Lawmakers Take Aim At Trump's Interior Budget.

The Hill (6/8, Henry) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "defended the Trump administration's budget request for the department as 'what a balanced budget looks like' in the face of bipartisan criticism on Thursday." Members of a House Appropriations Committee subcommittee "raised a handful of complaints about the $10.6 billion budget request for the Interior Department." The article notes that "the budget proposal is $1.6 billion, or 13 percent, lower than current levels, and it slashes funding from programs members said Thursday they support."

The Hill (6/8, Cama, Henry) reports that Rep. Ken Calvert, the chairman of the subcommittee, "said he was upset about cuts to earthquake early notification systems." Appropriations Chairman Rodney Frelinghuysen "raised objections to National Park Service and Fish and Wildlife spending measures." Rep. Hal Rogers "said he was 'flabbergasted' by a Trump administration proposal to end funding for a workforce redevelopment pilot program for coal country." Meanwhile, "Democrats said they deeply oppose cuts to climate science and adaptation accounts, as well as several policy proposals in the budget, including potential drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge."

The Missoulian \(MT\) (6/8, Chaney) reports that Zinke assured lawmakers "he would work together to get priorities balanced."

Additional coverage was provided by the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (6/8, Steelhammer) and the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (6/8, Connelly).

Zinke Says Interior Department Will Continue Climate Research. The Washington Examiner (6/8, Siciliano) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke told lawmakers "that his agency is doing research on climate change, but it will be focused in one division of the sprawling department instead of four or five." Zinke "said all of Interior's climate research will be done at the U.S. Geological Survey." He explained that "the change was done partly for budget reasons, but also because too many agencies were getting involved, which was making the effort confused and unfocused."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (6/7, Henry).

Secretary Zinke Suggests More Money Won't Help Indian Education. The Nation Sun News (6/8) reports that "during an appearance on Capitol Hill on Thursday," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said the federal government spends far more money per capita on Indian students than it does elsewhere." But "the 'results are far worse,' he said, a reference to high drop out rates and low achievement levels." Zinke told members of the House Committee on Appropriations, "We have to have a candid discussion on how to provide better service for Indian education."

Interior Secretary To Visit Katahdin Monument Amid Review.

The AP (6/8) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will visit Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument on June 14. Zinke will "also be in the area the following day to meet with local officials, the Maine Woods Coalition, American Indian tribal representatives and business people." He is "also scheduled to make a 'major sportsmen and conservation announcement' in Hooksett, New Hampshire, June 13."

Additional coverage was provided by the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/8, Sambides), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/8, Russell), WMTW-TV Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (6/8), and WMEA-FM Portland \(ME\) Portland, ME (6/8, Mitchell).

Mohegans To Host NCAI Conference, Interior Secretary Next Week.

The New London \(CT\) Day (6/8) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will “attend next week’s National Congress of American Indians’ 2017 Mid-Year Conference & Marketplace at Mohegan Sun.” Zinke is “scheduled to speak Tuesday, as are Mohegan Chairman Kevin Brown, Gov. Dannel P. Malloy and U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy of Connecticut. Lynn Malerba, chief of the Mohegan Tribe, will give an invocation.” NCAI President Brian Cladoosby said in a statement, “We are looking forward to hosting Secretary Zinke during NCAI Mid-Year. This year’s theme, ‘Sovereign Infrastructure: Building our Communities through our Values,’ is an important conversation we will continue to build upon with the Department of the Interior and the administration in the years to come.”

As Law That First Saved Grand Canyon Turns 111, Trump Takes Aim At Its Legacy.

The Huffington Post (6/8, D’angelo) reports that Thursday marked “the 111th anniversary of the Antiquities Act, signed into law by President Theodore Roosevelt and used by him and 15 other presidents, both Republicans and Democrats, to designate more than 150 national monuments.” But “rather than celebrating that legacy, President Donald Trump has taken aim at the 1906 law, claiming that recent administrations have abused it to ‘lock up millions of acres of land and water.’” According to the article, “conservationists and lawmakers took to social media on Thursday to celebrate the Antiquities Act, with many using the hashtag #MonumentsForAll and expressing outrage over the Trump administration’s actions.”

An Open Letter To Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (6/8, Stritzke, Contributor), Jerry Stritzke, president and CEO of outdoor retailer REI, writes that Interior Secretary’s Ryan Zinke’s call for public input on America’s national monuments has unleashed “an unprecedented groundswell of love for our public lands.” Thanking Zinke for “giving citizens a chance to raise their collective voice,” Stritzke urges Zinke to “listen to the people who love the outdoors” and “to leave our public lands stronger, for generations to come.”

Zinke’s Monuments ‘Review’ Is Land Seizure In Disguise. For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (6/8, Rowland, Contributor), Jenny Rowland, the research and advocacy manager for the Public Lands Project at the Center for American Progress, acknowledges that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has expressed support for public lands in the past, but raises concerns that “his allegiance to keeping public lands in public hands has blurred.” Rowland warns that “his ongoing ‘review’ of national monuments, with a view to shrink or revoke them, could result in a sell-off of America’s lands to the highest bidder.” Rowland believes “the review appears to be little more than a cover for President Trump and Zinke to appease Utah’s anti-park politicians, whose end-goal has long been to sell off national public lands.” She concludes that “any changes made to the protection of the monuments should be seen for what they are: A sell-off of America’s parks and public lands.”

Trump Administration Can’t Alter California National Monuments, State Attorney General Says.

The Los Angeles Times (6/8, Boxall) reports that “California’s attorney general argued Thursday that President Trump has no legal authority to revoke or modify national monuments created by previous administrations.” In an 11-page letter to the Interior Department, state Atty. Gen. Xavier Becerra “vowed ‘to take any and all legal action necessary’ to preserve six California monuments, including one in Los Angeles’ backyard, that the Trump Administration may attempt to revoke or shrink.” Becerra added, “I expect that I will be joined by many of this country’s state attorneys general in using all of the legal tools at our disposal to ensure that the rule of the law is followed.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Huffington Post (6/9, Papenfuss) and the YubaNet \(CA\) (6/8).

Carbajal Tells Zinke To Respect Carrizo Plain. The Santa Barbara \(CA\) Independent (6/8, Welsh) reports that “joining with 86 other members of Congress, Salud Carbajal signed a letter demanding that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke respect the existing boundaries of the Carrizo Plain National Monument and back away from President Donald Trump’s executive order that would allow the boundaries to be redrawn.”

San Gabriel Mountains National Monument Faces A Huge Threat: Guest Commentary. In an op-ed for the San Gabriel Valley \(CA\) Tribune (6/8, Quintero), Andre Quintero, the mayor of El Monte, raises concerns that the review of national monuments will affect the San Gabriel Mountains National Monument. He urges residents to “speak up now to ensure the continued protection of these sacred places.”

The piece also appears in the Whittier \(CA\) Daily News (6/8, Quintero).

Interior To Review Sage Grouse Protections.

The Washington Times (6/8, Wolfgang) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “reignited a battle with western conservationists and environmental groups” by ordering a review of federal policies protecting the greater sage grouse. Zinke said in a statement, “destroying local communities and levying onerous regulations on the public lands that they rely on is no way to be a good neighbor.” The current limits on activities that can take place in sage grouse habitat, falling short of listing the bird on the endangered species list, was “praised at the time as a compromise.” Environmentalists cast the move as “groundwork for unchecked energy development across sage grouse habitat.”

Additional coverage was provided by NPR (6/8, Kennedy), TIME (6/8, Worland), the Idaho Statesman (6/8, Yardley), the High Country \(CO\) News (6/8, Wiles), the Wyoming Business Report (6/8), and KTVN-TV Reno \(NV\) Reno, NV (6/8, Jay).

Review Sans Lawsuit Fix ‘Doesn’t Solve The Problem’. E&E Publishing (6/8, Yachnin, Lunney) reports that House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop “applauded the Interior Department’s review of greater sage grouse conservation efforts but warned that potential new lawsuits could undermine any administrative changes to the plans.” Bishop “told E&E News ahead of Zinke’s announcement that the review was ‘appropriate’ and something that ‘should have been done a long time ago.’”

Environmental Groups Try To Block Montana Mine Expansion.

The AP (6/8, Volz) reports that “environmental advocacy groups launched a new attempt Thursday to halt the expansion of Montana’s largest coal mine over its effects on climate change, after federal officials said it wouldn’t contribute significantly to the nation’s greenhouse gas emissions.” WildEarth Guardians and the Montana Environmental Information Center claim in their lawsuit that the Interior Department’s “environmental review was shoddy, and argue the federal official who authorized the Spring Creek Mine expansion didn’t have the authority to do so.” Jeremy Nichols, WildEarth Guardians’ climate and energy program director, said, “From our perspective, they fell miserably short in accounting for the environmental implications of rubber-stamping more coal mining. It’s scandalous that the coal industry seems able to survive only because of the federal government cutting corners and turning its back on climate change.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (6/8, Volz), the Daily Mail (6/8), Fox Business (6/8, Volz), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/8, Volz), Philly \(PA\) (6/8, Volz), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/8, Volz), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/8, Matt Volz |, Ap), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/8, Volz).

Hoping For Greener Days At Interior.

Axios (6/8, Geman) reports that “when President Donald Trump tapped then-Montana congressman Ryan Zinke to lead the Interior Department, the National Wildlife Federation had supportive words for the move even as some other big groups – including the Sierra Club and Natural Resources Defense Council – bashed the choice.” Now, “around 100 days into Zinke’s tenure, NWF is still waiting for Zinke to become the conservation advocate they were hoping for, and they’re not happy with some early moves.” NWF President Collin O’Mara said, “100 days in, we are hoping there is going to be much more focus on conservation in the months ahead. We have a few areas that we are really proud that we have worked with him on, but I think we also have a lot of areas that we feel like industry’s needs have come well before conservation.”

Fossil Fuels Lead The Interior Department’s New Energy Webpage.

Motherboard (6/8, Emerson) reports that “shortly after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s confirmation on March 1, 2017, the agency’s energy webpage was changed to reflect Trump’s ‘America First Energy Plan.’” It states, “The Department of the Interior will increase access to public lands and balance conservation with the unleashing of America’s energy opportunities. And removing burdensome regulations at the Department, the United States will benefit from a stronger economy.”

Salena Zito Is On The Road Interviewing Paul Ryan.

The Washington Examiner (6/8) reports that Salena Zito will interview Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, “the man who rode a horse into work for his first day in President Trump’s Cabinet.”

According to the article, "as Zito puts it, whether you like him or not, 'that's pretty badass.'"

Additional Coverage: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Reviews Bears Ears National Monument.

Additional coverage that the deadline for Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's review of the Bears Ears National Monument is June 10 was provided by The Atlantic (6/8, Bullinger).

Additional Coverage: Trump Weighs Combining Agencies Separated After Gulf Spill, Sources Say.

Additional coverage that the Interior Department could combine the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management was provided by Bloomberg Politics (6/8, Dlouhy), the Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (6/8, Dlouhy), the New Orleans \(LA\) Times-Picayune (6/8), the Houma \(LA\) Courier (6/8, Dlouhy), the Thibodaux \(LA\) Daily Comet (6/8, Dlouhy), the Arkansas Democrat Gazette (6/9, Dlouhy), Workboat (6/8, Dlouhy), and Rigzone (6/8, Dlouhy).

It Will Take A Nation To Combat Trump's War On Wildlife.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/8, Corwin, Contributor), Jeff Corwin, who has hosted "numerous wildlife TV series," writes that "bringing back endangered species is one of our nation's greatest conservation success stories." However, under the Trump Administration, "our nation is employing disastrous policies that could take hundreds of uniquely American species back to the brink of extinction." Some of the concerns Corwin raises are the abandonment of the Paris Agreement, the proposed border wall, and the review of national monuments.

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Nets $1.2 Million From Sale Of Gas Leases.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/9, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management brought in over $1.2 million in revenue from a federal oil and gas lease sale on Thursday for 85 parcels in Colorado. Companies bid on 70 of the parcels, from the minimal allowable of $2 an acre to $102 an acre that Baseline Minerals paid for a parcel in Rio Blanco County. The sales revenue will be split between the federal government and the state.

Feds Sell Land Under Corpus Christi Water Supply For Fracking.

KRIS-TV Corpus Christi, TX (6/8) reports that the Center for Biological Diversity has released a response to the decision by the Bureau of Land Management "to move forward with the auction of 4,300 acres of federal land for fracking and drilling in Texas and Oklahoma – despite pending legal protests from the City of Corpus Christi and conservation groups concerned about public health threats." According to the group's statement, "the oil and gas leasing auction also comes over the objections of the City of Brenham, state representatives and U.S. Rep. Michael McCaul (R-Texas)." Wendy Park, a senior attorney with the Center for Biological Diversity, said, "It endangers public health and safety to frack dams, lakes and reservoirs. And it's reckless for the BLM to go forward with this sale knowing these dangers. When oil industry profits matter more than people and safe drinking water, our government is broken."

Iceberg Point Dig Could Locate Artifacts, But Harm Native Wildflowers.

The Journal of the San Juan Islands \(WA\) (6/8, Day) reports that "future projects, like trail maintenance, can't be completed" on protected land at Iceberg Point "without an inventory of buried artifacts, but dredging the land could destroy native wildflowers." Last fall, "a Central Washington University class was picked by Bureau of Land Management officials to dig up to 190 holes on Iceberg Point to locate remnants of local tribes." According to the article, "an environmental review of the proposed BLM plan is currently being finalized," and "if it's not accepted in about a month, a higher level review will be needed; if it is accepted, the project will start in July."

Mining Claims Increasing In Nevada.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (6/8, Harding) reports that "exploration in Nevada is seeing better days, according to the Nevada Division of Minerals and U.S. Bureau of Land Management numbers." Kyle Hendrix, the public affairs officer for the Battle Mountain office, "said the district had 44 notice-level exploration projects from September to April of the 2015-2016 fiscal year, but 84 notice-level projects from September 2016 to April 2017." However, "the BLM's Ely district isn't seeing as much of a change." Stephanie Trujillo, assistant field manager for lands and minerals in the Bristlecone Field Office, said, "There are currently 48 notice-level or plan of operations authorized in the district. This number has remained steady."

BLM Extends Public Comment Period For Dixie Meadows Geothermal Development Project.

The Northern Nevada Business Weekly (6/8) reports that "the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), Carson City District, has extended the public comment period for an Environmental Assessment (EA) for the Dixie Meadows Geothermal Development Project." According to the article, "public comments have been extended an additional three weeks and will be accepted through June 30, 2017."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

BOEM Launches GoM Marine Species Assessment.

Offshore Engineer (6/8) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is "funding and participating in a federal research partnership that has launched an intensive three-year program to improve assessment studies of protected marine species in the Gulf of Mexico." The initiative is "using aerial surveys, ship-based surveys and satellite tagging to collect the best information possible on the abundance and distribution of marine mammals, seabirds and sea turtles in the Gulf to inform federally mandated environmental assessments related to offshore energy and marine minerals development." According to the article, "the partnership, known as the Gulf of Mexico Marine Assessment Program for Protected Species (GoMMAPPS), was recently finalized through signed agreements between the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM); National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) Fisheries; US Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) Southeast Region; and the US Geological Survey's (USGS) Wetlands and Aquatic Research Center."

WWNO-FM New Orleans (6/8, Lux) reports that environmental scientist Rebecca Green, who is leading the survey and works for the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, said, "So what we're trying to do is figure out who is there, and when."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Reclamation Seeks Volunteer Boaters And Participants For The 17th Year Of Shasta Lake C.A.S.T. For Kids Event.

The East Valley Times \(CA\) (6/8) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation's Northern California Area Office, "in partnership with the C.A.S.T. (Catch a Special Thrill) for Kids Foundation, will host their 17th year of C.A.S.T. for Kids fishing event at Shasta Lake on Saturday, June 10, 2017." The event will be held at Packers Bay Marina at Shasta Lake. According to the article, "each child will receive a fishing pole, tackle box, T-shirt, and other prizes and spend the morning fishing with local volunteer anglers."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Public Input To Help Shape Management Plans For Montana Wildlife Refuges.

Montana Public Radio (6/8, Ouellet) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service was "in Polson and Kalispell this week, seeking public input on a pair of management plans for wildlife refuges in northwest Montana." According to the article, "about 15 people showed up to each meeting, hosted by Service staff, like Bernie Petersen, a regional refuge supervisor helping oversee the process." Petersen said, "We're just in the state of gathering information from the public, of what they want to see, what they think is important to protect, and how they think we should be managing those resources."

Editorial: Warbler Should Be Delisted As An Endangered Species.

In an editorial, the Tyler \(TX\) Morning Telegraph (6/8) says that "golden-cheeked warbler populations are fine, and continuing to list it as endangered is affecting everything from school funding to military preparedness." It notes that "researchers now say there's five times more habitat (about 6,480 square miles) and about 19 times more warblers than previously thought." The warbler's inclusion on the Endangered Species list is "also depressing land values and frustrating land owners."

Keep Protections In Place For Grizzly.

In an op-ed for the Missoulian \(MT\) (6/8, Baum), wildlife and wilderness advocate Bill Baum, opposes the removal of grizzly bears from the endangered species list. Baum harshly criticizes the members of the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee's Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem (NCDE) Subcommittee. Baum writes that during a meeting, he "read no compassion in their faces, only an egotistical arrogance of human superiority that was unconscionably dismissive of Indian culture and the plight of the grizzly bear, and wishing the pleading on behalf of the great bear would end soon."

National Park Service

Route 66 Corridor Preservation Program To Expire In 2 Years.

The AP (6/9, Barker, Levin) reports that the Route 66 Corridor Preservation Program is set to expire in 2019. Kaisa Barthuli, program manager with the National Park Service for the Route 66 Corridor Preservation Program, said, "Unless there's legislative action taken to extend it, we are expecting it to sunset on Oct. 1, 2019." According to Frank Butterfield, director of the nonprofit group Landmarks Illinois, "preservationists fear that small towns along the highway will miss out on much-needed investment if the funding program is not extended, or if the route does not get federal historic trail designation."

No More Weekend Free Parking On The National Mall.

WRC-TV Washington (6/8, Ward) reports that "free parking on the weekends is coming to an end on the National Mall." Now, drivers must "pay $2 an hour to park along the National Park Service roads on the National Mall, which includes popular parking spots like Ohio Drive." According to the article, "the idea is to encourage turnover of limited parking spaces and to encourage people to use public or alternative transportation."

Amtrak Showcasing National Park Service Destinations This Summer.

Travel Pulse (6/8, Wood) reports that rail company Amtrak has teamed with the Interior Department "to showcase the natural and cultural attractions that the National Park Service offers tourists." According to the article, "to ensure travelers optimize their summer vacations, Amtrak is extending its 75 percent discount to fourth-graders, with the purchase of one regular adult fare." The article notes that "the discounted rate is part of the Every Kid in a Park initiative and is available through Aug. 31 for travel through Sept. 3."

'Natchez History Minute' Gets National Park Service Regional Award.

The Natchez \(MS\) Democrat (6/9, Hamilton) reports that the National Park Service "recently recognized the Natchez National Historical Park for an outstanding achievement in multimedia." The "Natchez History Minute" project earned the NPS Southeast Region "Achieving Relevance" award, "winning out against approximately 60 other parks in the region." The project "commemorated the Natchez Tricentennial throughout 2016, as a one-minute video was posted every day of the year, providing a look at a historical event that occurred each day."

How To Succeed In Business While Really Trying.

Drawing from profiles of industry leaders it has written since May 2013, Bloomberg News (6/8) quotes various executives on how they achieved their success and reached their current positions. Included in the list is former National Park Service director Jonathan Jarvis' advice: "Take time to get outside. It's good for you. And though the odds are very low that you'll be eaten, carry your bear spray."

Office Of Insular Affairs

US Virgin Islands Receives Federal Grants.

Marianas Variety (6/9) reports that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula and “other officials met with U.S. Virgin Islands Gov. Kenneth Mapp to discuss issues facing the territory.” According to the article, “they discussed infrastructure challenges related to the hospitals and various initiatives Governor Mapp has implemented and is developing to bring greater fiscal stability to the Virgin Islands.” Mapp’s “trip coincided with the release of $704,000 in technical and maintenance assistance funding from the Office of Insular Affairs which will support the governor and his administration in several important ways.” Pula said, “The governor and I were able to have frank discussions on his priorities for the U.S. Virgin Islands. I am pleased OIA is able to provide some assistance to worthy projects that will directly impact and enhance the government’s ability to deliver services and opportunities.”

US Geological Survey

Valley District Renews USGS Agreement.

The Highland \(CA\) Community News (6/8, Hernandez) reports that the San Bernardino Valley Municipal Water District “approved a cooperative joint funding agreement with the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) for a variety of studies and investigations.” According to the article, “in renewing its cooperative agreement with the USGS the Valley district will receive the benefit of valuable scientific data from geological surveys and environmental studies used throughout the District’s planning including the Upper Santa Ana River Habitat Conservation Plan.”

Restore Quake Alert Funding To Federal Budget: Editorial.

In an editorial, the Los Angeles Daily News (6/8) says that “when the proposed federal budget from the Trump administration eliminated ongoing funding for ShakeAlert, a cost-efficient early-warning system that would provide up to a minute of crucial time for those of us who live here to prepare for a major earthquake, it did so at our peril.” It argues that “in a massive federal budget, we’re not talking about a lot of money here.” The paper urges Congress “to restore ShakeAlert funding as it crafts its budget.”

Top National News

Comey Accuses Trump Of “Lies,” Says He Felt Directed To Drop Flynn Probe.

Former FBI Director Comey’s testimony received saturation coverage last night and this morning, with the major network newscasts devoting more than 46 minutes of combined airtime to the story. The CBS Evening News, in fact, was entirely devoted to Comey’s appearance before the Senate Intelligence Committee – an event a Reuters (6/8, Simpson) story called the “Super Bowl of Washington.” Across mainstream media outlets, reporting describes the hearing in terms that are often ominous for the White House, raising the specter of troubling days ahead for the Trump presidency. Lester Holt, for example, said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (6/8, lead story, 4:55) that Comey left “questions of potential obstruction of justice...hanging in the air,” and the Los Angeles Times (6/8, Tanfani, Tanfani) calls the hearing “explosive,” and says it created “the certainty that what Trump has called the ‘cloud’ of criminal and congressional investigations will not lift anytime soon.” McClatchy (6/8, Gordon) refers to “extraordinary testimony,” the New York Times (6/8, Apuzzo, Huettner) to an “extraordinary” hearing which “squarely raised the question of whether Mr. Trump tried to obstruct justice,” and Politico (6/8, Purdum) to “a quietly devastating indictment of...Trump.”

Under the headline “Comey Gets His Revenge Against Trump In Day Of Riveting Testimony,” Susan Page similarly writes in USA Today (6/8) that Comey “painted a devastating portrait of a president whom he says lied in public and bulldozed in private through the governmental norms designed to protect the rule of law.” The Washington Post (6/8, Barrett, Nakashima, O’Keefe) says Comey “grimly recounted the events that he said showed the president sought to redirect the Russia probe away from his former national security adviser, Michael Flynn, and get the FBI to publicly distance the president himself from the probe.”

In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (6/8, lead story, 6:00, Muir) reported Comey outlined “his growing unease with” Trump, beginning with his first one-on-one meeting at Trump Tower in January. Comey then described what was to him “the most troubling interaction of all: a February 14th meeting in the Oval Office, with Comey, the President and his top advisers. At the end, the President tells Comey to stay, ordering everyone else out of the room." Comey was shown saying, "My impression was something big is about to happen. I need to remember every single word that is spoken. My sense was the Attorney General knew he shouldn't be leaving, which is why he was lingering. And I don't know Mr. Kushner well, but I think he picked up on the same thing. So I knew something was about to happen that I needed to pay very close attention to." ABC (Thomas) said Comey claimed that Trump then "asked him to back off the investigation into" Flynn. Comey said, "I took it as a direction." The Wall Street Journal (6/8, Wilber, Tau) runs a similar story under the headline "Comey Says He Felt Trump Directed Him To Drop Flynn Probe."

CNN's Situation Room (6/8) reported Comey also explained how Trump asked him "for what he took as a loyalty pledge." Comey was shown saying, "I could be wrong, but my common sense told me what's going on here is, he's looking to get something in exchange for granting my request to stay in the job." Politico (6/8, Purdum) notes Comey disclosed that "he had kept contemporaneous notes of their every conversation." In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (6/8, lead story, 4:45, Pelley) showed him saying, "I was honestly concerned that he might lie about the nature of our meeting, so I thought it really important to document." Moreover, the AP (6/8, Tucker, Werner) quotes him as saying, "It's my judgment that I was fired because of the Russia investigation."

Jan Crawford cautioned on the CBS Evening News (6/8, story 3, 2:05, Pelley) that Comey "was careful not to say whether he thought the President broke the law," and instead deferred to Special Counsel Robert Mueller. Reuters (6/8, Zengerle, Cornwell) quotes Comey as saying, "I don't think it's for me to say whether the conversation I had with the president was an effort to obstruct. I took it as a very disturbing thing, very concerning."

To the Washington Post (6/8, Zapotosky), however, Comey "essentially laid out an obstruction of justice case against...Trump and suggested senior leaders in the bureau might have actually contemplated the matter before Trump removed him as director." Dan Balz, also in the Washington Post (6/8), writes that "for months, the focus has been on what happened last year and outside of government," but "now, for the first time," Comey's "damning" testimony "has moved to inside the White House and specifically to questions about the president's personal conduct in office."

USA Today (6/8, Heath) reports "former prosecutors said Comey's testimony laid out sufficiently clear evidence to justify a deeper investigation of whether Trump had broken the law." Tom Nichols, "a Russia expert and a professor of national security affairs at the Naval War College," writes in USA Today (6/8) that Comey's testimony "cannot be considered anything but a political disaster for an administration already embroiled in a major scandal of its own making." Michael Gerson, in the Washington Post (6/8), writes that "Comey seemed to be setting up the factual basis for an obstruction case, like a tennis-serve toss for his friend...Mueller...to smash home." Politico (6/8, Samuelsohn) reports that Comey "gave...Mueller plenty to work with," and the New York Times (6/8, Savage) reports that "if one believes...Comey's account...it could present a prosecutable case of obstruction of justice."

The Washington Post (6/8, Miller) reports that "the reason for Trump's alleged efforts on Flynn's behalf remain unclear," and adds that "Flynn's attempt to secure immunity in exchange for congressional testimony have prompted speculation that he may have potentially incriminating information to share." Trump "might also feel guilty over how quickly he discarded the most high-ranking US national security official to endorse him and campaign for him during the 2016 race."

Politico Magazine (6/8) offers disparate assessments from legal professionals on what it all meant for Trump. Harvard's Laurence Tribe, for example, said "the case against Trump seems 'considerably stronger now,'" while former Watergate prosecutor Jill Win-Banks heard "echoes" of "what led to articles of impeachment against President Nixon." To Florida International University's Elizabeth Foley, however, "the most remarkable thing about Comey's testimony was its vapidness," as "other than thoroughly exploring the legally inconsequential issue of whether Trump asked Comey for his 'loyal honesty' or 'his honest loyalty,' the hearing yielded nothing." Ilya Somin of George Mason University said it was all "'dramatic theater' – but not much more."

Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (6/8) that "as perhaps should have been expected, the most important takeaway from Comey's testimony may be what he didn't say. Topics he scrupulously avoided may give a hint of where the investigation is headed." For example, "he declined...to answer a question in open session about Vnesheconombank (VEB), a Russian government-owned development bank linked to President Vladimir Putin. Trump's adviser and son-in-law, Jared Kushner, met last year with VEB executives."

Reuters (6/8, Zengerle, Cornwell) reports Comey also “said Trump’s administration had defamed him in comments made after his firing by saying that the FBI was in disarray.” CNN’s Situation Room (6/8) showed Comey saying, “The Administration then chose to defame me and, more importantly, the FBI by saying that the organization was in disarray, that it was poorly led, that the workforce had lost confidence in its leader. Those were lies, plain and simple.” The New York Times (6/8, Poniewozik) says “Comey’s camera manner is more suited for a human-resources video than a reality-show throwdown,” but he “demonstrated that he was not there to make friends – at least not with the president.”

The Washington Post (6/8, Fisher) says that Comey, “finally free to speak his mind about the president who sacked him, decided to play two roles at once: the prototypical G-man, always on the straight and narrow, dedicated only to truth and justice, and the aggrieved victim of an undisciplined, line-crossing president.”

On NBC Nightly News (6/8, story 2, 2:10, Holt), House Intelligence Committee ranking member Adam Schiff was shown saying, “What was among the most striking to me is the President basically telling everyone else to get out of the room. As a former prosecutor, that says to me he is conscious of what he’s about to do is improper.” Schiff also appeared on Fox News’ Special Report (6/8), saying he found Comey’s testimony “quite stunning. Not every day you have a former director of the FBI saying he couldn’t trust the President, that the President had demanded loyalty from him in a conversation that at least in part centered around whether the director would keep his job, and most significantly that he was asked to drop a criminal case involving a high profile surrogate of the President on the campaign trail.” Schiff added that “there’s evidence that was presented in the testimony that the President they have sought to interfere or obstruct the investigation.”

Rep. Joaquin Castro said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/8), “Yes, the evidence seems very damning, what we heard is very damning, but we have to make sure that we compile all of the pieces of evidence that we can.”

Former DNI Clapper said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/8), “The big difference in my mind between Watergate, which I lived through, and this is the backdrop of the Russian interference in our political process as opposed to a burglary, a break-in. To me that is hugely different. I thought Jim Comey’s testimony was riveting, compelling, and to me reinforced the comparison, at least in my mind, between Watergate and what we confront now.”

Sen. Dick Durbin said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (6/8), “You don’t need to be a legal scholar to realize that absolutely no one, including the President, should either try to stop a criminal investigation or influence the outcome.”

Sen. Joe Manchin said on CNN’s The Lead (6/8), when asked whether he thinks Trump obstructed justice, “I’m not there yet. ... The thing that I can tell you that’s comforting is that we have Bob Mueller, the special prosecutor. Everybody, Democrats and Republicans, has the utmost confidence and reliability in this man who’s beyond approach. ... I think we are all going to take whatever he comes back with, his recommendations, and that’s what we’ll run with.”

Rep. Joaquin Castro said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/8), “I do think we need to wait to let the special counsel do his work. He just started that but it’s hard to imagine if you’re James Comey and you’re in a one on one meeting at the White House with the President, which is very rare...and he says I hope this is what happens with this investigation, that you don’t take that as either directive or pressure of some sort.”

Sen. Angus King said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/8), “I think Mr. Comey’s response was what would be almost all of us, this is something the President wants done.” While leaving the question of obstruction of justice to the special counsel, King also said, “I think one of the most significant things that came across today was this moment – you played it – with Mark Warner, where the President was in the Oval Office with a group of people including Mr. Comey and the attorney general and Jared Kushner and others and the President said, everybody out, including the attorney general, closed the door, alone with Mr. Comey,” which “I think...makes it hard for the President to argue, well, I didn’t really intend it and it was a casual conversation.”

Rep. David Cicilline said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/8), “What we saw today was testimony from Director Comey that the President of the United States attempted to impede, influence, prevent an investigation from proceeding. And that should be concerning to everyone.”

Nick Ackerman from Dorsey and Whitney, assistant special prosecutor in the Watergate scandal, said on CNBC’s Closing Bell (6/8), “There’s no question Trump was involved in an obstruction of justice. The Comey testimony today makes that crystal clear.”

Robert Ray of Thompson and Knight, independent counsel for the Whitewater investigation, said on CNBC's Closing Bell (6/8), "Whatever the President's hopes and intimations were, he didn't issue a directive or an order to the FBI director to end any investigation. And furthermore, the fact anybody argues replacing the FBI director amounts to obstruction of justice doesn't give the President credit that his office is due, which is, how can you make a personnel decision into an obstruction of justice? That's a ridiculous notion. No prosecutor would ever bring such a case, ever."

Political analyst Carl Bernstein said on CNN's The Lead (6/8), "It was a bad day for the President of the United States, because what we see are these investigations and incredible testimonies closing in on his conduct and nearing a discussion of obstruction of justice and abuse of authority. ... And now there is a credible Senate investigation."

Democratic strategist Paul Begala said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/8), "I don't think the President can afford many more days this good." In Watergate, "the smoking gun, the chief of staff for the President said the way to handle it now is for us to have Vernon Walters call Pat Gray, the head of the FBI, and just say stay the hell out of this," and Nixon says "uh-huh. ... So if uh-huh was enough to drive Nixon out of office, what the hell did we just hear James Comey testify on?"

The CBS Evening News (6/8, story 8, 1:45, Pelley) reported that "Comey was everywhere today" as the public took to bars to watch the hearing. CBS (Blackstone) added that there were also 3.6 million tweets about Comey's testimony. NBC Nightly News (6/8, story 5, 1:50, Holt) reported, "From coast to coast today, the Comey hearing was must see TV for millions of Americans." NBC (Schwartz) added, "For the most part, those who turned up for parties in San Francisco, DC, Houston, Los Angeles rooting on the former FBI director. ... But in places like Gilbert, Arizona, liberals, conservatives, independents, making their way to work agreed on one thing. The debacle is getting way too complicated to follow." Politico Magazine (6/8) says the "blockbuster" hearing "lived up to its billing," The Hill (6/8, Williams) that it was "one of the most riveting and historic congressional hearings in decades," and Reuters (6/8, Zengerle, Cornwell) that it was "the most eagerly anticipated" one "in years." The New York Times (6/8) runs a feature of bar crowds under the headlined "Comey Testimony A Prism For Viewing American Politics."

In the Washington Post (6/8), David Ignatius describes the hearing as "the stuff of high drama – the temporizing ethicist meets the amoral bulldozer," and concludes that "the story didn't have a happy ending for Comey – or, it seems, for the country."

USA Today (6/8) editorializes that "two supreme ironies stand out: One is that Trump wasn't a target of the Russia investigation, but because of his own actions in the Oval Office, the president is surely now in Mueller's crosshairs." The second one is "that Comey, who helped... Trump become president with an October-surprise announcement that the Clinton email inquiry had been re-opened (only to find nothing), could turn out to be the man most responsible for hastening Trump's departure from office."

The New York Times (6/8) editorializes that "there is an aspect to public servants like Mr. Comey that Mr. Trump and his administration seem unable to comprehend, to their peril – a dedication to their roles that places service above any president's glory." The Times notes that Comey said the FBI's mission "is to protect the American people and uphold the Constitution of the United States." Concludes the Times, "Let's hope that the principles he articulated, and those who hold them, guide this investigation in the days ahead."

In an editorial, the Los Angeles Times (6/8) calls Comey's testimony "sensational, riveting and sickening," and adds that "Trump's behavior toward Comey may or may not meet the legal definition of obstruction of justice, but any American can see that it was grossly inappropriate. It's yet another misstep by an undisciplined, arrogant president who appears to have no compunction about breaking the rules when it comes to advancing his own interests." The Detroit Free Press (6/8) editorializes that "if there is any cause for optimism, it is that the institutions and legal mechanisms established to assure the rule of law have so far withstood the extraordinary strains the White House has placed on them."

Comey: "Lordy, I Hope There Are Tapes." USA Today (6/8, Kelly, Johnson) reports that Comey "said that he hoped the president was serious when he tweeted that there might be tapes" his conversations with Trump. Said Comey, "Lordy, I hope there are tapes. ... The president surely knows whether he taped me, and if he did, my feelings aren't hurt. Release all the tapes. I'm good with it." The New York Times (6/8, Apuzzo, Huetteman) says "the White House has not commented on whether recordings exist," but Comey "repeatedly baited Mr. Trump to produce them if they did."

On ABC World News Tonight (6/8, story 2, 3:30, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported White House Deputy Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders yesterday said she has “no idea” if such tapes exist.

Rep. Joaquin Castro said on CNN's Situation Room (6/8) that he thinks Congress “should send over a subpoena to the White House for those tapes and they should be produced if they exist.”

The Washington Times (6/8, Dinan, West), meanwhile, reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer “demanded...that...Trump ‘play the tapes’ of any conversations he had with...Comey, saying that unless the White House produces recordings, it cannot contradict Mr. Comey’s ‘eye-opening’ testimony.” Said Schumer, “Play the tapes for all of America to hear or admit that there were no tapes.”

Comey Admits He Leaked Memos To Trigger Special Counsel. McClatchy (6/8, Gordon) reports that “from their first meeting, Comey said, he felt uncomfortable with the president’s demands that he demonstrate loyalty, so he started taking detailed notes because he suspected Trump ‘might lie’ about their conversations.” Then, “after being fired...he felt the need to leak some of those notes to the media, through a friend, so that the Justice Department would be compelled to appoint a special counsel to probe the Trump campaign’s ties with Russia, which is what ultimately happened.”

The Washington Times (6/8, Boylan, Noble) also reports that Comey’s “gripping testimony...revealed that he orchestrated the leak of details of his memos of those presidential conversations because he hoped it would spur the Justice Department to announce an independent prosecutor to probe the Trump operation.”

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (6/8), “The fired, disgruntled ex-employee leaked details of his memo hoping that it would bring about a special counsel? This is beyond ridiculous and inappropriate and by the way, it shows you how calculated and political this guy really is.”

On CNN's Situation Room (6/8), former Special Prosecutor Michael Zeldin said of Comey leaking the memos, “I’ve never seen that from anyone in the government or who has been fired from the government. It is an extraordinary measure which I think reflects Jim Comey’s lack of trust of the President and the Justice Department apparatus to do the right thing.”

Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (6/8), “What do you do if you’ve just been fired as director of the FBI, the administration has chosen to ‘defame’ you with ‘lies plain and simple,’ and you believe the president of the United States may be trying to obstruct justice? You leak bombshell information to the media in hopes of forcing the appointment of a special counsel. It might work.” Adds Robinson, “Actually, it did work.”

However, the New York Times (6/8, Thrush, Haberman) reports “Trump and many of his aides believe that Mr. Comey’s unexpected admission that he leaked details of private Oval Office discussions to the news media, along with questions he raised about the conduct of Loretta Lynch...has given them fresh ammunition for a political counterattack that Mr. Trump badly wants to wage.”

Schiff said on Fox News' Special Report (6/8), “I think if the Director was as concerned as he evidently was that either this evidence might not be preserved or that the true story ought to get out, I think the Director should have come to the public directly himself or come to Congress and made those statements and clarify the record and not gone through a third party. That’s what I think the Director should have done.”

Sen. Angus King said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/8), “He wasn’t in the FBI when this occurred. Number two, it’s a legitimate question, although when you use the word ‘leak,’ it implies something is classified. ... You stated it, government property perhaps, but these were his personal recollections in the FBI files. The important thing to me is we’re going to get a hold of those memos.”

The New York Post (6/8, Brown, Sheehan) reports “a Columbia University professor from Brooklyn went into hiding Thursday after pal James Comey revealed during his Senate testimony that the man leaked memos detailing the former FBI chief’s conversations with...Trump.” Daniel Richman “confirmed by e-mail to several reporters that he was the ‘good friend’ and law-school prof who Comey slipped the documents – then hightailed it out of his tony Brooklyn Heights home and refused to answer any more questions.”

Panetta: White House Staff Should Have Known Better. Former CIA Director Leon Panetta said on the CBS Evening News (6/8, story 6, 2:25, Pelley) that Trump’s move to have everyone leave the room before he spoke privately with Comey “was a serious breach in the relationship between the President and the director of the FBI. It was at that point that somebody in the room should have made clear that the President ought not to be alone with the director of the FBI and, obviously, no one did, and I think that was a serious lapse in terms of good discipline at the White House." Panetta added that Comey's testimony "raised at least a pattern in the meetings and discussions [Trump had] with the director that raises the issue of whether or not he was trying to influence or obstruct that investigation."

Comey Hinted There's More To Sessions' Recusal From Russia Probe. CNN's Situation Room (6/8) reported that Comey also "hinted information not yet known about Attorney General Jeff Sessions" when the former director stated that Sessions "was close to and inevitably going to recuse himself for a variety of reasons – we also were aware of facts that I cannot discuss in an open setting – that would make his continued engagement in the Russia investigation problematic." Former CIA officer Phil Mudd said on CNN's Situation Room (6/8) that Comey's comment on sessions is "a message that says, 'you have to investigate this because the reasons he had to recuse himself are not incidental; they're secret reasons and ugly.'"

The Washington Post (6/8, Horwitz) reports Sessions "has acknowledged meeting twice with Sergey Kislyak, the Russian ambassador to the United States, during the 2016 presidential campaign – once on the sidelines of the Republican National Convention in July and a second time in his Senate office." However, "lawmakers have asked the FBI to investigate whether Sessions had a third, undisclosed encounter in April with Kislyak at a hotel in Washington where Trump gave a major foreign policy address. The Justice Department denies the hotel meeting occurred."

The AP (6/8, Gurman) reports "the Justice Department responded late Thursday, saying that after consultations with department ethics officials Sessions recused himself because of his involvement in Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, 'for that reason, and that reason alone.'" The Washington Post (6/8, Demirjian, O'Keefe) notes "Sessions is scheduled to appear Tuesday before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee to discuss the Justice Department's budget."

Comey Says NYTimes Story "Almost Entirely Wrong"; Times Stands By It. The Washington Times (6/8, Scarborough) reports that "a major New York Times story that helped spawn the unproven Trump-Russia collusion narrative for months in Washington was debunked on Thursday by...Comey." Asked by Sen. Tom Cotton whether "the story was 'almost entirely wrong,' he answered, 'Yes.'" Comey added that when the story came out, he "knew it was not true," and "alerted both Republican and Democrat senators not to believe the Times." It was "a rare public moment in Washington. A former FBI director was totally discrediting a major investigative story by the nation's most influential newspaper." In fact, notes The Hill (6/8, Easley), Comey also said yesterday, "There have been many, many stories based on – well, lots of stuff, but about Russia that are dead wrong."

The New York Times (6/8, Schmidt, Mazzetti, Apuzzo) reports that Comey "disputed" its article, which "was the first to reveal direct contacts between Trump advisers and Russian officials – contacts that are now at the heart of FBI and congressional investigations." The Times goes on to defend its reporting, claiming that "multiple news outlets have since published accounts that support the main elements of The Times's article," and that its "original sources could not immediately be reached after Mr. Comey's remarks, but in the months since the article was published, they have indicated that they believed the account was solid."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/8), "We learned that many of the other leaks and big scoops for major news outlets are lies." He added that "nameless leakers, the group that has been responsible more than anyone else for fueling the past seven months of media hysteria, often lied. ... Maybe reporters ought to take that into account before acting as their stenographers, as they usually do."

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (6/8), in reference to other news outlets, "We were the only ones in the media that cared about looking into this deeply and telling you, the American people, the truth and not going with lies and innuendos and propaganda and misinformation, because they were advancing a political agenda."

Schiff said on Fox News' Special Report (6/8), "Certainly some of the stories are wrong. As you know, some of the stories on Fox about the British being participants and surveillance of President Trump were wrong. That doesn't excuse the President's conduct here. We do need to get to the bottom of what allegations aired in public in these stories are true and what's not true. Certainly there's been press reporting that's been erroneous at times, press reporting that's been all too accurate. I will say any reporting that reveals sources and methods, anyone that is disclosing sources and methods, it's a real problem."

Media Analyses: No New Revelations On Russian Meddling In Election. Reuters (6/8, Zengerle, Cornwell) reports Comey "did not make major new revelations about any links between Trump or his associates and Russia, an issue that has dogged the president's first months in office and distracted from his policy goals such as overhauling the US healthcare system and making tax cuts.”

The Los Angeles Times (6/8, Tanfani, Tanfani) similarly says “Comey’s charges provided riveting political drama but no new bombshells about Russian meddling in the 2016 election or improper contacts by the Trump campaign or the White House with Russian authorities. ”

The Washington Post (6/8, Barrett, Nakashima, O’Keefe) recounts, however, that “onside the hearing room, people audibly groaned or gasped when Comey said he had ‘no doubt’ that Russian government officials were behind the hacking of the Democratic National Committee last year.”

Matthews: Accusation About Trump-Russia Collusion “Came Apart.” The Washington Examiner (6/8, Scarry) reports that “liberal MSNBC host Chris Matthews said Thursday the accusation that...Trump directly colluded with Russia to interfere in the US election ‘came apart’ following...Comey’s testimony.” Matthews said on MSNBC’s Andrea Mitchell Reports (6/8), “The assumption of the critics of the President, of his pursuers, you might say, is that somewhere along the line in the last year is the president had something to do with colluding with the Russians...to affect the election in some way,” but “what came apart this morning was that theory,” as it turns out “Flynn wasn’t central to the Russian investigation,” and “secondly, he said that kills the idea that Flynn might have been in a position to testify against Trump.” Asked Matthews, “And if that’s not the case, where’s the there there?”

Tucker Carlson similarly said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/8), “We’ve learned that the Russian collusion story, the one we’ve been force fed by Democrats in the Congress and their handmaidens in the media for months now, is starting to look weaker than ever.” He added that Comey “confirmed that Trump was never under investigation, and offers no evidence saying that he should be under investigation. We have also been told that if Trump did not collude with Russia himself, he maneuvered to protect those around him who did collaborate or collude with Russia. But Comey declared just the opposite today.”

Comey Says British Dossier Led To FBI Probe. The Washington Free Beacon (6/8, Gertz) reports that “a private intelligence dossier containing false and salacious claims about...Trump took center stage,” after Comey “revealed the document drove the FBI’s counterspy probe into alleged Russian collusion with the Trump presidential campaign.” The Free Beacon adds that “many of the claims in the...dossier have been exposed as false, including charges that Trump was compromised by prostitutes working for the FSB intelligence service at a Moscow hotel.” Comey said yesterday, “If the FBI receives a credible allegation that there is some effort to coopt, coerce, direct, employ covertly an American on behalf of the foreign power, that’s the basis on which a counterintelligence investigation is opened.”

Bharara Seated Near Comey. The Washington Times (6/8, Boylan, Noble) reports that while Comey “sat at the committee hearing desk alone and had no obvious legal counsel directly at his side, Preet Bharara, former United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York was seated nearby.”

NYTimes, LATimes Analyses: Comey’s Reaction To Trump Reminiscent Of Sexual Harassment Victims. The New York Times (6/8, Steel) reports that “for some people who watched...Comey’s Senate testimony on Thursday, the questions that Mr. Comey...faced and the situations he described brought to mind a seemingly unrelated topic: sexual harassment.” That is so, according to the Times, because senators pressed him “why he did not immediately report any behavior by...Trump that he thought was inappropriate, why he did not quit as FBI director and why he continued to take private calls from” him. Emily Nussbaum, The New Yorker’s “television critic, said that the situation reminded her of the sexual harassment scandal at Fox News that led to the ouster of Roger Ailes...and Bill O’Reilly, the former Fox News host.”

TV critic Lorraine Ali, in the Los Angeles Times (6/8) writes that the Comey saga is “not the Bill Cosby trial or a new, sordid allegation against...Ailes,” but there “were similarities between one of the most powerful men in America and the relatively unknown women testifying this week against Cosby.”

The NYTimes and LATimes may have been reacting to attitudes such as the one espoused by the Wall Street Journal (6/8) editorial page, which sounds a skeptical note on Comey’s testimony – as well as on his motives – and wonders why, if his allegations are true, he did not resign his position.

Comey Says Exchange With Lynch On Clinton Probe Gave Him “Queasy Feeling.”

USA Today (6/8, Johnson) reports that “during the course of the FBI’s investigation into Hillary Clinton’s use of a private email server, former FBI director James Comey said he had a troubling exchange with then-attorney general Loretta Lynch.” According to Comey, she told him, “Don’t call it that (an investigation). Call it a matter. Just call it a matter.” Comey “said the direction gave the ‘impression’ that the government was aligning its work with the Clinton campaign,” and that gave him ‘a queasy feeling.’”

To the CBS Evening News (6/8, story 7, 1:05, Pelley), Comey testified that Lynch “let politics influence the FBI’s description of its investigation of...Clinton’s classified emails.” Lynch responded Thursday, saying she chose the word “matter” because “she didn’t want to confirm or deny an ongoing investigation.”

The Washington Post (6/8, Gearan) reports “a former US official close to Lynch challenged Comey’s description of events,” saying, “The AG told Director Comey that she had used the term ‘matter’ in response to press inquiries, in order to ensure that she neither confirmed nor denied the investigation, in accordance with longstanding Justice Department and FBI policy. She suggested that she and the director should be consistent in their language, and at the end of the meeting, she asked if everyone was comfortable with using the term ‘matter.’ No one, including the Director, contested that view.” The New York Times (6/8, Baker) similarly cites “a person close” to Lynch who “said Mr. Comey requested the September 2015 meeting to ask for guidance on his coming congressional testimony. Ms. Lynch said he should follow normal department policy of not discussing open investigations.”

Politico (6/8, Nelson) notes “Comey said Clinton’s presidential campaign had been referring to the investigation into her use of a private email while at the State Department using ‘all kinds of euphemisms: security review, matters, things like that for what was going on.’” The New York Post (6/8, Fredericks) quotes Comey as saying that Lynch’s direction “tracked how the campaign was talking about the FBI’s work.” Comey added that “former President Bill Clinton’s surprise meeting with Lynch at an Arizona airport also prompted him to go public with results of the FBI probe into the email server.” Said Comey, “That was the thing that capped it for me, that I had to do something separately to protect the credibility of the investigation, which meant both the FBI and the Justice Department.”

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/8), “We learned that while investigating Hillary Clinton’s private email server, Loretta Lynch asked Comey to soft-pedal what was happening. She instructed him to call the whole thing a matter rather than what it was, and investigation. That is political pressure if there was such a thing, but Comey went along with it anyway.” He added, “Why did Comey agree to make [an] untrue statement that echoed the Clinton campaign’s talking points – and he’s admitted he did that – and then refuse to publicly say something completely true about President Trump, namely that he was not under investigation? Why did Comey make, and then leak, detailed memos about his meetings with President Trump, but do nothing in response to the political pressure that he received from the previous attorney general, Loretta Lynch?”

Sean Hannity said on Fox News’ Hannity (6/8) that Comey “created a two-tiered justice system, one for Hillary and Bill Clinton and one for the rest of America, by ignoring the many, many crimes we know she committed.” He added, “Comey literally explained that Hillary Clinton broke several laws, committed several felonies, but then what – we saw him do what he’s done now multiple times. He started to play politics instead of doing his job.”

Donald Trump, Jr. said on Fox News’ Hannity (6/8), “The double standard between the way he handled that with Loretta Lynch and the way he handled my father, that shows you how politicized this has all been. His credibility in DC has to be shot because that shouldn’t be happening.” Of news media reporting on alleged collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign, he added, “Even when they know it’s wrong, as long as it fulfills their narrative, they will leave it up there. They will leave it up for a couple hours. ... It’s not about reporting the truth anymore. It’s not about journalism.”

Schiff said on Fox News’ Special Report (6/8), “I think Director Comey didn’t shed additional light on how the Justice Department was viewing or handling or talking about the Clinton investigation.”

Kasowitz: Trump “Completely Vindicated,” Comey Leaked “Privileged Communications.”

With the media’s attention focused on former FBI Director Comey’s testimony, the President’s camp yesterday sounded a confident note.” A source close to the president crowed” to the New York Post (6/8, Morrongiello, Fears), in fact, “that the hearing ‘couldn’t have gone better,’ claiming that ‘everyone saw through’ Comey.” The “source” added, “No bombshells, nothing the White House wasn’t expecting.” John Roberts similarly reported on Fox News’ Special Report (6/8) that the “White House and the Republican Party are trying to put the best spin possible on today’s hearing, insisting that Comey’s testimony proves the President did nothing wrong and that it is 'time for this witch hunt to end.'"

In addition, the Washington Times (6/8, Boyer) reports "Trump's personal lawyer said Thursday that Mr. Comey 'makes clear that the president never sought to impede' the FBI's investigation of Russia's alleged interference in the 2016 presidential election." Lawyer Marc Kasowitz "also said Mr. Comey made 'unauthorized disclosures' of 'privileged communications' that he had with the president."

NBC Nightly News (6/8, story 3, 2:20, Holt) noted the "combative statement" by Kasowitz, while USA Today (6/8, Jackson) says "Trump's lawyer was referring to the memos Comey kept on conversations he had with the president." According to Comey's testimony, "he moved to make aspects of his contemporaneous memos public by enlisting a friend to share contents of his own notes with a reporter, after the president suggested in a tweet there might be secret recordings of his conversations with Comey." Comey "said he hoped news reports would prompt the appointment of a special counsel." Reuters (6/8) quotes Kasowitz as saying of the memos, "We will leave it the appropriate authorities to determine whether these leaks should be investigated along with all the others that are being investigated."

ABC World News Tonight (6/8, story 2, 3:30, Muir) reported that Trump's team "declared victory" after the hearing, and ABC showed Kasowitz saying, "Mr. Comey has now finally confirmed publicly what he repeatedly told President Trump privately. That is, that the President was not under investigation as part of any probe into Russian interference." ABC (Karl) added that "Kasowitz hotly disputed almost everything else Comey had to say, effectively accusing him of lying about his conversations with the President."

However, John Dickerson said on the CBS Evening News (6/8, story 4, 2:00, Pelley) that while Comey did tell Trump he was not under investigation "back then," Comey on Thursday "suggested the President was under investigation in his testimony," and "yesterday the acting FBI director also said he couldn't answer certain questions because the President was either under investigation now or will be. So the President who was putting pressure on Comey to say he wasn't under investigation may have given evidence to the investigators who are now looking into him."

Bloomberg Politics (6/8, Epstein) notes Kasowitz also "disputed Comey's claim that Trump demanded loyalty from the FBI chief or directed him to back off a probe of former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn." He went on to say "the former FBI chief's testimony proved Trump was innocent of wrongdoing." Kasowitz told reporters, "These important facts for the country to know are virtually the only facts that have not leaked during the long course of these events. ... The president feels completely vindicated."

Roll Call (6/8, Garcia) quotes the President's attorney as saying, "Of course, the Office of the President is entitled to expect loyalty from those who are serving the administration. ... It is overwhelmingly clear that there have been and continue to be those in government who continue to undermine this administration with selective and illegal leaks." Townhall (6/8, Pavlich) noted Kasowitz also said, "Contrary to numerous false press accounts leading up to today's hearing, Mr. Comey has now finally confirmed publicly what he repeatedly told the President privately: The President was not under investigation as part of any probe into Russian interference. He also admitted that there is no evidence that a single vote changed as a result of any Russian interference."

The Hill (6/8, Fabian) reported that "the blunt remarks and denials of the former FBI director's allegations are in keeping with Trump's reputation for counter-punching, and indicates the legal team led by Kasowitz intends to take a hard-nosed approach in pushing back against Comey." However, "critics accused Kasowitz of making a statement that was riddled with errors and dubious claims. For example, Comey was a private citizen when he leaked the memos, which he said were unclassified." Politico (6/8, McCaskill) also reports that "it's unclear" whether the leak "would be a violation."

White House Spokeswoman: "The President Is Not A Liar." Politico (6/8, Palmeri) reports White House Deputy Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "said 'the president is not a liar' after former FBI director James Comey blasted the White House for telling 'lies, plain and simple' about the circumstances surrounding his firing last month." She added, "It's frankly insulting that that question would be asked." Sarah Murray said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/8), "Certainly not a good day when you have to make that statement as a White House spokesperson."

NYTimes Feature: New Yorkers Disagree With Christie On Loyalty Comment. The New York Times (6/8, Leland) reports that "Chris Christie, a native son of Newark and the governor of New Jersey, suggested on Wednesday that...Trump's remarks to...Comey, including demands of loyalty, were 'normal New York City conversation.'" But "on Thursday, New Yorkers of various stripes begged to differ." The Times goes on to interview a number of random New Yorkers who strongly disagree with Christie.

NSA Leaker Of Russian Documents May Have Been Planning To Burn Down White House. ABC World News Tonight (6/8, story 8, 0:20, Muir) reported that prosecutors said Thursday in federal court that Reality Winner, the NSA contractor accused of leaking classified documents "about the Russians looking to hack election software here in the US," had notes in her home "indicating she wanted to burn down the White House." Fox News' Special Report (6/8) reported Winner at the hearing plead not guilty to the government's accusation that she revealed government documents to an online news source.

The New York Times (6/8, Blinder) reports, meanwhile, that Winner "might have stolen or exposed other secrets before her arrest last week. ... It was not clear, either in Courtroom No. 1 or even to federal investigators, whether Ms. Winner had distributed classified information beyond a single NSA report related to Russian hacking activities."

White House Holds "Infrastructure Summit."

USA Today (6/8, Korte) reports that despite former FBI director James Comey testifying on Capitol Hill, "the White House largely tried to stick to script" of Infrastructure Week, with Vice President Pence welcoming governors, mayors, county officials, and tribal leaders to what the White House called an Infrastructure Summit. He said, "The truth is that our roads, bridges, and airports are crumbling in too many cases. And America, as a result, has been falling behind."

