barbuda, St. Maarten, and the Virgin Islands."

National Hurricane Center Warns Maria Following Irma's Path Through Caribbean.

The Miami Herald (9/16, Staletovich) reports that in its 8 p.m. update, National Hurricane Center forecasters said Tropical Storm Maria, which formed in the Atlantic Ocean on Saturday afternoon, "will likely bring dangerous winds, more storm surge and heavy rain to parts of the Lesser Antilles and strengthen into a hurricane Sunday, then approach the Leeward Islands on Monday." According to the Herald, hurricane watches were issued on Saturday evening "for Antigua, Barbuda, St. Kitts, Nevis, Montserrat and Guadeloupe. Tropical storm watches were issued for other islands in the chain." The Herald adds that "by midweek, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico could again face fierce winds." The Coast Guard captain of the Port of San Juan also "warned that sustained gale force winds greater than 39 miles per hour may arrive within 72 hours, and advised pleasure craft 'to seek safe harbor.'"

US Prepares Militarily As North Korea Pledges "Military Equilibrium."

Ron Allen of NBC Nightly News (9/16, story 5, 2:20, Welker) reported "Osan Air Base – just 50 miles from the border, home to many of the 28,000 US military personnel in South Korea – remains on constant state of alert" amid the escalating North Korean threat. The so-called "Dragon Lady," a "top-secret U-2 spy plane" first used to collect intelligence on the former Soviet Union, is "taking on one of America's toughest challenges here, trying to gather intelligence about what Kim Jong Un will do next."

President Trump said "US options to deal with the threat are, quote, 'effective and overwhelming,'" recalled the CBS Weekend News (9/16, story 4, 0:25, Morgan), which reported that North Korea "released photos of its Friday morning missile launch with leader Kim Jong Un watching on as it sailed over Japan and into the Pacific." In the images, published by North Korea's state-run news agency KCNA, Kim was shown "beaming as he watched the missile fly from a moving launcher in photos released by the agency, surrounded by several officials," Reuters (9/15, Kim, Nichols) reports. KCNA quoted Kim Jong Un as saying that the "final goal is to establish the equilibrium of real force" with the US military, and dissuade the Administration from discussing any "military option."

Economists: UN Sanctions Targeting North Korean Garment Exports To Impact Female Employees. The Washington Post (9/17, Fifield) reports "the United Nations Security Council unanimously decided this week to prohibit North Korea from exporting labor and textiles," a move Ambassador Haley said imposes "an almost $800 million hit to its revenue." Diplomats said the ban refers to "textiles," but economists clarified that "it should more accurately be called a 'garment' ban" because the nation "does not export bolts of fabric but instead produces labor-intensive articles of clothing." Unlike previous actions against the regime, the move against "North Korea's garment industry is one that will have wide-reaching ramifications across North Korean society," not just the government. According to Marcus Noland of the Peterson Institute for International Economics, the ban will likely "hurt ordinary people and especially women," who account for about 98 percent of North Koreans employed in the garment industry.

House Considers Bill Targeting Multinational Banks With North Korean Ties. The Hill (9/16, Lane) reports the House Financial Services Committee is reviewing a bill that "would ban any foreign bank that services North Korea's government or regime-connected shell companies from opening a correspondent account with" an American bank. The bill has garnered bipartisan support, and is "currently circulating as a discussion draft, while other panels in both chambers of Congress work on their own offerings." While the measure "could have massive economic implications for the United States and its relationship with China," its supporters maintain that "North Korea's belligerent behavior and recent test of what appeared to be a hydrogen bomb requires a major response." The Hill says China hosts a number of shell companies that the North Korean "regime uses to support itself through money laundering and smuggling," and while the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control, or OFAC, "can list these companies and banks as they're revealed," experts have said China must intensify its efforts in identifying them.

NYTimes: US-China Relations Can Improve By Coordinating Against Climate Change. In an editorial, the New York Times (9/16) concedes "no relationship is more crucial than that between" the US and China, and “President Trump seems to understand all that.” However, the Times says, Trump “has failed to articulate a coherent strategy toward China or to achieve significant progress on the many consequential issues.” He also seems “to lump all China-related issues into one big, menacing ball – trade, tariffs, North Korea – rather than dealing with them separately, and this has added more complications.” The Times posits that the issue of climate change offers “a template for cooperation, and while it involves an issue in which Mr. Trump has no interest, it provides a glimpse of a way forward.”

US Geological Survey

After Disaster Strikes, Science Often Benefits.

The Washington Post (9/16, Yeager) reported that data collected during natural disasters can often help researchers discover better ways to help people in such emergencies. The article mentions “the science done during Hurricane Harvey” as an example. According to the article, “not long after the heavy rains stopped, crews of researchers from the U.S. Geological Survey fanned out across Texas, dropping sensors into streams.”

Tribal Leaders Urge Yellowstone Park Name Changes.

The U.S. News & World Report (9/17) reports that “leaders of Native American tribes gathered this weekend to urge the U.S. government to rename a valley and a mountain in Yellowstone National Park.” Tribal leaders “delivered a petition Saturday to park officials noting their opposition to the names of Hayden Valley and Mount Doane.”

Commentary: National Earthquake Program Is Vital To Utah.

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/17, Arabasz), Walter J. Arabasz, research professor emeritus of geology and geophysics at the University of Utah; M. Leon Berrett, the chair of the Utah Seismic Safety Commission and associate director of operations for Salt Lake County Public Works; Keith Koper, professor of geophysics at the University of Utah and director of the University of Utah Seismograph Stations; and Peter Shearer, a professor of geophysics at U.C. San Diego and president-elect of the Seismological Society of America, warn that “the earthquake threat in Utah is real.” They urge support of a bipartisan bill introduced September 6 in Congress that would reauthorize the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program “to support wide-ranging endeavors to deal with the nation’s earthquake threat.”

As He Prepares To Address UN, Trump Dubs North Korea's Kim Jong-Un "Rocket Man."

The President's tweet Sunday morning mocking North Korean leader Kim Jong-Un as "Rocket Man" is garnering significant media attention. All three networks reported Sunday night on the tweet. Media reports widely note the President's remark comes as he prepares to address the UN General Assembly for the first time on Tuesday and that North Korea is expected to be a central part of his speech.

The AP (9/17, Superville) reports President Trump "mocked" the North Korean leader in a tweet saying he and South Korean President Moon Jae-in "discussed North Korea during their latest telephone conversation Saturday." The CBS Weekend News (9/17, story 5, 2:00, Quijano) said the President "launched a twitter insult at North Korea's leader," and "coin[ed] a new nickname" for him. On NBC Nightly News (9/17, story 3, 2:55, Snow), Kelly O'Donnell said, "Today amid tweets, the President weighed in on a dire threat as he described a call with President Moon of South Korea and taunted North Korea's leader with a new mocking label."

Asked about Trump's description of Kim on Fox News Sunday, National Security Adviser McMaster said "Rocket Man" was "a new one and I think maybe for the president." But, McMaster added, "that's where the rockets are coming from. Rockets, though, we ought to probably not laugh too much about because they do represent a great threat to all." ABC World News Tonight (9/17, story 6, 2:30, Llamas) reported there was "no comment from the White House" on the President's tweet.

USA Today (9/17, Jackson) reports the tweet "came a day before Trump conferences with members of the United States General Assembly, where North Korea's development of nuclear weapons – and its threats to use them against the United States and allies – will be a major topic." The Washington Post (9/17, Nakamura, Morello) similarly says the President's "Twitter snark came two weeks after Kim's regime undertook its biggest nuclear test to date," Politico (9/17, Griffiths) that Trump took "a dig at North Korea's leader," and Townhall (9/17, Meads) that he "issued a new nickname for North Korean potbellied dictator."

NPR (9/17) reports that during their conversation Saturday night, Trump and Moon declared their commitment "to continuing to take steps to strengthen deterrence and defense capabilities and to maximize economic and diplomatic pressure on North Korea," according to the White House. The New York Post (9/17, Moore; Schultz) reports Trump also "signaled that United Nations' sanctions...are working as he referred to 'long gas lines' in North Korea."

The Washington Times (9/17, Richardson) writes, "You know you've run afoul of President Trump when he gives you a nickname." The Times says Trump's "approach represents the opposite of that of President George W. Bush, who gave out dozens of pet names for staffers, family, friends and foreign leaders. In the vast majority of cases, Mr. Bush's nicknames were affectionate, not insulting."

The Washington Post (9/17, Selk) similarly notes that "Rocket Man" is the "latest in a long line of nicknames" created by the President. "Without addressing the geopolitical wisdom of tweet-baiting an unpredictable dictator," The Post notes that "even some of Trump's critics had to admit that he'd come up with a pretty clever name."

ABC World News Tonight (9/17, story 6, 2:30, Llamas) reported President Trump is already in New York City in advance of his address to the UN, where North Korea is expected to take "center stage." ABC's Gloria Riviera noted that "we do not anticipate seeing either Russia's President or China's President – both leaders are key in applying pressure on North Korea, but the President will not have the chance to make his case personally for harsher sanctions."

Reuters (9/17, Nichols) likewise says the nuclear threat posed by North Korea "looms large this week over the" UN General Assembly, where "North Korean diplomats will have a front-row seat...for Trump's speech on Tuesday morning, which will touch on the escalating crisis." National Security Adviser McMaster said Friday, "This is not an issue between the United States and North Korea. This is an issue between the world and North Korea." The CBS Weekend News (9/17, story 5, 2:00, Quijano) too reported that when Trump addresses the General Assembly, Ambassador Haley "said North Korea will be front and center," and the Los Angeles Times (9/17, King) says the gathering is "expected to focus on North Korea's growing nuclear and missile threat."

USA Today (9/17, Jackson) reports that as the President heads to the UN "to meet with world leaders, and many of them are anxious – not just about global national security challenges, but about Trump himself." While the President "hopes to use his first appearance before the UN General Assembly to rally other countries against North Korea's nuclear threats, some world leaders are still reeling from their last interactions with the somewhat testy Trump at global summits earlier this year."

Calling it a “pivotal week” for the President, the Daily Caller (9/17) says Trump’s appearance “will come amidst concerns over North Korea’s missile program, continued unrest in Venezuela, increasing tensions between the US and Russia, the ongoing civil war in Syria, and a whole host of global issues.” He also “has a packed schedule” of meetings with foreign leaders.

On NBC Nightly News (9/17, story 3, 2:55, Snow), Kelly O’Donnell also said the President has “a packed week ahead. [On Monday], the President meets with leaders of Israel and France,” and he’ll be on “center stage Tuesday, where his speech will praise values that bind democratic nations, while also calling for more urgent action.” Secretary of State Tillerson said Sunday, “He’s going to address these specific threats of North Korea, Iran, terrorism, global terrorism, and why it is important that all of us come together and confront these as a unified body.”

According to the Korea Times (9/17, Whan-Woo), Trump will hold also a summit with South Korean President Moon Jae-in and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe Thursday on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in New York. Analysts said they expect the leaders to discuss “possible military options against North Korea.”

The Hill (9/17, Manchester) reports Trump, who once described the UN as “a club for people to get together, talk and have a good time,” is also expected to call for UN reform during his speech Tuesday. Senior level officials who “previewed themes” in Trump’s speech predicted his “call for change will set the tone for US involvement during a packed week of foreign policy.” Ambassador Haley told CNN’s “State of the Union,” “It is a new day at the UN. I think that the pleas he made in terms of trying to see change at the United Nations have been heard, and I think what we’ll do is see him respond to that.”

Reuters (9/17) reports Trump this week will try to “boost support for reforming” the UN, which he once called “a club for people to get together, talk and have a good time.” The Hill (9/17, Shelbourne) reports National Security Adviser McMaster told ABC’s “This Week” that Trump “is going to say the United Nations can’t be effective unless it reforms its bureaucracy and unless it achieves a higher degree of accountability for member states.”

Noting that the two have sometimes appeared at odds with each other, the New York Times (9/17, Sengupta) says a “crucial test” of Haley’s influence on the President “will come this week during Mr. Trump’s maiden visit to the United Nations, the organization he has repeatedly pilloried and whose very reason for being – international cooperation – he has dismissed with his promise of ‘only America first.’” According to the Times, “Many credit Ms. Haley for leading what Richard Gowan, a fellow at the European Council for Foreign Relations, called ‘the administration’s grudging but growing recognition of the UN’s significance.’”

Aides Warn North Korea Will Be “Destroyed” If Threats Continue. Several members of the Administration appeared on Sunday morning shows where they addressed the threat posed by North Korea, among other topics. USA Today (9/17, Jackson) reports Trump’s top aides “warmed up for this week’s series of United Nations meetings by calling for more global pressure on North Korea.”

The AP (9/17, Superville) likewise says the President’s top advisers “said the isolated nation would face destruction unless it shelves its weapons programs and bellicose threats.” Secretary of State Tillerson “held out hope the North would return to the bargaining table,” though Ambassador Haley said the Security Council had “pretty much exhausted” all its options. National Security Adviser McMaster told ABC’s This Week, Kim Jong-Un is “going to have to give up his nuclear weapons because the president has said he’s not going to tolerate this regime threatening the United States and our citizens with a nuclear weapon.” Asked if that meant Trump would launch a military strike, McMaster said “he’s been very clear about that, that all options are on the table.” The Washington Examiner (9/17, Lim) also reports McMaster’s remarks.

Bloomberg News (9/17, John, Niquette) says Tillerson “made a rare appearance on a Sunday talk show” where he stressed that the US strategy is to pursue a “peaceful pressure campaign” based on “what he called the four ‘nos’: not seeking either regime change or collapse in North Korea, an accelerated re-unification of the Korean peninsula, or a reason to send in military forces.”

The Washington Post (9/17, Nakamura, Morello) reports Tillerson told On CBS’ “Face the Nation” Sunday morning, Tillerson said that if diplomacy fails to coerce North Korea to the negotiating table, “our military option will be the only one left. So all of this is backed up by a very strong and resolute military option. But be clear, we seek a peaceful solution to this.” Tillerson also warned on CBS’ Face The Nation that as North Korea continues to test its weapons, the timetable is growing shorter and China will need to step up.

AFP (9/17) says Haley also “kept up the rhetorical pressure ahead” of the General Assembly, asserting that if the North should pose a serious threat to the US or its allies, "North Korea will be destroyed." Haley told CNN's State of the Union, "None of us want war. We wanted to be responsible and go to all diplomatic means to get their attention first. If that doesn't work, General Mattis will take care of it."

Reuters (9/17, Chiacu) reports that asked about President Trump's warning last month that the North Korean threat will be met with "fire and fury," Haley said, "It was not an empty threat. If North Korea keeps on with this reckless behavior, if the United States has to defend itself or defend its allies in any way, North Korea will be destroyed. And we all know that."

The Washington Times (9/17, Richardson) and Politico (9/17, Meyer) similarly report Haley's comments, while the New York Post (9/17, Moore) reports that when asked about President Trump calling the new UN penalties "not a big deal," Haley said 90 percent of North Korea's trade has been cut off, further isolating the rogue regime. "We have economically strangled North Korea at this point and they have said as much. I think what the president's saying is, 'Look we've done all this, but we can do a whole lot more.' Everybody in the international community sees what a big deal it is."

Sen. Mike Rounds said on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures (9/17, Bartiromo) that President Trump "makes it very clear that there are military options, but that we would prefer to have a diplomatic solution that would be better for everyone." He added, "I think also he has to send a message to China that they do have a responsibility here and that they can help us to eliminate the possible use of military forces in the future based upon our own time frame and I hope that that's the message that he's able to convey."

Sen. John McCain said on CBS' Face The Nation (9/17, Dickerson), "This is one of the longest standing crises that we have faced. Three previous administrations have tried to make deals with North Korea in order to stop the steady progress they have been making towards the acquisition of nuclear...weapons and the means to deliver them." He added, "It seems to me China is very important and, yet we can't revisit that same old scenario we had before. So we're going to have to do a number of things, including incredible emphasis on missile defense in South Korea and our own missile defense system."

Julie Hirschfield Davis of the New York Times said on CNN Inside Politics (9/17), "I think some of this is the standard diplomatic maneuvering you see. A diplomatic option, talks, negotiations really have no compelling case to be made for them unless there is a threat of something else if that doesn't yield something."

US Seeking To Identify Sources Of North Korea's Rocket Fuel. The New York Times (9/17, Broad, Sanger) reports that North Korea's recent missile launches were powered by "a rare, potent rocket fuel that American intelligence agencies believe initially came from China and Russia." The US is "scrambling to determine whether those two countries are still providing the ingredients for the highly volatile fuel and, if so, whether North Korea's supply can be interrupted, either through sanctions or sabotage." Some experts believe the US "should focus on the fuel, either to halt it, if possible, or to take advantage of its volatile properties to slow the North's program," but "it may well be too late. Intelligence officials believe that the North's program has advanced to the point where it is no longer as reliant on outside suppliers, and that it may itself be making the deadly fuel."

Report: North Korea Building Nuclear Submarine. The Washington Times (9/17, Taylor) reports Japan's Sekai Nippo – citing an "informed" but unnamed "source familiar with the North Korean situation" – says North Korea is secretly building a nuclear-powered submarine. The newspaper "said the size of the nuclear-powered submarine under construction is unclear, but that the Kim Jong Un regime in Pyongyang hopes to have it deployed within three years." The Times notes that the claim could "not be independently verified" and US intelligence sources "could not immediately be reached for comment."

Bank Of Korea: South Korea Halves Investments In China. Yonhap (9/17, Dong) reports South Korean companies "have reduced their investments in China by nearly half this year as it has become difficult to do business there amid Beijing's growing economic retaliation against Korea's deployment of a US missile defense system." According to the Bank of Korea, South Korea's direct investment in China between January and July of this year was "down 43.7 percent from...the same period last year."

South's Humanitarian Aid Offer To North "Largely Unwelcomed." The Korea Times (9/17, Lee) reports South Korea's plan to offer $8 million in humanitarian assistance to North Korea "is producing a frosty reaction at home and abroad due to its timing." According to the Times, "criticism is mounting over the timing of the announcement, which came only two days" after the UN Security Council adopted a new sanctions on Pyongyang. Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe asked Moon Jae-in “to consider the timing of the proposed aid,” and the US “also expressed considerable discomfort on the matter.”

Media Analyses Consider How Trump’s UN Debut Will Test His Agenda.

On a day when there was limited media coverage of key Administration-related topics, a handful of analyses considered how President Trump’s debut at the UN General Assembly this week will impact his international and domestic agenda.

Typical of the tone of the reporting was the Washington Post (9/16, Gearan, Nakamura), which states that although Trump had once said the UN “risked becoming an irrelevant salon,” his first address to the world boy “will be a test of his ‘America First’ agenda on global engagement, climate change and North Korea, but one topic – Iran – looms largest.” According to the Post, the President’s speech on Tuesday as well as his meetings with foreign leaders “are freighted with expectations that the U.S. leader wants to pull away from the 2015 U.N.-backed nuclear deal with Iran.” Meanwhile, the Post adds that White House officials have “sketched out an ambitious series of events for Trump, including bilateral meetings Monday with French President Emmanuel Macron and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.”

Bloomberg News (9/16, Talev) similarly says the President “will embark on a whirlwind series of meetings next week at the United Nations General Assembly to make two big asks of the world: Stand with us against North Korea, and hold the line against Iran’s nuclear program.” Bloomberg states that “over the course of four days, beginning Monday, Trump will engage in a speed round of diplomacy that may test his patience for the notoriously factionalized, lethargic institution as well as his preference for one-on-one dealmaking in which the U.S. always holds the strongest hand.” On Friday, Ambassador Haley told reporters, “Next week is not going to be short on topics” and he asserted foreign leaders “are all very anxious to hear what he has to say. ... I think that he will make quite an impact.” Haley added that from her review of a draft of the President’s address, “I personally think he slaps the right people, he hugs the right people, and he comes out with the U.S. being very strong in the end.” The AP (9/16, Lemire) reports Haley added, “No one is going to grip and grin. ... The United States is going to work.” National Security Adviser McMaster similarly said Trump “will urge all states to come together to address great dangers’ facing the globe.”

In a front-page article, the New York Times (9/16, A1, Baker) reports McMaster in a preview of the week ahead said the President “would stress ‘sovereignty and accountability’” and “will emphasize longstanding efforts to reform what many Republicans see as the sclerotic and inefficient United Nations organization,” but the Times adds “aides would not say whether he would commit to the traditional level of American financing as Washington remains in arrears,” with Haley saying only, “You’ll have to wait and see.” The Times details Trump’s schedule and mentions Vice President Pence will stand in for a meeting with new Pakistan Prime Minister Shahid Khaqan Abbasi while “many will watch Secretary of State Rex W. Tillerson, who has been overshadowed by Ms. Haley, to see if he has influence or is on the way out.”

While “the spotlight will be on...Trump and France’s new leader, Emmanuel Macron, who will both be making their first appearance at the General Assembly,” the AP (9/16, Lederer) reports, “it will be North Korea, which Secretary-General Antonio Guterres calls ‘the most dangerous crisis that we face today,’ that will be most carefully watched.” According to the AP, “No official event addressing Pyongyang’s relentless campaign to develop nuclear weapons capable of hitting the United States is on the U.N. agenda, but it is expected to be the No. 1 issue for most leaders.” The AP adds “not far behind will be the plight of Myanmar’s Rohingya Muslims, victims of what Guterres calls a campaign of ethnic cleansing.” However, the AP says world leaders will also address the threat posed by terrorism and climate change, as well as a US-led “declaration on U.N. reforms” backed by over 100 other countries, “but Russia’s U.N. Ambassador Vassily Nebenzia said Friday that ‘we are not sure we will sign this declaration.’”

NBC Nightly News (9/16, story 6, 1:05, Welker) Kelly O’Donnell similarly admitted that “the stakes are already high” for the President, whose “message will be serious, saying that [North Korea] is a global issue, not an American-only problem.” O’Donnell added Trump will “host a high-profile lunch with the leaders of Japan and South Korea, whose nations are most vulnerable in all of this, and Ambassador Haley says recent sanctions need some more time to determine if they can have any impact on the regime.”

Politico Analysis: Trump’s UN Speech “May Provide Some Affirmation” For Sessions. When President Trump speaks with world leaders this week about “overhauling the United Nations, it may provide some affirmation for a struggling member of the president’s team: Jeff Sessions,” Politico (9/16, Palmeri) reports, as “while the attorney general’s relationship with his boss has been fraught since Sessions recused himself from the Russia probe, it was the former Alabama senator's conviction that the New York real estate developer was the only person who could successfully modernize the U.N. that originally brought them together more than a decade ago." Politico recounted Sessions "invited Trump to testify before a Senate subcommittee in 2005 as Congress was considering whether to extend a $1.2 billion loan to the UN for modernizing its decrepit headquarters on Manhattan's East River." At the time, "Trump – then riding high on his 'Apprentice' fame – told Congress to let him take on the UN renovation rather than making a loan."

US Reiterates Position On Paris Climate Accord Unchanged. After representatives from roughly 30 nations, including the US, China, and Canada, met in Montreal "to discuss the most-sweeping accord to date to protect the environment," European Union's climate chief, Miguel Arias Canete, suggested that the US is "willing to re-engage under the Paris agreement but they want to check some of the terms under which they agreed to participate previously," Bloomberg News (9/17, Krukowska) reports. Canete added, "We assume that means that the U.S. will revisit at some time the targets put forward by the previous administration." Canete's assertion "was quickly denied by the White House." White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders tweeted, "Our position on the Paris agreement has not changed. @POTUS has been clear, US withdrawing unless we get pro-America terms."

Kelly O'Donnell of NBC Nightly News (9/16, story 7, 0:55, Welker) reported that at the UN General Assembly this week, French President Emmanuel Macron will push "other leaders this week to begin to implement the" Paris climate agreement. However, O'Donnell added "so far, other world leaders say the time for negotiating is long past, so that will increase pressure on President Trump."

Wife Of Princeton Student Imprisoned In Iran Renews Call For Diplomatic Resolution. Hua Qu, the wife of former Princeton University student and naturalized US citizen Xiyue Wang, discussed in detail with Reuters (9/16, Ax, Torbati) her husband's espionage conviction and 10-year prison sentence in Iran. The interview – Qu's first extensive one since Wang's arrest 13 months ago – signaled "a shift in strategy for those closest to Wang," as "Princeton and the Obama and Trump administrations kept Wang's detention confidential in hopes of brokering a release on humanitarian grounds." Qu is now "speaking out to encourage Iran and the United States to resolve her husband's case diplomatically," potentially at the United Nations General Assembly. A State Department spokeswoman said of Wang's case, "This administration is redoubling efforts to bring home all Americans unjustly detained abroad."

Trump Pledges US Support To UK After Terror Attack, Pushes For Expanding Travel Ban.

ISIS has claimed responsibility for the bombing of a London metro station early Friday morning, though local police expressed skepticism. The terror attack was covered as the lead story on all of the network and cable news outlets, which focused heavily on President Trump's remarks citing the attack as justification for his travel restrictions and British Prime Minister Theresa May's subsequent criticism of his comments. Reporting also considered the threat of additional, imminent attacks, as the UK raised the threat level to "critical" in the wake of the bombing.

The New York Times (9/15, A1, Landler, Haberman) reports on its front page that "Trump seized on a terrorist attack in London on Friday to promote his ban on travel to the United States by Muslims and, in the process, ran afoul of Britain by claiming without evidence that the assailants had been "in the sights" of the British police." The Times adds that in his "fusillade of early morning tweets, Mr. Trump cited the chaotic scene in a London Underground station as Exhibit A for his hard-line policies." The Times labels this as "the latest episode in which Mr. Trump was at odds with Britain over sensitive security issues."

NBC Nightly News (9/15, story 2, 2:15, Holt) White House correspondent Hallie Jackson similarly reported that "hours after the explosion in London," the President issued an "eruption of tweets," which Reuters (9/15, Heavey) reports started with a denunciation of the attack. Trump said, "Another attack in London by a loser terrorist. These are sick and demented people who were in the sights of Scotland Yard. Must be proactive!" He continued, "Loser terrorists must be dealt with in a much tougher manner. The internet is their main recruitment tool which we must cut off & use better!"

However, CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:09 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said that he also seized "on the incident to push his reposed travel ban, targeting merely all refugees as well as people from six Muslim-majority countries, a ban that is facing several legal challenges." Reuters (9/15, Heavey) reports Trump's comments comes in advance of "a key Supreme Court hearing next month on the constitutionality of his executive order on the ban."

The Washington Post (9/15, Wagner, Zapotosky) reports Trump said, "The travel ban into the United States should be far larger, tougher and more specific-but stupidly, that would not be politically correct!" The Post adds the President later "took credit for progress by his administration in combating the Islamic State terrorist group, asserting that more had been done in the past nine months than under Obama's eight years in office." The Washington Times (9/15, Persons) reports Trump tweeted, "We have made more progress in the last nine months against ISIS than the Obama Administration has made in 8 years. Must be proactive & nasty!"

According to Washington Post (9/15, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump, "it didn't take President Trump long to turn Friday morning's terrorist attack in Britain to his political advantage." Bump added, "This is not the first time that we've seen this pattern from Trump." He continued that the President is "frequently...quick to ascribe incidents of violence to terrorism, particularly acts that he believes to have been committed by Islamist terrorists. He is much slower, however, to weigh in on incidents in which Muslims or his political opponents have been targeted."

The AP (9/15, Lucey) similarly contended that "Trump's rapid reaction Friday contrasts with a statement he made defending his muted response to the violence in Charlottesville last month, when he said he wanted to ensure he had the facts and not make a 'quick statement.'" In a separate Washington Post (9/15, Bump) analysis, Bump said the "early-morning tweets Friday had a common theme: Any enemies must be punished." Bump added that the enemies highlighted on Friday "included the perpetrator of a terrorist attack on London's subway which, happily, didn't result in any fatalities," as well as ISIS and the television network ESPN.

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (9/15, Miller) reports that speaking to reporters at the White House Rose Garden later on Friday, Trump "called the London subway bombing 'a terrible thing' and repeated his call a tougher travel ban to keep terrorists out of the U.S." He asserted, "It keeps going and going, and we have to be very smart and we have to be very, very tough – perhaps we're not nearly tough enough. ... We have to be smarter." Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:39 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Trump telling reporters, "America and our allies will never be intimidated." He continued, "We will defend our people, our nations, and our civilization from all who dare to threaten our way of life. This includes the regime of North Korea which has once again shown its utter contempt for its neighbors and for the entire world community."

CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:08 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported National Security Adviser McMaster, "later trying to explain what Trump meant," told reporters: "What the President is communicating is that obviously all of our law enforcement efforts are focused on this terrorist threat for years. He didn't mean anything beyond that."

Leading the CBS Evening News (9/15, lead story, 2:25, Mason), Correspondent Charlie D'Agata reported Trump's comments "drew a sharp rebuke from" the British Prime Minister. May told George Stephanopoulos of ABC World News Tonight (9/15, story 3, 1:35, Muir), "I don't think it's helpful for anyone to speculate on what is an ongoing investigation." She added, "The police and the security services are doing the work necessary to discover the full circumstances of this cowardly attack that's taken place, and to identify all those who are responsible." AFP (9/15, Beatty) reports Trump's comments were also "described as 'unhelpful' by London's Metropolitan Police, as well as by Nick Timothy, May's former chief of staff." Timothy tweeted, "True or not – and I'm sure he doesn't know – this is so unhelpful from leader of our ally and intelligence partner." According to AFP, "after his tweets, and with ties apparently under strain, Trump spoke with May to convey "his sympathies and prayers" for victims of the London attack, the White House said in a statement."

Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Baier) White House correspondent John Roberts reported that a spokesperson for May said Trump called the Prime Minister "to offer his condolences over this morning's cowardly attack in London" while Reuters (9/15, Heavey, Brice) reports the White House said that in their phone call, the President "expressed support for those injured and 'pledged to continue close collaboration with the United Kingdom to stop attacks worldwide targeting innocent civilians and to combat extremism.'" Bloomberg News (9/15, Ross, Penny) reports that during the call, May "complained directly" to Trump over his tweets, "according to a U.K. government official familiar with the conversation."

On CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:13 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Rep. Ruben Gallego said "the fact that it wasn't a suicide bomber should tell us a lot. Also, it kind of tells you about the nature of what is happening with ISIS. ISIS is losing the territorial boundaries that it used to claim under its big caliphate. So now in order to have relevance within the, you know, the terrorist world or at least those who are drawn towards terrorism, whether it is funding or to go fight, they are trying to export their method of battle and war through more terrorism unless the actual holding of territory. And the way to fight this, obviously, is going to be with greater integration of our intelligence systems, both American and British, as well as the greater European in general." Gallego urged US intelligence officials to also work more closely with Muslim communities, which he argued have been instrumental in thwarting previous attempts on American soil.

Sen. Ben Cardin told CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:12 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that whether ISIS did in fact orchestrate the attack is unclear at this point. He added that the attack is "not the typical MO that we've seen in terrorist attacks in Europe; however, we'll wait to see exactly what the circumstances are. We know that as ISIS' caliphate, its geographical territory, is shrinking, that there is a lot more interest in what's happening in this type of terrorist episodes. So ISIS will claim credit, even if they had nothing to do with it." He stressed the need "to share intelligence information to try to prevent these types of things from occurring." Cardin added that he is "absolutely" concerned about the possibility of future, imminent attacks both in Britain and potentially the US. Cardin added that Trump's remarks on the attack were "not appropriate, and the fact that the National Security Adviser had to try to explain what the President meant, meant he shouldn't have said what he did."

Former State Department spokesman John Kirby told CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:41 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that while it may be "too early to say whether" Trump's remarks "hurt, it certainly didn't help any and it was inappropriate. This was hours after, not even hours after this, when he tweeted that," forcing May "to respond. And she was right to slap him back for that" because "speculating out there is certainly not helping authorities on the ground trying to solve this and to keep the city safe."

CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:31 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) chief political analyst Gloria Borger said she believes Trump, in his comments, implied "that maybe Scotland Yard wasn't doing its job, because they knew who this was." Former CIA counterterrorism official Philip Mudd said Trump's remarks that "we need to be proactive" is the part that is most insulting to British intelligence officers. He commented, "The British Security Service and British police are far advanced in terms of intelligence and policing. What that says to an intelligence officer is, you're not as good as you should be. They're better than we are. A little humility would help there."

Explosion On London Metro Train Injures At Least 29. Reporting from Parson Green Tube Station, the location of the attack, senior international correspondent Matthew Chance of CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported that the "device exploded at 8:20 local time on that metro station – tube train, as we call them here – at the height of rush hour. There were scenes of panic as people tried to escape the carriages onto the platform outside." Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:05 p.m. EDT, Baier) reported witnesses described "a wall of fire from the homemade bomb," which elicited "panic" on the "crowded train." Correspondent Kitty Logan said the device did not fully detonate, potentially "sparing many lives."

However, the Wall Street Journal (9/15, Mancini, Kantchev, Douglas) reports 29 people were injured in the attack, which a front-page New York Times (9/15, A1, Chan, Kingsley, Yeginsu) article says "was the fifth terrorist attack in Britain this year and the first to hit London at its most vulnerable point – mass transit – since the 2005 bombings that killed 52."

CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) terrorism analyst Paul Cruickshank reported ISIS released two statements – "one from its affiliate news agency and one from ISIS proper" – that both claimed responsibility for the attack. One statement said "it was a detachment from the Islamic State that carried it out, and another saying it was soldiers of the caliphate that did this and planted multiple devices." He clarified that no evidence confirms "that there were multiple devices that were planted, and ISIS really hasn't offered any evidence to back up its claim that it had responsibility for this attack."

Leading ABC World News Tonight (9/15, lead story, 3:05, Muir), correspondent Ian Pannell commented, "It takes a lot to spook people here, but the news that ISIS say that they've planted bombs across the city will surely mean that people will sleep less well tonight." Leading NBC Nightly News (9/15, lead story, 2:30, Holt), senior national security analyst Juan Zarate remarked, "Though the attack was relatively ineffective, it is part of a series of quickening attacks in London that not only worries officials in London and the UK, but also in Europe and in the United States."

CNN's Situation Room's (9/15, 5:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Chance reported investigators believe that the perpetrator or perpetrators had attempted to construct "a sophisticated bomb" because it "had a timer on it. We've seen that very rarely." He added the device was also "designed to cause maximum damage and mass casualties, and it used this highly explosive substance called TATP," which has been used in "a host of other attacks." Chance explained, "One of the reasons for that is it can be easily manufactured from normal household products like household bleach that can be readily bought at supermarkets. That's what makes it even more difficult for the authorities to pin down and try to trace who it was." CNN's Situation Room's (9/15, 6:03 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Chance said British authorities said "they're making excellent progress in their investigation, but the details of that progress, they're not disclosing to us. They say because of the nature of their investigation, there is a heavy covert element. So we're still waiting for news this evening on any suspects or any arrests that may be made."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (9/15, Ross-Thomas, Penny) reports May in a televised statement "announced the U.K. terror threat level has been raised to critical, its highest level," following the assessment by the Joint Terrorism Analysis Centre (JTAC) "that further attacks may be imminent." Reuters (9/15, Holton, Schomberg) reports May said that in the days ahead, "military personnel will replace police officers on guard duties at certain protected sites that are not accessible to the public." The AP (9/15, Lawless, Katz) reports May called the deployment of military troops to help the police a "proportionate and sensible step."

In the lead CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) story, Wolf Blitzer reported London police have categorized the attack as "a terrorist incident," and have launched a manhunt "with hundreds of detectives backed by Britain's intelligence service" to locate suspects. The Washington Post (9/15, A1, Booth, Adam) says in a front-page article that "as of Friday evening, authorities had given no details on possible suspects," though British media "said that investigators had images of a suspect from closed-circuit television." In the lead story for the second hour of CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), correspondent Brian Todd said London Police Commissioner Cressida Dick announced the department has "received about 77 images from the public, but they are pleading with people to come forward with more photos and videos to help them piece together what happened and who is responsible."

British Police Arrest Suspected Knifeman Near Birmingham Tube Station. Reuters (9/15, Pitas) cites the Birmingham \(UK\) Mail in reporting British police on Friday "arrested a suspected knifeman near Birmingham New Street Station."

UK Officials Aware Of Threat To Public Spaces, But Struggle To Secure Mass Transit Services. The Wall Street Journal (9/15, Gross) reports that Britain's National Risk Register on Thursday cautioned it was highly plausible that a terrorist attack could target crowded public spaces, but the Wall Street Journal (9/15, Wall, Macdonald) in a separate article reports that despite spending decades in an attempt to secure mass transit services, the UK and governments worldwide continue to face challenges in protecting such vulnerable infrastructure.

Major US Cities Enhance Security On Mass Transit Services, Tourist Attractions. "The bombing of a packed London commuter train on Friday prompted officials to beef up security on New York City's subway system, major commuter rail networks, at airports and other locations," Reuters (9/15, Szekely, Dobuzinskis) reports, and "the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, which operates mass-transit lines in New York City and the Long Island Rail Road and Metro-North commuter lines, said it was closely monitoring the investigation of the fiery blast that injured 29 people in a West London underground station." In a statement, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo "said...he had also directed authorities to increase security at airports, bridges, tunnels and other sensitive locations across the state."

ABC World News Tonight's (9/15, story 2, 0:55, Muir) Linsey Davis reported that the New York City Police Department also said Friday it is "not taking any chances in the event of a copycat. Unfortunately, they know this drill well and once again they are beefing up security. That, of course, includes bomb-sniffing dogs, increased police presence, heavy weapons teams. They say there have been no direct threats to New York City, but they're also monitoring intelligence and asking people to remain vigilant. The governor is calling for increased security at bridges, tunnels, area airports, and mass transportation. New York City is, of course, not alone." According to Davis, the Los Angeles Police Department is similarly "increasing security on buses, on trains, and at major tourist attractions. DC police say they're telling riders to remain vigilant."

On the CBS Evening News (9/15, story 2, 2:05, Mason), NYPD Deputy Commissioner of Intelligence and Counterterrorism John Miller commented, "In New York, we live with the reality that we are the most-targeted city in the United States by terrorist plots. We have a great relationship with the Joint Terrorism Task Force, our FBI partners, and together we've managed to thwart almost 100 percent of the plots that have been levied against us since 9/11/2001. We don't kid ourselves, though: There's no such thing as total protection in a free society." He added that the threat is "something of great concern to us, something that we follow every day, and something that we believe we've prepared for as well as we can."

Trump Warns Of "Effective And Overwhelming" Response To North Korean Threat.

President Trump on Friday vowed an "effective and overwhelming" response to North Korea over the launch of a missile towards Japan. While focused on the UK terror attack, the network newscasts nonetheless devoted six and a half minutes combined to highlighting the tough talk from Trump, Defense Secretary Mattis, Secretary of State Tillerson, National Security Adviser McMaster, and Ambassador Haley.

ABC World News Tonight (9/15, story 4, 0:45, Muir) reported the White House is talking "tough" after "North Korea's latest provocation," as Administration officials indicated "they are still giving diplomacy and sanctions a chance, but adding the US does have other plans at the ready." CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:08 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) reported the President arrived in New Jersey "just a few minutes ago," but before he left Joint Base Andrews, Trump addressed "this North Korea threat."

CNN's Situation Room's (9/15, 5:08 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Athena Jones reported, "Speaking at Joint Base Andrews just before departing for New Jersey, the President said America's military options are robust. He called them both effective and overwhelming, should they be needed to respond to threats from North Korea. He said America and her allies will never be intimidated, and that North Korea has once again shown its utter contempt for its neighbors and the entire world community."

CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:11 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast Trump, who when asked whether he is "running out of diplomatic options" responded, "No." At Joint Base Andrews, the President "talked up the country's military might." Said Trump, "When our enemies hear the F-35 engines, when they're roaring overhead, their souls will tremble and they will know the day of reckoning has arrived." The AP (9/15, Superville) reports Trump said the North Korean regime "has once again shown its 'utter contempt' for its neighbors and for the entire world community" and asserted he is "more confident than ever, after seeing the military hardware on base, that U.S. options for addressing the threat from North Korea 'are both effective and overwhelming.'"

AFP (9/15) reports McMaster told a White House briefing on Friday that Trump "will host a lunch with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and South Korea's Moon Jae-in on Thursday on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly." McMaster said the "most recent launch demonstrates...this is one of the world's most urgent and dangerous security problems." However, according to AFP, "McMaster sent a mixed message Friday, insisting that the US retained a 'military option' in dealing with North Korea even while calling on 'everyone to do everything we can to address the global problem short of war.'"

CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:49 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast McMaster asserting, "For those who have said and are commenting on the lack of a military option: There is a military option. Now, it's not what we would prefer to do." The AP (9/15, Riechmann) reports McMaster warned the US has "run out of road" to deal with North Korea while Reuters (9/15, Mason) reports he conceded the US "was approaching the limit of what sanctions and diplomacy can accomplish in terms of reigning in North Korea's weapons program."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (9/15, Sonne, Wong) reports Ambassador Haley hinted the US was willing to consider military solutions. In video footage broadcast by Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:43 p.m. EDT, Baier), Ambassador Haley warned, "What we are seeing is they continue to be provocative, they continue to be reckless. And at that point, there's not a whole lot the Security Council is going to be able to do from here when you've cut 90 percent of the trade and 30 percent of the oil. So, having said that, I have no problem kicking it to General Mattis, because I think he has plenty of options."

According to Reuters (9/15, Stewart), Mattis said Friday that he believes the latest launch "will further North Korea's isolation, diplomatic and economic isolation, because more and more nations are realizing there's simply no collaboration [by Pyongyang] with the international community."

Reuters (9/15, Heavey, Mitchell) reports Secretary of State Tillerson on Friday "said...that North Korea's continuing missile tests threaten the entire world and stressed the United States was working closely with regional allies Japan and South Korea on the problem." Speaking to the Community of Democracies, Tillerson said, "In East Asia, an increasingly aggressive and isolated regime in North Korea threatens democracies in South Korea, Japan, and more importantly, and more recently, has expanded those threats to the United States, endangering the entire world." Tillerson added, "We first look to our regional allies South Korea and Japan. By working with them and other democratic partners, we continue to build consensus at the United Nations Security Council to create a united international front that upholds our values and strives to make us safer." Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:07 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Tillerson asserting, "North Korea is now a global threat, and requires a global response from all nations."

Reuters (9/15, Miles) reports US disarmament ambassador Robert Wood at a news conference in Geneva on Friday said the Administration “wants to exhaust every diplomatic option on North Korea’s nuclear and missile programs, and to see loopholes in the North Korean sanctions regime closed.” Wood asserted, “Sanctions have not had a real opportunity to bite as hard as we would like them to bite, and that comes from the fact that they have not been fully implemented.” He added, “We are not taking any options off the table but...we are pursuing the diplomatic track right now ... We want to exhaust all diplomatic options.”

However, Politico (9/15, McCaskill) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham on Friday criticized the Administration’s “response to Kim Jong Un’s saber-rattling.” In a series of tweets, Graham said, “Clearly North Korea does not give a damn about UN sanctions or tough talk.” He added, “It is time to more forcefully back up our diplomatic efforts with the threat of a credible military option.” Graham continued, “North Korea believes there is no downside to pushing the envelope regarding their missile and nuclear programs.” He concluded, “It is up to the Trump Administration and the world to make North Korea believe otherwise.”

Rep. Adam Kinzinger said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/15, 5:22 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that because North Korea appears to have the technological capabilities to strike Guam, “it is a game changer.” He said the US and its allies have shown “a good, professional restraint for these massive provocations,” but that “it’s worrisome as they perfect their ICBM technology” and “are now within the continental United States. There are still key things they need to work out. But the pace they’ve been showing of development” suggests “they’re probably not far from having a completely workable, reentry-available ICBM.” When asked whether the US should shoot down North Korean missiles, Kinzinger said that “it may come to that point,” in large part because Pyongyang has “made the threat” against Japan, Guam, and the continental US.

Reuters (9/15, Heavey) reports a Gallup poll of 1,022 “US adults” (9/6-9/10) released Friday “found that 58 percent said they would favor military action against North Korea if the United States cannot accomplish its goals by more peaceful means first.” However, Reuters says the response “was largely split along political party lines. Among Republicans, 82 percent would back military action compared with 37 percent among Democrats. Among political independents, 56 backed such action.”

UN Secretary-General, Security Council Condemn North Korea Missile Launch. Reuters (9/15, Nichols) reports UN Secretary-General António Guterres in a statement “condemned North Korea’s missile launch over Japan on Friday and said he would discuss the situation at the United Nations General Assembly’s gathering next week.” He called upon the leaders of the DPRK “to cease further testing, comply with the relevant Security Council resolutions, and allow space to explore the resumption of sincere dialogue on denuclearization.”

In addition, the AP (9/15, Lederer, Tong-Hyung) reports the United Nations Security Council “strongly condemned the North’s ‘highly provocative’ ballistic missile test.” According to the AP, the Security Council “accused North Korea of undermining regional peace and security by launching its latest missile over Japan and said its nuclear and missile tests ‘have caused grave security concerns around the world’ and threaten all 193 U.N. member states.”

Kim: North Korea Seeking Military “Equilibrium” With US. Reuters (9/15, Kim, Nichols) reports that according to the North Korean state news agency KCNA, Kim Jong Un said his regime’s “final goal is to establish the equilibrium of real force with the U.S. and make the U.S. rulers dare not talk about military option.” Kim additionally said, “The combat efficiency and reliability of Hwasong-12 were thoroughly verified,” and asserted “the North’s goal of completing its nuclear force had ‘nearly reached the terminal.’”

David Martin of the CBS Evening News (9/15, story 3, 2:15, Mason) reported, “Until now, North Korea had tested its intermediate- and intercontinental-range missiles from fixed launchpads. This time, for the first time, an intermediate-range missile was launched from a mobile transporter, a significant development since it enables Kim Jong Un to fire a long-range weapon with little or no warning. In this case, though, spy satellites had seen the missile being rolled into position at an airfield near Pyongyang well before the actual launch, as if Kim was deliberately trying to avoid catching the US off guard.”

CNN’s Situation Room (9/15, 5:50 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) correspondent Will Ripley said “reports breaking right now” citing North Korea’s state-run KCNA outlet are claiming “that Kim Jong-un, the North Korean supreme leader, presided over this missile launch of what we have already believed to be a Hwasong-12. KCNA apparently confirming now their intermediate range missile was fired from the Pyongyang Sunan airport. They fired it right from their capitol, 2,300 miles over Japan’s northern island of Hokkaido.” He said the range is the longest ever fired from North Korea, leaving Guam “easily within striking range.” Clearly, Ripley said, “this is a strong message of defiance,” and “North Korea feels this is a reliable missile to hit the military targets in South Korea, Japan, and Guam.”

NBC Nightly News (9/15, story 3, 2:20, Holt) chief foreign correspondent Richard Engel reported, “It was an intermediate-range ballistic missile launched around 6:30 a.m. local time. It traveled 2,300 miles over northern Japan, landing in the Pacific Ocean. The US military said it posed no threat to American territory; Guam is far to the south, which Kim Jong Un has threatened before. South Korea responded to the launch by firing two missiles of its own into the sea, but at the same distance they’d have to travel to hit the North Korean launch site. Hours later, the UN convened an emergency session just days after imposing new sanctions watered down by Russia and China.”

China Deflects Blame For North Korea’s Belligerence, Criticizes South Korea. The Wall Street Journal (9/15, Wong) reports that within hours of the missile launch, a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry condemned North Korea but insisted Beijing lacks the ability to solve the crisis while a Wall Street Journal (9/15, Browne) analysis says that Chinese leaders have instead been portraying South Korea as the party responsible for North Korea’s actions because they are afraid the US will one day turn Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (Thaad) against its military.

However, Ben Tracy of the CBS Evening News (9/15, story 4, 1:10, Mason) acknowledged, “This idea that China can somehow call up Kim Jong Un and just tell him to cut it out is not realistic. There is not a good relationship between these two countries right now. And if you need proof of that, there is no picture of Kim Jong Un and Chinese President Xi Jinping, and that is because the two have never met.” However, he added China “does not want to see the regime collapse, mainly because it does not want a united Korea that would be aligned with the West. That could mean US military on its border.”

Japan Reevaluates Military As Aid Dispute With South Korea Intensifies. According to a front-page New York Times (9/15, A1, Rich) article, Japanese officials “who may have considered intercepting the missile faced two immediate constraints – the country’s missile defenses are limited, and the Constitution limits military action only to instances of self-defense.” The Times reports these “constraints have weighed heavily on the debate in recent weeks over how Japan should be responding to the North’s rapidly advancing nuclear program, including what role it should play as an American ally and to what extent it should upgrade its armed forces.”

Meanwhile, the New York Times (9/15, Sang-Hun) reports Japan and South Korea “differed on Friday over providing humanitarian aid to North Korea’s malnourished children and pregnant women, hours after that country launched a ballistic missile over Japan.” While Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and South Korean President Moon Jae-in in a phone call “shar[ed] their condemnation of North Korea’s latest missile test and vow[ed] to work together to bring about more sanctions against the country, Mr. Moon’s office said,” Abe “took issue with South Korea’s plan to donate $8 million to two United Nations humanitarian programs in North Korea. He asked Mr. Moon to reconsider the timing of the aid.” In an analysis, the Wall Street Journal (9/15, Martin, Jun) reports that while Moon has broke from his recent predecessors and pushed for peace talks with North Korea, his initiatives have been unsuccessful so far.

Russia: North Korea’s Violated UN Resolutions With Missile Launch. Reuters (9/15, Lowe) cites the Interfax news agency in reporting a spokeswoman for the Russian Foreign Ministry “said on Friday that North Korea’s latest missile test violated United Nations Security Council resolutions.” Meanwhile, Reuters (9/15, Lowe) reports the Kremlin in a statement Friday said Russian President Vladimir Putin and French President Emmanuel Macron spoke by phone the latest missile launch, in which they both “condemned Pyongyang’s ‘provocative’ actions, which risk leading to ‘irreversible consequences,’ the Kremlin said.”

Former US Official: North Korean Threat A Way Of Life For South Korea. Sue Mi Terry, a former CIA analyst and Korea director at the National Security Council, says in a Wall Street Journal (9/15, Terry) op-ed that while the US panics over North Korea’s intent to expand its nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs, Seoul has remained surprisingly calm as it bolsters its military. Terry explains that South Koreans have lived with the North Korean threat for decades – unlike the fear of President Trump dragging their nation into a war, which could threaten US-South Korean relations.

White House: Trump Supports Making Deal On DACA, Provided Border Security, Wall Are Included.

CNN’s Situation Room’s (9/15, 5:12 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Athena Jones reported President Trump “may be signaling his willingness” to work with Democratic lawmakers to protect “young people brought to the United States illegally as children” under the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA, program, “but the move is causing a stir among some conservative supporters." White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters that Trump "supports making an agreement on DACA, but that would have to include massive border security and interior enforcements. The President continues to push for those things. He's still one hundred percent committed to the wall, and we're going to be laying out what our specific priorities and principles are in that front in the next seven to ten days."

White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short told CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:23 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that a dinner between Trump and House Minority Leader Pelosi and Senate Majority Leader Schumer on the matter "was very cordial," and even "jovial, but there's not a deal in place. There was a beginning of a conversation in place." Short added that the President and White House believe former President Obama's "ruling was in fact unlawful, which was why it was overturned. Obama did that because he was frustrated Congress didn't act on it. So the President is trying to pull the sides together to say, we need to solve this problem." Short added Trump "feels that these are 800,000 people who came to the United States of no fault of their own who are productive and working in America's society. He wants to find a solution for them."

On CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 6:37 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), political analyst Ryan Lizza said Trump "says he wants them to stay, which is not the opinion of some other people in the Administration, so that's a clear indication that that's the White House's view on that right now. Jeff Sessions doesn't believe that. And I thought he was very expansive in how he wanted a deal. There weren't a lot of red lines being drawn in terms of what could be in a potential immigration deal. It sounded like they are very much in deal-making mode. They wanted to put all the White House's immigration proposals out on the table and see if they can come up with some broader package."

Chief political analyst Gloria Borger of CNN's Situation Room (9/15, 5:40 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said details of the purported agreement on DACA – specifically, whether DREAMers will have a path to citizenship – are unclear beyond "the fact that they have agreed in principle." Senior political analyst Mark Preston said if DREAMers "do not get citizenship and they're allowed to stay in this country, what we have effectively done is created another class of people, and we have created a class system at that point. That is so un-American in many ways. I just don't understand how you can allow somebody to stay here but say you can't become a citizen."

Trump Tweets That "Chain Migration" Cannot Be Included In Immigration Legislation. The AP (9/15) reports that President Trump "is reiterating his support for a plan that would curb legal immigration and shift the nation toward a system that would place an emphasis on merit and skills over family ties." Trump tweeted, "CHAIN MIGRATION cannot be allowed to be part of any legislation on Immigration!" The tweet comes amid discussions between Trump and congressional Democrats on a deal to preserve protections for DACA recipients. Reuters (9/15, Heavey) says that "chain migration" is a term used "to refer to citizens or permanent residents sponsoring relatives or the clustering of certain immigrants in the same areas."

Fox News' Special Report (9/15, 6:13 p.m. EDT, Baier) reported that the tweet came amid "some of the GOP pushback." Despite the uproar, correspondent Bret Baier said, "the deal looks like it's moving forward."

White House: "Priorities And Principles" For Immigration To Come In Seven To 10 Days. Politico (9/15, Conway) reports that press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders announced on Friday that the White House "plans to lay out its 'specific priorities and principles' for an immigration deal in seven to 10 days." After Schumer and Pelosi said a deal had been reached to protect former DACA recipients, President Trump "first denied that he had reached a deal with them, but later acknowledged they had discussed such an arrangement." The article also quotes Sen. Bernie Sanders, who said that Trump is "focused on making sure that in the efforts of these ongoing conversations between both Democrats and Republicans that we deliver on responsible immigration reform," but that a deal had not been finalized.

Ryan: Bipartisan Majority Exists To Protect DACA Recipients. The AP (9/15, Daly) reports House Speaker Ryan said Friday that "there's a sweet spot" in Congress for majority support to protect current DACA recipients, following a statement by President Trump that he was "fairly close" to an agreement with congressional Democrats on the issue. Ryan said that any such legislation would be paired with border-strengthening measures, and that "While we do this [legislative fix for young immigrants] we have a border problem we've got to fix." Ryan cautioned that Democrats "will have to stomach" that an immigration bill is likely to be perceived as a political victory for Trump, adding that it would be "a real mistake" for Democrats to oppose the bill simply because they dislike Trump."

NYTimes: Trump's Compassionate Deal Not "A Pivot Toward Principles." A New York Times

(9/15) editorial considers whether the deal President Trump reached with Democratic lawmakers this week “to enshrine into law protections for young illegal immigrants brought to the United States as children” signals “the arrival of a new, compassionate, capable” Trump. The Times laments, “Sadly, probably not,” because the President “is often transactional and capricious,” and thus “there must be an angle.” The Times concludes in warning, “No one should cheer Mr. Trump’s latest moves as a pivot toward principles. So far, his main operating principle seems to be service to himself.”

Cassidy: “48 Or 49” Republicans Back Plan To Replace ACA With Block Grants.

The Washington Times (9/17, Howell) reports that with time running out to replace the ACA with just 50 votes, Senators pushing a plan to replace the law with state block grants “are making real noise...insisting they are just one or two votes shy and that President Trump can nudge their last-gasp bill to victory.” Sen. Bill Cassidy, who co-wrote the legislation with Sen. Lindsey Graham said Friday, “We are thinking that we can get this done by Sept. 30.” Cassidy “said his informal whip count stands at ‘48 or 49’ Republican votes.” However, Sen. Rand Paul “announced Friday that he is staunchly opposed to the bill, lengthening the odds of success.” Democrat leaders, meanwhile, “are rallying Obamacare’s defenders to stamp out a revived threat to their signature law.” In a tweet over the weekend, Senate Minority Leader Schumer wrote, “Trumpcare is back & Senate GOP has until Sept 30 to pass their bill. ... We need your voices more than ever!”

Politico (9/17, Everett, Dawsey) says Senate Majority Leader McConnell and GOP leaders “are seriously considering voting” on the proposal, according to “congressional and Trump administration sources said.” While a final decision has not been made, McConnell “has told his caucus that if the bill...has the support of at least 50 of the 52 GOP senators, he will bring it to the floor, Graham and Cassidy say.” Politico says the move “would be a last-ditch attempt to repeal Obamacare before the GOP’s power to pass health care legislation through a party-line vote in the Senate expires on Sept. 30.”

E.J. Dionne writes in his Washington Post (9/17) column that before “supporters of universal health coverage get all wrapped up debating a single-payer system,” they must focus on the Graham-Cassidy proposal, which he describes as a “dire threat” to the ACA. The measure, Dionne argues, “would be disastrous” and in some ways is “even worse than earlier repeal measures, which at least kept some of the structure of Obamacare’s subsidies in place.”

McMaster: Administration Considering A “Tougher” Travel Ban.

On ABC’s This Week (9/17), National Security Adviser McMaster said the Administration is “looking at” a tougher travel ban. USA Today (9/17, Jackson) reports “McMaster echoed a Trump tweet calling for a tougher travel ban into the United States, saying ‘this is something we’re looking at.’” The New York Post (9/17, Schultz) reports that Trump on Sunday “retweeted himself in calling for another travel ban.” The tweet said, “The travel ban into the United States should be far larger, tougher and more specific-but stupidly, that would not be politically correct!”

The Hill (9/17, Shelbourne) reports McMaster said the travel ban is “a first step” toward better security screening of people entering the US. The Daily Caller (9/17) says that when asked if the Administration will propose a tougher travel ban, McMaster “didn’t give a straight ‘yes’ or ‘no’ in his response, but stated, ‘Well, if you can’t screen people to know who’s coming into your country then you shouldn’t allow people from that country to travel.’” Newsweek (9/17, Sinclair) reports McMaster “refused to rule out the administration considering a new travel ban.”

Meanwhile, CNN (9/17, Kenny) says McMaster also “echoed” another Trump tweet about terrorists’ use of the Internet for recruiting. McMaster told ABC, “Because of the strength of these terrorist organizations – why this is a greater danger than ever – is, first of all, their ability to communicate, to connect what would otherwise be disconnected cells in other places in the world.”

WPost Argues Against Further Reducing Refugee Resettlement. A Washington Post (9/17) editorial says that after having cut “refugee resettlement by more than half, compared with the Obama administration, officials close to Mr. Trump are pushing for a further draconian reduction, to levels not seen since the Cold War.” If Trump backs the proposal, the Post argues, “the message to those fleeing persecution and violence would be to shelter in place – any place, as long as it’s not the United States.” The Post says the Trump Administration “is waging a multi-front crusade against legal as well as illegal immigration,” and adds that by “rolling back refugee admissions to levels negligible when measured against the need, the administration would accelerate Washington’s retreat from the global stage and inaugurate a new age of American timidity.”

Tillerson, McMaster Dispute Report On Paris Accord Exit, But Leave Room For Negotiation.

Secretary of State Tillerson and National Security Adviser McMaster appeared on several of the Sunday morning political talk shows to discuss a variety of issues, and each responded to the Saturday Wall Street Journal report stating that President Trump would not withdraw the US from the Paris climate accord. Both said the report was false, with McMaster blunt and Tillerson more circumspect, though both also said that there could be room for the US to continue to participate if certain criteria are met.

Tillerson said on CBS' Face The Nation (9/17, Dickerson), "We are willing to work with partners in the Paris climate accord if we can construct a set of terms that we believe is fair and balanced for the American people." Tillerson added that the President is "open to finding those conditions where we can remain engaged with others on what we all agree is still a challenging issue." Bloomberg News (9/17, Krukowska) reports that Tillerson's comments came a day after the European Union said that the Trump Administration "is shifting its approach to the landmark global agreement on climate change, an assertion quickly denied by the White House." The New York Post (9/17, Schultz) also reports that Tillerson said Trump "could stay in the Paris climate accord if certain 'conditions' are met."

McMaster said on ABC's This Week (9/17) that Trump "left the door open to reentering if there can be a better deal for the United States." Trump's objection, according to McMaster, was not climate-related, but that "the agreement was not good for the environment." McMaster said if an agreement was reached that benefited US citizens, the US would stay in. The Washington Post (9/17, Gearan) reports, "McMaster denied Sunday that President Trump is reconsidering his decision."

McMaster was also questioned about the Wall Street Journal on Fox News Sunday (9/17, Wallace), where, according to Politico (9/17, Meyer), McMaster said, "That's a false report." McMaster "bashed the Paris deal," saying, "It gave the worst polluters the ability to continue polluting and emitting carbon without significantly reducing those levels." Reuters (9/17, Mutikani) says McMaster "struck a similar tone" to Tillerson in the two interviews.

On the CBS Weekend News (9/17, story 5, 2:00, Quijano), Errol Barnett reported that McMaster "disputed reports that the US is not leaving the international climate change agreement. ... The Trump Administration says it is exploring how the US can cut CO2 emissions. Chief Economic Adviser Gary Cohn will host an informal meeting Monday, ahead of the [UN General Assembly], with about a dozen senior climate and energy ministers from around the world." The Wall Street Journal (9/17, Peker, Timiraos, Gold) also reports that Cohn will outline the Administration's emissions goals while stating that the US stance on the accord has not changed. ABC World News Tonight (9/17, story 6, 2:30, Llamas) also ran a clip of McMaster's remarks; Washington Post columnist Josh Rogin tweeted, "McMaster calls Paris 'the worst deal for the environment' but everybody knows he argued for it."

The Guardian \(UK\) (9/17, Walters) reports, "Senior Trump administration officials on Sunday signalled a further softening of America's resolve to leave the Paris climate accord, amid signs that the issue will be discussed at the United Nations general assembly in New York this week." Both Tillerson and McMaster "indicated that the US is open to negotiations on staying in the landmark international agreement to limit mankind's role in global warming."

The New York Daily News (9/17, Silverstein) says the Administration on Sunday "continued its cryptic about-face on the Paris climate accord, with two top officials hinting President Trump is open to negotiations that would keep the U.S. in the international environmental pact." By contrast, the The Independent \(UK\) (9/17, Francisco) reports, "White House officials have sent mixed messages on whether America remains in a global climate agreement."

The Washington Times (9/17, Richardson) reports, "The White House insisted that there has been 'no change' in US policy. Spokesperson Lindsay Walters said, "As the President has made abundantly clear, the United States is withdrawing unless we can re-enter on terms that are more favorable to our country."

Breitbart (9/17, Key) headlines its report "Tillerson: Trump Open To Staying In Paris Climate Accord, 'Under The Right Conditions.'" In a Sunday update of its original report, the Wall Street Journal (9/17, Peker) also highlights the comments by Tillerson and McMaster, which are also covered by the Washington Examiner (9/17, Feldscher) and The Hill (9/17, Savransky).

Advisory Panel Recommends FAA Eliminate More Than 50 Air Safety Rules.

The Wall Street Journal (9/17, Pasztor) reports that as part of President Trump's targeting what he and aides describe as outdated and unnecessary government restrictions, the Aviation Rulemaking Advisory Committee has delivered a report calling on the FAA to eliminate or roll back more than 50 air-safety rules. Several of the recommendations have garnered opposition from union groups, safety advocates and the families of crash victims.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Using The E.P.A. To Prop Up Big Coal.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/18, Board) calls EPA Administrator Pruitt’s order to delay by two years “the Obama administration’s tighter controls on lead, mercury, arsenic and other coal plant wastes that threaten human health” a “shocking” attempt by the Administration that “deliberately overlooks the blossoming of profitable and cleaner energy products simply because of Mr. Trump’s hollow showmanship before his campaign base.” The Times argues that “cheaper and abundant natural gas” was the prime driver of coal industry’s decline, a trend it predicts “will continue.” The Times concludes in saying that “the environmental safeguards Congress has ordered it to enforce have been crucial to the development of new technologies,” but Pruitt has sullied “that history with false promises to a fading industry is irresponsible.”

“Squeeze Myanmar’s Military.” A New York Times (9/18, Board) editorial laments that the Burmese “military’s vicious crackdown against the Muslim Rohingya minority in Rakhine State” makes it “tragically clear” that the nation’s democratic transition was incomplete when former President Obama announced the US would lift the remaining sanctions against the military. While “there is little chance the Security Council will vote for new sanctions,” the Times says, nothing prevents the US “from acting on its own.” Thus, the Times concludes, the Senate should go beyond Sen. John McCain’s suggestion of halting plans to expand US-Burmese military ties by reinstating sanctions “unless the carnage stops, humanitarian aid groups are allowed back into Rakhine State, United Nations investigators are permitted to do their job there and the Rohingya are restored safely to their homes as full citizens.”

Washington Post.

“Trump Flirts With A New Age Of American Timidity.” A Washington Post (9/17) editorial says that after having cut “refugee resettlement by more than half, compared with the Obama administration, officials close to Mr. Trump are pushing for a further draconian reduction, to levels not seen since the Cold War.” If Trump backs the proposal, the Post argues, “the message to those fleeing persecution and violence would be to shelter in place – any place, as long as it’s not the United States.” The Post says the Trump Administration “is waging a multi-front crusade against legal as well as illegal immigration,” and adds that by “rolling back refugee admissions to levels negligible when measured against the need, the administration would accelerate Washington’s retreat from the global stage and inaugurate a new age of American timidity.”

“The Inexplicable Horror Of The Deaths Of Eight Elderly People In Florida.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/17) laments the “inexplicable horror” of the deaths of eight elderly people “found in a sweltering nursing home in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma last week.” The Post says the investigation into the deaths “needs to sort out the conflicting accounts of what happened to determine who...dropped the ball in protecting these people,” and their must be “a thorough review of nursing-home policies and practices and state oversight.”

“Turkey Still Hasn’t Owned Up To A Vicious Assault On American Soil.” A Washington Post (9/17) editorial recalls “the violent attack on peaceful protesters by Turkish bodyguards during President Recep Tayyip Erdogan’s visit to Washington” four months ago, and says the incident has not triggered “protests from the State Department, not bipartisan condemnations from Congress and not the indictments of Turkish security officials on criminal charges.” The Post posits, “Perhaps a threat to block certain weapon sales,” as called for in a proposed amendment co-sponsored by Sens. Chris Van Hollen and Patrick J. Leahy,” will be a more meaningful way to suggest there is a price to be paid for such brutality.” The Post urges Congress to approve the measure, “part of a larger spending bill for the State Department that now goes to the full Senate,” and President Trump to sign it.

Wall Street Journal.

“The Second Circuit’s Insider Trading Feud.” The Wall Street Journal (9/17) editorializes that the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals in 2014 tried to create a limiting principle for insider trading, the definition of which has been legally murky. According to the Journal, the court’s effort was mitigated last month by a three-judge panel of the court, and this conflict – centering on whether “friendship” between figures in an alleged insider-trading scheme satisfies the definition of “personal benefit” under the statute – calls for a resolution by the entire 2nd Circuit.

“California Democrats Target Tesla.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/17) writes that California Democratic lawmakers passed legislation Friday that requires manufacturers participating in an electric car rebate program to receive permission from the state labor secretary to verify they are “fair and responsible in their treatment of workers” – a measure backed by the United Automobile Workers and that directly targets Tesla. The Journal observes the state’s Democrats showed that loyalty to organized labor takes priority over electric cars and green subsidies.

“Reining In Mr. Sessions.” The Wall Street Journal (9/17) editorializes that Attorney General Sessions recently sparked bipartisan ire with the revival of a civil asset-forfeiture program that had been restricted by former Attorney General Eric Holder. According to the Journal, a bipartisan group last week countered Sessions’ move with a series of amendments to the annual appropriations package that is moving through the House. The Journal argues that the practice amounts to property being taken from individuals without due process or the determination of criminal culpability, and that it invites abuse. The House amendments would curtail the power of law enforcement officials under the program, and the Journal urges Congress to pass a separate law making these restrictions permanent, calling such a result a victory for property rights and due process.

Secretary Of Interior Ryan Zinke Visits Austin To Talk Harvey.

The Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (9/23, Goldenstein) reports that "about 16,000 Texans are still displaced and living in hotels and other temporary housing because of Hurricane Harvey, federal officials said Saturday." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Saturday came to Austin to "visit the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Joint Information Center and receive a department update on relief efforts at a local U.S. Geological Survey office." Zinke said "that recovery will be a 'marathon, not a sprint,' that lasts for years." He said, "This is going to take a long time for recovery. I would say we're probably at 20 percent."

Hunting Is Down In The US. The Trump Administration Wants To Change That.

CNN (9/22, Green) reports on the Interior Department's efforts to promote hunting and fishing on public lands. The article notes that "a US Fish and Wildlife Service survey released last week found that there are 2.2 million fewer hunters in America now than in 2011." According to the article, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "passion for expanding hunting rights on public lands is both personal and political." However, "despite Zinke's clear efforts to woo hunters and anglers, not all of his decisions have gone over well with the conservationist-minded group." One example is "Zinke's leaked recommendations to the White House to shrink the boundaries of national monuments and open up some of the land to the fossil fuel industry and loggers."

Also reporting are NPR (9/23, Simon), the Morristown \(NJ\) Daily Record (9/24, Stabile), the Orangeburg \(SC\) Times And Democrat (9/25), the Nevada \(MO\) Daily Mail (9/22, White), and the New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (9/23, Folco).

All-out Effort To Save Forests, Reduce Fuels Urged.

The Payson \(AZ\) Roundup (9/22, Aleshire) reports that "nearly 50,000 wildfires have burned 8 million acres across the country so far this year, prompting Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke to order the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management to give thinning, fuel reduction and forest restoration projects top priority." Zinke said, "This administration will take a serious turn from the past and will proactively work to prevent forest fires through aggressive and scientific fuels reduction management to save lives, homes and wildlife habitat. It is well settled that the steady accumulation and thickening of vegetation in areas that have historically burned at frequent intervals exacerbates fuel conditions and often leads to larger and higher-intensity fires. These fires are more damaging, more costly, and threaten the safety and security of both the public and firefighters."

Additional coverage was provided by the Payson \(AZ\) Roundup (9/22).

New BLM Pilot Approach Uses Outcome-based Grazing.

The Ruidoso \(NM\) News (9/22) reports that "officials with the Bureau of Land Management announced a new initiative this week to provide grazing permit holders an unprecedented level of flexibility in the management of livestock while also protecting the public lands." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said in the release announcing the program, "Farmers and ranchers know the wildlife and the land they work better than anyone, it only makes sense that we would enlist them in conservation efforts. One of my top goals is for the government to be a better neighbor, land manager, and partner. I think it's a great step in that direction. I applaud the team at BLM for coming up with this innovative program."

Additional coverage was provided by KTVN-TV Reno, NV (9/22).

Interior Department Likely To Propose Big Changes To Sage Grouse Management Soon.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/23, Richards) reported that a rule meant to prevent the sage grouse bird from going extinct required the bird's habitat to be improved or at least not harmed. The Department of the Interior is likely to propose a new rule. Oil and gas companies fear an arbitrary measuring stick when it comes to a new rule as conservationists fear that the likely rule may erode "the protections that they fought to include in federal plans." Proposed changes to sage grouse management "would be filed Oct. 30, kicking off a 60-day public comment period."

Politico Morning Energy (9/22, Adragna) reports that "on the two-year anniversary of the Obama administration deciding the sage grouse didn't warrant Endangered Species Act protection, several dozen local elected Western officials today sent Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke a letter urging him to leave existing protection plans in place." They wrote, "We urge you to listen to us, as well as the governors, ranchers, sportsmen, industry officials, conservationists and other stakeholders who invested years of work into these management plans — and allow those plans to stay intact."

Additional coverage was provided by the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/25, Webb).

Grand Forks To Host Trump Advisers During North Dakota Petroleum Council Meeting.

The Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (9/23, Baumgarten) reports that the North Dakota Petroleum Council will host its 36th annual meeting on Sept. 26 through 28 at the Alerus Center in Grand Forks. It will “feature more than 20 panelists and speakers, including Vincent DeVito, counselor on energy policy for the U.S. Department of Interior, and Stephen Moore, a policy adviser for Trump.”

Agencies Begin White House-Mandated Training For Every Fed On Consequences Of Leaks.

Government Executive (9/21, Katz) reports that federal employees are starting training on the consequences of leaks. The campaign against “the unauthorized disclosure of unauthorized information,” as well as “controlled unclassified information,” came at the direction of the White House. National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster “last week sent a directive—subsequently obtained by several media outlets—to all federal agencies demanding they train their employees on the ‘serious consequences’ of improper leaks of such information by Sept. 22.”

The Interior Secretary’s Favorite Horse, ‘Tonto,’ Has Been Very Busy.

Motherboard (9/22, Emerson) reports on Tonto, the horse that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke rode in to work on his first day in March. The author submitted a public records request to the US Park Police and received “20 pages of documents.”

Additional Coverage: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Proposes Shrinking Monuments.

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by The Atlantic (9/24, Felton), the National Review (9/25, Pendley), the Huffington Post (9/22, Brune, Contributor), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/23, Bare), the Las Vegas Sun (9/24, Gonzalez), the Durango \(CO\) Herald (9/22, Sybert, Petersen), the Silver City \(NM\) Sun-News (9/19), the Sidney \(MT\) Herald (9/23, Denowh), the Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (9/22, Kim), the New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (9/23), the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (9/24, Dash), the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Business Journal (9/22, Hazlehurst), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/22, Gehrke), the Durango \(CO\) Herald (9/22, Lopez-Whiteskunk), Business Insider (9/24, Nickelsburg), and KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (9/23, Hendrickson).

Additional Coverage: State Receives Federal Grant.

Additional coverage of the money distributed to states from the Land and Water Conservation Fund was provided by the Northwest Arkansas Democrat-Gazette (9/24), the Bedford \(IN\) Times-Mail (9/22), KTUU-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (9/21, Maguire), and WBKO-TV Bowling Green \(KY\) Bowling Green, KY (9/22).

Donald Trump Should Make Camp Nelson A National Monument To Black Soldiers.

In his column for the Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (9/22, Eblen), Tom Eblen supports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s recommendation to elevate the Camp Nelson Civil War Heritage Park to a national monument. Eblen asserts that “it is a natural monument to freedom that should also become a national one.”

Time Is Running Out To Save The Eisenhower Memorial.

In a piece for the Washington Free Beacon (9/24, Meadowcroft) reports, Micah Meadowcroft writes that “a final, superficial design change” to the proposed Dwight D. Eisenhower Memorial was approved by the U.S. Commission of Fine Arts Wednesday morning. Meadowcroft says that “if the Gehry design is to be scrapped and something more like a monument and less like a disappointing sculpture garden is to be built, it will be up to Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke to decline to sign off on the project, on his own judgment or by direction of President Trump.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Report Uncovers Numerous Safety Violations At Tribal Schools.

The Gloucester \(MA\) Times (9/23, Murakami) reports that “16 months after the first of two” General Accounting Office reports, “and six years after Indian Affairs auditors identified problems putting students at risk, the issues persist.” The article says that “in another report this month, the GAO said that of 50 recommendations it made in the past two years to fix numerous problems, including student safety issues, only one has been fully implemented.” The issues have “caught the attention of senators., who are vowing to keep the heat on agencies responsible for Native American education, health and economic development.”

Winnebago Tribe Hoping To Reclaim Land In Iowa.

The AP (9/24) reports that “the Winnebago Tribe is hoping to reclaim land in Iowa that was once part of its reservation in northeast Nebraska, but local hunters are concerned they might lose access.” Rep. Steve King “introduced a bill earlier this month to transfer the land to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, where it would be held in trust for the tribe.” Tribal officials “say they would keep the land as hunting ground and habitat for wildlife.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Sioux City \(IA\) Journal (9/24, Hytrek).

Bureau Of Land Management

Purchase Opens 32,600 Acres Near Coronado Forest To Hiking, Hunting.

The Arizona Daily Star (9/24, Windes) reports that “the Interior Department’s purchase of a plot of private land will allow public access to 32,600 acres of previously isolated forest land, a move that drew praise from wilderness advocates and hunters alike.” The acquisition “announced Wednesday opens up two parcels of public land, one in the Coronado National Forest and one northwest of Safford, that had been inaccessible because they were surrounded by private property.” The Bureau of Land Management “worked with the Arizona Game and Fish Department, the South Eastern Arizona Sportsmen Club and the Trust for Public Land over several years to acquire the land needed for access.”

Also reporting are the Eastern Arizona Courier (9/23) and the Havasupai \(AZ\) News-Herald (9/21, Windes).

Fracking Rule May See Jumbled Comeback As Court Tosses Case.

E&E Publishing (9/22, Gilmer) reported that the 10th US Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed a case Thursday over a Department of the Interior fracking rule, which emanated from the Obama Administration. Although the lower court struck down the regulation with a 2016 ruling, the 10th Circuit overturned the lower court’s decision allowing the rule to take effect. However, the Trump Administration is working to rescind the regulation. The court dismissed the case without ruling on the main “legal question of whether the federal government has authority over the oil and gas extraction process.” The regulation faced opposition after passage wherein “Wyoming and other states argued that it was beyond BLM’s authority because the Safe Drinking Water Act put EPA in charge of fracking, and the Energy Policy Act of 2005 subsequently assigned that power to state overseers.”

PennEnergy (9/22, Snow) reported that the court’s ruling gained positive responses from those interested in both sides of the case. Independent Petroleum Association of America President Barry Russell said that the “decision confirms what IPAA has advocated all along: Dismissing the appeal would protect independent producers from the uncertainty of whether it was necessary to comply with regulations that are certain to be revoked.” Russell also said, “All three judges ruled unanimously that it would be a waste of judicial resources to proceed with this case.” Western Energy Alliance President Kathleen Sgamma said, “We’re pleased that after today, IPAA and [WEA] are even closer to finally putting BLM’s ill-conceived fracking rule to bed.” Earthworks Energy Program Director Bruce Baizel said, “this decision is two victories in one. It means BLM can start enforcing a rule to protect water, public health, and communities threatened and harmed by fracking on public lands.” Baizel also said, “the second victory...is that in the eyes of the court and the eyes of the Trump administration, the public’s land managers have the authority to regulate drilling on the lands the public owns.”

UPI (9/22, Graeber) also reported.

BLM Sale In Wyoming Nets $38.7 Million In Bonus Bids.

The AP (9/23) reported that the Bureau of Land Management’s oil and gas lease sales in Wyoming brought $38.7 million in bonus bids. Bids were made on 106,000 acres out of 113,000 Thursday. The bonus bid funds will be split between the federal government and Wyoming. Parcels were offered in Niobrara, Big Horn, Goshen, Sheridan, Washakie, and other counties.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/24, Richards) reports that “the news comes on the heels of a push from conservation advocates to rehash the federal leasing program, holding leasees to a higher standard so that oil and gas firms aren’t gathering up parcels of land that they don’t intend to drill in a timely manner.” The petitioners would “also like royalty rates for production to be in-line with revenue made on state and private land, leasing to cease on lands that do not have a strong potential for oil or gas production, and the minimum leasing bid to be increased.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/22, Richards).

Colorado’s Wild Horses Face A New Danger On The Range: Trump Budget Cuts.

The Denver Post (9/23, McGhee) reports that in Colorado, “rapid population growth of the herds has resulted in ranchers’ complaints that the animals consume forage and water needed for cattle; an exploding numbers of horses and burros that challenge the BLM’s ability to manage them on and off the range; and anxiety among advocates who fear the government will legalize their slaughter.” Advocates claim “contraceptive drugs can halt galloping herd growth, but the BLM says the drugs are difficult to administer and require frequent reapplication.” The Trump Administration has “proposed a $10 million reduction to the government’s wild horse management program, a cut that advocates fear will place the horses in jeopardy of wholesale destruction.”

Rough Edges: Inmates Train Mustangs, Learn Life Lessons At Wyoming Corrections Facility.

The Pueblo \(CO\) Chieftain (9/23, Schmelzer) reports on the Honor Farm’s mustang program. In 1988, the Department of Corrections partnered with the Bureau of Land Management and “created the mustang program — the second mustang program for inmates established in the country and one of six total in the nation.” According to the article, “in the program’s 29 years, nearly 1,500 men and 4,000 mustangs and burros have completed the program.”

Private House On Public Land Causes Problems; Bend Business Owner Buys Home Built Inadvertantly On BLM Land.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/24, Hamway) reports that “nearly a decade after the co-founders of a prominent Bend biotechnology company inadvertently purchased a private home located on public land, the situation is approaching a conclusion.” In 2008, Chuck McGrath and Jennipher Grudzien, co-founders of Grace Bio-Labs Inc., “bought a remote, two-story log home southeast of Prineville.” In June, the Bureau of Land Management “sent out a letter requesting public input, the first public step toward resolving the situation.” The BLM will “prepare an environmental assessment that examines the benefits of three different options: leaving the land as is, removing the house and other structures, or selling the land to McGrath and Grudzien.” Jeff Kitchens, field manager for the Prineville district of the Bureau of Land Management, “said he’s hopeful the agency can issue a decision by the end of the year.”

The Myths Used To Needlessly Delay The Cadiz Water Project, Debunked.

In a piece published by the Los Angeles Times (9/22, Hernandez, Rodriguez), Tracy Rafter Hernandez, chief executive of the Los Angeles County Business Federation, and Carlos Rodriguez, chief executive of the Baldy View chapter of the Building Industry Assn. of Southern California, writes that “for nearly a decade, the Cadiz Valley Water Conservation, Recovery and Storage Project, which will create a new water supply for 400,000 people and thousands of jobs, has followed the entire California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) review and approval process from start to finish — public comment periods, public hearings, board approvals and litigation, all of which concluded last year, when the 4th District Court of Appeal sustained every approval of the project and concluded that it could be operated safely and sustainably.” The authors say “it’s disappointing that Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) and her allies, including state Assemblywoman Laura Friedman (D-Glendale), continue to perpetuate a series of myths about the Cadiz project as part of a campaign to derail it, including in a recent op-ed article for the Los Angeles Times.” The two provide “a few examples of the most common myths.” They “urge California’s leaders to continue to stand up for jobs, for citizens who need water, and for our state’s strong environmental review laws by rejecting sustained efforts to change the rules of the game for Cadiz or any other CEQA-approved project.”

Methane Rule Delay, Repeal Will Hurt Western Colorado.

In a guest column for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/24, Otero) youth Sunday school teacher, youth volunteer coach and outdoor enthusiast Gabriel Otero suggests that “Congressman Scott Tipton continues to vote against the best interests of his constituents.” Otero writes that Tipton voted to defund the BLM methane waste prevention rule. The rule “has survived a U.S.

Senate vote to permanently get rid of it and a lawsuit from oil industry trade groups seeking to prevent it from going into effect." Otero states that "oil and gas aren't going away anytime soon, but in the meantime, we must extract them in a responsible and environmentally conscious manner."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Water Bailout?

Colorado River Tribes Pose Statewide Leasing Idea. The Arizona Daily Star (9/24, Davis) reports on "a complex plan to send tribal water from the Colorado River into Arizona's heartland to support existing residents and future development." The Colorado River Indian Tribes "want to lease more river water than is delivered each year to the city of Tucson to various water agencies, utilities and the feds." But "for that, they want more money than they now make from their alfalfa fields, where the water currently goes." However, "the negotiations are now on hold, partly because of a separate power struggle between the CAP and the Arizona Department of Water Resources that's kept their leaders from speaking to one another."

Fish And Wildlife Service

African Wildlife Protectors Get A Hand In Detective Training.

The AP (9/23, Brasch) reports that African conservation officers came to Commerce City, Colorado "to train with their U.S. counterparts" at the National Wildlife Property Repository. Coleen Schaefer, a specialist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "led the delegation of 42 conservation officials through the warehouse." During the training at the repository, USFWS IT specialist Mike McCloud "led the delegation through techniques to keep evidence secure and carefully cataloged."

Scientists: Desert Turtle Endangered, 100 Left In Arizona.

The AP (9/24, Windes) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced the designation of the Sonoyta mud turtle as endangered last Wednesday, "citing threats from climate change to loss of habitat for the southern Arizona animal, whose numbers are believed to have dwindled to as low as 100 turtles." Steve Spangle, a field supervisor with Fish and Wildlife's Arizona Ecological Services, said in a release announcing the listing, "The Sonoyta mud turtle is clearly in danger of extinction." He added, "Protecting it under the Endangered Species Act will marshal increased attention and the resources needed by our U.S. and Mexican conservation partners to improve and expand its dwindling habitat and populations."

Nighttime Football Games Return To Kauai After 7 Years.

The AP (9/23) reports that "an agreement has paved the way for the first nighttime football games during fledgling seabirds season on Kauai in seven years." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "signed a deal Friday with Kauai County allowing four night games this football season." according to the article, "the first game was played Friday night, followed by games on Sept. 30, Oct. 7 and Nov. 4."

More Grizzly Bears Roaming Outside National Parks In Wyoming.

The AP (9/22, Moen) reports that "a growing number of grizzly bears are moving outside their established habitat in and around Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming, causing more conflicts with humans, according to wildlife managers." The article says that "the conflicts in Wyoming resulted in 39 grizzly bears being captured by state game managers in 2016," and "twenty-two were killed for various reasons, such as a history of problems."

Monarch Butterflies Might Vanish From Northwest Summers.

The AP (9/23, Cary) reports that "a study published recently in the journal Biological Conservation documents the steep decline of the population of migrating monarchs in the West." The study "puts the risk at 72 percent that not enough of the monarchs will be migrating in the West within 20 years to sustain the population. In 50 years, the risk is 86 percent." The study was paid for by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "which is considering whether to list the monarch butterfly as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act."

64 Walruses Found Dead At Point Lay Haulout.

The Arctic \(AK\) Sounder (9/22) reports that “dozens of walruses were found dead earlier this month at their seasonal haulout near Point Lay.” The article notes that “the findings came just about a day after locals said they saw an airplane they believed to be flying inappropriately over the herd, which comes to shore each year once the sea ice recedes past the continental shelf and it becomes too deep for them to feed.” Andrea Medeiros, a spokesperson for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, “We had heard from the community that they had seen an aircraft flying over the animals at [an altitude] they believed to be too close, and circled the animals. The community is very concerned about these animals when they are onshore and don’t want people to disturb them by flying over or trying to approach in any way, like using a boat.”

Senate Environmental Consultation Bill A Classic Case In Overreaction.

In an op-ed for The Hill (9/22, Super), David A. Super, a professor of law at Georgetown Law, argues that S. 605, the “Litigation Relief for Forest Management Projects Act,” would “severely limit environmental review of projects that could badly damage vulnerable wildlife.” Super claims that the problem that the legislation is seeking to address is “a small one,” and S. 605 is “a classic case of overreaction.” Instead, Super says that the sponsors of the bill “should establish reasonable standards for when to reopen environmental consultations.”

Curry: Wildlife Lovers Savor Candy Darter Study Story.

In an op-ed for the Roanoke \(VA\) Times (9/23, Curry), Tierra Curry, a senior scientist with the Center for Biological Diversity, argues that “the work of closely studying” the candy darter “wouldn’t be happening if Americans were not allowed to petition the government to protect rare wildlife and to enforce our country’s essential environmental laws like the Endangered Species Act.” However, she warns that “some in Congress are working to undermine the Act and its lifesaving protections.” She urges voters to tell elected officials that “you care about saving threatened wildlife and the laws that ensure we don’t sacrifice the heritage of future generations for short-term economic gains.”

National Park Service

Melania Trump Hosts Her First Event In The Garden Michelle Obama Founded.

The Washington Post (9/22, Thompson) reports First Lady Melania Trump “held her first event in the White House Kitchen Garden on Friday, donning a plaid shirt and coordinating red gloves to pull up leeks and plant kale along with children from a local Boys & Girls Club.” According to the Post, “the garden, which then-first lady Michelle Obama established in 2009 as part of her healthy eating initiative, is closely identified with the previous administration, so Trump’s decision to embrace it is noteworthy.” The Post adds that the First Lady “hosted 10 children in the garden Friday, a much smaller group than Obama often welcomed, but her gathering, in 80-degree temperatures, felt much like the garden events of the past, with White House chefs and National Park Service staff members on hand.” The CBS Evening News (9/22, story 11, 0:20, Mason) briefly reported “Mrs. Trump told the kids she’s a big believer in healthy eating and intends to keep the garden.”

Also reporting are the AP (9/22, Kellman) and Politico (9/22, Evich).

Park Service Announces Grant For Giffords Shooting Memorial.

The AP (9/22) reports that the National Park Service is “giving over $61,000 for the development of a memorial honoring the victims and survivors of the 2011 Tucson shooting that left six dead and 13 injured, including former U.S. Rep. Gabby Giffords.” U.S. Rep. Raul Grijalva “said Friday that the grant will be used for the January 8th Memorial park in downtown Tucson.” According to the article, “a foundation set up to take charge of the memorial has spent several years raising money for a $5 million monument that would include carved symbols along a dark red steel wall, items from makeshift memorials following the shooting and areas to reflect.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Star (9/24) and KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (9/22).

Glacier Park Plans To Begin Stabilization Efforts On Sperry Chalet In October.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (9/24, Backus) reports that “stabilization efforts on the four stone walls that remain of the historic Sperry Chalet dormitory are expected to get underway in early October.”

However, "for the dormitory to stand a chance of being rebuilt, a park historic preservation crew will have to win the race against upcoming winter conditions to brace the walls with a series of large beams and plywood." Glacier Park spokesperson Lauren Alley said, "We have to be able to protect those walls from both the wind and being pushed sideways by this winter's snowfall. October is our window for getting that work accomplished."

Sperry Chalet Worth Trying To Rebuild. In an editorial, the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (9/24) supports efforts to rebuild Sperry Chalet, "the historic backcountry lodge that was destroyed by the Sprague Fire the evening of Aug. 31." The paper acknowledges that "it will be a tall order gathering the money it will take to restore or replace the 103-year-old backcountry building." But it argues that "it makes sense to pursue a rebuild of the lodge."

Archaeologists: More Protections Needed For Chaco Region.

The AP (9/22, Bryan) reported that Friday researchers, archaeologists, and professors called for additional protections from oil and gas development in the Chaco Culture National Historical Park and a large adjacent area. The scientists said the industry may destroy portions of the landscape, which could assist in understanding ancient civilizations that used to live in the region. Scientists also said they are using new satellite and laser-imaging technology that could allow for more discoveries in the area.

All Of Blue Ridge Parkway Open After Irma's Heavy Rains.

The AP (9/22) reports that "the entire Blue Ridge Parkway has reopened after the heavy rains of Hurricane Irma forced the closure of some parts of it." The National Park Service "said the last of the debris from the storm was cleared away Thursday at Craggy Gardens near Asheville." The parkway was "open for travel Friday, the first day of fall."

Big Cypress, Everglades, State Parks Face Long Recovery.

The Naples \(FL\) Daily News (9/24, Staats) reports that Hurricane Irma "mangled Florida's national and state parks, turning places meant to be enjoyed into disaster zones that could take weeks or longer to reopen." The National Park Service has "sent some 380 workers from 95 national parks in 35 states to 15 parks in Irma's path in Georgia, South Carolina, Florida and the Caribbean." At Big Cypress National Preserve, "crews have been clearing downed trees along Turner River Road, which had water too high to access for more than a week after the storm," according to Park Service Ranger Brett Everitt. He "couldn't provide a timeframe for reopening Big Cypress, but the Park Service reported a big step in that direction Friday with the restoration of power in Ochopee and the water plant coming back online."

Cumberland Island Extends Cancellation Of Camping Reservations Through Oct. 11.

The Florida Times-Union (9/23, Dickson) reports that "with Cumberland Island National Seashore still closed because of damage from Tropical Storm Irma, the park is extending the cancellation of camping reservations two more weeks through Oct. 11." The National Park Service "said Saturday the docks in St. Marys that are needed for access to the island were badly damaged and that crews are still working on the island itself." The article notes that "the ferries that serve the island were placed in sheltered mooring during the storm and came through undamaged."

Park Seeks Wiggle Room On Boundary.

The Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (9/23, Broom) reports that Acadia National Park "wants to be able to make minor adjustments to its boundary without having to get congressional approval." According to the article, "a bill currently inching its way through Congress would validate Acadia's annexation of 1,441 acres on the Schoodic Peninsula, including the Schoodic Woods Campground, in 2015, but it would prohibit any future expansion of the park or other alterations of its boundary." Acadia and National Park Service officials back "the bill but would like for the park to have the same boundary adjustment wiggle room that most other national parks have."

10 New U.S. Citizens Take Oath Of Allegiance In Glacier Park.

KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (9/24, Miller) reports that "U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services hosted a Naturalization Ceremony in the Apgar Amphitheater on Friday as 10 new citizens from across the world took the Oath of Allegiance." Friday's event was the second Naturalization Ceremony that Glacier National Park has hosted. Glacier National Park's Deputy Superintendent Eric Smith said, "It's really an honor to be part of the process and for that process to take place here instead of a courtroom. It is a very solemn and formal process that is at the end of a long and arduous process."

Officials To Decide Fate Of Peninsula Mountain Goats.

The AP (9/23, Bush) reports that this summer, the National Park Service "published four plans for goat management" at Olympic National Park. Park officials have "produced a nearly 500-page document that seemingly examines every angle, secured some funding for goat removal and wrangled other government agencies to participate." Officials "favor capturing as many mountain goats as possible over several years, transporting them to the North Cascades and killing goats that evade seizure."

A Good Wildfire On Display At Yosemite National Park.

The Fresno \(CA\) Bee (9/22, George) reports that Yosemite National Park officials "aimed to help people better understand wildfire during a Thursday tour of the Empire Fire, which has burned more than 6,300 acres off Glacier Point Road." KGPE-TV Fresno, CA (9/22, Valera) reports that "Yosemite's fire ecologist Kristen Shive said fires like the Empire Fire are needed to prevent" bigger "fires from happening."

Lawsuit Filed To Stop Mining Near Yellowstone In Montana.

The U.S. News & World Report (9/22) reports that "opponents of mining near Yellowstone National Park filed a lawsuit Friday challenging a decision by Montana environmental regulators to allow a Canadian company to explore for precious metals just north of the park." The Park County Environmental Council and Greater Yellowstone Coalition "sued the Montana Department of Environmental Quality and Lucky Minerals, Inc. in state district court in Montana's Park County." Lucky Minerals was "given approval to drill on private land in the Absaroka Mountains to assess its prospects for mining of copper, gold, silver and molybdenum deposits."

Indiana Dunes Hoping For 'Dark Sky' Designation.

The Northwest Indiana Post-Tribune (9/24, Anderson) reports on the effort to get Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore designated as an International Dark Sky Park. Among the supporters of the push are Rep Pete Visclosky, and state House Minority Leader Scott Pelath, "who both wrote letters advocating for the Dunes to receive an International Dark Sky Park designation."

Plan For Moccasin Bend National Archaeological District Completed.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) (9/22) reports that "a General Management Plan for the Moccasin Bend National Archaeological District received final authorization from the National Park Service." According to the article, "Chickamauga and Chattanooga NMP is looking forward to implementing the plan which includes establishment of a visitor center on Hamm Road, as well as archaeological site protection, guided interpretation, and improved access to the Brown's Ferry site to better interpret the American Indian history of Moccasin Bend."

Cabin Restoration Completed At Historic Elkmont In Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (9/22, Ahillen) reports that a National Park Service project is renovating the Elkmont Historic District of Great Smoky Mountains National Park. According to the article, "four structures have been opened this weekend after nearly a year of restoration at the district off Little River Gorge Road." The National Park Service is "working to preserve more than a dozen buildings."

Cape Lookout Lighthouse Modernization Completed.

The Carteret County \(NC\) News-Times (9/24) reports that "the Coast Guard and National Park Service completed the Cape Lookout Lighthouse solar modernization Friday." The project "involved removing the previous optic, which was powered by a sub-cable, and replacing it with a solar-powered multi-tier LED optic, the Coast Guard said in a press release."

Local Residents Recognize Overmountain Men In Ceremony.

The Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/23, Sorrell) reports that "local residents recognized the service of two Revolutionary War veterans from Southwest Virginia on Saturday as Overmountain Victory Trail festivities continue in the region." The two men, Gen. William Campbell and John Broddy, were "honored during wreath-laying ceremonies." Ben Richardson, of the National Park Service, provided the keynote address Saturday.

Adventure Time: Fourth-graders From Joy Elementary Visit Denali National Park.

The Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (9/24, Capps) reports that three classes of fourth-graders from a Fairbanks school traveled to Denali National Park "earlier this month, thanks to a grant from the National Park Foundation, submitted by the Alaska Public Lands Information Center in Fairbanks." The grant was part of the National Park Foundation's Every Kids In A Park program.

The Washington Monument Will Endure.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (9/22, Lamar), Eric Lamar, a D.C. tour guide, empathizes with visitors who are upset with the closure of the Washington Monument. But he urges those who are "frustrated" to "pause and remember that like the monument, Washington's life was a series of setbacks and defeats requiring fortitude, persistence and no small amount of courage." Lamar concludes: "The Washington Monument may be down for a bit, but like the man, it will endure, stronger for the hardship."

Hurricane Maria Heads North As It Departs Caribbean.

"Hurricane Maria finally began departing the Caribbean Friday afternoon, leaving a wake of destruction that left at least 30 dead and crippled Puerto Rico," the Miami Herald (9/22, Staletovich) reports, and in the National Hurricane Center's 5 p.m. advisory, "forecasters said Maria was passing offshore east of the southeastern Bahamas with sustained winds remaining at 125 mph. The storm was located about 395 miles east-southeast of Nassau." Meanwhile, Reuters (9/22, Graham, Respaut) reports Maria "skirted past the Turks and Caicos Islands on Friday, leaving devastation in its wake that included fresh flooding on Puerto Rico two days after pummeling the U.S. island territory." Reuters adds that "Maria, which ranked as the most powerful hurricane to strike Puerto Rico in nearly a century, has killed at least six people there and claimed 19 lives on several other Caribbean islands, according to government officials and local news media accounts."

ABC World News Tonight (9/22, story 2, 0:30, Muir) in a brief report tracked "the possible paths for Hurricane Maria as it then moves toward the East Coast." Rob Marciano said Maria is currently "a Cat 3 and will weaken as it gets a little farther north; it'll be a Cat 1 by Wednesday, but just abreast of North Carolina." Marciano added "the forecast cone getting close to the US and our spaghetti models a little bit more spread out, so some uncertainty. And there could be some direct impacts from Maria in the US by the end of next week."

NYTimes Reflects On Status Of Caribbean Nations After Hurricanes. "After two major hurricanes tore through the Caribbean in less than two weeks, some of the most idyllic – and tourism-dependent – destinations have been devastated," the New York Times (9/22, Rosenbloom) says, and while "ferocious storms are nothing new to these islands," hurricanes Maria and Irma left "cities, and some islands...almost entirely in ruins." According to the Times, "In the hardest-hit places, including Dominica, Puerto Rico, Barbuda, St. Martin and the U.S. Virgin Islands, a slow and arduous recovery lies ahead." The Times breaks down the status of the various Caribbean nations and highlights that from Maria, "in Puerto Rico, at least 10 people died. The storm brought catastrophic flooding, destroyed homes and infrastructure, and left people without power, clean water and essential services. In Dominica, at least 15 people were killed."

Puerto Rico's Governor Says Cost To Rebuild After Marie Will Be More Than $7 Billion To $8 Billion.

The Wall Street Journal (9/24, De Cordoba) says that while the Puerto Rican government does not yet have an estimate for the cost of reconstruction, Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said it will be "north of the $7 billion to $8 billion" cost to rebuild after Hurricane Georges in 1998. The New York Times (9/24, Robles, Ferré-Sadurní) says Maria left "a rich agricultural region looking like the result of a postapocalyptic drought." Maria "wiped out about 80 percent of the crop value in Puerto Rico – making it one of the costliest storms to hit the island's agriculture industry, said Carlos Flores Ortega, Puerto Rico's secretary of the Department of Agriculture." The storm "took out entire plantations and destroyed dairy barns and industrial chicken coops." According to preliminary figures, the island "suffered a loss of $780 million in agriculture yields."

Citing Puerto Rico's "$73 billion in debt," Axios (9/24, Pandey) says the federal government "will have to take a significant role in the recovery process to give the US territory a chance at bouncing back." USA Today (9/23, Jervis) reports on the relief efforts of FEMA teams in Puerto Rico in the wake of Hurricane Maria. The teams were already on the island and "sprung into reconnaissance and search-and-rescue missions as soon as Maria's winds died down."

Eva Pilgrim said on ABC World News Tonight (9/24, story 6, 1:50, Llamas) that officials across Puerto Rico are "describing conditions as 'apocalyptic.'" David Begnaud said on the CBS Weekend News (9/24, story 6, 2:10, Quijano), "We're told there are still people in areas of the island that need to be rescued, but they have no way of calling for help."

The Washington Post (9/24, A1, Schmidt, Achenbach) reports in a front-page story that four days after the storm, "regions outside of San Juan remained completely disconnected from the rest of the island – and the world." As "the challenge of accessing the essentials of modern life – gasoline, cash, food, water – began to sink in" for residents, "government officials had no answers for them. Estimates for the return of electricity and basic services will be measured not in days but in weeks and months." On NBC Nightly News (9/24, story 5, 2:45, Snow), Gabe Gutierrez reported on "a FEMA search and rescue team from South Florida." Gutierrez said there is "an urgent rush to clear these roads and open up lines of communication. But the more people we speak with, it's clear this recovery won't be measured in weeks, but months, even years."

The AP (9/24, Coto) says that as authorities worked to assess the damage, Jenniffer González, Puerto Rico's nonvoting representative in Congress, said Sunday that Maria "set the island back decades." González said, "The devastation in Puerto Rico has set us back nearly 20 to 30 years. ... I can't deny that the Puerto Rico of now is different from that of a week ago. The destruction of properties, of flattened structures, of families without homes, of debris everywhere. The island's greenery is gone." The AP Adds that federal aid has "begun moving into Puerto Rico, welcomed by local officials who praised the Trump administration's response but called for the emergency loosening of rules long blamed for condemning the US territory to second-class status."

A New York Times (9/24) editorial urges federal help for Puerto Rico, arguing that while it "cannot vote for president and has no voting representatives in Congress," its citizens "are entitled to the same federal emergency funds and resources that Washington has been funneling to the far more politically powerful and economically resilient states of Texas and Florida in their hurricane miseries."

Dam Weakened By Maria's Rains Is In Danger Of Failing. Reuters (9/24, Graham, Respaut) reports that Guajataca Dam in the northwest of the island was damaged by Maria's heavy rains and was "in danger of bursting at any time." With around 70,000 people living downstream from the damn, Gov. Rosselló "reiterated his request on Saturday that people leave the area as soon as possible." However, USA Today (9/24, Dorell) reports that according to local officials, the dam "is holding and unlikely to threaten the lives of all 70,000 people ordered to relocate." Juan Morales Vega, public security director in the town of Isabela, "said the Guajataca dam in Quebradillas continues to hold despite reports of a fissure and partial breach, according to local paper El Vocero de Puerto Rico." Carlos Román, the special assistant to the executive director of the Center for Emergency Management in Quebradillas, "told El Vocero that alerts for the towns of Isabela and Quebradillas were overblown."

Tropical Storm Watches Issued For North Carolina, Virginia Coasts. ABC World News Tonight (9/24, story 7, 0:40, Llamas) reported that Maria is currently "a Category 2 storm, about four hundred miles southeast of Cape Hatteras." The Washington Post (9/24, Porter) reports that Maria is "still expected to remain off shore but sideswipe coastal locations with tropical storm conditions beginning on Tuesday," and "tropical storm watches have been issued for the entire North Carolina coast and parts of the extreme southern end of the Virginia coast."

'We Need Help': U.S. Virgin Islands Governor On Devastation After Maria And Irma.

WBUR-FM Boston (9/21) reports that U.S. Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp talked about the recovery effort following the passage of Hurricane Maria. Mapp said, "We need help. With our FEMA partners and our cruise ship partners, we're bringing in a lot of food, water, tarpaulins, personal hygiene packs, cots and blankets. That's really the immediacy of the need. We're asking folks who can go to USVI Recovery and they can donate there." He added, "I was able to speak to our Administrator William Brock Long of FEMA, and had a very good conversation with him, as well as the Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke, as we coordinate the relief for St. Croix."

Media Analyses: Trump Raising Rhetoric Against North Korea.

ABC World News Tonight (9/24, story 4, 2:10, Llamas) reported that the “volley of insults” between President Trump and North Korea has reached “an alarming level.” On Saturday, Trump tweeted, “Just heard Foreign Minister of North Korea speak at UN. If he echoes thoughts of Little Rocket Man, they won’t be around much longer!” That tweet followed North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong-ho “slamm[ing]” Trump at the UN, calling him “a mentally deranged person” who “committed an irreversible mistake.” USA Today (9/24, Cummings) similarly reports that Trump “sent another belligerent tweet directed at North Korea Saturday night,” referring to Ri’s remarks at the UN. USA Today says the President “has been engaged in an escalating war of words with North Korea and its leader.”

Reuters (9/24, Choi, Nichols) says the President “dialed up the rhetoric against North Korea again at the weekend” as he Kim Jong-un “have traded increasingly threatening and personal insults.” Analysts say the “escalation in rhetoric is increasing the risk of a miscalculation by one side or the other that could have massive repercussions.” John Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (9/24, story 3, 2:15, Quijano), “The tension, of course, is one of the ways the US thinks it might get the North Koreans to the negotiating table – if the North Koreans take seriously the overwhelming force the US could deploy, if things got to a military pass.”

A front-page New York Times (9/24, A1, Davis) analysis says Trump’s “willingness to casually threaten to annihilate a nuclear-armed foe was yet another reminder of the steep risks inherent in his brute-force approach to diplomacy.” However, it has also “led to a deep uncertainty about whether Mr. Trump is all talk or actually intends to act. The ambiguity could be strategic, part of an effort to intimidate Mr. Kim and keep him guessing. Or it could reflect a rash impulse by a leader with little foreign policy experience to vent his anger and stoke his supporters’ enthusiasm.”

Toluse Olorunnipa of Bloomberg News said on CNN’s Inside Politics (9/24), “It does not seem like they’re trying to dial things pack. It seems like both President Trump and the leader of North Korea are trying to ratchet things up as much as possible. Both have sort of fragile egos, egos that they believe have been challenged by one another and the President seems to be wanting to move that forward and ratchet things up significantly.”

The Washington Post (9/24, Morello), meanwhile, reports that other US officials “were more restrained in their words Sunday.” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin “repeated the insistence that all options, including military force, remain on the table,” but “lingered more on discussing how he has greater authority to punish countries, companies and individuals who trade with North Korea under an executive order signed by Trump last week. And he downplayed the likelihood of nuclear war.” Mnuchin said on and ABC’s This Week (9/24, Raddatz), “The President doesn’t want to be in a nuclear war. And we will do everything we can to make sure that doesn’t occur.” On CNN’s State Of The Union (9/24, Tapper), Mnuchin said the executive order signed last week by the President “gives the Treasury more authorities than we’ve ever had before” by allowing for us to “block many transactions with anybody that does trade or other significant business with North Korea.” Reuters (9/24) also reports Mnuchin’s comments Sunday.

According to the Washington Post (9/24, Denyer), “The view from China could hardly be much worse: the leaders of North Korea and the United States threatening to rain down total destruction on each other, while US bombers and fighters stage a show of military might close to China’s shores.” While in public China’s foreign ministry “has calmly advocated restraint,” experts said Sunday that in private it “is as frustrated with North Korea, and with the situation, as it has ever been.”

US Warplanes Conduct “Show Of Force” Ahead Of North Korean Official’s UNGA Address.

Leading the CBS Weekend News (9/23, lead story, 1:25, Ninan), correspondent Reena Ninan reported that “American bombers and fighter jets flew off the coast of North Korea today in a show of force.” The flight “was the furthest north of the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea that US warplanes have flown in the 21st century.” The Pentagon said the move “was in response to North Korea’s, quote, ‘reckless behavior.’” Shortly after, North Korean Foreign Affairs Minister Ri Yong Ho, at the United Nations General Assembly, escalated the “war of words” with President Trump. In video footage, Ri asserted, “None other than Trump himself is on a suicide mission.”

Calling Ri’s address the culmination of “an extraordinary week of militaristic threats from both nations before an organization founded to maintain international peace and security,” the Washington Post (9/23, Morello) reports Ri said Trump’s belittling of Kim with the nickname “little rocketman" rendered "our rockets' visit to the entire U.S. mainland inevitable." He pointed to a hydrogen bomb that can be affixed to an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of reaching the mainland US, and warned, "Trump might not have been aware what is uttered from his mouth, but we will make sure that he bears consequences far beyond his words, far beyond the scope of what he can handle even if he is ready to do so." The Post says the "rhetoric between Trump and Kim has grown exceptionally personal," and the heated exchanges "come at a time when diplomatic pressure may be starting to bear fruit," as Secretary of State Tillerson suggested last week.

The Wall Street Journal (9/23, Fassihi, Kesling) similarly says Ri's address to the UNGA dampened hopes that North Korea may be open to diplomacy. The Journal says many foreign leaders addressed the North Korean threat in their addresses to the Assembly this week, but the North Korean minister's speech was one of the most anticipated.

Reuters (9/24) reports that later on Saturday, Trump tweeted, "Just heard Foreign Minister of North Korea speak at U.N. If he echoes thoughts of Little Rocket Man, they won't be around much longer!" Reuters says that it was not apparent "from Trump's latest tweet if he was referring to Ri and Kim, or North Korea more broadly."

China To Impose Restrictions On Oil, Natural Gas Exports To North Korea. The Wall Street Journal (9/23, Chin) reports China's Commerce Ministry said in a late Friday online statement that beginning Jan. 1, it will cap refined petroleum exports to North Korea at two million barrels a year, and prohibit natural gas exports entirely. The ministry announced China will also prohibit North Korean textile imports, a key source of revenue that earned the nation $760 million last year, according to US officials.

Seismic Activity Detected Near North Korea's Nuclear Test Site. The Washington Post (9/23, Denyer) reports the US Geological Survey detected a 3.5-magnitude earthquake in northern North Korea on Saturday afternoon. The seismic activity was detected near North Korea's known nuclear test site; however, "experts said seismic data suggested that it was probably not caused by a new nuclear test, although it could have been a delayed geological reaction to the last test nearly three weeks ago." Furthermore, there were no reports of radiation detected around the site.

Still, the seismic activity was similar to that detected after North Korea's Sept. 3 underground nuclear test, so when the China Earthquake Administration initially attributed the tremor to a "suspected explosion," the incident "immediately set off alarm bells," the New York Times (9/23, Sang-Hun) reports. While the tremor appears, at least for now, "to have been a false alarm," as of Saturday afternoon the Chinese agency had not modified its initial assessment. The Wall Street Journal (9/23, Chin) reports the US Geological Survey also declined to publicly determine the source of the tremor, saying in a statement that it "cannot conclusively confirm at this time the nature (natural or human-made) of the event." The Korea Meteorological Administration in Seoul, however, offered a different initial assessment: "We have determined that this was caused by a natural earthquake, not a big one at that, and had nothing to do with any explosion."

US Olympic Committee Addresses Concerns Over North Korean Threat. In a letter sent to potential Winter Olympic athletes that was obtained by the AP (9/22, Pells), US Olympic Committee Chief Security Officer Nicole Deal said heightening US-North Korean tensions will likely persist for the foreseeable future, and while they "should not be dismissed as insignificant," they should not be "feared as precursors of an inevitable conflict." The AP says Deal's remarks signal that the US Team is not "considering skipping the Pyeongchang Games for security reasons." In a separate statement issued publicly on Friday, US Olympic Committee chief executive Scott Blackmun asserted, "We will continue to work with our State Department and local organizers to ensure that our athletes, and our entire delegation, are safe." Earlier this week, "France's sports minister suggested the country's athletes would stay home if security could not be guaranteed," prompting the International Olympic Committee to attempt to assuage security concerns.

WPost A1: Poll Finds Americans More Confident In Military Than Trump On North Korean Crisis. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (9/24, Clement, Rucker) reports on a new Washington Post-ABC News poll that found about "three-quarters of the public supports tougher economic sanctions on North Korea in an attempt to persuade it to give up its nuclear weapons, while just about one-third think the United States should offer the isolated country foreign aid or other incentives." The poll also found "37 percent of adults trust Trump either 'a great deal' or 'a good amount' to responsibly handle the situation with North Korea," compared to 72 percent who "trust U.S. military leaders, including 43 percent saying they trust them 'a great deal.'" Confidence in Trump's handling of the crisis was also "colored sharply by partisanship," with 11 percent of Democrats and 36 percent of independents trusting Trump to react responsibly, compared to more than three-quarters of Republican respondents.

North Korea Threatened A Hydrogen Bomb Test In The Pacific—which Is No Stranger To Nuclear Blasts.

Quartz (9/22, Mollman) reports that North Korea “warned Sept. 21 it might detonate a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific Ocean in response to threats made by US president Donald Trump as he addressed the United Nations General Assembly on Sept. 19.” According to the article, “if North Korea did decide—and manage—to detonate its own hydrogen bomb in the Pacific, it would...put at risk people on ships or even land, depending on the location, not to mention create long-lasting environmental damage.”

Palau Signs UN Treaty Prohibiting Nuclear Weapons.

Radio New Zealand (9/22) reports that “Palau’s president Tommy Remengesau has signed the UN treaty on the prohibition of nuclear weapons.” UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres “described the treaty as a product of increasing concern over the risk posed by the continued existence of nuclear weapons, including the catastrophic humanitarian and environmental consequences of their use.” Remengesau also “condemned North Korea’s threats against Guam describing them as intimidation of the entire Pacific region.”

Armenia Establishes Diplomatic Ties With Palau And Micronesia.

The Armen Press \(ARM\) (9/22) reports that “on the sidelines of the session of the UN General Assembly, foreign minister of Armenia Edward Nalbandian and Palau’s minister of state Faustina Rehuher-Marugg on September 21 signed the protocol on establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries with the presence of President of Palau Tommy Remengesau, press service of the Armenian ministry told Armenpress.” After the signing ceremony, they “held a meeting discussing issues relating to the cooperation within the frames of international organizations.” The article notes that “on the same day, the Armenian FM and Secretary of foreign affairs of Micronesia Lorin Robert signed the protocol on establishment of diplomatic ties between the two countries.”

USGS Says Cannot Confirm If North Korea Quake Natural Or Manmade.

Reuters (9/23, Feast) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey “said on Saturday it could not conclusively confirm whether a magnitude 3.5 earthquake detected in North Korea was manmade or natural.” USGS placed “the epicenter of the quake 22 km (14 miles) east-northeast of Sungjibaegam, North Korea, near the country’s main nuclear test site.” The article notes that “Chinese earthquake officials earlier said the tremor was a “suspected explosion”, while South Korean officials and CTBTO, the nuclear proliferation watchdog, both said they believed it was a natural quake.”

Katharine Hayhoe Talks Climate Science.

The Fulton \(MO\) Sun (9/24, Wilbers) reports that Katharine Hayhoe, the director of the Climate Science Center at Texas Tech University, and member of the Department of Interior’s South-Central Climate Science Center, gave a talk Wednesday at Westminster College’s Hancock Symposium. Hayhoe discussed climate science and focused “three common myths she thinks, contribute” to an “ideological divide” on the issue.

Trump Ignites Backlash With Tweets On Sports.

President Trump posted several tweets about sports on Saturday, prompting widespread criticism from athletes and business leaders that media analyses said distracted from other important political issues. Reporting was almost uniformly negative toward the President, with even conservative outlets and generally nonpartisan sports icons questioning his decision to rescind the NBA Championship invitation to the Golden State Warriors to visit the White House and his call for the NFL to fire players who protest the National Anthem.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (9/23, A1, Kilgore, Phillip) reports the President

"turned professional sports into a political battleground Friday night into Saturday, directing full-throated ire toward African American athletes who have spoken out against him and prompting a sharp rebuttal from the National Football League and several prominent sports figures." The Post says that "in a span of roughly 12 hours, as the sports world would typically be gearing up for college football and baseball's pennant races, Trump ensnared and agitated the most powerful sports league in North America and angered NBA superstars Stephen Curry and LeBron James. His comments set the stage for potential mass protest Sunday along NFL sidelines."

Reuters (9/23, Goldberg, Schectman) reports Trump at an Alabama rally for Sen. Luther Strange began by calling on NFL owners to fire players who protest the flag and then in two tweets on Saturday said, "If a player wants the privilege of making millions of dollars in the NFL, or other leagues, he or she should not be allowed to disrespect our Great American Flag (or Country) and should stand for the National Anthem. If not, YOU'RE FIRED. Find something else to do!"

In addition, USA Today (9/23, Amick) reports that "less than a day after so many prominent members of the Warriors reiterated their stance that they didn't want to visit to White House to celebrate their title, and just hours after Trump's inciteful rally in Alabama where he took aim at NFL players who protest the national anthem, he wasted no time in taking to Twitter – again." Trump said, "Going to the White House is considered a great honor for a championship team. Stephen Curry is hesitating, therefore invitation is withdrawn!"

The Wall Street Journal (9/23, Radnofsky, Beaton) characterizes the President's action as unusual and the Daily Caller (9/23, Pfeiffer) laments that "instead of the focus being on Republican struggles to pass health care and tax reform or the growing threat of a nuclear North Korea, Trump is now facing off in a battle against black athletes, which liberal journalists are already framing as racist." Bloomberg News (9/22, Jacobs) emphasizes that the President's "criticisms, directed primarily at black athletes, came after Trump fanned racial flames in August by repeatedly equating the actions of both sides after the death of a woman who was protesting against a demonstration by neo-Nazis, white supremacists and Confederate heritage groups in Charlottesville, Virginia."

The New York Times (9/23, A1, Belson, Davis) reports on its front page that although "many fans on social media were supportive of the president, the reaction from many athletes was immediate and impassioned, particularly among African-American football and basketball players who have criticized Mr. Trump on race."

On the CBS Weekend News (9/23, story 4, 2:20, Ninan), Tony Dokoupil said "the President's comments stirred fury online" while Politico (9/22, Griffiths, Jackson) reports Trump's tweets "drew an unusually blunt rebuke from National Football League commissioner Roger Goodell, who said the 'divisive comments' show a 'lack of respect' for the nation's most popular sport."

USA Today (9/23, Sports) reports Goodell in a statement added, "The NFL and our players are at our best when we help create a sense of unity in our country and our culture. There is no better example than the amazing response from our clubs and players to the terrible natural disasters we've experienced over the last month." The AP (9/23, Lucey) reports DeMaurice Smith, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, also "angrily denounced" Trump, tweeting: "We will never back down. We no longer can afford to stick to sports." Smith added the player's union is committed to "protecting the constitutional rights of our players as citizens as well as their safety as men who compete in a game that exposes them to great risks."

USA Today (9/23, Sports) reports NFL Players Association President Eric Winston tweeted, "I am extremely disappointed in the statements made by the President last night." Winston added, "The comments were a slap in the face to the civil rights heroes of the past and present, soldiers who have spilled blood in countless wars to uphold the values of this great nation and American people of all races, ethnicities, genders and sexual orientations who seek civil progress as a means to make this country, and this world, a better place."

The Hill (9/23, Seipel) reports Trump "fired back" late Saturday, tweeting, "Roger Goodell of NFL just put out a statement trying to justify the total disrespect certain players show to our country. Tell them to stand!"

Meanwhile, the New York Times (9/23, Hoffman) says Trump's remarks drew an "intense reaction from athletes," who "have begun firing back" at the President. According to the Times, "the response from players was swift," while the AP (9/23, Lucey, Reynolds) similarly reports that the President's remarks "drew sharp responses from some of the nation's top athletes," and The Hill (9/23, Manchester) states that he "caught flak on Saturday after ratcheting up his barbs on NFL and NBA players, prompting criticism from various professional athletes."

The Washington Times (9/23, Blake) reports that after Trump "singled out" Curry, the Golden State Warriors' "star athlete," the team on Saturday in a statement said, "While we intended to meet as a team at the first opportunity we had this morning to collaboratively discuss a potential visit to the White House, we accept that President Trump has made it clear that we are not invited." The Warriors added, "We believe there is nothing more American than our citizens having the right to express themselves freely on matters important to them. We're disappointed that we did not have an opportunity during this process to share our views or have open dialogue on issues impacting our communities that we felt would be important to raise." However, the team said it will still visit Washington, DC, but will use the trip "to celebrate equality, diversity and inclusion – the values that we embrace as an organization."

The Hill (9/23, Greenwood) "Briefing Room" blog reports that NBA Commissioner Adam Silver "said Saturday that he is 'disappointed' that the Golden State Warriors won't be visiting the White House in February, after the team canceled the plans amid a feud with President Trump." In a statement, Silver said, "I was in favor of the team visiting the White House and thought it was a rare opportunity for these players to share their views directly with the President." Silver added, "I am disappointed that that will not happen. More importantly, I am proud of our players for taking an active role in their communities and continuing to speak out on critically important issues." The Daily Caller (9/23, Hookstead) states that "it'll be interesting to see if this becomes a popular trend for sports teams as long as Trump is in the White House."

The Hill (9/23, Thomsen) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog that Curry on Saturday "fired back" at the President and "said it was 'surreal' for him to wake up and see that Trump had revoked his invitation." Curry asserted, "I don't know why he feels the need to target certain individuals rather than others." He added, "I have an idea of why, but, it's just kind of beneath, I think, a leader of a country to go that route. It's not what leaders do." The Hill (9/23, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog notes Curry "told reporters on Friday that he did not want to visit the White House." Curry said, "by not going, hopefully it will inspire some change for what we tolerate in this country and what we stand for, what is accepted and what we turn a blind eye toward."

The San Francisco Chronicle (9/23, Ting) reports Curry's teammate Draymond Green became "the first Warriors player to weigh in on...Trump's decision to disinvite the reigning champs to the White House," tweeting that he is "still wondering how this guy is running our country," while Breitbart (9/23, Huston) reports "NBA star LeBron James" joined in "to slam the president, saying, 'U bum @StephenCurry30 already said he ain't going! So therefore ain't no invite. Going to White House was a great honor until you showed up!'" Nonetheless, Breitbart highlights that "James' claim does not stand on a firm historical footing," as "players have been refusing White House visits for many decades before Donald Trump's first year in office."

USA Today (9/23, Neuharth-Keusch) reports "this isn't the first time that James, one of the world's most influential athletes, has spoken out against Trump, his most recent comments coming in the wake of the violent rallies in Charlottesville, Va. last month." The Hill (9/23, Thomsen) "Briefing Room" blog reports that later on Saturday, "the Cleveland Cavaliers star said in a video...that he was 'frustrated' because 'this guy that we've put in charge has tried to divide us once again.'" James asserted, "We all know what happened at Charlottesville and the divide that caused and now it's even hitting more home for me now because he's now using sports as the platform to try and divide us."

A number of other basketball icons also criticized Trump. In its "Briefing Room" blog, The Hill (9/23, Carter) reports Houston Rockets point guard Chris Paul, the president of the NBA Players Association, "said Saturday President Trump isn't 'man enough' to call athletes a 'son of a b----' to their faces after Trump used the term to describe athletes who kneel during the national anthem." The Hill (9/23, Carter) "Briefing Room" blog reports that former Los Angeles Lakers player Kobe Bryant tweeted, "A #POTUS who's name alone creates division and anger. Who's words inspire dissension and hatred can't possibly 'Make America Great Again.'"

In addition, ESPN (9/23) highlights how numerous "former and present NFL players, and front-office executives, reacted on social media," which included "Seattle Seahawks star Richard Sherman," Washington Redskins linebacker Zach Brown, Buffalo Bills running back LeSean McCoy, Tampa Bay Buccaneers wide receiver Desean Jackson, Lions tight end Eric Ebron, and former Heisman Trophy winner Reggie Bush, according to The Hill, which also shared criticism from the co-owners of the New York Giants, the CEO of the San Francisco 49ers, the CEO of the Green Bay Packers, the owner of the Miami Dolphins, and the owners of the Philadelphia Eagles, Buffalo Bills, Indianapolis Colts, and Seattle Seahawks.

USA Today (9/23, Martinelli) reports the mother of former San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick, Teresa Kaepernick, also "responded to Trump's remarks about her son with some sass." The Hill (9/23, Greenwood) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog she said in an interview with Deadspin that “it was ‘disappointing’ that Trump took aim at the NFL during a fiery campaign rally in Alabama Friday night, and accused him of playing to ‘racist people’ in the crowd of supporters.” She additionally compared Trump’s behavior to being “like a bully on a playground.”

Meanwhile, USA Today (9/23, Jones) reports Trump’s “could end up amplifying the number of demonstrations,” which extended to baseball, The Hill (9/23, Thomsen) “Briefing Room” blog reports, as the Oakland Athletics on Saturday “tweeted a statement in support of players who kneel during the national anthem moments after” catcher and rookie Bruce Maxwell “became the first major league baseball player to kneel during the national anthem Saturday night, one day after President Trump attacked NFL players who did the same.” New York Yankees pitcher CC Sabathia told the New York Daily News (9/23, Mazzeo) that “if the Yankees wind up winning the championship this season,” he would not visit the White House. He added, “I just don’t believe in anything that is Trump. So there wouldn’t be any reason for me to go at all.”

The Hill (9/23, Delk) reports the NAACP additionally “spoke out in defense of NBA All-Star Stephen Curry,” tweeting, “A hero dissed by a fill in the blank #TakeAKnee.”

According to The Hill (9/23, Lorenz), Milo Yiannopoulos also “disagree[d] with Trump’s statement that athletes who kneel during the national anthem should be fired.” In an interview, Yiannopoulos said, “I don’t think that people should be punished for kneeling during the national anthem. I think what should happen to them is they should be laughed at as attention seekers. ... I don’t think they deserve to be fired.”

UNC Men’s Basketball Championship Team Skipping White House Visit Due To Scheduling Conflict. The AP (9/23) reports a spokesman for the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill men’s basketball team, which won the national NCAA championship in April, announced Saturday that it “will not visit the White House because of a scheduling conflict.” The spokesman “said...that Hall of Fame coach Roy Williams and the players were willing to go, and the university and White House tried ‘eight or nine’ dates but none worked.”

Sports Columnists, Pundits Savage Trump Over Remarks. New York Times (9/23, Powell) sports columnist Michael Powell lauds the athletes who are responding to Trump and says that “in the surest and most striking sign of tectonic movements, N.F.L. Commissioner Roger Goodell, as careful and conservative a leader as you’ll find in pro sports, felt compelled to call out the president on Saturday.”

Washington Post (9/23, Jenkins) sports columnist Sally Jenkins argues that while the NFL’s response to the President’s “spit-foaming is hardly a test case for whether the republic will stand,” the league “is a maker of manners in this country, so it means something that Commissioner Roger Goodell and others are getting it right, striking the perfect calm but resistant tone in response to Trump’s gutter-mouthing, a tone that says, ‘We’re not your personal WrestleMania, and don’t use us for your sham body slams.’” She adds that the NFL, when “faced with whether to play to the basest instincts of the audience, declined. It adhered to civility.” Jenkins concludes that when “confronted with Trump’s vulgarity, rather than take him head on, [the NFL] chose simply to outclass him.”

The Hill (9/23, Carter) reports ESPN anchor Jemele Hill, who “called Trump a ‘white supremacist’ and a ‘bigot’ in a series of tweets earlier this month” that prompted the White House to call for her dismissal, predicted the President’s comments “will only incite more player protests, not quell them.”

In his Sports Illustrated (9/23, King) column, Peter King says “on the same day the media was filled with stories about a 27-year-old former NFL player who committed suicide and was found to have severe degenerative brain damage – likely much or all of it from football – the president decried how big hits have been taken out of the game.” While he admits that on the issue of tougher hits and opposing anthem protests, “the president might have the support of his core voters,” King contends “Trump’s longing-for-the-day-of-yore rhetoric in a speech in Alabama Friday night is the kind of anti-football, anti-player divisiveness that, frankly, no player or owner should stand for.” He adds that “Trump, apparently, is the only person in America who wants to see a more dangerous game of football.”

USA Today (9/23, Bell) NFL columnist Jarrett Bell hails Trump’s remarks as “fresh fuel for NFL players to engage in Colin Kaepernick-styled national anthem protests.” Bell asserts that “when the President of the United States, in all of his ignorance, urges his base of supporters to walk out on your game, your livelihood, your principles – because a number of NFL players have exercised their right to express discontent with some major inequalities of the American way – it is way past time to provide a determined response.” Bell adds “the rapid reactions from NFL commissioner Roger Goodell and NFL Players Association executive director DeMaurice Smith – who rarely agree on anything – was an encouraging sign of leadership that supplemented the voices from the players.”

USA Today (9/23) sports columnist Christine Brennan contends that “by unleashing his own despicable brand of fire and fury against the National Football League and the First Amendment rights of its players Friday night, President Donald Trump exhibited his failure to grasp the lesson every schoolyard bully learned long ago: Don’t pick on the football players.” Brennan adds it was noteworthy “that Trump mustered more anger Friday over Kaepernick’s personal decision to not stand for the anthem than he did for the neo-Nazis and white Supremacists who marched in Charlottesville’s deadly protest last month.”

WPost: MLB Needs To Raise Netting To Protect Bystanders From Foul Balls. The Washington Post (9/23) editorializes another young girl was injured Wednesday at Yankee Stadium when she was hit by “a 105-mph foul ball,” which illustrates why Major League Baseball has to take action to prevent more injuries from taking place. The Post asserts “player after player has since insisted that stadiums need more netting to protect fans from incoming foul balls” and argues “a large number of injuries would nevertheless be prevented if major league ballparks installed more extensive netting.” The Post concludes that “MLB should look to stadiums in Japan, where netting often reaches from foul pole to foul pole. And the next time the organization issues an obvious safety finding, it should come in the form of a requirement, not a mere recommendation.”

Trump, Kim Ratchet Up Public Criticism.

President Trump on Friday responded to the first public criticism directly from North Korean leader Kim Jong-un. Media coverage, which included nearly four and a half minutes on the network newscasts, cast both of their remarks as a dangerous escalation in rhetoric. Reporting also highlighted that North Korea says that it is currently preparing to conduct a hydrogen bomb test over the Pacific Ocean, which analyses warn would further inflame the tense region.

CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 6:05 p.m. EDT, Acosta) reported that a few hours after Kim described Trump as a “rogue,” “gangster,” “frightened dog,” and “a ‘dotard,’ which essentially means an old, senile lunatic,” the President tweeted, “Kim Jong Un of North Korea, who is obviously a madman who doesn’t mind starving or killing his people, will be tested like never before!” The Washington Post (9/22, Gearan, Phillip) reports “the back-and-forth between the United States and North Korea is the latest in a series of events escalating tensions between the two nations.”

In a separate article, the Washington Post (9/22, Nakamura, Gearan) reports the comments came a day after Trump signed new sanctions that “seek to leverage the dominance of the U.S. financial system by forcing nations, foreign companies and individuals to choose whether to do business with the United States or the comparatively tiny economy of North Korea. U.S. officials acknowledged that like other sanctions, these may not deter North Korean leader Kim Jong Un’s drive to threaten the United States with a nuclear weapon, but are aimed at slowing him down.” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin asserted Trump’s executive order “significantly expands Treasury’s authority to target those who enable this regime...wherever they are located.”

Reuters (9/22, Heavey) reports that in an Thursday interview with CNBC that aired Friday, Commerce Secretary Ross said China’s steps to restrict trade with North Korea “would “be very” good if they succeed in cutting off imported goods, and showed lessening support from China toward Pyongyang.” Ross added, “Even more importantly, it sent a very powerful message to North Korea that China is not being as supportive of them as it had been.”

Although “North Korea has long cultivated an image of defiant belligerence, punctuating its propaganda and diplomacy with colorful threats, insults and bluster,” a front-page New York Times (9/22, A1, Sang-Hun) article cautions Kim’s personal statement “pushed his government’s brinkmanship to a new, potentially more perilous level.” According to the Times, “in a country where the leader is essentially portrayed as a god, Mr. Kim’s decision to respond personally to Mr. Trump’s speech to the United Nations General Assembly and pledge reprisals escalated the standoff over the North’s nuclear program in a way that neither he nor his predecessors had done before.”

Brian Todd of CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 5:22 p.m. EDT, Acosta) asserted, “Never before have we seen this North Korean leader put his own name on a statement like this, and go after leader in such a personal and public way.” Todd added that US and South Korean officials are now “dissecting his words,” as well as “a threat by the foreign minister about testing a hydrogen bomb.” He also warned that US officials and analysts “believe the last nuclear bomb North Korea tested this month could have been a hydrogen bomb, which would be a game changer. Why? Because the blast may have been nearly 10 times more powerful than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima, which killed an estimated 150,000 people.”

Bloomberg News (9/21, Kang, Kim) reports Trump “expanded on those comments at a political rally in Alabama Friday night, saying Kim may be ‘smart, he may be strategic’ or he may be ‘totally crazy,’ but no matter what, Americans will be protected.” In his speech, which was broadcast by Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/22, 8:12 p.m. EDT, Carlson), the President stressed his commitment to “always defend[ing] America’s interest above all else,” and lamented, “When you look around the world, you have so many where they don’t respect their people. but we want nations that cooperate together to work for all people. That’s what we care about, all people. We can’t have mad men out there shooting rockets all over the place.” Trump added, “And, by the way, Rocket Man should have been handled a long time ago.” He pledged to “handle it, because we have to handle it. Little Rocket Man. We are going to do it. Because we really have no choice [since Kim is] talking about a massive weapon exploding over the ocean. The Pacific Ocean. Which causes tremendous, tremendous calamity.”

On CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 5:41 p.m. EDT, Acosta), senior political analyst Mark Preston said that “the unpredictability of the North Korean leader is, I think, the biggest wildcard and what concerns me the most, and probably concerns our intelligence officials the most as well. I do think, though, from a United States standpoint, trading barbs back and forth with the leader of North Korea is very ineffective. I think silence is deafening in many ways.” He called for tougher sanctions and “really pressuring China behind the scenes to take a more leadership role in this.” Senior congressional correspondent Manu Raju said US lawmakers are concerned that with his rhetoric, “the President painted himself in a corner here, and has given Kim Jong-un an excuse to move forward in a way that he may not have had otherwise.”

Meanwhile, Sen. Ed Markey said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 5:17 p.m. EDT, Acosta), “I think that we should be concerned that this escalatory rhetoric between two leaders of countries that have nuclear weapons is slipping very quickly into something that could become dangerous for the planet. And, again, if he detonates a hydrogen bomb into the atmosphere – that’s why we had the atmospheric nuclear test ban in 1963.” On whether the US should consider a military option, Markey stated, “No. There is no military option. None. If we take a strike at North Korea, it could very quickly escalate into the deaths of hundreds of thousands or millions of people in South Korea and in other countries in that region. The only answer is to go to final sanctions on the North Koreans.”

On CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 6:13 p.m. EDT, Acosta), Rep. Ruben Gallego said, “The problem is this is bluster, but it could easily get into what we call miscalculation, where one side decides they have to take some type of preemptive action to either protect themselves or get some kind of advantage. But the President did some correct things. He finally entered into a sanctions regime” that “can be helpful in compelling North Korea to the floor. Now he has to follow it through with our allies and make sure they’re enforced.”

CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 5:52 p.m. EDT, Acosta) previewed “Trump and Twitter,” a special report about the President’s tweeting more generally. Former CIA Director Gen. Michael Hayden told chief innovation correspondent Bill Weir, “If I’m the head of a hostile or even friendly intelligence service, I got a new office over here – follow that account. Tell me what this man is saying. It’s tremendously revealing. we know the President’s hot buttons. We know his vulnerabilities. We know what upsets him. We know what he demands from his subordinates. We even know his sleep patterns based upon his Twitter usage. That’s a tremendous gift to a foreign power.”

North Korea Says Hydrogen Bomb Test In Preparation. The Wall Street Journal (9/22, Cheng) reports North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho said Friday that North Korea “might consider a historic aboveground test of a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific Ocean” in retaliation for Trump’s remarks at the UN General Assembly this week. Kristen Welker, the White House correspondent for NBC Nightly News (9/22, story 5, 2:00, Holt), asserted the “threat to test a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific” – rather than the “series of potentially dangerous verbal volleys” between Trump and Kim – is “raising alarm bells.” She added, “If North Korea launched a bomb, Pentagon officials say, under one scenario, advanced radars and satellites all over the world would detect the launch, giving the US the military options to intercept it or shoot it down before any radioactive material could do harm. But there are no guarantees.”

CNN’s Situation Room (9/22, 6:08 p.m. EDT, Acosta) Pentagon correspondent Barbara Starr said that “North Korea already is getting ready for its next missile launch, according to Administration officials, possibly a missile that could hit the US. Kim Jong-un now threatening the ‘highest level of hard-line countermeasure in history’ following President Trump’s speech at the UN.” Meanwhile, Starr said such a test “could change everything,” and that the US intelligence community is now watching “for very particular signs” of such a weapon. Yet North Korea is seemingly undeterred, Starr added, and "all indications are to continue to proceed with their weapons program." A senior Administration official told Reuters (9/22, Spetalnick) that a hydrogen bomb test would be a "game-changer," but while the official did not give "too much credence" to the threat because "there's a certain amount of bluster that's taken for granted when you're dealing with North Korea," the US "to some extent [does] take it seriously."

Meanwhile, Reuters (9/22, Heavey) reports Trump and South Korean President Moon Jae-in "agreed to strengthen their defense posture amid rising tensions with North Korea, the White House said on Friday." In a statement, the White House said "Trump and Moon, who met on Thursday, committed to strengthen their 'combined defense posture, including through South Korea's acquisition and development of highly advanced military assets' and 'agreed to the enhanced deployment of U.S. strategic assets in and around South Korea on a rotational basis.'"

In a front-page article, the New York Times (9/22, A1, Baker, Sanger) examines some of the "pre-emption options" presented by aides to Trump, which "included cyberattacks against military or dual-use facilities, according to senior officials." The Times adds Defense Secretary Mattis "noted that the United States had not attempted to destroy the unarmed missiles that have been tested so far, because they were not on track to hit American territory, or allies like Japan." According to the Times, "so far, the president has declined to explicitly lay out a red line that, if crossed, would provoke some sort of action." A senior official "said that acting to prevent an atmospheric test, which would risk radiation spreading in the winds toward populated areas, could well result in a very different decision." However, the Times admits "such an operation would be highly risky even if it would be far more surgical than Mr. Trump's threat this week to 'totally destroy North Korea' if forced to defend the United States or its allies."

ABC World News Tonight (9/22, story 5, 2:25, Muir) broadcast Secretary of State Tillerson, who in an interview with David Muir on "Good Morning America" was asked how the US would respond if North Korea detonated a hydrogen bomb. Said Tillerson, "Well, we will continue our efforts in the diplomatic arena, but all of our military options, as the President has said, are on the table." Tillerson added that "once we can assess the nature of this threat, the President will make a decision regarding the appropriate actions," broadcast CNN's Situation Room (9/22, 5:07 p.m. EDT, Acosta), which said that, "despite the apocalyptic rhetoric" between Trump and Kim, Tillerson insisted that "the US has not given up on finding a diplomatic solution." Reuters (9/22, Chiacu) reports Tillerson asserted, "We are quite challenged but our diplomatic efforts continue unabated. ... We have put in place the strongest economic sanctions ever to have been assembled against...Kim Jong Un." Tillerson added, "he is being tested with the sanctions, voices from every corner of the world."

The AP (9/22, Burns, Pennington) reports Susan Thornton, the acting secretary of state for East Asia and the Pacific, "said Friday a North Korean H-bomb test in the Pacific would be 'outrageous.'" Thornton added that such action "would draw a 'concerted and determined international response' but declined to be specific."

According to the Wall Street Journal (9/22, Cheng), the threat also prompted criticism from both Russia and China, which called on North Korea and the US to deescalate the situation. Reuters (9/22, Nichols) reports that at a news conference on Friday, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said "the exchange of threats is quite bad, unacceptable" He added, "We have to calm down the hot heads." In a separate article, Reuters (9/22, Nichols, Brunstrom) reports Lavrov also "again pushed a proposal by Moscow and Beijing for a dual suspension of North Korean weapons tests and the U.S.-South Korean military drills to kick-start talks."

In addition, although "China has tightened the financial screws on North Korea under U.N. sanctions approved in recent weeks," the Washington Post (9/22, A1, Gearan, Denyer) in a front-page article reports China on Friday "disputed Trump's claim that it has joined a new round of punishing economic sanctions against its communist ally." While Trump said Thursday that Chinese President Xi Jinping "had ordered Chinese banks to cease conducting business with North Korean entities," Lu Kang, a spokesman with China's Foreign Ministry, "denied that Beijing had agreed to go that far." The Post adds that Lu instead "appealed for calm" and insisted, "What's needed now is to implement the U.N. resolutions strictly and positively explore channels to solve problems via talks, rather than provoking each other and adding oil to the fire."

US-Japanese Navies Conduct Drills Off Korean Peninsula. Reuters (9/22, Kelly, Kubo) reports "the U.S. Navy carrier Ronald Reagan is conducting drills with Japanese warships in seas south of the Korean peninsula, Japan's military said on Friday, in a show of naval power as Pyongyang threatens further nuclear and missile tests." Reuters adds that "the Reagan strike group will conduct a separate drill with the South Korean Navy in October, the defense ministry said in a statement distributed to South Korean lawmakers on Monday."

White House Aides Appealed To Trump To Tone Down UN Rhetoric. The Los Angeles Times

(9/22, Bennett) reports “senior aides to President Trump repeatedly warned him not to deliver a personal attack on North Korea’s leader at the United Nations this week, saying insulting the young despot in such a prominent venue could irreparably escalate tensions and shut off any chance for negotiations to defuse the nuclear crisis.” According to the Times, “some of Trump’s top aides, including national security advisor H.R. McMaster, had argued for months against making the attacks on North Korea’s leader personal, warning it could backfire.” The Times says “some advisors now worry that the escalating war of words has pushed the impasse with North Korea into a new and dangerous phase that threatens to derail the months-long effort to squeeze Pyongyang’s economy through sanctions to force Kim to the negotiating table.”

Army Investigating Fake South Korean Evacuation Order. The Washington Post (9/22, Lamothe) reports counterintelligence officials from the US Army in South Korea “are investigating fake mobile alerts and social media messages warning American military families and Defense Department personnel of orders to evacuate the volatile peninsula on Thursday.” The officials in a Facebook post stated that US Forces Korea “did NOT send this message” and they “warned that Americans living in South Korea with U.S. troops and Defense Department employees should confirm that any evacuation-related communications are legitimate before acting.”

South Korean Preppers Revise Emergency Plans As Tensions Rise. The Wall Street Journal (9/22, Lee) reports that while most South Koreans do their best to ignore the belligerence and threats from North Korea, preppers in the country are revising their disaster plans as tensions escalate.

WSJournal Reflects On Life In North Korea. In a more than 2,100-word article, the Wall Street Journal (9/22, Lyons, Cheng) reflects on a recent visit to North Korea and shares what its reporters saw on their closely monitored trip to Pyongyang earlier this week.

US Government Bonds Strengthen On North Korea Tensions. The Wall Street Journal (9/22, Banerji) reports US government bonds strengthened Friday as the yield on the benchmark 10-year US Treasury note declined from 2.278 percent on Thursday to 2.262 percent. The Journal attributes this change to market concerns over North Korea’s threat to test a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific Ocean.

WPost, WSJournal: Trump Should Allow Sanctions To Work, Stay Out Of Gutter. The Washington Post (9/22) editorializes that President Trump “appears to have embarked on a two-track approach to pressuring North Korea into restraining its nuclear weapons and missile programs” by focusing on “ever-tightening economic sanctions that, if properly implemented, could further isolate North Korea from world finance and trade” in addition to “a game of chicken to see who can hurl the harshest and most absurd rhetorical insults.” The Post asserts that while Kim Jong Un’s regime may avoid the penalties, “sanctions and coercive diplomacy, however difficult, offer the best available approach, given the unappealing alternatives.” However, the Post criticizes Trump for escalating “the food fight” with Kim and asserts the President “ought to focus on making his sanctions work and quit imitating the supposed madman he is trying to pressure.”

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/22) hails the latest sanctions on North Korea and argues Kim Jong Un’s threat to test a hydrogen bomb over the Pacific Ocean proves his regime is rattled. The Journal calls on China to live up to its commitments to avoid war, which the editorial acknowledges needs to be a last resort to prevent North Korea’s nuclear program from advancing further.

Puerto Rico Issues Evacuation Order For 70,000 People With Dam In Danger Of Failing.

In ABC World News Tonight’s (9/22, lead story, 3:00, Muir) lead broadcast, Rob Marciano reported Puerto Rican officials on Friday instituted a flash flood emergency in response to Hurricane Maria, which cracked the Guajataca Dam, “forcing 70,000 people to evacuate immediately.” In a front-page article, the Washington Post (9/22, A1, Schmidt, Zezima, Somashekhar, Cassidy) reports Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said the dam had suffered a “fissure” and called on residents in municipalities of Quebradillas, Isabela, and part of San Sebastian to evacuate. While the status of the dam was unclear Friday evening, the Wall Street Journal (9/22, Kamp) reports the National Weather Service has warned of its imminent failure and called on Puerto Ricans to move to higher ground.

According to the New York Times (9/22, Times), “the news about the dam was a dramatic sign that the scale of the troubles left behind by the storm were just being understood.” On NBC Nightly News (9/22, story 2, 2:25, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported that elsewhere “the floodwaters are receding, but many communities are still inundated.” In Toa Baja, 30 miles west of San Juan, Gutierrez said, “The town’s mayor tells us at least eight people drowned here and authorities have rescued 4,000 to 5,000 trapped by floodwaters. Without working cellphones, he’s coordinating with rescue crews from Florida and Virginia by word of mouth.”

The New York Times (9/22, A1, Robles, Alvarez, Walsh) reports in a front-page article that “with everyone from the governor of Puerto Rico to the mayor of San Juan predicting that it could take four to six months to resume electrical service, people [are] contemplating empty refrigerators, campfire cooking, bathing in their own sweat and perhaps wrangling for fresh water on an island accustomed to hard times but nothing like what the future may bring.” According to the Times, “the biggest long-term obstacle was the prospect of months without power.”

In the lead CBS Evening News (9/22, lead story, 2:20, Mason) segment, David Begnaud also reported residents are “trying to cope without power. Outdated and fragile, most of Puerto Rico’s power lines are above ground, no match for Maria.” Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority CEO Ricardo Ramos predicted that the island could be without power for months. He added, “If we go back to history under Hurricane Hugo, it took six months to restore power to everyone.” The Wall Street Journal (9/22, De Córdoba, Campo-Flores) reports Rosselló said, “It has been difficult to see the deterioration of infrastructure in Puerto Rico. ... But it has been even more difficult finding citizens who have lost everything.”

NBC Nightly News (9/22, story 3, 1:20, Holt) Gadi Schwartz reported that for the first responders, Maria has been “yet another disaster in what seems like an unrelenting season of catastrophe.” Schwartz added, “So many organizations have been stretched thin. FEMA supporting more than 30,000 people in disaster zones. The Red Cross deploying more than 5,000 workers and nearly its entire vehicle fleet. Samaritan’s Purse, a North Carolina nonprofit, responding to their third hurricane in the last few weeks with 50,000 pounds of emergency supplies to Puerto Rico.”

The Washington Post (9/22, O’Keefe) reports that in the days ahead, Puerto Rico “is set to ask for several billion dollars in federal relief after two major hurricanes, as officials acknowledge that the months-long recovery may compel more residents to abandon an already economically distressed island.” Sen. Marco Rubio said, “We have to begin to think in the worst possible terms, between power restoration, critical infrastructure, housing assistance, the need to airlift critical medical patients out of the island to the mainland, seniors, things like that.” Rep. Darren Soto (D), “the first Floridian of Puerto Rican descent to serve in Congress,” said Thursday, “We’ve anticipated we’ll see tens of thousands of folks here at least temporarily,” he said. “Many were, I’m sure, already contemplating the move, but this will push them over the top.”

Knicks Player Donates, Raises Money For Puerto Rico. USA Today (9/22, Tsuji) reports New York Knicks forward Carmelo Anthony has “set up a donation page and has contributed $50,000” to Puerto Rico and is trying to $1 million. In his statement, Anthony said “his father is Puerto Rican so he has family on the island, and that since the power has been knocked out after Hurricane Maria...he hasn’t heard from them. He’s also thinking of all the people struggling to recover.”