Rural Congressmen Raise Concerns With Infrastructure Plan. The Wall Street Journal (6/8, Mann) reports congressmen representing rural districts are wary of President Trump's plan to tap the private sector for most of the funds for infrastructure improvements, because the steady revenue from such projects that investors seek tend to be near urban areas. Republicans such as Sen. Jerry Moran of Kansas have suggested that privatizing the air-traffic control system could hurt small rural airports, and Sen. John Barrasso, chairman of the Senate's environment and public-works committee, has called for an infrastructure package to not require tolls his state's highways.

Bloomberg View Supports Trump Air-Traffic Control Plan. In an editorial, Bloomberg View (6/8) writes that President Trump's proposal to turn the air-traffic control system over to a nonprofit corporation is "a pretty good idea," citing the success of similar approaches in Canada and much of Europe. The move would shield the system "from Washington's budgetary madness, procurement requirements and onerous hiring rules" and provide a chance to "rationalize an often irrational system." It also could allow more rapid adoption of new technology. While Bloomberg acknowledges "plenty of reasons for skepticism," it concludes, "the plan still represents progress."

House Approves Bill Undoing Much Of Dodd-Frank.

The AP (6/8, Freking, Gordon) reports the House approved a bill "to undo much of former President Barack Obama's landmark" Dodd-Frank Act, which was enacted after the 2008 economic crisis "to prevent another meltdown." Under the bill banks could again trade for their own profit using federally-insured deposits and form "certain relationships with private equity funds," investment advisers who collect commissions would not need to put their clients' interests before their own, and would "sharply curtail" the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's "power to pursue companies that it determines have participated in unfair or deceptive practices in their financial products and services." While Republicans argue the current rules hurt community banks' lending, Democrats say the changes "would encourage the kind of risky lending practices that invite future economic shocks."

The New York Times (6/8, Rappoport) reports that bill's passage "keeps alive the Republican Party's dream of unwinding one of President Barack Obama's signature accomplishments." The Washington Post (6/8, Merle) calls the bill "the opening salvo in what is likely to be a protracted battle over deregulation of the powerful banking industry" and "a critical part of the Trump administration's multifront effort to ease banking industry regulations and could set the terms of a potentially explosive debate." Under the bill, banks can "avoid many of the regulatory burdens imposed during the Obama administration" if they "significantly increase their emergency financial cushion."

Bloomberg Politics (6/8, Dexheimer) reports the legislation "has little chance of winning approval in the Senate in its current form." In that chamber, "small tweaks to Dodd-Frank, such as providing relief for community banks, is more likely to win Democratic support." Also covering this story are the Wall Street Journal (6/8, Ackerman, Tracy, Witkowski), The Hill (6/8, Lane), the Washington Times (6/8, Sherfinski), Politico (6/8, Warmbrodt), the New York Post (6/8, Dugan), and Reuters (6/8, Lambert).

WSJournal Lauds Bill. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/8) applauds the bill, arguing that Dodd-Frank's empowering regulators will not stop the next inevitable mania and panic while having hampered the economy and helped big banks. The Journal, in particular, welcomes removing the CFPB's independence from the President and Congress, although the Journal would prefer it be eliminated or made part of the Treasury Department.

Lawmakers Push Bill To Address "Super Pollutants."

The Hill (6/8, Henry) reports that a bipartisan group of lawmakers introduced a bill that would create a task force to "optimize existing efforts at various levels of government to reduce super pollutant emissions." Described as "low-hanging fruit," Reps. Scott Peters (D-Calif.) said that "existing technologies have been proven effective at reducing these potent gases."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Comey And All The President's Lies." The New York Times (6/8) editorializes that "there is an aspect to public servants like Mr. Comey that Mr. Trump and his administration seem unable to comprehend, to their peril – a dedication to their roles that places service above any president's glory." The Times notes that Comey said the FBI's mission "is to protect the American people and uphold the Constitution of the United States." Concludes the Times, "Let's hope that the principles he articulated, and those who hold them, guide this investigation in the days ahead."

"Public Works, Private Benefit." A New York Times (6/9, Board) editorial says President Trump's infrastructure plan "is turning out to be a mirage." While Trump "had talked about a $1 trillion, 10-year effort," the White House is now proposing allocating "only $200 billion, which would come from cutting aid to states and localities and giving it to Wall Street investors as tax credits." The Times argues, "It's bad enough that Mr. Trump is not tackling the nation's critical infrastructure needs. It's worse that he seems determined to use the limited funds he has scrounged to enrich private investors at taxpayers' expense."

"Kansas Rises Up Against The Trickle-Down Con Job." The New York Times (6/9, Board) editorializes that the "Republican Legislature and much of Kansas has finally turned on Gov. Sam Brownback in his disastrous five-year experiment to prove the Republicans' 'trickle down' fantasy can work in real life — that huge tax cuts magically result in economic growth and more, not less, revenue." The Times argues that President Trump's federal tax proposals "are rooted in the same supply-side nonsense."

Washington Post.

"Mr. Comey's Vivid Testimony." The Washington Post (6/8) editorializes that "disappointingly, Republican senators at the hearing for the most part tried to play the part of Trump defense lawyers, challenging or playing down Mr. Comey's testimony. ... Overall," their "effort to minimize the president's transgressions served only to make those senators look small."

"The End Of The Beginning?" The Washington Post (6/8) editorializes that as the end draws near for the DC Metro's "SafeTrack" maintenance initiative, the Metro's "indefinite forecast of revenue shortfalls" leaves open the possibility of a budgetary crisis. As a result, the editorial says, "SafeTrack has not returned Metro to a state of good repair; it has, at best, diminished the odds of catastrophic and life-threatening track mishaps in the near to medium term," but further maintenance will be required that will compound the Metro's budgetary problems.

Washington Post. Welcomes State Department's Criticism Of Turkey. A Washington Post (6/8) editorial says that while there has been some concern about the Trump Administration's stance on human rights, "there was a glimmer of hope" that the State Department, "at least, has not thrown in the towel." The State Department this week "issued a statement in defense of Taner Kilic, the chairman of Amnesty International Turkey, who was detained in recent days on suspicion of links with the movement of Fethullah Gulen." The Post says "no one should harbor any illusions that Mr. Trump has changed his views overnight, but it is promising that Mr. Tillerson's department has seen fit to issue the statement."

Wall Street Journal.

“James Comey’s Passion Play.” The Wall Street Journal (6/8) editorial page sounds a skeptical note on Comey’s testimony – as well as on his motives – and wonders why, if his allegations are true, he did not resign his position.

“A Choice For Wall Street.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/8) applauds the bill, arguing that Dodd-Frank’s empowering regulators will not stop the next inevitable mania and panic while having hampered the economy and helped big banks. The Journal, in particular, welcomes removing the CFPB’s independence from the President and Congress, although the Journal would prefer it be eliminated or made part of the Treasury Department.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "Happy St. Comey's Day, everybody! Of course, everybody celebrates Comey Day in their own way. We're kind of traditionalists around here. We watched TV and wrote jokes."

Stephen Colbert: "That would be a Trump family law firm: 'Lies, Plain, and Simple.'"

James Corden: "Now of course, everybody here is talking about the election. Now if you are watching this in Britain, you already know who the prime minister is. If you are watching this in America, you already don't care who the prime minister is."

James Corden: "Just so you know, we taped this show a day before, so as it stands right now, we don't know what happened in this [UK] election. Meanwhile, in America, their election was last year and they still don't know what the hell happened in their election. Regardless of that, we can assume Donald Trump has already congratulated the winner in his traditional fashion by insulting them on Twitter."

Trevor Noah: "Whoa, whoa, whoa, James Comey, calling the President a liar? How dare you tell us things we already know!"

Trevor Noah: "This is why white people always die in horror movies. 'I was getting a bad feeling about this, and then I stayed to investigate further. I stayed to try and figure it out.' If you had a black FBI director, after the first meeting with Trump, he would have been like, 'Oh, hell, no, this is some obstruction, yo!'"

Trevor Noah: "Today's hearing was cool and everything, but basically it was like listening to a clean version of a hip-hop song. It felt like we missed all the explicit parts."

Jimmy Fallon: "Despite Comey's testimony, a White House spokesperson said today is a regular Thursday at the White House. America was like, 'Yeah, that's what worries us.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump did not post on Twitter during James Comey's Senate testimony today. Well, he thought he did, but his aide switched his phone with a Speak and Spell."

Seth Meyers: "Former President Barack Obama's White House ethics lawyers said yesterday that, 'Comey's accounts of his meetings with President Trump sounds like trial testimony,' which is also what Trump thinks Comey did today. 'This is just a trial testimony, right? We'll see how it goes, then decide if we like it?'"

Conan O'Brien: "Former FBI Director James Comey testified that he met privately with President Trump on February 14. Folks, this is good news for everyone who thought they had the worst Valentine's Day ever."

Conan O'Brien: "James Comey also testified that every time he thought President Trump was lying, he wrote it down, which explains why Comey was rushed to the hospital for carpal tunnel syndrome."

Conan O'Brien: "House Speaker Paul Ryan defended Donald Trump's behavior, saying the President is new at this. Ryan said, 'And by this, I mean following the law.'"

Interior Secretary: Maine National Monument Should Stay In Federal Hands.

The Hill (6/15, Cama) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says federal ownership of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument is "settled," but left open its management. In a public meeting Thursday, "Zinke said the monument area's management might change to allow logging and other 'traditional uses.'" Zinke said, "I think the solutions should be made-in-Maine solutions, not made-in-Washington, D.C. I think there are opportunities to do something different here."

The AP (6/15) reports that Zinke said "he may recommend an upgrade to a national park." Zinke "didn't share Maine Gov. Paul LePage's opinion that the land was unworthy of the federal designation." At a chamber of commerce breakfast Thursday, "Zinke went even further in suggesting that he might recommend that Congress elevate the land's status to a national park."

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/15, Miller) reports that "Zinke wrapped up a three-day visit to Maine by meeting in the morning with dozens of Katahdin-area business leaders who say the monument is already paying dividends, and then in the afternoon with some of its most vocal critics." The article notes that "Zinke made repeated statements about the beauty of the 87,500-acre Katahdin Woods and Waters monument and the surrounding region, as well as people's passion for the land." Zinke said, "overall, I would say it was a very positive experience, really good people, beautiful country with excellent potential to be something special."

Keep America Wild. In an op-ed for the New York Times (6/16, Powers), author Richard Powers writes in support of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument. According to Powers, "far from being a federal land grab, the more than 87,000 acres of forest and waters around Mount Katahdin were donated to this country by private owners, along with $40 million earmarked for the land's preservation and care in perpetuity." He also notes that "the land's status as a public monument has already begun to return considerable economic value to the local tourist economy."

Interior Secretary Zinke Visiting Mass.

The Greenfield \(MA\) Recorder (6/15, Metzger) reports that "when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke visits the Boston area on Friday, environmentalists plan to greet him by rallying for the preservation of national monuments that are under review by the Trump administration." According to a Zinke press aide, Zinke will "meet with a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service official and officials from the New England Aquarium about marine wildlife around the monument." He will "then attend a roundtable meeting with lobstermen and fishermen about the impact of the monument designation on their industry." Zinke will also "join the National Park Service for a tour of Boston Harbor and a number of park sites in the afternoon, according to the aide."

Man Arrested Following Death On Crow Reservation.

The AP (6/15) reports Travis Burrows, supervisory senior resident agent with the FBI, said that an 18-year-old man has been arrested in connection with the death of a 29-year-old man in Crow Agency on the Crow Indian Reservation. The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (6/15) reports, “The Bureau of Indian Affairs took the suspect into custody, and the FBI and BIA are jointly investigating the death.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

America Spent Centuries Mistreating Native American Children.

Trump Is Making It Worse. The Huffington Post (6/15, Klein) reports that former President Obama “made unprecedented investments in Native American youth,” but President Trump, “who released his full budget proposal in May, plans to dismantle all of that.” Community leaders claim “that if the budget passes in its current form, the results will be beyond devastating for their children.” Although Native American “students are some of the nation’s most vulnerable,” instead of investing in this group, the White House budget “proposes over $303.3 million in cuts to the Department of the Interior’s Bureau of Indian Affairs, including a $64.4 million cut to Indian education programs.” The budget also “proposes nearly $60 million in cuts to education construction projects that help replace and repair dilapidated Bureau of Indian Education schools.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Agencies Slow Methane Rules Opposed By Oil, Gas Industry.

The AP (6/15, Daly) reports in continuing coverage that the Trump Administration is delaying two Obama-era regulations designed to restrict methane emissions from oil and gas production. The EPA is seeking a two-year delay for companies to follow the rule, while the agency conducts a review of the regulation. The Interior Department is indefinitely postponing a separate rule designed to reduce the amount of methane released from oil and gas wells on federal lands. Kathleen Sgamma, president of the Western Energy Alliance, said, “Both rules vastly exceeded federal authority. ... The Trump administration is correcting that overreach from the prior administration, thereby saving jobs and supporting American energy independence.”

Trump Administration Falling Behind On Rule Reconsideration.

E&E Publishing (6/15) reports the Trump Administration has failed to meet its own target date for starting a review of an Obama-era regulation for hydraulic fracturing on public and tribal land. The Interior Department told a federal court last month that it would publish a review by June 13 on whether to repeal or revise the rule, but the agency has yet to release any notice. Earthjustice attorney Mike Freeman said the delay shows the problems in putting the case before the 10th US Circuit Court of Appeals on hold. He said, “That delay just underscores our concerns that by holding the appeal in abeyance, it could be allowing BLM to stall this whole issue for literally years.”

Trump Administration Auctioning 304 Square Miles Of Public Land For Fossil Fuel Development.

The Wisconsin Gazette (6/15) reports that “despite legal protests from conservation groups, the Bureau of Land Management is auctioning off 195,732 acres – 304 square miles – of public lands in Nevada for fossil fuel development.” The BLM “dismissed the protests this week, ignoring or downplaying legal and environmental concerns about fracking impacts to public lands, surface and groundwater, wildlife and the climate.” The bureau’s “denial of the groups’ protest begins a 30-day period for appeal to the Interior Board of Land Appeals.”

Burning Man: Yes, We’ve Noticed The Water On The Playa.

USA Today (6/16, Kane) reports that Burning Man is “set for Aug. 27 to Sept. 4,” but “about an inch of water still stands on much of the playa.” Event organizers have “been in talks with state officials at the Bureau of Land Management, the federal agency which oversees the Black Rock Desert and issues Burning Man’s multimillion-dollar special event permit each year. Both are monitoring the situation.”

BLM Issues Fire Prevention Order For Five Utah Counties.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/15, Manson) reports that “in the wake of recent blazes caused by people, the Bureau of Land Management is reminding the public about year-round and seasonal fire restrictions.” The BLM’s West Desert District on Thursday “re-issued a fire prevention order that applies to BLM lands in Salt Lake, Utah, Tooele, Rich and Box Elder counties.” Erik Valdez, acting fire management officer of the agency’s Utah West Desert District, said in a news release, “With recent record temperatures, low humidity, and strong winds, the vegetation in the West Desert is drying out quickly.”

BLM Implements Fire Restrictions On Colorado River District Public Lands.

The Kingman \(AZ\) Daily Miner (6/15) reports that the Bureau of Land Management’s Colorado River District will “implement fire and smoking restrictions on all 5.4 million acres of public lands in western Arizona and southeastern California along the Colorado River effective Friday.” William Mack, BLM district manager for the Colorado River District said, “Due to the above average winter and spring rainfall, the district experienced above average grass growth. Recent hot and dry conditions have created an abundance of very dry vegetation that is now highly combustible.”

Sheep Mountain Is A Public Investment Worth Making.

The Powell \(WY\) Tribune (6/15, Baker) editorializes that that “recently, both the Park County Commission and the Greater Yellowstone Coalition – entities that often find themselves on the opposite sides of an issue – sent letters calling on the federal government to buy land on the top of Sheep Mountain west of Cody.” The paper urges Congress and federal officials to “take action by finding the money to buy the roughly 1,800 acres of critical wildlife habitat.” According to the editorial, “the acreage west of the Buffalo Bill Reservoir is already surrounded by public lands and is a haven for species that include grizzly bears, birds and migrating bighorn sheep, elk and mule deer.” It concludes: “We don’t see any losers if a sale to the BLM goes through, but we can think of plenty if we fail to find a way to permanently protect Sheep Mountain.”

Brenda Love Bennett: What Would ‘Wild Horse Annie’ Say?

In an op-ed for the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (6/15, Bennett), Brenda Love Bennett calls on the public “to hold the Bureau of Land Management accountable for protecting wild horses and burros.” Bennett warns that “language in the Bureau of Land Management’s (BLM) 2018 budget could spell the demise of these national icons.” Bennett wants the BLM to follow the recommendations of the National Academy of Sciences, which in 2013, “outlined economically-sound and workable recommendations that would humanely and effectively manage wild-herd populations on our Western public rangelands.”

Drilling Foes Try To Simplify Comment Process.

The Coastal Observer \(SC\) (6/15, Best) reports that “five permits are filed for approval through the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management” and “a public comment period is open regarding the permits’ Incidental Hazard Authorizations.” A local environmental group Stop Offshore Drilling in the Atlantic (SODA) is “working to help format comments for any citizen to submit.”

You Can't Find What You Can't See – Seismic Surveys Shine A Light On Atlantic Oil.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/15, Keyte), Roger Keyte, the retired former board chairman of the International Association of Geophysical Contractors, welcomes the decision by the Trump Administration to overturn "President Obama's denial of five Atlantic outer continental shelf seismic survey permit applications." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management "can now thoughtfully and objectively review those permit applications and potentially put us on course for desperately needed new surveys." Keyte argues that "conducting new seismic surveying of our offshore territory is a logical and prudent step to building a secure energy future."

Udall, Heinrich Advance Legislation To Address Drought Challenges In N.M..

KRWG-FM Las Cruces, NM (6/15) reports that Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich "introduced the New Mexico Drought Preparedness Act that would improve the efficiency and effectiveness of water management across the state." The New Mexico Drought Preparedness Act "authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pilot a voluntary water acquisition and leasing program in certain New Mexico basins and to provide funding and technical assistance for the installation of modern water metering infrastructure in the Middle Rio Grande Valley, while giving more flexibility to water managers."

Lake Mead Forecast Drops Sharply, May Trigger CAP Water Shortage.

The Arizona Daily Star (6/15, Davis) reports that "a federal forecast of water levels at troubled Lake Mead took a big turn for the worse this week — a 20-foot drop in the lake's expected January 2019 elevation." The Bureau of Reclamation's "monthly prediction for Colorado River reservoir levels says the lake could drop to 1,076.53 feet by the end of 2018 or Jan. 1, 2019." The article notes "that would be a foot and a half above where a Central Arizona Project water shortage would be declared." According to the article, "the forecast is down sharply from the bureau's May 2017 prediction because this spring's river runoff levels are less than expected a few months ago although still above normal."

Federal Officials Make Formal Apology For WWII Internment Of Unangan People.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (6/15, Sobel) reports that "on Wednesday, Federal officials apologized for their role in the World War II internment of the Unangan people." Jim Kurth — acting director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service — "traveled to St. Paul Island to speak with survivors and descendants." Kurth said, "As much as we wish, we cannot take back the course of history. But what we can do now is heal together. We can work together."

Removal Of Pawcatuck River Dam Begins.

The New London \(CT\) Day (6/15) reports that "work to remove the Bradford Dam on the Pawcatuck River began this week, The Nature Conservancy announced Thursday." According to the article, "the $1.8-million project is being overseen by The Nature Conservancy and is supported by $821,000 in federal funding for Hurricane Sandy recovery and resilience projects." U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Northeast Regional Director Wendi Weber said, "We're proud to join with The Nature Conservancy and other partners in restoring our rivers and river systems to better withstand future storms and other environmental and land-use changes. Healthy rivers are lifelines for communities in the Northeast — providing recreation, water quality, strong economies and other benefits. By connecting and opening waterways like the Pawcatuck River, we're helping wildlife thrive and creating more resilient communities for people."

Wolf First To Be Caught, Collared, Monitored In Western Washington.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (6/15, Landers) reports that "field staff for state and federal wildlife agencies trapped, collared and released what is believed to be an adult male gray wolf east of Burlington near Marblemount, officials say." The animal was "found and captured last week after reports of wolf tracks, howling and chickens being attacked." According to the article, "blood and saliva were taken from the animal and sent to a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service forensic lab to confirm whether the animal is a full-blooded wolf and to help determine its origin."

National Park Service Celebrates 101st Birthday.

WRC-TV Washington (6/15) reports that "former Olympian, Dominique Dawes is celebrating the National Park Service's 101st birthday." In partnership with the National Park Foundation and National Park Service, Dawes is "helping people find and rediscover parks in the Nation's Capital and all over the U.S."

National Park Service Wants You To See Lincoln's Underside.

The Washington Business Journal (6/15, Cooper) reports that the National Park Service is "embarking on a renovation" of the Lincoln Memorial "funded by D.C. philanthropist David Rubenstein, and it includes opening up vantage points in the cavernous, columned area beneath the monument." Rubenstein contributed "$18.5 million for the project last fall." The NPS "also requested $2.2 million in the FY2017 budget to replaced the memorial's roof."

Park Service Analyzes Maui Haleakala Sunrise Reservations.

The AP (6/15, McAVOY) reports that the National Park Service on Thursday "said it would study whether to keep its new system requiring reservations to drive up to Haleakala's summit to see the sunrise." The park service "plans to conduct an environmental assessment for the program, which was implemented on an emergency basis earlier this year to address overcrowding." The study will "also analyze other possible solutions."

Study: California's Seasonal Rain And Snow Triggering Earthquakes.

The San Francisco Chronicle (6/15, Alexander) reports that "California's Mediterranean climate, with its wet winters and dry summers, brings enviable weather to the Golden State but also earthquakes, according to UC Berkeley research." The article says that "in a study over nine years, university scientists found that the weight of winter snow and rain on California's mountains puts enough pressure on both the Sierra Nevada and coastal ranges that when the state dries out come summer, the Earth's crust lunges back up, triggering increased fault movement." Nicholas van der Elst, "a research geophysicist for the U.S. Geological Survey in Pasadena, who had not seen the paper but studies earthquake triggers," said, "We have a pretty good understanding of earthquakes on a basic level and why they happen. However, we don't know things like how quickly stress accumulates and what is the breaking point of a fault."

Trump Asks For Prayers For Scalise As Some Partisan Bickering Resumes In DC.

Media reports sounded a note of concern about the condition of Rep. Steve Scalise, who is said to remain critical after undergoing surgery for the third time since Wednesday's shooting. According to Politico (6/15, Bade), "the third surgery was routine for gunshot victims," and "doctors went in to check on the work they performed the night before." NBC Nightly News (6/15, lead story, 3:25, Costello) reported that Scalise "was shot in the left hip," and "the bullet traveled across his pelvis, fracturing bones, damaging internal organs and causing severe bleeding that required multiple transfusions." The Washington Post (6/15, Bernstein) explains that "even a single penetrating wound to the pelvic region...is extremely dangerous," and the CBS Evening News (6/15, lead story, 3:00, Cordes), in fact, described doctors as working "to save" Scalise's "life," and referred to a "sobering update" from the President. ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 2, 2:00, Bruce) showed Trump saying, "It's been much more difficult than people even thought at the time. It's been, he's in some trouble, but he's a great fighter and he's going to be okay, we hope."

USA Today (6/15, Jackson) notes the President went on to ask "for prayers" for both "Scalise and lobbyist Matt Mika," who was "also critically wounded during Wednesday's attack," and expressed hope that "universal support" for the victims "might help heal the country's many political differences." Added Trump, "We've had a very, very divided country for many years." The Washington Times (6/15, Miller) quotes Trump as saying, "I have a feeling that Steve has made a great sacrifice, but there could be some unity brought to our country. Let's hope so." Townhall (6/15, Rousselle), Roll Call (6/15, Bennett) and The Hill (6/15, Savransky), among other news outlets, run similar reports on Trump's words.

However, just a day after the attack some partisan sniping was once again in evidence in the nation's capital. Says the AP (6/15), "It didn't take long for the capital's post-shooting talk of unity to begin fraying," after "some Republicans on the far right" said "vitriolic rhetoric on the left could be to blame for the gunfire." Rep. Steve King, for example, said "the violence is incited by the leading cultural voices of the Left." Chris Cilizza lamented on CNN's Out Front (6/15) that King "will pay no political price for comments like that. It may do him some good" if he did.

The CBS Evening News (6/15, lead story, 3:00, Cordes) reported that the fact that suspected shooter James Hogkinson's "Facebook page was filled with anti-Trump, anti-GOP messages" sparked some debate in Washington. Newt Gingrich was shown decrying "an increasing intensity of hostility on the left," and CBS noted "New York Republican Chris Collins told a local radio host, 'I can only hope that the Democrats do tone down the rhetoric. Some people react to things like that.'" Minority Leader Pelosi said in reply, "How dare they say such a thing," and "all of a sudden be sanctimonious as if they've never seen such a thing before."

To the Washington Examiner (6/15, Kasperowicz), "one day after House Speaker Paul Ryan declared 'we are united' after a gunman targeted Republican lawmakers, the bright light of bipartisanship...started fading, and was steadily being replaced by the usual partisan bickering."

McClatchy (6/15, Roarty) similarly points out that "even amid the moment of political Kumbaya," it is "suddenly" Democrats — "paired with a political base that hates the new president — who are on the defensive about their rhetoric." McClatchy adds that "even for a party that believes deeply in opposing Trump, the shootings are spurring reflection about how its leaders talk about the president — and whether they need to be more careful with their words."

The Washington Examiner (6/15, Langille) reports that Rep. Claudia Tenney, "the House Republican who received a threatening email Wednesday that warned 'one down, 216 to go' after" Wednesday's shooting, "argued Democrats are willing to do anything to make sure she loses in 2018." Tenney told Fox News (6/15), "They want me to lose and they want to put somebody else in place. So they're willing to do almost anything and they're encouraging people to do this unfortunately." Added Tenney, "I think this has reached a level that violence in the situation has been normalized. I have to say that the Resist movements, the Indivisible movements, this movement that has been supported unfortunately by the Democrats."

The Los Angeles Times (6/15, Mascaro) reports on additional threats to GOP lawmakers, "The voice-mail messages left at Arizona Republican Rep. Martha McSally's office were explicit: 'Our sights are set on you. Right between your [expletive] eyes.' Another said, 'Your days are numbered.'" The Times also reports that "a female caller recently warned Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-Ill.) that he would soon know her name — because she was coming for him."

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (6/15), "Let's not be deceived. The vice of rhetoric and vile hatred of the left, it's not going to end. It's only going to get worse. Democrats, liberals, the media will not stop until they absolutely destroy this President's agenda."

The New York Times (6/15, Badger, Chokshi) reports that "today, partisan prejudice even exceeds racial hostility (although the two are intertwined) in implicit association tests that measure how quickly people subconsciously associate groups (blacks, Democrats) with traits (wonderful, awful).” And that is “remarkable, given how deeply ingrained racial attitudes are in the United States, and how many generations they’ve had to harden.” The Times adds that “political scientists suspect that attack ads, which have grown in number and nastiness, have played a role,” as has “the rise of partisan media — Fox News on the right, MSNBC on the left, for example.”

Under the headline “America Is Riding A Carousel Of Hate,” Michael Gerson writes in the Washington Post (6/15) that “in our politics, dehumanization is far along,” and “this should be a reminder to opponents of...Trump as well. His violation of norms is a reason for criticism and opposition; it is not a justification for demonization.” Fareed Zakaria, also in the Washington Post (6/15), argues that “the dangerous aspect of this new form of politics is that identity does not lend itself easily to compromise,” because it its the “divide” is “about identity, culture and religion (think of abortion, gay rights, Confederate monuments, immigration, official languages),” and as a result “compromise seems immoral. American politics is becoming more like Middle Eastern politics, where there is no middle ground between being Sunni or Shiite.” Zakaria goes on to deride criticism of the Julius Caesar production in which the protagonist “resembles...Trump” and is cast is “a mixed, somewhat favorable light.”

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (6/15), “People ought to fight over policy but once you begin to question the motives, the patriotism of your opponents, you have gone too far. The worst thing, and I think this is overlooked, the two parties, the two ideologies, you might say, speak about the politics in apocalyptic terms. If the other guy wins, it’s the end of the republic. If the other guy wins, it’s the end of the world. ... And it’s up to the leadership to say these are policies. This is not the fate of the republic.”

At any rate, a number of key lawmakers continued to sound a call for unity and civility. Rep. Collins said on CNN's New Day (6/15), “I will admit that early yesterday...my good friend Steve Scalise was gravely wounded,” and “in that emotion I did lash out...putting the blame on the Democrats’ doorstep. And then after, you know, the emotion of that instance wore off, you know, an hour or two later, I looked in the mirror and I said, ‘That’s not the right tone.’ ... So I released a statement that subsequently said I’m willing to admit that was wrong for me to say, that would actually be going in the wrong direction and I myself am going to try to tone down some of my rhetoric and I would invite my Democrat friends – and they are friends – to do likewise.”

Senate Majority Leader McConnell said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/15), “We want everybody to know we have always had a robust discussion of the issues in this country throughout our history. But we don’t dislike each other. We work together all the time, Senator Schumer and I do on a daily basis, and we have our political arguments, but at the end we’re all Americans. Everybody needs to remember that because we’re all in this thing together.”

Senate Minority Leader Schumer said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/15), “We worked together pretty closely before this tragedy but if it can help bring things closer together and help us all work closer together, it’s a horrible way to do it, and we all pray for Mr. Scalise’s and all the other people’s speedy recovery, but let’s hope we can get some good out of this tragedy.”

House Speaker Ryan said on CNN's Out Front (6/15), “All of us have a responsibility to watch our rhetoric. But we’re passionate and we believe passionately about our causes and about our issues. So, we can do that without being vitriolic and fomenting the kind of anger that is out there in the country. So that’s what leaders do and members of Congress have incumbent upon them to have the responsibility to do that.”

Rep. Rodney Davis said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/15), “We have got to ratchet down this hateful political rhetoric that we see all over social media, all over the news media in Washington, in our state houses. We can argue about policy differences but we have to always realize that we’re Americans first. ... Let’s settle our policy differences at the ballot box not with bullets on a baseball field like many of us had to witness yesterday.” Davis said on Fox News' Fox & Friend (6/15) that “it makes me resolved to do what I cannot only as a member of Congress but as an American first to ratchet down this hateful rhetoric that we have seen on all sides and ensure that we take this lesson, this lesson that I saw yesterday of an attack on innocent people and innocent civilians in a park and turn it into something good. Let’s take this day and make yesterday’s attack the new beginning so that we can all work together, which is what we do a majority of the time out here. Many people would be surprised that Republicans and Democrats that serve in Congress actually get along.”

Rep. Gary Palmer was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/15) if he is optimistic that “there is going to be more Democrats and Republicans getting along and setting the tone from Washington." Palmer said, "I hope we do. I think we saw some of that yesterday when we all came together. I have got a number of Democrat friends who came over to see me. I was very encouraged by that. The country is fraying at the edges. We have got to pull the country back together. We have got to be able to reestablish a civil discourse. Otherwise, the future of the nation, I think, is in grave danger."

Rep. Ron DeSantis said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/15), "I'm a little bit pessimistic that anything much is going to change. I got a call after this happened to my congressional office, praising what had happened and hoping that Donald Trump was next. One of my colleagues got an email saying one down, 217 to go. When you talk about people like this, with the virulence and the hatred, that's a small minority of the country but it does have an outside impact. I look around here. We do have tough debates but I'm not sure that if Congress fixed a little bit of the debate, made it a little bit more civil that you're going to change a guy like that."

Sen. John Thune said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/15), "I think we've got to set the example and dial down the rhetoric and soften the tone in our public communications. With respect to a lot of the social media chatter that goes on, sometimes there's value in an unexpressed thought. Sometimes it is better not to just say everything that comes in to your mind. I think we see a lot of that today, and I think restraint should be applied when it comes to things public officials say."

In an editorial, USA Today (6/14) offers hope for the future, "In the final analysis, a shock like Wednesday's is best seen for what we can learn from it. Play ball, and let the learning begin."

Pelosi Puts Spotlight On Trump, "Assaults" On Hillary Clinton, Fox News. While Pelosi's "how dare they" comment was noted on a variety of news accounts, some of her other remarks received a lot less attention. The Washington Examiner (6/15, Kasperowicz) reported that she also said, "We have a president who says, 'I could shoot someone on 5th Avenue and nobody would care.' ... When you have people saying, 'beat him up and I'll pay your legal fees.' When you have all of the assaults that were made on Hillary Clinton." Breitbart (6/15, Key) also noted Pelosi's full remarks. Initially, Politico (6/15, Lahut, Tesfamichael) reports, Pelosi said, "I don't even want to go into the president of the United States in terms of the language he has used." She offered the comments above when pressed by a reporter.

The Washington Times (6/15, Persons) reports that Pelosi also described "one person who threatened her and was later put in jail, saying his behavior toward her was from watching Fox News."

On Fox News The Fox News Specialists (6/15), Mike Huckabee reacted to Pelosi's comments saying, "Everybody was saying, 'How long will this civility last?' Well, now we know. Not long."

CBS Analysis Of Troubling Rhetoric Singles Out "Political Blog Sites," Sanders, Trump. The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 11, 1:55, Pelley) reported that "too many leaders and political commentators who set an example for us to follow have led us into an abyss of violent rhetoric, which, it should be no surprise, has led to violence." CBS noted that "in December last year, a man with an assault rifle stormed into a Washington-area pizzeria to free child sex slaves whom Hillary Clinton was holding there, or at least that's what political blog sites had said." Bernie Sanders "has called the President the most dangerous in history. And the shoot or yesterday was a Sanders volunteer." In February, "the President tweeted that the news media were the 'enemy of the American people.' Later, at a lunch for reporters" he "was asked whether he worried that that language would incite violence. His pause, indicating it had never crossed his mind. And then he said, 'no, that doesn't worry me.'"

Sanford: Trump "Partially" To Blame. The Washington Times (6/15, Persons) reports Rep. Mark Sanford said Thursday on MSNBC that Trump "was 'partially' to blame for some of the hostility in the country that led to the shooting of... Scalise and others this week." Said Sanford, "I would argue the president has unleashed, partially, again not in anyway totally, but partially to blame for the demons that have been unleashed." Sanford also told MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/15), "There's some heavy soul searching going on right now because it was so dramatic and because it was so out of the ordinary and because people realize if it weren't for those two Capitol Hill police, it would have been a bloodbath. Maybe there would have been 15 or 20 members of Congress dead on a given day. I think people are registering it as such. What the Speaker said yesterday, what Nancy said in reaction to what the Speaker said yesterday is symptomatic of people saying, 'Wait a minute, we've got to find a way to slow this down.'"

White House Points To Trump's Call For Unity. The Washington Times (6/15, Miller) reports the White House said Thursday that "Trump was doing his part to tone down political rhetoric and was heeding his call for unity after a gunman attacked Republican lawmakers." White House deputy press secretary Sarah Sanders "said the president is not solely responsible and does not 'own' the heated rhetoric in American politics, and she said he was justified in responding to attacks." Said Sanders, "I think the president was extremely clear yesterday. ... There's been quite a bit of attacking against the president. ... As a whole, our country could bring the tone down a little bit. I think that's the goal the president laid out yesterday and hopefully we can all be reasonable."

At Baseball Game, Democratic Fans, "Dozens Of Aides" Boo Trump's Remarks. The AP (6/15, Werner) reports "Republicans and Democrats joined in friendly rivalry Thursday at their annual Congressional Baseball game, many fresh from the penetrating horror of the ballfield shooting rampage a day earlier and all playing in honor of their grievously wounded colleague." The President, in a recorded message that was played before the game, said, "By playing tonight we are showing the world that we will not be intimidated by threats, acts of violence or assaults on our democracy." The AP adds that "despite the unifying nature of the event, there were boos for the president...from the section for Democratic fans on the third base side." The Washington Times (6/15, Dinan) says "dozens of congressional staffers erupted into boos, jeers and even vulgar gesticulations when Trump...appeared in a video." The Times adds "the episode marred what had been a night celebrating those wounded in Wednesday's murderous attack on GOP players practicing for the game."

Politico (6/15, Bade, Cheney) doesn't mention the incident, and instead reports that "Republicans and Democrats were wracked with emotion even before the game started," and that "in a gesture to Scalise, both teams knelt at second base in prayer for their colleague, who was shot while playing that position at yesterday's practice." The New York Times (6/15, Flegenheimer) and USA Today (6/15, King) run similar stories, which likewise don't mention the booing of Trump's speech. In a separate report, USA Today (6/16, Fitzgerald) notes that special agent Bailey, who was "injured in the line of fire during Wednesday's shooting in Alexandria, delivered the first pitch."

GOP Candidate Karen Handel Receives Letter With White Powdery Substance. WSB-TV Atlanta (6/15) reports online that on Thursday afternoon, police said "authorities were called to the neighborhood" of the residence of Karen Handel, the Republican candidate for the Congressional Sixth District in Georgia, after "at least five homes in the neighborhood have received an envelope with a 'white powdery substance' in it." Police said "the FBI has joined the investigation." Roswell Police Department's Lisa Holland said, "We've been having a lot of issues with political signs over the past months. This has just been a situation over the campaign on both sides. We do not know the nature of the substance right now."

The Washington Free Beacon (6/15, Scher) reports letters accompanying the powdery substances called Handel a "dirty fascist," among other graphic threats. Handel confirmed, "This afternoon we had some suspicious packages delivered to our house and to our neighbors."

Drudge Highlights Shooting Of Truck With Trump Slogan. The Drudge Report last night highlighted incidents of violence against Trump supporters. WXIN-TV Indianapolis (6/15) reported that "Indiana State Police say shots were fired at a truck carrying a 'Make America Great Again' flag and an American flag on eastbound I-465 Tuesday." WJZY-TV Charlotte, NC (6/14, Baldeck), meanwhile, said "on a day when lawmakers from both sides of the aisle in Washington are asking Americans to unite, a loyal Starbucks customer says she was targeted for supporting...Trump." Starbucks "said they are making sure this incident won't happen again."

Analyst Identifies "Media Lies" That She Says "Radicalized The Violent Left." The Washington Times (6/15, Harper) reports PJ Media columnist Megan Fox "identified the top-six strategic headlines, which she says are 'media lies that radicalized the violent left.'" Fox's "meticulous analysis" pointed to the following headlines: "Trump is colluding with Russia!", "Donald Trump hates the planet and so do all Republicans," "Republicans hate gays," "Republicans have launched a war on women's health," "Republicans want you to DIE," and "Nationalism is synonymous with racism." The Times cites other studies as finding "liberal leanings" in the press, with one study conducted 31 years ago finding "81 percent to 94 percent of the nations journalists voted Democratic in presidential elections from 1964 to 1976."

Sanders, Stein Supporter Paglia: Democrats In "Nationwide Orgy Of Rage And Spite." The Washington Times (6/15, Ernst) reports "renowned feminist Camille Paglia says the Democratic Party's leaders are in 'a nationwide orgy of rage and spite' that prevents them from connecting with millions of potential voters." Interviewed by The Weekly Standard (6/15, Last), "the author and professor, who supported Vermont Sen. Bernard Sanders in the 2016 primary election and Green Party candidate Jill Stein in the general election, said Democrats are widening an unnecessary political chasm with voters."

Palin May Sue NYTimes For Claiming Her PAC Incited Giffords Shooting. Townhall (6/15, O'Brien) reported that "former Gov. Sarah Palin appears to be seriously considering a libel case against The New York Times," which "published an editorial Wednesday night in which they revisited a conspiracy theory regarding the attack on Rep. Gabrielle Giffords." The editors "surmised" that "the shooter, Jared Lee Loughner, was inspired to attack Giffords after seeing a map published by Palin's political action committee pointing out electoral districts." The theory "has [been] debunked time and again," and the Times "has since issued a correction for their obvious error."

In a "Fact Check" analysis, the Washington Post (6/15, Lee) says "this episode showed how pervasive this debunked talking point still is on the political left, and we wanted to set the record straight." In fact, the shooter's "focus on Giffords began as early as 2007, long before the map was published. He became fixated on her since he met her at a constituent event in 2007, and decided he was unsatisfied by her answer to his question: 'If words could not be understood, then what does government mean?'" The Post warns that "any future references to this talking point by politicians or political groups will receive Four Pinocchios."

Pence Visits Wounded. The Washington Times (6/15, Persons) reports Vice President Pence "tweeted Thursday that he visited Rep. Steve Scalise and Capitol Hill Police Officer Crystal Griner in the hospital and asked for continued prayers." Wrote Pence, "Karen & I just left @MedStarWHC. Thanked docs & staff. Keep @SteveScalise, Officer Griner & all involved & their loved ones in your prayers." The CBS Evening News (6/15, story 2, 1:30, Pelley) noted that "also injured...were Special Agent Crystal Griner of the Capitol Police, shot in the ankle, but she's in the hospital in good condition." Special Agent David Bailey "was treated for minor injuries," while "Texas Congressman Roger Williams suffered a broken ankle" and "his staffer Zach Barth was shot in the leg, but is out of the hospital."

Hodgkinson Bought Weapons From Licensed Dealer. The Washington Post (6/15, Jackman, Hermann) reports "law enforcement officials worked Thursday to piece together the final nomadic months of the shooter." The FBI "announced...that the gunman, James T. Hodgkinson, purchased the two firearms he used in Wednesday's assault from licensed gun dealers."

The New York Times (6/15, Fandos, Goldman) reports that "the SKS weapon that the authorities said was used in the attack is a semiautomatic infantry rifle designed in the 1940s in the Soviet Union." While it "is not as accurate as many modern infantry rifles and carbines...it has lingered as a ceremonial weapon in Russia and models from both Russia and China can be readily purchased in the United States, where it is popular with collectors."

ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 3, 2:15, Ross) reported that Sue Hodgkinson, the suspect's wife, "said she cannot explain what her husband did on that ball field." She "said her husband made preparations to go to Washington at the beginning of the year, selling off almost all he owned." Said the widow, "I can't believe he did this, I cannot believe."

The New York Times (6/15, Cochrane) reports from Alexandria that "the colorful neighborhood of Del Ray is very quiet, very charming and very liberal," and on Wednesday "was shaken by an outsider who was very destructive, very unwelcome and very liberal." The Times adds that "the liberal bubble in Del Ray is cushioned by signs calling for kindness and resistance, babies and rescue dogs both in bows and in strollers, and chalk signs asking for introspection from neighbors."

Massie Bill Would Recognize Out-Of-State Concealed Carry Permits In DC. The Washington Times (6/15, Sherfinski) reports "Rep. Thomas Massie on Thursday said he's introducing legislation that would recognize out-of-state concealed carry permits in the District of Columbia, in the wake of the shocking attack on...Scalise and others in Northern Virginia on Wednesday." Massie told the Fox Business Network, "What I'm trying to do is anticipate how to avoid a tragic situation in the future. ... As soon as we step into Washington, D.C. or anywhere in the public, we are unarmed and unaccompanied, for the most part."

Trump Calls Russia Probe "Greatest Witch Hunt In American Political History."

In the wake of reports that special counsel Robert Mueller is investigating President Trump for possible obstruction of justice, Trump posted a series of tweets Thursday, arguing that in the absence of evidence of collusion with Russia, investigators are trying to "go for obstruction." Media coverage of the Trump's tweets is heavy and generally negative toward the President, casting him as lashing out and describing a "sense of unease" inside the White House.

On NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 2, 2:50, Holt), White House correspondent Kristen Welker cited "a former senior intelligence official" who said Mueller "has launched a criminal investigation into President Trump for possible obstruction of justice." According to the official, "Mueller has requested interviews with top intelligence officials, including Director of National Intelligence Daniel Coats to appear in a closed question." Welker added that "146 days into Mr. Trump's presidency," the criminal inquiry is "starting earlier than any other modern day President, including Richard Nixon and Bill Clinton."

Cecilia Vega said on ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 4, 2:55, Muir) that "it's no longer just he said/he said" as investigators are now "looking into whether the President repeated something he did with Comey, telling all government officials to clear out of a White House meeting so he could be alone with CIA Director Mike Pompeo and the Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats. There, the President reportedly asked Coats to intervene in the investigation into fired National Security Adviser Mike Flynn." Trump "also reportedly called Coats and NSA Director Admiral Mike Rogers and asked them to publicly declare there was no collusion with Russia. They refused." Mueller's investigators now "want to talk to all three men." However, the Washington Times (6/15, Boylan, Noble, Taylor) says Mueller "could have a tough time making an obstruction of justice case stick against President Trump, according to legal analysts, who said he will have to overcome a number of 'unique hurdles' – not the least of which is a decades-old Justice Department ruling that a sitting president can't be charged."

The Washington Post (6/15, Wagner, Parker) describes a "heightened sense of unease gripp[ing] the White House," while The Hill (6/15, Savransky) says Trump "pushed back" on reports of the obstruction probe. Reuters (6/15, Ainsley) says he "lashed out," engaging in what USA Today (6/15, Jackson) describes as a "day-long tweet storm," during which he "criticized reports that he is now under investigation for obstruction of justice in connection with the firing of FBI Director James Comey," writing, "They made up a phony collusion with the Russians story, found zero proof, so now they go for obstruction of justice on the phony story. Nice." About an hour later, he tweeted, "You are witnessing the single greatest WITCH HUNT in American political history – led by some very bad and conflicted people! #MAGA." Some eight hours later, USA Today says, Trump tweeted, "Why is that Hillary Clintons family and Dems dealings with Russia are not looked at, but my non-dealings are?" and, "Crooked H destroyed phones w/ hammer, 'bleached' emails, & had husband meet w/AG days before she was cleared- & they talk about obstruction?" The Washington Times (6/15, Persons) also reports briefly on Trump's tweets.

The New York Times (6/15, Shear) says Trump "mocked federal investigators," adding that his tweets indicate that "he remains dismissive of the investigation," while the AP (6/15, Bykowicz) says the tweets "are the latest – and most direct – attacks on the leader of an investigation that he insists is unnecessary and distracting." To Politico (6/15, Nelson), the tweets "marked a dramatic shift in tone from the president, who spent Wednesday in a unifying mode following a shooting at a GOP congressional baseball practice in Virginia." The Washington Examiner (6/15, Quinn) reports deputy press secretary Sarah Sanders told reporters Thursday that "Trump's tweets were likely prompted by 'some developments' in the Russia probe."

Roll Call (6/15, Bennett) reports that Trump "never referred to Mueller or the Justice Department," but points out that Trump's tweets came "after some of the president's surrogates have attempted to ding" Mueller's credibility, questioning "how Mueller can lead the probe given he is friends with Comey," and citing "campaign contributions some of the staff he has hired made to the Hillary Clinton campaign." On the CBS Evening News (6/15, story 5, 2:40, Pelley), Jeff Pegues cited "a former FBI official" who said that "the President's tweets could be used by the special counsel as evidence."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Situation Room (6/15) that the investigation is "very far from a witch hunt. In fact, calling it a witch hunt and these continuing tweets are almost themselves a continuing course of obstruction because they are transparently an attempt to put pressure on the special prosecutor and the FBI to abandon a lawful investigation that's based on some very, very clear facts."

Jonathan Swan writes on Axios (6/15) that while no one in the White House will say who Trump meant when he referred to "very bad and conflicted people," Trump's "close allies outside the administration...believe they know exactly who these people are." Swan adds that he received a call from "a close Trump ally outside of the White House," who encouraged him to look into the backgrounds of some of Mueller's investigators. The source said that "these people were Democrats with malicious intent, who in some cases had donated to Hillary Clinton." Swan adds that he cannot confirm whether "the attacks on Mueller are part of a strategic plan, or whether what we're seeing is surrogates freelancing" but adds that "what I can confirm is that some prominent outside allies are not working off a plan here. They're simply taking cues from Trump and saying what they think he'd like to hear."

Manu Raju said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/15) that "a lot of Republicans are uncomfortable the way the President is going after Bob Mueller...who has gotten praise on both sides of the aisle." Fox News' Special Report (6/15) reported "some Republican lawmakers cautioned that the tone isn't exactly helpful or accurate."

Politico (6/15, Dawsey) reports that Trump's advisers "say they're more worried that the things he's done since the inauguration may have left him exposed to obstruction of justice or other charges." Politico says Trump "has bristled almost daily about the ongoing probes. He has sometimes, without prompting, injected." While aides "have tried to change the subject" and "buck up the president by telling him to be patient, agreeing that it is a 'witch hunt' and urging him to just let it play out" it has not "changed Trump's response." Aides "fear his incendiary tweets and public comments have spurred 'countless' leaks of damaging information, in the words of one," and while they "have urged Trump to stop meddling...he won't."

Commentary is also decidedly negative toward Trump. Chris Cillizza said on CNN's Situation Room (6/15) that Trump "has one frame, one lens through which he sees everything, which is basically the lesson he learned in New York tabloid back and forth media politics, which is, this is a story. I knock it down, I put my version of the story out, I declare victory and I move on. It worked for him, for a long time. He was good at it, frankly, but this is not that. This is a special counsel. ... I don't think he understands the seriousness of it. Yes, I am certain people have tried to emphasize the seriousness of it to him."

Jeff Zeleny said on CNN's Situation Room (6/15) that Trump is "clearly showing his frustration with this widening investigation here and many people inside the [White House] and many Republicans on Capitol Hill simply wish the President would stop weighing in on all of this and wish they would wall this off and talk about issues, but he's simply not following this instruction." Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (6/15), "One might think because President Trump's own friends and advisers have explained to him how much his impulsive tweeting has hurt him in various ways, that he might handle this news by being cautious, by being circumspect. But one would be wrong." Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (6/15), "The President could be right about all that but I think it's unbelievably imprudent for him to be tweeting about it."

Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (6/15) column that Trump is "exactly where he doesn't want to be: under investigation by a dogged, highly respected prosecutor who owes him no personal or political loyalty" and he "has only himself to blame." Robinson concludes his piece with the question, "Why would the president object to a thorough investigation – unless he had something to hide?"

Mueller Reportedly Investigating Kushner's Finances, Business Dealings. The Washington Post (6/15, A1, Horwitz, Zapotosky, Entous) reports that "officials familiar with the matter" says special counsel Robert Mueller "is investigating the finances and business dealings of Jared Kushner, President Trump's son-in-law and adviser." The Post stresses that the investigation "is in a relatively early phase, and it is unclear whether criminal charges will be brought when it is complete." Kushner's attorney, Jamie Gorelick, said in an email, "We do not know what this report refers to. ... It would be standard practice for the Special Counsel to examine financial records to look for anything related to Russia. Mr. Kushner previously volunteered to share with Congress what he knows about Russia-related matters. He will do the same if he is contacted in connection with any other inquiry."

Rosenstein Warns Public About Reports Based On Anonymous Sources. USA Today (6/15, Miller) reports that in a statement that was circulated on social media, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein warned Americans to be "skeptical" of stories using anonymous sources. Rosenstein said in the statement, "Americans should exercise caution before accepting as true any stories attributed to anonymous 'officials,' particularly when they do not identify the country – let alone the branch or agency of government – with which the alleged sources supposedly are affiliated." Rosenstein did not "mention any specific story," but the statement "comes the same day as a Washington Post story citing an anonymous source reported that Mueller was investigating the business dealings of the president's son-in-law, Jared Kushner."

Sessions May Have Had Meetings With Russian Lobbyist. Yahoo News and Finance Anchor Briana Golodryga said on CNN's Situation Room (6/15) that there are reports that Attorney General Sessions "may have lied once again in his testimony." She said the report states that Sessions "may have met with a powerful and a known Russian lobbyist for dinners over the past year. Obviously, that wasn't disclosed in what we heard from the testimony from the attorney general."

Pence Hires Personal Attorney. Kristen Welker reported on NBC Nightly News (6/15, story 2, 2:50, Holt) that according to his office, Vice President Pence "has retained a personal lawyer to represent him in the special counsel investigation." The Washington Post (6/15, Wagner, Parker) says Pence has hired Richmond-based attorney Richard Cullen “to handle fallout from investigations into Russian election meddling.” The Post notes that Pence “was one of the small group of senior advisers the president consulted as he mulled his decision to fire Comey, which is now a focus of Mueller’s investigation.” ABC World News Tonight (6/15, story 4, 2:55, Muir) and the CBS Evening News (6/15, story 5, 2:40, Pelley) also reported on Pence’s hiring of Cullen.

Senate Intelligence Panel Won’t Investigate Obstruction. The Hill (6/15, Greenwood) reports that in the wake of special counsel Mueller’s meeting with the leaders of the Senate Intelligence Committee, CNN reported Thursday that the panel will not investigate whether Trump attempted to obstruct justice. Chairman Richard Burr said, “Obstruction is criminal – there’s a criminal aspect to that. ... It’s never been part of our [investigation].” Ranking member Mark Warner said that “while the intelligence panel will not focus its efforts on Trump’s potential obstruction of justice, it will turn over any evidence it finds related to the matter to the special counsel.”

Coons, Blumenthal Say Judiciary Committee Also Probing Obstruction Of Justice. Sen. Chris Coons, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/15) that he considers Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley’s announcement that the panel will pursue investigations into efforts to interfere in FBI probes to be an investigation into obstruction of justice. Blumenthal similarly said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/15) that the Judiciary Committee’s probe “is very definitely an investigation into possible” obstruction of justice.

Schiff: House Intel Committee Should Investigate Obstruction Allegations. Meanwhile, Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee is negotiating with Rep. Mike Conaway, who has been the GOP leader of the panel’s probe since Chairman Devin Nunes stepped away in April, about whether to investigate possible obstruction by Trump as part of their committee’s investigation, Politico (6/15, Wright) reports. Schiff said in an interview, “I think it needs to be part of the investigation. ... Congress has to get to the bottom of whether anybody is interfering or obstructing any investigation in any way.” Schiff told CNN’s The Lead (6/15), “I think what James Comey testified to a week ago, if accurate, is very well evidence of an effort to impede or obstruct the investigation. If he was fired as a way of changing the course of that investigation, that seems to me evidence of obstruction. Now, whether it’s sufficient evidence is another story. Similarly, I believe there is evidence of potential collusion that we need to get to the bottom of.”

Thune Advises Trump Against Firing Mueller. Sen. John Thune was asked on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (6/15) for his view “of the President’s authority and the potential propriety of removing Mueller,” Thune said, “I would certainly advise against that and I don’t think legally he can. ... I don’t expect that to happen, and I would certainly advise that step not to be taken.” In an op-ed for the Washington Post (6/15, Starr), former independent counsel Kenneth Starr agrees, arguing that Mueller “should be allowed to do his work unhindered and unimpeded. Absent the most extreme circumstances, the president would be singularly ill-advised to threaten, much less order, Mueller’s firing.”

Poll: 61 Percent Think Trump Tried To Interfere With Investigation. Trump’s tweets came as a new Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research poll shows that “a clear majority of the American people” believe he “has tried to interfere with the investigation,” the AP (6/15, Lederman, Swanson) reports. According to the poll, USA Today (6/15, Estepa) reports, “61% of Americans surveyed believe the president has tried to obstruct or impede the investigation,” while “37% said they don’t think Trump has done this.”

Starr: Questioning Was Intended To “Embarrass” Sessions. The Washington Times (6/15, Persons) reports that former independent counsel Kenneth Starr said Thursday that Attorney General Sessions “was within his right to refuse to answer questions over possible claims of executive privilege.” Starr told CNN, “The attorney general was exactly right. He was protecting executive privilege, he wasn’t asserting it.” Starr added that “the repeated question of Mr. Sessions in open session was designed to “embarrass” the attorney general rather than get answers.” Said Starr, “He was asked continuously, repetitively, what conversations did you have with the president – to me, it was in fact a very well-known drama. ... I think it was an entire exercise that was intended in large part to embarrass the attorney general.”

Sen. Angus King said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (6/15), “I’ve done fair amount of research on executive privilege over the last couple of weeks. Usually what happens in these situations is a negotiation. Some kind of negotiation about what you want answered, which of the questions, what’s the specific information, what are the documents. ... I was frustrated because when you say ‘I’m going to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth,’ the basic premise is you’re going to tell everything you know. And if you aren’t, there has to be some legal basis for that and Mr. Sessions was asserting, I call it 'son of executive privilege.' I mean the President is the only one that can exert it, assert it, he didn't. Therefore, I thought the question should be answered."

CNN Sues To Force FBI To Turn Over Comey Memos. Brianna Keilar said on CNN's Situation Room (6/15) that CNN has filed a lawsuit in Federal court "trying to force the FBI to turn over the memos [former FBI Director] Comey wrote about his conversation with President Trump. The memos are not classified and the FBI has not explained its refusal so far to release them, despite a ruling from the Justice Department that it should expedite a Freedom of Information Act request to do so."

Putin Jokingly Offers Comey Asylum In Russia. The AP (6/15, Isachenkov, Vasilyeva) reports that in an appearance on a national call-in show Thursday, Russian President Vladimir Putin "sarcastically offered political asylum to fired FBI Director James Comey." Likening Comey to NSA leaker Edward Snowden, Putin said, "It sounds and looks very weird when the chief of a security agency records his conversation with the commander in chief and then hands it over to media via his friend. ... What's the difference then between the FBI director and Mr. Snowden? ... In that case, he's more of a rights campaigner defending a certain position than the security agency chief." Putin "added that if Comey 'faces some sort of persecution in connection with that, we are ready to offer political asylum in Russia to him as well.'" The Washington Times (6/15, Ault) also reports on Putin's comments.

Trump Touts Apprenticeships Order As Step Toward Closing "Skills Gap."

Media analyses offered mostly favorable assessments of the President's latest executive order, which aims to boost apprenticeship programs as part of an effort to close the so-called skills gap. The story, largely overshadowed by coverage of Wednesday's attack on GOP lawmakers and the Russia probe, was not mentioned on the major network newscasts, and wasn't a significant topic of discussion on cable. The AP (6/15, Kellman) reports that Trump's order will "roughly double to $200 million the taxpayer money spent on learn-to-earn programs," leaving it "to industry to design apprenticeships under broad standards to be set by the Labor Department." As the Washington Post (6/15, Wagner) indicates, the order "seeks to reorient and expand ApprenticeshipUSA, a grant program that was previously championed by the Obama administration and has been supported by Democrats and Republicans alike." The Washington Times (6/15, Miller) also says "the push for more apprenticeships, technical schools and other training for trades has been a touchstone for both Republican and Democratic presidents."

Several analysis, however, see a discrepancy between Trump's stated goal and proposed cuts to separate job training programs in the budget plan he submitted recently. CNBC (6/15, Breuninger), for example, said that "Trump wants to blow out the number of apprentices working for US companies – but it doesn't look like he'll spend the money to do it." Money (6/15, Bahler) cautioned that "critics" say yesterday's "announcement doesn't jive with the deep cuts...in his proposed budget," and Fortune (6/15, Abramson) that "advocates worry" Trump's initiative "won't come to fruition if the White House's proposed budget is implemented." Fortune also quoted Maria Flynn, President and CEO of Jobs for the Future, "who said she has had informal conversations with the White House about this initiative," as saying, "The Apprenticeship expansion would not have a negative impact. ... That comes if the proposed [budget] cuts are enacted because that would take a toll on lower skilled lower income young people and adults."

The coverage also included references to the names of Trump's old TV shows. The New York Post (6/15, Fredericks, Morrongiello) reports the President "made a mint as the longtime host of 'The Apprentice' and later 'Celebrity Apprentice' — and on Tuesday he signed an order that will boost funding and cut red tape to expand a popular federal apprenticeship program." Townhall (6/15, Pavlich) noted that "White House Special Advisor Ivanka Trump has been leading the apprenticeship project with Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta." The Daily Caller (6/15, Pfeiffer) reported Trump signed the order "surrounded by workers, as well as his daughter and...Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker."

To the New York Times (6/15, Scheiber), "Trump is taking one the most concrete steps of his presidency on Thursday to address the employment prospects of workers left behind by the current economic expansion." US News & World Report (6/15, Soergel) noted that "earlier in the day, a senior White House official said the order would direct the Department of Labor to work with the private sector on setting up what the administration is calling 'earn and learn' programs that would include some form of on-the-job training and compensation." According to this "official indicated... 'third-party' entities like companies, unions and trade associations would establish industry-specific criteria for such training programs, which the Labor Department then would consider for approval." In addition, "an apprenticeship task force also will reportedly be set up to gather additional skills-training input from those in the private sector."

Fox Business (6/15, De Lea) reported that the Administration "said Thursday that 90 percent of apprentices find employment upon completing their training programs and the average starting salary is $60,000." The Administration also said "technical program grads...see a '$300,000 lifetime increase in earnings' and don't owe student loans." The Washington Examiner (6/15, Pappas) quotes an unnamed "official" saying before the signing, "This is not in any way a negative comment on a traditional four-year university education. ... What this is about is choice, that there shouldn't be a one size fits all answer for education for the American worker. That there should be multiple pathways for workers to decide what is the best answer for them." The Chronicle of Higher Education (6/15, Mangan) reported that apprenticeships are "popular in Europe but...slow to catch on in the United States, partly because businesses balk at the cost and some students feel that career training carries a second-class stigma."

The Nation's Restaurant News (6/15, Ruggless) noted that "the National Restaurant Association Educational Foundation and the American Hotel & Lodging Association on Feb. 21 signed a $1.8 million contract with the US Department of Labor to launch the national Hospitality Sector Registered Apprenticeship project." The project "is seeking more than 450 apprentices in its inaugural year," with a focus "on management-level positions across the hospitality and foodservice industries." The News added that "foodservice partners so far include Chipotle Mexican Grill, Firehouse Subs, Golden Corral, Red Robin Gourmet Burgers, Sodexo and White Castle. Hotel partners span DoubleTree, Embassy Suites, Hilton, Waldorf Astoria and Wyndam."

Politico (6/15, Kullgren, Levine) reports that Trump "will cut back the federal government's role in creating and monitoring apprenticeship programs, a move that the White House says will help fill vacant jobs," and the AP (6/15, Kellman) refers to "questions about oversight of apprenticeship programs that begin and operate almost completely under the control of the company."

NYTimes Analysis: "Little Evidence" Of A "Skills Gap" In US. The New York Times (6/15, Scheiber) reports that with his order, Trump "joins a long-running and occasionally contentious debate over whether those workers have the skills they need to land desirable jobs." Acosta told reporters last week, for example, "The US faces a serious skills gap." The Times adds, however, that "there is little evidence that the economy is suffering from an unusually large skills gap." Economic indicators "do show a historically high number of job vacancies, as Mr. Acosta pointed out," but "research economists tend to believe that the skills gap accounts for, at most, a limited portion of this development. Many experts believe it plays almost no role at all."

Fortune (6/15, Abramson), meanwhile, said "both employers and economists agree with the White House that the skills gap...is something the country needs to address." The White House "noted that there are currently six million job vacancies in the United States, the highest number in nearly 40 years, but workers don't necessarily have the skills to fill them."

Obama Deputy Labor Secretary: "As Trump Discusses Job Training," Consider "Trump University." Politico (6/15, Kullgren, Levine) reports that "Chris Lu, former deputy Labor secretary under former President Barack Obama, said on Twitter that the executive order 'will remove gov't oversight of apprenticeship standards, which will reduce quality.'" He added, "As Trump discusses job training...consider his last foray into this area: Trump University. That worked out well." The Chronicle of Higher Education (6/15, Mangan) also noted that Lu added "a reference to the president's previous involvement in education."

Trump Deregulation Has Boosted Manufacturing, Coal Industry.

The Washington Times (6/15, Miller) reports in an analysis that rolling back what President Trump calls "job-killing regulations" has been "the only area" where he "has chalked up big wins on his economic agenda so far," but "that has been enough to quickly bolster confidence across the manufacturing sector and help revive the coal industry." Deregulation "has had the most immediate impact on the coal industry after Mr. Trump revoked Obama-era rules to combat climate change" as "Corsa Coal Corp. opened its first new deep mine in Pennsylvania in six years" last week and Alpha Natural Resources "announced the opening of a new mine in West Virginia." The Times adds that according to the National Association of Manufacturers, "the Trump administration's deregulations have played a major role in boosting business confidence to a 20-year high."

Labor Department: Weekly Jobless Claims Fall More Than Expected.

The Washington Post (6/15) reports that "the number of Americans filing for unemployment benefits fell more than expected last week, pointing to shrinking labor market slack that could allow the Federal Reserve to raise interest rates again this year despite moderate inflation growth." The Post adds, "Initial claims for state unemployment benefits dropped 8,000 to a seasonally adjusted 237,000 for the week ended June 10, the Labor Department said Thursday." Reuters (6/15, Mutikani) reports that the greater-than-expected fall in jobless claims "point[s] to shrinking labor market slack that could allow the Federal Reserve to raise interest rates again this year despite moderate inflation growth." The article quotes RDW Chief Economist John Ryding saying, "Labor is scarce and separations are low as companies try and hang onto skilled labor." Ryding adds, "At present, it appears the labor market data rather than the inflation data are in the driving seat for data-dependent Fed policy."

Mulvaney: No Strategy Determined Yet For Debt Ceiling Hike.

Reuters (6/15, Rascoe) reports that OMB Director Mulvaney said Thursday that the White House has yet to settled on a plan for working with Congress to raise the federal debt limit. Mulvaney said, "There are various thoughts about how to get something passed, but I don't think we've settled on how to move forward yet. Will it be a clean debt ceiling vote? Will it be a debt ceiling vote with some type of reforms attached to it? I don't think we've settled on that."

Pruitt Defends "Trimmed" EPA Budget Before House Panel.

The Washington Post (6/15, Dennis) reports that EPA Administrator Pruitt appeared before a House Appropriations subcommittee on Thursday to defend President Trump's budget proposal for his agency. Pruitt said, "I believe we can fulfill the mission of our agency with a trimmed budget, with proper leadership and management." Pruitt said the "proposal 'supports EPA's highest priorities' while aiming 'to reduce redundancies and inefficiencies.'"

Despite Trump's "Pencils Down" Order, Agency Still Studying Cost Of Carbon.

Science Magazine (6/15, Hess) reports that despite President Trump's "pro-coal rhetoric" and "pencils down" order, some of the federal government's "most influential number crunchers are still working on the social cost of carbon." While Trump has ordered "pencils down" on "federal work to estimate the monetary damage of greenhouse gas emissions," parts of the government "are still assessing the costs of using coal and other carbon sources." For example, the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs' Jim Laity, who leads the Natural Resources and Environment Branch, "said yesterday his office is 'actively working on thinking about the guidance' Trump gave in March."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Trump, Afghanistan Is Your War Now." The New York Times (6/16) editorializes that it is "not at all clear that adding 5,000 more troops — a roughly 50 percent increase over the current troop level of 9,800 — can make a difference, especially when the administration has yet to confront the basic problem of ensuring public safety and the larger political and economic issues that must be part of a comprehensive strategy to resolve the conflict." The Times argues that in order to "achieve any worthwhile outcome, the president must be committed and involved, as must his entire national security team. So far the Pentagon is running the show, largely by default."

"Taking The President's Self-Dealing To Court." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/15) says President Trump "seems determined not to let the Constitution stop him from doing what he wants," as he has "refused to divest his hotels, real estate properties, golf courses and other businesses, many of which earn money and receive other benefits from foreign governments and federal and state agencies." The Times argues that his "callous disregard for ethical norms is exactly the attitude that the founders sought to protect the country against, through the emoluments clauses they put into the Constitution."

Washington Post.

"Trump Promised To Do 'A Big Number On Dodd-Frank.' That Looks Unlikely." In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/15) writes that the "most striking" part about Treasury Department's proposal for financial regulatory reform, alongside the House's bill to repeal Dodd-Frank "is how little they actually have of resulting in a 'big number' on Dodd-Frank." The Post says the “most concerning aspect” of the proposal is its “disparagement” of Dodd-Frank’s mechanisms to ensure systemically important banks are adequately capitalized, as “swapping growth for stability is an acceptable trade-off in view of the disastrous buildup of risk that pre-crisis regulations permitted.” The proposal’s espousal of a regulatory “off-ramp” for well-capitalized banks is more palatable to the Post, as “the basic idea of trading regulatory relief for solid capital has promise, provided that the capital buffer is, indeed, high-quality and subject to rigorous and regular review.” The Post also endorses the proposal’s call for a looser regime for credit unions and community banks, as they aren’t important sources of systemic risk.

“Trump Needs To Be More Transparent – No Matter What The Courts Say About Emoluments.”

The Washington Post (6/15) says in editorial that regardless of how the courts rule in the suit filed by Maryland and DC accusing President Trump of violating the Constitution’s emoluments clause, Trump’s business operations “should be run by caretakers.” While his “current arrangement calls for no new foreign deals, but he should proscribe new domestic enterprises as well.” The Post adds that “there must be far more transparency. Mr. Trump should release not only his tax returns but a detailed, complete accounting of his businesses and ties.”

“FIFA Has A Human Rights Problem Of Its Own Making.” The Washington Post (6/15) editorializes that a new Human Rights Watch report shows preparations for the 2018 FIFA World Cup in Russia to follow the trend of allowing for human rights abuses in preparations for such events, as there are “intolerable labor conditions at seven stadium sites”: unpaid wages, sub-zero working conditions, irregular provision of work documentation, and up to 17 deaths. The Post says that Russia was called upon to improve worker protections post-Sochi, but “it would be naive to expect drastic change from a government that has thus far shown little respect for human rights.” However, the report’s recommendations for FIFA are “viable and necessary,” as the organization looks to solidify its commitment to human rights. FIFA should expand its monitoring system and improve transparency and reporting to allow for accountability to external observers. Ultimately, FIFA should follow through on its promise to take human rights considerations into account in the World Cup selection process.

Wall Street Journal.

“Lessons Of The Energy Export Boom.” The Wall Street Journal (6/15) says in an editorial that the US has become the world’s energy leader, exporting oil and gas, because of free trade and investment. The Journal says that Steve Bannon and Julia Hahn, then of Breitbart and now at the White House, criticized a 2015 GOP compromise with the Obama Administration to lift a decades-old ban on oil exports as a betrayal of conservative values, but that time has proven the compromise to have been the right decision.

“Washington Isn’t Istanbul.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15) endorses the DC police’s arrest warrants for 12 Turkish security agents serving on Turkish President Erdogan’s detail. The Journal says that while the warrants are symbolic since the agents are back in Turkey, they send an important message: America’s welcoming of foreign leaders doesn’t allow for the import of their brutal tactics against protesters.

“Congress Steps Up On Russia.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/15) voices its approval of the Senate-passed measure to impose new sanctions on Iran and Russia and expresses hope that the House will pass it and Trump will sign it.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “This morning at 7:57 a.m., Trump tweeted, ‘You are witnessing the single greatest witch hunt in American political history led by some very bad and conflicted people. #maga.’ He’s even making witch hunts great again. I don’t think witches play golf every weekend.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Negotiating with Kim Jong-Un goes like this. ‘You do everything I say and I won’t feed you to a boa constrictor. That is a deal, mom?’”

Stephen Colbert: “Looks like Trump’s going to need to change the hat, ‘Make justice obstructed again.’”

Stephen Colbert: “Mueller’s like Batman getting Flash, Green Lantern, and Wonder Woman to create an ‘Obstruction of Justice League.’”

Stephen Colbert: “Yesterday, the Senate overwhelmingly voted to impose new sanctions on Russia over election meddling. 97 to 2. Who voted against it? As usual, it was Wyoming Senators Boris and Natasha.”

Stephen Colbert: “Fox News is dropping its ‘Fair and Balanced’ slogan. I assume because they finally watched themselves.”

James Corden: "It was revealed yesterday that the FBI is now investigating President Donald Trump for obstruction of justice. Now, I don't know if Trump obstructed justice, but I'll tell you what he has obstructed: my ability to talk about anything other than Trump every night on this show."

James Corden: "Democrats are hoping that this will lead to impeachment. Republicans, on the other hand, are secretly hoping this leads to impeachment."

James Corden: "How do you guys think the President of the United States responded to these very serious allegations? If you guessed, on Twitter, I'm sorry to report that you were correct."

James Corden: "I have to say, Donald Trump is the first President to make regular use of the sarcastic 'nice.' Isn't he? You never heard FDR go, 'This is a date which will live in infamy. Nice!' Well, actually, Bill Clinton did use 'nice,' but it was different. It was when he said, 'I did not have sexual relations with that woman, nice!'"

James Corden: "[Donald Trump] tweeted: 'Why is that Hillary Clinton's family and Dems dealings with Russia are not looked at, but my non-dealings are?' It's a good question, and I think I can answer this one, Mr. President. It's because she's a grandma living in New York and you are the President of the United States. Well, for a few months, at least. Nice!"

Trevor Noah: "How long is President Trump going to talk about Hillary Clinton? In the distant future, President Trump will be in a hospital bed. The grim reaper will visit and he will be like, 'What about crooked Hillary?' And the grim reaper will be like, 'I am crooked Hillary.'"

Trevor Noah: "For seven years, Republicans have had one major legislative priority and that's been building a 60-foot-tall coal-powered mechanical Jesus to defend America. Just kidding. ... The main goal repealing and replacing Obamacare."

Trevor Noah: "Republican senators are so ashamed of the healthcare bill they are working on, they're putting it inside a porn magazine so no one will know what they're reading."

Jimmy Fallon: "Get this, though, the news that Trump is being investigated actually came out on his birthday, marking the first time someone blew out their candles and everyone else's wish came true."

Jimmy Fallon: "This morning, Trump responded to an article on Twitter and called it a phony story. I guess at this point, even Trump's tired of saying 'fake news.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that Fox News is dropping its slogan, 'Fair and Balanced.' Instead it will be replaced with the more appropriate slogan, 'Blonds and Hannity.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump will speak in Miami tomorrow. He'll be comfortable, because he still has strong support in Florida. Plus he's the state fruit."

Conan O'Brien: "Sunday is Father's Day. And the Trump kids are planning to give their father a tie. It will be the first time in a while that Trump has a tie that's not linked to Russia."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump is under investigation for obstruction of justice. That was confirmed today, when President Trump said he is not under investigation for obstruction of justice."

Conan O'Brien: "Expert say if President Trump were to fire Special Prosecutor Robert Mueller, all hell would break loose, or, as Trump calls that, Thursday."

Conan O'Brien: "Vladimir Putin has offered asylum to former FBI Director James Comey. When she heard, Melania Trump said, 'Hey, what about me?'"

Lawmakers Urge Zinke To Crack Down On Sexual Harassment At Interior.

The Hill (6/22, Costello) reports that "lawmakers on Thursday urged Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to crack down on sexual assault in his agency and pressed him on the steps he is taking to address the issue." Zinke was "testifying before the House Committee on Natural Resources on the department's fiscal 2018 budget request, but faced tough questions from Democrats on protecting agency employees from harassment and assault." Reps. Donald McEachin and Niki Tsongas "pushed Zinke to hold surveys on workplace satisfaction in the many offices making up the vast Interior Department." Zinke "told lawmakers he was taking the issue seriously and was committed to working with Congress." He said, "I share your concerns about sexual harassment and intimidation in the workplace. I think our overall survey of job satisfaction reflects something is wrong."

GOP New Mexico Lawmaker Wants To Shrink National Monument. The AP (6/22) reports that "members of New Mexico's delegation to Capitol Hill are at odds over whether to reduce the size of the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks National Monument under a review by the administration of President Donald Trump." At a congressional hearing, Republican Rep. Steve Pearce on Thursday urged Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to reduce the land area of the monument on the outskirts of Las Cruces to about one-tenth of its current size." But New Mexico's four Democratic U.S. lawmakers are urging Zinke "to leave intact both the Organ monument and the Rio Grande del Norte monument near Taos."

Darren Soto Pins Down Everglades, Drilling Assurances From Interior Secretary. Florida Politics (6/22, Powers) reports that during a House of Representatives Natural Resources Committee meeting, Rep. Darren Soto "pinned down Interior Department Secretary Ryan Zinke for assurances that the off-shore drilling ban is 'in no real jeopardy.'" Soto also "pressed Zinke on whether he would support a Wild & Scenic River Program designation for the Kissimmee River, and the secretary replied that he is coming to Florida soon to examine Everglades issues and would work with him, Gov. Rick Scott and others for solutions."

Yellowstone Grizzly Bear To Lose Endangered Species Protection.

The New York Times (6/22, Robbins) reports the Interior Department announced on Thursday that the Yellowstone grizzly bear will lose its protected status after 42 years on the Endangered Species list, though this move won't affect other populations of grizzlies in the lower 48 states. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said in a statement that long-term efforts have allowed the bear to thrive – its population has grown to 700 from fewer than 150. The Times says the conservation community is "split" on the de-listing. American Indians and some groups say ecological uncertainty prompted by climate change could lead to problems for the bear in the future. Meanwhile, others say the bears are adaptable and that their population is recovered.

The Hill (6/22, Cama) reports that Zinke said, "This achievement stands as one of America's great conservation successes; the culmination of decades of hard work and dedication on the part of state, tribal, federal and private partners. As a Montanan, I am proud of what we've achieved together."

The Washington Post (6/22, Brulliard) reports that the decision is “highly controversial and almost certain to be challenged in court by conservation organizations that still view the bears as vulnerable to both human and environmental threats.” Critics point to “several concerns about the move, including a decline in the white bark pine that grizzlies eat; that argument prompted a federal court to rule against an initial delisting in 2007.” Conservation groups also claim “that the Yellowstone grizzlies are an isolated group and that their routes to other bears in the region must be protected if they are to maintain genetic diversity.”

The Washington Times (6/22, Richardson) reports that “the governors of Idaho and Wyoming cheered the ruling, saying their states are prepared to take over management of the species from the Fish and Wildlife Service, while environmental groups ripped the move as premature.” Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead “commended the work of the Interagency Grizzly Bear Study Team and said the grizzlies ‘will be managed appropriately by our experts and Game and Fish.’” Mead said, “Grizzly bears have met or exceeded recovery objectives since 2003 and have long warranted delisting.”

The AP (6/22) reports that “Wyoming, Montana and Idaho officials say they won’t declare open season on grizzly bears once federal Endangered Species Act protections are lifted for the bruins in the Yellowstone National Park region.” The three states will “take over jurisdiction of Yellowstone-area bears once federal protections are lifted this summer have submitted management plans that allow for limited hunting.” However, “state officials say there is no rush. ”

At Independence Mall, Federal Workers Protest Trump Budget.

Philly \(PA\) (6/22, Von Bergen) reports that demonstrators on Thursday rallied on Independence Mall to protest budget cuts proposed by the Trump Administration. According to the article, organizers “hoped hundreds of federal employees would pop out of nearby federal office buildings to support the rally.” The article says that “about 100 people showed up.”

National Monuments Review Must Be Full And Fair.

In an op-ed for the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (6/22, Pfund, Baruch), Nancy Pfund and Tom Baruch, Co-Chairs of the Conservation for Economic Growth Coalition, argue that “the protection of national public lands – and the designation of national monuments, in particular – are important to the health and growth of entrepreneurial, innovative companies across America.” Since the authors “hold our public lands in such high esteem, Interior Secretary Zinke’s recommendation last week to shrink the boundaries of the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah raises serious concerns.” They inform President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke that their “coalition, and a large majority of western voters that support keeping protections for existing monuments in place, will be paying close attention to their next move.”

Don't Let Trump Open Cascade Siskiyou National Monument To Industry. In an op-ed for the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/22, Molidor), Jennifer Molidor, who leads sustainable food initiatives for the Center for Biological Diversity, warns that the review of national monuments is “the first step toward opening monuments to industrial development, including oil and gas drilling and large-scale logging.” Molidor asserts that the Cascade Siskiyou National Monument is “overwhelmingly supported by local communities, including mayors, city councils, state legislators and local tribes.” She urges the public to comment.

Trump Administration Outlines Strategy To Rescind Or Revise BLM Venting/Flaring Rules.

Natural Gas Intelligence (6/22, Passut) reports that the Trump Administration has “outlined its plans in federal court to ultimately rescind or revise a rule promulgated by the Department of Interior's (DOI) Bureau of Land Management (BLM) governing flaring and venting of associated natural gas on public and tribal lands.” Lawyers with the Justice Department on Tuesday filed a motion in U.S. District Court for the District of Wyoming. According to the motion, the Interior Department has “developed a three-step plan to revise or rescind the rule, while preventing any harm from compliance with the rule during the interim.” The BLM “took the first step last week, when it published a notice in the Federal Register that it wants to postpone the compliance dates for the rule from January 2018, pending judicial review.”

BOEM To Identify California Offshore Platform Decommissioning Issues.

The Oil and Gas Journal (6/22, Snow) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management is “trying to help identify issues that could arise as 27 offshore oil and gas platforms off southern California – all but three of which are in federal waters – are decommissioned, officials from the agency's Pacific Region told members of BOEM's Committee on Offshore Science and Assessment." The platforms, however, "could present unusual problems because they are attached to the ocean floor in considerably deeper water and have attracted different fish and mammals that will need to be dealt with, other BOEM Pacific Region specialists told OGJ during a break in the proceedings."

Airgun Blasts To Search For Oil Kill Plankton.

Florida Today (6/22) reports that "new research shows sound from airguns – like those proposed for surveying the Atlantic Ocean for oil and gas offshore of Florida – can kill zooplankton at distances of up to three-quarters of a mile away, more than 100 times the distance previously thought." The study by "Australian researchers found that blasts from a seismic airgun caused a two-to-threefold increase in dead adult and larval zooplankton within a day of the airgun blast."

Bureau Of Reclamation

House Passes Bill To Speed Permitting For Dams, Reservoirs.

The Hill (6/22, Henry) reports that "the House passed a bill on Thursday that supporters say will speed up permitting decisions for water-storage projects such as dams and reservoirs in drought-stricken areas of the United States." The legislation "would filter all permit requests for new dams and reservoirs through the Bureau of Reclamation, which would coordinate environmental permitting decisions from other agencies and allow some regulators to drop out of the process." Republican "supporters of the bill say it's a necessary step toward alleviating droughts and overhauling the federal permitting process." However, "most Democrats opposed the legislation, calling it a 'sham infrastructure bill' that takes aim at federal environmental rules."

Operators Shut 16 Percent Of Oil Output In U.S. Gulf Of Mexico: Regulators.

Reuters (6/22, Hampton) reports energy companies had shut down approximately 16 percent of Gulf of Mexico oil output as of midday Thursday because of Tropical Depression Cindy, according to the US Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement. Around 288,186 bpd of the region's production was affected. The BSEE also said that 39, around 5 percent, of oil platforms in the Gulf had been evacuated. Reuters (6/22, O'Brien, DiSavino) reports the US National Hurricane Center said flash flooding was possible in parts of Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas, while heavy rainfall was expected in Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. The Louisiana Offshore Oil Port suspended vessel offloadings, but did not expect interruptions to operations at its hub in Clovelly. Energy companies reported little impact on production. Shell suspended some well operations, while Anadarko, Eni and Enbridge evacuated non-essential personnel. Offshore natural gas production in the Gulf declined from about 3 bcfd to 2.3 bcfd on Wednesday, before increasing to 2.4 bcfd on Thursday. Gelber & Associates market analyst Daniel Myers said, "The tropical storm...promises to bring rain and cooler temperatures, curbing demand in the region."

Plan To Protect Salmon Backfires As Predator Birds Flee.

The AP (6/22) reports that "a plan to protect young salmon by killing double-crested cormorants on an island in the Columbia River has backfired after the birds fled the area halfway through their nesting season." The Army Corps of Engineers has "put a hold on killing the birds until it is clear if the colony will re-establish itself on the island." Conservation groups claim the plan to cut "the island's population of cormorants in half by 2018" is "harming the colony of birds." Bob Sallinger, conservation director for the Audubon Society of Portland, wrote in a letter to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "It's very possible that the combination of eagle predation activity and lethal control activity being conducted by the federal agencies are acting in a cumulative manner to put pressure on this colony. While the colony may have been able to withstand the pressure of eagles alone, the added impacts of pervasive shooting, egg oiling and other elevated human activities has significantly increased the scope, scale, frequency and intensity of threats to the cormorants."

Drought Helps North America's Largest White Pelican Refuge.

The AP (6/22, MacPHERSON) reports that "abnormally dry weather may bedevil farmers and ranchers, but is a boon for American white pelicans nesting on a North Dakota island known as North America's largest refuge for the big-billed birds." According to Neil Shook, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist and refuge manager, "a dry spell appears to have curbed years of wet weather and surging water levels that threatened to swamp the main nesting island at the Chase Lake National Wildlife Refuge." The article says that "an aerial survey completed this week showed some 27,120 breeding adults have returned from as far away as California and the Gulf Coast to raise their chicks."

Bradford Dam Removal Work Is Underway.

The Westerly \(RI\) Sun (6/23, Drummond) reports that "excavators have begun to carve a temporary channel around the Bradford dam in preparation for the dam's removal in July." The project, "a joint effort by The Nature Conservancy and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is part of a larger initiative to open 31 miles of the Pawcatuck River to allow the passage of migratory fish such as blueback herring, alewife, American shad and American eels, which breed upstream." John Torgan, the Nature Conservancy's Rhode Island director, said, "We're changing the way the Pawcatuck River and the Atlantic Ocean speak to each other. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is a terrific partner, and we're working closely together on fish passage and other conservation work all across the country."

New Mexico Water Official Moves To Clarify Ranchers' Rights.

The AP (6/22, Bryan) reports that "New Mexico's top water manager has fired the latest salvo in a battle with the federal government over the protection of an endangered mouse and the barring of livestock from certain streams and watering holes on national forest land." State Engineer Tom Blaine is "offering licenses to ranchers that clarify their water rights and allow them to use all sources of surface water on their grazing allotments." According to the article, "access to watering holes on the Lincoln National Forest has been an issue since federal managers began ordering closures and installing fences in the Lincoln and Santa Fe forests in 2014 after the mouse was listed as endangered."

Finally, A Real Public Hearing On Onondaga Lake Restoration Plan Will Be Held.

The Syracuse \(NY\) Post-Standard (6/22, Coin) reports that "after months of criticism that the public wasn't being adequately heard on the proposed Onondaga Lake restoration plan, a bona-fide public hearing will be held" Thursday night tonight. According to the article, "representatives from the state Department of Environmental Conservation and the federal U.S. Fish and Wildlife service will take comments and answer questions about the plan."

New Details Regarding Scarface Death Released In FOIA Request.

The Yellowstone Insider (6/22, Reichard) reports that "new details regarding the death of famous Yellowstone grizzly bear Scarface (Bear No. 211) have been released to the public." The article notes that "in the aftermath of Scarface's death, some grizzly advocates pointed to the murky circumstances behind Scarface's death as reason to preserve and even bolster protections for Yellowstone area grizzly bears under the Endangered Species Act."

Prestigious Award Presented To Genoa National Fish Hatchery Biologist.

WXOW-TV LaCrosse, WI (6/22, Amundsen) reports that "on Thursday morning, Angie Baran Dagendesh with Genoa National Fish Hatchery received the FWS Region 3 2016 Recovery Champion Award." Dagendesh was selected "because of her work with an endangered dragonfly species." Dagendesh "said she is honored to be recognized, but conservation is a team effort." She said, "I'm a little sheepish accepting it, because it's been such a collaborative program, and I'm very fortunate to be where I am to have the facilities and the staff and the support behind it with our Friends group and the other stations nearby."

Gosar Introduces Bill To Manage Grand Canyon Bison Population.

The Mohave Valley \(AZ\) Daily News (6/23) reports that Rep. Paul Gosar “introduced on Thursday the Grand Canyon Bison Management Act, which would allow the use of wildlife management and conservation techniques on the bison population within Grand Canyon National Park.” Specifically, the legislation would require both the Interior Department and the Arizona Game and Fish Commission “to coordinate on a plan to manage the bison population utilizing volunteer sportsmen holding a valid state-issued hunting license” and “the volunteers would then be allowed to cull bison and remove the harvested animal from the park.”

Glacier National Park Trail Reopens After Grizzly Activity.

The AP (6/22) reports that the National Park Service has “reopened the Avalanche Lake Trail after the path was closed due to grizzly bear activity.” The trail “on the west side of Glacier National Park reopened Wednesday afternoon.” It was “closed earlier this week after the park service received multiple reports of grizzly bears approaching people.”

Zion National Park Is Short On Money And Staff – So A Nonprofit Hopes To Supply $3 Million.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/22, Maffly) reports that “taxed to the hilt taking care of roads, bathrooms, shuttles and year after year of record visitation, Zion National Park lacks the budget and personnel” for “needs park officials would like addressed.” The Zion Natural History Association, the park’s private nonprofit partner, is “announcing a major reorganization Thursday at Salt Lake City’s Red Butte Gardens.” According to the article, “the association and its subsidiaries Zion Canyon Field Institute and Zion National Park Foundation are being folded under a single new name, Zion National Park Forever Project.” The group has “released a 2018 ‘field guide,’ outlining $3 million in funding needs it hopes to meet through private fundraising this year.”

Pearson To Celebrate 80th Anniversary Of Chkalov Flight.

The Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (6/22, Vogt) reports that “Russian officials from Seattle will visit Pearson Air Museum on Saturday to celebrate a much more harrowing trip to Vancouver by three countrymen.” The National Park Service will “observe the 80th anniversary of Valery Chkalov’s landmark transpolar flight from Moscow to Pearson Field.”

A Confederate Monument Solution, With Context.

TIME (6/22, Sanburn) reports that on July 15 the city of Richmond will “unveil a statue of Maggie Walker, the first black woman to charter a bank, and the National Park Service will conduct walking tours about her life.”

Editorial: An Encouraging Development For Cumberland Island.

The Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (6/21) editorializes that “although it came at the last minute, the National Park Service should be saluted for offering to help broker a settlement between the Park Service and private landowners over future land use on Cumberland Island.” The paper calls the development “encouraging, as it opens the door to a final, lasting resolution concerning Cumberland and it takes the matter out of the political arena.” It hopes the Park Service and private property owners, “who also have a stake in keeping Cumberland in its natural state, can negotiate in good faith and make a deal.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump Budget Would Cut Insular Affairs Funding For Guam.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (6/23, Mora) reports that “Guam Del. Madeleine Bordallo raised concerns about proposed cuts to the Office of Insular Affairs in President Trump’s budget request during a hearing of the House Committee on Natural Resources.” In a press release, Bordallo “said the budget will reduce technical assistance to the territories by $1 million and eliminate $3 million in discretionary compact-impact funding.” Bordallo said, “I am very concerned by the proposed cuts to the Office of Insular Affairs contained in the president’s budget. The government of Guam and many of our nonprofit organizations rely on technical assistance from (Insular Affairs) to modernize equipment, support programming and provide services in our community, and while relatively small, could have significant impacts on their abilities to carry out their missions.”

Hawai'i Delegation Leads Effort To Restore Healthcare For FAS Citizens.

The Big Island \(HI\) Now (6/21) reports that Sens. Mazie Hirono and Brian Schatz, and Reps. Colleen Hanabusa and Tulsi Gabbard “introduced legislation to reinstate Medicaid coverage for Freely Associated States (FAS) citizens living in the U.S.” The Covering our FAS Allies (COFA) Act would “restore Medicaid coverage, known in Hawai'i as Med-QUEST, for FAS citizens.” Hirono said, “We have a moral obligation to provide FAS citizens living in Hawai'i and across our country with access to medical care. The COFA Act will ensure that each FAS citizen in the United States can access healthcare and help states like Hawai'i dealing with unfunded mandates created by the compacts.”

Trump: “I Did Not Make, Do Not Have” Tapes Of Comey Conversations.

Media coverage of the President's tweets Wednesday declaring that he “did not make, and does not have” tapes of his conversations with former FBI Director Comey is largely negative for the President, with outlets tying the tweet to the reported obstruction of justice probe over Comey's firing. Outlets and lawmakers alike questioned why it took the President so long to set the record straight. For example, in its lead story, the CBS Evening News (6/22, lead story, 2:25, Mason) said that “for 41 days, the President kept us guessing after putting out a tweet that suggested he might be recording conversations, or at least those he had with...Comey. Today, we got the answer, it was a bluff.” Jonathan Karl reported on ABC World News Tonight (6/22, story 2, 3:10, Muir), “After six weeks of drama and controversy, President Trump today finally put an end to the speculation he started.” The President tweeted, “I have no idea whether there are ‘tapes’ or recordings of my conversations with James Comey, but I did not make, and do not have, any such recordings.”

The AP (6/22, Lemire, Tucker) says the President “end[ed] a month-long guessing game that he started,” but the New York Times (6/22, Landler) says he “left open the possibility that the conversations may have been taped without his knowledge.” The Hill (6/22, Fabian, Smilowitz) too says Trump “raised the possibility that a third party could have recorded his conversations with the ousted FBI director.”

USA Today (6/22, Jackson) reports the President “did not explain why he made the suggestion that he might have secretly recorded conversations” with Comey – “nor why he waited

41 days to clear up the confusion." According to Reuters (6/22, Becker, Mason), Trump "has privately told aides that the threat of the existence of tapes forced Comey to tell the truth in his recent testimony, a source familiar with the situation said."

Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said on Fox News' Hannity (6/22) that Trump's tweet was "100 percent accurate. ... I'm hearing the left say this tweet compelled James Comey to tell the truth. Well, why is that a bad thing? James Comey, the only thing we know about him is that he is a leaker and he did tell the truth" about whether Trump was under investigation. Sekulow added, "That's not an illegal act, getting someone...to tell the truth. It wasn't interfering with anything. ... It was the President stating what everybody knows. ... James Comey leaked a private conversation he had with the President of the United States to a friend, who leaked it to The New York Times. That's the only evidence we have of everything and that is what the crime is."

The Washington Post (6/22, Rucker, Demirjian) says that "for five and a half weeks, the president and senior White House officials refused to tell the public whether such tapes exist. But after an inquiry from congressional investigators about the tapes," Trump tweeted Thursday that no such recordings exist. Politico (6/22, Staff) says the tweet "came a day before a House Intelligence Committee deadline for the White House to produce any such tapes."

McClatchy (6/22, Welsh) likewise says that since the May tweet, "the White House had refused to confirm or deny the existence of such tapes. Press Secretary Sean Spicer would not comment, and Trump said cryptically in a press conference two weeks ago that 'maybe sometime in the very near future' he would elaborate on his tweet." Bloomberg News (6/22, Jacobs, Pettypiece) reports deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "declined to elaborate in a briefing with reporters afterward," saying, "The president's statement via Twitter today is extremely clear. I don't have anything to add." The Wall Street Journal (6/22, Ballhaus), Washington Times (6/22, Boyer), and Roll Call (6/22, Bennett) also report Sanders' remarks.

Sen. Brian Schatz said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22) it's "baffling" it took Trump 41 days to say there are no tapes, adding, "I think what shouldn't be lost on the American people is that his first tweet around tapes was essentially designed to intimidate James Comey."

Fox News' Special Report (6/22) reported House Intelligence Committee ranking member Adam Schiff said Trump's tweets "raised even more questions." In a statement, Schiff asked, "If the President had no tapes, why did he suggest otherwise? Was he trying to intimidate or silence James Comey? If so, did he take other steps to discourage potential witnesses from speaking out?" Schiff said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22) that Trump's tweet in May, in which the President said "Comey better hope there are no" recordings of their conversations, "certainly seems like an effort" to intimidate Comey, and "when you consider that also in light of James Comey's testimony," when he said Trump asked him "to drop the Flynn case, to make the Russia cloud essentially go away – and ultimately the firing of James Comey – you have to potentially ask...was this part of a concerted effort to alter the course of the Russia investigation? And that is obviously deeply troubling."

The New York Post (6/22, Moore) reports former House Speaker Newt Gingrich "said those who know the president realized all along he was bluffing." Said Gingrich, "I think he was in his way instinctively trying to rattle Comey."

A front-page Washington Post (6/22, A1, Phillip) analysis says the incident "highlights a new reality for Washington, which now must spring into action to bolster or refute presidential assertions of dubious origin and with no evidence to back them up." In many cases, the Post says, the claims have had "the opposite effect than what the president presumably intended — feeding into doubts about his credibility, deepening his legal woes and generating unflattering accounts that dominate the news for weeks at a time. And even when Trump has walked back a questionable comment, he has sometimes planted a new and similarly unsubstantiated claim."

Paul: Intelligence Community May Be Spying On Trump. Sen. Rand Paul said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22) that he's "concerned" the intelligence community may be spying on the President, "and I think the rules need to be explicit they don't listen to the President, and that they don't listen to members of Congress, and that the President doesn't listen to members of Congress." When asked for evidence to back that "startling accusation," Paul pointed to media reports about former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's conversations with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak. Paul added that a recent Washington Post article, which he says has "been somewhat disputed," said the intelligence community listened in on former President Obama's conversations with foreign persons "1500 times."

Sen. John Cornyn, asked about Paul's claim on CNN's Situation Room (6/22), said, "I don't find [Paul's claim] very believable."

Schiff said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22), "I hate to see members of the Senate or House make such claims without any factual basis. It echoes, of course, what the President has suggested or did suggest not only in this tweet, but when he earlier accused his predecessor of wiretapping him. ... Of course, it's not the case, and I think it brings disrespect to the office of the presidency to make such a suggestion."

Grassley: Comey Fanned "Conspiracy Theories" About Russian Election Interference. The Washington Times (6/22, Dinan) reports Sen. Charles Grassley "took to the Senate floor Thursday to blame...Comey for fanning 'conspiracy theories' about the US election that 'played right into Russia's hands.'" Grassley charged that Comey "kept hidden the fact that the president wasn't under investigation — allowing conspiracy theories and speculation to run wild" — and claimed he personally appealed to Comey "to reveal publicly...that the president wasn't a target of the Russia probe."

Breitbart: Comey May Have Leaked Information To Press While FBI Director. Breitbart (6/22, Wong) reports former FBI Director Comey "may have misled senator on May 3, when he testified to the Senate Judiciary Committee that he had never been an anonymous source in news reports related to the Russia investigation." According to Breitbart, "By that time, he had already leaked several private conversations he had with President Trump to his friend Benjamin Wittes," editor-in-chief of the blog Lawfare and former editorial writer for the Washington Post. Wittes wrote in a piece on May 18 that Comey had shared those conversations "over the previous few months." Breitbart (6/22, Pollak) reports separately that Comey was seen entering the New York Times building on Thursday.

Trump Says Mueller Team Staffed By "Hillary Clinton Supporters."

The Washington Examiner (6/22, Siegel) reports President Trump is "questioning the independence" of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation because his staff "is full of people who backed his Democratic opponent in the 2016 campaign." In a clip of an interview set to later this morning on "Fox & Friends," the President said, "I can say that the people that have been hired are all Hillary Clinton supporters." Politico (6/22, Lima) reports Trump, however, "would not say whether he believed...Mueller should recuse himself," but cast Mueller's relationship with James Comey as "very bothersome."

Coats Reportedly Says Trump "Obsessed" With Russia Probe. NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 3, 2:20, Holt) reported it "has learned from a US official familiar with the conversation that the President's Director of National Intelligence testified today behind closed doors" that President Trump has "seemed obsessed with that Russia investigation." CNN's Situation Room (6/22) reported that DNI Coats and NSA Director Rogers in a closed meeting "confirmed that the President suggested they put out statements denying any collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia."

The CNN (6/22, Bash, Perez, Raju) website reports that "sources say both men went further than they did in June 7 public hearings, when they provided little detail about the interactions," and CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22) reported that multiple sources say that in meetings with special counsel Mueller's team, Rogers and Coats described their "interactions with the President as odd and uncomfortable."

Congress Investigating Russian Investment Fund With Ties To Trump Officials. According to CNN (6/22, Frank, Investigates), Senate investigators are "examining the activities of a little-known $10-billion Russian investment fund whose chief executive met with a member of President Donald Trump's transition team four days before Trump's inauguration, a congressional source" said. The source said the Senate Intelligence Committee is investigating the Russian fund "in connection with its examination of discussions between White House adviser Jared Kushner and the head of a prominent Russian bank," Vnesheconombank (VEB), which oversees the fund.

Russian Official Investing In Trump Palace Real Estate. The Miami Herald (6/22, Dobrovolskaya, Nehamas) reports that Igor Zorin is "a Russian government official who's spent nearly $8 million on waterfront South Florida homes, hardly financially prudent given his bureaucrat's salary of $75,000 per year." Zorin's real estate holdings include three condo units at Trump Palace, "a ritzy tower in Sunny Isles Beach built by a local developer and branded by the Trump Organization."

Beijing Fears Mueller Will Investigate White House Dealings With China. The Washington Free Beacon (6/22, Gertz) reports that the "political hysteria sweeping Washington over allegations of Russian meddling in the presidential election is reverberating in China," where the government is "worried that a similar wave of anti-China sentiment will take hold in the United States." According to "China watchers in and out of government," Beijing fears special counsel Robert

Mueller “will add White House dealings with China to his investigation of Russian election meddling.”

Congress Urged To Subpoena Administration Officials. Former general counsel of the House of Representatives Irvin B. Nathan writes in the Washington Post (6/22) that the Administration “has no right to stonewall like this. It’s time for members of Congress to start using their legal powers to compel answers.” Nathan argues that “Congress and the public will not get the answers they deserve until lawmakers issue subpoenas and pursue contempt charges against officials who deem questions ‘inappropriate’ to answer. If congressional committees are serious about getting to the bottom of their investigations, they will have to be much more aggressive and use the tools provided by the Constitution and the courts.”

Trump Defense Lawyer Says He’s No “Snowflake.” In an interview with Reuters (6/22, Freifeld), President Trump’s defense lawyer John Dowd said, “I fight hard. I believe that’s what I’m supposed to do. I am not a snowflake, I can tell you that.” Reuters says the 76-year-old Washington lawyer “brings criminal defense and government investigation experience to Trump’s legal team.”

Trump Touts Johnson Testimony, Questions Why Obama Didn’t Stop Russian Hacking.

The CBS Evening News (6/22, story 2, 2:30, Mason) reported Trump “blasted the Russia investigations again last night.” Trump was shown saying, “I mean, they have phony witch hunts going against me.” CBS (Pegues): “And he continued on Twitter this morning. ‘Former Homeland Security Adviser Jeh Johnson is latest top intelligence official to state there was no grand scheme between Trump & Russia.’” Johnson and other DHS officials testified yesterday about Russian hacking during the 2016 election. Officials said Russian hackers attacked election-related systems in 21 states, but “today, sources told CBS News, nearly twice that many showed evidence of breach.” While Trump in another tweet asked why the Obama Administration “didn’t stop them,” Pegues reported that congressional investigators are now “interested in whether Trump campaign associates obtained information from hacked voter databases.”

The Washington Times (6/22, Persons) also reports on the President’s tweet, while Politico (6/22, Nelson) says he “sought to turn the tables Thursday morning on the ongoing investigations into the 2016 campaign, wondering online why his predecessor had been unable to stop Russian government efforts to interfere in last November’s presidential race.” Trump also “suggested that his position — that there was no connection between his campaign and the Kremlin’s efforts to interfere in the race — had been vindicated” by Johnson’s testimony. An AP (6/22, Lucey) “Fact Check,” however, disputes Trump’s claim, saying Johnson testified that “he was not aware of any information beyond what’s been reported publicly and what the US intelligence community has gathered.”

CNN’s Situation Room (6/22) reported White House deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, when asked Wednesday if Trump believes Russia interfered in the 2016 election, “said, he thinks ‘it probably was Russia.’”

“Pushing Back” Against Johnson, DNC Says Russians Ejected From System Before DHS Offer. Politico (6/22, Wright) reports the Democratic National Committee is “pushing back” after former DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson testified before Congress that the DNC “rebuffed the agency’s offer to help.” According to DNC officials, it “had kicked Russian hackers out of its computer systems by June of last year — two months before the Department of Homeland Security called to offer assistance.” CNN (6/22, Raju, Lobianco), meanwhile, reports that the House Intelligence Committee next week plans to interview John Podesta, Hillary Clinton’s 2016 campaign chairman “whose hacked email account became central to Russian meddling in the US election last year, according to multiple sources familiar with the matter.”

Townhall (6/22, Pavlich) reports Rep. Trey Gowdy said Thursday that he “is baffled as to why DNC officials wouldn’t take Johnson up on the offer and wonders what they may have been hiding.” Rep. Jason Chaffetz, meanwhile, said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (6/22), “Remember, all of this hacking happened during the Obama Administration and the Homeland Security Secretary is trying to help Democrats. The Democrats put up their stiff arm and say, ‘Back off. No help needed.’ Now after the fact they’re somehow claiming it was Donald Trump’s problem and Donald Trump’s fault.” Chaffetz added that “they thought they were on a glide path to the presidency. They didn’t want to have any hiccups. But Donald Trump ran a much more effective campaign. And now after the fact, the Democrats want to blame the hacking on Donald Trump.”

Media Analyses: New GOP Healthcare Bill Faces Tough Odds For Passage.

The draft healthcare bill released Thursday by Senate Republican leaders receives extensive media attention, including nearly 11 and a half minutes of reporting on the network evening newscasts – all three of which led with the story Thursday evening. Coverage and commentary are generally negative both in terms of the content of the bill – with much attention paid to proposed changes to Medicaid – and in terms of its chances for passage – with a great deal of focus on the fact that four conservative Republican senators have voiced their opposition and a number of Republican moderates have expressed concern while GOP leaders can afford to lose only two votes from within their caucus. USA Today (6/22, Kelly, Collins), for example, says it is unclear whether the measure “can attract enough support from both moderate and conservative Republicans to pass,” as Democrats “are united against it,” meaning McConnell can lose only two Republican votes. In the lead story for NBC Nightly News (6/22, lead story, 2:50), Lester Holt said that while Democrats “predictably are unhappy” about the plan, it is “dissent among a handful of Republicans that threaten to doom” it.

Also on NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 2, 2:05), Holt said that “there are real people with very real problems across this country, left in suspense over the future of healthcare. Many are caught between uncertainty of how the Republican plan will affect them and the dwindling choices and rising premiums under Obamacare,” and a pair of analyses made some dire predictions about what the potential impacts of the Senate proposal might be. A USA Today (6/22, Groppe) story outlines “how the bill released Thursday could affect you,” including the potential loss of subsidies and Medicaid coverage and higher costs for older people, among others, and McClatchy (6/22, Pugh, Douglas) says the bill, which was “negotiated in secret by a hand-picked group of 13 male senators,” would “likely cause millions of Americans to lose their Medicaid and private insurance marketplace coverage,” and “could make coverage more expensive for many sicker, older and low-income individuals.”

The New York Times (6/22, Pear, Kaplan) reports that the Senate GOP bill takes “a major step” toward Republicans’ goal of repealing the ACA. The Times adds that while Senate Republicans had said their bill would be “a top-to-bottom revamp of the health bill passed by the House last month,” the measure they delivered “maintains its structure, with modest adjustments.” USA Today (6/22, Kelly, Collins) says the bill “would make deep cuts in Medicaid, end the mandate that everyone buy insurance, repeal taxes on wealthy Americans and insurance companies, and strip funding from Planned Parenthood for a year.” Bloomberg News (6/22, Dennis, Litvan) reports that the GOP plan “would provide an additional $50 billion over four years to stabilize insurance exchanges, relying on a mechanism Republicans have criticized in the past as a way to keep insurers in the marketplace.”

The Wall Street Journal (6/22, A1, Armour, Peterson, Radnofsky) says that while the measure relies on the ACA’s tax credits to provide subsidies, it would impose stricter income eligibility requirements for the subsidies, which means fewer people would be eligible. USA Today (6/22, O’Donnell) reports the bill would extend “funding for subsidies to reduce out-of-pocket insurance costs” for two years, which could benefit insurers and millions of consumers. Insurers have cited “uncertainty over these cost sharing subsidies” as a reason why they increased premiums or left certain markets.

A New York Times (6/22, Sanger-Katz) analysis says that while the ACA “gave health insurance to millions of Americans by shifting resources from the wealthy to the poor and by moving oversight from states to the federal government,” the Senate proposal “pushes back forcefully on both dimensions.” Its “largest benefits go to the wealthiest Americans, who have the most comfortable health care arrangements, and its biggest losses fall to poorer Americans who rely on government support.”

The National Review (6/22, Lowe) says the “discussion draft” unveiled by McConnell “largely resembles” the House bill, while the Washington Times (6/22, Howell) says the Senate measure “softens the edges of the House bill that President Trump reportedly called ‘mean,’” but “maintains the same basic outline as the House proposal” McConnell, the Times adds, must now “sell it to wary conservatives and moderates within his own party, and with a narrow margin of error.” A Washington Post (6/22, Goldstein) analysis says the details of the plan “suggest that it helps insurers and many consumers primarily in the near term and, in important ways, offers less support than a comparable plan the House GOP adopted last month.” The analysis states that “by the end of the coming decade,” the Senate bill would offer $38 billion less to states “to help them make insurance affordable” than did the House bill.

Breitbart (6/22, Boyle) describes the challenge facing McConnell in shepherding the bill through the Senate as “a tightrope walk,” a “difficult dance,” and a “hurdle-filled battle,” but to the AP (6/22, Fram, Alonso-Zaldivar) McConnell “seemed determined to muscle the measure through his chamber next week.” The New York Times (6/22, Steinhauer) reports that McConnell may “be convinced that the Senate can pass this bill” but if he is “unable to pull together enough support on the health care bill over the next week, it would seem likely at first glance that he would make the dreaded call to the White House to let the president know that he lacked the votes." However, he may "decide that the matter cannot be closed without a vote and take his chances that recalcitrant members can be pulled along."

Mary Bruce said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/22, lead story, 3:50, Muir) that "few Republican Senators are racing to defend" the plan. This, as Sens Ted Cruz, Mike Lee, Ron Johnson, and Rand Paul who the Los Angeles Times (6/22, Mascaro) describes as "four key conservative senators," on Thursday announced their opposition to the bill, saying in a statement, "Currently, for a variety of reasons, we are not ready to vote for this bill, but we are open to negotiation and obtaining more information before it is brought to the floor."

Paul told CNN's Situation Room (6/22), "I think the marketplace works better. I think freedom works better than coercion. And I think the federal government shouldn't be giving any money to insurance companies. Insurance companies made $15 billion in profit last year. The new Republican bill will give them $110 billion to bring down prices, but to me that's a ludicrous economic concept. That would be like telling America, new cars cost too much, we're going to have a stabilization fund so your new car will cost less." In an interview before the draft was released and before he announced his opposition, Johnson said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/22), "From my standpoint, what I've been saying, we should be repairing the damage done by Obamacare and working with our Democratic colleagues to transition to a system that does work, that restrains, the growth in healthcare costs, brings down those premiums that were artificially driven higher and really works for the American people."

The Washington Post (6/22, A1, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) says that there were some "doubts about whether GOP senators who came out swiftly and forcefully against the bill were simply posturing in order to try to move it in a more favorable direction when it heads to the Senate floor...and eventually claiming credit for reshaping the legislation before a final vote." Sen. James Lankford said on CNN's The Lead (6/22), "I have a lot of questions still, a lot of things we have talked about. It's 142 pages of text, but there's things piled into that text that we've got to decipher. Put me down as a solid undecided. I'm quite confident we will have quite a few suggestions over the weekend." Lankford added that he has "identified about six areas where I have problems and suggestions. None of those are show stoppers, but things that...are problems we need to fix before we get this into law."

At the same time, "key centrists" have raised "initial concerns about the cuts to Medicaid," the Washington Examiner (6/22, King) reports. Sen. Dean Heller said in a statement, "At first glance, I have serious concerns about the bill's impact on Nevadans who depend on Medicaid," and Sen. Susan Collins "also has a 'number of concerns,' according to a statement." Collins said that she "wants to see what the Congressional Budget Office thinks about the draft's impact on insurance coverage and spending." The agency is expected to release a score early next week.

The Washington Post (6/22, A1, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) says the senators' opposition "places the effort to overhaul the American health-care system in jeopardy as it heads for an anticipated vote in the Senate next week." Likewise, John Roberts said on Fox News' Special Report (6/22) that "many on both sides of the aisle" say "the prognosis is not good." Townhall (6/22, Pavlich) says that given the uniform Democratic opposition, "the legislation as it stands is sunk and will not pass." Nancy Cordes reported in the lead story for the CBS Evening News (6/22, story 4, 2:35, Mason) that "within hours," the bill "went from being a secret to being a lightning rod." GOP leaders, she added, "must now find ways to appease both wings of their party, in the face of universal opposition from Democrats."

However, in a somewhat more positive assessment, The Hill (6/22, Bolton) says the conservative opposition "is a blow to the bill but doesn't mean it's dead yet." That said, McConnell is under pressure from conservatives "to revise the legislation and move it further to the right" at the same times he "under pressure from GOP centrists, creating a difficult balancing act" in which any move he makes "to one of the two sides risks losing support from the other."

Senate Majority Whip Cornyn was nonetheless optimistic about the prospects for winning over the senators, telling CNN's Situation Room (6/22), "I talked to senator Cruz after this statement was released, and basically, he reaffirmed that they're not opposed to getting the bill, getting the yes eventually, they're not there yet because of the way the bill is written so far. But that's why we call this a discussion draft so we can have that discussion so we can build on it and get to the 50 plus one that we need." Politico (6/22, Everett, Haberkorn, Cancryn) cites senators who said Republicans are hopeful that "health insurance groups will ultimately come to the legislation's defense," but adds that "the bill's fate will rest on how factions on either end of the conference's ideological spectrum react to the bill's sweeping proposals," and "conservatives, moderates and senators from Medicaid expansion states all remained on the fence.”