New York Governor Assembles Delegation To Puerto Rico To Assess Damage From Hurricane Maria. CNBC (9/22) reports online that the devastation Hurricane Maria caused on Puerto Rico “is nothing short of catastrophic.” Six people are confirmed dead, and the island’s infrastructure sustained a “ruinous blow.” After the hurricane struck, “New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo immediately assembled a delegation of administration officials and emergency response experts, including 60 members of the National Guard, to do a reconnaissance of the destruction. The relief flight, donated by JetBlue – the largest airline in Puerto Rico – departed from John F. Kennedy International Airport to San Juan Airport early on Friday.” President Trump said he will visit the island “to see the damage firsthand and disclosed that his Homeland Security adviser, Tom Bossert, has been helping him actively prepare the government’s response to Hurricane Maria.”

Graham And Cassidy Plan Changes To Bill As More GOP Senators Express Doubts.

With several senators from both the conservative and centrist wings of the Republican caucus saying over the weekend that they will not support, or have not yet committed to supporting, the Graham-Cassidy healthcare bill, the Washington Post (9/24, A1, Sullivan, Cunningham, Phillip) reports that Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy “plan to release a revised version of their bill Monday sending more health-care dollars to the states of key holdouts” Sens. Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski. But while Murkowski has been on the fence, “Republicans close to the process have long counted Collins as an eventual ‘no,’ with some predicting that little could be done to the bill to change her mind.” Sean Sullivan, one of the writers of the Post report, tweeted, “There is pessimism tonight among some Rs close to the process that these changes to Cassidy-Graham will move Collins from likely no to yes.”

Bloomberg News (9/24, Dopp) reports that the revised bill “also changes language regarding pre-existing conditions. ... States would have to describe how their health plans 'shall maintain access to adequate and affordable health insurance coverage for individuals with pre-existing conditions.' The original language said each state had to show how it 'intends' to have adequate and affordable access to coverage."

The Hill (9/24, Sullivan) reports that in a Sunday evening statement, Senate Minority Leader Schumer said, "Despite an attempt to appear to add money for a select few states, this bill is just as bad for those states and the rest of the states because it still contains a massive cut to Medicaid, and would throw our health insurance system into chaos while raising premiums. It still takes away protections for those with preexisting conditions and further weakens consumer protections."

NBC Nightly News (9/24, story 3, 2:30, Snow) reported earlier that passage of the bill is "looking more and more difficult now with two more Republicans today saying [that] they have big problems with this bill." NBC's Kelly O'Donnell reported, "Signs point to outright opposition and wavering reluctance from a few Republicans whose votes are critical." Collins: "Well, it is hard for me to envision getting to yes on this bill because my concerns are so fundamental." Sen. Rand Paul: "This is a bad idea. It's not repeal." The AP (9/24, Fram) reports that Sen. Ted Cruz "also voiced opposition, underscoring the bill's problems with both ends of the GOP spectrum." At a Texas event, Cruz said, "Right now, they don't have my vote." USA Today (9/24, Kelly) reports that Cruz also said that he does not think that fellow conservative Sen. Mike Lee is on board yet, either. ABC World News Tonight (9/24, story 8, 0:25, Llamas) said in a brief update that the legislation is "in critical condition." John Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (9/24, story 3, 2:15, Quijano), "There don't look like there are enough Republicans to support it because of its structural policy flaws."

The New York Times (9/24, Kaplan) reports that with no Democrats expected to back the bill, GOP leaders can afford to lose only two members of their caucus, and both Paul and Sen. John McCain have announced their opposition – though the Wall Street Journal (9/24, A1, Radnofsky, Mann) says that only McCain said that his vote was totally out of reach. The Washington Post (9/24, Costa) reports that Paul "continues to engage with President Trump and Senate leaders, giving proponents of the latest GOP bill a glimmer of hope." He "signaled Sunday that he is willing to consider a 'narrow' version of the legislation."

Paul said on NBC's Meet The Press (9/24, Todd), "I have always been a yes for repeal, but the bill unfortunately keeps most of the Obamacare spending, almost all of it, and just reshelves it and block grants it to the states." Jonathan Swan of Axios (9/24) writes that Paul wants the legislation to "cut the Affordable Care Act spending way back" and "scrap way more Affordable Care Act regulations. ... Paul's list of demands suggest he's not an absolute no, but his conditions may be impossible to meet." Washington Post congressional reporter Paul Kane tweeted, "Chasing a ghost – if you successfully buy off Murkowski with more $$$, how do you placate Rand, who wants less $$$?"

On CNN's State Of The Union (9/24, Tapper), Collins declined to confirm a "no" vote, saying she was waiting on an analysis from the Congressional Budget Office. Collins noted that the Affordable Care Act is "flawed" and that she sees "the work we're doing in the health committee as the path forward." Collins also joined CBS Face the Nation to talk about the bill. However, Politico (9/24, Robillard) reports that she said "it was 'very difficult for me to imagine a scenario' where she votes for Graham-Cassidy."

NBC's Benjy Sarlin tweeted, "We may see some more 'Psh, I totally wasn't going to vote for that' comments if Collins/Murkowski officially kill it. Still kinda alive now."

Trump: "I Don't Know What They're Doing," But "Eventually We'll Win." The Washington Post (9/24, Phillip) reports that President Trump "left open the possibility that the latest Republican effort to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act might not be successful" at this time, and said "that his first priority has always been on overhauling the tax code." The Hill (9/24, Conradis) reports that Trump told reporters, "I have been watching for seven years at the Republicans that have been saying 'repeal and replace' and then you have John McCain voting 'no' for whatever reason. ... So I don't know what they're doing, but you know what? Eventually we'll win, whether it's now or later."

White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short said on Fox News Sunday (9/24, Wallace) that the bill "is not dead" and "we're trying to win over the last couple of senators to get there." Short said on NBC's Meet The Press (9/24, Todd) that special interests were making decisions on healthcare, and that they should "push it to the states" to make decisions. He said that "preexisting conditions are protected by this legislation."

Graham Says GOP Will "Get The Votes Next Week." Politico (9/24, Robillard) reports that

Graham said on ABC's This Week that "the GOP would manage to round up the 50 votes necessary to pass Obamacare repeal through the Senate by the end of the next week. but their path to 50 is unclear." Graham said, "I think we're going to get the votes next week." When asked on ABC's This Week (9/24, Raddatz) about criticism of the bill from some insurance groups, Graham said, "I would have been surprised if these people were for our bill, because we take money away from them, [and] give it to state governments to design systems that will deliver a better outcome."

McCain Says His Stance Is Not About Trump. The Washington Examiner (9/24, Leonard) reports that McCain "defended his vote against the Republican healthcare bill this summer, saying that his decision was not rooted in antagonism against President Trump for mocking his military record." McCain told CBS' 60 Minutes (9/24, Stahl), "If I took offense at everybody who has said something about me, or disparaged me or something like that – life is too short. You've gotta move on. And on an issue of this importance to the nation, for me to worry about a personal relationship, then I'm not doing my job."

Some Democrats Wonder If Party Strategy Failed On Healthcare. The Washington Post (9/24, Weigel) reports, "This week, as Senate Republicans scrambled one more time to unravel the Affordable Care Act on a party-line vote, some Democrats asked whether it all could have been prevented with a little more strategy." They wonder if the agreement that Schumer and House Minority Leader Pelosi reached with Trump "on the debt limit that cleared the calendar" gave the GOP time to revisit healthcare, or if Sen. Bernie Sanders' announcement of a Medicare For All bill energized conservatives. One Democratic voter at an Iowa event told the Post, "That should have waited. They should have gotten this bill put down and decided what to do from there."

Sen. Cory Booker said on MSNBC's Politics Nation (9/24) that "every member of the Democratic caucus knows that right now what we need to be focused on is protecting and defending the Affordable Care Act. And actually working in a bipartisan manner to make it better, which we had going on." Several Democratic senators tweeted about the bill on Sunday. Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto tweeted, "#GrahamCassidy is not about Republicans and Democrats, it's about life and death. Stop playing politics with healthcare." Sen. Kamala Harris tweeted, "Don't stop calling, writing letters, and tweeting, telling Senators to vote NO on #GrahamCassidy. This isn't over until Sept 30th." Sen. Ron Wyden tweeted, "As ranking member on cmte w/jurisdiction over health care, I've seen a lot of health care proposals. #GrahamCassidy is BAD POLICY & cruel."

Dionne: GOP Rushing Bill In Search Of "A Win." E.J. Dionne writes in his Washington Post (9/24) column, "There is only one reason the Senate even considered a vote this week: The GOP base, and particularly the party's donor class, wants repeal. ... Republicans scheduled a quickie, last-minute hearing this week for show. Because Trump and his party want 'a win,' they're willing to wreak havoc on the insurance markets, state governments and people's lives to get it."

Trump, Pence Urge GOP To Repeal Obamacare As McCain Opposes Healthcare Bill.

Politico (9/22, Nelson) reports President Trump on Friday "warned Republicans...to fall in line behind last-ditch legislation in the Senate to repeal and replace Obamacare, writing online that any GOP lawmaker who votes against the bill will be remembered as 'the Republican who saved Obamacare'" and he "singled out" Sen. Rand Paul. The President tweeted, "Rand Paul, or whoever votes against Hcare Bill, will forever (future political campaigns) be known as 'the Republican who saved ObamaCare.'"

The Indianapolis Star (9/22, Cook, King, Groppe, Lange) reports Vice President Pence on Friday also "turned his attention to health care" on a visit to Indiana "to drum up support for tax reform," as he "called on Congress to pass the Graham-Cassidy health care bill." Speaking in Anderson, Pence "acknowledged the effort would not be easy" and admitted "some have gone so far as to announce their opposition already," but said he and Trump "remained 'undeterred' and could not 'in good conscience abandon this cause.'" The Vice President added, "A vote against Graham-Cassidy is a vote to save Obamacare. ... The Republican majority in Congress in particular was not elected to save Obamacare, they were elected to repeal and replace it – and it's time for every member of the Republican majority to keep their word to the American people."

Meanwhile, The Hill (9/22, Greenwood) reports White House counselor Kellyanne Conway said Friday on "Fox & Friends" that the White House is "increasingly optimistic about the chances to pass Graham-Cassidy," which she hailed as "an innovative solution that would still preserve many of the most important components of repealing and replacing ObamaCare, doing away with those draconian taxes and penalties – saving about $300 billion in taxes, $485 billion in spending.”

However, the New York Times (9/22, A1, Kaplan, Pear) in a front-page article reports Sen. John McCain on Friday “announced...he would oppose the latest proposal to repeal the Affordable Care Act, leaving Republican leaders with little hope of succeeding in their last-ditch attempt to dismantle the health law and fulfill their longstanding promise to conservative voters.” The Times characterizes McCain’s decision as “a slightly less dramatic reprise of his middle-of-the-night thumbs-down that killed the last repeal effort in July.” The Washington Post (9/22, A1, Sullivan, Eilperin) says on its front page that McCain’s announcement left “the latest Republican effort to dismantle the Affordable Care Act...on the brink of failure” with Senate Majority Leader McConnell and the President backed “into a difficult corner” because “they must now decide whether to continue to pursue a vote that increasingly appears likely to fail, or short-circuit the endeavor and deal with the backlash after another unsuccessful try.”

ABC World News Tonight’s (9/22, story 4, 2:40, Muir) Mary Bruce reported “McCain might have just killed this new repeal, because Republicans can only afford to lose two votes. Rand Paul has already said no. And McCain did this even though his own best friend in the Senate, Lindsey Graham, is one of the architects.” In a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (9/22, A1, Armour, Peterson) reports McCain in his statement said, “I cannot in good conscience vote for the Graham-Cassidy proposal. I believe we could do better working together, Republicans and Democrats, and have not yet really tried,” He added, “I take no pleasure in announcing my opposition. Far from it. The bill’s authors are my dear friends, and I think the world of them. I know they are acting consistently with their beliefs and sense of what is best for the country. So am I.”

In addition, Politico (9/22, McCaskill) reports Sen. Rand Paul, “a definitive ‘no’ on Senate Republicans’ last-ditch effort to repeal and replace Obamacare,” in a series of tweets said Friday that despite the President’s remarks, he “won’t be bribed or bullied” into voting for the legislation. Paul asserted, “No one is more opposed to Obamacare than I am, and I’ve voted multiple times for repeal. The current bill isn’t repeal.” He added, “I won’t vote for Obamacare Lite that keeps 90% of the taxes & spending just so some people can claim credit for something that didn’t happen” Paul continued, “Calling a bill that KEEPS most of Obamacare ‘repeal’ doesn’t make it true. That’s what the swamp does. I won’t be bribed or bullied.”

On the CBS Evening News (9/22, story 3, 2:10, Mason), chief congressional correspondent Nancy Cordes said the “GOP repeal effort has been just as rushed as past attempts, leaving” Sen. Cory Gardner and other Republican senators “scrambling to figure out what it would mean for their states before next Saturday’s vote deadline.” She added that “with McCain and...Paul opposed, GOP leaders can’t afford to lose another senator.”

In the lead NBC Nightly News (9/22, lead story, 2:20, Holt) segment, Capitol Hill correspondent Kasie Hunt reported that “in the spotlight: undecided Sen. Lisa Murkowski,” which prompted the Vice President to go on Alaska radio “to keep up the pressure.” Pence said, “I probably don’t need to tell the people of Alaska about the failings of national socialized healthcare.” Hunt added Pence also lobbied Sen. Susan Collins, but the AP (9/22, Villeneuve) reports Collins “said Friday she’s ‘leaning against’ a new Republican proposal to eliminate the Affordable Care Act but is waiting on an analysis by the Congressional Budget Office before making a final decision.” When asked about Trump’s tweet on Friday, Collins “said she wants to fix serious issues in the health care law.” According to the AP, Collins’ comments came as Maine Gov. Paul LePage met with Pence in Washington, DC “to promote the legislation. LePage said the bill represents the ‘best chance’ to reform the current system and to return decision-making on health care funding to the states.”

According to the Washington Post (9/22, Sullivan), “consumer health organization” Community Catalyst Action Fund, which is “trying to defeat the latest Republican attempt to dismantle the Affordable Care Act,” on Friday launched a nearly $200,000 radio advertising campaign focused on pressuring McCain, Murkowski, Collins and fellow Sens. Rob Portman and Shelley Moore Capito to oppose the legislation.

Trump Criticizes McCain For “Terrible” Opposition To Repeal And Replace. The Hill (9/22, Byrnes) reports that in his speech at a campaign rally in Huntsville, Alabama on Friday, Trump “chided” McCain over his “totally unexpected” and “terrible” opposition and insisted that when it comes to repealing and replacing Obamacare, “We’re going to do it eventually.”

Schumer Thanks McCain For Opposition, But Warns Democrats Against Celebrating. Politico (9/22, Schor, Caygle) reports Senate Majority Leader Schumer in a statement thanked McCain for his “courage” in opposing the healthcare bill and asserted he has “assured Senator McCain that as soon as repeal is off the table, we Democrats are intent on resuming the bipartisan process.”

However, Politico says that Schumer “signaled” Democrats not to celebrate and “they reminded each other in public and private on Friday that, McCain’s opposition aside, only the Sept. 30 expiration of Republicans’ ability to push through repeal with 50 votes can give Obamacare supporters room to breathe easy.”

GOP Sought To Placate Angry Donors With Latest Push For Obamacare Repeal. The New York Times (9/22, Hulse) reports “the backlash from big donors as well as the grass roots panicked Senate Republicans and was part of the motivation behind the sudden zeal to take one last crack at repealing the health care law before the end of the month.” The Times says that in the face of McCain’s new opposition, “Republicans must confront the possibility that they will once again let down their backers with no big win in sight.” According to the Times, “Republicans say the fund-raising drop-off has been steep and across the board, from big donations to the small ones the party solicits online from the grass roots.” The Times adds that GOP officials “say the hostile views of both large and small donors are in unusual alignment and that the negative sentiment is crystallized in the fund-raising decline.”

American Healthcare Associations “Mobilized” Against GOP Bill. In an analysis, the Washington Post (9/22, Ingraham) says that “one factor in the bill’s apparent (although not yet certain) demise: Cassidy-Graham has mobilized nearly the entire American health-care community in opposition.” The Post provides a list of national advocacy groups that oppose the measure and “strikingly...was unable to identify any medical associations that support the measure.” However, while “some antiabortion groups, such as the March for Life and National Right to Life, do support the bill,” the Post adds “they are not primarily medical or health-care-oriented in focus.”

In his New York Times (9/22) column, David Leonhardt asserts that because “defenders of the new Trumpcare – the Graham-Cassidy bill – are telling Jimmy Kimmel to be quiet and leave the health policy debate to the experts,” he shares the statements from the American Medical Association, American Nurses Association, American Hospital Association, AARP, and other major healthcare organizations criticizing the legislation.

Polls Highlight Opposition To GOP Healthcare Plan, Support For Single-Payer Healthcare. The Hill (9/22, Sullivan) reports a new poll of 638 “registered voters” (9/20-9/21) “from the left-leaning Public Policy Polling finds that less than a quarter of respondents approve of the Senate GOP’s latest repeal and replacement bill, while 50 percent disapprove.” In particular, “46 percent of voters said they would be less likely to vote for a member of Congress if he or she voted for Graham-Cassidy, while 23 percent would be more likely,” and 77 percent “said they agreed with late-night host Jimmy Kimmel that no one should be denied coverage because they cannot afford it.”

The Washington Post (9/22, Phillips) reports a Washington Post-ABC News poll of 1,002 “adults” (9/18-9/21) “finds that more than half of Americans prefer Obamacare (56 percent) to the latest GOP plan,” while 33 percent “prefer the bill that Senate Republicans, panicked by a month back home with their base and no Obamacare repeal to show, abruptly put on the table this month.” The Post adds that what is “worse for Republicans: Roughly twice as many people strongly prefer the current law to Republicans’ plan, 42 to 22 percent.” However, the Post acknowledges “Democrats are unsurprisingly supportive of the current health-care law – in all 85 percent of them prefer it to the Republican plan, with 70 percent strongly preferring it” whereas “Republicans favor the new plan by a nearly 3 to 1 margin, 66 to 23 percent over the current health-care law. But note that nearly a quarter of their party doesn’t support this bill, which is the closest thing to an Obamacare repeal that Congress has seriously considered.”

According to The Hill (9/22, Easley), the latest Harvard-Harris Poll survey of 2,177 “registered voters” (9/17-9/20) “found 52 percent favor a single-payer system against 48 who oppose it.” The Hill reports “a strong majority of Democrats – 69 percent – back the idea. Republicans oppose single-payer, 65-35, and independents are split, with 51 percent opposing and 49 supporting.” The Hill emphasizes that “the best-polling aspect of single-payer is the public’s belief that it will cover more people. Sixty-nine percent said it would provide more coverage, including 54 percent of Republicans.”

WSJournal Criticizes McCain, Paul For Healthcare Stance. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/22) laments that Sens. John McCain and Rand Paul are tarnishing their respective legislative records by opposing Republican efforts to repeal Obamacare and reform the country’s healthcare system. The Journal worries their actions will backfire on GOP moderates and leave Americans with fewer healthcare options.

WSJournal: Obamacare Mandate Hurts Low-Income Families. The Wall Street Journal (9/22) editorializes that IRS data reveals the Obamacare insurance mandate is disproportionately hurting low-income families. The Journal contends that failure to repeal the law and reform the US healthcare system reinforces this status quo.

New Travel Restriction Policy Adds Chad, North Korea, Venezuela To List; Sudan Removed.

ABC World News Tonight (9/24, story 10, 0:25, Llamas) reported that President Trump has revealed “his new travel ban. ... The President issu[ed] a new order, imposing travel restrictions on Chad, Iran, Libya, North Korea, Somalia, Syria, Venezuela, and Yemen.” The CBS Weekend News (9/24, story 4, 0:30, Quijano) reported that DHS “says these countries do not share sufficient information with the US or have not taken necessary security precautions.”

The AP (9/24, Colvin) reports that the restrictions “range from full travel bans on nationals from countries like Syria to more targeted restrictions. A suspension of non-immigrant visas to citizens for Venezuela, for instance, applies only to senior government officials and their immediate families.” The announcement came on “the same day as Trump’s temporary ban on visitors from six Muslim-majority countries is set to expire, 90 days after it went into effect.”

Bloomberg News (9/24, Dopp, Olorunnipa) reports that the President wrote in his proclamation, “I must act to protect the security and interests of the United States and its people.”

USA Today (9/24, Toppo) reports that while Chad, North Korea, and Venezuela have been added to the list, one nation on the original travel ban list – Sudan – has been removed. Administration officials said that Sudan “was cooperating with both monitoring security and sharing information with the US government.” Ryan Grim of The Intercept tweeted, “Sudan getting dropped from the travel ban comes as the UAE has been lobbying hard for them in DC in exchange for mercenary support in Yemen.” (The Washington Post (9/24, Barrett) writes that Iraq was removed from the list between the original and second versions of the ban. The Hill (9/24, Beavers) reports that DHS now advise that “Iraqi nationals should ‘be subject to additional scrutiny to determine if they pose risks to the national security or public safety of the United States.’”)

The New York Times (9/24, Shear) reports that officials also “described the new order as a much more targeted effort than the president’s earlier one. Each of the countries will be under its own set of travel restrictions, though in most cases citizens of the countries will be unable to emigrate” to the US, “and most will be barred from coming to work, study or vacation in America.”

The New York Times (9/24, Shear) reports that lawyers who filed challenges to the previous travel ban “left open the possibility that they would also challenge the new restrictions.” Anthony Romero of the ACLU said, “This is an apparent effort to paper over the original sin of the Muslim ban, especially when just last week Trump said he wanted a ‘larger, tougher, more specific’ ban.” The Los Angeles Times (9/24, Lauter, King) reports that “immigrant advocacy groups made clear that they would use many of the same arguments against the new restrictions.” Frank Sharry of America’s Voice said, “This is the Muslim ban by another approach. [Trump is] doing this to circumvent the courts and ban people based on the God they pray to, and that’s unconstitutional.”

The Washington Times (9/24, Dinan) reports, “No visas already issued in any of the countries will be revoked, but new visas will face the restrictions. The old travel policy remains in effect for now, with the carve-outs the Supreme Court imposed in June. The new restrictions generally take effect Oct. 18.”

Several Democrats commented on Twitter. Rep. Nanette Barragán (D-CA) tweeted, “@realDonaldTrump can pretend all he want, but the new #travelban is the same racist policy as before. #NoMuslimBanEver”. Rep. Diana DeGette (D-CO) tweeted, “This #travelban, too, will be challenged in the courts.” Rep. Lucille Roybal-Allard (D-CA) tweeted, “This new #TravelBan is another discriminatory gimmick by POTUS that does not address our nation’s security needs.”

Reuters (9/24, Mason, Stewart), the Wall Street Journal (9/24, Meckler), the Washington Examiner (9/24, Feldscher), and the ABC News (9/24) and NBC News (9/25) websites have similar coverage.

Experts Say SCOTUS May Now Decide Not To Hear Case Challenging Ban. Reuters (9/24, Hurley) writes that the new policy could mean that the Supreme Court will “skip deciding the case altogether,” since “the March 6 order under Supreme Court review banned travelers from six Muslim-majority countries and limited refugee admissions.” Experts say that “with the travel restrictions expiring, the court has an easy way out because it could simply say that the case is no longer a live issue and therefore, in legal parlance, moot.”

Trump: Border Wall Will Be “See Through.”

The Hill (9/22, Manchester) reports President Trump “told a crowd of supporters in Alabama on Friday night that his proposed wall along the U.S.-Mexico border would be ‘see through.’” Trump asserted, “The wall is happening. In fact, you probably saw, you know, we have a wall up there now, and re-renovating it already. It’s being made pristine, perfect, just as good as new, though we may go a little higher than that, but that’s OK. And we are building samples of a new wall. You know, it has to be a see-through wall.” He added, “If you can’t [see] through it, you don’t know who’s on the other side. Let’s say we build a pre-cast concrete wall and now we have people on the other side,” he continued. “It’s going to stop drugs. It’s going to stop a lot of bad things.”

Trump Focuses On Tax Reform, Promising “Largest Tax Cut” In US History.

The Hill (9/22, Greenwood) reports President Trump in his weekly address renewed his push for tax reform on Friday by previewing “a plan to simplify the tax code and lower corporate tax rates.” Trump explained that the Administration is “pursuing tax cuts and reform that create jobs in America, for American workers – not foreign workers, but American workers,” adding that “it will be the largest tax cut in our country’s history.” The Hill adds that a “key focus” of the plan will be the repatriation of “trillions of dollars in wealth held overseas.”

Pence Discusses Tax Reform During Indiana Visit. The Indianapolis Star (9/22) reports Vice President Pence on Friday visited Anderson, Indiana to speak about Trump’s upcoming tax overhaul plan. The AP (9/22, Slodysko) calls Pence’s visit “the continuation of a campaign by” the Administration “that is alternately attempting to woo and strong-arm [Sen. Joe Donnelly] into supporting whatever the GOP plan ends up being.” Donnelly, the AP says, is one of just three “Democratic senators who did not sign a letter addressed to Republican leaders and Trump that said the Democratic caucus would not support a tax overhaul that cuts taxes for the ‘top 1 percent’ or adds to the government’s $20 trillion debt.” In a separate article, the AP (9/22) notes that Donnelly “has been coy thus far about whether he will support the GOP effort.”

The AP (9/22) reports Pence also announced during his speech that the President will visit Indianapolis next Wednesday to promote his tax reform plan. The Indianapolis Star (9/22, Groppe, Lange) suggests the state “is getting lots of attention in the Trump administration’s effort to win bipartisan support for a tax package because of Sen. Joe Donnelly,” who “crosses party lines more than most members of his party, including on some tax issues.” If Donnelly does not, the Star adds, “Republicans could use that against him in next year’s election.”

Republicans Prepare For Big Tax Week. The Washington Post (9/22, Debonis, Sullivan, Paletta) reports Republicans are targeting a 20 percent corporate rate in their tax reform plan, which the Post notes is a “substantial cut” from current rates despite falling “short of the 15 percent President Trump has long pushed for.” According to other “Republicans familiar the emerging details,” the plan will also include a temporary provision that allows “‘full expensing,’ which permits businesses to fully deduct their capital expenses immediately rather than writing off their depreciation over the course of several years.” According to Grover Norquist, president of Americans for Tax Reform, the lower rate and expensing provisions “will kick-start the economy in a way that reflects every Republican who has a vowel in his name.” Norquist also believes that Congress will extend the expensing provision indefinitely, once its popularity becomes apparent.

The New York Times (9/22, Rappoport) reports Republicans say that “the tax cuts will essentially pay for themselves by generating robust economic growth,” rejecting criticisms of the soon-to-be-unveiled plan and “setting the stage for a fight with Washington’s economic scorekeepers – such as the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Congressional Budget Office.” According to the Times, Republicans fear that the two bodies “will underestimate the amount of economic growth from their” reforms, which the Administration believes will reach 3%. Other groups are also “urging Republicans to stop relying on the taxation committee, saying it uses an antiquated economic model that underestimates growth.” The objections, the piece adds, come “ahead of a big tax week,” which includes a two-day House Ways and Means Committee “policy retreat” to discuss tax policy starting Sunday and an anticipated release of the Administration’s tax framework on Wednesday.

Poll Finds 89 Percent Of Voters Support Tax Reform, Simplification. The Hill (9/22, Easley) reports the latest Harvard-Harris Poll of 2,177 “registered voters” (9/17-9/20) found that 89 percent of voters surveyed support tax reform. What’s more, there is strong support for the Administration’s approach, with 58 percent in favor of “lowering corporate rates and incentivizing companies to bring foreign profits back into the country,” and 45 percent saying that reform should prioritize simplification, “followed by 31 percent who said reform should aim to stimulate jobs and 24 percent who said it should cut taxes.” According to Harvard-Harris co-director Mark

Penn, “support for dropping the top rate back to 35 [percent] in exchange for fewer deductions and for business tax cuts so long as they bring their overseas profits back home.” However, he adds, a deduction cap is “the best way to move forward” because the public “is reticent to give up any specific deductions.”

Former Treasury Secretary Provides Principles To Guide Tax Reform. Former Treasury Secretary Jacob J. Lew writes at the New York Times (9/22, Lew) on four principles that “should guide Congress in the coming debate” over tax reform. Lew argues that changes “must at least maintain the current levels of progressivity,” or it would risk deepening the “income inequality that underlies the anxiety and anger among American voters.” Similarly, he says that the “cuts need to be revenue neutral, paid for by reducing tax subsidies, ending loopholes or generating new revenue,” or they will “open the door to cuts in basic programs for low- and middle-income families.” The reforms must also not open up new loopholes that would facilitate tax evasion. Finally, Lew advises lawmakers to rely on estimates from the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Congressional Budget Office, warning that ignoring their projections “would almost surely produce an explosion of debt.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Puerto Rico Is American. We Can’t Ignore It Now.” A New York Times (9/24) editorial urges federal help for Puerto Rico, arguing that while it “cannot vote for president and has no voting representatives in Congress,” its citizens “are entitled to the same federal emergency funds and resources that Washington has been funneling to the far more politically powerful and economically resilient states of Texas and Florida in their hurricane miseries.”

“The Day The Real Patriots Took A Knee.” A New York Times (9/24) editorial says President Trump’s remarks about NFL protests “provide further evidence that he has no concern for the legitimate and deeply felt fears and grievances of minority Americans.”

“In Germany, A Victory For Angela Merkel And Populism.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/24) says German Chancellor Angela Merkel’s Christian Democrats “came in first in the German national election on Sunday” as anticipated, “assuring her of a fourth term as chancellor.” Since “coalition governments are the norm” in Germany, however, “voting is only the start of a process that can take months before a government emerges.” Merkel now “faces a formidable challenge,” in part because the far-right Alternative for Germany will enter Parliament. The politically greater challenge, the Times says, is the loss of Merkel’s “partner, the Social Democrats.” The Times says hopefully Merkel’s negotiations with potential coalition partners will not result in the “erosion of the values the chancellor has defended in the past” and have “helped Germany, Europe and the world.”

Washington Post.

“The Is What The Flag Stands For, Mr. President.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/24) says that while it is “embarrassing...to have to explain to the children that we have a president who speaks so rudely,” as it is “playing into the diversion he may seek when he finds himself flummoxed by Kim Jong Un or Sen. John McCain,” in some ways, “there is nothing more important than his misguided understanding of how to truly respect the flag.” The Post adds that “the response to Mr. Trump’s ugly tweets and threats, from players and team owners, reflects an encouraging consensus that the real way to respect the American flag is to respect the diversity of opinion it protects.”

“Amid The Russia Probes, Trump Makes An Important Nomination.” The Washington Post (9/24) says in an editorial that “it comes as welcome news that President Trump has named the well-qualified Adam Klein to chair” the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board, “established on the recommendation of the 9/11 Commission...to provide independent oversight to ensure that national security and counterterrorism programs are conducted with appropriate protections for civil liberties.” The board “has been unable to perform its oversight role since January, when two members stepped down,” and Klein merits a quick confirmation. The Post says the Administration should also “continue working to get the board to a quorum and fully staff it, consulting with Democratic leaders in Congress to settle on nominees for the board’s two minority positions.”

“Good Luck Not Rolling Your Eyes At The Virginia Candidates’ Magic Math.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/24) attacks the “illogic at the heart of” Virginia’s Republican gubernatorial candidate Ed Gillespie’s tax proposal, “which would reduce income taxes by 10 percent over three years, costing the state more than $1.3 billion in annual revenue." The Post editorializes that "by an act of magical thinking," Gillespie says this revenue reduction "wouldn't put a dent in spending." Meanwhile, that tax plan of Democratic candidate Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam is "hardly more tethered to earthly reality," the Post writes. Northam would "scrap the state's 2.5 percent grocery tax for lower-income residents," but he "leaves unexplained which state-supported services would bear the brunt of the giveaway." The Post concludes that "of the two, Mr. Gillespie's plan...is the more fanciful and the more insidious," but each plan "would be given short shrift by lawmakers in Richmond, who know better."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Politicization Of Everything." The Wall Street Journal (9/24) says in an editorial that the President, NFL players, and the press are mixing politics with sports and the losers are Americans for whom the Sunday games are a break from work and the other divisions of American society.

"Restoring Due Process." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/24) applauds the Education Department's decision on Friday to formally rescind its 2011 "Dear Colleague" guidance on how universities and colleges should adjudicate sexual assault cases under Title IX and argues that the decision represents a return to the rule of law, due process, and the protection of students from provable cases of gender discrimination.

"Merkeldämmerung." A Wall Street Journal (9/24) editorial says the successes of Germany's smaller parties, including the far-right Alternative for Germany, free-market Free Democrats, and the Greens, in Sunday's national election reflect German voters' desire for more competitive politics. The Journal says Germans deserve a more vigorous discussion on European Union reform, and in the face of French President Emmanuel Macron's desire for fiscal integration in the bloc, German politicians should seize on the opportunity posed by Merkel's eventual departure and unveil policies that better address the demographic and competitive challenges facing the nation.

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Makes an announcement on the Trump Administration's commitment to equipping the American workforce for jobs of the future; has dinner with grassroots leaders.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Visits NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center; participates in a US Senate Rally for Luther Strange.

US Senate: 10:00 AM Senate Finance Committee hearing on 'Graham-Cassidy-Heller-Johnson' health care reform proposal – Hearing on 'Graham-Cassidy-Heller-Johnson Proposal' * Congressional Republicans are rushing for a vote on the proposal to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act – spearheaded by Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy and co-sponsored by Republican Sens. Dean Heller and Ron Johnson – before the end of the fiscal year 30 Sep, after which the Senate parliamentarian has ruled that any attempt to repeal 'Obamacare' could not be done under the budget reconciliation process and would therefore need 60 votes to overcome procedural votes in the Senate rather than just 51 (or 50, with a casting vote from Vice President Mike Pence) Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://finance.senate.gov>

4:00 PM Senate votes on NLRB nominee, and has goal of passing 'Obamacare' repeal bill by the end of the week – Senate convenes, with agenda including resumption of consideration of the nomination of William Emanuel to be a National Labor Relations Board member, including a vote * Agenda for the week due to include a new proposal to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act – spearheaded by Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy and co-sponsored by Republican Sens. Dean Heller and Ron Johnson – after the Senate parliamentarian ruled that the 'budget reconciliation process' on such a measure expires at the end of the fiscal year 30 Sep, meaning any procedural votes in the chamber after that date would need 60 to pass rather than just 51 (or 50, with a casting vote from Vice President Mike Pence). The proposal has been criticized for lacking protection for people with pre-existing medical conditions, although President Donald Trump has claimed that it does cover them. Between two and four Senate Republicans are likely to oppose the bill, which could see it fall short of the 50-vote threshold Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

Interior Chief Zinke Spares Another Monument, Recommends No Changes To Upper Missouri River Breaks.

The Washington Times (8/2, Wolfgang) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "spared another historic site," announcing Wednesday "that he will not recommend any changes to the Upper Missouri River Breaks National Monument." Zinke said in a statement that "the 378,000-acre monument is no longer a part of his comprehensive review of more than two dozen monuments across the country."

The New York Times (8/2, Lipton) reports that Zinke said, "The monument is one of the only free-flowing areas of the Missouri that remains as Lewis and Clark saw it more than 200 years ago."

The AP (8/2, Daly) reports that Montana Gov. Steve Bullock "had asked Zinke to keep the Breaks monument unchanged as he reviews 27 national monuments designated by previous presidents." The Montana monument is "the fourth Zinke has removed from his review ahead of a final report due later this month." Twenty-three other national monuments still "face curtailing or elimination of protections put in place over the past two decades by presidents from both parties.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (8/2, Daly), the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (8/2, Daly), the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/2), Business Insider (8/2, Daly), the Harrisonburg \(VA\) Daily News Record (8/2, Daly), the Springfield \(OH\) News Sun (8/2), the Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (8/2, Daly), U.S. News & World Report (8/2, Daly), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/2, Daly), the Daily Mail (8/2), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (8/1, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (8/2, Daly), the Washington \(DC\) Times (8/2, Daly), and the Washington \(DC\) Post (8/2, Matthew Daly |, Ap).

Zinke Meets With Sportsmen As Some Ask ‘What Happened’ To Him.

E&E Publishing (8/2, Streater, Yachnin) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Wednesday met “with sporting groups in a closed-door meeting in Washington, even as a national sportsmen’s organization launched an ad campaign in Zinke’s home state of Montana questioning his ongoing review of national monuments and his overall commitment to public lands.” Zinke “hosted the private ‘Sportsmen’s Summit’ with dozens of organizations, including the Congressional Sportsmen’s Foundation, Ducks Unlimited, the National Rifle Association, Safari Club International and the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership.” Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said, “Access to our public lands for hunting and fishing is at the heart of Secretary Zinke’s agenda, which is why on day one he signed an order to look into areas to open up access. Today’s summit brought together more than 30 sportsmen’s organizations and wildlife conservation organizations at the Department to talk about how we can all work together to achieve this mission.”

Montana Sportsmen’s Group Criticizes Secretary Zinke In Ad Campaign. Montana Public Radio (8/2) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “now the target of a new ad campaign launched by a Montana-based sportsmen’s group.” They’re concerned that “Zinke’s review of other national monuments could put a damper on hunting and fishing in public lands and water.” Land Tawney, CEO of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers, says in an ad, “Make no mistake, Zinke’s national monument review threatens our heritage and thousands of jobs. Mr. Secretary, don’t turn your back on Roosevelt now.” The group is “launching a seven-figure radio, TV and web campaign.”

Legal Scholars Dispute Whether Monuments Are Permanent.

The High Country \(CO\) News (8/2, Shogren) reports that “the high regard given” national monuments is “part of what makes President Donald Trump’s order to review all large monuments designated since 1996 so extraordinary.” The article notes that “courts have never decided whether a president has the legal authority to change or undo a designated monument, and now this uncertainty has sparked a clash of legal titans.” According to the article, “a multitude of legal experts — including 121 law professors — argue that presidents lack the power to alter or revoke monuments.” However, “a much smaller but no less adamant group asserts the opposite.” As a result, “the ultimate fate of any monuments Trump targets likely will lie with the courts.”

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the Moapa Valley \(NV\) Progress (8/2, Robison), the Arizona Daily Star (8/2, Davis), the Vail \(CO\) Daily (8/2, Boyd), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/2, Davidge), and Ricochet (8/2, Gabriel).

Fireworks Fizzle After Alleged Threat Over Vote.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (8/2, Brehmer) reports that “the seemingly odd mix of health care and resource issues was blended July 26” when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke called Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan “separately on behalf of President Donald Trump and expressed displeasure” with Murkowski’s vote against the repeal of the Affordable Care Act. Alaska Chamber CEO Curtis Thayer “said he also got a call from the nation’s capital July 26, but his call was from a friend there who said if he received a call from an unknown number he should answer it, as it would likely be from Zinke’s office.” Thayer “said he would be surprised if the administration actually tried to exact revenge in any material form on Alaska as a result of Murkowski’s health insurance votes.” He said, “I just don’t see with Secretary Zinke visiting here in May and the comments he made publicly — and the direction of the delegation — I don’t see a harsh penalty. I think there could be a reminder that we need to work together; you have things we need and we have things you need, but I just don't see it being a long-term penalty — penalizing the state.”

Murkowski Earns Respect; ANWR Needs Protection. In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (8/2, Demientieff), Bernadette Demientieff, executive director of the Gwich' in Steering Committee, lauds Murkowski “for her stand to protect the interest of the people’s health in this country” and expresses disappointment “by President Trump’s and Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke’s response.” Demientieff claims that “this administration’s response to Murkowski is a clear indication that they do not care about my land or my people.” She asserts that “the total lack of concern Trump and Zinke have shown during this incident must provide further incentive for Congress to take drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge off the table.”

Additional coverage of the reassignment of Interior official Joel Clement was provided by PBS NewsHour (8/2).

‘Go West, Mr. President, Go West’.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (8/2, Hunt), Jeff Hunt, the Chairman of the Western Conservative Summit, Director of the Centennial Institute, and Vice President of Public Policy for Colorado Christian University, writes that “Western conservatives are fighting hard to advance conservative principles and public policy in their states.” He says that “Ryan Zinke, a Western conservative himself, was a great selection as U.S. secretary of the Interior.” In particular, Hunt welcomes Zinke’s actions on energy development and the review of national monuments. Hunt looks forward to “a visit from the president to the Western United States,” which “would strengthen grass-roots conservatives and help the president’s agenda.”

Zinke, Interior Botched Zuckerberg’s Visit.

In an editorial, the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/3) criticizes the Trump Administration and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for blocking “Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg from meeting with Glacier Nation Park’s superintendent and a prominent federal climate scientist.” The paper says that “if the intent behind this juvenile move was to distract attention from climate change, it had precisely the opposite effect, drawing more attention to the issue than it would have garnered had the meeting gone on as scheduled.” In conclusion, the paper seriously hopes that the Trump Administration will rethink its position on climate change and that Zinke “and his staff can find more important things to do with their time than deciding who goes along on celebrity tours.”

Lead Bullets Poison Wildlife, Our Families.

In a piece for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (8/2, Hatch), Cory Hatch writes that “in March one of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s first official acts was to reverse an Obama-era rule that would have phased out lead bullets on public lands.” Hatch questions why we would allow “children to eat meat tainted with lead bullet fragments?” According to Hatch, “Zinke enacted a reversal that, while popular with his constituents, only harms the American public and wildlife.”

Judge Dismisses Most Of Title IX Lawsuit Against Haskell.

The AP (8/2) reports that “a federal judge has dismissed most of a Title IX lawsuit filed against Haskell Indian Nations University by a former student who says she was treated unfairly and ultimately expelled after she reported she was raped in a dormitory three years ago by two football players.” In his decision, U.S. District Judge J. Thomas Marten sided “with attorneys for the university who argued that Title IX doesn’t apply to Haskell as it does to other public colleges because the school is a federal agency operated by the Bureau of Indian Education.” Marten allowed “the woman’s request to allow a Privacy Act claim to proceed in court.” However, he held “that the woman, who has been named Jane Doe H. in court filings, would have to use her name to proceed with that claim.”

Dinosaur Fossil Found On Future Site Of Mountain Bike Route.

The AP (8/2) reports that “Colorado government officials say they found a dinosaur fossil while they were conducting early surveys for a bike trail.” According to the article, “experts believe the large lower leg bone belonged to a duck-billed dinosaur named hadrosaur that roamed in the Grand Junction area 70 million years ago.” The fossil was “removed from “the future site of the 30-mile (48-kilometer) Palisade Plunge mountain biking route” by “a Bureau of Land Management team, a local paleontologist and a sedimentologist last week.”

Additional coverage was provided by KUSA-TV Denver \(CO\) Denver (8/2, Moraitis).

Officials Investigating Illegal Wild Horse Hazing Report.

The AP (8/2) reports that the Bureau of Land Management and the Emery County Sheriff’s Office have “launched an investigation after a photographer reported seeing members of the sheriff’s search and rescue team harassing wild mustangs.” According to the article, “the photographer captured images of men on ATV and bikes chasing horses July 9.” BLM spokeswoman Lisa Reid “says the photographer handed over the photos and a video to the BLM, which has begun an investigation.”

Ongoing Resistance To Wayne National Forest Fracking As September Land Auction Looms.

Cleveland Scene Magazine (8/2, Sandy) reports the Bureau of Land Management will “sell rights to 141 acres” in Wayne National Forest Sept. 21 According to the article, “with the September auction looming, The Center for Biological Diversity, Heartwood, Ohio Environmental Council, Sierra Club, The Buckeye Environmental Network and Athens County Fracking Action Network have jointly filed a protest against the event.” The groups say “that the cumulative effect of Wayne National Forest drilling and the Rover pipeline construction was not considered in the BLM’s environmental assessment.”

Nolan, Emmers Want To Shortcircuit Mining Review.

In an op-ed for the Rochester \(MN\) Post-Bulletin (8/2, Zabokrtsky), Jason Zabokrtsky, founder and head guide for Ely Outfitting Co., and co-chairman of Sportsmen for the Boundary Waters, writes that Minnesotans “have a responsibility to protect” the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness “so future generations can enjoy the Boundary Waters in the same ways we have.” However, Zabokrtsky is dismayed that “the health and integrity of our priceless Boundary Waters appear to be of no concern to Minnesota Congressmen Rick Nolan and Tom Emmer.” He claims that “Nolan and Emmer are doing everything they can to roll back protections and give this most iconic of Minnesota’s publicly-owned northwoods lands to Chilean mining giant Antofagasta.” According to Zabokrtsky, “Nolan’s and Emmer’s efforts to halt an environmental review that would support a science-based determination constitute a blow at the heart of Minnesota.” He argues that “not only would such a move create irreparable harm to the Boundary Waters and Superior National Forest, it would also endanger the $913 million in annual consumer spending that the Boundary Waters and Voyageurs National Park generate.”

Progress On Increasing Access To Federal Lands.

Breaking Energy (8/2, Green) says that “it’s a positive step – for U.S. energy, economic growth, consumer benefits and climate progress – for the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) to begin rescinding its 2015 hydraulic fracturing rule.” The piece says the rule “duplicates existing and effective state regulation and risks delaying energy development, potentially impacting consumers.” The Interior Department’s Katharine S. McGregor explained: “Maintaining positive, productive working relationships with our state and tribal partners is a top priority of this Administration. We are committed to working collaboratively with them to ensure the safe and environmentally responsible development of our Nation’s energy resources. Our proposal to rescind the 2015 final rule responds to the President’s call to reduce regulatory burdens, foster job growth, and serve the energy needs of America’s families, small businesses, and manufacturers.”

Editorial: A Needed Second Exit For Crooked River Ranch.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (8/2) praises a plan “to add a second paved exit” from Crooked River Ranch, “doubling the routes out that can be used in case of a wildfire or other emergency.” The action, “announced July 20, comes as the result of work by Prineville District BLM officials, Deschutes County and Crooked River Ranch residents.” As a result, “a 1-mile paved road will run southwest across BLM land from NW Quail Road to join Lower Bridge Road west of Terrebonne.”

Hearings Ahead On Oil, Gas Leasing Program.

The Carteret County \(NC\) News-Times (8/2) reports that North Carolina environmental officials will “conduct three public hearings to gather comments on the U.S. Bureau of Ocean Energy Management’s request for information and comments on the preparation of the 2019-24 national outer continental shelf oil and gas leasing program.” The BOEM is “seeking information and requesting comments on the preparation of a new five-year national outer continental shelf program for 2019-24, in accordance with the federal Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act.” The N.C. Department of Environmental Quality is “seeking public input and information on the potential impact of oil and gas exploration and development on the biological, social, economic and aesthetic values of North Carolina’s coast.”

Supporters, Detractors Spar Over Seismic Testing For Oil.

The Brunswick \(GA\) News (8/3, Wolfe) reports that “as the months move closer to a possible opening of the Atlantic Coast to underwater seismic airgun exploration, opponents of the practice and industry advocates continue to push and pull in the debate that could — once exploration commences — lead to offshore oil and gas drilling.” Dustin Cranor, senior communications director of the ocean conservation and advocacy group Oceana, “said the damaging effects of seismic testing for oil to marine life are well-documented and significant.” However, “proponents of seismic testing and the drilling that would follow — notably, the industries engaged in that practice — strongly disagree with what are seen as overblown concerns that hinder otherwise responsible energy practices.”

Environmental Groups Join The Legal Fray On Golden-cheeked Warbler.

The San Antonio Express-News (8/2, Gibbons) reports that “four environmental groups, two of them based in Texas, are asking to join the fight to keep the golden-cheeked warbler on the endangered species list.” The Houston Chronicle (8/2, Gibbons) reports that “Travis Audubon, the Texas Ornithological Society, the Center for Biological Diversity and Defenders of Wildlife filed a motion Tuesday asking a judge to let them intervene in a lawsuit by the Texas General Land Office to take the bird off the list.” According to the article, “the warbler case could test whether Trump's Department of Justice and Department of the Interior will vigorously defend protections for endangered species."

Nearly 2 Tons Of Seized Ivory To Be Crushed In Central Park.

The AP (8/2, Esch) reports that "nearly two tons of trinkets, statues and jewelry crafted from the tusks of at least 100 slaughtered elephants are heading for a rock crusher in New York City's Central Park to demonstrate the state's commitment to smashing the illegal ivory trade." State environmental officials, "who are partnering with the Wildlife Conservation Society and Tiffany & Co. for Thursday's 'Ivory Crush,' say no price justifies slaughtering elephants for their tusks."

Review Of Nuclear Weapons Plant Says Protections Are Working.

The AP (8/2) reports that "the latest government review of a former nuclear weapons plant outside Denver says precautions put in place after a 10-year cleanup are protecting people and the environment." The U.S. Department of Energy "released the review Wednesday on the most contaminated portion of the Rocky Flats site west of Denver." According to the article, "the review covered the central part of the property where manufacturing took place."

Memo To The West: When You Hunt Grizzlies And Wolves, You Lose Midwest Tourists.

The Chicago Tribune (8/2) editorializes that there are reasons to wary after the delisting of Yellowstone grizzlies. It notes that "a decade ago a similar lifting of protections backfired," the bears "hugely contribute to the Mountain West's economy," and "the feds' action doesn't ease the geographic and genetic isolation of this population." It hopes the superintendent of Yellowstone and several Native American tribes, who opposed the delisting, will "watch and publicize how the bears do under the new policy." It also hopes "federal and state agencies that often give too much deference to hunters and ranchers haven't repeated their bungling of a decade ago."

Editorial: New Wolf Recovery Plan Needs To Focus On Science.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/3) editorializes that "the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's long-awaited revision of its Mexican Wolf Recovery Plan – currently a draft but due in its final form by Nov. 30 – isn't being fully embraced by environmental groups or cattle ranchers, which could indicate it's a fair compromise." However, "the plan, which hadn't been updated since 1982, contains some serious flaws that appear to place political expediency ahead of science." The paper says that "those shortcomings need to be addressed in the final document, as it will be the de facto road map for saving the Mexico gray wolf from extinction and ensuring a healthy ecosystem in southwestern New Mexico and Arizona."

National Park Service

National Park Service Grants Money To Preserve Bear River Massacre Site.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/2, Carlisle) reports that the National Park Service is "granting a Native American tribe $72,000 to help preserve the site of the 1863 Bear River Massacre." The recipient, the Northwestern Band of the Shoshone Nation, has "worked for years to memorialize the massacre. Up to 500 members of the tribe died during the attack by the U.S. Army." The grant was "announced as part of a nationwide effort by the Park Service to preserve battlefields."

Seniors Snap Up US National Park Passes Before Price Hike.

The AP (8/2, Ridler) reports that "seniors are snapping up so many lifetime passes good for U.S. national parks and other recreation areas ahead of a steep price increase later this month that some government agencies have run out and started issuing vouchers." The America the Beautiful Lifetime Senior Pass has "been available to buyers 62 and older for $10 for the past two decades." On Aug. 28, the price is increasing "700 percent, to $80, after a measure passed by Congress late last year."

10-year-old Offers To Mow White House Lawn.

CNN International (8/2, Landers) reports that "a 10-year-old boy named Frank" from Falls Church, Virginia has written to President Trump "to offer his lawn mowing services." White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "read the letter from the White House briefing podium on Wednesday." Sanders "said she spoke with the President and not only did he want to pass along the message to Frank that he's 'doing a great job,' but he also wanted to invite Frank to the White House to cut the grass in the famous Rose Garden."

Ellis Island Exhibit 'Streets Paved With Gold' To Feature New Yorkers' Handwritten Stories.

AM New York (8/2, Cook) reports that the National Park Service "wants to pave Ellis Island with gold, and it needs the help of immigrants to do it." The NPS is looking to collect "anecdotes, advice and messages from New Yorkers who are connected in some way with the immigration process." The NPS, "which manages Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty, will take those messages to feature in a new exhibit, 'Streets Paved with Gold.'"

Glacier Park Announces New Procedures For Motorized Boats On Lake McDonald.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/2) reports that Glacier National Park officials "announced Wednesday they will begin scheduling motorized watercraft inspections and sealing procedures for boaters who wish to launch on Lake McDonald after a 30-day quarantine period." According to the article, "the quarantine process is designed to prevent invasive zebra and quagga mussels and other invasive species from entering park waters on motorboats." The park has already started "allowing private landowners living within the park boundary around Lake McDonald, whose motorboats are exclusively launched there, to begin accessing the lake." According to Superintendent Jeff Mow, "those boats have exceeded the 30-day quarantine requirement and undergone boat inspections."

NPS Re-establishes Partnership With Oconaluftee Job Corps Center.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (8/2) reports that "for the first time in 10 years, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is operating a career development center aimed at helping youth develop the skills they'll need to enter the workforce." The Oconaluftee Job Corps Civilian Conservation Center "closed in March 2007, at which point the National Park Service operated it, due to health and safety issues related to mold in the dining hall." According to the article, "the students were immediately transferred to other Job Corps Centers to complete their education and vocational training, with the U.S. Forest Service taking over operations in July 2008." Now, the NPS is "once more a partner in the endeavor after signing an agreement with the Forest Service in July." Park Superintendent Cassius Cash said, "We are fortunate to have the Oconaluftee Job Corps Center in our backyard. This partnership will allow hard-working youth an opportunity to acquire important trade skills as they work alongside park staff. These skills can help them transition into the workforce of tomorrow."

Tips Sought In Smokies Hit-And-Run Crash That Injured Teenage Girl.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (8/2) reports that "investigators are asking for the public's help in the search for a motorcyclist who fled from the scene of a crash that seriously injured a 13-year-old girl in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park over the weekend." The National Park Service Investigative Services Branch is "seeking information from anyone who may have witnessed the collision or who may have seen the two motorcycles traveling from Gatlinburg toward Townsend on Little River Road, between 7:45 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Saturday."

Acadia Reopens Cliffs, Trails After Closures To Help Falcons.

The AP (8/3) reports that the National Park Service "says it is reopening three cliffs and their associated trails to public entry soon following a closure to protect peregrine falcons." The NPS "closed the areas in March to protect the falcons from disturbances while they were nesting." The agency "says the protection resulted in the fledging of five chicks this year compared to 11 last year." The areas will reopen to the public on Thursday.

Comments Being Solicited On Proposals For Theodore Roosevelt Island.

Inside NoVa \(VA\) (8/2) reports that the National Park Service is "accepting comments through Sept. 8 related to the scope of projected improvements at Theodore Roosevelt Island." The NPS is "considering alterations to trails, viewpoints and landings for non-motorized watercraft, and must conduct the outreach as part of the National Environmental Policy Act and the National Historic Preservation Act."

This Park Ranger Has Been Selected As One Of The Nation's Best.

The Sierra Star \(CA\) (8/2) reports that Geoff Walker from Mount Rainier National Park has "been named the recipient of the annual Harry Yount National Park Ranger Award, one of the National Park Service's most prestigious honors." Walker received the award "at an Aug. 1 ceremony in Washington, D.C. sponsored by the National Park Foundation, the official charitable partner of the National Park Service." Acting National Park Service Director Michael T. Reynolds said, "Geoff exemplifies all of the personal and professional characteristics desired in a park ranger. His positive attitude, calm demeanor, exceptional skills, and desire to serve others shine through everything he does."

Interior Releases $3M For Compact-Impact.

Marianas Variety (8/3) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula "made available discretionary Compact impact funding in the amount of $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2017, as an additional federal contribution toward defraying the costs that Guam, Hawaii, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa bear due to the presence of migrants from the Freely Associated States of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, and the Republic of Palau." Pula said, "The governors of the affected jurisdictions have reported that the federal government is not providing sufficient funds to cover the costs they bear for the impact of migrants from the freely associated states on social services. Both Guam and Hawaii have each reported costs exceeding $100 million a year."

Plaskett Touts Cooperation Amid 'Crazy' Washington Scene.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (8/3, O'CONNOR) reports that V.I. Delegate to Congress Stacey Plaskett "says she's working to keep things moving," despite the "gridlock" in Washington. At a press conference on St. Croix on Wednesday, Plaskett said that "the Washington arms race has had some effect on territorial interests." For instance, the article notes that "the nomination of Douglas Domenech to head the Interior Department's Office of Insular Affairs, which coordinates policy among U.S. territories and the federal government, has stalled.”

Also, the Virgin Islands Daily News (8/3, O’CONNOR) reports that Plaskett said “that the 2018 federal budget looks mixed for the territory.” The article notes that “among the upsides” are “a 10 percent increase in funding for capital improvement grants through the Interior Department’s Office of Insular Affairs and proposed increases to the Homeland Security Department and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.” However, Plaskett said, “There are quite a bit of negatives in this budget.”

Court Rejects Marshall Islands’ Suit Against US Over Nuclear Treaty.

The Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\) (7/31, Blair) reports that “the dismissal of a lawsuit that sought to force the United States to comply with an international treaty on nuclear nonproliferation was upheld Monday by a federal court in San Francisco.” The U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals “upheld a lower court’s 2015 dismissal of a legal challenge from a group called Nuclear Zero, brought by the Republic of the Marshall Islands.” The lawsuit “did not seek money, but asked that the U.S. be found in breach of treaty obligations under international law and the 1970 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.”

Shunned From Bond Market, U.S. Virgin Islands Faces Cash Crisis.

Reuters (8/2, Respaut) reports that “for years the U.S. Virgin Islands funded essential public services with help from Wall Street,” but “now the borrowing window has slammed shut.” According to the article, “trouble in neighboring Puerto Rico, which recently filed for a form of bankruptcy after a string of debt defaults, has investors worried that the U.S. Virgin Islands might be next.” The USVI has the “biggest per capita debt load of any U.S. territory or state,” with $2 billion owed “to bondholders and creditors” and “billions more in unfunded pension and healthcare obligations.”

U.S. Test-Launches ICBM As Tensions Rise With North Korea.

WMGT-TV Macon, GA (8/2) reports that “the U.S. military successfully test-launched an Intercontinental Ballistic Missile from California early Wednesday, according to an Air Force spokesman — just days after North Korea’s second test of an ICBM.” According to the article, “the unarmed Minuteman III missile was launched at 2:10 a.m. PT from Vandenberg Air Force Base, about 130 miles northwest of Los Angeles.” An Air Force statement “said that the test was not a response to recent North Korean actions but show that the America’s nuclear enterprise is ‘safe, secure, effective and ready to be able to deter, detect and defend against attacks on the United States and its allies.’” The ICBM was “equipped with a test reentry vehicle, which officials said showed it traveled about 4,200 miles to the Kwajalein Atoll in the Marshall Islands.”

Scientists On Case Of Deadly Bat Disease Discover New Clues.

Oregon Public Broadcasting (8/1, Burns) reports that “a new study from the U.S. Geological Survey finds that the fungus that causes white-nose syndrome in bats can be spread much more readily than previously thought.” The research “suggests people and equipment can become contaminated with the fungus no matter what time of year they enter caves.” Lead author Anne Ballmann, a wildlife disease specialists with the USGS National Wildlife Health Center, said, “It’s not just within the winter season when white nose is much more prevalent in the bat populations. But it needs to be considered at all times of year because there’s always going to be that potential to pick it up and move it.”

Rapid Rise Of Coastal ‘Ghost Forests’ Provides Startling Glimpse Of Future.

NJ News (8/2) reports on “ghost forests,” which are “dead trees along vast swaths of coastline invaded by rising seas, something scientists call one of the most visible markers of climate change.” According to the article, “the process has occurred naturally for thousands of years, but it has accelerated in recent decades as polar ice melts and raises sea levels, scientists say, pushing salt water farther inland and killing trees in what used to be thriving freshwater plains.” The article says that “efforts are underway worldwide to determine exactly how quickly the creation of ghost forests is increasing.” However, “scientists agree the startling sight of dead trees in once-healthy areas is an easy-to-grasp example of the consequences of climate change.” Greg Noe, a research ecologist with the U.S. Geological Survey, said, “There is a lot of change going on. It’s dramatic and it’s changing faster than it has before in human history.”

Total Solar Eclipse: How Everyone In America Can See It.

TIME (7/31, Wilson, Rebal) reports that a total solar eclipse “will traverse the U.S. on Aug. 21.” The authors “ran a few calculations to see whether there is enough open space within the umbra for every American to theoretically witness the complete eclipse.” Among the maps they used was a National Map published by the United States Geological Survey “that provides detailed data on all federal land.” They found that 876 square feet were available per person.

When Life On Earth Was Nearly Extinguished.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (7/29, Brannen), Peter Brannen writes that “a growing body of evidence suggests” that the “Great Dying” at the end of the Permian period was “brought on, in large part, by gigantic emissions of carbon dioxide from volcanoes that erupted across a vast swath of Siberia.” Seth Burgess, a geologist with the United States Geological Survey, is quoted saying, “The End-Permian mass extinction is unique in earth history. Nothing else is as severe, and it’s not even close.” This month, the journal Palaeogeography, Palaeoclimatology, Palaeoecology “published a special issue that explores a growing body of evidence that past volcanic releases of carbon dioxide may have helped drive many of the most extreme die-offs in earth history.” Brannen writes that “though the Great Dying was truly extreme, and likely included some stresses beyond the scope of humanity’s armamentarium, we have emerged as a formidable geological force in our own right as we continue to tweak and warp the complex earth systems that sustain life.”

How To Film A Polar Bear.

In a piece for the Scientific American (8/1, Groskin), video producer Luke Groskin writes the “challenging logistics of polar bear research.” He describes filming United States Geological Survey scientist Karyn Rode and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist Michelle St. Martin “working over an anesthetized polar bear” to “place an ear tag.” According to Groskin, the research will help to understand “how rapid changes to the sea ice...affect the bears of the Chukchi”

Trump Unveils Legal Immigration Plan Prioritizing English Speakers, Skilled Workers.

To mostly unfavorable media coverage – including reports on all three major network newscasts – the President yesterday unveiled the Reforming American Immigration for Strong Employment (RAISE) Act. Under the proposal, Bloomberg News (8/2, Sink) reports, visa applications would be evaluated “based on merit, with a preference for people with higher education or job skills.” The White House, notes the Washington Times (8/2, Boyer, Dinan), said the new system “would be similar to the merit-based immigration systems used by Canada and Australia.” ABC World News Tonight (8/2, story 2, 2:20, Bruce) said the plan would also “slash legal immigration in half” and limit “admissions based on family connections” – something which, according to McClatchy (8/2, Ordoñez), would “slash a key tenet of the American policy that helps keep families together.” In a “Fact Check” analysis, meanwhile, the AP (8/2, Boak, Galvan) says the plan “is based on some shaky assumptions, such as the idea that low-wage green-card holders are flooding in to take jobs from Americans.”

At any rate, media analysts are giving the plan little chance of becoming law. NBC Nightly

News (8/2, story 3, 2:00, Alexander), meanwhile, noted that the President “insists the proposal, if passed, would be the most significant change to the nation’s immigration system in half a century,” but “saying it and doing it are two very different things for a president still waiting for his first legislative victory.” Jeff Zeleny said on CNN’s Situation Room (8/2), “I think first and foremost, the White House is trying to appeal to their base” because “they’ve had a series of defeats here.” ABC World News Tonight (8/2, story 2, 2:20, Bruce) said last night “this bill doesn’t seem to be going anywhere,” as “it lacks support even from Republicans.”

Announcing the plan at the White House, USA Today (8/2, Jackson, Gomez) reports, Trump hosted GOP Sens. Tom Cotton and David Perdue, who authored similar legislation months ago that “has been stalled in the Senate.” There, says McClatchy (8/2, Ordoñez), “the proposal will have to get 60 votes to cut off debate – a dim prospect.” The Los Angeles Times (8/2, Bennett) uses identical language to assess the bill’s chances, while Fox News’ Special Report (8/2) gives it “long odds,” the AP (8/2, Thomas, Colvin) says it has “little traction,” and Bloomberg News (8/2, Sink) that it “faces a steep climb.” Mark Krikorian, writing for National Review (8/2, Krikorian), offers a glimmer of hope, “If the supporters of the DREAM Act are scared enough, they might be willing to deal. A package that includes DREAM, RAISE, and enforcement measures to prevent future DREAMer populations from forming, might actually have a chance. I wouldn’t bet my house on it, but it’s not crazy.”

Reuters (8/2, Rascoe, Rosenberg) indicates Trump’s push follows “a crackdown on illegal immigration that has sharply reduced the number of unauthorized border crossings from Mexico.” The Washington Post (8/2, Nakamura) reports “the outlines of the legislation” unveiled yesterday “reflect the aims Trump touted on the campaign trail,” calling “for drastic cuts to family-based immigration programs that allow siblings and grown children of US citizens and legal residents to apply for green cards. (Minor children and spouses would still be able to apply.)” It also establishes “a point system based on factors such as English ability, education levels and job skills would be created to rank applicants for the 140,000 employment-based green cards distributed annually.” Moreover, the proposal would “cap refugee levels at 50,000 per year and to end a visa diversity lottery that has awarded 50,000 green cards a year.”

Writing for National Review (8/2, VerBruggen), Robert VerBruggen called the “point system...a thing of beauty. Immigrants would be scored on a scale of zero to 100, though in practice it’s more like a scale of zero to 45 — someone with a perfect score would need a Nobel Prize (25 points), an Olympic medal (15), and $1.8 million invested in a business (12), for instance.” VerBruggen adds that “those without at least 30 points would be ineligible.”

USA Today (8/2, Jackson, Gomez) notes the President “said the current system ‘has not been fair’ to US workers because it allows employers to undercut them by hiring migrants for less pay,” and NBC Nightly News (8/2, story 3, 2:00, Alexander) showed him saying, “This competitive application process will favor applicants who can speak English, financially support themselves and their families, and demonstrate skills that will contribute to our economy.” The New York Times (8/2, Baker) reports the President also said, “This legislation...will not only restore our competitive edge in the 21st century, but it will restore the sacred bonds of trust between America and its citizens. This legislation demonstrates our compassion for struggling American families who deserve an immigration system that puts their needs first and that puts America first.” Townhall (8/2, Pavlich), meanwhile, quoted Trump as saying, “The green card reforms in the RAISE Act will give American workers a pay raise by reducing unskilled immigration.” The Wall Street Journal (8/2, Mann, Meckler) runs a similar report including the same Trump statements.

Perdue said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (8/2), “People out there in the rest of the country get this. Seventy-two percent believe it should be the primary worker plus their nuclear family or less. Eighteen percent believe it ought to be just the worker. So people out there in the real world get this. It’s pro-worker. It’s pro-growth. And it’s been proven to work in Canada and Australia.”

Cotton told Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (8/2), “The law of supply and demand applies to the labor market just like does every other market, even though some Republicans feel like it doesn’t apply there. Look, over the last 40 years, my lifetime, you’ve seen quadrupling of the number of foreign born residents in our country. The vast majority of those – 14 out of 15 – today come here not based on their skills or their education or their English language ability. ... They are, by definition, unskilled and low-skilled. In that 40-year window, if you have a high school degree or less, your wages have fallen. If you have more than that, so if you are not competing with those very same immigrants, your wages have increased. So there is a direct correlation between the mass unskilled, low-skilled migration we have seen over the last few decades and stagnant wages and standards of living for working Americans.”

Reuters (8/2, Rascoe, Rosenberg) reports Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina “said his state is dependent on immigrant labor to sustain the two biggest sectors of the economy: agriculture and tourism.” CNN's Situation Room (8/2) reported Graham seemed to speak “for a lot of Republicans.”

Asked on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (8/2) if this policy “expands the tent,” Sen. Jeff Flake said, “No. I do believe that we can do a merit-based system somewhat. SB-744, the last bipartisan immigration bill that I was a part of, we moved on legal immigration partly to a merit-based system. There was still a family-based side, but there was a merit-based system. We didn’t cut the number of immigrants in half. I don’t think that we should do that. I think we need to look out for the needs of our economy and I don’t think the economy will be well served by cutting the number of immigrants in half.”

Rep. Will Hurd said on CNN's Situation Room (8/2), “When we look at trying to fix our broken immigration system, we should be looking at trying to turn it into a market-based system. ... I think this proposal that was introduced today doesn’t have a chance of going anywhere, especially in the Senate. If you can’t have a bipartisan piece of legislation on immigration, it’s not going to go anywhere in the Senate. So, this is, I think, something that has no place to go.”

Breitbart (8/2, Munro), meanwhile, reports “Democrats and their ethnic pressure groups are expected to oppose the immigration reform because they wish to increase the inflow of unskilled foreign migrants,” while “business groups also oppose the measure because it would raise wages and reduce the inflow of new welfare-aided consumers.” Senior economics reporter Steve Liesman said on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/2), “Economists in general don’t give high marks to this bill endorsed by the President. ... Economists are most concerned about the decline in immigration. That would reduce the labor force growth and overall economic growth.” Liesman added that “a positive to the new point system” is that it “could be an increase in the skills of immigrants. That would be a positive for productivity and a positive for growth. But several economists say the economic impact of a half a million fewer immigrants which is called for in the bill would overwhelm those benefits.”

Wired (8/2, Lapowsky) reported that “in his remarks...Trump framed the RAISE Act as a bid to protect American workers and create good-paying jobs in America.” However, “40 percent of Fortune 500 businesses were started by immigrants and their children, ‘many of whom did not speak English or came here as refugees,’ says AOL cofounder Steve Case.”

Jeremy Robbins, the executive director of New American Economy, writes in the Washington Post (8/2) that “drastic cuts to legal immigration levels would hurt economic growth and result in fewer jobs for Americans,” stripping “the United States of our greatest competitive advantage in the global economy: that we attract so many talented, innovative entrepreneurs and individuals from so many different places.”

Sen. Dick Durbin said on CNN's The Lead (8/2), “A lot of the jobs filled by immigrants are jobs Americans don’t care to fill.” Durbin added that “you find a lot of immigrants taking these dirty, hot, sweaty jobs and there aren’t a lot of Americans standing in line trying to get that opportunity. So, I think they’re overlooking the obvious. There are some jobs immigrants will take that, quite frankly, Americans won’t take.”

Sen. Dianne Feinstein said on CNN's Situation Room (8/2), “It doesn’t make sense to me what [Trump is] doing.” She continued that Trump is “cutting refugees with all the millions of people without homes, with all the terrible things that are happening,” and “to add insult to injury, he takes the scandal-ridden EB-5 program, which I gather the Trump family uses, and which both the chairman of my committee and myself believe should be abolished, and he continues it.” She said she doesn’t think the legislation passes the Senate, and she “will do everything I can to prevent it from passing.”

CNN's Acosta, Miller Clash Over Plan At White House Briefing. Following the announcement, CNN reporter Jim Acosta expressed outrage over the proposal at a White House press briefing, and engaged in a heated exchange with Trump aide Stephen Miller that was widely featured across the coverage. CNN's Situation Room (8/2), for example, dedicated more than 14 minutes to the story, and the CBS Evening News (8/2, story 3, 1:30, Mason) devoted all but the very first sentence of its report on the immigration plan to the exchanges.

Miller’s handling of the clash, meanwhile, was relished in conservative media outlets. For instance, the Daily Caller (8/2, Pfeiffer) ran two pieces on it, once headlined “Miller Demolishes Journalists At Briefing” and another one (8/2, Hasson) titled “Stephen Miller Embarrasses Jim Acosta.” The Washington Examiner (8/2, Quinn), under the headline “Conservatives Praise Stephen Miller, Rebuke CNN's Acosta After White House Press Briefing,” notes Ann Coulter’s praise for Miller's performance, and The Federalist (8/2) says Acosta "threw a fit in the briefing room."

NBC Nightly News (8/2, story 3, 2:00, Alexander) showed Acosta accusing the Administration of "trying to engineer the racial and ethnic flow of people into the country," and USA Today (8/2, Estepa) notes Miller said in response, "I am shocked at that statement. ... It reveals your cosmopolitan bias to a shocking degree. ... The notion that you think this is a racist bill is so wrong and so insulting." The Washington Times (8/2, Boyer) also highlights that part of the exchange, and The Hill (8/2, Fabian) indicates Miller called Acosta's question "one of the most outrageous, insulting, ignorant and foolish things you've ever said."

The Daily Caller (8/2, Pfeiffer) noted that at one point during the exchange, Acosta "interrupted Miller and asked, 'are we just going to bring in people from Great Britain and Australia?'" Miller responded, "I have to say, I am shocked at your statement that you think that only people from Great Britain and Australia would know English. It's all — it reveals your cosmopolitan bias to a shocking degree that in your mind — no, this is an amazing moment." The NYTimes' Glenn Thrush also pushed Miller on hard data backing his assertions, to which Miller said, "Maybe we'll make a carve-out in the bill that says The New York Times can hire all the less skilled, low paid workers from other countries and see how you feel about low wage substitution."

The CBS Evening News (8/2, story 3, 1:30, Mason) showed Acosta asking, "Aren't you trying to change what it means to be an immigrant coming into this country if you're telling them, if you have to speak English — can't people learn how to speak English when they get here?" Miller replied, "Well, first of all, right now it's a requirement that to be naturalized you have to speak English, so the notion that speaking English wouldn't be a part of the immigration system would be actually very ahistorical."

The New York Post (8/2, Fredericks) reports Acosta told Miller, "When it comes to immigration, the Statue of Liberty says 'give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to be free.' It doesn't say anything about speaking English or learning to be a computer programmer." Miller replied, "I don't want to get off into a whole thing about history, but the Statue of Liberty is a symbol of American liberty lighting the world. The poem you are referring to was added later. It is not actually part of the original Statue of Liberty." The AP (8/2, Contreras) reports the exchange under the headline "Trump Aide Dismisses Statue of Liberty 'Huddled Masses' Poem."

Acosta later said on CNN's Situation Room (8/2), "I think at times this the White House has an unhealthy fixation on what I call the three M's: the Muslims, the Mexicans and the media. Their policies tend to be centered around bashing one of those three groups, and we just see it time and time again. Today on immigration, what the White House is essentially saying with a wink and a dog whistle to some of these battleground states that they won, is that immigrants coming in from Latin America are taking your jobs."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (8/2), "Jim Acosta and the network he works for don't know much at all about this subject. They don't know how many immigrants come here every year or how. They don't have any clue as to how many should come ideally. They know very little of the economic effect those immigrants have on Americans who already live here because they don't care enough to find out. They are utterly ignorant on the subject of immigration and yet — and here is the amazing part — they are still filled with absolute moral certainty and boundless self-righteousness."

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (8/2), "I love the hypocrisy of the liberals who are so shocked by this. People who swoon over Canada's progressivism with its national healthcare and its matinee star liberal prime minister. ... All of a sudden, when the US proposes essentially the Canadian system, a merit-based system, they are shocked at how mean and racist it is."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/2) says "Miller is correct that as a percentage of the country's population, foreign-born residents are near their highest level in almost a century. That stark fact is a major cause of the nativist, anti-immigration backlash that helped propel Mr. Trump's candidacy and that sustains the hard core of his political base even after a calamitous first six months in office."

"Upshot": Trump Primary Supporters More Likely To Consider European Ancestry Key To American Identity. The New York Times (8/2, Vavreck) "The Upshot" looks at "The Great Political Divide Over American Identity," writing that "the 2016 election made clear that there's not universal agreement on what it means to be an American, with restrictive views centered on ethnicity and religion playing a major role in the Trump campaign." A survey by the Democracy Fund found that while "relatively few members of both parties linked American identity with being of European heritage (only 16 percent of Democrats and 23 percent of Republicans thought this was important)," 30 percent of President Trump's supporters said so, contrasted with 16 percent of Sen. Ted Cruz's supporters and nine percent of those who backed Gov. John Kasich. And while 63 percent of all Republicans said being born in the US was "was important for people who want to call themselves American," among Trump supporters the number was 72 percent.

Trump Signs "Seriously Flawed" Russia Sanctions Bill, Criticizing Congress As He Does So.

Coverage of President Trump's signing of Russian sanctions legislation focuses primarily on the President's highly critical signing statement, in which he called the measure "seriously flawed" and an affront to the role of the Executive Branch. Analyses say the President was essentially forced into signing the bill because near-unanimous votes in both the Senate and House would have made a veto override a near-certainty. Broadcast network coverage was limited, with only ABC running a full-length story – though all the major national newspapers have reports.

ABC World News Tonight (8/2, story 3, 1:40, Muir) reported that the President "did sign [the sanctions bill], but without cameras, and he did not sign it without blasting lawmakers and the bill itself." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "President Trump, so often criticized for being too soft on the Kremlin, today reluctantly signed into law tough new sanctions on Russia. But for someone who seems to so enjoy a signing ceremony, the White House kept this one behind closed doors, away from the cameras. The President signing it but issuing scathing words at the same time, calling the legislation 'seriously flawed.'" NBC Nightly News (8/2, story 4, 0:25, Holt) briefly reported that the President "reluctantly" signed the measure.

The AP (8/2, Salama, Lardner) reports that Trump "grudgingly signed what he called a 'seriously flawed' package of sanctions against Russia on Wednesday, bowing for the moment to resistance from both parties to his push for warmer ties with Moscow." The AP says Trump "signed the most significant piece of legislation of his presidency with no public event" and with a "resentful" signing statement. Reuters (8/2, Rampton, Zengerle) reports that Trump "slammed the legislation as infringing on his powers to shape foreign policy, saying he could make 'far better deals' with governments than Congress."

The New York Times (8/2, Baker) reports that in his signing statement, Trump "asserted that the measure included 'clearly unconstitutional provisions' and left open the possibility that he might choose not to enforce them as lawmakers intended." Politico (8/2, Nussbaum, Schor) reports that the statement "included a stepped-up defense of his own administrations foreign policy and input on the legislation. Trump said that 'despite its problems,' he had signed the bill 'for the sake of national unity.'"

USA Today (8/2, Jackson) reports that some Democrats "saw Trump's signing statement as an 'apology' note" to Russian President Vladimir Putin. Democratic analyst Jesse Ferguson said, "It's far less significant that he signed a bill which would have become law anyway because of an override from Congress than it is that he attached a note apologizing to Putin for doing it." In a second item, USA Today (8/2, Korte) writes that the audience for such signing statements "is usually a small group of Washington players...in this case, there may be yet another audience: the world." Washington and Lee University law professor Mark Rush said, "What you see the President doing in this case is trying to maintain a powerful image in foreign affairs. ... I think this is just a bit of bluster."

Charlie Savage of the New York Times (8/2) writes, "It was politically remarkable for Mr. Trump to issue a statement challenging aspects of this particular bill, which a distrustful Congress forced upon him." But in legal terms, his "objections were unremarkable." Martin Lederman, who served in the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel during the Obama Administration, said, "The particular constitutional objections in the signing statement are not groundbreaking or particularly noteworthy – they reflect the likely views of most any administration."

The Wall Street Journal (8/2, Ballhaus, Andrews) reports that during the congressional debate over the bill, the White House would not say whether Trump would sign it. The Washington Post (8/2, Phillip) writes, "Lawmakers' solidarity in tying Trump's hands on this issue reflects a deepening concern about the administration's posture toward Russia, which critics have characterized as naive. ... Despite Trump's considerable objections," House Speaker Ryan "praised the bill becoming law" Ryan said, "Today, the United States sent a powerful message to our adversaries that they will be held accountable for their actions."

The Los Angeles Times (8/2, Bierman) reports that Trump "quietly signed" the legislation "without cameras. ... He had little choice about signing the bill after nearly unanimous votes in both houses of Congress approved it, all but guaranteeing any veto would be overridden." Sen.

James Lankford said on CNN's The Lead (8/2), "If the President wants to be able to pull those sanctions down, he needs to come back to Congress. We all agreed to put them in place, we all need to agree together to take them out."

Several Republicans praised the President's decision online. Sen. Jeff Flake tweeted, "There are times I'll agree w @realDonaldTrump & times I'll disagree. Today he should be commended for signing #RussiaSanctionsBill". Sen. John McCain tweeted, "Glad @POTUS signed #RussiaSanctions- hope he'll be as vocal about Russian aggression as he was about concerns w bill". The official Senate GOP account tweeted, "Sanctions on Iran, North Korea, and Russia passed with overwhelming bipartisan support in Congress and were signed into law today."

Rep. Bill Flores (R-TX) said on Facebook, "Pleased to see that President Trump has signed the bill to impose sanctions on Russia, Iran and North Korea into law. These rogue regimes must be held accountable for their aggressive behaviors." Rep. Dave Trott (R-MI) said on Facebook, "Russia, Iran, & North Korea – these are some of our world's most nefarious actors. I applaud President Trump's implementation of these new sanctions, which choke off their economic lifelines and their ability to undermine our national security."

Bloomberg News (8/2, Talev), the Washington Times (8/2, Miller), and The Hill (8/2, Easley) also have reports.

Medvedev: "Incompetent" Trump Will Be "Liquidated" By US Establishment. Tom Rogan of the Washington Examiner (8/2) writes that "in a Facebook post specifically referencing Trump, the Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev (No. 2 only to Putin), warned that Congress sees Trump as 'an incompetent player' who must be 'liquidated,'" and later "continued his criticism on Twitter, saying in a series of tweets that, 'The Trump administration has shown its total weakness by handing over executive power to Congress in the most humiliating way.'" Medvedev added, "The US establishment fully outwitted Trump." The Los Angeles Times (8/2, Bierman) reports that Medvedev "denounced the measure as a 'full-scale trade war' and an end to 'the hope that our relations with the new American administration would improve.'"

Pence Praises Trump For Signing Bill. The Washington Post (8/2, Parker) reports that in a Wednesday interview on his flight back from Montenegro, Vice President Pence "touted President Trump's signing of a Russia sanctions bill as evidence that the White House strongly rejects Russian meddling and misbehavior around the world." Pence said, "His decision to sign the Iran sanctions bill – or the Iran-North Korea-Russia sanctions bill – I think is reflective of a desire to make sure that freedom-loving countries around the world know that we are with them, and that Russia and the rogue regimes in North Korea and Iran know that this president and this administration expect a change."

Ashley Parker of the Washington Post (8/2) reports that during his trip to Estonia, Georgia, and Montenegro, Pence "spoke forcefully about the specter of Russian aggression, talked of 'peace through strength,' and reaffirmed" the US commitment to NATO. But his "tough-on-Russia talk doesn't quite align with some of the previous comments from Trump, who remained mostly silent on the issue this week."

Politico Analysis: Congress Challenging Trump On Russia Again Over Nuclear Arms Treaty. Politico (8/2, Bender) writes, "Congress is moving to force the Pentagon to violate a nuclear arms treaty with Russia – in yet another effort to box" in Trump on relations with Russia. Language in pending defense bills "would require the military to begin developing medium-range missiles banned by a 1987." The legislation is "likely to stir up new friction between lawmakers and Trump, who has already accused Congress of illegally meddling in his dealings with Russia."

Congress Could Ban Any Federal Use Of Kaspersky Lab Products And Services. National Journal (8/2, Bordelon) reports that though Russian cybersecurity firm Kaspersky Lab "has already weathered a rough couple of months" after being removed as a General Services Administration-approved vendor following reports of its connection to Russian intelligence, its "troubles are just beginning. The Senate will soon consider a provision in the National Defense Authorization Act that bans the use of Kaspersky software, hardware, or services in all federal agencies," and the House may soon do the same. Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA), the ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, said, "I guess the bottom line for me is, is any of this data you'd be concerned about the Russian government having? If it is, then I wouldn't recommend the use of Kaspersky."

Some Senate Republicans Hope To Return To ACA After Tax Reform.

The Washington Examiner (8/2, King) reports that "some Senate Republicans say they are not abandoning Obamacare repeal, although any progress is likely months away." The leadership is interested in moving on to tax reform, and those senators who hope to return to work on the Affordable Care Act say that must come first. Sen. Thom Tillis said, “We’ve gotta start forming up consensus around tax reform.” Sen. Rand Paul similarly said, “We should continue on the tax front, but we should continue negotiating on the health front.” Sen. Ted Cruz said more optimistically, “The media celebration that the vote last week came one vote short, I believe, was premature. We are close, and we could get to yes, and I believe we will.”

Mulvaney Says Congress Should Not Abandon Healthcare. OMB Director Mulvaney was asked on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (8/2) about Senate Majority Leader McConnell’s claim that it is time to move on from healthcare. Mulvaney said, “I understand why the leader is saying that but at the same time, I think it is important that we still deal with the issue. ... I don’t know how you run saying something for seven years – that we will repeal and replace Obamacare if you give us the House, if you give us the Senate, if you give us the White House – and then when the voters give that to you, you don’t follow through on that promise.”

Portman: ACA “Dying On Its Own.” Sen. Rob Portman said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (8/2), “I think the Affordable Care Act is kind of dying on its own. In my own state of Ohio, we’ve got huge increases in deductibles and co-pays.” Portman added that is “not a good thing for us to pull the rug out from under those people who are depending on those plans. On the other hand, we’ve got to do some real reforms here and that’s why I did support the effort to replace, not just repeal, but to replace the Affordable Care Act with something better.”

GOP Senators: Trump Hurt Repeal Chances By Ignoring Advice To Name Senate Democrats To Cabinet. The Daily Caller (8/2, Crowe) reports that President Trump “ignored suggestions that he add to the GOP’s slim majority in the Senate” by appointing Senate Democrat to his Cabinet, which “may have cost the party the one additional vote needed to pass Obamacare repeal.” GOP senators reportedly suggested that Trump name Sen. Heidi Heitkamp agriculture secretary, or Sen. Joe Manchin energy secretary. North Dakota has a Republican governor, and though West Virginia has a Democratic governor, the state went heavily Republican in the presidential election.

Mexico Denies Trump Claim About Phone Call Regarding Border Security.

CNN’s Situation Room (8/2) reported President Trump’s “credibility and trustworthiness” are being called into question after Mexico denied Trump’s claim on Monday that Mexico “called me” and praised his success in slowing unauthorized border crossings. The CBS Evening News (8/2, story 2, 2:10, Mason) showed Trump saying, “Even the president of Mexico called me. They said their southern border, very few people are coming because they know they’re not going to get through our border, which is the ultimate compliment.” CBS (Reid): “But the Mexican Foreign Ministry responded that President Peña Nieto ‘has not recently spoken to Donald Trump over the telephone.’”

Cecilia Vega said on ABC World News Tonight (8/2, story 4, 2:15, Muir), “Today, we asked the White House, did President Trump lie?” White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders: “No. On Mexico, he was referencing the conversation that they had had at the G20 summit.” Vega: “But the President specifically said that he received a phone call from the President of Mexico...” Sanders: “They were direct conversations, not phone calls.” Vega: “So he lied. He didn’t receive that phone call?” Sanders: “I wouldn’t say it was a lie. That’s a pretty bold accusation.” Vega: “How would you characterize it?” Sanders: “The conversations took place, they just simply didn’t take place over a phone call, that he had them in person.”

The New York Times (8/2, Davis) says the “nonexistent” Boy Scouts and Mexico calls “added to questions about Mr. Trump’s credibility and that of his White House, already in doubt given shifting explanations on matters large and small.”

Meadows Says Congress Will Raise Debt Ceiling.

Bloomberg News (8/2, Edgerton, Wasson) reports that Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), who heads the House Freedom Caucus, “said Wednesday that Congress will raise the nation’s debt ceiling in September as he appeared to soften his earlier demands that any increase be paired with steep spending cuts.” Meadows said, “I don’t believe we should play around with the full faith and credit of our country – I’m bullish on getting it done.”

Meadows Seeks Corporate Tax Rate In High Teens.

The Hill (8/2, Jagoda) reports that House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) said Wednesday that “he wants Congress to enact a corporate tax rate that’s in the teens in order to go ‘big and bold’ on tax reform.” He said, “I don’t want to nibble around the edges. I think that something with a one in front of it, whether it’s 15 or 17 or 18 [percent], that’s where we need to be.”

Blinder: GOP Likely To Pursue Tax Cuts, Not Tax Reform. Alan Blinder of the Brookings Institution, a former Federal Reserve vice chairman, writes in the Wall Street Journal (8/2) that though everyone in Washington agrees that tax reform is desperately needed, there is no consensus on how to do so. He writes that Republicans are likely to instead pursue tax cuts for the wealthy and for corporations.

Van Hollen: Democrats Interested In "Genuine Tax Reform," Not Tax Cuts. Sen. Chris Van Hollen said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (8/2) that Senate Democrats "sent a letter to Mitch McConnell...saying we were happy to work with him on genuine tax reform. We're not interested in providing another round of windfall tax breaks to very, very wealthy people. We don't think that's the priority in the country."

National Journal Analysis: Trump Has Seen Most Success On Agency Regulations.

National Journal (8/2, Plautz) reports in an analysis that the Trump Administration "has enjoyed the most success" in "its largely under-the-radar effort to systematically shift administrative and regulatory decisions in the executive branch to the right." While these "advances have been overshadowed so far by Trump's legislative failures," in "decisions usually announced in the small print of the Federal Register, his administration is making a sharp turn to the right in virtually every federal department and agency." Taken together, they "amount to an organized assault on Democratic priorities and a hard tilt toward corporate and conservative preferences."

EPA Highlights Improvements In Air Quality.

The AP (8/2, Biesecker) reports that as EPA Administrator Pruitt "moves to roll back regulations aimed at making further gains" on air quality, he is "praising significant improvements" on that front. A report from the agency released Wednesday shows that "in the 45 years between the passage of the Clean Air Act and the end of 2016, emissions of six harmful pollutants declined by a combined 73 percent," but "nearly 40 percent of Americans live in areas that fail to meet federal air quality standards." Pruitt says "there is more work to be done," but the AP notes that since his appointment, Pruitt "has moved to block or delay several Obama-era regulations aimed at reducing pollutants caused by burning fossil fuels."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Capitol Shocker: Democrats And Republicans Start Working Together On Health Care."

The New York Times (8/3, Board) editorializes, "Something unusual and important is happening in Congress: Republicans and Democrats are working together to improve the health care system. And they're doing so in defiance of President Trump, who appears determined to sabotage the Affordable Care Act and the health insurance of millions of people." The Times writes that Congress can either "follow Mr. Trump's lead, and treat Americans' health care as a hostage in a purposeless political battle, or it can stabilize the health care market."

"Mr. Maduro's Drive To Dictatorship." The New York Times (8/3) says in an editorial that while Venezuela, "with possibly the world's largest oil reserves, had the chance to be one of South America's leading democracies," its "overdependence on oil has led to political and economic turbulence, which became disastrous" when President Nicolás Maduro "sought to emulate his left-wing predecessor, Hugo Chávez, with lavish public spending that falling oil prices and chronic mismanagement rendered unsustainable." The Times compares him to "Syria's Bashar al-Assad, North Korea's Kim Jong-un and Zimbabwe's Robert Mugabe, whose rapacious greed for power has brought their countries to ruin."

"Helping The Poor Get Through The Turnstiles." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/3, Board) says that Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr. "took an important step toward a more rational policy" on law enforcement "when he declared in June that his office would as of September no longer prosecute most people for bus or subway fare-beating, partly because the criminal charge unfairly penalizes people for being poor." The Times says the City Council should try again next year "to set aside money in the city budget to subsidize mass transit fares for the poorest New Yorkers."

Washington Post.

"Trump's War On Legal Immigration Would Cripple The Country." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/2) says White House senior adviser for policy Stephen Miller "is correct that as a percentage of the country's population, foreign-born residents are near their highest level in almost a century. That stark fact is a major cause of the nativist, anti-immigration backlash that helped propel Mr. Trump's candidacy and that sustains the hard core of his political base even after a calamitous first six months in office."

"A Life Changing Genetics Breakthrough Deserves Celebration – And Demands Caution." The Washington Post (8/2) editorializes, "The news that researchers have carried out the first known attempt to create genetically modified human embryos is another signpost in an astounding revolution unfolding before our eyes." However, "this realm of scientific inquiry, manipulating the tiny building blocks of life, demands caution as well as enthusiasm and encouragement."

"Can Baltimore Go One Weekend Without A Murder?" The Washington Post (8/2) editorializes that Baltimore "is suffering through its bloodiest year in decades, a daily drumbeat of carnage impervious to community outrage and surge police deployments," and "is now on pace to exceed 400 killings this year." According to the Post, "so many factors have combined to produce the homicide spree that began in 2015" that "local officials often seem flummoxed in their attempts to unpack the causes." According to the Post, the police department "is understaffed, under-resourced and undertrained," and its "relations with the community it serves are strained to the breaking point." The Post adds that "the good news is that many residents, far from being resigned, are outraged," and "a broad coalition of churches and grass-roots groups, mainly in the black community, has launched an energetic campaign for a 72-hour cease-fire for this weekend."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Coming ObamaCare Bailout." The Wall Street Journal (8/2) says in an editorial that though the decision to make the Affordable Care Act's "cost-sharing" payments is in the hands of Congress, the Obama Administration continued the payments without authorization. The Journal says that Trump is right to consider ending the payments, but because they are illegal, not as a bargaining chip.

"Tillerson's Korea Confusion." A Wall Street Journal (8/2) editorial says that while Secretary of State Tillerson said Tuesday that the US doesn't seek regime change in North Korea, the Administration shouldn't take any options off the table. The Journal also argues that the best way for the US to secure Chinese cooperation is to work toward regime change.

"Bartman At The Bat." A Wall Street Journal (8/2, Board) editorial.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Pew Research Center yesterday...released a report of the world's most dangerous threats. ... In the United States, we said cyberattacks are the most dangerous threat. Here in LA, we said traffic and gluten, but the rest of the country said cyberattacks."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President's approval rating has dropped to a new low. This is a newer new low than the last new low. Trump's approval rating is down to 33 percent today, which I think is lower than the 'Emoji Movie.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "According to Golf magazine, of all places, the President told a group of members at his golf club in New Jersey, 'The White House is a real dump.' A White House spokesperson today denied the President said that, so it's true."

Jimmy Kimmel: [Referencing Trump's golf vacation] "You know it's going to be one of those 'Home Alone'-type scenarios when he forgets to take Barron with him. They leave him and he accidentally launches a nuke at North Korea or Canada or something."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Before heading out of town, President Trump today signed a round of sanctions against Russia to punish Russia for making him win the election. He's still very angry about that."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The sanctions...passed with an overwhelming majority in the House and the Senate, so Trump had to sign it. Vladimir Putin is not happy. In fact, he changed their relationship status on Facebook today to 'it's complicated.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The prime minister of Russia is calling this, now, 'full-scale trade war' with the United States, which, what do we even trade with them? I mean, does this mean we won't be able to get nesting eggs? I don't know."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Did you know Sean Spicer is still working at the White House? He resigned like two weeks ago, but he's still there and they're planning to have him stay on as de facto communications director, despite the fact that he quit. Sean Spicer's like the boyfriend who breaks up with you but still comes over to mow your lawn."

Trevor Noah: [Referencing Trump's support for new immigration bill] "Somewhere right now Hillary Clinton is like, 'Oh, you think people should advance based on merit now? Interesting.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "This morning, President Trump announced a new immigration plan that will favor people who speak English, which is why tonight he had to deport himself."

Jimmy Fallon: "He also signed off on new sanctions against Russia for interfering with our election. Source says that he talked to Vladimir Putin on the phone right before. Yeah. People said that was inappropriate. Trump said, 'I agree, I wanted to Facetime.'"

Seth Meyers: "A new Quinnipiac Poll found that 33 percent of people approve of the job President Trump is doing. Unfortunately, they're all under investigation."

Seth Meyers: "According to Axios, President Trump has been trying to impress his new White House chief of staff, John Kelly, by acting sharper in meetings and rattling off stats. So far, none have been right, but bless him, he's trying."

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Proposes Expansion Of Hunting And Fishing At 10 Natural Wildlife Refuges.

The Washington Examiner (8/9, Jessen) reports that the Interior Department is seeking "to open or expand hunting and fishing recreational activities in 10 natural wildlife refuges." In a statement, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "These 10 refuges will provide incredible opportunities for sportsmen and anglers across the country to access the land and connect with the wildlife." The change would "bring the number of refuges where the public may hunt up to 373, and up to 312 where fishing would be permitted," according to the department.

Additional coverage was provided by the Oregonian (8/9, Theen) and the Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (8/9, Urness).

Zinke Supports Opening Access To New Mexico Wilderness Site.

The AP (8/9) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said Wednesday that federal land managers will be working to finalize a process for considering whether to accept a donation of land that will allow public access to a landlocked parcel of federally protected wilderness in northern New Mexico." According to the article, "if approved, the donation of an adjacent parcel of ranch land will allow" for the Sabinoso Wilderness "to be accessed without trespassing." Zinke "said expanding access to hunting, fishing and recreation on federal lands is a top priority." He said in a statement, "I originally had concerns about adding more wilderness-designated area, however after hiking and riding the land it was clear that access would only be improved if the department accepted the land and maintained the existing roadways."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by McClatchy (8/9), the Washington \(DC\) Times (8/9), the Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (8/9), the Miami \(FL\) Herald (8/9), and the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (8/9).

Additional coverage was provided by the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/9, Coleman), the Santa Fe New Mexican (8/10, Chacón), and the Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (8/9).

Enviros Sue Over 'Sham' Monument Review.

The Daily Caller (8/9, Pearce) reports that the Center for Biological Diversity "filed a lawsuit Wednesday against President Donald Trump's administration for withholding documents related to the Department of the Interior's (DOI) ongoing review of national monuments designated by presidential authority under the Antiquities Act.” The Interior Department “has not answered Freedom of Information Act requests for Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke’s schedule, communication records and any other documents related to a review of national monuments mandated by an April 26 Executive Order, according to a CBD press release.” Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift confirmed that “a recap of the secretary’s schedule is available online at the end of every month after all of his agency-related interactions have been recorded.”

Additional coverage was provided by Newsmax (8/9, Reyner) and Law360 (8/9, Phillis).

Outdoor Business Leaders Concerned About Economic Impact Of Rescinding National Monuments. The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (8/9, Loranger) reports that “a group of business leaders from five western states met in U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s home state on Wednesday to discuss the economic impact to outdoor oriented businesses of shrinking or rescinding national monuments.” Business for Montana’s Outdoors and the Colorado Outdoor Business Alliance co-hosted two Western Businesses for National Monuments roundtable discussions in Helena and Great Falls. Participants “said they would be affected by the loss or reduction of eight monuments: Rio Grande Del Norte, Upper Missouri River Breaks, Grand Staircase Escalante, Basin and Range, Mojave Trails, Sand to Snow, Canyons of the Ancient and Organ Mountains Desert Peaks.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (8/9, Puckett).

Secretary Zinke’s Monument Review Was Fair. In an op-ed for NMPolitics \(NM\) (8/9, Schickedanz), Jerry G. Schickedanz, a distinguished chair of the Linebery Natural Resource Policy Center at New Mexico State University, defends Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s visit to New Mexico against claims that “he didn’t talk to everybody.” According to Schickedanz, “Zinke visited with the governor, local governments, tribal representatives, veterans, Friends of the Organ Mountains, ranchers, and officials concerned with flood control, watershed management, rights of way, border security, and public safety.” Schickedanz believes Zinke “visited with a broad spectrum of local citizens to hear their concerns and not whether people were for or against the monument.”

The Energy 202: The Interior Department Could Cost Taxpayers At Least $60 Million By Rolling Back Obama Rule.

The Washington Post (8/9, Grandoni) reports that “during his confirmation hearing for the job of running the Department of the Interior, Ryan Zinke told the Senate he wanted taxpayers to get ‘fair value’ on resources extracted from public lands by private companies.” However, “a recent move by him means taxpayers will get millions of dollars less from companies that extract oil and gas from public lands.” This week, Zinke “arrived at a final decision, to the consternation of environmental and fiscal critics, on exactly how Interior will define what is an appropriate value for oil, gas and coal taken from lands collectively owned by U.S. citizens.” On Monday, the Interior Department “officially repealed an Obama administration rule that in effect required oil, gas and coal extractors to pay more in royalties to the federal government and states.”

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s Royalty Rule Repeal Will Cost Taxpayers. In an op-ed for U.S. News & World Report (8/9, Alexander), Ryan Alexander, president of Taxpayers for Common Sense, criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announcement on “the full repeal of a rule aimed at preventing companies from undervaluing oil, gas and coal developed on federal lands.” According to Alexander, “the goal of the rule was to provide taxpayers with increased royalty revenues based on prices closer to the fair market value of the resource; the result of repeal will cost taxpayers up to $75 million annually.” Alexander concludes that “a full reversal of the rule with no alternative plan to correct the problems within our federal royalty collection system is a step backwards – as well as a boon to industry at the expense of taxpayers.”

Trump’s Hiring Freeze Falls Flat With Government Reformists.

The Washington Times (8/9, Miller) reports that while President Trump’s hiring freeze “helped cut the size of federal government by about 9,000 employees in his first six months in office,” that number represents only a fraction of the 2.8 million person federal workforce, “and the administration has ended the freeze to fill mission-critical positions at agencies.” The Times notes that the 2018 budget “called for eliminating 24,000 full-time employees across 17 agencies” and “one of the largest cuts” was to the Interior Department “with 4,100 jobs cut, or 6.3 percent of its employees.”

Trump Administration Urged To Avoid Salmon Protection Rules.

The AP (8/10, Ridler) reports that “a group that represents farmers is calling the costs of saving imperiled salmon in the largest river system in the Pacific Northwest unsustainable and is turning to the Trump administration to sidestep endangered species laws." The Columbia-Snake River Irrigators Association "wants the government to convene a Cabinet-level committee with the power to allow exemptions to the Endangered Species Act." The group is "frustrated with court rulings it says favor fish over people, claiming the committee could end years of legal challenges over U.S. dams on the Columbia and Snake rivers and bring stability for irrigators, power generators and other businesses that rely on the water." However, "environmental groups call the request a publicity stunt and say it could hurt fishing companies and others that rely on healthy runs of federally protected salmon and steelhead." Darryll Olsen, association board representative, said, "What we're asking for is that the secretary give direction to the (Interior) Department to work with us to review the steps for implementing the God squad." According to the article, "Zinke can gather the committee, which he would chair and would include other natural resource agencies, such as the Environmental Protection Agency."

How Soaring Park Visitation Could Rescue Public Lands.

The Planet Jackson Hole \(WY\) (8/9, Sollitt) reports that "increased visitation to national parks is straining federal public lands and infrastructure – but it's also what will save them," according to former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell. Addressing a Jackson Hole crowd on Friday, Jewell said that if she were still Interior Secretary, "her biggest priority would be to make to make sure that 'Nick Mulvaney and the budget committees in the house and senate, and frankly American people broadly, understand that there is tremendous value in public service, public servants, public lands.'" Jewell was "this year's Teton Science School Spirit of Conservation award recipient, and was the keynote speaker at Friday's 50th anniversary celebration."

Climate Reports May Slow Trump's Push To Undo Obama-Era Rules.

Bloomberg News (8/9, Sullivan) reports that "a pair of highly anticipated government studies...could complicate President Donald Trump's effort to roll back federal climate regulations." Bloomberg says "a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration-backed report summarizing the global effects of climate change in 2016 is scheduled for release Thursday" and "its conclusion will be similar to previous years' versions, according to people familiar with the report: Climate change is real, it's man-made and it's dangerous." Meanwhile, "that report dovetails with a broader National Climate Assessment, which is due next year from the administration. Drafts of the study, compiled by scientists from across the federal government, show the effects of climate change in the U.S. are severe." Analysts say "both reports are at odds with Trump's contention that climate change is a 'hoax' and may hinder his moves to undo President Barack Obama's efforts to address the issue."

Science Says: Trump Team Garbles Climate Science. The AP (8/9, Borenstein, Biesecker) also reports that "Trump and his cabinet often avoid talking about the science of climate change, but when pressed what they have said clashes with established mainstream science." The AP says "even the federal government's own reports – including a draft science study for the National Climate Assessment obtained this week by The Associated Press and other media – paint an entirely different reality than what's coming from the Trump Administration." The AP also points out that cabinet members have questioned climate science.

Ryan Zinke Settles Lawsuit Over 'Uninhabitable' $5,800-A-Month Rental House.

The Huffington Post (8/9, D'angelo) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "and his wife settled with a Washington, D.C., church that sued them for backing out of a lease on a $1.9 million Embassy Row home they claimed was 'uninhabitable,' court documents show." The article says that "the terms of the settlement, reached in mid-June, remain confidential."

Editorial: Western Perspective From Zinke Changes Sage Grouse Policy.

In an editorial, the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (8/9) notes that "when a team of Interior Department officials this week released a proposal to loosen land use restrictions in sage grouse country, they included a positive statement on the impact of livestock grazing on sage grouse habitat." The paper says "that change in policy is a victory for ranchers and a victory for Nevada, which went to great lengths under Gov. Brian Sandoval to craft a state-specific sage grouse conservation plan." The editorial says that sage grouse are not being "displaced by people or human activity." Rather, "the biggest factors are the combined threat of fire and invasive species."

Sohn: Make Climate Great Again, Mr. President.

Pam Sohn writes at the Chattanooga \(TN\) Times Free Press (8/9, Sohn) that President Trump and his band of climate deniers “are, quite literally, snuffing out our world and our children’s future” by delaying action on climate change. According to a draft Climate Science Report, “there is at least a 95 percent likelihood that more than half of that mercury spike could be attributed to human activity.” Meanwhile, “despite all this evidence...the report still awaits an Aug. 18 approval by the Trump administration, which has mostly maintained that climate change is a hoax.” Sohn says a Yale survey found “a majority of Americans said they believe global warming will harm people in the U.S.” but days after the survey results were released, “Trump signed an executive order to review the Obama administration’s Clean Power Plan and unravel a number of other energy orders and memorandums.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Calif. Tribe Wants Time-Out In Off-Reservation Casino Row.

Law360 (8/9, Westney) reports that “the Picayune Rancheria of Chukchansi Indians on Tuesday said that a California federal court can press the pause button on the tribe’s suit challenging a U.S. Department of the Interior decision authorizing another tribe to conduct gambling at an off-reservation site, saying the case may be stayed while the state’s highest court weighs a related case.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Federal Bills Studied For BLM Transfers.

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (8/9, Gross) reports that “Teton County commissioners and landowners are in talks about using federal legislation to transfer parcels along the Snake River corridor from the Bureau of Land Management to the county.” The plan is for Sen. John Barrasso “to introduce a bill to accomplish that.” However, “first the county must decide the terms of the transfers, and which parcels to advance when.”

California Company Submits Plans To Build Solar Facility In Nye County.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/9, Botkin) reports that “a California company wants to build a 1,600-megawatt solar energy generation facility in Nye County.” The report says “Sandstone Solar Energy’s preliminary plans for the facility on 20,000 acres of federal public lands were in a filing sent this week to the Nevada Public Utilities Commission.” The Review-Journal says that “because the project is on federal land, the company needs approval from the Bureau of Land Management, a process that includes an environmental review and opportunity for public comment.”

Prosecution To Rest In Bunkerville Standoff Retrial.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/8, Ferrara) reports that “prosecutors questioned their final witness Tuesday in the retrial of four Bunkerville standoff defendants, whose attorneys began preparing to present their case to jurors.” U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro “said she would allow one potential defense witness, who was at the 2014 armed standoff but not arrested, to give a proffer statement outside the presence of jurors Wednesday, while a private investigator could testify for the defense the next day.” According to the article, “after spending several hours on the witness stand detailing photographs and videos of the standoff and Bunkerville area, FBI special agent Joel Willis, a key government witness, responded to about 15 juror questions.”

With Jury Absent, Cliven Bundy Supporters Give Testimony. The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/9, Ferrara) reports that “with the jury box empty, defense attorneys called four witnesses Wednesday in the retrial of four Bunkerville standoff defendants.” U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro “allowed three men and one woman, each of whom attended the April 2014 protest, to give proffer statements, or a preview of what they might tell a jury.” However, “the judge ruled that jurors should not hear their testimony because none of them offered evidence of self-defense the men on trial hoped to claim.”

Another Wild Horse Roundup In Iron County, Officials Say Problems Remain.

The St. George \(UT\) News (8/9, Sullivan) reports that “about 100 wild horses are slated to be rounded up in Iron and Beaver counties Tuesday, one of several roundups conducted since 2014 to try and bring the overwhelming herd numbers under control." The Bureau of Land Management will be "removing the wild horses from areas within and outside the Bible Spring Complex located in both counties."

BLM Removes 12 Camping Sites Along Quartzville Corridor.

The Albany \(OR\) Democrat-Herald (8/9, Paul) reports that "about a dozen dispersed camping spaces along the Quartzville Recreation Corridor near Green Peter Reservoir have been removed, according to the Bureau of Land Management." BLM spokeswoman Jennifer Velez "said the sites have been removed because the BLM's lease with a private landowner for the spaces expired in December."

Additional Coverage: BLM Seeks Input On Opening Entire NPR-A To Leasing.

Additional coverage that the Bureau of Land Management is seeking input on whether "any more of the nearly 23 million-acre National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska should be open to development of its namesake resource" was provided by the Alaska Journal of Commerce (8/9, Brehmer).

Thomas Mitchell: Rural Groundwater Grab Gets Federal Court Hearing.

In his column for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (8/9, Mitchell), Thomas Mitchell writes that "three years ago several counties and groups filed lawsuits in federal court" claiming the Interior Department and the Bureau of Land Management violated the National Environmental Policy Act and the Federal Land Policy and Management Act in approving a groundwater project. This past week, federal Judge Andrew Gordon "heard nearly two hours of oral arguments from both sides seeking summary judgment."

Gulf Oil Disaster & Deadly Climate Change Won't Stop GOP.

NJ Today (8/9) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "recently announced that the federal government would offer 75.9 million acres offshore Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida for oil and gas exploration and development – waters in the same Gulf of Mexico spoiled by the Deepwater Horizon disaster in 2010." The lease sale scheduled for August 16 "would include all available unleased areas in federal waters of the Gulf of Mexico and provide a reduced royalty rate for shallow water leases to encourage exploration and production under current market conditions." Lease Sale 249, "scheduled to be livestreamed from New Orleans, will be the first offshore sale under the National Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) Oil and Gas Leasing Program for 2017-2022."

Charleston-area Leaders Rally Against Offshore Oil Exploration; Gov. McMaster's Stance Against Drilling Affirmed.

The Charleston \(SC\) City Paper (8/9, Waters) reports that "with the possibility of oil and natural gas exploration off the Atlantic seaboard back on the table, South Carolina's coastal leaders find themselves once again taking a stand to prevent drilling in local waters." According to the article, "faced with an Aug. 17 deadline to provide public input, state and local officials rallied in Mt. Pleasant Monday to ask that citizens voice their opposition to such a proposal and encourage Gov. Henry McMaster to do the same."

$7M In Oil Spill Fines, 300 Conservation Jobs Over 3 Years.

The AP (8/9, McConnaughey) reports that "about $7 million in BP oil spill penalties will create 300 conservation jobs in Gulf of Mexico states." Jeff DeQuattro of The Nature Conservancy said "that employment will ramp up over three years: 10 people working in each state next year, 20 more in 2019 and another 30 in each state in 2020." The AP explains "the conservancy is working with The Corps Network and the Student Conservation Association under a RESTORE Act grant administered by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration."

Decommissioning Platform Holly.

The Santa Barbara \(CA\) Edhat (8/9) reports that when the oil company Venoco, Inc. "declared bankruptcy last spring and ceded its offshore lease, the state of California 'inherited' 50-year-old Platform Holly off the coast of Santa Barbara." Now the state is looking at "how to decommission the platform, an arduous process that will require years to complete.” According to the article, “to inform the decommissioning process, a team from UC Santa Barbara is partnering with the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) to determine the biological effects for various platform removal scenarios.”

BOR: Fresno, Nelson Reservoirs Near Lowest Levels For Season.

The Havre \(MT\) Daily News (8/9) reports that “with levels at Fresno and Nelson reservoirs at their lowest levels in years, the federal agency that administers the irrigation reservoirs said the water should start rising soon.” The Bureau of Reclamation, “which runs the reservoirs as part of the Milk River Project created at the start of the last century to provide irrigation water — they also provide municipal water to cities on the Milk River — said irrigation operations are starting to ramp down, about a month sooner than normal.” The bureau “said in a release Tuesday that Fresno is at 30 feet below its full storage elevation of 2575 feet — the BOR website reports as of this morning that Tuesday it was at 13.5 percent full with 604.9 cubic-feet-per-second of water coming in and 880.2 CFS going out — and Nelson is nearly 12 feet below the full storage level of 2,221.6 feet, with the website reporting Nelson Tuesday was at 47.7 percent full with an inflow of 584.1 CFS and outflow of 407.6 CFS.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Galveston Suggested As Rescue Site For Endangered Turtles.

The AP (8/9, Ketterer) reports that turtle monitors are pushing for a turtle incubation site on Galveston Island. However, environmentalists “would have to find a place to build a corral and then go through a lengthy permitting process.” Both Chuck Underwood, spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Services North Florida office, and Donna Shaver, chief of the Division of Sea Turtle Science and Recovery at the National Park Service, confirmed the challenges of building such a site.

Animal Rights Groups Growl At Panther Regulators.

WFSU-FM Tallahassee, FL (8/9, Ash) reports that “animal rights and environmental groups are urging members to flood the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service with pleas not to alter the Florida Panther’s ‘endangered’ status.” Federal regulators are conducting “a periodic review of the iconic predator and August 14th is the last day for public comment.” The Humane Society’s Laura Bevan said, “We want the Florida Panther recognized by that federal agency and we want the protections to be maintained and even increased.”

No Evidence Of Invasive Mussels After Divers Scour Tiber Reservoir.

Montana Public Radio (8/9, Whitney, Saboe) reports that “scuba divers from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have spent the past three days in north-central Montana, scouring the waters of Tiber Dam for any signs of aquatic invasive mussels.” In October of last year, “a juvenile mussel was found in a water sample from Tiber Reservoir by the Bureau of Reclamation, and suspicious samples were discovered in Canyon Ferry Reservoir, near Townsend.” Since then, Montana has “ramped up its efforts to stave off a potentially destructive infestation of non-native quagga and zebra mussels.”

In East Arapahoe County, West Bijou Ranch Is Home To One Of The Best Places In The World To Study Earth’s Fifth Great Extinction.

The Denver Post (8/9, Rubino) reports that Interior Secretary Sally Jewell “proclaimed West Bijou Site the country’s 599th national natural landmark in November.” The designation will be “celebrated at a dedication ceremony on Aug. 17 at the ranch.” A National Park Service news statement said, “The designation of West Bijou Site as a national natural landmark recognizes its incomparable contribution to the Earth’s geologic history through its unique features, including pollen records and vertebrate fossils.”

Yellowstone Visitation Down In July And For The Year.

The AP (8/9) reports that "more than half way through the calendar year, Yellowstone National Park has seen about 5 percent fewer visitors so far this year." The National Park Service on Wednesday said just over 962,400 people visited the park in July, down 3.4 percent from July 2016's 995,910 visits." The article notes that "Yellowstone officials are expecting a busy August because of the solar eclipse."

BASE Jumper Faces Charges For Leaping Off Yosemite's Cliffs.

The Fresno \(CA\) Bee (8/9, Lopez) reports that BASE jumpers at Yosemite National Park are complaining of "a double standard." The park "allows high-risk sports such as hang gliding from Glacier Point Overlook and climbing of El Capitan and Half Dome without ropes or safety equipment. BASE jumpers, though, get prosecuted." According to Yosemite park spokesman Scott Gediman, "BASE jumping is illegal because it doesn't fit in with 'the park's values' that puts a high priority of providing a wholesome, quiet, safe environment for families and visitors." Gediman "said typically two to three BASE jumpers are prosecuted each year for illegally pursuing their sport in the park."

ABC: Sequoia National Park-Mountain Lion Encounter.

ABC World News Tonight (8/9, story 10, 1:20, Muir) reported, "We turn next tonight to that close encounter in the woods. Two hikers in California's Sequoia National Park getting a little too close to nature. Crossing paths with a mountain lion ready to pounce. Authorities tonight with an important reminder about what you should do."

Lessons From Night Of The Grizzlies.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/9, Scott, Franz) reports that the deaths of two young women in separate grizzly bear incidents at Glacier National Park on Aug. 12, 1967 has had far-reaching impacts. According to the article, "the tragedy, indelibly etched into history as the 'Night of the Grizzlies,' would forever change the lives of those involved, and it would transform the nation's bear management policies." The Beacon reconstructed the tragic events from "numerous interviews with witnesses, as well as National Park Service incident reports."

A Primer On Sea Turtle Nests, And A Inside Look Into The 2017 Nesting Season.

The Island Free Press \(NC\) (8/9, Allman) reports that starting May 1, the National Park Service "monitors the beaches of Cape Hatteras National Seashore from Ramp 30 to Hatteras village for sea turtle nest activity." Currently, NPS workers begin "patrolling at 4:30 a.m. each morning in order to secure any recently laid turtle nests before 6 and 7 a.m., when the beaches open to ORV traffic." The NPS of Cape Hatteras welcomes "volunteers to their team who are willing to give two consecutive weeks of their summer for 3 or 4 nights a week to monitoring nests within villages." According to the article, "they have also begun exploring options in internships in wildlife management and beach clean-up for any adolescents wanting to gain skills in the field of biology and conservation at an early age."

2 Rescued In Wyoming's Grand Teton National Park.

The AP (8/9) reports that "Grand Teton National Park rangers have rescued two men who got lost and became stranded while descending Mount Moran in northwest Wyoming." The National Park Service "says 58-year-old Ron Sloat of Colfax, Washington and 35-year-old Geoff Mitchell of Spartanburg, South Carolina called for help about 2 a.m. Tuesday." According to the article, "a helicopter had to be used to get the men down safely about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday."

42-Year-Old Man Found Dead In Lake Mead.

The AP (8/9) reports that "the body of a 42-year-old Las Vegas man who went missing in late July while swimming at Lake Mead has been recovered." The man's body was recovered on Tuesday.

Where Is Guam And Why Is North Korea Threatening It?

The Guardian \(UK\) (8/9, Grierson) reports that Guam's location, "within range of North Korean medium- and long-range missiles, and military significance to the US make it a logical target for Pyongyang." The US has "a naval base and coastguard station in the south, and an air force base in the north, which was used during the Vietnam war." According to the article, "though there has been some resistance and displeasure from the people of Guam over the US military's presence, it is also essential to the island's economy, second only to tourism."

Guam Is Overlooked Asset In Asia. In an op-ed for the Detroit News (8/9, Lennox), Dennis Lennox, who was executive director of the Republican Party of the Virgin Islands, writes that "North Korea's threat presents a unique opportunity for the federal government to simultaneously fly the flag while empowering Guam to promote the national interest, be it economically or diplomatically." To achieve this, Lennox urges President Trump "to reinvent the way the federal government oversees the territories." Lennox argues that "it's time to use broad authority of the president to transfer Guam and the territories from Interior to a new, standalone cabinet-level agency."

Additional Coverage: Interior Funds One Stop Centers In Hawaii And Guam.

Additional coverage that Interior acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula "made available two technical assistance grants totaling $467,095 to continue support for the Micronesia Resource Center One Stop Shop on Guam and the We are Oceania Halau Ola One Stop Center in Hawaii" was provided by Marianas Variety (8/9).

Keep Tabs On Wildfire Activity Using U.S. Geological Survey Website, Geomac.

The Sierra \(CA\) Sun Times (8/9) reports that "during a particularly heavy fire season 17 years ago, the USGS and partners identified the need to locate fires quickly for first responders, and started a consortium called the Geospatial Multi-Agency Coordination Group. eventually building a website called GeoMAC to fill that void." The site "provides one-stop shopping for emergency managers, fire responders and public eager to track where fires are burning, and their intensities." Elizabeth Lile, USGS scientist and GeoMAC project manager, said, "GeoMAC integrates daily wildfire perimeters for the public and wildland fire community. This tool is also a great resource for the public seeking more information about exactly where fires are burning."

North Korea Says It Will Have Plan To Strike Guam Developed "By Mid-August."

Reuters (8/9, Kim, Kim) reports North Korean state-run media said Thursday that Pyongyang will develop a plan "by mid-August to launch four intermediate range missiles" at Guam "before presenting it to leader Kim Jong Un who will make a decision on whether to proceed." Reuters says the "unusually detailed report on the attack plan marked a further escalation in tensions" between Pyongyang and Washington one day after President Trump warned North Korea would face "fire and fury" if it threatened the US. North Korea called Trump's threat a "load of nonsense."

The AP (8/9, Lederman, Pennington) reports North Korea "officially dismissed...Trump's threats," calling the President "bereft of reason" and warning "ominously" that "only absolute force can work on him." Reuters (8/9, Oliphant, Blanchard) quotes the state-run KCNA news agency as saying "sound dialogue is not possible with such a guy."

The Los Angeles Times (8/9, Kaiman) reports North Korea responded to Trump's threat "with vitriol." In a statement, the Korean People's Army threatened to "turn the US mainland into the theater of a nuclear war," sending "a strong signal that Pyongyang's nuclear ambitions remain unchecked."

The Wall Street Journal (8/9, Cheng) reports North Korea said it would be "closely watching the speech and behavior of the US," and USA Today (8/9, James) reports North Korean media said the purpose of the missile launch will be "to interdict the enemy forces on major military bases on Guam and to signal a crucial warning to the US."

The New York Times (8/9, Sang-Hun) reports that "in addition to serving as a warning to the United States, the proposed missile firings would also be a challenge to Japan," noting that "some of the North Korean missiles launched in recent months have fallen in waters near Japan." The New York Post (8/9, Brown) also reports North Korea's response, and the Los Angeles Times

(8/9, King) notes that “at a distance of about 2,100 miles, Guam lies closer to North Korea than any other US territory.”

The AP (8/9, Bordallo, Bussewitz), meanwhile, reports Guam residents “say they’re afraid of being caught in the middle of escalating tensions between the US and North Korea,” but “local officials downplayed any threat.” Secretary of State Tillerson was also “unruffled as he headed to Guam to refuel on his trip back to Washington from Malaysia.” Said Tillerson, “I do not believe that there is any imminent threat.”

Media Analyses: US Missile Defenses Lack Real-World Tests. Martha Raddatz said on ABC World News Tonight (8/9, story 2, 0:55, Muir) that while Trump’s statement “was a surprise to many” and “war is the last thing anyone at the Pentagon wants to see happen,” Pacific Command has been updating its “war planning, and they are certainly focusing on defensive measures.” Reuters (8/9, Stone) reports that the US military says its missile defense system and network of radars “allow it to successfully track and destroy incoming warheads,” but “test conditions do not accurately mimic those of wartime and critics are skeptical the country can truly defend itself.” On May 30 the Missile Defense Agency held its 10th successful test, in 18 attempts, of the Ground-based Midcourse Defense (GMD) system, but the test “took place during daytime and intercepted a single incoming missile. Few experts expect either of those assumptions to be likely if North Korea launched an attack.”

The CBS Evening News (8/9, story 2, 2:10, Mason) reported the US is “scheduled to conduct an annual military exercise in South Korea later this month,” and Cynthia McFadden reported on NBC Nightly News (8/9, story 2, 3:35, Holt) that the Pentagon has already prepared a “specific strike plan for a preemptive attack” that would involve B-1 bombers targeting “approximately two dozen North Korean missile launch sites and support facilities, which intelligence officials tell NBC News they feel confident they have accurately identified.”

North Korea Frees Jailed Canadian Pastor. The New York Times (8/9, Choe) reports that Canadian pastor Rev. Lim Hyeon-soo, who had been sentenced to hard labor for life in North Korea, was released on humanitarian grounds on Wednesday, North Korean state-run media said. Lim was sentenced in December 2015 after the nation’s Supreme Court convicted him of carrying out “subversive plots” and committing “activities against” the country. North Korea gave no further details about his release.

White House Sources: Trump’s “Fire And Fury” Threat Surprised His Own Advisers.

The tensions over the North Korean nuclear threat once again dominated the news cycle. All three networks led with the story, dedicating just over 23 minutes of combined coverage – up from 15 minutes on Tuesday night. One major topic of discussion was reporting, based on unnamed sources, on the President’s stern warning to North Korea the previous day.

Cecilia Vega reported on ABC World News Tonight (8/9, lead story, 3:55, Muir) that it “caught some in the President’s own inner circle by surprise. The President, in that statement, using language not vetted or pre-approved by his national security team.” According to Vega, “Sources close to the President say behind closed doors with top aides, including new Chief of Staff Gen. John Kelly, President Trump had discussed taking a tougher tone on Pyongyang. But even members of his own national security team had no idea the President would go this far.” Similarly, Anthony Mason said in the lead story on the CBS Evening News (8/9, lead story, 2:30) that Trump’s national security advisers had “agreed on a tough statement,” but “they didn’t expect” him to warn of “fire and fury like the world has never seen.”

Similarly, the Washington Post (8/9, Rucker, Deyoung) reports Trump discussed with his advisers “a strategy to escalate his rhetoric and deliver a more aggressive and overt challenge to North Korea’s leader, Kim Jong Un, said two senior White House officials.” The message Trump delivered Tuesday afternoon “was unexpected, but it wasn’t surprising,” one of the officials said.

The New York Times (8/9, A1, Baker, Thrush) reports that when Trump delivered his “fire and fury” threat to North Korea on Tuesday with “eyes flitting on what appeared to be a single page of talking points set before him on the conference table,” the piece of paper “was a fact sheet on the opioid crisis he had come to talk about.” Trump’s “ominous warning to Pyongyang was entirely improvised,” and he did not run the language by his advisers during talks beforehand.

The Washington Times (8/9, Boyer), however, reports that the White House said Wednesday that the President’s advisers were “well aware” that he planned to deliver a strong message, but Trump “chose the specific language.” Press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Chief of Staff John Kelly and others on the President’s national-security team “were well aware of the tone of the statement of the president prior to delivery,” but “the words were his own.”

Bloomberg News (8/9, Faries, Syeed) reports White House senior adviser Stephen Miller “suggested one intended audience for Trump’s blunt rhetoric may have been China.” Said Miller, “One of the most important things that you’ve seen is the president being so clear so publicly about China’s responsibilities in this regard. But the frankness of the president’s comments, the straightforwardness of his comments broadcast publicly about his expectations in that area, again, represent a new approach to how we’re handling the issue.”

White House Deputy Assistant Sebastian Gorka said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (8/9) that the President “is saying don’t test America and don’t test Donald J. Trump. We are just not a superpower. We were a hyper power. Nobody in the world, especially not North Korea, comes close to challenging our military capabilities, whether they’re conventional, whether they’re nuclear or whether they are special forces. So the message is very clear: don’t test this White House, Pyongyang.”

Gorka said on Fox News’ Hannity (8/9), “North Korea needs to understand the blackmail stops, and if you get into an arms race, as Secretary Mattis said, with United States of America, you will lose, whoever you are.”

Trump aides, Politico (8/9, Nelson) reports, are “warning against reading too much into the combative talk.” One “White House official” said, “I think he just wanted to show North Korea he was tired of it.” Trump, the official said, “was presented at his golf course on Tuesday with a new batch of information on North Korea a few hours before his controversial comments.”

Lawmakers, however, have been “worried about...Trump going off script for months,” McClatchy (8/9, Kumar, Clark) reports, and now they “are worried that his blunt and provocative warning to North Korea could lead to war.” Rep. John Garamendi (D-CA) said, “His bombastic rhetoric really inflamed a very...dangerous situation.” McClatchy says “it’s not just Democrats who are alarmed,” and “even some fellow Republicans criticized the president’s language.” Sen. John McCain told Arizona radio station KTAR, “It’s kind of the classic Trump in that he overstates things.”

Sen. Ben Cardin, ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (8/9), “I think the international community is looking to the United States for leadership to avoid a military confrontation with North Korea that could well involve nuclear weapons, and what the President said was just not helpful, but also raises the question to the international community whether the United States has a game plan for North Korea in order to change the equations.”

The New York Times (8/9, Myers, Choe) reports the President’s comments Tuesday also “sent a shudder through Asia on Wednesday, raising alarm among allies.” The Chinese Foreign Ministry “restated its position that the North Korean nuclear issue should be resolved by political means” and that “all relevant parties” should avoid “remarks and acts that may escalate the conflict.” South Korea, meanwhile, sought “to ease concern about the situation, saying that the North’s recent posturing, including its threat to attack Guam, appeared to be aimed at tightening solidarity among its own population and causing its neighbors anxiety.”

The CBS Evening News (8/9, story 3, 1:50, Mason), however, reported that amid the heightened rhetoric, South Korean President Moon Jae-In says he will now allow the US to fully deploy the THAAD defense system in his country. Japanese lawmakers, meanwhile are “pushing for new weapons that could allow it to launch a preemptive strike on North Korea.”

Trump’s comments Tuesday, the Washington Post (8/9, Fisher, Johnson) reports, have also further raised concerns among “those who believe the president is a loose cannon, impulsively blurting whatever flits through his mind.” The Post says the incident recalls for some Hillary Clinton’s campaign ad featuring “a longtime nuclear missile launch officer” who warned against voting for Trump: “I prayed that call would never come. Self-control may be all that keeps these missiles from firing.”

While a Wall Street Journal (8/9) editorial hits back at criticisms of the President’s remarks, arguing that diplomacy works best when there is a credible threat to back it up, most commentary is critical of the President’s tone Tuesday. A USA Today (8/9) editorial, for example, argues that it is “time for a deep breath. Fiery rhetoric aside, it bears remembering that the United States and North Korea do not seek dominion over the other,” and “America fares best when it acts with steely resolve, not out of fear.” In Japan, the Wall Street Journal (8/9, Sonne, Radnofksy) reports Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s government welcomed Trump’s “fire and fury” language.

On its editorial page, the New York Times (8/9) writes that “on some emotional level, one might be able to see why Donald Trump threatened to unleash ‘fire and fury’ against North Korea,” but he “is president of the United States, and if prudent, disciplined leadership was ever required, it is now." The Times argues that "rhetorically stomping his feet, as he did on Tuesday, is not just irresponsible; it is dangerous." Instead, "tougher sanctions, coupled with [Secretary of State] Tillerson's continued efforts at a diplomatic solution, are the best path to a peaceful end to this conflict. That is what Mr. Trump should also be focused on. Engaging in a war of words with North Korea only makes it harder for both sides to de-escalate."

Washington Post (8/9) columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. writes that while Trump "may be given to hyperbolic (and often fact-free) attacks on those he perceives as enemies," it's "hard to be hyperbolic where Kim is concerned. He's about as scary and cruel as they come. And this is where Trump's temperamental unfitness for the office he occupies is disturbing for reasons that go far beyond party or ideology." Politico's Edward-Isaac Dove tweeted, "The president's aides would like you to know he wasn't prepared and didn't mean it when he threatened nuclear war."

Former Ambassador Bill Richardson said on the CBS Evening News (8/9, story 4, 2:20, Mason), "The best option is diplomacy. The best option is continued sanctions...continue to pressure China, continue the military exercises. But find a way to talk to the North Koreans." He added that "talk about preemptive military strikes and the President's very incendiary statement, which was not helpful, is not the way to go."

Rep. Andre Carson (D-IN) said on CNN's Situation Room (8/9) said he doesn't think a military response should be taken off the table, but "our diplomatic response sends an example," and "I don't think that President Trump should try to make outlandish statements to one-up Kim Jong-un."

Many Democratic members of the House tweeted about the President's words. Rep. Judy Chu (D-CA) tweeted, "Trump has said 'all options are on the table' w/r/t #NorthKorea but all we've seen is reckless bluster. Diplomacy must be the top priority." Rep. Diana DeGette (D-CO) tweeted, "@POTUS' reckless rhetoric on #NorthKorea could further escalate a very precarious situation. Thoughtful strategy & diplomacy is critical." Rep. Dan Kildee (D-MI) tweeted, "When it comes to North Korea, we need a smart, strong and unified strategy – not bombastic rhetoric."

Rep. Gwen Moore (D-WI) tweeted, "Please, @realDonaldTrump, enough w/ the saber-rattling. You can't fight lunacy w/ lunacy. Diplomacy is the only way forward w/ #NorthKorea." Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) tweeted, "Erratic and fiery belligerence of @POTUS statements do little to defuse North Korea situation and threaten to make a bad situation worse." Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) tweeted, "Constituent texts pouring in asking 'should we worry about North Korea?' I've never seen anything like chaos @realDonaldTrump has created."

Rep. Paul Tonko (D-NY) tweeted, "Diplomacy = best & only peaceful way to push back on #NorthKorea. We must work w/ S.Korea, Japan & China to reverse their nuclear ambitions." Rep. Tim Walz (D-MN) tweeted, "@POTUS rhetoric on N. Korea is reckless and does nothing to keep us safe. Clear he fails to understand the role of commander-in-chief."

Trump Comments Spark Debate Over War Resolution. The Hill (8/9, Wong) reports President Trump's warning to North Korea has "reignited a debate about whether the commander in chief needs congressional approval before launching a preemptive military strike." So far, however, "congressional leaders from both parties have been silent on the issue." The Hill suggests lawmakers are "reluctant to tie Trump's hands" and "recognize how unpopular and divisive a vote on a war resolution would be for lawmakers facing reelection next year."

Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) tweeted, "No debate here. It's unconstitutional for @realDonaldTrump to go to war with #NorthKorea without Congressional authorization."

Former GOP Senator Says Trump Should Be Removed From Office Via 25th Amendment. WMUR-TV Manchester, NH (8/9) reports on its website that former New Hampshire Sen. Gordon Humphrey, a Republican, has sent letters to the state's senators and two House members, all Democrats, urging them to support removing Trump from office, "citing the president's Tuesday promise to unleash "fire and fury" on North Korea if that nation continues its nuclear aggression. Humphrey says Trump is 'sick of mind' and 'dangerous'" and should be removed via the 25th Amendment. The Boston Globe (8/9, Pindell) reports that Humphrey "represented New Hampshire in the US Senate from 1978 to 1990, during which time he was viewed as one of the body's most conservative members."

WPost Analysis: Echoes Of Cuban Missile Crisis In Trump's North Korea Warnings. The Washington Post (8/9, Miller) reports President Trump's comments about North Korea have "echoed President Truman's warning to Japan two days after the bombing of Hiroshima" that if the country didn't surrender, it faced "a rain of ruin from the air, the like of which has never been seen on this Earth." But his "blunt words" also "reflect the influence not only of the military academy" Trump attended as a teen, "but also the Cuban missile crisis."

Author Michael Dobbs, writing in the Washington Post (8/9), also ties Trump's comments to the Cuban missile crisis. Dobbs writes, "Given the explosive rhetoric of North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, it is understandable that President Trump should be tempted to respond in kind. ... Playing chicken is, however, a dangerous indulgence for the leader of a nuclear superpower."

Media Analyses: Obama, Not Trump, Deserves Credit For Upgrading US Nuclear Arsenal. The President's tweets Wednesday morning also got extensive media attention, with analysts casting doubt on the accuracy of his claims about the nation's nuclear arsenal.

Kristen Welker, for example, reported on NBC Nightly News (8/9, story 3, 2:25, Holt) that "privately, Administration officials acknowledge they've spent the day trying to turn down the heat, but the President may have added to the mixed messaging, tweeting, 'My first order as President was to renovate and modernize our nuclear arsenal. It is now far stronger and more powerful than ever before.'" However, Welker reported that though it's true Trump ordered a review of the nuclear arsenal in January, former President Obama "had already launched an effort to upgrade the stock pile, and it's a project that will take at least 30 years to complete, making it impossible for there to have been any significant changes this year."

Major Garrett, in the lead story on the CBS Evening News (8/9, lead story, 2:30), likewise noted that "in fact, it was President Obama who directed billions over many years to improve aging nuclear weapons and delivery and targeting systems." The President did, however, "order an overall review of US nuclear strategy earlier this year."

Under the headline "Trump Makes False Claims About US Nuclear Arsenal," the Los Angeles Times (8/9, Hennigan) says "parts of the president's claims are false." Like other outlets, the Times says Trump "did not order the modernization of the nuclear arsenal, President Obama did that in 2014." And while Trump "did launch a top-to-bottom Nuclear Posture Review...just like each of his recent predecessors did when they took office," it "wasn't Trump's first order." Instead, it was issued "a week after Trump took office, and was preceded by more than a dozen orders on other topics." The Wall Street Journal (8/9, Sonne) also says the review ordered by Trump in January is a customary action taken by administrations, while a revamp of the nuclear arsenal would require congressional legislation

Trump, the New York Times (8/9, Qiu) reports, "claimed undue credit for revamping the nation's nuclear arsenal, wrongly suggested tremendous progress had been made since he took office, and misrepresented the sequence and scope of his executive actions." An AP (8/9, Baldor) "Fact Check" makes similar claims, adding that Trump's statement about overall nuclear strength is also "debatable," the Washington Post (8/9, Rucker, Wagner) calls it "an inflated claim," and Bloomberg News (8/9, Syeed) reports that "for now, at least, the arsenal is shrinking" under its obligations to the New START treaty.

Glenn Kessler writes in his Washington Post (8/9) "Fact Checker" column that "we wavered between Three and Four Pinocchios, but ultimately tipped to Four, given how Trump tooted his horn inappropriately."

Gorka: Clinton, Obama "Appeasement" Led To Current Predicament. During an appearance Wednesday on CBN, the Daily Caller (8/9) reports, Gorka blamed former Presidents Clinton and Obama for the rise of North Korea, and said the US is now "paying the price of that appeasement of Pyongyang." After CBN anchor David Brody played a 1999 clip of Trump "sounding the alarm on North Korea," Gorka "praised Trump for his foresight," saying he "saw the price of appeasement which happened afterwards during the Clinton administration and then during the Obama administration, and today we are paying the price of that appeasement of Pyongyang."

Global Stocks End Lower Amid North Korea Fears. Reuters (8/8, Campos) reports Trump's "warning to North Korea and Pyongyang's threat of possible armed retaliation drove investors away from stocks and other risky assets" on Wednesday and into "safe-havens like gold and Treasuries." Trump's remarks "weighed on Wall Street" as the Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 36.64 points, or 0.17 percent, to 22,048.7, the S&P 500 lost 0.9 points, or 0.04 percent, to 2,474.02 and the Nasdaq Composite dropped 18.13 points, or 0.28 percent, to 6,352.33. The Washington Times (8/9, Miller) reports Trump's threatening rhetoric on North Korea "is almost entirely responsible for the pullback," said Randy Frederick, vice president of trading and derivatives for Charles Schwab.

WPost Recalls Nixon-Era Officer Dismissed For Questioning Nuclear Launch Protocol. The Washington Post (8/9, Rosenwald) recalls the story of Air Force Maj. Harold Hering, who in 1973 was training to be "a missileer – the guy who turns the keys to commence nuclear Armageddon." In an interview earlier this year, Hering said, "I assumed there had to be some sort of checks and balances so that one man couldn't just on a whim order the launch of nuclear weapons." According to the Post, Hering was forced to retire because "he wouldn't stop questioning the launch protocol." A New York Times (8/9) video says that with his threat, Trump could have been employing a strategy used by former President Richard Nixon, the “madman theory.”

Mattis Warns Of North Korea’s “Destruction,” Tillerson Tells Americans To “Sleep Well At Night.”

Media reports are contrasting separate remarks made Wednesday by Secretary of State Tillerson and Defense Secretary Mattis regarding North Korea. While Tillerson was cast as urging calm, a warning to the North from Defense Secretary Mattis was described as echoing the President’s rhetoric. The Washington Post (8/9, Morello), at any rate, says Tillerson “defended” Trump’s forceful “warning to North Korea” even as he “attempted to dismiss concerns that Guam is in any imminent danger.” Speaking to reporters aboard a flight home from Asia, Tillerson said, “What the president is doing is sending a strong message to North Korea in language that Kim Jong Un would understand, because he doesn’t seem to understand diplomatic language.”

Meanwhile, another Washington Post (8/9, Lamothe) story indicates that in remarks that were “notably more measured” than the President’s, Mattis warned North Korea Wednesday that its actions “will continue to be grossly over-matched by ours,” and that Pyongyang would lose any conflict that it starts with the US. In a statement, Mattis said, “While our State Department is making every effort to resolve this global threat through diplomatic means, it must be noted that the combined allied militaries now possess the most precise, rehearsed and robust defensive and offensive capabilities on Earth.” He added that North Korea “should cease any consideration of actions that would lead to the end of its regime and the destruction of its people.”

In its lead story, NBC Nightly News (8/9, lead story, 3:25, Holt) said Mattis delivered “his own more artfully worded, but no less threatening message, warning North Korea against actions that could lead to ‘the destruction of its people.’” Mattis, the Washington Times (8/9, Muñoz) says, was “echoing the strong language coming from the Trump White House,” and The Hill (8/9, Mitchell) says he was “just as tough in tone with North Korea, but it indicated mere threats from Pyongyang, which are routinely made by that country’s government, would not lead to military action.” Townhall (8/9, Pavlich) also reports on Mattis’ statement.

USA Today (8/9, Brook) reports Mattis also said Trump “was informed of the growing threat from North Korea last December and has since stressed the need to enhance US readiness.” But USA Today expresses doubts that the US nuclear arsenal is, as Trump boasted, “now far stronger and more powerful than ever before.” While Trump ordered a review of the nation’s nuclear weapons programs, any changes take time “usually measured in years and decades, not weeks and months.”

The AP (8/9, Lederman), meanwhile, reports that as President Trump in a series of tweets on Wednesday declared the US nuclear arsenal “far stronger and more powerful than ever before,” Secretary of State Tillerson was working to calm the North Korea crisis and insisting there wasn’t “any imminent threat.” Only hours before Trump’s tweets, Tillerson urged calm and said Americans should have “no concerns” despite the recent rhetoric. Aboard his plane as he flew home from Asia, Tillerson said, “Americans should sleep well at night. Nothing that I have seen and nothing that I know of would indicate that the situation has dramatically changed in the last 24 hours.” The AP says the “mixed messages from Tillerson and Trump put the onus on the North Koreans to decide how to interpret the latest missives from the US.”

Bloomberg News (8/9, Kate, Foroohar) similarly reports Tillerson “tried to ease concerns that the US was heading toward a military confrontation with North Korea,” and the Washington Times (8/9, Boyer, Taylor) quotes him as saying, “I do not believe that there is any imminent threat, in my own view.”

Anthony Mason similarly said in the lead story on the CBS Evening News (8/9, lead story, 2:30) that Tillerson “tried to reassure Americans and the world that we are not on the brink of nuclear war,” and Bill Neely said on NBC Nightly News (8/9, lead story, 3:25, Holt) that Tillerson is “turning down the temperature.”

Cecilia Vega reported on ABC World News Tonight (8/9, lead story, 3:55, Muir) that Tillerson sent “a message of his own...offering very different words” and “striking a much softer tone” than the President. The New York Times (8/9, Baker, Harris, Sullivan) likewise says the Secretary sent “a more nuanced message” than Trump, and USA Today (8/9, Wolf) writes that while Tillerson “wants Americans to sleep well at night,” his “task as the nation’s chief diplomat facing his first major international crisis is tougher than promoting sweet dreams. He must try to tamp down” Trump’s threat “with an oilman’s background, a depleted senior staff, a threatened budget crunch and a power struggle with the White House.”

Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (8/9) column that on Tuesday, Trump “delivered remarks about North Korea – words we now know to have been off the cuff – that pushed the world toward a nuclear standoff last seen in the Cuban missile crisis." But "then came Tillerson...to assure us that there is nothing to see. It has become a familiar exercise: walking back, cleaning up and outright contradicting crazy things uttered by the man with the nuclear codes." Milbank says that there "have been other such cleanup actions, and there will inevitably be many more, as Trump's advisers try to convey to the world a perverse message: Rest assured, sleep well – and pay no attention to the president's yammering."

Along similar lines, Gloria Borger said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (8/9), "I think what you saw was Mattis and Tillerson kind of being the shovel brigade here and trying to clean up the mess the President made with his rhetoric. You saw Tillerson trying to tamp down everyone, saying everyone ought to sleep well at night. You saw Mattis – it was a muscular statement from Mattis about America's military power, but it didn't draw a red line saying if you threaten us again, watch out. It was kind of more generalized. So there was clearly a recognition that something had to be said after the President. If the President had not spoken, I don't think you would see those two statements from these two men today."

State Dept.: Administration "Singing From The Same Hymn Book" On North Korea. The New York Post (8/9, Moore) reports State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert on Wednesday "dismissed a suggestion" that some in the Administration "weren't fully behind" President Trump's statements. Nauert said the Administration is "singing from the same hymn book" in its reaction to North Korea. "The United States is on the same page. ... We are speaking with one voice," she added. The Washington Examiner (8/9, Gehrke) reports Nauert also "scolded reporters...for being too interested in the US stance on North Korea." Her comment "rankled some reporters," including Matt Lee of the Associated Press, who said, "We're not 'obsessing' about this. This is the president of the United States threatening a nuclear-armed country...with 'fire and fury the likes of which the world has never seen.' I don't think it's obsessing to want to know, to have a further clarification of exactly what that means and whether or not it means that we're preparing to send 'fire and fury' raining down on the North Korean regime."

Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted, "State Dept: US speaking 'with one voice' on North Korea... you only say that when you're not."

WPost Analysis: Kelly "An Apolitical Force" In Divided White House. The Washington Post (8/9, A1, Costa, Rucker) reports that in an administration that "has split into factions and been ravaged by ideological warfare," Chief of Staff John Kelly has "asserted himself as a rare apolitical force." As Trump "bluntly addressed North Korean threats," Kelly has been "a constant by his side in Bedminster, N.J., keeping a low profile and serving as a neutral mediator more than a pacifier." According to the Post, Kelly is "one of a number of generals whom the president has come to rely on for national security guidance," along with Defense Secretary Mattis and National Security Adviser McMaster.

Trump Blasts McConnell Over Failure Of ACA Repeal.

In a tweet Wednesday, President Trump took a shot at Senate Majority Leader McConnell, questioning his explanation of why Congress has not repealed and replaced the ACA. Trump wrote, "Senator Mitch McConnell said I had 'excessive expectations,' but I don't think so. After 7 years of hearing Repeal & Replace, why not done?" Media reports cast Trump's tweet as an escalation of tensions between himself and McConnell, who is facing conservative ire over his criticism of what he described as Trump's "excessive expectations," as well as his inability to muster the necessary votes to pass a healthcare bill.

USA Today (8/9, Collins) reports that Trump's tweet was prompted by McConnell's comments in an interview this week in which he "blamed Trump for setting 'early timelines' and 'excessive expectations' as one of the reasons that people believe Congress is getting nothing done." Townhall (8/9, Pavlich) says the comments "didn't sit well with the president, who fired back on Twitter." The AP (8/9, Fram) says that while Trump "repeatedly used Twitter to pressure McConnell to find the votes to approve the health care bill, even saying hours after its failure that GOP senators 'look like fools,'" Wednesday's tweet "was an unusually personal reproach" of the Majority Leader.

The New York Times (8/9, Flegenheimer) reports that before Trump posted his tweet, he spoke with McConnell on the phone "to express his disappointment in the senator's comments, according to a person with knowledge of the call." During the call, Trump "emphasized that he would continue to push for a repeal, the person said, and suggested Mr. McConnell do the same." The Washington Examiner (8/9, Jessen) also reports on the Trump-McConnell conversation, citing the Times story.

The Wall Street Journal (8/9, Tau) also reports on Trump's tweet, highlighting what it sees as tensions between the President and the Majority Leader. Similarly, the Los Angeles Times (8/9, Bierman) describes an “escalating fight” between Trump and McConnell “over who is to blame for the Republican Party’s failure to repeal Obamacare,” and highlights that the “public nature of the intra-party fight is unusual.” It comes as Trump “has been increasingly frustrated with what he sees as a lack of support” from congressional Republicans, and “lawmakers have grown increasingly concerned that Trump’s low standing in the polls and lack of legislative accomplishments could hurt them politically.” Chris Cillizza writes in an analysis on CNN’s (8/9) website that Trump’s tweet was an “overreaction,” and “a needless fight to pick that could have decidedly negative consequences on the Trump’s agenda in the future.”

However, the Washington Times (8/9, Dinan) reports the President’s “defenders say the problem isn’t the president, but rather congressional Republicans’ inability to work out issues.” Breitbart (8/9, Spiering) also reports on Trump’s tweet, describing him as “fir[ing] back” at McConnell. Breitbart says Trump and his supporters were “disgusted” by the fact that Senate Republicans left for their August recess “after failing to repeal or replace Obamacare,” and the New York Times (8/9, Flegenheimer) says lawmakers’ “collective exhaling over this August recess has been complicated, as ever, by President Trump,” who “has found ways to encroach” on their time in their districts.

According to Roll Call (8/9, Lesniewski), McConnell is facing “a conservative backlash” over the comments, and The Hill (8/9, Carney) says conservatives, who have used McConnell’s “failure to win a victory on ObamaCare repeal against him,” have “found an ally, at least temporarily, in Trump.” Bloomberg News (8/9, Kapur, Litvan) reports that White House social media director Dan Scavino also unleashed a “rebuke” of the Majority Leader, tweeting, “More excuses. @SenateMajLdr must have needed another 4 years – in addition to the 7 years – to repeal and replace Obamacare.....” Citing Scavino’s tweet in a separate story, Politico (8/9, Tesfamichael) says “the White House is pushing the blame on Capitol Hill.”

Politico (8/9, McCaskill) says “frequent Trump critic” Sen. Lindsey Graham “also came to the president’s defense, calling it ‘ridiculous’ for McConnell to blame Trump’s impatience and inexperience for the public sense that Congress hasn’t done much.” Politico (8/9, Morin) also reports that hours after he vowed to “stop ‘all petty political disagreements’ in light of new threats from North Korea,” Fox News host Sean Hannity called McConnell “weak” and “spineless,” writing in a tweet, “@SenateMajLdr No Senator, YOU are a WEAK, SPINELESS leader who does not keep his word and you need to Retire!” In his monologue on Fox News’ Hannity (8/9) Wednesday night, Hannity said McConnell is making a “ridiculous excuse” for failing to repeal the ACA. Hannity added, “Senator, if you can’t get it done, get out of the way, retire, leave Washington, go play golf, go fishing.”

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times (8/9, Bierman) says that as the “fight” between Trump and McConnell “escalated,” the Administration “shifted tone Wednesday, opening the door for a bipartisan plan to ‘fix’ the law.” HHS Secretary Price told Fox News’ Fox & Friends (8/9), “Both folks in the House and the Senate, on both sides of the aisle frankly, have said that Obamacare doesn’t work, and it needs to be either repealed or fixed. ... So the onus is on Congress.” Asked if the Administration “is serious about a plan to fix the law,” White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders “did not back away from Price’s wording,” saying in an email, “We are always looking for best ways to improve and fix the broken Obamacare system.”

Lane: Eliminating Filibuster May Be In GOP’s Interest. Charles Lane writes in the Washington Post (8/9) that while “McConnell shows no signs of agreeing to” eliminate the Senate’s 60-vote filibuster, “there is a reasonable case to be made that it would be in the GOP’s interest to do what Trump says – if not immediately, then certainly if the Republicans manage to overcome Trump’s declining approval numbers and do well in the 2018 midterm elections.” If “2018 produces another GOP majority of fewer than 60 votes,” and Republicans “retain the House,” Trump “might see a once-in-a-generation opportunity to transform a whole host of policies – taxes, spending, regulation, immigration – in ways Democrats could not reverse until that far-off day when they manage to capture both houses of Congress and the executive branch.”

White House Reportedly Seeking Budget Deal That Includes Border Wall Funding.

Politico (8/9, Kim, Bade, Bresnahan) reports that according to “multiple sources,” the White House is seeking a deal to avoid a government shutdown “that would lift strict spending caps long opposed by Democrats” in exchange for border wall funding. White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short “met with top staffers from both parties on the Senate Appropriations Committee last week to make a hard sell for the proposal.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Fear Of Missiles And Words." On its editorial page, the New York Times (8/9) writes that "on some emotional level, one might be able to see why Donald Trump threatened to unleash 'fire and fury' against North Korea," but he "is president of the United States, and if prudent, disciplined leadership was ever required, it is now." The Times argue that "rhetorically stomping his feet, as he did on Tuesday, is not just irresponsible; it is dangerous." Instead, "tougher sanctions, coupled with [Secretary of State] Tillerson's continued efforts at a diplomatic solution, are the best path to a peaceful end to this conflict. That is what Mr. Trump should also be focused on. Engaging in a war of words with North Korea only makes it harder for both sides to de-escalate."

"Closing The Courthouse Door." The New York Times (8/10, New York (NY), Times) editorializes, "The Trump administration is moving to deny Americans their day in court when they have been wronged." Both the Education Department and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services are working to reverse Obama-era regulations barring forced arbitration, and now congressional Republicans are "attacking a new rule, issued by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, that will let Americans bring class-action lawsuits against banks instead of being forced into arbitration. ... If Senate Republicans...vote to repeal this rule, they will join their House colleagues and the Trump administration in closing the courthouse door to vulnerable, victimized and defrauded Americans."

"Frustration Over A War And Its Crimes." A New York Times (8/9) editorial acknowledges the frustration expressed by Carla del Ponte, who quit "the United Nations panel investigating atrocities in Syria in disgust." Yet, the Times says, "the Security Council's inaction has not been for lack of trying," but rather "because Russia, often joined by China, has obstinately propped up President Bashar al-Assad of Syria, using its veto eight times in the Council so far to block measures against him." While "deeply frustrating for victims of atrocities and for investigators," the Times argues, "international organizations and international justice are inherently dependent on the political will of those involved, and the Syrian conflict is an infernal tangle of political goals, ideologies and actors." Ultimately, the Times concludes, only a diplomatic solution can end "the carnage" and hold responsible parties, including Assad, accountable.

"Needed: Proposals To Fix New York's Crumbling Subways." The New York Times (8/9) editorializes, "Gov. Andrew Cuomo, Mayor Bill de Blasio and Albany lawmakers are at last talking about how to pay for vital improvements to the city's crumbling subways. ... At least New York politicians are publicly tossing around ideas," and de Blasio's proposed "millionaire's tax" is "an opening bid, flawed as it is. Now, Mr. Cuomo...and others need to step up."

Washington Post.

"Trump Ignores His Own Commission's Advice On Opioids." The Washington Post (8/9) editorializes that at his briefing on the opioid crisis on Tuesday, "after an appropriate nod to prevention, which is indeed a potentially efficient means of stemming the epidemic," President Trump "launched an extended attack on his predecessor's record. ... Not only did this inject a discordantly partisan note into a subject that had heretofore brought Democrats and Republicans together, but also it was of dubious logic. For much if not most of" Barack Obama's presidency, "users obtained opioids through legal channels – starting with doctor prescriptions. At least Mr. Obama's administration sought to clamp down on that through tightened national prescribing guidelines late in his term."

"Ideology Trumps Crime Fighting At Sessions's Justice Department." The Washington Post (8/9) editorializes that "in grappling with its worst epidemic of homicides in years, Chicago faces no more critical task than repairing frayed relations between its beleaguered police force and the communities it serves," and now the Trump Administration, "more eager to advance its anti-illegal-immigration agenda than to combat violent crime, is throwing up obstacles that will make it more difficult for Chicago and other localities to get a grip on the problems they confront." The Justice Department recently announced that "localities that refuse to cooperate with deportation agents are ineligible for a specific grant program for police departments." Attorney General Sessions "justifies barring the federal grants to Chicago – thereby impeding its ability to buy crime-fighting gear such as police cars, SWAT equipment and radios – by falsely linking the Windy City's homicide rate with its sanctuary policies." According to the Post, Sessions' demands "would undermine local law enforcement by driving a wedge between police and immigrant communities."

“China And Russia Go Further In Squelching Internet Freedom.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/9) writes that China recently created a new cybersecurity law “cracking down” further on free Internet access of foreign platforms by targeting popular software known as virtual private networks, or VPNs, that allow users to bypass the “great firewall” and that Chinese authorities have overlooked for years in an effort to attract foreign businesses. Noting that in Russia, Putin has also recently “signed legislation outlawing the use of VPNs,” the Post concludes, “In both Russia and China, the impulse is the same: Rulers fear the free flow of information.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trumpian Fury On North Korea.” A Wall Street Journal (8/9) editorial hits back at criticisms of the President’s remarks on North Korea, arguing that diplomacy works best when there is a credible threat to back it up.

“A Berkeley ‘Escape Hatch.’” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/9) writes that internal emails from the University of California at Berkeley show that staff are “deeply disturbed” by student protesters whose violent demonstrations in recent years have prompted the administration to request funding for a $9,000 security door in the university chancellor’s office. The Journal argues that the Chancellor and staff are right to be concerned – noting the particularly violent riots in February during a visit by blogger Milo Yiannopoulos – and concludes by lamenting the state of campuses when administrators are purchasing physical barriers to defend themselves from the student body.

“New York’s Liberal Subway War.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/9) argues that the ongoing dispute between New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio over funding for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority offers an entertaining spectacle but hurts New Yorkers who experience widespread metro delays and face the possibility of tax increases. The Journal particularly highlights Mayor de Blasio’s proposal to raise taxes on individuals earning more than $500,000, which the Journal says would hurt taxpayers even more and may receive support from Cuomo despite his past campaigns against tax hikes.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Here's the theory. Maybe Kim Jong-Un is just trying to ruin Donald Trump's vacation."

Jimmy Kimmel: "[Secretary of State Rex] Tillerson, he said Trump was just speaking in a language Kim Jong-Un would understand. Was that Korean? I didn't think it was."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This problem with North Korea and the nukes is not an easy one to fix for anyone. President Clinton, President Bush, President Obama all tried different strategies and they didn't work. And so far, Trump's strategy of playing multiple rounds of golf and watching Fox & Friends is not working either."

Stephen Colbert: "This past weekend, the UN imposed harsh sanctions on North Korea to try to get them to curb their nuclear program. North Korea responded by threatening revenge on the US, so renowned deal artist, Donald Trump...saw their threat of apocalypse and raised them one Armageddon."

Stephen Colbert: "Look, North Korea, leave Guam out of this! They're a US territory. That means they don't participate in the elections! They didn't vote for Trump. Just like most of Americans."

James Corden: "It was announced today that the FBI conducted a raid on the home of Trump's former campaign manager, Paul Manafort. Yeah, so of course this afternoon, Trump fired the entire FBI."

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night, Kim Jong-Un actually threatened the US territory of Guam. Yeah. When he heard that, Trump said, 'Oh, my God, do I have any golf courses there?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that the 2018 Winter Olympics in South Korea are now just six months away. Hopefully."

Seth Meyers: "Following President Trump's threats of fire and fury against North Korea, Sen. John McCain has recommended that the President instead walk softly but carry a big stick, which incidentally is how Melania keeps away from him around the White House."

Seth Meyers: "Hey, man, when you respond to North Korea, you're not supposed to sound like North Korea. Obama didn't respond to Putin's hacking by riding shirtless on horseback, even though everyone would have loved that."

Seth Meyers: "Politico reported that inside the Administration, there was little initial support for [FBI Director Christopher] Wray. After talking extensively with [Chris] Christie, Trump decided to go with Wray without telling others on his staff. The most shocking thing about that story is the fact that Trump still talks to Chris Christie."

Conan O'Brien: "This study came out, a new study reveals one out of eight Americans is an alcoholic. However, after Trump's comments on North Korea yesterday, it's now seven out of eight Americans."

Interior Secretary Removes 1 California Monument From Review.

The AP (8/16) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "will not recommend that any changes be made to the Sand to Snow National Monument in Southern California." Zinke "says in a statement Wednesday the monument is no longer under the Interior Department review ordered by President Donald Trump in April." He "says the monument has some of the most diverse terrain in the West and is home to "incredible" geographic, biologic and archaeological history."

The Los Angeles Times (8/16, Halper) reports that "as with such promises Zinke has made regarding select monuments in other states, there seemed to be little rationale to the timing of the announcement, or why Zinke has chosen to publicly comment on this particular property but none of the five other monuments in California, which include Berryessa Snow Mountain, Carrizo Plain, Giant Sequoia, Mojave Trails and San Gabriel Mountains." According to the Times, "whether any other California monuments are safe from Trump's vow to shrink the size of public lands is an open question."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (8/16), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/16), the Daily Mail (8/16), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/16), Philly \(PA\) (8/16), the Washington Post (8/16, Press), the Washington Times (8/16), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/16, Press), the Olean \(NY\) Times Herald (8/16), and the Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (8/16).

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Caller (8/16, Pearce), the Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (8/16, Roth), the San Bernardino \(CA\) Sun (8/16, Steinberg), the Inland Valley \(CA\) Daily Bulletin (8/16, Steinberg), My News LA \(CA\) (8/16, McAllister), the Highland \(CA\) Community News (8/16), and KTLA-TV Los Angeles \(CA\) Los Angeles (8/16).

The 10 National Monuments Trump Is Most Likely To Shrink.

USA Today (8/16, Roth) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "wrapping up his review of nearly two dozen national monuments targeted for downsizing or elimination by the Trump administration." By next week, Zinke is "supposed to send to President Trump recommendations on the future of those land monuments, which were created or expanded by presidents Barack Obama and Bill Clinton." The article posts a gallery of "the monuments Trump is most likely to downsize or eliminate, in alphabetical order, based on interviews with supporters and opponents of the monuments review."

Greens Launch 'Final Push' Against Monument Review. Politico Morning Energy (8/16, Adragna) reports that the League of Conservation Voters is "launching a final $100,000 push" Wednesday "across multiple platforms against the Trump administration's review of nearly two dozen previously-designated national monuments." The campaign will "urge people to urge Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke against making changes to the designations and promote videos highlighting support of public lands." The group also "plans to use Facebook and Instagram to push Reps. Paul Gosar, Steve Pearce, Doug LaMalfa and Doug Lamborn to stop their support of the review."

350 Outdoor Recreation Leaders Urge Zinke To Protect Public Lands. The Denver Post (8/16, Blevins) reports that "in one of the strongest displays of solidarity in the outdoor industry, more than 350 American outdoor businesses large and small have sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urging him to keep the country's national monuments unchanged and intact." The letter, "which was signed by executives from the largest and most influential outdoor recreation companies in the country, including REI, Burton, Columbia, Patagonia, The North Face and more than two dozen Colorado-based recreation companies," read, "These places and experiences can't be exported or commoditized. They are a national competitive advantage. We ask you to not erode that potential but create certainty for our businesses and for the communities that often need it most."

Lawsuit Filed Over Kane, Garfield Commissions' Meetings With Zinke. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/16, Maffly) reports that "during his May swing through Utah to review national monuments, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke had private meetings with three county commissions whose counties host two of the most controversial monuments under scrutiny — Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante." On Tuesday, the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance filed a lawsuit, "alleging Kane and Garfield commissions' May 10 meetings were illegal because they were not posted as required under Utah's Open and Public Meetings Act." The lawsuit stated, "The closed meetings flagrantly violated multiple provisions of the act and, if left unchecked, would shield defendants' activities on important public policy matters from the light of day."

What Veterans Have To Lose In Trump's National Monument Review. For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (8/16, Myrick, Contributor), Brett Myrick, who served in U.S. Navy SEAL Team 5, writes that as a former SEAL, he is "focused on two areas: keeping our communities safe and ensuring that veterans have access to nature." Myrick sees "a strong connection between veterans and protected public lands." Myrick urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to recommend no changes at the end of this month." He concludes: "As veterans, we fought to protect America and all her glory. Our national monuments are a part of that. He should leave them all intact."

Sec. Zinke Would Do Well To Honor Roosevelt. In an op-ed for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/17, Anker), Conrad Anker, a mountaineer and author, writes that President Theodore Roosevelt's "legacy is built on the Antiquities Act of 1906." Anker claims that "President Trump's directive to review the 26 most recent monuments is a direct assault on the public lands we all own." He urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "to leave our wild and cultural monuments as they are."

Trump Won't Remove Civil War Statues.

The Daily Caller (8/16, Bastasch) reports that the Interior Department "won't be removing monuments to Confederate soldiers at national battlefields that are 'an important part of our country's history,' according to a spokesman." Spokesman Jeremy Barnum said, "The National Park Service is committed to safeguarding these memorials while simultaneously educating visitors holistically and objectively about the actions, motivations and causes of the soldiers and states they commemorate." The article notes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "told reporters in July that battlefield monuments were worth preserving for their historical value." During his visit to Antietam National Battlefield, Zinke said, "Don't rewrite history. Understand it for what it is and teach our kids the importance of looking at our magnificent history as a country and why we are what we are."

Eye In Sky To Spy On Wildfires Awaits Green Light From Feds.

KLCC-FM Eugene, OR (8/16, Banse) reports that at the beginning of June, the Interior Department "solicited bids for drones and operators to support wildfire fighting, search and rescue and other remote sensing missions." Interior acquisitions branch chief Joshua Carter in Boise "said the agency is evaluating multiple offers." Carter "projected a 'mid-September timeframe' for making a bid award."

Aamodt Meetings Spark Anger, Frustration.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (8/17, Stelnicki) reports that "discontent over the implementation of the Aamodt water-rights settlement took center stage at a pair of meetings Wednesday, with non-Pueblo residents of the Pojoaque Basin north of Santa Fe expressing their frustration, anxiety and even anger about matters that concern the next steps for water use in the valley." According to the article, "at a town hall in Pojoaque, impassioned valley residents told Alan Mikkelsen, the deputy commissioner of the federal Bureau of Reclamation, that they were unhappy to be excluded from recent closed-door meetings over roadway easement disputes held by Mikkelsen's agency, Santa Fe County and four pueblos." The article says that "more than once, Mikkelsen told the crowd that the private meetings had been organized to resolve the roadway concerns without going to court."

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/16, Last) reports that "Mikkelsen also said that if push came to shove, the federal government has a responsibility to side with the pueblos, and Indian tribes rarely lose in court."

Additional Coverage: Ohio To Receive More Than $1.4 Million In Federal Funding For Conservation Projects.

Additional coverage of the funds awarded through the State Wildlife Grants program was provided by the Circleville \(OH\) Herald (8/16), the Huron \(SD\) Plainsman (8/16), the Deseret \(UT\) News (8/16), WTTV-TV Indianapolis \(IN\) Indianapolis (8/16), and WDTV-TV Bridgeport \(WV\) Bridgeport, WV (8/16).

Coal Makes A Comeback.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/16) writes that despite the Obama Administration's many efforts to reduce coal consumption and production through regulation, the Trump Administration has spurred coal production and exports through regulatory reform, such as repealing the steam rule, dismantling the power, ash, and methane rules, reopening coal leases, and rescinding the royalty revaluation. The Journal notes that the largest increase in coal exports is to countries with supposedly better climate records, and concludes that the last three quarters of data – while not necessarily indicative of a long-term trend – offer optimistic news to coal states.

Heavily Regulated Coal Mining Has High Standards.

In an op-ed for the Gillette \(WY\) News Record (8/16, Deti), Travis Deti, executive director of the Wyoming Mining Association, supports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "to allow for the continued leasing of federal coal at fair market value." According to Deti. "the decision is not a step to open more lands to mining. Rather, it merely ended an ill-conceived moratorium that was never intended to exist for more than three years anyway."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

10th Circ. Won't Budge On Chaparral Lease After BIA Redo.

Law360 (8/16, Powell) reports that "the Tenth Circuit stayed firm Tuesday in its conclusion that an appeal in a dispute over the Bureau of Indian Affairs' approval of an oil and gas lease and drilling permits between an Osage Nation council and Chaparral Energy LLC is moot."

Gov't Is Owner In Navajo Land Uranium Cleanup Suit: Judge.

Law360 (8/16, Sieniuc) reports that "an Arizona federal judge on Tuesday ruled that the federal government qualifies under environmental cleanup law as an owner of more than a dozen old uranium sites on Navajo Nation land and could be liable for cleaning up the area." U.S. District Judge David G. Campbell "partially granted El Paso Natural Gas Company LLC's bid for a quick win against the United States and U.S. the Department of the Interior, as well as the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the U.S. Department of Energy."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Looks To Approve Arch Coal's Request For Royalty Rate Reductions.

Crested Butte News (8/17, Todd) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "appears poised to approve Arch Coal's recent request for a renewed royalty rate reduction (RRR) on coal they've been digging from particularly troublesome areas of the West Elk Mine in Somerset." According to the article, "while the decision is not yet final, it appears likely to land in the coal mine's favor, as noted in a recent letter from the BLM to Colorado Governor Hickenlooper." Gunnison County Commissioners and High County Conservation Advocates have "written letters opposing the reduction."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Producers Bid $121 Million For Gulf Of Mexico Blocks.

Reuters (8/16, Hampton) reports major oil producers pushed high bids during the Gulf of Mexico offshore auction to $121 million, almost seven times greater than a year ago, as interest returned for deepwater exploration. Producers said that the Gulf of Mexico is more attractive, as operational cost cutting has helped projects become profitable at a lower break even. Shell claimed the largest number of blocks, with 19 high bids worth a combined $25.1 million. Chevron followed with 15 high bids for $27.9 million, while Anadarko won 10 blocks for $10.6 million and ExxonMobil took seven blocks for $20.4 million. A second Reuters (8/17) report says producers bid on 90 tracts covering 508,096 acres, according to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. The sale offered 76 million acres and a reduced royalty rate for shallow water leases. A total of 99 bids were submitted by 27 companies, worth a total $137 million.

The AP (8/16) reports that companies bid on far fewer tracts than in March, but the sale was the first to offer every available tract in the Gulf since 1983. Of the 90 tracts, 42 are in at least 1,600 meters of water. Platts (8/16) reports that the sale demonstrated the majors' preferences for deepwater areas, as shallow water bidding only accounted for 10 blocks and offers received for these were mostly under $200,000 each. Total had the high bid of the auction, offering $12.1 million for a block in the deepwater lower Garden Banks area. Wood Mackenzie senior research analyst William Turner said, "The deepwater industry is emphasizing short-cycle, low-risk prospects [rather than] impact, wildcat drilling. ... Operators continue[d] to focus on areas near existing infrastructure with a majority of bids close to existing hubs or appraised developments."

UPI (8/16, Graeber) reports Randall Luthi, the head of the National Ocean Industries Association, said bidders may avoid the shallow water areas, despite the lessened royalty rate, because of the low price environment. Luthi said, "Given current economic conditions and regulatory environment, offshore operators may choose to focus their capital on acquiring leases for longer range deepwater projects."

E&P Magazine (8/16, Addison) reports director of BOEM's Gulf of Mexico region Mike Celata said, "It's a continued show of the strength of deep water. ... It's a continued investment in the gulf looking at the Lower Tertiary and Miocene trends." Assistant secretary for Lands and Minerals Management Katharine MacGregor said, "I characterize this as a very successful sale. We made $121 million, and last August for Lease Sale 248 we made $18 million. ... There is something to be said about having a gulf-wide sale that offers more acreage for competitive leasing."

Additional coverage was provided by UPI (8/16, Graeber), UPI (8/16, Graeber), Offshore Magazine (8/16), Offshore Engineer (8/16, Sustaita), and WLTZ-TV Columbus \(GA\) Columbus, GA (8/16, Hammond).

Lawmakers Push Interior To Expand Offshore Drilling.

The Hill (8/16, Henry) reports more than 100 lawmakers wrote a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urging the Administration to allow oil and gas drilling in more areas off the coast of the US. The letter said, "Just as today's energy security is the result of production set in motion by decisions made years ago, the decisions on [Outer Continental Shelf] leasing and development facing the department today will lay the groundwork for our energy and national security for decades." However, another group of lawmakers asked the department to block drilling in the Arctic and Atlantic as part of its ongoing review.

Christie Tells Trump White House "NO" On Coastal Energy. The AP (8/16) reports New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie signaled his opposition to Trump's plan to explore for oil and natural gas off the state's coast. Department of Environmental Protection Commissioner Bob Martin sent a letter to the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management saying the exploration program would hurt the wildlife and endanger the state's tourism industry.

Additional coverage was provided by NJ Spotlight (8/17, Johnson), North Jersey \(NJ\) Media Group (8/16, O'Neill), and the Cape May County \(NJ\) Herald (8/17).

NJ Enviro Regulator Blasts Atlantic Ocean Drilling Plan. Law360 (8/16, O'Sullivan) reports that "New Jersey's environmental regulator voiced its opposition to the federal government's proposal for offshore drilling in the Atlantic Ocean waters off the state's coast, telling authorities on Wednesday that such industrialization could harm natural resources, coastal communities and the economy." In comments submitted by the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection to the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, "the Garden State agency blasted the BOEM's proposed National Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program."

About 30 Georgia Businesses Join Anti-drilling Alliance. The Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (8/16, Landers) reports that around 30 Georgia businesses have joined the Business Alliance for Protecting the Atlantic Coast to oppose drilling off the East Coast. The South Carolina-based organization has support from more than 41,000 businesses and 500,000 commercial fishing families.

Offshore Drilling Rally. The Charleston \(SC\) Moultrie News (8/16, Giroux) reports that more than 150 residents from South Carolina's Lowcountry rallied to protest offshore drilling when they discovered that the region lies on a fault line of the National Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program for 2019-2024. The protest was hosted by Stop Offshore Drilling in the Atlantic, which is dedicated to preventing offshore seismic testing and drilling.

Bureau Of Reclamation

Farmers & Environmentalists Join To Battle Planned Delta Tunnels Project.

Courthouse News (8/16, Cahill) reports that as the final approval of California WaterFix nears, “delta farmers, environmentalists and residents remain skeptical.” California Gov. Jerry Brown’s “appears to have the Trump administration’s support for the delta tunnels.” The project “still must be approved by the Bureau of Reclamation and the state’s water board.”

Groundwater District Gets Grant For Project.

The Idaho Mountain Express (8/16, Jensen) reports that the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation is “funding a $53,000 grant to help keep more water available for junior water users in the Big Wood and Little Wood basins.” Together with “other funding sources, the project will cost $124,825 total and will repair banks along a section of Silver Creek that have eroded.” The project will “also install devices on the Little Wood River that record instantaneous flow information 24 hours a day, which will help the water master improve water allocation.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Loss Of Sea Ice Leads Walruses To Early Appearance In Alaska.

The AP (8/16, Joling) reports that “hundreds of Pacific walruses came ashore to a barrier island on Alaska’s northwest coast, the earliest appearance of the animals in a phenomenon tied to climate warming and diminished Arctic Ocean sea ice.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “announced Wednesday that several hundred walruses were spotted during the first week of August near the village of Point Lay on the Chukchi Sea.” According to spokeswoman Andrea Medeiros, “last week, the number had grown to 2,000.” The FWS said that “it’s the earliest date for the arrival, known as a ‘haulout,’ to form.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by U.S. News & World Report (8/16, Joling), the Daily Mail (8/16), Fox News (8/16, Joling), the Miami Herald (8/16, Joling), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/16, Joling), Philly \(PA\) (8/16, Joling), the Washington Post (8/16, Dan Joling |, Ap), the Washington Times (8/16, Joling), and ABC News (8/16, Joling).

Hunting Bears With Dogs Comes Under Attack By Wisconsin Wolf Advocates.

The La Crosse \(WI\) Tribune (8/16, Marcotty) reports that “a national watchdog group says Wisconsin bear hunters are harassing wolves with their dog packs — then claiming state compensation when their hounds are killed — and wants the federal government to launch a criminal investigation.” In a letter to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, an attorney for Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility (PEER) said that the practice amounts to “a state-sanctioned financial subsidy for hunters engaged in the criminal harassment” of wolves. Adam Carlesco, staff counsel for PEER, noted that “Wisconsin is the only state that reimburses dog owners in addition to farmers and livestock owners for wolf depredation.”

Our View: Don’t Miss Today’s Meeting On Refuge Boating Regulations.

In an editorial, the Havasu \(AZ\) News-Herald (8/17) urges the public to participate in a public forum hosted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “to go over new proposals establishing a series of no-wake and restricted zones through Havasu National Wildlife Refuge.” The paper says that “the future of the lake and the activities it supports are too important to let a bunch of bureaucrats decide what happens.” It concludes that “even though the new regulations seem acceptable, the feds need to know that we’re still paying attention.”

National Park Service

National Parks Service Ends Ban On Disposable Water Bottles.

The AP (8/16, Silber) reports that “the federal government announced Wednesday it will eliminate a policy that allowed national parks like the Grand Canyon to ban the sale of bottled water in an effort to curb litter." The National Parks Service "said in a statement it made the decision to 'expand hydration options for recreationalists, hikers, and other visitors to national parks.'" International Bottled Water Association spokeswoman Jill Culora "praised the Park Service's decision in a statement, calling the policy 'seriously flawed' and noted it still allowed other less healthy beverages that are packaged in heavier types of containers." Officials said that "parks will still promote recycling of plastic water bottles, and many have worked with partners to provide free water in bottle-filling stations."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington Times (8/16, Silber), the Washington Post (8/16, Clarice Silber |, Ap), the Washington Post (8/16, Clarice Silber |, Ap), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/16, Silber), Philly \(PA\) (8/16, Silber), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/16, Silber), and the Arizona Republic (8/16, Silber).

Additional coverage was provided by the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (8/16, Alexander), the Cleveland \(OH\) Plain Dealer (8/16, Eaton), and the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (8/16).

Permit For Right-wing Crissy Field Rally To Get 2nd Look By Officials.

The San Francisco Chronicle (8/17, Alexander) reports that the National Park Service on Wednesday "acknowledged widespread concern over plans to hold a right-wing rally at Crissy Field in San Francisco next week, and said it would make a decision soon on whether to let the event proceed on the park property." The superintendent of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, "in her first public statement on the event, said the agency was bound to honor free speech rights of the organizers, regardless of their politics, but also would have to account for public safety." GGNRA's acting general superintendent, Cicely Muldoon, said, "We have heard and take very seriously the concerns expressed by the public and elected officials regarding the proposed Aug. 26 Patriot Prayer First Amendment event at Crissy Field. Our highest priority is to ensure public safety, while honoring our obligation to uphold one of our nation's most cherished constitutional rights, the First Amendment right to free speech."

Additional coverage was provided by the East Bay \(CA\) Times (8/16, Kelly).

New Smokies Science Program To Target Schools.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (8/16) reports that "a new science education program will soon launch in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park thanks to a $1 million Veverka Family Foundation donation to the National Parks Foundation." Citizen Science 2.0 in National Parks will be "a three-year partnership between the Great Smoky Mountains Institute at Tremont, the park, and local middle and high schools, providing citizen science engagement for students and delivering professional development for teachers." According to the article, "the teacher education program will consist of a series of residential workshops at Tremont and consults at local schools, giving teachers practice with experiential learning and linking what they have learned with standards-based subject matter." Smokies Superintendent Cassius Cash said, "These science-based opportunities cultivate lasting connections between the public and their parks by establishing a fascination and love of science. We are thrilled to work with the National Park Foundation and the Veverka Family Foundation to implement this citizen-science based education project."

On A Mission: Preservation Work Underway At Tumacacori.

The Green Valley \(AZ\) News (8/16, Bottemiller) reports that "a five-year project involving backbreaking, eyeball-bending work is underway to conserve Tumacacori National Historical Park's valuable heritage." Frank Matero, "a visiting professor of architecture at the University of Pennsylvania, is overseeing a team of specialists on earthen architecture to conserve the original plasters and painted finishes inside San José de Tumacácori Mission Church south of Tubac." According to the article, "while the goal is to protect the culturally significant structure from the elements, the hope is that in doing so come educational and collaborative opportunities for internships involving Americans, Mexicans and Park Service professionals."

Springfield Armory Museum Closed Friday For Paving.

The Springfield \(MA\) Republican (8/16, Kinney) reports that the Springfield Armory National Historic Site will "close its museum Friday so contractors can complete paving work at the armory site." The paving is "part of a $1.2 million project to redo the landscape, the road and the drainage at the Springfield Armory National Historic Site." The National Park Service is "restoring the landscape to what it looked like in the 1950s under Army control."

Yosemite's Half Dome Disappears Into A Plume Of Smoke From Wildfires.

The San Francisco Chronicle (8/16, Graff) reports that smoke from two wildfires burning in Yosemite National Park has made the Half Dome not viewable. According to the article, "air quality in the park was especially poor on Monday and Tuesday with the amount of particulate matter in the air peaking between Monday and Tuesday afternoons and reaching unhealthy conditions." Yosemite spokesperson Jamie Richards said, "This morning it's not too bad. As the afternoon sets, we're in a low-lying valley at 4,000 feet, so it may change as the day progresses. If you're someone with asthma or respiratory issues, it might not be a good idea to go on a strenuous."

Trump: Kim Jong-Un Made "Wise Decision" In Backing Off Plan To Attack Guam.

USA Today (8/16, Onyanga-Omara) reports President Trump tweeted Wednesday that North Korean leader Kim Jong-un made a "wise and well reasoned decision," after backing off from a plan to fire four ballistic missiles at Guam. "The alternative would have been both catastrophic and unacceptable!" Trump tweeted. The New York Times (8/16, Perlez) says Trump offered "rare words of praise" for Kim, and Reuters (8/16, Brice) likewise said Trump "praised" the North Korean leader for making a "wise" decision, which "has eased escalating tension between the two countries."

The New York Post (8/16, Moore) also reports Trump's tweet about Kim's decision, which Bloomberg News (8/16, Olorunnipa) reports, "at least for now," has shifted "the focus...toward finding a diplomatic solution." At the UN on Wednesday, Secretary-General Antonio Guterres called for confidence-building measures to defuse tensions and a return to negotiations. "As tensions rise, so does the risk of misunderstanding, miscalculation or escalation," Guterres told reporters. "There are many possible avenues for this dialogue, from various bilateral formations to the six-party talks."

Bannon On North Korea: "There's No Military Solution Here, They Got Us." In a telephone interview with the American Prospect (8/16), Steve Bannon said regarding North Korea, "There's no military solution, forget it. Until somebody solves the part of the equation that shows me that 10 million people in Seoul don't die in the first 30 minutes from conventional weapons, I don't know what you're talking about, there's no military solution here, they got us." The Washington Examiner (8/16, Siegel) reports that the American Prospect's Robert Kuttner "writes that Bannon told him [President] Trump should consider a diplomatic deal in which China got North Korea to freeze its nuclear program, in exchange for the US removing troops from the Korean Peninsula."

Pence Urges Latin America To End Diplomatic Ties With North Korea. Bloomberg News (8/16, Pettypiece) reports Vice President Pence on Wednesday called on Chile, Brazil, Mexico, and Peru to "cut all economic and diplomatic relations" with North Korea as the US looks to broaden the coalition of countries pressuring leader Kim Jong-Un to abandon his nuclear program. After meeting in Santiago with Chilean President Michelle Bachelet, Pence said, "We strongly urge Chile today, and we urge Brazil, Mexico and Peru to break all diplomatic and commercial ties to North Korea. The era of strategic patience is over, with regard to North Korea. All options are on the table." Pence, the Wall Street Journal (8/16, Radnofsky) reports, asked Bachelet to reclassify Chilean wine as export luxury goods under current US sanctions, which, he said "would prevent North Korea from obtaining these commodities and converting them into hard currency that support the regime."

According to the AP (8/16), Pence is "cutting short his trip to Latin America so he can join the President at a meeting about North Korea." The White House announced Wednesday that Pence would travel to Camp David with the President on Friday to meet with his national security team.

A Washington Post (8/16, Rucker) analysis says that during his week-long tour of Latin America, Pence has "cast himself to his hosts as a dutiful, even earnest messenger for President Trump. But in visits this week to Colombia, Argentina and Chile, Pence has acted more like Trump's translator." The Post writes that "again and again," Pence's statements have "sounded somewhat discordant from the ones his boss has been delivering back home," and "more than delivering Trump's messages, Pence is repackaging them with a decidedly sober and diplomatic spin."

Moon: US Promises To Seek Seoul's Approval Before Action On North Korea. Reuters (8/16, Kim, Kim) reports South Korean President Moon Jae-in said Thursday that President Trump has "promised to seek Seoul's approval before pursuing any option against nuclear-armed North Korea." Trump's recent "aggressive comments" do "not appear to have been made with the intention to take military action, Moon said" at a news conference marking his first 100 days in office.

NYTimes Analysis: US War Games With South Korea May Be "A Bargaining Chip." The New York Times (8/16, Rich) reports that bi-annual joint US-South Korean military exercises are condemned "year after year" by the North "as a rehearsal for an invasion and demands that they be called off." Now, with President Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un "recently trading threats of nuclear war, another round of the biannual drills is set to begin on Monday in South Korea." The Times notes that two years ago, the North proposed "a temporary moratorium on nuclear tests if Washington canceled" the exercises, and some analysts are suggesting that a "permutation of that offer may be the best way to defuse the crisis over North Korea's nuclear and missile programs."

China's Enforcement Of UN Sanctions Starts To Pinch. The New York Times (8/16, Perlez) reports that UN sanctions banning the import of North Korean seafood "started to bite on Wednesday, two days after China's Commerce Ministry announced it would enforce the new rules" passed earlier this month by the Security Council. By curtailing the trade, China is "obeying the intent of the latest sanctions resolution but harming its own businessmen." The Chinese traders were also "not given any warning about the sanctions enforcement," setting off protests.

Dunford Meets With Chinese Soldiers Near North Korean Border. The Wall Street Journal (8/16, Lubold, Page) reports Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunford on Wednesday said he discussed with his Chinese counterparts ways to coordinate with China's military should war break out with North Korea. Dunford also paid a rare visit to the Chinese military command that oversees the North Korean border, viewing live-fire drills and meeting with People's Liberation Army troops.

American Samoa GDP Turns Down In 2016.

Marianas Variety (8/16) reports that in estimates of gross domestic product or GDP for American Samoa for 2016, the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis said "that real GDP — GDP adjusted to remove price changes — decreased 2.5 percent in 2016 after increasing 1.2 percent in 2015." The drop in the American Samoa economy "reflected decreases in spending on construction and equipment; several investment projects in both the government sector and private sector had ended or entered their final stages during 2015." Also, "government spending decreased, reflecting a decline in investment spending by the territorial government." These estimates were "developed under the Statistical Improvement Program funded by the Office of Insular Affairs of the U.S. Department of the Interior," and "moving forward, an agreement between OIA and BEA will extend and improve the estimates of GDP for American Samoa."

Panel Studying Possible Tie Between Health Problems, Appalachian Mining To Meet In Kentucky.

The Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (8/16, Estep) reports that "a panel studying the potential link between surface mining and health problems in Appalachia plans meetings in Kentucky to gather information." The committee of the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine will "hold a town hall meeting in Hazard on Aug. 21 to gain 'insights and information' from people in the area, according to a news release." The U.S. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement "commissioned the study, saying the research agency would examine a 'growing amount of academic research that relates to possible correlations between increased health risks as a result of living near surface coal mine operations.'"

US Geological Survey

USGS Begins Low-level Flight To Survey And Research Oklahoma Fault Lines.

The Altus \(OK\) Times (8/16, Goforth) reports that scientists with the U.S. Geological Survey and the Oklahoma Geological Survey "began a 6 to 10-week survey of southwest Oklahoma's fault lines on Monday at the Altus Quartz Mountain Regional Airport." USGS and OGS are "contracting with Glodak Airborne Surveys to conduct surveys in over 18 counties in southwestern and north-central Oklahoma to capture 3-D images of geology beneath Earth's surface for earthquakes hazard and mineral resources." USGS scientist and project lead Dr. Anji Shah said, "Oklahoma has been experiencing increased seismicity since about 2009. Many of these earthquakes occur on faults that haven't been mapped. In order to better understand local seismic hazards, the USGS and OGS will use the new data to work toward improved fault maps."

Media Analyses: Trump Faces Growing Political Isolation In Wake Of Charlottesville Comments.

Media outlets offered no respite to the President the day after his impromptu comments on the Charlottesville tragedy. ABC World News Tonight (8/16, lead story, 5:30, Muir) – as did the other two major network newscasts – showed him making the statements that sparked the outcry, "What I'm saying is this: You had a group on one side, and you had a group on the other, and they came at each other with clubs and it was vicious and horrible. I think there is blame on both sides." Pressed on whether he was defending neo-Nazis, the President said, "Excuse me. They didn't put themselves down as neo-Nazis. You had some very bad people in that group. You also had people that were very fine people on both sides." Media analyses were unremittingly hostile, both in terms of what Trump meant by his words and in their assessment of the implications for his presidency.

The New York Times (8/16, Peters, Martin, Healy), for example, refers to Trump's "embrace of the country's racially charged past," Politico (8/16, Dawsey) says he "offered what some perceived to be overtures to white supremacists," and the Washington Post (8/16) speaks in an editorial of a "stunning defense of white supremacist marchers." The CBS Evening News (8/16, story 4, 3:40, Mason), meanwhile, interviewed Bryan Stevenson of the Equal Justice Initiative, who said, "I think the President needs to step back. ... We cannot be ambivalent about the danger posed by Nazism and fascism."

Another New York Times (8/16, Landler) report accuses Trump of abdicating "what presidents from Roosevelt to Reagan have regarded as a cardinal duty of their job: to set a moral course for the nation." In that sense, to the Times "Trump's refusal Tuesday to pass an explicit moral judgment on the violence...seemed a genuine reflection of his beliefs," and was "similar to his refusal to condemn the tactics of autocrats like...Rodrigo Duterte...or...Vladimir V. Putin." John Kass, in his Chicago Tribune (8/16) column, charges that "the amoral man in the White House failed his morality test. And in doing so, he gave the left a powerful weapon."

NBC Nightly News (8/16, lead story, 3:20, Holt), meanwhile, reported "the shock" over Trump's comments triggered "a cascade of criticism that could further stall the President's agenda," and Wolf Blitzer said on CNN's Situation Room (8/16) that Trump "may have derailed his presidency." Along similar lines, USA Today (8/16, Jackson) reports "some of...Trump's most ardent supporters are worried his impromptu comments on the racially motivated violence...will imperil the fate of his economic and policy agenda." The story cites two unnamed "prominent supporters who have worked with the Trump team" who "say they worry the self-inflicted Charlottesville controversy will only make it harder for the White House to get...anything...critical to his agenda out of Congress." The Wall Street Journal (8/16, Nicholas, Hughes, Bender) runs a similar analysis under the headline "Trump's Remarks Rattle His Staff, Threaten Agenda."

Sara Murray said on CNN's The Lead (8/16) that Trump "has no regrets about what he had to say," and "in fact...has been defiant. We are told he views this essentially as the liberal media and these East Coast liberal elites having a panic attack, hyperventilating over his comments." However, Trump is "increasingly isolated as the backlash to these remarks a day ago builds." The New York Times (8/16, Shear, Thrus, Haberman) also reports Trump "found himself increasingly isolated in a racial crisis of his own making on Wednesday, abandoned by the nation's top business executives, contradicted by military leaders and shunned by Republicans." The Hill (8/16, Easley) likewise says "Trump's political isolation mounted on Wednesday, with...GOP lawmakers ducking for cover."

The New York Post (8/16, Fredericks), meanwhile, reports Trump "stunned his top aides at his combative news conference" and ignored "their advice." The Post cites a quote from an unnamed "senior White House official" who told NBC News that the President "went rogue." Politico (8/16, Cook, Dawsey) says Trump's "decision to double down on his argument that 'both sides' were to blame...was driven in part by his own anger – and his disdain for being told what to do." Politico quotes "one adviser to the White House" as saying, "In some ways, Trump would rather have people calling him racist than say he backed down the minute he was wrong. ... This may turn into the biggest mess of his presidency because he is stubborn and doesn't realize how bad this is getting." Meanwhile, "an adviser" says Trump "thinks he's right. He still thinks he's right."

The political devastation ensuing from the current controversy, says McClatchy (8/16, Glueck), could spread to the entire Republican party: "If...Trump's campaign stomped all over the Republican Party's 2012 plans to build a more diverse movement, his refusal now to squarely blame white supremacists and neo-Nazis for violence has destroyed those efforts entirely." McClatchy adds that "interviews with a dozen Republican operatives and activists around the country revealed genuine frustration – and for some, disgust – over Trump's repeated suggestions that there is an equivalence between the neo-Nazis, Ku Klux Klan members and white supremacists...and those who turned out to protest them."

Steve Hayes of The Weekly Standard said on Fox News' Special Report (8/16) that the White House strategy Wednesday was "to stop digging. They didn't have the President out to continue to talk about this in a way that undoes what he tried to do on Monday and in that sense I think they have made some progress today. But you listen to Mike Pence say that the President was clear and unambiguous about his condemnation here and you look at the White House talking point...that talked about the President as a force for calm and unity. That's not only misleading and wrong, it's delusional."

Trump's "defense of far-right protesters" in Charlottesville drew criticism from two of his predecessors, the CBS Evening News (8/16, lead story, 2:30, Brennan) reported in its lead story. Without mentioning Trump by name, former Presidents George and George W. Bush issued a statement saying, "America must always reject racial bigotry, antisemitism, and hatred in all forms." CBS (Brennan) added that Trump "also drew sharp rebukes from" other GOP officials. Ohio Gov. John Kasich: "He has got to fix this, and Republicans have to speak out." Sen. Lindsey Graham said in a statement, "Mr. President, your words are dividing Americans, not healing them." The Washington Times (8/16, Dinan) also reports on the statement from the Bushes.

The Detroit Free Press (8/16, Spangler) reports that Rep. Dave Trott "had some advice" for Trump, saying in a tweet Wednesday, "I think America needs more unity and less divisiveness...meaning @realDonaldTrump should focus more on golf & have less press conferences."

The AP (8/16, Peoples, Beaumont) says that while "the nation's most powerful Republicans responded" to Trump's comments, "few mentioned the president." Senate Majority Leader McConnell "condemned 'hate and bigotry,'" and House Speaker Ryan "charged that 'White supremacy is repulsive,'" but neither "criticized the president's insistence that there were 'very fine people on both sides'" of the violent clash. Their "nuanced statements" are a reflection of the GOP's establishment's "delicate dance." While "few top Republican officeholders defended" the President, they "are unwilling to declare all-out war against Trump and risk alienating his loyalists."

USA Today (8/16, Przybyla) describes McConnell as "livid" over Trump's remarks, but adds that the "difficulty he felt responding to the leader of his party" underscores "the quandary facing many Republicans in the aftermath of Trump's comments." Republicans, USA Today adds, "are searching for ways to distance themselves from the president without personally taking on a president who remains popular in many GOP-dominated states."

The Los Angeles Times (8/16, Mascaro) reports, however, that while a number of Republican lawmakers have criticized the President over his remarks on the Charlottesville violence, "the GOP-led Congress isn't expected to respond with much more than impassioned statements and social media posts." The Times adds that Trump "remains popular in many states and congressional districts that elected Republicans to the majority in Congress," and "lawmakers remain reluctant to put themselves crosswise with the voters many will need in next year's midterm election. Moreover, Republicans in Congress have hitched Trump's popularity – which stems in part from his disruptive and racially tinged tone – to their legislative agenda."

John Harwood said on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/16), "This is an extraordinarily difficult moment for Republican leaders because it's embarrassing to them. ... This was a President revealing what he really thought and the problem has come because people see what he really thought and they don't like it. ... Republican leaders therefore are feeling the need to distance themselves." Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (8/16), "It is not clear GOP are leaders are going to do much about" Trump's comments, but added that "one Republican source told CNN, 'I think the President's ability to effectively govern is dwindling by the hour.'"

In an op-ed for Politico Magazine (8/16), Matt Latimer, a former speechwriter for President George W. Bush, argues that while the media "has been biased" and "have gone after Trump with a determination and fury that Barack Obama never faced," the media "didn't force the president to say – or rather not say – what he did on Saturday" or "to (yet again) fault 'both sides' on Tuesday afternoon, or suggest that those hanging around with armed Nazis...were just peaceful, lawful demonstrators speaking their minds." Latimer adds that it is "time to put the country ahead of the party. And for politicians in Washington, D.C., to prove they still have the ability to see the difference."

The Washington Post (8/16, Degrandpre) reports that the "most senior leaders" of the US military "have publicly – and bluntly – repudiated the racist violence" in Charlottesville, "declaring the nation's armed forces as being unequivocally against hatred." The military's four service chiefs "issued firm, forceful statements that stand apart from remarks made by President Trump." The "flurry of activity prompted some observers to question whether the Pentagon aimed to create distance between the service chiefs and the commander in chief."

The AP (8/16, Burns) reports that Chief of Naval Operations Adm. John Richardson wrote in a tweet Saturday evening that the events in Charlottesville were "unacceptable and mustn't be tolerated," and issued a statement calling them "shameful." In a tweet Tuesday, Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Robert Neller wrote, "No place for racial hatred or extremism in @USMC. Our core values of Honor, Courage, and Commitment frame the way Marines live and act." On Wednesday, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark Milley tweeted, "The Army doesn't tolerate racism, extremism, or hatred in our ranks. It's against our Values and everything we've stood for since 1775." Also, Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. David Goldfein wrote in a tweet, "I stand with my fellow service chiefs in saying we're always stronger together – it's who we are as Airmen."

Politico (8/16, Klimas) says the military chiefs' statements were "in stark contrast" to Trump's remarks, while the Washington Examiner (8/16, McIntyre) says they "have to be especially careful not to cross a line into domestic politics" as it is "actually illegal under military law for a commissioned officer to say anything that could be construed as direct criticism of the commander in chief."

WPost A1: Since 1970s, Trump "Has Regularly Fanned The Flames Of Racial Controversies." On the front page of the Washington Post (8/16, A1), Marc Fisher writes, "From his first public controversy in the 1970s, when the federal government sued Trump and his father over discriminatory rental practices in their New York real estate empire, to the opening salvo in his 2016 presidential campaign, when he said that Mexicans entering the United States were criminals and 'rapists,' Trump has regularly fanned the flames of racial controversies." Fisher writes that some say Trump's "eagerness to speak up for at least some of the people who took part in the alt-right demonstrations in Charlottesville must be viewed as a reflection of his attitude on race."

Media Analyses: Trump's Base Siding With Him. While officials from both parties are blasting Trump over his comments, the AP (8/16, Sedensky) reports, "many men and women who helped put him in office remain unmoved by the latest uproar." They "wash their hands of neo-Nazis and wag their fingers at leftists. They denounce a press corps they see as biased and controversies they view as manufactured. But in the frenzied blame game over the deadly violence at a rally of white supremacists...Trump's loyal base is happy to absolve the president himself."

Along similar lines, the CBS Evening News (8/16, story 5, 2:20, Mason) interviewed several Trump voters, who said they remained on his side in this controversy, "These Republican women," CBS reported, "say if a President deserves blame for making racial tensions worse, it's Obama, not Trump, for the identity politics they say Democrats have practiced for the last eight years." NBC Nightly News (8/16, story 3, 2:00, Alexander) reported on reaction to Trump's words across the nation, and featured some Trump defenders while noting the "outrage blaring from newspaper headlines. In New York, 'Sympathy for the Devils.' In Chicago, 'Fake President.'"

Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist said on Fox News' Special Report (8/16) that it is "so frustrating to people that we cannot acknowledge just the reality that of course, everyone, most everyone, should, of course, condemn white nationalism and other racists and it's also true that we do have a really serious problem in this country with leftist violence and even the inability of Republican leaders to admit that reality which is just factually true. That's actually just what happened even in this last weekend where you had violence on one side – you had the murderous violence of the racist and also violence on the other side it makes it very difficult to have a fruitful conversation."

In his opening monologue on Fox News' Hannity (8/16), Sean Hannity said, "What seemed to set the media off yesterday is that the President said there was violence on both sides. Whether we like it or not – this is an important point – the First Amendment does protect even hate speech. That is why even the ACLU defended these white supremacists and their right to say what they want to say. Whether or not we like it or not, you are not allowed in America, under the rule of law to get into fist fights, to punch people, engage in fighting because you don't like what they say. Despite those facts, the media is living in an alternative universe. Why? Because all they want to do is destroy the President."

Marist Poll: 52 Percent Say Trump Response To Charlottesville Was "Insufficient." Politico (8/16, Conway) reports that a new Marist poll found that most Americans think Trump's response to the violence in Charlottesville "was not strong enough." According to the poll, 52 percent "said Trump's response to the violence was insufficient, while 27 percent said his reaction was strong enough and 21 percent were unsure." The poll was conducted Monday and Tuesday, which means "some respondents were surveyed before Trump made further remarks about the event at a freewheeling news conference in New York on Tuesday afternoon."

WPost Says Kelly "Deeply Frustrated And Dismayed," ABC Remarks On Apparent "Wince" As Trump Spoke. ABC World News Tonight (8/16, lead story, 5:30, Muir) reported last night that "many" are "studying...Chief of Staff...Kelly's face, appearing to wince as...Trump" made his remarks Tuesday. ABC further asked, "Was the White House blindsided on this?" The Washington Post (8/16, Parker, Costa) says the latest "uproar – which has consumed not only the White House but the Republican Party – left Kelly deeply frustrated and dismayed just over two weeks into his job, said people familiar with his thinking."

Pence: "I Stand With The President." The CBS Evening News (8/16, lead story, 2:30, Brennan) said "the President's comments...drew sharp rebukes from fellow Republicans," but Vice President Pence was shown saying, "And I stand with the President, and I stand by those words. ... The strength of the United States of America is always strongest as the President has said so eloquently, when we are united around our shared values. And so it will always be." NBC Nightly News (8/16, lead story, 3:20, Holt) reported that Trump's "surrogates" remained "largely silent" yesterday – with the exception of Pence. To the AP (8/16, Colvin), however, Pence "skirted questions about...Trump's comments voicing sympathy for Charlottesville protesters, but said he stands with the president nonetheless."

Cohn "Visibly Dismayed," "Disgusted"; White House Staff "Wrestling With How To Respond." The CBS Evening News (8/16, lead story, 2:30, Brennan) reported that "top aide Gary Cohn was visibly dismayed...by the President's comments, but he has no plans to resign." Politico (8/16, Dawsey), meanwhile, reports that "White House aides are wrestling with how to respond to...Trump's defiant news conference," though "no aides had yet threatened to resign." Cohn "was particularly displeased, according to people familiar with the matter."

The New York Times (8/16, Shear) focuses on "Jewish members of...Trump's administration," who "remained largely silent Wednesday after Mr. Trump came to the defense of nationalist and right-wing protesters...who had chanted anti-Semitic slogans and demeaned the president's Jewish son-in-law." Cohn "was described by several people close to him as 'disgusted' and 'deeply upset' by the president's remarks."

Rep. Marc Veasey said on CNN's Situation Room (8/16), "What I think is that White House staff, they need to speak up. I mean, you have African Americans that work for him – Omarosa. You have, including his son-in-law, Jewish Americans that work for him. And I do think that their silence really speaks volumes. And by not saying anything at all, they absolutely are enabling him. And to me, they need to really step up and the reason I say that...is because...Trump right now, he is on a path that is going to make his presidency and his legacy perhaps the worst on race relations since Reconstruction ended."

Bannon Dismisses "Fringe Element," Welcomes Democratic Focus On "Identity Politics." Robert Kuttner of the American Prospect (8/16) writes that during a telephone conversation that Steve Bannon initiated, Bannon "dismissed the far right as irrelevant and sidestepped his own role in cultivating it." Bannon said, "Ethno-nationalism – it's losers. It's a fringe element. I think the media plays it up too much, and we gotta help crush it, you know, uh, help crush it more." Bannon added, "The Democrats, the longer they talk about identity politics, I got 'em. I want them to talk about racism every day. If the left is focused on race and identity, and we go with economic nationalism, we can crush the Democrats."

USA Today (8/16, Cummings) reports that in the interview, Bannon "seemed thrilled that Trump's opponents are talking so much about race." In a piece consisting primarily of large excerpts from the American Prospect piece, Breitbart (8/16, Pollak) writes that Bannon said he "welcomed the Democrats' obsession with the Charlottesville incident, and identity politics in general." The New York Post (8/16, Perez) has a report headlined "Bannon Calls White Nationalists 'A Collection Of Clowns.'"

Jonathan Swan of Axios (8/17) writes, "Bannon's White House colleagues can't believe what they're reading tonight – and here's the twist: neither can Bannon." Bannon "has told associates he never intended to do an 'interview' with an editor at the American Prospect, a left-wing publication," but that he simply called Kuttner to discuss a recent piece on China. Bannon "never thought that the journalist might take his (very newsworthy) comments and turn them into a story."

The New York Times (8/16, Shear, Thrusch, Haberman) reports that "one aide who felt energized by the president's actions was...Bannon," whose "future in the White House remains uncertain" and "has been encouraging Mr. Trump to remain defiant." The Times adds that "two White House officials who have been trying to moderate the president's position suggested that Mr. Bannon was using the crisis as a way to get back in the good graces of the president."

Trump Ends Advisory Councils As CEOs Quit Them; Breitbart Sees "Blow" To Cohn's Influence.

ABC World News Tonight (8/16, lead story, 5:30, Muir) reported that Trump's comments Tuesday "did not sit well with many CEOs on the President's business advisory councils." After a number of "CEOs called the White House to inform the President of their decision and he quickly put out this tweet: 'Rather than putting pressure on the business people of the manufacturing council & strategy & policy forum, I am ending both. Thank you all!'" The CBS Evening News (8/16, lead story, 2:30, Brennan) noted that "by the time the President tweeted he was disbanding his business advisory councils, almost a dozen members, including the heads of GE, Campbell Soup, and 3M, had resigned." On NBC Nightly News (8/16, lead story, 3:20, Holt), Kristen Welker said the President faced "a full scale rebellion by the very CEOs he once called colleagues," in what amounted to "a punch in the gut to Mr. Trump, a billionaire former CEO."

The Los Angeles Times (8/16, Lien) notes that the two councils Trump dissolved are "the White House's economic advisory council and manufacturing council – panels that consisted of business leaders from firms such as BlackRock, JPMorgan Chase, IBM and PepsiCo." To Politico (8/16, Diamond), "the president who promised business leaders would 'thrive' under his administration cut ties Wednesday with three dozen of America's top CEOs."

The New York Times (8/16, Gelles, Thomas, Kelly) reports "the quick sequence began late Wednesday morning when Stephen A. Schwarzman, the chief executive of the Blackstone Group and one of Mr. Trump's closest confidants in the business community, organized a conference call for members of the president's Strategic and Policy Forum." The Times adds that "after a discussion among a dozen prominent C.E.O.s, the decision was made to abandon the group altogether, said people with knowledge of details of the call." U.S. News & World Report (8/16, Soergel), Reuters (8/16, Shepardson, Erman), Bloomberg News (8/16, Tracer, Townsend), the Washington Times (8/16, Boyer), Wall Street Journal (8/16, Glazer, Krouse), and USA Today (8/16, Yu), among other news outlets, run similar stories this morning.

Breitbart (8/16, Boyle), meanwhile, reported "the move is a significant blow to the influence of Cohn in the White House," as "his level of control in the White House is dwindling by the minute." To Breitbart, "the organizational structure that empowered American CEOs – and not small business leaders – was always fraught with potential peril if and when something like this came up," but "Cohn and Trump son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner pushed the president forward in advising the course of action that included the creation of these institutions full of corporatists and globalists."

Andrew Ross Sorkin said on CNBC's Closing Bell (8/16), "The President has said he is disbanding these groups, but let there be no doubt, both of these groups decided to disband en masse themselves. A resignation of dozens at this point, deciding that it wasn't because of embarrassment about their own roles, but in part, outrage and fury over President Trump's comments over the past several days."

Yahoo News and Finance anchor Bianna Golodryga said on CNN's Situation Room (8/16), "The President can say that he disbanded them, but these CEOs were breaking up with him way beforehand, especially over the last 48 hours. You know, these councils are traditionally prestigious and they're not really risky. ... I think regardless of what a lot of CEOs personally felt about this President, they thought he would be offering more business-friendly priorities and policies like deregulation, tax reform, what have you. They did not think they would have to be answering questions from reporters as to whether or not they support Nazis and white supremacists."

VA Chief Defends Trump, Says It's A "Dishonor" To Have Neo-Nazis "Go Unchallenged." The CBS Evening News (8/16, lead story, 2:30, Brennan) reported VA Secretary Shulkin "said he's...staying" in his post, "but it is a 'dishonor' to all veterans to let Nazis 'go unchallenged.'" The Hill (8/16, Greenwood) notes that "in a short press briefing in Bedminster, N.J., Shulkin denounced white supremacists and hate groups that fed the violence," saying "their ideology and behavior is an 'affront to American ideals.'" The Washington Times (8/16, Boyer) notes Shulkin also said Trump "has done a good job of speaking for himself," and that "he's denounced bigotry, hatred, violence, Nazis, white supremacists. ... I think he has been very clear that this was not acceptable to him, that he has denounced them."

The Washington Post (8/16, Lamothe) reports that "Shulkin, who served in the Obama administration and was kept on under Trump, said that the president can speak for himself," but also "offered his own thoughts," saying, "I do feel like as an American and as a member of the Cabinet, that I can speak for my own personal opinions on this, and I am outraged by the behavior that I have seen with the Nazis and the white supremacists. I am outraged on the use of violence – to be able to put one's ideals, and force them upon others."

WPost Offers Advice To Top Trump Officials. In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/16) ponders whether Kelly, Secretary of State Tillerson, Defense Secretary Mattis "or national security adviser H.R. McMaster" should resign. To the Post, "each of these men must consider, every day, whether they are maximizing whatever leverage they have for the good of the country, and whether their accomplishments justify whatever 'normalizing' benefit their presence conveys on their chief executive. As long as they can answer yes, we think they should be thanked, not condemned."

NBC News Features "White Nationalist" Praising Trump. On NBC Nightly News (8/16, story 5, 2:15), Lester Holt said that after Trump's remarks on Charlottesville, "white supremacists have come out of the shadows to cheer his message, viewing it as a validation of their own racist beliefs, including some...in California." NBC's Jacob Soboroff said that "white nationalist William Johnson," who lives in Los Angeles, "was elated with...Trump's press conference." After Trump was shown saying, "I think there's blame on both sides," Johnson said, "That's an honest man saying what he believes in his heart." Asked if he thinks "Trump saying things like that will ultimately bring America closer to your goal of a white ethno-state," Johnson replied, "We have a festering racial problem. ... I think the only solution is separation, but there may be another solution, and Donald Trump is going to...help us overcome the racial divide. I think that he will encourage fair-minded, deep-thinking people to realize that separation is the only way we can achieve racial goals."

In a follow-up segment on NBC Nightly News (8/16, story 6, 1:10, Holt), Holt asked Tom Brokaw, "who covered the civil rights movement of the 1960s," to share "what lessons can we learn from that experience." Brokaw said, "I thought the most dramatic example that still resonates with me was in the 1960s when Dr. Martin Luther King launched the nonviolent movement. And it was a strong moral cause that advanced his cause and alerted the country to the kinds of absolutely unacceptable things that we should not be tolerating anymore."

CBS News Highlights Scalise Tweet Decrying "White Supremacy And All Forms Of Hatred." The CBS Evening News (8/16, story 6, 0:25, Mason) reported, "Following President Trump's news conference yesterday, Louisiana Congressman Steve Scalise tweeted, 'We must defeat white supremacy and all forms of hatred.' The House Republican whip was critically wounded in June when a gunman opened fire on GOP lawmakers practicing for a congressional baseball game." The report doesn't mention that the alleged shooter was a progressive supporter of Sen. Bernie Sanders.

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Lawyer's Email "Echoed Secessionist Civil War Propaganda." The New York Times (8/16, Schmidt, Apuzzo) reports that "Trump's personal lawyer on Wednesday forwarded an email to conservative journalists, government officials and friends that echoed secessionist Civil War propaganda and declared that the group Black Lives Matter 'has been totally infiltrated by terrorist groups.'" The Times adds that "the email forwarded by John Dowd, who is leading the president's legal team, painted the Confederate general Robert E. Lee in glowing terms and equated the South's rebellion to that of the American Revolution against England."

Politico Transcript Erroneously Had Trump Calling White Supremacists, Alt-Right "Us." BuzzFeed (8/15, Koerner) reports that Politico's transcript of President Trump's Tuesday press conference said he referred to white supremacists and the alt-right "as 'us' – but a review of the audio doesn't back that up." The Federal News Service transcript quotes Trump as saying, "OK, what about the alt-left that came charging them? Excuse me. What about the alt-left that came charging at the – as you say, the alt-right? Do they have any semblance of guilt?" The White House's official transcript quotes Trump as saying, "Okay, what about the alt-left that came charging at – excuse me, what about the alt-left that came charging at the, as you say, the alt-right? Do they have any semblance of guilt?" Politico's version, however, reads, "Okay, what about the alt-left that came charging at us – excuse me – what about the alt-left that came charging at the, as you say, the alt right? Do they have any semblance of guilt?" Townhall (8/16, Vespa) also reports on the Politico transcript, citing the BuzzFeed report.

AP Offers "Some Facts About The Antifa Movement." The AP (8/16, Baumann, Rankin) runs a piece offering "some facts about the antifa movement and those who protested the [Charlottesville] rally." The AP says, "According to websites and Facebook posts, people who affiliate with the term take a militant approach against fascism and white nationalism that doesn't necessarily shy away from violence." Regarding the Charlottesville rally, the AP says, "Both sides did engage in violence Saturday. ... In the mass of hundreds of people, it was not always possible to see who was instigating the fights."

Writing for the Daily Caller (8/16), Peter Hasson said that members of antifa "aren't interested in protecting America's system of government, according to their own statements – they're interested in destroying it." For example, Hasson quoted "a female leader for Refuse Fascism" as saying not long after Trump was inaugurated, "We need to make this country ungovernable. We need to do what the German people should have done when Hitler was elected."

Breitbart: Harvard/MIT Study Concludes Site Is Not "Alt-Right." Breitbart (8/16, Lee) reports under the headline "Harvard/MIT Study: 'Breitbart Is NOT Alt-Right'" that a New York Times Magazine piece on the website features a comment from Harvard's Yochai Benkler, who studied Breitbart content along with colleagues from both Harvard and MIT. He said, "Breitbart is not talking about these issues in the same way you would find on the extreme right. They don't use the same language you find on sites like VDARE and The Daily Stormer. ... Breitbart is not the alt-right."

AP Will Not Use Term "Alt-Right." The Taegan Goddard's Political Wire (8/16, Goddard) cites new guidance from the AP which says that "we have taken the position that the term 'alt-right' should be avoided because it is meant as a euphemism to disguise racist aims. So use it only when quoting someone or when describing what the movement says about itself."

UN Secretary General Offers "Veiled But Unmistakable Rebuke" Of Trump. In what the Washington Post (8/16, Gearan) calls "a veiled but unmistakable rebuke to President Trump," UN Secretary General António Guterres said Wednesday that "the world must reject intolerance and speak up against 'irrationality.'" Asked about Trump's response to the violence in Charlottesville, Guterres "said he does not comment on individual leaders," but "his criticism of Trump was nonetheless plain." Guterres said, "Racism, xenophobia, anti-Semitism or Islamophobia are . . . poisoning our societies. ... And it is absolutely essential for us all to stand up against them everywhere and every time." While Guterres "did not mention Trump by name in answering direct questions about the U.S. president," he "made clear he sees dangers from the brand of nationalism and populism that fueled Trump's election as well as political changes elsewhere."

Trump Faces "Backlash" From World Leaders. In a separate story, the Washington Post (8/16, Wang) reports on a "wave of backlash from world leaders" over Trump's comments. British Prime Minister Theresa May "didn't call Trump out by name," but "said in a statement Wednesday there was 'no equivalence' between the two sides." The European Commission "mentioned neither Trump nor Charlottesville," but said in a tweet Wednesday morning, "We reject and condemn all forms and manifestations of racism and xenophobia." In "more explicit" criticism, Germany Justice Minister Heiko Maas said, "It is unbearable how Trump is now glossing over the violence of the right-wing hordes from Charlottesville. ... No one should trivialize anti-Semitism and racism by neo-Nazis." Also, Martin Schulz, leader of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, said, "Nazis must be confronted decisively. ... What Trump is doing is highly incendiary. Those who downplay violence and hate betray the values of the West!"

Milbank Decries "Fox & Friends" For Defending Trump. In his Washington Post (8/16) column, Dana Milbank says that amid the fallout over his remarks on Charlottesville, Trump "was in need of a friend. And that's what 'Fox & Friends' is for." Milbank says that he watched "all three hours of 'Fox & Friends'" on Wednesday, and that the hosts sought to defend the President. Milbank adds, "It was obscene and unthinkable that" Trump "let white supremacists know it's okay to hold and act on their hateful views. In defending Trump, Fox is further encouraging these racists to crawl out from under their rocks and preach in the open."

WPost's Sullivan: Media Shouldn't "Be Falsely Evenhanded" In Covering Trump. In her Washington Post (8/16, Sullivan) column, Margaret Sullivan writes, "During the 2016 presidential campaign, the national news media's misguided sense of fairness helped equate the serious flaws of Hillary Clinton with the disqualifying evils of Donald Trump." Sullivan says, "Elected with the help of false equivalency, Trump is now creating some of his own" with his remarks on Charlottesville. Sullivan says, "With the issue of false equivalency front and center once again, a profound question arises for journalists: What does true fairness look like in covering this president?" After highlighting some harsh coverage of Trump, Sullivan adds, "In dealing with the false-equivalency president they helped to get elected, the news media may have learned something. The best way to be fair is not to be falsely evenhanded, giving equal weight to unequal sides. It's to push for the truth, and tell it both accurately and powerfully."

Three House Democrats Seek Formal Censure Of Trump.

McClatchy (8/16, Clark) reports, "House Democrats are introducing a formal resolution" to censure President Trump "for saying that 'both sides' are to blame" for the violence in Charlottesville. So far, "just three Democrats have signed on" to the measure – Reps. Pramila Jayapal (D-WA), Jerrold Nadler (D-NY), and Bonnie Watson Coleman (D-NJ) – and it "is unlikely to see traction in the GOP-led House." The Hill (8/16, Marcos) reports that the measure "specifically condemns Trump for employing chief strategist Stephen Bannon and national security aide Sebastian Gorka in the White House for their 'ties to white supremacist movements.'"

The Washington Post (8/16, Debonis) reports that the move "reflects a growing frustration among Democratic lawmakers and activists with the seemingly never-ending cycle of Trump controversies." The Washington Times (8/16, Dinan) reports, "Censure of a president is rare. The Senate lists just one occasion, in 1834, when Andrew Jackson drew the ire of lawmakers." The New York Daily News (8/16, Blain) also reports.

USA Today (8/16) editorializes that Republicans "should join together with Democrats to censure Trump. Censure is not impeachment. Whether that's appropriate will likely depend on the outcome" of the Russia investigation. But censure "would constitute a forceful way of rebuking the White House and condemning the vile views of a bigoted fringe, even as those people's right to free speech and peaceful protest is protected under the First Amendment."

The Charlotte \(NC\) Observer (8/16) editorializes, "It's time for Republicans to make a forceful and permanent break from the accidental president. ... General boorishness, bad-mouthing war heroes, mocking the handicapped: Republicans calculated that these were tolerable. Now they have a new calculation that should not be one at all: Will they stand with a man who stands with neo-Nazis and white supremacists?" The Observer says that Republicans should "show voters they do not share Trump's views on exclusion by joining Democrats in a proposed censure."

Washington Post (8/16) conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin writes that "every Republican must sign a censure" of Trump: "They lifted this president to office and now they must disown him. ... Any Republican not willing to sign on should be voted out. Period." The Hill (8/16) columnist Brent Budowsky also backs censure "for conduct unfit for the American presidency and in violation of the principles of our country."

Ellison: Trump "Has Some Level Of Sympathy" For "Neo-Nazis And Klan Members." The Washington Examiner (8/16, Langille) reports, "Democratic National Committee Vice Chairman Rep. Keith Ellison says he sees President Trump's reluctance to denounce white supremacy as evidence he has sympathy for them." Ellison told the Washington Post, "I have to come to a conclusion, based on all of the behavior I've seen out of Donald Trump, that the reason he is reluctant to denounce white supremacy and neo-Nazis and Klan members is because he has some level of sympathy for them."

Perez: RNC Chair Has "Responsibility" To Hold White Supremacists Accountable. USA Today (8/16, Przybyla) reports that DNC Chairman Tom Perez, in a Wednesday letter to his Republican National Committee counterpart Ronna Romney McDaniel, wrote, "There is no denying that these white supremacists, neo-Nazis, and the Ku Klux Klan have made their home in this president's Republican Party. As chairwoman, you bear a responsibility not just to reject hateful ideology generally, but to hold accountable the individuals in your party who have allowed that ideology to flourish."

Memorial Held For Woman Killed In Charlottesville Protest.

A memorial service was held Wednesday for Heather Heyer, who was killed when a drive plowed his car into a group of demonstrators in Charlottesville last weekend. The CBS Evening News (8/16, story 2, 1:50, Mason) says Heyer was "killed in an act of domestic terrorism." CBS (Begnaud) added that it was "largely peaceful" as "about 1,500 people filed into the Paramount Theater" for the service. While supporters outside "offered protection against any white supremacist who might show up and try to cause trouble...there ended up being no trouble." ABC World News Tonight (8/16, story 2, 2:55, Pilgrim) reported that Heather's mother Susan Bro offered “defiance,” telling those gathered, “They tried to kill my child to shut her up. Well, guess what? You just magnified her.” She also issued “a call to action,” saying, “Say to yourself, what can I do to make a difference? And that’s how you’re going to make my child’s death worthwhile. I’d rather have my child, but by golly, if I have to give her up, we’re going to make it count.” The Washington Post (8/16, Silverman, Hernández, Hendrix) says Bro’s comments sparked “a cheering ovation” from the crowd that included Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe and Sen. Tim Kaine.

The New York Times (8/16, Spencer, Dickerson) reports that Heyer was remembered “for a quality that friends and family described as her most frustrating, and most admired – a passion for fighting injustice that was so relentless, it often spilled into her work and personal life.” Friends and family members “described her convictions as so intense that they prompted tearful outbursts at work, collapsed relationships and argumentative dinners at home, from which her father would occasionally escape to his car to play video games and avoid being lectured.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/16) says Heyer’s “principles and resolve were incontrovertible proof of her integrity – far more proof than a morally compromised president could possibly confer by his words.” Heyer, the Post adds, “is in that tradition of ordinary Americans of all races and creeds who perceived injustice clearly and, in standing up to it, lost their lives.”

911 Transcripts Show Accused Driver “Terrorizing” His Mother. ABC World News Tonight (8/16, story 3, 1:35, Muir) reported that authorities have released records of 911 calls showing the accused driver of the car that killed Heyer, James Alex Fields’, “alleged treatment of his own mother.” ABC (Thomas) added that the transcripts portray Fields, who is accused of driving his car into a crowd of demonstrators in Charlottesville, killing one person and injuring 19 others, “terrorizing his wheelchair-bound mother three times from 2010 to 2011.”

USA Today Analysis: Trump Comments May Have Prejudiced Case Against Fields. USA Today (8/16, Johnson) reports that Trump “may have unwittingly prejudiced the legal case” against James Alex Fields, who is accused of slamming a car in to a group of demonstrators last weekend in Charlottesville, by calling him “a murderer” during his “rollicking press conference” on Tuesday. Trump, USA Today adds, “likely made it harder to seat an impartial jury, legal analysts said, and offered his defense lawyers an opportunity to argue the case should be moved out of Charlottesville.”

Charlottesville Synagogue Felt “Under Siege” During Demonstrations. NBC Nightly News (8/16, story 4, 2:05, Holt) reported that rabbis say a Charlottesville synagogue “was under siege” Saturday with “dozens of people inside...afraid to leave while outside, armed men and marching neo-Nazis invoked painful echoes of the past.” Alan Zimmerman, President of Charlottesville’s Beth Israel congregation: “It was indescribable. I never, for a minute, ever thought in my life that I would see that on the streets of America. This is our sanctuary. ... If I’d taken a camera and filmed that in black and white, it would look to people like newsreels from 1933 in Germany. Even now just unbelievable.” NBC (Gutierrez) added, “Zimmerman told us he saw parades of Nazis walking by, some heckling the temple.”

WSJournal Analysis: Charlottesville Shows White Nationalist Movement Is Unifying. The Wall Street Journal (8/16, Frosch, McWhirter, Kesling) cites the white nationalist rally in Charlottesville as evidence that the movement is unifying, aided by an online rebranding that has enabled groups to work together, new young leadership that has helped heal longstanding divisions, and President Trump’s comments on immigrants, Muslims and the media bias, which have energized the groups.

Silicon Valley Steps Up Efforts Against White Supremacy. The Washington Post (8/16, Jan, Dwoskin) reports in a front-page story that Silicon Valley has “significantly escalated its war on white supremacy,” curtailing “the ability of hate groups to raise money online, removing them from Internet search engines, and preventing some sites from registering at all.” In a reversal of their “hands-off approach about content supported by their services,” tech companies including Google, GoDaddy, and PayPal are “making it much more difficult for ‘alt-right’ organizations to reach mass audiences.” But the moves are “heightening concerns over how tech companies are becoming the arbiters of free speech in America,” and “right-wing technologists are building parallel digital services that cater to their own movement” in response.

Colleges Prepare For Fall Protests. The New York Times (8/16, Goldstein) reports that college administrators and law enforcement officials across the country “are bracing for a wild fall of protests as their campuses become battlegrounds for society’s violent fringes.” The Times cites examples of such preparations and notes that due to the First Amendment, “colleges and universities that rely on public funding have few legal options in preventing offensive lectures from taking place, especially if a student group is affiliated with the event” and even “the violence in Charlottesville is not likely to help universities make a case in court.”

SPLC Identifies 1,500 Confederate Monuments In US. The CBS Evening News (8/16, story 3, 2:10, Mason) reported that while the Southern Poverty Law Center “found some 1,500 Confederate memorials across the country, including 718 statues and monuments, and 10 US military bases named after Confederate officers,” the list “has gotten a little smaller” as cities and states have moved to take them down. The Wall Street Journal (8/16, Calvert, Kamp) reports that the city of Baltimore removed several Confederate monuments in an unannounced pre-dawn operation Wednesday.

A New York Times (8/16) editorial praises the push to remove Confederate monuments, saying the “racist rage in Virginia and President Trump’s shamefully sympathetic response have prompted local and state politicians to encourage community peace by weighing the future of Confederate monuments civilly and unapologetically, even if the president has not.” Chicago Pastor Calls For Removal Of Washington Statue, Renaming Of Park. The Washington Times (8/16, Ernst) reports that in the wake of Trump’s question to reporters “about the possibility of tearing down historical monuments,” Bishop James E. Dukes of Chicago’s Liberation Christian Center has called on Mayor Rahm Emanuel “to rename Washington Park and remove a statue of the first U.S. president over his ties to slavery.” Dukes wrote on Facebook, “It’s time. Please read my letter to Mayor Rahm Emanuel and The Chicago Park District. ... I’m calling on them to change the names of Washington and Jackson Park. Slave owners do not deserve the honor of our children playing in parks named after them. There is no way a Native American Community would allow a General Custer Park or a Jewish Community allow a Gestapo Park in their community.”

Capitol Has More Statues Of Confederates Than Black People. The Washington Post (8/16, Ingraham) reports that in the US Capitol’s National Statuary Hall Collection “there are three times as many statues of Confederate soldiers and politicians as there are statues of black people in the entire Capitol complex, according to records maintained by the Architect of the Capitol.”

Cuomo Asks Army Secretary To Change Names Of Streets Named After Southern Generals. The New York Times (8/16, Nir, Otterman) reports that Gov. Andrew Cuomo (D-NY) on Wednesday “asked the acting secretary of the Army to change the names of two streets at the Fort Hamilton Army base in Brooklyn that are named after Southern generals.” The Times says Fort Hamilton “has streets named after [Gen. Robert E.] Lee and Gen. Thomas Jonathan ‘Stonewall’ Jackson, both of whom served there decades before the Civil War.” In a letter to acting Army Secretary Ryan McCarthy, Cuomo “singled out President Trump for his remarks this week in which he blamed both the white nationalists and counterprotesters for the violence in Charlottesville,” Virginia, writing, “Renaming these streets will send a clear message that in New York, we stand against intolerance and racism, whether it be insidious and hidden or obvious and intentional.” Cuomo, who faces reelection next year, is considered a potential 2020 presidential candidate. The Wall Street Journal (8/16, Alfaro) also reports on the story.

White House Says Government Will Make August ACA Payments To Insurers.

A White House official said Wednesday that the government will make this month’s payments to insurers under the ACA, the AP (8/16, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports. While President Trump “has repeatedly threatened to end the payments,” a White House spokesman who “insist[ed] on anonymity to discuss the decision ahead of the official announcement,” said “the August payment will be made.”

WSJournal: CBO Shows Insurance Market Won’t Collapse If ACA Subsidies End. Citing this week’s report from the CBO, the Wall Street Journal (8/16) argues in an editorial that congressional Republicans should not move quickly to make a deal with Democrats that would preserve the ACA’s subsidies for insurers. The Journal says the insurance market will not collapse if the subsidies end and the CBO provided no evidence that allowing the subsidies to continue will stop the law’s move toward higher costs and fewer choices.

Brady Would Accept Tax Code Overhaul That Raises Deficit To Jump-Start Economy.

The Washington Times (8/16, Sherfinski) reports that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady “said Wednesday that he’s willing to stomach a tax code overhaul that deepens the federal deficit in order to jump-start the economy.” Speaking at the Reagan Ranch Center in California, Brady said that this “could mean expanding on existing deductions for charitable giving and ‘unprecedented’ capital expensing for businesses.” Brady “said eventually the package must reach balance, but in the near term he’s looking for ‘the greatest growth for the greatest number of years.’”

Report: Reducing Regulations Could Spur Economic Growth.

The Washington Free Beacon (8/16, Meyer) reports that a new Competitive Enterprise Institute report found that reducing government regulatory authority “could boost economic growth and increase job creation.” The “Shrinking Government Bureaucracy” report provides “detailed steps” for the Administration and Congress to address regulations – particularly, cuts to the EPA, partial privatization of Commerce Department activities, greater controls over the FDIC, the transfer of Consumer Financial Protection Bureau authority to the Federal Trade Commission, a reduction of SEC authority, and the elimination of the National Labor Relations Board.

Pruitt Criticizes “False Narrative” On “Leaked” NYTimes Climate Report.

The Daily Caller (8/16, White) reports EPA chief Scott Pruitt has criticized a recent National Climate Assessment (NCA) report “leaked to The New York Times” for, in the Caller’s words, allegedly “stoking...fears that President Donald Trump might dismiss findings that supposedly show man-made global warming is already affecting the environment.” Pruitt said, “The report doesn’t impact the process. It doesn’t impact the responsibilities that we are taking already with respect to CO2. And so I think some of those are simply legend and false narrative that people try to put on the marketplace.” The Times reportedly quoted “scientists who feared ‘the Trump administration could change or suppress the report’” and “suggested skeptics were ‘equally worried that the draft report, as well as the larger NCA, will be publicly released,’” despite reports that “several of the scientists who worked on the report wrote on Twitter that the NCA has been public since January.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Exporting Chaos To Venezuela.” In an editorial, the New York Times (8/17) writes, “Having scared a lot of people last week with his bombast over North Korea, causing jitters about nuclear war, he threatened on Friday to use force to quell chaos in Venezuela. That threat poured fuel on the worsening conflict between President Nicolás Maduro and his opponents. It also unsettled people across Latin America.” The Times warns that the “precipitous decline of Venezuela is not just a tragedy for its people, but a threat to regional stability,” and Trump should “continue to toughen sanctions, but any lasting solution will be achieved only in concert with regional leaders.”

“After Racist Rage, Statues Fall Quietly.” A New York Times (8/16) editorial praises the push to remove Confederate monuments, saying the “racist rage in Virginia and President Trump’s shamefully sympathetic response have prompted local and state politicians to encourage community peace by weighing the future of Confederate monuments civilly and unapologetically, even if the president has not.”

Washington Post.

“Should The President’s Advisers Stay Or Resign?” The Washington Post (8/16) speaks in an editorial of President Trump’s “stunning defense of white supremacist marchers.”

“The US Cannot Abandon Afghanistan Now.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/16) writes that President Trump’s concerns about continuing the United States’ lengthy involvement in Afghanistan are “entirely understandable,” but adds that the President should “listen to the generals” that advise deploying an additional 3,000 to 5,000 troops to the country to help block the Taliban’s momentum. The Post argues that US withdrawal “would accelerate” the Taliban’s gains and potentially again provide a “sanctuary” for extremists. The Post concludes that the President should choose a strategy “with a clear, limited goal: shore up the Afghan government, help it gain greater legitimacy and strengthen its security forces.”

“Remember Heather Heyer.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/16) praises Heather Heyer, who was killed when a driver plowed his car into a group of demonstrators in Charlottesville, saying her “principles and resolve were incontrovertible proof of her integrity – far more proof than a morally compromised president could possibly confer by his words.” Heyer, the Post adds, “is in that tradition of ordinary Americans of all races and creeds who perceived injustice clearly and, in standing up to it, lost their lives.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Coal Makes A Comeback.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/16) writes that despite the Obama Administration’s many efforts to reduce coal consumption and production through regulation, the Trump Administration has spurred coal production and exports through regulatory reform, such as repealing the steam rule, dismantling the power, ash, and methane rules, reopening coal leases, and rescinding the royalty revaluation. The Journal notes that the largest increase in coal exports is to countries with supposedly better climate records, and concludes that the last three quarters of data – while not necessarily indicative of a long-term trend – offer optimistic news to coal states.

“Blame-Sharing On ObamaCare.” Citing this week’s report from the CBO, the Wall Street Journal (8/16) argues in an editorial that congressional Republicans should not move quickly to make a deal with Democrats that would preserve the ACA’s subsidies for insurers. The Journal says the insurance market will not collapse if the subsidies end and the CBO provided no evidence that allowing the subsidies to continue will stop the law’s move toward higher costs and fewer choices.

“Britain’s Brexit Flights Of Fancy.” A Wall Street Journal (8/16) editorial welcomes Britain’s release of some specifics about its plans for the nation’s relationship with the EU after its departure. But the Journal says that as the two sides reveal their negotiating positions, it is becoming clear that an easy trade solution is unlikely.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Here we are enjoying a little bit of calm after a storm named Hurricane Donald ravaged much of the country yesterday. The effects are still being felt and talked about."

Stephen Colbert: "Yesterday afternoon, when he was supposed to be talking about highway infrastructure, Donald Trump drove America's moral leadership right through the guardrails by saying some of the people bearing torches with the Nazis were just good Joes."

James Corden: "Let's start off with some good news: Donald Trump did not have a press conference today."

James Corden: "Today, Donald Trump completely disbanded his manufacturing council after eight members quit in 48 hours. The way these CEOs are leaving Trump, you'd think they were married to him."

James Corden: "Forget creating new manufacturing jobs in this country. Trump can't even manufacture manufacturing councils."

James Corden: "The CEO of the company 3M also resigned, and when Donald Trump asked why, they said that 3M doesn't want to be associated with three ks."

James Corden: "Here's a photo of workers taking down the Robert E. Lee statue last night, and the horse is like, 'What did I do? Take him. Leave me. I love it here.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Yesterday, President Trump made a big press conference on the subject of infrastructure. And all he had to do was just stop right there."

Jimmy Fallon: "[President Trump] can't even get vacation right. Imagine coming back to the office: 'Hey, how was your two-week break?' 'It was good, I defended Nazis. What'd you do?'"

Seth Meyers: "The studio behind The Hunger Games movies announced that it will be opening a theme park in South Korea dedicated to the films. They're calling it North Korea."

Conan O'Brien: "As you probably all heard, North Korea has backed off its threat to launch a nuclear missile at Guam. That's good news. Be happy about that! So now, now the title of crazy tyrant most likely to destroy America returns to defending champion, Donald Trump!"

Conan O'Brien: "Today, President Trump dissolved his advisory council because a bunch of CEO's dropped out. Trump said they didn't take their jobs seriously. Trump then went back to golfing and re-tweeting memes while sitting on the toilet."

Conan O'Brien: "Last night, the city of Baltimore removed four statues of Confederate heroes. Or, as Fox News reported it, Baltimore liberals force pigeons from their homes."

Conan O'Brien: "Check this out. Today, all McDonald's in Canada are offering 67-cent burgers. Isn't that cool? As if Americans need yet another reason to move to Canada."

Trump To Hear Recommendations For National Monuments.

The Hill (8/23, Cama) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke faces a Thursday deadline “to issue recommendations to the White House for any changes he thinks President Trump should make” to 21 national monument designations. The announcement will “close a chapter on the administration’s highly contentious review that has fueled significant opposition among conservationists and support by Republicans and industries like oil and agriculture that use federal land.” The article notes that “Zinke invited comments from the public on the review, the first time such a formal process has been taken for national monuments,” and “he also traveled to many of the monuments and met with opponents and supporters.”

Meanwhile, the AP (8/23, McCOMBS) reports that “conservation and tribal groups are airing TV ads, sending letters to President Donald Trump and creating parody websites in a last-minute blitz to stop Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke from downsizing or eliminating national monument areas that cover large swaths of land and water from Maine to California.” The AP says that “groups that want to see the areas reduced have been less vociferous, pleading their cases on social media and working behind the scenes to lobby federal officials.”

Also reporting are the AP (8/24), the New York Times (8/24, Turkewitz, Friedman), the Santa Fe New Mexican (8/23), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/23, Coleman), the Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/23, Brean), the Arizona Republic (8/23, Devoid), KSBW-TV Monterey \(CA\) Monterey, CA (8/23), KSTU-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (8/23, Edwards), WMEA-FM Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (8/23, Sharon), and KCRA-TV Sacramento \(CA\) Sacramento, CA (8/23).

Breathtaking Utah Monuments To Test Trump, Antiquities Act. The Washington Times (8/23, Wolfgang) reports that the Trump Administration is “considering pairing down” the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in Utah “in what environmentalists, Western land advocates and energy industry leaders agree is a key test of the century-old Antiquities Act, the 1906 law that gives presidents authority to create monuments.” Opponents of the designation say President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke have “a key opportunity to right a decades-old wrong that’s still harming local economies in the state, greatly depressing energy development and stands as a bright reminder of just how much unchecked power presidents wield under the Antiquities Act.”

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/24, McIntosh), Heidi McIntosh, a managing attorney and public lands expert at Earthjustice, writes that after President Clinton designated the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in 1996, “Utah politicians howled, in chorus with coal, oil and gas interests, that the monument would spell economic doom for the region.” But “instead, the communities in this rugged landscape thrived.” According to McIntosh, “they’ve grown sustainable economies and rejected the boom-and-bust fossil fuel industries that have long pillaged the West’s fragile landscapes.” In fact, “recreation from adventure-seekers, hikers, amateur geologists and families simply getting outdoors now funnels more than $12 billion into Utah’s economy.” McIntosh argues that “stripping the Grand Staircase of its monument protections, in whole or in part, and turning it over to mining and drilling outfits would be destructive and unlawful.” She concludes that “it should remain protected, not lost forever to pad the balance sheets of the fossil fuel industry for a few years.”

Review Unlikely To Spur Oil And Gas Rush. E&E Publishing (8/23) reports that while the Department of Interior’s review of 21 national monuments could create limited opportunities for oil and gas operators, it is unlikely that unlocking monument-designated land will offer widespread development. The Interior Department has not said whether fossil fuel development is a factor in assessing the monument designation, while the Western Energy Alliance said its support for the review is more about the harm future designations could cause than energy potential. However, environmental groups have raised concerns that the review is about expanding drilling opportunities. Chris Saeger, executive director of the Western Values Project, said, “It’s very clear that Secretary Zinke and this administration is willing to risk just about every national monument under review that has the potential for development at the behest of the fossil fuel industry.”

With Redraw Of Bears Ears, Grand Staircase Looming, Utah State University Study Says National Monuments Are Neither Economic ‘Boon Nor Bane’. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/23, Maffly) reports that a study by Utah State University economics professor Paul Jakus and his colleague

Sherzod Akhundjanov "concludes that landscape-scale monuments are 'neither a boon nor a bane.'" They "compared changes in per-capita income for Garfield and Kane with changes in Utah's other counties and four bordering counties in Arizona." The economists found "incomes rose in step with comparable counties, although they remain lower than the state as a whole."

Heller Touts Himself As Nevada's Foremost Republican Champion For Immigrants, Opposes Arpaio Pardon. The Nevada Independent (8/23, Rindels) reports that during a Wednesday appearance in Las Vegas before the Hispanics in Politics group, Sen. Dean Heller "touched on a pending review of national monuments." Heller said he planned to meet Wednesday with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "who has previously toured the monuments." Heller "said he supports monuments but questions whether they should be so large and believes the process should be handled through Congress and not executive order."

Interior, Agriculture Secretaries To Visit Montana Wildfire.

The AP (8/23) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue "plan to visit a Montana wildfire command post Thursday as dozens of blazes rage across the western U.S." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift "said Wednesday that the two members of President Donald Trump's cabinet will receive a briefing from firefighters battling a 50-square-mile blaze burning northwest of Missoula." According to Swift, "the visit was requested by the two Republicans on Montana's congressional delegation, Sen. Steve Daines and Rep. Greg Gianforte."

Also reporting are the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/23, Wright) and KTVH-TV Helena \(MT\) Helena, MT (8/23, Garrison).

Interior Dept. Agencies Could Move West, High-Level Official Says In Denver.

The Denver Business Journal (8/23, Proctor) reports that senior officials at the Interior Department "are 'actively looking' at moving 'some' of its agencies out of Washington, D.C., to the western states, a senior Interior official said at a Denver oil and gas forum."

Study: Public Lands Bolster State's Economy.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (8/23, Backus) reports that "Montana's wealth of public lands are an economic driver that has fueled state job and income growth enough to surpass the national average over the last 15 years, according to a study released Tuesday." The study, commissioned by the group Business for Montana's Outdoors, "showed the five fastest-growing counties in the state have the highest percentage of the lands protected for public use." The Headwaters Economics' report, "Business for Montana's Outdoors Five-year Report: Montana's Public Lands, Jobs, and the Economy" found "102,000 new jobs were created in Montana between 2000 and 2015."

Commentary: Interior's New Sage Grouse Protection Efforts Welcomed.

In his column for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (8/23, Mitchell), Thomas Mitchell welcomes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's order to implement "recommendations from a team that reviewed the previous administration's draconian land use restrictions under the guise of protecting greater sage grouse." According to Mitchell, the move by the Interior Department "should have a salutary impact on Nevada's economy."

Bureau Of Land Management

Critics: Utah Horse Meeting Is Secretive 'Slaughter Summit'.

The AP (8/23, Price, Sonner) reports that "swollen populations of federally-protected wild horses roaming 10 Western states are starved and damaging rangelands, Utah and U.S. government officials said at a conference Wednesday, an invitation-only meeting that mustang-protection advocates say is promoting the slaughter of an icon of the American West." According to the article, "members of Utah's congressional delegation and a U.S. Interior Department official speaking at the National Horse and Burro Summit in Salt Lake City all described an unsustainable population of wild horses that's nearly three times the size that federal officials think the rangeland can support." Meanwhile, "horse-protection groups who weren't allowed into the Utah State University-hosted event protested outside the downtown hotel where it was held, calling it a 'slaughter summit' that's kowtowing to livestock interests, promoting increased roundups and slaughter of wild horses from California to Colorado without public input."

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/24, Feral), Priscilla Feral, president of Friends of Animals, writes that "the main concern of a national wild horse summit should be the protection of wild horses and keeping them roaming free on western public lands, not manipulated by humans by roundups or forcibly drugging them with fertility control." However, Feral claims that "the truth is the organizers don't want the public to get wind of their pro-slaughter agenda and wild horse extinction plan that placates cattle and sheep ranchers."

Also reporting are the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/23, Feral), the Deseret \(UT\) News (8/23, O'Donoghue), and the Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/23, Botkin).

Prosecutor Vows 3rd Trial For 2 In Bundy Ranch Standoff Case.

The AP (8/23, Ritter) reports that acting Nevada US Attorney Steven Myhre "vowed a third trial Wednesday for two men accused of armed assault on a federal officer in a 2014 standoff that stopped a cattle roundup near the ranch of states' rights figure Cliven Bundy. 'There's no question about us proceeding forward. Just so the record's clear,'" Myhre told Chief US District Judge Gloria Navarro "a day after a jury acquitted two defendants of all 10 charges but failed to reach verdicts on four charges against Eric Parker and two counts against Scott Drexler. 'Raising a firearm against a federal law enforcement officer, or any law enforcement officer, is a crime,' Myhre declared as he lost a bid to keep the two men in federal custody until the next trial. 'That's why we brought (Parker) to trial and ... intend to try him a third time.'"

The Hill (8/23, Bowden) reports that Scott Drexler, Ricky Lovelien, Eric Parker and Steven Stewart "were found not guilty on multiple charges, including conspiracy, assault on a federal officer, extortion and weapons law violations related to the standoff with federal authorities." The jury "deadlocked on four charges for Parker and two against Drexler." The Hill adds that "the standoff occurred when federal authorities obtained a court order to seize Bundy's cattle in 2014 for decades of unpaid grazing fees that totaled more than $1 million," and "instead, hundreds of supporters converged from around the country to begin an armed standoff with authorities, which resulted in the government backing down."

The Washington Times (8/23, Richardson) reports that prosecutors "have argued that the defendants brandished weapons and placed BLM agents in fear of their lives after hundreds of Bundy supporters descended on the rural area after the agency, prompted by Cliven Bundy's refusal to pay grazing fees as a protest against the federal government, began impounding cattle." Defense attorneys "have countered that nobody was harmed in the standoff, described by the prosecution as a 'massive armed assault against federal law enforcement.'"

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Republic (8/23, Anglen).

Bishop Seeks Full Investigative Report On BLM Agent.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (8/23, O'Donoghue) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop "wants the names and other redacted information revealed in an ethics probe of the Bureau of Land Management law enforcement supervisory agent once in charge of Utah and Nevada." According to the article, "details of the more than yearlong probe by the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General were released in a February report, but key names were blacked out – including that of Dan Love, who the Deseret News confirmed was at the center of the probe." Bishop requested "the full report by no later than noon Thursday, wanting the information 'concerning serious misconduct by a senior Bureau of Land Management law enforcement manager.'"

Officials Propose Raising Fees For Red Rock Canyon Park.

The AP (8/23) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "considering raising the entrance fees for the Red Rock Canyon National Conservation Area in Las Vegas." BLM spokesman John Asselin, "if the fee increase is approved, drivers will be charged $15 per visit, motorcyclists will pay $10 and pedestrians and bicyclists will pay $5 by 2018." Asselin "says the additional money would be used to pay for trail maintenance, search-and-rescue costs, educational program and other upkeep costs." The BLM will "host three meetings to hear public comments on the proposal before sending it to a Resource Advisory Council for approval."

Remodeling Project For Prineville BLM;

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (8/24) reports that "beginning next week, the Bureau of Land Management will be remodeling its district office in Prineville, and closing its front desk to visitors in the process." The project will "include upgrades to make the office more energy efficient, and the existing carpet in the office will be replaced, according to a Bureau of Land Management news release." According to the article, "during the remodeling project, which is expected to take several months, the district office's front-desk staff will be stationed next door at the Ochoco National Forest headquarters, at 3160 NE 3rd St."

Additional coverage was provided by KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (8/23).

County Sets Protocols For Snake Transfers.

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (8/23, Gross) reports that Teton County commissioners "approved a set of guidelines to shape the transfer of 24 Bureau of Land Management parcels to Teton County ownership." Since federal lands are "involved a special bill must be introduced in Congress." According to the article, "once the county reaches agreements with the parcels' neighbors, it will request that U.S. Sen. John Barrasso draft federal legislation authorizing the transfer of a 'bundle' of five parcels."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Our View: Neil Creek Shows Salmon Projects Work.

In an editorial, the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (8/23) points to the stream restoration work that has "brought juvenile coho and chinook salmon back to Neil Creek" as an example of a project that works. Meanwhile, "irrigators who object to federal protections hope the Trump administration will agree to convene what is known as the 'God squad,' a committee with the power to grant exemptions to environmental regulations." The paper concludes: "It's unclear whether the God squad will be convened, or if it is, whether it will issue the ruling the irrigators want. But here in Southern Oregon, the Neil Creek project shows protection methods are working."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Judge: Bears Near US-Canada Border Merit Endangered Status.

The AP (8/23, Volz) reports that "animals and plants can be considered endangered even if they are not on the brink of extinction, a judge ruled in overturning the U.S. government's re-classification of a small population of grizzly bears living in the forests of Montana and Idaho near the Canada border." Tuesday's decision by U.S. District Judge Dana Christensen "said that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is prohibited from narrowing the definition an endangered species in its future decisions without explaining why it wants to make the policy change."

Reuters (8/23, Zuckerman) reports that the FWS "in 2014 determined the fewer than 50 grizzlies that roam the Cabinet Mountains and Yaak River drainage in the Northern Rockies were not in danger of extinction and did not warrant re-classifying as endangered or threatened under the federal Endangered Species Act." The Alliance for the Wild Rockies sued, "arguing the so-called Cabinet-Yaak population of grizzlies would go extinct unless U.S. wildlife managers tightened restrictions on logging, mining and other activities in bear habitat, all safeguards that would come with endangered status." The judge "sided with the conservation group in a ruling that found that the Fish and Wildlife Service had violated U.S. law in determining that the number of outsized, hump-shouldered bears in the Cabinet-Yaak ecosystem could reach a targeted recovery goal of 100 without added protections."

Also reporting are the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/23, Chaney) and Law360 (8/23, Sieniuc).

Litigation Reform Needed To Curb Lawsuits Undermining Conservation.

The Washington Free Beacon (8/23, Mooney) reports that "well-endowed environmental advocacy groups have exploited the 'perverse incentives' of federal laws with 'sue and settle' arrangements that enrich trial lawyers at the expense of taxpayers while undercutting successful conservation efforts, according to congressional figures and attorneys who favor litigation reform." The House Committee on Natural Resources held a hearing on July 17 on "five new bills aimed at reforming the ESA." A spokesperson for the House Natural Resources Committee said the "full slate of bills has not been finalized" but "various ESA reform measures will advance through committee in September."

Vern Buchanan Urges FWS To Create A Habitat For Florida Panthers.

The Sunshine State \(FL\) News (8/23, Derby) reports that Rep. Vern Buchanan "continued his efforts on behalf of the Florida panther this week, urging the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) to continue to protect that animal." In a letter to Greg Sheehan, the acting director of the FWS, "Buchanan called on the federal government to continue its current efforts instead of removing them from the endangered species list." Buchanan wrote, "I am writing to express my strong concern over reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service may weaken protections for Florida panthers under the Endangered Species Act. While it is heartening to see the Florida panther population increase to more than 200 in recent years, major hurdles remain to the full recovery of these majestic animals. That is why it is essential to maintain current federal protections to prevent one of the world's rarest cats from becoming extinct."

In an editorial, the Orlando \(FL\) Sentinel (8/23) supports continuing protections for the panthers. The paper argues that "instead of making things easier for big land owners, state and federal officials should boost efforts to save Florida's big cats and protect the open spaces where they live."

Grizzly Delisting Jeopardizes Population.

In an op-ed for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (8/23, Mader), Sharon Mader, the Grand Teton senior program manager for National Parks Conservation Association, explains why the National Parks Conservation Association plans to sue over the removal of the grizzly bear from the endangered species list. Mader argues that "the final decision fails to assure adequate protections for GYE grizzlies into the future."

Additional coverage of the grizzly bear decision was provided by the Planet Jackson Hole \(WY\) (8/23, Thomasma).

National Park Service

Trump Goes To Bat For NRA-Backed Bill By Stifling National Parks Director.

McClatchy (8/23, Leavenworth) reports that efforts by the National Park Service to express concerns about the impact of an NRA-backed bill that "would restrict" the NPS "from regulating hunting and fishing within park boundaries" have so far been halted, according to a leaked memo from the Department of Interior. NPS Acting Director Michael Reynolds had submitted to Interior's Legislative Counsel a June 30 memo "detailing his agency's objections to the draft legislation," and received a response from Interior "with sections of Reynolds' concerns crossed out." According to Jeff Ruch, executive director of Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility and the individual who obtained the leaked memo, agency officials "were told they could not repeat their concerns to Congress."

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Caller (8/23, Pearce), the Northwest Arkansas Democrat-Gazette (8/24, Leavenworth), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (8/23, Levitz) and the Wisconsin Gazette (8/23, Pacelle).

Parks Service Issues Permit For San Francisco Rally.

The AP (8/23, Elias) reports that "federal authorities on Wednesday issued a permit to a politically conservative group for a Saturday afternoon rally in San Francisco that local officials fear could turn violent." The National Park Service "had earlier told Patriot Prayer leader Joey Gibson that he had permission for the event, but withheld issuing the permit until the group agreed to several conditions, which include banning guns, tiki torches and other items that can be turned into weapons." The NPS "said denying Patriot Prayer a permit would violate the organization's free speech rights."

Also reporting are Fox News (8/23, Wallace), the San Francisco Chronicle (8/23, Alexander), the Independent \(UK\) (8/23, Francisco), KPIX-TV San Francisco San Francisco (8/23), and KPIX-TV San Francisco San Francisco (8/22, Caen).

Coming Soon To The National Mall: A Pro-Trump Protest, Juggalo Rally, Liberal March And Weddings – On The Same Day.

The Washington Post (8/23, Stein) reports that the National Park Service is “preparing for one of its busiest days of the year in the nation’s capital next month – a fall day when more than 30 events are expected to coincide, including a pro-Trump rally and a demonstration of Insane Clown Posse fans who have dubbed themselves Juggalos.” NPS spokesman Mike Litterst “said the agency is sifting through applications to determine where best to situate each group on Sept. 16.” The U.S. Park Police “wouldn’t discuss its security plan for the day, but said the agency is prepared to provide security while protecting First Amendment activities on federal property.”

Maine’s American Indian Tribes Getting $80K For Preservation.

The AP (8/24) reports that the National Park Service is “providing more than $80,000 to Maine’s American Indian tribes to help with historic preservation.” The tribal offices receiving the funds include those of the Aroostook Band of Micmacs, the Passamaquoddy Tribe and the Penobscot Nation.

Park Service Fixes Family Cemetery Within Flight 93 Memorial.

The AP (8/23) reports that the National Park Service has “restored a family cemetery that just happens to lie within the Flight 93 National Memorial, which honors those killed on the hijacked airliner that crashed in western Pennsylvania during the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.” The cemetery “belongs to the Sorber family, who buried relatives there from 1856 to 1892.” The NPS “says it has straightened headstones, landscaped and cleaned up the small cemetery, and fenced it in.” The NPS will “offer tours of the fixed up cemetery on Tuesday.”

Great Smoky Mountains Observation Tower Closes For Repairs.

The AP (8/23) reports that the Great Smoky Mountains National Park has “closed an observation tower at the park’s highest point for extensive renovations and repairs.” The Clingmans Dome Observation Tower “closed Wednesday and will remain closed through the end of the 2017 season for rehabilitation work, including repairing deteriorated areas on the tower’s columns and walls, repointing stone masonry and stabilizing support beams at the base of the ramp.”

National Park Awarded Student Conservation Association Medal.

The Peninsula \(WA\) Daily News (8/23) reports that “the Student Conservation Association has awarded Olympic National Park its Founder’s Medal.” According to park interim spokeswoman Penny Wagner, “the park is one of the original partners of the Student Conservation Association (SCA) and the only park to provide young SCA stewards with service opportunities in each of the past 60 years.” Margie Brown, chairwoman of the SCA board, “presented the medal to park Superintendent Sarah Creachbaum at park headquarters in Port Angeles on Aug. 12.”

LBJ State, National Parks To Honor 109th Birthday Of Former President.

The Fredericksburg \(TX\) Standard (8/23) reports that “in honor of the late president, the Lyndon B. Johnson National Historical Park and Lyndon B. Johnson State Park and Historic Site will celebrate the 109th anniversary of President Johnson’s birth on Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 26-27. “

Shark Bites Surfer’s Paddle Board In Shallow Water At Cape Cod Beach.

CBS News (8/23) reports that “a Cape Cod beach was closed until further notice after a shark bit a surfer’s paddle board Wednesday morning.” The National Park Service “in Cape Cod said on its Facebook page that the person on the board wasn’t bitten or injured.” The NPS “said it was investigating the incident alongside members of the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries and the Atlantic White Shark Conservancy.”

North Korea Hints It Is Developing More Advanced Ballistic Missiles.

The New York Times (8/23, Sang-Hun) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, when visiting the Chemical Material Institute of the Academy of Defense Science, ordered the production of more rocket engines and warheads, according to state news media. A photograph in the state-run newspaper Rodong Sinmun “showed what appeared to be a conceptual diagram for a missile called the Pukguksong-3,” which would be “a more powerful solid-fuel ballistic missile” than the Pukguksong-1. The missile “was identified as an ‘underwater strategic ballistic missile.’”

Reuters (8/23, Kim) reports, however, that the KCNA news agency’s report, which came soon after Secretary of State Tillerson “appeared to make a peace overture, welcoming what he called recent restraint shown by the reclusive North,” did not include “the traditionally robust threats against the United States.” The Wall Street Journal (8/23, Cheng) also covers this story.

Russian Diplomat Warns Against Further Sanctions Against North Korea. The AP (8/23) reports Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov warned against expanding sanctions against North Korea, saying, “the scope of sanctions already endorsed by the U.N. Security Council is such that any possibilities of expanding such measures have been exhausted.” He also “bemoaned Washington’s ‘absolute and boundless’ emphasis on developing new sanctions against Pyongyang” and called for the UN Security Council to focus on a political settlement.

Former Marshall Islands Foreign Minister Tony DeBrum Dies.

NPR (8/22, Shapiro) reports that “the former foreign minister for the Marshall Islands, Tony deBrum, has died.” DeBrum was “an advocate for climate policies that would keep his homeland from drowning under rising seas.” The New York Times (8/22, Friedman) reports that de Brum “died on Monday in the capital city, Majuro. He was 72.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (8/22).

Air Link Woes Are Barriers For FSM Tourism.

Radio New Zealand (8/23) reports that “the president of the Federated States of Micronesia Peter Christian says access and regional inter-airline agreements are holding back tourism.” Christian has “been in talks with the South Pacific Tourism Organisation to improve air access and develop the Chinese tourism market.”

Springdale Schools Welcomes First Marshallese Teacher.

KNWA-TV Fayetteville, AR (8/22, Chambers) reports that Springdale’s “school district educates over 2,500 Marshallese students,” and “for the first time in history, the district is putting a relatable face at the head of the class.” At Sonora Middle School, where “over 20% of the students are Marshallese,” physical education teacher Jessica Olson “became the first Marshallese teacher in the history of Springdale School District.”

As Trump Calls For Unity In Reno, Media Points To Contrast With Phoenix Remarks.

While coverage of President Trump’s speech before the American Legion National Convention in Reno is largely favorable, most national reports juxtapose it with the President’s Tuesday night speech in Phoenix, focusing on the marked differences in tone and content to paint the President as erratic. Several analyses say that the President stuck to his scripted text on Wednesday, while his Tuesday speech was off the cuff.

Lester Holt asked in opening NBC Nightly News (8/23, lead story, 2:25), “Healer or antagonist? The answer may depend up on which Donald Trump you heard over the last 24 hours. After casting himself as the victim of bad news coverage at a fired-up rally in Phoenix, blasting everyone from the media to fellow Republicans, the President appeared in Nevada today, where he returned to a call for unity based on common values,” a “head-snapping change of tone.”

ABC World News Tonight (8/23, lead story, 3:00, Muir) reported that Trump went “on the attack” in Phoenix – “defiant, standing by his decisions and his words. Then today, another speech and a starkly different tone.” ABC’s Cecilia Vega: “At the American Legion today, President Trump calling on the nation to come together.” Trump: “It is time to heal the wounds that divide us and to seek a new unity based on the common values that unite us.” Vega: “It came just hours after his own divisive rhetoric in Phoenix. For 75 fiery minutes, he unloaded."

The CBS Evening News (8/23, lead story, 2:50, Mason) reported that in Phoenix, "the on-again-off-again presidential teleprompter was off again, and the President went off again on the media, fellow Republicans, and anything else that came to mind." Wolf Blitzer said on CNN's Situation Room (8/23), "After an off-the-rails rant in Phoenix in which he angrily attacked the news media, Democrats and members of his own party, President Trump was back on script today in Reno calling for unity in a speech to veterans."

KTVN-TV Reno, NV (8/23, 6:32 p.m. PDT) reported that Trump spoke "to a packed room of veterans" and focused on "issues facing our veterans and the military. While the American Legion is a nonpartisan crowd, most of its members seemed to like his overall message." KLAS-TV Las Vegas (8/23, 6:33 p.m. PDT) reported that Trump "didn't insult the media or refer to any of Nevada's competitive 2018 political races in his 22-minute speech to veterans. Instead, he ran down a list of reforms enacted since he took office, and signed a bill that shortens the period veterans have to wait to have their appeals decided." KSNV-TV Las Vegas (8/23, 3:04 p.m. PDT) reported, "This was very friendly Trump territory at the Reno Sparks Convention Center."

The Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (8/23, Litz) reports, "In a measured 20-minute speech that deviated little from his prepared remarks," Trump "told the American Legion that they serve as a model for 'the bonds of loyalty' that are needed for the country to find unity again." The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/23, Delaney) reports that the President "sidestepped political controversy for the most part" in a "patriotic" speech. Trump "couldn't resist a few political comments, however, noting that the veterans he spoke to backstage before his public remarks were 'much more proud than they were last year at this time.'" The Wall Street Journal (8/23, Ballhaus) reports that Trump invited Medal of Honor recipient Donald Ballard up on stage, where the Vietnam veteran praised the President.

The Military Times (8/23, Shane) reports, "Trump touted veterans as an example of unity and harmony for a divided America...just hours after a fiery campaign rally in Phoenix the night before." Stars And Stripes (8/23, Wentling) calls Trump's remarks "a shift from what Trump said just yesterday during a divisive, campaign-style event in Phoenix."

The New York Times (8/23, Landler) reports under the headline "Different Day, Different Audience, And A Completely Different Trump" that the President "reverted to his script as commander in chief" on the day after "he delivered an aggrieved and impromptu defense of his comments on the violence in Charlottesville." The Reno speech "was a day-and-night contrast to Mr. Trump's performance Tuesday night in Phoenix. ... But such contrasts have become a recurring motif of his presidency: Mr. Trump has toggled between Teleprompter Trump and Unplugged Trump every day since the deadly clashes in Virginia, leaving Washington and the rest of the nation with a chronic case of rhetorical whiplash."

The AP (8/23, Bykowicz, Lemire) writes, "It was a tale of two Trumps in the desert Southwest." The Washington Post (8/23, Rucker) writes, "In the span of 48 hours this week, President Trump has boomeranged among three roles – the commander in chief, the divider and the uniter. Like a contestant on one of his reality TV shows, Trump has taken on contrasting personas, showcasing divergent traits with flourishes seemingly to survive another day of his beleaguered presidency. Or, as Trump the television producer might put it, to keep up the ratings."

The Los Angeles Times (8/23, Finnegan, Willon) reports, "A day after stoking the nation's racial tensions" in Phoenix, Trump "set aside his anger and called for healing 'the wounds that divide us'" in a "subdued speech, read from a teleprompter, [that] contrasted sharply with his ad-libbed tirade" on Tuesday night. CNN (8/23, Bradner, Tatum, Liptak) reports on its website that Trump "struck a drastically different tone Wednesday." US News & World Report (8/23, Camera) says Trump "largely stuck to his script," and Politico (8/23, Conway) calls the speech "a significant change in tone" for Trump.

White House reporter Kaitlin Collins said on CNN's Situation Room (8/23), "I think you know which one is the real one, and we all do. It's when he's not reading off of the teleprompter. ... When he was on the teleprompter, he was talking about unity, love, patriotism. When he was off the teleprompter, he was attacking the media, threatening to shut down the government and bragging about how big his apartment is."

Bloomberg News (8/23, Olorunnipa, Epstein), the Washington Examiner (8/23, Westwood), and The Hill (8/23, Fabian) also report.

Trump Signs VA Reform Bill After Reno Speech. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/23, Dupree) reports that following his speech, the President "signed the latest bipartisan bill from Congress into law that seeks to make new reforms" at the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Townhall (8/23, Pavlich) says the new law will “allow veterans to appeal or ask questions about their benefits in a more timely and organized fashion.”

Media Analyses: Debating Trump’s Mental Health Moves Into “The Mainstream.” Under the headline “Amid Mounting Bipartisan Concerns, Debating Trump’s Mental Health Becomes Cottage Industry,” USA Today (8/23, O’Donnell) reports that Sen. Bob Corker (R-TN) last week said that Trump “hasn’t ‘been able to demonstrate the stability’ needed for success.” And in the wake of the President’s Phoenix speech, ex-DNI Director James Clapper on Wednesday “questioned Trump’s ‘fitness to be in this office’ and said he was worried about the president’s access to the nuclear codes.” USA Today adds, “Until now, talk of Trump’s erratic behavior and alleged narcissism was common on social media, late-night talk shows and among political opponents. But Trump’s ‘fire and fury’ comments about North Korea,” the Phoenix rally, “and changing response to the violent protests in Charlottesville, Va., crossed a line for some Republicans and brought the conversation into the mainstream, even among some supporters.”

The CBS Evening News (8/23, story 2, 1:00, Mason) broadcast CNN footage of Clapper saying of Trump’s Monday address on Afghanistan and the President’s Tuesday speech in Phoenix, “It’s interesting to contrast last night’s teleprompter Trump performance versus tonight, which is, of course, the real Trump, just as it was in the unglued, impromptu press conference at Trump Tower. So I just find this extremely disturbing.” CNN anchor Don Lemon asked Clapper, “Are you questioning his fitness?” Clapper replied, “Yes, I do. I really question his ability to – his fitness to be in this office, and I also am beginning to wonder about his motivation for it. Maybe he is looking for a way out.”

Politico (8/23, Marinucci) reported, “California Democrats are stoking a debate over” the President’s “mental health and fitness for office, opening a new front in the resistance to” Trump “but raising fears that the line of criticism could backfire. As early talk of impeachment wanes and questions about Trump’s stability have surfaced after his volatile responses to the violence in Charlottesville – most recently by [Clapper and Corker] – California’s Democratic House delegation has seized on an issue that until recently was limited to the Internet fever swamps.” As one of several examples, Politico said that Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-CA) “last week introduced a congressional resolution urging Trump to seek a medical and psychiatric evaluation to determine if he is unfit for the office.”

USA Today (8/23, O’Donnell) reports that “psychiatrists including Bandy Lee, editor of the upcoming book The Dangerous Case of Donald Trump, worry about how Trump responds to what are likely stressful crises with fiery rhetoric that could provoke violence. There’s evidence to support their concerns, given heightened terrorism concerns. Health company Sharecare did a voice analysis of Trump’s stress during recent public appearances for USA TODAY. It found talking about firing former FBI Director James Comey, who was leading the Russia probe, did not appear to induce stress in Trump. Discussing the Islamic State did.”

Axelrod Warns Talk Of Removing Trump “A Very Dangerous Road To Go Down.” The Hill (8/23, Shelbourne) reported that during a Wednesday appearance on CNN, ex-Obama advisor David Axelrod “cautioned against talk that...Trump is unfit for office, saying it opens the door to a potentially ‘dangerous road.’” Commenting on Clapper’s remarks, Axelrod said, “The inference was that somehow there should be some effort to remove him, or at least that’s how some people would have heard it. And I think we have to be very, very careful when we have these discussions because we have a system, a Constitutional system.” Axelrod added, “Remember a third of the country supports this president, that’s a very dangerous road to go down. And if you ever did go down that road, you’re open a Pandora’s box that will never end.”

Media Fires Back At Trump Over Phoenix, Frets About Potential Violence. In the wake of Trump’s Phoenix address, in which he lambasted the media, several reports focus on the press’ reaction to the President’s attacks. Some reports warn the comments could result in violence against journalists.

Under the headline “Media Lets Loose Its Fury After Trump Attacks,” The Hill (8/23, Easley) reported that media members on Wednesday ripped Trump “after he railed against the press” in Phoenix, calling “journalists ‘dishonest people’ who ‘don’t like our country.’” For example, said The Hill, CNN anchor Don Lemon “accused the president of ‘trying to ignite a civil war’ and likened Trump to a 6-year-old child with imaginary friends. ‘He’s unhinged,’ Lemon said,” adding of Trump’s speech, “There was no sanity there. ... [Trump is] clearly wounded by the rational people who are abandoning him in droves, meaning the business people and the people in Washington now who are questioning his fitness for office and whether he is stable.”

In her Washington Post (8/23, Sullivan) column, Margaret Sullivan says that Trump’s Tuesday attacks on the media were “both shocking and completely predictable. Shocking because it was the most sustained attack any president has made on the news media,” but “predictable because this is exactly what Trump does when he's in trouble. He finds an enemy and punches as hard as he can. Make no mistake, he is in trouble." Sullivan adds, "Under siege, Trump needs a foil more than ever, so these media attacks are only going to grow in intensity. It will be journalists' continued challenge not to take the bait, to refuse to play the assigned role of presidential enemy."

Writing for the New York Times (8/23, Rutenberg), Jim Rutenberg says that Trump's "latest attack on the media came at a time of heightened racial tension stoked by a white supremacists' rally in Charlottesville, Va., and continuing now in the national debate over removing statues that commemorate Confederate figures from the Civil War. Mr. Trump's speech in Phoenix reprised a question spawned by his raucous rallies during the presidential campaign: How long before someone is seriously hurt, or worse?"

The New York Times (8/23, Victor) reports that Trump's "angry condemnation of the news media during" the rally "heightened the fear among journalists that verbal attacks on the profession could lead to physical attacks." The Times says Trump's broadsides of the media "took even seasoned journalists by surprise. He called journalists 'sick people,' accused the news media of 'trying to take away our history and our heritage' and questioned their patriotism." Committee to Protect Journalists advocacy director Courtney Radsch told the Times, "To see this sort of attack coming yet again from the president is deeply disturbing. It creates an environment in which attacks on the press, both verbal and potentially physical, could become common."

The New York Times (8/23) editorializes, "Trump trotted out the usual enemies, the malefactors in the 'very dishonest media' and the 'anarchists' of the left. ... But this time he gave equal billing to his fellow Republicans in Congress – the people he will surely need if he hopes to deliver on infrastructure or anything else of value to the working-class Americans who elected him." The President offered "77 minutes worth of anger that began, as the evening wore on, to exhaust even his most fervid listeners, who began quietly to fade away."

The Washington Post (8/23) editorializes, "There is a danger...that we become inured to President Trump's mockery of democratic norms and common decency." The Post juxtaposes Trump's Phoenix comments "what we imagine a presidential president – a president we could be proud of – might have said." The editorial goes through several of the President's remarks.

WPost Analysis: Trump Lost Attention Of Crowd With Long Phoenix Speech. The Washington Post (8/23, Johnson) reports under the headline "As Trump Ranted And Rambled In Phoenix, His Crowd Slowly Thinned" that "as the night dragged on" Tuesday, "many in the crowd lost interest in what the president was saying. Hundreds left early, while others plopped down on the ground, scrolled through their social media feeds or started up a conversation with their neighbors." Though Trump "has long been the master of reading the mood of a room and quickly adjusting his message to satisfy as many of his fans as possible, his rage seemed to cloud his senses." Roll Call (8/23, Bennett) writes, "Trump roared, blamed, boasted, omitted and obfuscated Tuesday night at a campaign rally in Phoenix, but there was one thing he decided against doing: selling his stalled legislative agenda."

AP Fact Check: Trump Selectively Quoted His Own Charlottesville Remarks In Phoenix. The AP (8/23, Lemire) writes in a Fact Check piece that Trump "accused the media of selectively quoting from his remarks" about Charlottesville, then "turned around and did the same thing himself: At a Tuesday night rally in Phoenix, the president re-read portions of his comments about the violence – but left out the specific phrase that generated all the controversy."

Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (8/23) that Trump "attempted historical revisionism, insisting he had never done anything but condemn the racists in Charlottesville. In this retelling, the President omitted the controversial parts of his post-Charlottesville remarks" in which he condemned hatred, bigotry, and violence "on many sides," which "was the part that was controversial." Fact Check (8/23, Kiely) headlines its 4,500-word analysis of the Arizona speech "At Phoenix Rally, Trump Revises History, Exaggerates Accomplishments And Makes False Claims."

WSJournal Editor Chides Staff's Trump Coverage As "Commentary Dressed Up As News Reporting." The New York Times (8/23, Grynbaum) reports that Wall Street Journal editor-in-chief Gerard Baker "has faced unease and frustration in his newsroom over his stewardship of the newspaper's coverage of...Trump, which some journalists there say has lacked toughness and verve. Some staff members expressed similar concerns on Wednesday after Mr. Baker, in a series of blunt late-night emails, criticized his staff over their coverage of Mr. Trump's Tuesday rally in Phoenix, describing their reporting as overly opinionated. 'Sorry. This is commentary dressed up as news reporting,' Mr. Baker wrote" early "Wednesday morning to a group of Journal reporters and editors, in response to a draft of the rally article that was intended for the newspaper's final edition. He added in a follow-up, 'Could we please just stick to reporting what he said rather than packaging it in exegesis and selective criticism?'"

AP, WPost Analyses Differ On Whether Carson "Likely" Violated Law With Rally Appearance.

The AP (8/23, Kerr) reports, "Legal experts said Wednesday that HUD Secretary Carson's appearance with Trump at the Phoenix rally "likely did not violate federal law." Following the rally, "questions were raised on Twitter about whether Carson had violated the federal law known as the Hatch Act, which bars most executive branch officials from using their government positions to influence elections." HUD spokesman Jerry Brown "said the agency doesn't think Carson did anything wrong. 'His travel and lodging were not paid for by the department. He was there in his personal capacity. He didn't discuss HUD during the speech.'"

However, writing for the Washington Post (8/23, Bump), Phillip Bump says that prior to Carson taking "the stage at" the rally, "the announcer introduced him. 'The secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Dr. Ben Carson,' the voice intoned, prompting cheers from the audience. And, as simply as that, a law was likely broken." Bump adds, "Among the prohibitions included in the Hatch Act is one prohibiting Cabinet secretaries from leveraging their positions for a political cause. That means that the head of, say," HUD, "can't appear at a campaign rally in a way that implies he's doing so in an official capacity. Say, by being introduced with his official title."

Police Responded To Protesters With "Tear Gas, Pepper Spray And Rubber Bullets." Drawing from a Daily Mail report (8/22, Martosko), the New York Post (8/23, Moore) says that protesters outside Trump's Tuesday speech in Phoenix "tossed rocks and bottles at police who responded with tear gas, pepper spray and rubber bullets. ... At one point, a man wearing a gas mask kicked a tear gas canister back at police. Moments later, the protester doubled over in pain as a cloud of dust spilled from his groin area. A news anchor for the local CBS station remarked on the unfolding scene that was caught on camera. 'A guy just got shot with a rubber bullet,' the anchor said as the stricken man was dragged away by another demonstrator. 'So – er – yeah, the officers are not, are not messing around at all.'"

White House, McConnell Downplay Reports Of Feud.

Amid "reports of a deteriorating relationship with President Trump," Senate Majority Leader McConnell "sought to dispel" the reports and "insist[ed] they remain in 'regular contact over shared Republican goals,'" the Los Angeles Times (8/23, Mascaro) reports. The Times calls McConnell's statement "uncharacteristic," but adds that a New York Times report which said "the two men had not spoken since Trump berated McConnell in a phone call earlier this month following the collapse of the healthcare bill, provoked a response." Likewise, the Washington Times (8/23, Miller) says the White House "pushed back against reports of a feud."

Reuters (8/23, Becker) says both Trump and McConnell "emphasized their plans to cooperate on shared goals." The White House issued a statement which said the two leaders "remain united on many shared priorities, including middle class tax relief, strengthening the military, constructing a southern border wall, and other important issues." A statement from McConnell said, "The President and I, and our teams, have been and continue to be in regular contact about our shared goals. ... We have a lot of work ahead of us, and we are committed to advancing our shared agenda together and anyone who suggests otherwise is clearly not part of the conversation." On ABC World News Tonight (8/23, story 2, 0:45, Muir), Cecilia Vega also reported that the McConnell camp is "dismissing this story" and the White House said "that both sides will indeed meet after the August recess."

The Washington Post (8/23, Phillip) quotes White House press secretary Sarah Sanders as saying, "They will hold previously scheduled meetings following the August recess to discuss these critical items with members of the congressional leadership and the president's Cabinet. ... White House and leadership staff are coordinating regarding the details of those meetings." NBC Nightly News (8/23, story 2, 0:15, Holt) also reported briefly on the story.

According to the AP (8/23, Peoples, Fram), the "escalating tension" between Trump and McConnell "is threatening the GOP's re-election prospects and its ability to govern." McConnell and other Republicans are "particularly upset by Trump's consistent attacks against vulnerable Republican senators who need his help, according to a person familiar with the Kentucky Republican's thinking." According to this person, "McConnell questions whether Trump is capable of righting his struggling presidency."

Wolf Blitzer said on CNN's Situation Room (8/23), "A Republican senator tells CNN his colleagues are rallying behind" McConnell "after some sharp attacks by President Trump. Sources say their last phone call broke down in a shouting match with the President cursing at McConnell.” CNN senior congressional reporter Manu Raju said on CNN’s Situation Room (8/23) that Senate Republicans are “not happy with the President. They are overwhelmingly siding with Mitch McConnell. I talked to one Republican today. He said it had a unifying effect within the Republican conference. They’re getting behind him.”

The Hill (8/23, Bolton, Wong) describes a Republican Party “at the brink of breaking out into open warfare with itself after months of straining to keep its internal divisions under control.” Trump “is firing warning shots at Capitol Hill and openly criticizing” McConnell. House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) is warning that House Speaker Ryan and McConnell “could lose their jobs if they fall short on tax reform and funding the U.S.-Mexico border wall.” At the same times, GOP leaders “are scrambling to deflect blame.” Ryan has been emphasizing the number of bills passed by the House in “a tacit complaint that it is the Senate where Republican legislation is dying.”

Hill GOP Concerned By Trump’s Shutdown Threat Over Border Wall Funding.

The New York Times (8/23, Davis) reports, “President Trump issued an extraordinary challenge to his own party” in his Tuesday evening remarks in Phoenix, “threatening to shut down the government in a matter of weeks if Congress did not fund” a US-Mexico border wall, and “followed up on that threat on Wednesday by going after” Sen. Jeff Flake, “who has been skeptical” of the wall plan, on Twitter. Trump tweeted, “Not a fan of Jeff Flake, weak on crime & border!” The Washington Post (8/23, Debonis, Viebeck, Paletta) reports that “Trump’s threat to shut down the federal government over his demand for $1.6 billion in border wall money could upend delicate negotiations” on keeping the government operating past September 30, “further entrenching Democrats against what they see as an unpopular president scrambling to appeal to his base of supporters.”

Politico (8/23, Dawsey) reports that Trump’s Tuesday “vow...mirrors private comments he has made to advisers in recent days.” The President “has told his advisers he will not accept a deal on other issues without money for the wall ‘and it has to be real money,’ said one senior White House official.” But Wall Street Journal (8/23, Peterson, Hughes) reports that Capitol Hill Republicans were alarmed by the threat. Reuters (8/23, Mikolajczak, Morgan) reports that Republicans “rebuked the president,” with the Washington Times (8/23, Sherfinski) reporting that House Speaker Ryan said, “I don’t think a government shutdown is necessary and I don’t think most people want to see a government shutdown – ourselves included.” On the CBS Evening News (8/23, story 3, 2:15, Mason), Major Garrett said, “The President...rattled GOP congressional leaders with [the] threat.”

The Hill (8/23, Bernal) reports that Democratic leaders also said they would not give in. Senate Minority Leader Schumer “said Trump’s demands for wall funding in a government-funding bill would lead to a shutdown,” while House Minority Leader Pelosi said, “President Trump’s multi-billion dollar border wall boondoggle is strongly opposed by Democrats and many Republicans. Democrats will stand fast against the immoral, ineffective border wall and the rest of Republicans’ unacceptable poison pill riders.”

Bloomberg News (8/23, Wasson) writes, “Trump’s shutdown threat may just be part of the routine bluster he employs in negotiations, but it still raises the specter of a potentially market-shaking showdown if he decides to follow through on it.” In fact, Reuters (8/23, Chin) reports, “stocks closed lower...as investors grappled with [the] threat” from the President.

The Wall Street Journal (8/23) says in an editorial that while the threat was popular with Trump’s Arizona audience, it is reckless and counterproductive, with GOP leaders knowing that they and the unpopular Trump will take the blame for any shutdown. The Journal says Democrats will be happy to let Trump force a shutdown.

Steve King Calls Border Wall A “Mandate From The American People.” Rep. Steve King (R-IA) said on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight (8/23) that the border wall “is a mandate that came from the American people. The mandate says build the wall. The President said he is going to build the wall. If he vetoes an appropriations bill because it lacks funding for the wall...the votes won’t be there to override a presidential veto and eventually this will get done.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The President Turns On His Own.” The New York Times (8/23) editorializes, “Trump trotted out the usual enemies, the malefactors in the ‘very dishonest media’ and the ‘anarchists’ of the left. ... But this time he gave equal billing to his fellow Republicans in Congress – the people he will surely need if he hopes to deliver on infrastructure or anything else of value to the working-class Americans who elected him.” The President offered “77 minutes worth of anger that began, as the evening wore on, to exhaust even his most fervid listeners, who began quietly to fade away.”

“New York Democrats Snub The Voters.” In an editorial, the New York Times (8/24) writes New York City politicians’ “tendency to freeze out” voters “has been on conspicuous display in recent weeks,” with Democrats timing departures to come after the deadline to enter primaries “so that picking successors would in effect fall to party leaders, not to registered Democratic voters.” Such “shenanigans foster cynicism, which is already deep enough,” and the Times call for political leaders to act “to put power where it belongs, with the voters.”

Washington Post.

“What A Presidential President Would Have Said In Phoenix.” The Washington Post (8/23) editorializes, “There is a danger...that we become inured to President Trump’s mockery of democratic norms and common decency.” The Post juxtaposes Trump’s Phoenix comments “what we imagine a presidential president – a president we could be proud of – might have said.” The editorial goes through several of the President’s remarks.

“Trump Has Sent The Right Signal To Egypt. But There’s More He Needs To Do.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/23) calls the Administration’s move to withhold aid “an appropriate response to the most severe repression in” Egypt’s modern history and the country’s “collaboration with North Korea,” but warns the move isn’t due to a shift in President Trump’s views but was “largely forced by congressional legislation, and they are unlikely to have much effect unless there is follow-up in the next federal budget.” The Post calls for the Administration and Congress to “fundamentally reform aid to Egypt.” The Post argues the end of cash-flow financing “provides a chance to undertake a wholesale restructuring of the aid” and suggests shifting some of it to Tunisia, “a struggling democracy that, unlike its neighbor, is eager to partner with the United States.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Cuomo’s Natural Gas Blockade.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/23) writes that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo’s blocking last year of the Constitution pipeline transporting natural gas from Pennsylvania to upstate New York and New England has resulted in fewer jobs and less local government revenue, has demonstrated an abuse of state discretion over environmental rules, has increased energy costs, and has caused a halt to natural gas to a region that needs another power source to replace shuttering nuclear and coal plants.

“Beating His Own Head Against The Wall.” The Wall Street Journal (8/23) says in an editorial that while the threat to shut down the government over the border wall was popular with President Trump’s Arizona audience, it is reckless and counterproductive, with GOP leaders knowing that they and the unpopular Trump will take the blame for any shutdown. The Journal says Democrats will be happy to let Trump force a shutdown.

“Nisman And The Iranians.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/23) writes that a new toxicology analysis of the body of late Argentine prosecutor Alberto Nisman – who had been investigating Iran’s role in the 1994 bombing of a Buenos Aires Jewish community center – shows that the drug ketamine was present, indicating what one criminal prosecutor called a “mountain of evidence” that Nisman’s death was a homicide. The Journal concludes that this new evidence may lead to the truth of Nisman’s death, potentially at the hands of Iran, if the Argentine judiciary allows the investigation to proceed unimpeded.

Senators' Silence Kills Probe Into Zinke's Alleged Threats Against Alaska Senator.

The Hill (8/30, Henry) reports the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General is about to end "its investigation into Secretary Ryan Zinke's alleged threats against an Alaska senator during an ObamaCare fight last month after the lawmaker and her in-state colleague refused to participate in the probe." Interior's Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall wrote to House Democrats who had asked for the investigation, saying that "her office 'does not believe it could meaningfully investigate the matter further' because Alaska Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, both Republicans, declined to be interviewed as part of the inquiry."

Also covering the story were the Associated Press (8/30), Reuters (8/30, Beech), CNN (8/30, Tatum), the Washington Examiner (8/30, Phillips), Talking Points Memo (8/30, Ollstein), the Daily Caller (8/30, Pearce), the Alaska Dispatch News (8/30), the Alaska Public Radio Network (8/30, Ruskin), KTUU-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (8/30), and KTVF-TV Fairbanks \(AK\) Fairbanks, AK (8/30).

Trump Donation Will Help Restore Historic Home Near Confederate Statue.

The Washington Post (8/30, Moyer) reports that the National Park Service announced in July that it would use some of the funds from President Trump's donation of his first quarter salary "to restore a historic home at Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland." Next summer, work will begin "on property that includes a 24-foot statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee astride his horse, Traveller." The statue "sits on a bluff about 250 feet from the Newcomer House that will benefit from Trump's donation." The Post adds that the donation was made "before Trump called for the preservation of Confederate memorials following deadly violence in Charlottesville." Heather Swift, a spokeswoman for the Department of the Interior, "said the National Park Service, not Trump, selected the property, and that his donation will not be used to restore the statue."

States Win Hollow Victory Over Trump's Favors To Oil, Gas & Coal.

Courthouse News (8/30, Iovino) reports that "California and New Mexico won a hollow victory on Wednesday, as a federal judge found the U.S. Department of Interior unlawfully postponed a royalties rule for oil, gas and coal companies' benefit – but refused to reinstate the rule." California and New Mexico sued the Interior Department in April, "arguing its postponement of a new royalties rule this past February, after it took effect on Jan. 1, deprived states of an estimated $72 million to $85 million in royalties, which they depend on to help fund crucial services like public education." Meanwhile, the Interior Department "had already proposed a new rule to roll back the increased royalty valuations on April 4, with a public comment period ending May 4," and "the repeal is set to take effect on Sept. 6." U.S. Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte

“found the department effectively repealed the royalties rule in February after it had taken effect and without allowing for public comment in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act.” However, “she said making companies comply with higher royalty valuations for a few days before the rule is repealed on Sept. 6 would be ‘unduly disruptive’ for the oil, gas and coal industries,” and “she declined to vacate the Interior Department’s postponement of the rule.”

Additional coverage was provided by KXJZ-FM Sacramento, CA (8/30, Bradford).

Please Come To Grand Junction, Towns To Tell BLM.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/31, Harmon) reports that the Associated Governments of Northwest Colorado “voted Wednesday to encourage the counties and cities within its area to write” to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urging him to move the Bureau of Land Management to Grand Junction. Zinke is reportedly “considering moving the headquarters of three agencies – the BLM, Fish and Wildlife Service and the Bureau of Reclamation – to Denver.”

Bizarrely, The State Department And Interior Department Just Commented On Trump’s Tax Plan.

The Week (8/30, Stanek) said that it was strange to see Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson weighing in on President Trump’s tax reform plan. According to the article, “though Zinke’s domain is federal lands and natural resources,” he “couldn’t help but comment on how great Trump’s tax reform plan would be for the American people.” Zinke tied his statement “back to the Interior Department by claiming that Trump’s tax reforms would mean Americans ‘will have more money in their pockets’ to spend on trips to national parks, and that businesses would have more money to ‘invest in our public lands.’”

Blowing The Whistle On Trump’s Mistreatment Of Civil Servants.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (8/30, Friedman, Geltzer, Contributors), Robert Friedman and Joshua Geltzer, who serve as institute fellow and executive director, respectively, at Georgetown University Law Center’s Institute for Constitutional Advocacy and Protection, writes that “since Jan. 20, some civil servants, and especially certain senior civil servants, have fallen victim to an administration uninterested in their hard-earned experience and apparently intolerant of questioning of the administration’s pre-existing ideological commitments.” For this reason, the Georgetown University Law Center’s Institute for Constitutional Advocacy and Protection has “just filed a letter with the U.S. Office of Special Counsel on behalf of 12 leading scholars of constitutional, administrative and civil service law in support” of Joel Clement, a reassigned senior executive at the Interior Department. The authors argue that “Clement’s case presents an important opportunity for the Office of Special Counsel to send a clear signal to the administration.” They urge the office to “carefully police the line between mission-inspired reassignments and retaliatory ones to ensure that President Trump’s vow to ‘drain the swamp’ does not become a full-blown political purge of the civil service.”

Breaking The Rules: Zinke And Trump Go To War On Regulation.

In an op-ed for the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (8/31, Leiter), Amanda C. Leiter, a professor at American University’s College of Law, and former deputy assistant secretary, Land and Minerals Management, at the Interior Department, writes that “laws and regulations can always be reformed and improved, but the real threat to America’s natural resources, and to the health of our democracy, is the Trump administration’s nontransparent, one-sided assault on common-sense regulation.” Leiter touts the importance of the rulemaking process and criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for catering to the fossil fuel industry, while shutting out other interests. Leiter concludes that the Trump Administration’s “disdain for open and participatory rulemaking is unlawful and undermines our democracy.”

Trump Administration Falsely Blames Lawsuits For Forest Fires.

In an op-ed for the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (8/30, Garrity), Mike Garrity, the executive director of the Alliance for the Wild Rockies, writes that “Ryan Zinke, Sonny Perdue, Steve Daines and Greg Gianforte followed Trump’s lead in using alternative facts in their recent press conference near the Lolo Peak Fire.” According to Garrity, “the Trump administration apparently believes that it is because of lawsuits that we have forest fires during this exceptionally hot, dry, and windy summer.” However, Garrity points out that “there is no lawsuit in the Lolo Peak area, and the Lolo Peak area has already undergone extensive logging.”

In an op-ed for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/31, Scalia), Dr. Joseph Scalia III, director of Northern Rockies Psychoanalytic Institute, criticizes the group of Republican politicians for supporting “a federal 2018 budget that would cut $350 million from forest fire fighting and prevention programs.” Scalia claims that the politicians are “spouting dumbed-down ideology while ignoring wildland fire science in their attempt to sway public policy towards support of an extractive industry that will be regulated by an underfunded and understaffed Forest Service.”

Hey President Trump, Leave The San Gabriel Mountains Alone.

In his column for the Los Angeles Times (8/30, Lopez), Steve Lopez raises concerns that the San Gabriel Mountains National Monument may be scaled back. Lopez thinks that “it’s unlikely that the San Gabes would be in for any major scarring by commercial enterprise; other monuments around the country appear to be in far greater danger.” However, he notes that “some San Gabriels boosters remain worried, with possibilities that include expansion of a ski resort into the monument, erection of cellphone towers and tunneling for the bullet train.”

Our Voice: National Monuments Still Need Defense.

In an editorial, the Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (8/30) rallies support to preserve the Cascade-Siskiyou, the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments. The paper asserts that “reviewing the national monuments was an unnecessary process that never should have been started.” The paper urges “all those who weighed in to protect the Hanford Reach” to “help Oregon and Utah with the same passionate resolve.”

National Parks, A National Legacy.

In an editorial, the Valley News \(VT\) (8/30) touts the importance of the national parks and related sites, which “have shown the wisdom of preserving — rather than exploiting — the best of America and its natural resources.” The paper hopes that President Trump won’t follow Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s recommendation “to reduce the size of three national monuments and roll back protections in them.” The editorial says that if he does, then “it would be in keeping with his administration’s apparent mission of achieving a clean sweep of environmental degradation, involving the nation’s air, water and land. ”

A Year Worth Celebrating At Katahdin Woods And Waters.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/30, Farmer), David Farmer, a political and media consultant in Portland, is heartened by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “promising – if not complete – news about the review” of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument. According to Farmer, “there are still people who oppose the monument, but their numbers are waning.” he also notes that “businesses throughout the region are reporting spikes in visitation and so far between the National Park Service and the endowment created by Elliotsville Plantation, the foundation which donated the land for the monument plus an endowment of $20 million, about a half a million dollars have been invested in the region so far.”

Daunted Courage: Is Ryan Zinke Losing Touch With Montana?

In an op-ed for the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (8/31, Brooks), Dan Brooks satirically analyzes whether Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has lost his “Montana values.” Brooks compares Zinke’s record as a defender of public lands as a congressman, and now, as secretary, “his commitment to making public lands available to all Americans—particularly those Americans who own mining and drilling corporations.” Brooks figures Zinke is “as much a Montanan as he ever was, which is to say he lives somewhere else most of the time but keeps wearing a giant hat.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Ruling Paves Way For Freedmen’s Citizenship In Cherokee Nation.

The Tulsa \(OK\) World (8/30, Hinchey) reports that “the descendants of Cherokee freedmen have a right to tribal citizenship,” the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia ruled Wednesday.” The holding is “an important victory in the freedmen’s longstanding legal battle to secure rights to Cherokee citizenship. The court held “that the Treaty of 1866, which entitled freedmen to ‘all the rights of native Cherokees,’ takes priority over the tribe’s constitution.”

Feds Urge Justices To Spurn NY Town’s Tribal Land Challenge.

Law360 (8/30, Westney) reports that “the federal government has urged the U.S. Supreme Court not to hear a New York town's bid to overturn a Second Circuit decision approving the government's decision to take land into trust for the Oneida Indian Nation, saying the Oneidas meet the requirements to have their land taken into trust under the Indian Land Consolidation Act."

Tribe Gets $3.9 Million From BIA For Reforestation.

The Omak-Okanogan County \(WA\) Chronicle (8/30, Camp) reports that "the Colville Confederated Tribes are getting nearly $3.9 million from the federal government for reforestation efforts in the wake of the 2015 fire season."

Additional Coverage: Ex-Federal Officer Accused Of Blackmailing Woman Into Sex.

Additional coverage that "a former law enforcement officer with the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Montana is facing federal charges accusing him of coercing a woman into having sex and then lying about it to investigators" was provided by the AP (8/30).

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Land Transfers Near County Approval.

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (8/30, Gross) reports that "three agreements are up for consideration by county commissioners Tuesday that outline terms for the transfer of several Bureau of Land Management land parcels to Teton County." Following approval, "the county can draft legislation for U.S. Sen. John Barrasso to introduce to Congress to realize the transfers." It is part of "the latest movement on an effort that has been ongoing for more than a decade as the BLM works to pass off ownership of 24 parcels scattered along the Snake River."

BLM To Offer Three Parcels In Oil And Gas Lease Sale.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (8/30) reports that the Bureau of Land Management will "offer three parcels in Nye County totaling approximately 3,680 acres in the Battle Mountain District at its September quarterly oil and gas lease sale." Bidding will begin on Sept. 12.

BLM Approves Decision To Remove Wild Horses.

The Wyoming Business Report (8/30, Mechling) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "announced its decision Tuesday to take 1,560 adult wild horses from the Great Divide Basin, Salt Wells Creek, and Adobe Town herd management areas." The roundup will "begin after Sept. 15 to restore herd populations to appropriate management levels, according to a press release."

McClintock Spearheads Proposal To Stop Protecting Wild Horses.

In an op-ed for the Sierra Star \(CA\) (8/30, White), Joseph H. White opposes that the Trump Administration's budget that "calls for the end of the prohibition of slaughtering wild horses and burros and "destroying" the 45,000-plus healthy horses and burros in holding pens, and up to 40,000 healthy animals on the range." Rep. Tom McClintock has "spearheaded the proposal, claiming that the wild horses and burros are starving to death when in reality almost every animal that has been captured in the BLM helicopter roundups would be graded as good to excellent (a score of four to six) on the Henneke condition score system for horses." According to White, "the truth is that the wild horses and burros are competing successfully for forage against the private livestock that outnumber them on the federal ranges, that were designated by Congress to be managed primarily for their benefit and are not yet overpopulated."

Bureau Of Reclamation

New Groundwater Basin Studies For Arizona And New Mexico.

The AP (8/31) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation is "launching two new groundwater basin studies, one in Arizona and the other in New Mexico." BOR Acting Commissioner Alan Mikkelsen "says growing imbalances between supply and demand are affecting many basins throughout the West." According to the article, "the groundwater is being over-drafted by about 230,000 acre-feet per year and causing severe caving-in of land in the basins, putting critical infrastructure at risk."

For Reclamation, Water Use And Small Hydropower Go Hand In Hand.

Hydroworld (8/30, Ingram) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation “recently announced it had selected 43 projects to receive a total of $20.9 million for water delivery efficiency improvements.” The funds are being awarded as part of the WaterSMART project, “which aims to improve water conservation and sustainability, helping water resource managers make sound decisions about water use.” The bureau “says that when leveraged with non-federal funding sources, these projects will complete more than $101 million in improvements.” The article notes that “of the 43 projects selected, eight involve hydroelectric generation.”

There’s Success In Money-for-water Programs.

The High Country \(CO\) News (8/30, Tory) reports that in the Colorado River Basin, a money-for-water program is winning over skeptical farmers and ranchers. The pilot program was “launched in 2014 by the four largest municipal water providers in the Colorado River basin along with the Bureau of Reclamation.” The goal is to “see how complicated it would be to pay ranchers to use less water on their fields and instead let the water flow down the Green, Colorado and San Juan rivers to Lake Powell and Lake Mead, the two biggest water storage buckets in the Colorado River system.” According to the article, “after three years, the initiative, known as the ‘System Conservation Pilot Program,’ proved popular...but water officials called a halt to the program after this year until they work out some big challenges.”