In a separate story, Politico (6/22, Everett) reports that while McConnell “is far away from having a commitment for the 50 votes needed for passage, according to senators who spoke on anonymity,” no one “seems to be betting against the wily majority leader as he plans for one of the most critical roll call votes of his career next week.” Politico adds that McConnell has followed a “slow burn” strategy, “allowing his members to vent in private party discussions while gradually writing a bill that takes in their considerations over the past six weeks.”

A USA Today (6/22, Page) analysis says that after promising to repeal the ACA “almost from the day it was passed,” for Republicans, the “political bill has now come due, whether [they] are ready to pay it or not.” USA Today adds that if the measure passes, and the House agrees to it, “GOP voters can cheer the first big legislative victory of the Trump presidency,” and if it does not, “they can hold responsible the handful of Republicans who bring the bill down.” However, if it is never brought to a vote, “they could blame the entire party.”

The Washington Post (6/22, Phillips) considers several “very possible scenarios” that could cause the measure to fail. Among them: “anti-Obamacare purists draw a line = the bill is dead.” Under another scenario, “Midwest senators just can’t agree to cut off Medicaid = the bill is dead.” In a third scenario, “at least three senators who have state-specific issues draw a line = the bill is dead.” In another, the CBO “estimates 20+ million fewer people would be insured than are under Obamacare AND/OR doesn’t predict significant premium decreases = the bill is dead.” Reuters (6/22, Cowan, Cornwell) reports that the CBO is expected to deliver its score of the new measure early next week.

Trump: Bill Needs A “Little Negotiation.” The Washington Times (6/22, Boyer) reports that President Trump told reporters Thursday that the Senate bill “is in good shape but needs a ‘little negotiation.’” Trump said, “It’s going to be very good,” adding that “a little negotiation” is necessary to get the measure to his desk. The Washington Examiner (6/22, Siegel) reports that Trump expressed his support in a tweet Thursday, writing, “I am very supportive of the Senate #HealthcareBill. Look forward to making it really special! Remember, ObamaCare is dead.”

Meanwhile, Politico (6/22, Nussbaum) says Trump’s aides “refused to commit” on whether the President will support the bill. Deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders “demurred” Thursday when asked during a news briefing whether Trump supports the bill, and “on two of the most controversial issues at hand — cuts to Medicaid and to Planned Parenthood — Sanders declined to indicate whether Trump has any firm position.” Sanders said, “He wants to bring the stakeholders to the table, have those conversations and we’ll get back to you. ... We’ve been talking about reforming health care for a number of years; I don’t think it’s moving too fast.” Roll Call (6/22, Bennett) describes a “striking silence” from the White House in reaction to the bill, highlighting that there was no “paper statement about the bill, either under Trump’s name or that of any senior official,” and that Sanders “declined to discuss any of its contents.” According to Sanders, “there are no plans – for now, at least – for the president to comment on any provision in the Senate bill.”

HHS Secretary Price discussed the bill on Fox News’ Hannity (6/22), saying, “Is it everything that everybody wants, absolutely not. But we’ve got 52 senators and we are working to try to make certain that it is able to pass the Senate and then have the House support it. But what it does is move us in such a better direction than where we are right now. Remember where we are. We’ve got over a third of the counties in these nations were not going to have any choices for the purchase on the exchange next year. ... Where we are right now is in a terrible place in the individual and small group market. That is what we are trying to fix.”

Cruz Advocates “Consumer Freedom Amendment” To Bill. The Hill (6/22, Hellmann) reports that Cruz wants to offer what he is calling a “Consumer Freedom Amendment” to the bill that “would allow insurers to sell plans that are not compliant with ObamaCare requirements.” The amendment “would leave existing ObamaCare plans on the individual market, while also allowing insurers to sell plans that don’t comply with requirements of the Affordable Care Act.” Cruz told The Hill, “It will enable a lot more people to be able to afford buying health insurance.”

On NBC Nightly News (6/22, story 2, 2:05), Holt said that “there are real people with very real problems across this country, left in suspense over the future of healthcare. Many are caught between uncertainty of how the Republican plan will affect them and the dwindling choices and rising premiums under Obamacare,” and a pair of analyses made some dire predictions about what the potential impacts of the Senate proposal might be. A USA Today (6/22, Groppe) outlines “how the bill released Thursday could affect you,” including the potential loss of subsidies and Medicaid coverage and higher costs for older people, among others, and McClatchy (6/22, Pugh, Douglas) says the bill, which was “negotiated in secret by a hand-picked group of 13 male senators," would "likely cause millions of Americans to lose their Medicaid and private insurance marketplace coverage," and "could make coverage more expensive for many sicker, older and low-income individuals."

Obama, Democrat Lawmakers Blast Senate GOP Bill. Opposition to the plan was vocal Thursday as former President Obama joined Democratic lawmakers in criticizing the plan. Politico (6/22, Conway) reports that former Obama, "who has largely stayed out of the political fray and refrained from publicly criticizing" Trump, on Thursday "denounced the Senate proposal...calling the Republican bill a massive transfer of wealth to the richest people in America with a 'fundamental meanness' at its core." Obama wrote in a Facebook post, "Simply put, if there's a chance you might get sick, get old, or start a family — this bill will do you harm. ... And small tweaks over the course of the next couple weeks, under the guise of making these bills easier to stomach, cannot change the fundamental meanness at the core of this legislation."

The Washington Post (6/22, Eilperin) says Obama called the Senate bill "a massive transfer of wealth from middle-class and poor families to the richest people in America," and urged "Americans to push back against congressional Republicans." The Washington Times (6/22, Howell) reports that Obama "said he realizes that repealing and replacing his namesake law is a 'core tenet' for Republicans," but added, "Still, I hope that our Senators, many of whom I know well, step back and measure what's really at stake, and consider that the rationale for action, on health care or any other issue, must be something more than simply undoing something that Democrats did."

Chief Deputy Minority Whip Sen. Brian Schatz said on CNN's Situation Room (6/22), "What strikes me is that it moved to the right. I think there was a sense that maybe in order to accommodate the folks who have concerns about Medicaid populations that it would be as President Trump was talking about less mean. They went totally in the opposite direction and cut Medicaid really deeply. ... This is not to make the program more sustainable. This is not to fund other government priorities. This is specifically for the purpose of giving a tax cut of about $800 million to the wealthiest Americans."

Sen. Bernie Sanders said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/22), "If you throw 23 million people off of health insurance, if you cut Medicaid by over $800 billion, there is no question but that thousands of Americans will die." Sanders added, "The purpose of this whole legislation" is "to provide $500 billion in tax breaks for the top two percent, for the insurance companies, for the drug companies, and other major corporations. This is barbaric. This is what oligarchy is all about."

The Washington Times (6/22, Ernst) describes Sen. Elizabeth Warren as having been "enraged" by the bill, adding that she "took to her social media accounts to accuse 'cruel' Republicans of enriching those 'who make a lot of money' by shortchanging '30 million kids who get their health care through Medicaid.'" Warren wrote in a tweet, "I've read the Republican 'health care' bill. This is blood money. They're paying for tax cuts with American lives."

Sen. Al Franken said on CNN's The Lead (6/22), "This is a terrible bill" because "it cuts Medicaid to the same degree that the House bill does. It just delays it some, and it's hundreds of billions of dollars from Medicaid, which helps kids, the disabled, seniors. Sixty percent of seniors get their nursing home care from Medicaid. And all of that money that's cut from Medicaid pays for huge tax cut for people who are doing very well."

Sen. Claire McCaskill was asked on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/22) about Trump's claim that Democrats do not want to work with Republicans on healthcare. McCaskill said, "That's just dumb. It's just dumb. Of course, we want to fix health care. Many of us have been trying for several years to put fixes in place that would stabilize the individual market. But our colleagues were interested in using Obamacare or ACA as a political 2X4. They wanted to win elections with it because healthcare is hard and obviously, we made mistakes and things do need to be fixed."

USA Today (6/22, Estepa) reports that protesters, some of whom were in wheel chairs, staged a sit-in Thursday in front of McConnell's office "to voice their opposition to health care legislation that would make deep cuts to Medicaid." The Washington Post (6/22, Dvorak) highlights "real-life lobbying done by a brigade of 12 intrepid families who pushed their way through Capitol Hill's offices and shared their stories and the stories of nearly 150 other families from across the country who feel ignored." These families were "showing Capitol Hill folks the actual kids their wheeling, dealing, backroom bargaining and political gamesmanship will affect in the repeal and replacement of the Affordable Care Act."

Commentary about the plan is almost universally critical as well. Michael Hiltzik writes in his column for the Los Angeles Times (6/22) that the plan is "a rollback of health coverage for millions of Americans that could cost the lives of tens of thousands a year." In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (6/21), Alan S. Blinder, a professor of economics and public affairs at Princeton University and a former vice chairman of the Federal Reserve, is highly critical of the secrecy with which the Senate bill was prepared.

A Bloomberg View (6/22) editorial says the proposal is “a travesty,” and argues that attempts “to shame Republicans for this attack on the poor, old and sick, who will face the brunt of the cuts, are unlikely to succeed.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/22) says the plan, if enacted, might “end up as mostly a massive, unpaid-for tax cut for wealthy people and industries with pull on Capitol Hill.” The Post casts the plan as a “choice between Americans’ physical health and the nation’s fiscal health,” and calls on senators to “end this repeal-and-replace disaster now.”

In an editorial, the New York Times (6/23) writes that Senate Republicans have not produced a healthcare bill but “a plan to cut taxes for the wealthy by destroying critical federal programs,” including Medicaid. The Times adds the bill is not any “less brutal” than the House’s version, and the Senate per-person cap on Medicaid spending could be worse. The Times calls on Republican senators opposed to the bill to not fall for the “cheap gimmicks” that will be offered in an effort to buy their support and to vote against the bill.

USA Today (6/22) says in an editorial that the plan “deserves the old surgeon general’s warning about cigarettes: This product may be hazardous to your health.” USA Today adds that the measure “is mean in ways that are abundantly clear, and havoc-wreaking in ways are not,” and argues that attempting “to ram it through, before those impacts become clear for all to see, is no way to deal with life-and-death issues and a big chunk of the American economy.”

The traditionally conservative editorial page of the Wall Street Journal (6/22) is an outlier this morning, arguing that while the plan is not perfect, it represents a significant improvement over the current situation.

Trump Vows To Build Wall, Calling Mexico World’s “Second Deadliest Country.”

President Trump tweeted Thursday evening, “Mexico was just ranked the second deadliest country in the world, after only Syria. Drug trade is largely the cause. We will BUILD THE WALL!” The Los Angeles Times (6/22, Wigglesworth) says that Trump “appeared to refer to a report released May 9 by the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies, which concluded that criminal violence in Mexico had reached ‘a level akin to armed conflict’” due to 23,000 homicides in 2016. However, “some observers raised objections to the report’s methodology and argued that it incorrectly characterized Mexico as a country in armed conflict.” But Breitbart (6/22, Starr) says the President “may have been referring to a new report by Mexico’s National Public Security System” that recorded violence in Mexico since the start of 2017.

Trump, Peña Nieto Urged To Build Solar Panel Field, Not Wall, Along Border. In a Wall Street Journal (6/22) op-ed, Vasilis Fthenakis of the Center for Life Cycle Analysis at Columbia University, and Ken Zweibel, the former director of the Solar Institute at George Washington University, write that rather than building a US-Mexico border wall, President Trump and President Enrique Peña Nieto should construct a 2,000-mile string of photovoltaic panels on the Mexican side of the border. Building it there would reduce costs, and provide enough energy for about 500,000 US homes or many more in Mexico. The vast field would also be difficult to sneak across.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Senate’s Unaffordable Care Act.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/23) writes that Senate Republicans have not produced a healthcare bill but “a plan to cut taxes for the wealthy by destroying critical federal programs,” including Medicaid. The Times adds the bill is not any “less brutal” than the House’s version, and the Senate per-person cap on Medicaid spending could be worse. The Times calls on Republican senators opposed to the bill to not fall for the “cheap gimmicks” that will be offered in an effort to buy their support and to vote against the bill.

“The Young And Brash Saudi Crown Prince.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/23) writes that newly-designated Saudi crown prince Mohammed bin Salman is “more in tune with the nation’s overwhelmingly young population,” and in some ways “is just what his country needs.” However, the Times warns against his “impetuosity and hard-line foreign policy.” In both the country’s escalation in Yemen’s civil war and the current tensions with Qatar, “the prince acted without thinking through the consequences.” The Times calls for him to be guided by “more experienced hands, including the deposed crown prince, whom many American officials consider the United States’ best friend in the royal family and a singular partner against terrorism.”

“Albany Turns Its Back On City Schools.”

Washington Post.

“Senate Republicans’ Obamacare Replacement Is Bad For America’s Health.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/22) says the Senate GOP’s healthcare plan, if enacted, might “end up as mostly a massive, unpaid-for tax cut for wealthy people and industries with pull on Capitol Hill.” The Post casts the plan as a “choice between Americans’ physical health and the nation’s fiscal health,” and calls on senators to “end this repeal-and-replace disaster now.”

“Philando Castile’s Death Poses Questions That Still Need Answering.” The Washington Post (6/22) editorializes that while police officer Jeronimo Yanez’s acquittal from all charges in last year’s fatal shooting of Philando Castile “must be accepted.” However, it is imperative that an independent review by federal law enforcement look into why Castile, a black man with a legal gun permit who follow Yanez’s directions, was killed – including the question of race. The Post asks whether the current Administration can acknowledge the need for such a probe, which “should be vigorously pursued despite the change in administrations to one openly disdainful of the need for police reform.” The Post says the case “demands better answers than have so far been supplied.”

“The Trump Administration Fails To Call Out Vietnam On Its Dismal Human Rights Record.” A Washington Post (6/22) editorial says that following President Trump’s meeting last month with Vietnamese Prime Minister Nguyen Xuan Phuc, their public statements failed to mention on topic: human rights. The Post writes, “This was a glaring lapse. Vietnam has a long history of stifling dissent and cracking down on political activists.” Members of Congress “from both sides of the aisle have raised concerns about Vietnam’s human rights abuses, showing that the administration’s heedlessness does not represent American values. The State Department should take note and speak out in support of the activists who have championed democracy at grave personal risk.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Senate’s Healthcare Advance.” The traditionally Wall Street Journal (6/22) argues in an editorial that while the Senate GOP’s healthcare plan is not perfect, it represents a significant improvement over the current situation.

“All DeBlasio’s Children.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/22) writes that New York Mayor Bill de Blasio’s ceding mayoral control of the city’s schools rather than permit an increase in the cap on the number of charter schools reflects his distaste for nontraditional public schools. Despite de Blasio’s campaign pledge to be a mayor for all children – those in traditional public schools, charter schools, and religious schools – the Journal says he has played right into the hands of the anti-charter teachers union. At least, says the Journal, state lawmakers and Gov. Andrew Cuomo support school choice and have reined in de Blasio’s mayoral control. However, de Blasio’s failure to increase the cap on charters threatens the futures of children who might be better educated in such alternatives to traditional, union-run public schools.

“Singapore And The Fighting Lees.” The Wall Street Journal (6/22) editorializes that the feud between the offspring of Singapore’s late founder, Lee, Kuan Yew, while ostensibly about the leader’s house is in fact over the nation’s political system. Lee’s son and daughter, Lee Hisen Yang and Lee Wei Ling, are accusing his other son, Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong, of abusing his power, saying that there are few checks and balances built into Singapore’s political system. However, the prime minister denies allegations of such abuse and especially of nepotism. The Journal says that while the country was reputed to have a clean government based on meritocracy under its late founder, another part of Lee Kuan Yew’s legacy was the suppression of criticism. As such, the Journal wonders whether the infighting could result in a more democratic society.

In the committee hearing, Comey told the committee he had not previously considered that there might be tapes of their meetings until he saw the tweet, but said ‘Lordy, I hope there are tapes’ Location: TBD <http://intelligence.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseIntelComm>

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “This morning, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell showed us a draft of his top secret new healthcare legislation. They opened the vault. They laid the bill out on a table, rubbed lemon juice all over it, and the text magically appeared for all to see. And wouldn’t you know it, the bill includes a big tax cut for rich people. So unless you just got drafted by an NBA team, it’s not great news.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Trump held a rally in Cedar Rapids, Iowa last night where he explained why he would only ever hire a rich person to help him run the economy. ... Right. The more money you have, the smarter you are. Look at the Kardashians, for instance. It makes sense.”

James Corden: “Today, Donald Trump tweeted, ‘I have no idea whether there are tapes or recordings of my conversations with James Comey. But I did not make and do not have any such recordings.’ He’s now fact-checking himself.”

James Corden: “Of course Trump doesn’t have a tape. Secretly taping someone would require thinking ahead.”

James Corden: “Trump thinks only rich people should be in charge of the economy. Putting rich people in charge of the economy is like putting the Cookie Monster in charge of Oreos.”

James Corden: “Senate Republicans released their version of their new healthcare bill designed to replace Obamacare today. And it features massive cuts to Medicaid and defunds Planned Parenthood. But don’t worry, this isn’t the final version of the healthcare plan, because tonight, Trump said he thinks he can make the proposal even better. He’s going to add solar panels to it.”

Trevor Noah: “Republicans went into a room saying, ‘Let’s fix healthcare,’ and came out saying, ‘All right, so we’ve cut Americans healthcare so that we can give people tax cuts.’ That was the point of this, right? That was the point? No, it’s not the point. It’s like a fireman running into a burning building and saving the fire instead of the baby.”

Trevor Noah: “The House bill was like a rapper; it was going to screw people hard and fast. The Senate bill is like Barry White; it’s going to go slower, but so much deeper.”

Trevor Noah: “Fortunately, with a bill this shaky and unpopular, it should be easy for the Democrats to rally people against it. Unfortunately, they are the Democrats.”

Jimmy Fallon: “The Senate healthcare bill came out today, and I saw that it would cut a tax on indoor tanning.”

Jimmy Fallon: “White House officials said Russia targeted election systems in 21 states last year. Trump was furious. He said ‘I paid for all 50.’”

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, Trump tweeted that he doesn't have recordings of his conversations with former FBI Director James Comey. He doesn't have it. Then one guy said, 'Don't worry, you can borrow ours.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Last night was the congressional picnic at the White House. Trump spent the picnic chatting with lawmakers, while Pence spent the night avoiding eye contact with the hot dogs."

Seth Meyers: "Senate Republicans today released a draft of their bill to repeal and replace Obamacare, which would cut taxes for richer Americans and insurance companies, and defund Planned Parenthood for one year. The bill is so bad, President Trump said, 'Does anyone have any questions for me about Russia?'"

Seth Meyers: "Following losses in two special congressional elections this week, one Democratic staffer reportedly said, 'We have 80-year-old leaders and 90-year-old ranking members. This isn't a party, it's a giant assisted living center.'"

Seth Meyers: "An article published in the North Korean state newspaper today called President Trump a psychopath, which means their official foreign policy towards North Korea is now 'takes one to know one.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to a report, President Trump spent about $133,000 in taxpayer money on furnishing for the White House between January and May, compared to the $51,000 former President Obama spent during same period. Though, to be fair, Barack and Michelle only needed the one bed."

Trump Launches 'Dominant' Energy Policy Focused On Exports.

Reuters (6/29) reports the President Trump on Thursday "promoted a 'golden era' of the US energy business by seeking to assert power abroad through a boost in natural gas, coal and petroleum exports," in what he "called a policy of 'energy dominance.'" Under this approach, he "re-branded efforts to export liquefied natural gas (LNG) to markets in Eastern Europe and Asia that had been set in motion during the previous presidential administration." The US "will offer to export coal to Ukraine, where energy consumers often have suffered from cuts in natural gas supply by Russia." Moreover, says Bloomberg News (6/29, Dlouhy), Trump is "lifting an Obama-era policy that curtailed the financing of coal-fired power plants overseas, as he seeks to reorient the US government away from fighting climate change and toward American 'energy dominance.'"

The Houston Chronicle (6/29, Osborne) notes that the President said yesterday, "The truth is we have near limitless supplies of energy in our country. ... This administration is looking not just American energy independence but American energy dominance. We will export American energy all over the world." The Washington Times (6/29, Wolfgang) quotes Trump as further stating, "We're going to be an exporter. ... These energy exports will create countless jobs for our people and provide true energy security to our friends, partners and allies all across the globe. But this full potential can only be realized when government promotes energy development... instead of obstructing it like the Democrats."

The Washington Examiner (6/29, Westwood) reports Trump also spoke of "the efforts his administration has made to roll back Obama-era environmental regulations and approve a pair of high-profile pipeline projects his predecessor stalled or blocked, the Dakota Access Pipeline and the Keystone XL Pipeline." Said the President, "Under the previous administration, so much of our land was closed to development, but we're opening it up."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (6/29, Cama), CNN (6/29, Klein), the Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (6/29), the Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Daily Caller (6/29, Bastasch), and KTVO-TV Billings, MT (6/30, Jay).

Trump Urges 'Energy Dominance' As He Promotes Exports, Jobs. The AP (6/29, Daly, Boak) reports one of the "initiatives that the president unveiled Thursday in hopes of generating more energy exports and jobs" was its move "to expand oil drilling in the Arctic and Atlantic oceans." The Interior Department "is rewriting a five-year drilling plan established by the Obama administration, with an eye toward opening areas in the Arctic and Atlantic oceans that now are off-limits to drilling." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said in a speech last week "increased offshore drilling could provide more than enough revenue to offset an $11.5 billion maintenance backlog in national parks." Said Zinke, "There's a consequence when you put 94 percent of our offshore off limits. ... There's a consequence of not harvesting trees. There's a consequence of not using some of our public lands for creation of wealth and jobs."

The Washington Post (6/29, Fears) reports "Vincent DeVito, Interior's counselor for energy policy, said a 45-day comment period will start Monday with a request for public comment in the Federal Register." DeVito also "said stakeholders such as state governors would be contacted for their input, as will the Department of Defense, which frowns on exploration near bases and areas where ships conduct training exercises." Said DeVito, "Our country has a massive energy economy, and we should absolutely wear it on our sleeves, rather than keep energy resources in the ground. ... This work will encourage responsible energy exploration and production, in order to advance the United States' position as a global energy force and foster security for the benefit of the American citizenry."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/29, Daly, Boak), U.S. News & World Report (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (6/29, Daly, Boak), Business Insider (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Daily Mail (6/29), Fox News (6/29), the Miami \(FL\) Herald (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Orangeburg \(SC\) Times And Democrat (6/29, Daly, Boak), Philly \(PA\) (6/29, Daly, Boak), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/29, Daly, Boak), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/29, Daly, Boak), and PBS NewsHour (6/29, Daly, Boak).

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (6/29, Siciliano), Offshore Engineer (6/29, Boman), Oil & Gas 360 (6/29), the Alaska Dispatch News (6/29, Rosen), Alaska Public Radio Network (6/29, Ruskin), and E&P Magazine (6/29, Addison).

Florida Members Of Congress Tell Trump To Back Off Atlantic Drilling. The Tampa Bay \(FL\) Times (6/29, Leary) reported that "a large, bipartisan contingent of the Florida House delegation has a firm message for President Donald Trump: Lay off plans for oil drilling in the Atlantic." The letter to Zinke and "was signed by Florida Reps. John Rutherford, Darren Soto, Bill Posey, Alcee Hastings, Matt Gaetz, Charlie Crist, Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, Frederica Wilson, Brian Mast, Dennis Ross, Val Demings, Debbie Wasserman Schultz, Ted Yoho, Kathy Castor, Francis Rooney, Al Lawson, Ted Deutch, Ron DeSantis, Lois Frankel, Vern Buchanan and Stephanie Murphy."

Additional coverage was provided by the St. Augustine \(FL\) Record (6/30, Keever), the Florida Times-Union (6/29, Patterson), and Florida Politics (6/29, Gancarski).

Trump Vows To Build Oil Pipeline Under Border Wall. The Washington Examiner (6/29, Westwood) notes that the initiatives Trump addressed yesterday included "a pipeline that will pump petroleum south to Mexico." Said Trump, "That'll go right under the wall, right? ... Have it go down a little deeper in that one section." The AP (6/29, Daly, Boak) notes "the State Department said it had issued a permit to NuStar Logistics for the construction and operation of the New Burgos Pipeline, which would have the capacity to deliver 108,000 barrels a day and would cross the US-Mexico border near Peñitas, Texas."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (6/29, Cama).

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke On US Energy Dominance. On CNBC (6/29), Interior Ryan Zinke talked about the Trump Administration's "push to make America energy independent." On Bloomberg News (6/29), Zinke explained "how energy dominance can increase national security and discusses the future of natural gas and coal energy."

Perry Introduces The 'Three Musketeers' Of Energy. The Washington Examiner (6/29, Siciliano) reports that Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt "are three individuals that do believe that the future of America is inextricably intertwined with the energy industry," Perry "said in opening an energy conference at his agency." He added, "Some call us the Three Musketeers for whatever reason that might be." Perry, Zinke and Pruitt will "host a panel discussion later Thursday afternoon after hearing from industry representatives."

LEWANDOWSKI: Trump's Energy Plan Will Energize The Economy. Corey R. Lewandowski writes in The Hill (6/29), "An America First energy policy allows more domestic drilling and exploration, both offshore and on federal lands." The President "has taken decisive action that will increase American energy production, and, in turn, wean the United States off foreign sources of energy." Lewandowski concludes that "the media will not give him credit, but...Trump is a far better steward of the economy than the Obama Administration."

Interior Announces $3.4M In Energy Grants For Territories.

Marianas Variety (6/29) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “informed American Samoa Gov. Lolo Moliga, Guam Gov. Eddie Calvo, and Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands Gov. Ralph Torres that he has approved a total of $3,489,427 in energy grants for their respective territories.” In addition, Zinke “announced energy grants for the U.S. Virgin Islands.” Zinke said, “We recognize that the cost of electricity in the U.S. territories is three times higher, on average, than the U.S. national average. The energy needs of the territories are unique and I am pleased to help bring them into focus as President Trump highlights energy strategies across America during Energy Week.”

Dems Say Oil And Gas Industry Calling The Shots At Interior Dep’t.

Courthouse News (6/29, Buchman) reports that the House Natural Resources Committee “held their last hearing before recess to discuss the future of oil and gas development on federal lands.” According to the article, “talk of permitting access to federal lands was dominated by sharp critiques of the oil and gas industries who, in the opinion of one committee member, stand at the ready to scoop up all control of the nation’s public lands and resources if given the chance.” Katharine MacGregor, deputy assistant secretary of the Interior’s land and minerals management agency, “didn’t dive deeply into budgetary questions but moved focus back to the ease and access of permitting for developers.” MacGregor told lawmakers “that the back log of permits was dwindling swiftly and that this was to be celebrated because in her view quicker permitting equates to positive returns on investments not just for developers, but also all Americans.”

Montana Wants To Defend Federal Coal Leases.

The Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (6/29, Nerbovig) reports that “Montana’s attorney general is jumping into the legal battle over Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s decision to lift the moratorium on coal-mining leases on federal land.” Zinke’s order “reversing the Obama administration’s pause on issuing new coal mining leases on March 29” was “quickly challenged in federal court by environmental groups.” Montana Attorney General Tim Fox is “seeking to join the suit supporting Zinke because Fox says Montana’s economy relies heavily on taxes paid by coal mining operations.”

Trump — A Conservative Conservationist.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (6/29, Anderson, Contributor), Terry L. Anderson, a senior fellow at the Stanford University Hoover Institution, writes that President Trump could “leave a legacy of conservative conservation” by “getting the incentives right in both the private and public sectors.” For examples of “conservative conservation,” Anderson points “Trump’s proposed budget for the big land management agencies,” Interior Secretary, Ryan Zinke’s proposal “to form partnerships with private companies and contract out campground services,” the proposal to fund “$12 billion backlog of maintenance projects in national parks” with royalties from off-shore oil leases, “recreational access to federal lands,” and the Trump Administration’s approach to “national monument designations it inherited from President Obama.”

Vail Daily Column: An Important Week For Western Water Users.

In an op-ed for the Vail \(CO\) Daily (6/29, Tipton), Rep. Scott R. Tipton writes that he has introduced the Water Rights Protection Act (H.R. 2939) “to prevent federal water grabs.” The bill “would prohibit the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of the Interior from requiring the transfer of water rights as a condition of any land-use permit.” The legislation “would also ensure that any future water directives issued by federal agencies are consistent with state water law.”

No, Cleaning Up After Ourselves Is Not ‘Un-American’.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (6/29, Holst, Contributor), Eric Holst, associate vice president of working lands at advocacy organization Environmental Defense Fund, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was “simply wrong when he called conservation efforts ‘un-American’ during his keynote speech at the Western Governors’ Association meeting this week.” Zinke was “criticizing compensatory mitigation, a prudent and well-accepted environmental protection grounded in a basic ethic that we all practice when we go camping in one of our beautiful National Parks: Always leave the campground cleaner than you found it.” But Holst argues that “offsetting harm to our natural resources — our land, water and wildlife — is a basic American value that not only benefits public health and the environment, but also the long-term viability of our economy.”

Senator Skepticism.

In a piece for the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (6/29, Brown), Kellyn Brown praises Sens. Jon Tester and Steve Daines for their pointed questioning of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who was defending President Trump's proposed budget last week. According to Brown, "the senators' tones and verbiage during their respective committee meetings reflected their political parties — Tester more pointed and Daines mixing praise with questions — but both men clearly know what's at stake for Montana if the president's proposed budget is passed as is." Brown concludes that the senators are "in the position to stop" the budget "from disproportionately hurting Montana," and concludes that "it appears they will."

Time To Fire Up The Burn Barrel Again.

In a satirical piece for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (6/29, Heinlein) columnist Parker Heinlein writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "busy removing as many protections on the land and critters as he can, de-mumenting and de-listing at a furious pace." Heinlein proposes: "Let's disregard that foolish talk about climate change, accept the fact that our presence has no impact on the planet, and get back to work."

Thomas: Craters Of The Moon Fate Hangs On Antiquities Act Interpretation.

In an op-ed for the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (6/29, Thomas), Terry Thomas, a wildlife biologist and naturalist, "crux of the issue" of the debate over recent national monument designations under the Antiquities Act is "determining what is the smallest area that still protects the specific values of the monument is a challenge." Thomas asks: "How do you establish the smallest area for a resource with scientific value such as Craters of the Moon? What is the letter and what is the spirit of the law?"

Team Trump Deems Rural Funding 'Critical,' Expendable.

The San Francisco Chronicle (6/29) editorializes that the Interior Department "this week announced nearly half a billion dollars in subsidies for local government services on federally owned land, the largest share of which went to California." But it notes that President Trump is "at the same time suggesting a steep reduction in the very same funding, known as payments in lieu of taxes, or PILT." According to the paper, "a substantial decrease in PILT funding would be most painful in the largely rural counties that tend to support Trump."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Blackfeet Voters Reject Proposed Constitution.

The Cut Bank \(MT\) Pioneer Press (6/29, McGill) reports that "in unofficial results, a total of 2,923 Blackfeet voters determined the outcome of the June 27 Secretarial Election to accept or reject a proposed new Constitution when 1,644 residents voted against the proposal and only 1,279 were in favor." The article notes that "on-reservation voters voted against the proposal, 1,359 to 396, while those living off the reservation voted 883 to 285 in favor of the proposal."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM State Chief Reassigned.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/29, Harmon) reports that Bureau of Land Management Colorado State Director Ruth Welch has been reassigned to the Bureau of Reclamation. Welch, "who has served state BLM director for three and a half years, begins her new assignment as director of policy and administration for Reclamation on July 10." Gregory Shoop, the associate state director, "will take over as Colorado state director on an interim basis."

Additional coverage was provided by the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/30, Harmon).

Input Sought On 108 Oil Wells.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/28, Webb) reports that "an environmental assessment of a proposal to drill more than 100 oil wells south of Palisade and west of the Grand Mesa has been released for public comment after it was revised to account for impacts such as anticipated hydraulic fracturing of the wells." The updated analysis by the Bureau of Land Management

"evaluates a proposal by Fram Operating LLC, to drill 108 wells from 12 new pads over four years." The BLM is "asking for public comments by July 28 on the 239-page revised assessment."

US Attorney Asks Judge To Toss Beaver County Suit Over Wild Horse Programs.

KSL-TV Salt Lake City (6/28, Knox) reports that "the U.S. Attorney for Utah Wednesday asked a federal judge to toss Beaver County's case alleging that federal managers have not done enough to address growing populations of feral horses." The county claims in a lawsuit filed in February that the Bureau of Land Management "broke the law by failing to prevent explosive population growth of feral horses." On Wednesday, John Huber's office "filed the motion to dismiss the suit in U.S. District Court in Utah, saying federal managers were not on the hook to corral all horses there immediately and that the county allegations didn't include enough specifics or proof."

BLM Announces Burning Man Closure.

The Gardnerville \(NV\) Record Courier (6/29) reports that "the site of Black Rock City, where twice as many people as live in Carson Valley will take up residence for the week, will be closed to the public July 31 through Sept. 20, according to a release issued by the Winnemucca District Office of the Bureau of Land Management." BLM Black Rock Field Manager Mark E. Hall said, "Similar temporary closures for the Burning Man event in past years have been implemented with minimal disruption to other public uses within the area."

$115M Transferred From Amarillo-managed Federal Helium Reserve To U.S.

Treasury. The Amarillo \(TX\) Globe News (6/29) reports that "a total of $115 million generated from the 2016 sale and auction of crude helium from the Federal Helium Reserve — which is managed by the Amarillo Bureau of Land Management field office — is being transferred to the U.S. Treasury." The Helium Reserve has "returned more than $1.75 billion to the US Treasury between 2005-2017 through the sale and auction of crude helium, according to the BLM."

Beaufort Mayor Ready For Another Offshore Drilling Fight.

Bluffton \(SC\) Today (6/29, Murdaugh) reports that Beaufort Mayor Billy Keyserling and "other state municipal leaders were successful in their first effort to oppose offshore drilling, but now they are preparing for another fight." President Trump" on April 28 instructed the Department of the Interior to lift offshore drilling restrictions that former President Barack Obama put in place for the Arctic and Atlantic oceans."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Reclamation Nominee Wins Mostly Acceptance And A Little Wait-and-see.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (6/29, Harmon) reports that President Trump's nomination of Brenda Burman to lead the Bureau of Reclamation "won the endorsement of U.S. Rep. Scott Tipton and a cautious reaction from U.S. Sen. Cory Gardner, both Republicans." Also, Arizona Sens. Jeff Flake and John McCain praised her. Chris Treese, spokesman for the Colorado River Water Conservation District, said, Burman has a "deep background and a great reputation in the Colorado River basin — and beyond. She is the one nominee from this administration who should be confirmed easily and unanimously."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Feds Release Long-Awaited Recovery Plan For Mexican Wolves.

The AP (6/29, Bryan) reports that "after repeated failures over decades, U.S. wildlife officials have finally drafted a recovery plan for endangered wolves that once roamed parts of the American Southwest and northern Mexico." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is "under a court order to complete the plan for the Mexican gray wolf by the end of November." The draft document released Thursday "calls for focusing recovery of the wolves in core areas of the predators' historic range."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (6/29, Bryan), the Boston \(MA\) Globe

(6/29, Bryan), the Arizona Republic (6/29, Bryan), the Daily Mail (6/29), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/29, Bryan), Philly \(PA\) (6/29, Bryan), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/29, Bryan), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/29, Bryan), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/29, Bryan).

Lawsuits Challenge Ambitious California Water Tunnels.

The AP (6/29, Smith) reports that "Gov. Jerry Brown's ambitious plans to build two massive tunnels, reengineering the hub of California's water system, would destroy native fish species already on the brink of extinction, lawsuits filed Thursday said." The $16 billion project "won a critical first round of approval from two federal agencies early this week, but days later a group of fish and conservation groups filed federal lawsuits attempting to stop the project." John McManus, executive director of the Golden Gate Salmon Association, said, "This version of the tunnels will wipe out California's salmon fishery and the families and communities that rely on salmon." McManus is "joined in the two lawsuits by the Natural Resources Defense Council, Defenders of Wildlife and the Bay Institute."

Additional coverage was provided by the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/29, Sabalow).

Animal Refuges Threatened By Flooding In Florida Everglades.

The U.S. News & World Report (6/29) reports that "parts of Florida's Everglades are so waterlogged that deer, wading birds and other animals are running out of dry ground." According to the article, "heavy rains this month have left water levels 2 feet (0.6 meters) higher than normal in the wetlands in western Broward and Miami-Dade counties." The Miami Herald (6/29, Staletovich) reports that "this week, the U.S. Corps of Engineers opened flood gates into the western Everglades, flooding nesting grounds for the endangered Cape Sable seaside sparrow for the second year in a row." According to the article, "the dilemma pits flood control against conservation efforts and while it's an old battle in Florida, water managers have now faced back-to-back years of emergency operations."

A Grizzly Proposition.

In an op-ed for the Teton Valley \(ID\) News (6/29, Conboy), Brendan Conboy considers "what de-listing entails for the Yellowstone grizzly at this critical juncture in its recovery." Conboy thinks whether the de-listing is premature will "almost certainly be decided by the courts and it is possible and perhaps likely that the Yellowstone grizzly will be re-listed." He concludes that "however this issue is decided, the debate over grizzlies is symptomatic of a bigger question about our relationship to wilderness and the impacts of past, present, and future development in the Yellowstone region."

Alexander: Senate Energy And Natural Resources Bill Takes Next Step To Preserve Polk Home.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) (6/29) reports that Sen. Lamar Alexander "on Thursday said the Senate's bipartisan energy and natural resources bill includes several Tennessee priorities – including taking the next step in making President James K. Polk's home part of the National Park System and designating 20,000 acres of the Cherokee National Forest as wilderness area." Alexander said, "We talk a lot about the importance of science and math, but, according to the National Assessment of Education Progress, most high school seniors in America score the worst in history. I can think of no better way to encourage the study of U.S. history than to protect and preserve sites like President Polk's home, Shiloh National Military Park and important landmarks of the Civil Rights Movement."

Park Service Officials Gather Ideas For Freedom Riders Monument.

The Anniston \(AL\) Star (6/30, Fiscus, Burkhalter) reports that "National Park officials spent most of Thursday sharing their vision for the Freedom Riders National Monument but also took suggestions from Anniston city officials and the public during two meetings." Ben West, the chief of planning with the National Park Service southeast region, "started the morning meeting with city officials and community leaders by talking about how far-reaching the monument can be." Later, at the evening meeting, "National Park officials met again to hear from residents about their thoughts on the national park, and to seek photos, memories and stories about the former bus station to help in its restoration.”

Draft Of NPS Report On Chimney Tops 2 Fire Complete.

WBIR-TV Knoxville, TN (6/28, Crowe) reports that “a National Park Service official is shedding new light on the pending wildfire after-action report on the response to the Chimney Tops 2 fire.” Bill Kaage, the chief of Fire and Aviation Management for the National Park Service, said, “We owe all citizenry involved our due diligence and a good solid report with facts and findings, and we owe our engagement as part of that larger effort because of the natures of the fires that affected those local communities.” He “said the report is scheduled to be released in mid-August.”

Park Service Gives Green Light For Zion Monument Redesign.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (6/29) reports that the National Park Service has “concluded that a redesign of Zion National Park’s south entrance monument will create no significant impact to the park, meaning the project can move forward.” The aim of the project is “to enhance visitor safety, expand cultural resource protection measures, and help mitigate factors contributing to vehicle congestion experienced at the south entrance.” The monument will be “moved approximately 28 feet to the east, and a plaza will be installed around the site.”

Drakes Estero Project Sparked Investigations.

The Point Reyes \(CA\) Light (6/29, Guth) reports that “numerous allegations made by a former employee tasked with helping remove the aquaculture debris and defunct oyster racks from Drakes Estero led the Department of the Interior’s Office of the Inspector General late last year to request the National Park Service to investigate the project.” According to the article, “though the status of that probe is unclear, hundreds of pages of documents and private emails obtained through the Freedom of Information Act and passed along to the Light show that the park service steadfastly pushed back against the findings of another federal investigation—by the Department of Labor—into claims made by the diver, Matt Zugsberger, whose allegations center on the rate at which he was paid, the project’s safety protocols and environmental mitigation measures.” Documents reveal “that the Labor Department found that the park and its contractors significantly mischaracterized and undercompensated Mr. Zugsberger’s work—and also that the department reversed its finding multiple times.” The article says that “those reversals were made amid strong pressure from the park and the companies hired to complete the restoration project, T.L. Peterson and a subcontractor, Galindo Construction.”

Federal Judge Denies Motion To Halt High-impact Activities At Sauk Prairie Recreation Area.

The Madison \(WI\) Capital Times (6/29, Prinsen) reports that “a local conservation group’s request to halt helicopter training exercises, dog training with firearms and off-road motorcycling at the Sauk Prairie Recreation Area was denied Monday in federal court.” The Sauk Prairie Conservation Alliance last week “filed a request for a preliminary injunction in the U.S. District Court of Western Wisconsin” seeking restriction of “‘high impact’ recreation on the state-owned property until its lawsuit challenging state and federal agencies’ management of the site are settled.” U.S. District Judge James D. Peterson stuck down the motion. Peterson “stated in a court order that while high-impact recreation may disrupt wildlife, it is unlikely to cause sufficient environmental harm to warrant immediate court action before the case is decided next year.”

New Trails Coming To Monocacy National Battlefield.

The Frederick \(MD\) News-Post (6/28, Dodd) reports that the National Park Service “approved a new public access plan Wednesday for Monocacy National Battlefield.” The plan will “allow for expanded walking trails at the increasingly popular park.”

Joe’s Trail Has Been Deemed Nationally Historic.

The San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (6/29, Miceli) reports that the National Park Service has “partnered with the city of Saratoga to designate Joe’s Trail as part of the Juan Bautista de Anza National Historic Trail, a 1,210-mile stretch of land that contains hundreds of years of history, tracing back to the Anza expedition in 1776.” Joe’s Trail will “receive new signs highlighting historical stories and artwork at the wayside of the trail, and other National Park Trail insignia throughout the 1.4-mile Saratoga stretch.”

Fort Pulaski Open Again, But Tornado Repairs Continue.

The Savannah \(GA\) Morning News (6/29, Coleman) reports that on Thursday morning, the National Park Service rangers allowed visitors to access the Cockspur Island again. On May 23, "an EF-2 tornado hit Cockspur Island, striking Fort Pulaski's visitor center and knocking down trees, doing about $400,000 worth of damage." The article says that "the damage prompted the National Park Service to close the island to the public on the eve of Memorial Day weekend and the traditional summer vacation period that brings thousands of visitors to the fort from nearby Tybee Island and Savannah."

Central Avenue Beach Access Reopens In Beverly Shores.

The Times of Northwest Indiana (6/29, Cross) reports that "Central Avenue Beach will reopen Saturday after a roadway collapse and flooding of its access roads this spring prompted a months-long closure, the National Park Service announced Thursday." The article notes that "the popular Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore beach has been shut down since April 5."

Report: Famous Yellowstone Bear Shot At Close Range In 2015.

The AP (6/29) reports that "the investigation into the death of a famed Yellowstone National Park grizzly bear killed by an elk hunter in late 2015 determined that the bear was shot three times at close range with a .30 caliber rifle." The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/29, French) reports that "Scarface, the name given by bear watchers in the park to bear No. 211, was killed in the Little Trail Creek drainage, near Gardiner, Montana, outside of the park the night of Nov. 18."

Bison Rams, Injures Couple At Yellowstone National Park.

The AP (6/29) reports that "a bison rammed and injured a husband and wife as they were taking photographs in Yellowstone National Park." The Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (6/29) reports that "Utah residents Theodore Schrader, 74, and Patsy Holmes, 72, were taking photos on a boardwalk when a bison approached them."

Bear Killed By Grand Teton Officials After Multiple Reports.

The AP (6/29) reports that Grand Teton National Park officials have "killed a 4-year-old black bear after it approached three different groups of people, destroyed a tent and walked on a person's porch." Officials started "looking for the bear on June 21 and trapped it on Tuesday."

Smithsonian Folklife Festival Kicks Off Thursday Under The Big Top.

WRC-TV Washington (6/29, Rozen) reports that the 50th annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival kicks off Thursday. The article notes that "in its 50th year, the festival will feature daily performances and craft activities hosted by the Smithsonian Institution and co-sponsored by the National Park Service."

Gettysburg National Military Park Issues Several First Amendment Permits For The Weekend.

WPMT-TV Harrisburg, PA (6/29, Ready) reports that "this weekend, several protests are expected to take place in Gettysburg during the 154th Anniversary of the Civil War Battle." According to a spokesperson at the Gettysburg National Military Park, "they've issued three first amendment permits to separate groups for Saturday, including the 'Sons of Confederate Veterans M-C' and a group called 'Real 3% Risen,' both of which are expected to have hundreds of participants and take place north of Mead's headquarters." In addition, "a third permit was issued to the 'Maryland Sons of Confederate Veterans' which will be a smaller group of re-enactors that will be marching in formation along several memorials, with a ceremony at each one."

Going-to-the-Sun Road Reopens In Glacier National Park.

The Montana Standard (6/28, Szpaller) reports that the Going-to-the-Sun Road "opened to motorists Wednesday."

Editorial: National Parks Budget Cuts Won't Go Unnoticed.

The Everett \(WA\) Herald (6/29) editorializes that "a year after a record 323.6 million visitors helped the National Parks Service celebrate its centennial, proposed budget cuts of $378 million by the Trump administration are threatening to force the layoffs of more than 1,000 full-time park service employees, resulting in reduced staffing at 90 percent of parks and loss of programs and services enjoyed by park visitors." Moreover, "those cuts would be on top of a long-standing backlog of $12 billion in maintenance and restoration work at the service's 400 parks, monuments, recreation areas, memorials and historical parks and trails in all 50 states on more than 84 million acres of public land." The paper says that "as Congress continues the process of considering the administration's budget proposals — and having already rejected some cuts — those who benefit from the programs and services above need to show their support."

Trump's Tweets About Brzezinski Spark Bipartisan Criticism, Sexism Accusations.

The President's tweets about MSNBC host Mika Brzezinski led all three major newscasts — which devoted nearly 12 minutes of combined airtime to the story — and dominated discussion on cable news shows. Trump tweeted, "I heard poorly rated @Morning_Joe speaks badly of me (don't watch anymore). Then how come low I.Q. Crazy Mika, along with Psycho Joe, came... to Mar-a-Lago 3 nights in a row around New Year's Eve, and insisted on joining me. She was bleeding badly from a face-lift. I said no!" With near unanimity, media reports and analyses cast Trump in an extremely unfavorable light, often placing his words in the context of past controversial statements about women. NBC Nightly News (6/29, lead story, 3:00, Holt), for example, showed Trump saying of Megyn Kelly, "You could see there was blood coming out of her eyes, blood coming out of her wherever." The broadcast also ran footage of the President saying, "Grab them by the [beep]."

Media reports reflect the immediate outrage caused by Trump's tweets. To Politico (6/29, Gold), "It takes a lot to shock reporters in the Trump era," but he "managed to do that on Thursday morning." The New York Times (6/29, Grynbaum) reports "the personal and crude nature of Mr. Trump's Twitter remarks...proved to be an equal-opportunity stunner, sparking a backlash that spanned the news industry's usual divides," and USA Today (6/29, Estepa) says the President's words "sent shockwaves through the political universe."

Politico (6/29, Conway) refers to "widespread condemnation." Meanwhile, David French called the President "crass, vicious, and petty" on National Review (6/29), while Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (6/29) that when presidents "talk like this...it reduces the United States from a grand republic to a banana republic." The AP (6/29, Ortutay) concludes that if Trump "were anyone else, he'd be fired, or at least reprimanded," and "if he were to look for a job...these and past tweets would raise red flags." Chris Cillizza, in a piece for CNN (6/29), asked, "Then why, when that person is the President of the United States, should we treat that sort of behavior any differently?" The Hill (6/29, Kurtz), meanwhile, reported the reaction led to "a wave of new accusations of sexism and cyberbullying."

To many Trump critics, in fact, it was all about sexism. The New York Times (6/29, Davis) says "Trump's invective threatened to further erode his support from women and independents, both among voters and on Capitol Hill, where he is in need of negotiating leverage for the stalled Senate health care bill." NBC Nightly News (6/29, lead story, 3:00, Holt) showed House Minority Leader Pelosi calling Trump's tweets "so blatantly sexist," and the CBS Evening News (6/29, story 2, 2:55, Cordes) reported "it wasn't the first time this week that the President's comments about women have drawn attention," and added that "what drew scrutiny earlier this week wasn't an insult, but a compliment." Trump was shown saying of a reporter — during a phone conversation with Ireland's Prime Minister — "She has a nice smile on her face, so I bet she treats you well." Sara Murray, on CNN's The Lead (6/29), referred to just "the latest example of Trump making tasteless comments about women."

Reuters (6/29) reports "Democrats seized on the remarks as an example of what they view as Trump's sexism." CNS spokeswoman Adrienne Watson said in a statement, "Trump's bullying tweets are an attack on women everywhere. ... From his Twitter slurs to his policies, we have a president who continues to show us he has no regard for women and whose comments demean the office he holds."

Susan Chira, "senior correspondent and editor on gender issues" for the New York Times (6/29), writes that "there is something about the way" Trump "strikes back at women who anger him that seems to resonate for some men — and which, at least so far, has not cost him the support of the women who backed him." To Chira, "the uncomfortable larger question is whether this president's behavior is encouraging and unmasking resentments about women's place in society," after "the women's movement spent decades attempting to change attitudes among Americans so that tweets like Mr. Trump's would be out of bounds."

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (6/29) that while "everyone...is rallying around the sweet couple," they are "completely nuts and...not innocent victims in this case. In fact, they have called the President a liar, a schmuck, and every vicious, vile name in the book. They have lobbed insult after insult in every way, every single morning for months on end. They are not so innocent." Writing for Townhall (6/29), Guy Benson agrees that "holding up Brzezinski as some sort of victim here, after beckoning the president down into the gutter, is silly," but adds that "Trump isn't in second grade; he is the president," and "unfortunately, it is painfully obvious that he is temperamentally incapable of picking battles and transcending the noise."

Mercedes Schlapp similarly argued on Fox News' Special Report (6/29) that "that particular show has been a relentless smearing campaign against the President." However, Trump "has now made these two television anchors into the heroes of the mainstream media and the left." On that topic, the New York Times (6/29, Grynbaum) says the two hosts "have openly questioned Mr. Trump's mental state, comments that particularly upset the president, according to a senior administration official."

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (6/29), "When it comes to the White House message, the President is again his own worst enemy, stepping all over his Administration's announcements." Tucker Carlson similarly argued on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (6/29) that the "real tragedy" of the tweets is that they "are a diversion. When the President talks about the people who elected him, he wins. When he talks about himself, the left does. The President was not elected to pick fights with TV hosts. He was elected because he promised an agenda the country actually needs but nobody else but him was offering."

The Washington Post (6/29, Johnson) quotes Mark Kornblau, the NBCUniversal News Group's senior vice president for communications, as saying, "Never imagined a day when I would think to myself, 'It is beneath my dignity to respond to the president of the United States.'" Meanwhile, "an MSNBC spokesman said in a statement: 'It's a sad day for America when the president spends his time bullying, lying and spewing petty personal attacks instead of doing his job.'"

The Washington Post (6/29) editorializes that "it's obvious that there is no point in urging President Trump to act with greater dignity, respect for his office or, for that matter, self-respect," and "that makes it all the more urgent for the rest of us to think about how to safeguard civility and democratic values until his presidency ends. ... What gives us hope is the conviction that the American people are better than the misogyny and rudeness we see spewing from the White House."

Republicans Criticize Tweets. Across the coverage, much was made of Republican criticism of Trump. The Washington Post (6/29, Lac, Holley) reports "defenders of Trump's Brzezinski tweets were elusive on Capitol Hill" – whereas GOP critics made their displeasure clear during the day.

ABC World News Tonight (6/29, lead story, 3:15, Llamas), for example, showed Sen. Susan Collins saying, "It clearly was inappropriate and not something that he should have done. It is beneath the dignity of the office." Collins said on CNN's Situation Room (6/29) that "these kinds of tweets, which attack individuals, have got to stop. The President has to better appreciate that there are three branches of government, plus the media, that we may not always get along, that we may disagree, but his tone should always be civil and respectful. And I hope that perhaps the response to this latest tweet will tell him that he really needs to change his ways if he hopes to get his accomplishments through and be successful." Collins said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/29). "I think the President failed to show both respect and civility. The President should be modeling good behavior and this language falls far short of that. ... It's unworthy of the office of the President of the United States. I'm concerned about how we look in the eyes of the world, as well as our own citizens."

Criticism by Sen. Lindsey Graham and Speaker Ryan was also featured in nearly every story. NBC Nightly News (6/29, lead story, 3:00, Holt) noted that Graham said, "Tweets like this are inconsistent with the greatness of the country and the office." Ryan also weighed in, "What we're trying to do around here is improve the tone, the civility of the debate, and this obviously doesn't help do that."

Sen. Pat Toomey said on CNN's The Lead (6/29) that Trump's comments are "maddening because it's beneath the President of the United States, or at least it should be, and it's a distraction. And really, ultimately, it starts to undermine the President's ability to get his agenda done."

Reuters (6/29) reports that "another Republican senator, Ben Sasse, tweeted, 'Please just stop. This isn't normal and it's beneath the dignity of your office.'"

Rep. Michael McCaul said on CNN's Situation Room (6/29), "I think it is a huge distraction from the real issues at hand. ... I wish he would tweet more about those issues that I think the American people are more concerned about, real issues that face real Americans." Roll Call (6/29, Garcia), Politico (6/29, Tamborrino, McCaskill) and the Wall Street Journal (6/29, Stokols), among other news outlets, run similar rundowns of GOP lawmakers' criticism. The Los Angeles Times (6/29, Bennett), meanwhile, reports that that Jeb Bush said of Trump's tweets, "Inappropriate. Undignified. Unpresidential."

White House Defends Trump, Says "Morning Joe" Routinely Launches "Personal Attacks" Him.

The Washington Times (6/29, Miller) reports White House deputy press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders yesterday defended the President's tweets, saying the show "routinely launches personal attacks on Mr. Trump and his staff, including calling them 'utterly stupid,' 'liars' and mentally ill.'" Sanders continued, "It's kind of like we're living in the Twilight Zone. They do this day after day after day and then the president responds and defends himself and everybody is appalled and blown away."

The New York Post (6/29, Fredericks) notes that Sanders also said, "If this had happened in the previous administration, the type of attacks launched on this program, the things they say [about Trump]: 'utterly stupid,' 'personality disorder,' 'mentally ill,' constant personal attacks. ... The rest of the media would have said, 'Guys, no way. Hold on.' But nobody does that. But the president, he's not going to step back. He's showed that, and that's exactly what he did today." The Hill (6/29, Fabian, Hagen, Kamisar) quotes her as adding, "He's not going to sit back and be attacked by the liberal media, Hollywood elites – and when they hit him, he's going to hit back."

In addition, Bloomberg News (6/29, Olorunnipa) reports, Sanders said "the American people got 'a fighter'" when they elected Trump, arguing that "they knew what they were getting when they voted for...Trump and he won overwhelmingly." NBC Nightly News (6/29, lead story, 3:00, Holt) showed Sanders saying of Trump, "He fights fire with fire. ... I don't think you can expect someone to be personally attacked day after day, minute by minute and sit back." The First Lady's press secretary "declined to comment on this morning's tweet specifically, instead pointing to this past statement, when her husband gets attacked, he will punch back ten times harder."

The CBS Evening News (6/29, lead story, 2:35, Garrett) noted that Sanders was asked whether Trump's words "create an atmosphere that is either dangerous or one we need to avoid." She replied, "The President in no way, form, or fashion has ever promoted or encouraged violence. If anything, quite the contrary." CBS added, "That is true as President. It is not true when Mr. Trump was a candidate," as "at four separate rallies, Mr. Trump specifically encouraged supporters to punch, rough up, or hurt protesters. Twice he promised to pay the legal bills of any supporter who did." Aaron Blake, in an online piece for the Washington Post (6/29), called Sanders' response "laughable," because "even if you don't believe Trump has technically incited violence (which he has been sued for), he clearly nodded toward violence at his campaign rallies."

Jake Tapper said on CNN's The Lead (6/29) that Trump believes that "criticism from the media or anyone needs to be fought back. It's been very clear ever since the Trump campaign banned reporters from the Des Moines Register back in 2015 because Mr. Trump didn't like the editorial the newspaper wrote that he has a problem with criticism."

David Axelrod said on CNN's Situation Room (6/29) the Trump's "enablers" say "he's a fighter," but "there is a difference between being a fighter and being an epic jerk and one shouldn't mistake the two."