Fallout From Harvey To Disrupt Energy Markets Around The World.

The Wall Street Journal (8/30, Sider, Yang) reports Tropical Storm Harvey is disrupting the flow of oil and petroleum worldwide because of the growing influence of the US in the global energy industry. The production disruptions will cause supply shortfalls in gasoline, chemicals, plastics and crude exports, and consumers from Houston to Beijing will be affected. The US Gulf Coast has become an increasingly critical link in the global energy chain, as shipments from the region now account for 6 percent of global demand for oil and liquid petroleum fuels. A second Wall Street Journal (8/30, Matthews, Sider) reports that more than a dozen refineries have been affected by the storm, while IHS Markit says more than 3 million bpd of refining capacity in Texas remained shut Wednesday mornings. Port closures are complicating refineries’ problems, as Port Houston has warned shippers it is likely closed to large vessels at least through the weekend. US Coast Guard officials said it could be weeks before large container ships and oil tankers can safely navigate the Houston Ship Channel. Reuters (8/30, Seba) reports Reuters estimates and company reports show that about 4.2 million barrels of US refining capacity has been shut because of the storm. More refineries could close now that Harvey has made landfall in Louisiana, where an additional 3.3 million bpd are produced. Anthony Scott, managing director of analytics at BTU Analytics, said, “We’re still pretty early in the process of figuring out the extent of any damage from the flooding. ... If flooding has washed out a pipeline or something else, you won’t find out until the water has receded.” The Washington Times (8/30, Wolfgang) reports Nicole Leonard, a senior project consultant at Platts Analytics Oil and Gas Consulting, said, “This is impacting the whole world. ... There’s so much more in getting back to normal than I think anyone understands.” Leonard said the slowdown in refining is hampering deliveries around the world, as foreign markets are not getting the usual cargoes of fuel from US suppliers.

Groups Sue To Protect Yellowstone Bears As Hunts Anticipated.

The AP (8/30, Brown) reports that “wildlife advocates and a Montana Indian tribe have asked a U.S. court to restore protections for grizzly bears in and around Yellowstone National Park so that trophy hunting of the fearsome animals would not be allowed.” The Northern Cheyenne Tribe, the Humane Society and several conservation groups “filed three lawsuits Tuesday and Wednesday in federal court in Montana, challenging the government’s recent move to lift protections.” Idaho, Montana and Wyoming “are planning limited public hunting of the region’s roughly 700 bears, although no hunts are expected this year,” but “critics say there is already too much pressure on the bear population as climate change affects what they eat and as conflicts with humans result in dozens being killed every year.”

Reuters (8/30, Zuckerman) reports that WildEarth Guardians “as well as a coalition including the Sierra Club and Northern Cheyenne Tribe separately sued Republican President Donald Trump’s administration in U.S. District Court in Missoula, Montana to prevent removal of the bears from the U.S. list of endangered and threatened species. ‘Grizzlies have disappeared in nearly 98 percent of their range in the Lower 48; now is not the time to strip these bears of vital federal protections,’ WildEarth Guardians carnivore advocate Kelly Nokes said in a telephone interview.” The lawsuits, “which name U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service as plaintiffs, claim that illegal killing and climate changes have caused declines in the grizzlies’ food supplies and habitat loss.”

Commissioners Oppose Wolf Recovery Draft.

The Ruidoso \(NM\) News (8/30, Stallings) reports that “as in past Mexican gray wolf recovery plans, the Lincoln County Commission approved a letter and reaffirmed a resolution in opposition to a draft released for public comment by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” Commissioners were “following the recommendations last week of the board of supervisors of the Upper Hondo Water and Soil Conservation District and of the members of the county’s Land and Natural Resources Advisory Committee.” They “voted to submit a new letter of objection by the Aug. 29 deadline.”

Yosemite Name Changes: Lawsuit In Dispute Inches Forward.

The Fresno \(CA\) Bee (8/30, Appleton) reports that the National Park Service and “Yosemite’s former concessionaire, Delaware North, remain embroiled in a legal battle over the names of some of the park’s most cherished landmarks: The Ahwahnee, Curry Village, Badger Pass, Wawona Hotel.” The two sides are “more than $40 million apart on the amount owed.” The article says that “given the distance between the parties and how slowly the courts move in such cases, both sides agreed this week that it could be years before a resolution is reached.”

Inoculations Give Endangered California Frog A Shot At Life.

The AP (8/30, Smith) reports that “endangered California frogs are getting an immunity boost from scientists who are scooping them up from remote Sierra Nevada ponds and sending them to big city zoos for inoculation, giving them a fighting chance to beat extinction, officials said Wednesday.” Aquatic ecologist Danny Boiano of the Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks, “who has led the three-year project” to help the mountain yellow-legged frog, “said it appears to be paying off.” His team will next “study their frogs to determine if it’s working.”

Smoke From Wildfires Forces Closure Of Lodge In Glacier Park.

The AP (8/30) reports that “smoke from wildfires has led Xanterra Parks and Resorts to close Lake McDonald Lodge in Glacier National Park for the season.” The lodge “closed Wednesday, nearly a month ahead of schedule.” According to Xanterra, “the Sprague fire burning in the park was not threatening the lodge, but heavy smoke was settling in the area, at times creating hazardous air quality conditions.”

Attorney: Arkansas Man Fatally Shot By Rangers Had BB Gun.

The AP (8/30) reports that “an attorney representing the family of a man who was fatally shot by two park rangers while camping in northern Arkansas says the camper had a BB pistol on him.” According to attorney David Ransin, “the BB gun didn’t have an orange tip on the barrel to indicate that it wasn’t a real weapon.” A statement from Buffalo National River officials “says the park rangers fired at 34-year-old Jonathan Bolger on Aug. 20 after he refused to drop the weapon.”

3 Indicted On Big Game Hunt Charges In Alaska National Park.

The AP (8/30) reports that “a federal grand jury has indicted three men on charges connected to illegal hunting" in Wrangell-St. Elias National Park and Preserve. The indictment also alleges that two of the men "used artificial sweetener harmful to canines on bait piles to try to kill wolves and coyotes."

Great Smoky Mountains National Park To Get Emergency Radio Upgrade.

The Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (8/30) reports that "in celebration of the organization's 25th anniversary next year, Friends of the Smokies has announced a capital campaign to fund a critical radio system upgrade in Great Smoky Mountains National Park." The total cost of the upgrade project is $2.5 million. Jim Hart, president of the nonprofit, said, "Our target for this campaign is to raise $1.25 million by this time next year, making it our biggest fundraising goal in a decade." According to the article, "federal funding sources and other grants will be used to match donations to Friends of the Smokies dollar for dollar to reach the total cost."

Trump Says U.S. Is Paying 'Extortion Money' To North Korea.

Coverage of the Administration's response to North Korea's latest missile launch over Japan continues, with media reports from cable outlets characterizing President Trump and Defense Secretary Mattis as giving conflicting statements regarding the response options available for the US. ABC World News Tonight (8/30, story 6, 1:35, Llamas), for example, said the Administration sent "mixed messages" Wednesday. While Trump "appeared to double down on a military option," Mattis "seemed to contradict him." Martha Raddatz said this isn't the first time the Administration has sent mixed signals, "but in the end, North Korea's leader listens most carefully to only one person: Donald Trump."

The New York Times (8/30, Sullivan, Landler) reports that in a post on Twitter on Wednesday, President Trump "accused past administrations of paying 'extortion money' to North Korea and said diplomatic talks are not sufficient." The President tweeted, "The US has been talking to North Korea, and paying them extortion money, for 25 years. Talking is not the answer!" The Times says it "was not clear what money the president was referring to," and also notes Trump has "been both open to and against talks with North Korea."

The Washington Times (8/30, Persons) says the President's tweet Wednesday follows his previous comments that "all options are on the table" if North Korea continues its missile testing. On NBC Nightly News (8/30, story 6, 2:10, Holt), Richard Engel said that "just hours after the President's tweet, Defense Secretary Mattis chimed in, seeming to contradict the President." Reuters (8/30, Ali, Kim) reports that while Trump declared "talking is not the answer" to the standoff with North Korea, Mattis "swiftly asserted that diplomatic options remain." When asked by reporters hours after Trump's tweet if the US was out of diplomatic solutions, Mattis replied: "No. We are never out of diplomatic solutions."

Trump, the CBS Evening News (8/30, story 9, 2:10, Mason) similarly reported, "seem[ed] to rule out the possibility that negotiations could end the building crisis with North Korea, but just a few hours later," Mattis, "meeting with his South Korean counter-part, sounded less belligerent." CBS showed Mattis saying in part, "We continue to work together, and the minister and I share a responsibility to provide for the protection of our nations, our populations and our interests."

The AP (8/30, Pennington) reports, "True to form...Trump sowed policy confusion with a tweet" that "appeared to clash with efforts by his Cabinet members to safeguard the possibility of a diplomatic solution." The AP says Trump's tweet "raised fresh uncertainty" about the Administration's strategy for North Korea.

Pointing to Wednesday's comments as an example, a Washington Post (8/30, Jaffe, Lamothe) analysis says that "away from the cameras and apart from the nonstop drama of the White House," Mattis has "come to play a role unlike any other Cabinet member," becoming a "force for calm, order and, in the eyes of the president's critics, quiet resistance to some of President Trump's most combative and divisive instincts." In what the Post says is "perhaps his greatest political feat," Mattis has "maintained this air of independence without directly provoking a president who demands absolute loyalty."

Trump Says 'Talking Not The Answer' On North Korea, Mattis Disagrees. Reuters (8/30, Ali, Kim) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov spoke by telephone with Secretary of State Tillerson on Wednesday and "urged the US to refrain from any military action on the Korean peninsula," which it warned would be "fraught with unpredictable consequences." Lavrov "also said Russia...believed any further sanctions on North Korea would be counter-productive."

U.S. Test Successfully Intercepts Ballistic Missile. The New York Times (8/30, Sullivan) reports the US conducted a missile-defense test on Wednesday off the coast of Hawaii and successfully intercepted a medium-range ballistic missile. Wednesday's test was conducted by the Missile Defense Agency and Navy sailors on the John Paul Jones, "a guided-missile destroyer." Missile Defense Agency Director Lt. Gen. Sam Greaves said, "We are working closely with the fleet to develop this important new capability, and this was a key milestone" in advancing the capability to intercept missiles.

USA Today (8/30, Michaels) says the test "raises fresh questions about the feasibility of the US military intercepting a North Korean missile test as a means of deterring the country from future provocative launches." Experts say the system "may not be a practical option since most North Korea missile tests have been aimed at the open seas."

Interior's Zinke Recommends Local Access To Monument.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/29, Bautista) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "wants the Marianas Trench Monument to continue to be federally protected, but acknowledged that it should be accessible as a resource to those who live in the area." In his report to President Trump last Friday, Zinke recommended "that the 27 national monuments, including the Marianas Trench Marine Monument, should continue to be federally protected, with a change as to who may access the monuments' grounds."

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/28) reports that the review of monuments was "praised by New England and Hawaii commercial fishing groups, along with New Mexico ranchers."

Strong Opposition Voiced To Reducing The National Marine Sanctuaries. The Samoa News (8/24, Sagapolutele) reports that "more than 98,000 whose comments were released on the federal portal – www.regulations.gov – in response to a US Department of Commerce notice issued June 26th seeking public input regarding President Trump's Apr. 28th executive order for the US Secretary of Commerce to conduct a review of national marine sanctuaries and marine national monuments designated or expanded since Apr. 28, 2007 throughout the nation." According to the article, "the vast majority of those who submitted comments strongly oppose any reduction to marine sanctuaries including the NMSAS, and some even specifically pointed to the importance of the Rose Atoll Monument to many marine species and birds."

National GOP Leaders' Push For Equal US Citizenship Is Backed.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/29, Encinares) reports that "Gov. Ralph DLG Torres and several members of the Legislature support the Republican Party's push for 'equal U.S. citizenship' to be extended to the three U.S. territories." The Republic National Committee last Friday adopted a resolution titled "Affirming Equal Citizenship for All Americans," which "says U.S. citizens residing in the 'territories of Guam, NMI, and the Virgin Islands,' regardless of their sex, race, color, ethnicity, religion or creed, are 'entitled to the full of enjoyment of their citizenship.'" The resolution calls for the U.S. Congress to "ensure that American citizens residing in the territories of Guam, NMI, and the Virgin Islands to have unfettered enjoyment of their American citizenship."

Earthquake Strikes Guam Hours After Kim Jong-un Threats.

The Daily Mail (8/30, Davies) reports that "a magnitude 5.2 earthquake has struck Guam just a day after Kim Jong-un promised to target a US military base on the island." The US Geological Survey "says the earthquake hit at 8am on Wednesday and that the epicenter was 51.7 miles (83.4km) southeast of Inarajan Village, a community of about 2,300 people."

Lolo Says Concerns Over N. Korea Threat Should Include Am Samoa.

The Samoa News (8/18, Sagapolutele) reports that "Gov. Lolo Matalasi Moliga says Congress needs to be aware that American Samoa is a US territory and a valuable platform for a military staging area and frontline defense, given its proximity to the Asian Rim countries." Moliga's "comments were made in an Aug. 15th letter to US Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke, a day after US Rep. William 'Mac' Thornberry, chairman of the US House Armed Forces Committee appeared on CNN discussing the escalating tension between North Korea and the U.S, particularly on the recent threat by North Korean leader, Kim Jong Un, to fire four missiles into waters near the US territory of Guam."

'We Have To Make Tough Decisions If We Want To Survive'.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (8/23) reports that Governor Kenneth Mapp said on talk radio "on Tuesday that the territory's financial condition demands difficult choices relative to government spending, stating that the territory's survival depends on its ability to live within its means." Mapp said, "We're just at a point where we simply have to make the tough decisions if we want to survive. Liken it to you in the community that have your family, if you're a two parent or one parent household and somebody gets laid off or your hours get reduced. Or if you're operating a business and the season goes off and the revenue is lower, you've got to make changes to survive because you can't just spend the way that you normally spend; you can't do the things that you normally do, so you must make the adjustments in order to remain balanced."

The St. Croix Source (8/22, Kossler) reports that "as a cost-saving measure to help with the territory's financial crisis, Gov. Kenneth Mapp sent a bill to the Senate this week changing the formula for premiums for active and retired government employees." According to the administration, "the changes would save about $21 million every year."

Additional coverage of the Virgin Islands' financial crisis was provided by the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (8/25).

New CW Permits Now Available.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/30) reports that Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan has announced "that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service has begun implementing his Northern Mariana Islands Economic Expansion Act, which President Trump signed into law on Aug. 22." According to the article, "an additional 350 CW-1 permits are now available for current employees whose permits expire between Aug. 23 and Sept. 30 of this year." The legislation "lifts the fiscal year cap on CW-1 permits from 12,998 to 13,348, the first time that the number of CW-1 permits has been allowed to increase."

Media Analyses: Trump's Push For "Pro-Worker" Tax Reform Lacked Specifics.

Local TV outlets offered favorable assessments of the President's push for tax reform during a visit to Springfield, MO, but national media coverage was generally critical, charging that Trump did not provide enough specifics. In a brief report, for example, the CBS Evening News (8/30, story 8, 0:20, Mason) said last night Trump "gave no specifics other than cutting the corporate tax rate from 35 percent to 15 percent," USA Today (8/30, Korte) indicated he "was selling a tax plan that largely doesn't exist," the Dallas Morning News (8/30, Benning) that "notably lacking was any plan," and the Los Angeles Times (8/30, Puzanghera) that the speech was "heavy on populism but almost devoid of specifics." Noted in nearly all stories was Trump's admonition to lawmakers that he doesn't "want to be disappointed" by them again – an apparent reference to efforts to repeal Obamacare earlier this summer which, says Bloomberg News (8/30, Sink, Olorunnipa), "ended...with a spectacular defeat." As Reuters (8/30, Morgan) reports, Trump went on to say, "I think Congress is going to make a comeback, I hope so. I'll tell you what, the United States is counting on it." According to KOLR-TV Springfield, MO (8/30, 6:01 p.m. CDT), that last comment "was met with some pretty enthusiastic applause."

KYTV-TV Springfield, MO (8/30, 6:02 p.m. CDT) reported, "The President is talking [about] rewriting the tax code and he said something we all can appreciate: he is planning to simplify the process. Apparently it used to be two pages long, the tax code, and now it's 100 pages long. He wants to take it back to simple." KYTV added that Trump "said 90% of Americans right now, 90%, have to hire a professional tax accountant to file their taxes every year. He's hoping that for the average Joe...those days are gone. Again, simplify the process, hopefully not make it so confusing, and for small business owners, he says ease the burden. And business owners here, at least, say it's about time."

The Washington Post (8/30, Paletta, Wagner) reports that "during the failed push to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act, Trump seemed disinterested in fully utilizing the bully pulpit provided by his office," but "on tax reform, the White House is planning a series of pitches by Trump himself, building on his remarks Wednesday." A "senior Republican congressional aide said Trump's speech was exactly the kind of message lawmakers want to see the president deliver and only wished he had started sooner."

The AP (8/30, Lucey, Thomas) reports that "Trump, who rarely travels to promote his policy agenda, chose to debut his tax overhaul pitch before employees at a manufacturing plant" in Springfield, "a community known as the birthplace of Route 66, one of the nation's original highways, and one known as America's Main Street." Said Trump, "This is where America's Main Street will begin its big, beautiful comeback." KODE-TV Joplin, MO (8/30, 5:03 p.m. CDT) said that Trump's "plan is to bring businesses back to the United States by exporting our goods and not our jobs. He plans to keep our jobs in America by reforming our taxes which according to him haven't been reformed in over 30 years." KTVI-TV St. Louis (8/30, 5:04 p.m. CDT) showed Trump saying, "We need a competitive tax code that creates more jobs and higher wages for Americans. It's time to give American workers the pay raise they have been looking for many, many years."

The New York Post (8/30, Fredericks) reports Trump said his tax reform ideas "would help workers and the middle class in an economy rigged against them," and the Wall Street Journal (8/30, Rubin) also reports the story under the headline "Trump Pitches Business Tax Cut To Middle Class." Meanwhile, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch (8/30, McDermott, Suntrup) refers to a "fervent call for lower and simpler taxes, including a more than 50-percent cut in business taxes," and notes Trump promised "a 'pro-job' 'pro-worker' 'pro-America' policy." Townhall (8/30, Pavlich) quotes the President as further stating, "This is our once in a generation opportunity to deliver real tax reform for everyday, hardworking Americans. ... This is our opportunity to deliver real tax reform for Americans. I am fully committed to working with Congress to get this job done." Trump also exhorted lawmakers to "out the partisan posturing behind us and come together as Americans, to create the 21st century tax code that our people deserve," adding, "What could possibly be more bipartisan than helping people keep more of what they earn?"

While the New York Times (8/30, A1, Davis) – as did the CBS Evening News (8/30, story 8, 0:20, Mason) – reports on its front page that Trump "offered few specifics beyond a goal of a 15 percent corporate tax rate," The Hill (8/30, Jagoda, Easley) indicated that he "laid out four principles he would like to see in a tax-code rewrite: A tax code that's simple and easy to understand, a globally competitive tax code, tax relief for middle-class families and bringing back trillions of dollars in money held overseas." Breitbart (8/30, Carney) said "this was a departure from the principles of tax reform announced during the 2016 campaign," which included a pledge not to "add to the debt or deficit of the federal government."

In an editorial, the Kansas City \(MO\) Star (8/30) quips, "No wonder he went to Missouri to say all this rather than to Sam Brownback's Kansas, where he would have gotten laughs in all the wrong places."

Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Hannity (8/30) that Trump went to Missouri and "basically said to them, 'We want those manufacturing jobs to come back. You deserve a pay raise, you deserve a tax cut.'" The instruction page is over 240 pages long. That's the instruction page. We are spending billions of hours, costing millions of jobs because of this draconian, outdated tax code." Trump "went to Missouri today to tell the nation and to tell the Congress...that this President is set on reforming the tax code and giving relief to middle-class families."

Conway said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (8/30), "This is basically like getting a pay raise for many middle-class Americans, middle-income earners, I should say. We are reducing their marginal rate, but we're also reducing the rate on small-business owners and entrepreneurs, who are already suffering under the yolk of Obamacare, which, of course, was one of the biggest job killers and tax raisers in modern history. In addition to that regulation they've had to overcome, they are now taxed in a way that hurts their productivity and their ability to attract and retain the American workforce, expand their operations, survive and prosper."

Former White House communications director Jen Psaki was asked on CNN's The Lead (8/30) if the White House should have postponed the push for tax reform. Psaki said, "If I were advising them, I would say yes, because the President's focus should be on Harvey. He should be communicating mainly about Harvey. What he is saying this week when Congress is not back is not changing the momentum for tax reform. Congress isn't even in Washington at this point in time."

Commentator Alice Stewart said on CNN's The Lead (8/30), "If he hadn't gone to Texas yesterday, I would say yes, postpone it. But going to Texas yesterday and showing his support and reiterating that the federal government is here to help you, that was critical. ... It's not going away, this will be an ongoing effort, but walking and chewing gum at the same time, pushing the agenda down the road and getting the message out there. It's good to talk about the tax cut, the corporate tax, but also good for people watching. Contact your members of Congress, let them know you support tax reform, because this is an important agenda to get passed."

Mara Liasson of NPR said on Fox News' Special Report (8/30), "President Trump sounded like he couldn't wait to get to Election Day, but he's got a long way to go on tax reform before he gets to blame Claire McCaskill for the end of it. Tax reform is an opportunity for Republicans to get all back on the same page with the President." But Trump "is going to have to get his Republicans together. Remember, the Treasury Secretary said this is going to be passed by August and it hasn't been. And some members of congress and tax-writing committee members have different ideas than the President about the rates should be, what those corporate rates should be.... But, tax reform is something, or at least released tax cuts is something that Republicans should be able to unite around."

Byron York of The Washington Examiner said on Fox News' Special Report (8/30), "It was a disciplined speech, a focused speech. Trump stayed on script, which is always good news for him. The most important point he made was his second reason for tax reform: create more jobs and higher wages. Republicans are doing a lot of research on what they need to do to win next year, and it all boils down to more jobs at higher wages."

Trump Fails To Mention Cohn As He Praises Officials Involved In Tax Push. Bloomberg News (8/30, Jacobs, Olorunnipa) reports Trump "singled out several top advisers who accompanied him to a speech about overhauling the tax code on Wednesday, but not the man leading the administration's effort, chief economic adviser Gary Cohn." Cohn "was among the officials who traveled with Trump to Missouri, including senior adviser Ivanka Trump, White House chief of staff John Kelly, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross and Small Business Administration chief Linda McMahon." The President "gave each of those five a shout-out," and also "named members of Congress in attendance."

Politico (8/30, McCaskill) points out that it "is unclear whether Cohn was inside the Loren Cook Company building as Trump spoke," but adds that "it's also not clear why Trump avoided a direct mention of Cohn, a potential candidate to replace Janet Yellen as chair of the Federal Reserve." Cohn "did criticize Trump last week during an interview for the president's response to the deadly violence at a white supremacist rally in Charlottesville."

Trump: If McCaskill Doesn't Support Tax Reform, "Vote Her Out Of Office." Also getting much press attention is the President's swipe at Sen. Claire McCaskill (D-MO). As the St. Louis Post-Dispatch (8/30, McDermott, Suntrup) reports, Trump "edged, briefly, into Missouri's high-profile 2018 Senate race, in which" McCaskill "is seeking her third term." Said Trump, "Your Sen. Claire McCaskill must do this for you...and if she doesn't do it for you, you must vote her out of office." The Post-Dispatch adds that comment "evoked from the crowd the biggest cheer of the day." The story says that present at the event were "most top Missouri Republicans, including US Sen. Roy Blunt, Gov. Eric Greitens, all six of the state's Republican members of Congress and most of the state's statewide elected Republicans." In fact, says the Kansas City \(MO\) Star (8/30, Lowry, Hancock), state Attorney General Josh Hawley (R), who is "exploring a run for US Senate next year against...McCaskill, was the only statewide Republican official to skip the president's visit."

The Washington Times (8/30, Boyer) reports that Trump also said, "We just can't do this anymore with the obstruction and the obstructionists. The Dems are looking to obstruct tax cuts and tax reform." Along those lines, the Times reports Trump's push is "likely to unify Republicans and raise pressure on Democrats in conservative states for some rare cooperation."

Politico (8/30, Gerstein) reported that Trump's "public electoral threat Wednesday against...McCaskill...triggered another round of questions about the administration's blurring the line between partisan politics and official business." According to "ethics experts...the main issue...is whether he was ad-libbing or whether White House aides planned for him to urge McCaskill's defeat." While "Trump is not covered by the Hatch Act, the federal law prohibiting politicking while on official duty...White House officials are subject to the measure." While "the White House did not respond to a question about who prepared the speech or how the related expenses would be paid for," press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said, "It's not a political threat when you ask a member of Congress to do their job."

In a piece titled "Why Claire McCaskill Is Holding Her Fire," Kevin Robillard wrote for Politico Magazine (8/30, Robillard) that Trump had "already launched an opening salvo at McCaskill, arguably the most vulnerable Democratic senator heading into the 2018 elections, saying [in a tweet] 'C.M.' is 'opposed to big tax cuts.' That tweet marked the unofficial start of what will be a two-year GOP-wide effort to disparage and eventually defeat" McCaskill, who "knows what's coming, and she has chosen not to fire back, even at a president who is as hot a target for her party as Trump. That's because McCaskill knows the futility of trying to persuade staunchly conservative voters."

White House Targeting Manchin, Donnelly And Heitkamp As Potential Tax Reform Backers. Politico (8/30, Nussbaum, Schor) that even as Trump tried to put McCaskill on the spot, Vice President Pence was preparing to visit West Virginia – "a state Trump carried by more than 40 points" – to "appear alongside Sen. Joe Manchin...at a Chamber of Commerce event." Manchin "is up for re-election in 2018. Like Manchin, Sens. Joe Donnelly and Heidi Heitkamp...are also top targets for the White House," as the three "were the only three Democratic senators who didn't sign a letter circulated by minority leader Chuck Schumer this month outlining principles for Democrats on tax reform." A "senior administration official" is quoted as saying, "If they don't help us, it could end up hurting them in the 2018 midterms."

CNN Cut Away From Trump Speech. The Hill (8/30, Concha) reported that "CNN cut away early from...Trump's speech on tax reform Wednesday, breaking with other cable news and business networks." The Hill added that "seven minutes into the president's speech, at approximately 2:48 p.m., CNN switched to covering anchor Brooke Baldwin's Skype interview with a flood victim in Texas." Fox News, Fox Business, MSNBC, CNBC, Bloomberg TV, One America News and Newsmax TV "all stayed with the president's speech" for the 34 minutes it lasted.

Trump To Discuss Tax Reform With "Big Six" As Ryan, Brady Express Support. A "White House official" told Roll Call (8/30, Bennett) Trump "will meet with the 'Big Six' group of tax writers Tuesday at the White House." The "group of heavy-hitters includes: Speaker Paul D. Ryan, House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady," Mnuchin, "Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch, and Cohn." Roll Call adds that "one member of that group, Ryan, described Trump and congressional Republicans as 'united in our determination to get this done,'" while Brady "said he was encouraged by Trump's remarks."

NBC Nightly News (8/30, story 5, 2:20, Jackson) said "top Republicans on Capitol Hill tell NBC News they're confident tax reform will be easier than healthcare," but adds that "before Congress can get to that, it has to pass a budget first, as pressure from the President builds." In an editorial, meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (8/30, Board) ties success on tax reform to any GOP chances of winning in 2018, and urges Republican lawmakers to gear their efforts toward crafting a bill that lowers taxes and helps spark economic growth.

Fox Poll: Only 14% Believe Tax Reform Likely To Be Enacted. Fox News (8/30, Blanton) reported that "the latest Fox News poll finds that just 15 percent of voters approve of the job Congress is doing, while about five times as many, 74 percent, disapprove." Meanwhile, "49 percent of voters feel it is important Congress pass tax reform legislation this year," but "far fewer, 14 percent, think it's likely to get accomplished."

Milbank: Republican Tax Cuts Will Balloon The Debt. In his Washington Post (8/30) column, Dana Milbank writes that Republicans – in the words of Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget President Maya MacGuineas – are starting to fall into a "predictable spiral" of pressing for tax cuts while failing to address their impact on the federal debt, as evidenced by the cuts in President Trump's announced tax reform plan coupled with increases in defense spending. Milbank argues that Trump "is poised to oversee an exponential increase in that debt."

Trump Could Request Harvey Aid Package Next Week.

The Washington Post (8/30, Paletta, O'Keefe, Debonis) reports that the President "could request a package of emergency funding to deal with the damage caused by Hurricane Harvey as soon as next week," according to "a senior administration official," but "no final decision on the funding request has been made and it could fluctuate based on conversations with lawmakers." Roll Call (8/30, Bennett) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell, House Speaker Ryan, Senate Minority Leader Schumer, and House Minority Leader Pelosi are expected to meet with White House officials next week.

However, Roll Call (8/30, Bennett) reports, "The White House has a message for those speculating on how much hurricane-ravaged Texas might need from the federal government and how a relief package might move through Congress: Pump the brakes." Press secretary Sarah Sanders said Tuesday evening "that it is too soon to say how a Harvey aid package might move through Congress." Sanders said, "We are still working through that process, I think the first thing is to determine how much they need, what the need is, and then develop the best process and plan for them." The Washington Examiner (8/30, Giaritelli) reports that Sanders said the President "will act to ensure Texas receives federal funding approved by Congress but skated around what that process could entail." Kellyanne Conway similarly said on CNN's Cuomo Prime Time (8/30), "We don't know if it will be weeks, months, years. But this president and vice president and Cabinet stand ready to assist those in need."

The AP (8/30) reports that though the President "is promising billions...his Republican allies in the House are looking at cutting almost $1 billion from disaster accounts to help finance the president's border wall." The pending FEMA budget cut "is part of a massive spending bill that the House is scheduled to consider next week." McClatchy (8/30, Clark) reports that though the President has threatened to shut down the government over border wall funding, that "may be muted by negotiations among congressional leaders" eager to avoid a shutdown "and quickly deliver aid to storm-ravaged Texas."

The Houston Chronicle (8/30, Ramirez) reports, "Harvey is gone, but the difficult task of rebuilding the Texas coast still remains." At a joint news conference, Sen. Ted Cruz, Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-TX), and Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner "stressed the need to push a united message to Washington." Jackson Lee said, "This is a bipartisan effort. I've gotten calls from across the country from Republicans and Democrats."

Rep. Joaquin Castro (D-TX) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (8/30), "I hope Congress can go back into session and Texas will be a supplemental package in the tens of billions of dollars. I hope we can support that as Republicans and Democrats and really learn a lesson not to get into the divisiveness that characterized the Superstorm Sandy relief package."

Rep. Mike McCaul (R-TX) was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (8/30) if he is concerned that federal agencies have sufficient personnel in their regional offices to handle the recovery process. McCaul said, "I believe they have it right now. The question is at what point is that going to be depleted and we are going to need assistance coming in. ... FEMA has a $3 billion disaster recovery fund. That will be depleted I think fairly soon as you all well know, this will be a topic of conversation when we get back into Congress. There will be an emergency supplemental bill to deal with this."

Rep. Ted Poe (R-TX) said on CNN's The Lead (8/30), "The state and the local folks are responsible first for disaster relief funds, and I think they have spent all of those. There are some funds available already, but I do believe that there will have to be some type of appropriation specifically for Hurricane Harvey for the entire Gulf Coast, wherever it goes. ... I think people get it, that this is a national disaster that affects everybody, and I think there will be an appropriation."

Joel Pollak of Breitbart (8/30, Pollak) suggests President Trump tie Harvey aid to his infrastructure bill, writing, "The issues are closely related, since there will be an urgent demand to rebuild or repair infrastructure damaged by the storm, and other states threatened by future natural disasters – not just hurricanes – will want to shore up their defenses now." And "there may not be another opportunity to jump-start the president's stalled infrastructure plans." The Hill (8/30, Zanona) reports that Administration officials said Wednesday that the infrastructure package "will be broken up into three pieces, with the largest chunk of funding dedicated to projects that already have some private or local money secured." OMB Director Mulvaney told state and local officials, "We're looking at breaking this up into pieces. The largest piece of the package is going to be wrapped around incentives."

USA Today (8/30, Jansen) reports that though Texas "has a larger-than-average share of bridges: 53,488 out of the country's 614,387," the state "takes above-average care of them, according to a review by the American Society of Civil Engineers: Only 900 or 1.7% are rated structurally deficient by federal inspectors. For comparison, 9% of bridges nationwide are rated deficient."

Abbott Says Recovery May Cost Federal Government More Than $125 Billion. The Washington Times (8/30, Dinan) reports that Gov. Greg Abbott said Wednesday that "he expects federal taxpayers will have to pony up 'far in excess' of $125 billion to help the recovery effort. ... He said the federal government spent about $125 billion on Katrina – though federal budget numbers say the figure was closer to $100 billion – and Mr. Abbott said Texas will need more than that." Reuters (8/30, Scheyder) briefly reports on Abbott's statement. Bloomberg Business (8/30, Romero) reports that the "full economic impact is still unclear. Risk-modeling company RMS estimates $70 billion to $90 billion in losses from wind, storm surge and flood damage," most of it in the Houston area.

Trump Rolled Back Obama Disaster Aid Order Two Weeks Before Storm. The AP (8/30, Biesecker, Lowy) reports that two weeks before the storm, President Trump "quietly rolled back an order by his predecessor that would have made it easier for storm-ravaged communities to use federal emergency aid to rebuild bridges, roads and other structures so they can better withstand future disasters." Critics say the order "could force Houston and other cities to rebuild hospitals and highways in the same way and in the same flood-prone areas."

NYTimes Analysis: 2013 Sandy Aid Bill Was Not "Full Of Pork." The New York Times (8/30, Qiu) reports, "As Tropical Storm Harvey barrels down the Gulf Coast and talk of a disaster-relief bill begins, Republican lawmakers from Texas are rushing to defend their 2013 votes against spending $50.5 billion on Hurricane Sandy relief." While GOP critics say the 2013 bill was "full of pork," a Times assessment finds the claims "hyperbolic and misleading," with most of the funding either "Sandy-related" or intended "to mitigate future storms."

Gov. Chris Christie said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/30) that Congress should pass a relief bill "quickly. The fact is that we know after Katrina and Sandy, we know the parameters of the kind of aid that will be necessary and how it will be used. The recovery time for Sandy has been half the amount of time it took for Katrina. We learned a lot from the mistakes of Katrina and they can learn from some of the mistakes they learned from Sandy."

US Economy Grew 3% In Q2, In "Best Quarterly Showing In Two Years."

The New York Times (8/30, Schwartz) reports that the Commerce Department on Wednesday said "that the economy had expanded at an annual rate of 3 percent in the second quarter of the year, better than initially estimated, and a substantial acceleration over the first quarter's lackluster 1.2 percent pace. The revised figure is still well below President Trump's target of 4 percent growth, but it is the economy's best quarterly showing in two years. 'The economy is stronger than you think,' said Chris Rupkey, the chief financial economist at Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group in New York. 'Bet on it.'"

Reuters (8/30, Mutikani) reports, "The upward revision from the 2.6 percent pace reported last month reflected robust consumer spending as well as strong business investment. ... Economists had expected that second-quarter GDP growth would be raised to a 2.7 percent rate." Reuters adds, "Growth estimates for the third quarter are as high as a 3.4 percent rate."

The Wall Street Journal (8/30, Leubsdorf) reports that there is currently little indication that a downturn in the economy is imminent. Morgan Stanley chief US economist Ellen Zenter told the Journal, "Typically in a business expansion, you would see growth start to arc downward as we get later into the cycle. ... It's incredible to sustain this kind of momentum this far into a business expansion."

The Hill (8/30, Ellis) reported that President Trump on Wednesday "touted" the upward revision "showing that the economy grew at an annualized rate of 3 percent in the second quarter of 2017, while attempting to take a shot at his predecessor, Barack Obama. 'We just announced that we hit 3 percent in [gross domestic product]. It just came out. And on a yearly basis, as you know, the last administration during an eight-year period never hit 3 percent, so we're really on our way,' Trump said during a speech on tax reform in Springfield, Mo."

Private-Sector Added "Robust 237,000 Net New Jobs" In August. The Los Angeles Times (8/30, Puzanghera) reports that the private sector added "a robust 237,000 net new jobs" in August, "a sign that the labor market remains strong and should start pushing up wages. The figures released Wednesday by payroll firm Automatic Data Processing exceeded analysts' expectations of 185,000 and were a significant improvement over an upwardly revised 201,000 net new private-sector jobs in July." Said Moody's Analytics chief economist Mark Zandi, "The job market continues to power forward. ... Job creation is strong across nearly all industries [and] company sizes. Mounting labor shortages are set to get much worse."

Buffett: "I Would Guess We Are In A 2% Growth Economy." USA Today (8/30, Shell) reports that billionaire investor Warren Buffett "says it still feels more like a 2% economy to him despite the government" revising "its second-quarter GDP growth estimate to 3%." USA Today adds, "When asked if it felt like a 3% economy, Buffett" – appearing on CNBC – replied, "I would guess we are in a 2% growth economy now. Every now and then we think we are accelerating, and every now and then that maybe there's a double dip. It just seems to be a couple of percent."

Trump Administration Revokes Waiver Policy For Welfare Work Requirements.

In a move toward reimposing work requirements for welfare recipients, the Trump Administration on Wednesday revoked "an Obama-era policy that had urged states to apply for waivers exempting the poor from having to show they were either getting job training or looking for work," the Washington Times (8/30, Dinan) reports. The move restores the 1986 welfare reform law, which includes the work requirement, as written.

The AP (8/30) says the Obama Administration said in 2012 that "it would be willing to grant states waivers to some of the requirements" if governors "could show they could accomplish the same welfare-to-work goals using different methods." While Ohio was the only state to apply for a waiver, it was "neither approved nor denied by the Obama administration." The state was told Wednesday that its application was being denied. According to Acting Assistant Secretary for Children and Families Steven Wagner, the waiver option is being replaced "by an expectation that work should always be encouraged as a condition for receiving welfare."

Administration Nixes Obama Rule Requiring Companies To Report Pay Data.

Reuters (8/30, Wiessner) reports that the Trump Administration has blocked an Obama-era rule "requiring US employers to report detailed pay data broken down by gender and race echoing business groups by saying it would not have the intended effect of addressing wage gaps." OMB said in a memo on Tuesday that "the rule was burdensome to companies and could pose privacy and confidentiality issues." Reuters calls the move "the Trump administration's latest bid to undo Obama-era policies designed to help workers or unions." A Wall Street Journal (8/30) editorial is critical of the rule and says the decision to block it is good news for employers and workers who want their pay to be based on merit rather than government mandates.

Trump Rolls Back Obama-Era Order To Fund Rebuilding After Storms.

Two weeks before Hurricane Harvey "engulfed much of Houston" in floodwaters, the AP (8/30, Biesecker and Lowy) reports President Trump "quietly rolled back an order by his predecessor that would have made it easier for storm-ravaged communities to use federal emergency aid to rebuild bridges, roads and other structures." The AP says that order "would have permitted the rebuilding to take into account climate scientists' predictions of stronger storms and more frequent flooding."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Affirming Privacy, Rebuking India's Leaders." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/30) writes that the Indian Supreme Court's unanimous decision last week affirming a fundamental right to privacy has opened the door "to litigation on specific privacy issues down the line," such as dietary restrictions or gay marriage, and has reaffirmed "the fundamental freedoms that make all democracies strong."

"On Voting Reforms, Follow Illinois, Not Texas." The New York Times (8/31) editorializes, "In the face of America's abysmal voter participation rates, lawmakers have two choices: They can make voting easier, or they can make it harder. Illinois made the right choice this week" by enacting automatic voter registration. The bill, "which could add as many as one million voters to the state's rolls, was signed by Gov. Bruce Rauner, a Republican who had vetoed similar legislation last year."

"Beyond Houston, A World Awash." The New York Times (8/31) editorializes, "Houston isn't the only major city reeling from record rainfall and devastating floods. ... So far this summer, flooding has killed more than 1,000 people in India, Nepal and perennially flood-prone Bangladesh. The United Nations says at least 41 million people have been directly affected by flooding and landslides in South Asia, with homes and croplands destroyed." Like Hurricane Harvey, "these unnatural rainfalls carry two messages. One is the risk of unregulated development. ... The second message is that unabated climate change does, indeed, exact a price."

Washington Post.

"After Harvey, Flood Insurance Needs Reform." A Washington Post (8/30) editorial says the US is "long overdue for smart reforms" to the National Flood Insurance Program, and that the reauthorization deadline next month should "galvanize Congress to ensure enough money is available to pay current commitments, while reforming NFIP for the future." The Post argues that "what's needed are tougher flood-risk mitigation requirements, more realistic premiums and encouragement for private-sector involvement in the business, based on modern technology that may enable insurance companies to underwrite risks they could not have underwritten in the 1960s."

"Will The Divider In Chief Strike Again?" In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/30) wonders whether President Trump will dismantle DACA as requested by Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton and other conservatives who challenge the program as unconstitutional or preserve it. The Post concludes, "There is no clamor for ending DACA, which polls suggest enjoys broad public support. Ending the program would be a cruel betrayal and a gratuitous blow against the very people Mr. Trump just months ago described as 'incredible.'"

"Fixing The 'Grocery Gap.'" In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/30) writes that the DC government needs to address better the lack of grocery options in the city's Wards 7 and 8, arguing that the lack of access to fresh produce and other foods "can lead to poor nutrition and bad health outcomes," especially among "some of the city's most vulnerable people."

Wall Street Journal.

"The GOP's Tax Reform Baseline." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/30, Board) ties success on tax reform to any GOP chances of winning in 2018, and urges Republican lawmakers to gear their efforts toward crafting a bill that lowers taxes and helps spark economic growth.

"Rauner's Big School Victory." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/30) writes that Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner on Wednesday signed into law a state private-school choice program providing $100 million in tax-credit scholarships that will allow low-income students to attend private schools. The Journal argues that the law – which also includes $450 million for Chicago Public Schools – offers a great step forward in helping poorer students have greater academic opportunities.

"An Obama Pay Rule Dies." A Wall Street Journal (8/30) editorial is critical of an Obama-era rule requiring companies to report pay data broken down by gender and race, and says the Trump Administration's decision to block it is good news for employers and workers who want their pay to be based on merit rather than government mandates.

Lawuits Address Whether Presidents Can Modify Monuments.

The AP (12/6, McCombs, Price) reports that "a flurry of lawsuits" President Trump's move to shrink the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments "could finally bring an answer to the much-debated question of whether presidents have the legal authority to undo or change monuments created by past presidents." Already, four lawsuits have been filed, "and more are expected – especially if Trump follows Zinke's recommendations to shrink two other monuments – Gold Butte in Nevada and Cascade Siskiyou in Oregon." But "legal experts disagree on whether the 1906 Antiquities Act – allowing presidents to create a monument – also lets them reduce one."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Post (12/6, Grandoni).

Patagonia Sues To Prevent Trump Administration From Shrinking Bears Ears Monument. The Washington Examiner (12/6, Correll) reports that "outdoor recreation company Patagonia sued Wednesday to block President Trump from shrinking Bears Ears National Monument in Utah." Patagonia called Trump's decision to reduce the size of the Bears Ears monument an "extreme overreach in authority." The Huffington Post (12/6, Madani) reports that Patagonia President and CEO Rose Marcario said in a statement, "The Administration's unlawful actions betray our shared responsibility to protect iconic places for future generations and represent the largest elimination of protected land in American history. We've fought to protect these places since we were founded and now we'll continue that fight in the courts."

Patagonia, Interior Department Trade Twitter Barbs Over 'Special Interests'. CNN (12/6, Green) reports the Interior Department and outdoor retailer Patagonia "continued their public spat over US national monuments Tuesday on Twitter, trading barbs over each others' ties to 'special interests.'" In a tweet, Patagonia referred to "a back-and-forth over" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "travel on behalf of the agency: 'It's odd that @SecretaryZinke has no problem with special interests when they're paying for his private jets. We have been fighting for these lands for decades, so that hunters, fisherman, hikers and everyone else can use them and help us protect them.'" Following Patagonia's tweet, "the official Interior spokesperson account piped in, calling aspects of Patagonia's statement 'fake news.'" Another tweet a few minutes later said, "Not a jet. Not paid by spec interest. Same prop that prev secs used. selected by career officials."

Patagonia CEO On Trump Shrinking Monuments: 'This Is Not About Politics'. In its "Blog Briefing Room" blog, The Hill (12/6, Delk) reports that Patagonia CEO Rose Marcario "denied the company having any political motivations in its website's statement condemning President Trump's 'illegal' move to shrink two national monuments in Utah." In an op-ed for TIME (12/6, Marcario), Marcario wrote, "This is not about politics; it's about protecting the places we love and keeping the great promise of this country for our children and grandchildren. We won't let President Trump tear down our heritage and sell it to the highest bidder." Marcario also "defended the company's claim that Trump's move was illegal, citing the Antiquities Act of 1906 that allows presidents to designate national monuments but noted it does 'not give the President the power to undo a prior president's monument designations.'"

Additional Coverage. Also reporting are AP (12/6, McCOMBS), NBC News (12/6, Rainey), PBS NewsHour (12/6, Grabenstein), The New Yorker (12/6, Nijhuis), and the Santa Fe \(NM\) Reporter (12/6, Paskus).

Alaskan Oil Lease Sale Brings Few Bids Despite Vast Territory Offered.

Reuters (12/6, Rosen) reports the Trump Administration's oil and gas lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska only received seven bids. The bids covered about 80,000 acres, less than 1 percent of the 10.3 million acres offered in the sale. ConocoPhillips Alaska submitted all seven bids, worth $1.16 million, in partnership with Anadarko. Ted Murphy, associate director of the BLM's Alaska office, said, "Lease sale interest is unpredictable. ... We don't know what industry, ultimately, will be interested in getting from year to year." The AP (12/6, Joling) reports Kristen Miller, conservation director of the Alaska Wilderness League, said the sale shows that any drilling in the Arctic Refuge will not bring in the expected revenue. The bids on Wednesday brought in $14.99 an acre, leading Miller to say, "At that price, leasing the entirety of the Arctic Refuge coastal plain's 1.5 million acres would raise slightly more than $11 million in revenue for the federal government, a far cry from the billion dollar lie that Trump and Republicans are feeding the American public."

Conservation Group Takes After Zinke Over Park Fees; Praises Tester.

KRTV-TV Great Falls, MT (12/6, Dennison) reports that the political arm of the Natural Resources Defense Fund, has launched a "five-figure" ad campaign in Montana opposing the Trump Administration proposal to hike "entrance fees to national parks – and praising Democratic U.S. Sen. Jon Tester for his stand on the issue." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift said "Wednesday that the increase is 'still more affordable than taking a family of four to see a 3-D movie,' and that the majority of the increased funds will pay for park maintenance." Swift "also noted that NRDC has filed several 'expensive and frivolous lawsuits' against the Interior Department, wasting 'valuable taxpayer funds.'" The campaign by NRDC Action Fund is "the latest of several efforts by conservation groups either taking" after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "or boosting Tester, who is up for re-election in 2018."

Four Major Wildfires Ravage California.

ABC World News Tonight (12/6, lead story, 3:35, Muir) reported that "at least four major fires" burned out of control in California, with "flames creeping towards the homes perched on the hills of LA." 200 structures, including a hospital, homes, and apartment buildings, have been destroyed so far. At least seven firefighters have been injured at the Creek Fire. Gale-force winds were predicted for Wednesday night, which could only exacerbate the situation. The CBS Evening News (12/6, story 3, 2:15, Glor) reported that "for much of the day, a stretch of the 405, a major highway, was closed."

NBC Nightly News (12/6, lead story, 2:50, Holt) reported that a fifth major wildfire broke out in Los Angeles near Brentwood early in the morning. Winds "could reach 70 miles per hour tomorrow," while about "15,000 homes are in the path of fire." On the ground, hundreds of firefighters "scrambled door to door, saving dozens of homes." The dry, summer-like conditions have made efforts to fight the fires far more difficult. ABC World News Tonight (12/6, story 2, 0:50, Muir) reported that Los Angeles could face 30 to 40-mile-per-hour wind gusts tomorrow, with 70 to 80-mile-per-hour gusts possible in the mountains.

The AP (12/7, Balsamo, Melley) reports that "about 200,000 people were under evacuation orders." There have only been a few reported injuries, and no deaths. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection Director Ken Pimlott said that the department "issued a purple forecast, the most severe, for the first time ever." Production of at least two television shows, HBO's "Westworld" and CBS' "S.W.A.T.," "was suspended because of the danger to cast and crew from two nearby fires."

USA Today (12/6) reports that there were five separate fires: "the Thomas fire, which started in Ventura County northwest of downtown Los Angeles;" "the Creek fire, north of downtown Los Angeles;" "the Rye fire...near Santa Clarita;" "the Little Mountain fire in San Bernardino;" and the Skirball fire, which began "near the Skirball Cultural Center in west Los Angeles."

The Washington Post (12/6, Wilson, Berman, Rosenberg) reports that "the Thomas Fire burned across 90,000 acres on Wednesday, spreading through an area larger than the city of Detroit." The Skirball Fire forced the evacuation of 1,200 homes. Officials in Ventura County "said they expected the fire to grow to the north and west over the next two days, as well as what one Cal Fire official, Tim Chavez, said was a 'large probability of spot fires that will spread easily and spread rapidly.'"

The New York Times (12/6, Medina, Pérez-Peña) reports that "smoke from the fires ringing the region could be spotted from the Santa Monica Pier, the streets of downtown and the beaches of Santa Catalina Island." Additionally, "the J. Paul Getty Museum in Los Angeles was closed to the public for a second day on Wednesday because of the wildfires."

The Los Angeles Times (12/6, Etehad, Nelson, Kohli) reports one fire destroyed several homes in the exclusive Los Angeles neighborhood of Bel-Air.

Fires Cause Air Quality To Deteriorate. NBC Nightly News (12/6, story 2, 1:20, Dahlgren) reported that the fires have caused a thick haze to envelop Southern California, with "smoke so dense, you can see it from space." In several counties, air quality warnings have been issued. Residents have been warned to stay indoors, and over 200 schools have closed. The CBS Evening News (12/6, story 4, 0:55, Glor) reported that Ventura County officials have warned residents that "there will be a severe impact on air quality and visibility."

Vietnam Wall Brings Healing.

The Nevada Appeal (12/6, Ranson) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was among the speakers on Veterans Day at the Vietnam Wall Zinke "said the wall is a tribute to remembering Vietnam veterans." He said, "We should never run away from the history of our country. We should learn. When I served in the seal teams for 23 years, 1985, most of my instructors were SEALs that had served in Vietnam. They cut their teeth in the jungles and the rivers. I learned a lot from those fine warriors. I have learned a lot from you, those that have fought. I've learned commitment, dedication, sacrifice."

Heller Bill Protects Special Federal Lands Without Using Taxpayer Funds.

The Ripon Advance (12/6) reports that Sen. Dean Heller on Monday "introduced bipartisan legislation to enable protecting and preserving iconic Western federal lands with special conservation importance without using taxpayer funds." The bill "reauthorizes the Federal Land Transaction Facilitation Act (FLTFA), which expired in 2011." Heller said, "This bipartisan program provides a fiscally responsible way to protect and manage important public lands in Nevada and throughout the West. Not only will it spur economic growth and development, it will also keep conservation at the forefront of the region's needs."

Area Of Protected Land Larger Than California At Risk From Drilling.

The MintPress News (12/6, Carter) reports that "an area of protected land larger than California could be at risk from fossil fuel development, as the Trump administration looks to ramp up drilling on federal lands – according to a new investigation by Uearthed." The analysis "mapped the overlap between every protected park in the US and potentially major reserves of oil, gas and coal." The report "shows how much protected land – and which iconic landscapes – could be affected by the Trump administration's goal of opening up more land for energy development than ever before."

Bureau Of Land Management

Grazing Resumes On Land Burned In Oregon, Idaho Wildfires.

The AP (12/6) reports that "ranchers in Idaho and Oregon have begun grazing their cattle again on some of the thousands of acres burned in wildfires in 2015." The Bureau of Land Management has "allowed grazing to resume on 48 of the 84 pastures on affected allotments in southwest Idaho and southeast Oregon." According to Peter Torma, Soda Fire project manager for the BLM, "a decision on whether to resume grazing on the remaining 36 pastures is expected to come later this month."

Bureau Of Reclamation

House Panel Considers Extending Endangered Fish Recovery Programs.

Courthouse News (12/6, Buchman) reports that "the House Natural Resources Committee considered legislation Wednesday that will extend endangered fish recovery programs in the Upper Colorado and San Juan rivers and direct the Interior Department to conduct an in-depth review of the success of the program to date." Rep. John Curtis' bill, the Endangered Fish Recovery Programs Extension Act of 2017, "would do two things: first, it would allow for the continued annual collection of fees from water and power users to continue funding the collaborative restoration efforts involving state and federal agencies, tribes and other stakeholders." Second, the legislation "directs the Interior Department to assess how well the programs are working and how they can be improved."

Georgia Initiative Brings Business To The Table To Save A Rare Animal.

On its website, WABE-FM Atlanta (12/6, Samuel) discusses the Georgia Gopher Tortoise Initiative, a partnership between state wildlife officials and businesses working to protect the tortoise and its habitat. The goal is to prevent the tortoise from being included on the federal endangered species list, which "can be bad for business, since protected species can mean red tape and additional costs." The article highlights the Gopher Tortoise habitat maintained by Georgia Power adjacent to Plant Hatch. Georgia Power wildlife biologist Jim Ozier said, "We're glad to have them here. ... Gopher tortoises do very well right next door." According to the article, Ozier "says in addition to planning around the tortoises, to make sure they're not affected by transmission line maintenance, Georgia Power plans to bring fire back to the woods next to the power lines, in the form of controlled burns, to restore the longleaf pine savannah that would have grown here naturally."

Panther Deaths Down For First Time In Years.

The Fort Myers \(FL\) News-Press (12/6, Gillis) reports that "although the Florida panther population is growing, the number of overall documented deaths may be down this year for the first time in years." According to the article, "twenty-eight big cats have died this year, with 23 of those being road kills and the others with cause of death listed as intraspecific aggression (panthers killing panthers) and unknown." The article notes "that's down from last year's record of 42 overall deaths and 34 vehicle kills, although there are still three weeks left in the year."

National Park Service

National Park Service Awards $18,000 Grant To Aid Restoration Of Topeka's Historic Constitution Hall.

The Topeka \(KS\) Capital-Journal (12/6, Hrenchir) reports the National Park Service recently awarded $18,000 "to help restore the front doors and windows of Topeka's Constitution Hall, which was the site of events in the 1850s that helped shape this nation's history." Diane Miller, national program manager for the National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom, noted that "the effort to restore the front doors and front windows at Constitution Hall, 427-429 S. Kansas Ave., was among only 16 projects chosen to receive funding from 41 applications nationwide." In a letter to Grant Glenn, president of the not-for-profit Friends of the Free State Capitol, Inc., Miller wrote, "We found your project to be very exciting and feel that it will advance the goals of preserving the history of the Underground Railroad and informing the public. We commend your creativity in developing the proposal and your dedication to this important part of our heritage."

Town Clock Church Gets Network To Freedom Grant.

The Jefferson \(IN\) News & Tribune (12/6) reports that the National Park Service awarded a Network to Freedom grant of $15,940 to the Friends of the Town Clock Church. The application sought funds for "tuck-pointing the historic Town Clock Church at Second Baptist Church in New Albany." The article notes that "the federal grant requires a dollar for dollar match" and "the Friends of the Town Clock Church will need to raise $15,940 to match the grant."

In Oklahoma, The National Park Service Estimates There Are $19.9 Million In Deferred Maintenance.

The Oklahoma Gazette (12/6, Eastes) reports that "according to National Park Service, Chickasaw National Recreation Area, Washita Battlefield National Historic Site and Oklahoma City National Memorial & Museum welcomed 1.6 million visitors, who spent an estimated $27 million in OKC and across the state." However, the article notes that Chickasaw National Recreation Area "requires $19.7 million in repairs" and Washita Battlefield National Historic Site "lists $196,027 in needed repairs."

North Dakota: Refinery Near National Park Could Win Permit.

The AP (12/6, Nicholson) reports that a proposed oil refinery that would be near the "Theodore Roosevelt National Park has met federal and state air pollution rules" and will now undergo a public comment period prior to obtaining a permit. Meridian Energy Group has met or exceeded the air quality permit requirements for the proposed Davis Refinery that is expected to be worth more than $800 million. The Davis Refinery must also obtain a water permit from North Dakota.

Katherine Landing's Commercial Services To Be Updated.

The Kingman \(AZ\) Daily Miner (12/6) reports that the National Park Service has "awarded a 15-year contract to Urban Park Concessionaires to operate commercial services at Katherine Landing on Lake Mohave." Lizette Richardson, Lake Mead National Recreation Area superintendent, said, "The National Park Service has invested millions to enhance the services at this popular destination. With our new private partner, we anticipate there will be even further redevelopment of the area." Beginning in the spring, Urban Park Concessionaires will "provide a variety of commercial services at Katherine Landing, including a full-service marina with moorage, boat rentals, food and beverage, retail, fuel, campground and other related services."

NPS Set To Rehabilitate Kalahaku Overlook Area.

The Maui \(HI\) News (12/6) reports that the National Park Service is proposing a plan to rehabilitate the Kalahaku Overlook at Haleakala National Park. The NPS will host a public meeting on Thursday to discuss the proposal.

Sea Level Rise Could Drown More Than 2,500 Louisiana Historic Sites.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (12/6, Sneath) reports that "more than 19,600 historically significant sites along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts could be lost to sea level rise, according to a new peer-reviewed study published in PLUS ONE." The study examined "records of archaeological sites and the National Register of Historic Places from nine states and overlays that information with projected sea level rise over the next century." The study said, "Tens of thousands of historic and prehistoric archaeological sites, and thousands of properties currently designated eligible for inclusion on the (National Register of Historic Places), which include archaeological sites, standing structures, and other cultural property types, will be submerged and hence lost or damaged, as well as underwater resources that will be effected by changes in ocean acidification, currents, and shipping patterns."

Sen. Murkowski Moves To Retake Federal Control Over Bikini Trust Fund.

Hawaii Public Radio (12/6, Conan) reports that last month, the Interior Department "announced it was time for the people of Bikini to make decisions, not policy makers in Washington DC, and transferred control over the Bikini Resettlement trust fund." Soon after, "11 million dollars was withdrawn from the 59 million dollar fund, and now Senator Lisa Murkowski of Alaska plans legislation to restore federal supervision." Murkowski "objected that an amount more than double the annual budget was withdrawn without any agreement on how it would be spent."

US Geological Survey

Interior Department's Climate Science Centers Persevere.

The High Country \(CO\) News (12/7, Shogren) reports that President Trump's "first budget proposal took a big swing" at Interior's eight regional Climate Science Centers, "proposing to cut their numbers in half and reduce their budget by a third." However, the Trump Administration "didn't try to eliminate them outright as it has many other Obama climate change initiatives." The article says that "the key to their resilience is that they don't focus on the kinds of climate science that the Trump administration likes least – research into the human role in climate change and how to reduce greenhouse gas emissions." Supporters of the Climate Science Centers are now hopeful "the centers will ride out" the Trump Administration.

West Coast Earthquake Early Warning System Continues Progress Toward Public Use.

Phys \(UK\) (12/6) reports that "in two papers published December 6 in Seismological Research Letters, researchers describe the key components and testing platform for the prototype ShakeAlert system, now being tested in California, Oregon and Washington." According to Monica Kohler, a Caltech research faculty member in the Department of Mechanical and Civil Engineering, "the development of ShakeAlert has shown that a dense network of seismic stations, swift transfer of seismic data to a central processing and alert station, speedy paths for distributing alert information to users, and education and training on how to use the alerts are all necessary for a robust early warning system."

Opinion Pieces

Trump's Radical Monuments Reduction Will Sully Precious Lands.

The Washington Post (12/6) says in an editorial that with President Trump's announcements that he will reduce the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments in Utah, the "degree of his shortsightedness became clearer." The Post argues that while "public lands and waters should be open to development, including drilling, so that the nation's resources can drive national growth, enable all sorts of recreation and benefit nearby towns and cities," the federal government "owns some lands that are simply too precious to permanently sully in pursuit of temporary economic gains."

FINALLY! President Trump Kicks Off The Rollback Of National Monument Abuse.

In an op-ed for the Daily Caller (12/6, Cohen, Boneta), Bonner Cohen, a senior policy analyst with the Committee for a Constructive Tomorrow, and Martha Bonet, a policy advisor with America First Policies, writes that “by significantly reducing the size of two gargantuan national monuments on federal land in Utah, President Donald Trump has begun to undo the decades-old mistreatment of rural Westerners by smug elites in faraway Washington.” In doing so, they say Trump has “shown a respect for the rule of law that was conspicuously absent when President Bill Clinton created the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in 1996, and when President Barack Obama designated the Bears Ears National Monument in 2016.” The authors urge the Trump Administration to move forward and “right the wrongs at other national monuments around the country, including the Katahdin Woods and Waters in Maine, the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks in New Mexico, Cascade Siskiyou in Oregon and California, Basin and Range in Nevada and castle Mountains in California.”

Trump Names Jerusalem Israel’s Capital, Announces Plans To Move Embassy.

Coverage of the President’s announcement that the US now recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and that he has ordered the State Department to begin planning to move the US Embassy to that city from Tel Aviv is highly negative. Reports cast the decision as being made against the urging of world leaders and members of the President’s own Cabinet – including Secretary of State Tillerson and Defense Secretary Mattis – amid fears the move could lead to violence in the region and possibly the end of the peace process between Israel and the Palestinians.

In the lead story for CBS Evening News (12/6, lead story, 2:45, Glor), Major Garrett said Trump’s decision is “an appeal to his Christian conservative base,” but it “rejects...the recommendations of his Secretaries of State and Defense,” and Administration officials “could point to no evidence this symbolically important shift in US policy will accelerate peace talks.”

James Rosen reported in the lead story for Fox News Special Report (12/6), “He was cautioned not to do it by advisers and world leaders alike, but today President Trump insisted 22 years of doing the same thing in Israel has yielded nothing in terms of peace, so he is going to shake it up.” The Los Angeles Times (12/6, Wilkinson, Bennett) says the President “took a swipe at previous presidents who failed to officially recognize Jerusalem or move the embassy,” saying they “lacked courage.”

Another Los Angeles Times (12/6, Bierman) piece says that while the “decision may have alarmed prime ministers, presidents, kings and their subjects around the world," Trump is the president who tallies "promises kept," and "especially important are promises to the voters Trump sees as his base, who include a strong majority of evangelical Christians."

Bloomberg News (12/6, Talev, Jacobs) says Trump's decision "divided his top advisers and at best complicates an effort to restart peace talks between the Israelis and Palestinians" directed by Kushner. According to Bloomberg, the "urgency for Trump's announcement...was driven partly by Vice President Mike Pence's planned travel to the Mideast later this month." During a meeting last month discussing Jerusalem, Pence reportedly "argued...it was past time for the US to recognize the 70-year reality that Jerusalem is the country's center of government." Chief of Staff Kelly and Ambassador Haley agreed, while Tillerson and Mattis "recommended against the move."

A front-page New York Times (12/6, A1, Landler) analysis says that for Trump, "the status of Jerusalem was always more a political imperative than a diplomatic dilemma. Faced with disappointing evangelical and pro-Israel backers like [Sheldon] Adelson, or alarming allies and Arab leaders while jeopardizing his own peace initiative, the president sided with his key supporters."

Also in a front-page report, the Washington Post (12/6, A1, Dawsey, Ryan, DeYoung) says the "decision to shake off warnings from senior officials such as" Tillerson and "align himself instead with prominent proponents of the move, including Vice President Pence and major donor Sheldon Adelson, underscored the president's determination to break with past policy and keep a key campaign pledge – despite the potential risks to US interests in the region and the goal of Middle East peace."

A Wall Street Journal (12/6) editorial praises the President for keeping his campaign promise and argues that the move is not a radical policy departure. The Journal agrees with Trump's assertion that his decision is "a recognition of reality." The Washington Post (12/6) editorializes that at the "heart of Mr. Trump's speech was his boast that 'while previous presidents...failed to deliver' on their campaign promises about Jerusalem, 'I am delivering.'"

Martha Raddatz reported on ABC World News Tonight (12/6, story 3, 2:30, Muir) that Trump "had promised this day would come, but to hear these words from the White House was jaw-dropping." Trump: "I have determined that it is time to officially recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. ... We cannot solve our problems by making the same failed assumptions and repeating the same failed strategies of the past." The President is "calling this a long overdue step to advance the peace process, but it's unclear what the new strategy to attain peace is."

On NBC Nightly News (12/6, story 3, 2:25, Holt), Hallie Jackson reported, "Leaving a little wiggle room, the President is not taking a position on whether or how Jerusalem should be divided. He also says he's not ending support for a two-state solution. But in reality, experts say, any solution looks exponentially more difficult now." Former Ambassador Nicholas Burns: "By giving this unilateral concession to the Israelis today and getting nothing for it, the President has weakened the American position and made it less likely that we'll get progress from the Israelis at the negotiating table."

The New York Times (12/6, Landler) reports Trump "cast his decision as a break with decades of failed policy on Jerusalem," saying, "It would be folly to assume that repeating the exact same formula would now produce a different or better result." But the Times says the move "isolates the United States on one of the world's most sensitive diplomatic issues."

While the Wall Street Journal (12/6, Schwartz) reports Trump said the decision is "the right thing to do" and in the best interests of the US, Reuters (12/6) says it "jeopardizes the United States' historical role as a mediator in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and frays relations with Arab allies that Washington relies on to help it oppose Iran and fight Sunni Islamist militants."

Trump, the AP (12/6, Lee, Klapper) says, "def[ined] dire, worldwide warnings" and "insisted that after repeated peace failures it was past time for a new approach." The AP notes that "no government beyond Israel spoke up in praise of Trump or suggested it would follow his lead."

USA Today (12/6) reports analysts said the move "sends a stark message that Palestinians should abandon their all-or-nothing demands in peace talks and applies subtle pressure on the Jewish state to make concessions." The Washington Post (12/6, Nakamura) calls the move "politically risky," and "in a sign that the move could backfire," Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas "slammed" the announcement as a "declaration of withdrawal" by the US from the peace process. On the CBS Evening News (12/6, story 2, 2:55, Glor), Seth Doane likewise reported Abbas "said that he believes this disqualified America...from being a negotiator." The Wall Street Journal (12/6, Jones) and Axios (12/6, Treene) similarly report Abbas' reaction.

Husam Zomlot, the chief Palestinian representative to the US, said on CNN's Situation Room (12/6) that Trump's decision "would be a kiss of death to the two-state solution" because "we will never recognize Israel's annexation of Jerusalem or control of Jerusalem." He later added, "What is the purpose of this move? It has just injected anxiety in the process, it has injected suspicions and anger. ... I believe today what is certain is that the US has done a self-inflicted disqualification of being the sole arbitrator of this."

USA Today (12/6, Korte) says Trump sought to "minimize the diplomatic consequences of the move" by emphasizing that the decision "is not intended in any way to reflect a departure from our strong commitment to facilitate a lasting peace agreement." Politico (12/6, Nelson) similarly says he was "emphatic in declaring that his decision did not represent a shift in US dedication to the peace process." Trump, the Jerusalem Post (12/6, Wilner) reports, insisted, "We are not taking a position on any final status issues." But the international community "did not immediately interpret Trump's moves in this way." UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres told reporters, "Jerusalem is a final status issue that must be resolved in final status negotiations between the two parties."

Asked on CNN's Situation Room (12/6) if the Administration now considers the Old City of Jerusalem part of Israel, and whether the Administration will now "differentiate between West and East Jerusalem," UN Ambassador Haley said, "We are not going to weigh in anymore on that out of our commitment for the peace process. ... What we want to say is, it is time – for the sake of Israeli children and Palestinian children – it is time for those two sides to come together. It's time for them to negotiate."

Speaking to reporters in Brussels ahead of the President's highly anticipated announcement, the New York Times (12/6, Harris) reports Tillerson said peace in the Middle East was still possible. "The President's very committed to the Middle East peace process," Tillerson said. While Tillerson "has been largely shut out of the usual back-and-forth between Israelis and Palestinians that many secretaries of state spent much of their tenures conducting," he was "complimentary" toward Jared Kushner's Middle East peace efforts. The Washington Times (12/6, Boyer) quotes Tillerson as saying, "We continue to believe there is a very good opportunity for peace to be achieved, and the President has a team that is devoted to that entirely. That team has been working very diligently on new approaches to the peace process. They've been engaged in a quiet way with many in the region around that process."

The Washington Post (12/6, Morello) says Tillerson's message was "one he has delivered repeatedly – with little success in convincing anyone – during two days of meetings at NATO as the anticipated US recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital was criticized from the Kremlin to the Vatican." According to the Post, "Since arriving in Brussels on Monday night, virtually every diplomat who has met with Tillerson has raised objections to Trump's move, though Tillerson said they did not spend much time discussing it." Calling it Tillerson's "go-to catchphrase," the AP (12/6, Lederman) reports that when Tillerson is "called on to explain his boss on the world stage," he responds, "America first is not America alone." Yet on Wednesday, the AP says Tillerson "stood all by himself."

Richard Engel said on NBC Nightly News (12/6, story 4, 2:00) that "it seems the Israelis and President Trump are largely alone in supporting this move," while Jim Acosta reported on CNN's Situation Room (12/6) that some of America's "closest allies in the region and elsewhere" are "very disturbed by the President's move."

The Washington Post (12/6, Noack) reports that "several countries are warning that the move could worsen relations between Palestinians and Israelis and spark unrest in the region." British Prime Minister Theresa May "indicated that she would discuss the decision with Trump," and in the Netherlands, "criticism of Trump was unusually strong." Dutch Foreign Minister Halbe Zijlstra said in an interview, "We think it's an unwise step and a counterproductive step. If we want to solve at some moment the conflict between the Palestinians and the Israelis, we need a two-state solution, and a one-sided step is not going to help."

The New York Times (12/6, Horowitz) says "a chorus of international leaders criticized the Trump administration's decision," including UN Secretary-General António Guterres and Pope Francis, who "both expressed alarm that the announcement would provoke new tensions in the Holy City." The leaders of France, Germany and Italy all also spoke out against the decision. French President Emmanuel Macron, Bloomberg News (12/6, Valentini, Fouquet) reports, said the it "contravenes all rules of international law."

Reuters (12/6) says Arabs and Muslims across the Middle East also condemned the decision as "an incendiary move in a volatile region." Egypt "rejected Trump's decision," while Jordan said Trump's action was "legally null." Qatari Foreign Minister Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman al-Thani said Trump's undertaking was a "death sentence for all who seek peace" and called it "a dangerous escalation." The AP (12/6, Karam) reports Saudi Arabia also voiced "strong opposition" to Trump's move, saying it would "provoke sentiments of Muslims throughout the world." USA Today (12/6, Dorell, Hjelmgard) reports Turkish Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu said the "whole world is against" Trump, while "diplomats from Iran to China expressed concern the move would aggravate tensions."

The Washington Post (12/6, Morris), however, reports that the announcement was met with "celebration" by Israelis. An hour before Trump delivered his speech, "municipal authorities lit up the ancient walls of the Old City with images of the Israeli and American flags 'as a token of appreciation' to Trump." Politico (12/6, Pazmino) reports the announcement "sent ripples across the local political scene...with many legislators voicing strong support for Trump's decision and others warning that any hopes for a two-state solution would immediately vanish." For his part, the Washington Post (12/6, Morris, Eglash) reports, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu hailed Israel's "irreplaceable" relationship with the US in his first public remarks after the announcement, but he "did not address the move directly."

New York Times (12/6) columnist Thomas Friedman writes, "I've never seen a president give up so much to so many for so little." He notes that "every Israeli government since its founding has craved United States recognition of Jerusalem as its capital. And every United States government has refrained from doing that...until now. Today, Trump just gave it away – for free. Such a deal! Why in the world would you just give this away for free and not even use it as a lever to advance the prospect of an Israeli-Palestinian deal?"

Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (12/6) column that Trump is "effectively throwing in the towel on Mideast peace. He's inflaming Arab allies, denying the United States legitimacy as a broker and putting already remote hopes of a peace deal into the category of pipe dreams. Not only did he announce the embassy move, but he also softened the longtime American commitment to a two-state solution (embraced by George W. Bush in 2002)," saying the US would support two states "if agreed to by both sides."

Former Wall Street Journal reporter Brett M. Decker writes for USA Today (12/6) that "recognizing Jerusalem is consistent with this president's agenda to be a purposeful disrupter of the stale, hypocritical status quo that brought him to power."

US Posts Across Middle East Bracing For Protests. Bloomberg News (12/6, Sink) reports that in the wake of the President's announcement, "US facilities in the Middle East are bracing for possibly violent protests." The State Department "sent alerts to embassies and consulates in Muslim-majority countries last week to warn them of unrest." James Longman reported on ABC World News Tonight (12/6, story 4, 0:55, Muir) that the Marines have sent security teams to various US facilities across the region. While things appear "quiet" on the streets of Jerusalem, Longman said "that could change in the days to come."

White House: Trump Slurred Speech Result Of Dry Throat. The New York Post (12/6, Fredericks) reports the President "provoked a Twitterstorm" after his speech Wednesday "in which he appeared to be breathing heavily and slurring some of his words toward the end." Some Twitter users "questioned whether the president was on medication – or if he had dentures that possibly came loose." According to the Post, the White House "did not immediately return a request for comment," but the Los Angeles Times (12/6, Bennett) reports it said later that Trump's slurred speech "was no more than a case of dry mouth." Spokesman Raj Shah said, "His throat was dry. There's nothing to it." Pressed on whether the slurred words "might indicate any health concerns," Shah said: "I know what you're getting at. I'm saying there's nothing to it."

Senate Votes To Go To Conference With House On Tax Legislation.

Reuters (12/6, Morgan, Becker) reports that the Senate formally voted 51-47 on Wednesday to go to a conference committee with the House to work out differences between the tax bills passed in each chamber. Senate Majority Whip Cornyn expressed optimism that an agreement could be reached before the GOP's self-imposed December 22 deadline. The Washington Times (12/6, Sherfinski) reports that Senate Majority Leader McConnell named Cornyn and Sens. Mike Enzi, Orrin Hatch, Lisa Murkowski, Rob Portman, Tim Scott, John Thune, and Pat Toomey to the conference committee.

State And Local Tax Deduction Could Be Expanded. The AP (12/6, Ohlemacher, Gordon) reports that one "possible solution to a standoff with rebellious House Republicans from high-tax states" would be to expand the "deduction for state and local taxes to enable Americans to deduct local income taxes as well as property taxes." House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady said that negotiators "are looking at several options to help people who live in high-tax states." The New York Times (12/6, Rappeport) reports that McConnell "threw his support behind allowing a more generous state and local tax deduction in the final legislation."

Reuters (12/6, Bernstein, Schneider) reports that any “elimination or reduction of tax breaks for homeowners” could hurt the GOP in wealthy suburban districts in the 2018 elections. The Wall Street Journal (12/6, Brody, Hackman) reports that as the tax bills now stand, school districts in high-tax states could suffer because state and local governments will face pressure to cut taxes. Michael Borges of the New York State Association of School Business Officials said, “Taxpayers that may end up paying higher taxes may take out their anger on school budget votes.” However, in an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/6) says that instead of compromising, the GOP would best serve residents of high-tax states by cutting all tax rates in return for eliminating deductions.

Corporate Tax Rate May Be Set At 22% Rather Than 20%. The Washington Post (12/6, Paletta, Werner) reports that Republicans are also mulling “scaling back some of the corporate tax cuts that they are trying to usher into law.” Both chambers’ bills would cut the corporate tax rate from 35% to 20%, “but GOP negotiators are now openly discussing the possibility of moving that rate up to 22 percent in order to free up more revenue, people familiar with the discussions said.”

Final Version Expected To Kill ACA Coverage Mandate. The New York Times (12/6, Pear, Kaplan) reports that while negotiators “are likely to eliminate the insurance coverage mandate at the heart of the Affordable Care Act,” that could “potentially jeopardiz[e]” Sen. Susan Collins’ support for the final measure. Collins voted for the Senate bill only after a “deal [was] struck...to mitigate the effect of the repeal.”

Conservative Groups Find Tax Bills To Be A Hard Sell. The New York Times (12/6, Peters) reports that a “problem” Republicans are facing is “that most Americans do not believe” the tax plan will put “more money in the pockets of American families.” Republican strategist Steve Schmidt “said that amid all the talk about the need to score an important victory for their party, ‘it bears mentioning that the ‘win’ is something that is extraordinarily unpopular with 75 percent of the American people.’” Yet, for groups like the US Chamber of Commerce and others, “the tax bill would be the only tangible legislative achievement after 11 months of an uneasy and, so far, unproductive alliance with a president they fiercely resisted during last year’s election.”

Will Says GOP’s “Wager Is Worth Trying.” George F. Will writes in his Washington Post (12/6) column that the tax bills are “an amalgam of earnest hoping and transparent make-believe” but are also “a serious lunge for sustained 3 percent growth. Without this, the economy, and hence the entitlement state, will buckle beneath the strain of 10,000 of the elderly each day becoming eligible for Social Security and Medicare.” Will says the GOP’s “wager is worth trying.”

Ahead Of Meeting With Congressional Leaders, Trump Says Shutdown “Could Happen.”

A day before he was to meet with congressional leaders from both parties to discuss a spending bill, President Trump on Wednesday “again raised the possibility of a US government shutdown” by the end of the week, “blaming Democrats for that possible outcome,” Reuters (12/6, Cowan, Cornwell) reports. Democrats “have demanded legislative protections” for so-called Dreamers as a condition of their support for a new spending measure, a condition the President has criticized, “saying it could set the stage for an impasse.” Trump told reporters, “The Democrats are really looking at something that is very dangerous for our country. ... They are looking at shutting down.”

The Hill (12/6, Fabian) says Trump “accused Democrats of impeding talks on a spending deal with demands on immigration.” The AP (12/6, Fram, Taylor) reports that Trump said of a shutdown, “It could happen,” arguing that Democrats “want to have illegal immigrants pouring into our country bringing with them crime, tremendous amounts of crime. We don’t want to have that.” The Washington Times (12/6, Boyer, Howell) reports that Trump said, “We want to have a great, beautiful, crime-free country. That’s why we’re being so careful with our process and with our screening.”

House Minority Leader Pelosi responded to Trump’s comments with a tweet in which she said, “President Trump is the only person talking about a government shutdown. Democrats are hopeful the President will be open to an agreement to address the urgent needs of the American people and keep government open.”

The Washington Post (12/6, Debonis) says Trump’s comments came “as tensions on Capitol Hill appeared to diminish after hard-line House conservatives backed off plans to oppose a short-term stopgap.” House Freedom Caucus leaders on Wednesday morning left meetings with House Speaker Ryan and House Majority Leader McCarthy “saying they had not decided whether the group’s three dozen members would back the two-week stopgap favored by the GOP leaders,” but that “they had backed off pushing for a longer-term spending bill and were instead focused on setting up a more advantageous fight with Democrats shortly before Christmas.”

Bloomberg News (12/6) says GOP leaders are considering a plan pushed by the Freedom Caucus under which the House's fiscal year 2018 defense spending bill would be attached to "a resolution to keep the government funded after Dec. 22," according to Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC) and House Armed Services Chairman Mac Thornberry. According to Meadows, "progress had been made in obtaining assurances this plan would be followed." However, even if the plan clears the House, "it is practically dead on arrival in the Senate where Democratic votes are needed to end debate."

Politico (12/6, Bade, Ferris) says House leaders and conservatives "appear close to reaching a reluctant truce." Meadows said, "I think the real focus for all of us is tax reform and getting tax reform done. ... That was the crux of the conversation we had today: that we gotta get across the finish line on tax reform. Any distraction from that is a problem." Politico adds that if conservatives back the package, "it would likely seal the GOP's hopes of avoiding the need for a last-minute deal with" Pelosi.

Baldwin Indicates Willingness To Support A "Very Short-Term" Spending Bill. Sen. Tammy Baldwin said on CNBC's Closing Bell (12/6), "I think I am open to short-term, a very short-term extension so that we can resolve the year-end spending issues. I was disappointed that Trump sort of made it harder last week when the leaders were scheduled to meet on a bipartisan basis, but I do think we can work our way through this with the spending caps and an omnibus. Much work has already been done in the House and Senate appropriations committee so I'm hopeful if there is a short-term extension we can get the job done."

Poll: 63% Say Congress Should Avoid Shutdown "At All Costs." Politico (12/6, Shepard) reports that a Politico/Morning Consult poll found that "a majority of voters think Congress should avoid shutting down the federal government – and members shouldn't threaten a shutdown to enact policy changes." According to the poll, 63% said lawmakers "should avoid a shutdown at all costs," while 18% said that "members should allow a temporary government shutdown if it helps them achieve their policy goals." Another 19% were undecided.

Murkowski Touts Senate Energy Bill As Springboard For Trump's Infrastructure Plan.

Platts (12/6, Melvin) reports that Sen. Lisa Murkowski, chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, is touting the Senate's bipartisan energy bill as an springboard for President Trump's infrastructure plan, which remains short on details. She said the bill, which streamline permitting for natural gas and hydropower projects, facilitate LNG exports, support modernization of the electric grid, and more, is "ready to go and that's already pre-vetted."

Trump's Travel Ban Faces More Court Challenges.

The AP (12/6, Johnson) reports that in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision allowing President Trump's third travel ban to take effect, there is increased attention on "a legal showdown Wednesday before three judges in Seattle who have been cool to the policy." Ninth US Circuit Court of Appeals Judges Ronald Gould, Richard Paez, and Michael Hawkins were scheduled to hear arguments to Hawaii's challenge to the ban. The judges "unanimously ruled against the second version of the travel ban, saying the president had not shown that allowing travelers from the listed nations would harm American interests." While courts in Hawaii and Maryland partially blocked the ban, the Supreme Court "lifted those orders pending the outcome of legal challenges in the 9th Circuit and the 4th US Circuit Court of Appeals, which is scheduled to hear arguments Friday in Richmond, Virginia." Bloomberg News (12/6, Mehrotra) says that whatever the judges rule in those cases, "the president's directive will remain in effect until the Supreme Court says otherwise."

Branstad: North Korea Must Halt All Testing For Talks.

Bloomberg News (12/6) reports US Ambassador to China, Terry Branstad, said Wednesday that the Administration "would be ready to talk with North Korea if it renounced further nuclear or missile tests and followed through on the pledge." Appearing on Bloomberg Television, Branstad said, "If they announce that they're not going to be doing any more nuclear tests and they're not going to be launching any more missiles. If they announce that and do that, I think there's an opportunity for us to get back to the bargaining table." With regards to Chinese pressure, he said, "We believe we need to go further. We think oil and also these North Korean workers working in China and other countries, that needs to stop."

Chinese Border Province Warns About Dangers Of Nuclear War. The Washington Post (12/6, Denyer) reports that a provincial state newspaper on China's border with North Korea "spooked a few people Wednesday by dedicating an entire page to advice for local residents on how they might survive a nuclear war." The advisory, by the official Jilin Daily, "was picked up by many online news services and circulated widely on Chinese social media, forcing the paper and other state media outlets to hurriedly issue statements trying to calm people down." The full-page advisory also included "a series of cartoons" reminiscent of public service announcements in 1950s America advising children to "duck and cover" in order to survive a nuclear attack. One cartoon states that "if a bomb goes off when you are near a river, pond or lake – jump in it." The New York Times (12/6, Bradsher) likewise says the publication "caused a flurry of discussion on social media in China, and official news media sought to discourage speculation that a nuclear conflict might be imminent."

ADP: US Businesses Added 190,000 Jobs In November.

In what the AP (12/6, Rugaber) describes as "a sign that hiring is strong enough to reduce an already-low unemployment rate," payroll processor ADP said Wednesday that US companies "added a robust 190,000 jobs in November." Manufacturers added "40,000 jobs, the largest gain this year," while healthcare "added 31,000 positions, and a category that includes restaurants and hotels hired 25,000."

National Homelessness Rates Rise For First Time Since 2010.

The AP (12/6, Weber, Mulvihill) reports for the first time in seven years, homelessness numbers in the US increased by one percent to approximately 554,000 people, according to statistics released by HUD. Of those, 193,000 lacked access to nightly shelter, representing an increase of "more than 9 percent compared to two years ago." Homelessness rates continued to fall in most places, except on the West Coast, where they grew, particularly in major urban centers. Favorable economic conditions were blamed for increasing living costs in those areas and forcing many out onto the street.

EPA Chief Assures Congressmen Of Agency's Scientific Integrity Policy.

The New York Times (12/6, Friedman) reports EPA Administrator Pruitt reassured lawmakers from now on EPA scientists would not face restrictions on discussing their work, following reports that two EPA scientists were prevented in October from presenting on environmental issues to the Narragansett Bay Estuary Program. The canceled EPA scientist presentations reportedly were to touch upon the concept of climate change. In a letter to Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, Pruitt said, "Procedures have been put in place to prevent such an occurrence in the future." Whitehouse and other Democrats who challenged the EPA on the issue were reportedly satisfied with Pruitt's response.

EPA Administrator Announces More Hearings On Clean Power Plan Repeal.

The Washington Examiner (12/6, Siegel) reports the Environmental Protection Agency yesterday announced that "it will host three more public hearings on its move to repeal the Clean Power Plan, including one in San Francisco, after the agency was criticized for not conducting a transparent review process." The agency "had planned only one public hearing, which it held last week over two days in Charleston, W.Va., the heart of coal country." EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said, "Due to the overwhelming response to our West Virginia hearing, we are announcing additional opportunities for the public to voice their views to the agency."

The AP (12/6) reports the hearings will take place "in San Francisco, Gillette, Wyoming, and Kansas City, Missouri."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Holding Prison Guards Accountable." A New York Times (12/6) editorial says "a radically different" version of the state's contract with the New York State prison guards union is needed in order to ensure prison guards answer for wrongdoing. As the contract undergoes a renegotiation, the Times urges Gov. Andrew Cuomo to "hold out for a new one that strengthens state control over the prison system" and "push for a sensible disciplinary system, like that used by the State Police." The current contract contains "a convoluted disciplinary process" and "makes it difficult to fire officers," even in cases of egregious wrongdoing.

"Let's Limit The Term Limit Debate." A New York Times (12/6) editorial says that in response to a new proposal to extend term limits for New York City elected officials, members of the New York City Council should remember that “over the last quarter-century, city voters have affirmed in three referendums – in 1993, 1996 and 2010 – that they want all their officeholders to max out at two consecutive terms.” Proponents of the bill say “that a Council with longer terms for its members could be more effective at providing the checks and balances that are part of this country’s founding principles.”

“The Olympic Ban Helps Mr. Putin, Hurts Russia.” In an editorial, the New York Times (12/7) writes that Russia’s “Olympic ban was the perfect setup” for Vladimir Putin to announce he is running for yet another term as Russia’s president, as “Putin has maintained his popularity in large part by persuading Russians that he is the guarantor of their national greatness against the machinations of a West forever conniving to keep Russia down.” However, “the same power plays that garner Mr. Putin plaudits at home have spectacularly backfired abroad” and “sharply diminished Mr. Putin’s, and Russia’s, stature in much of the world.” The Times concludes by praising the International Olympic Committee for still allowing clean Russian athletes to compete, stating that “the sanctions make clear that the culprit is the Kremlin and its greed for glory.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Jerusalem Move Is A Big Risk.” The Washington Post (12/6) editorializes that at the “heart” of President Trump’s speech recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of Israel “was his boast that ‘while previous presidents...failed to deliver’ on their campaign promises about Jerusalem, ‘I am delivering.’”

“Trump’s Radical Monuments Reduction Will Sully Precious Lands.” The Washington Post (12/6) says in an editorial that with President Trump’s announcements that he will reduce the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments in Utah, the “degree of his shortsightedness became clearer.” The Post argues that while “public lands and waters should be open to development, including drilling, so that the nation’s resources can drive national growth, enable all sorts of recreation and benefit nearby towns and cities,” the federal government “owns some lands that are simply too precious to permanently sully in pursuit of temporary economic gains.”

“Russia Scores An Olympic Own Goal.” A Washington Post (12/6) editorial argues that Russian objection to the IOC ruling “would be quite wrong,” given that the doping was state-sponsored, and that “Russian fans ought to be angry at their leadership for such reckless disregard for the integrity of international sport.” Although Russians object that “sports doping and cheating exist in the West, too,” Russia’s “systematic and centralized cover up and manipulation of the doping control process” means that the punishment imposed by the IOC is justified.

Wall Street Journal.

“How To Help The High-Tax States.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/6) says that instead of compromising, the GOP would best serve residents of high-tax states by cutting all tax rates in return for eliminating deductions.

“Trump’s Frankenmoore Nightmare.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/6) says that with a mass of Senate Democrats having called on Sen. Al Franken to resign, President Trump should pull his and the RNC’s support from Alabama Republican Senate candidate Roy Moore. The Journal argues that if Trump doesn’t do so, Democrats – having likely purged their congressional caucus of those accused of sexual misconduct (Franken and Rep. John Conyers) – will use Moore to paint the President and the GOP as soft on sexual harassment.

“The Reality Of Jerusalem.” A Wall Street Journal (12/6) editorial praises the President for keeping his campaign promise to recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and argues that the move is not a radical policy departure. The Journal agrees with Trump’s assertion that his decision is “a recognition of reality.”

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: [Referring to Donald Trump's announcement on recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of Israel] "The move was opposed by France, the UK, Germany, Russia, China, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Syria, and the Pope. I never thought I'd say this, but Donald Trump is really bringing the world together!"

James Corden: "A recent article revealed that Vice President Mike Pence once snitched on his college fraternity brothers for, get this, having a keg at a party. I have been thinking about this. I personally think we should praise Mike Pence for being so honest. You know, Mr. Vice President, I know that you are watching, great job. Now be a good boy and also tell Robert Mueller where the kegs are, you know what I am talking about?"

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump just blew up the Middle East so hard that ISIS is going to take credit for it. And since he is so desperate for compliments, he would be like, 'You know what, ISIS has many sides folks, many sides.'"

Trevor Noah: "This is how Trump probably wants to put out the California fires, by throwing Samsung phones at them."

Trevor Noah: "This is big news. Al Franken is going to be making an announcement tomorrow. He could be stepping down, or he could be announcing he's having a baby! Either one. So it looks like Al Franken's political career could be over, unless he moves to Alabama to run as a Republican."

Jimmy Fallon: "And following more allegations of sexual harassment, 30 Democratic senators called on Al Franken to resign as senator of Minnesota. But he's already got a back-up plan. He's going to run for senator of Alabama."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that Vladimir Putin just announced he is seeking reelection. Really? Who's running against him? That's like running for class president when you're home-schooled."

Seth Meyers: "Towards the end of the speech on Israel today, President Trump began to slur his words, leading some to speculate that he may have been wearing dentures. But the White House insists that it's nothing unusual and that most of his words are slurs."

Seth Meyers: "Thirty-two Democratic senators have now called on Senator Al Franken to step aside after another woman accused him of sexual misconduct. Also stepping aside: women when they see Al Franken coming."

Conan O'Brien: "'TIME magazine announced the person of the year today and it is not President Trump. When asked for comment, the White House said, 'Shhh, we haven't told him yet.'"

Conan O'Brien: "In an interview, Senate candidate Roy Moore's spokesperson said his accusers gave Academy Award performances. Then Moore interrupted and said, 'I just wish they'd been Teen Choice Awards.'"

Conan O'Brien: "This morning, Vladimir Putin announced he's going to run for re-election. Then this afternoon, he announced he'd won."

Jordan Klepper: "Today, TIME magazine named their 2017 Person of the Year, honoring the 'silence breakers' who have spoken out against sexual harassment and assault. This comes after the magazine refused to give the cover to its rightful owner, President Trump. But the joke's on TIME. If Trump isn't Person of the Year, then how come the article spends so much time recognizing the contributions he's made to awareness of sexual predators?"

Jordan Klepper: [Referring to Steve Bannon's comment on Mitt Romney] "That's right, Mitt. If you're going to get a deferment, don't hide behind your religion and do missionary work. Real men defer enlistment because they have bone spurs and bravely stay in New York to try their hand at real estate development."

Samantha Bee: [Referring to Rep. John Conyers' resignation and Sen. Al Franken's announcement tomorrow] "Great news today, the grabby creeps on Capitol Hill is down to infinity minus one. ... And if the Democratic women of the Senate have anything to say about it, it's about to be infinity minus two."

Samantha Bee: "Great job, Democrats. You really showed that Democrat lawmakers will not tolerate a predator with more than six sexual harassment allegations against them. Seven strikes and you are out, probably."

Congress Far Away From Solution To Help Prevent Wildfires As Blazes Sweep Through California.

The Washington Examiner (12/13, Siegel) reports that Congress is “no closer to agreeing on a plan to try to reduce the risk of wildfires and fix a funding problem that challenges the federal response, more than a week after damaging fires in Southern California worsened a record wildfire season.” Lawmakers have “disagreed over how to help fund wildfire response and impose forest management changes that could prevent fires from starting.” Rep. Bruce Westerman and Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, “met this week with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Department of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, to discuss forest management options.” However, “Westerman says he is not aware of any ‘substantive’ negotiations occurring between the House and Senate to bridge a solution.”

House Offers Unanimous Support For Pair Of Hydro Project Development Bills.

Hydroworld (12/13, Harris) reports that the U.S. House of Representatives has “unanimously approved a pair of bills that would promote the development of qualifying pumped storage projects and addition of hydroelectric capacity to existing non-powered dams.” Rep. Morgan Griffith’s Promoting Closed-Loop Pumped Storage Hydropower Act (House Resolution 2880), would “limit the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission’s authority to enforce licensing conditions for closed-loop proposals ‘only as necessary to protect public safety’, or in instances ‘that are reasonable, economically feasible, and essential to protect fish and wildlife resources.’” The second bill, called the Promoting Hydropower Development at Existing Non-powered Dams Act (H.R. 2872), “would establish an expedited licensing process, resulting in decisions on applications in two years or less.” The bill would “also require FERC, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the U.S. Department of the Interior to develop a list of existing non-powered, federally-owned dams that have the greatest potential for private sector hydropower development.”

For The First Time, Interior Makes More Details Of Recent SES Reassignments Public.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (12/13, Ogrysko) reports that the Interior Department is “beginning to make more details public about its recent – and often controversial – round of senior executive reassignments.” According to documents Interior recently made available, 33 senior executives, “or 15 percent of the department’s Senior Executive Service cadre, received reassignment notices from Interior on June 15,” and 23 of “those SES accepted and made the transfer to their new positions.”

Barr Seeks Trump’s Approval On Camp Nelson Becoming National Monument.

WKYT-TV Lexington, KY (12/13) reports that Rep. Andy Barr is urging President Trump to designate Camp Nelson a national monument. In a release on Wednesday, Barr says the camp was recommended by Secretary Ryan Zinke as a possible addition for monument status. Barr said, “I applaud Secretary Zinke for recognizing this site’s potential to convey nationally significant information about the survival and persistence of African-American soldiers and their families as they fought for their freedom. I strongly encourage President Trump to follow through on the secretary’s recommendation so that, like the 6th District of Kentucky, the entire nation can experience the rich history Camp Nelson has to offer.”

Mark Ruffalo Is ‘Disgusted’ With Trump’s Monuments Decision.

The AP (12/13, Landrum) reports that actor Mark Ruffalo “said he is disgusted with President Donald Trump’s plan to shrink two sprawling Utah national monuments by nearly two-thirds.” Ruffalo “said Trump’s decision is environmentally wrong and an attempt to cater to a group of wealthy people.”

Uranium Mill Pressed Trump Officials For Bears Ears Reductions, Records Show.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/13, Maffly) reports that “energy extraction on public lands had a lot more to do with Utah’s national monument reductions than the Department of Interior and the state’s elected leaders are acknowledging, newly disclosed documents suggest.” According to a May 25 letter obtained by The Washington Post, Energy Fuels Resources “implored Interior officials to trim Bears Ears National Monument in ways that protect its assets just outside the monument’s periphery, which included the country’s last operating uranium mill.” The firm “apparently feared that having a national monument abutting the mill located at southern Utah’s White Mesa – which features a sprawling network of wastewater ponds – would hurt its operations, putting at risk the nation’s domestic ore-processing capacity.”

River Advisory Group Axed.

The Weaverville \(CA\) Trinity Journal (12/13, Gittelsohn) reports that the Interior Department has “taken an action that effectively dissolves the advisory group that provides input on Trinity River Restoration Program decisions.” Members of the advisory group known as the Trinity Adaptive Management Working Group were “advised in November that the Interior Department had declared the group ‘administratively inactive.’” Rep. Jared Huffman has sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke writing “that the stakeholder group is ‘an important oversight committee’ and essential to the restoration program.”

State Proposes $562 Million In Coastal Restoration, Hurricane Protection In FY ‘19, Drop From ‘18.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (12/13, Schleifstein) reports Louisiana expects to spend $561.8 million on coastal restoration and hurricane protection projects for the 2019 fiscal year, according to the Coastal Protection and Restoration Authority. The total funding is less than the state budgeted for the current year, in part because the state expects less offshore oil revenue than previously expected under federal law. Most of the funding comes from financial settlements from the 2010 BP Deepwater Horizon spill. The state expects to have 23 projects under construction for the year.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

DC Circ. Nixes Freedmen Descendants’ Suit Against DOI.

Law360 (12/13, Posses) reports that “the D.C. Circuit on Tuesday declined to revive a proposed class action, brought by descendants of slaves held by Native American tribes, claiming the U.S.

Department of the Interior owes them royalties from land granted to their ancestors, agreeing with a lower court that alleged injuries to their relatives aren't enough to give them standing."

Albuquerque Man Pleads Guilty To Assaulting Tribal Policeman.

The AP (12/13) reports that "an Albuquerque man has pleaded guilty to assaulting an officer with the Pueblo of Isleta tribal police." According to a criminal complaint, Daniel Mendoza, 20, "intentionally backed his truck into the tribal police officer's vehicle while attempting to evade arrest in September 2016 on the Isleta Pueblo in New Mexico's Bernalillo County." The officer was commissioned as a Special Law Enforcement Officer by the Bureau of Indian Affairs' Office of Justice Services. Mendoza "faces up to 20 years in prison when he's sentenced."

Additional Coverage: County, Tribes Make Progress Toward Roadway Settlements.

Additional coverage that Santa Fe County this week "revealed the scope of proposed settlements to resolve long-standing roadway disputes with four pueblos after months of closed-door negotiations" was provided by the Santa Fe New Mexican (12/14, Stelnicki).

Bureau Of Land Management

"Congress Has Spoken" On BLM Rule – Cantwell.

E&E Publishing (12/13, King) reports that in discussions over the speed at which permits are processed for federal land energy projects, some on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee were still considering the Obama-era Department of the Interior rule that was suspended last week. During a line of questioning, Democratic Sen. Maria Cantwell of Washington said "I think Congress has spoken on that" in reference to the BLM's delay of methane emissions standards. The questions were being directed at Interior Associate Deputy Secretary Jim Cason. Cason discussed the methane rule and said, "we were attempting to levy royalties on methane that was vented when we didn't have the presence of gathering lines to actually gather the materials." Cason added, "we're going back to a basically conservation of resource thought process."

Feds Rake In $6 Million From Oil And Gas Lease Auctions, Including Lands Near Utah's Dinosaur National Monument.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/13, Maffly) reports that Tuesday's auction held by the Bureau of Land Management brought in $6 million from oil and gas lease options. Bids were fielded on almost 94,000 acres throughout Utah, which includes some of the Dinosaur National Monument. Meanwhile, some "parcels covering about 40,000 acres...failed to attract acceptable minimum bids, including lands near Molen Reef, an area rich in ancient rock art in Emery County."

BLM Relocation? Colorado Democrats Jared Polis And Ed Perlmutter Sign Onto GOP Legislation.

The Denver Post (12/13, Paul) reports that Democrat Reps. Ed Perlmutter and Jared Polis have "joined their Republican congressional colleagues in backing legislation that would allow the Bureau of Land Management to relocate its headquarters to the West, and possibly to Colorado." Perlmutter said in a statement, "Relocating BLM headquarters to the West would be a natural fit with the agency's mission and purview, and allow agency officials to be closer to the land and minerals they oversee. I believe Colorado is well-positioned to house the BLM headquarters as Coloradans value our public lands and outdoor recreation." Gardner applauded Polis' and Perlmutter's co-sponsorship, saying "this is a common-sense proposal that Coloradans from across the political spectrum support."

Lawmakers Urge Leaders To Protect Wild Horses.

The Washington Examiner (12/13, Siciliano, Siegel) reports that "a bipartisan coalition of more than 40 lawmakers are urging House and Senate leadership to keep current protections for wild horses and burros in the West in its 2018 government funding bill." The House lawmakers wrote in a letter to this week, "While we recognize that management issues must be addressed, killing these magnificent creatures is not the answer."

New Mexico Oil And Gas Companies Sign On To Reduce Emissions.

The AP (12/13, Bryan) reports that energy firms in New Mexico have "signed on to a national effort within the oil and gas industry to curb methane emissions as pressure mounts for states to enact more pollution laws." Industry officials in New Mexico "say BP America, Chevron, ConocoPhillips, Devon Energy and others see the effort to reduce emissions as a priority and that work already underway has led to lower methane levels." Through the initiative, "companies will participate in programs that focus on addressing leaks and repairing or replacing certain pneumatic controllers at wells and other sites that are known for releasing methane."

Mormon Religion Used To Justify Extreme Anti-Government Ideology In Cliven Bundy Case.

Newsweek (12/13, Maza) reports that "an obscure Mormon religious text has emerged as one of the central tenets influencing the anti-government ideology of Cliven Bundy, a militiaman accused of leading an armed standoff against federal agents near a ranch outside Las Vegas in 2014." Researchers at the Southern Poverty Law Center have noted that the Bundy family and its supporters "follow a text called The Nay Book, allegedly compiled by Bundy's friend and fellow rancher Keith Allen Nay, who died in 1997." According to the center, "the book lays out a religious justification for resisting the federal management of public lands."

BLM Seeks Public Comment On Proposed Parkdale Mineral Sampling In Fremont County And More.

The Canon City \(CO\) Daily Record (12/13) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is seeking public input "on its draft environmental assessment to sample hard rock minerals in the Parkdale area as part of a mineral materials sale application."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Bureau Of Reclamation Plans Conservation Efforts For Planet Ranch.

The Havasupai \(AZ\) News-Herald (12/14, Louis) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation has "a plan to add 3,400 acres of land near Planet Ranch to the Lower Colorado River Multi-Species Conservation Program." The addition of land is "a result of a controversial water transfer by the mining company Freeport-McMoRan Copper & Gold Inc." John Swett, manager for the conservation program, said, "What we've done is to insure we are not going to use the water that it would adversely affect the nearby Bill Williams National Wildlife Refuge. This was a big part of the deal. We wanted to make sure the water would stay in the aquifer. If it all gets used up, the refuge would be in a lot of trouble because that's its source."

Feds Give Initial OK To Utah's Application To Build Lake Powell Pipeline.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/13, Penrod) reports the FERC conditionally approved an application by Utah for the construction of the Lake Powell Pipeline, which will "pump Colorado River water from Glenn Canyon Dam to St. George and 12 other southern Utah communities." At the same time, however, FERC was reviewing if additional federal entities, such as the National Park Service and the Bureau of Land Management, would have "jurisdiction over the six hydroelectric sites along the route." Should that be the case, Utah would be expected to also navigate "a lengthy review from a host of other federal agencies."

Also reporting are the AP (12/13) and the St. George \(UT\) News (12/13, Kessler).

Dam Police Department Dissolved; Park Rangers Now Patrol Facility.

Boulder City \(NV\) Review (12/13, Goodyear) reports that National Park Service rangers now provide law enforcement at Hoover Dam, "rather than the Bureau of Reclamation's defunct police department." According to the article, "the Bureau of Reclamation's security force now handles all security needs for the Hoover Dam facility, and when it encounters a situation where law enforcement is needed, the park rangers will come in." Terry Fulp, Lower Colorado Region director of the Bureau of Reclamation, "said it was hard for the federal agency to maintain a police department because of the requirements it had to meet and its size."

Federal Official, Accountant Indicted In Las Vegas Bribery Case.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/13, Brean) reports that "a former official for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation in Boulder City and an accountant for a private accounting firm have been indicted on federal corruption charges." Fredrick J. Leavitt and Dustin M. Lewis "each face one count of conspiracy in connection with a bribery scheme involving a government contract, the U.S."

Attorney's Office in Las Vegas announced Wednesday." Leavitt was the director of the financial management office for the bureau's Lower Colorado Region. Lewis was employed by LL Bradford & Company, an accounting and tax firm. Their indictment claims "that between February 2015 and February 2016, Lewis bribed and provided kickbacks to Leavitt so he would steer a Southern California Public Power Authority audit contract to LL Bradford."

Final GOP Tax Bill Would Allow Arctic Refuge Drilling.

The Hill (12/13, Henry) reports the compromise tax cut bill reached Wednesday by the GOP included the provision to drill for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, according to Sen. Lisa Murkowski. She said the bill "contains the single most important step I believe we can take to strengthen our energy security and create new wealth." Rep. Raúl Grijalva, another tax bill negotiator, said the ANWR measure is a "a completely unrelated, unpopular provision that should not be forced through this Congress under these procedures." The Seattle Times (12/13, Bernton) reports the overall tax legislation is expected to be voted on by the House and Senate in the coming days.

Environmentalists Drag Out Robert Redford To Protest Arctic Drilling. The Daily Caller (12/13, Bastasch) reports Robert Redford is working with the National Resource Defense Council to advocate opposition to the Republican tax bill over ANWR drilling. In an ad for the NRDC, Redford says, "Republican leaders are saying the refuge needs to be auctioned off to the oil industry to help offset a $1.5 trillion tax giveaway. ... They claim that they can raise $100 million plundering these public lands."

House Committee Approves Monomoy Boundary Bill.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Chronicle (12/13, Wood) reports that "the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources approved legislation Wednesday to restore the western boundary of the Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge to mean low tide." Rep. William Keating "filed the legislation to restore what town officials say was the historically recognized western boundary." The legislation is "opposed by environmental groups like Mass Audubon which see it as relinquishing federal control of an environmentally sensitive area."

Wildlife Managers On The Lookout For Grizzlies In The Bitterroot.

Montana Public Radio (12/13, Burnham) reports that "wildlife managers in the Bitterroot Ecosystem are stepping up their efforts to document the presence of grizzly bears there." At a Tuesday meeting of the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee in Missoula, Kimberly Nelson with the Salmon-Challis National Forest "reported on managers' efforts to document evidence of grizzlies in the Bitterroot." She "told the committee that places with credible grizzly sightings like the Ninemile and the Lower Clark Fork will be a prioritized for data gathering over the next 5 years."

Poliquin Bill To End Acadia Mudflats Disputes Advances.

The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (12/13, Sambides) reports that "a bill designed to resolve border disputes between Acadia National Park and its neighbors cleared a hurdle on Wednesday." The House Committee on Natural Resources "unanimously endorsed HR 4266, which includes language aimed at ending confusion among clam and worm diggers who use mudflats near the park and rangers who have stopped them." The legislation "reinforces the Schoodic Point donation, repeals the 1929 law and maps the park's boundaries."

Wreaths Across America Event Happens Saturday.

The Greeneville \(TN\) Sun (12/13, Shepherd) reports that "thousands of wreaths will be placed over graves at Andrew Johnson National Cemetery on Thursday, and the annual program will take place on Saturday." The featured speaker this year is Lt. Col. Neal Kerney, of the Tennessee National Guard, with remarks also given by Acting Superintendent Eric Leonard. Leonard said, "The Wreaths Across America Program is an iconic annual event for national cemeteries. And it reflects the best side of any community. On behalf of the National Park Service we are grateful for the annual support from students, leaders, veterans and community members.”

Postal Service Stamp Will Feature Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore.

MLive \(MI\) (12/13, Champion) reports that the United States Postal Service “unveiled a portion of its 2018 stamp collection on Tuesday, Dec. 12” and Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore is “among the images that will be featured.” A USPS news release said, “With this Priority Mail Express stamp, the Postal Service celebrates the Sleeping Bear Dunes, a national park in Michigan that takes its name from a Native American legend.”

Higher Entry Fees Announced For Great Basin National Park.

The AP (12/14) reports that “federal officials are raising fees for cave tours and campground stays within Nevada’s vast Great Basin National Park.” Acting park Superintendent Curt Dimmick “calls the increases modest, and says the money they raise will underwrite services at the park where visitation increased 25 percent in 2016, to nearly 145,000 people.”

New Concessionaire Named For Katherine Landing At Lake Mohave.

Boulder City \(NV\) Review (12/13) reports that the National Park Service has “awarded a 15-year contract to Urban Park Concessionaires to operate commercial services and facilities at Katherine Landing on Lake Mohave in the Lake Mead National Recreation Area.” Lizette Richardson, Lake Mead National Recreation Area superintendent said, “We are pleased to announce that Urban Park Concessionaires is the new concessionaire at Katherine Landing. The National Park Service has invested millions to enhance the services at this popular destination. With our new private partner, we anticipate there will be even further redevelopment of the area.” John Koeberer, CEO of Urban Park Concessionaires, “said the company is ‘anxious’ to begin revitalizing the area and plans to update the restaurant and retail facilities, increase water conservation and reduce electricity and fuel consumption.”

Buffalo National River Superintendent Kevin Cheri Honored Tuesday.

The Harrison \(AR\) Daily Times (12/13) reports that Buffalo National River Superintendent Kevin Cheri, “who has announced his retirement, was honored Tuesday with the Regional Director’s Award for Outstanding Service for exceptional leadership in the National Park Service.” A statement said, “Throughout his 43 years of service, Kevin has strengthened resource stewardship by advancing employee development, community engagement, diversity, and inclusion in parks.”

Park Natural Resources Manager Recognized For Excellence.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (12/13) reports that Glacier National Park Natural Resources Program Manager Mark Biel has “earned the 2017 National Park Service Intermountain Region Director’s Award for Professional Excellence in Natural Resource Stewardship.” Biel was “recognized for his leadership on several fronts, including his work to initiate a wildlife shepherding program, dark sky conservation and mountain goat research.”

Mining Mogul Murray Gets Coal In His Stocking—and Wants More.

Bloomberg News (12/13, Loh) reports that President Trump has at least partially delivered on “more than one-third of a three-and-a-half page list of policy proposals” offered up by coal mogul Robert Murray. Murray is described as one of the most vocal energy executives “pushing Trump to shift US policies more in favor of fossil fuels.”

US Geological Survey

Williston Oil, NatGas Resources To Be Reassessed.

Natural Gas Intelligence (12/13, Nemec) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey has agreed to undertake a new assessment of technically recoverable oil and natural gas resources in the Williston Basin at the bidding of North Dakota Republican Sen. John Hoeven and energy industry stakeholders who say “an updated assessment may spur more interest in the Bakken Shale.” According to North Dakota Petroleum Council President Ron Ness, the updated assessment “would provide a much clearer picture of the resources in North Dakota.” AN NDPC spokeswoman added, “There is more competition for investment dollars today and having the best information available would reaffirm development in the Bakken and show the potential for underdeveloped formations in North Dakota.”

Noting that there are “up to 19 producing formations in the Williston Basin,” the Prairie Public News \(ND\) (12/13, Thompson) quoted NDPC’s Ron Ness as saying, “Now, we hope the USGS goes back to look at the entire basin, and then do an assessment of all the other horizons,” Ness said. According to Ness, these assessments have been an important tool in helping to attract investors, not just in drilling wells, but “investors into hotels, retail and real estate” as well.

Fracking Sites May Raise The Risk Of Underweight Babies, New Study Says.

The Washington Post (12/13, Fears) reports, “Living within half a mile of a hydraulic fracturing site carries a serious risk for pregnant women,” investigators found in a “five-year study of more than 1.1 million births” in Pennsylvania. In “Science Now,” the Los Angeles Times (12/13, Healy) reports that the study authors also “estimated that, in 2012, about 29,000 of the close to four million annual births in the United States – roughly 0.7% of babies born each year – were to women who lived within about two-thirds of a mile of a hydraulic fracturing operation during their pregnancies.”

After Fires, Southern California Faces Risk Of Mudslides.

Reuters (12/13, Gruber, Dobuzinskis) reports that “firefighters in Southern California are slowly gaining control of one of the largest wildfires in state history, but residents may not enjoy much relief as experts said the flames are laying the groundwork for the next disaster – mudslides.” According to experts, “the intense fire is burning away vegetation that holds the soil in place and baking a waxy layer into the earth that prevents the water from sinking more than a few inches into the ground.” Jason Kean, research hydrologist for the U.S. Geological Survey, said, “Pretty much anywhere there’s a fire on a steep slope, there’s cause for concern.”

Opinion Pieces

The Trump Regulatory Game Plan.

In an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (12/13), Neomi Rao, the administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs in the Office of Management and Budget, opines that the Trump Administration's efforts to dismantle the regulatory state have reassured businesses and families that planning for the future without worrying about regulatory red tape is OK. Rao criticizes President Obama for burdening the economy with up to $15.2 billion in regulatory costs and praises the Trump Administration's confidence in the decision-making abilities of the American people. Rao also asserts that regulatory reform strengthens and promotes constitutional democracy by deferring to Congress' power to assign legal authority to agencies.

What Is Zinke Doing?

In his column for the Glasgow \(MT\) Courier (12/13, Carmichael), Alec Carmichael is surprised that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke went along with the decision to reduce Bears Ears and Grand Staircase – Escalante National Monuments "in such a rank and file manner that one could hardly remember the lowly outsider who stood up to the Republican Party's position on selling off federal lands." What Carmichael is most concerned about is "how quickly he abandoned the character of a Montana do-no-wrong conservative in apparent hopes of appeasing the Trump machine, and riding the wave to power." Carmichael acknowledges that Zinke has "merely reshuffled lands back to other agencies," but notes that "in doing so has opened up those lands to the development of fossil fuels and other mining operations." He argues that "grazing lands, and development by industry actually harm public access and hunting access due to the need to protect equipment, livestock and everything else that goes along with industrial development."

Energy Fuels Was One Voice Among Many In Bears Ears Debate.

In an op-ed for The Denver Post (12/13, Chalmers), Mark Chalmers, president of uranium producer Energy Fuels, seeks to defend Energy Fuels from a "wildly exaggerated impression" advanced in a Washington Post article that the company "somehow played a significant role in the decision to reduce the size of Utah's Bears Ears National Monument." Chalmers says the company was "only one voice among many" in offering input during both the early and later stages of the "Administration's monument review process."

Cutting The Red Tape On The Way To U.S. Global Energy Dominance.

In an op-ed for the Daily Caller (12/13, Cohen), Bonner R. Cohen, Ph. D., a senior fellow at the National Center for Public Policy Research, President Trump's goal for the US to achieve "global energy dominance" is "absolutely achievable in light of America's abundance not only of hydrocarbons, but also of innovative technologies and nimble businesses practices that enable energy to be produced and brought to market at an affordable price." Cohen lauds the Trump Administration for making "enormous strides in rolling back Obama-era regulations specifically crafted to hamstring American energy production." However, Cohen writes that "the swamp in Washington is still very much with us, and there are further steps Team Trump can take to accelerate its draining." Notably, Cohen suggests that "the Washington-centric management" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "inherited should be dismantled in favor of engaging rural western communities and resource developers in the decision-making process."

Trump Delivers “Closing Argument” As Republicans Reach Agreement On Tax Plan.

Republican leaders have reportedly reached agreement on a tax plan on the same day President Trump delivered what aides described as a “closing argument” for it. While Trump said the plan would provide “massive tax relief for American families and for American companies,” many media reports cast the plan in a negative light, saying it will largely benefit corporations and the wealthy.

Reuters (12/13, Morgan, Becker) says the agreement “would repeal the corporate alternative minimum tax...and expand a proposed $10,000 cap for state and local property tax deductions to include income tax, lawmakers and sources familiar with the negotiations said.” In addition, it was “expected to limit the popular mortgage interest deduction to home loans of no more than $750,000 and provide the owners of pass-through businesses...with a 20 percent business income deduction.” It would also “gut part of the Obamacare health law” by repealing the individual mandate. Reuters says the final bill “could be formally unveiled on Friday,” with final votes expected next week. The New York Times (12/13, Tankersley, Kaplan, Rappeport) says the “overall cost of the revised legislation” is unclear, and adds that it “cannot exceed the $1.5 trillion bucket that lawmakers have allowed if they want to pass the bill without Democratic support.” Several Senate provisions added “to help pay for the overall bill were either reversed or scaled back in the consensus version, and some tax breaks eliminated by the House were added back in.” The CBS Evening News (12/13, story 8, 0:20, Glor) mentioned the agreement briefly in a 20-second report.

The Hill (12/13, Bolton, Wong) reports that while House conservatives “said they didn’t like the bump in the corporate rate,” with “a tax victory so close, they said the tweak would not be a deal breaker.” Republican Study Committee Chairman Rep. Mark Walker said, “We don’t like it; it causes some consternation. I am concerned about the business rate. ... But it’s not a deal breaker.”

Politico (12/13, Faler, Kim, Cook) says that with Senate expected to take up the bill Monday and hold a final vote on Tuesday, “attention turns to a handful of Republican senators who have held considerable leverage in the tax fight,” including Sen. Susan Collins, who “stressed on Wednesday that she doesn’t believe the top individual tax rate should be lowered,” and Sen. Marco Rubio, who “hinted Wednesday that his vote for the plan was not guaranteed. He has demanded that, if his colleagues back off their promises to cut the corporate tax rate to 20 percent, they must use at least some of the budget savings to expand the refundability of the child tax credit.” Sen. Bob Corker was also “non-committal.”

Senate Majority Whip Cornyn told the Washington Examiner (12/13, Ferrechio) that Republicans are “in good shape” to pass the bill with at least 51 votes, and said he is hopeful that Corker, who was “the only holdout on the initial Senate plan, may also vote for it.” Breitbart (12/13, Moran) reports that Republicans “hope to pass the tax bill before Christmas.” The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/13, Burr) says that at a White House meeting Wednesday, Sen. Orrin Hatch told the President. “We’ll get it done.”

The Los Angeles Times (12/13, Mascaro) calls the “tentative accord” a “significant step” in the GOP effort to get the bill to Trump by Christmas, but says Republicans “did not release details of the compromise or the text of a final bill as negotiations continued.” Critics meanwhile, “said the latest changes...only reaffirmed several independent analyses that show the bulk of the savings from the Republican plan would go to businesses and the wealthy.”

The Washington Post (12/13, Paletta, Werner) says the agreement “would deliver a major tax cut for upper-income households.” Its passage would “amount to the biggest legislative victory President Trump has secured since taking office.” The AP (12/13, Ohlemacher, Taylor, Gordon) similarly says passage of the plan, which “would provide generous tax cuts for corporations and the wealthiest Americans,” would be Trump’s “first major legislative accomplishment.” The New York Post (12/13, Fredericks) says that while the plan “would give Trump his first major victory in Congress and fulfill a longstanding goal of top Republicans,” it “has come under assault by Democrats, who say it is unfairly tilted in favor of business and the wealthy.”

The Wall Street Journal (12/13, Rubin, Hughes) says Republicans crafted the agreement with no input from Democrats. Sen. Joe Manchin said on CNN's Situation Room (12/13), “There were 15 Democrats that wanted to be part of this. I’m the easiest pick up they would have had, but it was designed not to have any Democrats.”

USA Today (12/13, Jackson, Shesgreen, Collins, Today) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer on Wednesday “called for action on taxes to be delayed until the newly elected senator from Alabama, Democrat Doug Jones, can be sworn in.” The New York Times (12/13, Stolberg) says Schumer called on Senate Majority Leader McConnell to “hit the pause button,” arguing, “It would be wrong for Senate Republicans to jam through this tax bill without giving the newly elected senator from Alabama the opportunity to cast his vote.” Sen. Bernie Sanders said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (12/13) that “the precedent here is when Scott Brown of Massachusetts was elected to replace the late Ted Kennedy, he was allowed to participate in voting on the Affordable Care Act. That’s the precedent there. And I think Schumer is exactly right in saying that Mitch McConnell should give Doug Jones the same opportunity.”

The Hill (12/13, Jagoda) reports that at the start of the conference committee’s open meeting on Wednesday, Democrats sought to postpone the conference until Jones is seated “but their effort was shot down.” Rep. Richard Neal “offered a motion to delay conference work until after Jones takes office,” but Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady “said Neal’s motion was ‘not available.’”

The Washington Times (12/13, Sherfinski) says that “Republican leaders say they’re pressing forward,” and White House Legislative Director Marc Short told Fox News’ Special Report, “I think the American people need this tax relief now so there is no need for us to wait. We hope when Doug Jones arrives here in Washington, DC...if he is representing the people of Alabama, then he will be wanting to make sure they get this middle income tax relief, too.”

In a televised speech from the White House Wednesday that USA Today (12/13, Jackson) says aides called a “closing argument” for the Republican tax bill, Trump promised a “giant tax cut for Christmas,” Bloomberg News (12/13, Sink, Epstein) reports. Trump said, “When I say giant, I mean giant. ... As we speak, Congress has reached an agreement on tax legislation that will deliver more jobs, higher wages and massive tax relief for American families and for American companies.” Trump said, “It’s critically important for Congress to quickly pass these historic tax cuts. ... If Congress sends me a bill before Christmas – this is breaking news – the IRS has just confirmed that Americans will see lower taxes and bigger paychecks beginning in February.”

Politico (12/13, McCaskill) reports that Trump said, “I’m here today to tell you that we will never let bad things happen with respect to the economy of our country.” Trump called the current tax code as “burdensome, complex and profoundly unfair,” and it “blam[ed] it for the loss of jobs that have gone overseas.” Said Trump, “And you see it. Even before we do this...they’re starting to come back. Our country’s starting to do really well again. And as a country, we’re being respected again. We’re being respected again.”

The Hill (12/13, Easley) quotes Trump as saying, “Our tax cuts will break down – and they’ll break it down fast – all forms of government and all forms of government barriers and breathe new life into the American economy. ... They will unleash the American people, they will tear down the constraints on discovery, innovation and creation, and they will restore the hopes and dreams of the American family. Millions of middle class families will win under our plan.” The Washington Times (12/13, Dinan) says Trump “surrounded himself with families who would benefit from the tax cuts,” as he delivered the speech, which “seemed designed to counter the claims of Democrats who have ridiculed the tax cuts as too little and too skewed to the wealthy.” Mary Bruce reported in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (12/13, lead story, 3:45, Muir) that Trump is “cautious.” Trump: “I mean, we are so close right now, so close, in fact, almost – I don’t want to talk about it. Maybe we shouldn’t talk about it.”

Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Hannity (12/13), “We are on the verge of passing historic tax reform.” The President “said people would start seeing the difference in their paychecks in February. When you file your taxes by April 15th next year, you will have seen the difference in your paychecks. He is the paycheck President.”

Peter Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (12/13, lead story, 2:35, Holt) that outgoing Fed Chair Yellen on Wednesday “cast doubt on the President’s rosy economic projection.” Yellen: “It would be challenging to achieve numbers like that.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/13, Board) says that in its report Wednesday, the Federal Open Market Committee did not indicate that it believes the Republican tax bill will have much of an impact on the economy.

WPost Analysis: Despite Trump Comments, Ireland Not Threatened By US Tax Overhaul. The Washington Post (12/13, Pogatchnik, Long) reports that as he has argued that the US must overhaul its tax code “to win back American investments and jobs,” Trump “has singled out Ireland for its extraordinarily low corporate tax rate.” However, according to “Irish government officials, accountants and highly skilled workers” see “little threat” to Ireland from the US tax changes, which the Post says “underscores why many experts are forecasting that the GOP tax plan will do little to alter the forces that drive American industry overseas.” In fact, “some argue, US moves could make Ireland an even more attractive landing spot for members of the Fortune 500 in Europe.”

Personal Finance Experts Offer Tips On Preparing For Coming Tax Changes. Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (12/13, story 2, 1:55, Holt) that with the coming tax changes, “there’s a lot to process including the loss of and limitations on a long list of popular deductions and you might be wondering what you should do now to prepare before they take effect.” Tom Costello added that with the new tax year drawing near, “personal finance experts say the time to act is now before the new rules take effect.” The story featured comments from personal finance experts.

Samuelson: “Tax Gap” Of GOP Bill Is Between $7 Trillion And $12 Trillion. Robert Samuelson writes in the Washington Post (12/13) that while estimates have said “that the tax gap of the Trump-Republican program – the net amount of the tax cut – is somewhere between zero (the administration’s position – the tax cut will pay for itself through stronger economic growth) and $1.5 trillion over a decade (the position of many economists who doubt much of a boost to economic growth),” a “more realistic estimate of the tax gap is somewhere between $7 trillion and $12 trillion, again over a decade.” Samuelson argues that even if the plan works, “it won’t cure chronic deficits,” but both parties “find it more convenient to argue over the plan’s distributional effects – are the rich and well-to-do unfairly favored? – than to close the gaping deficits.”

Trump Says He Originally Backed Strange Because He Knew Moore Wouldn’t Win.

Coverage in the wake of Doug Jones’ Tuesday win over Roy Moore in Alabama’s Senate special election largely focuses on two themes: First, that the outcome imperils both President Trump’s agenda and the GOP Senate majority in 2018. And second, Moore’s loss has led to a spate of finger-pointing within the GOP between Republican establishment allies of Senate Majority Leader McConnell and supporters of ex-White House chief strategist Steve Bannon.

The Washington Times (12/13, Boyer) reports that President Trump on Wednesday said he knew Roy Moore wouldn’t win the Alabama Senate special election, “after Democrat Doug Jones’ stunning victory dealt the president one of the biggest defeats of his first year in office. It was the president’s second loss in the Alabama Senate race this year, after he backed losing Republican Luther Strange in the GOP primary.” In a tweet, Trump said, “The reason I originally endorsed Luther Strange (and his numbers went up mightily), is that I said Roy Moore will not be able to win the General Election. I was right! Roy worked hard but the deck was stacked against him!” In a “Fact Check” piece headlined “Trump’s Revisionist History Of His Role In Alabama Race,” the New York Times (12/13, Qiu) says that Trump’s Wednesday tweet “is a highly amended account of the president’s efforts in the Alabama race.”

On ABC World News Tonight (12/13, story 2, 2:55, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported, “A subdued President Trump made it clear today he is unhappy with the results in the Alabama Senate race, even as many in his party are relieved.” Trump was shown telling reporters, “A lot of Republicans feel differently. They’re very happy with the way it turned out. But I would have – as the leader of the party, I would have liked to have had the seat. I want to endorse the people that are running.” Karl added that “unlike many Republicans in Congress, Trump went all-in for Moore...despite the fact that eight women accused the candidate of sexual misconduct, much of it when they were teenagers.”

Under the headline “Trump’s Unexpected Reaction After Alabama Loss: Magnanimity,” Politico (12/13, Karni) reported that Trump, “famous for his tantrums and his Twitter tirades, appeared to take” Moore’s defeat “in stride on Wednesday as he basked in a soon-to-be victory on tax reform.” Politico reported on the President’s remarks to the press, and added, “Setting aside his personal disappointment, Trump” called Jones, “congratulating him on the win and inviting him to visit the White House, even as Moore was still demanding a recount. It was a muted reaction to a stunning loss from a gut-trusting president who had endorsed the candidate against the advice of his own political shop and family members – and who rarely admits to being wrong.”

Breitbart (12/13, Spiering) reported Trump also “said that Moore’s loss would not affect his agenda going forward, but urged his supporters and the” GOP “to come out strong in the midterms. ‘We have to get more senators and more congressmen that are Republicans elected in ‘18,’ Trump said.” The Washington Examiner (12/13, Westwood) also reported on Trump’s remarks.

On the CBS Evening News (12/13, story 2, 2:00, Glor), Nancy Cordes reported, that in the wake of Moore’s loss, “Republicans were so relieved today you’d think they picked up a seat.” Sen. Bob Corker was shown saying, “Strange to say I guess for my side of the aisle, but I thought it was a great night for America.” USA Today (12/13, Collins) reports that Corker, speaking with reporters, said “that he’s ‘really, really happy’ that Jones defeated...Moore. ‘I know we’re supposed to cheer for our side of the aisle, if you will,’ Corker said. ‘But I’m really, really happy with what happened for all of us in our nation, for people serving in the Senate, to not have to deal with what we were likely going to have to deal with should the outcome have been the other way.’”

The Washington Post (12/13, Terris, Zak) reports that Sen. Richard Shelby, “who’d made a rare appearance on the Sunday talk shows to tell his fellow Alabama Republicans they need” to vote for someone other than Moore, said of Tuesday’s results, “It bodes well for ‘18 for us. Roy Moore would’ve been very toxic. ... We dodged that bullet.” The Hill (12/13, Carney) reported that in the wake of Moore’s loss, “Republicans are breathing a sigh of relief.” While Tuesday’s outcome shrinks the party’s Senate majority to a “razor-thin 51-49 margin,” Republican “senators said the slimmer majority is a small trade-off for avoiding long-term damage to the party caused if Moore had won.”

Politico (12/13, Nelson) reported that while Moore’s defeat “narrows Republicans’ already razor-thin majority in the Senate,” the President “was undeterred when asked about the prospects for his legislative to-do list. ‘I don’t think it’s going to affect it. I think that we’re doing a lot. This is the biggest thing that we’ve worked on,’ Trump said at a White House meeting with lawmakers about the tax reform package currently making its way through Congress.”

Moore “Substantially Underperformed” Among White Evangelicals. Writing for The Federalist (12/13), Lyman Stone said that while exit polling indicated Moore captured “80 percent of the white evangelical vote” in Tuesday’s election, he actually “substantially underperformed” the demographic, scoring “the worst showing of any Alabama Republican Senate candidate in the twenty-first century.”

Jones Says Trump Invited Him To White House During “Very Gracious Call.” The Hill (12/13, Shelbourne) reported that Jones on Wednesday said “that he had ‘a very gracious’ phone call with...Trump,” who “invited him to visit the White House and congratulated his campaign’s victory. ‘It was a very gracious call. I very much appreciate it. He congratulated me on the race that we won. He congratulated me and my staff on the manner in which we handled this campaign and went forward. And we talked about finding that common ground, to work together,’ Jones said during a news conference.”

Politico (12/13, Lima) quoted Jones as saying, “Very nice phone call, very pleasant phone call, and I appreciated him very much reaching out to me.” Jones “added that Sen. Luther Strange, the appointed incumbent whose seat Jones will fill, was among the first to call and congratulate him on his upset” win. Jones said “the calls from Strange and Trump were ‘very gracious.’” However, Jones “said he had yet to receive any such call from Moore.”

Media Analyses: Jones’ Win Imperils Trump’s Agenda, GOP Senate Majority. However, the CBS Evening News (12/13, lead story, 3:00, Glor) reported, “When Jones takes office next month, the Republican advantage in the Senate will shrink to just one seat, 51-49,” making “it more difficult for President Trump to get his agenda passed.” And under the headline “The Alabama Senate Loss Just Made Trump’s Job A Lot Harder,” the Los Angeles Times (12/13, Bierman) reports that in the wake of Jones’ victory, “Republicans [will] have one less vote to spare in the Senate,” making “passing major legislation even more difficult than it has been in Trump’s rocky first year, absent compromises with emboldened Democrats.”

In an “analysis” for Townhall (12/13), Guy Benson said that in the wake of Jones’ win, Senate Republicans “will now have just a one-vote cushion for the next year, which is a scary prospect,” in terms of the GOP-controlled Congress being able to implement Trump’s agenda. In addition, said Benson, Jones’ victory “makes the path more plausible” for Democrats to retake the Senate in the 2018 midterms.

In an analysis, USA Today (12/13, Jackson) reports that Trump’s backing of “a controversial candidate accused of serial sexual assault and harassment of young girls, analysts say, may haunt the president as he and the GOP pursue a conservative agenda and try to keep control of Congress in next year's national elections." Politico (12/13, Johnson) reported, "Jones' win, said one senior administration official, 'is a big black eye for the president.' For the president, who ignored the advice of both Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and his own political team at the White House to stay out of the race, it was a self-inflicted wound."

In an "analysis" for the AP (12/13), Julie Pace says, "Rarely has a sitting president rallied behind such a scandal-plagued candidate the way...Trump did with...Moore. And rarely has that bet failed so spectacularly." In the wake of the election, adds Pace, Trump will "head into his second year in office with one less Republican senator, narrowing a margin already so slim that it has so far left him unable to push major legislation through Congress. Democrats, who started the year as a deeply wounded minority party, press toward the midterm elections with a burst of momentum from the most unlikely of states." Bloomberg News (12/13, Litvan) reports that with Jones' win, "Senate Democrats gained significant new leverage to stymie the Republican agenda and make demands on spending and immigration in Congress next year."

On the CBS Evening News (12/13, story 3, 2:45, Glor), "Face the Nation" host John Dickerson said that "the major takeaway for Republicans is what kind of candidates are they going to nominate in other states where there are going to be close election in Nevada and Arizona? Are they going to have hardline candidates that thrill the primary audiences or ones that can win in the general election? For Democrats, the takeaway is in the Virginia governor's race and in this race, the President thrilled the Democratic base, got them to turn out. If that's true in 2018, that's great news for Democrats."

On NBC Nightly News (12/13, story 4, 2:20), Lester Holt reported that "Moore's loss is a big blow to...Trump, who went all in by endorsing the controversial candidate. And it could spell trouble for the GOP in 2018 and beyond." NBC's Gabe Gutierrez added, "Jones' victory relied heavily on strong support from women, crossover suburban Republicans, and African-Americans, who made up 29 percent of the electorate – up slightly from when Barack Obama was last on the ballot." Reuters (12/13, Whitesides) reports that Jones' victory "in Alabama, coupled with last month's Democratic sweep in Virginia, has given" Democrats "new optimism about" their "2018 prospects in the South and other conservative, heavily rural regions where Republicans have dominated for decades."

The Washington Post (12/13, Scherer, Costa, Dawsey) reports that Jones' win "was the latest example in a string of elections this year that Democratic leaders think represent a growing backlash against...Trump – and a potential building wave for 2018." Republicans, meanwhile, "were buzzing about how their hopes of retaining power on Capitol Hill after 2018 suddenly looked dimmer. No Republican 'should feel safe about anything' Sen. Lindsay O. Graham (R-SC) said Wednesday. 'Our party is in turmoil.'"

In an online analysis for CNN (12/13, Cillizza), Chris Cillizza said Jones' win "sent a very clear signal heading into the 2018 election: No Republican Senate seat is safe. What that means is this: Democrats now have a reason to believe that they could do something that was considered unthinkable as recently as the start of this week: Retake control of the Senate next November." The Hill (12/13, Hagen, Kamisar) reported that Jones' victory "gives the Democrats a narrow path to winning back the [Senate] majority in the 2018 midterm elections."

Under the headline "Alabama Win Stokes Democratic Senate Majority Hopes," Politico (12/13, Robillard) reported that Jones' victory "has cracked open a path to the Senate majority in 2018 that looked all but impassable before Tuesday night. The party will still have to defend 10 incumbents next year in states carried by President Donald Trump in 2016 – a long shot in even the best political environment – in addition to snagging Republican-held seats in Nevada and Arizona. But the party no longer needs to stage an upset in another forbidding red state – like Tennessee or Texas – on top of that."

McClatchy (12/13, Roarty) reports that Democratic "leaders are eagerly anticipating the 2018 midterm elections in the" wake of Jones' win, "convinced they can now win outright majorities in the House and Senate in addition to a fleet of marquee gubernatorial races. To them, the victory in Alabama was the culmination of victories last month in Virginia and New Jersey, where the party swept to big wins in both gubernatorial and state legislative races." The AP (12/13, Barrow) reports that Democratic "leaders cast the upset as a sign of growing nationwide momentum among voters opposed to...Trump and an indication that Democrats shouldn't shy away from competing in Republican territory."

The Los Angeles Times (12/12, Decker) reports, "Democrats who opened the year clashing among themselves and" bemoaning "Trump's election have closed 2017 with victories that demonstrated their ability to weaponize party enthusiasm and draw a template for success in a sharply competitive battle for Congress in 2018.”

The Washington Post (12/13, Weigel, Scott) reports, “The Alabama race, like last month’s elections in Virginia, saw Democrats outperform expectations and polling thanks to a surge of nonwhite voters. ... Democrats in Alabama and elsewhere spent Wednesday thanking black voters – and studying what had been so successful in getting them to the polls.” Said DNC chief Tom Perez, “Let me be clear: We won in Alabama and Virginia because black women led us to victory.” The Post adds, “Now, Perez and other Democrats said, they have a road map to follow in next year’s midterm elections, where they hope to make gains in battlegrounds with large nonwhite populations, including Nevada, Arizona and even Texas.”

Writing in “The Upshot” on the website of the New York Times (12/13), Nate Cohn said, “Over the last eight years, political analysts had come to think that Democrats were at a distinct disadvantage in midterm elections, since their younger and nonwhite coalition was less likely to turn out than older and white voters. It is time to retire that notion” in the wake of Tuesday’s election, which saw Democrats benefit “from strong turnout that plainly exceeded midterm levels, while white working-class Republicans voted in weaker numbers. This has been a pattern in all of this year’s major special elections, as well as in the Virginia general election,” and “suggests that President Trump’s less educated and affluent version of the Republican coalition has eroded the party’s traditional turnout advantage.”

DSCC Chairman Sen. Chris Van Hollen was asked on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (12/13) if Jones’ win was more than just people casting a vote against Moore and has significance for races outside Alabama. Van Hollen said, “I think you have to look at this in the context of the elections we saw just last month in November – from Virginia, New Jersey, to races throughout the country where you had a huge turnout, not just of Democrats, but independents and people really rejecting the kind of crude Trumpism that we’ve seen. ... I do think that while there were obviously some special circumstances in Alabama, putting that together with what happened last month around the country and you see voters who are fed up and want to send a message that they don’t like Trumpism and want to go in a different direction.”

Sen. Chris Coons (D-DE) said on CNN’s Situation Room (12/13) that Tuesday’s outcome “shows that the voters of Alabama are taking another look at the Trump Administration and at who is running on the Republican ticket. In this particular case, I think it’s important for us to look at who the citizens of Alabama voted for – a dedicated public servant, an experienced prosecutor, somebody who stood up for civil rights, and the fact that Doug Jones was able to win in a deeply red state that hasn’t elected a statewide Democrat in 25 years, that there was terrific and strong turnout across the board both by the African-American community and by folks who typically vote for Republican candidates. ... I think that should make it clearer that there is a real chance for a Democratic sweep in the House and for Democrats to hang on to our seats, even to pick up a few seats in the Senate.”

Sen. Bernie Sanders said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (12/13) that Tuesday night “was a defeat for Trump. November seventh was a defeat for Trump and I think if we can mobilize the American people to demand that we have a government that works for all of us and not just the one percent, that we end the divisiveness that Trump has been advocating, I think we can win tremendous victories in 2018.”

Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA) said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (12/13), “It’s a huge win for America, not just for Democrats. A great repudiation of someone who has no business being in the United States Senate. It shows when we put forward good candidates and we get our base energized and activists working, we can make a difference even in the deep South.” Asked if Democrats are in danger of “over-reading a win against a guy that was accused multiple times of being a pedophile,” Moulton said, “Yes, absolutely. There absolutely is. That’s why I’ll continue my call for a new generation of leadership in the party, a generation that has some vision, that is not just talk about how the Republicans are terrible, how Trump is an awful President, but really talk about what our plan is for the future of our country.”

In a Washington Post (12/13) op-ed, Emory University political scientist Alan Abramowitz says that Jones’ win “reinforces the conclusion, based on the results of numerous special and off-year elections and other leading indicators, that 2018 is shaping up to be a Democratic wave election. One of those leading indicators is the generic ballot,” which “an average of recent national polls” shows Democrats leading by 10 points. Abramowitz adds, “That is the largest Democratic advantage on the generic ballot question since 2008 and, if it continues into next fall, it would predict substantial Democratic gains in the midterm elections.”

The New York Times (12/13, Fausset) reports that exit polling by CNN found that “30 percent of the electorate was African-American” in Tuesday’s election, “with 96 percent of them voting for Mr. Jones. ... The share of black voters Tuesday was higher than the share in 2008 and 2012, when Barack Obama was on the ballot." A number of black voters said "they had long harbored a distaste for the fiery brand of evangelical politics that Mr. Moore had relied on to court working-class whites. But many others said that the Jones campaign uncorked the intense feelings of alarm and distaste that many African-Americans harbor toward...Trump."

Media Analyses: In Wake Of Moore's Loss, GOP Finger-Pointing. On NBC Nightly News (12/13, story 5, 1:55, Holt), Kristen Welker reported that Tuesday's outcome is "a huge embarrassment for the President." who after having supported Strange in the GOP primary backed "Moore in the general election in part after...Bannon convinced him to do so." Welker added, "Deepening GOP concerns, the rift in the" GOP "is growing, with Bannon saying Moore's loss has energized his war against the establishment. ... Even as many Republicans are stepping up their calls for Bannon to abandon his anti-establishment battle."

The Washington Post (12/13, Parker, Dawsey) reports that while the President congratulated Jones via Twitter on Tuesday night, "by Wednesday morning, as Trump watched the unflattering portrait of the loss unfold on television," he "grew piqued at the notion that he, somehow, was responsible. 'I won Alabama, and I would have won Alabama again,' Trump said, according to a senior administration official." The Post says Trump "spread the blame," faulting Bannon "for selling him what one outside adviser described as 'a bill of goods' in urging him to" back "Moore, and he faulted Moore himself for being an abysmal candidate." Trump previously "had also groused about [McConnell], saying he had been too aggressive in trying to push out Moore. But the president, White House officials said, was in largely good spirits – surprisingly so, some thought – throughout the day."

In a "news analysis," the New York Times (12/13, Baker, Haberman) reports, "Aides to the temperamental president reported being pleasantly surprised that he did not rage against the setback in private, as he is wont to do in moments of difficulty. But neither did he concede a mistake in" supporting "Moore, despite sexual misconduct allegations, attributing the loss to Mr. Moore and the national party establishment that abandoned him." The Times adds, "Behind the scenes, some advisers hoped the loss would persuade Mr. Trump to stop listening to...Bannon, his former chief strategist who has vowed war against the Republican establishment. But Mr. Trump talked with Mr. Bannon for 15 minutes by phone on Tuesday, aides said, and seemed disinclined to cut the adviser from his circle."

The AP (12/13, Miller) reports that in having backed Strange in the GOP primary and Moore in the general election, Trump "managed to endorse two different losing candidates in the same Senate race, a setback that is highlighting an experience deficit within the White House political team." The AP adds, "There is growing sentiment both inside the West Wing and around the nation's capital that there's a shortage of political know-how in the upper echelon of the administration. The Alabama defeat has some inside the White House hoping for a moment of reckoning with the president."

Bloomberg News (12/13, Asseo, Talev) reports that GOP "finger-pointing started minutes after" Jones' win, "with nervous party members fearing more of the same in the 2018 election might take away their majorities in Congress." Bloomberg News quoted Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) as tweeting on Wednesday, "Congratulations to the Bannon wing of the @GOP for gifting a seat to @SenateDems in one of the reddest states. You have no future in our country's politics." Meanwhile, McConnell, "who opposed Moore, was blamed by an adviser to the pro-Trump Great American Alliance. 'Mitch McConnell and the Republican establishment got their wish: they successfully delivered Alabama to a liberal Democrat,' said adviser Andy Surabian."

The New York Times (12/13, Martin, Burns) reports that Jones' win "tore open divisions between the party's establishment and populist wings, inciting bitter recriminations in the" GOP "as Democratic enthusiasm surges." In the GOP's case, "competing in the first midterm elections of a president this unpopular was always going to be difficult. But that natural disadvantage is being exacerbated by the conflict between Senate Republicans and antiestablishment conservatives such as...Bannon." The Times adds that GOP "lawmakers were all but gleeful on Wednesday at Mr. Bannon's comeuppance, ridiculing him for supporting the rare Republican who could lose an Alabama Senate race."

Under the headline "Republican Civil War Erupts Anew," Politico (12/13, Johnson, Isenstadt) reported that Jones' win – "far from settling the score between the McConnell and Bannon wings of the" GOP – "instead touched off another round of" Republican "infighting over who's to blame for the party's loss in one of the most conservative states in the country. From the outset, the race served as a proxy war between [Bannon and McConnell]. Now, both sides are blaming the other for Tuesday's loss, with each painting the results as a case study in the other's political ineptitude." Under the headline "Alabama Defeat Stokes Divisions Among Republicans," the Wall Street Journal (12/13, Hook, Peterson, Bender) similarly reports on the GOP infighting.

Rep. Bradley Byrne (R-AL) said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (12/13), "Mitch McConnell should have stayed out of this race. If he would have, we'd have a Republican US senator coming up there, not a Democrat."

The Washington Post (12/13, Sullivan, Weigel, Scherer) reports, "Stunned Republicans began casting blame Wednesday" in the wake of Moore's loss, as "members of the GOP began pointing fingers at one another for his defeat after being steamrolled in Virginia's elections last month." The Post adds that GOP "lawmakers, strategists and party figures picked sides: either with McConnell, who kept his distance from Moore's campaign, or...Bannon, who was among Moore's most ardent backers." On Twitter, "even Trump suggested that Moore had been a weak candidate, a tacit rebuke of Bannon's support." The Washington Times (12/13, Boyer, Miller) reports, "There was plenty of blame to go around" among Republicans in the wake of Moore's loss, "but most of the finger-pointing was directed at...Bannon."

The Hill (12/13, Greenwood) reported that during a Wednesday appearance on Fox News, Strange slammed Bannon, faulting him for Jones' win. Of Bannon, Strange said, "I have never seen him accomplish anything. ... He has accomplished one thing that I don't think anybody in America thought was possible. And that's getting a Democrat elected in the state of Alabama."

The Washington Post (12/13, Dawsey, Parker) quoted Steven Law, "a top McConnell ally who leads the Senate Leadership Fund.," as saying, "Not only did Steve Bannon cost us a critical Senate seat in one of the most Republican states in the country, but he also dragged the president of the United States into this fiasco."

The New York Post (12/13, Fredericks) reports that during a Wednesday appearance on MSNBC, Rep. Peter King blasted Bannon as "a 'phony' and a 'disheveled drunk' who does not deserve a role in national politics. 'I don't think Steve Bannon adds anything positive at all to the dialogue in the country,'" said King. The congressman also "said Bannon, whom he also called the 'phony type from Goldman Sachs,' should be kicked out of the GOP because of his declaration of war on the Republican establishment." In his Wall Street Journal (12/13) column, Gerald Seib says that Moore's loss may further stoke the divisions between Trump, Bannon, and GOP leaders.

The New York Daily News (12/13, Cullen) reports that Bannon, a vocal critic of McConnell, "said his battle to rid the GOP of what he believes are Washington insiders could take up to 20 years. 'You have to grind it out,' he reportedly told Breitbart Radio. 'Every day. If we're prepared to do it, we win.'"

The Washington Post (12/13, Farhi) reports, "The Alabama results suggest that a reckoning is due for both Bannon and Breitbart, whose influence and audience grew exponentially during Trump's presidential campaign. Since then, as support for Trump has declined, so has Breitbart's traffic, settling back to the 15 million people a month it drew before a spike around the election last year."

In an "analysis," Roll Call (12/13, Garcia) reported that ex-McConnell chief of staff Josh Holmes said on Twitter that Bannon "showed how to lose 'the reddest state in the Union.' But it was the second part of Holmes' tweet blaming Alabama's Republican Gov. Kay Ivey that also shows that there are more Republicans who share some blame for the rise of Moore, including Holmes' former boss."

In his Wall Street Journal (12/13) column, Karl Rove says that the GOP has in recent years lost a number of winnable Senate races by nominating sub-standard and erratic candidates, the latest example being Moore. Rove says that GOP will continue to suffer losses if Bannon is successful in boosting candidates he supports to primary wins.

In an editorial, the National Review (12/13) said, "There are several obvious lessons from Alabama: Character still matters; if he gets his way in other primary" contests, "Bannon could help throw away other winnable Senate races" and cost Republicans their majority in the Senate; "Democratic constituents are, as we also saw in Virginia, highly mobilized, and Republicans will need impressive candidates and campaigns to try to survive next year's mid-terms;" the President "would be well-served to listen to political advisors who aren't, like Bannon, hoping to tear down the GOP for fun and profit."

Will: Trump Has Supplanted Andrew Johnson As "Nation's Worst President." In his Washington Post (12/13) column, George Will says, "By joining...Bannon's buffoonery on Moore's behalf," Trump "planted an exclamation point punctuating a year of hitherto unplumbed presidential depths. He completed his remarkably swift – it has taken less than 11 months – rescue of the 17th, Andrew Johnson, from the ignominy of ranking as the nation's worst president."

WPost Analysis: Jones' Win Celebrated "In A Europe Horrified By Trump." Under the headline "Alabama Election Result Seen As 'Miracle' In A Europe Horrified By Trump," the Washington Post

(12/13, Noack), reporting from Berlin, Germany, says that Moore's loss "may have come as a relief to liberal Americans, but in Europe it was taken as a sign that the United States has not totally lost its moral compass. The 2016 election victory of President Trump, who is deeply unpopular across Western Europe, appears to have severely damaged the United States' status as a role model in Europe." Consequently, Jones' defeat of Moore, "who was dogged by allegations of sexual misconduct involving teenage girls decades ago...was interpreted by many in Europe as a reversal for Trump and a sign that all is not lost across the Atlantic."

Politico: Jones "Figures To Make Progressives In The Democratic Caucus Quite Happy." Under the headline "The Next Senator From Alabama Would Make Bernie Sanders Proud," Politico (12/13, Strauss) reported that Jones "favors abortion rights and same-sex marriage, and believes young immigrants brought to the country as children should be allowed to become US citizens. And he opposes both...Trump's border wall and the Republican tax plan." Politico added that though "the last generation of Democratic senators from the Deep South were reliable conservatives on many issues, Jones figures to make progressives in the Democratic caucus quite happy once he's sworn in."

White House: Now Not Right Time For North Korea Talks.

Reuters (12/13) reports that "a White House official" said Wednesday that no negotiations can be held with North Korea until it changes its behavior, "raising questions" about Secretary of State Tillerson's offer to begin talks any time and without pre-conditions. "Given North Korea's most recent missile test, clearly right now is not the time," a White House official told Reuters. A day after Tillerson's comments, the official, "who declined to be named, laid out a more restrictive formula for any diplomatic engagement with North Korea," saying, "The administration is united in insisting that any negotiations with North Korea must wait until the regime fundamentally improves its behavior. As the secretary of state himself has said, this must include, but is not limited to, no further nuclear or missile tests."

CNN's Situation Room (12/13), however, reported "there are conflicting signals about whether the United States is willing to negotiate with North Korea." Tillerson on Tuesday "appeared open to starting talks" with Pyongyang "without any preconditions," but "Tillerson's not on the same page with President Trump." The White House is "saying now is not the time for any talks because North Korea's simply been too aggressive." The New York Times (12/13, Landler) likewise says the President and Tillerson "are once again at odds over how to deal with" North Korea. In "an unusual statement" Tuesday evening, press secretary Sarah Sanders said Trump's position on North Korea was unchanged. Other sources, however, said "White House officials were alarmed by Mr. Tillerson's remarks...fearing that they would sow confusion among allies after Mr. Trump rallied them behind a policy of 'maximum pressure.'"

The AP (12/13, Pennington) says Tillerson's "surprising diplomatic offer of unconditional talks...hinges on two big X factors: Does the North even want talks, and is President Donald Trump fully behind his top diplomat?" A Washington Post (12/13, Taylor) analysis says a "major stumbling block" to talks with North Korea has been "a long-standing US insistence on North Korea meeting certain preconditions before any talks could begin." While Tillerson "appeared to back away from that position," the Post says it will depend on what Tillerson "consider[s] preconditions."

UN's Feltman: North Koreans Agree On Importance Of Avoiding War. Deutsche Welle (12/13, Welle) reports UN Under Secretary-General Jeffrey Feltman said Tuesday that senior North Korean officials told him during a recent visit that "it was important to prevent war but they did not commit to talks." Feltmen met with North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho and Vice Minister Pak Myong Guk during a four-day visit to Pyongyang last week. "Time will tell what was the impact of our discussions, but I think we have left the door ajar and I fervently hope that the door to a negotiated solution will now be opened wide," Feltmen said after a closed door briefing at the UN Security Council.

Fed Increases Interest Rate, Boosts 2018 Growth Forecast.

The CBS Evening News (12/13, story 9, 0:20, Glor) reported that "the Fed raised interest rates for third time this year and plans to raise them three more times next year, a sign the economy is in strong shape." NBC Nightly News (12/13, story 3, 0:15, Holt) reported that "the cost of borrowing still on the low end range of one and a quarter to one and a half percent."

The Los Angeles Times (12/13, Puzanghera, Lee) reports that monetary policymakers at the Federal Reserve increased the short-term federal funds interest rate "to a target range between 1.25% and 1.5%" on Wednesday. The rate hike was approved in a 7-2 vote, with "two regional Fed bank presidents, Neel Kashkari of Minneapolis and Charles L. Evans of Chicago" opposing. The officials also "forecast 2.5% growth next year with an increase in consumer spending and business investment expected from the lower taxes, with growth declining in subsequent years and running below 2% in the longer run."

The New York Times (12/13, Appelbaum) reports that outgoing Fed Chairwoman Janet L. Yellen "said the faster growth forecasts reflected an assessment of the $1.5 trillion tax cut moving through Congress," however, Fed officials "did not deviate from their 2018 outlook for interest rates or inflation and continued to signal three interest rate increases next year." The Times adds that the Fed "continues to raise interest rates because officials are confident that the economy is in good health. This is the third time the Fed has raised its benchmark rate this year." In a statement, it said that "the labor market has continued to gain strength and that economic activity has been rising at a solid rate." USA Today (12/13, Davidson) adds that the rate hike "is expected to ripple across the economy, nudging up rates, most noticeably for credit cards, adjustable-rate mortgages and home-equity lines of credit."

Bloomberg News (12/13, Condon, Torres) reports that in "its statement announcing the decision, the Federal Open Market Committee omitted prior language saying it expected the labor market would strengthen further," and instead wrote that "monetary policy would help the labor market 'remain strong.'" Following the announcement, both the Bloomberg Dollar Spot Index and "the yield on 10-year US Treasury notes" dropped. Additionally, "stocks jumped...before paring gains." The Washington Post (12/13, Long) reports that "unemployment is at the lowest level since 2000, growth is picking up, and inflation remains tame." Unemployment is projected to drop even more, to below 4 percent next year. Yellen said that "Fed governors expect a 'modest' increase in growth from the tax plan that the Republican-controlled Congress is finalizing...although she warned that 'the magnitude and timing of the macroeconomic effects of any tax package remain uncertain.'"

The Wall Street Journal (12/13, Timiraos) reports that Evans and Kashkari both pointed to weak inflation as the reason for their votes against the rate hike. Officials expect inflation to grow to the 2% target by 2019. Economists opined that both Yellen's comments and the new projections demonstrate that officials don't believe growth will generate as much inflation as they once thought.

Financial Experts Question Fed's Readiness For Booming Economy. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (12/13, Gramm, Saving), former Senate Banking Committee Chairman Phil Gramm and economics professor Thomas Saving opine that Obama-era Fed policies have created an environment that is not conducive to triggering a sustainable economic recovery. The two specifically critique monetary easing programs used in the immediate aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis that essentially paid banks not to lend. The pair believe that the Fed will put pressure on interest rates if it attempts to prevent inflation by selling securities going forward.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Pentagon Is Not A Sacred Cow." The New York Times (12/13) writes in an editorial that while "health care, Social Security, Medicare and other social programs are all on the chopping block as the Republican-led Congress scrambles to make up for the revenue lost to its planned tax cuts," the military budget "remains a sacred cow, destined to receive yet more money." While "the actual and potential threats from Russia, China, North Korea and Islamic extremists are all serious," the Times argues that "giving the Pentagon another huge increase defies common sense. The Pentagon already wastes about one in five of the taxpayer dollars it receives, according to a Pentagon-commissioned study." And the US "already spends more on its military than the next seven countries combined."

"When The People's Lawyer Breaks The Law." The New York Times (12/13) editorializes that "the renegade Rensselaer County, N.Y., district attorney, Joel Abelove, showed his contempt for the law and his unworthiness to hold office last year, when he brazenly obstructed a state investigation of a fatal shooting by a police officer in Troy." According to the Times, "a grand jury indictment unsealed this month, charging him with perjury and official misconduct, makes a strong case for removing Mr. Abelove from office." The Times notes that "removal proceedings against elected officials in New York State are rare," but argues that "given the egregiousness of Mr. Abelove's conduct," New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo "has little choice but to start removal proceedings." The Times concludes that "Abelove would be wise to resign now, to not further damage the already ravaged reputation of the Rensselaer County district attorney's office."

Washington Post.

“Republicans Are Worried About The Integrity Of Mueller’s Team. That’s Overblown.”

The Washington Post (12/13) says in an editorial that “there is no basis” for the GOP criticisms of special counsel Robert Mueller. In testimony Wednesday before the House Judiciary Committee, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein “gave a vote of confidence to the special counsel’s work,” and “we are glad to see Mr. Rosenstein stand firm in support of the special counsel he appointed despite the onslaught of partisan attacks. In doing so, he is upholding no less than the rule of law.”

“Sandy Hook Was Five Years Ago. Congress Has Still Done Nothing.” The Washington Post (12/13) editorializes that the efforts of the family members of victims of the Sandy Hook massacre to change their tragedy to positive change through a number of foundations and charities “puts Congress and its inaction” on passing sensible gun control to shame. The Post opines that in the years since Sandy Hook, “the gun lobby has become more emboldened,” as demonstrated by “the House’s passage of legislation allowing people, including those with dangerous backgrounds, to carry concealed guns across state lines.” However, the Post finds actions at the state level, where “states have enacted laws to strengthen gun safety, including new or expanded background checks, and candidates promising gun control have won elections,” to be more encouraging.

Wall Street Journal.

“The FBI’s Trump ‘Insurance.’” The Wall Street Journal (12/13) says in an editorial that anti-Trump text messages to and from Peter Strzok undermine the credibility of special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation.

“Yellen’s Fed Farewell.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/13, Board) says that in its report Wednesday, the Federal Open Market Committee did not indicate that it believes the Republican tax bill will have much of an impact on the economy.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Last night, there was real concern the voters in Alabama would put an alleged child molester and bigot and homophobe – all the bad things Santa frowns on – in the United States Senate. But it didn't happen. The special election actually turned out to be a very special election after all. Last night, Doug Jones beat Roy Moore to become the first Democratic senator from Alabama since 1992. It was a major upset. A Republican losing to a Democrat in Alabama is like a grizzly bear losing to a fish."

Jimmy Kimmel: "It just doesn't happen. Unless the Republican happens to be so creepy around young girls, he was banned from the local mall. If the Republican you're running against is not allowed inside Forever 21, your odds of winning increase significantly."

Jimmy Kimmel: "It is kind of depressing that in 2017, barely not electing an alleged pedophile to the Senate is something to celebrate. But we'll take what we can get at this point."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Not long after they announced Doug Jones was winning, I went to Donald Trump's Twitter account. He wrote, 'Congratulations to Doug Jones and a hard-fought victory. The write-in votes played a very big factor but a win is a win. The people of Alabama are great. Republicans will have another shot at the seat in a very short period of time, it never ends.' He was gracious, he was tasteful, he didn't insult anybody. Which means there's no way he wrote one word of that tweet."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Then this morning, he [Trump] was back to his old self. He wrote, 'The reason I originally endorsed Luther Strange and his numbers went up mightily is that I said Roy Moore will not be able to win the general election, I was right. Roy worked so hard but the deck was stacked against him.' Which is absolutely perfect. Only Donald Trump could say, 'Remember when I was wrong? I was right!'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "And the idea that the deck – he said the deck was stacked. ... Does Donald Trump know how a stacked deck works? Maybe this is why his casinos went bankrupt."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The USA Today editorial board took an unusually harsh stance against the President. Among many other things, they wrote, 'A President who would all but call Senator Kirsten Gillibrand a whore is not fit to clean the toilets of the Barack Obama's library or shine the shoes of George W. Bush.' That is from USA Today. The previously most controversial thing they published was a pie chart asking whether cats made great pets.”

Stephen Colbert: “Jones is the first Democrat to win an Alabama Senate seat in 25 years. So a quarter of a century. So the last time Alabama elected a Democratic senator, the biggest movie was ‘Aladdin’, or as Roy Moore calls it, ‘the perfect date movie.’”

Stephen Colbert: “[Donald Trump] tweeted, ‘The reason I originally endorsed Luther Strange – and his numbers went up mightily – is that I said Roy Moore will not be able to win the election. I was right! Roy worked hard, but the deck was stacked against him!’ Yes, the deck was stacked, and we also learned that Donald Trump’s endorsement is a royal flush.”

Bryan Cranston: “Now the big news was last night that Democrat Doug Jones defeating controversial Republican candidate Roy Moore. Wow. People are excited. Now he lost, but on the bright side, Roy Moore can now focus his energies on his real passion, hiding from shopping mall security guards.”

Bryan Cranston: “But this is really historic because it’s the first time in 25 years that a Democrat has been elected senator in Alabama. Now to give you an idea of how long ago it was, Roy Moore was dating girls back then who are now in their 30s.”

Bryan Cranston: “And some other news out of the White House: It was revealed that Omarosa [Manigault], the former ‘Apprentice’ contestant and recent White House aide, has been fired. Omarosa is out of a job. So now she’ll be doing, well, pretty much the same thing she was doing at the White House. Absolutely nothing.”

Bryan Cranston: “Now Omarosa was reportedly fired after a heated argument with Chief of Staff John Kelly and escorted off of the White House grounds. Now on the bright side for her, it’s the first time in months that a Trump staffer was not led away in handcuffs.”

Bryan Cranston: “Moving on to the newspaper, USA Today published an editorial – listen to this – that bashes Trump as ‘not fit to clean the toilets in Obama’s presidential library.’ But when you think about it, come on, as if Donald Trump would ever set foot inside a library.”

Jimmy Fallon: “Last night, Doug Jones pulled off a shocking win over Roy Moore to become senator of Alabama. And you know it’s been a crazy year when an alleged pedophile loses a Senate race and we’re like, ‘Wow, what an upset.’”

Jimmy Fallon: “Roy Moore became the first Republican to lose an Alabama Senate race in 25 years. It was so embarrassing his horse went home in an Uber.”

Jimmy Fallon: “As the results came in, reporters said it was very quiet at Moore’s campaign headquarters. But to be fair, it was a school night.”

Seth Meyers: “Last night, the people of Alabama made the apparently very difficult decision of choosing a Democrat over a guy who was banned from a mall.”

Seth Meyers: “I know we’re all tired of mall jokes, so let me just say one thing very seriously. Sure, Roy Moore was the Hot Topic for a while, but America’s not a Banana Republic, and the voters made that Claire’s. The voters said Ugg and they were able to Chanel their energy and send that Fossil off on some New Journeys.”

Seth Meyers: “According to a new Monmouth university poll, only 32 percent of people approve of the job President Trump is doing. Oh, wait. Oh, I’m sorry I read that wrong. Only 32 people approve of the job President Trump is doing.”

Trump Orders Boost In Production Of Critical Minerals.

The AP (12/20, Daly) reports that President Trump on Wednesday "ordered the government to boost production of critical minerals used for manufacturing everything from smartphones to wind turbines and cars, raising the prospect of more mining." The new executive order "directs federal agencies to find ways to increase exploration, mining and processing of critical minerals and streamline permits for private mining companies."

The Hill (12/20, Cama) reports that "the order, directed toward Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, came a day after Zinke released an in-depth report concluding that the United States depends entirely or almost entirely on foreign imports for many important non-fuel minerals like titanium, fluorine, cobalt and manganese." According to the article, "Zinke's strategy, due in 180 days, will outline options to reduce the country's dependence on foreign critical minerals, assess progress toward large-scale mineral recycling and recommend ways to streamline mining permitting, among other factors."

Bloomberg News (12/20, Barton) reports that Trump said in the statement, "This executive order will prioritize reducing the nation's vulnerability to disruptions in our supply of critical minerals safely and responsibly for the benefit of the American people."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Examiner (12/20, Siciliano).

Drilling In Arctic Refuge Gets A Green Light. What's Next?

The New York Times (12/20, Fountain, Friedman) reports the GOP tax bill passed Congress on Wednesday, including a provision lifting a ban on oil and gas drilling in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. However, both supporters and opponents of ANWR drilling say it could be years before the first lease sale. While the Interior Department is expected to conduct one sale within four years, there are a number of steps that need to be taken before any lease can be held. The process moving forward is not clear, as lawsuits and other actions are expected to slow down any drilling efforts. The Interior will work to identify land for lease, after which it must hold at least one public comment period. There are also doubts that oil companies are interested in conducting seismic surveys in the region or if they are looking to bid on the newly opened territory.

The AP (12/20, Bohrer) reports Alaska's political leaders hailed the bill's passage as a victory that has been decades in the making. US Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, along with Rep. Don Young, were invited to speak at an event marking the bill's ratification. Young said persistence paid off, while Murkowski highlighted how drilling can occur in way that balances development with environmental stewardship.

The Hill (12/20, Cama) reports Speaker Paul Ryan said, "After decades and decades in this chamber, we are opening up a small non-wilderness area of the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge for responsible development. That is the most ambitious step we have taken in years to secure our own energy future." At a Cabinet meeting, President Trump told reporters, "We're going to start drilling in ANWR, one of the largest oil reserves in the world, that for 40 years this country was unable to touch. That by itself would be a massive bill. ... They've been trying to get that, the Bushes, everybody. All the way back to Reagan, Reagan tried to get it. Bush tried to get it. Everybody tried to get it. They couldn't get it passed. That just happens to be here."

The Washington Times (12/20, Boyer, Miller) reports Trump said, "We got it done. ... Above all else, it's a jobs bill. We have done a job like no other administration." He also said, "ANWR by itself would be a massive bill. ... ANWR is a big, big deal." The Washington Examiner (12/20, Siciliano) reports Trump went on to describe the ANWR, saying, "It'll be one of our biggest oil reserves. It's one of the biggest in the world. ... It puts us at a level that we're not even at now. And we're doing very well all in terms of energy."

Also reporting are the Seattle Times (12/20, Mapes), E&E Publishing (12/20), Vox (11/28, Irfan), UPI (12/20, Graeber), and the Alaska Public Radio Network (12/20, Harball).

For Oil Drillers, Glut Damps The Excitement As Arctic Opens Up. The Wall Street Journal (12/20, Puko) reports that Congressional Republicans and the Trump Administration are slated to offer new exploration opportunities in federal land, but the depressed oil market may limit interest. The glutted oil market has left companies less willing to find new sites to drill. Investors and analysts only expect light interest when Arctic lands are opened for exploration. Wood Mackenzie found that with the global oversupply, companies have cut their exploration budgets by more than half since 2014, down to about $40 billion. The trend is likely to continue for government sales, especially for remote or environmentally-sensitive areas. Bloomberg News (12/20, Nussbaum) reports Raymond James analyst Pavel Molchanov said, "Our sense is that there is little to no current interest in the industry to invest in ANWR. ... This is high-risk 'frontier exploration' with a very distant roadmap to cash flow."

Fight Over Alaska Arctic Drilling Has Just Begun, Opponents Vow. Reuters (12/20, Gardner) reports Democrats and environmentalists have vowed to challenge ANWR drilling every step of the way. Environmentalists are planning to challenge applications to conduct seismic tests, saying they could block drillers with lawsuits over endangered species or other environmental laws. Trustees for Alaska lawyer Suzanne Bostrom said, "We will be working every step of the way to make sure that the coastal plain is protected." Barclays analysts also warned that environmentalists could delay the lease sales and project approvals, and could even discourage investment entirely. The Houston Chronicle (12/20, Osborne) reports the National Audubon Society released a statement saying it would "do whatever it takes to prevent drilling in America's bird nursery." President David Yarnold said, "This tax bill trades away a national treasure – for what – oil we don't need and the fiction that oil from the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge will serve as a bank to offset tax cuts? This is the biggest threat the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge has ever seen." Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune said, "This outrageous scheme is among the worst pieces of legislation we've seen in over a generation. It's made even more tragic because it sacrifices one of our last great wild places."

Judge Declares Mistrial In Bundy Case In Las Vegas.

The New York Times (12/20, Pérez-Peña, Turkewitz) reports that, in "the latest failure by federal prosecutors to convict participants" in the armed standoff led by Cliven D. Bundy over decades of unpaid grazing fees, Judge Gloria M. Navarro declared a mistrial for Bundy, his two sons, and supporter. The judge "stated that prosecutors had improperly withheld evidence from the defense." The move follows the unearthing of "powerful evidence" supporting the Bundys' claims of misconduct by federal agents and prosecutors, when The Oregonian newspaper made public a complaint that a Bureau of Land Management agent filed with the Justice Department alleging "unprofessionalism, bias, heavy-handed tactics, and withholding of evidence by his colleagues during and after the standoff."

The Washington Post (12/20, Sottile) reports, "Navarro determined that the prosecution suppressed evidence from FBI surveillance cameras recording the Bundy family home and the presence of Bureau of Land Management snipers around the property," as well as withholding "FBI logs, maps, reports and threat assessments that said the Bundy family was not dangerous." The Post casts the evidence as creating doubt of "the government's portrait of the family as violent, paranoid, anti-government extremists." Reuters (12/20) reports Navarro offered "a stinging rebuke" to prosecutors saying they, in Reuters' words, "knew or should have known of the existence of memos from Federal Bureau of Investigation agents that might have been helpful to the defense.”

Interior Reimbursed For Zinke Virgin Island Fundraiser, But Contributions Unaccounted For.

Politico (12/19, Lefebvre) reports that “taxpayers have been reimbursed for Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s participation in a political fundraiser last spring in the Virgin Islands — but questions remain about the donations he helped solicit, according to campaign finance records and interviews.” The Virgin Islands Republican Party “repaid on Oct. 5 the Interior Department $275 for expenses related to Zinke’s appearance, according to recent federal campaign finance filings.” According to the article, “the reimbursement may be enough to protect Zinke from accusations that his Virgin Islands appearance violated the Hatch Act, which prohibits government officials from using taxpayer resources to advance partisan causes.”

Rob Bishop Slams Criticism Of National Monuments Rollback As ‘Lie’.

The Washington Examiner (12/20, Siciliano, Siegel) identifies Rep. Rob Bishop as “the chief congressional backstop and encourager of President Trump’s rollback of national monuments.” In response to criticism of the decision to reduce the size of two national monuments in Utah, Bishop, who is also chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, characterized the opposition as attempting to introduce a false choice between preservation and development. Specifically, Bishop singled out the owner of outdoor retailer Patagonia, Yvon Chouinard, who has filed a lawsuit against the government over the decision. Bishop said, “I am not saying Patagonia is lying, but they are.”

Federal Agency Reports Show ‘Continuum Of Harm’ From Workplace Sexual Misconduct.

The Washington Post (12/20, Davidson) reports there is a “continuum of harm” caused by different forms of sexual misconduct, according to a report released by the Government Accountability Office. The article reports the GAO found that “sexual harassment is a gateway offense to more serious transgressions.” The Post notes that “the everlasting effects of sexual misconduct also were shown by an Interior Department survey issued last week.”

Methane Emissions From Oil And Gas Are Plummeting Without Obama Rule.

The Daily Caller (12/20, White) reports that in the last six years, natural gas well methane emissions have decreased “even as activists and lawmakers argue that stringent regulations are required to tackle” the task of reducing emissions. Emissions from the Appalachian Basin, for example, have decreased by 26 percent since 2011, according to federal data. These decreases are happening alongside the Trump administration’s rollback of Obama-era methane regulations for oil and gas operations.

YEAR IN REVIEW: Port Project, King Cove, Alaska-Virgin Merger.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (12/20, Brehmer) posts a year in review regarding top stories from 2017. The article says that “proponents of a road from King Cove to Cold Bay feel renewed hope under discussions with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s administration for a different land swap than was proposed in the past.” According to the article, “discussions involve setting up a federal lands appraisal process on 200 to 300 acres owned by the King Cove Corp. that could be swapped with the federal government for land to complete the road with an 11-mile connection through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge to reach Cold Bay and its all-weather airport.”

Feds Hit With FOIA Suit For Tribal Leadership Dispute Docs.

Law360 (12/20, Lidgett) reports that “seeking information regarding a Timbisha Shoshone Tribe leadership row, the Indian Law Resource Center filed a lawsuit Tuesday urging a D.C. federal judge to force the federal government to turn over records that it said were either improperly kept from the organization or redacted." The Freedom of Information Act suit was filed "against the Office of Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs, Pacific Regional Office of the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Office of the Solicitor of the DOI."

Spokane Tribe Announces Opening Date For Airway Heights Casino.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (12/20, Kramer) reports that the Spokane Tribe will hold the grand opening of its new casino in Airway Heights on Jan. 8. The tribe "first proposed the casino development in 2006, but waited nine years for the greenlight from the U.S. Department of Interior to build the off-reservation casino." Washington Gov. Jay Inslee approved the project in 2015.

Michigan Sending 20 Firefighters To Battle California Wildfires.

MLive \(MI\) (12/20, Champion) reports that "a team of 20 Michigan firefighters are set to spend two weeks on the West Coast to help subdue fires that have burned more than 270,000 acres since the beginning of December." According to the article, "the Michigan Department of Natural Resources will send 13 firefighters while seven firefighters are coming from Michigan's Bureau of Indian Affairs." Jim Fisher, the DNR's fire section manager, said, "They choose to go for a variety of reasons. This is the kind of work they enjoy doing, they're helping other states and fire agencies and they gain valuable experience while they are there."

Bureau Of Land Management

Everyone's Fighting Over BLM's Methane Rule.

E&E Publishing (12/20) reports that "states and environmental groups" have filed two new lawsuits against Trump administration's decision to suspend a Bureau of Land Management rule designed to regulate methane emissions from oil and gas operations. According to New Mexico Attorney General Hector Balderas (D), "Quite frankly, Secretary Zinke's action to suspend the BLM methane rule is not only short-sighted but ignores the strong local and national support for curbing methane waste." Meanwhile, Western Energy Alliance President Kathleen Sgamma said, "I think you have some AGs who are trying to make a name for themselves by opposing responsible oil and natural gas development whenever they can," while the Independent Petroleum Association of American dismissed the challenges as "short-sighted" opposition.

BLM Nets $1M-Plus In Ohio, Louisiana Lease Sales.

Natural Gas Intelligence (12/20, Cocklin) reports that last week, the US Bureau of Land Management auctioned acreage for the development of oil and natural gas in Wayne National Forest, and the Kisatchie National Forest, which produced more than $1 million in revenues to be split between the state governments of Ohio, Louisiana, and the federal government. The BLM started auctioning off parcels within the Marietta Unit last year, which has produced a total of more than $7 million in revenues. The unit was first nominated for unconventional development two years ago, according to the BLM.

New Mexico Delegates Renew Push To Limit Drilling.

The AP (12/21) reports that "Democratic members of New Mexico's congressional delegation" called for limits on oil and gas drilling in New Mexico's northwestern corner. The legislators sent a letter to a federal land official in New Mexico expressing concerns over potential effects of drilling on the "archaeological and cultural sites that dot the region." The Trump Administration reportedly is considering relaxing restrictions on land surrounding Chaco Culture National Historical Park.

HCCA Sues Federal Government To Prevent Coal Mining Expansion.

The Crested Butte News (12/21, Eaton) reports that the nonprofit group High County Conservation Advocates has sued the Trump Administration and has "asked for a temporary restraining order against several government agencies to stop road building and the expansion of mining in the West Elk Wilderness by national coal mining giant Arch Coal." According to HCCA public lands director Matt Reed, "the move comes after a series of decisions that will open the Sunset Roadless Area, a 5,800-acre forested landscape in northwestern Gunnison County to road building and coal mining." Reed said, "On December 11, the Forest Service consented to the modification of two coal leases in the West Elk Wilderness. This paves the way for the West Elk Mine to enter into 1,700 acres of the Sunset Roadless Area and to access 17 million tons of coal."

BLM Hopes To Install Digital Payment At Blackwell Island.

The Coeur d'Alene \(ID\) Press (12/20) reports that The Bureau of Land Management Coeur d'Alene Field Office is "hoping to make the public's visit to the popular Blackwell Island boat launch and recreation site a bit more convenient." The bureau "hopes to provide more flexibility and convenience for users by installing two automated machines that would accept day-use fee payments by either credit or debit card, eliminating the need for cash."

BLM Issues Final Supplementary Rules For Guffey Gorge.

KOAA-TV Colorado Springs, CO (12/20, Dumas) reports that the Bureau of Land Management's Royal Gorge Field Office will "implement supplementary rules for public lands at Guffey Gorge beginning Jan. 19, 2018." The bureau "said that increased visitation to the area has caused a number of public safety and natural resource concerns in recent years." According to the article, "the new rules prohibit possessing alcoholic beverages, parking motor vehicles outside of designated areas, playing amplified music, and bringing animals into the area without a leash."

Local Motion: Protest At BLM.

KVNF-FM Paonia, CO (12/20, Goold) reports that "about 40 stakeholders from the North Fork Valley and beyond were at the headquarters of the Bureau of Land Management in Montrose on December 15th to protest the BLM's approval of oil and gas development at Bull Mountain."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Three Companies Submit Bids For Offshore Wind Power.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (12/20, Bragg) reports that "three offshore wind energy developers bid Wednesday on contracts to sell electricity to Massachusetts power companies, taking the next big step in a process that could set turbines spinning south of Martha's Vineyard within the next five years." According to the article, "by April, Vineyard Wind, Bay State Wind and Revolution Wind will hear whether their bids have been selected for negotiation by the handful of electric distribution companies that will buy the wind energy." Then, "by the end of July, the utilities and offshore wind energy companies are expected to finalize long-term contracts and hand them over to the state Department of Public Utilities for review and approval."

Also reporting are the Springfield \(MA\) Republican (12/20, Serreze), Renewable Energy World (12/20, Delony), reNews (12/19), and RTO Insider (12/20, Kuser, Heidorn).

Bureau Of Reclamation

Reservoirs Release More Than Normal.

The Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (12/20) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation will be "releasing higher than normal flows in the Wind and Bighorn Rivers downstream of Boysen Dam and also in the Shoshone River below Buffalo Bill Dam." According to the article, "the release from Boysen Reservoir to the Wind River will be approximately 1,250 cubic feet per second for the winter months, which is about 300 cfs above normal." Also, "the release from Buffalo Bill Reservoir to the Shoshone River is expected to be set at approximately 500 cfs, which is about 150 cfs above normal, and remain at that flow for the winter months." Wyoming Area Manager, Carlie Ronca, said, "These water operations are needed to manage reservoir levels and will have the added benefit of increased power generation, while still appropriately managing for this coming season's irrigation water supply."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Prairie Dog Endangered-Species Plan Eases Rules Under Trump.

The AP (12/20, Whitehurst) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “moving to loosen endangered-species protections for Utah prairie dogs, flipping the script in a long-running conflict over federal policies in a town where residents say they’re overrun by the creatures.” The plan would “allow prairie dogs to be killed or removed from private property more often, relaxing regulations designed to protect the species.” The FWS “said Wednesday that the plan will preserve the prairie-dog numbers while helping people in the southern Utah town of Cedar City.”

Border Wall Lawsuit Details Environmental Concerns.

Business Insider (12/20, Garfield) reports that “four environmental conservation nonprofits have filed suit against the United States Department of Homeland Security.” The groups claim that the Trump Administration’s “planned border wall would jeopardize more than a dozen endangered species, including the Quito checkerspot butterfly and the Arroyo toad.” A judge is set to make a decision during a hearing in February.

Government Agencies, Landowners Team Up To Help Cottontail.

The Hartford \(CT\) Courant (12/21, Coffey) reports on the efforts of “a region-wide initiative” to help the “struggling” New England Cottontail rabbit. The efforts included “preserving and creating habitat for the rabbit, specifically early successional habitat with thick shrubs for food and cover.” The article notes that “because 90 percent of the state is in the hands of private landowners, Working Lands for Wildlife was born, a voluntary cost reimbursement program for private landowners.”

USFWS To Restore Wetlands On Bloom Township Parcel.

The Worthington \(MN\) Daily Globe (12/20, Buntjer) reports that “a representative from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service appeared before Nobles County commissioners on Tuesday to discuss a 97-acre Bloom Township parcel that will be restored to wetlands, native prairie grasses and forbs.” Todd Luke, district manager for the FWS at Windom, “said the parcel, adjacent to the already developed Bloom Waterfowl Production Area (WPA), had appeal because of the ability to develop a larger tract for brood habitat for waterfowl.” The FWS will “be involved in the restoration of the site, including converting two semi-permanent wetlands on the property to permanent wetlands.”

Additional coverage was provided by AgWeek (12/20, Buntjer).

Game Commission Approves Wolf Plan, Releases.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (12/20, Hayden) reports that the New Mexico State Game Commission “approved the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s final Mexican Wolf Recovery Plan during a meeting Wednesday morning in Albuquerque, a move that some hope signals the start of a better relationship between the two groups.” The commission also “approved Fish and Wildlife permits to allow the cross-fostering of up to 12 pups in New Mexico in 2018 and for some pups to be moved into captivity in New Mexico from Arizona.” The Department of Game and Fish said in a statement, “The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish is satisfied with the Mexican wolf recovery plan which includes; measurable recovery criteria, biological and legal considerations. Key to our support is that consideration of the historical range of the Mexican wolf are taken into account, recognizing that approximately 90 percent of the subspecies’ historical habitat exists in Mexico.”

Michigan Fish Dealer Sentenced In Lake Trout Case.

The AP (12/20) reports that “a Michigan fish dealer has been sentenced to four months in prison for buying and selling lake trout from Lake Michigan that had been illegally taken by a tribal fisherman.” George Eugene Schrink “pleaded guilty to the false labeling of fish.” Schrink was nabbed “in a three-year investigation conducted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.”

National Park Service

Poll: National Park Fee Hikes Likely To Reduce Visits.

The Hill (12/20, Cama) reports that “nearly two-thirds of Americans would be less likely to visit a national park if its fees increased, a new poll finds.” The survey, commissioned by the Outdoor Alliance For Kids, “found that 64 percent of respondents would be less likely to visit parks with higher fees, while 68 percent oppose the Trump administration's proposed fee hikes." The findings are intended "to push back against the National Park Service's proposal, floated in October, to increase entrance fees at 17 of the system's most popular parks."

Additional coverage of the proposal was provided by Federal News Radio \(DC\) (12/20).

Arizona Parks Prepare To Close As Government Shutdown Looms.

KVOA-TV Tucson, AZ (12/20, VinZant) reports that "according to the National Park's Service contingency plan, parks will start closing at noon on Friday if Congress is unable to reach a funding deal" and avert a government shutdown. The NPS' contingency plan "calls for park's to operate with only 'essential' personal."

Trump Goes Big With White House Christmas, But Who Pays?

Reporting on the holiday festivities during December at the White House, ABC News (12/20, Phelps, Hughes) notes that "the amount of Christmas decoration in the Trump White House appears consistent with their predecessors." The National Park Service "said it has helped purchase the 53 trees dotting the inside of the White House — similar to the number it acquired in other years." NPS spokesperson Jenny Anzelmo-Sarles said, "This year, the trees were purchased from farms in West Virginia and North Carolina."

Park Service To Conduct GW Parkway Traffic Study.

Covering the Corridor \(VA\) (12/20) reports that the National Park Service will "begin a study of traffic on the George Washington Memorial Parkway between Belle Haven to Mount Vernon later this year," Rep. Don Beyer's office confirmed. The study, "which will be completed in either late 2018 or early 2019, is expected to evaluate safety at problem intersections, look at ways to automate traffic enforcement, and provide recommendations to improve safety on that section of roadway, according to information provided by Beyer's office."

Sea Lions Terrorize San Francisco Bay Swimmers In Spate Of Attacks.

Fox News (12/20, Rogers) reports that "a spate of a sea lion attacks prompted authorities to close part of San Francisco Bay to swimmers this week." A spokeswoman for the San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park said that Aquatic Park Cove re-opened for swimming Wednesday. Over the past several days, she explained, "park rangers have not observed any unusual marine mammal activity, and the park has received no new reports of animal bites."

Report: Inadequate Warning By Park Officials In Smokies Fire.

The AP (12/20, Mattise) reports that "insufficient warning by Great Smoky Mountains National Park officials contributed to dramatically less time to evacuate people during a Tennessee wildfire that killed 14 people in November 2016, according to a report released this week." According to the article, "the outside review ordered by the city of Gatlinburg and Sevier County says reliance on limited information from the National Weather Service and park officials meant that the predicted speed and severity of the impending firestorm was inaccurate." The report states, "More timely and accurate communications from the (park) personnel would have helped the city to prepare sooner for what was a catastrophic event."

Study: Moose On Lake Superior Island Are Shrinking.

The AP (12/20) reports that "scientists studying the moose population on a national park in Lake Superior have discovered that the size of the animals has been shrinking over the years." Michigan Tech University researchers "studied more than 660 moose skulls from Isle Royale National Park." They "discovered that the skulls have shrunk by 16 percent over the past 40 years." John Vucetich, an ecologist at the university who co-authored the study, said, "As wolf predation has gone down on the island, moose abundance has gone up, and that's contributed to most of the changes we've seen, maybe 80 percent of the changes we've seen."

Blue Ridge Parkway Ranger Vehicles Totaled By Drunk Drivers.

The Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (12/20, Chávez) reports that "drunken driving continues to be a big problem on the Blue Ridge Parkway, as it is across the country." According to the article, "to raise awareness and cut down on potentially deadly offenses, the parkway, a unit of the National Park Service, is joining the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's National Drunk and Drugged Driving Prevention Month." The national "Drive Sober or Get Pulled Over" campaign will be enforced through Dec. 31.

Company Wins Legal Fight To Lead Park Tours.

The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (12/20, Koshmrl) reports that “more than four years after filing suit against the National Park Service, a local wildlife safari company has won its legal bid to guide clients over the snow in Grand Teton National Park.” Eco Tour Adventures owner Taylor Phillips was disagreed “with a 2014 federal court ruling that said he should have won a permit to guide cross-country skiers and snowshoers in Teton Park, but that the judge lacked the authority to force the Park Service’s hand.” Phillips “wanted the permit — not the $50,000 the judge awarded — and so he continued to push the issue.” According to the article, “Phillips saw his fortune take a turn for the better in April, when U.S. District Court Judge Beryl Howell ruled from Washington, D.C., that the agency ‘violated its own clear regulations’ by awarding the contracts to Jackson Hole Mountain Resort and the Hole Hiking Experience.” The settlement agreement with the NPS was finalized this fall.

Office Of Insular Affairs

America’s Overlooked Pacific Island Partners.

In a piece for the Diplomat (12/21, Leis), Scott Leis, an International Program Officer for the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration in Washington, D.C. and an officer for Habele Fund, writes that “the U.S. is finally taking a more overt interest in the strategic importance of the Freely Associated States.” He notes that in early December, President Trump “signed the 2018 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), and, in doing so, the 2010 Compact Review Agreement between the U.S. and Palauan governments as well.” Leis praises officials for recognizing the “strategic importance” of the Freely Associated States “to U.S. interests.”

World Bank Commits US$34m To Marshall Islands Energy Project.

Voxy \(NZL\) (12/18) reports that “the Republic of the Marshall Islands will be closer to its goals of greener, more efficient and more reliable energy, following the approval by the World Bank’s Board of Executive Directors of US$34 million for the Sustainable Energy Development Project.” Marshall Islands Minister of Finance, Hon. Brenson S. Wase said, “The Marshallese government is working hard with development partners to meet our targets of 20 percent renewable energy by 2020, and 100 percent renewable energy by 2050. We are excited by this new World Bank-supported project, which will significantly boost access to reliable, efficient and ultimately more affordable renewable energy for residents and businesses across Majuro and Ebeye.”

Governor To Kilili: ‘Stop Saying I Supported HR 339’.

Marianas Variety (12/20, Villahermosa) reports that Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres, “who has just returned from a recent trip to Washington, D.C., said he discovered a lot of “misleading information” coming from the office of U.S. Congressman Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan.” The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (12/20, Encinares) reports that Torres said that the intent of House Resolution 339 and “the repercussions of it after being enacted into law was something that he did not support.” Torres said, “...My support [on the bill] originally is not what has transpired and it is not what I supported; the outcome of [H.R. 339’s enactment] is devastating everybody here on the island and I am very concerned because those good folks that have been here on the island as construction workers, maintenance workers, gardeners—all fall under the category of construction workers.”

Three Months After Hurricanes Irma And Maria, V.I.

National Guard Soldiers Have Yet To Receive Full Pay. The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (12/20) reports that over three months since Hurricanes Irma and Maria, “V.I. National Guard soldiers have yet to receive their full pay for their hurricane-related efforts.” The article notes that “the Government of the Virgin Islands, under financial pressure even before Hurricanes Irma and Maria, has found itself in a worse position following the storms, forcing the government to agree to a federal community disaster loan that not only breaks the government’s covenant with its current bondholders, but weakens an already frail position in the bond market.” Moreover, “compounding the matter is a 2018 budget deficit projected to be around $250 million.”

US Geological Survey

Update On The USGS Aerial Survey With The Hula-hoop Helicopter.

The Crested Butte News (12/21, Minsley) reports that the US Geological Survey "finished its survey of the valleys around Crested Butte in early November," with "more than 1,200 miles of data...successfully collected." According to the article, "the data will be used to generate a three-dimensional view of the local geology." The article says that "the information will be released to the public and be used as part of other research to understand groundwater flow and other processes in mountain headwater systems."

Small Earthquake Recorded In North-Central Oklahoma By USGS.

The AP (12/20) reports that on Wednesday, the US Geological Survey reported a 3.3 magnitude earthquake in Oklahoma. This earthquake follows one "day after at least 10 temblors were recorded in the state, including one of magnitude 4.0." The earthquake did not cause any reported injuries or damages. The state has recently experienced thousands of earthquakes that are being "linked to underground wastewater injection from oil and gas" operations.

Yes, Something Can Be Done About Wildfires.

In a column for the New York Times (12/19), Gregory Scruggs discusses how develop a "comprehensive approach" to reducing wildfire risks, writing, "Experts believe that a cohesive strategy involving public education, community outreach, landscape restoration and robust emergency response could at least begin to mitigate the potential for such devastation." Scruggs highlights Deschutes County, Oregon, calling the area "a national leader in pursuing such a comprehensive approach." According to Scruggs, "It too experiences regular wildfires. Nevertheless, no house has burned here since 2003, even as fires caused enormous property damage elsewhere in the West."

Cassidy, Scalise Boost State's Oil Revenues.

The Lake Charles \(LA\) American Press (12/20) editorializes that Louisiana's Republican US Sen. Bill Cassidy and Louisiana's Republican House Majority Whip Steve Scalise worked two measures into the tax reform bill that will "increase the revenue sharing cap for Louisiana from $500 million to $650 million for the two-year period of 2020-2021." The two legislators "have done a great job ensuring that Louisiana gets its fair share of offshore oil revenue." The protective measures will "allow the sale of five million barrels of oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve in either 2026 or 2027."

Trump, Republicans Take Victory Lap After Passage Of Tax Reform Bill.

Wednesday's passage of the Republican tax plan receives extensive media coverage, including 14-and-a-half minutes of coverage on the network news broadcasts – all three of which led with the story – and heavy print and online reporting. Generally, the coverage – which describes Trump as “triumphant” and “jubilant” as he celebrated the victory with Republican leaders at the White House – is positive for the President and Republicans, casting the bill's passage as their first major legislative victory since taking control of Congress and the White House. However, several reports highlight Democrat claims that the measure benefits the wealthy and corporations more than the middle-class Americans whom Republicans had promised would see substantial benefits from the legislation. The reports also say Republicans now face a difficult task in selling the legislation to voters.

Politico (12/20, Nussbaum) says Republicans gathered at the White House on Wednesday to make sure Trump, “who prizes winning over all else...received his thanks.” Politico described a “love-fest, a scene unprecedented in any other presidency but almost normal-seeming in Trump's Washington,” as a “triumphant” Trump took the stage “and kicked off a series of speeches aimed at touting the legislation – and especially on praising the president, who is expected to sign it in the days ahead.” Congressional leaders, Politico adds, “seemed to compete for who could lavish the most praise on the president, whose hunger for aggrandizement is well known.” For his part, Trump “appeared to soak it all in, smiling and nodding along, playing the role of emcee as he summoned each speaker to deliver his or her thanks.”

The Washington Times (12/20, Boyer, Miller) describes Trump as being in “a jubilant mood” as he took what Bloomberg News (12/20, Jacobs, Epstein) and the Washington Examiner (12/20, Westwood) called “a victory lap” after the House cleared the bill. USA Today (12/20, Jackson, Przybyla) says Trump “enthusiastically declared victory” as Republicans handed him “the first major legislative achievement of his 11-month-old presidency.” Speaking at a “pep-rally like event on the South Lawn of the White House,” Trump declared, “It's always a lot of fun when you win.” USA Today added that while Trump “says the tax cuts will spur investment,” there is “significant skepticism among Democrats that U.S. corporations, already flush with cash, will reinvest the money instead of using it to buy back shares to drive up stock prices.”

Townhall (12/20, Pavlich) quotes Trump as saying, “We had a historic victory for the American people. It will go through final passage today in the House. Then the congressmen and women and the Senate will be coming over – the Republican Senate. ... We're going to have the Republican senators come over, we're going to have the Republican members of the House come over. And we're going to have a news conference. And people are starting to see how great this historic victory was.” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on Fox News' Special Report (12/20), “We fixed a broken tax system, we've delivered on tax cuts for individuals and business. This is all about creating jobs. I think this is going to be an enormous impact on the US economy.”

David Muir said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (12/20, lead story, 3:30, Muir) that while “not everyone is convinced” that the bill will result in “jobs, and pay raises for the middle class,” Trump “is beaming. The Christmas promise he made is coming true.” The New York Post (12/20, Schultz, Fredericks) says a “jubilant” Trump touted the plan, saying, “People are starting to see how great this historic victory was, the passage of the massive tax cuts and reform that's – a lot of reform in there, but the tax cuts supersede and I said very specifically ‘use the word tax cuts.’ ... It will be an incredible Christmas gift for hard-working Americans. I said I wanted to have it done before Christmas. We got it done.” In an earlier tweet, Trump blasted the media “for portraying the reforms as a giveaway to the rich and big business, and for emphasizing polls that show most Americans oppose the bill.” Trump wrote, “The Tax Cuts are so large and so meaningful, and yet the Fake News is working overtime to follow the lead of their friends, the defeated Dems, and only demean. This is truly a case where the results will speak for themselves, starting very soon. Jobs, Jobs, Jobs!”

The Hill (12/20, Easley) quotes Trump as saying, “It's the largest, I always say the most massive, but it's the largest tax cut in the history of our country and reform. Something special." However, although "the cuts are among the largest since 1918, they are not largest in history, according to an analysis by the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget." The New York Times (12/20, Shear, Tackett) says Trump's "significant legislative victory" came "after nearly a year of humiliating defeats in Congress, making good on his promise to deliver what he called a 'big, beautiful' tax cut before Christmas and finally demonstrating the political power of unified Republican control in Washington." Trump "will enter his second year in office with a roster of Republican achievements that he and his party will attempt to sell to voters in the 2018 midterm elections: Lower taxes, more conservative judges, fewer regulations and more restrictive borders." Gary Varvel writes in his column in the Indianapolis Star (12/20, Varvel) that as recently suggested by White House press secretary Sarah Sanders, "The good news of Trump's presidency hasn't received much attention." Varvel lists some of the "good news" including "defeating ISIS," tax cuts, economic growth, greater consumer confidence, deregulation, the stock market, judicial appointments, unemployment, trade, immigration, energy, Israel, climate change, coal, and school choice as areas in which Trump has been successful. Varvel concludes, "Trump has more wins than losses."

Likewise Major Garret said in the lead story for The CBS Evening News (12/20, lead story, 2:40, Glor) that the celebration at the White House "capped a year of accomplishment. Neil Gorsuch on the Supreme Court. ... Fewer illegal crossings on the southern border, regaining territory from ISIS in Iraq and Syria, and eliminating regulation. But the President fell short on replacing the Affordable Care Act." However, also on The CBS Evening News (12/20, story 2, 2:35, Glor), CBS "Face the Nation" anchor John Dickerson highlighted "a bit of a paradox. If you look on the one side, you have all of those achievements...that the President got," but "for somebody who came into the office with his signature skill being marketing, all of those achievements have not paid off in popularity. His approval rating, the average is about 39 percent. This tax bill that he's been selling, the approval rating for that is below 30 percent. About 10 points away from where the Affordable Care Act was when President Obama signed it. The Republican Party is less popular. And so, he has gotten the achievement, but what has eluded him so far is the approval."

Breitbart (12/20, Spiering) reports that Trump thanked Senate Majority Leader McConnell and House Speaker Ryan "and many other senators and members of Congress for their efforts to pull the bill across the finish line on Wednesday." Trump said, "I want to thank you, Mitch McConnell. What a job." He also praised Ryan, calling him "a great Speaker." The Washington Post (12/20, Paletta, Stein) says Republicans "were united in ways they haven't been at any point during the Trump presidency, rebounding from internal divisions that plagued them when they sought to overhaul the nation's health-care laws." The Washington Post (12/20, Wagner) says Trump "basked in the praise of Republican lawmakers" as they "lauded" him for his "exquisite presidential leadership." Republicans "touted" him as "one heck of a leader" and as a "man of action." The Post adds that "the adulation from the Republican lawmakers signaled an even bigger moment: Many were embracing not only a shared accomplishment with Trump, but also his unorthodox presidency itself."

Eamon Javers said on CNBC's Closing Bell (12/20), "You saw the relationship between Mitch McConnell and the President of the United States much different today. Remember the President's former political adviser Steve Bannon has been overtly campaigning against Mitch McConnell and branding him as sort of a wing of the Republican establishment that needs to go away. Today, the President, though, saying very much Mitch McConnell, heck of a job here, pushing this tax bill through. So perhaps bygones are bygones and this victory will help paper over some of the rifts within the Republican Party, or perhaps this is just a temporary ceasefire in that ongoing debate within the party of which direction they're going to go. But this was a very united Republican party we saw here today."

On its website, Roll Call (12/20, McKinless) features a video of GOP lawmakers at Wednesday's ceremony "showering...Trump with praise for his role in helping get the bill across the finish line." The Daily Caller (12/20, Donachie) says Sen. Tim Scott "got choked up" as he spoke about "the benefits of tax reform Wednesday, completely stealing the show at what was already a celebratory affair for Republicans and the administration." Scott "discussed how Republicans are bringing tax relief to single-mothers, middle-class Americans and will ultimately help many achieve the 'American Dream.'"

The AP (12/20, Peoples, Lucey, Gordon) says that while a "triumphant" Trump and "jubilant" Republicans celebrated the measure's passage, the American people "will need some convincing." Some Republicans "warned that the party could face a painful political backlash against an overhaul that offers corporations and wealthy taxpayers the biggest benefits and triggers the loss of health care coverage for millions of Americans" and even some of "the president's strongest allies conceded that voters may not immediately warm to the new law." The AP adds that there are calls from GOP strategists and candidates for Trump "to launch an immediate public relations tour to sell the plan to help avert an anti-Republican tsunami in 2018."

In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (12/20, lead story, 2:30, Holt), Lester Holt said a "practically giddy" Trump was "savoring his first big legislative win" with "a victory lap at the White House." The hope now, Holt added, is "that the large number of Americans unhappy with the bill will learn to love it." Chief White House correspondent Hallie Jackson said Republicans are "betting there will be no political hangover, that this tax plan will end up winning over more Americans." Similarly, the Wall Street Journal (12/20, Hughes) says that while passage of the measure is a political win for McConnell and Ryan, they now face the task of selling the measure to the public, which they believe will become easier once the tax cuts kick in. Politico (12/20, Bade, Kim) says that while Republicans "have every reason to feel euphoric" about the tax bill, "on the periphery is palpable angst, particularly in the House." Ryan and McConnell "scored an undeniable win this week" but "the victory lap for both men may be short-lived" as Republicans by Friday "will have to figure out how to fund the government, and there are no good options."

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (12/20, Gilbert) reports that Ryan said in an interview "that he would be happy to have the battle for Congress next year hinge on the sweeping tax bill that Republicans just passed, despite the bill's unpopularity today." Ryan said, "I think that would work very well for us." Ryan told Fox News' Fox & Friends (12/20), "The average taxpayer in every income group including people in these high tax states still get a tax cut." Asked if the result of the bill may be that legislatures in high-tax states will "have to do something about the high tax rate," Ryan said that "what members of Congress or conservatives see is basically 46 state are paying higher federal taxes to subsidize higher state taxes in about four states. It's really a fairness argument."

The Washington Free Beacon (12/20, Meyer) cites a Tax Foundation analysis which find that the final version of the bill "will reduce taxes for nearly every household." According to the Foundation, "Our results indicate a reduction in tax liability for every scenario we estimated, with some of the largest changes in after-tax income accruing to moderate-income families with children."

USA Today (12/20, Shesgreen) reports that the House had to hold "an unusual do over vote," on the measure after the Senate was forced to make changes to comply with Senate rules, providing "an anti-climactic end to an otherwise triumphant win for the GOP." The New York Times (12/20, Kaplan) says the need for a second House vote "gave ammunition to Democrats, who had already accused Republicans of trying to rush the tax overhaul through the House and Senate." Rep. Louise Slaughter said, "We are five days away from Christmas, but it feels like Groundhog Day," and Rep. Lloyd Doggett said, "We will be cleaning up this mess and the blunders in this bill all of next year." The Los Angeles Times (12/20, Mascaro) also reports briefly on the GOP plan.

The Washington Post (12/20, Merle, Gregg) says that while workers "will see the first glimpse of a tax cut in February at the earliest," it "won't be until 2019 – when people file their taxes for next year – that most will know whether they will pay more or less to the federal government." The Post adds that "tax attorneys, accountants and corporate payroll departments are scrambling to adjust to changes that won't be official until Trump signs the bill in January."

AT&T To Increase US Capital Spending Give Employee Bonuses After Tax Bill. Politico (12/20, Lima) reports that Trump announced during his remarks, "AT&T plans to increase U.S. capital spending $1 billion and provide $1,000 special bonus to more than 200,000 U.S. employees, and that's because of what we did." AT&T chairman and CEO Randall Stephenson "announced Wednesday that the company would increase its capital expenditures budget in the U.S. by $1 billion once the bill is approved by the president." In addition, "employees would also receive a $1,000 individual bonus, which be awarded over the holidays if the law were signed by Christmas." On its website, CNBC (12/20, Jeffery) says the announcement came "a month after the Justice Department challenged AT&T's pending merger with Time Warner. Trump has said the deal is 'not good for the country' because it might make prices increase."

The Washington Times (12/20, Richardson) says that in addition to AT&T, Fifth Third Bancorp "also announced bonuses of $1,000 to more than 13,500 employees and said it would raise its minimum hourly wage to $15. The banking corporation said approximately 3,000 employees will benefit from the wage increase." On its website, CNBC (12/20, Moyer) reports that Wells Fargo "also said it would be boosting its minimum wage for employees to $15 an hour" and would "target $400 million in donations to community and nonprofit organizations next year."

Also Wednesday, Breitbart (12/20, Mason) reports, Boeing tweeted that the tax bill “will allow them to spend $300 million on ‘employee-related and charitable investment.’” Boeing tweeted, “#Boeing announces $300M employee-related and charitable investment as a result of #TaxReform legislation to support our heroes, our homes and our future.” Boeing CEO Dennis Muilenburg said in a statement, “On behalf of all of our stakeholders, we applaud and thank Congress and the administration for their leadership in seizing this opportunity to unleash economic energy in the United States. ... It’s the single-most important thing we can do to drive innovation, support quality jobs and accelerate capital investment in our country.” A feature on the Washington Post (12/20) highlights how the nation’s 20 largest companies “will use their tax cut money.”

Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Hannity (12/20), “Unfortunately there were no Democrats there because none of them took an opportunity to give tax cuts and relief to our job creators, to middle class families, and they are going to have to go home this Christmas and all next year and explain why they insist this is a tax cut for the rich when just today you had major companies say they are going to give bonuses and other charitable contributions to their employees. Are those employees receiving those hard working men and women the rich? I think the Democrats missed a huge opportunity here with President Trump’s leadership that really put this over the top.”

Pence: Growth From Tax Bill Will Outpace Deficit Predictions. Vice President Pence was asked on Fox News The Ingraham Angle (12/20) about the estimates that the bill will increase the deficit. Pence said, “The need for the Congress to always look for ways to tighten its belt is a real priority for President Trump. The estimates of deficits here are all based on some pretty predictable growth estimates going forward.” Pence added, “I have to tell you President Trump really believes, we all do, that by letting the American people keep more of what they earn, by letting middle income Americans have more spending power, by lowering taxes on businesses large and small that we are going to outperform those growth projections and we will see those deficits overcome by growth, but also by exercising the kind of fiscal responsibility that President Trump has been driving for since the first day of this administration.”

Toomey Argues Tax Cuts Will Pay For Themselves. Sen. Pat Toomey was asked on CNN’s The Lead (12/20) about The New York Times’ claim that no economic analysis supports the idea that the tax cuts will pay for themselves. Toomey said, “That’s not true. Larry Lindsey’s done a great analysis that demonstrates why it’s very likely we will have a smaller budget deficit as a result of this bill, not a larger one. Fundamentally you need to ask yourself how much extra economic growth will it take over the ten-year window of this budget or longer to fully offset the foregone revenue? The answer is less than half of one percent of extra economic growth. CBO’s projecting that our economy will only grow by 1.9 percent per year over this period of time. If we get to 2.5 percent, we don’t even have to quite get there, we will more than fully offset all lost revenue.”

Meadows: Tackle Deficit By Slowing Growth Of Government. Rep. Mark Meadows was asked on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (12/20) about concerns that the bill will add to the debt. Meadows said that “the deficit is something we have to tackle. ... We have to make sure that we slow down the growth of government. Really, government has been growing twice as fast as paychecks back home on Main Street. So what I propose is that we slow down the growth. Not cut government. Just slow down the growth.”

WPost Analysis: Trump Likely To Save Millions Under Tax Bill. The Washington Post (12/20, Harwell) reports in an analysis that while Trump said he would be a “big loser” if the bill passed, he “will likely save millions of dollars.” Trump “stands to gain immensely” from the measure “including through a lower top tax rate and lucrative deductions for top-earning households, according to attorneys and tax experts who reviewed the final bill.” The White House “has claimed repeatedly that the tax bill could cost the president ‘a lot of money,’” but on Tuesday, press secretary Sarah Sanders “acknowledged that the overall impact on his finances could be more complicated,” saying, “In some ways, particularly on the personal side, the president will likely take a big hit. ... But on the business side he could benefit.”

Democrats Vow To Make Tax Bill An Issue In 2018. Reuters (12/20, Morgan, Becker) says there was united Democratic opposition to the measure, which polls show is “unpopular with the public,” and Democrats “promised to make Republicans pay for their vote during next year’s congressional elections.” House Democratic Caucus Chairman Joe Crowley said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (12/20), “I think it was a bait and switch on a proportion we’ve never seen before. The President said that he would help the middle class. He campaigned on that in middle America. And, in essence, what he’s doing here and what the Republicans are doing is giving a huge corporate tax break. ... It really was a classic bait and switch. They dangled it out there for the middle class...and what it's really doing is helping the corporate special interests as well as the wealthiest in this nation to the tune that's been really unheard of in modern history." Peter Alexander said in an analysis for NBC Nightly News (12/20, story 2, 1:50, Holt) that while Trump "repeatedly branded it as a middle class miracle," analysts "say in 10 years, more than 80 percent of the benefits will go to the top one percent."

Meanwhile. Rep. Jim Himes told CNN's Situation Room (12/20), "The President doesn't understand that what he's just done is he's just raised...health insurance premiums on every American. Why is that? ... The reason we have a mandate is because people, often young people who are very healthy think I don't need health insurance. ... The reality is that healthy 25-year-olds get hit by buses sometimes and those healthy 25-year-olds get hit by buses and show up in emergency rooms if they do not have health insurance, guess who pays for their cost to the emergency room? Those of us who actually do buy insurance. What will happen if you do away with the mandate and healthy people don't buy insurance, now you've got people who are older and sicker and using more health care buying insurance. ... If that is true, everybody's premiums go up."

Republicans Rejected Manchin Proposal. The Washington Post (12/20, Debonis, Werner) reports that in the days before the Senate voted on the tax bill, Sen. Joe Manchin told Sen. Rob Portman that "he would consider joining the tax effort" if the corporate tax rate was cut to 25 percent instead of 20 percent and the proceeds were used "for bigger middle class tax cuts." Portman took the proposal to GOP leaders, but they rejected it because "the prospect of a bipartisan deal that could have solidified public support for the tax plan was far outweighed by the imperative to keep the GOP unified and the belief that deep cuts in corporate taxes, more than anything else, were the recipe for economic and political success." The Post says the rejection of the Democrat's offer "underscores the political risks undertaken by the GOP." But Republicans believe the cuts will "spur economic growth, and that everyday Americans will reward the GOP."

The Washington Examiner (12/20, Drucker) says Manchin "struggled" Wednesday to explain his opposition to the bill, "conceding in a local radio interview that it contains 'some good things' that could benefit his state." Manchin said in the interview, "There's some good in this bill. I acknowledge that." Asked why he "opposed legislation that will benefit the 'vast majority' of taxpayers and businesses in the state," Manchin said, "The things that you mention are correct. Initially people will benefit and see some changes in their taxes." He blamed his opposition on predictions that the measure will add to the debt and that cuts for individuals and married couples will expire while the corporate cuts are permanent. The Examiner said that it appeared at times that "Manchin was wrestling with his answers, trying to justify his 'no' vote without being too critical, and antagonizing Trump."

NYTimes Analysis Considers Next Steps After ANWR Drilling Is Approved. The New York Times (12/20, Fountain, Friedman) reports on what will occur now that the GOP Tax bill lifts a ban on oil and gas drilling in ANWR. The Times says supporters and opponents both say it could be years before the first lease sale, which is "a precursor to any drilling." On the issue of what Democrats can do to stop it, the times says, "not much" as their "ability to halt progress toward drilling in the refuge hinges on the party's ability to recapture the majority in one or both houses of Congress in the 2018 midterm elections." In the short-term environmental groups can do "potentially more than Democratic politicians" by seeking "to block drilling through legal or procedural means and by mobilizing public opinion against it."

CNN's King: GOP Bill Provides "Damn Good Money:" To Working Families. Matt Vespa writes on Townhall (12/20, Vespa) reports that CNN's John King "asked if Democrats, especially those from states that Trump won in 2016, were taking a risk by opposing this historic bill." King said, "If you're a working class family, a lot of people say, 'oh, it's only $200, oh, it's only $300;' if you're a working class family living paycheck-to-paycheck – $200-300 is damn good money and you are grateful for it."

WSJournal Sees Benefits In Tax Bill While WPost Denounces It. The Wall Street Journal (12/20, Board) in an editorial on the tax plan comments on the criticism that it will not increase American competitiveness, citing a study from Germany's Center for European Economic Research concluding that the tax plan will encourage foreign investment in the US, which, it said, had been discouraged by US tax rates. Under the new tax rates, the economists found that US taxes will now be about the EU average and lower than those of France or Germany. The Journal concludes by suggesting that France and Germany may well follow the US in lowering taxes.

The Wall Street Journal (12/20, Board) in an editorial on the tax act suggests it may encourage states to reconsider their tax rates, as high earners who will have the deductibility of state taxes capped may lobby state legislatures to reduce the rates. The Journal identifies 17 states that may be affected and singles out the four with the highest income tax rates – California, New York, Oregon, and Minnesota – as unlikely to change given the states politics, but notes a number of the higher-rate states have Republican governors or legislatures that may decide to reduce rates including Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Nebraska, South Carolina, and Wisconsin.

The Washington Post (12/20, Board) in its editorial on the “huge tax bill” calls it “an ignominious moment for Republicans,” describing it as beneficial for “wealthy heirs” and for “tax dodgers and their lawyers” as well as “for corporations that look like the Trump Organization,” and “pass-through” businesses. The Post also says the act is based on “the discredited theory of trickle-down economics,” and “know-nothing anti-intellectualism.” The Post further says it is “a victory for corrosive partisanship,” but “most of all...for fiscal irresponsibility.” The Post concludes by saying the bill will require more legislation “to limit the damage to already shaky health-care insurance markets,” as well as “a technical-corrections bill” and in the “longer term” will require tax increases and cuts in entitlement programs.

More Commentary. Robert J. Samuelson writes in his column in the Washington Post (12/20, Samuelson) in opposition to the tax bill, accusing Republicans of “shameless cynicism” by, he says, borrowing $1.5 trillion “to cut taxes for major constituencies – workers, families, small businesses and big companies,” in order to “buy votes.” Samuelson adds, “We need more taxes, not fewer.”

Binyamin Appelbaum and Ana Swanson write in the New York Times (12/20, Appelbaum, Swanson), that the bill will test whether President Trump’s “ideas for strengthening American business will increase the prosperity of the American people.” They identify Trump’s goal as “increasing the output of the United States economy.” They also argue that Trump favors lower domestic taxes and higher tariffs to support “the United States economy in what he sees as a zero-sum competition among nations.”

Greg Ip writes in the Wall Street Journal (12/20, Ip) that the GOP plan address only some of the problems economists have cited with the tax code and exacerbates others, which will force lawmakers to revisit the issue in years to come.

Rosie O’Donnell Offered Senators $2 Million To Vote Against Tax Bill. The Federalist (12/20, Payton) reports that Rosie O’Donnell posted a tweet Wednesday in which she offered Republican Sens. Jeff Flake and Susan Collins $2 million in cash to vote against the GOP tax bill. The Federalist notes that is a federal crime to offer members of Congress “money or anything else of value in exchange for an official act.”

Congress Working To Avert Shutdown Over End-of-year Funding Bill.

NBC Nightly News (12/20, story 3, 1:55, Holt) reported Congress has an “end of the year to do list [that] includes urgent matters like funding for” CHIP and “preventing a government shut down.” NBC (Hunt) added that under CHIP “nine million children are covered. It helps those who don’t qualify for Medicaid but can’t afford private insurance.” Now “Congress is arguing over a permanent solution.” Also on the “to do list” is “the future of more than 700,000 undocumented immigrants brought to the US as children,” and “billions for disaster relief, reauthorizing the surveillance laws that lets the government wire tap foreigners without warrant, and keeping the government open because funding runs out at midnight on Friday.”

The New York Times (12/20, Stolberg, Alcindor) reports a large bill including agreements “once promised over delicate issues like immigration, health care and surveillance appeared to fizzle on Wednesday,” as Sens. Susan Collins and Lamar Alexander “dropped their demands” for plans “to shore up shaky health insurance markets,” while Democrats and Sen. Jeff Flake “appeared to abandon” demands for action on DACA. The Times adds that the more likely bill would be “a one-month punt that would keep the government funded into January.”

Bloomberg News (12/20, Wasson, Litvan) also reports Republican leaders are expected to put forward “a stripped down temporary funding measure to avert a government shutdown,” because no deals were forthcoming on “a host of other issues,” including a plan “to stabilize Obamacare markets”; “an immigration deal”; “full-year funding for the Pentagon”; extending the Children’s Health Insurance Program; and “a government surveillance program.” The House may opt to “pass an extension of current government funding until Jan. 19 along with separate bills” for “hurricane and wildfire recovery assistance.” The AP (12/20, Taylor) reports “congressional Republicans scrambled on Wednesday” to put together the “must-pass spending bill,” and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi said there may be a “patch” to prevent states from running out of funding for CHIP.

Politico (12/20, Ferris, Caygle, Haberkorn) reports House Republican leaders will urge “their fractured caucus to swallow another spending bill that shelves the problem for a few more weeks.” Meanwhile, Democrats said “they will refuse to back to the bill.” Politico adds that both House and Senate Republicans on Tuesday had suggested they would pass bills at odds with each other and fight for their own priorities.

Mnuchin, Short Endorse Short-term Bill. Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said on Fox News' Special Report (12/20), “I think it’s highly unlikely that there’s a government shutdown. But, I don’t want to give the assurance until it’s passed by Congress and gets to the President. I can tell you the President doesn’t want to shut down. I think the right thing to do is let’s get a short-term funding and will deal with it in January.”

White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short said on CNN's Situation Room (12/20), “I don’t think anybody’s advocating for a shutdown right now. I think Congress will do the right thing and we’ll get a short-term continuing resolution to get us into January.” Asked about CHIP, and other matters, Short said, “I think there will be short-term patches in each of those programs...that basically provide a 30-day patch, and a longer extension that comes in January.”

Collins And Alexander Plan Effort On Healthcare Early In New Year. USA Today (12/20, Collins) reports Sens. Collins and Alexander abandoned their healthcare effort because of “resistance from hardline conservatives in the House.” They said that instead, “they would offer the bill early next year.” They also said that Majority Leader Mitch McConnell has committed to bringing it to a vote and Collins said that Speaker Paul Ryan had told her, “by waiting until early next year, we will be able to use a new (Congressional Budget Office) baseline that will result in more funding being available for reinsurance programs that have been proven effective in lowering premiums while protecting people with pre-existing conditions.”

Dreamers Say Democrats Betrayed Them. The Washington Times (12/20, Dinan, Swoyer) reports that “Dreamers said they have been betrayed by Democratic leaders who failed to force a government shutdown showdown” in order to press their “demands to pass a legalization bill” this year. Protesting “Dreamers” on Wednesday, “took to the hallways in Congress to march and conduct lie-downs in office corridors to complain that they have been forgotten.”

The Los Angeles Times (12/20, Ulloa) reports California Senate leader Kevin de León, who is challenging Sen. Dianne Feinstein in next year’s Senate race, “urged Democrats to block a year-end spending bill as leverage to pass a Dream Act,” and “commended Sen. Kamala Harris for pledging to block the measure,” while accusing Feinstein of being “AWOL.” He added, “Don’t come back to California if you haven’t demonstrated your leadership and your courage to stand up for these young men and women.”

Scientists Estimate Large Consequences From Humanity’s Use Of Land.

The Washington Post (12/20, Mooney) reports that new research from Austria’s Institute of Social Ecology “provides a surprisingly large estimate of just how consequential” humanity’s “treatment of land surfaces and vegetation has been for the planet and its atmosphere.” The research suggests “that current human use of land is responsible for roughly halving the potential storage of carbon by that land.” This “simultaneously suggests that restoring land could do a lot to fight climate change but also that the highly popular idea of using biomass to withdraw carbon dioxide from the air may need some rethinking.”

Heavy Snowfall On Alaska Mountain Linked To Climate Change.

The Washington Times (12/19, Richardson) reports that “a study released Tuesday in the journal Scientific Reports found that snowfall on the highest peak in the Alaska Range has more than doubled since the start of the Industrial Revolution in the mid-19th century, which researchers attribute to climate change.” Scientists believe the snow accumulation has been caused by “warmer waters thousands of miles away in the tropical Pacific and Indian oceans,” which were “driven by rising greenhouse gas emissions.” “We had to check and double-check our results to make sure of the findings,” said researcher Erich Osterberg. “Dramatic increases in temperature and air pollution in modern times have been well established in science, but now we’re also seeing dramatic increases in regional precipitation with climate change.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“New York Hot Dogs In A Corn Dog State.” In an editorial, the New York Times (12/20) says that New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio on Tuesday visited the lead-off presidential caucus state of Iowa, where he continued to insist he’s not planning a 2020 White House run. The Times says Iowa may see other New York politicians in the future, as Gov. Andrew Cuomo and Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand “are both widely presumed to be thinking 2020 would be a splendid year to try ascending the political ladder. Should those thoughts become reality, New York accents might well reverberate from Sioux City to Dubuque.”

“Congress Refuses To Do Right By Children’s Healthcare.” The New York Times (12/20) in an editorial faults the Congress for having approved “a tax bill that will make the wealthiest Americans richer,” while leaving “lower-income families” to worry “their children will soon lose their health insurance because Congress didn’t care enough to renew funding for it.” The Times also approves Democrats’ refusal to accept Republican plans to pay for the CHIP program by “raising Medicare premiums on affluent retirees and cutting spending on public health programs” under the ACA, arguing that the tax bill would add “more than $1.4 trillion to the federal deficit” while “CHIP costs just $14 billion a year.” The Times concludes that President Trump and the Republicans “were desperate to pass a tax bill by Christmas but seem unconcerned about the more urgent and important work” of funding CHIP.

Washington Post.

“The Government Abuses Its Power Over Pregnant Teenagers – Again.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/20) blasts the federal government for again seeking “to prevent two more pregnant teenagers from getting the medical care they desired.” Its failure to do so “demonstrates just how absurd” Health and Human Services’ Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) head and antiabortion activist E. Scott Lloyd’s policy of barring “federally funded shelters for undocumented minors from ‘supporting’ access to abortion without his approval” is. The Post welcomes that “the government is no longer abusing its power over these two vulnerable teenagers” but warns “it’s likely that ORR will continue to trap other undocumented teenagers in the same situation” and calls for Lloyd to “abandon this cruel policy.”

“A Day Of Reckoning For Charlottesville, At Last.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/20), welcomes the beginning of the accounting for law enforcement’s “stunning failure” in Charlottesville with the resignation of Charlottesville Police Chief Alfred Thomas and the retirement of State Police Superintendent Col. W. Steven Flaherty. The Post condemns the “incompetence of state and local police” who “failed in their most basic duties” through “bumbling and ineptitude.” Noting the lack of action by law enforcement to violence occurring feet from officers, the Post asks, “why have police?” The Post concludes with the hope that the top commanders’ departures are “a sign that lessons have been learned from that debacle.”

“A Win For The Wealthy, The Entitled, And The Irresponsible.” The Washington Post (12/20, Board) in its editorial on the “huge tax bill” calls it “an ignominious moment for Republicans,” describing it as beneficial for “wealthy heirs” and for “tax dodgers and their lawyers” as well as “for corporations that look like the Trump Organization,” and “pass-through” businesses. The Post also says the act is based on “the discredited theory of trickle-down economics,” and “know-nothing anti-intellectualism.” The Post further says it is “a victory for corrosive partisanship,” but “most of all...for fiscal irresponsibility.” The Post concludes by saying the bill will require more legislation “to limit the damage to already shaky health-care insurance markets,” as well as “a technical-corrections bill” and in the “longer term” will require tax increases and cuts in entitlement programs.

Wall Street Journal.

“Tax Reform Take 2: The States.” The Wall Street Journal (12/20, Board) in an editorial on the tax act suggests it may encourage states to reconsider their tax rates, as high earners who will have the deductibility of state taxes capped may lobby state legislatures to reduce the rates. The Journal identifies 17 states that may be affected and singles out the four with the highest income tax rates – California, New York, Oregon, and Minnesota – as unlikely to change given the states politics, but notes a number of the higher-rate states have Republican governors or legislatures that may decide to reduce rates including Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Nebraska, South Carolina, and Wisconsin.

“Obama’s Pass For Hezbollah.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/20) argues that the information presented in the Politico report warrants a Congressional investigation, because it presents “compelling evidence” that the Obama Administration undermined DEA’s Project Cassandra. This evidence includes statements from Obama Administration officials, including Obama's counterterrorism chief, a Treasury Department official, and an unnamed former CIA officer. "The Germans Are Impressed." Wall Street Journal (12/20, Board) in an editorial on the tax plan comments on the criticism that it will not increase American competitiveness, citing a study from Germany's Center for European Economic Research concluding that the tax plan will encourage foreign investment in the US, which, it said, had been discouraged by US tax rates. Under the new tax rates, the economists found that US taxes will now be about the EU average and lower than those of France or Germany. The Journal concludes by suggesting that France and Germany may well follow the US in lowering taxes.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that only 24 percent of Americans think the GOP tax plan is good. To put that in perspective, the Spice Girls movie got a 29 percent on Rotten Tomatoes."

Jimmy Fallon: "House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi said that the tax plan is an all-out looting of America and a wholesale robbery of the middle class, which incidentally is also the slogan for Whole Foods."

Jimmy Fallon: "University of Pennsylvania, which is Trump's alma mater, says the tax bill will add $2.2 trillion to the national debt. Trump was like, 'Come on, are you really going to believe a school that let me graduate? Give me a break, come on.'"

Seth Meyers: "It tells you everything you need to know about the Trump era that this is how 2017 is ending, with Republicans ransacking the country, taking healthcare away from millions, and then telling women that the solution is for them to have more babies."

Samantha Bee: "This week, the Republican tax bill has lurched its way into becoming a law, which was like a Christmas miracle for Paul Ryan.”

Samantha Bee: “Lucky for Trump, he surrounded himself with an evangelical council who are equally fascinated to find themselves in the White House, and they’re still there after the sexual harassment allegations and mocking the disabled and sympathizing with white supremacists and endorsing an accused child molester. He’s running out of commandments.”

Italy's Eni Begins Drilling Oil Well In Alaska's Beaufort Sea: BSEE.

Reuters (12/27, Sims) reports that the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said Wednesday that Italian oil company Eni started drilling a new well in U.S. waters off the north coast of Alaska this week. As "the first company to do so since 2015," Eni "is working from an artificial island in the Beaufort Sea about three miles off Oliktok Point in the Arctic Ocean," and "the well is expected to run more than 6 miles (10 km) long." According to the BSEE, "the project could result in 20,000 barrels a day of oil production," as "Eni plans to use extended-reach drilling techniques to tap a formation on the Outer Continental Shelf that regulators approved a year ago."

The Alaska Dispatch News (12/27, DeMarban) reports Interior Department Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management Joe Balash "said in the statement that the Arctic is important to the Trump administration's national energy strategy." The BSEE "said its inspectors will visit the site as drilling continues in the coming weeks, including during critical periods such as testing of the blowout preventer designed to prevent an oil spill," and that "the drilling is expected to last more than two months." The article emphasizes that the planned oil well would be Alaska's longest.

Offshore Engineer (12/27) says that "the start of drilling follows BSEE's 28 November approval of Eni's Beaufort Sea plans and a pre-drill inspection that took place from 6-10 December." The BSEE said last month that "Eni and Shell will jointly explore the unit using the Doyon Rig 15." The article adds that "Eni plans to drill four exploration wells – including two mainbores and two sidetracks – over the next two years from its Nikaitchuq North project." BSEE Alaska Region Director Mark Fesmire said in a statement Wednesday that "as drilling continues, BSEE will provide oversight to ensure operations are being conducted in accordance with approval plans and permits."

Westmoreland Wasn't Cleared To Expand Coal Mine, Interior Says.

Bloomberg News (12/27, Loh) reports that "Westmoreland Coal Co. hasn't received federal approval to expand a Montana mine, the U.S. Interior Department said Wednesday, a day after the miner's shares surged on a report the project had been cleared." Spokeswoman Heather Swift said by email, "A previous statement by the Department that it had approved the expansion of the mine was incorrect and was the result of an internal miscommunication." Swift was "correcting her statement that appeared in an Associated Press article last week that Westmoreland had been cleared to expand the facility, potentially unlocking 60 million tons of coal production there."

Additional coverage was provided by KUSA-TV Denver (12/27).

Court Won't Reconsider Dismissing Case Against Obama Fracking Rule.

The Hill (12/27, Cama) reports that on Wednesday, a federal appellate court "declined...to reconsider its September decision that undid a previous court ruling overturning the Obama administration's fracking rule for federal land." The order was not accompanied by an explanation, but did indicate that no judges were interested in having a second hearing on the matter. The Trump Administration's Department of the Interior is currently attempting to repeal the regulation, which would render the Wednesday order moot. The court wrote, "Our proceeding to address whether the District Court erred in invalidating the BLM's fracking regulation when the BLM has now commenced rescinding that same regulation appears to be a very wasteful use of limited judicial resources."

The Washington Examiner (12/27, Siciliano) reports that the court said in September the matter is moot as the Administration is working to repeal the regulation. Some anticipated that activist groups will sue "the agency after the rule is made final, adding to the list of Trump administration actions being challenged in court in the new year."

Senators Question USFS Role In Sage Grouse Review.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (12/27, Plaven) reports that thirteen Democratic senators are "questioning what role the U.S. Forest Service played in the Trump administration's recent decision to review protections for the greater sage grouse." In a letter sent Dec. 20 to USFS Chief Tony Tooke, the lawmakers "pose a list of 10 questions stemming from federal orders to review the 2015 sage grouse plans, which sought to keep the peculiar bird off the Endangered Species List." The article notes that "among their questions, they ask how the Forest Service was involved in working with the Department of the Interior on its recommendation to review sage grouse plans, and if the agency held any meetings with local stakeholders."

The Most Consequential Environmental Stories Of 2017.

The Washington Post (12/27, Dennis, Fears) reviews the most substantial environmental stories of 2017, a year in which President Trump "scaled back regulations on the fossil fuel industry and pushed for more drilling." In November, the Trump Administration offered 77 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico for oil and gas leases. Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke opened up more land for coal exploration. In 2017, the price of oil has increased as coal has struggled to come back amid the rise in the popularity of natural gas. The past year also saw disputes and protests over the Dakota Access Pipeline, Keystone XL Pipeline, and others. The Post adds that the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge could be drilled soon, as "the Republican-controlled Congress greenlighted leases for exploration in the recently passed tax bill completely along party lines." However, Royal Dutch Shell spent $7 billion to drill "in the Chukchi Sea in 2014 and has nothing to show for it."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

MGM Resorts Wants To Intervene In Suit Over 3rd-Casino Gaming Amendments.

The New London \(CT\) Day (12/27, Hallenbeck) reports that MGM Resorts International is "seeking to intervene on the side" of the Interior Department "in the lawsuit the state and the Mashantucket Pequot and Mohegan tribes lodged last month against the department." In a court filing Tuesday, lawyers for MGM Resorts assert "the Las Vegas-based casino operator should be allowed to intervene in the suit because its business interests are at stake." MGM Resorts claims "that it meets all legal requirements for intervenor status, noting that the Interior Department wouldn't represent 'MGM's private, competitive interests because those interests differ from Interior's institutional interests as a federal agency charged with representing the public and with carrying out the United States' trust obligations to Indian tribes.'"

Bureau Of Land Management

Wyoming Oil And Gas Lease Revenue Increases By 800 Percent In 2017.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (12/27, Richards) reports that from 2016 to 2017, Wyoming's revenues from oil and gas leases have increased by more than 800 percent. When compared to the Permian Basin, "Wyoming is still a bargain." The AP (12/27) reports that "the revenue from lease sales from the Bureau of Land Management and the auctions from the Office of State Lands added up to about $16 million last year when oil and gas activity was still in a downturn."

Bureau Of Reclamation

City Sets New Sewer Charges For USBR, Others.

The Star of Grand Coulee \(WA\) (12/27, Hunter) reports that "Coulee Dam's city council voted Wednesday to sewer service rates that will charge low-income customers a little less and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation a lot more." The USBR's sewer bill will "go up considerably after the change approved to the amount of equivalent residential units, or ERUs, the new resolution states the bureau uses." The USBR has been "charged for 88 ERUs, but will now be charged for 114."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Accidentally Killing Birds Isn't A Crime, Says Trump Administration.

NPR (12/27, Wamsley) reports that the Trump Administration "says it will no longer criminally prosecute companies that accidentally kill migratory birds." A legal memo from the Interior Department "posted Friday declares that the Migratory Bird Treaty Act applies only to purposeful actions that kill migratory birds, and not to energy companies and other businesses that kill birds incidentally." In a memo, Daniel Jorjani, Interior's principal deputy solicitor, writes, "Interpreting the MBTA to apply to incidental or accidental actions hangs the sword of Damocles over a host of otherwise lawful and productive actions, threatening up to six months in jail and a $15,000 penalty for each and every bird injured or killed."

Also reporting are the Smithsonian (12/27, Daley).

Bill Would Vastly Increase Money Available For Managing At-Risk Species.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (12/26, Barker) reports that "a bill pending in Congress would vastly increase money available for the management of at-risk species by minimizing long-standing wildlife funding mechanisms." The Restoring America's Wildlife Act "would direct $1.3 billion of existing royalties collected from companies that drill for oil and gas on federal lands and allocate it to state fish and wildlife agencies." However, "one possible hurdle to the bill could be the requirement of new federal spending to be offset by cuts or new revenue."

Record Number Of Kirtland's Warbler Nests Found In Wisconsin.

The AP (12/27) reports that "conservationists in Wisconsin say they've spotted a record number of nests from the endangered Kirtland's warbler this year, a decade after the songbird was first spotted in the state." According to the article, "fifteen nests have been found so far in Wisconsin." Meanwhile, "state and federal agencies are working to create more habitat area for Kirtland's warblers and to protect the birds from predators."

Another Species Of Asian Carp Could Become Threat To Pennsylvania's Waterways.

The Valley \(PA\) News Dispatch (12/27, Thomas) reports that the black carp could be spreading in Pennsylvania's waterways. Charlie Wooley, Midwest deputy regional director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, said, "We are concerned about the black carp moving up the Ohio River and moving to waters with native mussel population, which are already stressed in the Ohio River tributaries."

Banks Lake Drawdown This Winter.

The Valdosta \(GA\) Daily Times (12/27) reports that "personnel at Banks Lake National Wildlife Refuge are drawing down water levels in Banks Lake this winter as a means to control aquatic vegetation." According to the article, "the drawdown began in November, with staff gradually reducing the water levels with the goal of lowering the water level by seven to eight feet to maximize the amount of vegetation exposed to cold temperatures." The article says that "at its lowest level, one-third of the 900-acre lake will remain underwater, allowing fish to survive and re-populate the lake once water levels are raised."

National Park Service

Decaying Portion Of Jackson Magnolia Removed.

The CBS Evening News  (12/27, story 11, 0:20, Quijano) reported that "today, White House workers removed a decaying limb from" a magnolia tree that was planted on the South Lawn by President Andrew Jackson in 1835. The AP (12/27, Superville) reports that "former first daughter Chelsea Clinton, who grew up in the White House during Bill Clinton's two terms in office, tweeted her thanks late Tuesday to the horticulturists and National Park Service attendants who take care of the White House grounds.”

Also reporting are the CBS News (12/27) website, the New York Post (12/27, Moore), and the Telegraph \(UK\) (12/27, Millward).

How Much Cell Service Is Too Much In Yosemite, Other National Parks?

McClatchy (12/27, Leavenworth) reports that “environmentalists are pressing the National Park Service to slow or halt construction of new cellular towers within park boundaries.” They claim the park service is “quietly facilitating a digital transformation with little public input or regard to its mission statement — to preserve ‘unimpaired the natural and cultural resources and values of the National Park System.’” On the other hand, “advocates for increased cell service, including many NPS officials, say the parks can’t cling to an earlier era.” They argue that “expanded cellular and broadband coverage...helps rescue teams respond to emergencies and are necessary to draw a new generation to the parks.”

National Park Service Drops Marin Leash Law Plan.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (12/27, Prado) reports that “National Park Service plans for new leash laws were officially withdrawn with the decision posted in the Federal Register” on Wednesday. The notice in the Federal Register said, “The National Park Service no longer intends to prepare a final rule or issue a Golden Gate National Recreation Area dog management plan. The NPS has terminated the rulemaking process.”

Lincoln Boyhood Entrance Fees Suspended.

The Dubois County Free Press (12/27) reports that “visitors to Lincoln Boyhood National Memorial will be able to enter the park for free beginning January 1, 2018.” Kendall Thompson, the superintendent at the park, announced the new policy because “these lands belong to, and should be accessible to, all Americans.” Thompson said the park looks “forward to serving even greater numbers of visitors in the future.”

Entrance Fee To Increase At Point Park.

The Cleveland \(TN\) Daily Banner (12/22) reports that on Jan. 1, the National Park Service will “increase the entrance fee to the Point Park area of Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park to $7 per person (from the current $5), to fund ongoing maintenance and improvement projects within the park. However, the price of an annual pass will remain unchanged at $30.”

Lassen Park, Whiskeytown Entry Fees Increasing Jan. 1.

The Chico \(CA\) Enterprise-Record (12/27) reports that entrance fees will be increasing Jan. 1 at Lassen Volcanic National Park and Whiskeytown National Recreation Area. The fees are “used within the parks to make improvements such as trails, visitor facilities and access roads.”

NPS Wants To Keep Lake Roosevelt Mussel-free.

The Star of Grand Coulee \(WA\) (12/27) reports that as part of “an ongoing effort to prevent aquatic invasive species, the National Park Service (NPS) at Lake Roosevelt National Recreation Area is implementing a mussel-free self-certification program.” The NPS is “requesting operators certify their boat or personal watercraft free of aquatic invasive species, especially quagga/zebra mussels, prior to launching, and for boaters who have recently boated in infested waters, that will take some doing and some time.” The park service said, “Boats that have been in infested waters should be drained of all water, washed thoroughly with hot water and dried for at least seven days before entering Lake Roosevelt. It is important to remove all dirt, plants and water from boats and trailers prior to launching every time.”

Devils Tower Plans Accessibility Improvements.

The Oil City Wyoming (12/27) reports that Devils Tower National Monument “plans to design and construct a new accessible approach route to the Tower Trail, a 1.3 mile hiking trail around the base of the Tower.” The National Park Service “recently created an Accessibility Task Force to recommend a more effective organizational approach to improving accessibility across the service.” Also, “new accessible interpretive wayside exhibits along the trail, an accessible interpretive plaza and exhibits, accessible walkways to the trailhead, visitor center, and climber registration office will be developed and installed.”

Wind Cave Continues Efforts To Limit CWD In Elk Herd.

The Rapid City \(SD\) Journal (12/27, Rempp) reports that two initiatives are underway "to address the prevalence of Chronic Wasting Disease in the Wind Cave National Park elk herd." One is "a research endeavor while the other focuses on population control." According to the article, "current estimates indicate there are around 260 elk located in the park," while "long term management plans call for a population of 232-475."

National Park Service To Visitors: Please (Please) Leave The Rocks.

KGMB-TV Honolulu (12/27) reports that National Park Service rangers are reminding visitors to not take rocks. According to the article, "this year, as they do every year, Hawaii national parks got boxes of rocks returned to them by visitors who shouldn't have lifted them in the first place." The National Park Service said, "We can't return rocks to the crater because doing so confuses the geological story — we don't know what part of the volcano the rocks came from. So leave rocks alone, don't take them home!"

Florida Man Dies While Snowshoeing In Glacier National Park.

California Earthquake: Two Minor Quakes In San Jose.

The AP (12/27) reports that "the U.S. Geological Survey says a pair of minor earthquakes just a few hours apart rattled the San Jose area in central California." The San Jose Mercury News, "citing the USGS, reports a 3.1 magnitude quake hit an area northeast of San Martin at 7:19 p.m. Tuesday. A stronger 3.9 magnitude quake hit at 10:32 p.m. northeast of Alum Rock."

Also reporting are USA Today (12/27, Bacon), Newsweek (12/27, Sheridan), and International Business Times (12/27, Glowatz).

Opinion Pieces

In 2017, The White House Abandoned The Environment And Public Health.

John O'Grady, president of a group "representing over 9,000 bargaining unit employees at the US EPA nationwide," writes in a piece for The Hill (12/27) that "2017 was the worst year on record" for people who "care about public health and the environment." He says EPA Administrator Pruitt "continues to challenge the two central Obama-era rules, the Clean Power Plan and the Clean Water Rule, while" President Trump "doubles down to make his children and grandchildren's generations more fossil fuel reliant, and isolates us from the rest of the world on climate leadership."

Trump Administration Reversal On Mining Leases Near BWCA Is No Surprise.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (12/27) editorializes that "the recent reversal of a last-minute Obama administration move to block a mining project on the edge of northern Minnesota's Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness is troubling but should come as a shock to no one." The Editorial Board has "put its faith in traditional environmental and permitting reviews that rely on data-driven analyses by state and federal agencies" but "the retaliatory politics now re-energizing the Twin Metals project cast serious doubt on the process for this particular project." For that reason, the paper says that "it's time to discuss other protective measures, such as legislation creating a permanent mining buffer zone around the BWCA."

Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Is Now Up For Sale.

Federal lands management official Tim Lydon writes in The Hill (12/27, Lydon) in opposition to the opening of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling. Lydon says the "Republican tax bill...gifted one of your most treasured national landscapes to oil companies" "against any measure of public interest, and in defiance of plausible economic reason." Lydon cites how the wildlife refuge "supports Alaska's highest density of denning polar bears, exclusively mothers nursing newborns," "millions of migrating birds...swans, terns, sandpipers, loons, eiders, and others." In addition, the lands are "critical human habitat," as "the Gwich'in people have lived there for millennia, calling it the sacred place where life begins." Lydon targets Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK), who he says pushed the passage of the measure.

Don't Loosen Safety Regulations On Offshore Drilling.

The Tampa Bay \(FL\) Times (12/27) editorializes against the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement's proposed rollback of offshore drilling safety measures. The Times says that "if approved, the measure would repeal a requirement that the agency certify third-party inspectors of equipment, including blowout preventers," which was "a critical last line of defense that failed in the 2010 Deepwater Horizon disaster in the gulf." The editorial opposes the elimination of the term "safe" from the rule that requires companies to "stream real-time oil production data to onshore facilities that regulators could review." The Times asserts, "The harsh and unpredictable environment a mile under the sea requires that drilling standards put safety first."

Guest Opinion: Congress Should Fund Crater Lake Maintenance.

In an op-ed for the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (12/27, Thorndike, Hicks), Bill Thorndike, president of the Crater Lake National Park Trust, and Brad Hicks, CEO of The Chamber of Medford/Jackson County, write that Crater Lake is "an economic engine for Southern Oregon and it is important that we take the steps necessary to make sure that the park can continue to serve in that role, particularly as visitation increases." But they note that "Crater Lake has a backlog of important maintenance projects that total more than $85 million." They urge Congress to "make sure the National Park Service has the funds and certainty necessary to keep its crown jewels like Crater Lake open for business."

The Story Of The White House's Famous Magnolia Tree.

Meryl Gordon, author of a book about Bunny Mellon, writes in an op-ed in the Washington Post (12/27) that the Jackson Magnolia was key to Mellon's redesign of the White House Rose Garden, which she began in 1961. Mellon sought "to create the equivalent of an elegant outdoor stage set for use as a backdrop for ceremonies and entertaining," and was inspired by the presence of the Jackson Magnolia. She eventually imported magnolia trees from Washington's Tidal Basin to serve her purposes.

Editorial: Wolf Recovery Plan Based On Reason, Compromise.

In an editorial, the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (12/28) argues that "a decision earlier this month by the state Game Commission to approve the new federal wolf recovery plan strikes a blow for reason and compromise." The paper says that "the new plan reflects compromise and science, and the hope of a new relationship that values both ranchers and wolves."

BLM Needs To Build Firebreaks.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (12/27) notes that the Bureau of Land Management is "launching an effort to consider adding more firebreaks to the federal rangeland across Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, Utah and Washington." According to the paper, "the multi-state scale of the proposal could help speed up environmental approval of a number of smaller projects, which makes sense." Although the strategy is "not going to stop rangeland fires," the editorial concludes that "it is worth doing to help firefighters be able to better protect lives, property and habitat."

Micronesia Won't Soon Break Its Addiction To US Dollars.

In his column for the Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\) (12/27, Blair), Chad Blair writes about the ties that bind the US and three Micronesian nations. Blair says that Palau, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia, are "particularly dependent on American largesse." Meanwhile, with heightened tensions East Asia, the US is increasingly beginning to recognize the strategic importance of its relationship with the COFA nations.

Trump Visits First Responders In West Palm Beach.

President Trump on Wednesday visited West Palm Beach Rescue Station where he took photos with firefighters and paramedics and thanked them for their work. Coverage of the visit is relatively light and generally focuses on Trump's discussion of his record during his first year in office rather than his comments thanking the first responders.

WPBF-TV West Palm Beach, FL (12/27, 6:04 p.m. EST) reported that Trump "shook hands with all the firefighters in attendance and even took a handful of their questions." The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (12/27, Washington) reports that Trump "sandwich[ed] pats on the back for his economic stewardship and last week's passage of tax legislation between thanks for the first responders." His theme "was that his administration was rescuing a nation from economic danger." The Hill (12/27, Beavers) says Trump "took time out of the unscheduled stop to highlight the recent GOP tax-cut plan, which passed shortly before the holiday season." He said, "We took a big, big beautiful ship that we're turning around, and a lot of good things are happening." Trump "also noted that there is 'a lot of legislation' he helped pass since taking office."

The AP (12/27) reports that Trump said the firefighters are "great people" who do "a fantastic job," and he said that "the country is 'doing well,' with the stock market and 401(k) retirement plans rising." ABC World News Tonight (12/27, story 4, 0:25, Llamas) said Trump "tout[ed] his record, saying he signed, quote, more legislation than anybody, a claim widely challenged." The Daily Beast (12/27) reports that Trump has actually "signed 96 bills, the fewest of any president since before Truman." Politico (12/27, McCaskill) reports that while Trump "had signed more bills in his first 100 days than any president since Truman," as he nears the anniversary of his inauguration, "he is far removed from his 100th day. And he has now signed the fewest number of bills into law of any first-year president dating back to Dwight Eisenhower, according to a recent report from the website GovTrack."

WPTV-TV West Palm Beach, FL (12/27, 6:00 p.m. EST) reported that Trump also “addressed the stock market hitting new highs since taking office.” The Washington Times (12/27, Boyer) says Trump “also said he has achieved ‘the all-time record for stopping ridiculous regulations.’” He said, “We’re very proud of that, that’s one of the reasons stocks are up to record level.”

The Washington Examiner (12/27, Phillips) reports that Trump told the first responders that “under his administration, local law enforcement agencies are getting military-grade equipment back.” Said Trump, “Particularly the police, we’re giving them military equipment which was taken away by the previous administration, you know all about that. ... Now you have the best military equipment and you’re able to use it for the police force.”

Media Highlights Trump Playing Golf After Tweeting He Would Be “Back To Work” After Christmas. BuzzFeed (12/27, Montgomery) reports that Trump “was spotted” on his West Palm Beach golf courses “on Wednesday for a second day despite his tweet saying he would be ‘back to work in order to Make America Great Again’ the day after Christmas.” CNN “aired video of the president golfing at his course in West Palm Beach on Tuesday, the day after Christmas,” but on Wednesday, “a truck blocked CNN’s view of the president.”

Trump’s round of golf on Wednesday also received attention in the local media. WPEC-TV West Palm Beach, FL (12/27, 5:59 p.m. EST) reported that Trump “promised to get back to work after the holiday, but he started the day with a round of golf at Trump International. ... It was around 4:00 when the President stopped at West Palm Beach Fire Station Number Two where he made some brief remarks and took a few questions.” The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (12/27, Washington) says that while Trump’s visit to the fire rescue station “accomplished Trump’s goal of shining the media spotlight that follows him onto first responders,” it “won’t obscure the reality that Wednesday was spent largely at one of his properties, this one Trump International Golf Club in unincorporated West Palm Beach.”

Trump Active On Twitter While In Florida. The Wall Street Journal (12/27, Nicholas) reports that while Trump has remained largely out of the public eye since he arrived at Mar-a-Lago, he has been active on Twitter commenting on the news and touting his record in office.

Palm Beach Adjusts To Trump Being A Part-Time Resident. The Washington Post (12/27, Lee, Rozsa) reports that while Trump’s visits to Palm Beach in the months following his election “would cause a stir among locals and visitors,” during “this holiday season, as Trump makes his tenth visit as president, his presence has become an afterthought to many.” Although “logistical problems caused by his stay remain a mild annoyance...those who live and visit here say they have learned to plan around the inconveniences.” The town “has adjusted to having the president of the United States as one of its part-time residents.”

Trump Plans Infrastructure Push In January.

CNN (12/27, Merica, Liptak) reports on its website that according to aides, President Trump “plans a major push on infrastructure in January.” During the campaign, Trump promised “a $1 trillion infrastructure bill,” but “a White House official said on Tuesday the current proposal...would propose spending at least $200 billion on infrastructure projects over the next decade, with the hopes of spurring an additional $800 billion in state and local funding.” The $200 billion figure has been criticized by some Democrats and business groups as too low, but “the White House official characterized the figure as a floor, not a ceiling, and said Trump is willing to spend more federal dollars if it means getting a package through Congress.”

Rep. Gregory Meeks said on CNN’s The Lead (12/27), “The devil is always in the details. My concern is that was before we spent over $2 trillion for tax cuts for the top one percent. Now you’re talking about $200 billion, which is not enough to do anything of substantial nature as far as what our infrastructure needs are, and, you know, I think that you look at what the middle class, the working class and poor folks – well, clearly you’re going to cut things that are important to them. Like I think they would like to go – Republicans would like to go after entitlements like Medicare and Social Security and Medicaid. So I’ve got to look at the entire package.”

Trump To Host GOP Leaders At Camp David To Lay Out 2018 Agenda. The AP (12/27, Superville) reports that President Trump is “eager for more legislative achievements before Washington’s focus shifts to the midterm elections,” and will host House Speaker Ryan and Senate Majority Leader McConnell at Camp David during the weekend of Jan. 6-7 “to map out the 2018 legislative agenda, the White House said.” the AP says the GOP agenda for 2018 is “already lengthy.” Trump has predicted that the parties will “eventually come together” to craft a new healthcare plan and he is anticipating bipartisan agreement on infrastructure spending. Ryan “has talked about overhauling Medicaid and Medicare and other welfare programs," and Congress will begin the new year needing to address issues left unfinished in 2017 including a spending bill, aid for hurricane victims, raising the debt ceiling, and extending protections for "Dreamers."

The Washington Post (12/27, Scott) reports that Ryan would like Congress' next move to be "cutting welfare programs that benefit low-income Americans – a move that is not particularly popular with the American public, including the congressman's own party." According to a Kaiser Family Foundation survey, "only 12 percent of American adults want to see President Trump and Congress decrease spending for Medicaid," and "four in 10 preferred to increase Medicaid spending," while "nearly half – 47 percent – want funding levels to remain the same." Pew Research Center data show that "only 15 percent of Republicans support decreasing funding for Medicare," and "only 10 percent of Republicans support decreased funding for Social Security."

Daily Caller Analysis: Despite Gloomy Predictions, Economy Faring Well Under Trump.

The Daily Caller (12/27, Athey) reports in an analysis that while the media, businessmen and economists "predicted a economic collapse would occur under President Donald Trump," the "2017 economy tells a different story." The DC cites a number of predictions of economic decline under Trump but says "the stock market hit a number of record highs and the economy experienced high growth during Trump's first year in office."

Housing Market Booming. The CBS Evening News (12/27, story 4, 1:55, Quijano) reported that "the housing market is booming." CBS (Villafranca) added that "new and existing home sales [are] driving the market, both up five percent just in October. And realtors expect to see an increase in 2018 and continued strong sales growth in the South."

Ip: Technology-Driven Economic Boom Could Be Coming Soon. Greg Ip writes in the Wall Street Journal (12/27) that an economic boom driven by advancements in technology including artificial intelligence and robotics could be coming soon. Ip cites historical examples which suggest that technological breakthroughs can take decades to register on traditional economic gauges.

EPA Chief Favors Conservative Understanding Of "Environmentalism."

The Hill (12/27, Cama) reports that Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt is challenging the "established" definition of environmentalism used over the last few decades in favor of a more conservative version. Pruitt has said in interviews that "environmentalism ought to mean using natural resources like fossil fuels and agricultural products to their fullest potential, while being mindful of their impact." Like others in the conservative ilk, "Pruitt says he wants to prioritize cleaning up air quality and contaminated lands, which he sees as affecting people more acutely, directly and immediately than climate change."

The Daily Caller (12/27, White) reports, "activists are scoffing as EPA chief Scott Pruitt's mission to completely redefine what it means to be a 'true' environmentalist." In an interview with the National Review earlier this month, Pruitt argued, "If you are of the side that says we exist to serve creation, then you have no trouble putting up a fence and saying, 'do not use' oil or coal, even if it might mean misery for millions in the developing world."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Yemen Crucible." The New York Times (12/27) editorializes that the Administration applies "a double standard to the violence in Yemen" by condemning Iranian support for the indigenous Houthi insurgents while "enabling... Saudi Arabia's savage bombing in support of Yemen's government." Despite "signs the administration is beginning to listen and even exert a constructive influence on the Saudis," the Times argues much more needs to be done to end the war, for example encouraging Saudi Arabia to lift its blockade of Yemen's major ports and airports and "challeng[ing] the Houthis and the Iranians to join in an immediate unconditional cease-fire." This would help save Yemeni lives in the process.

"Reforms Rein In Police Harassment; Now More Is Needed." The New York Times (12/27) editorializes that New York City's police commissioner, James O'Neill, "showed admirable candor" when he publicly admitted "that the department had 'overused and sometimes misused' its stop-and-frisk program in past years – particularly in minority neighborhoods." The Times also praises O'Neill's embracing of reforms to end the department's "unreasonable search and seizure" and discrimination against black and Latino citizens, and urges the department to take further steps “to rid itself of longstanding, often unconscious, racial biases.”

Washington Post.

“What A Presidential President Would Have Said About His First Year.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (12/27) offers a series of “imaginary” tweets that President Trump might offer, if he were “more presidential.” For instance, one of the “tweets” reads, “[C]an you really be a president of all Americans if you’re not believing the women? I don’t think so. Of course I want a Republican majority in the Senate. But that can’t be more important than listening to women who were preyed on as teenage girls. ... I apologize to them. I apologize for calling my own accusers liars. Sen. Gillibrand, I apologize to you.”

“Turkey’s Stalinist Prosecution Of Journalists For Tweets And Blogs.” The Washington Post (12/27) editorializes that the increasing number of Turkish journalists falsely accused by President Recep Tayyip Erdogan of supporting terrorism or attempting to overthrow the constitutional order reflect the country’s ongoing fall “into the grip of dictatorship.” The Post cites several cases of such journalists, adding that “many civil servants and academics face the same dreaded punishment.” The Post further describes one case in which a detained journalist is being held in solitary confinement and pressured to confess “to carrying out orders from the exiled cleric Fethullah Gulen, who lives in Pennsylvania.” The Post says of this trend: “The losers will be the Turkish people.”

“The Authorities Stay Silent On A Local Police Shooting.” The Washington Post (12/27) editorializes “the curtain of official silence that continues to shroud the death of Bijan C. Ghaisar” in a shooting by US Park Police six weeks ago “makes a mockery of the open society that distinguishes the United States from autocracies and dictatorships,” adding, “the longer it continues, the more the public will suspect a coverup.” The Post suggests the public may suspect the police of ethnic profiling.

Wall Street Journal.

“Google-Hotel Travelopoly.” The Wall Street Journal (12/27) argues in an editorial that Google and some major hotels have “ganged up” to undercut competition in the travel industry, leaving travelers facing higher prices and fewer choices. According to the Journal, Google is exploiting its market dominance and working with major hotels to get around online travel agencies (OTAs) such as Expedia, Priceline and Travelocity. This will ultimately cause the OTAs, as well as mom-and-pop hotels, to raise their prices as they suffer from profit losses.

“Murder Most Foul In Argentina.” The Wall Street Journal (12/27) editorializes the ruling of an Argentine judge that Alberto Nisman, the prosecutor who was investigating former President Cristina Kirchner’s links to Iran, was murdered is part of an independent investigation promised by current President Mauricio Macri. The Journal asserts that the investigation should continue to uncover evidence about Mrs. Kirchner’s links to Tehran.

“Washington’s Carbon Overreach.” The Wall Street Journal (12/27) editorializes that Washington Gov. Jay Inslee’s attempt to use executive powers to require its largest emitters, including “indirect emitters,” to reduce carbon emissions represented an attempt by progressives to impose their climate agenda “by regulatory fiat” rather than democratic procedures. The Journal argues that a Washington judge’s ruling that the Inslee Administration lacked the legal authority to regulate indirect emitters is a victory for the rule of law.

Trump Donates First Presidential Paycheck To Antietam Battlefield.

The Washington Times (7/5, Dinan) reports that President Trump "donated the first few months of his White House salary to Antietam National Battlefield, the national park in Maryland that preserves the hallowed ground of the bloodiest day of the Civil War, the government said Wednesday." Trump's "first quarter salary of $78,333 was matched by an anonymous donor who gave another $22,000, bringing the gift to $100,000, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said." Zinke issued a statement saying, "As both the Secretary of the Interior and a military veteran, I'm deeply honored and humbled to deliver the donation to Antietam National Battlefield on behalf of President Trump. ... The president's donation will allow generations of Americans to learn about our history and heritage on this sacred site."

The AP (7/5) reports that "the donation will restore the Newcomer House on the Antietam Battlefield." It also will go toward replacing "5,000 feet of deteriorated rail fencing along the Hagerstown Turnpike, where some of the most intense fighting of the battle occurred."

The Hill (7/5, Cama) reports that Zinke also "used the Wednesday event, the day after Independence Day, to announce $7.2 million in new grants going to states, localities or nonprofits to buy historic battlefield land at 19 sites from the Civil, Revolutionary and 1812 wars and preserve it." That money comes from the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

The Washington Examiner (7/5, Siciliano) reports that "the $7.2 million in grants for historic battlefields will go toward preserving about 1,200 acres as part of the pre-existing American Battlefield Land Acquisition Grants program." Zinke said the lands "were once the scenes of our nation's bloodiest conflicts" that "we must preserve...for future generations of Americans to remember and understand the impact of sacrifices of those who fought on these hallowed grounds. This grant program, along with President Trump's donation will help ensure just that."

Ryan Zinke: Activists Shouldn't 'Rewrite History' By Removing Confederate Monuments.

Breitbart (7/5, House) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "told Breitbart News that 'history is important' and it should not be rewritten when asked about those attempting to destroy or remove Confederate monuments while touring Antietam National Battlefield on Wednesday in western Maryland." Zinke "explained the significance of history, gesturing to the area around him, 'As an example, what did the battle of Antietam bring us? One is that it was the deadliest battle in the history of our country. But also, one could argue successfully, it also brought the Emancipation Proclamation.'" He continued, "So there is goodness that came out of this battlefield. Recognizing that two sides fought, recognizing (the) historical significance of a change in our country...so I'm an advocate for recognizing history as it is. Don't rewrite history. Understand it for what it is and teach our kids the importance of looking at our magnificent history as a country and why we are who we are."

Man Receives Medal Of Valor For Aid In Crash At Pearl Harbor.

The AP (7/5) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "presented Bryan Eisenberg with the Medal of Valor Tuesday for his role in saving a pilot and a family of four Feb. 18, 2016, after their tour helicopter plunged into the water" at Pearl Harbor. Eisenberg, "was working as a federal police officer for the National Park Service at the time of the crash," was "one of the bystanders who jumped in and pulled the four survivors out of the harbor."

KTAL-TV Shreveport, LA (7/5, Wiernicki) reports that Zinke said, "Especially on the fourth of July when we are celebrating the birth and the greatness of our nation, to have people that go above and beyond the highest tradition of service, self-sacrifice, I was very honored to give the awards of Valor today and recognize them for a job well done."

Interior Chief: New Offshore Drilling Funds Should Pay For Parks.

The Hill (7/5, Cama) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke wants the income from offshore oil and gas drilling to pay for budget gaps in national parks. Zinke said the royalty and fee payments could help reduce the $11 billion maintenance backlog at the National Park Service, and help negate the effects of the $360 million budget reduction that the Trump Administration proposed. Zinke said, "Across the board, we're looking at revenue, to make sure we catch up, and my priority is the infrastructure in our park system. We've got to protect our parks."

EXCLUSIVE: Angela Marshall Speaks One-On-One With Interior Secy.

In an interview on KULR-TV Billings, MT (7/5, Marshall), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke talked about his approach to managing the nation's public lands. Zinke's first priority is to restore the public's trust. He said, "In the political environment we live in, where everything is so polarized, our public lands should be an American issue and not necessarily a Republican, or Democrat, or Independent. Being a steward of our greatest treasures, that takes all sides to invest."

The interview also appears at KWYB-TV Butte, MT (7/5, Marshall).

CA Bill Takes Aim At Groundwater Project With Ties To Trump Nominee.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (7/6, Roth) reports that "a new bill in the state Legislature would require California to review the environmental impacts of a company's proposal to pump groundwater from beneath the Mojave Desert and sell it to Southern California cities — a controversial plan that was slowed down by President Obama, but which appears to have the backing of the Trump administration." Assemblymember Laura Friedman's legislation, AB 1000, "singles out Cadiz by requiring state regulators to review projects that seek to transfer groundwater away from desert lands in the vicinity of national monuments, national preserves and other protected spaces." Cadiz spokesperson Courtney Degener called Friedman's bill "a thinly-veiled effort to delay and obstruct a fully-reviewed, approved and lawful new water supply for 400,000 people."

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "issued a preliminary recommendation to shrink Bears Ears National Monument" was provided by Public Radio International (7/5, Wernick).

An Open Letter To Secretary Zinke.

In a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke published in Outdoor Life Magazine (7/5, McKean), Andrew McKean, Editor-in-Chief of Outdoor Life, provides his comments in opposition to "any change in size or management of our current roster of national monuments." McKean believes that Zinke has called for a review of national monuments "as a clever (and slightly subversive) way to call attention to these special places that are reservoirs of the American qualities of equality, adventure, self-reliance, and democracy." He encourages Zinke "to take no action on this misguided and ineffectual review of monuments, and instead to devote your department's resources to adequately funding the management of our existing national treasures."

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the Foothills \(CA\) Sun-Gazette (7/5, Carmen), the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (7/6, George), the Steamboat \(CO\) Pilot & Today (7/5, Marchand), the Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (7/5, Romo), the Santa Fe New Mexican (7/6, Krasnow), the Victorville \(CA\) Daily Press (7/5, McDonald), the Sierra \(CA\) Wave Online (7/5, Pietasanta), Curbed (7/5, Barber), and KCNC-TV Denver \(CO\) Denver (7/5, Bush).

Theirs: Sage Grouse Plan Needs Time To Work.

In a piece for the Rapid City \(SD\) Journal (7/5, Pfankuch), Bart Pfankuch writes that "the country's plan to manage sage grouse populations across the West was a compromise" and "none of the groups received everything it wanted, so the plan to manage the iconic Western species wasn't wildly popular with any one side." However, "it had approval from all stakeholders, which made it a rare and significant success story at the intersection of agriculture and energy development and conservation." But now, "those plans have come under attack from Interior Department Secretary Ryan Zinke." Pfankuch finds it "troubling that Zinke appears willing to throw cold water on these landmark management plans after all the work that went into them." He argues that "the federal government should not waste time wading into these hard-fought sage grouse management strategies."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Interior Department Wants One More Go At Mashpee Wampanoag Land Ruling.

The Brockton \(MA\) Enterprise (7/5, Winokoor) reports that "the key counsel for two dozen plaintiffs who have managed to block construction of a resort casino in East Taunton says an email sent Friday by the U.S. Department of Interior does little more than delay the inevitable." Referring to the Mashpee Wampanoag tribe and "its ongoing attempt to secure a favorable Interior Department ruling to retain 151 acres in Taunton and 170 acres in Mashpee as tribal, sovereign land," Nixon Peabody attorney David Tenant said, "It's their only chance, and it will be denied." Meanwhile, Taunton Mayor Thomas Hoye Jr., "a staunch supporter of the tribal casino — which potentially would create thousands of construction jobs and 2,600 permanent jobs — said the email from Interior Department associate deputy secretary James Cason is to some extent encouraging." Hoye said, "It appears the DOI wants to see them (the tribe) succeed in their quest. They haven't said no, which leads me to believe there is hope."

Bureau Of Land Management

California, New Mexico File Environmental Lawsuit.

The AP (7/5) reports that "the attorneys general of California and New Mexico sued the Trump administration Wednesday for delaying new rules to reduce methane leaks on federal lands." According to the article, "opposition from energy companies and several states, including Wyoming, prompted the U.S. Department of the Interior to delay pieces of the rule." It notes that "the postponed pieces are not set to take effect until January 2018."

BLM Considers Offering Utah's Recapture Canyon – Rich In American Indian Artifacts – For Oil And Gas Leasing.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/5, Maffly) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is planning to lease Recapture Canyon in Utah for oil and gas development, despite its importance in Native American prehistorical artifacts. The BLM initiated an environmental assessment of leasing 45 parcels covering 57,074 acres of land nominated by energy companies. Historic preservationists are concerned that drilling activity could threaten the sites occupied by Ancestral Puebloans, who left behind a record of their lives in the canyons and mesas. Robin Naeve, fluid minerals chief for the BLM's Utah state office, said, "The BLM is aware there are sensitive resources here and will be carefully reviewing each parcel, consulting with tribes and cultural resource experts, and reaching out to the public as part of our environmental review process and responsibilities under the National Historic Preservation Act."

Climate, Poverty Woes Fuel BLM Rule Debate In N.M.

Gas Patch. E&E Publishing (7/5) reports that with the Interior Department “set to completely scrap and rewrite the BLM methane rule,” Don Schreiber is “preparing to resurrect his campaign to stop methane emissions that he says are harming his ranch and other public landscapes.” Schreiber was “a regular Capitol Hill fixture during lawmakers’ battle to kill the rule under the Congressional Review Act (CRA) earlier this year.” He is vowing to continue the fight, and “he returns to Washington next week.”

GAO Rejects Helicopter Co.’s Protest Of Contract Conditions.

Law360 (7/5, Stanley) reports that the Government Accountability Office has “rejected a helicopter company’s claim that the Department of Interior’s requirements in a solicitation for transport services are impossible to comply with, finding the complaint was based on a misunderstanding of Federal Aviation Administration policy.” Timberline Helicopter Companies Inc. had “argued it would be impossible to attain authorization for a helicopter requested by the DOI’s Bureau of Land Management to both fly restricted missions and carry non-crew members such as firefighters to support natural resource missions.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Time Is Now To Comment On Offshore Drilling Plans .

WRAL-TV Raleigh, NC (7/5) reports in continuing coverage that the Trump Administration is opening the public comment period for a new five-year energy leasing program for the outer continental shelf in a move that seeks to open Atlantic and Arctic waters to drilling. The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is looking to input on the “economic, social and environmental values of all outer continental shelf resources, as well as the potential effects of oil and gas exploration and development on other resources and the marine, coastal and human environments.”

The Washington Post (7/5, Grandoni) reports that there are currently two obstacles facing President Trump as he pushes for more offshore drilling. First, there is bipartisan opposition to more drilling as representatives from coastal states have sponsored or supported legislation locking in Obama-era offshore policies. Second, the price of oil has remained below $50 a barrel, which gives oil and gas companies less motivation to pursue expensive offshore extraction.

In an editorial, the Baltimore Sun (7/3) writes that “offshore drilling is a loser.” On Monday, the Trump Administration published notice in the Federal Register of a new five-year plan to open up offshore waters to energy exploration. The editorial says this is a “frightening prospect to millions of Americans who vacation on, own property along, or whose livelihoods depend on Atlantic beaches.” Maryland risks an estimated 90,000 jobs and $5.4 billion in GDP from the coastal economy if offshore drilling moves forward. The editorial concludes, “Being pro-business requires standing up for those jobs — as publicly and firmly as possible — so that nobody in the White House or Congress gets the idea that Maryland is the least bit undecided about the wisdom of offshore oil and gas exploration and drilling.”

Pete Stauffer, environmental director of the Surfrider Foundation, writes in the Miami Herald (7/5, Stauffer) that “beaches are the workhorse engines that drive coastal economies,” but the “nation’s coasts are under threat.” The Trump Administration has launched plans to “expand offshore drilling, eliminate beach water quality grants, and reverse climate change policies,” would result in “permanent damage to the nation’s magnificent coasts if we don’t hold our federal leaders accountable.”

The Huffington Post (7/5, Kaufman) provides coverage of the opinion piece former Florida Gov. Bob Graham and former EPA Director William K. Reilly wrote in the New York Times yesterday. Graham and Reilly warned that President Trump’s order to expand offshore drilling would allow energy exploration in “environmentally sensitive” areas and “threatens to abolish” safety regulations implemented to protect against disasters.

Montana Dam Blocked Again Over Threat To Endangered Fish.

The AP (7/5, Volz) reports that “a judge on Wednesday blocked construction of a $59 million irrigation dam because of the potential threat to an ancient fish species in Montana’s Yellowstone River just three months after he lifted a previous injunction on the project." In his order reinstating the injunction, U.S. District Judge Brian Morris "wrote that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' new analysis of the proposed dam and a separate channel to allow pallid sturgeon to swim around the dam likely violated federal environmental laws." In his order, Morris "noted that the U.S. government estimated about 41 percent of the fish would use the bypass channel, but didn't analyze what effect those low numbers would have on the overall population."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (7/5, Volz), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (5/7, Volz), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/5, Volz), and the Fort Wayne \(IN\) Journal-Gazette (7/5).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Tribes Oppose Removal Of Grizzly From Protected Status.

The AP (7/5) reports that "tribal leaders from the Great Plains and across Canada have come together in opposition to removal of the Yellowstone Grizzly Bear from the Endangered Species Act protection." According to the article, "more than 128 tribal nations have signed a 'Reclamation of Independence' treaty of cooperation in the wake of the removal." Tribal leaders "say they fear removing the grizzly not only will lead to trophy hunting of an animal they consider sacred, but also comes as President Donald Trump has proposed the opening of more tribal lands for oil exploration and mining."

U.S. Fish And Wildlife Working In Potter Valley To Save Pacific Lamprey.

The Ukiah \(CA\) Daily Journal (7/5) reports that "U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologists, along with local tribes and state partners, have started the Van Arsdale project in Potter Valley to reverse the decline of Pacific lamprey and avoid placing the species on the federal Endangered Species List, according to a report by the service's Pacific Southwest Region." Damon Goodman with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Arcata office and Dr. Stewart Reid with Western Fisheries, "started the project in 2015 at the Van Arsdale Fisheries Station."

U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service Spraying For Lamprey.

WLUC-TV Marquette, MI (7/5, Markle) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "begun their yearly process of trying to rid the Great Lakes and other bodies of water in the area of sea lamprey." Jamie Criger, lead physical science technician for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, "We've started doing this type of operation more in an effort to basically knock down the population in the Great Lakes even further than what our normal target values are."

Big Oaks NWR Hosts 'Take A Kid Fishing Day'.

The Greensburg \(IN\) Daily News (7/5) reports that Big Oaks National Wildlife Refuge will host a 'Take a Kid Fishing Day' on Saturday, July 8.

National Park Service

Lack Of Discipline For Upper Management Of The NPS.

Federal Times (7/5, Kalinyak) reports that "the acting National Park Service Director Michael Reynolds has not been following up on his previous pledge to 'fundamentally change the culture of the National Park Service,'" according to independent watchdog group Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility. The article notes that "two individuals in particular are getting attention — Mike Caldwell and Myrna Palfrey." According to PEER, "the lack of disciplinary actions taken against managers in the NPS only serves to reinforce perceptions of a biased hierarchy within the system."

2 Arkansas Veterans Advance Gulf War Memorial Plans In DC.

The AP (7/5) reports that "two Arkansas Gulf War veterans are leading a campaign to build a Desert Storm War Memorial in Washington, D.C." Jeff Kurczek and Brenten Byrd serve on the board for the National Desert Storm War Memorial Association. The National Park Service will "hold a hearing for two proposed sites later this month."

Lasers To The Rescue! Slime & Grime Set To Be Removed From Jefferson Memorial.

WUSA-TV Washington (7/5, Valerio, Block) reports that "dark slime and grime now covers the top of the Jefferson Memorial, an eyesore the National Park Service is ready to confront – with lasers." According to the article, "after a year of testing different chemical compounds used to clean other architectural landmarks, the National Park Service said a laser treatment proved to be most effective, and would not damage or corrode the stone." A contractor has been chosen "to perform the monumental task of removing the slime, and work is set to begin later this summer."

Appalachian Forest National Heritage Area Bill Introduced.

Elkins \(WV\) InterMountain (7/5) reports that Rep David McKinley has "introduced H.R. 3142 — the Appalachian Forest National Heritage Area Act of 2017 — in the U.S. House of Representatives, bringing national recognition for Appalachian Forest Heritage Area one step closer to reality." Co-sponsored by Rep. Evan Jenkins and Rep. John Delaney, "the bill will designate the 18-county region in the highlands of West Virginia and western Maryland as a National Heritage Area." The Appalachian Forest Heritage Area has been "seeking National Heritage Area designation since approval of their feasibility study by the National Park Service in 2006."

22-year Wolf Control Study Gives Insight On Interior Populations.

KTVA-TV Anchorage, AK (7/5) reports that "a 22-year wolf control study gives new insights into how species management programs in adjacent areas effect Interior Alaska populations." According to the article, "from 1993 to 2014, National Park Service researchers monitored wolf population dynamics, to assess how two large-scale wolf control programs affected a population located within the adjacent protected area of the Yukon-Charley Rivers National Preserve." The study "found when wolf control programs were implemented, wolf survival rates in the national preserve were lower than usual even though the preserve encompasses 2.7 million acres and wolf control activities are prohibited in the preserve (and on other lands managed by the National Park Service)."

Camp Brookside Bridge In Summers To Be Closed For Five Weeks.

The Beckley \(WV\) Register-Herald (7/5) reports that the National Park Service, "working in coordination with the Federal Highway Administration, announced Wednesday that the Camp Brookside Bridge will be closed for repairs during July and August." The closure will begin Thursday, July 6, "and is scheduled to be in effect for five weeks." Lizzie Watts, superintendent of New River Gorge National River, said, "We understand this temporary closure will be an inconvenience to some folks over the next few weeks. However, with an improved bridge, we look forward to welcoming even more visitors to the Camp Brookside area in the coming years."

Florida Man Dies After Fall Into Crater Lake Caldera.

The AP (7/5) reports that "a 20-year-old man from Florida is dead after tumbling up to 70 feet down a steep cliff in Crater Lake National Park in Oregon." The accident happened Tuesday "when the man walked out onto a rocky point and the rocks broke loose." The National Park Service "says hiking on the rim around the collapsed volcano – or caldera – is not allowed because it is extremely hazardous."

Additional coverage was provided by CNN (7/5, Levin).

Skier Missing After Falling Through A Snow Bridge.

The AP (7/5) reports that "a skier is missing after falling through a snow bridge into Pebble Creek in Mount Rainier National Park." According to the article, "the 30-year-old Washington man was skiing from Camp Muir to Paradise Monday when he fell into a hole that spanned Pebble Creek." Authorities "launched a search Monday night, followed by an aerial search Tuesday, but neither turned up any sign of the missing skier."

Partnerships Can Enhance The National Park Experience.

In an editorial, the North Andover \(MA\) Eagle Tribune (7/5) supports the proposal to turn "over even more functions to vendors, mainly at national park campgrounds." According to the paper,

“this is a commonsense move with the potential to save money for the government and improve the experiences of park visitors.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

$3.5M Energy Grants For Territories.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (7/5) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “last week informed American Samoa Gov. Lolo Moliga, Guam Gov. Eddie Calvo, and CNMI Gov. Ralph DLG Torres that he has approved a total of $3,489,427 in energy grants for the three territories.” In addition, Zinke “announced energy grants for the U.S. Virgin Islands.” Zinke said, “We recognize that the cost of electricity in the U.S. territories is three times higher, on average, than the U.S. national average. The energy needs of the territories are unique and I am pleased to help bring them into focus as President Trump highlights energy strategies across America during Energy Week.”

President Proposes $591.9 Million FY18 Budget For The U.S.

Territories And Freely Associated States. The Kaselehlie Press \(FSM\) (6/17) reports that President Trump has “proposed $591.9 million for Fiscal Year 2018 (FY18) for the benefit of the U.S. Territories of Guam, American Samoa, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and the Freely Associated States of the Republic of Palau, the Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of the Marshall Islands through the Office of Insular Affairs (OIA).” Acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula said, “While we continue to support all of our U.S. insular areas, we have long been striving to meet our commitments to the Republic of Palau. President Trump’s strong support for the Palau Compact shows that he recognizes the strategic importance of our U.S. Territories and the Freely Associated States.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, “The Territories and Freely Associated States are absolutely critical to the strategic readiness of the United States, and they are part of the fabric of who we are as fellow Americans. President Trump’s budget proposal makes it abundantly clear that these lands, often on the front lines of escalating tensions, are under our protection and serve vital importance. The President’s budget balances these priorities and commitments to the Insular Areas with his promise to make government work for the taxpayer again and support a balanced budget by 2027.”

Resolution Honors Guam Youth’s Great-grandma, A NASA Pioneer.

The Guam Daily Post (6/28, Lujan) reports that “the major motion picture ‘Hidden Figures,’ which is based” on Katherine Johnson – “as well as two other notable African-American women – premiered in January.” Johnson’s great-grandson, Trevor Boykin, “worked to honor his great-grandmother’s legacy further by organizing a special screening of the movie at the Micronesia Mall theaters on Jan. 7.” Johnson was “also honored locally by the Guam Legislature in the form of Resolution 7-34, introduced by Sen. Regine Biscoe Lee in January.”

Definition Of ‘Cultural Fishing’ Still Being Debated.

Samoa News (6/29, Sagapolutele) reports that “an attorney with the US National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has hinted to a federally established group that its work to define cultural fishing will have an impact on future issues pertaining to fisheries in American Samoa.” According to the article, “one of the main issues on the agenda at last week’s three-day meeting of the Western Pacific Regional Fisheries Management Council, held in Honolulu, dealt with defining cultural fishing in American Samoa, following a Honolulu federal judge’s decision in March, that the US National Marine Fisheries Services failed to consider the Deeds of Cession, when implementing the 2016 amendment to the Large Vessel Prohibited Area in territorial waters.”

Pacific Fisheries Ministers Touch Down In Australia To Talk Tuna.

Bush ‘N Beach Fishing (7/4) reports that “fisheries ministers from across the Pacific have converged on Mooloolaba, Queensland” for the 14th Forum Fisheries Committee Ministerial Meeting to discuss “the future of critical tuna fisheries.” Assistant Minister for Agriculture and Water Resources Anne Ruston said the meeting “would discuss the sustainable management of fisheries in the Pacific, particularly tuna fisheries.”

The Marianas Named 'Best Island Destination'.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (6/29) reports that "the Marianas was named 'Best Island Destination' of the year by Travel Weekly China at its China Travel & Meetings Industry Awards gala at Peace Hotel in Shanghai." The article notes that "so far this fiscal year, The Marianas has received 146,159 visitors from China, comprising 34 percent of all visitors to the islands."

Haley To Security Council: "If Need Be," US Ready To Use Force On North Korea.

Media coverage of the ongoing tensions with North Korea is dominated by reports on Wednesday's emergency session at the UN Security Council. NBC Nightly News (7/5, lead story, 2:40, Guthrie) opened its broadcast last night saying "the US is scrambling to deal with a North Korea that is more aggressive than ever, and now closer than ever to being able to deliver a nuclear blow to the United States." Sources tell NBC News the US was "caught by surprise" by North Korea's test of an ICBM on Tuesday. NBC also reported that "in stunning comments, the commander of American troops" in South Korea is "saying all-out war is possible. 'Self-restraint, which is a choice, is all that separates armistice and war.'" Politico (7/5, Nelson) also reports the comments by Gen. Vincent Brooks, who added, "It would be a grave mistake for anyone to believe anything to the contrary."

The Washington Post (7/5, Nakamura, Rauhala) says Ambassador Haley's "pointed speech" to the Security Council "marked the latest effort by the Trump administration to rally allies and rivals around a common agenda to blunt North Korea's progress," but her remarks "also illustrated the limits of the White House's options and lacked specifics about what concrete steps the administration is considering." On ABC World News Tonight (7/5, story 2, 2:00, Muir), Haley was shown saying: "Time is short. Action is required. The world is on notice." Reuters (7/5, Kim, Kim) reports Haley told the Council that the US is "ready to use force if need be to stop North Korea's nuclear missile program but said it preferred global diplomatic action against Pyongyang." Haley warned that North Korea's actions were "quickly closing off the possibility of a diplomatic solution" and that the US was prepared to defend itself and its allies. The New York Post (7/5, Fredericks) reports Haley "slammed" North Korea, saying it "does not want to be part of a peaceful world."

Deputy assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka similarly said on Fox News' Hannity (7/5), "The Administration will use whatever tools and instruments the President deems necessary," because North Korea "is a grave threat, not only to our allies and partners, but now to the United States, and we cannot permit it to move down this trajectory of further developing longer and longer range ballistic missiles and nuclear weapons. It cannot go on." Gorka added that the US "is not just this superpower, we are a hyperpower. Nobody comes close to our capabilities. What it looks like is happening now is their attempt to destabilize the region, to make our friends nervous, and potentially to blackmail the Western community. We won't stand for any of that."

Politico (7/5, Toosi) says Haley "did leave some wiggle room, however, noting that diplomatic options are still on the table," but the Wall Street Journal (7/5, A1, Cheng) reports she warned fellow diplomats that "time is short" and that all nations must pressure North Korea, including through new sanctions, to change course.

The New York Times (7/5, Sang-Hun) reports Haley said the US was working on a Security Council draft resolution that "raises the international response," but did not specify what the resolution would do or when it might be ready for a vote. According to the Times, she "alluded to punishments including a complete cutoff of North Korea's access to international currency markets, severe restrictions on high-level North Korean officials and, in a reference to China," penalties for "any country that chooses to do business with this outlaw regime." In fact, the AP (7/5, Lederer) reports Haley warned China that it "risks its trade with the United States if trade with North Korea violates UN sanctions."

In what Bloomberg News (7/4, Wadhams, Foroohar) calls "a warning to China and other nations" the US says aren't doing enough to rein in North Korea, Haley "threatened trade ties with countries that continue to do business with North Korea." Said Haley, "There are countries that are allowing, even encouraging, trade with North Korea in violation of UN Security Council resolutions. Such countries would also like to continue their trade arrangements with the United States. That's not going to happen."

Another AP (7/5, Pace, Salama) report says President Trump "and other senior officials dangled the prospect of punishing countries that trade with North Korea." In a tweet Wednesday morning, Trump questioned why the US should continue what he sees as bad trade deals "with countries that do not help us." The Hill (7/5, Savransky) also reports the President's tweet.

On the CBS Evening News (7/5, story 3, 1:30, Brown), Margaret Brennan said the Administration "is trying to find new ways to cut off North Korea's financial lifeline without Beijing's help." A Washington Post (7/5, Rauhala) analysis says in the wake of North Korea's latest missile test, the US and China are "at odds about what to do next." Trump took to Twitter on Wednesday, "appearing to blame China for failing to tighten the economic noose," saying, "Trade between China and North Korea grew almost 40% in the first quarter. So much for China working with us – but we had to give it a try."

A New York Times (7/5, Perlez) analysis says this week's test of the North's first intercontinental ballistic missile "has raised the question of what is China's red line for its ally, and whether the test will force" President Xi Jinping "to act decisively against North Korea." The Times, however, says he will "probably do little, if anything."

A USA Today (7/5, Dorell) analysis says the US "could start calling out companies involved in North Korea's weapons programs, such as two Chinese trucking companies that provided or helped build large vehicles that North Korea uses to transport, erect and launch its missiles." The CBS Evening News (7/5, story 2, 1:50, Brown) said "China has stopped buying North Korean coal, but it has not cut off oil shipments to North Korea, fearing that could cause Kim Jong-Un's regime to collapse, destabilizing the Korean Peninsula," and the Los Angeles Times (7/5, Demick) reports "nonproliferation experts say that the United States has yet to implement the kind of far-ranging sanctions against North Korea that the Obama administration used to pressure Iran."

Jim Sciutto said on Fox News' Special Report (7/5), "The Trump brand on this issue and others is 'I'm a great negotiator, and just with toughness and quid pro quo, I'll make things happen.' But what you cannot change are the essential differences in interests here. Frankly, China does not want a reunited Korean Peninsula. They don't want a Western democracy on their border – a US ally, et cetera, on the border. It's kind of impossible to square that circle at the end of the day."

The Washington Times (7/5, Boyer), meanwhile, reports Trump also discussed the North Korean threat with President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi on Wednesday. While flying aboard Air Force One to Europe, Trump spoke with Sisi, urging Egypt to "fully implement UN Security Council resolutions on North Korea."

Meanwhile, the AP (7/5, Klug, Kim) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un vowed Wednesday his nation will "demonstrate its mettle to the US" and that its weapons programs is not up for negotiations. The AP says the "hard line suggests that North Korea will conduct more weapons tests."

While Haley said the US was prepared to respond militarily, NBC Nightly News (7/5, story 2, 2:15, Guthrie) said "US options are few, each with critical risks," and a New York Times (7/5, Rich) analysis says that "even the most limited strike risks staggering casualties, because North Korea could retaliate with the thousands of artillery pieces it has positioned along its border with the South." In addition, Bloomberg Politics (7/5, Capaccio) reports that North Korea's test of an ICBM "capable of striking the US mainland is putting renewed pressure on a US missile defense system racing to keep up with North Korea's quickly evolving military threat." The Washington Post (7/5, Lamothe) reports that while the US "has built a web of missile defense weapons around the Pacific over the last few years...one of the main cogs in it — missile interceptors known as the ground-based midcourse system — have struggled in testing."

On ABC World News Tonight (7/5, story 3, 0:45, Muir), military analyst Steven Ganyard said, "The North Koreans demonstrated they have a rocket that can reach the United States. This is what's disturbing. This is what we believe is a miniaturized nuclear warhead. We don't know yet if they can put the warhead with the rocket and have it survive the heat of re-entry. It's the last piece of the puzzle, and we know they are working hard to get it."

The CBS Evening News (7/5, lead story, 2:35, Brown) reported former CIA Director and Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said, "You can't out-bully a bully in North Korea. So it doesn't make a lot of sense simply to sit back and threaten this leader." Rep. Lee Zeldin said on CNN's The Lead (7/5) that military action "is an absolute last possible option. What will be important for the Administration right now to do...is to be prepared for any of those scenarios." Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (7/5), "We have two choices: we are either going to go to war or acquiesce."

Rep. Adam Schiff said on CNN's Situation Room (7/5) that the situation won't be resolved by "Twitter diplomacy...we're going to have to put much more meaningful pressure on China."

The Washington Times (7/5, Muñoz) says the Administration and the international community are “weighing a range of bad policy options after North Korea’s ballistic missile program cleared a dangerous milestone this week.”

A Washington Post (7/5) editorial says in response to the latest missile test, the Administration “must now rally not only Republicans and Democrats within this badly polarized country but also the widest possible range of like-minded countries around the world.” President Trump, however, “is an unlikely orchestrator of a multilateral approach, given both his erratic conduct and his off-putting rhetoric about ‘America first.’” In order to “construct a widening circle of cooperation against the North,” the Post says Trump must “overcom[e] the resistance of skeptical governments — and his own most impulsive tendencies.”

A Los Angeles Times (7/5) editorial says the US “should continue to lean on China” and also “leave the door open to negotiations with North Korea – including direct talks. ... There is no guarantee that diplomacy will solve this problem, but a reckless military response will surely make it worse.”

North Korean Broadcaster Makes Only Rare Appearances For Major News. The Los Angeles Times (7/5, Stiles) reports that on the “rare occasions these days when Ri Chun Hee appears on North Korea’s state-run news network, the audience knows the looming declaration is serious.” The latest broadcast came when Ri “told the world Tuesday about North Korea’s successful test launch of an intercontinental ballistic missile.” The Times says Ri’s “three-minute monologue...is one of many historic moments in North Korean history the anchor has announced over a decades-long career for Korean Central Television.”

CNN Faces “Backlash” Over Story About Source Of Trump Wrestling Video.

According to multiple reports and analyses, CNN on Wednesday suffered a “backlash” over its handling of a story about the anonymous Reddit user who was the source of a doctored video President Trump tweeted this past weekend. In that video, Trump was shown assailing a man who had the CNN logo superimposed over his face. The New York Times (7/5, Victor) reports that the CNN story, published on Tuesday, “has inspired multiple backlashes. Some criticized it as a form of blackmail. Others raised issues of journalism ethics over the network granting conditional anonymity to the user.” In its story, CNN said “that it was not publishing the user’s name ‘because he is a private citizen who has issued an extensive statement of apology, showed his remorse by saying he has taken down all his offending posts, and because he said he is not going to repeat this ugly behavior on social media again.’”

USA Today (7/5, Snider) reports that “#CNNblackmail trended Wednesday as Twitter users including Trump’s family and far-right pundits blasted the network, claiming it had blackmailed the creator of that video into promising to desist.” USA Today says Donald Trump, Jr. “called the network ineffective at ‘threatening the admin(istration) so they go after and bully a 15 y/o?’, tweeting a description of the person passed along online by many.” In response, CNN on Wednesday said “it had decided not to publish the name of the Reddit user out of concern for his safety. ‘Any assertion that the network blackmailed or coerced him is false,’ said” CNN, adding, “The user, who is an adult male, not a 15-year-old boy, apologized and deleted his account before ever speaking with our reporter. CNN never made any deal, of any kind, with the user.”

McClatchy (7/5, Irby) reports that CNN’s statement saying it “reserves the right to publish his identity” sparked “polarizing opinions, with some defending CNN’s right to name a confirmed source if they choose and others interpreting the statement to mean the major news network was blackmailing a private citizen into staying quiet.”

Under the headline “CNN Faces Backlash Over Handling Of Doctored Trump Video,” the AP (7/5, Bauder) reports that the “reserves the right to publish his identity” line “made CNN a target. ‘That’s essentially blackmail,’ wrote conservative activist Ben Shapiro. ‘That’s CNN stating that it will out the guy if he dares to defy their political perspective or offends them sufficiently.’”

The Washington Times (7/5, Richardson) reports that in the wake of CNN’s story, “a swift backlash on social media ensued, with users accusing CNN of engaging in ‘extremely unethical’ behavior and using the hashtag ‘#CNNBlackmail.’” The New York Post (7/5, Moore) reports, “Even WikiLeaks took CNN to task. ‘Trump was bad. CNN is worse: CNN threatens amateur satirist behind Trump video: make fun of us again and we dox you,’ it wrote on Twitter, using the term for publishing somebody’s identity on the internet.”

Under the headline “How A CNN Investigation Set Off An Internet Meme War,” the New York Times (7/5, Roose) reports that “in instances where the meme-making community finds itself facing off against a clear antagonist, its tactics can be swift and brutal, and can catch large institutions off guard. In these communities, a feud with CNN over the identity of a Reddit user provided a perfect storm of hot-button topics: speech policing, journalist ethics and the perceived bullying of right-wing sympathizers on social media. The fact that the media organization in question was CNN, which has been singled out for criticism in recent weeks by the Trump administration, only added fuel to the fire."

In his Washington Examiner (7/5) column, Becket Adams said that "CNN appears to be dangling the threat of revealing" the meme-creator's "identity should he renege on his apology and slip back into what CNN characterized as 'ugly behavior.' Publishing what looks like an obvious threat to expose a private citizens' identity is a very, very bad look for a professional newsroom."

Writing at Townhall (7/5), Matt Vespa asks rhetorically of CNN's "reserves the right to publish his identity" line, "You're telling me that this isn't coercion of some sort?" Writing for The Federalist (7/5), Bethany Mandel said, "Think or say anything negative about CNN and play into President Trump's war against them, even in your capacity as a private citizen, and you may have the resources of an international news organization devote themselves to destroying your life. CNN has set a bullseye on not only President Trump, but his fans as well."

Writing for National Review (7/5), David French said that "when CNN completed its investigation and found that the poster wasn't a member of the Trump administration or a pro-Trump journalist or other public figure, it should have either protected the man's privacy or exposed him as an example of the kind of person who's polluting the internet with the recent wave of alt-right sludge. Instead, it chose a bizarre and ominous third course – to protect his privacy while reserving the right to expose him if he restarted his 'ugly behavior.' At that point, the CNN story changes from a news story of debatable value into ham-handed blackmail."

In his USA Today (7/5) column, Jonathan Turley writes that CNN has not revealed the identity of the creator of the video "while making a thinly veiled threat that it will release his name if he posts anything CNN finds disturbing or offensive. That is an odd role for a news organization. The media do not usually put citizens on probation for exercising their free speech." Turley adds, "Once a news organization becomes the manager of free speech, it becomes a menace to the free press."

Meanwhile, in his Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (7/5), Christian Schneider said that in the immediate wake of Trump tweeting the video, CNN said in a statement, "It is a sad day when the President of the United States encourages violence against reporters." Saying that some other pundits and news outlets sounded a similar note, Schneider added, "Those with even a fleeting knowledge of professional wrestling, of course, know that Trump's tweet wasn't inciting any sort of violence. ... Wrestling is fake and fun, and pretty much everyone gets it. What Trump's tweet did expose, however, was the cultural bubble that a good number of our political pundits refuse to escape."

Cruz: CNN May Have Broken Law With Threat To Reveal Reddit User's Identity. The Washington Times (7/5, Richardson) reports that Sen. Ted Cruz on Wednesday "said CNN may have committed a crime by threatening to publish the identity of [the] private citizen," tweeting that the network "may be guilty of 'extortion.'" In a pair of tweets, Cruz said, "Troubling. I assume CNN's lawyers are examining GA § 16-8-16 Theft by extortion. If CNN constructively obtained the gif-maker's IP...it's a GA crime if they threatened to 'Disseminate any information tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule.'" The Federalist (7/5) also reported on Cruz's tweets.

Trump's Tweet Of Faux Attack On CNN Now His Most Retweeted Post. The AP (7/5) reports that the President's tweeting of the video "showing him pummeling a man whose face is covered by the CNN logo has become Trump's most-shared post on the platform." Trump's tweet "had been retweeted more than 340,000 times as of early Wednesday morning. The mark edges out his tweet from the morning of Election Day reading, 'TODAY WE MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!'"

NYTimes Examines Trump-CNN Feud. Under the headline "The Network Against The Leader Of The Free World," the New York Times (7/5, Grynbaum) reports on the feud between Trump and CNN, saying that "the president's denunciations" of the network "have far outstripped his criticisms of other prominent news outlets, like The New York Times or The Washington Post. And his attacks have spawned a cottage industry of Trump supporters who have declared a digital war of sorts against CNN, including gotcha videos of network employees and threatening messages sent to anchors' cellphones." Even so, says the Times, "CNN's troubles have been compounded by a series of recent self-inflicted wounds – not least a high-profile retraction of a sensitive article about one of Mr. Trump's close allies, which last week led to the forced resignations of three veteran journalists."

Barkoukis: Prior To Inauguration, CNN's Zucker Issued "Veiled Threat At Trump." Leah Barkoukis wrote at Townhall (7/5), "WeazelZippers dug up a Q&A between CNN's Jeff Zucker and the New York Magazine days before...Trump's inauguration in which the network's president lobbed a veiled threat at Trump if he continued to be hostile toward CNN.” Barkoukis highlighted a passage from the interview, in which Zucker – responding to a question about whether he is “concerned about getting access to Trump” – said, “One of the things I think this administration hasn’t figured out yet is that there’s only one television network that is seen in Beijing, Moscow, Seoul, Tokyo, Pyongyang, Baghdad, Tehran, and Damascus – and that’s CNN. The perception of Donald Trump in capitals around the world is shaped, in many ways, by CNN. Continuing to have an adversarial relationship with that network is a mistake.”

The Federalist’s Hemingway: CNN Tweeted Incorrect Quote From Abraham Lincoln. Writing for The Federalist (7/5), Mollie Hemingway said, “CNN tweeted out quotes from notable Americans for the Fourth of July. Here was one of the quotes they tweeted from Abraham Lincoln: ‘Let the people know the facts, and the country will be safe.’ The quote, which is also displayed at the Newseum, was interpreted as yet another attack from the media giant against” Trump. However, Hemingway said that “Quote Investigator [later] found a quote with some similarities, and some differences, to the one being put out by CNN.” Quote Investigator tweeted Lincoln as actually saying, “Let them know the truth, and the country is safe,” citing a journalist’s report in a West Virginia newspaper dated April 21, 1865.

Citing “Market Realities,” EPA Proposes Lowering Biofuel Mandates.

The Washington Times (7/5, Wolfgang) reports the EPA yesterday “proposed to lower the amount of renewable fuels that must be blended into the nation’s gasoline supply next year, saying ‘market realities’ have informed its decision and leaving the door open for a much broader overhaul of the entire Renewable Fuel Standard in the near future.” EPA Administrator Pruitt said in a statement “the decision was made because of ‘challenges’ in getting more advanced biofuels into the marketplace,” and added, “We are proposing new volumes consistent with market realities focused on actual production and consumer demand while being cognizant of the challenges that exist in bringing advanced biofuels into the marketplace. Timely implementation provides certainty to American refiners, the agriculture community and broader fuels industry, all of which play an important role in the RFS program.”