Brzezinski Tweets Back Apparent Jibe At Trump's Hands; Hosts Delay Vacation To Respond On Air. The Washington Post (6/29, Johnson) reports "Brzezinski responded on Twitter on Thursday morning with a photo of the back of a Cheerios cereal box that reads: 'Made for Little Hands.'" While "Brzezinski did not explain what she meant by the tweet...she seemed to be subtly attacking the president for the size of his hands." Trump, adds the Post, "has long been defensive about the size of his hands." "An MSNBC source told" the New York Post (6/29, Smith), meanwhile, that "Joe and Mika were supposed to start their July 4th weekend early by taking Friday off – but following Trump's tweet, they postponed their trip by day so they can be back on air Friday morning to sling some 'bad blood' back at Trump."

Limited Travel Ban On Entry From Six Muslim-Majority Countries Takes Effect.

All three broadcast networks briefly reported that a limited version of President Trump's executive order on immigration went into effect Thursday. The CBS Evening News (6/29, story 4, 0:15, Mason) reported that Trump's "travel ban" restricts "many visitors from six mostly Muslim countries" – Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen – for 90 days, while ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 5, 0:25, Llamas) reported that while this "scaled-back version of the travel ban" will allow people into the country who have a visa, the Trump Administration is still “sparking controversy” with the criteria that must be met for people to get a new visa.

NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 2, 1:50, Holt), which ran the most detailed report, said that the Supreme Court said people from those six countries can still apply for a visa to come here if they have a “close familial relationship with someone in the US.” The Administration “narrowly” defined such relationships to include “a parent or child including in-laws, a sibling, or a spouse.” However, the Administration’s definition “does not include fiancée, grandparent, aunt or uncle, niece or nephew, cousin, or brother- or sister-in-law. Advocates for immigrants say those distinctions don’t make sense,” and civil liberties groups “say they may go back to court over what counts as close family and what kind of connection refugees must have before they can come here.”

USA Today (6/29, Gomez) says the “scaled-back travel ban against majority-Muslim countries” took effect at 8 p.m. ET Thursday. The New York Times (6/29, Harris, Nixon, Shear) reports that the Administration “moved aggressively” on Thursday to implement the policy, “banning entry into the United States by refugees from around the world and prohibiting most visitors from six predominantly Muslim countries,” and “critics immediately denounced the administration, accusing the White House of violating the Supreme Court’s directive to exempt anyone with a ‘bona fide’ family connection” to the US.

The Wall Street Journal (6/29, A1, Meckler) reports that late Thursday, the Administration reversed course and included those who are engaged to be married among those permitted to enter. The Detroit News (6/29, Kozlowski) has a profile of an Ann Arbor, Michigan engaged couple that was concerned that the ban would keep them apart.

Hawaii Challenges Administration’s Implementation Of Ban. Politico (6/29, Gerstein) reports that Hawaii has asked a federal judge to rule that the Administration’s implementation of the “travel ban executive order defies the ruling the Supreme Court issued on the subject just four days ago.” The state argues that guidance issued by the Administration “takes too narrow a view of what family relationships qualify” for exemption from the ban. The Washington Times (6/29, Dinan) reports that Hawaii Attorney General Douglas S. Chin said, “In Hawaii, ‘close family’ includes many of the people that the federal government decided on its own to exclude from that definition. Unfortunately, this severely limited definition may be in violation of the Supreme Court ruling.”

Lawyers Offering Advice At LAX. The Los Angeles Times (6/29, Tchekmedyian, Parvini) reports that attorneys set up tables at Los Angeles International Airport three hours before the ban took effect “where they offered free legal aid and distributed copies of an eight-page travel advisory with information about the status of the new ban, as well as advice for travelers on interacting with customs officers.” There were also “a handful of activists” protesting outside the international terminal.

McConnell Cites “Good Progress” In Revising Healthcare Legislation.

While Senate Majority Leader McConnell said Thursday that progress had been made in negotiations over the Republican healthcare legislation, media reports indicate that Republicans are unlikely to meet the Friday deadline they set for revising the measure. Reuters (6/29, Cowan, Becker) reports that McConnell cited “good progress” in efforts to reach agreement “on retooled draft legislation aimed at repealing and replacing the 2010 Affordable Care Act.” On Fox News’ Special Report (6/29), Sen. John Thune described the process as “three steps forward, two steps back,” adding, “It’s a very, very difficult, complicated task with lots of moving parts. But what we know is that we have got to get to yes eventually.”

However, the Los Angeles Times (6/29, Mascaro) says Senate Republicans “appear unlikely to hit” their “self-imposed Friday deadline” for revising the bill. Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (6/29, story 2, 0:25, Llamas) that Vice President Pence “was on Capitol Hill [Thursday] meeting with Republican senators,” but “there is no indication whatsoever of any further progress,” and the Washington Times (6/29, Sherfinski) says GOP senators “fled Washington...without a clear resolution on health care, leaving them to face voters back home after having failed to make their own self-imposed deadline.”

The Washington Examiner (6/30, Drucker) cites complaints from Republicans that “President Trump is wasting the power of the bully pulpit as the party struggles to partially repeal Obamacare.” According to lawmakers and “top strategists,” Trump’s “limited public engagement is hampering their ability to corral votes for their bill in the Senate.” His effort, they conceded, with disappointment...pales in comparison to what former President Barack Obama did to push the Affordable Care Act across the finish line.

Matt Vespa writes on Townhall (6/29) that Democrats “don’t want to work with Republicans on this issue." Ahead of the midterm elections, "Democrats feel that they have a shot at retaking Congress, or at least the House, and if ginning up the health scare tactics gets them there – so be it. They feel the GOP is screwed either way" as "the bad poll numbers on their health care bills could sink them," if they cooperate with Democrats "to fix but not repeal Obamacare, their base could abandon them." However, Sen. Joe Manchin said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/29), "No one is trying to find the middle, trying to find a pathway forward. I have not spoken to Mitch McConnell. and I heard him say the Democrats don't want to work with him. That's not factual and it's accurate. I am one that wants to work with my friends."

Republicans Mull Leaving Some ACA Tax Increases In Place. Politico (6/29, Everett) reports that Thursday's "furious round of deal-making" included "a potential agreement to scrap some of their Obamacare repeal bill's tax cuts." Sen. Bob Corker said Thursday morning that "the party is leaning toward maintaining Obamacare's tax on wealthy individuals' investments" and "reallocat[ing] that money to help more low-income people pay for insurance." Politico adds that Republicans said that while a final decision has not been made, "the party is leaning strongly toward reshaping the bill to be less of a tax cut for the wealthy and more to supplying health insurance options to the working poor." The Wall Street Journal (6/29, Rubin, Hughes) says keeping the tax would provide up to $172 billion that can be used to make health insurance affordable for low-income consumers and it would insulate them from Democrat claims that the Republican bill weaken people's healthcare to provide tax cuts for a few.

The New York Times (6/29, A1, Pear, Kaplan) calls the "open talk of leaving in place a tax on investment income" a "big break from the House-passed health care bill and from the Senate's initial approach." The Times adds that the idea "was championed by reliably conservative Republicans who acknowledged the tough choices that the health bill would force on lower-income Americans." To the AP (6/29, Fram), the idea is "a bid" by GOP leaders "to placate moderate GOP lawmakers and salvage their struggling health care bill," but Kasie Hunt said on NBC Nightly News (6/29, story 4, 2:00, Holt) that the changes "might not be enough for moderates who want to start over completely."

Cruz, Lee Plan Would Let Insurers Offer Non-ACA Compliant Plans. USA Today (6/29, Collins, Shesgreen) says "a controversial proposal floated by a band of hard-line conservatives is gaining ground." Sens. Ted Cruz and Mike Lee "are pushing a provision that would allow insurance companies to offer health plans that don't cover services that are mandatory for insurance plans under Obamacare," on the theory that "if insurance plans cover less, they'll cost less." In what USA Today describes as "a nod to moderate Republicans," the proposal would "require insurance companies to offer plans that do cover all the minimum benefits required by the Affordable Care Act." The Hill (6/29, Sullivan, Roubein) says that "the proposal has drawn resistance from other Republicans who want to maintain ObamaCare's protections for people with pre-existing conditions and worry that the change would allow plans to be sold without those protections."

The New York Post (6/29, Morrongiello) reports that McConnell and Cruz are "working closely" on the amendment, which would "satisfy a key conservative demand to improve consumer choice and give McConnell more leeway to court moderates with increased spending on Medicaid and fewer tax cuts for wealthy Americans." A Washington Post (6/29, A1, Sullivan, Eilperin, Snell) analysis says that while it is unclear if the changes, "if adopted, would garner enough support for the bill to pass," they "may represent the most viable path forward if Republicans want to rewrite the 2010 health law known as Obamacare without any help from Democrats."

Paul Advocates Splitting Bill Into Two Pieces. Sen. Rand Paul offered another suggestion on Thursday, telling MSNBC's Morning Joe (6/29) that the bill should be broken "into two pieces. We pass one that looks like repeal, that conservatives like, and the other one you load up with Christmas ornaments, and gifts, and money, and just pile money on it that the Democrats will vote for and some of the Republicans will vote for. Then I think both end up passing." Paul said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/29), "I think the President is a leader, and I think he has the ability to lead the way on this. ... I think if he leads the way and tells them, 'Guys, we're going to do two bills.' ... I don't know, I think he could do it. I think he has the force of personality and the bully pulpit of the presidency to do it."

WSJournal: State Waivers Could Foster Innovation. A Wall Street Journal (6/29) editorial argues that the Senate bill would make the process by which states apply for waivers faster and more flexible, which, it says, could result in innovation at the state level.

Centrist House Republicans Building Opposition To Draft GOP Budget.

In what Politico (6/29, Bade) calls "the latest in House Republican's budget woes," centrist

Republicans are quietly gathering opposition to a draft GOP budget that would cut entitlement spending, and “are threatening to vote against the plan without a bipartisan deal to increase spending caps.” Tuesday Group co-chairman Charlie Dent “is gathering signatures on a letter asking Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) to intervene in House Budget Chairwoman Diane Black’s plan to curb $200 billion in mandatory spending in the GOP budget.” According to a draft, the letter warns that the proposal is “not practical” and “could imperil tax reform.”

CBO: Congress Must Raise Debt Limit By Mid-October.

The New York Times (6/29, Rappeport) reports that the CBO said in a report Thursday that lawmakers have until mid-October to increase the debt limit or the country “will risk defaulting on its debt obligations.” Treasury Secretary Mnuchin has been urging lawmakers to raise the limit before their August recess, while Republicans have been considering “whether to have a ‘clean’ increase or to attach other policy priorities or spending cuts to legislation that lifts the limit.”

House, Senate Divided Over Privatizing Air Traffic Control.

Reuters (6/29, Shepardson) reports that Congress is divided over efforts to privatize the air traffic control system. The Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee on Thursday approved legislation that includes FAA reforms, but “does not spin off air traffic control” like a measure approved by the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee.

The Washington Post (6/29, Halsey) says the “increasingly independent Senate, emboldened by Trump’s legislative failures, opted to disregard the White House push to privatize the controllers and those working on modernizing the aviation system.” Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John Thune said, “I remain open to moving the FAA’s functions into a not-for-profit nongovernment body, but I also appreciate that sincerely held concerns exist. ... I hope and expect that we will consider this proposal more fully as the bill advances.” The ranking Democrat on the panel, Sen Bill Nelson, “was blunter: ‘The support is not there on this committee or in the Senate.’”

Study: Climate Change Would Hit Southern States Harder Than Others.

The New York Times (6/29, Popovich) reports a new study in the journal Science on the potential economic harm of climate change found that America could face damages worth 0.7 percent of GDP annually by the 2080s for every one degree Fahrenheit rise in global temperature. The researchers concluded that the impacts could prove highly unequal, with states in the Northeast and West faring relatively well and parts of the Midwest and Southeast suffering the most harm. For instance, the worst-hit counties in already-warm states such as Arizona and Texas could see losses of up to 20 percent of GDP if emissions to continue to rise unabated. The greatest impact would come from heat wave deaths, with high temperatures also leading to energy cost spikes, flagging labor productivity, and increasingly flood-prone coasts that would heighten hurricanes’ potential for destruction.

Despite Appeals Court Ruling, EPA To Evaluate Job Impacts Of Regulations.

The AP (6/29, Lovan) reports that a federal appeals court ruled Thursday that the Environmental Protection Agency does not have to evaluate the economic and job impacts of its air pollution regulations. Regardless, the agency said it will consider the job impacts of the its policies.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“A Sign Of Hope From Mr. Tillerson.” A New York Times (6/30) editorial notes that when the State Department rolled out its annual human rights report in March, Secretary of State Tillerson “was nowhere to be found. Unlike his recent predecessors, he didn’t introduce the findings at a press briefing.” The Times welcomes Tillerson’s participation this week in the release of the Department’s annual human trafficking report, which it calls “a hopeful sign” that Tillerson chose to put his “own political weight behind the report, and more broadly, the American effort to press other governments to improve anti-trafficking laws and prosecutions.”

“Mr. Trump’s For-Profit Campaign.” In an editorial, the New York Times (6/30, Board) notes that President Trump hosted “a $10 million re-election fund-raiser at his own hotel in Washington on Wednesday,” which it says “may have been a first in recent presidential history: an event that lined a chief executive’s campaign coffers and his pockets at the same time.” The Times says the event “also suggested that Mr. Trump plans to run his second campaign much like his first, as an opportunity to not only further his political ambitions, but also to make a bit on the side.”

“Please Let This Be A Pivot Point For The Subway.” The New York Times (6/29) editorializes that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo’s declaration that New York City’s subway system is in a state of emergency is “a welcome statement from on high” that fixes “are needed right away.” Still, “it is tempting to point out that Mr. Cuomo’s focus on the subway...could have come a lot sooner.” It’s also tempting to “arch an eyebrow” at his MTA Genius Transit Challenge offering $1 million in prize money, which would seem unnecessary. The Times proposes obvious fixes: decrease overcrowding with upgraded signals, replace “prehistoric” cars, and find new money sources.

Washington Post.

“A Syrian Activist Was A State Department Ally. Now, The State Department Won’t Grant Him Asylum.” A Washington Post (6/29) editorial says Syrian activist Radwan Ziadeh “was a go-to ally for the Obama administration’s State Department when it sought to create an alternative to the Assad regime.” Now, “inexplicably, Mr. Ziadeh is being threatened with deportation” from the US on grounds that he had “provided material support” to “an undesignated terrorist organization” — namely, members of US-backed rebel groups. The Post says the “blinkered judgment is a gross violation of common sense and an embarrassment to the federal government bureaucracy. It ought to be reversed before it has a more damaging impact on the faltering US effort to find a formula for peace in Syria.”

“Trump Clearly Won’t Change. Here’s What The Rest Of Us Can Do.” The Washington Post (6/29) editorializes that “it’s obvious that there is no point in urging President Trump to act with greater dignity, respect for his office or, for that matter, self-respect,” and “that makes it all the more urgent for the rest of us to think about how to safeguard civility and democratic values until his presidency ends. ... What gives us hope is the conviction that the American people are better than the misogyny and rudeness we see spewing from the White House.”

“Virginia’s Governor Still Has Time To Save A Mentally Ill Man From Execution.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/29) says that while there is no doubt as to the guilt of William Morva — who is scheduled to be executed in Virginia next Thursday — it’s less clear whether “jurors would have sentenced him to death they had been aware of the true extent of his mental illness.” The Post says that while “capital punishment is dehumanizing,” executing “a man suffering from severe mental illness is an act of particular barbarism — especially if his condition may have been misdiagnosed in trial.” The Post lauds Gov. Terry McAuliffe’s commitment to upholding state law despite personal opposition to the death penalty. However, the Post encourages the governor to commute Morva’s sentence on grounds of mental illness — a move for which there is precedence.

Wall Street Journal.

“Central Banks And The New Abnormal.” The Wall Street Journal (6/29) editorializes that currency and bond market fluctuations this week show investors’ sensitivity to signals central banks are sending about eventually tightening monetary policy. The Journal insists, however, that ECB Mario Draghi and Bank of England Governor Mark Carney actually said very little in their policy announcements this week, especially as it will be years until either the UK or EU reaches anywhere near their pre-2008 interest rates. Even the Federal Reserve’s monetary policy tightening isn’t very tight, says the Journal. Rather, market reactions come because they’ve forgotten what normal, pre-crisis monetary policy looks like. This makes central banks’ jobs difficult because signaling even gradual tightening is interpreted as drastic, but the Journal says this is their own fault because policy is increasingly divorced from definable metrics such as inflation.

“How Long Is Three Years?.” The Wall Street Journal (6/29) editorializes that the Supreme Court’s 5-4 decision on Monday is to be celebrated, as it ruled that the case the California Public Employee’s Retirement System filed in 2011, past the three- year deadline specified in the law. The Journal says the four liberal justices’ voting in favor of Calper reflects their openness to creatively interpreting laws, even when Congress unambiguously has written that a statute of repose — meant to protect “the defendant from an interminable threat of liability” — can be changed in “no event.”

“The ObamaCare Waiver Breakthrough.” A Wall Street Journal (6/29) editorial argues that the Senate healthcare bill would make the process by which states apply for waivers faster and more flexible, which, it says, could result in innovation at the state level.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "Let's stop pretending Trump is a symptom of something. He's the disease, and the only cure is three and a half years of liquor and bed rest."

Stephen Colbert: "The Supreme Court OKed partial implementation of the ban and will revisit the full ban when it hears oral arguments in October, which will be followed by oral arguments with your family at Thanksgiving."

Stephen Colbert: "The decision allows in travelers from the six affected countries if they have 'a bona fide relationship with a person or entity in the United States.' Yes, it has to be a 'bona fide relationship with a foreigner,' so that will exclude your imaginary Canadian girlfriend and the totally hot guy you made out with in France."

Jimmy Fallon: "This morning, President Trump sent a pretty crazy tweet about MSNBC's Mika Brzezinski, where he accused her of getting a face-lift. Then he went back to combing his hair with a Dyson Air Blade."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump accused Mika Brzezinski of getting plastic surgery, which is odd, 'cause that's the only thing covered by his healthcare plan."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump, last night, hosted the first fundraiser for his 2020 re-election campaign. The event was black tie, but white guests."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump today met with the newly elected President of South Korea. 'Do you speak English?' asked the President of South Korea."

Seth Meyers: "You know things are bad when five months into your presidency, you have to tell people, 'Hey, I'm not going anywhere.' That's like hearing a couple is renewing their vows a month after the wedding."

Seth Meyers: "If the Cubs found themselves in the unenviable position of standing awkwardly next to Trump while he rambled on about healthcare, they maybe should have taken their cues from pitcher Carl Edwards Jr., who skipped the meeting. Asked what he would do instead of meeting the President, Edwards says, 'I'm trying to go see, like, the dinosaur museum.' So, apparently, he went to the Senate."

Senators Question Interior Nominee On Conflicts Of Interest, Science.

The Hill (5/18, Henry) reports the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee "dug into the background of" Interior Department Deputy Secretary nominee David Bernhardt, "raising concerns about conflicts of interest and his time in the George W. Bush administration." Democrats probed "his work as a lobbyist and the possible influence he could have over government decisions involving his former clients." Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-WA) called for him to "recuse himself from any decisions involving former clients for his entire tenure, not just the one-year period established by administration ethics rules." Sen. Debbie Stabenow (D-MI) "asked about his approach to science, noting reports that Interior changed scientific research related to oil drilling during his tenure" in the Bush Administration. However, "the hearing was less contentious than was expected, given the intense opposition Bernhardt's nomination has garnered."

The Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (5/18, Boxall) reports Sen. Cantwell "pressed Bernhardt about his involvement with the Central Valley's Westlands Water District, the nation's largest irrigation district, and Cadiz Inc., which has for years been embroiled in a controversial effort to pump water from a Mojave Desert aquifer." Barnhardt is a partner at "high-profile lobbying-law firm" Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck, which has "represented Westlands in four lawsuits against Interior Department agencies" and lobbied for Cadiz. Cantwell said about those relationships, "Westlands and Cadiz represent such large public policy issues with financial interests that it would be better if you recused yourself from [their matters] the entire time that you were at the department."

Bloomberg Politics (5/18, Natter, Dlouhy) reports Bernhardt said he would "step down from Brownstein Hyatt if confirmed and said he would forfeit his capital account with the law firm if it's not refunded first," meaning he would forfeit "potential revenue tied to the Mojave Desert project."

ABC News (5/18, Ebbs) reports Bernhardt told the committee "that he will consider science on climate change but that Trump's policy opinions that prioritize jobs could outweigh scientific conclusions." When pushed on his prioritization of addressing climate change by Sen. Al Franken (D-MN), Bernhardt responded, "Here's the reality, we're going to look at the science whatever it is, but policy decisions are made, this president ran, he won on a particular policy perspective."

The Washington Examiner (5/18, Siciliano) reports that after Bernhardt said "we're not going to sacrifice jobs” to deal with climate change, Sen. Franken told Bernhardt, “I think it’s very short-sighted to talk about the extra jobs you get by drilling for fossil fuels.” Franken asked, “What about the jobs we are going to have dealing with climate dislocation and refugees? What about the jobs we’re going to have when the East Coast is flooded?”

Another Washington \(DC\) Examiner (5/18, Sciliano) article says Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) said she would move Bernhardt’s nomination “to a vote as soon as possible, despite opposition raised by Democrats over his past experience.” She pointed out “two past appointees to the Interior Department under the Obama administration with similar backgrounds to Bernhardt’s.” If Bernhardt is confirmed as deputy secretary, McClatchy (5/18, Doyle) reports that he would “effectively serve as chief operating officer of a department with 70,000 employees, a $12 billion annual budget and management responsibility for some 500 million acres.”

Additional coverage and commentary on Bernhardt’s nomination can be read at Huffington Post (5/18, Erbenraut, Kaufman), Washington \(DC\) Examiner (5/18, Sciliano), Politico Europe (5/18, Whieldon), Think Progress (5/18, Page), Alaska Dispatch News (5/18, Martinson), Alaska Public Radio Network (5/18, Ruskin), High Country \(CO\) News (5/18, Shogren), and Southern California Public Radio (5/18, Guerin).

Conservation Group Takes Out Full Page National Ads Supporting Monuments.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (5/18, O’Donoghue) reports the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance purchased full page ads in the Thursday national editions of The Washington Post and The New York Times in support of saving the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante monuments. The ads “question if Trump’s legacy will measure up to that of another New York Republican, Teddy Roosevelt, and the first U.S. president to declare a national monument under the Antiquities Act.” The ads’ placement come “the heels of a four-day visit to Utah by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, who is conducting a review of 27 national monuments as the result of an executive order signed by Trump in April.” The Trump Administration’s order “asks for a probe to determine if the designations comply with the provisions of the Antiquities Act, which was passed by Congress in 1906 out a desire to protect antiquities – or cultural artifacts – from looting and vandalism.”

Meanwhile, Mike Matz, Director, US Public Lands for the Pew Charitable Trusts (5/18, Matz) writes in its “Compass Points” blog that all citizens need to “speak up for our national monuments.” He encourages readers to submit their comment “by May 26 to urge President Trump and Secretary Zinke to preserve Bears Ears as it was approved.”

Additional commentary concerning the Administration’s review of national monument designations can be read at the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (5/18, Canon), Santa Clarita Valley \(CA\) News (5/18, Castro), Santa Clarita Valley \(CA\) Signal (5/18, Holt), Adventure Journal (5/18, Barronian), and Las Vegas \(NV\) Sun (5/18, Rothberg).

Zinke Has Made It Harder To Comment On Monument Review Process. Zoe Carpenter writes in Nation (5/18, Carpenter) that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke claimed last week while visiting Utah to inspect the Big Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments: “This is the first time in a monument that we’ve given the public a say.” He said when President Trump ordered the review of national monuments, “Finally, rural America has a voice again.” Carpenter argues Zinke “has not made it easy for the public to participate in the review process—in fact, in some ways he’s made it more difficult.” Carpenter points out Zinke held no public meetings during his Utah trip, “in contrast to his predecessor Sally Jewell, who held a four-hour meeting prior to the designation of the Bears Ears monument, with more than 1,000 in attendance.” It took six years to establish Big Ears, whereas the “public comment period DOI opened as it considers rescinding its protections lasts just 15 days.”

Legal Experts: Congress, Not President, Solely Has Power To Weaken Monument Protections. Chris D’angelo writes in the Huffington Post (5/18, D’angelo) that four legal scholars argue in a new analysis that if President Trump tries to rescind monument status or “at least shrink” sites like Big Ears National Monument, the Administration “will almost certainly be challenged in court.” Two law professors from the University of Colorado and UCLA, an assistant law professor at the University of California, and a law school fellow at UCLA “conclude that Congress, not the president, has sole legal power to rescind or weaken protections for monuments designated under the Antiquities Act of 1906.”

Bear Ears National Monument Proclamation Shows Tension Between Natives, Farmers. Voice of America (5/18, Hilleary) reports on the tension between Native Americans and non-Native farmers over then-President Barack Obama’s proclamation last year naming Bears Ears a national monument “and established a commission of tribal representatives to consult with the government on how the land should be used.” Utah lawmakers in January “appealed to Donald Trump to rescind Obama's proclamation and return Bears Ears to its former status." On April 26, the president "called on the Department of the Interior (DOI) to review all national monuments larger than 4,047 hectares with an eye toward their status and use." Interior announced May 5 a 15-day period for public comment on the debate, starting May 12.

Lawsuit Filed Over Opening Of Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge.

Reuters (5/18, Aubin) reports "several environmental groups" have filed suit against the US Department of Interior and allege "that it failed to properly investigate the presence of plutonium in the Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge before deciding to open it to the public." The lawsuit "seeks an in-depth environmental study of the 4,883-acre area before its scheduled opening to visitors in the summer of 2018 to assure that it is safe."

The Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (5/17, Brennan) reports the lawsuit was filed by the "Rocky Mountain Peace and Justice Center, the community activist groups Candelas Glows/Rocky Flats Glows, Rocky Flats Right to Know, Rocky Flats Neighborhood Association and the Environmental Information Network Inc."

Zinke Dances With Second Lady In Montana.

The Independent Journal Review (5/18, Johnson) reports Vice President Mike Pence visited Montana to support the Republican candidate a special election last weekend, and after the headliner campaign rally in Billings, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke tapped Karen Pence on the shoulder, who commence to lift "the Second Lady off the ground and went side-to-side."

American Petroleum Institute Sues Interior Department.

Legal Newsline (5/18, Torres) reports the American Petroleum Institute is suing the Interior Department, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, the Office of Natural Resources Revenue and director Gregory Gould, "alleging they eviscerated the hierarchy of the civil penalty provisions of the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act." API says in the complaint it was "damaged due to the final rule's net effect. The plaintiff alleges the defendants replaced the provision of the Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act, which could risk federal and Native American oil and gas lessees for enforcement actions."

Seniors Can Get NPS Lifetime Pass For $10.

The Arizona Republic (5/18, Johnson) reports people 62 and older can purchase a National Park Service lifetime pass for $10 for a limited time, as it will soon increase to $80. The senior pass "offers lifetime admission to more than 2,000 recreation sites managed by the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Reclamation, Fish and Wildlife Service, Forest Service, National Park Service and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers." The pass is called an "incredible bargain" considering, for example, admission to Grand Canyon National Park is $30 for seven days. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (5/18) and Tacoma \(WA\) News Tribune (5/17, Cockrell) also report on the senior pass.

NPS Temporarily Closes Bunker Hill Monument Due To Record Heat Thursday.

The AP (5/18, Salsberg) reports that heat records in the Northeast US Thursday were a preview of summer. According to the National Weather Service, the "mercury reached 92 degrees in Boston shortly after noon Thursday, breaking the old record of 91 degrees for May 18 set in 1936." The National Park Service said on Twitter that it had to close Boston's Bunker Hill Monument to visitors for a time due to the heat. Alan Dunham, a meteorologist at the Massachusetts office of the weather service, "said 90-plus degree heat in mid-May was unusual in the Northeast, but far from unheard of." The AP story was also picked up by Bloomberg News (5/18), Denver \(CO\) Post (5/18), Boston \(MA\) Herald (5/18), WSMV-TV Nashville \(TN\) Nashville, TN (5/18), and the Japan Times (5/19).

Washington Monument Accepts Plaque From Ireland.

In continuing coverage, the Washington \(DC\) Times (5/18) carries an AP article about the National Park Service accepting a plaque on Thursday from the people of Ireland that will be hung in the staircase of the Washington Monument. The park service says new donations to the monument are accepted "only in very rare circumstances." Other sites that carried the AP article include the Owosso \(MI\) Argus-Press (5/18), Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (5/18), and WUSA-TV Washington \(DC\) Washington (5/18).

NPS Investigating Vandalism To Perry's Victory And International Peace Memorial.

WJW-TV Cleveland (5/18, Sutyak) reports the National Park Service and US park rangers "are investigating vandalism to Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial, which is the final resting place of three American Naval officers and three British officers." Around May 13, "an unknown person or persons scaled a fence to enter an area which was closed for restoration." Investigators are offering up to $1,000 for information "leading to the identification, arrest, and conviction of those responsible."

White House Website Survey Asks Americans If They Want Government To Dismantle NPS, FWS.

Wilderness Society (5/18) reports a new White House website asks Americans which agencies they would like the federal government to dismantle. Included among the choices are the National Park Service, US Fish and Wildlife Service, and "other critical environmental departments." The Wilderness Society claims the survey is "keeping with the worldview of an administration that has previously advised starvation-diet funding for conservation agencies and programs, even though they are considered to provide a great return on taxpayer investment." The society urges citizens to "take a minute to tell the White House you REJECT its attack on public land agencies."

Fish and Wildlife Service

FWS Restarts Process To Chart New National Bison Range Management Plan.

The Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (5/18, Wilson) reports the US Fish and Wildlife Service has restarted the process to draft a new 15-year management for the National Bison Range "after a proposal to transfer the lands back to the Flathead Indian Reservation was rescinded last month." The announcement comes about a month after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "reversed course on an Obama Administration proposal to return the Bison Range to the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes." The agency has not released any information regarding "whether the plan might grant the tribes increased management authority over the Bison Range," but the notice does "invite the tribes to participate as a 'cooperating agency' in the process, meaning they will work alongside the Fish and Wildlife Service to help develop the plan and an accompanying environmental review."

Flathead National Forest Withdraws Logging Proposal After FWS Reverses Bull Trout Opinion.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (5/18, Chaney) reports the Flathead National Forest withdrew a "proposal to log in a popular hiking area west of Condon after environmental groups threatened to sue and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reversed an ecological opinion." FWS biologists in 2015 "told the Forest Service the Cold Jim project would probably not have adverse effects on bull trout in the area." But after several conservation groups "sent a 60-day notice of intent to sue in November 2016," FWS reanalyzed and reversed its position. Arlene Montgomery, program director for Friends of the Wild Swan, said in an email, "It is ironic that the agencies were fine with this project until we raised concerns and threatened to sue." Nevertheless, Flathead Forest Supervisor Chip Weber "said the Cold-Jim project would only need some adjustments in its documentation to resume the activity."

Bureau of Land Management

BLM Organizing Yearly Cleanup Of Snake River Canyon Rim Saturday.

The Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (5/18) reports the Bureau of Land Management is partnering with several groups for an annual cleanup of the north rim of the Snake River Canyon starting at 8 a.m. Saturday. Volunteers should bring rakes and square point shovels, and trash bags will be provided. KLIX-AM Twin Falls \(ID\) Twin Falls, ID (5/18, Baeza) also covers this story on its website.

Bruneau Canyon Outlook Holding Ribbon-Cutting Ceremony June 1.

KLIX-AM Twin Falls, ID (5/18, Weeks) reports on its website the BLM announced the Bruneau Canyon Outlook in Idaho will open with a June 1 ribbon-cutting ceremony. The overlook "offers a dramatically improved area from which to take in the breathtaking vistas along the canyon rim," reads information from the Twin Falls District of the Bureau of Land Management. The site will offer "a variety of new amenities, including an ADA-accessible trail along the edge of the wilderness."

US Geological Survey

Debris Caused Erroneous Gauge Readings Along Boise River.

The Idaho Statesman (5/18, Poppino) reports debris downstream of the Glenwood Bridge on the Boise River "backed up water at the streamgauge the U.S. Geological Survey maintains there," causing the gauge to "overreport the flow of water passing under the bridge." USGS said the gauge height is accurate, but the flow "was thrown off by the debris slowing the water and increasing the area it covered at the gauge."

USGS Estimates Spraberry Formation Contains 4.2 Billion Barrels.

The Midland \(TX\) Reporter-Telegram (5/18, McEwen) reports the completed assessment of the Spraberry formation by the US Geological Survey estimates it "holds an estimated 4.2 billion barrels of technically recoverable oil and 3.1 trillion cubic feet of natural gas." The new reading is significantly higher than the 2007 assessment of 500 million barrels.

Securing America's Energy Future

Offshore Energy Development

Production Growth Outside Of US, OPEC Poses Problem For Oil Supply.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Kantchev) reports while oil traders are primarily concerned with US shale output and OPEC cutting supply, a new wave of production from countries including Canada and Brazil may pose unexpected problems. Most of the attention has focused on the larger producers, but the gains from Canada and Brazil, along with the UK and Norway, are adding to the global oversupply. A Wall Street survey found that outside of the US and OPEC's coalition, the next five biggest producing countries are set to increase their combined output by about 300,000 bpd.

Onshore Energy Development

McCurdy: Greater Access To Natural Gas Will Help US Economy, Businesses.

Dave McCurdy, president and CEO of the American Gas Association, writes in The Hill (5/18, McCurdy, Contributor) "Pundits Blog" that upgrading and extending the nation's natural gas infrastructure is "key" to helping "businesses operate more efficiently." McCurdy continues, "Greater access to natural gas can help move our communities and our nation forward." However, "because America's natural gas infrastructure is privately owned and operated, we are not asking for government funding to meet the market's demand." Instead, McCurdy says, the natural gas industry is "advocat[ing] for reforms to policies developed during a time of perceived scarcity," namely the "modernization of federal permitting policies."

Renewable Energy

Administration Expected To Propose Cuts To Wind, Solar Energy Research.

The Washington Post (5/18, Mooney) reports that "current and former Energy Department officials familiar with budget discussions" say the Administration "is expected to propose massive cuts to federal government research on wind and solar energy next week." Citing a Department budget document Axios first reported (5/17, Harder) that the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy "would face a roughly 70 percent cut in 2018, carving about $ 1.45 billion from its $2.09 billion 2017 budget," and two officials contacted by the Post "cited numbers very similar or, in some cases, identical to those in that report." While it "was unclear whether these were the final budget figures," Josh Freed, vice president for the Clean Energy Program at Third Way, called them "extremely troubling."

Maryland Approves Off-Shore Wind Project, Seeking Economic Boost.

E&E Publishing (5/18) reports Maryland approved 368 megawatts of offshore wind power last week in an effort to become "the industry's 'first mover' and the supplier for the East Coast." The approval is the first policy in the US "to explicitly marry an offshore wind goal to an economic one." The Maryland Public Service Commission required developers US Wind and Deepwater "to build part of their supply chains in Maryland," including spending at least $76 million on steel manufacturing in the state, using ports in Baltimore and Ocean City, and "pump[ing] $40 million into Tradepoint Atlantic, a vast shipyard east of Baltimore." Maryland offers offshore renewable energy credits worth about $130 per megawatt-hour generated for "20 years once the windmills start generating power," creating "a premium price for power" but also a cash stream the developers "say will enable them to raise the cash to build the projects."

California Sets Renewable Energy Record.

The San Francisco Chronicle (5/18, Fracassa) reports that on Saturday "renewable sources produced a record 67.2 percent of the electricity on the portion of state's power grid controlled by the California Independent System Operator." The year is expected to be record-setting for renewable energy production in the state, due to "the growing number of solar power plants in the state, the seasonal increase in sunshine and the flush hydroelectricity reserves produced by last winter's rain." Steven Greenlee, a spokesman for the ISO, said that the regular pace of record breaking days "shows how our grid is shifting from the old paradigm, the old grid we used to have."

Empowering Native American Communities

Tribes Challenging Dakota Access Pipeline Drop Appeal On Sacred Water Argument.

The AP (5/18, Nicholson) reports the Native American tribes that are continuing their legal challenges to the Dakota Access pipeline voluntarily dropped an appeal of a decision that allowed final construction to proceed on the project. US District Judge James Boasberg refused to stop completion of the line on grounds that the Sioux tribes considered the water sacred. The Cheyenne River Sioux appealed the decision, but in late April submitted a motion to voluntarily dismiss the claim. A number of tribes continue to challenge the project in federal court.

Other sources carrying the AP story include the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (5/18, Nicholson), Philly \(PA\) (5/18, Nicholson), U.S. News & World Report (5/18, Nicholson) and the Daily Mail (5/18, Nicholson).

Federal Judge Grants Mashpee Tribe's Request For A Stay In Appeal Of Land-In-Trust Ruling.

The Brockton \(MA\) Enterprise (5/18, Lindahl) reports a federal judge "granted the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe's request for a stay in its appeal of a lower court ruling that rejected the way the government took the tribe's land into trust." The tribe requested the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals "pause the appeal proceedings earlier this month in anticipation of a decision by the Bureau of Indian Affairs" by June 19 "that could preserve the tribe's trust land on an alternate track, outside of court." Judge David J. Barron granted the request Monday, and "the tribe will be required to inform the court how it wishes to proceed within 10 days of the bureau's decision."

Utility Board Panel Backs Replacement Lease For Navajo Power Plant.

The AP (5/18) reports, "A Salt River Project board committee is recommending the full board approve a proposed replacement lease" for a coal-fired power plant on the Navajo Nation, which would allow it to continue operation beyond this year.

Office Of Insular Affairs

Over 7,000 Public Comments Oppose Redesignation Of Marine Monuments.

Samoa News (5/16, Sagapolutele) reported that as of Monday, there have been 7,000 public comments submitted online “opposing any move by the federal government to remove previous presidential designation of the five marine monuments in the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean, such as the Rose Atoll in American Samoa.” One anonymous commenter wrote, “Rose Atoll must be protected as an uninhabited wildlife refuge, as it is home to an immense fish population, is a critical nesting site for two species of threatened turtles, and is home to a vast majority of the seabird population of American Samoa.” The comments are in response to President Trump’s executive order “directing the Interior Secretary to review land and marine monuments throughout the US and its territories that were designated by previous presidents going back to 1996.”

Marshall Island President Criticizes Australia, US Over Inaction On Climate Change.

The Australian Broadcasting Corporation (5/17, Fettes) reports Marshall Islands President Dr, Hilda Heine “questioned Australia’s standing in the Pacific over its inaction on climate change.” During a lecture at the Australian National University in Canberra, Dr. Heine said, “It is hard to explain the feeling of being the President of a country reading a report that supposedly condemns your country to oblivion.” The Marshall Islands also is a “fierce defender of the Paris Climate Accord, which it says is critical to the very survival of the nation.” In response to President Trump’s consideration of withdrawing from that agreement, Dr. Heine said, “Paris is the last chance for the world. We must hope the President sees that strong international cooperation based on climate science is the way to avert the catastrophic threat to our very existence.”

World Bank Approves Grant Financing For Marshall Islands Resilience Project.

The Financial (5/10) reported the World Bank’s Board of Executive Directors “approved on May 9 grant financing for a project that is expected to help communities in the Marshall Islands...prepare better for the impact of climate change.” The Pacific Resilience Project II “will receive a US$19.6 million grant for the Marshall Islands and a US$4 million grant for the Pacific Community (SPC) to support this important initiative, according to the World Bank.” The project will “Improve disaster preparedness and strengthen early warning systems” and “invest in coastal adaptation and shoreline protection.”

Opinion: Climate Change Disproportionately Impacts Health Of Small Island Nations.

Hugh Sealy, a professor in the Department of Public Health and Preventive Medicine at St. George’s University in Grenada, writes in STAT (5/17, Sealy) that the Marshall Islands recently “became the first nation to sign onto the Kigali pact, a major international agreement aimed at limiting the emission of an extremely potent class of greenhouse gases called hydrofluorocarbons.” He explains that the Marshall Islands, like many smaller island nations, faces health hazards from rising sea levels that “threaten to someday submerge the islands,” a higher risk of disease from growing mosquito populations in increasingly warmer weather, and other climate change-induced perils. Sealy urges larger nations to adopt more responsibility for climate change impact, writing that “for residents of small island nations,” climate change is “an immediate public health challenge.”

OIA Economist Collects Input On Economic Development In America Samoa.

The Talanei \(ASM\) (5/11) reported the Department of Interior, Office of Insular Affairs Economist, Wali Osman briefed about a dozen members of the American Samoa business community May 10 “concerning a project he is doing with the US territories aimed at creating economic growth and stimulating the economies of these jurisdictions.” According to the article, the OIA “is compiling a report on doable economic development projects in the insular areas, and Osman is in the territory to collect input from the government and private sector on what they feel should be included in the list.” Osman said there is no guarantee that the identified projects in the report would be implemented, but there is “hope that the report would be considered beyond the Department of Interior.”

Amphibious Military Exercises On Guam Continue After French Landing Craft Ran Aground.

The AP (5/13) reported multinational amphibious exercises on Guam moved ahead as scheduled Saturday, a “day after being suspended when a French landing craft ran aground.” A spokesman for the US 3rd Marine Division “said Japanese soldiers will practice rubber craft raids” on Saturday, and on Sunday, US Marines “plan to conduct live-fire training with French troops.” According to the AP, the “weeklong maneuvers” around Guam and Tinian islands also involved the UK and “were intended to show support for the free passage of vessels in international waters amid concerns China may restrict access to the South China Sea.”

Australia’s Simplot Praises Sustainability Of PNA Pacific Tuna.

The Marshall Islands Journal (4/26) reported Parties to the Nauru Agreement’s Pacific tuna label was praised by Australian-based Simplot for being the “only true sustainable” fishing model in the world. Over the past 15 months, the company “has sold 100 million cans of tuna with the Pacific/Marine Stewardship Council logos. This is tuna sourced from Parties to the Nauru Agreement (PNA) waters that is the subject of what is known as a “chain of custody” that verifies the tuna was caught without the use of fish aggregation devices (FADs).”

Palau, FSM Sign Interconnect Agreement With Philippines, Indonesian Carriers.

Marianas Variety (5/5) reported Palau and the Federated States of Micronesia reached an interconnection agreement “with Philippines and Indonesian carriers that will allow the two Pacific island states to tap into a new submarine cable network that directly connects Southeast Asia and the United States.” The high-speed undersea cable system “is currently being installed by Japan’s NEC Corp., the cable network supplier, and is anticipated to be up and running by the end of the year.” Palau President Tommy Remengesau praised the deal, saying, “The submarine fiber network will be critical to so many aspects of our life in Palau, from healthcare to education, from social networking to business.” NEC Corp. said in a statement that “it has commenced construction of three submarine cable links that will connect Palau, Yap and Chuuk to the rest of the world.”

Tax Breaks For UVI Research Park Have Not Helped Virgin Island’s Budget Crisis.

St. Croix Source (5/16, Kessler) reports on the Virgin Islands’ budget crisis, discussing how in recent years the government has used local money to “create a research and technology park at the University of the Virgin Islands to foster a local tech industry.” Data show the RTPark “has arguably reduced tax revenues with little development in exchange.” The article says it is unlikely, in the near term, for Congress to rescind the tax breaks because “the current governing majority and president are broadly in favor of corporate tax breaks. Meanwhile, whether or not tax breaks are an effective strategy for creating real economic development.”

Tackling America’s Water Challenges

California To Repair Oroville Dam’s Spillway.

The AP (5/18) reports that, in “an all-out race to get” the Oroville Dam’s “shattered main spillway” operational before the next rainy season, California will shut it for the summer to accommodate “a $275 million project to rebuild and strengthen the” spillway. The water-release gates in the dam’s hydroelectric power plant will be “the main way of releasing water from behind the dam during summer construction.”

Idaho Water Resource Board Suspends Snake Plain Aquifer Recharge Program.

KIFI-TV Idaho Falls, ID (5/18) reports on its website that the Snake Plain Aquifer recharge program has been suspended as of Thursday. The Idaho Water Resource Board “took the action to accommodate efforts to fill the reservoir system.” According to the article, the “U.S. Bureau of Reclamation is decreasing flows below Minidoka Dam to meet irrigation demand.” If conditions change and the Bureau of Reclamation permits flows past Milner Dam, “the board will reassess managed recharge opportunities.”

Shoshone Falls To Decline Due To Bureau Of Reclamation Changes.

The Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (5/18, KEnnison) reports “flows at Shoshone Falls are declining rapidly, and should be around a minimum of 300 cubic-feet-per-second this weekend” because “of Bureau of Reclamation operations in the Upper Snake River system, and increased diversion for irrigation upstream.” The falls’ peak flows this spring “were nearly 20,800 cfs April 13-14. In May, the flows have been between 11,000 and 13,000, but began dropping below that on Wednesday.”

Lake Tahoe Nears Maximum Capacity.

KCRA-TV Sacramento, CA (5/18) reports on its website that Lake Tahoe “has filled well above its natural rim and is inching closer to reaching its maximum legal capacity, thanks to record precipitation and snowpack over the winter.” John McEldowney, emergency manager for the Placer County Office of Emergency Services, “said the dam that releases water from the lake into the Truckee River is fully open to allow for as much water release as possible.” According to McEldowney, “the lake is projected to go higher than what it is legally allowed to hold, so the water master has to manage it and be as safe and proactive as possible in order to get Lake Tahoe’s water level down over the next several months.”

Trump Calls Investigation A “Witch Hunt” Amid Bipartisan Praise For Special Counsel.

Coverage of the beginning of special counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation into possible Trump campaign ties to Russia led two of the three broadcast network newscasts, and combined for more than 22 minutes of related coverage between the three. While coverage itself of President Trump’s Thursday morning tweet calling the Russia investigation “the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history,” and his repetition of that phrase later in the day, is basically straightforward, legislators and commentators reacted negatively. Reaction to Mueller’s appointment is also heavily covered, and praised by legislators of both parties. While Trump told reporters that he hopes the investigation can be wrapped up quickly, several analyses say it could consume much of his term.

On ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 2, 3:00, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported, “Asked for the first time about the appointment of a special counsel to investigate Russian meddling in the campaign, President Trump insisted the whole investigation is a ‘witch hunt.’ ... Behind closed doors, in a meeting with network anchors, the President went even further. David Muir asked him about his upcoming foreign trip, saying that world leaders would undoubtedly ask him if he supports the idea of a special counsel. The President’s response: ‘I believe it hurts our country terribly, because it shows we’re a divided, mixed-up, not-unified country. It also happens to be a pure excuse for the Democrats, having lost an election that they should have easily won, and I think it’s a very, very negative thing. And hopefully, this can go quickly.’”

The CBS Evening News (5/18, lead story, 3:00, Pelley) reported, “For the first time, the President has denied trying to shut down the FBI investigation of whether his campaign colluded with Russia to influence the election. The President called the investigation today ridiculous.” NBC Nightly News (5/18, lead story, 3:00, Pelley) reported, “In a brief news conference, the President saying yesterday’s appointment of the special counsel to take over the Russia investigation is a ‘witch hunt’ that divides the country, and he offered an emphatic ‘no’ when asked whether he asked former FBI Director Comey to stop investigating his National Security Advisor Michael Flynn.”

Jeff Zeleny reported on CNN’s Situation Room (5/18) that even though the appointment of special counsel has been widely approved “by many Republicans...the President is seething.” Zeleny said “Russia’s role in the 2016 election...is undisputed by any leader of the intelligence community” but Trump “did not take that opportunity to say anything negative about Russia at all.” Trump also “defended his decision to fire Comey, saying he thought it would be a very popular, bipartisan decision.”

The AP (5/18, Werner, Superville) reports that the President “denounced the appointment of a special counsel to investigate his campaign’s ties with Russia Thursday, repeatedly calling it an unprecedented ‘witch hunt’ that ‘hurts our country terribly.’ Even as he erupted anew, fellow Republicans expressed hopes the move would restore some calm to a capital plunged into chaos.” Reuters (5/18, Chiacu, Zengerle) says the President’s “defiant Twitter comments stood in contrast to his measured statement on Wednesday night...in which he said ‘a thorough investigation will confirm what we already know – there was no collusion between my campaign and any foreign entity.’” Abby Phillip of the Washington Post (5/18) writes, “President Trump’s silence lasted just over 12 hours. Then, he let it all out.” The Los Angeles Times (5/18, Bierman, Bennett) says the President “returned from a brief Twitter hiatus” with tweets “illustrating his anger over the appointment of a special counsel to head the investigation.”

The New York Times (5/18, A1, Landler) reports, “In a pair of early morning tweets, Mr. Trump cited, without evidence, what he called the ‘illegal acts’ of President Obama and Hillary Clinton’s campaign. “With all of the illegal acts that took place in the Clinton campaign & Obama Administration, there was never a special counsel appointed!' Mr. Trump wrote, misspelling counsel." USA Today (5/18, Jackson) reports that "it was unclear what 'illegal acts' Trump was referring to." The Washington Post (5/18, Parker) says that it "was not the first time Trump has made baseless claims without providing any evidence."

The New York Daily News (5/18, Silverstein) writes that Trump "awoke in paranoia Thursday morning with a defensive tweetstorm about the probe into his alleged Russia ties – contradicting reports that he calmly received news of a special counsel taking over the investigation." Politico (5/18, Nussbaum) says Trump "is tired of not winning. He wants to talk about jobs, or trade, or combating illegal immigration, or his victory in the 2016 election. But reality continues to intervene." The New York Post (5/18, Moore), the Washington Times (5/18, Miller), and Roll Call (5/18, Bennett) also cover the President's remarks.

Senate Minority Whip Durbin said on CNN's New Day (5/18), "This president has no one to blame by himself for the mess that he's in. Things that he has done, things he has said, the tweets that he continues to incessantly release, just make his life much more complicated." Sen. Jack Reed said on CNN's Wolf (5/18) that Trump's comments were "inappropriate, frankly." Rep. Jim Himes (D-CT) told CNN's Situation Room (5/18) that there's nothing about Trump's "behavior that suggests that there's absolutely nothing to hide here." Himes also said that he has "seen things that cause me to say this investigation needs to continue."

Some Republicans were critical as well. ABC News tweeted video of Sen. Jeff Flake saying, "Witch hunt? No, I think it's a serious investigation." Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) said on CNN's New Day (5/18) that Trump's tweet was "unfortunate. ... Not only do I think we need this independent counsel and I think Mr. Mueller will do a good job, but I think that Congress also has to allocate additional resources to this effort by appointing a select committee." Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-IL) said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/18), "I don't think it's a witch hunt. Look, if the President thinks there's nothing to hide in this, this will exonerate him."

Philip Bump of the Washington Post (5/18) calls Trump's "witch hunt" comment "an extraordinary complaint," writing, "Any number of other politicians with lower profiles or further back in history have been subjected to unfair and relentless criticism." Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA) tweeted, "As the Representative of Salem, MA, I can confirm that [Trump's assertion] is false."

Bloomberg Politics (5/18, Pettypiece) reports, "During a news conference at the White House Thursday, Trump rejected any suggestions that he tried to interfere with the investigation." The Washington Post (5/18, Parker, Nakamura) reports, "Asked whether he urged Comey to ease up on the Flynn investigation, Trump said at a news conference, 'No, no,' before ordering the media to move onto the 'next question.'"

The New York Daily News (5/18, Joseph) reports that Trump "adamantly denied" that he asked Comey "to stop investigating his close ally." Politico (5/18, Lima) reports that Trump said he fired Comey "in part because of his 'poor, poor performance' during recent testimony before lawmakers on Capitol Hill, as he shifted his explanation of the much-criticized decision." The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Stokols), the New York Post (5/18, Fredericks), the Washington Times (5/18, Miller), the Washington Examiner (5/18, Pappas), and Breitbart (5/18, Key) also have brief coverage of the President's remarks about whether he asked Comey to halt the investigation.

In his Washington Post (5/18) column, Eugene Robinson writes, "Trump believes he is being persecuted, and that is a frighteningly dangerous mind-set for a man with such vast power." Michael Gerson writes in his Washington Post (5/18) column, "Donald Trump offered America a deal: He might cut ethical corners and trash democratic norms, but he would fix the country. After all, the argument went, things could hardly get worse. They could. They did." Catherine Rampell writes in the Washington Post (5/18), "Our saving grace – as a country and, perhaps, as a planet – is that so far the United States has not experienced any major external shocks. Woe betide us when the Trump administration is tasked, as it inevitably will be, with handling a crisis not of its own making."

Mueller May Make Probe A Criminal Investigation. ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 5, 1:05, Thomas) reported that Mueller "is already at work on the investigation. ... In his new role, he'll have broad powers, the power to seek subpoenas, to convene a grand jury, and add as many FBI agents as needed as he digs for evidence of any crimes, ranging from collusion with the Russians to obstruction of justice." On the CBS Evening News (5/18, story 3, 1:35, Pelley), Jan Crawford reported, "In authorizing the appointment, Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein gave [Mueller] broad powers to investigate any links and/or coordination between the Russian government and individuals associated" with Trump, "as well as other matters that may arise directly from the investigation."

NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 3, 2:20, Pelley) reported that the probe “may become a criminal investigation under the man leading it.” Sen. Lindsey Graham: “I think the biggest legal change seems to be that Mr. Mueller is going to proceed forward with the idea of a criminal investigation versus the counterintelligence investigation.” Fox News Special Report (5/18) similarly reported that “some senators told us that they think the ongoing FBI case has crossed a threshold from a counterintelligence probe” to “an investigation of criminal allegations that are extremely serious, including possible obstruction of justice.” Brian Todd reported on CNN's Situation Room (5/18) that “there is a lot of sentiment in Washington tonight that this new investigation and the man leading it are going to turn out to be a positive development.”

Legislators of both parties praised the selection of Mueller and called for a wide inquiry. Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (5/18), “I want to know what the Russians did to interfere with our election, what Trump campaign's collusion was there, and what obstruction of justice there may have been, because there's mounting evidence of obstruction. No charges. No proof. But certainly evidence that needs to be pieced together.” Sen. Ben Cardin said on CNN's The Lead (5/18) that with the appointment of Mueller, “we are assured that this investigation will go without any political involvement and we'll have the resources it needs in order to do a thorough investigation. I think it was well-received by both Democrats and Republicans.”

Sen. Susan Collins said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/18) that her biggest concern is “the steady, drip, drip, drip of stories and allegations. And I worry that the allegations and the speculation are getting ahead of the facts. ... And that's why we need the special counsel to take care of the criminal aspects but we also need the Senate Intelligence Committee to continue its investigation.” Sen. Dianne Feinstein told CNN's Situation Room (5/18), “I think it is a terrific appointment. I think it says to both sides this is going to be a strong, independent investigation.”

Sen. John McCain said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/18), “This is the classic scandal in the nature that there's another shoe that drops every day or two. ... This is the drip system, and that's why it's good to have Mueller doing what he's doing, and it's important for the Congress of the United States to do what they're supposed to do.” Sen. Chris Murphy said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/18), “The question is, if he starts to find new leads, if he starts to want to have a more expansive portfolio and has to go back to [Attorney General] Sessions or Rosenstein to get that, whether that's going to be run up the chain.”

Rep. Yvette Clarke said on Facebook, “The appointment of Robert Mueller as special counsel is a step in the right direction, but we need an independent commission as well so that the American people can finally know the truth of Donald Trump's ties to Russia.” Rep. Elijah Cummings said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/18) that Rosenstein “did the right thing. I have a lot of respect for Counsel Mueller. I think it was a good choice.” Rep. Charlie Dent said on CNN's New Day (5/18), “Director Mueller has impeccable credentials. I think this is the right thing to do and I think this will help the situation.” Rep. Peter King said on CNN's New Day (5/18), “I was opposed to the appointment of a special counsel. However, if you are going to have a special counsel, you cannot have a better man than Bob Mueller.”

Rep. Kathleen Rice told CNN's Situation Room (5/18) that she thinks “Rosenstein did not only the right thing but the only thing that he could do under the circumstance. ... Robert Mueller, you can't find one person to say anything about his character, his integrity. They're both unimpeachable.” Rep. Maxine Waters said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (5/18) that the investigation is “going to be very revealing. And I know a lot of people don't like to hear the word impeachment, but I believe it's going to lead right to impeachment.”

Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News Special Report (5/18) that while “the appointment of a special counsel is what the President needs and helps him in the short run” because all questions can be “dumped on to the special counsel,” the “problem is in the long run. The long run is he has lost control.” Krauthammer added, “I think the vulnerability is that Mueller can take this anywhere he wants for as long as he wants and no one is in control except Mueller.”

National Review (5/18) editorializes, “Ideally, Mueller will be able to conclude his investigation expeditiously, but it's possible this could drag out: The special counsel appointed to investigate Whitewater in 1994 outlasted the Clinton administration. For this reason, among others, no administration ever wants a special counsel. Trump has no one to blame but himself that he now has one.” The New York Times (5/18, Hulse) writes, “Just four months into President Trump's tenure, he faces the prospect that an aggressive, high-powered and well-resourced inquiry into any connections with Russia could become a near permanent fixture of his presidency.”

The Hill (5/18, Budowsky) columnist Brent Budowsky writes that “the decision to name the universally-respected” former Mueller as special counsel “is a defining moment in modern American history that sets off a chain reaction that probably leads to the ultimate resignation of President Trump. ... Readers should carefully read the articles of impeachment of Richard Nixon passed by the House Judiciary Committee that involves obstruction of justice. More than one of the accusations in the obstruction article of impeachment passed by the committee is present today in the coverup of Putingate that is now imploding in real time.”

Hugh Hewitt writes in the Washington Post (5/18), “Given the charges of collusion and obstruction that have dogged” Trump and his Administration, the appointment “is a greatly encouraging development. ... Rosenstein has made an excellent choice that will allow Republicans to again concentrate on turning the country around.”

Andrew Rosenthal of the New York Times (5/18) says that the Mueller appointment does not go far enough, “a classic too-little-too-late action. ... There is strong reason to believe that Trump’s firing of Comey was a grave abuse of power aimed at thwarting an investigation that could harm the president and his associates. That, as many legal experts have pointed out, is a violation of the president’s oath of office and possibly an obstruction of justice.”

Kimberley Strassel writes in her Wall Street Journal (5/18) column that Mueller may have a hard time being objective given his long ties to Comey, a history that both the Wall Street Journal (5/18, Viswanatha) and Politico Magazine (5/18, Graff) recount. Meanwhile, the Washington Post (5/18, Gold, Helderman) reports that Mueller “will undergo a Justice Department ethics review that will examine possible conflicts of interest regarding his former law firm, which represents several figures who could be caught up in the probe.”

Rosenstein Said He Knew Trump Planned To Fire Comey Before Drafting Memo. The New York Times (5/18, Rosenberg, Ruiz) reports that Rosenstein told senators on Thursday that he knew President planned to fire Comey “before he wrote a memo outlining the reasons for his dismissal, according to three Democratic lawmakers who were in the briefing.” The Washington Post (5/18, A1, Horwitz) reports that Senate Minority Whip Durbin said Rosenstein told the senators “that he was not pressured into writing his memo.” Durbin said, “He learned the President’s decision to fire him and then he wrote his memo with his rationale.” On ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 3, 2:45, Muir), Mary Bruce reported Rosenstein went to the Capitol to brief “all 100 senators on why he decided a special counsel was necessary.” Durbin: “He said to make sure the integrity of the Department of Justice was protected, to make certain the American people felt this was going to be handled firmly and justly.”

David Leonhardt of the New York Times (5/18) writes, “Rosenstein is a widely admired longtime Justice Department official.” But last week, he “disappointed – shocked isn’t too strong a word – his many admirers in the legal community by doing Trump’s bidding. ... Rosenstein wrote a shoddy memo that gave Trump a rationale for doing so. Shortly thereafter, Trump admitted the truth, making Rosenstein look all the worse.”

The New York Times (5/18, Schmidt) reports that Comey wanted to keep the President “at a distance. ... Comey told the president that if he wanted to know details about the bureau’s investigations, he should not contact him directly but instead follow the proper procedures and have the White House counsel send any inquiries to the Justice Department.” The Washington Post (5/18, Barrett, Nakashima, Entous) reports that Comey “prepared extensively for his discussions with President Trump, out of concern that the president was unlikely to respect the legal and ethical boundaries governing their respective roles, according to associates.” Comey “was very apprehensive heading into a dinner with the president in late January.” He “felt as if Trump did not understand or did not like the FBI director’s independence and was trying to get Comey to bend the rules for him, the associate said.”

Advisers And Associates Urge Trump To Hire An Outside Lawyer. The New York Times (5/18, Haberman) reports, “Several White House advisers and personal associates of President Trump have urged him to hire an experienced outside lawyer to help him deal with” the investigation. The recommendations “came even before a special counsel was named on Wednesday.” The Washington Post (5/18, Kranish) reports that Jay Goldberg, who represented Trump from 1990 to 2005, said, “He needs a good lawyer, someone who is strong, not that he would go against the lawyer’s advice, but everybody should have a lawyer who sees things through and comes up with good advice.”

Ryan Says House Committees Will Continue Their Investigations. Politico (5/18, Bade) reports that House Speaker Ryan told reporters Thursday that House committees will “continue their investigation of Russia’s meddling in the 2016 presidential election – despite the Justice Department’s move to name a special prosecutor to probe the matter.” Ryan said, “We are going to keep these investigations going here, as I’ve always said. ... These committees are going to continue their investigations.”

The Washington Post (5/18, Demirjian, Zapotosky, Sullivan) reports on its front page that “behind closed doors, lawmakers are growing increasingly nervous that with Mueller’s rise, their committee probes may be pushed aside,” and in the Senate, some Intelligence Committee members “are bracing for at least a temporary slowdown while Mueller determines the breadth of his probe.”

House Democratic Leaders Try To Tamp Down Impeachment Talk. The New York Times (5/18, Martin, Burns) reports that House Democratic leaders “took great pains” this week “to show they were not seeking to railroad [Trump] out of the White House.” House Intelligence Committee ranking member Rep. Adam Schiff said, “No one ought to, in my view, rush to embrace the most extraordinary remedy that involves the removal of the President from office.” The Times says that the “barrage of reports about Mr. Trump’s chaotic and controversial administration has helped revive Democrats, raising their hopes that they can ride a Trumpian backlash to great success in next year’s elections. But with the cloud over the White House darkening each day, liberal activists are courting a backlash of their own as they demand of their lawmakers nothing short of driving the president from office by any means necessary.”

Lieberman Is Trump’s Top Choice To Lead FBI.

President Trump told a group of television anchors gathered at the White House Thursday that former senator and vice presidential nominee Joe Lieberman is his top choice to replace former FBI Director Comey. The AP (5/18, Superville) reports that Trump discussed the job with Lieberman at the White House on Wednesday, but he also interviewed three other potential candidates: “former Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, former top FBI official Richard McFeely and Andrew McCabe,” who “became acting director after Trump fired James Comey as director last week.” ABC World News Tonight (5/18, story 4, 0:30, Muir) reported briefly on Trump’s comments.

The Wall Street Journal (5/18, Bender) says that by picking Lieberman, the White House could argue the President made a bipartisan choice, but the Washington Post (5/18, Parker) reports that some senators “were expressing skepticism Thursday about choosing a politician to lead the independent investigations bureau.” The Los Angeles Times (5/18, Bennett) says it “would be unusual to name a former politician to run the FBI, a law enforcement agency that views itself as outside partisan politics.” Nonetheless, Lieberman “got a vote of confidence” from Sen. Lindsey Graham, who told reporters, “I think Joe Lieberman is a pillar of credibility. ... I think he would be a good choice.” Rep. Peter King also offered a strong endorsement of Lieberman, telling Fox News The Story (5/18), “Joe Lieberman is a true patriot. There is nobody in politics or government that I have had more respect for than Joe Lieberman. He is a good friend. More than that, he is a great American. He is a man of total integrity. Strong as can be. Totally independent.”

Senate Democrats meanwhile, said they will not accept an FBI director who comes from a political background,” which would seem to rule out” Lieberman and Keating, the Washington Times (5/18, Dinan) reports. Senate Minority Leader Schumer said on the Senate floor Thursday, “A career politician of either party or anyone who suggests a lack of impartiality should not be considered.” Similarly, Sen. Richard Blumenthal said during a judiciary committee meeting, “This appointment is so important that we should try to insist on someone who has no political background.”

Pence Stands By Claim He Was Unaware Flynn Was Under Investigation.

Peter Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (5/18, story 2, 2:20, Holt) reported that the White House is denying a New York Times report that former National Security Advisor Flynn “informed the Trump transition team’s chief lawyer, Don McGahn, weeks before the inauguration that he was under federal investigation for secretly working as a paid lobbyist for Turkey during the campaign.” Vice President Pence, who chaired the transition team, “maintains he was unaware of Flynn’s ties to Turkey.” An “Administration aide” said that “if McGahn knew and didn’t tell Pence, it’s either malpractice or intentional and either is unacceptable.” Trump, Alexander added, “remains unflinching defender of Flynn.” According to Yahoo! News, “late last month, Flynn told loyalists, ‘I just got a message from the President to stay strong.’”

USA Today (5/18, Groppe) says that in the wake of the Times report, Pence is “standing by his claims that he did not know...Flynn had been secretly lobbying for the Turkish government until March.” Pence’s office said in a statement Thursday that the Vice President “stands by his comments in March upon first hearing the news regarding General Flynn’s ties to Turkey and fully supports the president's decision to ask for General Flynn's resignation."

Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr, meanwhile, has retracted a statement he made Thursday saying former Flynn's attorney had told the committee Flynn would not comply with its subpoena for private documents. The AP (5/18, Day, Braun, Jalonick) reports that according to Burr, Flynn "hasn't responded to a subpoena from the panel in its probe of Russia's meddling in the 2016 presidential election." The AP adds that "legal experts say it's unlikely Flynn would agree to turn over the personal documents because he would be waiving his constitutional protection against self-incrimination by doing so."

House Oversight Committee Chairman Jason Chaffetz said on ABC's Good Morning America (5/18), "General Flynn is a former officer and should have never taken money from Turkey nor should he have taken money from the Russians. You just can't do that unless you seek permission and get permission. He evidently didn't get that. That's why we referred the matter to the Department of the Army for the final determination." Chaffetz said on NBC's Today Show (5/18) that Trump "did make the right decision in that he let him go 24 days into it." Asked if Flynn should have been hired in the first place, Chaffetz said, "You can argue he probably shouldn't, and maybe in retrospect, knowing what we know now, he probably shouldn't have. Nevertheless, he did hire him. He was there for just over three weeks and then he did dismiss him."

A Washington Post (5/18, Phillips) analysis says Flynn "was involved in a lot of questionable Trump administration actions," but "perhaps the most damning of all of Flynn's troubles – and the one that could keep haunting the Trump administration" is his work "for the Turkish government while working for Trump, which means that he was advocating for policies that benefited Turkey while serving as Trump's national security adviser. And Trump may have known about this." According to the Post, "Flynn's decision to lobby for Turkey and work for Trump at the same time could indefinitely haunt the Trump administration."

Media Analyses: Pence's Defense Of Administration Presents Credibility Problem. As "more than a few people [now] look at Vice President Pence and see President Pence," the Washington Post (5/18, Blake) presents "three big instances" in which Pence's remarks in defense of the Administration "have been pretty directly contradicted in ways that seriously call into question his credibility." First, Pence maintains that White House counsel Don McGahn did not inform him of former National Security Adviser Flynn's status as a foreign agent for Turkey – which McGahn learned on January 4. Second, Pence's insistence that Trump fired FBI Director Comey based on Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein's recommendation was discredited by the President just a day later. Third, Pence said on CBS' "Face the Nation" on January 15 that Flynn hadn't discussed US sanctions with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak, which the Post says "turned out to be flat-out wrong." While it is unclear in these instances that Pence knew his statements were false, "none of [them] is good for Pence's political future."

Meanwhile, USA Today (5/18, Groppe) finds that Pence "has somehow managed to stay arm's length from the multiplying scandals now engulfing the Trump White House." Furthermore, Pence's move to launch a leadership PAC likely "will enhance his already-strong popularity among Republicans." However, the Vice President "hasn't escaped totally unscathed," according to USA Today. His "credibility has been questioned" over his explanations as to President Trump's firing of FBI Director Comey, and "new questions are swirling" about what Flynn told the Pence-led transition team about his Turkey involvement.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Trumpcare Is Already Hurting Trump Country." A New York Times (5/19) editorial says the "mere threat that Obamacare will be dismantled or radically changed — either by Congress or by President Trump himself — has persuaded several big insurance companies to stop selling policies or significantly raise premiums," leaving "some lower-income and middle-class families" with "no good options for insurance." President Trump, however, "claims that uncertainty in the insurance industry is evidence that Obamacare is collapsing and needs repeal, not that he and his allies have created the uncertainty. This is disingenuous nonsense."

"Turkey's Mr. Erdogan Does Not Get His Way." A New York Times (5/18) editorial says Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan came to Washington this week "with hopes of achieving a 'turning point' in an alliance that is vitally important to both sides," but his demands were "mostly unreasonable, which means continued tensions." The Times writes that instead the "enduring image of Mr. Erdogan's visit will not be the pomp at the White House but that of his security guards and other supporters beating up protesters outside the Turkish ambassador's residence."

"As Cities Raise Wages, States Push Back." The New York Times (5/19, Board) editorializes Missouri and Minnesota are "the latest battlegrounds where Republican-led legislatures are determined to block local pro-labor laws." In both states, "lawmakers who are fighting to keep wages low, benefits measly and localities subservient to the states are doing the bidding of their corporate backers. But political momentum favors higher minimum wages." The Times argues that if the governors in Missouri and Minnesota "don't veto the bills, voters will be back, driven by necessity to demand and win higher minimums and other labor protections."

Washington Post.

"Trump Has Made An About-Face On Saudi Arabia. He Shouldn't Get Too Cozy." A Washington Post (5/18) editorial says that while candidate Trump "suggested, among other things, that the United States had no business defending the Persian Gulf" and said the Saudis should "pay for the protection we extend as allies," he is expected to "celebrate what is being described as a renaissance of the US-Saudi relationship" during his trip. The Post says US-Saudi ties are "worth preserving," but the Trump Administration's "new fervor for the tie appears to lack the healthy skepticism the Obama administration developed about Saudi enmity toward Shiite Iran."

"A Judge's Snoozing Puts A Vital Transit Link In Peril." The Washington Post (5/18) editorializes that last fall, US District Judge Richard J. Leon, "who blocked funding and construction of the light-rail Purple Line in Maryland's suburbs ordered federal officials to go back to the drawing board." Judge Leon "wondered if safety and maintenance problems on Metro, which would account for about a quarter of the Purple Line's passengers, required a rethink of the new project's finances and forecasts," and "the answer was delivered in December," as the Federal Transit Administration said "Metro's challenges, including falling ridership, would not materially change the Purple Line's prospects or warrant a months-long delay to update its environmental study." The Post adds that "the stately pace the judge has set for himself is divorced from the real world and from the needs of tens of thousands of real people whose daily lives would be enhanced by the Purple Line."

"There's No Clear Winner For America In Iran's Presidential Election." A Washington Post (5/18) editorial says today's election in Iran "is a familiar contest between a relative moderate, the incumbent Hassan Rouhani, and a hard-line conservative backed by the Revolutionary Guard and, it seems, Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei." From the US point of view, the Post says, "it's not clear that there's a side to root for," because both candidates have promised to uphold with the 2015 nuclear deal, and "both appear committed to Iran's aggressive bid for hegemony in the Middle East by other means, including military interventions." The Post argues that "real transformation in Iran will require a collapse of the Islamic Republic," and a Raisi victory could "bring a reckoning for the regime closer."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Lessons Of Amazon." The Wall Street Journal (5/18) editorializes that as Amazon marks 20 years since its IPO this week, it's timely to reflect on business and policy takeaways from the hugely successful tech giant. On the one hand, Amazon's success from focusing on what its customers need – even if they don't know what that is – is a testament to the well-being of capitalist innovation. But on the other hand, the fact that the number of publicly listed companies trading on US exchanges currently is down 37 percent since Amazon's 1997 IPO shows that excessive regulation and filing requirements are harming nonrich investors' chances. The Journal therefore praises SEC Chairman Clayton's ambitions to revive the public capital markets.

"Roger Ailes." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/18) praises former Fox News chairman and CEO Roger Ailes, who died Thursday, saying he brought balance back to both TV and politics in America.

"Cuomo's Nuclear Short Circuit." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (5/18) writes that New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's move to close the Indian Point nuclear plant – which provides electricity for about 25 percent of New York City and Westchester County – not only harms state residents and taxpayers, but also potentially is illegal. Westchester County Executive Rob Astorino has sued Cuomo for flouting the State Environmental Quality Review Act, because the governor never conducted a full environmental review before negotiating the plant's closure. Not only will the plant's electricity be difficult and expensive to replace due to Cuomo's 50 percent renewable-energy mandate, but the Journal says the closure will leave 1,000 workers jobless and cut $30 million in local tax revenue.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “This morning at 7:52 a.m., [President Trump] got on Twitter and wrote, ‘This is the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history.’ Even his witch hunts are the greatest in American history.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Trump will be out of the country for nine days. See, this is when they should put that travel ban in place.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “There may be some changes when the President gets back from his trip. White House Stress Secretary Sean Spicer might not be allowed to do the daily press briefings anymore, which would be a shame because that’s one of my favorite shows right now.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “He hosted a lunch at the White House with all the cable and network news anchors. He invited them all to the White House. He definitely spit in their food, though.”

Stephen Colbert: “The announcement of the special counsel shocked everyone, including the White House, which reportedly only got 30 minutes warning before the announcement went public. Sean Spicer barely had time to dive in the hedges and cover himself with mud. He learned that from Schwarzenegger in ‘Predator.’”

Stephen Colbert: “Last week, when the Administration was looking for someone to blame for the Comey fire, they tried to throw Rosenstein under the bus, forgetting that he is deputy AG, he’s actually the bus driver, okay. ‘Next stop, Indictment Avenue.’”

Stephen Colbert: “Once the room cleared, Trump started by saying that Mr. Comey should consider putting reporters in prison for publishing classified information. You can’t put reporters in prison just because you don’t like what they are publishing? That’s like burning down a movie theater because it’s showed ‘King Arthur: Legend of the Sword.’”

James Corden: "On Wednesday, the Justice Department appointed a special counsel to investigate Trump's connections to Russia. Former FBI Director Robert Mueller will be the special counsel. And today, Trump reacted by saying, 'No fair, why does that guy get to be called special?'"

James Corden: "This morning, Donald Trump tweeted that he is the victim of 'the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history.' 'The single greatest.' Even when he's whining, Trump still has to be the greatest."

Trevor Noah: "Here's a rule, guys, in 2017 you should always assume you're being recorded. I assume I'm being recorded right now. I just assume that. That's why I won't share my real views on koala bears. I won't."

Trevor Noah: "I've been swamped with all the scandals happening right here with President Trump. It honestly feels like this guy stops all other news. There are probably asteroids headed to us right now."

Trevor Noah: "I guess this is the world we live in now, world leaders have second jobs. The King of Holland is a pilot, the Queen drives for Uber, possibly. And Donald Trump is a task rabbit for Putin."

Trevor Noah: [Referring to the violence between protesters and the Turkish president's bodyguards] "A foreign leader brought his goons into America to turn a peaceful protest into a surprise Black Friday. It's actually worse than that because you don't get to leave with a TV."

Trevor Noah: [Referring to Special Counsel Robert Mueller] "Wow, forget investigating the President. Just make this guy the President. Seriously, good at his job and everybody likes him? He's a reverse Donald Trump. I bet his hands are huge."

Jimmy Fallon: "A recording just came out from a closed-door meeting where Republican Congressman Kevin McCarthy says he thinks Vladimir Putin actually pays Donald Trump. Trump said he never accepted any money from Putin because he was paid entirely in KFC gift cards."

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, Trump started tweeting again. Today he criticized the Russia investigation, saying, 'This is the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history.' Then one guy was like, 'Do you still want to see my birth certificate?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Tomorrow, Trump will leave for Saudi Arabia, even though he publicly bashed the country while he was campaigning. The only way staffers got him to go was by telling him he gets to meet Aladdin and Princess Jasmine."

Jimmy Fallon: "I heard that a princess in Japan is giving up her royal status so she can marry a commoner, which is something she'll definitely bring up in every single fight she has with her husband."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump today called the appointment of a special counsel to investigate his campaign's ties to Russia 'the single greatest witch hunt of a politician in American history.' Though it didn't help his case much when he flew away on a broom."

Seth Meyers: "During a press conference this afternoon, President Trump said that his Administration is getting things done at a record-setting pace. For example, most Presidents take four years to finish a term, but it looks like Trump's gonna get it done in like eight months."

Seth Meyers: "The Justice Department yesterday appointed former FBI Director Robert Mueller as special counsel to oversee the investigation into Trump and Russia. 'I'm gonna get to the bottom of this,' said Donald Trump to a pint of Haagen Dazs."

Seth Meyers: "This isn't Watergate, it's the Watergate Express."

Senators Spar Over Proposal To Drill In Alaska Wildlife Refuge.

The Hill (11/2, Henry) reports that "lawmakers on Thursday fought over the possibility of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), the opening act of a legislative push to allow oil production in the Alaskan Arctic." According to the article, "Republicans from Alaska and on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee cast drilling in the refuge as an operation that can be done safely and one that would help the economies in both the state and the nation." However, "Democrats vowed to fight drilling there, saying the area is too ecologically important to allow industrial production."

The Washington Examiner (11/2, Siciliano, Seigel) reports that Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, chairwoman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, "expressed confidence Thursday morning that drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, a longtime Republican goal, could raise $1 billion over 10 years to help pay for tax reform." She said, "The first 10 years are just the start of a 40-year period where responsible production raises billions of dollars in revenues for our country every year. We will see the benefits over decades, not just over the 10-year budget window."

The AP (11/2, Daly) reports that Alaska Gov. Bill Walker and members of the state's congressional delegation said Thursday that drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge "would create jobs and enhance energy security, while maintaining important environmental protections and conserving caribou and other wildlife." The recently-passed budget resolution "allows lawmakers to pursue legislation allowing oil and gas exploration in the remote refuge on a majority vote." Walker, speaking at a Senate hearing, "said opening a small section of the 19.6 million-acre site to drilling would provide billions of dollars in revenue to Alaskans and the rest of the nation, create thousands of jobs." In addition, Walker said, the drilling would "significantly improve our national security and international influence while fully protecting the wildlife and environment of the coastal plain."

The Wall Street Journal (11/2, Carlton) reports that Fish and Wildlife Service Acting Director Greg Sheehan testified at the same hearing that if Congress authorizes production, the Administration believes it will bolster US national security and energy independence, give Alaskans more economic opportunities, and provide necessary revenue to both the federal government and the state of Alaska.

Additional coverage was provided by Politico Morning Energy (11/2, Adragna), Fox Business (11/2, Carlton), the Huffington Post (11/2, D'Angelo), the Alaska Public Radio Network (11/2, Ruskin), and KTVF-TV Fairbanks, AK (11/2, Zampa).

ANWR Tests Spirit Of Bipartisanship In Developing Energy Bill. The Washington Post (11/2, Grandoni) reports that a bipartisan effort to craft a comprehensive energy bill "was tested Thursday as Republican Chair Lisa Murkowski (Alaska) and ranking Democrat Maria Cantwell (Wash.) clashed over whether to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling." ANWR is back on the legislative table, and, on one hand, “Republicans and virtually every Alaskan elected to statewide office, who argue that opening ANWR to drilling will boost the state’s economy and the nation’s energy security. Using modern drilling techniques, they argue, it can be done with little environmental impact.” On the other, “virtually every Democrat” contends “that the region is too ecologically critical to indigenous caribou hunters and the broader Arctic ecosystem to bore for oil.”

U.S. To Exit Global Anti-Corruption Effort Aimed At Oil Money.

Bloomberg News (11/2, Dlouhy) reports that the Trump Administration said it plans to exit a global anti-corruption initiative that requires oil, gas, and mining organizations to disclose the payments they give to international governments. Gregory Gould, the director of the Interior Department’s natural resources revenue office, wrote in a letter to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative that the US government “remains committed to fighting corruption in the extractive industries sector and the ideals of transparency enshrined in the EITI principles,” but “domestic implementation of EITI does not fully account for the US legal framework.” Bloomberg notes that “in February, amid oil industry pressure, Trump signed a congressional resolution” repealing an SEC rule “that required oil, gas and mining companies publish the payments they make to governments.” The rule, mandated under Dodd-Frank, “was seen as critical to compelling disclosure and satisfying the EITI requirements.”

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (11/2, Bowden), the Washington Examiner (11/2, Siciliano), and Reuters (11/2, Simon).

Rosselló Denies Reported Ties To Whitefish Energy.

Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló was asked on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (11/2) about claims that his campaign manager is a lobbyist for Whitefish Energy. Rosselló said, “He has no ties to that effort. I personally have no ties. I had nothing to do with this contract. ... As soon as the allegations came about with Whitefish, I did two things. Number one, I invoked two investigations. Those investigations are ongoing. And secondly, even if we didn’t have the information, on the best interest of the people of Puerto Rico, I decided to cancel that contract.”

Groups Sue For Details On Trump Plan For National Monuments.

The AP (11/2, Brown) reports that environmentalists sued the Trump Administration on Thursday “seeking to pry loose details of plans to shrink national monuments and marine areas and open them to more resource development.” The lawsuit claims “the White House Council on Environmental Quality and the Interior Department illegally ignored Freedom of Information Act requests for documents related to the issue.” Yvonne Chi with Earthjustice, the law firm representing the environmentalists, said, “If the Trump administration thinks what they are about to do is legal, why are they keeping it secret? We expect the record to show that the administration has been speaking with industry groups.”

Additional coverage of the national monuments issue was provided by Colorado Public Radio (11/2, Babits).

The Teddy Roosevelt Legacy At Ryan Zinke’s Interior Department.

Oregon Public Broadcasting (11/2, Boyce) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “often pays his respects” to the legacy of Theodore Roosevelt, “while still pushing the pro-industry agenda of the Trump administration.” The article says that the “ideological struggle over public lands...goes back at least to Roosevelt.” It adds that “the country’s different land designations all have different rules, creating a conservation spectrum.”

Tester Joins Western Senators: Congress Can’t Balance Budget By Selling Public Lands.

The Missoula Current \(MT\) (11/2, Kidston) reports that Sen. Jon Tester “joined five senators from four western states this week in urging congressional leadership to change language in the 2018 budget resolution that opens the door to selling off public lands to reduce the federal deficit.” The letter “urges Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski not to use the federal budget as a tool to sell public lands to raise revenue.” The senators said, “We strongly believe we must tackle our debt but are concerned this partisan, fast-track process could be used by those in Congress who support selling off our public lands. We strongly oppose these efforts and respectfully urge you not to allow any such legislation to move forward.”

Counties, Timber Group Want To Resume Cascade-Siskiyou Litigation.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (11/2, Perkowski) reports that “groups representing Oregon counties and timber companies want to resume litigation against the federal government’s expansion of the Cascade-Sisikiyou National Monument.” But a federal judge is “delaying proceedings in the two lawsuits until Dec. 1 to give the Trump administration more time to consider scaling back the monument’s size.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Bureau Of Indian Affairs Planning To Re-Open Montana Jail.

The AP (11/2) reports that the Bureau of Indian Affairs “expects to re-open a privately-built jail on the edge of the Crow Indian Reservation in coming months after it sat vacant for much of the last decade.” The BIA’s director “recently told a U.S. Senate committee that the agency is finalizing a contract to begin operating the Two Rivers Detention Facility in Hardin within the next three months.” The bureau “has not said who would operate the jail.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (11/2, Wilson).

Calif. County Calls Off BIA Land Suit After Deal With Tribe.

Law360 (11/2, Westney) reports that “a California county on Wednesday dropped its lawsuit over the federal government’s decision to take more than 1,400 acres of land into trust for the Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians, a day after the county approved a settlement with the tribe.” Santa Barbara County “had sued the Bureau of Indian Affairs in January in California federal court over its decision to take land in the county known as ‘Camp 4’ into trust for the Santa Ynez Band for tribal housing and economic development.”

What’s Next For A Grand Canyon Tram?

Prospects Are Bleak. The AP (11/2, Fonseca) reports that “lawmakers on the country’s largest American Indian reservation have shot down a measure to build an aerial tram to take visitors to a riverside boardwalk in the Grand Canyon, with stores, hotels and restaurants above on the East Rim.” The prospects of “moving forward with the Grand Canyon Escalade project now appear slim.” The measure was “opposed by environmentalists and outdoor enthusiasts who are trying to keep open spaces wild.”

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Takes Step To Undo Gas Venting And Flaring Rule.

Law360 (11/2, Phillis) reports that the Bureau of Land Management on Wednesday “sent to the White House for review a proposal to rescind or revise an Obama-era regulation aimed at limiting venting and flaring from gas wells on federal lands, which is the final step before it is made public.” The Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, “which is part of the executive branch, posted a brief notice that said it received the BLM’s proposal.”

Map Shows Spills, Blowouts And Other ‘Undesirable Events’.

E&E Publishing (11/2, King) reports that this week WildEarth Guardians issued a map of “undesirable events” on public US lands from the oil and gas operations. According to the Bureau of Land Management’s Automated Fluid Minerals Support Systems, since 2010, there have been 2,360 blowouts, fires, and spills which was obtained through a Freedom of Information Act request. WildEarth Guardians Climate and Energy Program Director Jeremy Nichols said “if the oil and gas industry can’t prevent spills, fires, blowouts and other calamities, then they shouldn’t be allowed to develop our public lands, period.”

Drilling Proposal For Nev.’s Ruby Mountains Under Fire .

E&E Publishing (11/2) reports that a proposal to open the Ruby Mountains in Nevada for oil and gas developments, which has raised “hackles among a coalition of groups that see it as an unnecessary concession of iconic land to an industry with a scant history of operations in the state.” Patrick Donnelly Nevada State director of the Center for Biological Diversity said “we feel this particular oil and gas leasing proposal stands out above the rest in terms of its egregiousness and inappropriateness.” The Nevada Service is likely to make a final decision during the month of February.

Federal Court Jury Picked For Bundy Standoff Trial In Nevada.

The AP (10/30) reports from Las Vegas that “a jury has been picked for the trial of rancher Cliven Bundy, two sons and one other co-defendant on federal charges stemming from an April 2014 armed standoff with federal agents.” The AP adds that “U.S. Attorney’s office spokeswoman Trisha Young said the judge, prosecutors and defendants finished Thursday choosing a panel of 12 jurors and four alternates to hear what is expected to be a four-month trial.” Opening statements are scheduled for Tuesday.

The Oregonian (11/2, Bernstein) reports that Cliven Bundy, 71, sons Ammon Bundy, 42, and Ryan Bundy, 45, and co-defendant Ryan Payne, 34, “are accused of conspiring to block federal agents from enforcing court orders to confiscate the Bundys’ cattle on public land near the family ranch after the patriarch failed to pay grazing fees and fines for more than two decades.” They have “each pleaded not guilty to conspiracy to impede a federal officer by force, threats and violence, using or carrying a firearm in a crime of violence, threatening a federal law enforcement officer, obstruction of justice and extortion.” Jury selection “lasted three and a half days, with the last 90 minutes done to the violin strains of classical music and pop tunes piped into the courtroom as lawyers quietly made peremptory challenges.”

Additional coverage was provided by Reuters (11/2, Smith).

Waste Dumping Being Investigated.

The Pueblo \(CO\) Chieftain (11/2) reports that Bureau of Land Management staff are “seeking information on two incidents involving dumping of human waste on public lands along Copper Gulch Road.” Keith Berger, field office manager, said, “It is important that those responsible are held accountable. Their actions pose risks to public health, as well as wildlife in the area and ultimately, taxpayers end up paying for the clean up.”

BLM Citizen Council To Meet For First Time Since National Monument Review.

The Taos \(NM\) News (11/2, Hooks) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management Farmington District will host a public meeting of its resource advisory council for the first time since the U.S. Interior Department canceled all such meetings earlier this year.” The council will “convene for a day-long meeting in Farmington Dec. 5 and 6.”

Offshore Drilling: House Panel Looks For Common Ground.

The Coastal Observer \(SC\) (11/3, Topper) reports that environmentalists, business leaders and legislators hesitant about offshore energy development are seeking opportunities to work with oil advocates to limit the impact of offshore drilling. According to Frank Knapp, president and CEO of the S.C. Small Business Chamber of Commerce, “If we can get the petroleum industry to agree to force the technology to come up with a testing procedure that has very minimalistic impact on marine life, and if we can get the industry to tell BOEM to require only one exploration that everybody would have to share instead of five of them for a whole year, we’d have something to talk about.” Knapp, along with other environmentalists, has been tasked with working with Bonnie Loomis, director of the S.C. Petroleum Council to come up with a potential agreement regarding offshore surveying. According to Loomis, “I believe seismic is coming. I believe that the permits will be issued early in 2018. I think that we owe it to ourselves to work to manage that change.”

Settlement Talks Continue In Suit Over 13-Year-Old Oil Leak.

The AP (11/2, Kunzelman) reports that Taylor Energy Co. is seeking additional time to enter a settlement, which “could allow it to recover millions of dollars it set aside for work to end” a leak that started in 2004. US officials have met with the company “four times in the past year to discuss possible terms of a settlement that would resolve the company’s lawsuit against the federal government.” Interior Department Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Scott Angelle took part in a September 26 meeting.

Yellowstone Grizzlies May Soon Commingle With Northern Cousins.

The New York Times (11/3, Robbins) reports that the bears in Yellowstone National Park, "protected from hunting, have been cut off from the rest of their kind," and "their closest kin prowl the mountains some 70 miles north, in and around Glacier National Park." In a new study, "biologists say that as grizzly populations increase in both Glacier and Yellowstone, more adventurous males from both parks are journeying farther to stake out territory, winding up in places where they have not been seen in a century or more." If the bears "keep roaming and expanding, the two populations will likely reconnect, perhaps as soon as five or 10 years from now." Frank van Manen, leader of the Interagency Grizzly Bear Study Team, said, "It's very encouraging for the long-term future of the bear."

Groups Want Protections Restored For Louisiana Black Bear.

The AP (11/2, McGILL) reports that "environmental groups put federal officials on notice Thursday that they intend to file legal action to return the Louisiana black bear back to a list of threatened species." Officials announced the "removal of the bear from the list in March 2016," but "some conservationists and environmentalists opposed the move when it was announced." On Thursday, the Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility "released copies of its letter to the Department of the Interior, announcing plans to sue under provisions of the Environmental Protection Act unless the department's Fish and Wildlife Service restores federal protections for the bear and its habitat."

Is The California Gnatcatcher Truly Endangered? Lawsuit Wants Feds To Take Another Look.

The Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (11/2, Steinberg) reports that "seeking to free up about 200,000 acres from Ventura County to San Diego for housing, a group representing property owners, homebuilders and others has filed a lawsuit seeking to loosen the endangered species status for the coastal California gnatcatcher." The lawsuit, filed Thursday by the Pacific Legal Foundation, "asks the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to conduct a fair review of scientific evidence that has emerged casting doubt on the rarity of the bird." According to the foundation, the data shows "that the gnatcatcher is not an imperiled subspecies living only in Southern California, but part of a large and healthy species found from Southern California to the southern tip of Baja, Mexico."

Interior Official Compares $70 Entry Fee To Cost Of A Movie.

E&E Publishing (11/2, Hotakainen) reports that Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt on Thursday "defended a plan to charge $70 for a peak-season entry fee at 17 of the busiest national parks next year, saying it's roughly the same cost as taking his family to a 3-D movie." Bernhardt "said park fees have not kept pace with inflation." He added "that higher fees would not keep most low-income Americans from visiting the parks, adding that a bigger problem for them is the cost of transportation and lodging associated with traveling to the parks."

Most US Voters Oppose Fee Hikes for National Parks. Morning Consult (11/2, Gheorghiu) reports that "a majority of U.S. voters oppose increasing fees for national parks during peak season to pay for park infrastructure and maintenance." A Morning Consult/Politico poll "conducted Oct. 26-30 shows a majority of registered voters oppose the proposed fee hikes, regardless of the region they live in or their political ideology." According to the poll, "fifty-two percent of registered voters said they do not support increasing the cost — currently between $25 and $30 — to $70 for each private vehicle entering one of the parks during peak season, while 36 percent support the higher fees." Meanwhile, "in the West, where most of the affected parks are located, 55 percent oppose the fee increase and a third support it." The article notes that "a majority of Democratic, independent and Republican voters also oppose the cuts."

US House Backs National Park Designation For Indiana Dunes.

The AP (11/2) reports that the U.S. House has approved the bill to make the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore “the country’s 60th national park.” The House “approved the bill in a unanimous voice vote Wednesday, sending it to the Senate for consideration.”

Eisenhower Memorial Commission Gets Digging.

Roll Call (11/2, Connolly) reports that Sen. Pat Roberts delivered the “final remarks at the Dwight D. Eisenhower Memorial’s groundbreaking Thursday.” The commission has “set a target date to complete and dedicate the memorial on May 8, 2020, the 75th anniversary of Victory in Europe Day in the Second World War.” According to the article, “every hurdle has been cleared after the National Park Service on Monday issued the Eisenhower Memorial Commission a permit to begin construction.”

Musical Lineup Announced For National Christmas Tree Lighting.

WTOP-FM Washington (11/2, Massimo) reports that the National Park Service has “announced the musical acts for the lighting of the National Christmas Tree.” According to the park service, “Craig Campbell and Us the Duo will headline the ceremony, which will be held Nov. 30 on the Ellipse at the White House.” The NPS “said more entertainers will be announced in the next few weeks.”

GMP Details Emerge At Park Open House.

The Point Reyes \(CA\) Light (11/2, Guth) reports that the National Park Service “hosted two public meetings last week to discuss its future management of agriculture and tule elk in the Point Reyes National Seashore, which will ultimately be codified in an amendment to the seashore’s general management plan.” The NPS has proposed six strategies that “range from extending ranch leases to 20-year periods and limiting elk on ranchlands to eliminating ranching altogether while allowing the elk to expand.” According to the article, “the park’s ‘initial proposal,’ the option the agency has suggested the public focus on, allows for 20-year leases, operational flexibility and diversification on ranches, along with increased elk management in the pastoral zone.”

Incident Renews Importance Of Following Assateague Island’s Pet Laws.

The Maryland Coast Dispatch (11/2, Soper) reports that “after an incident emerged related to dogs going after one of the wild horses on Assateague, National Park Service officials this week are reiterating the importance of the laws regarding pets on the barrier island.” According to the article, “photos of two dogs harassing one of the famed wild horses on Assateague began circulating on social media platforms last weekend, prompting Assateague Island National Seashore officials to begin an investigation into the incident.” Assateague Island National Seashore Chief of Interpretation and Education Liz Davis “this week confirmed the incident was being investigated, but could not comment specifically on it because the investigation is ongoing.”

Mysterious Debris Washed Ashore In Outer Banks Could Be Part Of Historic SpaceX Rocket.

The Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (11/2, Hampton) reports that “debris found washed ashore last month was what it looked like: part of a SpaceX rocket that possibly made history.” Photographer Erin Everlee and “neighbors found the piece, about 15 feet long, lying on the beach and reported it to the National Park Service.” Officials with Cape Hatteras National Seashore “contacted the Air Force and NASA to find out who it belonged to.”

Isolated Gustavus Deals With National Park-sized Garbage Problem.

KTOO-FM Juneau, AK (11/2, Resneck) reports that the National Park Service pays the city of Gustavus, “which is small, with less than 500 year-round residents,” to handle Glacier Bay National Park’s waste. National park maintenance worker Dan Grivois said, “We typically get around anywhere from 100 to 200 pounds of trash every day. My job is basically to get the biggest diversion rate out of that as I can.” According to the article, “to cut down on space – and expense – the park burns its waste in a towering incinerator.” But “aside from the faint smell of mulch from the compost heap, there’s almost no odor.”

Yosemite Mountain Pass Closes Ahead Of Snowstorms.

The AP (11/2) reports that “a mountain pass across the Sierra Nevada that runs through Yosemite National Park was closing to traffic Thursday ahead of storms expected to dump up to 2 feet of snow on the highest peaks, park officials said." Tioga Road, "the soaring eastern entry to Yosemite, was closing to traffic shortly before nightfall Thursday." Also closing was Glacier Point Road, "which offers sweeping views of Yosemite Valley." According to the article, "both roads are to be shut through Monday, when the storms are expected to dissipate and road conditions can be assessed."

World 'Running Out Of Time' On North Korea, Trump To Tell Asia: White House.

Reuters (11/2, Holland) reports National Security Adviser McMaster said Thursday that President Trump will tell leaders on his upcoming five-nation Asian tour that the world is "running out of time" on North Korea's nuclear crisis and "that he will give his strategy to isolate Pyongyang a few months before making adjustments." Trump's goal during the trip "will be to increase international support for an effort to deprive North Korea of resources as leverage to coerce it to give up nuclear weapons." Said McMaster, "The President recognizes that we're running out of time (to deal with North Korea) and will ask all nations to do more."

The Washington Times (11/2, Miller) reports McMaster also said Americans should not expect President Trump to tone down his rhetoric while visiting Asia. "I don't think the President really modulates his language, have you noticed that," McMaster told reporters. According to the Times, he "bristled at criticism in the news media that Mr. Trump uses inflammatory rhetoric toward North Korea," saying, "What's inflammatory is the North Korean regime and what they are doing to threaten the world." USA Today (11/2, Jackson) reports Asian leaders fear Trump's "aggressive rhetoric on 'Rocket Man' Kim could lead to a military confrontation with North Korea, possibly involving nuclear weapons."

Meanwhile, President Trump, in an interview with Fox News' Ingraham Angle (11/2), said, "We have a problem called North Korea. ... If we don't solve it, it won't be very pleasant for them. It won't be very pleasant for anybody, but China is helping us."

According to the AP (11/2, Superville), McMaster also suggested that North Korea could be returned to the US' list of countries sponsoring terrorism as part of Trump's strategy to counter the North's growing nuclear threat. "You'll hear more about that soon, I think," McMaster said. Citing the killing in a Malaysian airport earlier this year of the estranged half-brother of North Korea's leader, McMaster said, "A regime who murders someone in a public airport using nerve agent, and a despotic leader who murders his brother in that manner, I mean, that's clearly an act of terrorism that fits in with a range of other actions."

Bloomberg News (11/2, Tweed, Sink, Reynolds) says "there's little sense of a way forward" in the crisis before Trump travels to the region as his "team struggles to articulate a unified policy on dealing with Pyongyang." In a piece titled "Trump Heads To Asia With An Ambitious Agenda But Little To Offer," the New York Times (11/2, Landler) says Trump departs on his first trip to Asia "weakened and scandal-scarred, ready to face off against newly empowered Chinese and Japanese leaders in a region increasingly determined to set its course without American direction." While the White House is "framing the trip as a chance for Mr. Trump to showcase his budding personal relationships with President Xi Jinping of China and Prime Minister Shinzo Abe of Japan," his "erratic statecraft, compounded by the shadow of the Russia investigation, leaves him in a questionable position to extract concessions from Mr. Xi or even allies like Japan and South Korea."

CNN (11/2, McKirdy) reports on its website that Trump may be "looking forward to his upcoming Asia trip as a moment of respite from domestic strife, but he will face a new set of unique challenges across the Pacific, analysts say." With issues like North Korea and "foundering trade deals in the wake of the scuppered Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP)," CNN says the trip will be "a test of Trump's dealmaking – and diplomatic – skills."

Reuters (11/2, Spetalnick, Thul) reports that Trump's first trip "will bring him face-to-face with a number of leaders with poor human rights records" as his Administration "has been taking a more muted approach than his predecessor to such concerns, said current and former US officials, rights activists and diplomats." They cite "what they see as a slow, overly cautious response" to Burma's Rohingya crisis and Trump's "eagerness to engage with the Philippines' controversial president, Rodrigo Duterte, and a less vocal approach to human rights in China." But McMaster "pushed back against the notion that Trump would downplay human rights" on his trip, saying he would speak out "about the importance of promoting freedom and individual rights."

Tillerson To Travel With Trump. Reuters (11/2) reports the State Department said Thursday that Secretary Tillerson will visit Japan, South Korea, China, Vietnam, the Philippines and Burma as part of President Trump's trip to Asia. In a statement, the Department said Tillerson would represent Trump at the East Asia Summit in Manila before traveling to Burma.

US Bombers Fly Over Korean Peninsula; Kelly Warns Of Missile Advancements. CNN's Situation Room (11/2) reported that ahead of President Trump's Asia trip, the US Air Force has flown two B-1 bombers over the Korean peninsula. The "show of force" comes as White House Chief of Staff Kelly is "hinting" North Korea has made progress in their weapons program. CNN showed Kelly saying, "The American people should be concerned about a state that has developed a pretty good ICBM capability and is developing a pretty good nuclear re-entry vehicle."

Administration Dubs Region "Indo-Pacific." The AP (11/2, Pennington) reports President Trump "isn't just remaking American foreign policy in Asia by tearing up trade deals and getting tough on North Korea. His administration is giving the region a whole new name." For decades, the region has been referred to in Washington as the "Asia-Pacific," but "White House officials and even the president himself are steering clear of that term" and using "Indo-Pacific" instead. The AP notes McMaster "used it repeatedly when he previewed" the President's trip on Thursday.

Trump To Visit Pacific Military Command In Hawaii. The Los Angeles Times (11/2, Hennigan) reports that two days after the Navy "blamed sloppy seamanship and navigational blunders for two 'avoidable' collisions at sea that killed 17 sailors this summer," President Trump departs today for Hawaii to visit the "troubled" Pacific Command. Trump will receive a briefing at command headquarters in Honolulu and visit the battleship Arizona memorial at Pearl Harbor before he leaves for his first official visit to Asia.

Walrus Threatened After U.S. Declines To List As Endangered.

NPR (11/2, Raphelson) reports that "walrus are facing a 'death sentence' after the Trump administration declined last month to list the Pacific walrus as endangered, according to the Center for Biological Diversity." The center, "which took legal action starting in 2008 to get walrus on the list, says the White House's decision puts the species in a dire state as it confronts the effects of climate change." Chad Jay, who leads the walrus research program at the U.S. Geological Survey Alaska Science Center, says that walrus are confronting a loss of their habitat due to sea ice melt. Jay says, "The sea ice model projections indicate that the sea ice decline is going to continue through the end of the century, so a good deal of their habitat is still going to be lost in the future. It's really hard to say how well they're going to deal with that as conditions get worse." While the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "acknowledged sea ice is declining due to climate change, it said the Pacific walrus is not 'in danger of extinction for the foreseeable future,' suggesting walrus will likely be able to adapt to their changing environment."

State Officials Want Earthquake Early Warning System Funded.

The Pasadena \(CA\) Weekly (11/2, Coleman) reports that "in a letter to Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney, 34 members of Congress, including Adam Schiff (D-Burbank), urged the Trump administration to include funding for the continued development and operation of the West Coast Earthquake Early Warning System (EEW) in the 2019 budget." The lawmakers wrote in the Oct. 31 letter, "To follow through on the funding made by the federal government, as well as growing commitment from states and the private sector, it is critical that this program be fully funded at $16.1 million annually so the West Coast will be prepared for the next catastrophic earthquake. This technology will save lives and reduce the economic impact of an earthquake; it simply needs to be properly funded."

Ryan Zinke Is Erasing ‘Public’ From Lands He’s Meant To Guard.

In an op-ed for the Seattle Times (11/2, Krupp), Chris Krupp, who works for WildEarth Guardians, claims that “Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s actions show his priority is to fossil-fuels companies and whether they will be able to profitably access the public lands they’ve long relied on for cheap natural resources.” Krupp criticizes the proposal to raise entrance fees at the 17 most popular national parks, the decision to rescind the federal moratorium on coal leases on public land, and the move to repeal “an Obama administration rule that ended a scam coal, oil and gas companies had long relied on to make deceitfully small royalty payments to the federal treasury.” In Krupp’s view, “when Zinke talks of improving public access to federal lands, he has an extremely narrow subset of the public in mind.”

National Parks For The 1 Percent.

In his column for the New York Times (11/3, Egan), Timothy Egan criticizes the plan to raise fees at national parks because it would “make it prohibitively expensive for many to enter the most popular national parks.” As “a birthright of citizenship,” Egan asserts that “all national parks should be free, like the great museums of Washington.” He argues that “we should care for these special places with a budget commensurate to their value, treating them like the huge income generators they are, producing $34 billion to local businesses.”

Four Dams In The West Are Coming Down — A Victory Wrapped In A Defeat For Smart Water Policy.

In an op-ed for the Los Angeles Times (11/2, Leslie), Jacques Leslie writes that “when a top Interior Department official acknowledged recently that the Trump administration wouldn’t try to block removal of four hydroelectric dams on the Klamath River, he signaled a monumental victory for local Native American tribes, salmon fishermen and the national dam removal movement.” However, “this development is less momentous than it would have been in 2015, when dam removal was just one component of a broad plan for the Klamath Basin, which straddles the California-Oregon border.” Leslie points out that, “the dams are going to come down, but no water-sharing plan will accompany their removal.” As a result, “the ranchers and farmers in the Upper Klamath Basin, where Republican voters predominate, will not have a reliable source of irrigation water.”

Trump Calls House GOP Tax Plan “A Big Beautiful Christmas Present” To Taxpayers.

Coverage of the House Republican tax plan unveiled Thursday paints the plan as primarily reducing taxes on corporations and the wealthy, but also offering some benefits to the middle class. It would also markedly increase the federal deficit. Reports highlight Republican divisions over some aspects of the measure, with less focus on the expected Democratic opposition.

ABC World News Tonight (11/2, lead story, 4:00, Muir) opened with the “new tax plan unveiled today by President Trump and House Republicans, and the President’s promise that it will be law by Christmas.” ABC’s Mary Bruce: “A beaming President Trump today welcomed the sweeping new Republican tax bill with a smooch, and a holiday promise to the American people.” Trump: “We are giving them a big beautiful Christmas present in the form of a tremendous tax cut.” Bruce: “On the Hill, it looked like Christmas morning for many House Republicans.” House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady: “This is the beginning of the end of this horrible tax code in America.” Bruce: “The number of tax brackets drops from seven to just four. A family making up to $90,000 would pay 12%; up to $260,000, 25%; up to $1 million, 35%; while the wealthiest Americans would still pay the same rate as they do now, 39.6%. ... The plan also offers some big potential breaks for the rich, including repealing the estate tax after six years.” Senate Minority Leader Schumer: “They’re doing tax giveaways to the wealthy and the powerful, and telling the middle class, ‘Take a hike, you’re on your own, baby.’”

NBC Nightly News (11/2, lead story, 2:45, Holt) also opened with the story, reporting, “With great fanfare, Republicans in Congress announced their plans to dramatically overhaul the US tax code today – a business-friendly blueprint for tax cuts that also carries a promise to lower the tax bite on middle-income families.” NBC’s Kasie Hunt: “Trump and Republicans in Congress today rolling out the biggest rewrite of the tax code in a generation, racing to pass a bill that will affect every American family.” Trump: “This is a middle-income tax reduction.” Hunt: “But it’s not necessarily that clear-cut. The bill slashes the corporate tax rate from 35 to 20. It eliminates the estate tax, helping wealthy Americans, and it ends deductions that many families rely on for medical expenses, student loans and state and local taxes.”

On the CBS Evening News (11/2, story 3, 2:55, Mason), Nancy Cordes reported, “Democrats noted that the GOP proposal would also eliminate deductions for student loans and medical expenses, and it would slice the mortgage deduction cap for new homes in half, from $1 million to $500,000.” House Minority Leader Pelosi: “What they give you with one hand, they take away with the other.”

Trump said on Fox News’ Ingraham Angle (11/2), “They are big tax cuts – the biggest tax cuts in the history of our country. We have reform and we have simplification. ... We really have had tremendous receptivity to it to a point that I don’t think I have seen anything like it.” Reuters (11/2) reports that National Economic Council Director Cohn said at the Economic Club of Washington that the President supports the plan. Cohn said, “The bill that the House has delivered today...is a bill that the President can support. If it delivers middle class tax relief and a 20% corporate tax rate and it shows up on his desk, I can guarantee he’s going to sign it.”

Asked on CNN’s Situation Room (11/2) if it is realistic to expect that the bill will be signed by Christmas, Brady said, “I believe it is, and here’s why: We’ve worked six years towards this moment, held hundreds of town halls around the country. ... The American people are sick of the current tax code.” Asked why it is necessary to “jam it through so quickly and secretly,” Brady said, “The House Republican tax reform plan was introduced a year ago. The President’s plan working with us, three months ago. We’ve incorporated in this more than 50 lawmakers’ ideas. We consulted and they’ve consulted with their families and businesses all the way along.”

The AP (11/2, Fram, Gordon) says the plan “would touch virtually all Americans and the economy’s every corner, mingling sharply lower rates for corporations and reduced personal taxes for many with fewer deductions for home-buyers and families with steep medical bills.” The measure “is the product of a party that faces increasing pressure to produce a marquee legislative victory of some sort before next year’s elections.” Bloomberg News (11/2, Wasson, Kapur) reports that the plan “is estimated to add $1.49 trillion to the deficit over a decade – just fitting in under the amount allowed under the congressional budget adopted last week.”

USA Today (11/2, Jackson) reports that while “Republican leaders touted savings for the average family and said lower rates and new write-offs for businesses would spur job creation,” Republicans from New Jersey and New York “were angered their states would be hurt by the elimination of the deduction for state income taxes and a new cap on the deduction for property taxes,” and “some groups on the conservative end of the spectrum were sounding alarms” over the deficit and “a corporate tax provision aimed at overseas companies selling products into the United States that could raise costs for consumers.”

The New York Times (11/2, Tankersley, Kaplan, Rappoport) says the bill “includes several land mines that could complicate its passage," including the limits on the mortgage interest deduction and the state and local tax deduction. The Wall Street Journal (11/2, Rubin) reports that while most Republicans rallied behind the measure, some expressed skepticism or called for revisions. The Wall Street Journal (11/2, Peterson, Hughes) says in another item that groups like the Club for Growth, the National Association of Realtors, and the National Federation of Independent Business offered criticism.

The Washington Post (11/2, Paletta, Debonis) says the bill's "true impact on the middle class will be difficult to immediately measure. The bill would create a new 'Family Credit' and expand the child tax credit used by working families," and "would nearly double the standard deduction that many Americans claim on their taxes, raising it from $12,700 to $24,000 per family. But this benefit would be partially offset by the personal exemption many Americans can claim."

Before the measure was unveiled, Senate Minority Whip Durbin said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/2), "There is an element of political desperation here. Here we are at the end of the calendar year. I can count on one hand, maybe three fingers, what we've done substantively in the United States Senate during the course of this year. ... Now there's a desperate effort to get something done before the end of the year."

Sen. Elizabeth Warren said on CNN's The Lead (11/2), "If they really wanted to sit down and write a tax proposal that would help middle-income families, I would be all on this. ... This is a tax proposal that will raise taxes on some people who are middle-class." Warren said on CNBC's Closing Bell (11/2), "What's happening right now is the Republicans are saying, 'Let's give $2 trillion to giant corporations,' and then when it blows a hole in the debt, which we know it will do, they come back in a year, two years and say, 'Gee, really, really sorry, but we're going to have to cut Medicare, going to have to cut Medicaid, going to have to make cuts in all the investments here in America.'"

The New York Times (11/2) editorializes, "With their new bill that would slash taxes on the wealthy and blow up the federal budget deficit, House Republicans and President Trump are making it absolutely clear whom they are working for – the top 1 percent – and whom they consider dispensable. Well, that's pretty much everybody else." The bill "contained multibillion-dollar gifts for corporations, Wall Street titans and rich families," with "a few peanuts thrown at lower-income and middle class families."

The Washington Post (11/2) editorializes, "Republicans promised Americans a smart, careful tax reform that would simplify the code without adding a penny to the debt. The bill that House Republicans released Thursday betrays that promise. It also betrays the nation's children, and their children, who would eventually have to pay for this big, unpaid-for tax cut that the country does not need." The Wall Street Journal (11/2) says in an editorial that the bill fails to mirror the 1986 tax reforms, offering needed pro-growth reforms but also making parts of the individual tax code worse.

The New York Times (11/2, Cohen) writes that "economists are divided over whether the plan is likely to revitalize the economy or merely bestow a windfall on the wealthiest investors," and the Washington Post (11/2, Long) writes that among the plan's "winners" are "big corporations," "the super-rich," and "edge funds, doctors and lawyers," while the "losers" include "people in high-tax blue states," "the working poor," and "charities." The Washington Post (11/2, Long) reports that budget experts say the measure "jeopardizes what could otherwise be one of the great legacies of Republican-controlled government: fixing the US tax code and improving the economy." Maya MacGuineas of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget said, "I do think this is a sensible framework. It emphasizes the need for corporate reforms and how our tax system works. But this is still a deficit-exploding tax cut at a time when the deficit is at near-record levels." Politico (11/2, Faler) also reports on the broad outlines of the plan.

New Yorker Analysis: Trump Would Benefit From Tax Plan. The New Yorker (11/2, Cassidy) reports that "Donald Trump himself" would benefit from the changes. According to Trump's 2005 tax return, "parts of which were leaked earlier this year, he paid $38.4 million in federal taxes on income of $152.7 million. ... If this tax bill had already been in effect, Trump would have seen his tax bill reduced by more than eighty per cent." He also "stands to be a big beneficiary of the new flat rate on pass-through income" and "the abolition of the estate tax."