Reuters (7/5, Prentice, Renshaw, Shepardson) says “the proposal marks the first plan for US biofuels usage announced under President Donald Trump, who has promised to cut regulations on industry.” Reuters adds that “the Renewable Fuel Standard (RFS) has become a battlefield between entrenched corn and oil interests,” with “petroleum companies” saying “the biofuel targets are impossible to meet and add billions in costs” whereas “the law has been a boon to agriculture, supporting economies across the corn belt.”

Study: Global Warming Models Likely More Accurate Than Historical Inferences.

The Washington Post (7/5, Harvey) reports a study out yesterday in the journal Science Advances “joins a growing body of literature that suggests” global warming “models are on track after all,” despite the difficulty of predicting the extent to which future greenhouse gas emissions will cause Earth to warm. The Post says while the study’s findings “may be worrisome for the planet, [they’re] good news for the scientists working to understand its future.” The Post explains that the study “helps to reconcile the models,” which predict up to 4.5 degrees Celsius in warming with the doubling in the preindustrial level of carbon dioxide, “with the historical record,” whose patterns would suggest a doubling in carbon dioxide would lead to only about a three-degree Celsius increase. The study says global warming occurs in different “modes” throughout the planet, some of which happen faster than others.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Showdown In Hamburg.” The New York Times (7/6, Board) editorializes, “Stopping over in Poland on his way to the Group of 20 summit meeting in Germany gives President Trump a chance to briefly bask in the acclaim of a right-wing, illiberal Polish leadership before he starts taking flak from more powerful allies like Germany and France.” Germany’s Angela Merkel “has made clear that she intends to focus on issues on which Mr. Trump has sharply parted ways with much of the European Union, including trade, climate change and migration. ... The overriding question is whether Mr. Trump can reach some sort of détente with other leaders.”

“Work And Reward: The Great Disconnect.” The New York Times (7/6, Board) editorializes, “Working hard and getting ahead used to go hand in hand. But that was a long time ago, before decades of stagnating incomes and rising inequality took their toll." A National Bureau of Economic Research study indicates that "lifetime income [will] continue to lag. ... As workers lose ground, inequality deepens, because money that would flow to wages tends to flow instead to those at the top of the income ladder."

Washington Post.

"What Trump Can Do About North Korea." A Washington Post (7/5) editorial says in response to North Korea's latest missile test, the Administration "must now rally not only Republicans and Democrats within this badly polarized country but also the widest possible range of like-minded countries around the world." President Trump, however, "is an unlikely orchestrator of a multilateral approach, given both his erratic conduct and his off-putting rhetoric about 'America first.'" In order to "construct a widening circle of cooperation against the North," the Post says Trump must "overcom[e] the resistance of skeptical governments — and his own most impulsive tendencies."

"The G-20 Should Put Climate Change At The Top Of Its List ." A Washington Post (7/5) editorial argues that climate change "must be at the top of the list of global priorities" at the G-20 summit, adding that regardless of "how irresponsible President Trump's behavior [is] on this matter, the world cannot afford to lose four years."

"The FCC Is Gearing Up To Shut Down Robo-Callers." The Washington Post (7/5) editorializes that the FCC's $120 million fine for Adrian Abramovich's estimated 96,758,223 illegal robocalls made over the course of three months should be just the "first step in shutting down a practice that preys on consumers and causes plenty of annoyance along the way." The Post says it approves of FCC Chairman Ajit Pai's prioritization of the issue and a proposal to create a list of fraudulent numbers that carriers can choose to block from reaching any of their clients. However, this "leaves some problems unsolved," such as filtering out callers going unidentified for legitimate reasons and tracking down scammers.

Wall Street Journal.

"Trump's Putin Test." A Wall Street Journal (7/5) editorial advises President Trump to show strength rather than charm with Russian President Vladimir Putin, arguing that the chances for a improved ties will be better if Trump shows Putin that the cost of a better relationship is better behavior by Russia.

"State Of The Teachers Union." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/5) writes that the exasperation of National Education Association President Lily Eskelsen Garcia with President Trump and Education Secretary DeVos shows the Administration is doing something right. The Journal says the union's July 4 statement renewing criticism of charter schools as "a failed and damaging experiment" shows the group's focus on the adults, not students, in America's education system. Regarding the Education Department, the Journal says that since it has insufficient funding and authority to have a significant impact on schools, DeVos should use her stature to advocate for parents who are desperate for better schooling options for their children.

"Junk By Any Name In Illinois." The Wall Street Journal (7/5) editorializes that as credit-rating agencies back off their threats of downgrading Illinois' debt to junk status following the state legislature's override of Gov. Bruce Rauner's veto of a budget deal, bondholders should remain wary. The Journal says that while Moody's, S&P, and Fitch are good at highlighting fiscal deficits, they often fail to adequately estimate credit risk in a timely matter, and they pay little heed to how deficits are closed. For instance, in Illinois they accepted the temporary fix of an income tax hike, which the Journal says ultimately will prove insufficient to address the fundamental flaws with the state's tax-borrow-and-spend culture. The Journal underscores that the rating agencies didn't reprimand Puerto Rico, Detroit, or Stockton, California when they raised taxes and deferred spending reforms, but the policy resulted in economic decline, population flight, and the fleeing of bondholders.

House Panel Approves $31.4B Interior, EPA Funding Bill.

The Hill (7/12, Henry) reports that "a House panel on Wednesday approved a $31.4 billion bill funding the Interior Department and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the first step toward moving the legislation to the floor." An Appropriations Committee subpanel quickly approved the legislation on Wednesday, cutting "spending for the Interior Department and programs like the Land and Water Conservation Fund, National Park Service, Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife Service, and the U.S. Geological Survey." The article notes that "none of the cuts were close to the levels Trump envisioned in his budget proposal."

Bloomberg BNA (7/12, Kovski, Stecker) reports that the Bureau of Land Management would "receive $1.2 billion in fiscal year 2018, a cut of $46 million or 4 percent from the current year, including a $20 million cut for land acquisition." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service would "receive $1.5 billion, a $38 million or 2 percent decrease." The bill "prioritizes funding to reduce the endangered species delisting backlog and to fight invasive species, among other things." The legislation "provides $275 million for Land and Water Conservation Fund programs, down $125 million or 31 percent from the current level despite the fact that many Democrats and Republicans alike in Congress are reluctant to reduce spending from the fund." The Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement would "receive $213 million, down $40 million or 16 percent."

Park Service To Take Better Care Of What It Has Instead Of Buying New Land. The Daily Caller (7/12, Follett) reports that House Republican introduced a draft bill Wednesday to cut National Park Service funding by $64 million, "largely stemming from cuts to land purchases" According to the article, "most of the Park Service budget will go towards maintaining park operations and addressing the $12 billion dollar maintenance backlog." Rep. Ken Calvert, chairman of the House Interior Subcommittee, said in a statement, "The agencies funded in the Interior and Environment Appropriations bill do important work protecting public lands, the air we breathe, and the water we drink. Our subcommittee prioritized proven programs that have a meaningful impact to achieve these goals while also ensuring our economy can continue to grow.”

Congress Votes To Spare Earthquake Early Detection Warning System For California, Oregon, Washington. KGO-TV San Francisco (7/12, Freedman) reports that “members from both political parties in the House appropriations subcommittee overseeing the Department of the Interior and the Environmental Protection Agency voted Wednesday” to save the earthquake early warning system for California, Oregon and Washington, from a $10 million cut that President Trump proposed for the budget. The funds allow the United States Geological Survey “to continue research on a system that could provide potential victims with several seconds to get out of harm’s way.”

Wild Horses And Burros On Public Lands Won’t Be Killed. The Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (7/12, Horseman) reports that “the federal government would be barred from euthanizing wild horses and burros on public lands if provisions in a draft House spending bill released this week end up in the final legislation.” According to the article, “the sale of wild horses to slaughterhouse buyers also would be forbidden by the bill.”

U.S. Dept. Of Interior Provides $250,000 In Funding To USVI For New Consumer Price Index.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (7/12) reports that the Office of Insular Affairs has “awarded the U.S. Virgin Islands a $250,000 grant for the development and implementation of a 2017 Consumer Price Index (CPI).” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “presented the grant award to Governor of the U.S. Virgin Islands Kenneth E. Mapp during their meeting at Interior Headquarters on Monday.” Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula said, “The new CPI will be based on a new 2016 Household Income and Expenditure Survey. The major focus of the project is to provide current data on consumer expenditures in the U.S. Virgin Islands, congruent with national standards. This is critical in order to better assess and evaluate price trends in various sectors of the economy and prospects for economic growth and development.”

Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (7/12) reports that Interior Department officials “say they will support the territory’s efforts to establish a ‘day visa’ program, expand parking in Christiansted, resolve longstanding issues within the National Park on St. John and back a permanent increase in the amount of federal rum excise taxes returned to the local treasury.” Governor Kenneth Mapp “described his meeting this week with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke in Washington D.C. as highly productive.”

Trump ‘Review’ Will Keep Hands Off Hanford Reach National Monument

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer (7/12, Connelly) reports Washington Democratic Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell confirmed Wednesday that the Hanford Reach National Monument “will not be reduced or deleted as a result of President Trump’s ‘review’ of monuments in the American West.” Murray said, “Today, the Department of the Interior confirmed what so many Washingtonians have known all along – that the Hanford Reach, designated after year of collaboration in the Tri-Cities community, is worthy of protection for generations to come.” According to the Post-Intelligencer, “the Monument was carved out of the Hanford Nuclear Reservation, and still has Manhattan Project-vintage reactors nearby.”

Bronson Blasts GOP Call To Eliminate Ironwood Nat’l Monument. The Tucson \(AZ\) Sentinel (7/12, Smith) reports that Sharon Bronson, the chair of the Pima County Board of Supervisors, “said she is ‘astounded’ that three Republican congressman from Arizona are calling for the elimination of four national monuments in the state, including the Ironwood Forest just outside Tucson.” Bronson sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Monday, “responding to the call by U.S. Reps. Paul Gosar, Andy Biggs and Trent Franks to reverse the declaration of Ironwood, as well as shrinking or de-listing other monuments across the nation.” Bronson “told Zinke that none of the Arizona congressmen who backed rescinding the monument designations had inquired of her about the impacts to the local economy or environment if that were to take place.”

Benefits Of Expanding Offshore Oil And Natural Gas Development Benefits Highlighted During House Hearing.

DailyEnergyInsider (7/12) reports that the House Natural Resources' Subcommittee on Energy and Mineral Resources "convened an oversight hearing on Wednesday to review the status of oil and gas leasing and drill permitting processes on the outer continental shelf (OCS), where panelists said expanding access would lead to more jobs and increased revenues for states and the federal government." Katherine MacGregor, acting Assistant Secretary of Land and Minerals Management at the Department of the Interior, said in prepared testimony, "OCS activities are a key aspect of the Trump Administration's America First Energy Agenda and Secretary (Ryan) Zinke's goal of maintaining our nation's energy dominance by advancing domestic energy production, generating revenue, and creating and sustaining jobs throughout our country." MacGregor "highlighted recent secretarial orders to reshape the 2017-2022 Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Proposed Final Program, also known as the Five Year Plan.," and "she also discussed efforts to approve permits for new seismic surveys, and the review and overhaul of regulations from the Obama Administration to improve certainty and data transparency."

Heinrich Introduces Every Kid Outdoors Act.

The Carlsbad \(NM\) Current-Argus (7/12, Booth) reports that lawmakers are "hoping to turn an initiative into law, allowing free access to federal public lands and water to fourth grade students and their families." Sen. Martin Heinrich, along with Sen. Lamar Alexander, introduced the Every Kid Outdoors (EKO) Act on Wednesday. The legislation "builds on the 'Every Kid in a Park' initiative, which was implemented by the Obama Administration a few years, offering free entry to fourth graders."

Trump's Environment And Energy Policies Trigger Storm Of Lawsuits.

McClatchy (7/12, Leavenworth) reports President Trump's efforts to roll back energy and pollution rules has been met with a surge of lawsuits from environmental groups and Democratic state attorneys general. Trump Administration efforts have been confronted with more than four dozen lawsuits challenging executive orders and decisions by the EPA, Interior Department and other agencies. A McClatchy review of the federal Public Access to Court Electronic Records found that environmental groups have sued the Administration more than 50 times since Trump took office. The early rounds of litigation have been favorable to the challengers, as a US Court of Appeals blocked efforts from delaying compliance with a methane leak regulation and a federal judge ruled against permits needed to complete construction of the Dakota Access pipeline. Abigail Dillen, VP of litigation at Earthjustice, said, "What we are seeing is unprecedented. ... With this administration, we face a disregard to basic rules of environmental decision making."

Montana Pushes To Use State Helicopters To Fight Fires On Federal Land.

Montana Public Radio (7/12, Cates-Carney) reports that Montana has "five large helicopters used to fight fires on state land, but they can rarely be used on federal land, which makes up about 29 percent of the state." Montana's Environmental Quality Council "sent a letter to the secretaries of the U.S. Departments of Agriculture and Interior Wednesday, urging an end to what was described by the state council as an illogical bureaucratic technicality." An emailed statement from an Interior spokesman said Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "continues to monitor the fire situation in Montana and is 'dedicated to keeping our people, and wildlife safe.'"

Additional coverage that Todd Willens, Rep. Steve Pearce's longtime chief of staff, has been named assistant deputy secretary of the Interior Department was provided by the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/12, Coleman), the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (7/12), and the Santa Fe New Mexican (7/13).

America's Energy Dominance Won't Sacrifice Environmental Quality.

In commentary for the Daily Signal (7/12, Loris), Nicolas Loris, a fellow at the Heritage Foundation, welcomes President Trump's declaration "during energy week that the United States would 'usher in a golden age of American energy dominance.'" But Loris argues that "energy dominance need not mean disregarding our nation's strong environmental record, as too many have assumed." He notes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "emphasized improving the environmental stewardship of federal lands." Zinke "plans to solicit input from the Western governors, native tribes, and citizens living in those states." He "emphasized unlocking valuable resources for private sector development and advancing human knowledge by promoting innovative technologies." Loris concludes that "the reality is that the Trump administration's efforts to strengthen an already dominant energy industry in the U.S. are fully compatible with a healthy environment."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

No Evidence Of Theft From Shoshone Tribe: DOI Watchdog.

Law360 (7/12, Guarnaccia) reports that the Office of the Inspector General for the Interior Department has "found no evidence of theft from the federal or tribal funds of the Eastern Shoshone Tribe but said the tribe's finance office improperly commingled funds and failed to keep adequate accounting records."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Looks To Expedite Planning.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/13, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "seeking ideas this month for how to make its land use planning procedures and environmental reviews timelier and less costly." The BLM "noted in its news release that its outreach follows President Trump's March 27 signing of a congressional resolution nullifying the BLM's Planning 2.0 rule."

Senate Democrats Urge Trump To Reverse Course On BLM, EPA Methane Rules.

Natural Gas Intelligence (7/12, Passut) reports that "a group of 27 Senate Democrats has urged President Trump to reverse course and allow methane emissions regulations promulgated by the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to take effect." In a four-page letter to Trump dated Monday, the senators called the BLM's venting and flaring rule and the EPA's updates to its New Source Performance Standards "commonsense, cost effective requirements that direct the oil and gas industry to find and fix leaks, use up-to-date readily available equipment, and prevent waste of a natural resource – saving taxpayers money while also reducing air pollution and protecting human health." The senators wrote, "These requirements drive innovation and increase jobs in the growing sector of methane detection and capture technologies. We urge you to fully implement the EPA and BLM methane and air pollution regulations as legally required without delay and to keep these important protections for public health, American taxpayers, and our energy security in place."

House Of Representatives Passes Clear Creek Re-opening.

KSBW-TV Monterey, CA (7/12) reports that "a bill that opens 63,000 acres in San Benito and Fresno Counties for use by off-road vehicles, unanimously passed the House of Representatives on Tuesday." The Clear Creek National Recreation Area and Conservation Act, a bill introduced by Rep. Jimmy Panetta, directs the Bureau of Land Management "to reopen the Clear Creek Management Area in San Benito and Fresno counties for use by off-road vehicles." The act also "protects 21,000 acres of BLM land adjacent to Clear Creek by designating the area the Joaquin Rocks Wilderness."

Drilling Plan In SW Wyoming Draws Opposition.

The AP (7/12) reports that "an energy company is proposing to drill up to 3,500 natural gas wells on 220 square miles (570 square kilometers) of Bureau of Land Management property in southwest Wyoming." The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (7/12, Koshmrl) reports that the Normally Pressured Lance project, "located south of the Anticline and Jonah fields, would add up to 3,500 wells on 220 square miles of mostly Bureau of Land Management property." The project "must navigate the National Environmental Policy Act approval process before it adds to the activity." The article says that "a draft environmental impact statement released last week is a first step, and though the development remains tentative it is already a cause of worry for conservationists like the Upper Green River Alliance's Linda Baker."

Washington Firefighters Save Pygmy Rabbits From Burned Area.

The Idaho Statesman (7/12, Blanchard) reports that "a crew of Washington state firefighters took a break from battling wildfires to save some tiny, adorable wildlife last week, according to a Facebook post from the Oregon Bureau of Land Management." Spokane BLM fire management officer Richard Parrish said that "a team of seven BLM firefighters accompanied a state wildlife biologist to the breeding area as part of a 'capture team.'" KTVB-TV Boise, ID (7/12) reports that "a total of 32 pygmy rabbits were rescued," but "wildlife officials say about 70 rabbits likely died in the fire."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Florida Senator Releases DOD Letters Backing Eastern Gulf Moratorium.

PennEnergy (7/12, Snow) reports that the office of Sen. Bill Nelson "released two letters on July 11 from officials at the US Department of Defense urging retention of a moratorium on offshore oil and gas leasing in the eastern Gulf of Mexico." Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. David L. Goldfein said in a June 27 letter to Nelson, "The moratorium is essential for developing and sustaining the Air Force's future combat capabilities. Although the Gulf of Mexico Security Act's moratorium the certainty of the proposed extension to guarantee long-term capabilities for future tests." According to the article, "a second letter—from A.M. Kurta on behalf of the US under-secretary of Defense for personnel and readiness to US Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.) on Apr. 26—said emerging technologies such as hypersonics, autonomous systems, and advanced subsurface systems 'will require enlarged testing and training footprints' and increased DOD reliance on the moratorium beyond 2022."

Government OKs Eni Plans To Drill From A Man-made Island Into Federal Arctic Leases.

The Alaska Dispatch News (7/12, DeMarban) reports that on Wednesday, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management "said it had approved the plan by Eni US, a subsidiary of Eni S.p.A., to drill four exploration wells into federal submerged lands in the Beaufort Sea." A conservation group "reacted immediately to the announcement, saying drilling by Italian oil company Eni US will set the stage for a spill in the ecologically sensitive area that's home to whales, polar bears and other imperiled animals."

New Report Outlines Potentially Bright Future For Deepwater GoM.

Offshore Magazine (7/12) reports new research from Petrologica found that the deepwater oil and gas industry in the Gulf of Mexico has a bright future. The report found that there will be relatively high E&P costs, leading to a preference for near-field exploration and expansion because of the lack of development options. Petrologica found that only 33 percent of recoverable reserves have been produced, with an additional 48 percent remaining undiscovered. The USGS expects that 51 percent of the recoverable undiscovered reserves, about 37.7 billion barrels of oil, could be produced economically at $50 a barrel prices.

Comment Now On Proposed Offshore Drilling Plan.

The Cordova \(AK\) Times (7/12) reports that “comments are being accepted through Aug. 17 on the proposed new five-year national offshore oil and gas leasing program in the Outer Continental Shelf, including offshore exploration in the Alaska Arctic.” The notice was published on Jul 3 in the Federal Register.

Don't Expose Atlantic Coast To Drilling Risks.

In an editorial, the Orlando \(FL\) Sentinel (7/10) notes that “recently two U.S. House members — Republican John Rutherford of Jacksonville and Democrat Don Beyer of Virginia — co-authored a letter to U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke declaring “strong opposition” to opening waters off the Atlantic Coast to exploration for oil and natural gas.” The paper says that “it’s notable — and encouraging — when rival party members come together on the right side on an issue.” The editorial argues that since “U.S. oil and gas production is already booming,” it’s “neither necessary nor rational to endanger the environment, the economy and the way of life of coastal communities in Florida or anywhere else on the Atlantic seaboard by expanding offshore drilling.”

In an editorial, the Ocala \(FL\) Star-Banner (7/13) also opposes offshore drilling.

President Trump: Don't Risk Fishing, Tourism Jobs On A Small Amount Of Oil.

In an op-ed for the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/12, Savitz), Jacqueline Savitz, a senior vice president at Oceana, argues that “offshore oil exploration threatens decades of progress toward making America’s fish stocks great again and thereby threatens economies and livelihoods along the East Coast.” She asserts that “it’s not worth taking these risks, especially considering the small amount of oil at stake.” Savitz asks, “Why would we bet a sure thing that we know helps our economy — thriving fishing and tourism industries — on a prospect that we know will harm our economy — disruptive and dirty oil exploration and drilling?”

Bureau Of Reclamation

California Water Bill Passes House, But Democrats Vow To Fight It In The Senate.

The Los Angeles Times (7/12, Wire) reports that the Gaining Responsibility on Water Act, sponsored by Rep. David Valadao, was “approved in the House by a 230-190 vote largely along party lines.” Republicans say the legislation will bring more water to the Central Valley, “streamline dam construction and other water storage projects, and allow more water from the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta to be used in the Central Valley rather than flowing out to sea,” but “California’s Democratic senators have promised to fight the bill in the Senate because it weakens California’s ability to manage its own resources.” Democrats say the bill “would preempt California water laws and impede the Endangered Species Act by waiving some of the most stringent environmental reviews required by the law.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Central Valley \(CA\) Business Times (7/12).

A Damming Proposal.

The Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (7/12) editorializes that “five members of Congress from the Pacific Northwest are attempting to overturn a court order that found the federal government is not doing enough to protect threatened and endangered salmon and steelhead species in the Columbia and Snake River basins.” The paper calls the bill — introduced by Washington Reps. Cathy McMorris Rodgers, Jaime Herrera Beutler and Dan Newhouse and Oregon Reps. Kurt Schrader and Greg Walden — a “naked power grab, and a thumbing of congressional noses at the judiciary.” The paper also argues that “they could hardly have picked a worse time — salmon runs are the lowest in decades, which is matter of some concern to people in the representatives’ districts.” It hopes the bill dies “a quick death.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Scott Angelle Talks Reliable And Safe Energy Production.

KATC-TV Lafayette, LA (7/12, Baker) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Scott Angelle is "touring the Gulf Coast, and Acadiana, meeting with industry leaders and other stakeholders to explore ways to move the offshore energy program forward." Angelle is "determined to listen to these people and see if there are ways that new policies can be written to get the outer continental shelf oil industry moving again and get people back to work." According to the article, "Angelle also believes it's a delicate balance and it takes a lot of work to provide a sustainable energy sector while keeping workers safe and protecting the environment."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Congress Renews Efforts To Remove Gray Wolf Protections.

Wisconsin Public Radio (7/12, Quirnbach) reports that two measures in Congress could "knock the gray wolf in Wisconsin off the endangered species list." One is a House of Representatives funding bill for the Interior Department "that would de-list the gray wolf within 60 days of passage and block the department from spending money to enforce Endangered Species Act protections for the wolf in the lower 48 states." The other legislation is a U.S. Senate bill "being discussed next week by a Senate committee," which "would restore a previous U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services decision to de-list wolves in the western Great Lakes region."

Additional coverage was provided by the Detroit \(MI\) News (7/11, Burke).

'Donut Hole' Would Remain Restricted To Rocky Flats Refuge Visitors.

KCNC-TV Denver (7/12, Sallinger, Ackerman) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service plans to open the Rocky Flats Wildlife Refuge to visitors in 2018, "but a large area in the middle of the site will remain off limits." According to the article, "both wildlife and people" are expected to be allowed "to roam where nuclear weapons were once built." However, "the center of Rocky Flats, which some call the 'donut hole,' will stay closed to visitors."

US Supreme Court Asked To Step Into Endangered Frog Case.

The AP (7/12, McCONNAUGHEY) reports that the Pacific Legal Foundation is asking the U.S. Supreme Court "to overturn a declaration that Louisiana timberland is critical habitat for an endangered frog found only in Mississippi." The nonprofit "wants the high court to overturn lower court rulings that have upheld the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which says the 1,500-acre (607-hectare) tract is the only potential breeding ground outside Mississippi for dusky gopher frogs." However, a lawyer with the Center for Biological Diversity "says the foundation's challenge is pointless because no appeals court has ever ruled that the federal agency violated the Constitution when implementing the Endangered Species Act."

US Judge Orders Documents Sealed In Case Against FBI Agent.

The AP (7/12) reports that "a federal judge says government documents from a case against an FBI agent will remain sealed to protect the identities of other law enforcement officers involved in a deadly confrontation with one of the people who occupied a remote Oregon wildlife refuge last year." Government lawyers "in Oregon requested the move Tuesday in their case against FBI agent W. Joseph Astarita."

Customs And Border Protection To Host Trade Day In Detroit.

The AP (7/12) reports that the U.S. Customs and Border Protection's Detroit Field Office will "host its annual Trade Day on Aug. 16 at downtown's Cobo Center." The article notes that "other participants include the U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Consumer Product Safety Commission, Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office and Food and Drug Administration."

Parks Group Sues Over Jamestown Transmission Line Project.

The AP (7/12) reports the National Parks Conservation Association has filed a lawsuit against the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers over its decision to grant Dominion Energy a permit for the controversial Surry-Skiffes Creek transmission line. The Washington Post (7/12, Schneider) reports the project is opposed by historic preservationists, who argue that "it will alter a landscape that has changed little since Capt. John Smith and the Virginia Company founded the first permanent English settlement in America more than 400 years ago." National Parks Conservation Association CEO Theresa Pierno said, "If we allow this to happen to one of America's most important historic areas, what's next for our other national parks? ... We will continue to fight in court to ensure that reckless development does not destroy this treasured and historic area." However, Dominion Energy spokeswoman Le-Ha Anderson said, "The Army Corps and other approving agencies followed the law and based their permitting decisions on sound legal basis after considerable study and input from the public and various other constituents. ... This has been one of the most heavily scrutinized infrastructure projects in the history of Virginia and any further delay in its construction will only put at greater risk our ability to keep the lights on in the Peninsula."

Likewise, the Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (7/12, Zullo) reports Dominion Energy spokeswoman Bonita Harris said that the utility stands behind the Corps' decision making, adding that the project also faced review by the State Corporation Commission and the Virginia Supreme Court, among other agencies. Harris said, "It is clearly needed to maintain electric reliability for more than 600,000 people and was carefully sited to ensure it would not be visible from the Jamestown Settlement, Colonial Williamsburg and the Yorktown Battlefield. ... Every other alternative fails to meet the need or has greater environmental and cultural impacts. No amount of additional study will change the facts."

Point Reyes Ranching Threatened In Lawsuit Settlement.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (7/12, Prado) reports that "a settlement in a lawsuit that targeted dairy and beef cattle operations in the Point Reyes National Seashore now threatens the future of ranching in West Marin." The settlement announced Wednesday requires the National Park Service "to consider and evaluate a no-ranching alternative, a no-dairy-ranching alternative and a reduced-ranching-alternative as part of a management plan." Under terms of the agreement, the NPS will "decide future uses of the lands that are currently leased for ranching by amending the national seashore's general management plan within four years." The NPS will "then decide what ranch operations will look like after public input."

U.S. House OKs John Muir National Park Expansion.

The East Bay \(CA\) Times (7/12, White) reports that "for the second time, the U.S. House of Representatives has approved a bill allowing the National Park Service to accept 44 acres donated to the John Muir National Historic Site." Rep. Mark DeSaulnier "introduced the bill in the last Congress, but it stalled in the Senate." Sen. Kamala Harris is pushing similar legislation.

More Than 803,000 Visits To Yellowstone Park In June.

The AP (7/12) reports that visitation to Yellowstone National Park during June has declined “4.8 percent from a year ago but is still the second busiest June on record in the nation’s first national park.” The National Park Service tallied “more than 803,000 visits last month.” In June 2016, the park saw “over 838,000 visitors.”

Park Service OKs Plans For Passenger Ferry Facilities.

The Outer Banks \(NC\) Voice (7/12, Walker) reports that the National Park Service has “approved a plan submitted by the North Carolina Department of Transportation to build a system to support the Hatteras-Ocracoke Passenger Ferry, which is scheduled to start running in 2018.” A Finding of No Significant Impact was recently signed by Stan Austin, director of the Southeast Region of the National Park Service, “completing the National Environmental Policy Act and National Historic Preservation Act processes that began earlier this year, according to a news release.”

Thurmond Train Day Is Saturday At New River Gorge.

The AP (7/13) reports that Thurmond Train Day will be held at the New River Gorge National River park this weekend. The National Park Service “said in a news release the event Saturday will feature half-mile walking tours with stories of the historic town and the railroad.”

National Park Officials Seek Witnesses To Campground Fire.

The Hawaii Tribune-Herald (7/12) reports that “fire officials at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park are seeking witnesses to a fire Tuesday afternoon that burned about 1/4 acre of native koa and ohia forest behind a cabin at Namakanipaio Campground.” The blaze “started behind Cabin 3 shortly before 3 p.m., and was human-caused.” According to the article, “a woman and several children told firefighters they saw how it started, but left the scene before anyone could get her name and contact information.”

Longtime Assistant To Yellowstone Superintendents Retires After Years Of Service.

Yellowstone Insider (7/12, Kearney) reports that Jane Laye has “retired after 25 years as secretary and special assistant to Yellowstone National Park’s four most recent superintendents.” Laye, 62, started at the National Park Service in 1991.

US Geological Survey

Study: No Major Hurricanes, Louisiana Wetlands Loss Slowed.

The AP (7/12, McConnaughey) reports that a new federal study released Wednesday “says Louisiana’s devastating wetlands loss has slowed slightly since 2010, but cautions that the main reason is probably that no major hurricanes have hit the state since 2008.” Brady Couvillion, lead author of the U.S. Geological Service study, said in an interview, “It’s been a period of relative calm in hurricane activity, so it has reduced the stress on coastal wetlands.” Couvillion explained “that the lack of destructive hurricanes allows plants to settle in.”

Trump Defends Son, Says Putin Would Have Preferred Clinton As President.

In comments that media reports cast as a pushback against the intelligence community’s belief that Russia interfered in the 2016 election in a bid to aid his campaign, President Trump told Pat Robertson of the Christian Broadcasting Network that Vladimir Putin would have preferred it if Hillary Clinton prevailed because she would have weakened the nation. Trump's interview, which will air Thursday, came as his son's meeting with a Russian lawyer continued to receive extensive media coverage – including as the lead story on all three network news broadcasts, which spent nearly 16 minutes on the story. Comments from the President defending his son also receive heavy coverage, much of which highlights that he appeared angry at the media, not Trump Jr., over the matter.

The Hill (7/12, Fabian) says that in the interview, which came “a day after emails reported by the New York Times showed Trump's eldest son, Donald Trump Jr., agreeing to a 2016 meeting where he was promised damaging information on Clinton as ‘part of Russia and its government's support for Mr. Trump,’” Trump “appeared to be push[ing] back on the US intelligence community's conclusion that Russia meddled in the 2016 election to help him and hurt Clinton.” However, the New York Post (7/12, Fredericks) says Trump's position “is at odds with US intelligence assessments.”

Similarly, Politico (7/12, McCaskill) reports that “despite the US intelligence community's conclusion that the Kremlin meddled in the 2016 election to boost Trump over the Democratic nominee,” Trump told Robertson that Putin would have preferred Hillary Clinton to win the election because Clinton would have made the country weaker. The Washington Times (7/12, Boyer) says Trump “tried to debunk claims that Russia wanted him to win the election.” Trump said, “We are the most powerful country in the world and we are getting more and more powerful because I'm a big military person. ... As an example, if Hillary had won, our military would be decimated. Our energy would be much more expensive. That's what Putin doesn't like about me. And that's why I say, why would he want me? Because from day one I wanted a strong military, he doesn't want to see that.” USA Today (7/12, Estepa) reports that Trump described his meeting with Putin at the G20 summit as “good,” saying, “I think we got along very, very well. We are a tremendously powerful nuclear power, and so are they. ... It doesn't make sense not to have some kind of a relationship.” However, Trump also said that he and the Russian leader “still differ because they're working on behalf of their respective countries.” Said Trump, “Well, he wants what's good for Russia, and I want what's good for the United States.”

In an interview with Reuters (7/12, Holland), Trump said he asked Putin directly “if he was involved in what U.S. intelligence says was Russian meddling in the presidential campaign and that Putin had insisted he was not.” Trump said, “I said, did you do it? And he said no, I did not. Absolutely not. I then asked him a second time in a totally different way. He said absolutely not.” USA Today (7/12, Jackson) reports that Reuters asked Trump “if he believes Putin's denials.” Trump said, “Look. Something happened and we have to find out what it is, because we can't allow a thing like that to happen to our election process. So something happened and we have to find out what it is.” Trump added, “Somebody did say if he [Putin] did do it you wouldn't have found out about it. Which is a very interesting point.”

The Washington Examiner (7/12, Quinn) says Trump “has largely remained out of the public's view since returning from Europe” while his White House “grappled” with the news of Trump Jr.'s meeting with a Russian lawyer “in hopes of receiving damaging information about Clinton.” However, in the interview with Reuters (7/12, Holland), Trump said he was unaware of Trump Jr.'s meeting and “only learned of it a couple of days ago.” Asked if he knew his son was meeting with the lawyer, Trump said, “No, that I didn't know until a couple of days ago when I heard about this.” Trump also “said he did not fault his son for holding the meeting,” telling Reuters, “I think many people would have held that meeting.”

Privately, the AP (7/12, Lemire, Pace) reports, Trump “has raged against the latest Russia development, with most of his ire directed at the media, not his son, according to people who have spoken to him in recent days.” According to the AP, “in conversations with confidants,” Trump “has questioned the quality of advice he has received from senior staff, including chief of staff Reince Priebus.” Chief White House correspondent Jonathan Karl said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/12, lead story, 3:30, Muir) that aides describe Trump “as angry and frustrated, but today these images emerged, the President meeting with faith leaders in the Oval Office, laying their hands on him in prayer.”

The New York Times (7/12, Baker, Macfarquhar) says Trump is taking the “fierce criticism” of Trump Jr.'s meeting “personally.” The criticism “has left the president by turns angry, defensive and protective but ultimately relieved that for now, the worst appears to be over, people who spoke to him said Wednesday.” Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (7/12) that according to a person “who does talk to the President regularly,” Trump “remains angrier at the media than anything he might feel in anger at all towards Donald Trump, Jr. And I think that he believes that we are creating this conspiracy, I was told, and that he believes that when everything comes out in the open, people will see no culpability. And that what we're trying to do is create a conspiracy that doesn't exist." The source added that Trump's instinct is "to fight. He believes that this is all garbage, and that, in fact, Mueller, the special counsel, is out to get him."

Trump defended his son on Twitter Wednesday, offering what Politico (7/12, McCaskill) describes as "the most vigorous defense yet" of Trump Jr.'s meeting with the lawyer. In a tweet Wednesday morning, Trump wrote, "My son Donald did a good job last night. He was open, transparent and innocent. This is the greatest Witch Hunt in political history. Sad!" Politico adds that Trump, who "appeared to be rankled by the news coverage," argued in another tweet "more than three hours later that his administration is held to a tougher standard than Democrats," writing, "Look what Hillary Clinton may have gotten away with. Disgraceful!" Peter Alexander reported in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/12, lead story, 2:30, Holt) that the White House is "under siege" and Trump is "now acting as defender in chief."

Citing another tweet in which Trump wrote, "The W.H. is functioning perfectly, focused on HealthCare, Tax Cuts/Reform & many other things. I have very little time for watching T.V.," Dana Bash said on CNN's The Lead (7/12) that the tweet is "like the ultimate example of protesting too much. We know that that's not the case." The Washington Examiner (7/12, Westwood) reports that deputy White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said that "the trickle of revelations about contacts between President Trump's associates and Russian officials has not undermined the administration's credibility." Sanders argued, "I think it's actually undermining the credibility of the media."

Jessica Schneider reported on CNN's Situation Room (7/12) that while Trump is "presenting a forceful and defiant front," a "top Republican source in tune with the West Wing does say that there is that sense of paralysis" in the White House. John Roberts noted the "reports the White House is in a state of paralysis" on Fox News' Special Report (7/12), adding that the controversy is "smothering any progress that came out" from Trump's meeting with Putin.

Appearing on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (7/12) Wednesday night, deputy assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka denied reports that there is a bunker mentality in parts of the White House, calling it "laughable." Gorka added, "I work in the West Wing, I work in the White House. It is absolutely nothing of the kind. We are pushing the make America Great Again agenda. The President is a steam locomotive that will not be stopped. It's just fake news. I'm sad to see CNN fall to this. I know you want salacious, sensational coverage for your ratings, so your corporate sponsors and owners will have more money. But that's not media, that's not reportage. It's just fake news."

Meanwhile, in a series of interviews Wednesday morning, the President's attorney Jay Sekulow argued that Trump Jr. did nothing illegal by having the meeting and that the President was unaware that it was taking place. Sekulow said on CBS This Morning (7/12), "There was not a violation of the law, no illegality. . . . If you look at the law as it was written, as it is applied, there's not a violation of the law here. Meetings like this, on opposition research are not uncommon, even when the government aspect has raised a lot of interest, obviously we're talking about it this morning." On ABC's Good Morning America (7/12), Sekulow said that "the President wasn't aware of the meeting, did not participate in the meeting, did not attend the meeting and was only made aware of the email, actually reading the emails, seeing the emails yesterday when they were released but very, very recently is when the lawyers, our legal team briefed the President on this. So that was very, very recent." Asked on NBC's Today Show (7/12) if Trump will now "acknowledge this is a legitimate area of investigation," Sekulow said, "There's no illegality. The question is – you're talking about an investigation – investigating what violation of what law? That's what I look at, in any case. What's the law alleged to be violated here? And the truth of the matter is, that a meeting under the circumstances that were described by the release of the emails that Donald Trump Jr. did yesterday, is not a violation of the law." Alexander reported in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/12, lead story, 2:30, Holt) that Trump's lawyer, Marc Kasowitz, was also "fending off accusations of collusion." Kasowitz: "There was no law that was violated here. There was no violation of law here. The meeting that took place is not illegal."

The New York Times (7/12, Martin) reports that while "opposition research is part of modern presidential campaigns, it normally does not come from representatives of a hostile foreign power." The Times goes on to describe "how the peddling of opposition research – or oppo, as political professionals and reporters call it – typically works." The Washington Post (7/12, Phillip) says Trump Jr.'s June 9, 2016 meeting and a June 7, 2016 appearance in which Trump Sr. promised a "major speech" in which "we're going to be discussing all of the things that have taken place with the Clintons," underscore "the freewheeling nature of the Trump campaign, which at that moment found itself unprepared and underfinanced to face Clinton's machine-like campaign in the general election." A video on the New York Times (7/13) website describes "How a Russian Offer Got to Donald Trump Jr.'s Inbox."

Discussing Trump Jr.'s Fox News interview on Fox News' Hannity (7/12), counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said, "How refreshing to have someone take responsibility, be transparent and earnest, admit that maybe he would have done things differently." In a profile of Trump Jr., the Los Angeles Times (7/12, Demick) says his critics see "his willingness to meet with a Russian fixer to get dirt on Hillary Clinton" as "'criminally stupid,' as the New York Post put it in an editorial on Wednesday," while his defenders "say that his public release of emails about the meeting was perfectly in keeping with his personality — direct, transparent and brave."

Nonetheless, in cable appearances Wednesday, lawmakers from both sides of the aisle were critical of Trump Jr.'s meeting. Rep. Eric Swalwell was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/12) about the argument that Trump Jr. took the meeting because he was naïve. Swalwell said, "Ignorance is not a defense, especially for a high level executive like Donald Trump Jr. Look, you're playing in the majors now. You're running for President of the United States. The pitches come faster, the strike zone is a little bit different. And so you can't, you know, plead that you didn't know what you were getting into."

House Oversight Committee Chairman Rep. Trey Gowdy told the CBS Evening News (7/12, story 3, 2:25, Mason), "Potentially there could be four or five different statutes impacted, most of which deal with whether or not you can solicit or receive anything of value from a foreign national, but Bob Mueller is an expert in criminal law, and I never was. I certainly am not now, so I trust Bob Mueller to sort all that out." Asked what he would say to the Administration, Gowdy said, "You should get everyone in a room, and from the moment you watched either Dr. Zhivago or read The Brothers Karamozov, to the point you had a shot of liquor with a guy in a furry hat, you need to disclose every contact you have ever had with Russia. We're not going to have any more of these disclosures coming out on the front page of the newspaper."

Rep. Adam Kinzinger said on CNN's The Lead (7/12), "Opposition research is one thing. It's how politics works. ... But I think when a foreign government if, in an e-mail, it says the Russian government has information, that is when you hit the hard stop on it. I don't know exactly where espionage laws apply in this situation. What I do know in the very least is if I got an email that said, 'Hey, Congressman Kinzinger, we have information on the government or on your opponent,' I would walk it to the FBI and say, 'We have a problem.'"

USA Today (7/12, Kelly) reports that House Speaker Ryan said Wednesday that "it is 'absolutely unacceptable' that Russia interfered in the US presidential election and urged congressional investigators and special counsel Robert Mueller to get to the truth." However, Ryan "refused to answer a question about whether he would have accepted a meeting" similar to the one Trump Jr. attended, saying, "I'm not going to go into hypotheticals."

Other commentary was also largely — although not universally — negative for the Administration. CNN White House correspondent Sara Murray said on CNN's The Lead (7/12) that the White House is "struggling through this...and we saw...an attempt to turn this back around on Hillary Clinton and her campaign, but we also saw Sarah Huckabee Sanders dodging the question of why we are yet again facing another previously undisclosed closed meeting between a Trump official and a Russian, this time President Trump's own son." Guy Benson of Townhall.com said on Fox News' Special Report (7/12), "I think the White House problem right now is one of credibility. I've seen some of the arguments about Donald Trump, Jr. and his actions and to me they are decent arguments. ... The problem is, you have this blanket assertion from the President, Vice President, all the way down, that there was no collusion, there were no meetings with Russians, this is all a fairy tale and then slowly but surely the thread gets pulled and there are retractions and backpedaling and revisions of the public record."

USA Today (7/12, Schouten) writes that while Trump Jr. called the meeting "standard opposition research into a political rival," opposition research "normally involves slogging through public records, poring over candidate statements and tracking a politician's every public appearance," not "meeting of high-ranking campaign aides with someone they believed represented a hostile foreign government," according to "several campaign and ethics experts." President George W. Bush's former ethics lawyer Richard Painter said, "It's called spying, not opposition research."

The Washington Post (7/12) says in an editorial that Russia "is a hostile power" because of President Vladimir Putin's "adherence to, and dependence on, a set of values that are antithetical to what have been, at least until now, bedrock American values. ... His antipathy toward Hillary Clinton was not personality-driven but based on her advocacy of values that would threaten his rule. ... So while the younger Mr. Trump may have seen advantage in accepting Russia's help, Russia certainly would have seen an advantage in proffering it."

Pence Team Denies He Is Distancing Himself From Trump. Amid reports that "some White House aides said they were blindsided" by a statement Tuesday from Vice President Pence's office that he "not focused on stories about the campaign, particularly stories about the time before he joined the ticket," Politico (7/12, Palmeri) reports that Pence's team "pushed back...against the notion that he was trying to distance himself" from the President. According to Politico, the statement from Pence's office "drew raised eyebrows," and some "White House officials said they felt the statement implied guilt on the part of the campaign." Politico quotes "a source close to Pence" as saying, "The Vice President finds any suggestion that he's distancing himself from the President to be offensive." Politico adds, however, that a Pence spokesperson "did not respond to inquiries about whether Pence's office ran the statement by counterparts in the White House before releasing it." To USA Today (7/12, Groppe, Cook), Pence's statement "appeared to be a stark departure from his usual blanket rejections that there was any contact between Trumpland and the Russians, as well as from Pence's usual effusive praise of Trump." USA Today cites a Pence "adviser, who was not authorized to speak publicly," who said the Vice President "is taking a wait-and-see approach to the latest controversy before mounting a robust defense of the administration."

E.J. Dionne writes in his Washington Post (7/12) column that Pence's "effort to stay loyal to Trump while tiptoeing away from the latest disclosures is another sign of chaos." Pence, Dionne adds, "cannot be allowed to slink away from the administration whose cause he has advanced. If he's starting to see reasons for breaking with Trump, he'll have to do it outright and end his own collusion with one of the most disingenuous White Houses in our history."

Indianapolis Star (7/12) columnist Matthew Tully calls Pence's statement "classic Pence," and writes that "there's a decent chance" that Pence "will someday be president." Tully argues that Pence is thinking "All the drama and all the craziness, as well as the close proximity to scandal and the spot forever etched in history next to an inept, mean-spirited president" will "all be worth it."

Grassroots Republicans Unfazed By Russia Revelations. Politico (7/12, Debenedetti, Lahut) reports that a "POLITICO survey of more than two dozen local Republican Party leaders in counties where 2018's most competitive races are shaping up," found that "the GOP grassroots aren't fazed by news of Donald Trump Jr.'s meeting last year with a Kremlin-linked lawyer or the daily drip of stories about Trump and Russia." Reuters (7/12, Reid) reports that interviews with 20 people in Ohio towns that went heavily for the President last year found them "dismissive of the barrage of headlines" about Trump Jr.'s emails and the meeting. Said one, "I don't mind Donald Trump being treated critically or aggressively, but not in a way that is an effort to drag him down. Donald Trump Jr. had one 20-minute meeting with a lawyer from Russia and it's wall-to-wall coverage."

Richard Grenell, former US spokesman at the UN, said on Fox News' Special Report (7/12) that outside Washington, "people don't care about this. There's such a difference between listening and acting. I think Donald Trump Jr. listened to something that was brought to him. He didn't act on it. ... It was nothing. It was a crazy person coming up with some idea that when they heard it, they were like, were not doing anything. ... I don't think people care about this at all."

Gorka: Russia Focus Explains Why "More People Watch Nick-at-Nite Cartoons" Than CNN. Townhall (7/12, O'Brien) reports that in an appearance on CNN (7/11), Deputy Assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka highlighted a recent study that showed "that CNN had plummeted to No. 13 in the 8-11 p.m. time slot," telling anchor Alisyn Camerota, "The amount of time you spend in desperation on a topic that has plummeted you to 13th place in viewership ranking across America. ... I mean more people watch Nick-at-Nite cartoons than CNN today."

Trump Lawyers Seek Wall Between Kushner, Trump On Russia Discussions. Jonathan Swan writes on Axios (7/12) that Trump's legal team "wants to wall off Jared Kushner from discussing the Russia investigation with his father-in-law, according to sources with direct knowledge of the discussions." The attorneys contend that they are not "out to get Kushner," but want "to protect the president because his son-in-law is so wrapped up in the investigation."

Constitutional Law Experts Say Trump Jr.'s Actions Not Treasonous. The Hill (7/12, Greenwood) reports, "Experts on constitutional law say lawmakers should be careful before throwing around words like 'treason,'" since it is "a charge where a high and specific evidentiary standard must be proven. It requires testimony from two witnesses who participated in the crime or a confession from the accused in an open court." Richard Cohen writes in the Washington Post

(7/12) "PostPartisan" blog that while "Trump Jr., his father and others" may have "committed a crime," that offense "is certainly not treason. ... The loose talk of treason is both ugly and counterproductive," and "is unfortunately reminiscent of Sen. Joseph McCarthy's demagoguery." In related coverage, Politico Magazine (7/12) runs a 4,000-word piece on "what precisely would constitute collusion," and whether "we actually seen evidence of it so far." The piece consists of brief essays from a number of experts on the subject.

Veselnitskaya Denies Kremlin Connections, Says She Had No Dirt On Clinton. Chief foreign correspondent Terry Moran reported on ABC World News Tonight (7/12, story 2, 2:15, Muir) that Natalia Veselnitskaya, the Russian attorney with whom Trump Jr. met, told ABC, "I have never had compromising materials on Hillary Clinton." Veselnitskaya "insisted she is not a Kremlin emissary." Julianna Goldman reported on the CBS Evening News (7/12, story 2, 2:10, Mason) that while the Russian government "says they don't even know who [Veselnitskaya] is," like "most things Kremlin, there's more to that story." Veselnitskaya "represents a wealthy Kremlin-connected family in Moscow, the Katsyvs," who have "lobbied hard to overturn US sanctions against Russian officials accused of money laundering."

Upon Leaving Congress, Democrat Dellums Worked As Lobbyist For Veselnitskaya. The Daily Caller (7/12, Pollock) reports that former Rep. Ron Dellums was hired as a lobbyist for Veselnitskaya. Dellums "is one of several high-profile Democratic partisans who was on Veselnitskaya's payroll, working to defeat a law that is the hated object of a personal vendetta waged by Russian President Vladimir Putin." The DC cites "a complaint filed to the Department of Justice Foreign Agents Registration Act division last July," which alleged that Dellums "failed to register as a foreign agent representing a Russian-driven effort led by Veselnitskaya to repeal the Magnitsky Act."

Lavrov Calls For Proof Of Russia's Election Meddling. Reuters (7/12) reports that Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said Wednesday that "he wanted to be shown at least one fact proving Moscow's meddling in the 2016 US presidential election." Speaking at a news conference in Belgium, Lavrov said, "I don't know anything about this fact. It's amazing that serious people are making a mountain out of a molehill."

Video Shows Trump With Agalarovs And Goldstone In 2013. CNN (7/12, Diamond) reports on its website that video it has obtained shows President Trump at a Las Vegas dinner with Aras and Emin Agalarov, and their publicist Rob Goldstone, in 2013. The footage, "a series of clips from the eve of the Miss USA pageant, documents more than three minutes of interactions between Trump, the Agalarovs and Goldstone." The Washington Post (7/12, Abbakumova) reports that in a Wednesday interview with a Moscow radio station, Aras Agalarov "insisted he did not know Trump Jr." or Goldstone. Agalarov said of Goldstone, "He worked with Emin at some point." USA Today (7/12, Reilly, Dorell) has a profile of the "Putin-connected Russian billionaire."

Rep. Jim Himes, a member of the House Intelligence Committee, said on CNN's Situation Room (7/12) that the video "establishes that then Donald Trump knew the people concerned at the very center of this, and it puts some question and doubt on his repeated statements that he didn't know Russian oligarchs, he doesn't know Russia, he doesn't do business with Russia." Himes later added that if Trump "himself knows these people, what is the probability that this meeting happened without somebody in that room going back to" him "and saying, 'here's the deal, here's what they have to offer.'"

Sen. James Lankford, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said on CNN's Situation Room (7/12) he has no problem with Trump knowing the Russians from the video back in 2013, calling that "old news," but added that "what I want to know about is what happened in the meeting" with the Russian lawyer, "what documents were exchanged, was anything given to them, was there a follow-up after that. Those are reasonable questions."

Intelligence Agencies: Russian Officials Discussed Trump Associates In 2015. In the lead story for the CBS Evening News (7/12, lead story, 2:55, Mason), Major Garrett reported that "US intelligence picked up electronic intercepts of Russian officials discussing presidential candidates, including Mr. Trump, as far back as mid-2015." The Wall Street Journal (7/12, Harris) says US intelligence agencies detected conversations in which Russian officials discussed Trump associates starting in early 2015. The reports were seen as inconclusive, but are being reviewed in light of the release of Trump Jr.'s emails.

Sherman Introduces Articles Of Impeachment Against Trump. The Los Angeles Times (7/12, Mai-Duc) reports on its "Essential Politics" blog that in a move that "has put him at odds with House Democratic leaders, who have tried to quiet talk of impeachment," Rep. Brad Sherman on Wednesday "introduced articles of impeachment against President Trump, making good on a promise to move the process forward." Sherman's measure "accuses Trump of obstruction of justice and seeking to 'use his authority to hinder and cause the termination' of an investigation into former national security advisor Michael Flynn, including 'through threatening, and then terminating, James Comey.'" Sherman said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (7/12), "I didn't file these in response to the emails. They further bolster it, but I circulated these articles a month ago and said I was going to consult with experts, did that for about three weeks, then Congress went on break. This is our first day back." Sherman added that Trump "threatened Comey in order to get Comey to curtail the investigation of Flynn. That's obstruction of justice and it lines up perfectly with the code section and with the cases that have defined it. Secondly, he fired Comey and then said that his reason, or that the effect, was to curtail or thwart the investigation into the general Russia matter. And of course, in the last couple of days, we learned how important that Russian matter was."

McClatchy (7/12, Welsh) reports that other Democrats "have expressed concern" about Sherman's push, and his resolution "had only one cosponsor, Rep. Al Green." USA Today (7/12, Estepa) says "this resolution is unlikely to go anywhere in the House," and the Washington Post (7/12, Debonis) calls it "fantastic to think that the impeachment push might proceed in any meaningful way in the coming months."

The AP (7/12, Ohlemacher) reports that Sanders "blasted" Sherman's move, saying, "I think that is utterly and completely ridiculous, and a political game at its worst." The Washington Examiner (7/12, Quinn) also highlights Sanders' comments.

Grassley To Call Manafort Before Senate Judiciary Committee. USA Today (7/12, Kelly) reports in a brief item that Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley told reporters that he intends to call Manafort to testify "and will subpoena him if necessary as part of the panel's investigation into Russian meddling in last year's presidential election." Politico (7/12, Kim, Wright) reports that he may be called to appear "as soon as next week."

Grassley said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/12), "I think that the lady Russian lawyer that was there at that meeting, I've written to Secretary Tillerson and Secretary Kelly...to find out what she was doing in the country when presumably either a visa or parole expired, she wouldn't have been in the country at that particular time. We are trying to get information on that." Asked if "this could have been a setup," Grassley said, "There's no way I know that, and I shouldn't comment on things you don't know. But we do have a responsibility to congressional oversight to the bottom of it."

Fusion GPS Co-Founder To Testify Before Senate Panel. The Hill (7/12, Manchester) reports in its "Blog Briefing Room" blog that Glenn Simpson, co-founder of the Firm Fusion GPS, which "hired former British spy Christopher Steele to investigate then-candidate Trump," will "testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee next week." Politico (7/12, Wright) also reports on Simpson's scheduled testimony.

Gorka: Clinton Campaign Sent Operative To Ukrainian Embassy. Breitbart (7/12, Riehl) reports that Gorka told Breitbart News Daily on Wednesday, "The Hillary campaign...actually sends one of its operatives to the Ukrainian embassy to collect oppo research, to actually collect it and then coordinates with members of that foreign government attacks on our campaign." The New York Times (7/12, Qiu) reports that while Trump Jr.'s defenders "have offered a familiar argument: Hillary Clinton's actions were more egregious," the "same standards don't apply to the cases surfaced by Mr. Trump's supporters, experts agreed."

Meanwhile, CNN (7/12, Merica) reports on its website that DNC officials, former Clinton campaign officials, and "Democratic sources" have all denied that the DNC or Clinton's campaign worked with the Ukraine government "to dig up dirt on Donald Trump and his top aides." However, CNN cites "multiple Democratic sources" who "said that a DNC contractor, whose work included organizing political events for Ukrainian-Americans, did tell DNC operatives that Ukrainian officials would be willing to deliver damaging information on Trump's campaign and, most notably, Paul Manafort." CNN adds that the denials seek to "cut against a talking point the White House and pro-Trump Republicans are using to deflect attention from" Trump Jr.'s meeting with Veselnitskaya.

Futerfas Backed Clinton And Obama, Criticized Trump Over Yates Firing. The New York Post (7/12, Golding) reports that Trump Jr.'s attorney Alan Futerfas is "a Democrat who supported both Hillary Clinton" and President Obama and who "bashed President Trump as ignorant of history and the Constitution following his firing of acting Attorney General Sally Yates." In an email to members of the New York Council of Defense Lawyers on the night of the Yates firing, Futerfas "backed a proposal that the group take a public stand against 'what increasingly appears to be a renegade and lawless President.'"

Ex-DNC Staff Member, Donors Sue Trump Campaign And Stone Over Email Leaks. The New York Times (7/12, Savage) reports that former Democratic National Committee staff member Scott Comer and DNC donors Roy Cokrum and Eric Schoenberg “have filed an invasion of privacy lawsuit against President Trump’s campaign” and Trump adviser Roger Stone, “accusing them of conspiring in the release of hacked Democratic emails and files that exposed their personal information to the public.” Their complaint “does not contain any hard evidence” that the Trump campaign colluded with Russia, “but it is seeking to depose witnesses and obtain campaign emails and other documents during the discovery process.”

Brazile Book Due On Anniversary Of Election. The Washington Times (7/12, Boylan) reports that ex-DNC chair Donna Brazile will “soon publish a book titled: ‘Hacks: The Inside Story of the Break-ins and Breakdowns that Put Donald Trump in the White House.’ The book deal was announced Wednesday with a publication date set for the one-year anniversary” of the 2016 election.

Previously Leaked Email Says Clinton Camp “Killed” Bloomberg Story. Breitbart (7/12, Klein) reports that an email from Clinton’s campaign that was previously published by Wikileaks “may take on new significance” because of the Trump Jr. story. The message “was purportedly sent” by Clinton foreign policy spokesman Jesse Lehigh, and says that the campaign “‘killed a Bloomberg story’ attempting to link Clinton’s opposition to the anti-Russia legislation known as the Magnitsky Act to a speech that Bill Clinton delivered in Moscow for $500,000.”

Wray: Russia Probe Not A “Witch Hunt,” Would Resign If Pressured By White House.

Media reports, including reports on all three network newscasts, cast Christopher Wray’s performance during his confirmation hearing in a positive light. Analyses describe him as establishing his independence from the White House, and highlight his apparent disagreement with the President on the Russia investigation.

The AP (7/12, Gurman, Tucker) reports that FBI Director-designate Wray “broke with the president in key areas Wednesday, rejecting the idea that an investigation into possible coordination” between Russia and President Trump’s 2016 campaign “is a ‘witch hunt’ and promising not to cave to any pressure from a White House that has challenged boundaries” with the FBI. The AP says that his “responses seemed to satisfy both Democrats and Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee, many of whom signaled their support for him.”

On ABC World News Tonight (7/12, story 3, 2:10, Muir), Pierre Thomas reported that Wray faced “intense scrutiny today, grilled about everything from the loyalty to the President to Don Jr.” Sen. Lindsey Graham: “If you get a call from somebody suggesting that a foreign government wants to help you by disparaging your opponent, tell us to call the FBI.” Wray: “Any threat or effort to interfere in our elections from any nation-state or any non-state actor is the kind of thing the FBI would want to know.” Thomas: “I think [senators] were satisfied with answers that he is not afraid to challenge the President. He once threatened to resign over a controversial surveillance plan during the Bush Administration.”

Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (7/12, story 2, 2:30) that Wray “is widely regarded as well qualified to lead the FBI. Nonetheless, after the messy firing of James Comey amid the Russian influence investigation, Wray faced some unusually pointed questions.” On the CBS Evening News (7/12, story 4, 2:25, Mason), Nancy Cordes reported, “Wray is poised for easy confirmation, but even Republicans acknowledge today that the job of FBI director is currently strewn with landmines. As Utah’s Orrin Hatch put it, Wray’s going to have an interesting life over next couple years, but he’s not sure it’s going to be a very nice life.”

US News & World Report (7/12, Neuhauser) reports that Wray said in his opening statement, “If I am given the honor of leading this agency, I will never allow the FBI’s work to be driven by anything other than the facts, the law, and the impartial pursuit of justice. Period. My loyalty is to the Constitution and the rule of law. They have been my guideposts throughout my career, and I will continue to adhere to them no matter the test.” Reuters (7/12, Ainsley) reports that Wray, who “who appeared on target” to be confirmed, “vowed to quit if told by the president to do something unlawful.”

USA Today (7/12, Johnson) reports that Wray “said that ‘no one asked me for any kind of loyalty oath during any part of this process,’ and he would not provide one if asked.” He also “pledged to guard the independence” of Robert Mueller’s Russia investigation, “and said any effort to tamper with the inquiry would be ‘inappropriate.’”

The Los Angeles Times (7/12, Tanfani) reports that Wray declined to directly criticize former FBI Director James Comey, “but he said he doesn’t think the FBI director should be offering opinions on people who aren’t charged.” Referring to Justice Department policies, Wray said, “I think those policies are there for a reason and I would follow them.” The Wall Street Journal

(7/12, A1, Wilber, Viswanatha) reports that Wray had kind words about Comey in general, saying, "In all my dealings with Jim Comey, he was a terrific lawyer, a dedicated public servant and a wonderful colleague."

The Hill (7/12, Williams) calls Wray's testimony "calm and understated." The Washington Post (7/12, Nakashima, Demirjian) describes Wray as "an accomplished lawyer with a classic establishment pedigree...and a strong résumé as a former federal prosecutor who rose high within Justice's ranks."

The Washington Times (7/12, Ernst) reports that Sen. Al Franken, one of the President's "most ardent critics, said he was 'impressed'" with Wray's performance, and Townhall (7/12, O'Brien) reports that Sen. Dianne Feinstein also indicated that she will back his confirmation.

The Washington Post (7/12) editorializes, "Wray bore a special responsibility to assure lawmakers and the public that he would support a fair investigation into the administration of the man who appointed him, resisting any bullying or blandishments." His "testimony Wednesday was encouraging, but it will take more than an FBI director of integrity to restore faith in government."

The New York Post (7/12, Schultz, Eustachewich) headlines its brief report "FBI Nominee Breaks With Trump On Several Fronts." Bloomberg News (7/12, Strohm, Dennis) and Politico (7/12, Kim, Samuelsohn, Gerstein) also report.

Trump Says He'll Be "Very Angry" If Senate Fails To Pass Healthcare Bill.

The AP (7/12, Fram) report that in an interview with Pat Robertson of the Christian Broadcasting Network Wednesday, President Trump said he will be "very angry" if the Senate does not pass a revised healthcare bill, and argued that Majority Leader McConnell must "pull it off." The comments, which came a day before McConnell "planned to release his revised legislation to a closed-door meeting of GOP senators," intensified "pressure on party leaders laboring to win over unhappy GOP senators and preserve the teetering measure." Asked "what would happen if the effort fails," Trump said, "Well, I don't even want to talk about it because I think it would be very bad. ... I will be very angry about it and a lot of people will be very upset." When Trump was asked if McConnell can get the bill through the Senate, The Hill (7/12, Hagen) reports, Trump said, "He's got to pull it off. Mitch has to pull it off. He's working very hard. He's got to pull it off." The Washington Post (7/12, Wagner) quotes Trump as saying, "I am sitting in the Oval Office with a pen in hand, waiting for our senators to give it to me. ... It has to get passed. They have to do it. They have to get together and get it done." The Post adds that Trump's "urgency" on the matter "stood in sharp contrast to comments last month, when he said that it would be unfortunate if the bill didn't reach his desk but that it would be 'okay.'" Likewise, Politico (7/12, Tesfamichael) says Trump's comments "stand in contrast to his earlier statement in late June."

Conservatives Threaten To Vote Against Budget Without Tax Reform Details.

Bloomberg News (7/12, Edgerton) reports that House conservatives "are threatening to vote against a budget deal unless it lays out details of a plan to overhaul the US tax code." House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows "said the House should cancel or delay the planned August recess until there is agreement on 'a set of principles' for the tax plan that President Donald Trump and congressional leaders have promised since shortly after his election." Among them, he said, should be "a decision on the unpopular border-adjusted tax that House Speaker Paul Ryan defends as a way to pay for cutting corporate and individual rates." Bloomberg calls the request "the strongest message yet that some rank-and-file members want to see the tax plan details before voting to adopt a budget resolution for the next fiscal year – or leaving for August recess."

Meadows Calls For 16 Percent Corporate Tax Rate. Roll Call (7/12, McPherson) reports that House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows on Wednesday "present[ed] a third number for Republicans to consider as they seek to rewrite the tax code by year's end," calling for "cutting the corporate tax rate to 16 percent," while the President "has called for a 15 percent corporate rate," and the "House Republican leadership's blueprint calls for 20 percent." Meadows told Roll Call "that a 16 percent corporate tax rate 'helps with base erosion based on the tax rates of other countries.'"

Will Highlights Wyden's Pessimism About Tax Reform. George Will uses his Washington Post (7/12) column to highlight Sen. Ron Wyden's concerns about the US tax code. But Wyden "is skeptical about fixing much this year," in large part because Republicans appear to "plan to pass tax reform without Democratic votes, under 'reconciliation,' which is inherently partisan." Wyden has "described the tax code as 'a rotting economic carcass,'" but he seems "to be preemptively, but not prematurely, disappointed about a legislative process that will fall somewhat short" of fixing it.

WSJournal Analysis: Aging Waterway Infrastructure In US Near Breaking Point.

In a 2,000-word analysis, the Wall Street Journal (7/12, Maher) reports that decades of underinvestment in US infrastructure have caused damage to much of the nation's network of dams and locks that allow commercial waterway traffic accounting for more than $70 billion in cargo to be transported annually along the country's 12,000 miles of river. The Journal highlights two major waterways infrastructure projects already underway that the US Army Corps of Engineers views as top priorities for completion – the repair of three locks along the Monongahela River in southwest Pennsylvania and improvements to several locks along the Ohio River near Cairo, Illinois – and emphasizes the potential economic losses should commercial waterway traffic be impeded because of poorly maintained infrastructure.

Tech Giants Join Online Protest Against Net Neutrality Repeal.

Reuters (7/12, Moon, Shepardson) reports that Twitter, Alphabet Inc., Facebook, Netflix, Amazon and "dozens" of other major technology firms "are participating in an online protest" Wednesday in which more than 80,000 websites "are displaying alerts, ads and short videos to urge the public to oppose the overturn of the landmark 2015 net neutrality rules," which forbid broadband providers from "giving or selling access to certain internet services over others." Supporters of Federal Communications Commission Chairman Ajit Pai's proposal to repeal net neutrality rules claim that the rules hurt jobs and investment, but opponents argue that repeal would signify "worse internet for consumers and less innovation online." The public has until mid-August to submit comments to the FCC before its final vote.

The Los Angeles Times (7/12, Puzanghera) reports that participants in the "Internet-Wide Day of Action to Save Net Neutrality" say the protest was "the first major salvo of what they promised would be a long battle" involving the courts, the FCC, and potentially Congress. Commissioner Pai hasn't publicly acknowledged the online protest but assured lawmakers in a letter Tuesday that the FCC's staff would be "on high alert" to ensure that the public comment system on the agency's website did not shut down from the volume of comments.

Conservative Coalition Lobbies Lawmakers To Remove Pentagon Climate Policies.

Reuters (7/12, Gardner) reports that a coalition of 14 conservative groups urged in a letter to Congress Wednesday that House lawmakers support Rep. Warren Davidson's (R-OH) amendment to the annual National Defense Authorization Act, which "would prevent the Pentagon from implementing climate-change and green energy policies meant to save taxpayers money and protect the planet." In the letter, the groups, which include the Competitive Enterprise Institute, Americans for Prosperity, and Americans for Limited Government, argue that the Obama-era climate policies "are likely to undermine military readiness by diverting scarce resources." Reuters writes that Defense Secretary Mattis "has long been supportive of programs that reduce troops' petroleum dependence." The House of Representatives is scheduled to vote this week on its version of the NDAA, and the Senate version "will follow later this year."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Obamacare Is Not Collapsing, Imploding Or Exploding." The New York Times (7/13) editorializes, "The biggest lie that President Trump and other Republican leaders have been repeating about the Affordable Care Act for years is that it is collapsing, imploding or exploding." The ACA "is actually working reasonably well, and even the part that has shown the most weakness – the health insurance marketplaces – has been stabilizing." But the White House and GOP "continue to peddle horror stories about the ACA as they try to gather the votes for repeal of major provisions of the law."

"States Fight To Protect Students Of Schools." The New York Times (7/13, Board) says in an editorial that "states are still fighting the good fight" against for-profit colleges "that saddle students with crushing debt in exchange for degrees that are essentially useless." Earlier this year, the Education Department "abruptly suspended federal rules that allow students who have been defrauded by colleges to have their federal loans forgiven," so 19 states and the District of Columbia took legal action. The Times says that until the department crafts new rules, courts "should require the department to enforce the rules that are already on the books."

"Help Fix Transit, Mr. De Blasio, And Be A Hero." The New York Times (7/13, Board) says in an editorial that New York Mayor Bill de Blasio needs to offer the "money and political will" necessary to fix the city's mass transit system.

Washington Post.

"This Is What Makes Russia A Hostile Power." The Washington Post (7/12) says in an editorial that Russia "is a hostile power" because of President Vladimir Putin's "adherence to, and dependence on, a set of values that are antithetical to what have been, at least until now, bedrock American values. ... His antipathy toward Hillary Clinton was not personality-driven but based on her advocacy of values that would threaten his rule. ... So while the younger Mr. Trump may have seen advantage in accepting Russia's help, Russia certainly would have seen an advantage in proffering it."

"Worried About Trust In Government, Senators? Prove You Deserve It." The Washington Post (7/12) editorializes that during his confirmation hearing, FBI Director-designate Christopher Wray "bore a special responsibility to assure lawmakers and the public that he would support a fair investigation into the administration of the man who appointed him, resisting any bullying or blandishments." His "testimony Wednesday was encouraging, but it will take more than an FBI director of integrity to restore faith in government."

"There's No Way To Replace Planned Parenthood." A Washington Post (7/12) editorial takes aim at Republican arguments "accompanying efforts to defund Planned Parenthood" that "other health-care providers would easily absorb the patients left adrift if Planned Parenthood could no longer receive Medicaid reimbursements." The Post argues that "there is no way community health-care centers cited by Republicans as an alternative could fill the gap" and "millions of women would lose access to critical health care."

Wall Street Journal.

"ObamaCare Freedom And Failure Options." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/12) calls a healthcare plan from Sens. Ted Cruz and Mike Lee a good one, but worries that it would shift the bill too far to the right to be able to get 50 votes.

"Richard Cordray's Financial Damage." The Wall Street Journal (7/12, Journal) editorializes that President Trump should fire CFPB Director Cordray for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office," with the last straw having been the bureau's announcement on Monday that it had finalized a rule banning mandatory arbitration at financial institutions. While the CFPB claims the move is in the interest of consumers, the Journal says resultant class-action suits largely will benefit trial lawyers, provide consumers with few benefits, and saddle financial institutions with such high legal fees that they will be unable to engage in arbitration, which does benefit consumers. The OCC raised concerns this week that the rule will adversely affect the soundness of the federal banking system due to resultant increased litigation costs. The Journal adds that the rule is an obvious violation of the Administrative Procedure Act.

"US Marines And Risk." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/12) writes that Monday's crash of a KC-130 Marine cargo plane illustrates a growing trend – that Marine aviation has recently faced a steady increase in Class A Mishaps, accidents that result in casualties or more than $2 million in aircraft damage. The Journal notes the increased accident rate in 2015 and 2016 and says some have theorized that the fault lies with a combination of old equipment and reduced pilot hours due to funding cuts. The Journal concludes that, regardless of the reasons, Marines and other service members deserve to fly under safer conditions when conducting routine training and transport.

GOP Sen. Mitch McConnell releases updated version of controversial health care reform proposal – Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell introduces updated health care reform legislation, two weeks after he dropped plans for a vote on the original Better Care Reconciliation Act due to a lack of support from a number of members of his party * The original bill, controversially drafted by the chamber’s Republicans through closed-door meetings, featured some changes from the American Health Care Act which had previously passed the House of Representatives by four votes, but a number of Senate Republicans still expressed concerns over various aspects of the proposal, which would likely have been opposed by all the chamber’s Democrats. Despite the updates, reportedly including maintaining Obama-era tax increases on high-earners, analysts have suggested the bill may still lack sufficient support to pass Location: TBD www.republicanleader.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/SenateMajLdr>

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “One thing President Trump definitely did watch was his son Jr.’s interview with Sean Hannity last night on Fox News. Trump said his son was open, transparent, and innocent. That’s three lies in four words. That’s 75 percent, a new record.”

Stephen Colbert: “Donald Trump Jr. is quickly rising to the ranks of America’s most embarrassing Donald Trumps.”

Stephen Colbert: “So with his agenda in tatters, with his White House paralyzed, in turmoil, and with his family in disgrace, the President did the right thing and headed to France tonight.”

Trevor Noah: “Most people, including many prominent conservatives, have agreed that Donald Trump Jr. clearly colluded with the Russians. I know they’re all walking around pretending like we didn’t know what collusion is.”

Trevor Noah: “The first event tonight: the Hillary Deflection, where participants do all they can to take away attention from Don Jr. back to last year’s nominee.”

Trevor Noah: “Last year, the Republicans entered into power with a clear agenda: repeal Obamacare, pass tax reform, and spend on infrastructure. After six months in power, they’ve got nothing to show for it, sort of like Ben Carson in a rap battle.”

Conan O’Brien: “Today, President Trump tweeted that his son, Donald Jr., is, quote, ‘open, transparent, and innocent.’ Open, transparent, innocent. Which is why President Trump is now demanding a paternity test.”

Conan O’Brien: “According to friends of Donald Trump Jr., back in college he was a blackout drunk, so he does have a long history of meeting with white Russians.”

Belle Isle Gets $750K For Walking Trails, Renovation.

The Detroit Free Press (7/19) reports that the Interior Department and the National Park Service is "giving $750,000 to renovation and develop walking trails on Detroit's Belle Isle." The funds were "awarded to the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, which manages Belle Isle, through the federal Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership program." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Every kid deserves the opportunity to get outside and play. Whether it's downtown Detroit or rural Wyoming, investing in public lands is an investment in communities."

TV Duluth \(MN\) Duluth, MN (7/19, Lentz).

Burlington Gets $500K To Build Park At Lake Champlain. The AP (7/20) reports that "Vermont's congressional delegation says the city of Burlington is getting a $500,000 federal grant to help create a new park on the Lake Champlain waterfront." The funds from the National Park Service "will help the city acquire 12 acres (4 hectares) of land along Lake Champlain to develop the park and, eventually, a trail connecting two other park properties."

Additional coverage was provided by the Burlington \(VT\) Free Press (7/19), Vermont Business Magazine (7/19), and WCAX-TV Burlington \(VT\) Burlington, VT (7/19, Liguori).

Duluth Gets $750,000 Grant To Refurbish Lincoln Park. The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (7/19, Myers) reports that the Interior Department "on Wednesday announced a $750,000 grant to the city of Duluth to help refurbish recreational facilities in Lincoln Park." The project will "improve playgrounds, basketball courts, disc golf and handicapped-accessible trails that federal officials hope will encourage local residents to be more active." The federal grant was "part of $13.3 million doled out Wednesday to 22 cities in 17 states."

A 1930s Campground Will Be Revived In Gwynns Falls Park. The Baltimore Sun (7/19, Wells) reports that "a 1930s-era campground in Gwynns Falls Park will be revived with a $750,000 grant from the U.S. Department of the Interior announced Wednesday." The campground, "which is adjacent to the Cahill Recreation Center and the Jastrow Levin picnic grove, was a Girl Scout camp in the early 20th century, said Richard S.B. Smith, the director of Friends of Orianda House, a historic mansion in the park."

Grant Aids Funding For Clary-Shy Park Expansion. The Columbia \(MO\) Missourian (7/19, Lagore) reports that "a $400,000 grant from the Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership program will be gifted to the city of Columbia to help fund the Clary-Shy Park Urban Demonstration Farm project."

Chavis Park: Ice Rink, Stage, Water Play Area With $747,600 Federal Grant. The Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (7/19, Bennett) reports that the Interior Department "announced on Wednesday $747,600 that will go to North Carolina for improvements at Central Plaza at John Chavis Memorial Park in Raleigh." According to the article, "the Central Plaza revitalization project for the park includes a water play area, seasonal ice rink, stage area and concrete amphitheater seating."

With Finances In Disarray, City Of Hartford Gets Park Grant. Connecticut Public Radio (7/19, Skahill) reports that the Interior Department and the National Park Service have "selected Hartford as the beneficiary of a $750,000 grant."

Anchorage Gets Federal Grant To Develop Muldoon Park. The Alaska Dispatch News (7/19, Zak) reports that the Interior Department and the National Park Service "on Wednesday announced a grant of $750,000" to Anchorage "toward the development of Muldoon Town Square Park."

Outdoors Roundtable Meets With Interior Secretary.

Trade Only (7/19) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and "members of Congress met with the Outdoor Recreation Industry Roundtable at the Interior Department on Tuesday to discuss how public-private partnerships can improve visitor experiences on public lands and waters." The meeting was "followed by a showcase of American-made outdoor recreation equipment — including boats, RVs, off-road vehicles and fishing gear — as part of "Made in America Week" in Washington, D.C."

The BDOutdoors (7/19) reports that Boat Owners Association of The United States sat down with Zinke at the Tuesday event in Washington "to discuss his agency's support for maintaining boating infrastructure and growing access to federal waters." Zinke's "interview with BoatUS was part of a coalition of outdoor recreation industry associations that met with him to highlight the economic importance of outdoor products and the enjoyment they bring American families." In the interview, Zinke "made clear his advocacy for expanded access to federal public lands and waters and improving infrastructure at many of the aging facilities."

Additional coverage was provided by RVBusiness (7/19).

Report Details Administration Regulator Rollback Efforts.

The New York Times (7/19, Eder) reports that the White House has released its first report on its regulatory rollback efforts, "claiming that during President Trump's first five months in office it had brought about savings for the economy rather than impose regulatory costs." According to the report, "President Obama's agencies accrued $3.1 billion in regulatory costs during the same period at the start of his administration." In addition, the Administration "said it was ahead of schedule in implementing President Trump's pledge to eliminate two regulations for each new one on the books."

The Washington Post (7/19, Paletta) says OMB plans "to release a list of rules it plans to weaken or eliminate" on Thursday. Regulations on the list "will run the gamut from significant policy measures to minor procedural measures, said Neomi Rao, who heads the White House's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs." While Trump "has promised to jettison 80 percent of all federal regulations," Thursday's list "will fall far short of that." However, Rao "said the process is expected to intensify even further later this year."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (7/19), the AP (7/19, Boak), Reuters (7/19, Mason), and Forbes (7/19).

Trump Names Alaskan To Interior Department Post.

The Alaska Dispatch News (7/19, Martinson) reports that President Trump has "nominated Joseph Balash, Alaska Sen. Dan Sullivan's chief of staff, to head the interior, land and mineral management office at the Department of the Interior." Balash is an Alaskan who previously served as commissioner and deputy commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources before heading to Washington, D.C., to work in the U.S. Senate." He "also worked for two Alaska governors and in several positions with the state legislature."

Additional coverage was provided by KTUU-TV Anchorage, AK (7/19).

In The Push To Deliver On Campaign Promises, Interior's Energy Drive Looms Large.

The Washington Post (7/19, Eilperin) reports that "with control over more than 500 million acres of public land and hundreds of millions of acres offshore, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is moving rapidly to promote American production of coal, oil and gas." The Post adds, "in the past few weeks alone, Zinke has lowered the price companies must pay the government for offshore drilling; acted to accelerate approval for onshore drilling permits; approved exploratory drilling in the Arctic's Beaufort Sea; and scheduled lease sales on Western lands the Obama administration had deemed off limits."

Creating Memorial For War On Terror Before It's Over Gains Support In Washington.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (7/19, Mauriello) reports that "a Pittsburgh veteran's monumental effort to memorialize his comrades' sacrifices is gaining traction in Congress." Andrew Brennan's "quest to ensure veterans of the Global War on Terror have a memorial in Washington D.C." started five years ago. The article notes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke supports the legislation.

Will Zinke Undo Protections For The West's Most Iconic Bird?

The High Country \(CO\) News (7/19, Wiles) reports that "just over two weeks remain in the Department of Interior's review of sage grouse management plans that span 10 Western states." In early June, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "ordered the review to ensure the plans adhere to President Donald Trump's 'America First' vision for energy development and give more say to states in how the bird is managed." The article notes that "the review comes despite the completion of 98 different sage grouse plans in 2015 that took five years to negotiate."

I'm A Scientist. I'm Blowing The Whistle On The Trump Administration.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (7/19), Joel Clement, who served as director of the Office of Policy Analysis at the Interior Department until last week, and is now a senior adviser at the department's Office of Natural Resources Revenue, calls himself "a whistleblower on an administration that chooses silence over science." Writing that he is "one of about 50 senior department employees" who were involuntarily reassigned, Clement argues that he was "retaliated against for speaking out publicly about the dangers that climate change poses to Alaska Native communities." Clement adds that he has filed a complaint with the Office of Special Counsel “because the Trump administration clearly retaliated against me for raising awareness of this danger.”

At Interior, Foxes Now Run The Hen House.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (7/19, Greenwald, Contributor), Noah Greenwald, Endangered Species Director, Center for Biological Diversity, writes that the Trump Administration has been “quietly staffing the Department of the Interior, which oversees protection of more than 1,500 of the nation’s most endangered species and millions of acres of public lands, with the worst cast of anti-environmental, corporate stooges in history.” Greenwald calls out the conservation records of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, David Bernhardt, nominated as deputy secretary for Interior, and Susan Combs, nominated as Interior’s assistant secretary for policy, management and budget. He also calls the appointments of Todd Willens and Greg Sheehan “lousy.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Dr. Gavin Clarkson Appointed To New Role With Bureau Of Indian Affairs.

The Gardnerville \(NV\) Record Courier (7/19) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announced this month “he had appointed Dr. Gavin Clarkson, a citizen of The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, as the new Deputy Assistant Secretary for Policy and Economic Development-Indian Affairs, within the Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs, a supervisory position for the Offices of Indian Energy and Economic Development, Indian Gaming and Self-Governance.” Zinke said, “Dr. Gavin Clarkson’s expertise in the areas of law, finance and economic development are a valuable asset to the Department of the Interior and the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs as we work together with tribes to increase economic opportunity and promote self-determination throughout Indian Country.” Clarkson assumed the position on June 11.

10th Circ. Backs Nixing Of NM Tribal Road Dispute.

Law360 (7/19, Westney) reports that “the Tenth Circuit on Wednesday upheld the dismissal of a suit by New Mexico landowners over a Bureau of Indian Affairs letter that supported the San Ildefonso Pueblo’s right to deny them the use of roads leading to their property, saying the group didn’t raise a dispute that the court could settle.”

California Governor Signs Sacramento County Casino Compact.

Congressional Panel Permits Culling Of Wild Horses.

USA Today (7/19, Sullivan) reports that “a congressional committee Tuesday night authorized the ‘humane euthanization’ — some called it ‘extermination’ — of what many acknowledge is a large and unsustainable population of wild horses and burros on public land in the West.” The House Appropriations Committee “voted to remove language from the Interior Department’s budget that would have prohibited ‘the destruction of healthy, unadopted wild horses and burros in the care of’ the Bureau of Land Management or its contractors.” The author of the amendment, Rep. Chris Stewart, R-Utah “stressed that it did not make the horses available for sales that would result in their ‘processing as commercial products, including for human consumption.’”

The Denver Post (7/19, Mcghee) reports that Suzanne Roy, director of the American Wild Horse Campaign said, “Let’s be clear: House Appropriations Committee members just signed a death warrant for America’s mustangs and it will lead to the wholesale destruction of these irreplaceable national treasures.” She added, “It’s being spun as ‘euthanasia’ but it’s really license to kill tens of thousands of healthy wild horses and burros.”

9th Circ. Affirms BLM Win In Enviros’ Sage-Grouse Suit.

Law360 (7/19, Sieniuc) reports that “the Ninth Circuit on Tuesday tossed an environmental group’s suit alleging the Bureau of Land Management didn’t properly study how proposed fencing and pipeline projects running through eastern Nevada might hurt sage-grouse in the area before it signed its approval, saying the BLM has met the standard for a legal environmental review.”

BLM Open House In Craig Will Discuss Roads And Trails.

The Craig \(CO\) Daily Press (7/19) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is “hosting an open house July 25 in Craig to discuss preliminary alternatives for managing roads and trails on 370,000 acres of BLM-administered lands in Moffat County.” The Little Snake Field Office in northwestern Colorado is “undertaking a comprehensive, multi-year look at the roads and trails it manages to address current and future needs.” Little Snake Field Manager Bruce Sillitoe said, “We developed these preliminary alternatives after asking the public last winter about how they are currently using the roads and trails in this area, and what they would like to see in the future. We want feedback on these preliminary alternatives before we begin the detailed analysis in an environmental assessment.”

Congress, Don’t Let Logging Industry Decide Fate Of American Forests.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (7/19, Super, Contributor), David A. Super, professor of law at Georgetown Law, criticizes Rep. Bruce Westerman’s Resilient Federal Forests Act as “extreme legislation” that “would give logging interests virtual absolute primacy in setting forestry policy, to the exclusion of others that depend on our forests.” Super warns that “the reckless logging likely to follow would do serious damage to the forests’ natural ecology.” According to Super, “turning our forests into political battlefields is likely to produce a boom-and-bust cycle that is uneconomical for industry, chaotic for local communities, and ruinous for hikers, trout enthusiasts, hunters, and wildlife.”

Martin County To Receive 1 Million Cubic Yards Of Sand.

TC Palm \(FL\) (7/19, Broadt) reports that “by mid-2018, Martin County is to receive up to 1 million cubic yards of sand from an offshore federal sand site, according to an agreement signed earlier this week." The agreement, "between the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, the Army Corps of Engineers and the county, authorizes using the sand to renourish a 4-mile stretch of shoreline on south Hutchinson Island." The project aims "to restore the beach profile following damages from Hurricane Matthew in October and to reduce future erosion."

Bad Plan For Arctic Drilling.

The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (7/20) editorializes that that "despite bans on offshore oil exploration in the Arctic, the Trump administration has cleared the way for drilling to start as early as December in Alaskan waters where environmentalists say a spill would threaten marine life, polar bears and birds, and be nearly impossible to clean up. It is a terrible plan." The paper argues that "Trump's decision to support Arctic drilling was as rash as his plan to open the Atlantic Coast to oil exploration and drilling in the face of strong community opposition." It concludes that "there is no upside to risky drilling."

Closed Meetings Lead To Mistrust.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (7/18) editorializes that "mistrust is the one of the best reasons for all governments to remember to operate openly and with transparency." Santa Fe County "fell short last week in agreeing to keep the public out of meetings to discuss road disputes with four area pueblos." According to the paper, "the people perhaps most affected – property owners in disputed areas – did not get to participate." It urges Santa Fe County to "do more to inform citizens what is happening." The editorial says that "a good first step would be to hold an informational meeting on what took place in these closed meetings."

GOP Takes Aim At Reforming Endangered Species Act.

The Hill (7/19, Cama) reports that "Congressional Republicans launched efforts Wednesday aimed at reforming the Endangered Species Act to make it more friendly for states, landowners, industry and others." According to the article, "the debates in the House and Senate were on bills with specific, limited purposes, not the full-scale comprehensive reforms that Republicans and some industries have been craving." Nonetheless, Republicans "made it clear that they want to make significant changes to the law that they see as outdated, ineffective and unnecessarily costly for states and land users." On the other hand, Democrats "see the proposals as significant threats to a bedrock environmental law and a handout to industries, including oil and natural gas.”

The AP (7/19, Daly) reports that “five bills were being considered by the House panel, and a sixth bill was being heard in the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee.”

Environmental groups “called the simultaneous hearings a ‘one-two punch’ on threatened wildlife.” Jamie Rappaport Clark, president and CEO of Defenders of Wildlife, said, “While nine out of ten Americans want to protect endangered species and their habitat, Congressional leaders are spending their time dismantling the ESA in favor of special interests. Enactment of any of these bills will only hasten the disappearance of endangered and threatened species from our planet.”

E&E Publishing (7/19, Doyle) reports that the Fish and Wildlife Service “backed ‘in general’ a package of Republican-authored Endangered Species Act reform bills that critics contend would gut the 1973 law.” However, “in a sign of negotiations to come, the agency’s acting director advised lawmakers that certain ‘technical modifications’ are still needed to meet specific concerns.” Fish and Wildlife Service acting Director Greg Sheehan said, “My goal as the acting director of the service is for the organization to be a better neighbor and partner to the states.”

Minnesota Gets Money For Bat Research.

The International Falls \(MN\) Daily Journal (7/19, Beager) reports that “Minnesota is among 37 states to receive grants from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to help combat white-nose syndrome.” The grants “bring the total funding to states for WNS response over the last eight years to $7 million.”

Texas Receives Grant To Prevent Local Bats From Disease-causing Fungus. KXAN-TV Austin, TX (7/19, Ferrari) reports that “Texas has received a $30,000 grant from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in hopes to aggressively monitor affected bats, prevent” white-nose syndrome, “and eventually find a treatment.”

Court Ruling Paves Way For Purple Line Construction To Begin.

The Washington Post (7/19, Shaver) reports that a federal appeals court reinstated the Purple Line’s environmental approval, allowing Maryland to “begin building the Purple Line while a lawsuit opposing it continues.” The ruling will make it possible for Maryland “to secure $900 million in federal grants for the line’s $2 billion construction.” Construction on the line could begin within a few weeks. However, the article notes that a “key issue remains” over “whether the U.S. Department of Transportation will consider the ruling to provide enough legal certainty to sign a multiyear funding agreement with the state for nearly $1 billion in federal aid.”

The Washington Business Journal (7/19, Gilgore) and the AP (7/19) similarly report on the story.

WPost: Ruling Gives Way For DC-Area’s “Most Important” New Transit Link. In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/19) writes that reinstatement of the environmental approval for the Purple Line signals a potential resurrection of what could be “the Washington area’s most important new transit link.” The court order “gives the state of Maryland a fighting chance at reclaiming $900 million in federal funding for the Purple Line that was blocked at the 11th hour by US District Judge Richard J. Leon.” The Post concludes by noting that the lawsuit blocking the Purple Line “will continue for now,” but that regardless of the legal dispute, the Purple Line “would provide an enormous convenience to tens of thousands of daily commuters and a means of revitalizing aging neighborhoods in its path.”

No-wake Zones Proposed For Refuge Backwaters.

The Havasu \(AZ\) News-Herald (7/19, MESSICK, WALTERS) reports that “a new proposal being floated by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service establishes a series of no-wake and restricted zones throughout Havasu National Wildlife Refuge backwaters.” The proposal released Wednesday is “a compromise, according to Refuge Manager Richard Meyers, after public outcry against stricter proposals in 2016.” While the FWS “has some restrictions in mind for Refuge boaters, Meyers says those restrictions will do little to obstruct recreational boating in the Refuge or on the Colorado River.”

Wolf Plan Gets Skeptical Greeting At Flagstaff Meeting.

The Arizona Daily Sun (7/19, Cowan) reports that “federal wildlife managers in charge of a new draft recovery plan for the endangered Mexican gray wolf received a barrage of questions during a public meeting Tuesday night that suggest the plan still has many skeptics.” According to the article, “many people during the three hour event in Flagstaff asked the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to defend both its wolf population targets as well as provisions in the newly released plan that limit the wolves to an area south of Interstate-40 in Arizona, New Mexico and Mexico.” Meanwhile, “others questioned the more than $7 million a year the recovery program is expected to cost and pushed for more local input when it comes to decisions on how to deal with wolves that have threatened livestock.”

House Of Horrors: Inside The US Wildlife Repository.

The Guardian \(UK\) (7/20, Milman, Staver) reports that “the National Wildlife Property Repository, operated by the US Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS), is a warehouse of the macabre.” According to the article, “there are about 1.5m items at the repository, with approximately 200 specimens arriving each week for storage and education purposes.” Coleen Schaefer, the repository’s supervisor, said, “The US is a big player in all this, you can’t get around that. We are a consumer nation. We aren’t the source country of rhinos, or tigers or elephants, but they are here and they wouldn’t be unless someone was importing them.”

Portions Of Hilton Head Beaches Are Roped Off To Protect Piping Plovers, And Will Be Until 2021.

The Hilton Head Island \(SC\) Packet (7/19, Kincaid) reports that “a federally protected shorebird is at the center of a dispute between some Port Royal Plantation residents and Hilton Head town officials over access to a large chunk of beach.” According to the article, “more than nine acres of beach encompassing the north end of the plantation and a small island next to Fish Haul Creek and Mitchelville Beach Park have been roped off with twine and ‘Area Closed’ signs to protect the piping plover.” Melissa Chaplin, “a U.S. Fish and Wildlife official working with the town, said Wednesday the federal agency is considering creating an access point to give Port Royal Plantation residents an easier way to get to the beach, though a final decision hasn’t been made.”

Rare Floodplain Forest At Fannie Stebbins Wildlife Refuge In Longmeadow To Get 2-year, $400K Restoration.

The Springfield \(MA\) Republican (7/19, White) reports that “starting this summer and for the next two years, The Nature Conservancy, the leading conservation organization in the world, will be restoring the floodplain forest at the Fannie Stebbins Wildlife Refuge on the banks of the Connecticut River in the area of Longmeadow known as The Meadows.” The project will “restore 223 acres of the refuge – including reforesting seven old farmers’ fields comprising 32.2 acres – and is expected to cost approximately $400,000, funded by the Natural Resources Conservation Service, a division of the United States Department of Agriculture.”

House Passes DeSaulnier’s Bill To Expand John Muir Site.

The Martinez \(CA\) News-Gazette (7/19, Weilenman) reports that the House has passed Rep. Mark DeSaulnier’s bill “that would expand the John Muir National Historic Site.” DeSaulnier’s legislation, HR 1719, “would add 44 acres of donated land to the park to improve access and preserve the land for future generations.” Sen. Kamala Harris has “introduced similar legislation in the Senate.”

Angus King, Park Service At Odds Over Bill Protecting Clamming, Harvesting In Acadia National Park.

WMEA-FM Portland, ME (7/19, Leary) reports that the National Park Service is “criticizing legislation sponsored by independent U.S. Sen. Angus King of Maine that’s intended to protect traditional intertidal clamming and worm harvesting in Acadia National Park.” King “told a hearing of the National Parks subcommittee that his bill is simply designed to make sure traditional uses of the park by Maine wormers and clammers can continue.” However, Robert Vogel, acting deputy director of the National Park Service, “testified that the Park Service wants to limit uses to current levels and allow the secretary of the interior to develop rules to protect the park from overuse by mechanical harvesting devices and by expansion of harvesting to other crops.”

Pork-Barrel Spending Surging Despite Earmark Ban, ‘Pig Book’ Says.

Fox News (7/19, Weber) reports that “pork-barrel spending is surging despite a roughly five-year-old moratorium on so-called earmarks, according to the annual ‘Pig Book’ report released Wednesday.” The report “calls out special projects that receive billions of dollars thanks to Capitol Hill lawmakers who tuck the funding – which critics call ‘pork’ – into appropriations bills.” The article notes that “among them in fiscal 2017 was $10.3 million to support 49 National Heritage Areas under the National Park Service.” Additional coverage was provided by the McClatchy (7/19, Siripurapu).

California Wildfire Forces Thousands To Evacuate, Threatens Power In Yosemite.

The AP (7/19, Newman) reports that “a wildfire in Mariposa County, California, doubled in size between Sunday and Tuesday, forcing 4,000 residents to evacuate and threatening the power supply to Yosemite National Park, according to local fire officials.” The article says that “since igniting Sunday, the Detwiler fire has burned across more than 45,000 acres of land west of the national park and is only 7 percent contained, the Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, announced Wednesday.”

The Los Angeles Times (7/19, Branson-Potts, Rocha) reports that “the conflagration has made for a hazy few days in Yosemite, where roaring waterfalls aided by a record-setting wet winter have drawn legions of tourists.” The fire “knocked out power in Yosemite National Park for several hours Tuesday, but crews were able to restore service at 11 p.m., said Denny Boyles, spokesman for Pacific Gas & Electric Co.”

Trump Initiative Changes Name Of V.I. National Park To ‘Caribbean National Parks’, Upsetting Local Leaders.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (7/19) reports that Senate President Myron Jackson on Wednesday “encouraged concerned residents to attend a public meeting to discuss the sudden reorganization and name change of the Virgin Islands National Park.” Jackson said, “The possible change of name of the Virgin Islands National Park to the Caribbean National Parks and news that superintendents will be located in Puerto Rico is unacceptable in this day and age. This centennial year should be about revisiting the Virgin Islands Park System in addressing the cultural resources, community values, heritage and land issues of the Virgin Islands. Why were we not consulted as a community? Why has the Governor or the Delegate not addressed the community on this drastic change?”

National Parks Service Cleans Up Crookes Point.

The Staten Island \(NY\) Live (7/19, Bascome) reports that Sen. Charles E. Schumer announced Wednesday that the National Park Service “-- in response to a letter he sent earlier this month – cleaned up all of the litter at Crookes Point and will continue to monitor the area over the next six weeks.” The NPS was “helped by members of the Summer Youth Employment Program.” Schumer said, “Now that NPS has heeded my call, Staten Islanders can once again put their toes in the sand at Crookes Point without worrying what’s underneath. As a local gem, and a critical habitat for marine life and a great spot for fishing, Crookes Point must continue to be properly maintained by the feds.”

Possible World War II Era Unexploded Ordnance Found Near Hatteras Island.

WTKR-TV Norfolk, VA (7/19) reports that “a potential World War II era unexploded ordnance was found in a remote area near Hatteras Island, the National Park Service announced.” The National Park Service “located the ordnance Tuesday and contacted the U.S. Navy.” The article notes that “this is the second unexploded ordnance found in the Outer Banks in the last six days.”

Area At New River Gorge Closing To Prepare For Upgrades.

The AP (7/20) reports that “the Grandview Sandbar and River Access Area of New River Gorge National River will close for a few days to prepare for upgrades.” The National Park Service “says the area will be closed from noon Sunday until 7 a.m. July 28 while park staff and workers prepare the area for a service project with Boy Scouts during the 2017 National Scout Jamboree.” The NPS said “that the troops will work with staff to convert and upgrade two picnic areas to accessible design standards.”

To Save My Island Homeland, Large Nations Must Do More To Combat Climate Change: Hugh Sealy (Opinion).

In an op-ed for the Cleveland Plain Dealer (7/19, Sealy), Hugh Sealy, a professor in the Department of Public Health and Preventive Medicine at St. George's University in Grenada, writes that “small island nations the world over are at risk of seeing their economies – and their lands themselves – wash away” from climate change. He argues that “it's perverse and unjust to force small island nations to pay for the climate sins of the developed world.” Sealy concludes that “without aggressive action, however, global warming could soon leave many island economies – and, indeed, entire nations – submerged.”

US Geological Survey

New App Shows Exactly Where Houston Is Sinking.

The Houston Chronicle (7/19, Baddour) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey on Wednesday unveiled “a web portal displaying 40 years worth of Houston-area data on subsidence, or sinkage of the ground, which has become a major factor guiding the development of Houston in recent decades.” The data, “covering the years 1977 to 2016, shows the substantial recovery of groundwater levels since governmental action was taken to limit their decline.” Sachin Shah, USGS chief of Gulf Coast hydrologic studies and research, said, “This is the first time that groundwater and subsidence data have been put together to illustrate the story of what is happening to our land and water resources in the region. The ability to explore, visualize and compare how groundwater levels are changing over time in an easily accessible and uniform format is a tool that we hope will effectively communicate this information to area cooperators, stakeholders and the public.”

Trump Tells Senators To Stay In Washington Until They Pass A Healthcare Bill.

Coverage of President Trump's meeting with Republican senators at the White House on Wednesday highlights what it sees as the President's reversals on repealing and replacing the Affordable Care Act over the past few days. Analyses also indicate that a late revival of the Senate legislation – that appeared dead earlier this week – remains unlikely. Most reports also note the President's public pressuring of Sen. Dean Heller, who faces a tight reelection race next year.

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (7/19, lead story, 2:50) by reporting that the President "invited Republican senators to the White House today for lunch and served up healthy portions of pressure. He urged them to pass a healthcare bill before they leave Washington for their summer recess. The President reminded senators that they and he had promised to replace Obamacare, and said, 'I intend to keep my promise, and I know you will, too.'" CBS' Nancy Cordes reported that Trump "even issued this veiled threat to Dean Heller of Nevada, who was seated conveniently to his right." Trump: "Look, he wants to remain a senator, doesn't he? And I think the people of your state, which I know very well, I think they're going to appreciate what you hopefully will do." Cordes: "But the President himself has sent mixed messages. In the last 24 hours, he's promoted repeal and replace, repeal alone, and doing nothing."

Lester Holt said in the lead story on NBC Nightly News (7/19, lead story, 2:30) that Trump, "who only 24 hours ago was willing to let government healthcare die a slow death, performed a head-snapping turnabout today...effectively ordering CPR on a bill that fractured Republicans fear may be beyond saving." Trump: "We shouldn't leave town until this is complete, until this bill is on my desk. We're very close." NBC's Hallie Jackson: "They're not. Not right now. But President Trump's pushing them back to 'Plan A' again." Trump: "I think the people of this country need more than a repeal. They need a repeal and a replace." Jackson also noted Trump's comment about Heller, a "jab couched as a joke," and said that Trump made "an about-face. Monday's message, repeal and replace...turned into repeal now, replace later that night. But by Tuesday..." Trump: "We'll let Obamacare fail." Jackson: "Now today." Trump: "We have no choice. We have to repeal and replace."

On ABC World News Tonight (7/19, story 5, 3:00), which did not lead with the story, David Muir said the President brought Senate Republicans to the White House, "issuing a new order: Do not leave Washington until you come up with a new plan to repeal and replace Obamacare. But then the White House was asked, is the President promising the same himself? Will he stay in Washington until it happens too?" ABC's Mary Bruce: "The White House says the President is willing to stay in town so long as senators are right here on the Hill and working on healthcare." ABC also carried the comment about Heller.

The AP (7/19, Werner, Fram) reports that Trump, "lecturing fellow Republicans...told them face-to-face they must not leave town for their August recess" without sending him a bill to sign. The President "spoke at length as he cajoled, scolded and issued veiled threats to his fellow Republicans, all aimed at wringing a health care bill out of a divided caucus that's been unable to produce one so far." The AP reports that "Heller gave a strained grin" when Trump made his comment about him, while Bloomberg News (7/19, Pettypiece, Litvan) reports that Trump "directed some joking but pointed remarks to the senators whose opposition sunk" Senate Majority Leader McConnell's plan. The President referred to Sens. Mike Lee and Jerry Moran as "my friends, they really were and are, they might not be very much longer."

The New York Times (7/19, A1, Sullivan, Haberman) reports Trump "vigorously defended an all-but-dead" Senate healthcare bill, "pressing Republicans to stay in Washington and improve the proposal or risk being tagged as supporting the current system." The Times calls it "a stark turnabout from earlier this week" and "a pep talk that could have been more effective in the last several days as Republican leaders desperately sought support." The Washington Post (7/19, A1, Nakamura) writes that Trump is "hoping to avoid a humiliating political defeat," and "appeared to issue a veiled threat that he would campaign against Republicans who stood in his way." Townhall (7/19, Pavlich) similarly reports that "the President also sent veiled warnings to vulnerable senators" like Heller "by joking about his chances of being re-elected in 2018."

The New York Times (7/19, Qiu) reports that Trump's remarks included "several falsehoods." The Times says the President "conflated data about health care premiums, selectively chose the largest increases, and falsely suggested they were representative," made "misleading claims that the Senate bill will 'substantially lower premiums,'" and "falsely said that people with pre-existing medical conditions will have 'better' coverage" than under the ACA.

The Wall Street Journal (7/19, A1, Radnofsky) reports that Trump and the White House say a bill can still be passed. Earlier Wednesday, Trump tweeted, "I will be having lunch at the White House today with Republican Senators concerning healthcare. They MUST keep their promise to America!" He then tweeted, "The Republicans never discuss how good their healthcare bill is, & it will get even better at lunchtime. The Dems scream death as OCare dies!"

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Hannity (7/19) that Wednesday's lunch "showed the President at his finest. It is real leadership to go in and to say, 'I want you to stay in Washington and do your job.' ... The President said, 'I have been here six months. You have been here for seven years, promising in four consecutive election cycles to repeal and replace Obamacare.' The President has done his job. He ran successfully on repealing and replacing Obamacare. The House bill got passed and he is waiting...in his office, pen in hand, ready to sign it."

The Washington Times (7/19, Persons) reports that ex-Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski "expressed full confidence Wednesday that the health care repeal bill will pass." Lewandowski said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/19), "I think this bill is probably going to get done. ... I know the President. I know he's a deal-maker, I know he's going to do whatever it takes to get this done."

But congressional correspondent Phil Mattingly said on CNN's Situation Room (7/19) that Trump is "desperately deploying a last-minute pressure play on Republican senators to revive the all but dead Obamacare repeal effort," and Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News Special Report (7/19), "I think the chances of a resurrection are rather small. If it succeeded, it would be the most spectacular since Lazarus."

The Washington Times (7/19, Boyer) reports under the headline "Trump Delivers Ultimatum To GOP On Health Care Bill" that "a combative President Trump implored Republican senators Wednesday not to go on their summer recess until they vote on a bill to repeal and replace" the ACA. The Hill (7/19, Fabian) headlines its report "Trump Plays Hardball On ObamaCare Repeal." Karl Rove writes in his Wall Street Journal (7/19) column that though conservatives are right that the measure would not solve all of the ACA's problems, their refusal to support the McConnell bill serves only to leave bad policy intact. The New York Post (7/19, Fredericks) and the CNN (7/19, Merica, Lee) website also report on the meeting.

Trump Says Obama Lied About ACA. The Washington Times (7/19, Boyer) reports, "In unusually strong language about his predecessor, President Trump called President Obama a liar" during the Wednesday meeting. Trump said, "Obamacare was a big lie You can keep your doctor? Lie. You can keep your plan? Lie." Breitbart (7/19, Spiering) reports that Trump continued, "It was a lie, directly from the President. Twenty-eight times, he said it. Twenty-eight times."

McConnell: Senate Will Hold Procedural Vote Next Week. The Hill (7/19, Fabian) reports that after the White House meeting, McConnell "insisted the Senate will take a procedural vote next week to move toward ObamaCare repeal." But it is "unclear whether that will lead to a vote on ObamaCare repeal, with Republicans putting off a plan to replace the healthcare law, or a vote on the Senate's ObamaCare repeal-and-replace legislation, which had seemed dead days ago." The New York Times (7/19, Hulse) writes, "The Republican health care push was declared dead Wednesday morning. By afternoon it had a breath of life. Legislation in Washington can assume Frankenstein-like qualities."

Reuters (7/19, Zargham) reports that McConnell said, "I think we have two options here, I think we all agree it's better to both repeal and replace, but we could have a vote on either, and if we end up voting on repeal only, it will be fully amendable on the Senate floor, and if it were to pass without any amendment at all, there's a two-year delay before it kicks in...so the takeaway from what I'm telling you is no harm is done from getting on the bill."

HHS Analysis: Cruz Amendment Would Lower Premiums. Politico (7/19, Cancryn) reports that an HHS analysis of Sen. Ted Cruz's proposal "to let insurers sell plans that don't comply with Obamacare regulations appears to back up" Cruz's claim "that the idea would lower premiums across the individual insurance market. But the internal report relies heavily on a so-called proprietary model that offers little insight into its calculations." The Washington Examiner (7/19, Ferrechio) also covers the analysis of the Cruz proposal.

Grassroots Conservatives Blaming Senate, Not Trump. McClatchy (7/19, Clark) writes that even if Trump's "personal intervention" does not "revive the seemingly dead" GOP effort, he is "unlikely to take the fall for its collapse." GOP senators are instead "taking aim at their own for the bill's malaise," while "grassroots conservatives are furious at the senators who have blocked the bill." David Weigel of the Washington Post (7/19) writes that "pundits and outside groups cast senators as 'traitors' if they did not deliver a victory for the president. ... On the right, the final repeal push has been framed as a rematch of Trump's 2016 victory – a chance for Republicans to go with their president, or reveal themselves as sellouts." The Washington Times (7/19, Miller) reports that “blue-collar voters across the Rust Belt” primarily fault the “Washington establishment” for Trump’s failure to advance legislation.

Senate Leadership May Offer $200 Billion In Assistance To States That Expanded Medicaid. The Hill (7/19, Bolton) reports that Senate Republican leaders “are getting ready to propose giving $200 billion in assistance to states that expanded Medicaid, according to a person familiar with internal Senate negotiations,” with the goal of winning over Heller and fellow Sens. Shelley Moore Capito, Lisa Murkowski, and Rob Portman. A McConnell spokesman “declined to confirm or deny the pending offer, as has been the leader’s practice of not commenting on negotiations.” The Washington Examiner (7/19, King, Ferrechio) reports that “the offer has not flipped any ‘no’ votes yet.”

House Freedom Caucus Pushing Vote On Clean Repeal. Politico (7/19, Cheney, Bade) reports, “House conservatives are launching a late effort to force their colleagues to vote on an outright repeal of Obamacare.” The House Freedom Caucus “will jump-start a process intended to force the measure...to the floor as early as September.” Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), who chairs the caucus, said, “There’s no reason we should put anything less on President Trump’s desk than we put on Obama’s. President Trump wants to sign repeal – it’s time Congress send it to him.”

Trump Says He Wouldn’t Have Appointed Sessions Had He Known About Recusal.

In what the New York Times (7/19, Baker, Schmidt, Haberman) says is a “remarkable public break with one of his earliest supporters,” President Trump said in an interview with the Times on Wednesday that he would not have appointed Attorney General Sessions if he has known Sessions “would recuse himself from overseeing the Russia investigation that has dogged his presidency, calling the decision ‘very unfair to the president.’” Trump “complained” that the decision “ultimately led to the appointment of a special counsel that should not have happened.” Said Trump, “Sessions should have never recused himself, and if he was going to recuse himself, he should have told me before he took the job and I would have picked somebody else.”

Trump Also Criticizes Rosenstein. The New York Post (7/19, Perez) reports that Trump also said in the interview that “he doesn’t like” Deputy Attorney General Rod “Rosenstein — simply for the fact that he’s from Baltimore.” The Post says the Times describes Trump as having been “‘irritated’ to learn where the former federal prosecutor earned his chops before landing in Washington.” Trump “‘expressed discontent’ with Rosenstein,” and “reportedly claimed that Rosenstein — who was born in Philadelphia and worked in Baltimore as a federal prosecutor — had been playing both sides when it came to the firing of former FBI Director James Comey back in May.”

Rosenstein Indicates He Disapproved Of Comey Leak. The Washington Post (7/19, Zapotosky) reports that in an interview with Fox News, Rosenstein “suggested he did not approve of former FBI director James B. Comey engineering a leak of information about a request from the president to shut down the bureau’s probe into former national security adviser Michael Flynn.” Asked if “it would ‘ever be proper’ for the FBI director to ‘make notes of a conversation in that regard and leak them to the press,’” Rosenstein said, “As a general proposition, you have to understand the Department of Justice. We take confidentiality seriously, so when we have memoranda about our ongoing matters, we have an obligation to keep that confidential.”

White House Downplays Second Trump-Putin Meeting While Democrats Attack. Media coverage continues to focus heavily on Trump’s previously undisclosed second meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin at the G-20 summit. While many reports cast the White House as denouncing the coverage and downplaying the significance of the meeting, the coverage continues to be negative for the Administration and Democratic lawmakers remain vocal in their criticism. USA Today (7/19, Jackson) reports that Administration officials on Wednesday “denounc[ed] news coverage” of the meeting. Deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said, “Once again, the Russian fever has caught up with the media.” The Washington Post (7/19, Phillip) says Sanders “played down the controversy” over the second meeting, saying, “It would be incredibly awkward for them to all be at a dinner and not speak with each other.” Sanders would not “say what was discussed.”

New York Times White House correspondent Maggie Haberman, who interviewed Trump on Thursday, said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (7/19) that Trump said the second conversation with Putin lasted only 15 minutes. However, noting that “Ian Bremmer, the columnist and consultant who revealed the meeting, said it lasted nearly an hour,” the AP (7/19, Lederman) says in an analysis that a meeting of that length “is unlikely to have been limited to casual chit-chat.” Margaret Brennan said on the CBS Evening News (7/19, story 2, 2:35, Mason) that while the White House “pointed out that President Obama also huddled with Vladimir Putin and the same Kremlin translator," Obama "was accompanied by his National Security Adviser Susan Rice for this 2015 conversation" and "no US official was with President Trump for his chat."

Former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/19), "There is nothing there. ... All of a sudden this is a secret meeting? There is nothing secret when there are 40 people at the dinner."

Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Hannity (7/19), "We talk about America – this was Made in America week here at the White House – they get to talk about Russia, Russia, Russia again. But, this one is really over the top. ... Any description of this as an undisclosed secret second furtive meeting is complete nonsense. That was part of the public schedule. This is what leaders do, they talk to each other. ... This is just another attempt to bring Russia into the conversation." Deputy assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka said on Fox News' Hannity (7/19) that the story is "a massive nothing burger." Gorka added, "Can I tell you how we react to these stories in the White House, we love it. You know why? Because it's just an indicator of one thing: They are desperate."

Democrats, however, continued criticizing the meeting. Sen. Tim Kaine said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/19) that the meeting is "troubling because last week we heard we're going to hear everything, now we're going to be completely transparent but as John McCain once said... 'I guess there's more shoes to drop off this centipede.' It seems there's always another shoe to drop." Rep. Eric Swalwell, a member of the Intelligence Committee, said on CNN's Situation Room (7/19) that the meeting "fits the pattern of what we've seen with Donald Trump, his campaign, his businesses and their ties with Russia. And it goes something like this: you hold secret, undisclosed meetings with Russia, you deny or not acknowledge they exist, only when confronted with overwhelming evidence do you attempt to explain it, and now it goes to the very top." Rep. Jackie Speier said on CNN's The Lead (7/19), "I think it was very poor judgment. And, again, added with everything else we know about the Putin/Trump bromance, it raises lots of questions."

In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/19) argues that "the problem is not so much that he sought out Mr. Putin for an informal chat," but "the deeply troubling and unresolved questions about his relationship with Russia, which mean that any such contact raises serious — and understandable — concerns." The Post adds that the larger issue is "the epidemic of mistrust Mr. Trump has created about his ties to Russia, which sensationalizes contacts that might otherwise be unremarkable."

That sentiment is reflected in a comment by Fox News media analyst Howard Kurtz on Fox News' Special Report (7/19). According to Kurtz, it is "hard to fathom how a conversation in full view of the 18 world leaders and their spouses gets billed as a shadowy secret meeting. When it comes to this president, many news outlets don't give him the benefit of the doubt."

Breitbart: CNN's Cillizza Became "A Fake News Purveyor" With Article On Trump. Under the heading "Very Fake News Scandal Erupts Again: CNN's Cillizza's Latest Attack On Trump Debunked By His Own Network," Matthew Boyle – writing for Breitbart (7/19) – said, "The very fake news scandal engulfing CNN just erupted again on Wednesday afternoon as CNN's Chris Cillizza published demonstrably fake news. What's more, Cillizza's significant mistake ropes two more CNN anchors – Kate Bolduan and Brooke Baldwin – into the very fake news scandal touching nearly every single person at CNN." Boyle said, "The fake news from Cillizza specifically was meant to rebut President Trump's attacks on the fake media after the nothing story about a supposed extra, previously unreported "meeting" with Russian president Vladimir Putin at the recent G20 Summit in Hamburg, Germany." However, "Cillizza made a number of inaccurate statements himself – thereby becoming a fake news purveyor."

Trump Jr., Kushner, Manafort To Testify Before Senate Next Week. Politico (7/19, Cheney) reports that Donald Trump Jr., Jared Kushner, and Paul Manafort are scheduled to appear on Capitol Hill next week "in the highest-stakes hearings yet on Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election." The New York Post (7/19, Fears) says Kushner "will testify privately before the Senate Intelligence Committee" on Monday, while Trump Jr. and Manafort "will testify publicly before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday." Senior White House correspondent Cecilia Vega said on ABC World News Tonight (7/19, story 4, 1:40, Muir) that Kushner will likely "face tough questions about his meetings with Russian officials during the transition, meetings he did not initially disclose on security clearance applications," as well as "that Trump Tower meeting with Donald Trump Jr. two weeks after Mr. Trump became the Republican nominee."

The Washington Examiner (7/19, Siegel) reports that the committees and Mueller "are believed to be focusing on Kushner's interactions with Russian officials as part of investigations into Moscow's election interference." In addition, investigators are "likely to focus on Kushner's failure to initially disclose some of these conversations on his security clearance application." Reuters (7/19) reports that senators are expected to question Trump Jr. and Manafort "about allegations Russia meddled in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and possible collusion with the Trump campaign." Vega also said on ABC World News Tonight (7/19, story 4, 1:40, Muir) that representatives for Trump Jr. and Manafort "confirmed they have received these invitations, but their appearances are not confirmed." NBC Nightly News (7/19, story 3, 0:35, Holt) also reported on next week's expected testimony, as does The Hill (7/19, Williams).

Brianna Keilar reported on CNN's Situation Room (7/19) that Glenn Simpson, "one of the people who hired a former British spy to write what has now become an infamous dossier" about President Trump, will testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee next week.

Cyprus Records Show Manafort Debt To Pro-Russian Interests. The New York Times (7/19, McIntire) reports that financial records filed last year in Cyprus indicate that Manafort "had been in debt to pro-Russia interests by as much as $17 million before he joined Donald J. Trump's presidential campaign in March 2016." Manafort kept bank accounts in Cyprus "during his years working in Ukraine and investing with a Russian oligarch." The Times says the records "were certified as accurate by an accounting firm as of December 2015, several months before Mr. Manafort joined the Trump campaign, and were filed with Cyprus government authorities in 2016." A spokesman for Manafort "did not address whether the debts might have existed at one time," but "maintained that the Cyprus records were 'stale and do not purport to reflect any current financial arrangements.'"

Source Says Trump Jr. Is "Miserable" With His Father In White House. People (7/18, Westfall) reports that Trump Jr. has been "long outshone by his sister," Ivanka who, along with her husband, Jared Kushner, has a West Wing office and a White House title, "has had a harder time adapting to life after the election." People cites a friend of Trump Jr. and his brother Eric who said the brothers "hate their role as First Sons: 'Eric and Don, they never wanted this.'" People quotes "a source in their circle," as saying, "Don can't do any deals, because he'll be overly scrutinized. He just goes to work every day and is miserable."

Veselnitskaya Says She Would Give Senate Testimony. Natalia Veselnitskaya, the Russian lawyer who met with Trump Jr. last year, said in an interview with the Russian government-funded television network RT that "she would testify before the Senate in order to 'clarify' what had happened during the meeting, the Associated Press reported," USA Today (7/19, Estepa) reports. Veselnitskaya said, "I am ready to clarify the situation behind the mass hysteria, but only through lawyers or testifying in the Senate. ... If the Senate wishes to hear the real story, I will be happy to speak up and share everything I wanted to tell Mr. Trump." Jessica Schneider reported on CNN's Situation Room (7/19) that Veselnitskaya said that "she's happy to disclose details about her meeting with Donald Trump Jr. if she gets a guarantee her family will stay safe."

Free Beacon Analysis: Power A Key Figure In Obama Unmasking Probe. The Washington Free Beacon (7/19, Kredo) reports that the involvement of former UN Ambassador Samantha Power "in the unmasking by former Obama administration officials of sensitive national security information is raising red flags over what insiders view was an attempt by the former administration to undermine President Donald Trump and key figures on his team." The Examiner cites "multiple sources" who say Power "appears to be central to efforts by top Obama administration officials to identify individuals named in classified intelligence community reports related to Trump and his presidential transition team." The House Intelligence Committee "has issued subpoenas for Power and other top Obama administration figures, including former national security adviser Susan Rice, as part of congressional efforts to determine the source of these leaks."

Wasserman Schultz Will Allow Investigators To Scan Her Laptop. Fox News (7/19, Weber) reports on its website that former DNC Chairwoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz "is expected to start cooperating with federal investigators in a separate cybersecurity case, after months of apparent stonewalling." Wasserman Schultz "plans to allow federal investigators to scan a laptop belonging to her as part of a complex probe into allegations of computer theft, over-billing and possible email hacking."

Kelly: States "Nuts" For Not Seeking Election Security Help. Politico (7/19, Toosi) reports that during the opening session of this year's Aspen Security Forum, DHS Secretary Kelly said states are "nuts" if they are not seeking federal help in protecting their election systems from hackers. Kelly said, "All of the input I get from all of the states are 'We don't want you involved in our election process' ... I think they're nuts if they don't [seek help. But] if they don't want the help, they don't have to ask."

Mook, Rhoades To Lead Harvard Anti-Election Hacking Initiative. The Washington Times (7/19, Blake) reports that Hillary Clinton's 2016 campaign manager Robbie Mook and Mitt Romney's 2012 campaign manager Matt Rhoades "will co-lead a Harvard initiative aimed at safeguarding the nation's elections from future cyberattacks." Mook and Rhoades "will join the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at Harvard Kennedy School's newly established 'Defending Digital Democracy' (DDD) Project as 'fellows and co-leaders,' the center announced Tuesday."

Gore Urges Democrats To Hold Off On Treason Accusations. The Hill (7/19, Kurtz) reports in its "In The Know" blog that former Vice President Al Gore said that Democrats should "wait" until Mueller concludes his investigation before suggesting that Trump committed treason. Gore said, "Anything having to do with the investigation, I think people ought to wait for Bob Mueller to conduct his investigation."

Trump Stresses Concerns About Voting Fraud.

The Presidential Advisory Commission on Election Integrity met on Wednesday for the first time at the White House. Media reports took on a decidedly skeptical tone, focusing heavily on Trump's previous unproven claims of widespread voter fraud in last year's White House race. On the CBS Evening News (7/19, story 3, 2:00), for example, Anthony Mason reported that "Trump has set up a panel to investigate election fraud with little evidence, if there is any." CBS' Chip Reid added that the commission's "origin goes back to November, when [Trump] won the Electoral College," but lost "the popular vote to Hillary Clinton by almost three million votes. Mr. Trump has refused to believe it, insisting that millions of people illegally voted for Clinton, but he has cited no evidence. Critics say the President created this commission in a desperate effort to prove that he did win the popular vote."

The Washington Times (7/19, Swoyer) reports that Trump "pushed back Wednesday against critics who say" the panel "was created to support his claim of widespread voter fraud, questioning the intent of some states withholding voter data." The President "said at least 30 states are willing to hand over the information and he wonders why a state would be worried about disclosing its voter data." Said Trump, "This issue is very important to me because through the campaign, and even after, people would come up to me and express their concerns about voter inconsistencies and irregularities which they saw." Trump added, "All public officials have a profound responsibility to protect the integrity of the vote."

The Washington Post (7/19, Wagner, Berman) reports that Trump "repeatedly characterized the group as a 'bipartisan panel' – it includes seven Republicans and five Democrats – and said it is engaging in 'very, very important work.' 'If we want to make American great again, we have to protect the integrity of the vote and our voters,' Trump said." Trump also asserted, "This commission, let me be clear, has no preconceived notions or preordained results. We're fact-finders."

Reuters (7/19, Rampton, Chiacu) reports that during Wednesday's meeting, Trump "pressed his unproven claims of voter fraud," alluding "to his campaign claim that millions of illegal immigrants voted in the November 2016 election. 'Every time voter fraud occurs it cancels out the vote of a lawful citizen,'" said Trump, adding, "Any form of illegal or fraudulent voting, whether by non-citizens or the deceased, and any form of voter suppression or intimidation must be stopped."

The AP (7/19, Williams) reports that Trump "told [the] hand-picked White House" panel "that it must follow where the facts lead it, but suggested that states who have refused to give it detailed information on voter rolls – including names, party affiliations, and voting patterns – probably have something to hide. 'If any state does not want to share this information, one has got to wonder what are they worried about,' Trump said," adding, "There's something – there always is." Trump "also vowed that the commission will be transparent, insisted it is bipartisan and said that its formation was in response to repeated public concerns about problems at the polls."

Roll Call (7/19, Bennett) highlighted Trump's, "If any state does not want to share this information, one has to wonder what they're worried about," statement, and added, "That's when the unpredictable president appeared to venture from his prepared remarks and went right after state officials who are withholding the voter data his administration is seeking. 'And I ask the vice president and I ask the commission: What are they worried about?' he said, referring to Mike Pence, also the commission's chairman."

Politico (7/19, Nussbaum) reported that the President "has repeatedly declared, without evidence, that the American electoral system is rigged and that mass voter fraud took place during the 2016 election." And he "further stoked fears of voter fraud at the start of the commission meeting on Wednesday, saying states that have declined to provide information to the committee are attempting to hide something." The Wall Street Journal (7/19, Ballhaus) headlines its report, "Trump Suggests States Resisting Records Request Have Something To Hide."

Similarly, USA Today (7/19, Przybyla) reports that Trump on Wednesday "cited 'very large numbers of people in certain states' who may have voted fraudulently, resurrecting a claim from the campaign that remains unproven." USA Today adds that "there is no major study showing the incidence of fraud is statistically significant. On the contrary, numerous studies have found the incidence to be low."

McClatchy (7/19, Kumar) reports that Trump "created the elections commission after claiming – without evidence – that millions of people had voted illegally and deprived him of a popular-vote victory. He has argued specifically that fraud denied him a win in three states: California, New Hampshire and Virginia. Independent groups and election officials said there was no evidence of either charge."

Writing for the Washington Post (7/19), Philip Bump discusses the President's remarks, saying that Trump "said the thing he wasn't supposed to say. The meeting was not supposed to be about his conspiracy theory. It was supposed to be about an evenhanded look at voting systems, a lot of chin-stroking academics who were weighing the evidence impartially. So Pence was given the microphone and did a little cleanup."

Dianne Gallagher said on CNN's The Lead (7/19) that Wednesday's meeting "seemed to be more of an idea session. The commission seems to be working on what the full scope or goal of its mission will be." Gallagher added that Pence "play[ed] cleanup, insisting afterward, 'Look, this is not about preconceived notions here.' But the majority of the conversation did focus on who is voting and how they're doing it."

Kobach: Requested Voter Data Already "Publicly Available." Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach (R), the commission's vice chair, said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (7/19) that the pushback from states over the commission's request for voter data "wasn't about ballots. It was actually about the voter rolls. ... The commission asked, 'Can we have the publicly available voter rolls that any person who walks in off the street can have?' The reason you need that is so you can start somewhere when you are looking at things" such as "deceased people on the voter rolls, noncitizens on the voter rolls, things like that." Asked about efforts to have him removed from the commission, Kobach said, "I think they want me removed because I have been fighting voter fraud in my state of Kansas for over six years now. ... I guess they just don't want someone heading the commission as vice chair who knows this issue and knows how to get at the problem."

Kobach: "We May Never Know" If Clinton Won 2016 Popular Vote. USA Today (7/19, Estepa) reports that Kobach "suggested Wednesday 'we may never know' if Hillary Clinton won the popular vote in the 2016 election." Speaking with MSNBC, Kobach "was asked if he believed that Hillary Clinton won the popular vote. Kobach's reply: 'You know, we may never know the answer to that question.'" Kobach later said, "It's impossible to know exactly, if you take out all the ineligible votes, what the final tally would be in that election." And "asked if the votes that won Trump the election are also in doubt, Kobach replied, 'Absolutely.'" The Hill (7/19, Greenwood, Kamisar) also reported on Kobach's remarks.

NAACP Suit Alleges Racial Motivations Behind Commission. Under the headline "NAACP Lawsuit Against Trump Voter Commission Centers Around Alleged Racism," the Washington Free Beacon (7/19, Schoffstall) reports that a lawsuit filed Tuesday against the commission by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund "in part centers around the argument that the commission is racist." The suit states, "The President and his surrogates have...repeatedly described voter fraud in language suggesting that voters of color are more likely to commit voter fraud than white voters, using racially-coded language linking voter fraud to predominantly-minority urban communities and to 'illegals.'" The suit also contends "that Trump's choice of Kobach to serve as vice-chair shows that motivations for the commission in part stem from 'racial discrimination.'"

CBO: ACA Repeal Would Leave 32 Million More Uninsured By 2026.

The AP (7/19) reports that the Congressional Budget Office estimates that the Senate Republican legislation "erasing but not replacing much" of the Affordable Care Act "would mean an additional 32 million uninsured people by 2026." Bloomberg News (7/19, Edney, Tracer) reports that that is "about 10 million more uninsured than the estimated 22 million people who wouldn't be covered under a previous Senate Republican bill to replace many parts" of the ACA, leading Lester Holt to say on NBC Nightly News (7/19, story 2, 2:00) that “10 million Americans who receive their coverage through Obamacare are essentially in limbo.” Reuters (7/19, Becker, Cornwell) reports that the CBO estimates that “17 million would become uninsured next year alone,” while “premiums on individual insurance plans would rise 25 percent next year and double by 2026.” USA Today (7/19, Groppe) writes that “faced with fewer customers with higher expenses, some insurers would likely stop selling plans. About half the country could have no option in the first year after subsidies are eliminated,” and after a decade, “three out of four Americans might not be able to buy a plan on the individual market, according to the CBO.” The New York Post (7/19, Fredericks) reports that the repeal “would cut federal deficits by $473 billion over the coming decade,” according to the CBO. Politico (7/19, Cancryn) also covers the CBO report.

WPost A1 Analysis: Trump “Heavily Engaged” In Immigration Policy.

The Washington Post (7/19, A1, Parker, Nakamura, Rucker) runs a 2,500-word, front-page story headlined “Trump’s Wall: The Inside Story Of How The President Crafts Immigration Policy.” The Post writes that while Trump “is often dismissed by critics as a chief executive uninterested in the policy process,” on immigration he “has been heavily engaged in the administration’s roiling debate. Officials credit him for being relentless in framing illegal immigration as a threat to public safety and to the economic security of American workers, and for turning a border wall into a populist rallying cry.” The Post says the President “is torn over how to address the status of the younger immigrants who were brought to the country illegally by their parents,” but “is far more certain” about building a wall on the US-Mexico border. While “the structure could change in design or function,” his “security argument for it has remained constant.”

Brady: Republicans May Include Elimination Of ACA Tax As Part Of Tax Reform.

Reuters (7/19, Morgan) reports House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady said Wednesday that if the Senate does not overturn the ACA, Republicans will consider using tax reform to eliminate the 3.8 percent Net Investment Income Tax, which is one of the law’s “biggest taxes.” Brady told Reuters that Republicans will look at the tax “in discussions aimed at unveiling a tax reform plan in September. The levy is a weight on economic growth.” Brady added that “tax legislation was unlikely to be able to include the repeal of other Obamacare taxes,” as that “would result in about $1 trillion in additional revenue losses over a decade, cutting into efforts to avoid adding to the federal deficit in the overall tax package.”

Administration Scaling Back Proposed Business Tax Rate Cut Plans.

The New York Times (7/19, Kelly, Rappeport) reports that Administration officials “are scaling back their ambitions to cut the corporate tax rate sharply.” With Republican healthcare legislation “nearly dead,” the Times says Republicans are “apparently taking a more pragmatic approach as they scramble to secure a major legislative victory this year.” A “person briefed on the matter,” said that “discussions among Mr. Trump’s economic advisers over promised tax cuts for corporations and individuals have taken on new urgency,” and a “crucial point of discussions in the coming days...will be the proposed business tax rate.” While an April policy paper from the White House “pegged it at 15 percent for corporations and small businesses alike,” the Times’ source said the proposed rate is “drifting higher” and “may end up in the low 20 percent range.”

Politico Analysis: House Republicans Lack Votes To Pass Their Budget.

Politico (7/19, Bade, Ferris) describes “a serious math problem” facing House Speaker Ryan and House GOP leaders with regard to their budget as “they’re far from the 218 votes needed to pass it on the floor, according to multiple GOP aides and lawmakers.” Politico says “it looks increasingly likely that Republicans will punt once again on the most fundamental task of governing: passing a budget,” leaving Republicans “exposed to criticism at home and undermin[ing] their chances of moving on to” tax reform, “another key agenda item.”

Handling Of Spending Bills Exposing “Tensions” Within House GOP. The Washington Post (7/19, Debonis) reports that House GOP “leaders announced Tuesday that they plan to bring a package of 2018 spending bills to a vote next week,” which “would probably be the last item passed in the chamber before members depart for a five-week summer recess. But in the latest instance in which the House GOP has flinched from the basic responsibilities of governing, that package is set to include only four of the 12 yearly appropriations bills. That has exposed tensions inside the GOP over how its leaders have approached the annual spending cycle.” Said Rep. Mark Walker (R-NC), chair of the conservative Republican Study Committee, “There is an overwhelming frustration that this looks like this is the same pattern, that we are on the same spinning hamster wheel that we have been on for the last few years.”

WPost Analysis: Federal Workers Feel Impact Of Trump’s Spending Priorities.

The Washington Post (7/19, Rein) reports that “President Trump’s ascendancy” has been felt across the federal workforce, “upending their sense of mission or empowering it, depending on where they sit.” While employees in areas where “Trump is putting resources and priorities...describe a sense of validation and optimism,” employees where he is “dismissive of their mission and their value as public servants” are “anxious, discouraged and sometimes hostile.” Meanwhile, “in offices where the White House envisions severe budget cuts and has set in motion buyouts, early-retirement offers and possible layoffs, civil servants are ill at ease, their futures uncertain.”

Samuelson: Large Deficits Are Likely To Continue.

In his Washington Post (7/19) column, Robert Samuelson writes that “chronic deficits reflect a basic political impasse that can be broken only if majorities in Congress do things they’ve refused to do: trim Social Security benefits; raise taxes significantly; control health spending.” Large deficits, he adds, “are likely to persist until some sort of debt crisis — by no means inevitable — forces action or the United States’ political leaders decide to engage the unpopular question of paying for popular government.”

Trump Nominates Sam Clovis To Key USDA Scientific Post.

The Washington Post (7/19, Eilperin, Mooney) reports that President Trump nominated Sam Clover, “a talk radio host who has challenged the scientific consensus that human activity has been the primary driver of climate change, to serve in the Agriculture Department’s top scientific post.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Avoiding War With Iran.” A New York Times (7/20) editorial argues that “the last thing the United States needs is another war in the Middle East. Yet a drumbeat of provocative words, outright threats and actions — from President Trump and some of his top aides as well as Sunni Arab leaders and American activists — is raising tensions that could lead to armed conflict with Iran.” While it acknowledges that “Tehran invites some of this hostility,” the Times says the US and Iran “also share some interests, like fighting the Islamic State. So why not take advantage of all the diplomatic tools, including opening a dialogue, used before to manage difficult and even hostile governments?”

Washington Post.

“If We Could Trust Trump His Chat With Putin Wouldn’t Be Problem. But We Can’t.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/19) argues that although “it is possible to object to [President] Trump’s impulsive style and tendency to bypass established channels, the problem is not so much that he sought out [Russian President Vladimir] Putin for an informal chat,” but “the deeply troubling and unresolved questions about his relationship with Russia, which mean that any such contact raises serious — and understandable — concerns.” The Post adds that the larger issue is “the epidemic of mistrust Mr. Trump has created about his ties to Russia, which sensationalizes contacts that might otherwise be unremarkable.”

“Watch Your Wallets: Sessions Just Turned On The Asset Forfeiture Spigot.” A Washington Post (7/19) editorial calls for reform of the “scandal-plagued” asset forfeiture program which has been reinstated by the Justice Department. While Attorney General Sessions “said he would instruct department officials to use an ‘abundance of caution’ for seizures involving vehicles and residences, where many mistakes have occurred,” the Post argues that is insufficient and calls on Congress “to consider legislation introduced by Rep. Darrell Issa (R-Calif.) with bipartisan support that would increase the government’s burden of proof before seizing assets.”

“The Purple Line Resurrected.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/19) writes that the US DC Circuit Court of Appeals’ reinstatement on Wednesday of the environmental approval for the Federal Transit Administration’s construction of the Purple Line signals a potential resurrection of what could be “the Washington area’s most important new transit link.” The court order “gives the state of Maryland a fighting chance at reclaiming $900 million in federal funding for the Purple Line that was blocked at the 11th hour by U.S. District Judge Richard J. Leon.” The Post concludes by noting that the lawsuit blocking the Purple Line “will continue for now,” but that regardless of the legal dispute, the Purple Line “would provide an enormous convenience to tens of thousands of daily commuters and a means of revitalizing aging neighborhoods in its path.”

Wall Street Journal.

“A Bad GOP Dream.” Citing a letter from 10 state attorneys general to Attorney General Sessions asking that the DHS Secretary end the DACA program and threatening to sue if the Administration does not act, a Wall Street Journal (7/19) editorial says state level Republicans are trying to pressure Trump into deporting Dreamers.

“Betsy DeVos’s Due Process.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/19) writes that liberal opponents to Education Secretary DeVos’ recent efforts to review the adjudication process for campus sexual assault cases covered under Title IX law are wrongly outraged. The Journal contends that Secretary DeVos’ investigation into Obama-era Title IX guidance that established more stringent requirements for proving innocence introduces much-needed due process to an area of law in which the accused have little recourse despite frequently being innocent, according to data from the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education.

“The Wolves Of Long Island.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/19) writes that the Securities and Exchange Commission appears to be performing an often-overlooked duty of protecting smaller investors, as evidenced by the SEC’s charging of 13 individuals last week in a Long Island penny stock scheme that cost more than 100 small investors millions. The Journal concludes that the SEC under Chairman Clayton deserves credit for making small investor protection a focus of SEC enforcement.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "[President Trump] told everyone not to go home for break before they get [the healthcare reform bill] done. It was like the rewind of Sunday night on 'Game of Thrones.'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "The Russians are worried that fidget spinners are a Western plot to zombie-fy their children. iPads are our plan. Fidgets just give them something to do while they're charging."

Stephen Colbert: "The [healthcare] bill is less popular than the cereal parts of Lucky Charms, or as I call them, disappointment between marshmallows."

Stephen Colbert: "The White House statement goes on to say that the insinuation that the White House has tried to hide a second meeting [between Trump and Putin] is false, malicious, and absurd. Strong words. And I think we've also found Trump's re-election slogan."

Trevor Noah: "Russia is banning fidget spinners. And just like that, there goes Russia's reputation as a fun country."

Trevor Noah: "I'm starting to think Donald Trump never wants us to stop talking about Russia because then we would start talking about the fact that he doesn't know how to be President."

Jimmy Fallon: "A new book just came out claiming that last summer, President Trump yelled at former campaign manager Paul Manafort and said, 'You treat me like a baby.' But Trump said it wasn't a complaint; it was an order."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump spoke at a lunch with Republican senators today, and said that his GOP friends who opposed the party's healthcare bill may not be his friends much longer. Just so you know, Mr. President, you're supposed to threaten people with things they don't want."

Seth Meyers: "During his lunch with Republican senators today, President Trump said that the only thing Democrats are good at is screaming, 'Everyone is going to die.' Whereas Republicans are the only ones who know how to get it done."

Seth Meyers: "A new poll found that 32 percent of Americans who voted for President Trump said they don't believe that Donald Trump Jr. met with a Russian lawyer last year. What? That's an established fact. That's like not believing in global warm...oh, okay. Yeah, all right."

Interior Secretary To Visit Las Cruces Amid Monuments Review.

The AP (7/26, Contreras) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "scheduled to visit Las Cruces this week in connection with the Trump administration's review of Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument." The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/26, Coleman) reports that "on Thursday, Zinke will tour the Organ Mountains Desert Peaks National Monument by helicopter then meet with elected officials, ranchers, academics, border security experts, and others local stakeholders 'who represent all sides of the issue,' according to the Interior Department." On Friday, Zinke is scheduled to "hike with southern New Mexico veterans and then hold meetings with the Mescalero Apache, Fort Sill Tribe, and Friends of Organ Mountains Desert Peaks ". On Saturday, Zinke will "hike and ride horseback with Sens. Martin Heinrich and Tom Udall, both of whom are opposed to shrinking either monument."

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (7/26, Soular) reports that Zinke won't attend "a Thursday evening gathering of monument supporters, including local elected officials, at the Las Cruces Convention Center." The article notes that "most of Zinke's itinerary is closed to the press and to the public at-large, though a portion of the schedule includes invited attendees from different sides of the monument debate."

The Santa Fe New Mexican (7/26, Oxford) notes that "Zinke's agenda does not include a visit to the Rio Grande del Norte near Taos, though it is also part of the secretary's review."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Baytown \(TX\) Sun (7/26), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/26, Coleman), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/26, Contreras), the Midland \(TX\) Reporter-Telegram (7/26, Contreras), KLTV-TV Tyler \(TX\) Tyler, TX (7/26, Contreras), KROE-TV Albuquerque \(NM\) Albuquerque, NM (7/26), KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (7/26), and KOB-TV Albuquerque \(NM\) Albuquerque, NM (7/26).

Editorial: NM Monuments: Love Them & Leave Them Be. In an editorial, the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (7/27) urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to "keep Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument near Las Cruces and Rio Grande del Norte National Monument west of Questa just the way they are." The paper points to their "historical, cultural, geographical and environmental importance," as well as "the wide and deep groundswell of public support." It asserts that "in this highly partisan world, it's hard to argue with something that has the backing of 16 local government bodies; multiple chambers of commerce; several Indian tribes and pueblos; 375-plus businesses; hunting, fishing and environmental groups; and dozens of civic organizations."

Ryan Zinke Expected In Nevada On Monday For Monument Review.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/26, Brean, Martin) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is expected on Monday to visit Nevada to hear input on two national monuments in the state. The Interior Department has "not yet announced the visit, but Nye County Commission Chairman Dan Schinhofen said he and other local officials are scheduled to meet with Zinke Monday at the community center in Overton, 65 miles northeast of Las Vegas." Also, "a congressional aide confirmed the visit, saying Zinke's schedule includes a meeting in Mesquite with the monument advocacy and stewardship group Friends of Gold Butte at 10 a.m., followed by roundtable with state and local officials in Overton at noon."

Meanwhile, the Pahrump \(NV\) Valley Times (7/26, Brean) reports that "the Democratic congressman who represents the area said he feels left out of the process." At a news conference in Las Vegas on Friday, Rep. Ruben Kihuen "called it 'highly disrespectful' for Zinke not to tell him about his upcoming visit or respond to a letter the congressman sent to Zinke's office a week ago about the ongoing national monuments review." Interior Department press secretary Heather Swift "disputed Kihuen's claims of being ignored." She said in an email, "The congressman's letter will be received by the Office of Congressional Affairs and be processed accordingly. The secretary is on Capitol Hill quite often and always enjoys talking with members about local issues while he's there."

Ex-Interior Secretary Jewell Blasts Trump's Monument Review.

The AP (7/26, McCOMBS) reports that former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell "blasted President Donald Trump's review of two dozen national monuments Wednesday, calling it a move that is out of step with what Americans want that puts the Republican on the wrong side of conservationist history." Speaking to attendees of the Outdoor Retailer show being held this week in Salt Lake City, Jewell "said Trump should be reviewing what public lands are deserving of new protections, not trying to reverse measured decisions by past presidents to safeguard areas that include ancient cliff dwellings, towering sequoia trees, deep canyons and ocean habitats where seals, whales and sea turtles roam." Jewell said, "President Trump is playing games with our public lands, treating the monuments like they are contestants on a game show. But the consequences, as you know, are real and devastating and create uncertainty for businesses and uncertainty for residents."

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/26, Maffly) reports that Jewell's remarks were "made during what was her first major appearance since leaving office in January." Jewell said "she was hesitant to chastise her successor so early in his tenure, given Trump's push to undo much of the President Obama's conservation agenda." She said, "We have very real threats facing the public lands we love so much, and so I intend to speak up thoughtfully, respectful and factually."

The Deseret \(UT\) News (7/26, O'Donoghue) report that "later, at a meeting with the Deseret News and KSL editorial boards, Jewell said the only change that should come to Bears Ears is congressionally passed legislation that would clarify and strengthen management responsibilities for Native American tribes." She "noted that such unified support among Native American tribes toward a common goal is rare, and speaks to the long history and traditions held by the Bears Ears landscape and its importance." Jewell "emphasized, too, that the monument's designation was inevitable in the face of the failure of the massive Public Lands Initiative legislation to move forward."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/26, McCombs), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (7/26, McCOMBS), and the Fredericksburg \(VA\) Free Lance-Star (7/26, McCOMBS).

Outdoor Industry Flexes Political Muscle In US Land Fight. The AP (7/26, McCombs) reports that "outdoor recreation industry leaders aren't going quietly as they stage their last trade show in Utah before moving it to Colorado." According to the article, "as they said goodbye and thank you Wednesday to Salt Lake City for hosting the expo for two decades, some industry leaders also criticized Utah's Republican leaders for their hard-line opposition to a new national monument and for their efforts to seize control of federal lands." The article says that "several heavy-hitters in the industry spoke at the start of the show, saying the decision to relocate to Denver is part of their effort to flex the industry's collective power and support preservation of public lands.”

Dozens Of GOP Senators Urge Trump To Expand Offshore Drilling.

The Daily Caller (7/26, Pearce) reports that “three dozen Republican senators sent a letter to Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke Wednesday supporting a plan that would increase access and development of offshore drilling along the U.S. east coast.” The Hill (7/26, Cama, Henry) reports that in the letter, “the senators said the government should write a drilling plan that would allow oil and gas leasing in areas not included in the 2017-2022 outline finalized by the Obama administration.” The senators wrote, “Offshore projects often have long lead times, so it is important to start today to make sure that the United States is planning for the future to maintain its steady and stable supply of production. We look forward to working with the Department of the Interior as you advance the new five-year program.”

Zinke Call Has Sullivan ‘Very Concerned’ After Tuesday Vote.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (7/26, Brehmer) reports that “according to Sen. Dan Sullivan’s spokesman Mike Anderson, Sullivan took a phone call from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Wednesday.” Anderson said, “As a result of that call, he’s very concerned about Alaska’s economy.” The article speculates that the call may be tied to Sen. Lisa Murkowski’s opposition to Republican efforts to reform health insurance.

Zinke Incorrectly Identifies Veterans Affairs Secretary As A ‘Fellow Veteran’.

The AP (7/26, Daly) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday “incorrectly identified Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin as a ‘fellow veteran’” in a photo the former Montana congressman “tweeted from Air Force One.” Zinke, who is a former Navy SEAL, “tweeted a photo of himself with Shulkin, Energy Secretary Rick Perry and White House adviser Kellyanne Conway on the way to Youngstown, Ohio, Tuesday with President Donald Trump.” Zinke tweeted, “Aboard #AirForceOne w/ fellow veterans @SecShulkin & @SecretaryPerry for @POTUS #AmericanHeroesWeek in #Ohio.” Perry is a veteran of the Air Force. Shulkin, is a medical doctor, who “was appointed by President Barack Obama as the VA’s undersecretary for health in 2015 and became secretary this year.” He didn’t “serve in the military.”

Trump Interior Nominee Has A History Of Contempt For The Agency She’s About To Lead.

The Huffington Post (7/26, D’angelo) reports that former Texas Comptroller Susan Combs, who has been nominated to serve as assistant secretary of the Interior Department’s Office of Policy, Management and Budget, could “join the likes of Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt and Energy Secretary Rick Perry as top Trump officials with vehement opposition to agencies they’re tasked with helping to lead.” The article notes that Combs “regularly sparred with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over species listings, petitioning in 2015 to have protections removed for an endangered songbird native to central Texas.” Last week, “some 70 conservation groups sent a letter to the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee urging members to reject the nomination, describing Combs as someone who ‘built her career favoring big corporations and special interests over the needs and survival of imperiled species.’”

Interior Not Top-Heavy Enough To Relieve Field.

The Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (7/26) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “repeatedly said he wants to fill growing staff shortfalls in national parks and refuges by moving employees from headquarters and regional offices to ‘front line’ field positions.” However, “figures obtained by Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility (PEER) indicate that there are not enough bodies in these agencies’ rear echelons to fill the gaps.” PEER Executive Director Jeff Ruch said, “Not only are there fewer staff in many of these central offices, but the number of parks and refuges they support and the complexity of the management issues they face have both grown substantially during the past decade.”

Is Bears Ears Too Big? New Poll Says Utahns Split On Shrinking The Monument.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/26, Maffly) reports that “while Utah’s political leaders are largely united in arguing the new Bears Ears National Monument must be shrunk, a far smaller share of Utahns agrees that the 1.3 million-acre monument covers too much terrain in San Juan County.” A new Salt Lake Tribune-Hinckley Institute poll “found that 43 percent of registered voters believe the controversial monument is too big, while 39 percent disagreed.” The poll also “found most Utahns believe Congress should consider amending the Antiquities Act to limit presidential authority to designate monuments.”