Plan Caps Property Deduction At $10,000, Limits Mortgage Deduction. USA Today (11/2, Jackson) reports that the proposed "sweeping overhaul of the tax code" would "cap the deduction for property taxes at $10,000 and preserve the mortgage interest deduction only for existing mortgages and new purchases with loans of $500,000 or less." Brady said the change "was being made to drive tax relief to middle income families, but it also will go to offset lower corporate rates that sponsors believe will spur the economy and job creation." The New York Times (11/2, Dougherty) says that in taking of "the deduction of interest on mortgage debt," the plan "takes aim at the most sacred of cows."

Child Tax Credit Would Be Expanded, Child Care Pre-Tax Benefit Eliminated. McClatchy (11/2, Wise) reports, "Working parents would no longer be able to use pre-tax money to help pay for child care" under the plan, though it "would increase another per-child tax credit from $1,000 to $1,600 and add a new $300 credit for each parent and non-child dependent in a household, such as a grandparent." Politico (11/2, Cook) notes that the plan includes one of Ivanka Trump's "pet issues – the child tax credit – but expands it less generously" than she "had hoped."

Plan Expands American Opportunity Tax Credit. The Wall Street Journal (11/2, Mitchell) reports that the plan would increase aid available under the American Opportunity Tax Credit, which helps defray higher-education costs. Students can collect a credit of up to $2,500 a year or an annual tax refund of up to $1,000 for a maximum of four years. The GOP plan would add a fifth year credit of up to $1,250 or a maximum refund of $500.

Plan Eliminates $7,500 Electric Vehicle Credit. Reuters (11/2, Shepardson) reports that the plan eliminates a $7,500 tax credit for electric vehicles "that could hurt automakers like General Motors Co, Tesla Inc and Nissan Motor Co that are selling larger numbers of vehicles."

Trump Tells Senators To Leave Dreamer Protections Out Of Year-End Spending Bill.

In a meeting with GOP senators Thursday, President Trump rejected including language addressing the status of "dreamers" in a must-pass year-end spending bill. The Washington Post (11/2, O'Keefe) reports that in doing so, Trump "rais[ed] the stakes for year-end negotiations that could force a government shutdown or finally resolve an emotionally fraught element of immigration policy." Trump's request "could set up a high-stakes spending showdown in early December if GOP leaders don't take up immigration legislation beforehand," as Democrats have threatened to withhold their support for the spending legislation if Congress does not pass legal protections for "dreamers." Politico (11/2, Kim) says that if Trump maintains that stance, "it will increase the odds of a government shutdown, as Republican leadership will almost certainly need a large chunk of votes from Democrats to keep the government open."

The Hill (11/2, Bolton) reports that Sen. David Perdue and other Republicans at the meeting "said Trump was 'emphatic' about keeping the immigration bill separate from the year-end spending bill." Bloomberg News (11/2, Litvan, John) reports that Trump "said he wants Congress to adopt separate border security legislation that includes an extension of the immigrant protections established under President Barack Obama known as the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, or DACA."

Trump: Ending Chain Migration Will Be Part Of DACA Deal. Reuters (11/2) reports that President Trump told Fox News' Ingraham Angle Thursday that ending chain migration will be part of any legislation to address "dreamers." Trump said, "Yes it will be part of a DACA deal. ... I don't think any Republican would vote for anything having to do with leaving chain migration. Chain migration is a disaster for this country and it's horrible."

Trump: US Will Have "A Great Wall" For "$18 Billion Or Less."

President Trump said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (11/2), "We are going to have a wall. ... First of all, they say the wall is going to cost $40 billion. It won't cost anywhere near that. ... We are talking about less than half. ... I think for $18 billion or less, we are going to have a great wall. We are doing prototypes right now. We are going to make the choice."

Trump Nominates Powell To Replace Yellen As Fed Chair.

President Trump announced Thursday that he has nominated Fed Governor Jerome Powell to replace Janet Yellen as Federal Reserve chair. The AP (11/2, Crutsinger) reports that Powell, "who has backed Yellen's cautious approach to interest rate hikes," is "seen as a safe pick whose selection will likely assure investors hoping for continuity at the central bank." To the New York Times (11/2, Swanson, Appelbaum), while Powell "is expected to stay the course on monetary policy if the economy continues its steady growth," it is "less certain" where he "would lead the Fed if the economy falters."

NBC Nightly News (11/2, story 3, 0:20, Holt) reported that this marks "the first time in decades a new president has not renominated a sitting Fed chair for another term." Similarly, Reuters (11/2, Schneider, Mason) says that by denying Yellen a second term, Trump broke with precedent, but casts his selection of Powell as a signal of "a continuation of her cautious monetary policies." Powell has supported Yellen's "direction on monetary policy and, in recent years, shar[ed] her concerns that weak inflation justified a continued cautious approach to raising interest rates." USA Today (11/2, Davidson) says Powell "is likely to maintain the Fed's strategy of gradual interest rate hikes but may be open to easing some regulations on banks."

Politico (11/2, Guida, White) says Trump "has made a habit of jettisoning anything associated with the Obama administration, and the Fed became no different." Nonetheless, he praised Yellen as "a wonderful woman who has done a terrific job." Bloomberg News (11/2, Jacobs, Talev, Olorunnipa) reports that Trump considered renominating Yellen, according to "people close to him." However, "people familiar with the matter" said that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin "wielded outsized influence as Trump deliberated on the Fed" and he "favored Powell." Mnuchin's stance even "bested that of Vice President Mike Pence, who urged Trump to make a more dramatic change of direction at the Fed by nominating Stanford University economist John Taylor, a favorite of conservatives across Washington."

A front-page story in the Wall Street Journal (11/2, Timiraos, Harrison) says Powell's career indicates he will be a Fed chairman like Yellen and former chairman Ben Bernanke, meaning his Fed will be similar to those since former chairman Alan Greenspan retired in 2006. The Journal adds that the markets, which eschew uncertainty, would welcome that consistency. Greg Ip writes in the Wall Street Journal (11/2) describes Trump's choice of Powell as a gamble because he is changing Fed chairs at a time when unemployment is low, the economy is growing, and the stock market is posting records. However, Ip adds that Powell appears to be a safe bet because, of all the people Trump considered for the job, Powell's positions are closest to Yellen's.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (11/2), Scott Sumner, an emeritus professor of economics at Bentley University and director of the Program on Monetary Policy at the Mercatus Center, writes that while Trump's choice of Powell "can be seen as a vote for continuity," there are "a few reasons to be concerned about his appointment." Sumner points out that Powell is a lawyer, not an economist, like the past four Fed chairs. In addition, Powell "believes the Fed should focus not just on macroeconomic stability, but should also try to prevent financial market excesses," a position many economists are skeptical. Nonetheless, Sumner writes that he expects Powell "to do fine in the near future" as "the real danger occurs at the extremes of high inflation or a deep recession," when "a deep understanding of monetary policy is most essential. A job as important as Fed chair should be given only to the most highly qualified individuals."

The Washington Post (11/2) says in an editorial that while it would have preferred to see Yellen renominated, Powell "is a good choice – and by far the best non-Yellen option floated," while a Wall Street Journal (11/2) editorial expresses concern about Powell's ability to manage the next financial crisis given that his years on the Fed board have been relatively turmoil-free.

The Los Angeles Times (11/2, Lee) reports that Powell is likely to "face an immediate test as stronger economic growth exerts greater pressure on the central bank to step up the pace of interest rate hikes." Trump has expressed a desire to keep rates low, and Powell "has shown he is in no hurry to raise rates." However, amid a strengthening economy and high stock prices, he "soon could find himself in the uncomfortable position of having to build consensus around making more rapid rate increases, seldom a popular or easy thing to do."

Trump Says He Does Not Get Enough Credit For The Economy. President Trump was asked on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (11/2) if he is getting enough credit for the "economic revival." Trump said, "I am in here now 10 months and we are setting record after record, day after day. I think we hit another one today. No, I am not getting enough credit for it because a lot of the reason is enthusiasm level and the fact they cut regulations to the extent that I have cut them."

Stocks Finish Mixed. The AP (11/2, Jay) reports that stocks posted mixed results Thursday. The Dow climbed 81.25 points to a record 23,516.26, and the S&P 500 added 0.49 points to close at 2,579.85, while the Nasdaq ended the day 1.59 lower at 6,714.94. The New York Times (11/2, Hsu) says the major indexes "initially plunged as lawmakers circulated a set of talking points covering the House's highly anticipated $1.51 trillion package on Thursday morning," but "recovered by midday." The Times adds that the GOP's "proposed caps on the popular mortgage-interest deduction" sent "shares in home-building companies lower."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"A Tax Plan For A New Gilded Age." The New York Times (11/2) editorializes, "With their new bill that would slash taxes on the wealthy and blow up the federal budget deficit, House Republicans and President Trump are making it absolutely clear whom they are working for – the top 1 percent – and whom they consider dispensable. Well, that’s pretty much everybody else.” The bill “contained multibillion-dollar gifts for corporations, Wall Street titans and rich families,” with “a few peanuts thrown at lower-income and middle class families.”

“Mayor De Blasio Has Earned A Second Term.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/2) endorses New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio for reelection, saying he “has been an able mayor who can point to an impressively low crime rate, sound municipal finances and progress on revivifying schools and on creating reasonably priced apartments.” The election will be held on Nov. 7.

“Catalonia Tottering.” A New York Times (11/2) editorial says that if Catalan parties “are in fact prepared to participate in a new regional election,” Spanish Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy “should display magnanimity by apologizing for the behavior of the police on Oct. 1 and pledging greater respect for Catalan national yearnings. The crisis has done great damage to Spain and Catalonia, and the sooner the mending can start, the better.”

Washington Post.

“Republicans Break Their Promise On Tax Reform.” The Washington Post (11/2) editorializes, “Republicans promised Americans a smart, careful tax reform that would simplify the code without adding a penny to the debt. The bill that House Republicans released Thursday betrays that promise. It also betrays the nation’s children, and their children, who would eventually have to pay for this big, unpaid-for tax cut that the country does not need.”

“Can Hamas And The Palestinian Authority Reconcile In Gaza? Be Skeptical.” The Washington Post (11/2) editorializes that a recent reconciliation agreement between Hamas and the Palestinian Authority “demands a healthy dose of skepticism: Half a dozen previous unification pacts between the two movements have broken down since their violent split a decade ago, and the most difficult questions about this one have yet to be tackled.” The Administration “has taken a cautious interest in the ongoing negotiations between the Palestinian factions, rightly insisting that Hamas disarm and recognize Israel before it joins a unity government. Were that to happen,” the Post argues that there “might be a genuine opening for a peace process.”

“Trump’s Fed Pick Is Incredibly Important. And He Made A Good Call.” The Washington Post (11/2) says in an editorial that while it would have preferred to see Fed Chair Janet Yellen renominated, Fed Governor Jerome Powell “is a good choice – and by far the best non-Yellen option floated.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Half A Tax Reform.” The Wall Street Journal (11/2) says in an editorial that the Republican tax reform bill fails to mirror the 1986 tax reforms, offering needed pro-growth reforms but also making parts of the individual tax code worse.

“Mnuchin Gets His Man.” A Wall Street Journal (11/2) editorial expresses concern about Fed Governor Jerome Powell’s ability to manage the next financial crisis given that his years on the Fed board have been relatively turmoil free.

US Reverses Ban On Elephant Trophies From Zimbabwe, Zambia.

The CBS Evening News (11/16, story 9, 0:20, Mason) reported the Fish and Wildlife Service is reversing an "Obama-era ban on elephant trophies" that will allow hunters to bring "elephant remains" into the US from Zimbabwe and Zambia. Animal protection groups argue that killing elephants for sport "could threaten an already endangered species," and NBC Nightly News (11/16, story 9, 0:25, Holt) said the move "has left many animal lovers and animal rights groups outraged," although a Fish and Wildlife spokesman "says that legal hunting in and management programs actually help species survive by putting much needed revenue back into conservation." CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (11/16) reported on the ban reversal while noting that Donald Trump Jr. has gone to Africa "many times to hunt" elephants and "defends it."

Also reporting are the AP (11/16, Biesecker), the New York Times (11/16, Chokshi), the Los Angeles Times (11/16, Pearce), Reuters (11/16, Malone), Reuters (11/16, Malone), USA Today (11/16, Diebel), TIME (11/16, Worland), TIME (11/17, Hincks), NPR (11/16, Wamsley), Fortune (11/16, Meyer), Forbes (11/16, Nace), USA Today (11/16), the Huffington Post (11/15, D'Angelo), the Huffington Post (11/17), CNN (11/15, Wallace), NBC News (11/16, EDELMAN, WELKER), CBS News (11/16, Tillett), and CNBC (11/16, Diebel).

White House Says Elephant Trophy Decision Not Yet Finalized. Reuters (11/16, Malone) reports that the White House on Thursday "said it had not yet finalized a decision to allow trophy hunters who kill elephants in two African countries to bring the endangered animals home as trophies, a move that had outraged U.S. conservation groups." The proposal, "disclosed this week by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, had triggered protests from conservation groups and a frenzy on social media." White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders said, "There hasn't been an announcement that's been finalized on this front. Until that's done I wouldn't consider anything final."

Fox's Laura Ingraham Rips Trump For Ending Ban On Importing Elephant Trophies From Africa. The Hill (11/16, Savransky) reports that "Fox News' Laura Ingraham on Thursday ripped the decision by the Trump administration to lift the ban on importing elephant trophies from Africa." Ingraham tweeted Thursday morning, "I don't understand how this move by @realDonaldTrump Admin will not INCREASE the gruesome poaching of elephants. Stay tuned."

Trump Admin. Began Accepting Permits To Import Lion Trophies Last Month. ABC News (11/16, Ebbs) reports that U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials "began issuing permits for lion trophies hunted in Zambia and Zimbabwe about a month ago." FWS officials "said the decision was made after concluding that regulated hunting would help the survival of the endangered species in the wild." An agency spokesperson "said they found that 'legal, well-regulated sport hunting' can benefit conservation by providing incentives to local communities and generating revenue that can be directed to conservation programs, saying that the programs in Zambia and Zimbabwe will enhance the survival of the species in the wild."

Watchdog Says Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Failed To Properly Document Travel.

Interior Department Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall told department officials this week that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has failed to keep complete records – and in some cases kept none at all – of his travel since taking office," the Washington Post (11/16, Rein, Harwell) reports. In "a rare alert" to Zinke's office, Kendall "said her investigation into allegations of improper travel practices by Zinke has been stymied by 'absent or incomplete documentation for several pertinent trips.'" In addition, Kendall wrote that lawyers and ethics officials have not shown investigators that they can "distinguish between personal, political and official travel" or cost-analyses to justify Zinke's use of military or charter flights. The alert also says the IG is looking into "the travel of Zinke's wife, Lola, who often accompanied him on official trips." According to Kendall, the department's documentation was so deficient that investigators were unable to determine "the full extent" of her travel and how it was paid for.

The AP (11/16, Daly) reports that Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt "said in a memo Thursday that travel procedures followed by previous Interior secretaries were "dysfunctional," adding that most of those policies and procedures remain in effect, 10 months into the Trump administration." Bernhardt "promised to turn over documents for all travel by the secretary in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, including at least 10 travel vouchers related to trips taken by former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell." He added that "the department also will provide information related to trips where Zinke's wife or Jewell's husband traveled in government-owned vehicles, watercraft or aircraft, and document whether payments were made or if reimbursements were required."

US Lands Open For Biz.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (11/16, Hamilton) reports that "more than 250 people applauded" Kate MacGregor, acting assistant secretary for land and minerals management, "who came to Grand Junction on Thursday night with news that the federal government is dedicated to making federal lands welcome to energy development." MacGregor "outlined President Donald Trump's and U.S. Department of the Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's plans to remove roadblocks to mining and drilling." MacGregor said, "This Department of the Interior supports energy and mineral production in all of its many forms but recognizes where those raw materials come from. that's because one barrel of oil, one mcf of gas or one ton of coal produced here in this nation is better than one that we have to import. Under Secretary (Ryan) Zinke's leadership we are committed to serving as agents of change. We have been charged by this president to identify and eliminate the obstacles to development of these important resources."

Justice Department Won't Release National Monument Documents.

The AP (11/16, Ridler) reports that "documents possibly outlining legal justifications for President Donald Trump to shrink national monuments don't have to be provided to an Idaho environmental law firm because they're protected communications, federal officials say." The U.S. Department of Justice on Wednesday "asked a federal judge to dismiss a lawsuit from Advocates for the West seeking the information." The Justice Department "released more than 60 pages in May," but the agency "withheld 12 pages...contending they are protected by attorney-client privilege and intra-agency communication rules, making them exempt from Freedom of Groups Call For Zinke's Commitment To Public Lands.

Public News Service (11/17) reports that “on Thursday, a national coalition of sportsmen and women, recreation, business and conservation groups challenged Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to make good on his promises not to hand over public lands to states.” Also on Thursday, Zinke “announced the appointment of Brian Steed – a vocal proponent of transferring public lands to private interests – to head the Bureau of Land Management.” The article notes that “Zinke has also recommended removing national monument protections, claiming previous administrations over-reached their authority by limiting fossil-fuel development.”

Robotics Kits Arrive In Yap.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (11/17) reports that "robotics clubs at five high schools in Yap received VEX Classroom and Competition kits earlier this month, kicking off expansion of the popular Yap Robo League." Yap's Robo League was established in 2011 by the Unonprofit Hablele, and "itt is now expanding across that state through a pilot grant award by the Office of Insular Affairs." OIA director Nik Pula said, "We were inspired by the students from Yap who represented the Federated States of Micronesia this summer at the 2017 FIRST Global Challenge international robotics competition for high school students here in Washington, D.C. Through robotics, the Hablele Outer Island Education Fund has been promoting the broadening of students' experience in applying basic Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math skills in a positive, competitive, and hands-on way, and we are pleased to support expansion of this opportunity for more students in Yap."

Echols Named Acting Superintendent As VINP Undergoes Changes.

The St. Croix Source (11/16, Roberts) reports that when Hurricane Irma struck on Sept. 6, "much of the employee housing within Virgin Island National Park was severely damaged by either storm surge or high winds." According to the article, "within a matter of a few days, park rangers, resource managers, and even the deputy superintendent – the highest-ranking official in the VINP – received notice of mandatory evacuation and reassignment to other parks." However,

“some regular maintenance and administrative employees remained on the job, as did three law enforcement rangers, including Chief Ranger Rick Gupman who was named acting deputy superintendent.” Also, Darrell Echols “arrived on St. John Nov. 5 to serve as acting superintendent of the VINP.”

Opinion Pieces

National Monuments Have A Military Defense Mission, Too.

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/16, Dowdy), Ian Dowdy, AICP, a program director for the non-partisan research-oriented Sonoran Institute, highlights “the important role that national monuments and public lands play for our country – particularly for national defense.” Dowdy argues that “national monuments serve as irreplaceable buffers on lands that are critical for military readiness,” as shown in a report “analyzing the role public lands in the West play in protecting the military mission” released by Sonoran Institute. The report showed “that the open and undeveloped landscape in the West is well suited for training activities.” Dowdy asks the Trump Administration to “recognize the often-overlooked benefits that national monuments and other protect lands provide to military training and readiness, among the many other considerations, before moving forward with boundary adjustments or other reductions to the effectiveness and scale of our nation’s protected lands.”

America’s Statue Wars Are A Family Feud.

Author Sarah Vowell opines in a 1223 word op-ed in the New York Times (11/16, Vowell) that the debate over which statutes to dismantle and which to keep could become increasingly more complex as time passes. Vowell recounts stories of American Indians who fought with the Confederacy and their own decisions regarding statutes of people from that era to put the debate in a new perspective. Vowell also mentions that controversial statues of Christopher Columbus may not have been erected with hateful intentions, but as symbols of civic pride for oppressed Italian-Americans.

The World’s Strongest Conservation Law Is Under Attack. It Needs To Be Fixed Instead.

Peter Alagona, “an associate professor of history, geography and environmental studies at the University of California at Santa Barbara,” and James Salzman, the Donald Bren Distinguished Professor of Environmental Law at the UCLA School of Law and UCSB’s Bren School of the Environment, assert in an op-ed in the Washington Post (11/16, Alagona, Salzman) that five bills currently in Congress that seek to weaken the Endangered Species Act would not “make the law more efficient or effective.” The two academics opine that “the fundamental political problem with the act is that its incentives don’t match its ethics,” and they propose shifting funds or providing “deductions for landowners who successfully enhance and maintain their habitat for endangered species.” The two conclude by declaring that “reform is not a binary choice between weakening the law or keeping the status quo. There is a better path.”

Feds Must Bolster Resources To Eradicate Invasive Snakes: Our View.

In an editorial, the Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (11/15) urges the federal government “to significantly ratchet up its efforts and its funding to eradicate the brown tree snake on Guam.” The paper says that “more money and resources need to be channeled into finding ways to eliminate the snake entirely from Guam, as well as the coconut rhinoceros beetle, little red fire ant and other pests.” It notes that the Office of Insular Affairs will “spend about $2.8 million for brown tree snake eradication and control projects” this year, but “given the damage done by the snakes, that’s just not enough.”

Worst Engineering Failure In U.S. History Made Us Safer.

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/16, Weste, Spragens), Santa Clarita mayor pro tem Laurene Weste and Association of State Dam Safety Officials executive director Lori Cannon Spragens discuss the Saint Francis Dam Disaster National Memorial Act, explaining how the rupture of the St. Francis Dam in 1928 “brought about a new era of engineering oversight and methods for dam building across the nation.” Weste and Spragens mention that, “When the dam burst, Native Americans, agricultural farmworkers and Southern California Edison work crews were among those who perished in the path of destruction.”

Media Analyses: House Passes Sweeping Tax Reform Bill In Win For Trump, Ryan.

Media analyses cast yesterday’s tax reform vote in the House as a significant win for both the President and Speaker Ryan, though nearly all reports warn that the measure faces a challenging path before it gets to Trump’s desk. The Washington Times (11/16, Dinan) says Republicans acted “with spines stiffened by a presidential pep talk,” as Trump met with the GOP caucus ahead of the 227-205 vote. According to the Washington Post (11/16, A1, Debonis, Paletta), his “parting words to Republicans” were: “I love you. Now go vote.” USA Today (11/16, Jackson) notes Rep. Tom Cole later said, however, that “Trump didn’t try to twist arms.” Said Cole, “There’s not a lot of people left to persuade. ... You’ve got a bunch of happy Republicans around here.” In fact, The Hill (11/16, Jagoda, Marcos) recounted, “once the bill reached the magic number for passage, Republicans in the chamber erupted into applause.” Democrats “mockingly joined in, with some singing ‘na na na na, hey hey, goodbye,’ like they did when the chamber passed an ObamaCare repeal bill earlier this year.”

All three major network newscasts reported the story. ABC World News Tonight (11/16, story 3, 2:35, Vega) offered a decidedly grim view of the legislation, calling the vote a “small victory” for Trump “on a bill that would add $1.4 trillion to the deficit over ten years.” Also markedly unfavorable was the report on NBC Nightly News (11/16, story 3, 2:00, Welker), which said that “according to an NBC News analysis based on Mr. Trump’s leaked 2005 tax return, the House bill...would save the President more than $20 million and his heirs could potentially save $1.1 billion.” John Heilemann, “NBC News National Affairs Analyst,” was shown saying, “What they got to try to do is convince most Americans that this is not going to be just a sop to the wealthy, but it will help the middle class. That will be a hard sell given what’s in this bill.”

The CBS Evening News (11/16, story 3, 2:25, Cordes), meanwhile, said “the ‘Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017’ shrinks the number of brackets from seven to four, lowering rates and eliminating some deductions,” and added that “the independent Tax Policy Center estimates that Americans who make between $50,000 and $90,000 a year would get an average tax cut next year of about $800.”

Politico (11/16, Bade, Bresnahan, Lorenzo) says the vote provided “a sorely needed legislative victory for...Trump,” as well as “for Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady and Ryan, who GOP sources joke has been dreaming of this moment since he was in diapers.” Bloomberg News (11/16, Edgerton) refers to “a key milestone in...Trump’s quest to cut taxes for businesses and individuals,” the New York Times (11/16, A1, Kaplan, Rappeport) to “a significant leap forward as Republicans seek to...deliver the first major legislative achievement of...Trump’s tenure,” the Washington Post (11/16, A1, Debonis, Paletta) to “a key win for...Trump and...Ryan,” and USA Today (11/16, Jackson) to “a victory for...Ryan,” who “predicted a tax bill would pass before Thanksgiving and needed to show his party could deliver on a major campaign promise.” Another Politico (11/16, Bresnahan) analysis concludes “Trump got a boost,” but “the biggest winner may be...Ryan,” a figure “loathed by the Breitbart wing of the Republican Party.”

Reuters (11/16, Morgan, Becker) calls the vote “an important step toward the biggest tax code overhaul since the 1980s,” but warns “the tax debate now moves to the US Senate, where that chamber’s separate plan has already encountered resistance from some Republicans.” The AP (11/16, Fram, Gordon) similarly cautions that “the mostly party-line...vote masked more ominous problems in the Senate,” and adds that “even so, Republicans are hoping to send a compromise bill for Trump to sign by Christmas.” Breitbart (11/16, Moran) also indicates that “Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell will face more dire circumstances to pass the upper chamber’s version,” Roll Call (11/16, McPherson) warns that “the road ahead...won’t be an easy one.” The Wall Street Journal (11/16, A1, Rubin, Hughes) runs a similar story on the vote, and the Washington Free Beacon (11/16, Meyer) titles its favorable assessment of the day’s events “House Passes Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, Giving Americans a Tax Cut Not Seen in 31 Years.”

The Los Angeles Times (11/16, Mascaro, Puzanghera) reports “Democrats were unified against the plan, and the only GOP defections in the House came mostly from lawmakers in the Northeast and California, who were concerned about the plan’s limits on deductions for state and local income taxes important to their districts.” The Daily Caller (11/16, Crowe) lists the Republicans who oppose the measure: California Reps. Tom McClintock, Dana Rohrabacher and Darrell Issa, New Jersey’s Frank LoBiondo, Chris Smith, Leonard Lance and Rodney Frelinghuysen, and New York’s Lee Zeldin, Pete King, Daniel Donovan, John Faso, Elise Stefanik and Walter Jones.

Ryan said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (11/16), “We actually added back a $10,000 property tax deduction in addition to the tax cuts that are already in the bill that everybody gets. So we’ve actually run numbers on these districts and shown that taxpayers in those districts, in those states still get tax cuts – itemizers and nonitemizers. Most people won’t have to itemize. So, what we’ve done is added a $10,000 property tax deduction for these people in those high tax states. Everybody gets it, but it’s really the high-tax state people that would feel it the most – that deduction.”

Rep. Tom Cole was asked on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (11/16) about the opposition of Rep. Peter King and others to the elimination of the SALT deduction. Cole said, “I think we’ve made a reasonable compromise in the House bill. Look, I respect Peter King as much as any member we have, and I respect all members who are fighting for their constituents. But at the end of the day, you know, personally, if you make $250,000 in Oklahoma City or $250,000 in New York City, you ought to be paying the same amount of federal taxes. Now, again, the tax code is skewed to the advantage of people in high-tax states. That’s fair enough. People need to look after their constituents. I think we’ve tried to accommodate that in the House bill. I think we’ll be able to sustain that accommodation in a final bill.”

NYTimes: GOP Taking Money Way “From Working Families” To “Give It” To The Wealthy. Under the headline “A Tax-Cut Bill To Make Scrooge McDuck Proud,” the New York Times (11/16) editorializes, “Let that sink in. This tax bill would take money from working families and give it to the wealthiest people in the world. ... Republicans have made clear where their values lie. Well-heeled campaign funders matter. Middle-class families don’t.”

Along similar lines, a New York Times (11/16, Tankersley) analysis says “there are tough choices at the heart of the Republican tax bills speeding through Congress, and they make clear what the party values most in economic policy right now: deep and lasting tax cuts for corporations.” The Times adds that “the bill that sailed through the House on Thursday chooses to take from high-tax Democratic states, particularly California and New York, and give to lower-tax Republican states that...Trump carried in 2016, particularly Florida and Texas.” It also “allows for tax increases on millions of families several years from now, if a future Congress does not intervene, but not for similar increases on corporations.”

Senate Panel To Investigate Franken After Sexual Harassment Accusations.

The sexual harassment accusations against Sen. Al Franken dominated the news cycle, with the major network newscasts devoting nearly nine minutes of airtime to the story. NBC Nightly News (11/16, lead story, 2:50, Holt) opened its broadcast reporting that “the eye-opening list of powerful men outed for sexual misconduct now includes a sitting US senator,” and ABC World News Tonight (11/16, lead story, 3:05, Muir) also led with the “explosive charge” against Franken, “accused by a woman of forcibly kissing her during a USO tour.” The New York Times (11/16, Fandos) indicates Franken had “been mentioned as a possible presidential candidate,” and the Minneapolis Star Tribune (11/12, Brooks, Spencer, Rao) that “in recent weeks,” he “had repeatedly cheered the accounts of other women in the #metoo movement.” For example, notes the Washington Post (11/16, Wang, Lee, Bever), “in a Facebook post last month...Franken applauded the bravery of the women who shared their stories,” writing, “As we hear more and more about Mr. Weinstein, it’s important to remember that while his behavior was appalling, it’s far too common.”

Leeann Tweeden recounted her experiences with Franken on the website of KABC-AM Los Angeles Los Angeles (11/16), where she is news anchor on the “McIntyre in the Morning” show. In her account, she says the now-US senator “put his hand on the back of my head, mashed his lips against mine and aggressively stuck his tongue in my mouth. ... I walked away. All I could think about was getting to a bathroom as fast as possible to rinse the taste of him out of my mouth. I felt disgusted and violated. ... I tried to let it go, but I was angry.” The St. Paul \(MN\) Pioneer Press (11/16, Orrick) reports that Tweeden, “a California radio host,” also presented “a photo that shows Franken grinning at the camera with his hands hovering over the clothed breasts of the sleeping woman.” Tweeden initially “provided the picture with a tweet saying: ‘I’ve decided it’s time to tell my story. #MeToo.’” USA Today (11/16, Przybyla, Estepa) notes Tweeden later said of the picture, “I couldn’t believe it. He groped me, without my consent, while I was asleep. ... I felt violated all over again. Embarrassed. Belittled. Humiliated. How dare anyone grab my breasts like this and think it’s funny?” The CBS Evening News (11/16, lead story, 2:20, Goldman) also showed the picture that “Tweeden says...shows...Franken groping her while she was sleeping,” but closed the segment reporting that it had “reached out to 16 women who used to work for Franken in the Senate. Six got back to us. They all said they never witnessed or experienced anything inappropriate.”

Tweeden also described the incident with Franken on CNN’s The Lead (11/16) and said, “I’ve been angry about it for over ten years, and...my circle of friends and my husband have known how I felt about it for so long. ... I wanted to come out with it ten years ago, and, you know, it wasn’t the right time and, you know, I don’t want anything. I didn’t come out for it to destroy anybody. I came out because I want, you know, if he did this to somebody else or if somebody else has been sexually assaulted or if they’ve been, you know, abused in any way, that maybe somebody else can come out in real time because they find strength in numbers.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/16, Andrews) similarly surveys Tweeden’s recollections of the 2006 incident, while Breitbart (11/16, Nolte) reports that “Franken, who has been married since 1975, was elected to the United States Senate in 2008.” The New York Times (11/16, Fandos) notes Tweeden also “wrote that she had been compelled to share the story after an on-air conversation with Representative Jackie Speier, Democrat of California, who has been a leading voice sounding alarms about sexual harassment on Capitol Hill in recent weeks.” Asked about the allegations, Speier told the Washington Examiner (11/16, Ferrechio), “I think it’s disgusting. ... Here is the issue. It’s about whether you have the approval to come on to someone and unwelcome sexual advances are prohibited. ... And I don’t care what initial you have next to your name. It should apply to everybody.”

The AP (11/16, Daly, Potter) reports Franken “initially released a brief statement in which he apologized but questioned Tweeden’s recollection of his behavior.” Then, “in a longer statement Thursday afternoon, he again apologized while maintaining that he remembered the rehearsal differently.” Reuters (11/16) says it “was unable to independently verify Tweeden or Franken’s accounts.”

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (11/12, Brooks, Spencer, Rao) focuses on Franken’s “extended apology” and call “for a Senate ethics investigation into his behavior.” Said Franken, “The first thing I want to do is apologize: to Leeann, to everyone else who was part of that tour, to everyone who has worked for me, to everyone I represent, and to everyone who counts on me to be an ally and supporter and champion of women. There’s more I want to say, but the first and most important thing – and if it’s the only thing you care to hear, that’s fine – is: I’m sorry.” Added Franken, “While I don’t remember the rehearsal for the skit as Leeann does, I understand why we need to listen to and believe women's experiences."

Congress, says USA Today (11/16, Przybyla), "may be gridlocked when it comes to policy battles – but the condemnation from lawmakers after allegations" against Franken "was incredibly swift on both sides of the aisle." The Washington Post (11/16, Phillips) also reports Franken "faced swift and bipartisan condemnation," and the Los Angeles Times (11/16, Decker) that for Democrats, such "expressions of disappointment...and calls for Ethics Committee action" were "necessary to avoid the suggestion of hypocrisy, since most of them have condemned Roy Moore."

McClatchy (11/16, Magness) reports Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell "said in a statement...that 'with all credible allegations of sexual harassment or assault, I believe the Ethics Committee should review the matter.'" McConnell "added that he hoped Democratic leader Chuck Schumer would join him on the issue." Politico (11/16, Schor) quotes McConnell as saying, "Regardless of party, harassment and assault are completely unacceptable – in the workplace or anywhere else." Schumer quickly agreed, calling for a Senate Ethics Committee investigation. The Boston Globe (11/16, Andersen) reports Sen. Elizabeth Warren also "condemned...her liberal colleague," saying, "The behavior reported today is unacceptable and deeply disappointing. ... I am glad Senator Franken has acknowledged as much and has agreed to cooperate with an ethics investigation."

To Bloomberg News (11/16, John, Litvan), "Republicans sought to capitalize on the accusations against a Democrat." The National Republican Senatorial Committee "sent a series of press releases calling on Democrats on the ballot in 2018 to return campaign contributions from Franken's leadership political action committee." Bloomberg adds that "senators targeted included Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota, of Bob Casey of Pennsylvania, Debbie Stabenow in Michigan and Jon Tester of Montana."

Roll Call (11/16) reported that "Republican Party of Minnesota Chairwoman Jennifer Carnahan called for Franken to resign his Senate seat," while the NRSC communications director "questioned whether Florida Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson would still hold his fundraising date with Franken." Meanwhile, "Iowa Democratic candidate Abby Finkenaur, who's challenging Rod Blum, quickly announced she would donate Franken's contribution to her campaign to a nonprofit for survivors of sexual assault." The New York Post (11/16, Brown), meanwhile, notes "Sen. Claire McCaskill's campaign said she will donate $30,000 from...Franken's political action committee to a 'Missouri-based charity,' while Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand will give $12,500 she's received to Protect our Defenders, which fights rape and sexual assault in the military."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Situation Room (11/16), "Unwanted groping and sexual advances are never funny or acceptable." Asked if he believes Tweeden Blumenthal said, "I believe the photograph of Al Franken, in effect groping her, cannot be denied." Blumenthal added, "We need the truth about all of what happened and if there are other facts that we should know about this incident, about other incidents, about other people, they have to be known as well. And then the ethics investigation is going to have to determine whether any sanctions or penalties are appropriate. I also believe, as a prosecutor and someone who really trusts the rule of law and impartial decision makers that this investigation ought to be allowed to proceed without any of us interfering in it."

The Washington Post (11/16) editorializes that as the Senate Ethics panel "looks into Mr. Franken's behavior, it will have to consider what comes next. What level of misconduct merits a lawmaker's departure from Congress? Should the legislature have a zero-tolerance policy, or can gradations of offense be recognized? If a member's wrongdoing took place entirely before his time on the Hill, should that affect continued service?" The Post adds that "members of the House of Representatives should be asking these same questions," and that "both Democrats and Republicans should support measures to hold predators to account, provide victims with support and make clear that all people deserve to be treated with respect."

Political commentator Amanda Carpenter said on CNN's The Lead (11/16), "I think...Franken needs to do a lot more than issue a public apology via press release. She has a lot of class. She said she believed his apology. I think he needs to try to make it in person. She may not to want see him. He needs to make a much bigger gesture than a press release because she has gone through a lot over the last ten years."

Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist said on Fox News' Special Report (11/16), "There is absolutely no question that by the standard recently set by the political and media establishment that...Franken should be expelled. They have been saying for days that conduct 40 years ago should lead to expulsion from the Senate. There is no question this is a credible allegation. This is behavior that was just before he was a senator, and that's the standard that was being used for the last few days. But I do kind of wonder if maybe what should happen here is a little bit of everybody taking a deep breath, thinking through how to properly handle credible allegations of sexual assault and sexual impropriety, how to balance the allegations with the defense and whether we should institute better systems for handling this."

A.B. Stoddard of Real Clear Politics said on Fox News' Special Report (11/16), "I just feel, like a lot of people do, that this is the beginning of a big cascading event. I don't believe Senator Franken is the last lawmaker in the House or senator in the Senate to have done something like this. Women are coming together...in solidarity with each other, but also just try to stop it from happening again. It's going to really be a very difficult time on Capitol Hill."

Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (11/16) that Franken "has a long history of making all kinds of vicious, vile, completely out of line comments. He is also a massive hypocrite for sexual harassment." Hannity added, "We have to ask again, given this information, everything we now know, now considering everyone is raising questions who is fit for this office and who is fit for that office, is Sen. Franken fit for office? Sen. Franken clearly is a pretty sick, twisted individual with a warped sense of humor in his own mind that really isn't funny, but his actions do need to be evaluated. At the end of the day it will be the people of his home state that decide."

The USO, the Washington Examiner (11/16, Quinn) reports, "said Thursday the allegations...are 'deeply disturbing' and don't reflect the organization's values." Ashley McLellan, a spokeswoman for the USO, "told the Washington Examiner in an email the USO didn't have any knowledge of the incident."

Two "Prominent" Minnesota Democrats, NYTimes' Goldberg Call On Franken To Resign. The Washington Examiner (11/16, Nelson) reports, "Two prominent members of Minnesota's Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party," state auditor Rebecca Otto and Megan Thomas, "president of the party's official Feminist Caucus," are "calling on...Franken to resign his Senate seat following allegations of sexual misconduct." Otto, who is "a candidate for governor in Minnesota, said in a statement that 'I believe it's in the best interest of Minnesotans and of women everywhere for Senator Franken to resign, and to set an example to powerful men across America that sexual harassment will not be tolerated.'" Thomas, meanwhile, "told the Washington Examiner that Franken's misconduct was 'every woman's nightmare on a bus.'" She also said in a Facebook post, "No one should fear their elected representatives, so, sadly, for me, I think the Senator should resign."

Michelle Goldberg, in a New York Times (11/16) column, writes she had "hoped Franken would run for president in 2020," but though she "would mourn Franken's departure from the Senate...he should go, and the governor should appoint a woman to fill his seat. The message to men in power about sexual degradation has to be clear: We will replace you."

Franken Photographed Groping Another Woman In 2000. The Federalist (11/16, Payton) reports that "Tweeden isn't the only woman Franken has been photographed groping. At a roast hosted by Comedy Central in 2000, Franken was photographed groping Joy Behar's breast."

Another Woman Accuses Franken Of Harassing Phone Calls Until She Threatened To Call Police. The San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (11/16, Ross) reports "Melanie Morgan, a longtime Bay Area conservative radio anchor, claimed Thursday that she was harassed with phone calls by...Franken...in 2000, following a contentious debate on Bill Maher's ABC late-night show 'Politically Incorrect.'" Morgan "made the allegations on Media Equalizer, a blog she co-founded," saying "the harassment consisted of Franken aggressively trying to continue the argument off air and repeatedly calling her personal phone number to 'badger' her." Wrote Morgan, "He wouldn't leave me alone, he kept following me. As a woman, his presence and proximity to me felt very threatening and intimidating." She also "said he later approached the show's producer to get her phone number, 'which was a clear violation of network protocol,'" but "Franken got the phone number and 'shocked' her by calling her home at least three times." Adds Morgan, "By the third phone call I was outraged and terrified, as he is really disturbed." Morgan also "said he finally left her alone after she threatened to call the police and report him."

White House: Senate Investigation "Appropriate." Politico (11/16, Lima) reports "White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Thursday it would be 'appropriate' for the Senate to investigate allegations" against Franken. Said Sanders, "On Sen. Franken, it appears that the Senate is looking into that, which they should, and we feel that that's an appropriate action."

Trump Weighs In On Allegations Against "Frankenstien" On Twitter. The President commented on the accusations against Franken last night, tweeting, "The AI Frankenstien picture is really bad, speaks a thousand words. Where do his hands go in pictures 2, 3, 4, 5 & 6 while she sleeps?" Trump added, "And to think that just last week he was lecturing anyone who would listen about sexual harassment and respect for women. Lesley Stahl tape?" Politico (11/16, East) says "Trump's acknowledgment of the accusations against Franken comes at the same time that he has distanced himself from...Moore, who has been accused of pursuing and harassing teenage girls when he was in his 30s." Axios (11/16, Lawler) similarly indicates that "Trump weighed in quickly on Franken, but has declined to address the child sexual abuse allegations against...Moore."

White House: Trump Finds Moore Allegations "Troubling," But Fate Up To Alabama Voters.

The White House on Thursday weighed in on the controversy engulfing Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore, though President Trump, himself, didn't comment on the situation. The CBS Evening News (11/16, story 2, 2:30, Mason), in a report that covered several aspects of the Moore controversy, showed a clip of White House press secretary Sarah Sanders saying, "The President believes that these allegations are very troubling and should be taken seriously, and he thinks that the people of Alabama should make the decision on who their next Senator should be."

Bloomberg News (11/16, Wayne, Olorunnipa) reports that Sanders "said Trump continues to believe that 'if any of these allegations are true' Moore should withdraw from the race. That led to a series of questions from reporters about how the allegations might be substantiated. Sanders said 'that should be determined, possibly, by a court of law' but that it is 'a decision the people of Alabama should make, not the president.'"

USA Today (11/16, Korte, Berry) reports that Sanders' remarks "ended days of silence from the White House, since the allegations first arose last week while Trump was on a 12-day Asia trip. But Sanders stopped short of calling for Moore to drop out of the race, as a chorus of other Republican senators – including Majority Leader Mitch McConnell – have done."

The Washington Times (11/16, Miller) reports that Sanders "did not say whether Mr. Trump believed the women" who've accused Moore "of pursuing them or making inappropriate sexual contact. Most of the women were teens, although of legal age in Alabama, when the incidents occurred in the 1970s." Asked "why Mr. Trump had not called for Mr. Moore...to quit the race, Mrs. Sanders repeatedly said that it was up to Alabama voters. 'The president has been clear that if any of these allegations are true...then he should do the right thing and step aside,' Mrs. Sanders said."

Under the headline "Trump Stops Short Of Saying US Senate Candidate Moore Should Leave Race," Reuters (11/16, Mason, Alexander) quotes Sanders as saying, "The president said in his statement earlier this week that if the allegations are true, then Roy Moore should step aside. He still firmly believes that." However, Politico (11/16, Nelson) reported that Sanders "refused to outline what it would take for Trump to become convinced of the accusations' veracity. Sanders also declined to say whether or not Trump would vote for Moore if he were an Alabama voter and would not commit to following up with reporters on the issue."

Under the headline "Trump Ducks Moore Scandal," Politico (11/16, Johnson, Isenstadt) reported that "Trump has steered conspicuously clear of the" Moore controversy. His "absence from the race has compounded GOP worries the party is about to lose a seat it has no business relinquishing to Democrats. Republicans say a denunciation of Moore from Trump, a beloved figure in Alabama despite his problems elsewhere, offers the only hope of keeping the seat in the party's hands. But Trump sees nothing but negatives in getting involved, according to three White House aides, who say they consider the options laid out by McConnell and his team far-fetched."

Asked to comment on Moore, Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/16) "that I was the first person in the Administration last Thursday when this news broke...at the time to come out against the conduct as it was described, and I went a step further. I said – because I tried to make this an issue over a year ago on October 9, 2016, when I talked about maybe, when I was younger and prettier, folks on Capitol Hill behaving in such a way that we should take a look at. ... Nobody wanted to listen to me, because of the campaign I was managing. This is an important topic but in terms of this particular issue and this particular Senate race, I will not get ahead of the President and anything he wishes to add."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT) said on CNN's Situation Room (11/16), "Roy Moore is unfit to be a United States senator on various grounds and those grounds include the kinds of sexual advances he made to children."

Alabama GOP Steering Committee Backs Moore. Meanwhile, the New York Times (11/16, Blinder) reports that the Alabama GOP on Thursday said "that it would stand behind...Moore, most likely leaving Republicans with a nominee facing numerous allegations of sexual misconduct and unwanted overtures to women. The decision, which a committee of 21 party leaders reached Wednesday evening but did not formally announce until Thursday, placed the state's Republicans at bitter and public odds with national party leaders, who had demanded that Mr. Moore leave the race."

The Washington Times (11/16, McLaughlin) reports that in a statement, the Alabama GOP said, "The ALGOP Steering Committee supports Judge Roy Moore as our nominee and trusts the voters as they make the ultimate decision in this crucial race." The statement added, "Judge Moore has vehemently denied the allegations made against him. He deserves to be presumed innocent of the accusations unless proven otherwise. He will continue to take his case straight to the people of Alabama."

Gov. Ivey Won't Change Date Of Dec. 12 Special Election. On its website, CNN (11/16, Bradner) reported that Gov. Kay Ivey (R-AL) on Thursday said "that the state's Senate special election date will not change, despite national Republican leaders' efforts to get...Moore off the ballot. ... Asked if there are any circumstances in which the date of the election or the candidates included could change, Ivey" said, "The election's going to be December the 12th."

The Hill (11/16, Kamisar) reported that Ivey torpedoed "the idea that Sen. Luther Strange (R-Ala.) could resign and delay next month's special election." The Hill added that a "long-shot option that's been mulled" by Washington Republicans "is that Strange, who was appointed to fill the seat temporarily after Jeff Sessions left it to become attorney general, could step down before the election and reset the clock." However, "Ivey shot that prospect down."

Moore: Allegations "Not Only Untrue, But They Have No Evidence To Support Them." The Montgomery \(AL\) Advertiser (11/16, Lyman) reports, "Speaking at the end of an event" yesterday in Birmingham, "where 'pro-family' speakers expressed support for" Moore, the candidate "declined to answer questions about accusations that he pursued relationships with teenagers in the late 1970s and early 1980s, and that he engaged in sexual misconduct with them. Moore and his wife left the event without answering questions."

However, CNN (11/16, Watkins) reported on its website that Moore on Thursday "continued to deny the allegations against him as more women continue to come forward. 'They're not only untrue, but they have no evidence to support them,' Moore said in Birmingham." And referring to the Washington Post story that first detailed the accusations against him, Moore said, "The Washington Post is certainly not evidence."

NBC News Interviews Moore Accuser. On NBC Nightly News (11/16, story 2, 2:45, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported that Moore on Thursday "vowed to stay in the race," even "as more women are coming forward to accuse Moore of unwanted advances ranging from flirting to sexual assault." NBC News interviewed Tina Johnson, who, according to Gutierrez, "says Moore groped her at his law office in 1991 when she was 28 and trying to settle a child custody case." Johnson was shown saying, "I was in shock. And I was so humiliated and sickening. ... When I got up and went out, he grabbed my behind. He had power over me. He had me in a position where I couldn't do nothing."

ABC News Highlights WPost Report On New Accuser's Claims. On ABC World News Tonight (11/16, story 2, 3:20, Muir), Tom Llamas reported that "Moore has tried to push past the allegations, but new ones pop up nearly every day. The latest, from the Washington Post. Gena Richardson says she was a teenage girl, around 18 years old, when Roy Moore approached her at the local mall where she was working. ... A few days later, Richardson says she was sitting in trigonometry class when she was called to the principal's office. She tells the Post she was startled, and thought maybe her dad was calling. Instead, she says, the man on the phone was Roy Moore. 'He said 'what are you doing?' I said, 'I'm in trig class.' Richardson says Moore asked her out, but she told him she couldn't talk. A few days later, at the mall, she says he asked her out again, and that night, they went to the movies. After, Richardson says Moore offered her a ride, and in his car gave her what she calls a 'forceful' kiss. 'I'd never been kissed like that,' she says, 'and the minute that happened, got scared, and so I said I've got to go, because my curfew is now.'"

Moore Seizes On Franken Allegations To Hammer McConnell. Alabama Live (11/16, Gattis) reports that in the wake of Sen. Al Franken (D-MN) on Thursday being accused of groping a woman and forcing a kiss on her, Moore "suggested that there was a double standard for how he is being treated." In a tweet targeting Senate Majority Leader McConnell, Moore said, "Al Franken admits guilt after photographic evidence of his abuse surfaces. Mitch: 'Let's investigate.' In Alabama, ZERO evidence, allegations 100% rejected. Mitch: 'Moore must quit immediately or be expelled.'" McConnell, who has repeatedly called on Moore to drop his bid, on Thursday "called on the Senate Ethics Committee to review the allegations against Franken." The Washington Times (11/16, Morton) offers a similar report.

NRCC Chief: Moore Should “Step Aside.” The Hill (11/16, Manchester) reported that during a Thursday appearance on CNN, National Republican Congressional Committee chief Steve Stivers “called on...Moore to step aside.” Said Stivers, “I think that Roy Moore should step aside,” adding, “I do believe these women.” Stivers, “who had previously donated to Moore’s campaign,” also said, “I’ve subsequently asked for my money back.” The Washington Times (11/16, Persons) also reports on Stivers’ remarks.

Fox News Poll: Democrat Jones Leads Moore 50%-42%. On its website, Fox News (11/16, Blanton) reported that a Fox News poll of 649 Alabama likely voters, taken Nov. 13-15, shows ex-US Attorney Doug Jones (D) leading Moore 50%-42% in the Dec. 12 special election. Fox News said, “Support from women is the key to the Democrat’s” edge, “as Jones is their choice by 26 points (58-32 percent). The gap grows to 49 points among women under age 45 (69-20 percent), and he’s up by 11 among women ages 45 and over (51-40 percent). Jones even receives 19 percent support from Republican women (to Moore’s 68 percent).” The Hill (11/16, Anapol) also reported on the poll results.

Politico (11/16, Debenedetti, Strauss) reported that while Jones “remains an underdog in a state” Trump carried by 28 points, “he does have a path. Here’s how it looks, according to interviews with nearly a dozen Democrats within and near Jones’ team since Moore was hit with accusations of pursuing – and in two cases abusing – teenage girls. First, create a permission structure for alienated Republicans who are skeptical of Moore...to cross the aisle. At the same time invigorate the base, especially African-Americans.” Lastly, “keep the national Democratic Party and its despised brand as far out of the picture as possible, while still benefiting from its money.”

Under the headline “Democrat Doug Jones, Roy Moore’s Rival, Gains Traction In Alabama Senate Race,” the Wall Street Journal (11/16, Jamerson, Hook) reports that Jones is picking up momentum as Moore continues to battle allegations of sexual misconduct. Jones, according to the Journal, is largely focusing on issues such as healthcare and jobs

Alabama Evangelicals Divided Over Whether To Support Moore. Under the headline “For Some Evangelicals, A Choice Between Moore And Morality,” the Washington Post (11/16, Fisher) reports on the debate among Alabama Christians over whether to support Moore, saying, “What’s happening in the churches of Alabama – a state where half the residents consider themselves evangelical Christians, double the national average, according to a Pew Research study – is nothing less than a battle for the meaning of evangelism, some church leaders say. It is a titanic struggle between those who believe there must be one clear, unalterable moral standard and those who argue that to win the war for the nation’s soul, Christians must accept morally flawed leaders.”

US Strikes “More Conciliatory” Tone At Climate Talks.

The New York Times (11/16, Friedman) reports State Department acting undersecretary Judith G. Garber, in the “first official American remarks to the United Nations climate body” since President Trump announced the US would abandon the Paris climate accord, offered “a far more conciliatory message than a presentation earlier in the week by White House officials promoting fossil fuels, which drew catcalls and a walkout.” Garber said, “We remain open to the possibility of rejoining [the accord] at a later date under terms more favorable to the American people.” She also promised to help other countries “adapt to the impacts of climate change.” Environmentalists at the event “found Ms. Garber’s message confusing, and a sign of the awkward tightrope that America’s diplomats are walking as they work on a deal Mr. Trump has disavowed.”

The AP (11/16, Frank Jordans) reports Garber added that the US “will continue to be a leader in clean energy and innovation, and we understand the need for transforming energy systems.” Garber stated, “We remain collectively committed to mitigating greenhouse gas emissions through, among other things, increased innovation on sustainable energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse gas emissions energy systems.” The Washington Examiner (11/16, Siegel) reports, “Garber never used the word ‘coal’ in her Bonn address, although she reaffirmed the White House position that transitioning to renewable energy sources such as solar and wind must coincide with economic prosperity and energy security.”

However, the Washington Times (11/16, Hill) reports, that also on Thursday, “U.S. government officials said Washington will push for a change to World Bank rules blocking funding for coal-related projects, while seeking to build ‘a clean-coal alliance’ of like-minded nations across six continents.” The top US representative at the conference George David Banks “said it was vital that developing countries be able to generate electricity and that the structures of the Paris deal work against poorer countries trying to meet their emissions targets.” The position by the US “was announced even as Canada and Britain were unveiling their own Global Alliance to Power Past Coal to phase out the use of coal." Several US states have signed on to the alliance to phase out coal.

The Hill (11/16, Henry, Cama) highlights the "dueling US delegations" at the conference "the official team and a competing one made up of Democratic officials opposed to President Trump's decision to remove the U.S. from the Paris climate accord." Sen. Brian Schatz said, "Whatever the president may say about climate, he cannot stop clean energy. ... He's a powerful man, but he's not a monarch, and we are going to continue the clean energy revolution." California Gov. Jerry Brown added, "The rest of the world's got to carry the ball while we're temporarily in America off to the sidelines. ... But there's still California, there's still New York, Washington, Oregon, all these other places, and there's still corporations."

Supporters Stick By Trump On Leaving Paris, Rolling Back Regulations. Bloomberg News (11/16, Natter) reports that while the conference goes on in Germany, "the president's backers in the industrial heartland are cheering him on. Whether it's ditching Paris, moving to slash funding for the Environmental Protection Agency or rescinding a series of environmental regulations, interviews in the industrial area of Lordstown, Ohio, show those moves are popular among factory workers. They see them as Trump making good on his pledges to restore factory jobs." CNBC (11/16, DiChristopher) reports that last week at the Heartland Institute's America First Energy Conference, Trump supporters "gathered to celebrate and take stock of Trump's progress rolling back Obama-era regulations and his blueprint for achieving U.S. 'energy dominance.'" The conference "offered a glimpse into an organized and highly dedicated corner of conservatism that is committed to shrinking the EPA, demolishing the foundations of greenhouse gas regulations and minimizing the government's efforts to combat climate change wherever possible."

Pope Francis Calls Climate Denial A "Perverse" Attitude. The AP (11/16, Nicole Winfield) reports Pope Francis yesterday "rebuked those who deny the science behind global warming and urged negotiators at climate talks in Germany to avoid falling prey to such 'perverse attitudes' and instead accelerate efforts to curb greenhouse gas emissions." In his message to the conference, Francis said climate change is "one of the most worrisome phenomena that humanity is facing." Reuters (11/16, Pullella) reports Francis said, "We have to avoid falling into these four perverse attitudes, which certainly do not help honest research and sincere and productive dialogue on building the future of our planet: negation, indifference, resignation and trust in inadequate solutions." The Daily Caller (11/16, Bastasch) also provides coverage of this story.

Keystone Pipeline Leaks Oil In South Dakota.

The AP (11/16, Dexter) reports that "TransCanada Corp.'s Keystone pipeline leaked an estimated 210,000 gallons of oil onto agricultural land in northeastern South Dakota," although officials in South Dakota "don't believe the leak polluted any surface water bodies or drinking water systems." Regulators in Nebraska "are scheduled to announce their decision Monday whether to approve the proposed Keystone XL oil pipeline, an expansion that would boost the amount of oil TransCanada is now shipping through the existing line." TransCanada indicated "in its statement that it expected the pipeline to remain shut down as the company responds to the leak."

ABC World News Tonight (11/16, story 4, 0:15, Muir) reported that "officials say the cleanup could take some time." The New York Times (11/16, Smith, Bosman) reports that Kim McIntosh, an environmental scientist for the South Dakota Department of Environment and Natural Resources, said, "This is not a little spill from any perspective."