Additional coverage of the review of the monument was provided by the Salt Lake City Weekly (7/26, Harris, Dougherty).

9-Year-Old Launches Nonprofit To Fight Trump’s Monument Reviews.

The Huffington Post (7/26, D’angelo) reports that “in a stand” against the Trump Administration’s review of national monuments, nine-year-old Hawaii resident Robbie Bond “announced Tuesday that he has launched a nonprofit called Kids Speak for Parks, and he plans to take his message to all 27 monuments targeted by a pair of executive orders signed by Trump in April.” The goal, he said, “is to protect, advocate for and educate others about America’s national monuments and parks, which he fears will disappear, shrink or face damaging development.” He said, “I want to make sure that our national monuments are available for my kids and for future generations.”

Outdoor Recreation Credited With $8.2 Billion Annual Impact On Maine’s Economy.

The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (7/26, Holyoke) reports that “the outdoor recreational economy is a major driver that injects $8.2 billion in spending” to Maine “each year, according to a report released by the Outdoor Industry Association on Wednesday.” Also, the outdoor economy “generates 76,000 jobs in the state, according to the report.” Amy Roberts, the OIA’s executive director, said, “No matter your political affiliation, where you live, or your walk of life, the outdoors brings us together. From Maine to California, consumers are spending more on outdoor recreation as millions of Americans depend upon it for their livelihoods.”

The Busy Life Of The Secretary Of The Interior.

In an editorial, the Narrowsburg \(NY\) River Reporter (7/26) takes a look at some of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s most important decisions since taking office. Although it might seem like “Zinke’s job is...all business, conflict or darkness,” the paper says that “he is in a position where, from time to time, he can seem like a generous and loving grandpa.” The editorial lauds Zinke for “making the right decision” on the Upper Delaware Wild and Scenic River, and hopes “that a similar sensitivity to the needs of other ecosystems and communities becomes more evident in his future decisions.”

We Need To Preserve America’s Rich Investment In The Seas.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (7/26, Lautenbacher, Contributor), retired Navy Vice Adm. Conrad C. Lautenbacher Jr., argues that reducing protections for marine monuments “would be a serious disservice to America.” Lautenbacher asserts that “while reviewing monument status, priority one should be ensuring that we have appropriately protected places for sea life to thrive, such as in Papahānaumokuākea and Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monuments.” He concludes that “instead of removing protections, we should be asking how we can add to our investment in a healthy ocean by expanding our existing marine monuments.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Federal Official Outlines Economic Development Goals To Promote ‘Robust’ Tribal Economies.

The West Fargo \(ND\) Pioneer (7/26, Dalrymple) reports that “a Department of Interior official visited the Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara Nation Tuesday, July 25, outlining his goals for improving economic development of Indian Country.” Gavin Clarkson, deputy assistant secretary of Indian Affairs for policy and economic development, “told attendees of the MHA Energy Symposium how he wants to change federal policies to empower tribes economically.” Clarkson said, “We need to have robust, self-sustaining tribal economies. When tribes are prosperous, so too are surrounding states.” Highlighting the importance of energy development for tribal economic development, “Clarkson said and his goal is to remove hurdles, such as burdensome regulations, that slow down development on reservations.”

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Supports Goal Of Red River Bill.

The Wichita Falls \(TX\) Times Record News (7/26, Ingle) reports that “a representative of the Bureau of Land Management said in written testimony to a U.S. Senate committee that the federal agency supports the goal of legislation filed to resolve the Red River land dispute between Texas landowners and the federal agency.” John Ruhs, acting deputy director of operations for the BLM, “went before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee’s Subcommittee on Public Lands, Forests, and Mining in regards to 12 pieces of legislation, including Texas Republican Sen. John Cornyn’s Senate Bill 90.” Ruhs “verbally told the panel that the Department of Interior, which the BLM falls under, supports the goal of the bill but wants to work with the senator on a few modifications.”

Man Gets 68 Years In Prison In Bundy Ranch Standoff Case.

The AP (7/26, Ritter) reports that on Wednesday, Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro in Las Vegas sentenced Gregory Burleson of Phoenix “to 68 years in prison for his role as a gunman in a standoff that stopped federal agents from rounding up cattle near the Nevada ranch of anti-government activist Cliven Bundy three years ago.” The AP notes that prosecutors “had sought a maximum sentence of 73 years for...Burleson after he was convicted of threatening and assaulting a federal officer, obstruction and traveling across state lines in aid of extortion.” However, Navarro “knocked five years off the recommendation, noting that the 53-year-old Burleson has gone blind, has serious health issues and was once an informant for the FBI.”

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/26, Wilson) reports that Burleson is “a member of Arizona militia groups.” Assistant U.S. Attorney Nicholas Dickinson said Burleson “failed to show any remorse for his actions in Bunkerville, and that he came to the town with a small arsenal of weapons, knives, and swords.”

The Los Angeles Times (7/26, Montero) says the trial of Burleson and five others “earlier this year underwent intense scrutiny as a pre-cursor to Cliven Bundy’s trial scheduled for later this year.” The Times says “the government suffered a blow in April when only Burleson and Todd Engel were found guilty of crimes including assaulting a federal officer, obstruction of justice and interstate travel to aid extortion while the other counts against the remaining defendants resulted in a hung jury.” Eric Parker, O. Scott Drexler, Richard Lovelien and Steven Stewart will all be retried.

Congressman: How To Protect Jersey Shore From Trump’s Reckless Policies.

In an op-ed for NJ News (7/26, Pallone, Brune), Rep. Frank Pallone Jr. and Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune write in opposition to offshore drilling in the Atlantic. They argue that “drilling poses serious risks not just to the environment but also to local economies.” The authors note that “New Jersey beaches are a primary driver of tourism, supporting 312,000 jobs and generating $38 billion in economic activity for the state each year.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Red Wolf Proposed Changes By US Fish And Wildlife Service Draws Opposition.

The Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (7/26, Moody) reports that “proposed changes to how and where to manage the world’s only wild population of red wolves have drawn much criticism over the past week.” A public comment period “ending at midnight Monday produced more than 12,200 comments on the proposed rule changes posted online.” According to the article, “many of them were made by people who oppose the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s plan to scale back the territory of the endangered, dwindling and wild population of the species that is found only in Eastern North Carolina.”

Biologist Skips Private R-Project Meeting After NPPD Inquiry.

The North Platte \(NE\) Telegraph (7/26, Bain) reports that “tensions are high after Sandhills landowners and a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist planned to meet about a proposed power transmission line, and the Nebraska Public Power District objected.” The meeting was “in reference to the power district’s proposed R-Project, a 345,000-volt transmission line that would extend from Sutherland to Holt County, about 225 miles long.” Biologist Robert Harms “said he was asked to meet with landowners and answer questions regarding the USFWS environmental impact study. ”

Wolf Plan Needs More Public Outreach, Education.

The Arizona Daily Sun (7/26) editorializes “in the case of wolves, there appears to be no middle ground.” It notes that “the latest draft plan by the feds puts implementation and enforcement in the hands of state game managers – the same people, say critics, who are the reason the federal Endangered Species Act is needed.” Despite the “compromise,” Arizona wildlife managers “continue to oppose any new wolf releases, much less any growth in the packs.” Meanwhile, “wolf advocates and conservationists are dismayed by more state involvement in the plan and its disregard for northern reintroduction.” The paper urges “Fish and Wildlife to take a go-slow approach to reintroduction that balances sustainable pack numbers with minimal levels of cattle predation.”

National Park Service

House Passes Clay-Smith Bill Directing Park Service To Commemorate Civil Rights Movement.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (7/26, Raasch) reports that the House on Wednesday passed a bill by Rep. William Lacy Clay called the “African-American Civil Rights Network Act of 2017.” The legislation authorizes the National Park Service to “establish a program to preserve and protect the memory of the people and the places that were significant in the struggle to secure equal rights for African-Americans,” according to Clay. The bill requires the NPS “to note sites significant to the civil rights movement, and to coordinate federal, state and local activities to ‘commemorate, honor, and interpret the history of the African-American civil rights movement during the period from 1939 through 1968,' according to a background of the legislation by Clay's staff."

Cuyahoga Valley National Park Awarded $1.5 Million For New Boston Mills Visitor Center.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (7/26, Conn) reports that the Cuyahoga Valley National Park has "received nearly $1.5 million for its new visitor center through the National Park Service Centennial Challenge program." Park Superintendent Craig Kenkel in a statement, "This is a great example of how government can work effectively with nonprofit organizations to secure funding for the future of our nation's treasures. We are grateful for the commitment that Northeast Ohioans have shown for providing excellent services to visitors to CVNP, through donations to this project."

Daines Backs Yellowstone Protections, Not Tester's Bill.

The AP (7/26) reports that Sen. Steve Daines "says he opposes mining in some areas outside Yellowstone National Park but stopped short of endorsing proposed legislation on the matter from" Sen. Jon Tester. Daines "appeared to speak favorably" of Tester's "bill to block Yellowstone-area mining during a Wednesday hearing before a senate committee." However, "a spokeswoman said afterward the Republican still is weighing the best way to achieve the withdrawal of lands outside the park from future mining."

The Latest: Gold Mining Proposal Near Yellowstone Advances. The AP (7/26) reports that "Montana environmental regulators say a Canadian company can move forward with plans to explore for gold in an area north of Yellowstone National Park despite local opposition." The Montana Department of Environmental Quality on Wednesday "released a months-long evaluation of Lucky Minerals' exploration proposal." State officials said the firm "had agreed to extensive water quality and wildlife monitoring plans."

Fee Hikes Proposed For Padre Island National Seashore.

The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (7/26, Sikes) reports that "fees are likely to increase soon for park entry and certain amenities at Padre Island National Seashore." According to park officials, "included in the proposal is a doubling of the seven-day single vehicle pass to $20 from $10, as well as a cost hike from $20 to $40 for an annual pass." If adopted, fees would increase Jan. 1.

DC's Operation Desert Storm Memorial Receives $100K Donation.

WTOP-FM Washington (7/26, Hensley) reports that "Pilot Flying J, a chain of truck stops in the United States and Canada, announced Wednesday that it donated $100,000 to help build the National Desert Storm War Memorial." Scott Stump, CEO of the National Desert Storm War Memorial, said, "There is a 25-step process that we have followed to ensure this memorial is built; and we have been able to secure the funding necessary to quickly move through the process. Once the National Park Service determines the location of the Memorial, we move to the next phase of rigorous fundraising and finalization of the design concepts."

Feds Seek Public Comment On Assateague Beach Design.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (7/26, Vaughn) reports that "visitors and locals alike this week had the chance to see conceptual designs for a new recreational beach planned for Assateague Island National Seashore in Virginia." The article says that "an informal open house was held July 25, 26 and 27 at the Herbert H. Bateman Educational and Administrative Center at Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge to give people a chance to see alternative designs being considered for parking and the road to the new beach." The alternative designs were "developed by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Park Service through a collaborative process involving local stakeholders, including the town of Chincoteague and Accomack County." The public comment period is open until Aug. 24.

Chinese Tourists Come For Park.

The Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (7/26, Freedman) reports that "in mid-May, at the annual National Parks Day luncheon in Cody, Yellowstone Superintendent Dan Wenk said Chinese tourists have by far become the largest group of international visitors to the Park." According to the article, of "the 17 percent foreign visitors, Chinese people represented 34 percent or basically one-third of all Yellowstone tourists from beyond U.S. boundaries." The article notes that "as summer seasonal staff in 2016, Yellowstone hired three Mandarin-speaking rangers and in 2017 hired four."

Interior Provides $635,885 For Micronesia Region.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (7/26) reports that acting Interior assistant secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula has "made available $635,885 for natural and cultural resource protection for all U.S. island jurisdictions in the Micronesia region." Pula said, "It is reassuring to see the range of initiatives we have been able to support with this funding, from managing fisheries that support people's livelihoods to suppressing the impacts of the damaging coconut rhinoceros beetle and little fire ant. We are happy to support and bolster the collaborative efforts of conservation-minded leaders across the Micronesia region."

Financial Crisis Worries Head To Virgin Islands While Puerto Rico Recovers.

In a piece for the St. Thomas Source (7/25, Walton), James Walton writes that United States Virgin Islands government officials are hoping "to stave off the same kind of fiscal collapse that its neighbor Puerto Rico has encountered." Walton says that "the general debts of the Virgin Islands are smaller than those in Puerto Rico, which effectively made them declare bankruptcy two months ago during May 2017." But "they're combination of factors including the insufficient tax revenue, a pension delicate system, the loss of a major employer and a new reluctance in the markets to give the Virgin Islands any more money which has made it almost impossible for the government to meet its obligations."

At Northwest Clinic, Patients See A (Rare) Marshallese M.D., Hear A Hearty 'lakwe!'

KUAR-FM Little Rock, AR (7/25, Froelich) reports that Dr. Sheldon Riklon, "one of only two U.S. trained Marshallese doctors in the world," moved "from the Hawaii islands last year to Northwest Arkansas where the largest population of migrants from the Republic of the Marshall Islands in the world now reside." Riklon "practices family medicine at Community Clinic, a federally qualified health center which last year served more than 36,000 middle- to low-income patients in Benton and Washington Counties, thousands of them Marshallese."

Trump Announces Ban On Transgender People Serving In US Military.

President Trump's announcement via Twitter on Wednesday that transgender persons will not be permitted to serve in the US military receives heavy media coverage, most of which is negative, highlighting criticism of the policy from lawmakers on both sides of the aisle as well as LGBT advocacy groups. Coverage also points out that the move, which reportedly caught Pentagon officials by surprise, came as Trump was facing criticism from social conservatives over his public criticism of Attorney General Sessions.

In a series of tweets, Trump wrote, "After consultation with my Generals and military experts, please be advised that the United States Government will not accept or allow...Transgender individuals to serve in any capacity in the US Military. Our military must be focused on decisive and overwhelming...victory and cannot be burdened with the tremendous medical costs and disruption that transgender in the military would entail. Thank you."

Lester Holt said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/26, lead story, 3:15, Holt) that in "tweeting a major reversal of policy," Trump "may have bypassed his own military," and in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (7/26, lead story, 2:50, Mason), Major Garrett said the Pentagon and Congress were caught "completely off guard" by the announcement. Jonathan Karl said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/26, lead story, 3:50, Muir) the Pentagon "directed all questions to the White House, making it clear the change came from the President himself." But, "the White House couldn't provide answers to the most basic questions. What happens to transgender service members now? Are they immediately thrown out of the military?" White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders: "That's something that the Department of Defense and the White House will have to work together as implementation takes place and is done so lawfully."

USA Today (7/27, Hafner) reports that while Trump cited the "tremendous medical costs" involved with having transgender soldiers in the military, a "report for the Pentagon last year found that transition-related care would cost between about $2.4 and $8.4 million per year," which is "roughly the cost of four of Trump's trips to Mar-A-Lago." The Washington Post (7/26, Ingraham) says "total military spending on erectile dysfunction medicines amounts to $84 million annually, according to an analysis by the Military Times – 10 times the cost of annual transition-related medical care for active duty transgender servicemembers." The New York Times (7/26, Davis, Cooper) reports that Trump's decision to make the announcement on Twitter "raised immediate questions about how the shift would be put into effect and what would happen to openly transgender people on active duty." The AP (7/26, Burns, Lucey) says Trump "abruptly declared" the ban, "catching the Pentagon flat-footed and unable to explain what it called Trump's 'guidance.'" The Los Angeles Times (7/26, Bennett) says the Pentagon was "surprised" by the "unexpected announcement," and adds that Sanders "acknowledged" that the military "has not had a chance to decide how to put such a ban into effect." Sanders said, "Sometimes you have to make a decision and once he made a decision, he didn't feel it was necessary to hold that decision."

The Washington Post (7/26, Phillip, Gibbons-Neff) reports that Trump's declaration, which is "a reversal of the Obama administration decision that would have allowed" transgender people to serve, came after Defense Secretary Mattis "delayed the implementation of the plan to accept transgender troops by six months." BuzzFeed (7/26, Lewis) reports, "At the Pentagon, the first of the three tweets raised fears that the president was getting ready to announce strikes on North Korea or some other military action. Many said they were left in suspense for nine minutes, the time between the first and second tweet. Only after the second tweet did military officials receive the news the president was announcing a personnel change on Twitter."

Politico (7/26, Siu) reports that VA Secretary Shulkin said he "was not aware" that Trump would make the announcement, but he "backed up Trump's assertion that transgender service members have additional costs." In a radio interview, Shulkin said, "Certainly, when you personalize care, there are added costs," Shulkin said. "Transgender veterans do require staff that are trained to be able to deal with their situation appropriately so that they can get the care that they want with the dignity and the outcomes that they deserve."

The Hill (7/26, Bowden) says "multiple Republican senators broke" with Trump over the announcement, while Aaron Blake writes in a piece for the Washington Post (7/26) "The Fix" blog that the move is "another piece of political malpractice and poor planning from the White House." Blake highlights criticism from Republican lawmakers, including Sen. John McCain, who said, "Any American who meets current medical and readiness standards should be allowed to continue serving," and "criticized Trump for announcing the new policy on Twitter." Likewise, a spokeswoman for Sen. Joni Ernst expressed the senator's opposition to the policy, and "even...GOP senators from heavily conservative states" like Sens. Richard Shelby and Orrin Hatch made "critical statements."

Democrats were also very critical of the move. Bloomberg News (7/26, Olorunnipa) says House Minority Leader Pelosi "blasted" the decision as "vile and hateful" and "said in a statement that it would 'blindsides thousands of patriotic Americans already serving with honor and bravery.'" Rep. Eric Swalwell said on CNN's Situation Room (7/26), "It shouldn't matter who you are...only who you are for, and if you're for the United States, you should be able to serve in our armed services. This takes us very, very backwards." Swalwell added that "the will of the House of Representatives is to oppose this. We voted on similar amendment last week. That was defeated."

The decision, Reuters (7/26, Stewart, Chiacu) reports, was also "condemned by critics as 'raw prejudice' and a political stunt." The AP (7/26, Cray) says that while "most LGBT-rights activists never believed Donald Trump's campaign promises," with Wednesday's action, "they now see him as openly hostile." The AP Adds that "leaders of major advocacy groups" cast the declaration "as an appeal to the portion of his conservative base that opposes the recent civil-rights gains by the LGBT community." Bloomberg News (7/26, Olorunnipa) also highlights that Trump's announcement came a day after he "provok[ed] criticism from social conservatives and southern senators for his continuing public disparagement of Attorney General Jeff Sessions, the most prominent cultural traditionalist in his cabinet."

Jonathan Swan writes on Axios (7/26) that the issue "had been quietly burning for months, with social conservative leaders pressing the White House on why it hadn't made a decision." Following the failure of an amendment to reverse the policy, "House conservatives, especially Rep. Mark Meadows of the House Freedom Caucus, started threatening not to vote for the military appropriations bill unless the transgender issues were resolved." Meanwhile, inside the White House, "Mike Pence, Rick Dearborn, Marc Short, Steve Bannon and Paul Teller were pushing to overturn" the policy and Meadows' "intervention empowered Bannon and others to make the point to Trump that the security bill, which included Trump priorities like the border wall, could be derailed unless they handled this issue now."

The New York Times (7/26, Philipps) says "thousands" of "transgender veterans and members of the military...grappled with a mix of anger, sadness and fear" following Trump's announcement. Some, "were left to wonder if they would face a quick discharge from the military or if scheduled medical appointments would be canceled," and "nearly all expressed dismay at what they saw as a misguided action that could purge the military of untold numbers of highly skilled and dedicated service members and bring back an era when many troops lived in secrecy and shame." Chelsea Manning, who McClatchy (7/26, Irby) describes as "the most well-known transgender military figure, sharply disparaged" the move and "questioned the reasoning Trump gave for the ban and calling his actual motivation 'cowardice.'" Manning tweeted, "so, biggest baddest most $$ military on earth cries about a few trans people but funds the F-35? sounds like cowardice."

In a separate story, CBS Evening News (7/26, story 2, 2:30) anchor Anthony Mason pointed out that Trump's announcement came on the same day that President Truman in 1948 "declared that all members of the armed services would have equal treatment and opportunity, regardless of race, color, religion, or national origin. Transgender service members say they deserve the same." A Los Angeles Times (7/26) editorial calls Trump's announcement "deeply troubling," arguing that he "essentially called for a step backward in time that goes counter to all the slow but necessary progress the United States has made in recent years in its treatment of transgender people." A Washington Post (7/26) editorial says Trump "turned his back on the thousands of transgender people currently serving in the military – and he did so with his characteristic dishonesty." While Trump promised during his campaign to "'do everything' to protect members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community," his Administration's "small-minded and ignorant policies toward transgender people – first students, and now service members – are doing just the opposite."

Ivanka Trump's Pro-LGBT Tweet Draws Fire. USA Today (7/26, Miller) reports that in the wake of the President's announcement, "Ivanka Trump is taking heat for a tweet sent more than a month ago expressing her support for the LGBTQ community." Ms. Trump tweeted in June, "I am proud to support my LGBTQ friends and the LGBTQ Americans who have made immense contributions to our society and economy." USA Today adds that after Wednesday's announcement, her tweet is facing "even more scrutiny for what some saw as hollow words," and provides several examples of tweets criticizing it.

Trump Announces Foxconn To Build Wisconsin Factory.

President Trump's announcement Wednesday that Taiwanese electronics firm Foxconn intends to open a factory in Wisconsin is greeted with positive, but fairly light coverage. CBS and NBC covered it only briefly, and most national print and online outlets mainly cover comments by the President and others at the announcement with little analysis. Some reports mention that Foxconn has hinted at US investment in the past, only to renege. Local news coverage was more upbeat.

The CBS Evening News (7/26, story 4, 2:35, Mason) reported that “bringing back jobs” was “one of President Trump’s key campaign promises,” and he announced Wednesday that “electronics giant Foxconn will build a factory in Wisconsin, expected to create 3,000 jobs.” NBC Nightly News (7/26, story 11, 0:25, Holt) reported that Foxconn, “which is best known as one of Apple’s suppliers, will open a multi-billion dollar plant in Wisconsin, where it will make display panels used in TVs and computer screens. The company made the announcement late today at the White House, where officials say the factory – to be built in House Speaker Paul Ryan’s district – could mean up to 13,000 jobs.” The AP (7/26, Bauer, Wiseman) clarifies the discrepancy by reporting that while the $10 billion factory is expected to create 3,000 jobs at opening, “Foxconn could eventually employ 13,000 workers” there. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (7/27, Barrett) says the project will also “lead to another 22,000 indirect positions at suppliers and other employers, along with 10,000 construction jobs over each of the next four years, and 6,000 indirect jobs from the construction, according to estimates from the company and state.”

Reuters (7/26, Shepardson) reports that the President “praised Foxconn chairman Terry Gou at a White House event, asserting: ‘If I didn’t get elected, he definitely wouldn’t be spending $10 billion. ... This is a great day for America.’” The Huffington Post (7/26, Delaney), highlighting that remark, writes that “Trump gave himself credit for the deal.” The Wall Street Journal (7/26, Mickle, Ballhaus) reports that a White House official said Foxconn’s decision was a victory for the President’s “buy America principles.”

WKBT-TV La Crosse, WI (7/26, 9:02 p.m. CDT) reported, “Thousands of jobs are in store for Wisconsin as the US President announces an international electronics manufacturing company is coming to the state.” WFRV-TV Green Bay, WI (7/26, 10:06 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump “took credit for convincing the company to invest $10 billion dollars to build the Wisconsin plant.” WKOW-TV Madison, WI (7/26, 6:06 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump was “clearly taking a lot of the credit for today’s announcement as he does make good here on a promise to bring manufacturing jobs back to the US.”

WTMJ-TV Milwaukee (7/26, 6:01 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump said “he’s delivered on another of his campaign promises to bring jobs to America that have products made in America.” WLUK-TV Green Bay, WI (7/26, 10:03 p.m. CDT) called the announcement “a huge economic boost for Wisconsin.” Trump: “This is a great day for American workers and manufacturing and for everyone who believes in the concept and the label made in the USA.”

The Washington Times (7/26, Miller) reports that Ryan, Vice President Pence, and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker were on hand for the announcement. Pence said, “Company after company are announcing record investments – billions of dollars and thousands of jobs. Companies across this country and across the wider world are going to continue to invest in American jobs and American workers and America’s future, because under President Donald Trump, America is back.” Walker tweeted, “Foxconn is bringing 13,000 high-tech jobs to Wisconsin – the biggest jobs announcement in our state’s history!”

Bloomberg News (7/26, Sink) reports that Ryan “personally lobbied Trump and White House chief of staff Reince Priebus,” a fellow Wisconsinite, to help secure the plant. The White House’s Office of Innovation, headed by Jared Kushner, “led administration efforts to land the $10 billion facility, according to a White House official.” Bloomberg News calls the announcement “a political win” for Ryan, “whose relationship with Trump has at times been strained.” However, Politico (7/26, Overly) reports that a White House official “said political calculations weren’t a factor in Wisconsin’s selection.”

The New York Times (7/26, Schwartz, Goel) reports that Foxconn “has made promises to invest in the United States before, including in Pennsylvania, with little to show for it,” which “left some experts skeptical of the company’s latest commitment, and of the White House’s eagerness to claim credit for a major economic victory.” Scott Paul of the Alliance for American Manufacturing said, “I’ll be excited about the Foxconn announcement when workers are getting paychecks in Wisconsin. Foxconn has a history of talking big and not necessarily delivering on their commitments.”

Wired (7/26, Lapowsky) reports that the “jobs Foxconn says it will create in Wisconsin aren’t the kind of manufacturing jobs that so many laid off auto and steel workers have been clamoring for,” nor are they “a pathway to the American-made iPhone President Trump promised during the 2016 election. They are, instead, part of a new generation of advanced manufacturing jobs, requiring high levels of engineering skills – skills that are still sorely lacking in the American workforce.”

The Washington Post (7/26, Paquette, Frankel, Shaban) reports that Foxconn “has been talking to at least six states about its new factory," and Wisconsin officials "have said that they would consider legislative sweeteners to attract the company." The Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (7/26, Gearino) reports that Central Ohio "remains in the running to attract" a Foxconn plant, "even with an announcement Wednesday that the company plans to build in Wisconsin." The Hill (7/26, Neidig), Business Insider (7/26, Leswing), and the CNBC (7/26) website also have reports.

Scaramucci Hits Clinton In Tweet About Announcement. White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci tweeted, "The President was proud to announce that Foxconn will create 13,000 jobs in Wisconsin. Or as Hillary would call it, in Russia." Most Twitter discussion of the announcement was positive, though some critically mentioned bad working conditions at Foxconn facilities in China.

Amazon Plans To Make 50,000 US Job Offers At August 2 Events. The AP (7/26, Pisani) reports, "Amazon plans to make thousands of job offers in just one day as it holds a giant job fair next week at nearly a dozen warehouses" across the US. Nearly 40,000 of the 50,000 jobs will be full-time. The Wall Street Journal (7/26, Stevens) reports that most of the part-time jobs to be offered at the August 2 events are at sortation centers. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (7/26) reports that at an Amazon facility in Kenosha, Wisconsin, the full-time jobs will "have a pay range of $12.25 to $13.25. ... Part-time positions start at $11.75 an hour."

Lane: "Bizarre President" Not Hurting US And Global Economy. Charles Lane writes in his Washington Post (7/26) column, "There seems to be no end to tumult in Washington," and "the paranoia and vulgarity emanating from the White House do harm, probably lasting, to the political culture" of the US. But it is "amazing how little difference the absence of a functional figure at the top in Washington has made" economically. Lane writes, "Even a bizarre president can't necessarily bring down the global economy."

Senate Expected To Consider "Skinny Repeal" After ACA Repeal Measure Fails.

The Senate on Wednesday voted down a measure to repeal the Affordable Care Act without a replacement, the second failure of a GOP measure since the Senate voted to open debate on Monday. Reports now indicate that the Senate is likely to consider a so-called "skinny repeal" that would leave much of the ACA intact, but which would advance legislation to a conference between the Senate and House. A major sub-story, noted in all three broadcast network newscasts, was President Trump's Twitter criticism of Sen. Lisa Murkowski, one of just two Republican senators who voted against beginning debate.

ABC World News Tonight (7/26, story 3, 2:55, Muir) reported that after Senate Republicans "did not get the votes they needed" for the Better Care Reconciliation Act late Tuesday, "they tried a simple repeal. They did not get the votes again." The CBS Evening News (7/26, story 3, 2:05, Mason) reported, "One day after Senate Republicans brought their healthcare plan back from the dead, carrying it to the Senate floor on a stretcher, its chancing for survival are still in doubt." CBS' Nancy Cordes: "Seven Republicans bucked their leaders this afternoon, voting along with every Democrat against repealing Obamacare without a replacement." NBC Nightly News (7/26, story 4, 2:10, Holt) reported, "Already, two plans have gone down in defeat since debate opened yesterday, but the GOP is set to try again with a so-called 'skinny repeal.'"

The AP (7/26, Werner, Fram) writes, "After seven years of emphatic campaign promises, Senate Republicans demonstrated Wednesday they don't have the stomach to repeal 'Obamacare' when it really counts, as the Senate voted 55-45 to reject legislation undoing major portions" of the Affordable Care Act without replacing it. Republican Sens. Lamar Alexander, Shelley Moore Capito, Susan Collins, Dean Heller, John McCain, Murkowski, and Rob Portman opposed the measure. Reuters (7/26, Cowan) says it was "the Senate's second failure in 24 hours to repeal" the ACA, underscoring "the party's deep divisions on the role of government in helping provide access to healthcare." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/26) criticizes GOP dissenters like Heller and Murkowski, arguing that they are only serving to preserve a law that they say they oppose.

The Washington Post (7/26, A1, Snell, Eilperin, Sullivan) similarly reports, "In two separate votes over the course of less than 24 hours, lawmakers have rejected different approaches to rewriting" the ACA. But many Republicans "have expressed an openness to passing a minimalist measure that abolishes two of the ACA's insurance mandates and a single tax on medical devices, which is being dubbed 'skinny repeal.'" The New York Times (7/26, Kaplan, Sullivan) reports that Senate Republican leaders "may have no choice but to fall back" on the "far more limited measure that repeals parts of the Affordable Care Act, such as its mandate that most people have insurance and a tax on medical devices," but leaves most of the ACA intact.

McClatchy (7/26, Pugh) reports, "The defeat of both repeal measures appears to limit the scope of the Senate's final legislation to replace the ACA," The Los Angeles Times (7/26, Mascaro) reports that GOP senators are left "with few remaining options to fulfill their campaign promise to gut the 2010 law."

Politico (7/26, Everett, Haberkorn, Kim) reports, "At this point Senate Republicans are just looking to get something – anything – through the chamber with a bare majority." They are now aiming for what HHS Secretary Price "called the 'lowest common denominator' as its likely end game: repealing Obamacare's individual and employer mandates as well as its tax on medical devices." The AP (7/26, Ohlemacher, Taylor) reports that Sen. Lindsay Graham said of the skinny repeal option, "It's just a vehicle to get into conference [with House Republicans] so it may lead to a broader solution."

Roll Call (7/26, Williams) reports that some of the Republicans who opposed the first two measures "are withholding judgment" on the skinny repeal. But the Washington Post (7/26, Debonis) reports that key House conservatives expressed skepticism. Rep. Mark Walker (R-NC) said, "I don't think it's going to be very well received." Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), who chairs the House Freedom Caucus, "told reporters in recent days that a skinny-repeal bill would be 'dead on arrival' in the House and that a conference committee would have to be convened to work out a compromise."

Democratic senators criticized the plan on Twitter. Sen. Richard Blumenthal tweeted, "The CBO confirms it – 'skinny repeal' would be a giant disaster for our #healthcare system and millions of Americans." Sen. Dianne Feinstein tweeted, "The Congressional Budget Office says the Republican's so-called 'skinny' repeal would increase premiums by 20% NEXT YEAR." Sen. Tim Kaine tweeted, "'Skinny repeal' is just another way to say millions will lose their health care." Sen. Jeff Merkley tweeted, "I repeat: this is not a drill. According to @USCBO estimates, even GOP's 'skinny' repeal would kick 16 million off their health care by 2024." Sen. Ron Wyden tweeted, "Tell an American who is losing their health insurance or facing a huge premium increase that this is 'skinny.'"

The Washington Post (7/26) editorializes, "Republicans' strategy to end Obamacare unilaterally, through pure force of partisan will, has discredited Congress's claim to be a deliberative body and utterly failed to produce a workable plan," and "their cynicism is visible in the move toward a skinny, lowest-common-denominator bill." The legislation "is likely to only get worse in a House-Senate conference, altered to better resemble the cruel, deservedly unpopular Obamacare replacement bills House and Senate leaders have floated in recent months."

The New York Times (7/26) similarly editorializes, "This is not how laws affecting the health of millions of people and an industry that accounts for about one-sixth of the American economy should be made. Yet, here we are. To senior Republicans" like Price, "this process is about getting to the 'lowest common denominator,' not about improving health policy or providing people with better, more affordable medical care."

Case Western Reserve University professor of healthcare finance J.B. Silvers writes in the New York Times (7/26), "A 'skinny repeal' will result in an unintended expansion of ever larger government subsidies to the working poor. The difference is that those people will have higher incomes than allowed under normal Medicaid or the expanded Medicaid coverage that has been so controversial in red states." Republicans who advocate skinny repeal "as just a lighter version of 'repeal and replace' are likely to be very surprised at the unintended result."

The Washington Times (7/26, Howell), the Washington Free Beacon (7/26, Meyer), and The Hill (7/26, Carney) also report on Wednesday's vote.

Scaramucci Says Reform Must "Start With Incrementalism." Before the Wednesday vote, White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci said on CNN's New Day (7/26), "We have to...start with incrementalism. All good entrepreneurs have to start somewhere with a dedicated plan to finish in a great place. While things may not be perfect right now, whether it's repeal and replace or delay, you are moving the process towards a freer system. ... But what you can do is, working with the great leadership of the President, is move the process along to get it in a place where the American people will like in the next three, five, and 10 years."

Murkowski Says She Is Unfazed By Trump Tweet. Mary Bruce reported on ABC World News Tonight (7/26, story 3, 2:55, Muir) that the President "is taking aim as Republican holdouts like Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski who have been voicing concerns for weeks." Murkowski: "I said in January we should not repeal without a replacement, and just an indefinite hold on this just creates more chaos and confusion." Bruce: "The President today tweeting, 'Senator @Isamurkowski of the Great State of Alaska really let the Republicans, and our country, down yesterday. Too bad!' ... Are you concerned at all about political retaliation here?" Murkowski: "My vote yesterday was from my heart for the people that I represent. I have to focus on my job. I've got to focus on what I came here to do." Bruce: "So no second thoughts?" Murkowski: "No second thoughts. None!"

Nancy Cordes of the CBS Evening News (7/26, story 3, 2:05, Mason) asked Murkowski, "Do tweets like that from the President work? Do they intimidate you, put pressure on you?" Murkowski: "If I were to focus on every little morsel that comes out every day, I wouldn't have time to do the job that I need to do." NBC Nightly News (7/26, story 4, 2:10, Holt) also mentioned the President's tweet in its coverage.

But the New York Times (7/26, Hulse) reports that Murkowski reportedly told Trump at last week's lunch meeting of GOP senators, "With all due respect, Mr. President, I didn't come here to represent the Republican Party. I am representing my constituents and the state of Alaska." The Times says the President "did not appreciate the pushback." But he "picked on someone unlikely to be rattled by his attack." Collins said, "She is unshakable when it comes to her constituents. She has a spine of steel." The AP (7/26, Fram), Politico (7/26, Nelson), and Roll Call (7/26, Garcia) also briefly covered the President's tweet.

Sullivan Says Zinke Warned Alaska May Suffer Because Of Murkowski's Vote. Alaska Dispatch News (7/26, Martinson) reports that both Murkowski and fellow Alaska Sen. Dan Sullivan received phone calls from Interior Secretary Zinke on Wednesday "letting them know [that Murkowski's] vote had put Alaska's future with the administration in jeopardy." Murkowski "was not available for comment," but Sullivan said Zinke "was clear that his message was in response to the no vote Murkowski cast Tuesday on the motion to proceed." Sullivan said, "I fear that the strong economic growth, pro-energy, pro-mining, pro-jobs and personnel from Alaska who are part of those policies are going to stop."

DSCC May Step Up Anti-Heller Ads If He Backs Skinny Repeal. Politico (7/26, Everett) reports that the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee is "already running radio ads against Heller for trying to 'save his political career'" for voting to open debate on ACA repeal and replacement, "and Democrats are mulling expanding their ad campaign against Heller now that he is indicating he may support" the skinny repeal bill.

Democrats Take Up McCain's Call For Fresh Start. USA Today (7/26, Gaudiano) reports, "Democrats are seizing on...McCain's call for a back-to-the-drawing-board approach to health care reform, with committee hearings and input from both parties if the GOP bill fails." Merkley has "filed more than 100 amendments, all of them motions to refer the bill to a committee," and Sen. Joe Donnelly "offered a Democratic motion to send the GOP bill to the Finance Committee with instructions to strike provisions that would reduce Medicaid benefits." However, McCain "opposed Donnelly's motion, which failed 52-48." The Wall Street Journal (7/26, A1, Peterson) reports that Democrats continue to argue that the ACA can be improved, and need not be replaced.

Durbin Says "Single-Payer Option" On The Horizon. Senate Minority Whip Durbin said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/26), "What we're going through is the last gasp for private health insurance in America, as far as I'm concerned. If we can't make this work with the private health insurance industry, we start moving closer to a Medicare model. ... If the private health insurance industry can't make the current approach work, we're moving closer and closer to a single-payer option."

Poll: Majority Of Voters Trusts Democrats On Healthcare, Says ACA Is Working. The Hill (7/26, Easley) reports that a Harvard-Harris poll finds that "a majority of voters trust Democrats more than Republicans on the issue of healthcare and most say that ObamaCare is working fine." The poll found that 52 percent of voters "trust Democrats to provide the best way forward on healthcare. Twenty-seven percent said they trust President Trump and only 21 percent said they trust Republicans in Congress, bringing the total GOP figure to 48 percent." Fifty-three percent "said they believe ObamaCare is working, rather than failing."

House Republicans Working To Fund Border Wall.

The AP (7/26, Taylor) reports that House Republicans are working to include $1.6 billion in border wall funding in "a massive $788 billion spending bill that includes money for the military and the Department of Veterans Affairs, which provides political cover for any Republicans that might have qualms." The $1.6 billion – which would presumably go to fund the construction of the 74 miles of wall the Administration specified in its May budget – would be included in a procedural vote on Thursday, and the final measure is "expected to pass on Friday."

Sources: Congress, Administration Set To Release Tax Proposal Friday.

Politico (7/26, Cook) reports that the “Big Six” tax reform group, consisting of Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn, House Speaker Ryan, Senate Majority Leader McConnell, Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-UT), and House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady (R-TX), is planning to unveil a “broad-brush” tax proposal on Friday “before the House leaves for its August recess, according to six sources close to the administration.” A source “close to the administration” says the blueprint’s policy details were being finalized at a Big Six meeting on Wednesday at 5:30 pm, and according to two lobbyists attending a Capitol Hill fundraiser Tuesday evening, Speaker Ryan told supporters at the fundraiser “to expect the plan by the end of the week.”

The Wall Street Journal (7/26, Rubin) reports that the tax proposal will contain broad principles – lower tax rates in a deficit-neutral tax code overhaul – instead of legislative text and will reflect areas of agreement among Republicans. Sources did not clarify how the proposal would address the House Republican plan for border-adjusting the corporate tax, an idea that has drawn criticism from retailers and some senators in recent months. Congress will draft the legislation based on the proposal after returning from recess, and members of the Big Six say they hope to pass the final tax reform law by the end of the year.

The Hill (7/26, Jagoda) reports that the Big Six “have reached an agreement on six tax-reform principles and are briefing congressional staff about the plan.” Reuters (7/26, Gibson, Morgan) reports that Grover Norquist, the president of the anti-tax Americans for Tax Reform who has close ties to Republican leadership, said that the Big Six “was targeting the end of this month for producing a basic framework for a bill that would be introduced in September.”

Bannon Lobbying For 44 Percent Top Tax Rate. The Intercept (7/26, Grim) reports that White House Chief Strategist Steve Bannon is advocating for Congress’ final tax plan to raise the top marginal tax rate from 39.6 percent to 44 percent, affecting people earning more than $5 million a year, “according to three people who’ve spoken to him recently.” The increase would generate “around $18 billion per year” in revenue. The Intercept adds that the tax hike “would face stiff opposition from congressional Republicans.” Bloomberg News (7/26, Talev) reports that it is “unclear whether President Donald Trump would support the move.”

EPA, Army Announce Plans To Rescind Clean Water Rule.

The Washington Times (7/26, Richardson) reports that the EPA and the Department of the Army announced Wednesday their intention to begin the process of rescinding the 2015 Waters of the United States (WOTUS) rule starting Thursday, “dealing another blow to the Obama-era environmental regulatory regime.” The agencies also said they “will re-evaluate the definition of WOTUS” to align with the President’s February 28 executive order calling for clean navigable water “while at the same time promoting economic growth, minimizing regulatory uncertainty, and showing due regard for the roles of Congress and the States under the Constitution.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Donald Trump’s Assault On Jeff Sessions.” A New York Times (7/26) editorial says President Trump’s “passive-aggressive assault” on Attorney General Sessions “has crossed a line even for many of the president’s most stalwart supporters.” The Times says it agrees with the criticism of Trump, but is “puzzled by the sense of surprise” as Trump’s “debasement of Mr. Sessions...is in line with everything he’s said and done since he fired James Comey.”

“The Senate’s Lowest Common Denominator Health Debate.” The New York Times (7/26) editorializes, “This is not how laws affecting the health of millions of people and an industry that accounts for about one-sixth of the American economy should be made. Yet, here we are. To senior Republicans” like HHS Secretary Price, “this process is about getting to the ‘lowest common denominator,’ not about improving health policy or providing people with better, more affordable medical care.”

“Uncle Sam No Longer Wants You.” The New York Times (7/27, Board) in an editorial says that one “year after transgender Americans secured the right to defend their nation as equals in the military service, President Trump...declared on Wednesday that he was banishing them from serving.” The Times says the decision was “obvious pandering to regressive generals and right-wing zealots.” The Times says Trump’s “about-face on a basic human rights issue” was prepared by the decision by Defense Secretary Jim Mattis to delay by “six months the Obama administration’s July 1 deadline for admitting transgender recruits.” The Times characterizes the new policy as “thoughtless and cruel.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Dishonest Betrayal Of America’s Transgender Troops.” A Washington Post (7/26) editorial says that with his announcement that transgender people will not be permitted to serve in the US military, President Trump “turned his back on the thousands of transgender people currently serving in the military – and he did so with his characteristic dishonesty.” While Trump promised during his campaign to “do everything’ to protect members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community,” his Administration’s “small-minded and ignorant policies toward transgender people – first students, and now service members – are doing just the opposite.”

“The Hefty Downsides Of The ‘Skinny’ Healthcare Proposal.” The Washington Post (7/26) editorializes, “Republicans’ strategy to end Obamacare unilaterally, through pure force of partisan will, has discredited Congress’s claim to be a deliberative body and utterly failed to produce a workable plan,” and “their cynicism is visible in the move toward a skinny, lowest-common-denominator bill.” The legislation “is likely to only get worse in a House-Senate conference, altered to better resemble the cruel, deservedly unpopular Obamacare replacement bills House and Senate leaders have floated in recent months.”

“After Otto Warmbier, The US Must Fight To Free American Hostages In Iran.” A Washington Post (7/26) editorial writes that less than a month after the death of Otto Warmbier, news emerged of another American student imprisoned by a hostile power. Xiyue Wang has been sentenced to 10 years in an Iranian prison on charges of espionage. He is one of “at least four American citizens and two permanent US residents currently behind bars in Iran.” The Post notes that after Warmbier’s “tragic” death, the Administration “has indicated that it will make freeing American hostages a priority. Addressing Iran’s practice of de facto hostage-taking is a good place to start.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Why Jeff Sessions Recused.” The Wall Street Journal (7/26) defends Attorney General Sessions’ decision to recuse himself from the Russia investigation, arguing it was soundly based on the law and DOJ policy.

“Michigan Union To Animal Crew: Hoof It.” In a brief editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/26, Board) writes that despite increasing fears of robots displacing human workers, a recent competition at Western Michigan University used goats to clear poison ivy and other weeds from campus, saving the university $1,350 for each acre cleared – a project that local union Afsome Local 1668 is protesting, arguing that the goats cost nine union members their jobs on campus.

“ObamaCare’s GOP Preservers.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/26) criticizes GOP dissenters on healthcare, like Sens. Dean Heller and Lisa Murkowski, arguing that they are only serving to preserve a law that they say they oppose.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: [Referring to President Trump's transgender ban in the armed services] "The whole thing took Trump-supporter Caitlyn Jenner by surprise. ... Caitlyn, I don't know if I'm the first person to break this to you, but he's a liar."

Stephen Colbert: "Those 15,000 transgender troops, who volunteered to serve our country, were minding their own business, protecting our freedoms, when they all got fired by tweet. That's like your wife divorcing you by cookie bouquet."

Stephen Colbert: [Referring to President Trump's transgender ban in armed services] "So, the Pentagon didn't even know. Wait a second, Trump said he consulted with 'my generals.' I know, that must be a typo. He meant 'my genitals.' Damn you, Siri."

James Corden: "At this point, it just seems like Trump wants to do the opposite of everything Obama did. He is like, 'Oh, Obama pardoned a turkey on Thanksgiving? Well, I'm going to slaughter a turkey with a chainsaw on the front lawn.'"

James Corden: "Energy Secretary Rick Perry recently spent 20 minutes on the phone talking to the prime minister of the Ukraine, only to find out he was actually being pranked by a Russian comedian. So it looks like Russia is now two for two pranking America."

Trevor Noah: "The Republicans have voted more times [on healthcare] than those illegal Mexicans that voted for Hillary."

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump said he would protect LGBTQ citizens, and actually, considering how many wars he is going to start, maybe he just did."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, President Trump went on Twitter and announced that he is banning transgender people from serving in the military. Trump said he understands this is a very sensitive issue, so he made sure to choose his emojis very carefully."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump held a big rally in Ohio last night. I saw that he rubbed Melania's back while she was introducing him. It was the first time someone has ever shivered in 80 degree weather."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump's new communications director, Anthony Scaramucci, addressed all the leaks that have been coming out and asked staffers, 'You want to sell postcards to the tourists or do you want to work in the West Wing?' And the staffers said, 'Wait, is that postcard thing a real option?'"

Seth Meyers: "According to Politico, President Trump and Attorney General Jeff Sessions are no longer on speaking terms. Though come to think of it, Trump by himself is barely on speaking terms."

Seth Meyers: "Hillary Clinton's new memoir on the 2016 presidential race will be released in September. It just has to be transcribed from the car she keyed it into."

Seth Meyers: "If you devote yourself to Donald Trump like Sessions did, it will mean nothing to him. If it helps him save his own skin, he will throw you under the bus. Just ask the professional speed bump Chris Christie."

Interior Chief To Review Sage-Grouse Conservation Plan.

The AP (6/7, Daly) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said he is ordering a review of federal actions to protect the sage grouse to ensure that officials from 11 western states where the bird lives are consulted. E&E Publishing (6/7, Yachnin, Lunney) reports that Zinke, "who has been a vocal critic of the Obama-era sage grouse plans," will sign a secretarial order on Thursday "to establish a review panel to look at both federal- and state-level efforts to protect the birds and possibly recommend significant changes to how they are managed." Zinke said, "While we in the federal government have a responsibility under the Endangered Species Act to take action, we also want to be a good neighbor, a good partner and recognize that a lot of the state agencies and the work that has been done thus far are really the forefront of the efforts."

The Hill (6/7, Cama) reports that Zinke "said Wednesday that the team's goals are to evaluate whether the federal government's policies related to the greater sage grouse are compatible with state policies, whether they're beneficial for local economies and jobs and how they impact production of domestic energy." Zinke "said he wants to restore trust in the process, listen to states and businesses and improve consistency among Interior agencies like the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) in enforcing the policies.”

The Washington Post (6/7, Fears) reports that “the two-month review will take into consideration issues that concern some western politicians: jobs and energy development, some of the very things that scientists say led to the bird’s decline.”

Reuters (6/7, Gorman) reports that “environmental groups immediately protested the move, saying it might lead to unraveling a complex and delicately balanced strategy that took federal agencies years to negotiate with state and local governments, scientists, ranchers and other private interests.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/7, Carlton) reports that business groups were hopeful the move would lead to a reduction in restrictions on the affected lands. Kathleen Sgamma, president of the Denver-based Western Energy Alliance, said in a statement, “We hope Secretary Zinke will give western states a real chance to implement sage grouse protections tailored to actual conditions on the ground in each state, rather than the existing plans that don’t effectively protect sage grouse but do kill jobs.”

Sec. Ryan Zinke On Trump’s Push To Overhaul Infrastructure.

On Fox News (6/7), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke commented on President Trump’s remarks Wednesday on his call to overhaul America’s infrastructure. Zinke said that Trump was not distracted from focusing on rebuilding America’s infrastructure and creating jobs.

Zinke Addresses NPS Issues At Committee Week.

RVBusiness (6/7, Kessler) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke his remarks “to an appreciative RV industry audience during a keynote presentation on the second full day of the Recreation Vehicle Industry Association (RVIA) Committee Week, an annual conference at which industry leaders gather in Washington, D.C., to set strategy and lobby Capitol Hill.” Saying he “loves public-private partnerships,” Zinke “gave a clear signal Tuesday (June 6) as to his intentions in dealing with modernizing the National Park System (NPS) campgrounds and related infrastructure.” Zinke said, “I love public-private partnerships. There’s real opportunity, especially in our park systems, for public-private partnerships.”

Secretary Zinke Testimony Overshadowed By Trump’s FBI Controversy.

The Nation Sun News (6/7) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s congressional testimony will take “place at the same time” as former director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation James Comey’s. According to the article, “the drama means Indian Country’s interests are once again playing second fiddle to the FBI controversy.”

Trump Said To Mull Combining Agencies Separated After Gulf Spill.

Bloomberg News (6/8, Dlouhy) reports that “after the 2010 Gulf oil spill, the Obama administration broke the scandal-plagued federal agency that policed offshore drilling into separate bureaus,” but “now the Trump administration is considering putting it back together again.” The move, “described by Interior Department officials and lobbyists familiar with the deliberations, would combine two agencies: one that enforces regulations on offshore drilling safety and another in charge of leasing offshore tracts.” The article notes that “keeping those roles separate was a key recommendation of a presidential commission that investigated the Deepwater Horizon blast that killed 11 men and sent oil gushing into the Gulf of Mexico for months.” The Office of Natural Resources Revenue would “be untouched by the organizational plans now under consideration by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.” The two agencies that would be combined are the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management.

Utahns Unsure What to Expect From Interior on National Monument.

The Morning Consult (6/7, Fitzpatrick) reports that neither supporters nor opponents of the Bears Ears National Monument are “sure what to expect ahead of the Department of the Interior’s Saturday deadline to review its designation.” According to Gavin Noyes, executive director of Utah Dine Bikeyah, a nonprofit that supports the monument, “representatives from five tribes that initially proposed the monument designation and a nonprofit representing tribal interests met on May 25 with James Cason, who was named Interior’s associate deputy secretary the next day.” Noyes, who plans to file a lawsuit if President Trump revokes the monument, “credited the administration for agreeing to meet with his organization and the tribes that support the monument.”

Ken Burns To Trump: Don’t Scale Back Our National Parks.

Documentary filmmaker Ken Burns is urging President Trump “to reject any proposal to scale back federal park land,” telling USA Today (6/7, Ullmann), “The president donated his first paycheck to the national parks. ... I would just ask him to go out into those parks and see their transforming force...to understand that they are these important economic engines in every local economy. And as a businessman, it is going to make sense to save them.” Dayton Duncan, who along with Burns created the PBS documentary “The National Parks: America’s Best Idea,” said the President “should follow the lead of two other presidents who also came from New York City,” and pointed out that President Theodore Roosevelt signed the Antiquities Act and President Franklin Roosevelt used the act to expand Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming.

Rep. Poliquin Says State Should Have Control Of KWW, St. Clair Responds.

WCSH-TV Portland, ME (6/7, Coleman) reports that this week, Rep. Bruce Poliquin sent a letter to the Interior Department “saying regardless of President Trump’s decision, the state should gain control of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument.” On Wednesday, Lucas St. Clair, President of Friends of Katahdin Woods and Waters, “told NEWS CENTER reporters that he’s confident in the national monument review process.” St. Clair added that if the Trump Administration were “to rescind the national monument designation, he and his family foundation are ready to stand their ground against the state.”

Additional coverage was provided by WMEA-FM Portland, ME (6/7, Sambides).

Idaho Cattle Producers Impressed With Perdue, Zinke.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (6/7, Dumas) reports that the Trump Administration’s “focus on collaboration between agencies and stakeholders and its position of aggressively managing issues has Idaho cattle producers optimistic about better management of public lands.” Idaho cattle producers “say they are optimistic the Trump administration will get federal agencies back on track for sustainable land management after meeting with USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke late last week.”

Welcome To Idaho, Secretaries Zinke And Perdue. In an op-ed for the Idaho Mountain Express (6/7, Johnson), Rick Johnson, the executive director of the Idaho Conservation League, writes that “it was great to see the nation’s two top stewards of public lands—Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke and Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue—in Idaho on Friday.” Johnson emphasizes that “Idaho is a conservative place,” but the state also “loves its public lands.”

Keep Gulf Revenue In Budget, Oil/Gas Industry Tells Trump.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (6/7, Schleifstein) reports two energy industry lobby groups for companies in Louisiana said President Trump should abandon his plans to rescind the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act, which distributes revenue from offshore Gulf of Mexico oil and gas operations. Don Briggs, president of the Louisiana Oil and Gas Association, said, “Revenues that are shared through GOMESA are vital to the health of Louisiana’s working coast. ... The oil and gas industry worked hand-in-hand with the Congressional Delegation to ensure that these shared revenues were made permanent in order to protect Louisiana’s coastal communities.” Chris John, president of the Louisiana Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, said, “These dedicated funds should be used for coastal restoration and protection as intended by the Congress. Louisiana expects these funds to be used as a steady and predictable funding stream. Even hinting at diverting these funds from its original dedication puts meaningful dollars for coastal restoration at risk.”

Environmental Groups Want In On National Forest Canceled Leases Suit.

Law360 (6/7, Sieniuc) reports that “environmental and tribal groups on Tuesday told a Washington, D.C., federal court that they want to join a suit brought by an oil and gas lessee challenging a move by the U.S. Department of the Interior to void leases on portions of a Montana national forest, saying they are better positioned to defend against efforts to invalidate the DOI’s lease-cancellation decision than the government.”

Additional Coverage: Mohave County Asks Feds To Review Ban On Mining Uranium Near The Grand Canyon.

Additional coverage that the Mojave County Board of Supervisors asked Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “this week to consider lifting a 20-year uranium mining ban on public lands in northern Arizona” was provided by the Arizona Republic (6/7, Dungan).

We Must Protect Our U.S. National Monuments Established Through The Antiquities Act – Created By Republican President Teddy Roosevelt.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (6/7, Ertll, Contributor), Randy Jurado Ertll, executive director of the California Latino Environmental Advocacy Network, calls for “protecting 27 of our National Monuments that were created since 1996.” He warns that “these U.S. National Monuments are at risk throughout the United States and it does affect our daily lives since our natural resources/environment would become under further threat to be privatized and possibly destroyed through development.”

Let’s Take A Stand For National Monuments.

In an op-ed for the Las Vegas Sun (6/8, Tait), Thomas Tait, the former secretary of the Nevada Tourism Commission and former president of the Nevada Tourism Alliance, argues that the “executive order to review national monuments throughout the country and potentially strip them of protection” is “unnecessary.” He warns that the “order represents a serious threat to our state economy given that public lands play an integral role in the Nevada tourism industry, our largest employer and economic engine.” He urges the public to tell the Trump Administration “to maintain protections for our national monuments and continue to safeguard Gold Butte and Basin and Range by posting a comment at protectgoldbutte.org.”

Voices Of Alaska: Zinke’s Message Brings Hope To Arctic Iñupiat.

In an op-ed for the Kenai \(AK\) Peninsula Clarion (6/7, Sr.), Sayers Tuzroyluk Sr., president of the Voice of the Arctic Inupiat, welcomes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s comments on “the central role Alaska Natives” when he visited Alaska. Tuzroyluk expressed appreciation that Zinke took “the time to listen to us about the needs of our people.” Tuzroyluk thanks Zinke, for his “commitment to restoring trust among Alaska Natives and for taking concrete steps toward allowing decisions in our region to be driven by the local people.”

Bradner: Alaskans Should Take Initiative To Explore ANWR.

Tim Bradner, an Anchorage author, writes in Alaska Dispatch News (6/7) that Alaskans should take the initiative proposed by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to update the geological assessments of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Bradner said that “Alaskans deserve to have a better feel for whether major oil discoveries are really possible.” Former Gov. Sean Parnell had proposed a limited state-led, one-winter program to conduct 3D surveys, and Bradner urges Gov. Bill Walker to bring the plan back. Bradner acknowledges that securing funding for the project would be difficult, but he says, “If Alaskans are really serious about ANWR, they should step up to the plate with some money.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

President Begaye Calls For DOI Improvements.

The Lake Powell Life (6/7) reports that on June 1, Navajo Nation President Russell Begaye addressed a Department of Interior panel “calling for improvements to federal agencies that impact the lives of Native Americans across the country.” Begaye began “his statement by letting the panel know that the timeframe put forth by the DOI to solicit commentary from tribal leaders was insufficient.” The article notes that “among many issues, President Begaye presented concerns addressing tribal authority over land, efficient distribution of funding, and attention to redundancy in tribal public safety.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

McCain Introduces Bill To Expand School Choice To Tribal Kids.

KJZZ-FM Phoenix (6/7, Jung) reports that on Tuesday, Sens. John McCain and James Lankford “introduced a bill that would give students enrolled in Bureau of Indian Education schools an education savings account that can be used for things like private-school tuition.”

Bureau Of Land Management

In Utah, Federal Land Opponent Reverses Stance On Drilling Near Zion National Park.

The Guardian \(UK\) (6/7, La Ganga) reports that Utah Gov. Gary Herbert reversed a previous position and “decided oil and gas companies should not be allowed to drill near Zion national park.” Last week, Herbert declared: “In keeping with our current economic track, I support the tourism and recreation economies and not leasing the parcels that have helped define Washington County and the state of Utah. In keeping with our current economic track, I support the tourism and recreation economies and not leasing the parcels that have helped define Washington County and the state of Utah.”

69,056 Acres: Montana/Dakotas BLM Online Sale Slated For June 12.

The Fairfield \(MT\) Sun Times (6/7) reports that “the Montana/Dakotas Bureau of Land Management (BLM) will be holding a quick online oil and gas lease sale commencing on June 12.” According to the article, “a total of 156 parcels comprising 69,056.13 acres in Montana will be available for bid at the upcoming event.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

California’s Green Culture May Slow Offshore Wind Progress.

Recharge News (6/7) reports that “California’s ‘jealous guardianship of the ocean’ could slow offshore wind development off the Golden State, say developers and regulators.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Infrastructure Investments Must Prioritize The Colorado River, One Of The Hardest-working Rivers In The World.

In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (6/7, Connor, Scarlett), Mike Connor, an Environment Program Fellow with the Walton Family Foundation and a former Deputy Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation in the Barack Obama Administration; and Lynn Scarlett, the Global Managing Director for Public Policy at The Nature Conservancy and a former Deputy Secretary of the Interior in the George W. Bush Administration, urges the Trump Administration to prioritize 15 projects across the Colorado River basin as highlighted in the Walton Family Foundation’s white paper “Colorado River Critical Infrastructure Needs.” The white paper, “while not an all-inclusive list of needed actions, identifies over a dozen specific projects as well as some basin-wide initiatives that have significant water user support and represent a range of strategies to address water resource challenges, including traditional water supply improvements, habitat and stream restoration actions, and improved data-gathering networks.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

USFWS Recognizes Fort Hood For Conservation.

The Fort Hood \(TX\) News Sentinel (6/8, Ashley) reports that Fort Hood was “recognized Wednesday by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service with the agency’s 2017 Military Conservation Partner Award at a ceremony held at III Corps Headquarters.” Dr. Benjamin Tuggle, southwest regional director, USFWS, “presented the award to Fort Hood Garrison Commander Col. Todd Fox, on behalf of the Service to recognize the post's efforts with conservation and environmental stewardship." Tuggle said, "Fort Hood serves as an outstanding example of the many conservation contributions that military installations make across the country. They have ensured in execution of the training of our young Soldiers ... that they pay attention to the stewardship responsibility that comes with that."

Additional coverage was provided by the Killeen \(TX\) Daily Herald (6/7, Douglas).

Texas Sues U.S. To Delist Endangered Songbird.

Courthouse News (6/7, De La Garza) reports that "the Texas land commissioner sued the United States this week, claiming its refusal to delist the golden-cheeked warbler from the endangered species list prevents landowners from effectively managing their own properties." The Texas Public Policy Foundation, "acting on behalf of the Texas General Land Office, filed the lawsuit Monday against the Department of the Interior and U.S. Fish and Wildlife in Austin federal court after sending an intent-to-sue letter in March." The lawsuit argues "new scientific data shows the migratory songbird's population has recovered and that environmental protections are unnecessary because it has approximately five times more breeding habitat than estimated at the time of its listing in 1990."

Habitat Shows Why Golden-cheeked Warbler Isn't At Risk. In an op-ed for the Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (6/7, Wilcox), Erim Wilcox, an attorney with the Center for the American Future at the Texas Public Policy Foundation, writes that the golden-cheeked warbler has "been listed as endangered under the Endangered Species Act since 1990," but "despite federal law requiring that it do so, the USFWS has refused to designate critical habitat for the warbler, leaving landowners in 39 counties in regulatory limbo." Wilcox writes that "when USFWS first listed the warbler as endangered in 1990, it claimed that habitat destruction was one of the main reasons for protecting the warbler." But he argues that "if USFWS doesn't know which habitat is critical for the warbler, how can habitat destruction justify the listing?"

Bison Range Meeting Tiptoes Around Question Of Tribal Management.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (6/7, Chaney) reports that "Tuesday's Polson meeting and a second session set for Wednesday in Kalispell open a three-year process of writing a comprehensive conservation plan for the National Bison Range." FWS Regional Refuge Supervisor Bernie Petersen "said in Polson that the Obama Administration's work leading up to the Federal Register notice was still on the table, but was part of a new process." Petersen said, "We won't say it's not going to be used, but we're taking a fresh look at all of it. There is an alternative on the table for a transfer (to CSKT management), but when the secretary decided to change course, that means he's not in favor at this time of doing a transfer."

Montana To Switch How It Counts Wolves In The State.

The AP (6/7, Volz) reports that "Montana wildlife officials say the way they count wolves is too expensive and falls far short of an actual population estimate, so they plan to switch to a model that uses information gathered from hunters." But wildlife advocates "say wolf numbers are declining and the switch could threaten the species' survival." They are concerned "the data is too unreliable to be used to manage the population."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (6/7, Volz), the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (6/7, Volz), Fox News (6/7, Volz), Philly \(PA\) (6/7, Volz), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/7, Volz), and the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/7, Matt Volz |, Ap).

Second Lady Pence Pushes Bee Conservation, An Effort One Critic Labels 'Hypocritical'.

The Huffington Post (6/7, D'angelo) reports that "in hopes of boosting the local bee population and raising awareness about the threats facing the planet's most important pollinators, second lady Karen Pence has installed a honeybee hive at the vice presidential residence in Washington." Pence and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue "unveiled the new hive — home to a growing population of some 20,000 bees — at an event Tuesday and 'urged Americans to do their own part to help reverse' an ongoing worldwide decline in the bee population, according to a White House release." But Tiffany Finck-Haynes, "an expert in bee populations at the nonprofit advocacy group Friends of the Earth, called the White House request 'extremely hypocritical' in light of the administration's proposed cuts to funding for environmental protection." Finck-Haynes said, "They're not putting their money where their mouth is, based on their proposed budget cuts to critical agencies that are needed to help protect bees, butterflies and other pollinators."

The Lehua Aerial Poison Drop – Endangering Native Hawaiians And The Local Fishing Industry?

In a piece for the Huffington Post (6/7, Sergio, Contributor), Maggie Sergio, a conservationist, writes that “in Hawaii, the Department of Land and Natural Resources (DLNR), and U.S Fish & Wildlife, (USFWS) are planning several rat poison drops via helicopter onto Lehua Island, located approximately 30 miles west of Kaua’i.” She notes that “the planned drop is ¾ of a mile from an important Native Hawaiian community, the Ni’ihauans.” Sergio raises concerns that “there is risk that the poison pellets (lethal anticoagulant rodenticides) could impact the biologically diverse and important Lehua Crater.”

National Park Service

Montana Senator: ‘Bullying Is Rampant, Sexual Harassment Goes Unaddressed’ In National Parks.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/7, Lutey) reports that the National Park Service has “become a workplace where ‘bullying is rampant, sexual harassment goes unaddressed’ and top employees go unpunished, U.S. Sen. Steve Daines, R-Mont., said Wednesday during a hearing sparked by a Yellowstone Park scandal.” Daines, “chairing a subcommittee hearing on National Park Service workplace problems, said, “As a son, husband and father of four, including two young women, this is completely unacceptable.” The NPS is “working on workplace issues, said Michael T. Reynolds, acting director of NPS, but restoring employee trust will take work. Reynolds said, “There are some park locations where these cases were allowed to fester, where employees felt reporting these conditions would change nothing and invite retaliation. That was a wakeup call that we needed to make significant improvements to our workplace environment.”

Report: Energy Development Endangers National Parks.

The “Morning Energy” blog of Politico (6/7) reported “the National Parks Conservation Association is out with a report warning of negative consequences from improperly sited oil and gas leases at seven national parks.”

Mountain Lion Kittens Near LA Die After Mother Abandons Them.

The AP (6/7) reports that “two mountain lion kittens being tracked by scientists have died in the Southern California wilderness after being abandoned by their mother.” The male and female known as P-57 and P-58 were “part of a study of cougars by researchers with the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, which sprawls from Los Angeles westward along the coast.” The two were “believed to be the first litter for their mother, 3-year-old P-42, National Park Service spokeswoman Kate Kuykendall said via Facebook this week.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/7), Business Insider (6/7), the Daily Mail (6/7), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/7), Philly \(PA\) (6/7), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/7), Tucson News Now \(AZ\) (6/7), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/7, Press), and WTOP-FM Washington \(DC\) Washington (6/7).

In A Limited Engagement, The Fireflies Blink In Sync In The Great Smoky Mountains.

The Washington Post (6/7, Sachs) reports that “for two or three weeks in late May and early June, Great Smoky Mountains National Park pulsates with light and darkness.” The park is “home to 19 species of fireflies, including 13 that flash.” According to the article, “only one — the synchronous firefly — turns the springtime mating ritual into an incandescent performance that dazzles like a laser show.”

2017 Travel Season Off To Busy Start At Rocky Mountain Park.

The AP (6/7) reports that “the 2017 travel season is off to a busy start at Rocky Mountain National Park, which set a record for visitors last year.” Park spokeswoman Kyle Patterson “said Tuesday visitor numbers in April were up 21 percent over the same month in 2016.”

Burning For Acorns In Sequoia National Park: Native Peoples And The Park Service Working Together.

KCET-TV Los Angeles (6/7, Clarke) reports that fire crews from Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks this week are “managing a controlled burn in Sequoia’s Ash Mountain area, adjacent to the Park entrance on Route 198 east of Three Rivers.” According to the article, “the 26-acre burn, which will continue in several sections for four or five days, is being conducted in part to attempt to knock down grassy fuels whose growth was stimulated by the Sierra Nevada's wet winter." The article notes that "controlled burns in the Parks are nothing new, but the Ash Mountain burn is a little different: it's happening with advice and assistance from the Parks' Indigenous neighbors, and reducing fuel load is just one of the objectives." The Ash Mountain burn is "also intended to boost the health of oak trees in the area, and increase acorn crops in subsequent yields."

Park Service Investigating Helicopter Incident At Gettysburg.

WHTM-TV Harrisburg, PA (6/7, Snyder) reports that the National Park Service is seeking information on "what a helicopter pilot was up to Sunday morning at Gettysburg National Military Park." According to the park service, "the helicopter was seen flying low and may have been dropping something."

Coyote Encounters Force Trail Closures In SF's Presidio.

The San Francisco Chronicle (6/7, Fimrite) reports that the Presidio Trust, "which manages the area for the National Park Service, banned dogs this week on the Park Trail, between West Pacific Avenue and Crissy Field, and the Bay Area Ridge Trail, between Arguello Boulevard and the Rob Hill Campground, in an effort to protect people and their pets." Michael Boland, chief of parks development and operations at the Presidio Trust, said, "They perceive all canines as coyotes, so they are very threatened, very territorial and they are protecting their offspring. What's happening is they are trying to scare the dog away. It's designed to be threatening, but it can be scary if you are not used to having that kind of interaction with a coyote."

Site Of Woodstock Added To National Registry Of Historic Places.

NPR (6/7, Flanagan) reports that "the Bethel Woods Center for the Arts, the site of the Woodstock music festival in 1969, has been added to the National Register of Historic Places, according to an announcement on its website."

Our National Parks Must Tell The Whole Story.

In an op-ed for USA Today (6/8, Warren), Mackenzie Warren, who is on a mission to get to visit all 417 National Park Service sites, writes that "national parks are inherently egalitarian in their ideal," but "in many parks, the visitor profile does not match the makeup of America." Warren notes that "recent park service-funded research suggests a complex network of economic, historical and cultural barriers keeping some segments of American society away from national parks." Warren calls for more to "be done to document the struggles, controversies, contributions and achievements that continue to define our nation." In order for national parks to remain America's "best idea," Warren argues that "the concept needs to grow and evolve to reflect a wider range of experiences and be more accessible to all Americans."

Mapp Meets With Dept. Of Interior Officials As VI Government Receives Over $700,000 In Grants.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (6/7) reports that on Tuesday, Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula and "other officials met with Governor Kenneth Mapp to discuss issues facing the territory, the Department of Interior announced Wednesday." They talked about "infrastructure challenges related to the hospitals and various initiatives that Mr. Mapp has implemented and is developing to bring greater fiscal stability to the Virgin Islands." Mapp's "trip coincided with the release of $704,000 in technical and maintenance assistance funding from the Office of Insular Affairs (OIA) which will support the governor and his administration in several important ways." According to the article, "funds will be used to explore potential manufacturing and production in food and agricultural products and to save costs and improve the provision of public services in water distribution and maintenance and correctional safety." Pula said, "The governor and I were able to have frank discussions on his priorities for the U.S. Virgin Islands. I am pleased OIA is able to provide some assistance to worthy projects that will directly impact and enhance the government's ability to deliver services and opportunities."

American Samoa's Aumua Backs Fresh Climate Talks.

Marianas Variety (6/6) reports that "American Samoa's delegate to the U.S. Congress, Aumua Amata, says she can understand the disappointment Pacific Islanders feel about the U.S. withdrawal from the Paris Climate Change Pact." But "she feels that this is an opportunity to come up with a better and more effective agreement." Aumua said Trump "did not believe that sending U.S. dollars to an international body was the best way to expend resources." Aumua added that "she was pleased that he committed to begin immediate negotiations for terms more favorable to the U.S., so the U.S. could rejoin the agreement."

Amata And Governor Talk Issues With Secretary Of State Tillerson.

Samoa News (6/7) reports that Congresswoman Aumua Amata met with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson "during his second stopover in Pago Pago over the past few days to discuss some of the pressing issues facing American Samoa." The article notes that "also participating in the historic meeting were Gov. Lolo Matalasi Moliga and Lt. Gov. Lemanu Peleti Mauga." Amata said, "It was a very successful meeting. The Governor and I discussed issues pertaining to the Pacific, American Samoa, and the United States' commitment to the region. This is the second high-profile visitor that American Samoa has welcomed in the past few months, which demonstrates just how receptive and involved the new administration is in regards to the territories... a welcome change."

CUC Gets Over $60M In Grants.

Marianas Variety (6/8, Todiño) reports that "the Commonwealth Utilities Corp. was able to secure $60.03 million in grants as of April, its executive director, Gary Camacho, said on Wednesday." CUC grant administrator Carl J. Castro, "in a separate interview, said they expect a 'significant increase' in obligated grants in the next few months, adding that they will obligate a huge portion of their grant money to various projects." According to the article, "as of April, Castro said of the $60.03 million in grants they received, $43.04 million had been obligated while only $16.98 million remained unobligated."

US Labor To Ramp Up Fraud Probes Of Foreign Visa Programs.

Marianas Variety (6/8) reports that the U.S. Labor Department "said on Tuesday it is stepping up efforts to root out potential fraud in its visa programs for foreign workers, a move that will include increases in both civil investigations as well as criminal referrals." The announcement by Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta follows President Trump in April "ordering a review of the U.S. visa program as part of his 'America First' campaign pledge." On Tuesday, the Labor Department said its new policy will be to "enforce vigorously all laws within its jurisdiction governing the administration and enforcement of non-immigrant visa programs."

A Look At How Trump's Climate Moves Affect The Coal Industry.

The AP (6/7, Gruver, Brown) reports that long-term energy trends within the coal industry, such as the growing competition from natural gas, wind and solar power, have had "far more of an effect on the fossil fuel industries than climate regulations." Over the last decade, coal's share of the U.S. power market fell from 50 percent to about 32 percent, and hundreds of coal-burning power plants are scheduled to retire or shut down soon. The Trump administration, however, is undeterred in its support of coal. During a Wednesday meeting with international energy ministers in Beijing, Energy Secretary Rick Perry "said devising ways to burn coal more cleanly could stimulate economic growth."

Fisheries Scientists To Review Minnesota Lake's Fish Count.

The AP (6/7) reports that "a nationwide group of fisheries scientists will review the Minnesota Department of Natural Resource's walleye assessment on a popular fishing lake after nearby resort owners questioned the department's low population assessment of the fish." The experts, led by Chris Vandergoot of the U.S. Geological Survey, will be available to answer questions from members of the Mille Lacs Fisheries Advisory Committee.

US Geological Survey Using Drones To Study Prescribed Burns.

UAS Magazine (6/7, Miller) reports that U.S. Geological Survey scientists and its partners are “using unmanned aircraft systems (UAS) to gather data on the prescribed burns used to protect lives and property during wildfires.” The program “combines expertise from multiple USGS partners with the goal of reducing the harmful effects of smoke impacts during planned burns.” Todd Hoefen, USGS lead scientist, said, “We aim to use drones to better understand the relationship between fire intensity and what type of particulates are released from fires of greater or lesser intensity. This can tell us what a fire leaves behind and how that could affect people and the environment.”

Trump Touts Infrastructure Plans, Blasts Democrats’ “Obstruction” In Visit To Ohio.

Media coverage of the President’s remarks in Cincinnati cast them as a return to his campaign themes – and as an attempt to gain momentum for his agenda as the Russia investigation picks up steam in Washington, DC. The Cincinnati Enquirer (6/7, Williams) says Trump “was in his element” and “found solace in a region that played a big role in sending him to the White House last November,” but Reuters (6/7, Mason) reports that his efforts to “refocus attention on core” campaign “promises to boost jobs and the economy” were “eclipsed by the furor over Russia’s alleged meddling in the election.” Likewise, CNN (6/7, Merica) said that “though Trump stuck to the script, only veering from infrastructure to talk about health care briefly, his top White House aides were focused on what will happen less than two miles down Pennsylvania Avenue on Thursday.” CNN added that former FBI Director “Comey’s testimony has all but stalled Trump’s legislative agenda.”

The Cincinnati Enquirer (6/7, Williams, Horn), meanwhile, refers to a “campaign-style speech” by the President, who attacked “Democrats while promising to fix roads, bridges, dams, the steel and coal industries, health care and the tax code.” The Enquirer highlights that “though Republicans control the House, Senate and White House, Trump said Democrats are responsible for the challenges some of his initiatives have faced, including the GOP health care bill now in the Senate.” Said Trump, “Total obstruction from Democrats. ... We have had no help.”

To the New York Times (6/7, Thrush), Trump’s “forceful “America first” message” was “a wandering assortment of self-defenses, attacks and non sequiturs that bumped into one another like untethered barges.” The Dayton \(OH\) Daily News (6/7, Hulsey) notes “the Ohio River was the backdrop to Trump’s speech,” with “a barge loaded with what appeared to be coal...docked on the Kentucky side.” Then, “just before 1 p.m. a huge American flag was draped over its tug boat.” WVXU-FM Cincinnati (6/7, Wilkinson) said the barge was “full of West Virginia coal.”

WXIX-TV Cincinnati (6/7, 10:21 p.m. EDT) showed Trump saying, “The great highway system, the Interstate highway system, we don’t do that any more. We really don’t. We don’t even fix the old highways anymore. We’ll take even fixing ‘em. But we are going to get them going again like they’ve never been before.” WKBN-TV Youngstown, OH (6/7, 6:08 p.m. EDT) showed him saying, “It’s time to rebuild our country, to bring back our jobs, to restore our dreams, and yes, it’s time finally to put America first. And that’s what I’ve been doing, if you haven’t noticed.” WCPO-TV Cincinnati (6/7, 7:01 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump addressed “a much smaller crowd, a lot different than what we have seen in the past at his big rallies.”

The Washington Post (6/7, Paletta, Nakamura) portrays Trump as seeking “to rally blue-collar workers,” and adds that if “part of the aim was to build crucial bipartisan support for a plan he has claimed will boost jobs, Trump was unable to mask his disdain for his political rivals.” Said the President, “Every single thing is obstruction.” He added that “if I was in that party, I would not do it that way. I’d be doing positive things. That’s why they lost the House, it’s why they lost the Senate, it’s why they lost the White House.”

The Toledo \(OH\) Blade (6/7, Provance) reports that “early on, the idea of a massive federal investment into the nation’s aging bridge, highway, rail, and other public infrastructure was cited as an area where Democrats and the new Republican president might find common ground.” Sen. Sherrod Brown said yesterday, “I will judge any infrastructure package by whether it’s good for Ohio. ... What we’ve seen from the President so far falls short. We need the real, meaningful investments the President promised on the campaign trail, not handouts to Wall Street or fees and tolls on working families." The AP (6/7) says "Democrats have balked at Trump's plan for financing improvements, arguing it would result in taxpayer-funded profits for corporations with the cost offloaded on consumers." To Politico (6/7, Nelson), meanwhile, the reason Democrats haven't backed Trump's plans is that they have "come via a bare-bones outline in his administration's budget proposal, and the White House has up to this point placed more emphasis on undoing Obamacare and pushing an overhaul of the US tax code."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (6/7, Pelzer) notes the President's appearance came "days after he announced a $1 trillion plan to help build and refurbish the country's transportation and utility infrastructure using a mix of public and private funding (the former coming mostly from state and local governments)." The Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (6/7, Ludlow) says Trump "wants to leverage $200 billion in the pending federal budget to obtain matching spending by private corporations and state and local governments to generate $1 trillion to tackle a backlog of infrastructure maintenance needs." Said the President yesterday, "Yet, if we want to fix a road or build a school, we don't ever seem to have the money. It's got to change, folks. It's wrong. ... It's time to rebuild our country to bring back our jobs and restore our dreams and it's time, finally, to put America first and that's what I've been doing if you haven't noticed."

WHIO-TV Dayton, OH (6/7, 11:05 p.m. EDT) highlighted the fact that Trump "did not call for a gas tax increase to pay for" his plan. Instead, "his plan leaves the door open for private investment. Companies would build for projects up front and be paid back over time with tolls and user fees." Trump: "It is time to recapture our legacy as a nation of builders and create new lanes of travel, commerce, and discovery and we are going to see all the way into the future."

The Washington Times (6/7, Boyer, Miller) reports "Trump said his predecessor, President Barack Obama, and a Democratic Congress failed to help rebuild America in 2009 with an infamous $825 billion 'stimulus' package." The President also "said his approval of the once-installed Dakota Access oil pipeline is indicative of his approach to getting things done." Said Trump, "Nobody thought any politician would have the guts to approve that final link. ... I just closed my eyes and said 'do it.' When I approved it, I thought I'd take a lot of heat. I took none, actually none. People respected that I approved it. I take so much heat for nonsense, it probably overrode the other. It's like a decoy." The Daily Caller (6/7, Goodman) noted that Trump also "reiterated his commitment to the American worker," saying to "applause," "As long as I am president, America's labor leaders will always find an open door at the White House."

The Dayton \(OH\) Daily News (6/7, Hulsey) reports that Frani Jones, "whose husband Don owns the marina" where Trump spoke yesterday, "said the White House called them on Friday asking to allow the president to appear there." Said Mrs. Jones, "We're very excited to be hosting the president of the United States." The Daily News adds that "Tom Jones, Don's brother and the chairman of the board of Bryan Equipment Sales in Cincinnati, said he also is a Trump supporter."

Chris Cilizza said on CNN Wolf (6/7), "This is an attempt to talk about something that, frankly, does have some possibility or at least did have some possibility of getting bipartisan support or at a minimum, putting Democrats in tough spots." David Gregory said on CNN Wolf (6/7) that "you can't just talk about infrastructure in a vacuum. This requires a lot of the political capital. It is a campaign that requires a lot of work, working together in the administration, having issue discipline and then you look at the backlog in terms of legislative accomplishments."

Collins: Trump Not Advancing Infrastructure Plan. Gail Collins, in a column in the New York Times (6/8, Collins), writes that while Trump pronounced this to be Infrastructure Week, he hasn't discussed the issue with legislative leaders; never reached out to Democrats willing to consider infrastructure spending, instead calling them "obstructionist" on the issue; and "didn't say anything at all about how his infrastructure plan would work, possibly because it doesn't appear to exist at this point in time."

Comey Told Trump He Wasn't Under Investigation, Says Trump Asked Him To Drop Flynn Probe.

The release of former FBI Director James Comey's written testimony ahead of his Thursday appearance before the Senate Intelligence Committee dominated the news cycle, with extensive cable commentary and more than 29 minutes of combined airtime on the major network newscasts. Much of the mainstream media's tone cast Comey's disclosures as raising serious legal questions about the President, with several Democrats and commentators speaking of possible obstruction of justice. Republicans and conservative news outlets, meanwhile, portrayed the President's interactions with Comey as legitimate, and highlighted the fact that Comey confirmed that he told Trump that he was not under investigation.

NBC Nightly News (6/7, lead story, 4:40, Holt) called Comey's statement "explosive" in its lead story, and the Washington Post (6/7, A1, O'Keefe, Demirjian) reports on its front page that Comey "could bring the question of whether...Trump attempted to obstruct justice to the forefront." House Intelligence Committee ranking member Adam Schiff said on CNN's Situation Room (6/7) that it's "certainly very possible that this is evidence...that could amount to obstruction," and Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, also on CNN's Situation Room (6/7), said Trump's behavior was "prima facie obstruction of justice." Sen. Ron Wyden, on CNN's The Lead (6/7), referred to "a Watergate-level effort to interfere with an ongoing investigation." Pressed on whether it amounted to obstruction, he added, "That's going to be a topic for lawyers, but I'll tell you if it looks like a duck and it quacks like a duck, it just might be a duck."

On the other hand, GOP Sen. James Lankford said on Fox News' Special Report (6/7) that what is "very clear is the President wasn't saying" to Comey that he had to drop the Flynn probe "or else. ... What I hear from it is the President just fired Flynn, who he liked and who he respected, but understood he lied to the Vice President, he's not going to do that and be in the Administration. He's trying to say we fired him, that's enough." Rich Lowry, writing for National Review (6/7), summed it all up by concluding that "this isn't much of a bombshell and is going to be a very thin reed to try to build an obstruction case on."

There were also differing reactions to Comey confirming he told Trump he wasn't under investigation. The Los Angeles Times (6/7, Lauter), for example, indicates that "Republicans quickly seized on" that fact "as a major talking point," but the Times argues that "the idea that the president might personally be under scrutiny was never at the center of the controversy" in the first place. The Washington Post (6/7, Barrett), meanwhile, reports that "in essence, Comey's written testimony confirms a key claim that Trump has made," but to the New York Times (6/7, Schmidt, Goldman), even his attempts to get "Comey to announce" that he "was not personally under investigation" were part of Trump's "wide-ranging effort by...to influence the FBI's investigation into Russia's meddling in the election." Politico (6/7, Gerstein) notes that Comey made it clear he "rebuffed the president's attempts to have the agency clear him publicly in case the probe did eventually turn to Trump."

Eli Lake writes for Bloomberg View (6/7, Lake) that "it's strange that Comey's devastating testimony before the Senate on Thursday will end up vindicating in part something Trump and his advisers have been saying for months." But "make no mistake. The Boy Scout will fire back at the president who fired him." The Washington Free Beacon (6/7, Harrington), meanwhile, headlines its story "Comey Assured Trump Three Times He Was Not Being Personally Investigated," Townhall (6/7, Pavlich) "Comey Confirms President Trump Is Not Under FBI Investigation," The Federalist (6/7, Hemingway) "Comey Confirms He Thrice Told Trump He Was Not Being Investigated," and Breitbart (6/7, Pollak) "James Comey Testimony Proves Trump Right, CNN Wrong" – noting that "CNN reported on Tuesday that Comey was 'expected to refute Trump.'"

Former senior communications adviser for the Trump campaign Jason Miller said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/7), "I thought this was supposed to be about Russia. I thought this was supposedly about trying to get to the President about some supposed coordination between the campaign and some foreign entity. That seems to have been completely thrown out. You can see why Republicans look at this and feel like it's a witch-hunt."

According to the Washington Times (6/7, Dinan, Noble), "former bureau officials" said Comey "is unlikely to shed new light on the ongoing investigation into Russian interference in the presidential election and any links with members of the Trump campaign." Meanwhile, another Washington Times (6/7, Dinan) report notes "White House deputy press secretary Sarah Sanders told reporters Wednesday afternoon that she found the timing of the released testimony 'a little bit interesting.'"

Last night, ABC World News Tonight (6/7, lead story, 6:00, Muir) reported that at Thursday's hearing Comey will "acknowledge that he did tell the President that he was not under investigation personally on multiple occasions." However, "when it came to the investigation into...Flynn, Comey will say the President urged him to 'let this go.'" Catherine Herridge reported on Fox News' Special Report (6/7) that "Comey stated, 'I understood the President to be requesting that we drop any investigation of Flynn in connection with false statements about his conversations with the Russian ambassador in December. I did not understand the President to be talking about the broader investigation into Russia, more possible links to his campaign.'" However, Herridge noted that Comey "continues, 'It was very concerning, given the FBI's role as an independent investigative agency.'"

The CBS Evening News (6/7, lead story, 3:55, Pelley) reported that Comey found that meeting with the President "so concerning that he...decided to implore the Attorney General to prevent any future direct communications between the President" and himself. CBS also noted that "Comey reassured Mr. Trump that he was not personally under investigation." After that, the former FBI chief claims, Trump "repeatedly told me, 'we need to get that fact out.'" Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (6/7, story 2, 0:55, Muir) that Comey provided "several reasons" for not going public "with the fact that Trump was not under investigation. ... Primarily, because if it changed and if the FBI investigation began to turn to focus on...Trump, Comey said it would have been a duty to correct the record."

USA Today (6/7, Johnson) reports that Comey's statement outlined "nine contacts with...Trump, including a Jan. 27 dinner in which Trump apparently said: 'I need loyalty, I expect loyalty.'" USA Today adds that "later, in a Feb. 14 meeting at the White House, Comey said Trump strongly defended Flynn, saying that his former national security adviser 'hadn't done anything wrong' in his prior contact with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak." Trump added, "He is a good guy. I hope you can let this go." McClatchy (6/7, Welsh, Irby) notes that "Trump had asked for Flynn's resignation the day before, following revelations that the former national security adviser misled Vice President Mike Pence regarding his phone conversations" with Kislyak.

To John Dickerson of the CBS Evening News (6/7, story 3, 1:55, Pelley), "the fact that the President asked for private meetings to have these conversations leads some to believe that he knew what he was doing wasn't right." Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN's Situation Room (6/7) that if Comey's testimony is "to be believed, I think it does lay out a case of obstruction of justice against the President." ABC World News Tonight (6/7, story 3, 2:05, Muir) called "reaction to Comey's account of his conversations with the President swift, and from Democrats, fierce." Schiff was shown saying, "The President demanded his loyalty, didn't get it. The President asked him to drop the Flynn case, and he didn't do it. Is this why Jim Comey was fired?" ABC (Bruce) added, however, that "the number two Republican in the Senate sees it through a different lens. Is it appropriate for the President to be demanding loyalty of his FBI director?" Sen. John Cornyn was shown saying, "I think every President wants loyalty from his appointees. But I think Mr. Comey appropriately pointed out that an FBI director is different from a traditional political appointee, and they seem to have agreed to something called honest loyalty or loyal honesty."

Fox News (6/7, Berger) reported that "Comey admitted that when Trump later said he wanted 'honest loyalty,' Comey assured, 'You will get that from me.'" Comey "later wrote in a personal memo he may have interpreted that term differently from Trump." The New York Post (6/7, Moore) reports that Comey wrote in a memo that very night, "It is possible we understood the phrase 'honest loyalty' differently, but I decided it wouldn't be productive to push it further. The term – honest loyalty – had helped end a very awkward conversation and my explanations had made clear what he should expect."

Roll Call (6/7, Lesniewski), Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Talev, Strohm), The Hill (6/7, Williams) and the Wall Street Journal (6/7, Wilber), among other news outlets, focus their reporting on the Flynn and "loyalty" issues. Sen. Martin Heinrich, on CNN's Situation Room (6/7), said "it's absolutely devastating, completely inappropriate and I would leave it to someone like Bob Mueller...as to whether it's prosecutable." Rep. Eric Swalwell, a member of the House Intelligence Committee, said on CNN's Situation Room (6/7) that it "is wrong the President demanded loyalty for...Comey to keep his job. It was wrong to ask him to drop the case against his friend, Michael Flynn. And [it was] wrong that he hounded obsessively James Comey to, as he called it, 'lift the cloud' around the Russia investigation."

Trump Feels "Totally Vindicated" By Comey Statement. The New York Post (6/7, Fredericks) reports that "Trump's personal lawyer said Wednesday that...Comey's testimony to the Senate Intelligence Committee has left Trump feeling 'completely and totally vindicated.'" Wrote Marc Kasowitz, "The president is pleased that Mr. Comey has finally publicly confirmed his private reports that the President was not under investigation in any Russia probe. ... The president feels completely and totally vindicated. He is eager to continue to move forward with his agenda."

White House Mobilizing To Defend Trump; RNC Produces Talking Points. Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Cirilli, Jacobs) reports that the White House is "mobilizing" to defend Trump during former FBI Director Comey's Senate testimony, "an effort comparable to preparations for the presidential debate following the release of an Access Hollywood tape that nearly derailed his campaign." Trump's personnel attorney Marc Kasowitz was at the White House on Wednesday morning, while an "outside rapid-response operation" will be led by former deputy chief of staff Katie Walsh, who left the White House in March to join a pro-Trump group, and Mike Dubke, who recently resigned as White House communications director.

Politico (6/7, Nussbaum, Dawsey, Samuelsohn, Palmeri) likewise reports that "the White House and its allies have scrambled to create a robust outside operation to punch at...Comey" during his testimony on Thursday, but “West Wing aides – fearful that they could get further sucked into the Russia probe – are trying to avoid being the messengers themselves.”

The Washington Examiner (6/7) reports that the RNC has produced talking points which offer “Republicans a number of pointers including how to respond to Comey’s opening statement.” The Examiner, which obtained a copy of the talking points, highlights several, including, “President Trump feels completely and totally vindicated by...Comey’s opening testimony and is eager to move forward,” Comey “has a long history of blatant contradictions and misstatements,” and “There is no evidence of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia,” among others.

WPost Analysis: Trump Does Not See Russia Investigation As Legitimate. A Washington Post (6/7, Rucker) analysis says President Trump does not see the Russia matter as “a legitimate federal investigation into a foreign government’s interference with American democracy,” and he does not regard it “as an issue that could result in his impeachment, or even one that could expose him to legal trouble of any kind.” Instead, he sees it as “a political ‘cloud’ that hangs over him.” To Trump, “the Russia investigation has been an act of personal betrayal with political, though not legal, consequences, insofar as it has impeded his agenda and sullied the start of his presidency.” Moreover, according to “friends and advisors,” he “views the Russia scandal as a threat to the legitimacy of his election.” Trump “feels immense pride that he...defied the polls and pundits to handily win an electoral college majority.” The Russia probe “challenges the validity of that win,” and “for that, he exhibits a feeling of victimization.”

Sources: Comey Testimony “Closely Coordinated” With Mueller. According to a Fox News (6/7, Gibson) exclusive, a source close to Comey says his testimony has been “closely coordinated” with Robert Mueller, whom the Justice Department appointed as special counsel to oversee the Russia investigation. The source also told Fox News that Comey “will not come to any legal conclusions about whether there was ‘obstruction of justice’ on the part of President Trump.” The New York Times (6/7, Baker, Thrush) reports that by authorizing the release of his opening statement, Comey “instantly changed the conversation back to his assertion that the president tried to shut down part of the FBI investigation,” leaving the White House “on the defensive.”

Philip Wegmann writes for the Washington Examiner (6/7) that the Russia investigation also has “sparked a beautiful and influential relationship” between Comey and Benjamin Wittes, an editor of the Lawfare blog who “meets and occasionally speaks for the beleaguered lawman.” Wegmann says that “because of that relationship, his analysis of the FBI director’s written testimony comes closest to the real opinion of Comey.”

Poll: 61% Believe Trump Fired Comey To Protect Himself. TIME (6/7, Jenkins) reports that “more than 60% of Americans” think Trump fired FBI Director Comey “in order to protect himself rather than to help the country,” according to a new ABC News/Washington Post poll. The survey also found 72% of Americans “don’t trust Trump’s word on Russia, but 55% also don’t buy Comey’s – likely a reflection of his own past controversies such as Hillary Clinton’s email scandal and an overall distrust of the federal government.”

Rogers And Coats Say They Didn’t Feel “Pressured” On Russia Investigations, Won’t Offer Specifics. Media reports on the testimony of DNI Dan Coats and NSA Director Rogers cast their words as unfavorable toward the White House’s interests. The CBS Evening News (6/7, story 2, 2:50, Pelley) reported “just as Comey alleges Mr. Trump pressured him over the investigation, sources also say he made similar requests of” Coats and Rogers. During testimony Wednesday before the Senate Intelligence Committee, “neither would answer questions about their interactions with the President, but they denied any outside influence.” NBC Nightly News (6/7, story 2, 2:30, Holt) showed Rogers saying, “I do not recall ever feeling pressured to do so,” while Coats was shown stating, “I never felt pressure to intervene or interfere in any way.” But NBC (Jackson) added, “Asked to elaborate, they didn’t.” The Washington Times (6/7, Boylan) runs the full statement by Coats: “I have never felt pressure to intervene or interfere in any way with shaping intelligence in a political way or in relationship to an ongoing investigation.”

Pierre Thomas said on ABC World News Tonight (6/7, story 4, 3:30, Muir), “Over and over, they would not reveal what, if anything, the President had said to them. And many senators grew frustrated, saying there was no reason not to answer the questions.” Sen. Martin Heinrich was shown saying, “I think your unwillingness to answer a very basic question speaks volumes.”

USA Today (6/7, Kelly) reports Coats and Rogers “told a Senate panel Wednesday that they would not answer questions about whether...Trump asked them to downplay possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russian officials.” Politico (6/7, Cheney, Gerstein) headlines its report “Coats And Rogers Refuse To Say If Trump Asked Them To Sway Russia Probe,” the Washington Post (6/7, Nakashima, Demirjian) says the two “said...they would not discuss specifics of private conversations with...Trump,” and Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Strohm, Dennis) that they “refused to say whether they were asked...to help impede an FBI investigation.” The Wall Street Journal (6/7, Tau, Sonne) and New York Times (6/7, Huetteman, Savage) run similar reports.

Dana Bash said on CNN Wolf (6/7), “I don’t remember ever seeing anything quite like this. Not that we haven’t seen hearing after hearing where witnesses didn’t want to or didn’t feel that it was their responsibility or appropriate to give a response. But nothing at this level when it was very well-known that this is where the panel was going to be going. ... They just didn’t have a real answer except for it wasn’t appropriate.” Bash added that there is “bipartisan frustration and they are perplexed at why there weren’t better answers.”

Journalist Carl Bernstein said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/7), “It was an appalling moment, their absolute contempt for the Congress of the United States and its legitimate function, and they showed it in their attitude.”

Wyden said on CNN Wolf (6/7) that “on March 23rd, Director Coats told the Armed Services Committee that he wasn’t aware of the President or the White House contacting anyone in the intelligence community with respect to a request to drop the investigation into General Flynn.” The press has been “reporting otherwise and both accounts cannot be true. So I intend to keep digging.” Wyden said on CNN’s The Lead (6/7) that “they just pretty much stonewalled everything other than their talking points, and the irony of this is, of course, the President has spoken so expansively about these issues. He’s been so outspoken in public. This idea that they can’t say anything that touches on what the President has talked about widely in the public square just doesn’t add up. ”

Reuters (6/7) reports that following Wednesday’s hearing, Sen. Mark Warner said there was “more investigating to do.” Warner said in a tweet, “Our intelligence leaders could have laid allegations against (Trump) to rest. They chose not to and didn’t explain why they wouldn’t answer.” He added, “That tells me we have more investigating to do.”

Former Federal prosecutor Michael Zeldin was asked on CNN Wolf (6/7) if there is a legal basis “for these witnesses to refuse to answer those questions.” Zeldin said, “Sure, executive privilege. ... That I thought was very instructive in terms of the whole way the hearing unfolded. Rogers said, I called the White House and I asked them, are you asserting executive privilege here? And I got no answer. And so with no answer, he doesn’t really know what he can and cannot do. So he’s stuck with this position of I can’t tell you anything because I don’t know what I can tell you.”

Syndicated columnist Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News’ Special Report (6/7), “I think the advantage here is to the senators. If you’re going to go up there and you say, ‘I refuse to talk about what was said,’ then invoke executive privilege. That’s a legal basis. Fight it out on that. But to say, ‘I don’t think it’s appropriate,’ I think the senators are right. On the basis of what? If you listen to what the intelligence chiefs were saying, they were saying, ‘We were not directed.’ ... This is lawyerly stuff. I hate to say it but it’s rather Clintonian. It depends on what ‘directed’ means. It sounds as if it’s very carefully crafted.”

Before Wednesday’s testimony, Sen. Chris Murphy said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (6/7), “Coats is a guy with an ethical center. He’s also a really smart and careful politician, having served in the Senate for a long time. You should read his statement [Tuesday] night very carefully. He says he never has felt pressured by the President. That doesn’t mean that the President didn’t ask him to back off – to push Comey to back off the investigation.” Murphy added, “Frankly, I think knowing Dan Coats, I would read his statement last night to be almost a confirmation of the fact that Trump had that conversation with him.”

USA Today Analysis: Comey’s Firing Is Trump’s “Most Consequential Miscalculation.” USA Today (6/7, Johnson) reports that when Trump “declared war on the US intelligence community for its collective finding that Russia sought to steer the election in his favor, the president sowed a palpable level of suspicion among its top leaders.” In particular, “just 10 days before his inauguration,” Trump tweeted “a thinly-veiled shot at the FBI for the alleged ‘leak’ of an unsubstantiated dossier purportedly detailing the Trump campaign’s ties to the Kremlin, asking, ‘Are we living in Nazi Germany?’” USA Today adds that “the raw assertion from the president-elect did not escape the notice of top FBI officials, people familiar with the matter have said,” and when he fired Comey “the president effectively freed the former director to publicly air some of the most potentially damaging information to his young presidency.” That is why “former colleagues and legal analysts said the former director perhaps embodies the president’s most consequential miscalculation.”

Green Drafting Articles Of Impeachment. The Washington Times (6/7, Howell) reports that “maverick Democrat” Rep. Al Green said he is “drafting articles of impeachment against President Trump, alleging the Republican president broke the law in May and must be held to account.” Green argues that Trump obstructed justice when he fired Comey “and then told a TV reporter he did so because of ‘this Russia thing.’” Green said, “The remedy for obstructing justice is impeachment. ... The firing, coupled with the statement, indicated that the president intended to do what he did.” Green added that he “has no ‘acid test’ for when he might actually file the document, saying he wants the public to weigh in first.” Politico (6/7, Lahut) says Rep. Brad Sherman has joined the effort. Green said, “The important thing is that you have two members of Congress who are drafting, or have drafted – to an extent – articles of impeachment.” Green “said Sherman offered to join him in part because of threats to the Texan’s safety, after he reportedly received racial slurs and death threats after announcing his plans to draft articles of impeachment.”

Reich: Use 25th Amendment To Remove “Mentally Unstable” Trump From Office. The Washington Examiner (6/7, Langille) reports that former Labor Secretary Robert Reich argued in a Facebook post Tuesday that President Trump “is so mentally unstable that the 25th amendment should be used to remove him from office.” Reich wrote, “This is why it is now time to seriously consider the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, which provides for removal of a president who is ‘unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office.’” Reich added, “[A]s Trump becomes more isolated, he becomes more paranoid – more fearful of becoming weak and humiliated. We know from Trump’s history that whenever he’s cornered he also becomes more aggressive. The further he falls, the more fragile his ego becomes, and the greater is the danger that he will do something desperate.”

Millions Expected To Watch Comey Testimony; Bars Hosting Viewing Parties. The New York Times (6/7, Grynbaum, Rogers) reports that millions of Americans are expected to watch Comey’s testimony, which is “already being compared to other political-cultural touchstones, like the Army-McCarthy hearings and Anita Hill’s testimony about Clarence Thomas.” According to Times, “every national broadcast network – along with an alphabet soup of cable stations from CNBC to HLN – plans to carry the 10 a.m. hearing live.” President Trump “is expected to be among the viewers, and there is speculation that he may respond to Mr. Comey on Twitter in real-time.”

The New York Post (6/7, Lapin) reports that “bars across the country are hosting viewing parties” for Comey’s testimony, and the Post cites several examples.

Leaked Document Shows Russia Targeted State Election Officials. Reuters (6/7, Menn) reports that the top secret NSA document that was leaked and published by The Intercept shows that “Russian hacking of the 2016 US election included sophisticated targeting of state officials responsible for voter rolls and voting procedures.” NSA analysts “believed the hackers were working for the Russian military’s General Staff Main Intelligence Directorate, or GRU, according to the document.” While the document suggests “that US investigators are also still probing a more direct attempt to attack the election itself,” there is “no evidence that hackers were able to manipulate votes, or the vote tally.”

Former Defense Official Calls For More Information On Kushner Meeting With Russian Banker. Former deputy assistant secretary of defense for Russia, Ukraine and Eurasia Evelyn N. Farkas, in an op-ed in the New York Times (6/8, Farkas), writes that because most Russian financial, media, and energy companies are “virtual branches of the government,” the secret meeting President Trump’s son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner had with the chief executive of Russian bank Vnesheconombank is “worthy of deeper scrutiny.” The bank “is regularly used by the Kremlin to finance politically important projects” and has been linked to espionage. When Kushner spoke to the executive, “he was also talking to the Kremlin, and we should know what they discussed.”

Officials Confirm Unmasking For Political Purposes Is A Crime. Townhall (6/7, Pavlich) reports that Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein confirmed Wednesday that “unmasking American citizens for political reasons is in fact a crime.” During a Senate Intelligence Committee hearing Wednesday, Sen. John Cornyn asked Rosenstein, “If someone is to use the unmasking process for a political purpose, is that potentially a crime?” Rosenstein replied, “Yes sir,” and acting FBI Director McCabe “agreed, adding that leaking the name of an unmasked individual is also a crime.”

House Intel Panel Wants Ex-DHS Chief Johnson To Testify As Part Of Russia Probe. House Intelligence Committee ranking member Adam Schiff said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/7) the panel will hold its next open hearing with former DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson, who “can shed light on what he knew" about Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election. Schiff said the committee has been in contact with Johnson "to schedule that testimony."

More Commentary. A Wall Street Journal (6/7) editorial says that at its worst, Comey's prepared testimony reveals Trump is a naive narcissist who believes he can intimidate the director of the FBI. The USA Today (6/7) editorial page similarly says the testimony shows Trump "treats the FBI directorship, a 10-year term designed to preserve independence, like a patronage job." But "most disturbingly...Trump tries to obstruct" the investigation into Flynn.

Jonathan Turley of George Washington University writes in USA Today (6/7) that "ironically, those who want a criminal charge...are committing the very offense that they accuse Trump of committing: disregarding the law to achieve their desired goal. It would be a highly dangerous interpretation to allow obstruction charges at this stage."

RNC Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel writes in USA Today (6/7) that the "constant media feeding frenzy reeks of desperation to keep a fabricated anti-Trump narrative alive despite there being no basis in fact. The effort by the left to distract from the work the president is doing on behalf of the American people is truly troubling, yet this administration remains laser-focused on advancing the agenda he promised to the American people."

Washington Post (6/7) columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. writes that "succeeding in politics in a democratic nation is different from making a go of it in a business centered on one person," and "almost all of President Trump's problems can be traced to his failure to grasp this." Dionne says it also "explains why he now has such a big problem with...Comey."

Trump Announces Wray Nomination To Lead FBI To Cautiously Favorable Reviews.

President Trump tweeted early Wednesday morning, "I will be nominating Christopher A. Wray, a man of impeccable credentials, to be the new Director of the FBI." The choice generated cautiously favorable reactions across the political spectrum. While ABC World News Tonight (6/7, story 5, 0:35, Muir) indicated that the announcement caught even "some in the White House...by surprise," NBC Nightly News (6/7, story 4, 1:55, Holt) cited "one administration official" who said "the President picked Wray because he's widely respected and has bipartisan support." NBC went on to report that "the reaction was largely positive from both sides of the aisle." Less favorable was the assessment on the CBS Evening News (6/7, story 4, 1:45, Garrett), which reported that although "respected in the legal community," Wray is "not well-known among rank-and-file FBI agents," and "lacks extensive background in terrorism and national security prosecutions." Some media analysts and Democrats, meanwhile, criticized the timing of announcement as an attempt to divert attention from the Russia investigation.

Reuters (6/7, Ainsley, Holland), for example, reports Democratic lawmakers said it "seemed designed to distract" from former FBI Director Comey's "testimony," and Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Voreacos, Schoenberg, Shields) that "the timing suggests the White House is trying to turn the page...before" the Senate hearing. At any rate, says the AP (6/7, Gurman, Jalonick), while Trump "surprised Washington...with his choice" and it "captured headlines early in the day, it was quickly overwhelmed by the advance release of Comey's riveting testimony."

The Los Angeles Times (6/7, Tanfani) says that Trump "spent a month working through a long list of politicians, former prosecutors and others, in a chaotic month for a White House still struggling to fill many key positions." He "settled on Wray after interviewing him last week at the White House, along with former Transportation Security Administration Director John Pistole." Trump "did not brief key lawmakers" before tweeting his decision, USA Today (6/7, Gaudiano, Collins) reports.

The New York Times (6/7, Goldman, Apuzzo) reports that "those who know Mr. Wray say... he will brush back any political interference and protect the bureau's independence." In a separate story, the New York Times (6/7, Thrush, Davis) refers to a "a safe, mainstream pick" which appears "likely to allay the fears of FBI agents who worried that Mr. Trump would try to weaken or politicize the FBI," and the Washington Post (6/7, Zapotosky) says that "people who had worked with" him "said he is an accomplished, if low-key lawyer who would not hesitate to stand up to the president if he believed he had to."

USA Today (6/7, Jackson, Johnson) quotes Attorney General Jeff Sessions as saying in a statement, "Chris combines a brilliant legal mind, outstanding accomplishments and a proven record of public service. ... His exceptional abilities were recognized, and he was brought to the Department of Justice headquarters...where he performed superbly during the incredibly intense period after 9/11." Ken Wainstein, "former chief of the Justice Department's National Security Division, described Wray as 'an exceptionally strong choice.'"

The AP (6/7, Gurman, Jalonick), meanwhile, says the Senate's response to Wray was “supportive but cautious.” Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley said the nominee is “certainly...a suitable candidate,” and Majority Leader McConnell praised his “impressive credentials.” Democratic Sen. Chris Coons, meanwhile was “encouraged that Trump’s pick is a veteran of law enforcement ‘rather than a career in partisan politics.’” Reuters (6/7, Ainsley, Holland) reports that Sen. Ben Sasse, a “frequent Trump critic,” called Wray “tough, qualified and principled,” and “Republican Representative Mike Conaway, who is leading the House of Representatives intelligence committee probe of the Russia matter, told reporters: ‘It appears from the reading of his biography it’s a great choice.’”

Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Voreacos, Schoenberg, Shields) quotes Speaker Ryan as saying, “I don’t know the guy, but I’ve looked at his resume. He seems like the right person. He seems like to me he’s the perfect kind of person.” Breitbart (6/7, Spiering) reports Wray also “earned praise from Norm Eisen, a Brookings Institute fellow and former ethics czar for former president Obama.” Said Eisen, “Good choice. Oversaw Enron case, which I also spent years of my life on. ... He was very fair. I endorse.”

The Washington Examiner (6/7, Wegmann) reports that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, “demurred Wednesday morning, telling reporters that the nominee ‘may be fine.’” Sen. Mark Warner, ranking member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, told CNN, “There will be a time and place to review him. ... But it seems to me that this is an effort to try to take people’s attention off what is going to be the main event, at least for the next two days: the leaders of our intelligence community and the FBI director.” Warner said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (6/7), “I don’t know that much about him. I hear he had a good reputation.” Warner added that it appears “the President is trying to change the topic because we have got two days of hearing here and it could be explosive.” Politico (6/7, Nelson, Schor, Kim) quotes Sen. Richard Blumenthal praising Wray’s “solid experience and expertise,” while Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin “said he...had heard a ‘positive response’ from Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), who does know the prospective nominee.”

The Washington Times (6/7, Noble), meanwhile, reports that at DOJ, “Wray became the principal associate deputy attorney general under Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson,” who yesterday called him a “highly experienced” and “super smart” lawyer.

“Source” Tells NYPost Nomination A “Warning Shot” At Sessions. The New York Post (6/7, Morrongiello, Golding) reports that “Trump’s selection of a former top Justice Department official with ties to...Christie...was a ‘warning shot’ at...Sessions, a source close to the matter told The Post.” This “source close to the White House said Wray’s selection was meant to send a message to Sessions, who, according to reports, recently offered to resign over Trump’s continued disappointment that he recused himself from the federal probe of Russian meddling in last year’s election.” The “source” said, “I can’t imagine Sessions is pleased knowing a friend of Christie’s could soon be running the FBI.”

Wray Has Donated Funds Only To Republicans, Currently Works With Trump’s Ethics Adviser. Business Insider (6/7, Sheth, Bondarenko) reported that “Wray donated thousands of dollars to exclusively Republican candidates throughout his career, and he now works closely with Bobby Burchfield, Trump’s ethics adviser.”

Senate Unanimously Confirmed Wray In 2003; Comey Endorsed His Confirmation. To the Washington Examiner (6/7, Wegmann), Trump “has put Democrats in a bind and made opposition to the pick all but impossible,” because Wray “has impeccable credentials – at least that’s what the Senate believed in 2003.” Back then, “when President George W. Bush nominated Wray to become assistant attorney general, he was confirmed unanimously by voice vote. ... Should they protest, Democrats would have a hard time explaining why they were for Wray before they were against him.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/7, Ballhaus) recounts that Wray served under Attorney General John Ashcroft and then-Deputy AG Comey, who wrote the Senate Judiciary Committee, “The president has found someone who is...whip-smart, hardworking and possesses indispensable experience as a line prosecutor. ... The president has chosen wisely in deciding upon a governmental version of hockey’s substitution on the fly. The stakes are too high to have it otherwise.”

The New York Post (6/7, Golding) noted that “upon leaving the government, he was given the Edmund J. Randolph Award, the DOJ’s highest honor for public service and leadership.”

Merkley, Rolling Stone’s Berney Among Wray’s Few Outright Critics. Politico (6/7, Nelson, Schor, Kim) reports that “one Senate Democrat – Jeff Merkley of Oregon – quickly went on the attack against Wray, questioning whether the nominee could exercise true independence from the man who nominated him.” Politico adds that, “noting that Wray represented Christie during the so-called 'Bridgegate' scandal, is a Republican donor and that his firm 'represents Trump Trust and Russian oil,' Merkley tweeted: 'Wray doesn't pass the test.'" But "asked about Wray's ties to Christie, Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ) said: 'I don't know that anyone who's ever associated with anybody in the campaign is necessarily automatically disqualified.'"

Jesse Berney, meanwhile, writes in Rolling Stone (6/7, Berney), "I don't care about Christopher Wray's qualifications. ... How could we possibly trust that anyone Trump chooses to head the FBI hasn't offered him some kind of assurance? Or that Trump hasn't made it clear to him he too will be fired if the FBI continues its investigations?" Berney also notes that Republicans refused to consider former President Obama's Supreme Court pick Merrick Garland, and concludes that while Wray "may be well-qualified...not allowing" him "a hearing on his nomination as FBI director is clearly the right thing to do."

WPost Urges "Intense Scrutiny;" USA Today Says "Bridgegate" Ties Should Be "Thoroughly Explored." In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/7) argues that "Wray must get much more intense scrutiny than the typical executive nominee, because it is evident that the next FBI chief may face severe pressure from a president who is unwilling to respect the boundaries of his office." While "at first glance" he "seems to be a solid choice," his "work during the Bush administration deserves a careful look, as does his relationship to Mr. Christie." Moreover, "Wray must be prepared to reveal whether Mr. Trump demanded his 'loyalty before nominating him," and "should detail his conversations with the president and in particular disclose whether the two discussed the Russia probe." Adds the Post, "If he admits to making any commitments or refuses to answer, the Senate should reject his nomination."

USA Today (6/7) editorializes that "at first blush, Wray would appear" to be a good candidate, but "one area...needs to be thoroughly explored during his confirmation hearings for the 10-year term: Wray's law firm clients, especially New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie in the so-called Bridgegate scandal."

NYTimes: Next FBI Chief Needs To Resist Political Meddling. In an editorial, the New York Times (6/8) writes that former FBI Director James Comey's prepared remarks "tell a shocking story," adding that Comey's successor will need to be able "to protect the bureau's independence from political meddling," a qualification "all the more critical when the White House is led by a man with no respect for the established barriers between politicians and law enforcement."

Trump Suggests Building Border Wall With Solar Panels.

The Washington Post (6/7, Yeo) reports that during a White House meeting Tuesday, President Trump suggested "a new idea on how to cover the costs for a proposed border wall between the United States and Mexico: build it with solar panels." According to comments posted by Axios, Trump "floated the concept of 'beautiful structures,' 40 to 50 feet high, that generate clean electricity from the sun – and would help cover the cost of the project." The Post says "the realities of building a 1,000-mile wall covered with solar panels – and then getting that electricity to market on either side of the border – are not so simple" and "with few actual details about the design of the wall, the cost of building it or the price that would be paid for the electricity, it is difficult to make any realistic conclusions about the impact of Trump's solar wall."

Cohn: Administration, GOP Leaders On Board To Do Tax Reform This Year.

President Trump's Chief Economic Advisor Gary Cohn said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/7), "[Tuesday] was actually a very good day for us on tax reform." The President "had Republican leadership into the White House. Then later in the day, Secretary Mnuchin and myself met with both House leadership, Speaker and Chairman Brady and we met with Senate leadership. We met with Leader McConnell and Leader Hatch. The six of us met. We talked about a tax plan. We talked about the schedule. We agreed on a schedule. We agreed on our objectives and agreed on a time frame and we are all on board to do it this year. There is universal consent to get it done this year."

Ryan: Mnuchin Is In Charge Of Debt Limit Negotiations.

Bloomberg Politics (6/7, Edgerton) reports that while there have been questions "about how and when" the Administration "expects Congress to authorize more borrowing to keep from defaulting on US debts," House Speaker Ryan on Wednesday "said that when it comes to negotiating legislation to raise the US debt ceiling, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin is in charge." Ryan told reporters, "The Treasury secretary is and should always be the person in charge of debt-limit negotiations, debt-limit legislation. ... That's the natural thing." Mnuchin favors "a clean bill without other conditions attached," while OMB Director Mulvaney "has said other policy changes and spending cuts could be included to reach a deal.” Bloomberg adds that according to a report from Politico, the President “also stands behind Mnuchin.”

The New York Times (6/7, Rappeport) says that with Republicans in control of Congress and the White House, “some thought that the debt ceiling would be an easy lift.” However, “it has become an obstacle threatening to further stall an agenda that has already fallen well behind schedule.”

Chao Defends Plans To Privatize FAA Before Senate Commerce Committee.

The Washington Post (6/7, Halsey) reports that on Wednesday, Transportation Secretary Elaine L. Chao answered questions on a plan to privatize the FAA before the Senate Commerce Committee, as “Republicans voiced skepticism.” Chao said, “We’re very much aware that the members of this committee come primarily from rural states, so this is an issue that we are very cognizant of. I am very concerned about the rural areas.” Meanwhile, a House bill introduced by Reps. Peter DeFazio (D-OR) and Rick Larsen (D-WA) “makes critical reforms to the FAA” but would preserve the agency, although it has “little chance in a committee where...Republicans hold a 34-27 majority.” Chao is scheduled to appear before the House Transportation Committee today.

Labor Department Reverses Obama’s Expanded “Joint Employer” Rule.

The Washington Examiner (6/7, Higgins) reports that on Wednesday, the Labor Department announced the rescission of “an Obama administration rule that expanded the ‘joint employer’ doctrine, the conditions for when one business can be held liable for employment and civil rights law violations at another company,” marking “a win for business groups.” However, the Examiner points out “the Obama-era standard can still be applied to businesses” by the National Labor Relations Board.

Hawaii Passes Laws Committing To Climate Goals Of Paris Agreement.

The New York Times (6/7, Bromwich) reports that on Tuesday, Hawaii “became the first state to pass a law committing to the goals and limits of the Paris climate accord, defying President Trump.” Hawaii Gov. David I. Ige signed two bills that are “geared toward reducing greenhouse gas emissions in accordance with the landmark goals adopted by” the Paris Agreement and that “will establish a task force to help the state improve soil health and remove carbon from the atmosphere.” The Los Angeles Times (6/7, Lee) highlights how the laws are “a message for President Trump” in favor of the Paris Agreement.

California Gov. Brown Visits China To Spur Investment In Renewable Energy. The CBS Evening News (6/7, story 9, 1:55, Pelley) reported that “in a setting normally reserved for visiting heads of state,” California Gov. Jerry Brown (D) met with Chinese President Xi Jinping, “who is now viewed as the world’s leader on climate change,” to “spur more Chinese investment in renewable energy...which will help California achieve its own ambitious clean energy goals.” Asked whether Brown trusts China to lead the world on this issue, Brown said, “They’re taking the climate threat serious, so I say all for the good, and California will collaborate. I just hope that Washington comes on board.” China has asserted its clean energy initiatives will create 13 million jobs, despite President Trump’s stated concern that climate change goals would lead to job loss.

Canada Aims To Work With US States, Localities On Climate Change. The New York Times (6/7, A14, Austen) reports on “a broad strategy by the Canadian federal government to work directly with American states and cities on global warming, and to become a leader on the issue.” Canada’s environmental minister Catherine McKenna said, “I think it’s disappointing that the United States’ administration has not stepped up” to act on climate change, “But the United States is bigger than the administration.” The Times adds that privately, Canadian officials indicated “it is unlikely that the Trump administration will reverse its stand, making working with states and local governments even more critical.”

NOAA Records Second-Largest Carbon Dioxide Rise In 2016. USA Today (6/7, Rice) reports the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) announced “2016 tallied the second-largest rise in atmospheric carbon dioxide ever recorded,” which was “nearly double the average pace since measurements began in 1979.” Last year, the CO2 level rose 2.93 ppm, down from the record 2015 rise of 2.96 ppm. NOAA scientist Steve Montzka, who co-authored the update, said, “The warming effect of these chemicals we’re tracking has increased by 40% since 1990.”

North Korean Statement Blasts Administration Over Paris Agreement Withdrawal. USA Today (6/7, Abbasi) reports an unnamed North Korean Foreign Ministry spokesman “lashed out this week at the Trump administration for withdrawing from the Paris climate agreement, calling it a ‘short-sighted and silly decision.’” USA Today adds, “The harsh rhetoric by North Korea wraps up with a call for the world to remain highly vigilant about ‘the dangerous ideological trend’ surfacing in the U.S. with the Trump administration.”

Pruitt Wants To “Red Team” Climate Science.

The Washington Post (6/7, Samenow) reports that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt told Breitbart News that he wants to re-litigate climate change science, despite the fact that multiple assessments have concluded that climate change is man-made and poses significant risks. Pruitt said, “What the American people deserve, I think, is a true, legitimate, peer-reviewed, objective, transparent discussion about CO2.” NYU Professor Steven Koonin said, “The outcome of a Red/Blue exercise for climate science is not preordained, which makes such a process all the more valuable. ... It could reveal the current consensus as weaker than claimed. Alternatively, the consensus could emerge strengthened if Red Team criticisms were countered effectively.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“President Trump Picks Sides, Not Diplomacy, In The Gulf.” On its editorial page, the New York Times (6/7) says that “rather than position the United States to ease tensions in the Middle East, Mr. Trump has, essentially, picked one side in a small rivalry within a big rivalry.” The Times writes that there is also “no sign that Mr. Trump has actually thought any of this through” and calls on Congress to block the $110 billion weapons package Trump signed in Riyadh “until the Saudis enter into serious negotiations on Yemen and resolve their differences with Qatar.”

“James Comey And The Fear Of Being Alone With Donald Trump.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/8) writes that former FBI Director James Comey’s prepared remarks “tell a shocking story,” adding that Comey’s successor will need to be able “to protect the bureau’s independence from political meddling,” a qualification “all the more critical when the White House is led by a man with no respect for the established barriers between politicians and law enforcement.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s FBI Pick Deserves Intense Scrutiny. Here’s What He Should Be Ready For.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/7) argues that President Trump’s nominee for FBI director, Christopher Wray, “must get much more intense scrutiny than the typical executive nominee, because it is evident that the next FBI chief may face severe pressure from a president who is unwilling to respect the boundaries of his office.” While “at first glance” he “seems to be a solid choice,” his “work during the Bush administration deserves a careful look, as does his relationship to Mr. Christie.” Moreover, “Wray must be prepared to reveal whether Mr. Trump demanded his ‘loyalty before nominating him,” and “should detail his conversations with the president and in particular disclose whether the two discussed the Russia probe.” Adds the Post, “If he admits to making any commitments or refuses to answer, the Senate should reject his nomination.”

“The Trump Administration’s Birth Control Overhaul Could Do Serious Harm.” The Washington Post (6/7) argues in an editorial that the Trump Administration’s birth control overhaul could do serious harm, undoing access to no-cost birth control gained in the ACA. The Post laments that although the repeal and replacement of the ACA has stalled in Congress, a draft of “proposed regulation, which could go into effect as soon as it is published in the Federal Register, sadly demonstrates the harm that can be done if the executive branch sets its mind – and authority – to dismantling key provisions.”

“D.C.’s Campaign Finance Office Tells Candidates It’s Okay To Ignore The Rules.” The Washington Post (6/7) editorializes that the “paltry” fine of $5,100 against DC Council member Brandon T. Todd for failing “to meet deadlines in properly accounting for more than $100,000 in contributions” shows “that action is...needed by the D.C. Council to overhaul the city’s campaign-finance laws and how they are enforced,” as the violation was “discovered not by the campaign office but by the nonprofit Public Citizen.” The Post urges outside review by DC Attorney General Karl A. Racine into “lingering questions” about the campaign finance violations.

Wall Street Journal.

“The ‘Independent’ Mr. Comey.” A Wall Street Journal (6/7) editorial says that at its worst, former FBI Director Comey’s prepared testimony reveals President Trump is a naive narcissist who believes he can intimidate the director of the FBI.

“The Death Of Obama’s Slush Funds.” The Wall Street Journal (6/7) editorializes in support of Attorney General Sessions’ decision to end a Justice Department practice of directed funds from settlement agreements to non-governmental third parties that were not directly harmed by the conduct in dispute. Sessions sent a memo to US attorneys directing them to immediately put an end to the practice, telling them that financial penalties are meant to punish perpetrators and provide relief to victims, and that funds from future settlements will generally go directly into the US treasury.

“Qatar’s Reckoning.” A Wall Street Journal (6/7) editorial says the US goal should be to restore Arab unity to forge a common front against Sunni extremists and Iran, and not to isolate Doha.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "It's the most magical night of the year because it's Comey testimony eve. I'm ready. I have the decorations up. I hung my socks up over CNN. Got to put a few more of them up. I can still see Wolf Blitzer."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump's pressure to drop the Russia investigation made Comey so uncomfortable he told Attorney General Jeff Sessions, 'Don't leave me alone with Trump.' Which is a phrase you normally hear backstage at the Miss USA pageant."

James Corden: "We Brits hold our elections similar to the way we make love. Quickly and without a lot of unnecessary emotion and followed by an apology, just seven weeks to see who gets the most votes. But in America, they are much more thorough. They take two years to see who gets the most votes. Then they elect the person who gets the second most votes. I'm kidding. They elect whoever Vladimir Putin wants."

Trevor Noah: "Reportedly, Jeff Sessions has threatened to resign. And that would be insane for two reasons. One, he was one of Trump's first big supporters in Washington. And, two, I didn't know that house elves could leave of their own accord."

Trevor Noah: "You know, getting fired at the start of the Trump Administration is like being kicked off the 'Titanic' before it sets sail."

Jimmy Fallon: "President Trump tweeted that he's nominating Christopher Wray to be the new director of the FBI and called him a man of impeccable credentials. Wray was like, 'Thanks, can I put that on my resume when you fire me?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "This is interesting, I read that Wray was actually Chris Christie's lawyer. He helped Christie with the Bridgewater scandal and also got restraining orders dropped from seven KFCs."

Jimmy Fallon: "Former FBI Director James Comey released the opening statement for his testimony tomorrow. He said that Trump once invited him out to dinner and it turned out to be just the two of them. Even worse, he made them sit on the same side of the booth. This is weird. After dinner, Comey says, Trump asked him for loyalty, and then they just looked at each other in silence. Then Melania said, 'That's what I should have done.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "So the bar is opening at 9:30 a.m. in DC for Comey's hearing and will give everyone a free round of drinks each time Trump tweets about it, which means everyone will be blacked out around 9:31 a.m."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that today is Vice President Mike Pence's 58th birthday. That's right. But the White House is gonna leave the decorations up all week so they can celebrate Pence's inauguration."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that President Obama visited George and Amal Clooney at their home in the UK right before Amal gave birth to their twins. I knew Obamacare was good, but I didn't know he actually showed up to deliver your baby."

Seth Meyers: "Happy birthday to Vice President Mike Pence, who turned 58 today. He made a wish and blew out the candles, and tomorrow we'll find out if James Comey can make his wish come true."

Seth Meyers: "A bar in Washington, DC will offer customers a free round of drinks every time President Trump tweets about former FBI director James Comey during his testimony tomorrow. That story again, a bar in Washington, DC is having a going-out-of-business sale."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump announced his pick for FBI director today on Twitter, and you could tell he was excited about it because he spelled 'FBI' with two fefes."

Seth Meyers: "North Korea said yesterday that the United States' decision to pull out of the Paris climate agreement is shortsighted and silly. North Korea. Man, you know your country is in trouble when a guy with that haircut is telling you to get with the times."

Seth Meyers: "For a potential upcoming meeting between President Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin, it is being reported that the press may be excluded. Oh, I'm sorry, may be executed."

Conan O'Brien: "Former FBI Director James Comey apparently did not want to be left alone in a room with Donald Trump, which is why James Comey was just named an honorary Miss Universe contestant."

Conan O'Brien: "It's been reported that Attorney General Jeff Sessions has offered to resign. President Trump told him, 'That won't be necessary, I'm taking you down with me. We're going to go together.'"

Conan O'Brien: "In Utah, a woman pulled out two of her son's teeth in a Walmart bathroom. Or as that procedure will soon be known, the Trumpcare dental plan."

DOI In The News

US Interior Chief 'Comfortable' Keeping Maine Land Public.

The AP (6/14, Whittle) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "praised the beauty of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument on Wednesday and said he's 'comfortable' with the National Park Service property remaining in public hands." Zinke "sounded optimistic about the future of special land designation granted by then-President Barack Obama last summer with a goal of giving an economic jolt to the region." He said, "I'm confident there's a path forward here that will work."

The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/14, Sambides) reports that Zinke "did not address whether he would recommend that President Donald Trump rescind its status or make major changes to it." But he "said that dividing the monument's assets into different classifications, like he recommended as part of shrinking the much larger Utah's Bears Ears National Monument, would not be wise." Zinke said, "Scaling back, I don't think, makes a lot of sense from here."

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/14, Miller) reports that on Thursday, Zinke is "slated to meet in the morning with monument supporters from the Katahdin Area Chamber of Commerce and in the afternoon with opponents who are part of the Maine Woods Coalition." He will also "meet with leaders of the Penobscot Nation."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Connecticut Post (6/14, Whittle), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (6/14, Whittle), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/14, Patrick Whittle |, Ap), the Lewiston \(ME\) Sun Journal (6/14), WSB-TV Atlanta \(GA\) Atlanta (6/14, Whittle), WCSH-TV Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (6/14, Blanchard), and WLBZ-TV Bangor \(ME\) Bangor, ME (6/14, Blanchard).

Additional coverage was provided by the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/14, Sambides), the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (6/14), WCSH-TV Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (6/14, Blanchard), and WCSH-TV Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (6/14, Komulainen-York).

Maine National Monument Built On Public Outreach. In his column for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/14, Farmer), David Farmer writes that he "started work on the national monument project in 2012." He notes that "today, there are former opponents who are now supporters, a growing list of businesses who want the monument preserved, and three out of four members of Maine's congressional delegation who oppose any changes to the monument designation." He urges supporters to provide input.

Pretty As A Picture: Zinke Gets A Monumental View. In a piece for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/14, Holyoke), John Holyoke writes that Zinke "seemed duly impressed, setting up his staffers for a photo at the overlook, the new iconic view of Katahdin in the background." Holyoke hopesit "would mean something in a few weeks or months, when Zinke gets down to the business of making his recommendation to President Donald Trump."

County To Secretary Zinke: Help.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/15, Ashby) reports that in a letter sent to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday, the three members of the Mesa County Board of Commissioners are "asking for aid in reversing a few President Barack Obama-era decisions beyond his designation of national monuments, which earlier this week Zinke suggested might happen." Commissioners Scott McInnis, John Justman and Rose Pugliese wrote, "Mesa County, our region and much of the western United States have experienced significant negative impacts of over-regulation by the DOI. We have nurtured good working relationships with local DOI agency staff only to be frustrated with the interference of bureaucrats at the national level time and time again." They "cite three main issues: closure of roads on Bureau of Land Management property, canceled gas leases on the Thompson Divide and designation of certain critical habitat for endangered species, such as the yellow-billed cuckoo and the Gunnison sage-grouse."

Cortez Council OKs Letter Supporting Unchanged Canyons Monument. The Southwest Colorado Journal (6/14, Alderton) reports that the Cortez City Council "voted Tuesday to send a letter to the U.S. Secretary of the Interior asking that no changes be made to the national monument designation of Canyons of the Ancients." The council "voted 6-1 to allow Cortez Mayor Karen Sheek to sign the letter and send it to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke."

OPINION: Regarding President Trump's Review Of National Monuments. In an op-ed for the Pagosa \(CO\) Daily Post (6/14, Whiting), Michael Whiting writes that "federally protected lands are a critical component in ensuring Southwest Colorado's economic vitality." He urges "each of our state and federal elected representatives to publicly declare or re-declare where they stand for the people and values of Archuleta County and southwestern Colorado, and the public lands that sustain us, by rejecting this insult to our collective will and of our treasured National Monuments."

Experts: Captive Breeding Of Sage Grouse Won't Work.

The High Country \(CO\) News (6/14, Thuermer, Graham) reports that "prominent greater sage grouse conservationists say Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's plan to consider captive breeding of the bird would meet a dead end." According to the article, "several persons immersed in sage grouse conservation," including Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead, "say captive breeding hasn't worked, is inappropriate and may harm wild sage grouse populations." Mead said, "I follow the lead of our scientists and experts on that who suggested that's just really not going to be something that works." He continued, "The issue wasn't necessarily a population at a point in time – it's whether the habitat was there to support a healthy population. If we're talking about captive breeding, it sort of dismisses that there's a healthy population of birds out there. There's many, many birds."

Commentary: Nevadans Welcome Review Of Sage Grouse Land-Use Plans. In commentary for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (6/14, Mitchell), Thomas Mitchell writes that Nevada Attorney General Adam Laxalt, "who had filed a lawsuit attempting to overturn the Interior Department's 2015 land use plan to protect greater sage grouse, is praising the recent decision by the Trump administration to review those plans." Mitchell notes that "Interior's draft environmental impact statement estimated its grouse restrictions would reduce economic output in Nevada each year by $373.5 million, cost $11.3 million in lost state and local tax revenue and reduce employment by 739 jobs every year for the next 20 years."

Zinke's Doublespeak Is Bad For Sage Grouse. In a piece for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (6/14, Hatch), Cory Hatch claims that Zinke's order is "designed to open more sage grouse habitat to oil and gas development." However, Hatch argues that "Order 3353 hurts not only sage grouse but also the oil and gas industries it's designed to promote." According to Hatch, "by compromising those sage grouse plans, Zinke runs the risk of triggering another ESA review and subjecting the oil and gas industry to much stricter regulations."

E&E Publishing (6/14, Yachnin) reports that the Interior Department "topped its Monday announcement that Secretary Ryan Zinke will recommend significant reductions to the 1.35-million-acre Bears Ears monument with a striking photo of the former Montana lawmaker looking over a vista of rocky, red hills." However, "according to Interior's public account on photo sharing site Flickr, the image actually belongs to a collection of photos from Zinke's recent visit to Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument." The article says that "the photographic mix-up is only the latest in a string of errors identifying the Bears Ears monument."

Additional Coverage: Interior Secretary Visits State, Presents Millions For NH Fish And Game Programs.

Additional coverage Interior Ryan Zinke "signed a check for more than $1.2 billion" while visiting Bass Pro Shops in Hooksett on Tuesday was provided by the New Hampshire Union Leader (6/14, Proulx), the Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (6/14), the Denver \(CO\) Post (6/14, Blevins), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/14, French), the Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (6/14, Clark), and Inside Indiana Business (6/14, McGowan).

Additional Coverage: Zinke Recommends Downsizing Bears Ears In Shocking Display Of Common Sense.

Additional coverage of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommendation for the Bears Ears National Monument was provided by HotAir (6/14, Shaw), The Atlantic (6/14, Meyer), and Nation Sun News (6/14).

Additional Coverage: Montana Senators Vow To Fight For Park Service Funding.

Additional coverage that Sen. Jon Tester organized a media call on Tuesday blasting the White House's proposed budget for the Interior Department was provided by the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (6/14, Wilson).

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Ariz. Irrigation District Sues DOI, Claims Inflated Rates.

Law360 (6/14, Phillis) reports that the San Carlos Irrigation and Drainage District in Arizona has filed a complaint in Federal Claims Court accusing the Interior Department and Bureau of Indian Affairs of "charging landowners improperly high operation and maintenance costs for water services." The suit accused the federal government of "charging too much for O&M costs for fiscal years 2011 through 2017."

Blackfeet Prepares For Historic Constitutional Reform Vote.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (6/14, Franz) reports that "for the first time in eight decades, members of the Blackfeet Nation are deciding how their government will be organized." According to the article, "a secretarial election organized by the Department of Interior is underway east of the continental divide to determine whether the Blackfeet Nation should adopt a new tribal constitution."

Ex-Volunteer Firefighter Admits To Role In Tribal Fire Fraud.

The AP (6/14) reports that "a former volunteer firefighter for an American Indian reservation has admitted to covering up for the department's former leader who is charged with arranging for fires to be set that the tribe was paid to fight." The U.S. Attorney's Office in Kansas "says 35-year-old Arlene Negonsott, of Horton, pleaded guilty Tuesday to concealing a felony." Negonsott "admitted through her plea to not telling investigators what she knew about former Kickapoo Tribal Volunteer Fire Department chief Stephen Ramirez when she was interviewed about a series of fires on the Kickapoo Reservation in Brown County."

Additional coverage was provided by the Topeka \(KS\) Capital-Journal (6/14, Anderson).

Bureau Of Land Management

Trump Administration To Suspend Rule On Natural Gas Waste: Document.

Reuters (6/14, Gardner) reports an Interior Department document indicated the Trump Administration is suspending compliance dates on a regulation that limits methane emissions from oil and gas companies working on public lands. Compliance dates will be suspended until a federal court in Wyoming considers litigation on the rule.

The Washington Post (6/14, Eilperin) reports in a filing, the Bureau of Land Management entered a notice in the Federal Register saying it would delay compliance with the rule limiting methane flared from drilling operations on federal and tribal lands. Interior officials did not issue a public statement on delaying the rule, but deputy assistant secretary for land and minerals management Katharine MacGregor wrote, "While the BLM believes the Waste Prevention Rule was properly promulgated, the petitioners have raised serious questions concerning the validity of certain provisions of the Rule."

The Hill (6/14, Henry) reports the BLM wrote in the register that it was delaying the rule limiting methane waste "in light of the regulatory uncertainty created by the pending litigation and the ongoing administrative review." The agency wrote, "Given this legal uncertainty, operators should not be required to expend substantial time and resources to comply with regulatory requirements that may prove short-lived as a result of pending litigation or the administrative review that is already under way." Environmental groups sued the EPA earlier this month when it was considering delaying the rule, saying the agency overstepped its bounds.

Platts (6/14, Scheid) reports Lena Moffitt, senior director for the Sierra Club, said, "Once again, Donald Trump and [Interior Secretary] Ryan Zinke are showing where their priorities lie:

the profits of corporate polluters above all else, including the health of our communities. ... BLM's methane rule would protect our public lands and communities, and it has already withstood legal challenges and an attempted repeal in Congress." The Daily Caller (6/14, Follett) reports the EPA justified its review of rule citing a new study by NOAA researchers, which said the agency used inflated methane emissions estimates to justify the regulation. The study said that the research used daily peak emissions, rather than daily averages.

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (6/14, Siciliano), the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/15, Webb), the Santa Fe New Mexican (6/15, Moss), the Natural Gas Intelligence (6/14, Passut), and Greenwire (6/14)..

Western Colorado E&P Group Urges BLM To Eliminate EAs Required Before Lease Sales.

Natural Gas Intelligence (6/14, Nemec) reports that "the requirement to conduct environmental assessments (EA) before oil and natural gas lease sales are redundant and need to be eliminated, and the Trump administration should order a review, western Colorado producers urged in a letter earlier this month to the U.S. Bureau of Land Management." The Western Slope chapter of the Colorado Oil and Gas Association "wrote the two BLM offices in Grand Junction and Silt as part of comments regarding a planned December oil and gas lease sale in the state." The companies are "concerned about pre-leasing requirements under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) on a macro basis, even though similar environmental reviews are required of specific leases and drilling plans for each lease."

Big Solar Farm Near Joshua Tree National Park Signs Contract.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (6/15, Roth) reports that "the 500-megawatt Palen solar project would be built near Desert Center, between Interstate 10 and Joshua Tree National Park." Palen's developer, EDF Renewable Energy, has "signed a contract to sell the electricity the plant would generate to the region's major utility, Southern California Edison — a key step before construction can begin." The California Public Utilities Commission is "likely to approve that contract later this month." According to the article, "the developer must also wait for Riverside County and the federal Bureau of Land Management to conduct an environmental review, which the agencies expect to finish later this year."

Filmmakers Argue Verde Line Would Have 'Horrendous Effect' On N.M.

Film Industry. The Santa Fe New Mexican (6/14, Horwath) reports that "opponents of a 33-mile electric transmission line that a Texas company wants to build across parts of northern Santa Fe County and southern Rio Arriba County presented a documentary-style video in a packed Santa Fe County Commission chamber on Tuesday night as part of their efforts to sway decision-makers to reject the plan." Gregory Nava, "a filmmaker who wrote and directed El Norte, directed Selena and is on the Motion Picture Academy Board of Governors, was among area residents who spoke against the proposed 345-kilovolt transmission line, which could have support towers up to 110 feet tall." The article note sthat "Nava is the just the latest from the film industry to voice opposition to the proposed line." In December, Robert Redford wrote in a column published by The New Mexican "that the transmission line should not be built on Bureau of Land Management land because the agency's own classification charges it to 'retain the existing character of the landscape.'"

Elko BLM Fire Specialist Wins National Award.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (6/14) reports that "Elko District employee Clint Mothershead has become the first Bureau of Land Management employee to receive a Smokey Bear Award since the program began in 1957." Mothershead, "who received the 2017 Bronze award, has been the Fire Mitigation and Education Specialist on the Elko District for the last three years and is chairman of the Northeast Nevada Fire Prevention Group." Mothershead said, "It's an honor to receive this recognition, being from Elko and knowing multiple families who could be impacted by wildfire drives me a little harder to try and reach out to as many individuals possible. I couldn't have been as successful as I have been if it wasn't for the support I have received from my family and friends as well as my supervisor; Matt Murphy, the BLM Nevada State Office, cooperating agencies and the firefighters who attend the events promoting wildfire prevention."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Lake Mead Water Levels Could Lead To Statewide Water Limits.

Cronkite News (6/14, Kuhbander) reports that “Arizona risks losing water rights because of a lingering, nearly two-decade long drought in the Colorado River that could restrict water use ranging from farmers’ crops to how many households receive water, state water experts say.” According to Rose Davis, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, “state water officials from Arizona, Nevada and California – which draw water from Lake Mead – have been working with federal officials to reduce consumption and conserve water in other ways.” Davis said, “Water conservation for Lake Mead and the lower Colorado River relies on all of us. It’s you and me in our houses, how farmers are using their water, how businesses implement water conservation, and how we are starting to use reclaimed and re-purposed water.”

Projected New Los Banos Residents From San Luis Dam Project Less Than Advertised.

The Merced \(CA\) Sun-Star (6/14, Shanker) reports that “the number of new residents who could move to Los Banos in connection with a project on the San Luis Dam is much less than advertised to the Los Banos City Council last week, according to the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation.” The bureau “said that it now estimates the project will create about 200-300 construction jobs, a portion of which will go to area residents.” Last week, “the manager of a project that would raise the berms at specific points in the dam to prevent failure told the City Council that the project could generate ‘a couple thousand’ workers.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Los Banos \(CA\) Enterprise (6/14, Shanker).

Tell The Feds How To Improve Horsetooth Reservoir.

The Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (6/14, Coltrain) reports that “local and federal agencies are taking feedback on how to improve local reservoirs, including for recreation.” The Bureau of Reclamation and the Larimer County Department of Natural Resources are “compiling an integrated resource management plan and environmental assessment for Horsetooth Reservoir, Carter Lake, Pinewood Reservoir and Flatiron Reservoir.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

West Virginia To Get $11.6M For Fish, Wildlife Restoration.

The AP (6/15) reports that Sens. Joe Manchin and Shelley Moore Capito say West Virginia “will get $11.6 million in federal funding for its wildlife programs.” According to the senators, the West Virginia Department of Natural Resources will “receive $8.1 million for wildlife restoration and $3.5 million for sport fish restoration from the U.S. Department of the Interior.”

GOP Launches New Assault On Public Lands.

The Summit County \(CO\) Citizens Voice (6/14, Berwyn) reports that Rep. Bruce Westerman has “reintroduced a measure that would allow logging projects on up to 30,000 acres — more than 46 square miles — of public land to proceed without meaningful public input, regardless of the environmental harms they might cause.” The legislation “would also remove protections for old-growth trees and make it easier for endangered wildlife to be harmed during logging projects.” The “Resilient Federal Forests Act” would “eliminate Endangered Species Act requirements that the Forest Service consult with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to ensure logging projects don’t jeopardize endangered wildlife or plants.” It is scheduled for a hearing in the House Natural Resources Federal Lands Subcommittee on Thursday.

Experts: Keystone XL Pipeline Power Lines Will Hurt Cranes.

The AP (6/14, Press) reports Nebraska “environmental experts” are concerned that “transmission lines to power pumping stations for the planned Keystone XL pipeline would threaten endangered whooping cranes.” Environmental group representatives “submitted written testimony on Monday to the Nebraska Public Service Commission, saying they object to the $8 billion pipeline’s impact on natural resources.” Retired biology professor Paul Johnsgard said, “We need to reduce the threats to this magnificent bird, not increase them.”

Peregrine Falcon Population Rises In Southeastern Michigan.

The AP (6/14) reports that “a new report says peregrine falcons are making a comeback in southeastern Michigan.” The state Department of Natural Resources and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “say the region’s population has grown from five young birds introduced in 1987 to 15 nesting pairs that reared 30 young birds last year.” According to the report, “there were 54 peregrine falcon nest sites across Michigan in 2016.”

Additional Coverage: Wyoming Coalition Seeks Ban On Cyanide Traps To Kill Coyotes.

Additional coverage that “a coalition of environmental groups has petitioned the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service asking for a Wyoming statewide ban on cyanide traps being used to kill coyotes” was provided by the AP (6/14).

Will Trump’s Oil Flow From U.S. Reserves Or The Arctic?

John Kemp writes in the blog for Thomson Reuters (6/14) that President Trump has promised to balance the budget over the next 10 years by selling half the country’s crude oil reserves and opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling. The budget proposal calls for SPR sales starting in 2018, but Kemp says that sales estimates may be wrong because crude futures would likely drop due to the increased supply. A debate also remains on drilling in the ANWR because it houses large amounts of crude, but concerns remain over the risk of spills and climate change.

National Park Service

North Carolina Man Fell Into Yellowstone Hot Spring, Burned.

The AP (6/14) reports that “a 21-year-old North Carolina man has suffered severe burns after falling into a hot spring in Yellowstone National Park.” According to park officials, “Gervais Dylan Gate of Raleigh, an employee of park concessionaire Xanterra Parks and Resorts, fell into a spring in the Lower Geyser Basin on Tuesday.” Park spokeswoman Morgan Warthin “said the incident is still under investigation.”

Additional coverage was provided by Fox News (6/14, Fedschun), the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (6/14), and the Gephardt Daily \(UT\) (6/14).

A Tour Of The Mammoth Hotel Renovations In Yellowstone.

The Yellowstone Insider (6/14, Kearney) reports that the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel at Yellowstone National Park is “undergoing major infrastructure upgrades to its seismic stability and ADA compliance, along with the heating, electrical and fire suppression systems.” Peter Galindo, a National Park Service engineer and project manager, provided “a tour of the building on Tuesday, June 6.” According to Galindo, “the total bill for the project is about $8 million, which is funded through a National Park Service Line Item Construction Program.”

Grand Canyon National Park Rangers Search For Missing Hiker.

The AP (6/14) reports that Grand Canyon National Park rangers are “searching the park’s backcountry for a missing California hiker.” According to park spokeswoman Emily Davis, “air and ground crews are looking for 72-year-old Raafat ‘Ralph’ Amin Nasser-Eddin of Los Angeles along the Hermit Trail and several other trails.”

Superintendent Of Lincoln Home National Historic Site Retires.

The Springfield \(IL\) State Journal-Register (6/14, Landis) reports that “the superintendent of the Lincoln Home National Historic Site has retired after seven years at the local landmark and more than 40 years with the National Park Service.” Dale Phillips, “who came to Springfield from George Rogers Clark National Historical Park in Indiana in 2010, said Wednesday he had been considering retirement and that the time was right.” Phillips’ “retirement took effect in late May after 41 years with the park service.”

Franklin Elementary School Wins A Spot On National Historic Register.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/14, Prager) reports that Franklin Park Elementary School has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.

Office Of Insular Affairs

22 Pacific Graduates From Leadership Dev’t Program.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (6/15) reports that “twenty-two participants from throughout the U.S. affiliated insular areas represented the 2017 graduating class of the Executive Leadership Development Program.” ELDP graduation ceremonies were held on June 9 in Honolulu, Hawaii.

The ELDP is funded by the Office of Insular Affairs and administered by the Graduate School USA's Pacific Islands Training Initiative.

Additional coverage was provided by Marianas Variety (6/15).

St. Thomas Native Commands New Navy Ship.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (6/14, Austin) reports that "the new commander of the USS Gabrielle Giffords is Navy Cmdr. Keith Woodley, a native of St. Thomas." Congressional Delegate Stacey Plaskett "took to the House floor in Washington Monday to honor Woodley." She said, "With this being Caribbean-American Heritage Month, I wanted to highlight and congratulate a native Virgin Islander who is now the new commander of the USS Gabrielle Giffords, the Navy's newest littoral combat ship, which was commissioned this past weekend in Texas."

Trump Calls For National Unity In Wake Of Attack On GOP Lawmakers.

News reports and analyses, including an editorial in the Washington Post (6/14), mostly praised President Trump for his comments following Wednesday's shooting of GOP lawmakers in Virginia. The story overwhelmingly dominated the news cycle on cable and online media, with the major network newscasts devoting nearly 46 minutes of combined airtime to the attack. All three broadcasts showed footage of Trump saying, "We may have our differences, but we do well in times like these to remember everyone who serves in our nation's capital is here because above all, they love our country." Almost universally, the coverage highlighted Trump's calls for unity. The CBS Evening News (6/14, story 4, 1:25, Brennan), for example, remarked on the fact that "an often-polarizing President delivered a message of unity," and added that according to "a White House official...the President was very aware of the delicate nature of what was unfolding...and...worked on his remarks with Vice President Pence, someone who served in Congress himself, to craft a speech that showed reverence and respect for the victims." NBC Nightly News (6/14, story 4, 2:35, Holt) cast Trump as "abandoning partisan rhetoric as he faces his first domestic crisis," and ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 5, 2:00, Muir) referred to "a bit of a test of sorts for the President."

Wolf Blitzer said on CNN's Situation Room (6/14) that Trump responded to the shooting with "a very strong appeal for national unity." Jim Acosta added that "we heard from a very different...Trump," who "did not engage in any kind of divisive rhetoric" and "sounded a unifying theme." Anderson Cooper said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/14) that Trump "has been quick to react after other serious attacks and has come under criticism for some of what he said. This is certainly not the case this time. Today, his remarks drew bipartisan praise."

Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (6/14) that Trump "had a somber and reflective message for the nation," and Kristen Welker said on MSNBC Live (6/14) that he "abandoned any partisan politics." John Roberts said on Fox News' Special Report (6/14), "While some members of Congress at the ball field blamed what they called political rhetorical terrorism...Trump did not address the political environment." Politico (6/14, Samuelsohn) says Trump's "measured reaction...is being praised by all sides as they gauge his temperament in a time of crisis." Politico quotes former Harry Reid spokesman Jim Manley as saying, "His statement was measured and respectful and hit all the right notes." An anonymous "former senior Obama White House aide" was a bit more circumspect, saying, "I think he sufficiently played the part."

The New York Times (6/14, Thrush, Davis) reports that Trump delivered his comments "with a gravity and sense of focus not seen since his well-received address to a joint session of Congress in February," and that he "steered clear of the possible political motivations of the gunman." Meanwhile, Roll Call (6/14, Bennett) referred to "a measured message of national unity," and described Trump as "putting aside the scandals surrounding his presidency and pursuit of his embattled agenda."

The Washington Times (6/14, Miller) reports Trump "said that Americans would come together to confront violence and bloodshed," and USA Today (6/14, Jackson) notes that "in a message directed to Rep. Steve Scalise, the Louisiana Republican wounded in the attack, Trump said: 'America is praying for you, and America is praying for all of the victims of this terrible shooting.'" Before his remarks, the President "spoke with Scalise's wife and chief of staff, as well as House Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and the chief of the Capitol Police."

Townhall (6/14, Pavlich) noted that the President "praised two Capitol Police officers who were at the park where multiple members of Congress and staff were practicing for tomorrow's annual Congressional Baseball Game." The two were "shot and wounded, yet continued to take on the assailant." The Los Angeles Times (6/14, Lauter) quotes Trump as saying, "Many lives would have been lost if not for the heroic actions of the two Capitol Police officers," who were wounded responding to "a very, very brutal assault."

The Washington Post (6/14) editorializes that "Trump struck exactly the right tone" in his statement yesterday, and that the attack "should cause a gut check about what passes for political discourse in this country." The Post adds that "it was discouraging that some on both the political right and left couldn't wait for Mr. Scalise to even get out of surgery before escalating the rhetoric rather than toning it down." The Wall Street Journal (6/14) also praises Trump's tone in its editorial, in which it also lauds the police response to the attack and calls for enhanced security for lawmakers. USA Today (6/14), meanwhile, similarly editorializes that "the moment invites some reflection on the nature of debate."

The New York Times (6/14) editorializes that "Trump said just the right thing after the attack on Wednesday," and quotes him as saying, "We can all agree that we are blessed to be Americans, that our children deserve to grow up in a nation of safety and peace." The Times concludes, however, "Yet he will not help create that nation if he continues to advocate easy access to lethal weapons."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump's "Rhetorically Violent" Tone Has Permeated US Politics. Weighing in on Trump's call for more civil political discourse – in a story that is generally favorable toward him – the New York Times (6/14, Thrush, Davis) says that "moving beyond the confrontational, personal, rhetorically violent and at times divisive tone he has infused in politics will be no easy task," and describes the President as a "political agitator pressed into the unfamiliar new role of soothing a nation."

CBS Highlights Trump's Campaign Rhetoric. The CBS Evening News (6/14, story 6, 2:10, Garrett) reported last night that "partisan unity has been lacking for years," and showed Trump saying, "Hillary Clinton is a bigot," and then, also during the campaign, "Such nasty woman." CBS added that "she in turn called Trump supporters deplorable." CBS added that "the heated rhetoric has continued since...Trump's inauguration." CBS continued, "Comedian Kathy Griffin posed for this photo posted on social media, depicting a decapitated...Trump, and a New York city production of 'Julius Caesar' casted the assassinated emperor as a Trump look a-like."

Alleged Shooter A Left-Wing, Anti-Trump Activist Who Volunteered For Sanders. The alleged shooter's anti-Republican and anti-Trump activism was detailed across the coverage. The New York Times (6/14, Fandos) describes James Thomas Hodgkinson, a 66-year-old out of Belleville, IL as "distracted over the election of...Trump," and adds that he "traveled to Washington in recent weeks to protest, his brother said on Wednesday." NBC Nightly News (6/14, story 2, 3:00, Williams), however, said "investigators believe Hodgkinson was living out of his car, a white cargo van, since late March on the same street the ballpark is on, but they are trying to figure out why he came to Washington in the first place."

ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 2, 3:20, Thomas) called the shooter's political beliefs "strident," adding that his Facebook posts portray "a deep hatred for Republicans, even calling...Trump a 'traitor.'" Wrote the attacker, "Trump has destroyed our democracy. It's time to destroy Trump and company." He also "posted a cartoon critical of...Scalise," and "joined anti-Republican Facebook groups, including one dubbed 'Terminate the Republican Party.'" The latter, said The Hill (6/14, Williams), "took on a chilling significance after Wednesday morning."

The Belleville \(IL\) News-Democrat (6/14) also reports Hodgkinson was "a member of a number of anti-Republican groups on Facebook," including "The Road to Hell is Paved with Republicans," "Donald Trump is not my President," "Illinois Berners United to Resist Trump" and "Expose Republican Fraud." USA Today (6/14, Johnson, Locker) notes that "earlier this week, the suspect highlighted a campaign calling for the president's impeachment." He wrote, "Trump is Guilty & Should Go to Prison for Treason." He also posted frequently about MSNBC's The Rachel Maddow Show, "one of his favorite television programs." The suspect also left evidence of his liberal political leanings in numerous letters to the editor of the Belleville \(IL\) News-Democrat (6/14).

USA Today (6/14, Gaudiano) reports in a separate story that the suspect "'apparently volunteered in Iowa' for Sen. Bernie Sanders' 2016 presidential campaign, according to his staff." The Washington Post (6/14, Hermann, Kane, Phillips) reports that "Robert Becker, who served as the Iowa director of Sanders's presidential campaign, said that Hodgkinson had no formal role on the campaign and that he couldn't find anyone who remembered him." At any rate, notes the Washington Times (6/14, Dinan), Sanders took to the Senate floor yesterday and said, "I am sickened by this despicable act. ... Let me be as clear as I can be. Violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society and I condemn this action in the strongest possible terms."

The CBS Evening News (6/14, story 3, 2:40, Pegues) noted that "in 2011, Hodgkinson...was interviewed in an Occupy Wall Street protest." Hodgkinson was shown saying back then, "Ninety-nine percent are getting pushed around, and the one percent are just not giving a damn." NBC Nightly News (6/14, lead story, 4:20, Costello), meanwhile, reported in its lead story that "it would certainly appear this was a targeted assassination attempt on members of Congress, and goes to the very heart of the democracy."

On Fox News' Hannity (6/14), Sean Hannity referred to the shooter as "a left-wing gunman" who was "targeting and attacking" Republicans. Hannity added that the shooter was "a staunch left-wing, liberal leftist with an apparent hatred for all things Republican, conservative, and especially...Trump." The Washington Post (6/14, Marimow, Jackman, Boburg) says he was "highly critical of...Trump and other Republican leaders on social media," and the Washington Free Beacon (6/14, Griswold) that he was "a diehard liberal."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/14), "The only person directly responsible for what happened today is the man who pulled the trigger. That said, there might be some lessons we can learn. One is that in this volatile moment...people with megaphones ought to be responsible about what they say. That means never excusing political violence under any circumstances. That means condemning shootings like this, but it also means riots, assaults, occupations, threats, any other attempt to achieve political goals through force ought to be condemned."

Charles Lane, in his Washington Post (6/14) column, says "acts of murderous political violence...do not tell us much about the state of the country and its political culture," and that "absolutely no one is responsible for this deed except the individual who carried it out." Lane goes on to urge conservatives not to blame their opponents' rhetoric for the attack.

Daily Caller Analysis: Second Case In Two Weeks Of Sanders Backers Involved In High-Profile Crime. The Daily Caller (6/14, Ross) reported that "Hodgkinson's Facebook profile strongly suggests a political motivation for the shooting," and that "this is the second time in as many weeks that a Sanders supporter has been involved in a high-profile criminal case." The DC added that "last week, the FBI arrested 25-year-old National Security Agency contractor Reality Leigh Winner for stealing Top Secret documents and mailing them to a news outlet." Winner's "social media footprint shows that she was also a Sanders backer."

Donald Trump Jr.: Shooting Illustrates Danger Of "Glorifying" Trump's Mock Assassination. Politico (6/14, Gold) reports that "some conservative political figures and alt-right news outlets began speculating on whether Wednesday's attack...was connected to left-wing rhetoric against...Trump." Donald Trump Jr. "pointed his followers on Twitter to commentator Harlan Hill saying, 'Events like today are EXACTLY why we took issue with NY elites glorifying the assassination of our President.'" The Hill added that "recent theatrical performances, including by comedian Kathy Griffin and rapper Snoop Dogg, have portrayed...Trump being hurt or killed." Rep. Rodney Davis similarly told CNN, "This could be the first political rhetorical terrorist attack." Conservative radio host "Michael Savage tweeted 'I warned America the Dems constant drumbeat of hatred would lead to violence!'" The Drudge Report, meanwhile, "highlighted left-wing Twitter users who 'celebrated' the shooting."

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (6/14), "I think this will help to pull people back and to realize that the kind of language – to celebrate the Julius Caesar in Central Park, in which the Julius Caesar is clearly Donald Trump, as some kind of great cultural achievement, I think it's really appalling. This is part of all that."

The New York Post (6/14, Massarella) reports the "modern production of 'Julius Caesar' – with an actor made up as...Trump getting offed onstage – will continue to play in Central Park as scheduled, the theater company said."

Republicans Denounce Spike In Violent Threats; Lawmakers Seek Added Security. The AP (6/14, Bykowicz) reports that "some Republicans say that in the era of...Trump, they're being threatened like never before." They "point to a virulent backlash against Trump that they say goes beyond the bounds of moderate political dissent and – subtly or not – encourages violence." Charlie Kirk, "a young conservative activist" who "has been chronicling threats that get little attention outside conservative media," said yesterday, "I've been saying, 'What is it going to take for this to get some visibility.' ... And now here we are."

The Washington Times (6/14, Boyer) reports "the 'Resist' movement spawned a shooting rampage Wednesday morning that targeted Republican lawmakers," and "the demonizing of Mr. Trump has become a contest of one-upmanship" which "has extended to his Republican allies in Congress, whose support for the president's agenda has sparked such a heated outcry that some lawmakers have debated the need for more security at town hall meetings in their districts." To the Los Angeles Times (6/14, Barabak), meanwhile, "the attack almost seemed a natural, if sick, extension of the virulence that surrounds the country's increasingly tribal politics."

POLITICO New York (6/14, Vielkind) reports that "Rep. Claudia Tenney, a freshman Republican from suburban Utica, has forwarded a threatening email to Capitol Police in the wake of Wednesday morning's shooting at a Congressional baseball practice." Read the email, "One down, 216 to go. ... Did you NOT expect this? When you take away ordinary peoples very lives in order to pay off the wealthiest among us, your own lives are forfeit. Certainly, your souls and morality were lost long before. Good riddance." That message "came just hours after" the shooting. Added Politico, "Tenney's office said it 'regularly' receives threatening emails and social media replies, but that 'today's message was particularly disheartening following this morning's tragic events.'"

The CBS Evening News (6/14, story 2, 2:10, Cordes) showed Rep. Martha McSally, saying, "When you see some of the things going on out there, it's like the frog in the water where you're turning the temperature up one degree at a time. As I said, when the man was arrested making threats against me, threats of violence and acts of violence are not so far apart."

The New York Times (6/14, Hulse) reports on a "sense that national political conflict had escalated out of control," that there is an "acrid partisan atmosphere in Congress as well as back home, where lawmakers say they are increasingly worried about hostile audiences and constituents filled with vitriol who are unrestrained in venting at their member of Congress." Under the headline "Attack Tests Movement Sanders Founded," the New York Times (6/14, Alcindor) reports in a separate story that "in 2010, as the Tea Party movement rose, often with violent messages, Democratic lawmakers lamented the threats they faced." Republicans "are feeling a similar lash as the left rises to confront a Republican president."

The Washington Post (6/14, Costa, O'Keefe, Fahrenthold) reports that some "Republican lawmakers said the shooting made them more concerned about their own security, especially after tense town-hall meetings in recent weeks about the Republican efforts to repeal and replace President Barack Obama's health-care law." Bloomberg Politics (6/14, House) notes "rank-and-file members generally aren't accompanied by the Capitol Police, whose mission is to protect Congress," and that "even before Wednesday's shootings, there has been rising concern among members amid threats and anger at town hall meetings."

NBC Nightly News (6/14, story 3, 2:25, Holt) interviewed Sen. Rand Paul, who said, "Sort of the irony is, you know, Congressman Scalise is the one who suffered, but had he not been there and his detail team, it would have been a disaster." The Washington Times (6/14, Boyer, Dinan) quotes Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe as saying of the officers, "They saved a lot of lives today." ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 4, 2:20, Bruce) showed Rep. Ron DeSantis similarly saying, "Scalise gets a security [detail] because he's in leadership. Had Scalise not been there, I think it would have been a massacre today because there would have been no way to defend yourself."

Lawmakers Call For Easing Of Political Discord. The Wall Street Journal (6/14, Nicholas, Peterson, Lubold) quotes Speaker Ryan as saying on the House floor yesterday that "an attack on one of us is an attack on all of us," while Minority Leader Pelosi stated, "We are not one caucus or the other in this House today." The Washington Post (6/14, Costa, O'Keefe, Fahrenthold), meanwhile, reports that Rep. Rodney Davis, "who was present for the attack and did interviews in the Capitol's Statuary Hall while still wearing cleats and dirty baseball pants," said yesterday, "This has got to stop. ... We've got to ratchet down the rhetoric."

The Washington Times (6/14, Persons) reports "Rep. Mike Doyle, the manager for the Democratic baseball team, said he invited the Republican team for dinner at the Democratic Club as a first step towards changing the heated political climate." Said Doyle, "We want to be together. I just suggested to Joe [Barton] that we'd like to host the entire Republican team down at the Democratic Club. Probably some of them have never stepped foot in that building, but we want to have them to dinner and have both teams be together." ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 4, 2:20, Bruce) also reported the "show of unity will extend to the baseball diamond tomorrow night," as "Democrats and Republicans feel it sends a strong message that Americans will not back down to fear."

Politico (6/14, Dove) sounds more skeptical note, reporting that "six years ago it was Giffords, now Scalise, but neither the politics nor the rhetoric are likely to change." Dana Milbank, in the Washington Post (6/14), says "there is something magical about the national pastime uniting our leaders – and something tragic that it takes the bullets of a madman to remind them that their opponents aren't their enemies."

Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (6/14), "Maybe people – as many members of Congress have talked about today – need to tone it down and maybe we need to sort of take a look at ourselves and our political discord and the rest of it."

Brianna Keilar said on CNN's Situation Room (6/14), "You can't extrapolate with any certainty from this that even the discourse in Washington is what caused this" and "you can't extrapolate with certainty that it did not. So I think it becomes something on the minds of both Democrats and Republicans as they go through the process of making their arguments."

Susan Page of USA Today said on Fox News' Special Report (6/14), "Maybe this will be short-lived, but I think there's a sense of 'Have we gone so far in the fierceness of our political debates and things like social media postings, going over the line of civil discourse that we should step back?'"

Davis, Collins Put Onus On Democrats. The New York Post (6/15, Fredericks, Schultz, Massarella) reports Rep. Rodney Davis told Fox News, "This political rhetoric and political discourse that has led to hate, has led to gunfire. ... This has got to stop, and it's gotta stop today." Meanwhile, Rep. Chris Collins also "pointed a finger squarely at the Democrats," telling radio station WBEN, "I can only hope that the Democrats do tone down the rhetoric."

McAuliffe At Crime Scene: "Too Many Guns On The Street." Reuters (6/14, Lynch, Colvin) reports the attack "quickly revived debate about gun rights in America," with "Virginia's Democratic governor, Terry McAuliffe," urging "gun control measures." McAuliffe said at the scene of the shooting, "This is not what today is about, but there are too many guns on the street." Reuters adds that "Scalise has been a strong opponent of gun control measures." In a separate story, Reuters (6/14, Cowan) reports that "despite the day's carnage, there was no immediate indication that...Trump or his fellow Republicans would shift from their position protecting gun ownership rights," and adds that "pro-gun voters lean heavily toward the Republican Party."

To USA Today (6/14, Gaudiano), meanwhile, the shooting "has re-energized both sides of the gun debate." Rep. Collins, "who was not at the practice, told a Buffalo television station he has decided to carry his gun with him everywhere as a result of the shooting." Said Collins, "I have a carry permit. ... On a rare occasion I'd have my gun in the glove box or something, but it's going to be in my pocket from this day forward."

Likewise, the New York Times (6/14, Martin) reports "shaken and angry" GOP lawmakers "seized on the brazen daytime shooting...to demand that existing restrictions on gun access be loosened so that people facing similar attacks are able to defend themselves." While "past shootings have brought calls for more gun control...the ardent supporters of gun rights who came under fire this time were not about to change their views." Politico (6/14, Kim, Everett, Caygle), meanwhile, reported that in contrast to past shootings, "on Wednesday, the tone among even the most ardent proponents of stricter gun laws was dramatically different," as "in multiple interviews, several Democratic lawmakers urged that no, today was not the day to revive the dormant gun control debate. It was too soon, it hit too close to home – and lawmakers simply didn't want to stand accused of politicizing a shooting that injured a colleague and friend."

Trump, First Lady Visit Scalise, Who Has Had Second Surgery And May Need More. The Washington Times (6/14, Miller) reports that the President and First Lady "visited...Scalise at the hospital Wednesday night, bringing him flowers." The Los Angeles Times (6/14) briefly remarks on the "surprise visit," and USA Today (6/14, Korte) notes Trump later tweeted, "Just left hospital. ... Rep. Steve Scalise, one of the truly great people, is in very tough shape – but he is a real fighter. Pray for Steve!" Politico (6/14, Ocasio, Morin) and the New York Post (6/14, Tacopino), among other news outlets, run similar reports.

ABC World News Tonight (6/14, lead story, 4:25, Kerley) described yesterday's attack in its lead story, "Just after 7:00 a.m., Hodgkinson opens fire through a fence near the third base dugout. The number three man in House leadership, Scalise from Louisiana, is playing second base and is hit by a bullet. ... Members of Congress forced to flee...as the shooter is on the move." Scalise's security detail engaged "the suspect from behind an SUV, according to witnesses," and "within minutes, local police" joined "in the gun battle." The gunman was shot "down at 7:14 and died later." The AP (6/14, Werner, Day) reports "colleagues said Scalise dragged himself away from the infield leaving a trail of blood as they rushed to his assistance." The New York Times (6/14, Shear, Goldman, Cochrane) noted his aides said "he had undergone surgery at MedStar Washington Hospital Center and was in critical condition." ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 3, 1:45, Muir) devotes a second story to the frenzied scene, and a third (6/14, story 12, 1:25, Muir) to the two Capitol Hill police officers who were "wounded themselves" but saved "so many."

The CBS Evening News (6/14, lead story, 4:30, Pelley) showed Rep. Roger Williams saying, "There could have easily been 25 deaths or more today. But Officers Griner and Bailey prevented that, and my family and I will be forever grateful." CBS also reported that Rep. Jeff Duncan "left just before the shooting began, but he believes he encountered the gunman as he was leaving." Duncan was shown saying, "I had an interaction with someone in the parking lot who asked me if the team practicing were Democrats or Republicans. I told him they were Republicans. He said, 'Okay. Thanks.' And he turned around."

The New York Times (6/14, Shear, Goldman, Cochrane) reports "officials said Mr. Hodgkinson was armed with a handgun and a rifle," and "witnesses described a man with white hair and a beard wielding a long gun as he stood behind the dugout."

Suspect Had Arrest Record. Business Insider (6/14, Mark, Berke) reports "Hodgkinson has a varied arrest record in St. Clair County, for offenses such as failing to obtain electrical permits, damaging a motor vehicle, resisting a peace officer, eluding police, criminal damage to property, driving under the influence and assorted traffic offenses." The Washington Times (6/14, Miller, Noble) also reports that in Belleville, "deputies responded multiple times to his home to take complaints of damage to his yard, but a sheriff's report from a decade ago indicates that Mr. Hodgkinson was arrested and charged with domestic battery and aggravated discharge of a firearm for a domestic assault during which he was accused of firing a shotgun at a man." According to Roll Call (6/14, Pathé), "the most recent report was in March. Officers were dispatched when a caller reported hearing as much as 50 gunshots near Hodgkinson's house." When "they arrived...he showed them a valid state firearms permit, and the officers told him not to shoot in the residential area."

Politico (6/14, Woellert, Meyer) indicates that "St. Clair County is surrounded by communities that voted heavily for Trump in the 2016 presidential election," though "Hillary Clinton edged out Trump in St. Clair itself, home to Belleville."

WPost Report: Mueller Investigating Trump For Obstruction Of Justice.

A front-page Washington Post (6/14, A1, Barrett, Entous, Nakashima, Horwitz) report that special counsel Robert Mueller is investigating whether the President attempted to obstruct justice garnered relatively light media attention amid ongoing coverage of the shooting targeting member of Congress as they practiced for a charity baseball game. The Post, in what it casts a "major turning point" in the investigation, cited "officials" who say Mueller's "widening probe" now "includes an examination of whether...Trump attempted to obstruct justice." The Post also cites "five people briefed on the requests," who said DNI Coats, NSA Director Rogers and his former deputy, Richard Ledgett, "agreed to be interviewed by Mueller's investigators as early as this week," but adds that it "remains unclear whether they will describe in full their conversations with Trump and other top officials or will be directed by the White House to invoke executive privilege."

The New York Times (6/14, Schmidt, Apuzzo) says that while none of the men were involved in the Trump campaign, "recent news reports have raised questions about whether Mr. Trump requested their help in trying to get" Comey "to end an investigation into the president's former national security adviser, Michael T. Flynn." The Times adds that according to "an intelligence official," Mueller's office "has also asked the N.S.A. for any documents or notes related to the agency's interactions with the White House as part of the Russia investigation."

Adam Entous, a co-author of the Post's story, appeared on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/14) and confirmed that his report said the decision to investigate Trump for obstruction of justice came about because of Comey's firing. The Wall Street Journal (6/14, Wilber, Harris, Sonne) says a spokesman for Mueller declined to comment on the Post's report.

Jonathan Swan writes on Axios (6/14) that Republicans see a "familiar" and "distressing" pattern in which Trump's application of "unconventional or inappropriate pressure to 'independent' public officials" is "often followed by damaging leaks." Swan adds that after the Post story broke, he heard from "Republicans who are starting to draw a straight line from Trump's undisciplined venting to damaging leaks." One such text read: "Leak was probably a response to stories about POTUS firing Mueller. Can't fire him now."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/14) that the Post "said that investigation was not underway until Comey got fired and now it is. We know this, you won't be surprised to learn, from unnamed officials familiar with the matter. In other words, leaks." Cecilia Vega reported on ABC World News Tonight (6/14, story 6, 0:45, Muir) that in a statement, Trump's legal team "called this a leak that's outrageous, inexcusable and illegal."

Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/14) that this is "a huge deal, and I don't hate to tell you that I told you so. When you listen to James Comey's testimony about how the President tried to get him to drop the investigation and then you see that he fired Comey when he didn't drop the investigation, that is evidence of obstruction of justice. When you combine it with the apparent – and I say apparent – conversations between Trump and the Director of National Intelligence, the Director of the NSA, trying to stop this investigation in other ways, that's worth investigating someone for obstruction of justice." Glenn Thrush of the New York Times said on MSNBC's Hardball (6/14), "As people have said before, it's often not the crime but the cover-up. ... What's novel about this story is they're also talking to Dan Coats, Admiral Rogers of the NSA and one of Admiral Rogers' deputies. I'm very intrigued to figure out what they are going to talk about."

Gloria Borger said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/14), "This is all kind of self-sabotage, if you think about it. Because if he hadn't fired Comey, Comey would not have believed perhaps that the President was obstructing. ... So when you look at this whole event, all of them, you have to think, that in a way, Donald Trump did this to himself." David Gergen said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/14), "I think in every case where there's been a special counsel appointed by the Justice Department, it is because the person being investigated brought it upon himself." Gergen added that "this is taking a major turn and it's potentially much more dangerous for Donald Trump than what this started with and that is the Russian issue."

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (6/14) that this is "a classic case of a special prosecutor expanding the scope of the investigation. The metastasis has begun." Karl Rove writes in his column for the Wall Street Journal (6/14) that given the available information, Trump is not vulnerable to an obstruction charge, but Mueller may find no underlying offense in the Russia investigation and decide he must charge someone for something.

Sen. Chris Coons said on CNN's Out Front (6/14), "This is a very stunning development," adding that "this report in the 'Washington Post' this evening suggests strongly, given five different sources that the scope of the investigation has changed, since the firing of the FBI director, and is now targeted directly at the President and his actions which may amount to obstruction of justice."

Mueller Meets With Heads Of Senate Intel Committee. News that Mueller is investigating possible obstruction by Trump came on the same day he met with leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee "to discuss their respective investigations," the Washington Times (6/14, Boylan) reports. Mueller, Chairman Richard Burr, and ranking Democrat Mark Warner met in a secure room in the Capitol building. Burr and Warner said in a statement, "We had a constructive meeting with the special counsel today and we look forward to future engagements." Burr "refused to reveal further details to CNN other than to explain they met to open up lines of communication." Bloomberg Politics (6/14, Dennis, House) says they "discuss[ed] preventing conflicts in their separate investigations into Russian election interference." Mueller "is set to meet with House intelligence panel leaders in the coming days."

Reed: Trump Must Testify Before Mueller. Sen. Jack Reed was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/14) why he thinks Trump's offer to testify before the Senate is a bad idea. Reed said, "I think what you see is what we saw yesterday with Attorney General Sessions. 'I'm not going to answer that question. I have some policy reason, I'll claim executive privilege.' Then the sort of practical basis with five-minute rounds, there's no opportunity to develop I think a series of questions. But more practically, and more substantively to this investigation, he has to be deposed by – or testify before the special prosecutor, Mr. Mueller. That's the individual who will have all the information and he will have the legal authority to compel testimony unless there is some type of privilege and have the ability to follow up with questions. That's what should be done. I hope it will be done."

Senate Judiciary Committee To Investigate Comey Firing. Also Wednesday, the Wall Street Journal (6/14, Tau) reports, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley announced that his panel will investigate Trump's firing of Comey. In a letter released Wednesday, Grassley wrote, "The Judiciary Committee has an obligation to fully investigate any alleged improper partisan interference in law enforcement investigations. ... It is my view that fully investigating the facts, circumstances, and rationale for Mr. Comey's removal will provide us the opportunity to do that on a cooperative, bipartisan basis. The American people deserve a full accounting of attempts to meddle in both our democratic processes and the impartial administration of justice."

Trump Met With Donors On Day Comey Testified. Politico (6/14, Palmeri, Vogel) reports that on the day Comey "delivered his damaging Senate testimony," President Trump's team "summoned about a dozen top donors" including "Ken Griffin, Doug DeVos, Tom Hicks, Jr., Rebekah Mercer, Todd Ricketts, Tom Saunders, Paul Singer and Dick Uihlein" to the White House

“to rally support for Trump’s agenda.” A “senior administration official and other people familiar with the event” said the donors “gathered in the Roosevelt Room on June 8 for a briefing from Trump’s legislative director Marc Short,” and Trump “stopped by the briefing to greet” them. Politico adds that “as if underscoring the distracting effect, the briefing occurred soon after Comey finished testifying.”

Johnson To Testify Before House Intelligence Committee. Politico (6/14, Wright) reports that “a congressional source” says former DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson will testify publicly before the House Intelligence Committee next Wednesday “as part of its investigation into Russia’s election meddling.” Politico says Johnson “is likely to face questions about Russian attempts to hack US election systems.”

Goldberg: If Democrats Retake House, They Will Impeach Trump. Jonah Goldberg writes in a piece for National Review (6/14) that Democrats “are every bit as committed to impeaching Trump as the GOP was to impeaching Clinton,” but unlike Republicans at the time, “Democrats don’t control the House – yet.” If they retake the house in 2018, he warns, “it won’t matter to most members whether the country as a whole supports impeachment, because the voters who elected them – and the donors who supported them – will be in favor of it.” Goldberg argues that “the only hope for the Trump presidency is for the GOP to maintain control of the House.”

Thiessen: False Charges Of Collusion Actually Furthering Russia’s Goals. Marc Thiessen argues in his Washington Post (6/14) column that those who are “falsely claiming that Trump was under FBI investigation for collusion with Moscow are, in fact, the ones inadvertently colluding with Putin to undermine American democracy.” Thiessen writes that “airing unproven allegations of coordinating with the Kremlin,” which “was seen as bad form,” is now “common practice in Washington,” and the “false charges and innuendo directly assist Russia in its efforts to undermine public confidence in our democratic institutions.”

Senate Votes 97-2 To Tighten Sanctions On Russia.

In a move media reports say sets up a potential confrontation with the White House, the Senate on Wednesday defied Administration wishes and voted 97-2 to approve a measure to tighten sanctions on Russia. The New York Times (6/14, Salam) reports that the issue “had many of President Trump’s allies siding with his harshest critics,” and the Los Angeles Times (6/14, Mascaro) calls the vote “a rare bipartisan move intended to respond to various aggressions by Russia against the US.” The measure “firms up existing sanctions against Russia and imposes new ones.” It targets “a wide array of what senators called ‘corrupt Russian actors,’ including those engaged in hacking, seizure of state resources, human rights abuses and supplying arms to the Syrian regime,” and “requires Congress to review any effort by the Trump administration to loosen sanctions on Russia.” Politico (6/14, Schor) calls the bill “the year’s most significant GOP-imposed restriction on the White House,” and USA Today (6/14, Collins) says the Senate passed it in defiance of the Administration, setting up “a confrontation with President Trump, who has dismissed reports of Russia’s interference in the election and whose administration has been attempting to improve US relations with Moscow.”

The New York Post (6/14, Fredericks) reports that the House has not indicated when – or if – it will take up the bill, and adds that Trump, who “has not publicly backed sanctions against Vladimir Putin’s regime,” could veto it. However, Reuters (6/14, Zengerle) says that if Trump were to veto the measure, “some of its backers said they expected enough congressional support to override a veto.” The Washington Times (6/14, Dinan) describes the vote as “a bipartisan strike against the government of President Vladimir Putin,” which “marked a rare spot of agreement between Democrats and Republicans.” Senate Minority Leader Schumer “said the White House should take note of the vote,” arguing, “The bill should be a powerful signal to President Trump and the White House that the concern that he might weaken or lift sanctions against Putin is a bipartisan concern, one that the Senate is not going to ignore.”

Tillerson Seeks “Flexibility” On Russia Sanctions. The Senate vote came on the same day that Secretary of State Tillerson “warned” the House Foreign Affairs Committee “against passing any further sanctions against Russia that would prohibit ‘dialogue’ with the country on issues like counterterrorism,” The Hill (6/14, Bowden) reports. Tillerson told the panel “that he agrees with Congress that Russia needs to be punished for meddling in the 2016 election, but asked lawmakers for ‘flexibility.’” He said, “I certainly agree with the sentiment that has been conveyed by several members from both parties that Russia must be held accountable for its meddling in US elections. ... I would urge Congress to ensure any legislation allows the president to have the flexibility to adjust sanctions to meet the needs of what is always an evolving diplomatic situation.”

Media Analyses: Rate Hike Shows Fed Sees Stronger Economy.

Media reports agree on casting the Fed's decision to raise interest rates as a good sign for the economy. The Los Angeles Times (6/14, Puzzanghera, Lee) reports "Federal Reserve policymakers on Wednesday enacted their third small hike in a key interest rate in six months, a move that will push it above 1% for the first time since the 2008 financial crisis." It was "another validation of the recovery from the Great Recession."

The Wall Street Journal (6/14, Timiraos) runs a similar analysis of the Fed's motives, and the New York Post (6/14, Dugan) reports the it made its decision "as unemployment in the US has continued to fall and consumer confidence has risen." Likewise, Business Insider (6/14, Oyedele) that the Fed was "signaling that it believes the economy is healthy enough to withstand tighter financial conditions," Reuters (6/14, Dunsmuir, Schneider) that it cited "continued US economic growth and job market strength," the New York Times (6/14, A1, Appelbaum) that it demonstrated "confidence in the health of the American economy," and the Washington Post (6/14, Swanson) that it sent "a message of confidence in the strengthening of the US economy." The Post adds that the Fed also "laid out plans to begin rolling back the more than $4 trillion balance sheet it accumulated in an effort to prop up the economy after the financial crisis."

To USA Today (6/14, Davidson), "the plan to unwind the balance sheet, beginning this year, represents a milestone in the eight-year-old recovery as the Fed grows increasingly confident the economy can move forward without the extraordinary support it has provided since the 2008 financial crisis." Fed Chairwoman Janet Yellen said yesterday, "We continue to feel the economy is doing well."

Bloomberg News (6/14, Condon, Torres), meanwhile, cautions the Fed acted "despite growing concerns over weak inflation," and Politico (6/14, Guida) that it did so "despite signs that the economy is not overheating." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/14) generally supports the Fed's pace in hiking interest rates, but the Journal editors would prefer that the Fed complete the sale of its mortgage bonds – which are cast, moreover, as unneeded.

Yellen Declines To Say Whether She Would Like A Second Term. Bloomberg Politics (6/14, Condon) reports that Yellen yesterday "declined to say whether she would serve a second term at the helm of the US central bank if asked to stay on by President Donald Trump." Said Yellen, "I have not had conversations with the president about future plans." Bloomberg notes her "four-year term as chair expires on Feb. 3."

In a front-page story titled "Fed Actions Show Confidence But Are Not At Trump Speed," the New York Times (6/14, A1, Appelbaum) reports that Yellen "may soon lose her role as the conductor of the Fed's slow, steady and successful retreat." The Administration "is beginning to consider whether Ms. Yellen should be replaced when her term as chairwoman ends in early February," and "Gary Cohn," who is "Trump's chief economic adviser, is heading the search for a new leader."

Stocks Indices Mixed As Dow Reaches New Record. The AP (6/14) reports "US stocks dipped Wednesday as investors worried about weak retail sales and oil prices sank." The S&P "slid 2.43 points, or 0.1 percent, to 2,437.92," the Dow "rose 46.09 points, or 0.2 percent, to a record 21,374.56," and the Nasdaq "lost 25.48 points, or 0.4 percent, to 6,194.89."

DeVos Suspends Obama-Era Rules On For-Profit Colleges.

In what the Washington Post (6/14, Strauss) describes as "a victory for Republican lawmakers and for-profit colleges," Education Secretary DeVos moved Wednesday to suspend two Obama-era rules "that were intended to protect students from predatory for-profit colleges, saying it will soon start the process to write its own regulations." A statement from the Education Department said "that it was going to create new committees to rewrite rules covering borrower defense to repaying (BDR) and gainful employment (GE)." The Wall Street Journal (6/14, Mitchell) reports that DeVos argued the suspended rules created an undue burden and would have been expensive for taxpayers. Said DeVos, "It's time for a regulatory reset. ... It is the Department's aim, and this Administration's commitment, to protect students from predatory practices while also providing clear, fair and balanced rules for colleges and universities to follow."

The New York Times (6/14, Cohen) says the Department said that while it develops "fair, effective and improved regulations to protect individual borrowers from fraud, ensure accountability across institutions of higher education and protect taxpayers," it will "continue to process nearly 16,000 claims for debt relief being made under existing rules, and said some borrowers could expect loans to be discharged within the next several weeks."

USA Today (6/14, McCoy) reports that the plan "drew criticism and predictions of legal challenges," and quotes DeVos' Obama Administration predecessor, John King, as saying the decision was “deeply worrisome and wrong.”

Judge Orders Environmental Review Of Dakota Access Pipeline.

In what the Washington Post (6/14, Hsu) describes as a “limited victory” for Native American tribes in North Dakota that challenged the Trump Administration effort to speed the Dakota Access pipeline, US District Judge James E. Boasberg on Wednesday ordered the Administration “to conduct further environmental reviews” of the project but “stopped short of halting oil-pumping operations pending further hearings beginning June 21.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“America’s Lethal Politics.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/14) editorializes that “Trump said just the right thing after the attack on Wednesday,” and quotes him as saying, “We can all agree that we are blessed to be Americans, that our children deserve to grow up in a nation of safety and peace.” The Times concludes, however, “Yet he will not help create that nation if he continues to advocate easy access to lethal weapons.”

“Daughters Will Suffer From Medicaid Crisis.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/15, Board) warns that House Republican’s plans to cut Medicaid funding “would be devastating” to the elderly, which receive about two-thirds of Medicaid spending, as well as adult children, especially daughters, caring for elderly parents. Such cuts would cause the stresses on the children to “become extreme.” The Times warns of the cost to the economy and to physical and mental health due to caregiving, concluding, “If health, prosperity and dignity were driving policy making, lawmakers would be looking for ways to increase Medicaid coverage, not destroy it.”

“How ISIS Grew In The Philippines.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/15) writes that Philippines President Rodrigo Duterte “has a serious problem on his hands” in the ISIS-linked contesting control of the city of Marawi and who threaten “the security of the entire region.” The Times argues, “Mr. Duterte’s braggadocio is partly to blame for the escalation of the conflict” and warns that his “strongman tactics” and military displays of “brute force aided by the United States will not address the” poverty, lawlessness, and overcrowded prisons driving the militant movements on the island of Mindanao. The Times calls for “ratchet[ing] down the fight in Marawi and” pressuring “Duterte to restart negotiations with militant groups.”

Washington Post.

“The Shooting At A GOP Baseball Practice Was An Assault On Democracy.” The Washington Post (6/14) editorializes that “Trump struck exactly the right tone” in his statement yesterday, and that the attack “should cause a gut check about what passes for political discourse in this country.” The Post adds that “it was discouraging that some on both the political right and left couldn’t wait for Mr. Scalise to even get out of surgery before escalating the rhetoric rather than toning it down.”

“Thousands Of Russians Prove They’re Fed Up With Putin’s Authoritarianism.” A Washington Post (6/14) editorial says Monday’s protests in Russia “confirmed a trend that was seen in demonstrations in March” — that many young Russians are “fed up with the stagnant authoritarianism” that President Vladimir Putin “has come to represent.” The Post urges Putin to release jailed opposition leader Alexei Navalny and “permit a free and open presidential campaign leading up to the scheduled vote in 2018 in which Mr. Navalny is allowed to run.”

“Two Surprising – And Mostly Positive – Results From Virginia’s Primary.” The Washington Post (6/14) editorializes that in Virginia’s gubernatorial primaries, Democratic “voters chose experience over activist passion, picking Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam...over progressive favorite Tom Perriello by 11.8 points.” The editorial board writes, “it is heartening to see voters empower those who would make the most effective leaders, rather than the most emotionally satisfying rhetoricians.” Although Republican Ed Gillespie’s narrow victory over Corey Stewart will “feed the narrative that the Republican Party is now the Trump party,” the Post asserts “this account exaggerates the GOP establishment’s collapse” as “Stewart benefited from very low turnout on the Republican side, no doubt inspired in part by predictions that Mr. Gillespie was unstoppable.” The Post advises “establishment Republicans sickened by irrational populism” to aggressively confront the “populist rabble-rousers.”

Wall Street Journal.

“ObamaCare’s ‘Secret’ History.” A Wall Street Journal (6/14) editorial notes charges from liberals that the Senate Republicans are drafting their healthcare bill in secret. The Journal, however, points to ObamaCare architect Jonathan Gruber told an audience in 2014 that “lack of transparency is a huge political advantage. And basically, you know, call it the stupidity of the American voter or whatever, but basically that was really, really critical to getting the thing to pass.”

“The Fed Moves Up.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/14) generally support’s the Fed’s pace in hiking interest rates, but have preferred that Fed complete the sale of its mortgage bonds – which are cast, moreover, as unneeded.

“Their Finest Hour.” A Wall Street Journal (6/14) editorial praises President Trump’s tone in the wake of Wednesday’s shooting, lauds the police response to the attack and calls for enhanced security for lawmakers.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "On this day 71 years ago, a bolt of lightning struck a clump of hair in a golden shower drain and a President was born. Donald Jennifer Trump turned 71 today."

Jimmy Kimmel: "At the White House, they had a little party for the President. They played pin the blame on the press secretary."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Seventy-one years ago, Donald Trump was just a little baby with little hands and feet going wah-wah-wah all day long, and nothing has really changed since then."

Stephen Colbert: "It's Donald Trump's birthday. Seventy-one candles on that cake. Although, Trump later said it was 'Over a million candles. Most candles ever.'"

Stephen Colbert: "You can't just refuse to answer a question in case the President later decides he didn't want you to answer it. You can't just, that's like saying, 'I invoke my constitutional right to the 28th amendment, which, of course, is not written yet, but it might be written one day. And it might say that I don't have to answer your question."

James Corden: "Trump says the [healthcare] bill needs to be less mean and more generous. In other words, it needs to be Obamacare."

James Corden: "The Fox News Channel has said that it's getting rid of its longtime slogan 'fair and balanced.' They're getting rid of that. Here is an idea. If Fox News really wants to be accurate, shouldn't they just really drop the part that says 'news'? But then again, it is, it's just nice to see Fox get rid of something for reasons other than sexual harassment."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump turned 71 today. He got a lot of birthday cards from different people. And we actually got our hands on a few of them. Let's take a look at these. For example, here's one from Vladimir Putin. His card says, 'It sounds like you had a great party.' Inside it says, 'Based on our recordings from the Oval Office.' ... Next one is from Sean Spicer. It says, 'Today I'm toasting to you.' And inside it says, 'Because you're the reason I drink every day.' Here's one from Al Gore. It says, 'Warmest wishes.' Open it up, it says, 'Due to climate change.' ... This next one is from Jeff Sessions. It says, 'Today I have only one thing to say to you.' Open up, it says, 'I can't recall.'"

Seth Meyers: "Fox News has announced it's dropping it's slogan 'fair and balanced' for the same reason United dropped 'fly the friendly skies.'"

Seth Meyers: "Sen. Bernie Sanders published an op-ed yesterday, saying Democrats should pay more attention to young voters. Well, most Democrats."

Conan O'Brien: "Today is President Trump's 71st birthday. ... Trump received a card from Vladimir Putin saying, 'I hope you enjoyed the birthday present I gave you in November.'"

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump said the GOP healthcare bill that passed through the House was mean and difficult to defend. Then Trump said, 'In other words, I love it.'"

Interior Chief Wants To Shed 4,000 Employees In Department Shake-Up.

The Washington Post (6/21, Rein) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke told a Senate panel on Wednesday that he plans to reduce his department's workforce by 4,000 employees, about eight percent of its full-time staff. The budget-cutting measure would be achieved through attrition, reassignments, buyouts, and potentially layoffs if necessary. The Post says Zinke defended President Trump's proposal to reduce his department's budget by 13.4 percent, though he didn't specify whether the cuts would be concentrated in some offices or spread throughout, nor whether they would occur in the next year or over a longer period of time. According to an email sent from the Bureau of Land Management's acting director to employees last Friday, 1,000 jobs would be cut from the bureau. The Post says Zinke's proposal aligns with a larger push by Trump to downsize the federal bureaucracy.

Zinke Hits Dems For Delaying Interior Nominees. The Hill (6/21, Costello) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "hit back at Democrats on Wednesday during a contentious budget hearing, accusing them of 'willfully' delaying the confirmation of his department's nominees." In response to questions from Sen. Lisa Murkowski "on the slow pace of staffing during a hearing of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, the Environment and Related Agencies," Zinke said, "In my opinion, it's being slow-rolled, and it's not the White House." He added, "That is a frustration, and I suspect it's being done willfully."

Interior Secretary May Not Reduce Size Of NM Monuments. The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/21, Coleman) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said Wednesday he is open to keeping two new national monuments in New Mexico in their current configuration, although he has recommended scaling back Bears Ears National Monument in Utah and is considering similar changes to other monuments." In response to questioning from Sen. Tom Udall, "during a hearing on the Interior Department budget on Wednesday, Zinke said if state and community leaders are happy with the current configuration of the New Mexico monuments, he'll leave them alone. But he also did not rule out changes." Zinke said, "I do not want to rip a band-aid off of a monument that is settled. I will talk to the governor and the congressional representatives and I will talk to the county commissions ...and if it is settled and people are happy with it, I find no reason to recommend any changes." He added, "There might be a recommended change on a proclamation (designating the monument) if the community feels the proclamation is too stringent."

Additional coverage was provided by the Santa Fe New Mexican (6/21, Oxford) and the Westerner (6/21, DuBois).

US: Canyons Of The Ancients Not A Priority For Review. The AP (6/21) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "says Colorado's Canyons of the Ancients is not currently a priority as his agency reviews protections granted to more than two dozen national monuments nationwide." Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift "did not elaborate on Zinke's statement."

Additional coverage was provided by the Durango \(CO\) Herald (6/21), the Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (6/21), the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (6/21, Njegomir), the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (6/21), KXRM-TV Colorado Springs \(CO\) Colorado Springs, CO (6/21, Asperin), KRDO-TV Colorado Springs \(CO\) Colorado Springs, CO (6/21), and KCNC-TV Denver \(CO\) Denver (6/21).

Sen. Alexander Demands Answers About Delay In Smokies Wildfire Report. WATE-TV Knoxville, TN (6/21) reports that "the review of the damage from the Chimney Tops wildfires in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park still has not been released." During a Senate hearing Wednesday, Sen. Lamar Alexander "demanded answers about what's taking so long." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "admitted the report is overdue, but Sen. Alexander stressed how much it means to the community." Zinke said, "We owe you a report. We're late on it, and I expressed my priority to get it to you by the week's end, but we are overdue on that report. I talked to Representative Roe as well, and he shared the same concerns. I had the same concerns why that report is not submitted to you."

NM Interior Officials Undergoing Shuffle. The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/22, Coleman) reports that "the director of the Bureau of Land Management in New Mexico is among dozens of top U.S. Department of Interior officials asked by Secretary Ryan Zinke to accept new positions or resign, a move that drew criticism Wednesday from New Mexico's senators in Washington." Amy Lueders, director of New Mexico's BLM office, "has been reassigned to an as-yet-unannounced position in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." at an Interior budget hearing on Capitol Hill on Wednesday, Sen. Tom Udall told Zinke, "Amy has served as our BLM state director for the past two years, and she has been incredibly engaged and responsive. Quite frankly, I don't want New Mexico to lose her, and I'm very concerned about the impacts of other changes as well."

Zinke's Answer About Temperature Is Called 'Stupid'. E&E Publishing (6/21, Patterson) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "evaded questions" on Tuesday "about the extent of rising temperatures during a Senate budget hearing for an agency that oversees fossil fuel development on a fifth of the nation's land." According to the article, "during a heated exchange with Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.), Zinke punted on basic questions about climate science." Zinke "declined to engage in a line of inquiry that focused on government predictions of rising temperatures over the next 80 years. He claimed instead that climate models are inaccurate, a frequent talking point among climate skeptics."

Trump's Cabinet Takes Beating Over Budget Plan. The Hill (6/21, Elis) reports that Trump Administration officials are "taking a beating on Capitol Hill over the president's budget request." According to the article, "in hearing after hearing, Cabinet officials are absorbing heavy fire — much of it from Republicans."

Additional coverage was provided by Natural Gas Intelligence (6/21, Passut), Natural Gas Intelligence (6/21, Passut), Big Island \(HI\) Video News (6/21), and KPAX-TV Missoula \(MT\) Missoula, MT (6/21, Miller).

Department Seeks Input On Which Rules To Kill.

E&E Publishing (6/21) reports that the Interior Department on Wednesday "kicked off its regulatory reform initiative, seeking public comment on which policies it should work to eliminate or amend." The department "revealed in a press release that it will begin accepting comments at regulations.gov for policies implemented by the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Indian Education, National Park Service, Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement, Bureau of Reclamation, Fish and Wildlife Service and U.S. Geological Survey, among others." The statement said, "Interior is seeking input from the public, and specifically from entities significantly affected by Federal regulations, on what Interior regulations may be appropriate for repeal, replacement, or modification. This initiative is part of a government-wide initiative to alleviate unnecessary regulatory burdens on the American public.”

Trump’s Interior Secretary Calls Obama-Backed Solar Project A ‘Sphere Of Death’ For Birds.

The Daily Caller (6/21, Bastasch) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “said he’s not against any one form of energy, but still took the time during a recent speech to highlight how green energy from solar panels and wind turbines comes with an environmental cost.” At an event hosted by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday, Zinke said, “You know wind chops up around 650- or 750,000 birds a year. Wind comes at a cost. If you’re a fisherman, offshore wind isn’t particularly enamored with because it prevents you from fishing which is an important part of our economy.” Zinke also “said a massive government-funded solar thermal plant in the Southern California desert was a ‘sphere of death’ for insects and birds and looked like something out of the movie ‘Mad Max.’”

Bears Ears Monument Information Sought By Democrats Is Readily Available On Google, Chairman Says.

The Washington Times (6/21, Richardson) reports that “House Democrats demanding transparency on the Interior Department’s national-monument review process might want to start by checking Google, according to House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop.” In a Wednesday reply to Rep. Raul Grijalva, Bishop “said he found the information the Democrat has sought after ‘a few cursory Google searches,’ adding that the department has made the details readily accessible to the public online.” Grijalva “wasn’t amused” by Bishop’s reply, calling it “disappointing that House Republican oversight of the off-the-rails Trump administration goes no further than a Google search.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Caller (6/21, Pearce).

Lawmaker: Interior Asking Locals For Monument Maps. The AP (6/21) reports that “a Utah lawmaker says Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is asking state and local leaders to propose new, smaller boundaries for two national monuments under review by the Trump administration.” Rep. Mike Noel “said Tuesday that the Interior Department wants Utah to draft proposed maps of Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments.” According to Noel, “commissioners in his county near Grand Staircase-Escalante have already submitted a map of changes they’d like to see to that monument created by President Bill Clinton, but federal officials want to see a single, unified proposal from all state leaders.”

Western Governors Want A Say As Sage Grouse Plans Are Reviewed.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/21, Richards) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “yet to announce the experts who will lead a two-month examination of Obama-era plans to protect the imperiled sage grouse.” Gov. Matt Mead “along with the leaders of Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah and Nevada want to be directly involved in the recently announced 60-day review of federal strategies to protect the sage grouse.” In a letter to Zinke on Tuesday, the governors “asked that the feds initiate their promised partnership with the states at a meeting next week in Whitefish, Montana.”

Additional coverage of the review was provided by the Daily Yonder (6/21, Oates).

National Wild Horse Forum Planned In Utah; Zinke May Attend.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (6/21, O’Donoghue) reports that “Utah’s wildland managers say they plan to take a half-million dollars given to them by state lawmakers to put on a national wild horse forum to address the animal’s explosive population growth, plus use the money to carry out rangeland restoration projects.” The forum, scheduled “for three days in August, will seek solutions to tackle the wild horse numbers — now in Utah at more than twice the Bureau of Land Management’s targeted levels — and the hope is that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will accept the invitation to attend.”

UDC Mired In Paperwork Swamp.

The Narrowsburg \(NY\) River Reporter (6/21, Hulse) reports that “a review of all ongoing Department of the Interior (DOI) grant and cooperative agreement programs exceeding $100,000 ordered by” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “may soon cause the suspension of the work of the Upper Delaware Council (UDC), officials say.” According to the article, “the review has stopped all such federal funding, and DOI has provided no anticipated date for completion of the review.”

American Canyon Council Members Vow To Fight For Berryessa National Monument Status.

The Vallejo \(CA\) Times Herald (6/21, Raskin-Zrihen) reports that American Canyon council members “unanimously agreed to support efforts to maintain the National Monument designation of Berryessa Snow Mountain — which may be threatened by Trump Administration policy — and to send individual letters to that effect to the federal government.”

Guest Opinion: Zinke Flip Flops On Land Management Pledges.

In an op-ed for the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/21, Penfold), Mike Penfold, a retired BLM state director and U.S. Forest Service forest supervisor, writes that as President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “look to trim the fat in the bureaucracy, they have arrived at a proposed budget that quite simply will hurt jobs and livelihoods in Montana reliant on public lands.” According to Penfold, “communities throughout Montana depend on our public lands to fuel our outdoor recreation industry, tourism, livestock grazing, timber and small businesses.” Penfold writes that “it appears Zinke has gone to Washington and forgotten not only where he came from but what he promised during the confirmation hearing for his new job.” Penfold hopes that “the Teddy Roosevelt conservationist we were promised” will “take over the helm of the Department of Interior.”

I Hope Zinke’s Visit Showed Him The Importance Of The North Woods Monument.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/21, Steele), Sheridan Steele, an executive council member for the Coalition to Protect America’s National Parks, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “recent visit to Maine to see firsthand our majestic landscapes is a good exercise of his role of chief steward of our nation’s national parks and monuments.” However, “contemplating reduction or elimination of our public land is not.” Steele hopes to “work together to keep our public lands protected for generations today and tomorrow.”

Guest Opinion: National Parks Need Zinke’s Support.

In an op-ed for the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/21, Melton), Bart Melton, the Northern Rockies Regional Director for National Parks Conservation Association, writes that “while there are still plenty of opportunities” for the Trump Administration and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “to work to protect and fund our parks, their actions to date aren’t quite consistent with the secretary’s initial proposals, and may have negative impacts on the sites often referred to as ‘America’s best idea’.” The Trump Administration is “proposing Park Service budget cuts, threats to our national monuments, and a rollback of policies that protect Park Service lands, inside and out.” National Parks Conservation Association urges Zinke “to ensure our national parks get the dollars they need to properly operate; to protect President Theodore Roosevelt’s intent in the creation of the Antiquities Act; and to act to keep mining and energy development off the doorsteps of Yellowstone and Glacier.”

Protect Carrizo Plain In San Luis Obispo County.

In an editorial, the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) Tribune (6/21) urges support for the Carrizo Plain National Monument. The paper warns that “if these protected lands lose their national monument status, that leaves them open to development, including oil, gas and mineral exploration.”

Trump Budget Threatens Key Programs.

In an op-ed for the Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (6/22, DeVille), Lisa DeVille, president of Fort Berthold POWER, criticizes President Trump’s budget proposal for jeopardizing “the future of Native American people and tribes.” According to DeVille, Trump’s, “so-called ‘America First’ budget clearly puts America last, gutting the Environmental Protection Agency and Department of the Interior in favor of corporate special interests and CEOs.” She argues that “we will not be able to safeguard our public lands and our families’ drinking water if leaders in Washington continue to allow special interests to take priority over the needs of average Americans.”

Wilton Rancheria Accused Of Working Too Closely With City On Casino.

The Nation Sun News (6/21) reports that "it took the Wilton Rancheria more than three years to gain federal approval for a casino in northern California but opponents are accusing the tribe of rushing through the process." The tribe "secured the city's support for the project as its land-into-trust application was being reviewed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs." However, "the city's stance was not formally required by the federal agency." Yet, "opponents claim city officials colluded with tribal leaders to ensure the casino went through, at least on the local level."

FBI Charges 12 With Marriage Fraud.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (6/21, Kays) reports that "the deputy superintendent of the Cherokee's Bureau of Indian Affairs office will face federal charges following her arrest...for allegedly making money off of marriage fraud." Ruth McCoy is "one of 12 defendants named in a Grand Jury indictment filed June 7." The indictment claims "that McCoy worked with Golan Perez and Ofir Marsiano to connect U.S. citizens with non-citizens who hoped that marriage to a U.S. citizen would improve their immigration status."

MGM's Connecticut Casino Wrangle Crashes On Appeal.

Courthouse News (6/21, Stuart) reports that "plans for a new Connecticut casino operated by the state's two federally recognized Indian tribes received a boost Wednesday as the Second Circuit rejected a challenge by MGM Resorts International." The New York-based federal appeals court held that "just as Special Act 15-7 allows the Mohegan and Mashantucket Pequot tribal nations to enter into development agreements with municipalities, so too does the Connecticut law allow MGM to make a similar deal." U.S. Circuit Judge John Walker Jr. wrote in the decision, "MGM and any other developers are permitted to negotiate with municipalities for contingent future gaming contracts."

Bureau Of Land Management

Long Overdue Improvements To Data Tracking In Sight For BLM.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (6/21, Thomas) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has been "scrutinized recently for inconsistencies in data monitoring throughout its offices, but an update to its 20-year-old tracking system may be coming soon." According to the article, "the proposed update to the system, retitled AFMSS II, will overhaul paper applications and turn to web-based software to create more of a national standard application to ensure the offices are looking and tracking the same data." Steve Wells, BLM division chief for fluid materials, said that the BLM is "working on the first module of the new program designed to begin the drilling permit process."

Interior Pushes To Freeze Appeal As Plans To Nix Rule Advance.

E&E Publishing (6/21) reports the Interior Department filed a brief to the 10th US Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday urging the panel of judges to reject a request from environmental groups to move forward with the case over whether the federal government has the authority to regulate hydraulic fracturing on public and tribal lands. The Trump Administration said it was inappropriate to move forward with the case while Interior is reconsidering the rule. The filing said, "BLM's progress toward the publication of the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking strengthens the arguments that BLM made in favor of abeyance in its supplemental brief."

Wildfire Bill Shifting Liabilities From Utilities Passes House.

Bloomberg BNA (6/21, Moran) reports that "utility companies would be allowed to remove trees and other vegetation near transmission lines and could in some cases be shielded from liability for attempting to prevent wildfire damages under a bill passed by the House June 21." The Electricity Reliability and Forest Protection Act "would also require federal agencies that manage public lands such as the U.S. Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management to take responsibility for any costs associated with failure to remove a tree or vegetation if the utility request to do such clearing is denied." The bill "passed by a vote of 300-118," but "its outlook in the Senate is unclear, largely because no companion measure has been introduced there."

Tipton Reintroduces Bill To Protect Water Rights, Preserve State Water Law.

The Vail \(CO\) Daily (6/21) reports that Rep. Scott Tipton has reintroduced the Water Rights Protection Act, "a bill that would uphold federal deference to state water law and prevent federal takings of privately held water rights.” Tipton said, “In recent years, the federal government has repeatedly attempted to circumvent long-established state water law by requiring the transfer of privately-held water rights to the federal government as a permit condition for use of land owned by the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management. These efforts constitute a gross federal overreach and violation of private property rights. My bill provides permanent protections for ski areas, farmers, ranchers, and others in the West.”

Senate Misstep Will Cost Jobs And Energy.

In an op-ed for the Detroit News (6/22, Stier), Jeff Stier, a senior fellow at the National Center for Public Policy Research, writes that “the Senate just failed to roll back an Obama-era regulation that will discourage energy production, cost millions of dollars and kill thousands of American jobs.” The rule, “issued in the 11th hour of the Obama presidency by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), was designed to limit already decreasing methane emissions from oil and natural gas wells on federal lands.” Steir urges the Interior Department to “suspend, revise, or rescind” the rule.

City’s Vote Against Offshore Drilling Is A Message To Trump.

The AP (6/21) reports the Virginia Beach city council voted to oppose any offshore drilling operations in the Atlantic Ocean. The city has been under pressure from the tourism sector, hotel associations, civic and environmental groups who oppose offshore projects.

Bureau Of Reclamation

Federal Government Funding Millions In North Dakota Water Projects.

KFYR-TV Bismarck, ND (6/21, Skurzewski) reports that “the federal government is sending more than $24 million to North Dakota improve the water supply to several state and tribal communities.” The Bureau of Reclamation will “send $24.4 million to the Peace Garden State.” The funds will “go toward creating a more stable water intake for Mandan, improving water treatment and intake for the MHA Nation, building a new water tower for Burlington, and improving the water main system in Dickinson.”

Rep. Ken Buck Pushes For Streamlined Approval Process For Water Storage Projects.

The Greeley \(CO\) Tribune (6/21, Miller) reports that Rep. Ken Buck on Wednesday “called for a streamlined process for federal approval of water storage projects.” Buck said, “In Colorado, water is tough to come by, which makes water storage a necessity. That’s why House Resolution 1654 is so important. We need to streamline the water project permitting process so that future projects like NISP don’t take over a decade to win a permit.” The legislation places the Bureau of Reclamation “in charge of coordinating project permitting among state and federal governments on federal lands, allowing for a more streamlined process.”

Storm Cindy Crimps Shipping, Forces Energy Workers Out Of Gulf.

Bloomberg News (6/21, Sullivan) reports Tropical Storm Cindy has shut down some oil production in the Gulf of Mexico, halted vessel unloadings at the Louisiana Offshore Oil Port, and triggered a force majeure on the Destin natural gas line. The storm could also disrupt energy operations once it makes landfall. Andy Lipow, president of Lipow Oil Associates, said, "The biggest impact would be on shipping activity which will remain suspended through Friday." Stephen Schork, president of Schork Group, said the storm would not have much of an impact on natural gas because much of production has shifted to other parts of the country. Reuters (6/21, Hampton) reports the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said energy companies have shut down roughly 17 percent, about 301,618 bpd, of oil production in the Gulf of Mexico ahead of the storm. BSEE also said that personnel have been evacuated from 40 platforms, about 5.5 percent of the 737 manned facilities. Reuters (6/21, Hampton) reports the tropical storm weakened on Wednesday afternoon as it headed towards land on the Texas-Louisiana border, although there is still a threat of flash floods, according to the National Hurricane Center. Rains and wind could still disrupt regional refineries that produce around 2.3 million bpd. The Houston Chronicle (6/21, Hunn) reports Anadarko Petroleum stopped production at the Marlin, Holstein and Heidelberg platforms after pipelines run by other companies stopped shipping product. BP evacuated non-essential personnel from the Mad Dog and Atlantis platforms, but workers operation production equipment remained. BP said, "Our top priority is the safety of all personnel and protecting the environment. ... We remain prepared to respond as conditions warrant." Cheniere Energy said, "We are preparing for the weather as we always do to keep our workers and our facility safe." Offshore Magazine (6/21) reports Enbridge also decided to evacuate nonessential workers from Gulf platforms.

Platts (6/21) reports offshore US natural gas production declined for the second consecutive day, even though no impact on Gulf Coast hub prices was obvious as the storm approaches. Production in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama fell to 2.23 Bcf on Wednesday after dropping to 2.49 Bcf on Tuesday. However, prices at ANR Louisiana and Trunkline ELA only increased 2 cents/MMBtu on Wednesday.

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (6/21) also provided coverage that some production platforms are being evacuated.

Federal Judge Won't Halt Construction.

The Denver Post (6/21, Aguilar) reports that "community activists trying to stop construction at Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge were premature in filing a temporary restraining order because the work they targeted won't begin until next year at the earliest, a federal judge said in a ruling this week." U.S. District Judge Christine Arguello "said in her ruling, made Tuesday and released Wednesday, that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had shown the court that 'construction will not begin on the project until 2018, at the earliest.'"

Agencies Ponder Next Steps For Montana Grizzly Bears.

Courthouse News (6/21, Lundquist) reports that "with grizzly-bear recovery potentially complete in the greater Yellowstone ecosystem, agencies are daring to plan for a time when the bears are under state control." The Interagency Grizzly Bear Executive Committee "met to consider its five-year plan." The committee is "juggling the pending delisting of the Yellowstone grizzly bear population from the endangered species list, along with the myriad of challenges posed by the six other regions of grizzly recovery in the Northwest."

Probation Sentence Expected For Oregon Refuge Occupier Geoffrey Stanek.

The Oregonian (6/21, Bernstein) reports that Geoffrey Stanek, "who pleaded guilty to federal conspiracy last year in the takeover of the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge, shouldn't face a sentence longer than the probation given to three co-defendants who pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor, his lawyer argues." Stanek "left the property voluntarily after the occupation leaders were arrested on Jan. 26, 2016, his lawyer noted in a sentencing memo filed in court Wednesday." Benjamin Andersen, Stanek's lawyer, wrote, "This court should impose a sentence no more severe than the sentences imposed on other defendants, some of whom have worse records and arguably have more culpability in the overall offense."

Public Comment Open On Red Wolves' Future.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (6/21) reports that "the future of the world's only remaining wild red wolf population will be decided following a public comment period ending July 24." Earlier this month, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "held two public hearings on the matter in the eastern part of the state, where the red wolves live in a five-county area."

National Park Service Seeks Public Input On Birmingham, Anniston Parks.

The Birmingham \(AL\) News (6/21, Edgemon) reports that the National Park Service is "holding community meetings in Birmingham and Anniston next week to begin establishing the framework for the management of Alabama's newest national parks." The open houses are "part of a comprehensive planning process for establishing the parks' foundation documents." Birmingham Civil Rights National Monument Superintendent Reggie Tiller said in a statement, "The foundation document will be critical to helping the National Park Service map out management plans and priorities for the new park. We are inviting the public to play a role in shaping the park's future operations."

Worried About Cuts, Federal Employees To Protest In Philly.

Philly \(PA\) (6/21, Von Bergen) reports that "federal employees will rally Thursday at noon at Independence Mall to protest proposed cuts in federal funding that will likely eliminate jobs in the Environmental Protection Agency, Social Security Administration, Veterans Administration, and the National Park Service." Leaders of the American Federation of Government Employees expect "hundreds" to attend.

Boundary Bills Still Stuck In Congress.

The Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (6/21, Broom) reports that "bills validating the park's 2015 annexation of 1,441 acres on the Schoodic Peninsula, including the Schoodic Woods Campground, are still stuck in committees in the U.S. House and Senate." Last June, Sen. Angus King "introduced a bill to make the annexation legal, but also to clarify that there could be no further expansion of the park beyond the permanent boundaries that Congress established in 1986." Rep. Bruce Poliquin "introduced a bill similar to King's in the U.S. House last September." However, "both bills died because they were not acted on before Congress adjourned in December."

National Park Service Steps In On Cumberland Island Controversy.

The Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (6/20, Landers) reports that "a last-minute request from the National Park Service has postponed a controversial decision on rezoning private property within Cumberland Island National Seashore." The Camden County Board of Commissioners "last week voted to allow time for negotiations between the park and private landowners rather than moving forward with either an ongoing zoning variance request or a new zoning district." Environmental groups welcomed the move.

National Park Service Issues Beach Warnings In Light Of Tropical Storm.

The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (6/21, Pettis) reports that the National Park Service "announced Wednesday that although Tropical Storm Cindy is far to the east, it is causing dangerous conditions locally." The agency "issued a coastal flood advisory, a beach driving alert and warned of high current danger at the Padre Island National Seashore." According to the NPS, "the storm is causing extremely high tides, with gulf waters reaching the dune lines, and rough waves at the national seashore."

Mumps Outbreak In Arkansas May Be Linked To Marshall Islands.

Pacific Islands Report (6/20) reports that “a health consultant to the Marshall Islands says a mumps outbreak in Arkansas State last year could be linked to the current outbreak in the Marshalls.” Arkansas has “a large Marshallese community, and they accounted for more than half of cases during a mumps outbreak there late last year.” The Marshall Islands is “battling at least a thousand cases of mumps, which was first discovered in March.” Jill McCready, “who works for the Pacific Island Health Officers’ Association, said travel advice was issued to Marshallese living in Arkansas in October, but this wasn’t enough to keep the outbreak contained.”

Nova Southeastern University Continues To Oversee National Coral Reef Fellowship Program.

Newswise (6/21) reports that Nova Southeastern University will “once again oversee the National Coral Reef Management Fellowship Program.” The program is “a partnership between NSU, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration’s (NOAA) Coral Reef Conservation Program, the Department of the Interior’s Office of Insular Affairs and the U.S. All Islands Coral Reef Committee.”

Fake Quake: Report Of Major California Temblor A False Alarm.

The AP (6/21, Dalton) reports that “seismologists said Wednesday’s automatically generated report of a magnitude 6.8 quake in the Pacific Ocean 10 miles west of Santa Barbara was a false alarm based on a quake that happened in the same area nearly a century ago.” Rafael Abreu, a geophysicist from the US Geological Survey, said, “The quake did happen, but it happened in 1925.” According to the article, “researchers from the California Institute of Technology had been using new information to relocate the epicenter of a 1925 earthquake in the Santa Barbara Channel, and somehow set off the automated alert that went out to email accounts.”

Scientists Predict A Gulf Of Mexico ‘Dead Zone’ The Size Of New Jersey This Summer.

The Washington Post (6/21, Harvey) reports that “an oxygen-poor ‘dead zone’ in the Gulf of Mexico, which can prompt harmful algae blooms and threaten marine life, could approach the size of New Jersey this summer, federal scientists say — making it the third-largest the Gulf has seen.” A new forecast from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration “predicts that the annual dead zone will reach an area of nearly 8,200 square miles in July, more than 50 percent larger than its average size. Each year, NOAA scientists “create a forecast for the coming summer’s dead zone, based on nutrient runoff data collected by the U.S. Geological Survey.” The USGS data “indicates that more than 360 million pounds of nitrogen and nearly 50 million pounds of phosphorus flowed into the Gulf last month.”

Trump Touts “Amazing Progress” During “Campaign-Style” Iowa Rally.

Media coverage of President Trump’s speech in Cedar Rapids, Iowa Wednesday night casts the event as a “campaign-style” rally and a “victory lap” following Republican victories in special elections that were seen as referendum on his presidency. While some coverage was very positive for the President, a number of reports and pundits pointed out that amid the controversies and investigations confronting him in Washington, Wednesday’s trip was an opportunity for him to rally his base and attempt to redirect the narrative toward what he said was the “amazing progress” his Administration has made since taking office.

The AP (6/21, Lemire) reports that Trump “traveled to the Midwest on Wednesday in search of his supporters’ warm embrace and to celebrate a Republican congressional victory in an election viewed as an early referendum on his presidency.” The AP adds that Trump turned the visit “into a celebration of his resilience despite the cloud of investigations that has enveloped his administration and sent his poll numbers tumbling.” The New York Times (6/21, Haberman) says Trump delivered a “conquering-hero-returns speech,” during which “he – mostly – managed to avoid raising the topic he struggles to stop talking about: the investigations of Russian meddling in the 2016 election and possible collusion with his campaign.” The Times adds that the rally “served as a venting session for a pent-up president who has stewed and brooded from inside the gilded cage of the White House over attacks from investigators, Democrats and the news media, his interview schedule drastically pared down and his aides imploring him to stay off Twitter.”

On its website, ABC News (6/21, Caplan, Cohen, Wells) says Trump “emphasized his administration’s successes and preached a call to unite, even in the face of Democratic ‘obstructionists.’” Like many reports, ABC describes a “campaign-style rally,” as does CBS News (6/21) on its website. Trump, CBS adds, “is trying to find a way to message his own agenda.” Similarly, Jeff Zeleny said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/21) that the event was “a re-election campaign rally,” while the New York Post (6/21, Perez) calls the rally a “victory lap” and says Trump “boast[ed] that Republicans were ‘5-0 in special elections’ — after notching wins in South Carolina and Georgia.”

Reuters (6/21, Holland) says that Trump, who is “under siege in Washington, defended his record” at the “raucous” rally, which was “similar to those he held during last year’s presidential campaign.” The Washington Examiner (6/21, Pappas) reports that Trump “argu[ed] his administration has already made ‘amazing progress’ in the five months since the inauguration.” CNBC (6/21, Pramuk) reports on its website that at the “campaign-style rally,” Trump “bask[ed] in an energetic...crowd” as he “slammed his most frequent targets and promised lofty policy changes in the near future.”

Kimberly Guilfoyle said on Fox News’ The Five (6/21), “I thought he did a fantastic job because you could tell that he was in a very good mood. ... He is euphoric after that big win” in Georgia. Trump was “able to come off of that high to say wait a second, this is supposed to be a referendum against me. It in fact was not.” Guilfoyle added. “When you look at the juxtaposition, of this high coming off the big win, coming out in front of a crowd that enjoys his company, then you have the Russia thing seems to pale in comparison at least tonight.”

Juan Williams said on Fox News’ The Five (6/21), “What you saw in this speech, the spine of it was going after the media. ... His problem is if Republicans continue – you see a slight decline down to about 70 percent Republican support from what was 80 – he’s going to have problems. He needs to keep the conservative media on his side.” Political commentator Erroll Louis said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/21) that Trump “needs to shore up some of his sagging approval ratings,” and “consolidate his base.” Trump, he added, “wants to change the narrative. He wants to show himself being cheered by thousands of people.” The CBS Evening News (6/21, story 4, 2:10, Mason) highlighted “steadfast” Trump supporters waiting in line for Wednesday’s speech. These supporters “expressed little interest in current polls, which show a softening for support for Mr. Trump because...they know their support for him is strong.”

Local TV coverage across the state was very positive for Trump. For example, KWWL-TV Cedar Rapids, IA (6/21, 10:11 p.m. CDT) reported that people who attended the rally said that Trump “addressed many of the concerns and issues they felt were most important.” Trump, KWWL added, “pointed to the success he has had in office and promised much bigger successes in the near future, including tax cuts and healthcare.”

KCCI-TV Des Moines, IA (6/21, 10:06 p.m. CDT) reported that “thousands of supporters turned out” for the rally. KCCI’s reporter at the event said that “of all the political rallies I have covered, this crowd was one of the most fired up I have ever seen.” Trump “emphasized his accomplishments in office the first few months, saying he is keeping his promises to Iowans since we helped to elect him. He told the group he will protect the ethanol industry, eliminate regulations on workers and farmers, and will rebuild rural America. The crowd roared the loudest when he talked about immigration and building a wall.”

WOAD-TV Davenport, IA (6/21, 10:06 p.m. CDT) reported that “Trump came to Iowa to rally supporters and tell them he’s fighting for them, and that includes healthcare.” WOAD added that Trump “brought back the campaign stump speech, but this time saying his promises made are promises he kept.” KTIV-TV Sioux City, IA (6/21, 10:02 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump “tout[ed] his agenda directly to his supporters” at the “campaign-style rally.”

However, Iowa’s support for Trump was not universal. The Hill (6/21, Thomsen) reports in its “Blog Briefing Room” blog that the Cedar Rapids Gazette ran a front-page editorial Wednesday telling Trump that “now is not the time for a rally” and asking him “to not hold his scheduled rally in the city but instead talk about his policies and how he will help Iowans.” The open letter to Trump read, “Mr. President, the campaign is over. You won. Now is not the time to rally. Now is the time to sell your policies, listen to Americans with a stake in those efforts and govern. ... Iowans have questions and concerns about your plans. They can’t be heard over the cheers of a rally.” The letter also “listed a litany of topics that it said Iowans are concerned about, like cuts to crop insurance in Trump’s budget, paying for flood protection in Cedar Rapids, climate change, healthcare and funding for public schools.”

The Des Moines \(IA\) Register (6/22, Petroski) reports that “about 250 to 200 anti-Trump activists” gathered about a block from the US Cellular Center where Trump’s rally was taking place and “voiced boisterous opposition” to the President. Breitbart (6/21, Spiering) says Trump was interrupted by “dozens of protesters” as he paid tribute to Rep. Steve Scalise, “who was shot and wounded by a liberal gunman at the congressional baseball game.” According to Breitbart, more than “two dozen protesters, who infiltrated the crowd, started shouting and blowing whistles, interrupting the president’s tribute.”

Trump Says He Will Push To Expand Rural Internet Access As Part Of Infrastructure Plan. The Cedar Rapids \(IA\) Gazette (6/21, Patane) reports that in a visit to Kirkwood Community College, Trump said he “will push for increased rural internet access in his proposed $1 trillion infrastructure plan.” The visit “came as a part of Technology Week for the White House.” Bloomberg News (6/21, Bjerga) quotes Trump as saying, “I will be including a provision in our infrastructure proposal – $1 trillion proposal, you’ll be seeing it very shortly – to promote and foster, enhance broadband access for rural America also. ... We will rebuild rural America.”

KWWL-TV Cedar Rapids, IA (6/21, 10:11 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump spoke to “a large crowd” at Kirkwood. Trump: “It’s so important to support schools like Kirkwood, which are helping to train young people in cutting-edge new technologies that are making American agriculture greater than ever before.” KWWL added that Trump focused “the majority of his speech on farming.” Trump: “We will protect the corn-based ethanol and biofuels that power our country.” KTIV-TV Sioux City, IA (6/21, 10:02 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump “met with state leaders in the ethanol industry.”

The Hill (6/21, Shelbourne) reports that Trump told the crowd at Kirkwood that “he had promised to come back to see them. ‘And here I am,’ he said.”

McConnell Set To Reveal Healthcare Bill Amid Ongoing GOP Doubts.

Several sources report on emerging components of the Senate Republican healthcare bill, which Senate Majority Leader McConnell will unveil today. But most coverage continues to be about GOP doubts regarding the bill, and on whether McConnell can hold 50 of the chamber’s 52 Republicans in line to pass the bill before the recess that begins at the end of next week.

While NBC ran a full-length report, ABC aired just a brief item, while CBS had no coverage. Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (6/21, story 2, 2:30), “With coverage for millions at stake and the clock ticking for a vote, details are finally expected to be released tomorrow. But Democrats are turning up the pressure, hoping to peel away the three GOP votes they need to defeat it.” NBC’s Kasie Hunt: “Washington lobbyists are seeing early drafts, but Republican senators say they won’t see the full bill until around breakfast time tomorrow. Where it goes from there comes down to a handful of key Republicans.” On ABC World News Tonight (6/21, story 10, 0:35, Muir), Mary Bruce called the bill “the best-kept secret in Washington. Even Republicans helping to write the bill still don’t know what is in it.”

Several outlets report on the likely contents of the bill based on comments from legislative aides and lobbyists. The AP (6/21, Fram, Alonso-Zaldivar) reports that the proposal “would cut and revamp Medicaid, end penalties on people not buying coverage and eliminate tax increases that financed the statute’s expansion of coverage.” The Senate bill, would drop the House bill’s “waivers allowing states to let insurers boost premiums on some people with pre-existing conditions,” and “would also largely retain the subsidies” provided by the Affordable Care Act “to help millions buy insurance.” The Washington Post (6/21, Cunningham) says the Senate bill “largely mirrors” the House’s American Health Care Act, “but with some significant changes.” It “cuts off Medicaid expansion more gradually than the House bill, but would enact deeper long-term cuts” to the program.

Axios (6/21, Owens) reports that the bill “will also include an insurer stabilization fund, like the House bill. This probably will be funneled through the Children’s Health Insurance Program,” which is included under the Hyde Amendment barring federal funding of abortions. Since “most plans will use the stabilization fund, they won’t be allowed to cover abortions – a roundabout way of including pro-life protections.” The New York Times (6/21, Pear, Kaplan) says that the House bill “would bar the use of federal tax credits to help purchase insurance plans that include coverage of abortion.” But the Senate may need to drop that provision for procedural reasons, which could “generate concern among abortion opponents, as well as conservative lawmakers.”

White House Officials Get Capitol Hill Briefing On Bill. The Hill (6/21, Fabian) reports that “a group of White House officials” was due on Capitol Hill Wednesday evening for a briefing on the bill. The Hill says the conversation may have included “what role, if any, senators want [President] to play in selling the bill or whipping votes." Jeff Zeleny briefly reported on CNN's Situation Room (6/21) about the planned meeting.

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Hannity (6/21), "People know that Obamacare is broken. What Leader McConnell and the Senate have done, he's putting together a plan that he knows rips out Obamacare, branch and root."

GOP Senators Across Spectrum Express Doubts About Bill. The AP (6/21, Fram) reports, "Republican senators complained about their party's secretive health care bill" on Wednesday, with complaints "coming from all along the GOP political spectrum." Sen. Rand Paul "seemed skeptical that McConnell's package would go far enough in dismantling" the ACA, while Sen. Susan Collins "said she had 'no idea' if she'd back the legislation until she sees the language." Sen. Ron Johnson questioned whether senators will have enough time to review the bill, saying, "I've made leadership well aware of the fact that I need information to make the final decision. And if I don't have the information to justify a yes vote, I won't be voting yes."

Bloomberg News (6/21, Edney) reports that Sen. Thom Tillis, like Paul, questioned whether the bill goes far enough. He said, "It will probably put some on my side of the aisle outside their comfort zone. We have to look at these soft-landing strategies most importantly for the insured population but also to a secondary degree for the states so they have time to plan out their transition strategies as well."

Sen. Marco Rubio said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/21), "I respect what the leadership is trying to do. Perhaps what they produce is something that everyone's in agreement with, so you can move to a vote fairly quickly. But my sense of it is there will still be some differences that need to be worked out." Fellow Republican Sen. Bill Cassidy said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/21), "The current Medicaid expansion is not sustainable for states. States will be picking up 10 percent of that expense in 2020. ... The states that expanded cannot afford their 10 percent. There's something that has to be done to make it sustainable for both the state taxpayer and the federal. We've got to take care of the patient. ... And that's the sweet spot we're trying to search for."

The Wall Street Journal (6/21, A1, Armour, Peterson, Radnofsky) reports on its front page that in all, at least six Republican senators said they are not sure how they will vote. The New York Times (6/21) says in an editorial that "the country needs...at least three Republican senators to come out against the bill," listing Collins and Sens. Shelley Moore Capito, Dean Heller, Lisa Murkowski, and Rob Portman as possible no votes. The Times writes, "The health care of millions of Americans rests in the hands of a few Republican senators. Who among them will be willing to defy their party and fight for their constituents?"

GOP May Invoke "Seldom-Used Rule" To Advance Bill. Roll Call (6/21, Williams) reports that Republicans "appear ready to make a small, but significant change to historic Senate procedure" to advance the bill. A "seldom-used rule included in the Congressional Budget Act" would let Senate Budget Chairman Michael Enzi "skirt a decision from the chamber's parliamentarian" in order to move the bill via reconciliation, which "would have ripple effects" far into the future.

Tumulty: GOP Engaged In "Flagrant" Hypocrisy. Karen Tumulty of the Washington Post (6/21) writes, "Hypocrisy has always been a vital lubricant to making the gears turn in Washington. ... Rarely, however, has the double standard been so flagrant as now, when Republicans are scrambling to keep their promise to 'repeal and replace Obamacare.'" In 2010, then-Minority Leader McConnell "was full-throated in his denunciation of 'the partisan route' that majority Democrats had taken and of the 'closed-door sweetheart deals that were made to gain the slimmest margin for passage of a bill that's about their health care.'" Also in 2010, HHS Secretary Price, then a GOP congressman, tweeted, "With Democrats discussing health care in secret, they're sacrificing the trust of the American people."

The Washington Post (6/21) editorializes, "Remember when Obamacare was written 'hastily,' 'behind closed doors' in 'secret' negotiations, so that Democrats could 'jam' an unpopular health-care bill through Congress? ... Republicans are hoping you do not remember, or that you are willing to forget now that the shoe is on the other foot."

Polls Show Doubts About GOP Efforts, Even Among Republicans. Two new polls show wide public skepticism about GOP reform efforts. Politico (6/21, Shepard) reports that a Politico/Morning Consult poll found that just 22 percent of voters "say they have heard a lot about Senate Republicans writing their own health care bill," and 65 percent (including 54 percent of Republicans) "want Republicans to 'compromise with Democrats to reach bipartisan reforms.'" As for the House's AHCA, just 35 percent approve of it and 49 percent disapprove. Republican disapproval has doubled since May, from 15 percent to 30 percent. Reuters (6/21, Kahn) reports that a Reuters/Ipsos poll conducted earlier this month, 41 percent opposed the AHCA, while 30 percent supported it.

House Budget Committee Agrees To Tentative Resolution.

The AP (6/21, Taylor) reports the House Budget Committee agreed on a budget resolution yesterday that would give the military more money than President Trump requested, while largely rejecting cuts the White House proposed for domestic agencies' operating budgets. The plan would "modestly" cut benefit programs such as food stamps and "pav[es] the way for Congress to tackle an overhaul of the tax code this fall." The AP says House Speaker Paul Ryan has yet to sign off on the plan, which could face resistance from conservatives desiring more spending cuts and "defense hawks" requesting more for the military. According to the AP, "GOP leaders are worried that [Committee Chairman Diane] Black's proposal may not be able to win enough votes to pass on the floor."

Politico (6/21, Ferris) reports the committee plans to unveil the resolution next Wednesday, "despite lingering disputes within the GOP conference." The resolution would set spending levels at $511 billion for domestic programs and $621 billion for defense, according to two lawmakers, which amounts to a $72 billion boost for defense and a $4 billion cut for domestic spending. The resolution also would instruct GOP committees to cut $150 billion from mandatory programs in the next decade, which Rep. Mark Sanford said is not "robust" enough of deficit reduction.

Powell, Noreika Say Banking Regulators Ready To Roll Back Rules.

Reuters (6/21, Rucker) reports Federal Reserve Governor Jerome Powell said in prepared testimony due to be delivered to Congress today that the US bank regulators have room to relax the Volcker rule, which seeks to prevent banks from using customer deposits to make risky bets. Powell said, "We look forward to working with the other four Volcker Rule agencies to find ways to improve the regulation."

According to Bloomberg Politics (6/21, Hamilton), Powell and Acting Comptroller of the Currency Keith Noreika's prepared remarks for addressing the Senate Banking Committee today will also show an openness to rethinking "the burden of the annual exams that evaluate banks' ability to weather severe economic shocks." Noreika's remarks argue that the many banking regulators too often overlap, which stunts economic growth by making redundant and contradictory requests to lenders. He acknowledged that his thinking has been influenced by a Treasury Department report out June 12 that promoted a series of regulatory rollbacks.

House Republicans Reviving Effort To Privatize Air Traffic Control.

The AP (6/21, Freking) reports House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee Chairman Bill Shuster said yesterday that next week, the committee will consider his proposed legislation, which would shift responsibility for the nation's air traffic control operations to a private, nonprofit corporation. The full House likely will vote on the bill in mid-July. The AP says the measure faces bipartisan opposition in the Senate. Shuster explained that his proposal broadens participation in the corporation's 13-seat board of directors in order to prevent any particular group from dominating the panel. "Their No. 1 priority has to be the success of this corporation," regardless of which stakeholder group they represent, he said.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Misguided Attacks On Al Jazeera." A New York Times (6/21) editorial says Qatar's critics accuse Al Jazeera "of supporting Sunni Islamist terrorism and Iranian ambitions. But Saudi Arabia is hardly innocent when it comes to spreading Islamist extremism or supporting terrorist groups." The Times argues that "in reality, by attacking Al Jazeera, the Saudis and their neighbors are trying to eliminate a voice that could lead citizens to question their rulers."

"Uber Is A Creature Of An Industry Struggling To Grow Up." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/21) writes that "there's a cautionary message in Travis Kalanick's resignation" as Uber CEO under investor pressure over sexual harassment scandals, as "in many ways Uber is an extreme case of a business where rapid growth has fueled executive hubris and an anything-goes corporate culture." Indeed, it's "very much a creature of a technology industry that is still struggling to graduate from adolescence to adulthood." The Times says it "would be ridiculously naïve" to say that the departure of top executives would solve Uber's problem because its culture "is enabled by an ecosystem in which venture capitalists, investors, board members and others let founders and executives indulge in bad behavior as long as they keep delivering rapid-fire growth with the promise of a stupendous return on investment." The Times says Silicon Valley must "learn to leaven [its] aggressiveness with good judgment, humility and a large helping of ethics."

"Congress Steps Up On Foreign Policy." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/22, Board) commends the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for voting in favor of strengthened sanctions against Russia, considering a bill "to assert more power over military troop deployments," and attempting "to block a $500 million arms sale to Saudi Arabia." The Times says these actions are to some extent "simply the latest manifestation of the long historical struggle for control over national security policy between the executive and legislative branches," in part because of the "striking expansion of the president's executive power, particularly in the area of national security," since 9/11. While President Trump "remains the most influential player on the world stage," the Times says, it "does not mean that Congress has to remain silent."

Washington Post.

"Republicans' Healthcare Hypocrisy Is On Full Display." The Washington Post (6/21) editorializes, "Remember when Obamacare was written 'hastily,' 'behind closed doors' in 'secret' negotiations, so that Democrats could 'jam' an unpopular health-care bill through Congress? ... Republicans are hoping you do not remember, or that you are willing to forget now that the shoe is on the other foot."

"The Trump Administration Has Expanded Sanctions On Russia. Here's What It Should Target Next." A Washington Post (6/21) editorial says the Trump Administration's sanctions on Russia represent a "modest" expansion, but are "an encouraging sign that it will continue to raise the pressure" on Moscow "for its illegal activity in Ukraine." The Post argues that "pressure needs to be raised on Moscow until it agrees to international negotiations on its Crimea occupation, like those it has with Ukraine, France and Britain on its military incursion in eastern Ukraine."

"Prince Georges Residents Deserve An Answer To Charges Of Systemic Corruption." The Washington Post (6/21) editorializes that Maryland state education officials must examine the claim that "systemic corruption in the Prince George's County school system led to the fraudulent boosting of graduation rates." County residents must know "if school administrators engaged in unethical practices to burnish the system's credentials, or if the school board's small group of disaffected members is so reckless as to advance its interests by belittling the efforts of teachers and students." Noting the "significant improvement" in the county's graduation rate from 74.1 percent in 2013 to 81.4 percent in 2016, the Post says that while teachers should be lauded for helping more students graduate, it's problematic if the boost comes from students receiving diplomas they didn't earn.

Wall Street Journal.

"The Next Step On North Korea." A Wall Street Journal (6/21) editorial says this week's death of American student Otto Warmbier is a reminder of the brutal nature of the North Korean regime and underscores the urgency of curbing its nuclear ambitions. The Journal argues that the next step should be to sanction the Chinese financiers and traders who sustain Kim Jong-Un.

"The Real Georgia Lesson." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/21) says that the outcome of Tuesday's election in Georgia's Sixth Congressional District shows that the GOP can retain its majorities in Congress despite lingering skepticism about President Trump, if the party makes good on its campaign promises.

"Change In The House Of Saud." On its editorial page, the Wall Street Journal (6/21) says the elevation of Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman is a welcome change for the Kingdom, that it hopes will help propel it into modernity.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "A lot of people are saying Jared Kushner isn't qualified. But actually, he has been to Israel before on a high school trip with his mom. So they're wrong."

Stephen Colbert: "With that deadline looming, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell is rushing to put the bill together in what's being described as 'a frantic scramble,' which is the best way to make all your healthcare decisions. 'Honey, what do you make of this mole on my thigh?' 'Cut off the leg and burn it in a pit!'"

Stephen Colbert: "The tough part of this has been getting Republican moderates to vote for the bill. They don't like the idea of phasing out extra federal funding for Medicaid in 2020, which is the plan right now. So, to lure them in, McConnell is proposing doing it in 2023. 'I'm sorry, Mitch, I cannot in good conscience vote to take away life-saving healthcare from low-income people. What's that? Three years later? I'm in!'"

James Corden: "There is always an election here. You love elections. The only thing you love more than elections is moaning about the outcome of elections."

James Corden: "Experts say the Republican victory in Georgia shows that Americans may not be as dissatisfied with Trump as, let's say, Melania is."

James Corden: "In her latest speech, her majesty the Queen did not mention Donald Trump's state visit to the UK, leading some to speculate that it may have been canceled. So apparently, two can play this whole travel ban game. The Queen wouldn't even mention his name in his speech, so at this point, Trump has literally become Lord Voldemort."

Trevor Noah: "I don't know if you heard, but last night, the Democratic Party ended forever."

Trevor Noah: "When you're not having a good time, time lasts forever. Right now, the Democrats are the designated driver at the club who is not drinking. ... But when you're drinking, you're like, 'What, do you mean we're closing? Oh, my God, have we been here for a week? Wow, time flies.' Those are Trump supporters. And for them, it's only 1:00 a.m. in the club."

Trevor Noah: "I'm just saying that it might be too early for Trump's people to make a judgment about him. Trump has still got that new President smell for them. I mean, it smells like hair spray and taco bowls, but it's still new for them, still new."

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that Mitch McConnell wants to force a Senate vote on healthcare before July 4. Yeah, 'cause if there's one day you want to take away people's healthcare, it's the day when they get drunk and set off fireworks"

Seth Meyers: [Referring to the loss in Georgia House special election] "I would tell Democrats to go back to go back to the drawing board, but it would probably fall on them and kill them."

Seth Meyers: "Following two special election losses for the Democratic Party yesterday, one Democratic congressman said, quote, 'Our brand is worse than Trump.' 'Hey, that's our slogan,' said United Airlines."

Seth Meyers: "The White House is like a poorly wrapped burrito. It's falling apart, and we're all going to get E. Coli."

Seth Meyers: "The House bill cut Medicaid spending by $880 billion dollars to give the wealthiest people a near trillion dollar tax cut. A plan that is so toxic just 8 percent of Americans think the Senate should pass the healthcare bill as is. Eight percent! Even 'The Mummy' got a 15 percent on Rotten Tomatoes. In fact, 'The Mummy' might be the healthcare bill."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner is right now in the Middle East to broker historic peace between Israel and the Palestinians. Kushner thinks real progress will start once both sides stop laughing.”

Conan O'Brien: “In Israel, a court ruled that a religious man cannot force a woman to move seats on an airplane just because he’s afraid of having accidental physical contact with her. The landmark case of Israel versus Mike Pence.”

Trump: 'We Want To Be Energy Dominant'.

The AP (6/28) reports that in a meeting with several state and tribal leaders as part of the White House Energy Week, President Trump said he wants to make the country "energy dominant." The Washington Times (6/28, Wolfgang) reports that Trump "promised to usher in a 'golden age of American energy dominance,' pledging that his administration will lift regulatory restrictions that hamper coal mining and oil drilling." The President said, "For too long the federal government has put up restrictions and regulations that put this energy wealth out of reach. It's just totally out of reach. ... We're going to put it back in your hands." The Washington Examiner (6/28, Siciliano) reports that the President also "said Wednesday that he wants to see job growth like 'never seen before' from energy development on tribal lands." Trump said, "We love Indian country, right?" The Hill (6/28, Cama) says that a reporter "asked Trump at the end of the speech whether he believes in climate change. ... Trump listened to the question, but did not answer. Instead, Trump thanked the journalists as they were escorted out of the room."

The Hill (6/28, Cama, Henry) reports that on Thursday, President Trump, Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt will "speak at the Energy Department as part of the White House's Energy Week festivities."

Interior Sec Zinke Calls Obama Environmental Policy 'Un-American'.

The Daily Caller (6/28, Pearce) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "criticized a 2015 presidential memorandum for stunting job growth and industry on federal lands at a Montana Western Governors Association conference Tuesday." The memo, signed by former President Obama, "requires federal agencies to 'minimize harmful effects to land, water, wildlife, and other ecological resources' from any development opportunities taken or sanctioned by the agency." The Interior Department is "reviewing its enforcement of the Obama memorandum specifically." Zinke said of the memo, "Some people would call it extortion. I call it un-American."

US: Montana's Breaks Monument 'Likely' Will Not Be Changed. The AP (6/28) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says he "likely" won't recommend changes to the Upper Missouri River Breaks National Monument. Gov. Steve Bullock "sent a letter to Zinke last week asking him to keep the Breaks monument unchanged." Zinke said, "The elected officials and the vast majority of Montanans are comfortable with the Missouri Breaks as it is. The governor certainly is. And I see no reason to change that." Zinke "said he asks three questions when assessing changes to national monuments: Did creation of the monument follow the guidelines for creating monuments as spelled out in the Antiquities Act, was there enough public input when it was formed and would it be more disruptive or in the best interest of the local communities to do further review?"

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (6/28) and KTVQ-TV Billings, MT (6/28).

Republicans Fear Onslaught Of Green Group Lawsuits.

The Hill (6/28, Park) reports that "Republican lawmakers on Wednesday held a hearing to address what they fear is 'excessive litigation' against the Interior Department from green groups and other liberal activists." At a hearing of the House Natural Resources Subcommittee on Oversight, "lawmakers heard from experts who said that green groups are abusing the courts to challenge the agency's policies." Rep. Mike Johnson said, "Excessive litigation against the department drains our taxpayers' dollars away from good stewardship of our natural resources."

Trump Gains Local Support In Possible Shrinking Of California's Sequoia Monument.

The San Francisco Chronicle (6/28, Alexander) reports that the Tulare County Board of Supervisors voted Tuesday to send a letter to the Trump Administration "urging it to reduce the 328,000-acre Giant Sequoia monument to 90,000 acres." Meanwhile, "a similar request before the Kern County Board of Supervisors fell short." The board decided Tuesday "to take no position on the monument amid a groundswell of public opposition to any changes."

Additional coverage was provided by the Visalia \(CA\) Times-Delta (6/28).

Zinke Is Right, It's Fine The Way It Is.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (6/28) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "right in believing" the Canyons of the Ancients National Monument is "settled, and his decision to leave well enough alone is a wise one." It notes that "multiple use is still the management philosophy of the monument." It concludes that "while CANM appears to be off the chopping block for now, it still needs advocates because changing the monument's designation is not the only way to destroy it."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribe Suspends Bid For Federal Designation On Casino Land.

The AP (6/28) reports that the Mashpee Wampanoag tribe has "suspended its efforts to get the federal government to designate 321 acres as sovereign tribal land." The tribe "says it made the decision in consultation with the U.S. Department of Interior, which was expected to render a decision on the tribe's request by Tuesday." According to the tribe, "the move preserves its right to seek the designation later."

Additional coverage was provided by the New Bedford \(MA\) Standard-Times (6/28, Lindahl).

Bureau Of Land Management

As Wildfires Rage In West, DC Lawmakers Fight Over Forest Policy.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/28, Siripurapu) reports that "with wildfire season raging in western states, Congress is embroiled in a battle over how best to fight the fires." The "Resilient Federal Forests Act of 2017" would give the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management "access to funds to fight fires from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which coordinates responses to disasters like hurricanes, if their budgets for fighting wildfires run out." Many Republicans "want to help prevent and fight wildfires by giving the agencies that manage the federal forests more money and greater ability to thin out the forests." On the other hand, "most Democrats, as well as environmental groups, say the bill would lead to more logging without first considering potential damage to the forests."

Bureau Of Land Management Buys Land Near Utah National Trail.

The AP (6/28) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has "acquired 231 acres (935,000 square meters) from a private property owner near the Gooseberry Mesa National Recreation Trail." The BLM's St. George field office manager Brian Tritle "says the land was purchased from Quarter Circle 2 Ranch for $600,000." The BLM "hopes to enhance the outdoor recreation experience for visitors and provide economic growth for the tourism-based economy in Washington County."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Watershed Projects In Five States Awarded Bureau Of Reclamation Grants.

The American Security News (6/27) reports that "watershed management projects to improve water quality, water conservation and ecological health in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho and New Mexico were recently awarded Bureau of Reclamation grants totaling $664,754."

According to the article, "seven projects in those five states will receive the funds through the WaterSMART program.”

Embattled Navajo Coal Power Plant To Survive Through 2019.

The Washington Times (6/28, Wolfgang) reports the Navajo Generation Station, which is “partially owned by the federal government and critical to tribal economies in the West,” will stay open “for another two years, though its future beyond that remains uncertain.” On Tuesday, the Navajo Nation “approved a lease extension of the Navajo Generating Station (NGS) through 2019, temporarily heading off a catastrophic closure that would’ve left hundreds without jobs and almost certainly would’ve led to the shuttering of Peabody Energy’s nearby Kayenta Mine that supplies the facility.” Administration officials “say they’ve spent months searching for a way to keep NGS up and running.”

Large Sinkhole Opens At Wickiup Reservoir; Officials Warn That The Ground Is ‘Highly Unstable’.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (6/28, Hammers) reports that “a sinkhole opened up on the edge of Wickiup Reservoir over the weekend — possibly due to a collapsed lava tube — but officials say water levels at the reservoir just west of La Pine are expected to remain stable.” Dave Walsh, spokesman with the Bureau of Reclamation, “said the hole is roughly 10 to 12 feet across and about 4 feet deep.” The bureau has “taped off the area to deter visitors from getting too close.”

There’s No Green Light For Terrible Delta Tunnels.

In an op-ed for the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/28, Garamendi), Rep. John Garamendi calls the California WaterFix a “$15 billion boondoggle.” Federal agencies, in biological opinions issued this week, “only examined phase one, which is limited to the construction of the Delta twin tunnels themselves and the expansion of Clifton Court Forebay – not the project’s real environmental danger of actually moving water through the tunnels.” Garamendi argues that “instead of wasting time and money on a project that risks massive environmental damage, the state should immediately proceed with projects that actually increase our water supplies.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

At Offshore Drilling Regulator, Focus On “Economic Development”.

The Houston Chronicle (6/28, Osborne) reports the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement has put a new priority on economic development, according to Lars Herbs, Gulf of Mexico Regional Director at BSEE. He said, “Our mission has not changed. I don’t want folks to think we’re just looking at the economic development. ... We always had a conservation mission as well, which was not very well understood, about the effective and efficient development of offshore resources. This administration is looking at it as it’s not ‘either or,’ it’s ‘and.’” He said the driving concern is that production in the Gulf will go down if new investments in offshore fields do not increase quickly. He said, “Right now what may surprise some people is we’re at a record level of oil production offshore. ... That’s only because of past investments companies have made. If we don’t see some capitol investment that production will start dropping off.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Western Governors Back Endangered Species Act, With Changes.

The AP (6/28, Elliott) reports that the Western Governors Association “endorsed the aims of the Endangered Species Act on Wednesday but asked Congress to make changes, including giving states a bigger role and clarifying recovery goals for species protected by the law.” The governors “said Western states benefit economically from healthy species and ecosystems but bear the burden of land-use restrictions that usually come with species protection, as well as some of the cost of recovery programs.” The association “approved a resolution giving qualified backing for the act during a meeting in Whitefish, Montana.”

F.B.I. Agent Is Indicted In Shooting During Oregon Standoff.

The New York Times (6/28, Goldman) reports FBI agent Joseph Astarita, a member of the “elite Hostage Rescue Team involved in a deadly confrontation last year with a prominent antigovernment protester in Oregon,” was indicted yesterday on charges of obstruction of justice and lying to supervisors about firing his weapon in the effort to arrest protester Robert Finicum, who was killed. Astarita pleaded not guilty to all five counts yesterday and was released pending court appearances. The Times says the indictment "is a blow to the reputation of the hostage team, which carries out the bureau's riskiest missions in the US and abroad."

Describing the January 26, 2016 incident, the Washington Post (6/28, Sottile) explains that FBI agents and Oregon State Police troopers "swarmed" a group of protesters who had been occupying the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge as they drove down the highway. Swerving to avoid a police roadblock, Finicum ran into a snowbank and nearly hit an agent before walking toward an officer and appearing to reach for a loaded gun in his jacket. State troopers opened fire and fatally shot Finicum three times in the back, a move authorities deemed justified weeks later. The same day, Oregon officials and the DOJ IG announced they were investigating FBI agents' actions during the encounter to determine the source of an unaccounted-for bullet that hit the roof of Finicum's car. According to the Los Angeles Times (6/28, Denson, Pearce), Astarita's charges allege that during multiple interviews, he failed to admit to firing the shot. Finicum's wife Jeanette told the Times that while she's grateful for the indictment, "I believe there's more that needs to be done; there were other officers involved in the coverup."

Longmont Prairie Dog Colony May Be Moved To Rocky Flats.

The Denver Post (6/28, Fryar) reports that "prairie dog protection advocates announced this week that they've found a new home for a southeast Longmont prairie dog colony that the activists are hoping to prevent being exterminated." According to the article, "the estimated 200 or more prairie dogs that now live on about 12 acres of private property southwest of East Third Avenue and Great Western Drive may be relocated to an area on the federal Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge." Deanna Meyer, executive director of Prairie Protection Colorado, "said that David Lucas, manager of the Rocky Flats Wildlife Refuge, has notified her that the refuge is available as a receiving site for the southeast Longmont prairie dogs."

95 Acres Of Wetlands And Hull's Trace Now In Preservation Agreement.

The Monroe \(MI\) Evening News (6/28, Cousino) reports that "federal, state and local officials are hailing a public-private partnership to preserve a corduroy road dating back to the War of 1812 and 95 acres of coastal wetlands at the mouth of the Huron River here." According to the article, "at a press conference Monday held at the Brownstown Event Center, authorities praised U.S. Silica for its plan to donate 95 acres of high-quality coastal wetlands to the U.S. National Park Service and Fish and Wildlife Service for inclusion in the Detroit River International Wildlife Refuge."

Grizzlies 'Recovered'? Yeah. I Mean, Sorta.

In his column for the Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (6/28, Hatch), Cory Hatch writes that "the grizzly's miraculous comeback" is a "success story," but "many wildlife advocates — myself included — have greeted the delisting decision with a sense of dread." According to Hatch, "the problem is that the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem is poised for a drastic transformation thanks to climate change and an increasing human population" and "this transformation will almost certainly be bad for bears." Hatch concludes that "a token population of any species, hemmed in and hounded at its borders, and under siege from any number of human-caused threats, is not a recovered population."

Additional coverage was provided by the Missoula \(MT\) Independent (6/29, Sakariassen).

National Park Service

Proposal Would Make Civil War Origin Site A National Park.

The AP (6/28) reports that "two South Carolina lawmakers have proposed that the site where the Civil War began be raised in status to a national park." Sen. Tim Scott and Rep. Mark Sanford "on Wednesday introduced legislation creating the Fort Sumter and Fort Moultrie National Park as the nation's latest national park and second in South Carolina."

July 4th Citizenship Ceremony Being Held At Saratoga Park.

The AP (6/29) reports that "a group of new United States citizens will be sworn in during a ceremony being held on the Fourth of July at the site of a famous Revolutionary War battle." The National Park Service "says a citizenship ceremony and traditional reading of the Declaration of Independence will be held Tuesday morning at Saratoga National Historical Park." According to park officials, "20 immigrants from around the world will become new U.S. citizens during a ceremony that also will include fife and drums, a color guard and musket firings."

National Park Service Agrees To Stop Discriminating Against Christian Geologist.

The Arizona Daily Independent (6/29) reports that "an experienced geologist's lawsuit has prompted federal officials to grant him a long-awaited research permit after they originally denied his application because of his Christian beliefs about the origins of the Earth." In light of this decision, "an Alliance Defending Freedom allied attorney together with ADF attorneys who represent the geologist, Dr. Andrew Snelling, voluntarily dismissed Snelling v. United States Department of Interior in federal court Wednesday."

Prehistoric Stone Fish Trap Discovered On Alaska Island.

The AP (6/28) reports that "archaeologists have discovered a prehistoric fish trap constructed of rock walls near the mouth of a salmon stream on Alaska's Kodiak Island." The article notes that "the survey is being conducted with National Park Service grants as part of a two-year Afognak Native Corp. effort to map important cultural sites on the corporation's 387 square miles (1,000 square kilometers) of land." The survey has "uncovered other historical sites including fox farms and an abandoned gold mine."

Tioga Pass, The Busy Back Door To Yosemite, Is Finally Cleared And Is Opening To Vehicles Thursday.

The Los Angeles Times (6/28, Erskine) reports that Tioga Pass will "finally open to vehicles at 8 a.m. Thursday, a month later than usual." The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/27, Oide) reports that "snowmelt on the roadway and infrastructure repairs were two of the factors that kept Highway 120/Tioga Road closed."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Post (6/28, Fritz) and KGO-TV San Francisco (6/28).

Retiring Parkway Superintendent Reflects On 37 Years With The Park Service.

The Waynesville \(NC\) Smoky Mountain News (6/28, Kays) reports that "Mark Woods will retire as superintendent of the Blue Ridge Parkway on July 3, but on July 4 he'll don the flathat one last time as grand marshal of the Lake Junaluska Fourth of July Parade." Woods "worked with the National Park Service for 37 years before making his decision to retire, positions ranging from resource management to law enforcement to superintendent." He said, "I'm very thankful I've had a career I've absolutely loved and looked forward to going to work every day."

Our National Parks Need Updates; Congress Can Help.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/28, Wathen, Contributor), Tom Wathen, who leads The Pew Charitable Trusts' ocean and lands conservation projects in the United States, writes on the "backlog of restoration projects" at national parks, "in large part because of shortfalls in congressional funding needed to maintain the National Park Service's aging infrastructure." Wathen urges support for the National Park Service Legacy Act, which "would direct annual federal funding to national park deferred maintenance needs and provide incentives for private-public matching, in an effort to ensure that the NPS has the predictable resources needed to preserve our natural, cultural, and historical sites for future generations." According to Wathen, "addressing deferred maintenance will also ensure that park visitors continue to have positive, safe experiences, and spend money in cities and towns near park sites," and "as an added bonus, by funding these critical repairs Congress will help create infrastructure-related jobs."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Interior Secretary Applauds Nomination Of Domenech As Assistant Secretary For Insular Areas.

Marianas Variety (6/29) reports that President Trump has "announced his intent to nominate Interior Department veteran Douglas William Domenech as assistant secretary of the Interior for insular areas." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "I am excited to announce that the president and I have selected Doug Domenech to lead the administration's initiatives in the insular areas. Domenech's experience serving former Interior Secretaries Gale Norton and Dirk Kempthorne, his passion for the people and priorities in the islands, and his previous service in state and federal government combine to make him the ideal candidate for this position.”

Also, KUAM-TV Dededo, GUM (6/28, Delgado) reports, that Gov. Eddie Calvo “joined in endorsing Domenech’s nomination.”

‘Indispensable’ Palau Deal At Risk; Will China Get Access?

In a piece for Breaking Defense (6/27, Clark), Colin Clark questions why the House Armed Services Committee has defunded “a $123.9 million payment” that gains the US access to Palau. According to Clark Palau is “indispensable” because of its geographic location. Clark expects that the Senate Armed Services Committee, led by Sen. John McCain, will “make a very persuasive argument in the NDAA conference that Palau receive the money America committed to pay it, period.”

ADB Rolls Out $200m Renewables Package For 11 Pacific Islands.

PV Magazine (6/26, Clover) reports that the Asian Development Bank has “announced a $200 million finance package for the support and deployment of renewable energy projects in the 11 smallest island nations of the Pacific.” The Pacific Renewable Energy Investment Facility will “steer funds to the Cook Islands, Micronesia, Kiribati, Nauru, Palau, the Republic of Marshall Islands, Samoa, the Solomon Islands, Tonga, Tuvalu and Vanuatu.” According to the article, “each of these small Pacific states faces its own set of energy generation, climate change and economic problems, and thus the ADB believes that the potential $200 million package is money well spent.”

Mapp Approves Medicaid Match, Hospital Funds.

The St. Thomas Source (6/27) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp has “approved spending $2.5 million in reprogrammed bond funds for emergency repairs and sewer line replacement at the Gov. Juan F. Luis Hospital and Medical Center on St. Croix.” The bill also “appropriated rum funds and hotel occupancy tax funds to the General Fund, so another bill could spend them on federal matching funds for Medicaid and other priorities of the governor.”

Corals May Hold Cancer Insights.

Stanford University \(CA\) (6/28, Jordan) reports that “more than 70 years after the U.S. tested atomic bombs on a ring of sand in the Pacific Ocean called Bikini Atoll, Stanford researchers are studying how long-term radiation exposure there has affected corals that normally grow for centuries without developing cancer.” The researchers’ work is featured in the June 28 episode of PBS’ “Big Pacific.” Stephen Palumbi, the Harold A. Miller Professor of Marine Science, said, “The terrible history of Bikini Atoll is an ironic setting for research that might help people live longer. By understanding how corals could have recolonized the radiation-filled bomb craters, maybe we can discover something new about keeping DNA intact.”

Top National News

Trump Calls On Congress To Pass “Kate’s Law,” “No Sanctuary For Criminals Act.”

The President’s call for Congress to pass legislation targeting crimes committed by undocumented immigrants was not mentioned on the major network newscasts, and was not a significant topic of discussion on cable. The AP (6/28) reports Trump “met with more than a dozen people whose loved ones were killed by people in the country illegally,” and pushed for “passage of two pieces of legislation”: “Kate’s Law” would “impose harsher mandatory minimum prison sentences on deportees who re-enter the United States, with stronger penalty increases for those who have been convicted of non-immigration crimes.” The “No Sanctuary for Criminals Act” would “bar states and localities that refuse to cooperate with immigration authorities from receiving certain Department of Justice and Department of Homeland Security grants.”

The Washington Post (6/28, Debonis, Nakamura) reports that Trump’s “focus on immigration, a day after Republican leaders in the Senate postponed efforts to repeal the Affordable Care Act, illustrated the White House’s eagerness to get back onto comfortable footing.” The Post also reports that “the House votes” on the two bills, “coming six months into Trump’s presidency,” are “highlighting the limits of congressional action and the frustrations of conservatives who expected much more to have been done already.” While “arrests of undocumented immigrants have spiked under Trump” and “illegal border crossings have fallen significantly since Trump took office," there has been "little activity" on "the legislative front."

However, says the New York Daily News (6/28, Joseph), "both bills, strongly favored by...Trump, will be put on the House floor and are expected to pass largely along partisan lines." The Des Moines \(IA\) Register (6/28, Sullivan) notes that Michelle Wilson-Root, "the mother of 21-year-old Sarah Root of Council Bluffs, killed last year by an drunken driver in the United States illegally," met with Trump yesterday, and "will be in the House Chamber on Thursday" when immigration legislation is "debated and voted on, she said."

The Washington Times (6/28, Miller) reports that "championing the victims of illegal-immigrant crime was a hallmark of Mr. Trump's presidential run, and he vowed Wednesday follow through by quickly signing the bills when they reach his desk." Said the President, "You lost the people that you love because our government refused to enforce our nation's immigration laws and that's including the existing immigration laws." Trump also "called on all member of Congress to honor grieving American families by passing these life-saving measures."

The President, says Politico (6/28, Lahut), "painted a grim picture of the homeland Wednesday, saying his actions to crack down on illegal immigration in the United States were 'liberating towns' from gangs such as MS-13." Said Trump, "We're freeing up towns, actually we're liberating towns, if you believe we have to do that in the United States of America. ... But we're doing it and we're doing it fast."

TIME (6/28, Rhodan) reported that Attorney General Sessions "released a statement in support of the bill, saying criminals and gangs take advantage of sanctuary policies in order to wreak havoc on communities." Said Sessions, "Closing these loopholes in our laws must be a priority if we are to make America safe from these dangerous transnational organizations. ... These bills can restore sanity and common-sense to our system by ending abusive attempts to undermine federal law, and they can prevent future tragedies by empowering law enforcement."

Breitbart (6/28, Mason) quotes Sessions as also saying, "Countless families and communities have suffered as a result of these 'sanctuary' policies, which undermine federal law by safeguarding criminal illegal aliens from federal law enforcement. One victim of these policies was Kate Steinle, who was killed by an illegal alien who had been deported five times and yet still walked the streets freely. Her death was preventable, and she would still be alive today if only the City of San Francisco had put the public's safety first. How many more Americans must die before we put an end to this madness?"

Media Analyses: ICE Head's Comments Mark Break With Trump. Media analyses are casting comments yesterday by ICE Acting Director Thomas Homan as a break with the President's positions on immigrants and crime. Newsweek (6/28, Miere), for example, reported that Homan "effectively conceded that a claim that helped propel Donald Trump toward the White House was, as the president might put it, 'fake news,'" and BuzzFeed (6/28, Flores) that he "appeared to undercut his boss."

Business Insider (6/28, Mark) said Homan "appeared to break with one of...Trump's key campaign assertions on Wednesday, suggesting he didn't believe immigrants in the country illegally commit more crimes than Americans." In an "off-camera briefing," Homan said, "Did I say aliens commit more crimes than US citizens? I didn't say that. ... I'm saying, number one, they're in the country illegally. They already committed one crime by entering the country illegally. But when they commit a crime against a citizen of this country, they draw our attention." Business Insider added that "the statement contrasts with Trump's frequent insistence that immigrants living in the country illegally present a public safety threat to Americans, and his insinuations that illegal immigration and crime are linked."

The Washington Times (6/28, Miller) reports that Horman also "teared up at a White House press briefing Wednesday describing how he found a dead five-year-old boy in the back of a tractor trailer smuggling illegal immigrants – one of the often overlooked victims of lax immigration laws, he said." Homan and US Attorney for Utah John W. Huber "appeared before the White House press corps to help make the case for the House bills that have strong backing by...Trump."

Suspected Killer Of Virginia Muslim Girl An Illegal Immigrant Accused Of Sexual Assault. The Federalist (6/28) reported that "the suspect charged with the kidnapping and murder of a Muslim girl in Reston, Virginia earlier this month had been accused of sexually assaulting a woman in front of a child one week before." Darwin Martinez Torres, "a 22-year-old man from El Salvador who entered the United States illegally, was detained by Immigration and Customs Enforcement after he allegedly kidnapped" and killed "17-year-old Nabra Hassanen while she walked with her friends to the All Dulles Area Muslim Society mosque." An unnamed "woman" claims "he sexually assaulted her in front of a child" one week earlier, but she "decided not to press charges, telling authorities she was afraid of her attacker," who she "said...was a member of the gang MS-13."

Amid Trump Sparring With Media, Video Shows Van Jones Calling Russia Story “Nothing Burger.”

Following the release of footage showing a CNN producer dismissing the Trump-Russia story as “bullsh*t,” conservative media yesterday highlighted a new video featuring remarks by former Obama aide and CNN contributor Van Jones. The Washington Times (6/28, Richardson) reports “CNN was hit Wednesday with a second undercover video, this one” showing Jones “calling the Russia controversy a ‘nothing burger.’” The Hill (6/28, Concha) said “Jones appears to recognize the person he is speaking to, but does not seem to know he is being taped.” The Hill added that “‘Van Jones’ quickly began trending on Twitter after O’Keefe released the video through his personal Twitter account,” and Mic (6/27, Alcorn) pointed out that “conservatives on Twitter spent Wednesday afternoon celebrating the release of new video.”

Politico (6/28, Gold) reports “Trump and his allies believe he’s gained a tactical advantage in his war with the media,” amid “an escalation of Trump’s strategy of citing media bias to rally conservatives and undecided voters around the idea that the investigations of Russian influence in the 2016 election are media-driven and politically motivated.” Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/28), “How wonderfully revealing this exchange is. The Russia story is a nothing burger? We knew that. If only they admitted as much on CNN. But in private, they know it, too.” Sean Hannity said on Fox News’ Hannity (6/28) that Jones, who is “constantly smearing and slandering the President,” might “have some explaining to do.” Hannity went on to reiterate his call for CNN President Jeff Zucker to be held accountable, arguing that he “is leading all the fake new circus at CNN” and “all the blame for what is happening at CNN should be on his shoulders.” On Fox News’ The Five (6/28), Kimberly Guilfoyle called the Jones video “another layer to the CNN problem,” adding that “the network [is] under siege.”

Deputy assistant to the President Sebastian Gorka said on Fox News’ Hannity (6/28), “If you look at how the media has spun the story, the latest Harvard poll says that more than 70 percent of Americans don’t trust the media. Why? Because of these false, fake news, propaganda products like Russian collusion. Let me give you an example. We’ve had six months of Russia, from places like CNN, and then they try to say that we are going to go to war with Russia and Syria? Either we are in bed with Moscow or we want to go to war with them. Which one is it? They are schizophrenic.” Gorka added that the news organizations in question “may not be able to win their reputation back. ... The house of cards has crumbled because they can’t see beyond their political agendas, and the people see through it. Thanks to the President and his Twitter, he can just short-circuit all of it.”

Newsweek (6/28, Price) noted “a CNN spokesman responded to Newsweek’s request for comment by email saying: ‘LOL.’” Business Insider (6/28, Tani) says “the dismissive reply came after observers pointed to Jones’ frequent public comments saying he believes the Russia investigation will likely not yield any evidence of collusion.” WND (6/28, Unruh), which said Jones “agrees with...Trump” on “the Russia scandal,” had “previously attacked Trump over the ‘Putin relationship.’” The Washington Times (6/28, Richardson) reports that “in a Dec. 18 CNN segment included on the Project Veritas footage, Mr. Jones criticized the Trump administration for reaching out to Russia ‘in the face of an active attack on the country.’” However, “more recently, he tried to warn off Democrats fixated on the Russia-Trump connection. In a June 23 video Q&A on Twitter, Mr. Jones said he was ‘glad there is a Russian investigation and I hope they get to the bottom of it,’ but also expressed skepticism.” Jones said at the time, “Unless there is a real smoking gun, which there is probably not, it’s just going to be a big old mess.”

To the Los Angeles Times (6/28, Ng), “CNN has become a point of obsession among many conservative activists who see the network as their prime ideological foe for its coverage of President Trump.” The Times adds that “some of their motivation stems from left-wing attacks on Fox News that resulted in the firing of host Bill O’Reilly in April and a failed effort to unseat Sean Hannity after he pushed a right-wing conspiracy theory that Democratic National Committee staffer Seth Rich may have been killed because he provided emails to WikiLeaks.” Matt Vespa, meanwhile, writes for Townhall (6/28) that “since the inauguration, Russia has been mentioned in CNN’s coverage of the Trump White House 15,694 times,” despite the fact that “there is zero evidence that there was any collusion between the Trump campaign and Russian intelligence operatives during the 2016 election. None.”

Greg Gutfeld said on Fox News’ The Five (6/28), “It’s not a nothing burger, it’s a nothing caviar. I will defend Van Jones in the sense that I don’t think he was never on the Russian-Trump thing, the narrative of the network. Definitely, they are pushing this. But he always seemed more measured. ... I don’t think he’s being a hypocrite. So I have to praise him for being consistent off-camera and on camera.”

Juan Williams said on Fox News' The Five (6/28), “I think this is an overreaction. I’m amazed at anybody thinking the media doesn’t make mistakes. ... They made a mistake, and guess what, we know networks, and we know newspapers that have had to retract stories and haven’t fired people and having apologized.” Williams added, “When I look at the reality of Trump putting up fake Time magazine covers, I think fake news. When I hear about Trump saying Obama was spying on him during the campaign and he can’t prove anything, fake news. When he says, guess what, I’ve got tapes on James Comey, and there’s no such thing, I think fake news.”

The Washington Post (6/28, Farhi) reports that Project Veritas “has been repeatedly criticized for intentionally deceptive editing...and O’Keefe has a criminal record from an effort to illegally infiltrate a Democratic senator’s office.” The Post adds that “the video includes several journalistic evasions and shortcuts that would likely elicit outrage from critics if a mainstream news organization had employed the same techniques.”

Gingrich: CNN Should Appoint Outsider To Investigate Its Coverage. Breitbart (6/28, Kew) reported that Newt Gingrich told Fox and Friends that “should appoint an outside analyst, somebody of impeccable authority like Michael Mukasey, who used to be Attorney General of the United States, to view everything of CNN and basically reset it. ... You cannot get to a believable network while Zucker is there. He clearly made a gamble last year to be the leading anti-Trump network, he’s clearly done things that are absurdly wrong. I like lots of the people at CNN, I worked with them for a while. There are some very, very good people at CNN, they have a very long tradition of being good journalists. But the culture of the overall system right now is very toxic.”

Trump: #AmazonWashingtonPost Is “Fake News.” USA Today (6/28, Estepa) reports, “Have we just witnessed the creation of a new Trump nickname?” Yesterday, the President “tweeted about the Washington Post and Amazon: ‘The #AmazonWashingtonPost, sometimes referred to as the guardian of Amazon not paying internet taxes (which they should) is FAKE NEWS!’” To The Hill (6/28, Fabian), meanwhile, Trump “is escalating his attacks on the news media as he struggles to advance his agenda in Congress and grapples with the wide-ranging probe into whether his associates colluded with Russia in its efforts to influence the 2016 presidential election.”

The New York Times (6/28, Cohen) reports on what it terms Trump’s “angry tweet,” concluding that he “may not have meant to, but on Wednesday he seemed to endorse a longer reach for the tax collector.” To the Times, “The White House did not elaborate. But one possibility is that Mr. Trump was thinking of a proposal to allow state governments to force internet retailers to collect sales taxes from their customers. The bill — called the Marketplace Fairness Act — has been pushed for years by brick-and-mortar retailers like Walmart, which have been losing ground as e-commerce has grown.” The proposal “not only is anathema to anti-tax advocates but also would seem to be at odds with Mr. Trump’s own promise that ;we are going to be cutting taxes massively both for the middle class and for companies.”

Blitzer Asks WHCA Chief About “Potentially Dangerous” Trump Anti-Media Rhetoric. Breitbart (6/28, Key) reports that on his CNN program on Wednesday, Wolf Blitzer asked White House Correspondents’ Association President Jeff Mason “if he has discussed the ‘potentially very dangerous’ issue” of President Trump “calling the media ‘enemies’ of the American people with the White House communications team.” Mason replied, “That type of rhetoric is something that we have spoken about since he first said that. ... That is rhetoric that we reject and is just not something that I think is helpful to the public discourse.”

CNN Report: “Officials Struggle To Convince Trump That Russia Remains A Threat.” In a story headlined “Officials Struggle To Convince Trump That Russia Remains A Threat,” CNN (6/28, Murray, Bash) reported that “the Trump administration has taken no public steps to punish Russia for its interference in the 2016 election,” and that “multiple senior administration officials said there are few signs the President is devoting his time or attention to the ongoing election-related cyber threat from Russia.” Asked “whether Trump was convening any meetings on Russian meddling in the election,” a “senior administration official” said, “I’ve seen no evidence of it.” CNN also reported that “some in Trump’s own party believe he hasn’t done enough to repudiate Russia’s actions,” and quotes Sen. John McCain to that effect.

Burr Aims To Complete Intel Committee’s Russia Probe By Year’s End. Politico (6/28, Samuelsohn) reports Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr told reporters Wednesday that his panel is aiming to finish its probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election “by the end of this year and plans to double the number of witness interviews to nearly 90 before lawmakers break for the August recess.” Burr said, “I’d like to finish by the end of this year, but that's aspirational right now. ... It can be done." Burr added, "We've got a very aggressive schedule in July. ... We may double the number of interviews by the time we leave for the August recess based upon our schedule."

Bloomberg News (6/28, Dennis, House) says the investigation "is now focused sharply on financial transactions involving the president's associates – with the committee searching for improprieties in more than 2,000 documents it has received from the Treasury Department's financial crimes unit." Meanwhile, Sen. Mark Warner, the ranking Democrat on the panel, "told reporters that the committee is entering a higher profile phase where they plan to interview associates of President Donald Trump who have been mentioned in the press as having possible ties to Russians."

Warner: Intel Panel Has Agreement To Get Comey Memos. Warner confirmed Wednesday that the committee has an agreement to get former FBI Director Comey's memos concerning his conversations with the President, the AP (6/28, Jalonick) reports. Warner told reporters, "We have a commitment to get appropriate access to the Comey memos. ... I'm pleased, I think it's critical information we have to have as part of our review process."

Kasowitz Postpones Plan To File Complaint Against Comey. The Hill (6/28, Fabian) cites a Bloomberg report which said that President Trump's personal attorney, Marc Kasowitz, "is postponing a plan to file a complaint against former FBI Director James Comey." Bloomberg said Kasowitz "still plans to file the complaint," which "was supposed to have centered on Comey's testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee, in which he admitted to arranging for his accounts of conversations with Trump to be provided to the news media," but the New York Post (6/28, Fredericks), also citing the Bloomberg report, said the delay is "'a professional courtesy' to Robert Mueller, the former FBI chief who is heading the probe." According to Bloomberg, a source said the White House "wants to send a signal that Mueller will have 'space' to do job."

Several GOP Senators Admonish Obama Over Russia's Election Meddling. Politico (6/28, Bennett) reports that during a hearing of the Senate Intelligence Committee Wednesday, several Republicans "admonish[ed] former President Barack Obama for failing to stop Russia's hacking of the 2016 presidential campaign, echoing a narrative that President Donald Trump has promoted in recent days." Sen. Tom Cotton said, "He stood idly by in the 2016 election," while Sen. Jim Risch argued, "I'm talking about somebody that could have done something while this was going on." Political adds, however, that "not all Republicans said Obama was singularly to blame." For example, Sen. Susan Collins "argued that while Obama's reaction was 'behind-the-scenes, ineffective and tardy,' Trump has not been any better."

Athena Jones said on CNN's Situation Room (6/28), "Never in modern times has there been such a sustained public display of animosity by a President towards his predecessor as we are seeing now with Trump's frequent attacks on President Obama."

Schiff: Trump Should Confront Russia Over Election Meddling. Rep. Adam Schiff, ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, addressed Trump's criticism of Obama on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/28), saying, "Of course this is a continuation of the President's strategy to try to demean, downplay the investigation. The irony this week which is so inescapable is the President is criticizing his predecessor for not doing more to speak out on Russia, at the very time the President, the current President, is refusing to speak out on Russia." Schiff said on CNN's The Lead (6/28) that Trump "should confront Russia over what they did. He should be plain that it won't be tolerated again, that there will be severe repercussions, and second, he ought to be leveling with the American people and say, look, this is what Russia did. If they do this again, Democrats and Republicans need to come together and we all have to reject it no matter who it helps or who it hurts. It has to be rejected."

Burns Criticizes Obama, Trump Administrations Over Russia Threat. Fox News' Special Report (6/28) reported "former diplomats told a Senate panel" that the Obama Administration's response to Russia's election interference wasn't proportional. Former Ambassador Nicholas Burns told lawmakers, "We should've had a more immediate response that was painful to the Russians." Fox's Catherine Herridge added that witnesses "pointed to the French elections where the government moved quickly and publicly after suspected hackers targeted Emmanuel Macron." Rep. Jason Chaffetz said on Fox News' Special Report (6/28) that the Obama Administration believed Hillary Clinton was on her way to winning the election, "and when you think your team is going to win, you just let it slide."

Meanwhile, CNN's Situation Room (6/28) reported that Burns "raised some serious concerns that President Trump is not doing enough on Russia." Burns was shown stating, "I find it dismaying and objectionable that President Trump continues to deny the undeniable fact that Russia launched a major cyberattack against the United States regardless of what party he launched it against." Reuters (6/28, Zengerle, Volz) quotes Burns as saying, "Russia's going to do this again. ...Russia's our most dangerous adversary in the world today, and if he continues to refuse to act, it's a dereliction of the basic duty to defend the country."

Burns said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/28) that while "all of our intelligence services agree" that Russia conducted a massive cyber attack, "for six months the President has done nothing. He has not initiated an investigation into what happened. He's not had conversations with his cabinet officials to ask them what they think happened. He's not been talking to the European governments" that are "also victims...of Russian cyber attacks."

Sen. Mark Warner, the ranking Democrat on the panel, said on CNN's Situation Room (6/28) that he agrees with Burns, adding, "I just don't understand why this president won't accept the unanimous conclusion of his entire intelligence community," foreign leaders, and "every Democrat and Republican senator I know."

Rep. Jim Himes said on CNN's Situation Room (6/28) that the President and his Administration are "not taking the Russia threat at all seriously. Perhaps it's because this President happens to have a soft spot for Russia. There's plenty of evidence for that to be true. He clearly regards any talk of Russia as undermining his claim to the presidency of the United States, and that's why he's called this a hoax."

Sara Murray said on CNN's Situation Room (6/28) that "multiple senior officials say they struggle" with Trump's refusal to engage on the issue of Russia's interference. "Administration officials" claim "there is really no paper trail, no schedules, no read outs, no briefing documents, nothing to indicate the president is convening meetings or round tables on this subject." Murray added that sources have told CNN's Jim Sciutto that NSA Director Rogers "actually expressed to lawmakers how frustrated he is that he can't convince Trump to even accept US intelligence that Russia meddled in the election."

McMullin: GOP In Danger Of Becoming Putin-Aligned Party In US. In an op-ed for the Washington Post (6/28), former CIA operations officer Evan McMullin, who ran as an independent candidate in the 2016 presidential election, argues that the GOP "is at risk of becoming the Vladimir Putin-aligned party in the United States." While "increasingly sophisticated Russian influence and cyberoperations threaten Americans' ability to choose their own leaders," Trump "continues to sow doubt about whether Moscow even interfered in the 2016 presidential elections and to suggest the question's insignificance by ignoring it all together." Trump, he adds, "seems more interested in protecting Moscow than he does in deterring its future attacks."

Stone To Testify Before House Intel Committee Next Month. Manu Raju reported on CNN's Situation Room (6/28) that former Trump campaign adviser Roger Stone will testify behind closed doors to the House Intelligence Committee next month. Stone reportedly said "he is more than willing to go before the...committee to answer any questions they may have about his – what he says are brief interactions with the Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak."

FBI Investigating Russian Cybersecurity Firm For Potential Espionage In US. ABC World News Tonight (6/28, story 5, 2:35, Llamas) reported the FBI is investigating employees of Kaspersky Lab, the Russian-based cybersecurity company whose software is "widely used in American businesses, government, and maybe even your home." The Bureau is looking into the company's potential ties to the Kremlin over concerns its software could be used to spy on Americans. DNI Coats gave a "stark assessment" at a recent Senate Intelligence Committee meeting. Sen. Marco Rubio: "Would any of you be comfortable with Kaspersky Lab software on your computers?" Coats: "A resounding no from me." ABC (Thomas) added that the company has at least three executives with past ties to the KGB or Russian military, but its CEO, Eugene Kaspersky, "rejects any claim that his company is or would allow itself to be a tool of the Russian government."

Manafort Made $17 Million Working For Ukrainian Political Party. The CBS Evening News (6/28, story 3, 2:35, Mason) reported that President Trump's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort registered this week as a foreign agent, revealing that "he made $17 million in two years while working for a Ukrainian political party sympathetic to the Russian government." CBS (Garrett) added that Manafort worked for the Party of Regions, "a political party in Ukraine with ties to the Kremlin," from "2012 to 2014, but until this week, he did not disclose his activities as required by US law."

McCaskill Used Personal Foundation To Pay For Dinner At Kislyak's Residence. The Washington Free Beacon (6/28, Scher) reports that Sen. Claire McCaskill "used a personal foundation to pay for a dinner she attended at Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak's Washington, D.C., residence." McCaskill made the payment "through a foundation, the Shepard Family Foundation, that she set up with her husband Jon Shepard in 2013 but failed to disclose in filings to the Senate ethics committee until three weeks ago." Guy Benson writes about the payment on Townhall (6/28) and asks, "can we prove that Claire McCaskill is doing Moscow's bidding? Nyet, but think of the seriousness of the allegation, and consider her multiple layers of deception on these issues. Very suspicious (#impeach)." Benson adds that "Democrats who've fed into groundless hysteria deserve ruthless ridicule."

Trump Sounds Optimistic Note On Healthcare Bill, Predicts "Great, Great Surprise."

President Trump's optimistic tone on the prospects for Senate passage of a bill repealing Obamacare sparked mostly skeptical media analyses. ABC World News Tonight (6/28, story 2, 2:40, Karl) showed the President saying, "Healthcare is working along very well. You're going to have a great surprise, with a great healthcare package." To ABC, "at this point, victory would be a big surprise." The Washington Examiner (6/28, Westwood) notes that Trump added, "We're going to have a great, great surprise."

The New York Post (6/28, Schultz, Fredericks) reports Trump "mysteriously promised Americans 'a big surprise,'" and Politico (6/28, Nelson) notes that he also said that "by postponing the vote...Republicans 'have given ourselves a little bit more time to make it perfect.'" NBC Nightly News (6/28, story 2, 2:30, Holt) reported that despite Trump's optimism, "after seven years of promising to repeal Obamacare and six months of GOP control of the White House and Congress, a new reality is starting to sink in."

The White House, the Washington Times (6/28, Miller) reports, reiterated that Trump "remained confident that he would get a bill to repeal and replace Obamacare through Congress." Said White House Deputy Press Secretary Sarah Sanders, "It's really simple. Republicans have been talking about doing this for a number of years and they are committed to getting it done. ... You are talking about it as if it is over. It is certainly not. ... This is part of the process."

CNN's Acosta: Trump "Appeared To Be Bracing For A Potential Defeat." Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (6/28) that Trump "is not sounding so sure about victory in the healthcare debate" and "appeared to be bracing for a potential defeat."

Trump On Reports He's Not Involved In Healthcare Debate: "Fake News Media" Is "Wrong." Moreover, Roll Call (6/28, Bennett) reported the President yesterday "pushed back against reports that he has not taken a hands-on role in crafting the measure or garnering ample votes to pass it." He "used one of his typical morning tweets to lash out at a narrative that has emerged in recent days, including a New York Times piece posted online Tuesday evening, describing the president as not heavily involved" in Senate Majority Leader Mitch "McConnell's efforts." Trump "tweeted that some 'Fake News Media' outlets are painting him as 'not totally engaged in healthcare,' adding that assessment is 'Wrong.'" Another Roll Call (6/28, Bennett) piece quoted Sanders describing "Trump as 'fully engaged'...after multiple media reports describing him as taking a more hands-off approach than he did both times House Republicans took a swing at a health care overhaul measure."

The Washington Times (6/28, Persons) reports Sen. John Thune also "said Wednesday that...Trump is involved in the health care talks, despite reports that he's actually removed from the negotiations." Thune told Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/28), "The President has been very involved. He's engaged with individual members that have specific concerns they want addressed. He's engaged in our entire conference as you saw yesterday."

WPost A1: "Trump Loyalists" And "Seasoned Senators" Offer Differing Takes On Healthcare Bill Meeting. On its front page, the Washington Post (6/28, Costa, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) looks at "how the push for a Senate health-care vote fell apart" amid Republican tensions, writing that "nearly everyone" who took part in a meeting between Trump and GOP senators "had a different take" on the Tuesday session. While "White House officials and Trump loyalists saw a president diving in to patch up strife and save" the legislation, "some seasoned senators...saw a president unable to grasp policy details or the obstacles ahead." Trump's remark that he would understand if senators failed to pass a bill "prompted some senators to exchange concerned glances during the meeting," with some saying it "had the same ring as his comment a week earlier about the House's health bill being 'mean.'"

NYTimes: Trump Ruined Chance For Bipartisanship By Pursuing ACA Repeal. The New York Times (6/28, Steinhauer) reports that in the wake of Trump's election win, several Democratic senators "began the search for common cause with the unlikely new president." GOP lawmakers, meanwhile, thought "Trump's win in nine states where Democratic senators are up for re-election next year would scare those lawmakers into acceptance of a Republican agenda, perhaps even voting to repeal" the Affordable Care Act. The Times says that instead of "taking advantage of his honeymoon phase to pick an issue on which Democrats from conservative states might be amenable," the President "raced toward the most partisan corner of the room, pushing to repeal the" ACA "with no input from Democrats, in a manner that has proved deeply unpopular."

Revived Travel Ban To Take Effect Today.

The CBS Evening News (6/28, story 2, 0:20, Mason) reported President Trump's "partial 90-day ban on travel from six mostly Muslim nations goes into effect" on Thursday. The AP (6/28, Lee, Caldwell) reports that the Administration on Wednesday "set new criteria for visa applicants from six mainly Muslim nations and all refugees that require a 'close' family or business tie to the United States." While approved visas "will not be revoked," instructions issued by the State Department "say that new applicants from Syria, Sudan, Somalia, Libya, Iran and Yemen must prove a relationship with a parent, spouse, child, adult son or daughter, son-in-law, daughter-in-law or sibling already in the United States to be eligible." Refugees awaiting approval for admission would be subject to the same requirement. In addition, a legitimate business relationship must be "formal, documented and formed in the ordinary course rather than for the purpose of evading" the ban.

Sudanese Activists In Egypt In "Legal Limbo" Following Supreme Court Ruling. The AP (6/28, Rohan) reports that following the Supreme Court's partial reinstatement of the ban, dozens of Sudanese activists in Egypt, who "were close to approval for resettlement in the United States, now face legal limbo." Many fear for their safety in Egypt "because Sudanese agents operating in the country under tacit Egyptian approval regularly threaten them and their families, sometimes targeting them with violence."

GOP Lawmakers Say Ginsburg Should Recuse Herself From Travel Ban Case. The Washington Times (6/28, Swoyer) reports that more than 50 House Republicans have demanded that Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg recuse herself from the travel ban case, "saying she's already shown she can't be an impartial jurist when it comes to Mr. Trump." Citing Ginsburg's claim during last year's campaign that "she worried for the country should Mr. Trump be elected, and accus[ed] him of being 'a faker,'" the lawmakers "fired off a letter saying that creates a situation where her 'impartiality might reasonably be questioned' – the standard laid out in law for a justice to drop out of a case."

Cohn: "Pass-Through" Businesses Pose "Toughest Issues" For Tax Reform.

During a White House meeting with representatives from energy-industry groups on Wednesday, White House economic adviser Gary Cohn said "that the 'toughest issues' on tax reform that policymakers are dealing with relate to 'pass-through' businesses whose income is taxed through the individual code," The Hill (6/28, Jagoda) reports. Cohn said, "The personal side is relatively easy and the corporate side is relatively easy." But, "there's a big group in the middle, pass-through entities, which is really tough, but that group is really important." According to Cohn a decision has not been made on what the Administration will "do with pass-throughs in tax reform but [it] has received a lot of feedback on the topic."

Business Groups Urge Congress To Resolve Spending Disputes To Set Stage For Tax Reform.

Reuters (6/28, Gibson) reports that the US Chamber of Commerce, Business Roundtable, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the National Federation of Independent Businesses have written to Congress to urge lawmakers "to settle their differences on government spending so they can move forward on overhauling the U.S. tax code in the next year." The groups wrote, "In our view, given the historic opportunity before Congress, no other reforms under consideration rise to the importance of pro-growth, comprehensive tax reform." The Hill (6/28, Jagoda) quotes the letter as saying, "We understand that the Senate is actively considering health care legislation, but it is important that the House start the budget process now, so that reconciliation instructions will be available to move tax reform legislation expeditiously."

Republican Divisions Thwart Black Plan To Move Forward With Budget.

Politico (6/28, Bade, Ferris) reports that while House Budget Committee Chairwoman Diane Black "was set to stick it to her reluctant colleagues and forge ahead with her conservative fiscal blueprint — even without House GOP leadership's blessing," the decision, which was "made in a closed-door Republican budget panel huddle last Thursday, fell through after Black delivered that message to GOP leaders, who wanted more time to strike a deal with the broader and deeply divided Republican conference." Now, lawmakers are set to leave town for a recess "having once again missed their goal to finish writing a budget...by July 4." Black, Politico adds, finds herself "caught between a committee stocked with fiscal hawks eager to cut the deficit, whom she sympathizes with, and GOP chairmen loath to go along with her ambitious plan for curbing Pentagon spending and mandatory programs like food stamps.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The False Premise Behind G.O.P. Tax Cuts.” A New York Times (6/29) editorial says that “with the Senate effort to upend Obamacare suspended for the Fourth of July holiday, there’s a chance to step back and examine the assumptions behind Republicans’ longstanding objections to the social safety net — as well as the flaws in those assumptions.” The Times argues that “in the next decade, higher spending on low-income health programs is expected to be offset by lower spending on other low-income programs. So total federal spending on people struggling to get by is projected to hold steady. That is not lavish. And it is not an excuse for tax cuts that deprive tens of millions of people of health insurance.”

“Political Clarity After The Grenfell Tragedy.” The New York Times (6/29) editorializes that “there are disasters that enter history as much for the political mark they leave as for the death and destruction they wreak. ... And such may be the Grenfell Tower fire for Prime Minister Theresa May, and more broadly for the infatuation with austerity and deregulation of British governments for the past four decades.” The Times argues that “more important, perhaps, is that Grenfell Tower offers tragic evidence that the British state, in its relentless pursuit of less government, has gone too far in shedding its fundamental duties to protect public health and safety. That is where the political and moral investigation must start.”

Washington Post.

“Republicans, Step Away From The Brink.” The Washington Post (6/28) editorializes that “if both sides sat down in good faith, there would be a wide range of possible compromises” on healthcare legislation. Senators “could work off the Cassidy-Collins plan, which is not preoccupied with cutting taxes and allows states that want to keep the Obamacare system to do so, while letting others try a different course.” Also, “in any compromise scenario, Democrats would seek commitments that health-care markets would be properly subsidized and administered, and Republicans would seek some loosening of Obamacare regulations, particularly if doing so allowed younger people to buy bare-bones coverage. That is grounds for an obvious trade.”

“Texas’s New Law On Immigration Policy Is A Blow To Good Policing.” The Washington Post (6/28) editorializes, “At a stroke, Republicans in Texas enacted a law this spring that undercuts law enforcement chiefs in the state’s biggest cities and amounts to a frontal assault on the Hispanic population.” The law “threatens police chiefs, sheriffs and other officials with fines, removal from office and even imprisonment if they take steps to impede officers from questioning the immigration status of people they arrest or detain, including those stopped for minor traffic violations — even if they’re not charged with a crime” — and is “in some ways more draconian than Arizona’s notorious ‘show me your papers’ law.”

“Would More Evidence Have Changed The Catherine Fuller Case’s Outcome? We’ll Never Know.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/28) says the Supreme Court recently refused to grant a new trial for those convicted of the 1984 murder of Catherine Fuller, determining “that while the prosecution withheld information from the defense, it wouldn’t have made a difference in the outcome.” The Post says “we will never know” whether “evidence presenting an alternative theory of the crime with an alternative suspect would not have caused reasonable doubt in one or more jurors.” The Post says that this uncertainty “reinforces the need for reforms that give defense attorneys open access to all evidence collected during the investigation of a crime.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Republican Party?” The Wall Street Journal (6/28) says in an editorial that Republican moderates are behaving like liberals by backing away from the Senate healthcare bill’s efforts to reform Medicaid. Arguing that that Republicans always campaign on the idea of cutting federal spending, shrinking government, and making it more efficient, the Journal says this is their best opportunity in a generation to do so.

“The Trump Labor Board’s List.” The Wall Street Journal (6/28) says in an editorial that the NLRB made radical decisions during President Obama’s tenure, and with Emanuel and fellow Trump nominee Marvin Kaplan on the board, it will be able to start undoing them.

“Seattle Workers Pay For The Minimum Wage.” The Wall Street Journal (6/28) editorializes that a recent Seattle-commissioned study by the University of Washington on the city's implementation of a minimum-wage climb to $15 per hour proves the obvious law of economics that increasing labor costs will lead to fewer hours worked. The Journal calls Seattle Mayor Ed Murphy's promotion of a UC Berkeley study purporting to find no adverse affects of the wage hike an attempt to avoid reality, as he requested an advance copy when he heard the negative Washington study was set to come out.