The Washington Post (11/16, Mufson, Mooney) reports that Jane Kleeb, an activist who opposed Keystone XL and is also head of Nebraska's Democratic Party, said, "TransCanada cannot be trusted. ... I have full confidence that the Nebraska Public Service Commission is going to side with Nebraskans, not a foreign oil company."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"A Tax Cut Bill To Make Scrooge McDuck Proud." The New York Times (11/16) editorializes, "Let that sink in. This tax bill would take money from working families and give it to the wealthiest people in the world. ... Republicans have made clear where their values lie. Well-heeled campaign funders matter. Middle-class families don't."

"The Da Vinci Lode." A New York Times (11/16) editorial.

Washington Post.

“The Destructive Part Of The Republican Tax Bill You’re Not Paying Attention To.” A Washington Post (11/16) editorial says the “assault on higher education” in the House tax bill “is one of the less- examined unwise provisions in a tax bill full of unwise provisions.” The bill would require graduate students to “treat tuition waivers as taxable income.” While that “bad idea” is not in the Senate bill, it “contains other provisions that would undermine the nation’s colleges and universities.” For example, both plans “would slap a 1.4 percent excise tax on investment income that universities earn on endowments that Republicans deem to be too large,” a provision which “would mainly hit elite institutions,” that are “generally the ones that offer the most tuition aid to students from needy – and even securely middle-class – families.”

“Al Franken Is Just The Start Of Congress’s Reckoning With Sexual Harassment.” The Washington Post (11/16) editorializes that as the Senate Ethics panel “looks into [Sen. Al] Franken’s behavior, it will have to consider what comes next. What level of misconduct merits a lawmaker’s departure from Congress? Should the legislature have a zero-tolerance policy, or can gradations of offense be recognized? If a member’s wrongdoing took place entirely before his time on the Hill, should that affect continued service?” The Post adds that “members of the House of Representatives should be asking these same questions,” and that “both Democrats and Republicans should support measures to hold predators to account, provide victims with support and make clear that all people deserve to be treated with respect.”

“The Pentagon Has Detained A US Citizen For More Than Two Months – And Said Little.” The Washington Post (11/16, Board) editorializes that the US government must provide an American citizen, who has been detained in Iraq for over two months on suspicion of aiding the Islamic State, “with legal counsel and access to the justice system if he wishes it.” The Post also calls on the Pentagon to make basic information about the case public “in the spirit of accountability and transparency.” The Post asserts that “it can’t be the case that the government is effectively allowed to block the courts from reviewing a person’s detention by keeping the prisoner anonymous and incommunicado.”

Wall Street Journal.

“A Solution For Ron Johnson.” Citing Sen. Ron Johnson’s concern over the bill’s treatment of large corporations versus “pass through” business, which are taxed at the individual rate, a Wall Street Journal (11/16) editorial says President Trump’s call to reduce the top rate to 35% could be the solution to win Johnson’s support because a 35% rate would provide a more powerful incentive for growth against the Senate bill’s 17.4% pass-through deduction than the Senate bill’s current 38.5% top rate.

“No Republicans Need Apply.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/16, Board) criticizes the Congressional Hispanic Caucus’ decision to reject Republican Rep. Carlos Curbelo’s bid for membership, saying that while the group can set its own rules, Curbelo’s rejection confirms criticisms that the group has less to do with promoting Hispanic interests than pushing a liberal Democratic agenda.

“Trump’s South China Sea Message.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/16) praises President Trump for his challenging China on its territorial aspirations in the South China Sea. The Journal focuses on China’s conflicts in the area with Vietnam and Philippines, and concludes by lauding Trump for seeking to keep shipping lanes open and deter Chinese territorial expansion.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Meanwhile, here on Earth, the House passed the GOP-backed tax plan today, which is very good news for billionaires and also just your average run-of-the-millionaires too. The bill would shift the tax burden from the wealthy to people who really should be paying more, like college students. Time for those little punks to start eating bottom ramen for a while."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The President is also about to reverse a law that made it illegal to import elephant parts from African trophy hunts. That's right, struggling families of America, you asked for it, and the President delivered. We can finally bring our elephant tusks back home from Zimbabwe."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Roy Moore has been accused of sexual misconduct and worse by nine women, seven of whom were teenagers when the events allegedly happened. But when Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell called for him to step aside, this is how he responded on Twitter. He wrote, 'Dear Mitch McConnell, bring it on.' Now I'm not an expert in PR, but when you're accused of putting moves on high school girls, maybe don't reference the title of a movie about high school cheerleaders."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There are a bunch of new accusations made today against a wide variety of people, including Sylvester Stallone, the first PBS, and Senator Al Franken, whose story was amplified because it had a visual aid."

Jimmy Kimmel: "There is so much of this [sexual harassment news]. I mean, at this point I know it sounds extreme, but it might be time for guys, I think, we might all need to hand our penises over to the police for a few months."

Stephen Colbert: "Every day, it seems like we find out about another high-profile sexual harasser. And today is no exception. Brace yourself, because it is Sen. Al Franken. He's been accused of kissing and groping a woman without her consent. Come on, Franken! I guess there are no good people left, so let's just get it over with. Just tell us whatever you did, Jimmy Carter, Barack Obama, Tom Hanks."

Stephen Colbert: "Moore isn't afraid of the Washington Republicans, tweeting, 'Dear Mitch McConnell, bring it on.' A strong sentiment, leading the head of the National Republican Senatorial Committee to tweet, "'Bring It On' is a movie about high school cheerleaders.'"

James Corden: "Have you guys been following this story about the UCLA basketball players who were arrested in China for shoplifting? Well, President Trump helped get them released, and yesterday they publicly thanked him. So today, Donald Trump tweeted, 'To the three UCLA basketball players I say, You're welcome.' He also tweeted, 'Have a great life be careful, there are many pitfalls on the long and winding road of life!' There are many pitfalls on the long and winding road of life? The guy goes on one presidential trip to Asia, and now he's writing Chinese proverbs."

James Corden: "[Donald Trump] is right, though. There are so many pitfalls on the long and winding road of life. For example, there's bankruptcy, and there are lawsuits against a scam business you started. Then there's bankruptcy a second time. Then there's the FBI investigating you about Russia. And then bankruptcy again."

James Corden: "A piece of wedding cake from Donald and Melania Trump's wedding is currently up for auction. The 12-year-old piece of cake is being marketed as a rare collector's item. I can't believe it lasted this long. Not the cake, the marriage."

Trevor Noah: [Referring to sexual misconduct allegations of Sen. Al Franken and Senate candidate Roy Moore] "Al Franken is going with the whole 'I'm sorry, I'm going to look at myself. I understand this disgusting.' That's so boring. This guy is like, 'You know who needs to step down for what I did? Someone else!'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Radio host Leeann Tweeden came forward and said Sen. Al Franken groped her without her consent. And she posted a photo as evidence. In fact, it's so bad that Franken is already a front-runner for President in 2020."

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, it's been reported Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore would hang out in the mall in the '80s and try to get teenagers' phone numbers. He got a lot of numbers, but they were all for 'Jenny at 867-5309.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "It's crazy, though, two more women have come forward accusing Roy Moore of making unwanted advances at the mall, which explains that new slogan, 'Amazon, so you don't run into Roy Moore at the mall.'"

Trump Administration To Reconsider Sage Grouse Conservation Plans.

The Hill (10/5, Henry) reports that the Interior Department has "begun the process of reconsidering and potentially revising a 2015 plan to protect the greater sage grouse, a Western bird that has seen its habitat dwindle." In a notice published Thursday, the Bureau of Land Management "said it would review land use provisions in the federal sage grouse conservation plan, which limits new development on some of the sage grouse's range in 10 western states and defines ways to expand its habitat there." BLM is "also set to reverse an Obama administration effort to block mining on 10 million acres of land in six Western states." The ban was "part of the administration's efforts to protect the sage grouse."

The AP (10/5, Daly) reports that the BLM "said a recent analysis showed that mining or grazing would not pose a significant threat to the sage grouse." According to officials, "the proposal would affect less than one-tenth of 1 percent of sage grouse-occupied range across 11 states from California to the Dakotas."

The Washington Examiner (10/5, Siegel) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop "applauded Zinke's decision to reconsider the sage grouse policy." Bishop said in a statement, "These withdrawals were never about Sage Grouse conservation. It was all a ploy to assert more federal power, ignore actual data and best science, and diminish the influence and authority of states. Secretary Zinke is developing a better policy through input from states and people on the ground with local knowledge and expertise."

The Washington Times (10/5, Richardson) reports that the notices "drew cheers from Western Republicans and industry groups that have decried the sage-grouse restrictions as unnecessary and politically driven." Kathleen Sgamma, president of the Western Energy Alliance, said the Obama Administration's efforts represented a "top-down, one-size-fits-all approach." She said, "The attitude of this Interior Department, which is much more interested in real collaboration with states and counties, is welcome after the prior administration's process that ignored real threats to sage-grouse and exaggerated impacts from human activities."

The Washington Post (10/5, Grandoni) reports that the move was condemned by environmental groups. Whit Fosburgh, president of the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, said, "If they go too far in unraveling the basic framework of the agreement, it will lead to a listing. That's what everyone was trying to avoid."

Also reporting are the Deseret \(UT\) News (10/5, O'Donoghue), the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/5, Harding), the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/5, Richards), the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (10/6, Hamway), and KIFI-TV Idaho Falls \(ID\) Idaho Falls, ID (10/5).

Lake Okeechobee Dike Repairs 'Priority' For Trump, Zinke Says.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (10/5, Bennett) reports that "repairing the Herbert Hoover Dike around Lake Okeechobee and restoring the Everglades are important to President Donald Trump, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said Thursday after visiting a construction project along the lake." Trump has "proposed spending $82 million on rehabilitating the dike in 2018, up from about $68 million approved by Congress in 2017." Zinke said, "From President Trump, we want it done yesterday. He wants to win, so anything I can do to remove the regulations, streamline the process, to get it moving quicker — we can do it right. The Army Corps of Engineers is the best this country has as far as engineering goes. So I'm comfortable if they're given the green light they can complete the task quicker."

WPEC-TV West Palm Beach, FL (10/5, Weber) reports that Zinke added, "Above everything else is to make sure we restore the system, to make sure long-term, the Everglades and the system return to health."

Three Trump Cabinet Members Attended Mining Lobbyist Meeting At Trump International Hotel.

The Washington Post (10/5, Grandoni, Eilperin) reports that three members of the President's Cabinet attended a meeting of the National Mining Association at the Trump International Hotel in Washington this week, "according to a schedule of the event obtained by The Washington Post." Commerce Secretary Ross on Tuesday "headlined a general session." Tuesday afternoon, Labor Secretary Acosta "spoke with NMA members during a lunch sponsored by Jenmar Corp. and Royal Gold," and on Wednesday, Energy Secretary Perry "spoke at a breakfast sponsored by Komatsu Mining Corp." Interior Secretary Zinke also had been scheduled to attend, "but according to the department's deputy communications director, Russell Newell, he 'is traveling and so was unavailable for the meeting.'" Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt "attended Wednesday in his place."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Post (10/5, Grandoni).

House Dems Want DOI Monument Review Info Released.

Law360 (10/5, Phillis) reports that claiming "the process has been far too secretive, 26 House Democrats introduced a resolution Wednesday that would direct Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to release information on the Trump administration's review of national monuments." Rep. Raul M.

Grijalva, "and his colleagues said that Zinke has not been open about the administration's monument review process."

Baker Team Swims Around Marine Monument Controversy. The Gloucester \(MA\) Times (10/5, Lannan) reports that "fishing industry interests are hopeful that restrictions will be loosened" in the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument "while environmentalists are fighting to uphold Obama's designation." Gov. Charlie Baker's administration "began highlighting concerns with the monument designation process as early as November 2015, when the governor wrote to Obama saying the a monument designation could undermine work by the New England Fishery Management Council to establish protections for the canyons and seamounts and to develop a broader ocean management plan." Energy and Environmental Affairs Secretary Matthew Beaton has "declined to say if he agreed that commercial fishing should return to the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts, instead pointing back at the process by which it was declared a monument."

Notes From Closed Meeting Show How Interior Aims To Weaken Environmental Laws.

The Washington Post (10/5, Fears) reports that near the end of September, Bureau of Land Management officials "hosted a conference with state, county and local government representatives to discuss ways to loosen environmental rules." BLM "hosts told attendees and those joining the invitation-only meeting remotely that they wanted to streamline a powerful law that protects wildlife and public land, the National Environmental Policy Act." But "at least two groups not on the invitation list obtained the call-in information for the meeting and secretly sat in and took notes, which one group provided to The Washington Post." Leah Baker, the BLM division chief for planning and NEPA, said in an interview Tuesday, "We're seeking a better decision-making process that's more productive and getting decisions faster. We heard through this process that we should try and streamline regulations ... and that the agency leaves a little to be desired in how effectively we coordinate" with states and local governments.

Additional coverage that Joel Clement, "who blew the whistle on the Trump administration for reassigning him from measuring climate change to a different department has resigned." was provided by CNN (10/5, Green), the Huffington Post (10/5, D'Angelo), MSNBC (10/5, Benen), and Federal News Radio \(DC\) (10/5, White).

NYTimes: 48 Environmental Rules Targeted For Elimination Under Trump Administration.

An analysis in the New York Times (10/5, Popovich, Albeck-Ripka) examines nearly 50 environmental rules that the Trump Administration is seeking to reverse. The analysis includes a chart identifying each policy targeted by the Administration as well as who lobbied to get the regulations changed.

The Media Are Missing Trump's Much-Needed Regulatory Relief.

In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (10/5, Harbin), Americans for Prosperity VP of External Affairs Christine Harbin states that "American consumers, businesses, and families have all paid the price" for decades of creating additional federal regulations without removing any. The Trump Administration's efforts "in regulatory relief" have "not grabbed a lot of headlines in the media, but they have had significant impact in peeling back the regulatory state left over from President Barack Obama and prior administrations." Consistent with these efforts, "Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has reined in restrictive land use policies of previous administrations and reduced red tape to domestic energy production." Harbin encourages President Trump and Congress to continue these regulation streamlining efforts so that the federal government "works better for all Americans."

In a piece for the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (10/5, Brown), Kellyn Brown finds Interior Secretary

Ryan Zinke contradictory in many of his positions, especially on his “his proposal to shrink national monuments, except in Montana.” As a result, “fewer are pleased on any side.” Brown notes that “Zinke is nothing if not ambitious — he’s rumored to perhaps run for U.S. Senate in 2018 or governor in 2020.” However, Brown concludes that “in his effort to be so many different things to so many different stakeholders, it’s hard to know what he believes at all.”

‘Blame Game’ Not An Effective Way To Fight Fires.

In an op-ed for the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (10/5, Powers), Debo Powers criticizes “the outrageous and opportunistic comments made by Sen. Steve Daines, Congressman Greg Gianforte, Interior Secretary Zinke, and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue at the Lolo Fire.” Power says that “to use a time when many Montanans were evacuating their homes, firefighters were risking their lives, and all of us were tired of breathing smoke to start a ‘blame game’ and push a political agenda was insensitive and unethical.” Power suggests that “rather than playing the unproductive ‘blame game,’ real leaders should be working together, pushing for real solutions to address this complicated problem, like renewable energy and decreasing the use of fossil fuels.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

BIA Floats Rule Changes For Tribal Land-Into-Trust Bids.

Law360 (10/5, Westney) reports that John Tahsuda III, the principal deputy assistant secretary for the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, “sent a letter to Native American tribal leaders Wednesday that laid out proposed changes to the process tribes must follow to request that the federal government take their land into trust, including provisions that could make it harder for tribes to launch off-reservation casinos.”

Wino Round Up BIA Investigation Finds Fault, Fails To Deliver Justice.

Covering the “The Wino Round Up” of 2013, the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (10/5, Murray) reports that a “class action complaint claiming widespread civil rights violations on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation is dead in the water, despite the fact that a federal investigation conducted by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in 2014 concluded that Fort Peck Tribal Police officers ‘unlawfully arrested and detained 29 individuals without legal justification, this depriving these individuals of various civil rights.’” As of now, “no additional legal action is being taken against any of the individuals named in the IAD report, and there is no tribal, state or federal effort to financially compensate the individuals caught up in the 2013 Wino Round Up.”

Tribe Delivers Bottled Water To Crow Agency After Treatment Facility Was Vandalized.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/5, Wilson) reports that “crews of Crow Tribe employees worked into the night Wednesday and again Thursday morning to deliver trailer-loads of bottled water to homes in Crow Agency, where the municipal water supply has been shut down after a break-in at the water treatment plant.” The Gazette adds, “Investigators with the Federal Bureau of Investigation were also at the plant Thursday morning. Those at the scene declined to comment, and an FBI spokesman in Billings said the agency is investigating, but would not comment on whether any arrests had been made.”

BLM Proposal Would Revive Mining In Renewable Energy Zone.

E&E Publishing (10/5, Streater) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “proposed that the Interior Department cancel the withdrawal of more than a million acres of federal lands from new mining claims within a formally designated renewable energy development zone in the Southern California desert,” according to multiple sources. According to the sources, “formally canceling the two-year withdrawal from new mining claims signals the first step in a broader effort by Interior to eventually dismantle federal participation in the 22.5-million-acre Desert Renewable Energy Conservation Plan (DRECP) that it partnered on with the state of California.” A draft submitted by acting BLM Director Mike Nedd “argues that the cost of between $4 million and $6 million to conduct the environmental impact statement evaluating the withdrawal is cost prohibitive and necessitates a cancellation of the withdrawal, formally published in the Federal Register in December.”:

House Approves Bill To Allow Tucson Full Ownership Of Udall Park.

KGUN-TV Tucson, AZ (10/5) reports that “earlier this week the House of Representatives passed Congresswoman Martha McSally’s bill to allow Tucson to take full ownership of Udall Park.” The legislation “resolves a 28-year-old land exchange between the city and the Federal Bureau of Land Management.” McSally said, “Udall Park is a beautiful place in our Southern Arizona community to gather, but this long-standing land dispute has prevented the City of Tucson from improving the park and growing to its potential for too long.”

Defendants In Land Dispute Await DOJ Approval On Proposed Settlement.

The Wichita Falls \(TX\) Times Record News (10/5, Ingle) reports that “defendants are awaiting final approval of a proposed settlement that would end an almost two-year-old land dispute lawsuit that pits the federal against private landowners and local and state governments and agencies.” The Department of Justice was “required by U.S. District Court Judge Reed O’Connor to notify the court of the federal of it’s progress of reaching a settlement in the case.” In a filing Wednesday, the DOJ “said it is awaiting final approval of the proposed settlement, which comes from the assistant attorney general for the Environmental and Natural Resources Division of the DOJ.”

Judge: BLM Broke Law In Plan To Sterilize Idaho Wild Horses.

The AP (10/5, Kruesi) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “violated environmental law in its plan to sterilize a herd of wild horses in southwestern Idaho, according to a recent ruling from a federal judge.” U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge held Friday the BLM “failed to analyze consequences of the action and ordered the agency to reconsider its decision.” Lodge wrote in his ruling, “The BLM’s decision in this case is arbitrary and capricious because it did not consider the significant impacts its decision may have on the free-roaming nature of the herd nor explain why its decision is appropriate despite those impacts.”

Feds Target Popular Utah Wild Horse Herd For Roundup.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/5, Maffly) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is “proposing to remove up to three-fourths of the 450 horses that populate the Onaqui herd about 40 miles southwest of Salt Lake City.” The action is “needed to reduce effects the herd is having on vital sage grouse habitat occupied by Utah’s most imperiled population of the famous ground-nesting bird, the BLM said in announcing a public comment period through Oct. 31.” BLM spokeswoman Lisa Reid said, “It’s a beautiful herd loved by many, so we want to make sure we approach this in an open fashion. There are several factors playing a role in this and livestock grazing is not one of them.”

Bundy Trial Embodies Everything Dividing America Today.

In a piece for the Conversation \(UK\) (10/5, Eisenberg), Ann Eisenberg, Assistant Professor of Law, University of South Carolina, writes that “so much is at play in the trials of the Bundys and their supporters: the debatable phenomenon of white, rural, male, working-class alienation; longstanding conflicts over public lands; the role of race in the criminal justice system; and the deep racial and geographical divisions that weigh on the country.” But she concludes that “perhaps the clearest theme is that distrust of our legal institutions abounds, fueled by both the perception and reality of being excluded.”

Gov. Brown Visits L.A. To Lobby For The $17-billion Delta Water Project. The Los Angeles Times (10/5, Boxall) reports that "with two key California WaterFix votes looming, Gov. Jerry Brown expressed confidence Thursday that water agencies will commit to enough funding to sustain the massive project." Brown visited Los Angeles "to lobby for the $17-billion proposal." The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California's board is "scheduled to vote Tuesday on a $4.3-billion buy-in to WaterFix, which is a top priority for Brown. Two days later, the Kern County Water Agency board is expected to take its vote."

"Takings" Outcome Seen As Win For Tribes.

The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (10/5, Dillemoth) reports that "the Klamath Tribes shared positive reactions on Wednesday to the outcome of the 'takings' opinion, viewing the outcome filed Sept. 29 by Judge Marian Blank Horn as a win for tribal water rights in the Klamath Basin." The decision "denies Klamath Basin irrigators compensation of upward of $30 million sought through the lengthy case stemming from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's water shutoffs in 2001." The judge "noted in the opinion the superiority of the in-stream water rights deemed "time-immemorial" held by the Klamath, Yurok and Hoopa Valley Tribes over irrigators with junior water user rights." Don Gentry, tribal chairman, said, "We are pleased with the decision. This affirmation of the Tribes' water rights should be another positive step towards the healing and restoration of our tribal treaty fisheries."

Federal Grant To Help C.O. Irrigators Swap Water, Boost Flows.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (10/5) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation has "awarded a $400,000 grant to the Central Oregon Irrigation District." In partnership with the Deschutes River Conservancy, the money will "help finance the development of a WaterSMART marketing strategy, an innovative water transactions program to facilitate the trading of water between irrigation districts and boost stream flows in the Deschutes River." The $400,000 award will cover half of the $800,000 total estimated cost.

Bureau Will Ask Water Board To Help Fund Water Storage Study.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/5, Ellis) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation is "expected to ask the Idaho Water Resource Board this month to provide matching funding for a proposed study that would seek ways to store more water on the Boise River system." According to the article, "the study would cost $5.6 million and would require a 50 percent match from non-federal partners, such as the IWRB and irrigation districts."

Interior Department Rejects 25 Endangered Species Petitions, Including Several Linked To Climate Change.

The Washington Post (10/5, Mooney, Grandoni) reports that the Fish and Wildlife Service on Thursday "declined 25 separate petitions to list a variety of species as endangered or threatened, including the high-profile Pacific walrus, which is contending with sharp climate change trends in the Arctic where it spends much of its life atop floes of floating sea ice." The FWS "also declined a listing petition for the Florida Keys mole skink, a subspecies of lizard that lives on beaches and in coastal forests that face rising seas and were just swept by Hurricane Irma." The article notes that "other rejected listings included Bicknell's thrush, a songbird that lives at high mountain altitudes, the Big Blue Springs cave crayfish, and the Kirtland's snake." In addition, "fourteen separate species of Nevada springsnails were also rejected for listing."

Feds Say Black Hills Woodpeckers Not Endangered Or Threatened. The Rapid City \(SD\) Journal (10/5, Tupper) reports that "woodpeckers found in the Black Hills will not be listed as threatened or endangered, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has decided."

High-altitude Colorado Boreal Toad Left Unlisted As Endangered Species. Courthouse News (10/5, YOUNG-GRINDLE) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "finalized federal protection for four Florida pine rockland plants, but it has delayed the listing for the Louisiana pine snake." The agency has "listed the shrubby Everglades bully, the Florida pineland crabgrass, and the pineland sandmat, an herb, as threatened species under the ESA." In addition, "another shrub, the Florida prairie-clover, has been listed as an endangered species."

Congress Moves Closer To Allowing Oil And Gas Drilling In Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The Washington Examiner (10/5, Siegel) reports Congress is moving towards allowing oil and gas drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as both chambers made progress on budget legislation on Thursday. The House passed its 2018 budget resolution, which instructs the National Resources Committee to approve legislation reducing the deficit by $5 billion over 10 years. The Senate Budget Committee approved its 2018 budget resolution that contains a similar provision intended to facilitate drilling in the ANWR. E&E Daily (10/5) reports Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer is warning Republicans that they will have a tough time passing the budget if they move to open drilling in the ANWR to help pay for tax cuts. Schumer said, "I think it's going to be a tough fight for them to do it. There are some Republicans who at least expressed privately some distaste for opening up ANWR."

Battle Over Two Owl Species Takes Flight At 9th Circuit.

Courthouse News (10/5, Brown) reports that a Ninth Circuit panel seemingly express interest on Thursday "in an environmental advocate's novel argument against what has become an increasingly standard practice in wildlife management – killing droves of one wild species in an effort to benefit another." Friends of Animals sued the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "over a 2014 plan to kill thousands of barred owls, which in recent decades have encroached on the old-growth forest habitat of threatened spotted owls." The FWS "said it wanted to kill the birds as an experiment to determine whether reducing barred owl numbers would benefit spotted owls." Friends of Animals claimed the plan ignored the fact that the real problem was habitat destruction caused by deforestation, and instead unfairly scapegoated a protected wild animal for the spotted owl's human-caused decline."

Block Island Wind Farm Helps Researchers Monitor Offshore Bird And Bat Migrations.

WRNI-FM Providence, RI (10/5, Brookins) reports that the Block Island Wind Farm "now has a wildlife tracking station aimed at helping researchers learn more about offshore flight patterns of small birds and bats that are likely to become endangered or extinct in the foreseeable future unless federal action is taken." In August, Deepwater Wind, "developers of the wind farm, installed four antennas and a receiver on the foundation of one of the wind turbines to collect data from birds and bats previously tagged with tiny, high-frequency transmitters." Researchers from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "in collaboration with University of Rhode Island and University of Massachusetts Amherst have been monitoring what time of day and in what weather conditions small-bodied bats and birds, such as piping plovers, roseate terns, and common terns, fly by the station."

Newsweek (10/5, Ziv) reports that "a rainbow flag will soon fly at the Stonewall National Monument in Manhattan, the first such flag to be permanently placed on federal land and maintained by the National Park Service, activists announced on Thursday." Michael Petrelis, "the LGBT and AIDS activist who initiated the effort," said, "It is a victory for our community to have these symbolic colors flying majestically over our Stonewall, designated as a National Monument by President Obama, even as our LGBTQ brothers and sisters are under attack by the current regime in power."

Hey, You Can't Park There! Dockless Bike-share Bikes Ending Up In Inappropriate Places.

In its "Dr. Gridlock" blog, the Washington Post (10/5, Lazo) reports that "in the two weeks since Spin and other dockless bikeshare operations launched in Washington, the colorful bikes are proving popular — but also showing up in unwanted and inappropriate places." The National Park Service has "seized more than a dozen found abandoned inside memorials, sidewalks and parking lots." NPS spokeswoman Jenny Anzelmo-Sarles "said the dockless bike-share services do not have authorization to operate on NPS land in the D.C. area, and park officials have reached out to DDOT and bike-share companies to address the issue."

Report Recommends Capping Yellowstone Bison Removal At 1,250.

The AP (10/5) reports that "a recently released Yellowstone National Park bison status report says officials are looking to cap this winter's cull of bison at 1,250." The recommendations "released late last week also include banning bison hunting the West Yellowstone area because the officials have noticed the portion of the herd that migrates there has been decreasing." The article says that "various state, federal and tribal officials are expected to finalize winter cull details as early as November."

Freeway-Crossing Mountain Lion Dies In Southern California.

The AP (10/5) reports that "a mountain lion that managed to cross a Southern California freeway and make its home in the mountains north of Los Angeles has died." The National Park Service "says the 10-year-old male dubbed P-41 was found dead Wednesday on the edge of the Verdugo Mountains, a small range surrounded by urban sprawl." According to spokeswoman Kate Kuykendall, "the carcass had deteriorated so the cause of death is unclear but it's possible a recent wildfire may have been a contributing factor." A necropsy will determine how P-41 died.

White House Rules Out Debt Forgiveness For Puerto Rico.

After President Trump “appeared to signal an openness to wiping out Puerto Rico’s debts during an interview with Fox News on Tuesday,” the White House “threw cold water” on the idea, The Hill (10/5, Kamisar) reports. Asked about Puerto Rico’s more than $70 billion in debt, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders “said that the best thing for the island will be for it to use the normal process set up to deal with its debt.” Sanders said, “There’s a process for how to deal with Puerto Rico’s debt, and it will have to go through that process to have a lasting recovery and growth. ... That is a process that was put in place and set up under [former President] Obama, and has a board of advisers that deals with that debt. It’ll go through that process as we move forward.”

Bloomberg News (10/5, Sink, Olorunnipa, Spalding) says Sanders’ comments “were another attempt by administration officials to clarify Trump’s intentions regarding the territory’s debt” after he told Fox News, “We have to look at their whole debt structure. ... They owe a lot of money to your friends on Wall Street. We’re going to have to wipe that out. That’s going to have to be – you know, you can say goodbye to that. I don’t know if it’s Goldman Sachs but whoever it is, you can wave goodbye to that.”

AP Fact Checks Trump’s Claims About Puerto Rico. The AP (10/5, Woodward, Borenstein) reports that Trump “struck false notes in addressing Puerto Rico’s crisis in recent days, exaggerating both the ferocity of a truly ferocious hurricane and the pace of recovery.” The AP Fact Checks some of Trump’s statements including his claim in Puerto Rico that Hurricane Maria “has been a Category 5, which — few people have ever even heard of a Category 5 hitting land. But it hit land and, boy, did it hit land.” Maria “actually made landfall on Puerto Rico as a Category 4 hurricane, not 5.” In addition, Trump “said at one point that Maria had winds of 200 mph (322 kph),” but “no official reports put the winds that strong.” On Trump’s claim that Puerto Rico’s debt will be wiped out, the AP says, “Washington doesn’t have the authority to force investors to take massive losses, if that’s what he meant.”

Ninety-One Percent Of Puerto Rico Remains Without Power. David Begnaud Mason reported on the CBS Evening News (10/5, story 5, 2:00, Mason) that 91 percent of Puerto Rico is without power. One hospital had to be evacuated when “the power grid went down.” Officials are now “assessing all the hospitals to make sure the power grids are up to date, and they’re pre-planning for possible evacuations of other hospitals if need be.” Begnaud added that in the interior of the country, the situation is “much worse,” as people “are drinking and bathing with stream water.” The governor “has said some people could be without power for up to a year.”

Statistics On Drinking Water, Electricity Removed From FEMA Web Page. The Washington Post (10/5, Johnson) reports that on Wednesday the FEMA web page documenting the federal response to Maria showed that “half of Puerto Ricans had access to drinking water and 5 percent of the island had electricity.” However, by Thursday morning, both of those figures had been removed from the page. A spokesman for the agency “noted that both measures are still being reported on a website maintained by the office of Puerto Rican Gov. Ricardo Rosselló, www.status.pr," but "didn't elaborate on why they are no longer on the main FEMA page."

Thousands Of Puerto Ricans Fleeing For Mainland US. The New York Times (10/5, Healy, Ferré-sadurni) reports that "thousands of Puerto Ricans are cramming onto the small number of scheduled flights and charter jets and are fleeing for the mainland United States, rather than endure months more without power, cellphone service or regular running water." Mainland cities and states "with large Puerto Rican populations are preparing for the influx by trying to help people find housing, work and schools."

Case Made For Stronger Electric Grid In Puerto Rico. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/5), Mark P. Mills, a senior fellow at the Manhattan Institute and faculty fellow at Northwestern University's McCormick School of Engineering, argues that despite calls from environmentalists to rebuild a greener electric grid for Puerto Rico, what the island needs is a harder grid including stronger poles and wires, waterproofed substations, pre-emptive tree removal near wires, and buried wires.

GAO: NMI Faces Labor Shortages, Fiscal Risks.

Marianas Variety (10/5, Villahermosa) reports that "the CNMI's economic outlook has improved, but it faces growing labor shortages that may affect its ability to repay public debt, the U.S. Government Accountability Office said in a report titled 'U.S. Territories: Public Debt Outlook.'" The GAO "reiterated its earlier finding that removing all permitted foreign workers from the CNMI would result in a GDP decline of 26 to 62 percent — 'a relatively large negative effect on the economy.'" In its most recent report, the GAO said "planned reductions in permitted workers could worsen the effect on GDP going forward and hamper the territory's ability to repay existing debt."

Trump Expected To Decertify Iran’s Compliance With Nuclear Deal.

Multiple news outlets report that President Trump intends to decertify Iran’s compliance with the 2015 nuclear agreement, not killing the accord but giving Congress the option of reimposing sanctions. Coverage indicates that top national security personnel, including Secretary of State Tillerson and Defense Secretary Mattis, oppose the move. Analyses say that Trump may be seeking a way to act on his campaign promises opposing the agreement, without fully dismantling it, effectively shifting the matter to Congress.

Two US officials have told CNN’s Situation Room (10/5) that Trump plans to decertify the Iran nuclear deal. CNN’s Elise Labott reported that Tillerson is working on a plan to rewrite the legislation so that “instead of certifying that Iran is or is not in compliance,” Congress would “shift the focus to the other behavior that President Trump is also very concerned about. We’re talking about the ballistic missile program, we’re talking about human rights, their activity in Syria and Yemen.”

Fox News Special Report (10/5) reported the White House is “pushing back on the notion that anything is completely set in stone.” However, Fox’s Kevin Corke said UN Ambassador Haley may have “tipped the Administration’s hand yesterday,” when she tweeted that Sen. Tom Cotton “has clear understanding of the Iranian regime & flaws in the nuclear deal.” Corke noted that Cotton, who met with the President on Thursday, “has repeatedly called for the Administration to abandon the deal.”

CNN’s Situation Room (10/5) reported that Trump’s apparent decision to decertify comes despite “a lot of his national security advisers...seemingly suggesting [that’s] not necessarily such a good idea.” Both Tillerson and Mattis have previously said Iran is in compliance with the 2015 Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action – though Fox News (10/5) reports on its website that though Tillerson has said Iran is “violating the spirit of the agreement because of its testing of ballistic missiles.”

The AP (10/5) reports that officials say that Trump “is planning to deliver an Iran policy speech next week," with the event tentatively scheduled for Thursday. Reuters (10/5, Holland) reports that an official said the speech will outline a "broader US strategy on Iran that would be more confrontational." The Washington Post (10/5, A1, Gearan) reports that while Trump will "open the door to modifying the landmark 2015 agreement...for now he would hold off on recommending that Congress reimpose sanctions on Iran that would abrogate the agreement," according to "four people familiar with aspects of the president's thinking."

Margaret Brennan writes on the CBS News (10/5) website that if the President decertifies the deal by declaring that Iran is not in compliance, "the deal would still be intact, but he would effectively be putting the decision about what to do about the deal in the hands of Congress. Lawmakers would then be able to consider punitive measures like sanctions to punish Iran for non-compliance." Joshua Keating of Slate (10/5) writes that this would let Trump "(sort of) keep his campaign promise to dismantle the 'worst deal ever' while still keeping the JCPOA mostly intact."

CNN (10/5, Labott, Liptak, Cohen) reports on its website that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said that the President "had made a decision on the agreement and would announce it 'soon,'" and the New York Times (10/5, Landler) reports that while Trump had reportedly "made up his mind what to do," he "has not yet signed a decision memo on the deal itself."

Dennis Ross, who served in several diplomatic positions under Presidents George H.W. Bush and Clinton, and as an adviser to Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, writes in the Wall Street Journal (10/5) that while decertification alone would not kill the deal, it would place pressure on Congress to reimpose sanctions – and if it were to do so, the US would then be in noncompliance. AFP (10/5) and Reuters (10/5) both report that European ambassadors are working Capitol Hill, urging against any imposition of sanctions.

The Washington Post (10/5, A1, Deyoung, Morello) reports on its front page that decertification "could start a chain of events that would sharply divide the United States from its closest traditional allies in the world." None of the three European signatories – Britain, France, and Germany – "believes Iran is in violation, and each has said publicly it will not renegotiate the nuclear agreement." Bianna Golodryga said on CNN's Situation Room (10/5) that European allies have already expressed concern about the US leaving the deal after Trump's UN speech last month.

The Washington Post (10/5) editorializes, "Thanks the unanimous counsel of his national security team, President Trump appears to be edging away from his long-standing threat to junk the international accord that limits Iran's nuclear program. But it seems likely that he will embark on a dangerous and pointless game of brinkmanship with Tehran by refusing to recertify the deal to Congress," which "would be manifestly dishonest, and it could trigger a process that could cause the agreement to unravel."

The New York Times (10/5) says in an editorial that decertification "ignores that the deal is working," would "alienate our allies," and would "give Iran an excuse to resume a full-blown nuclear program." It also would not "help in the fight against" ISIS and would undermine "trust in America and the country's ability to negotiate in the future. At a crucial moment, Donald Trump is forcing the world to confront core questions it really shouldn't have to ask: Can he be trusted? And, more saliently, can America be trusted?"

David Ignatius writes in his Washington Post (10/5) column that Trump "should certify that Iran is complying with the nuclear deal because it's true. Even Cotton conceded as much this week, arguing against certification 'not primarily on the grounds related to Iran's technical compliance, but rather based on the long catalogue of the regime's crimes and perfidy against the United States.'"

Richard Haass of the Council on Foreign Relations tweeted, "Decertification not warranted given Iran's compliance. Whether JCPOA is in US nat'l interest is a policy question." The CFR's Max Boot tweeted, "Trump is making a mistake by decertifying Iranian deal despite Iran's compliance. He will isolate US, not Iran." David Rothkopf of the Washington Post tweeted, "Trump JCPOA position isolates America from the world, Trump his national security team, our national position from reality."

The Los Angeles Times (10/5, Bennett, Wilkinson) and the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (10/5, Raymond) also have brief reports on the President's expected action.

House Democrats Urge Trump To Stay In Agreement. The Jerusalem Post (10/5, Wilner) reports, "In recent days, Republican and Democratic senators alike have questioned the wisdom of a full withdrawal, making it unlikely they will vote to reimpose the sort of crippling sanctions that once were in force." While "many Democrats voted against the nuclear deal" two years ago, "the caucus is united against any effort to scuttle it today." In a Wednesday letter to the President signed by nearly every House Democrat, they said, "Some of us voted for, and some of us voted against, the nuclear agreement with Iran. Nonetheless, we are united in our belief that enforcing the agreement to the fullest extent will provide the United States with more leverage to stop a potential Iranian nuclear weapons program and push back on Iran's destabilizing activities."

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee (D-TX) tweeted, "I'm appalled Trump plans to decertify Iran deal. This is dangerous for the American people. Is it only because Obama helped negotiate deal??" Rep. Betsy McCollum (D-MN) tweeted, "The Iran deal is keeping us safe. @realDonaldTrump's plan to decertify defies logic and threatens global security." Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) tweeted, "Mr. President: Do not defy your Secs of Defense & State, & intel community leadership, who have advised Iran IS in compliance w/ #JCPOA".

Iran Imprisons Deal Negotiator For Espionage. Al-Araby Al-Jadeed \(UK\) (10/5) reports that Abdolrasoul Dorri Esfahani, a member of the Iranian team that negotiated the agreement, "has been convicted of espionage and sentenced by an Iranian court to five years in prison," according to Iran's semi-official Tasnim news agency. While the report did not mention him by name, Esfahani "is the only negotiator known to be facing charges in Iran."

NRA, Both Parties Move Toward Consensus On Banning Bump Stocks.

The emerging agreement between both parties and the National Rifle Association that bump stocks of the sort used by Las Vegas shooter Stephen Paddock should be banned is generally portrayed in news coverage as rare consensus on the divisive issue of gun rights. However, several sources say that the NRA and Republicans differ with Democrats on how the ban should be imposed, and that the move is a strategic one that aims to head off talk of further gun control.

David Muir asked in opening ABC World News Tonight (10/5, story 3, 2:00), "After the massacre took 58 lives, could there be bipartisan movement now on this in Washington?" There is a "growing call tonight to ban or regulate those so-called bump stocks." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "From the nation's most powerful gun lobby today, a call for change in the wake of the nation's deadliest mass shooting. ... The NRA now says, 'Devices designed to allow semiautomatic rifles to function like fully automatic rifles should be subject to additional regulations.' And tonight, a growing number of top Republicans say they would consider legislation banning bump stocks altogether." Vega added that while the White House has been "so far silent on gun control in the wake of the Las Vegas massacre," President Trump "signaled he'll be weighing in on the bump stock debate, too." Trump: "We'll be looking into that over the next short period of time."

The CBS Evening News (10/5, story 3, 2:25, Mason) reported, "The carnage in Las Vegas has led to a highly unusual development on Capitol Hill. Republicans signaled they're open to regulating the kind of equipment that enabled the shooter to gun down hundreds." CBS' Nancy Cordes: "In a sea change for Republicans, lawmakers from the House speaker on down today, said they're open to banning bump stocks." In 2010, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms "ruled that bump stocks are a firearm part, and, therefore, not regulated as a firearm under the Gun-Control Act or National Firearms Act." On Thursday, three GOP House members "sent a letter to the ATF today, urging them to re-evaluate these devices."

On NBC Nightly News (10/5, story 5, 1:55, Holt), Hallie Jackson reported, "After decades of Republican resistance on gun control, tonight a new narrow opening on bump stocks, which let semiautomatic guns fire faster." House Speaker Ryan: "Apparently this allows you to take a semiautomatic turn it into fully automatic, so clearly that's something we need the look into." Senate Majority Whip Cornyn: "I think it's worth our serious consideration." Jackson: "And the President himself willing to consider new regulations." White House press secretary Sarah Sanders: "We're open to having that conversation. We think we should have that conversation, and we want to be part of it moving forward."

The AP (10/5, Werner) reports that the NRA "joined the Trump administration and top congressional Republicans Thursday in a swift and surprising embrace of a restriction on Americans' guns, though a narrow one: to regulate the 'bump stock' devices the Las Vegas shooter apparently used to horrifically lethal effect." The devices, "originally intended to help people with disabilities, fit over the stock and grip of a semi-automatic rifle and allow the weapon to fire continuously, some 400 to 800 rounds in a single minute."

USA Today (10/5, Jackson) reports that the NRA said in a statement, "Devices designed to allow semi-automatic rifles to function like fully-automatic rifles should be subject to additional regulations." But while "some lawmakers have proposed congressional legislation for bump stocks...the NRA and others said the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms should issue new regulations." The New York Times (10/5) reports that the NRA said the ATF "should revisit the issue and 'immediately review whether these devices comply with federal law.'" The Wall Street Journal (10/5, Peterson) reports that GOP leaders including Ryan said bump stocks are a loophole in existing law.

NRA Executive Vice President and CEO Wayne LaPierre said on Fox News' Hannity (10/5) that bump stocks take "a semiautomatic firearm and makes it perform like a fully automatic firearm. It makes it function like one. What the NRA has said is we ought to take a look at that and see if it is in compliance with federal law and it's worthy of additional regulation. That being said, we didn't say ban, we didn't say confiscate."

The Washington Post (10/5, Debonis, Viebeck, O'Keefe) reports, "A House Republican with close ties to leadership...said there was a growing willingness to address the accessories among GOP lawmakers – if only to combat the perception that Congress has done nothing to address mass shootings." The Los Angeles Times (10/5, Mascaro) reports that some Democrats "denounced the move as dodge by the gun lobby to avoid new legislation" and a path that "could provide a way for Republicans to deflect pressure for congressional action that might lead to broader gun restrictions."

The Washington Times (10/5, Miller) calls the statement a "jarring pivot by the NRA," but Politico (10/5, Bade, Dawsey, Bresnahan) says that it is "designed to head off a messy gun control debate in Congress." Breitbart (10/5, Hawkins) writes that the NRA "is calling on members of Congress to squash talk of more gun control by moving the bump stock discussion back where it began in 2010: with the ATF," and the Daily Caller (10/5) reports that the NRA "said it would continue to push against efforts to restrict access to firearms."

Two Democratic legislators from Nevada backed the proposed move, but said it would not be enough. Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto said on CNN's Situation Room (10/5), "We had a massacre that occurred here Sunday night because somebody was able to accumulate all of these weapons and use a bump stock to turn a semiautomatic into fully automatic. ... I believe we need to do everything we can to bring these gun safety measures forward. I think there should be background checks. I think we should do everything we can to make sure that the mentally ill and terrorists do not access to weapons and we have to do something about the devices, like these bump stocks."

Rep. Ruben Kihuen (D-NV) said on CNN's Situation Room (10/5), "It is time for Congress, Republicans and Democrats, to take action, to set in place commonsense gun legislation that will prevent gun violence in the future. ... The majority of the American people want commonsense gun legislation and I believe that now is the time. If now is not the time, then when?"

The Washington Post (10/5) asks in an editorial, "Why focus solely on bump stocks – 'a goofy little doodad,' in the words of a former firearms official – while ignoring the danger posed when people are allowed to purchase and possess assault-style weapons that were designed for war, with the capacity to kill in large numbers?" Former Clinton and Obama Administration official Ronald Klain writes in the Washington Post (10/5), "The Constitution does not require our loved ones to face the daily risk of being the next victims of a mass shooting, and the NRA does not get the final word in mandating it: That is up to our representatives and senators – and a president who promised the American people, on his first day in office, that such 'American carnage [would] stop...right now.'"

McClatchy (10/5, Clark, Dumain) headlines its report "NRA Gives Green Light To GOP To Discuss Gun Restriction." Reuters (10/5, Sage, Bernstein), Bloomberg News (10/5, Dennis, Litvan), and The Hill (10/5, Bolton, Wong) also report on the NRA's statement.

Conway: "Obama's ATF" Decided Against Regulating Bump Stocks. David Weigel of the Washington Post (10/5) writes that on CNN on Thursday morning, Kellyanne Conway argued "that the deregulation of bump stocks had been an Obama administration blunder." Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/5), "It was President Obama's ATF...in 2010 that decided not to regulate this device. That should be part of the conversation and part of the facts that you put before your viewers."

Bump Stock Sales Surge; Walmart, Cabela's Remove Item From Websites. The New York Times (10/5, Hsu) reports that bump stock sales "jumped this week...even as Walmart and [outdoor products retailer] Cabela's stripped them from their websites." Walmart "said in a statement that the products never should have been sold on its site, that they were sold by third-party sellers, and they were 'immediately removed' because they violated the company's prohibited items policy." Amazon "does not sell bump stocks."

District Of Columbia Will Not Appeal Concealed Carry Gun Ruling To Supreme Court. The Washington Post (10/5, Jamison, Marimow) reports that the District of Columbia will not appeal a court order "blocking enforcement of the city's restrictions on the carrying of concealed guns in public" to the Supreme Court, "setting the stage for what could be a marked increase in firearms on the streets" of Washington. District Attorney General Karl Racine said, "I continue to believe the District's 'good reason' requirement is a common-sense, and constitutional, gun regulation. However, we must reckon with the fact that an adverse decision by the Supreme Court could have wide-ranging negative effects not just on District residents, but on the country as a whole."

Paddock May Have Scouted Targets In Chicago And Boston. Coverage of the investigation into the shootings once again led all three broadcast network newscasts. ABC World News Tonight (10/5, lead story, 4:00, Muir) reported that Paddock "may have scouted other potential targets in Chicago and in Boston." On NBC Nightly News (10/5, lead story, 2:35, Holt), Pete Williams reported that officials say Paddock "did Internet research earlier this year on Lollapalooza, the summer music festival in Chicago's Grant Park. He even reserved rooms in a hotel that overlooks the park for a few days, though he never actually showed up. He also researched events at Boston's Fenway Park and nearby hotels." On the CBS Evening News (10/5, lead story, 2:40, Mason), John Blackstone reported that while "investigators are no closer to understanding what may have inspired" Paddock, they "believe Paddock may have had an accomplice."

The Washington Post (10/5) reports that while investigators have made progress in piecing together Paddock's "movements in the hours and days before the attack...what local and federal investigators say remains elusive" is an "explanation for why Paddock carried out the rampage." The New York Times (10/5, Medina, Burns, Goldman) reports, "No grandiose manifesto has been found. No account of Mr. Paddock behaving dangerously or holding extremist views has emerged from neighbors or relatives. Unlike past killers, Mr. Paddock did not dial up the police to explain his actions." FBI agents have interviewed his girlfriend Marilou Danley, but Clark County Sheriff Joseph Lombardo "said he was 'not at liberty to say' what information had been learned." On ABC World News Tonight (10/5, story 2, 2:35, Muir), Brian Ross reports that Danley "told FBI agents Paddock was a caring man who showed no sign of violence."

ISIS Continues To Claim That Paddock Was Member. Townhall (10/5, Rousselle) reports under the headline "ISIS Triples Down Claiming Las Vegas Shooting" that ISIS "is continuing to insist" that Paddock was a member of the organization. The ISIS newsletter Naba says that Paddock "converted to Islam six months ago and used the Islamic name Abu Abdul Barr al-Amriki. The newsletter boasts that 'brother Abu Abdul Barr' fired on concertgoers using dozens of weapons and then died after exhausting his ammo supply." Townhall writes that as in its earlier claims, "ISIS does not provide any proof that Paddock was a Muslim or was connected to ISIS."

YouTube Alters Algorithm After Searches About Shootings Return Conspiracy Theories. USA Today (10/5, Guynn) reports, "YouTube has changed its powerful search algorithm to promote videos from more mainstream news outlets in search results" after searches for information on the Las Vegas shootings returned "conspiracy theories and misinformation." YouTube confirmed the changes, but "didn't say how it decides which news sources are authoritative."

Trump To Resume Tax Cut Push During Oval Office Meeting With Manufacturers.

USA Today (10/5, Przybyla) reports, that President Trump on Friday "will resume his push for tax cuts" during an Oval Office meeting at which he will "host more than a dozen manufacturing industry employees and executives and issue a proclamation making Oct. 6 'National Manufacturing Day.'" USA Today highlights that Sen. Joe Manchin will not attend the meeting because, according to an aide, he "can't support the plan outlined last week by GOP congressional negotiators." Manchin "believes the proposed plan differs from the one Trump described during a dinner earlier this month with moderate Democrats and Republicans at the White House, the aide said." He "believes the current plan benefits the wealthy more than the middle class," but "wants to work with Trump on a deal."

Trump: Meeting With Top Military Leaders Represents "Calm Before The Storm."

CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (10/5) reported that during a reception Thursday night for top military leaders at the White House, President Trump delivered some "ominous remarks." As he took pictures with his guests, Trump said, "You guys know what this represents? The calm before the storm." When reporters asked what he was referring to, Trump repeated his remark, adding that the "world's great military people" were present. The White House did not provide further clarification. USA Today (10/5, Miller) says the President sent a "cryptic message" to White House pool reporters. When reporters asked the President what he meant, Trump "did not clarify his comments," saying only, "You'll find out."

The Washington Times (10/5, Boyer) reports Trump also told the senior military leaders

“that he wants them to give him military options ‘at a much faster pace’ when national-security emergencies erupt around the world.” Said the President, “I know that government bureaucracy is slow, but I am depending on you to overcome the obstacles of bureaucracy.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Cuba And The Mystery Of The Sonic Weapon.” A New York Times (10/5) editorial says the symptoms of US and Canadian officials in Havana “are real and deeply worrisome,” and Cuba “must be the prime suspect.” If Cuba “is found to have used some new surveillance machine, the United States would have the obligation to respond angrily.” But the Times writes that “until there is concrete evidence about the source of the attacks, the Trump administration is wrong to expel Cuban diplomats from Washington.”

“Why Decertifying The Iran Nuclear Deal Would Be A Bad Idea.” The New York Times (10/5) says in an editorial that decertification of the Iran nuclear deal “ignores that the deal is working,” would “alienate our allies,” and would “give Iran an excuse to resume a full-blown nuclear program.” It also would not “help in the fight against” ISIS and would undermine “trust in America and the country’s ability to negotiate in the future. At a crucial moment, Donald Trump is forcing the world to confront core questions it really shouldn’t have to ask: Can he be trusted? And, more saliently, can America be trusted?”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Dangerous Folly On The Iran Deal.” The Washington Post (10/5) editorializes, “Thanks the unanimous counsel of his national security team, President Trump appears to be edging away from his long-standing threat to junk the international accord that limits Iran’s nuclear program. But it seems likely that he will embark on a dangerous and pointless game of brinkmanship with Tehran by refusing to recertify the deal to Congress,” which “would be manifestly dishonest, and it could trigger a process that could cause the agreement to unravel.”

“Banning Bump Stocks Is Not Nearly Enough.” The Washington Post (10/5) asks in an editorial, “Why focus solely on bump stocks – ‘a goofy little doodad,’ in the words of a former firearms official – while ignoring the danger posed when people are allowed to purchase and possess assault-style weapons that were designed for war, with the capacity to kill in large numbers?”

“Ed Gillespie Wants Virginians To Be Very, Very Afraid.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/5) criticizes ex-RNC chief Ed Gillespie, who is battling Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam in this fall’s race to succeed term-limited Gov. Terry McAuliffe, over ads he’s been running on the topic of his “wedge issue of the day...gang violence – specifically, violent Hispanic gangs such as MS-13 – to which he hopes to harness the xenophobic fervor that propelled Donald Trump to the White House.” The Post says Gillespie “has twisted truth to suit his purpose, and pandered to nativists in the Republican base, by trying to link [Northam] to the MS-13 scourge” for having, as a narrator says in an ad, “cast the deciding vote in favor of sanctuary cities that let illegal immigrants who commit crimes back on the street.” The Post calls the ad’s claim “hogwash,” and says “Gillespie ads seek to dupe and terrify Virginians by using the racialized specter of Hispanic violence.”

“House Republicans’ Unforgiving Assault On The Freedom To Choose.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/5, Board) criticizes House’s passage of a measure to “ban abortions of fetuses that have passed 20 weeks of gestation.” The Post calls the bill “an unforgiving assault on the freedom to choose,” and adds that the fact that the Senate “almost certainly will not pass the bill,” does not matter because Republicans “need money and passion from antiabortion groups, who insisted on moving the bill.” The Post highlights that one the measure’s co-sponsors was Rep. Tim Murphy, who on Thursday announced his resignation after text messages were published which “appear to show the congressman and a woman he had a relationship with discussing how he had pressured her to get an abortion this year, when she had a pregnancy scare.” To the Post, this is an “exquisite reminder that politicians’ embrace of divisive cultural wedge issues is often less than principled.”

Wall Street Journal.

“President Cordray Strikes Again.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/5) writes that the CFPB’s new restrictions on payday lending may appear well-intended, but they in practice allow lending only to unprofitable customers with good credit and remove lenders' ability to take recourse against borrowers who fail to pay. The Journal concludes that the new rule gives President Trump more cause to dismiss CFPB Director Cordray.

"Pacific Trade Advances Without The US." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/5) writes that the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade agreement is advancing without the United States, with leaders of 11 TPP member countries meeting last month to push for ratification as early as November in hopes Washington would rejoin. The Journal argues that if the 11 remaining members of the trade pact wait for a US return, it is possible that the US will reject protectionism and embrace the agreement.

"Tax Reform Down Payment." A Wall Street Journal (10/5) editorial stresses the necessity of House and Senate Republicans to come to agreement on a budget outline in order to pass tax reform, which it casts as a key moment for Republicans if they want to retain control of Congress after 2018.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Tillerson decided to hold a press conference at which he denied ever wanting to resign, but did not answer the moron question. That's got the President's little thumbs tingling. This morning, he again tweeted, 'Why isn't the Senate Intel committee looking into the fake news networks in our country to see why so much of our news is just made up, fake!' I guess he's moved on from Puerto Rico and Las Vegas."

Jimmy Kimmel: "This is Donald Trump's rating on Politifact, the nonpartisan fact-checking organization. According to them, only five percent of the things that come out of his mouth are true. More than two-thirds, 69 percent, are either mostly false, false, or pants-on-fire false."

Jimmy Kimmel: "[The leaders of North Korea] have a fundamental misunderstanding of what Americans care about. They're always like, 'Your President is a dangerous simpleton pig!' We're like, 'Yeah, yeah, we know.' They think Dennis Rodman is still a big star. 'Look, we brainwashed your number one celebrity!' 'Yeah, it's okay, his brain has been washed for a long time.' Now they're trying to provoke on Columbus Day, the most cherished of all the American holidays."

Stephen Colbert: "Yesterday, NBC reported Tillerson was on the verge of resigning his position this summer and had openly disparaged President Trump, referring to him as a 'moron.' That's usually something you say right before you quit."

Stephen Colbert: "And administration officials are confident that Tillerson will stay because, apparently, there's an agreement between Defense Secretary James Mattis, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Tillerson, whereby all three cabinet secretaries vow to leave in the event that the President makes moves against one of them. And Trump is known for making moves. Rex, if the President offers to take you furniture shopping, get out of there. Just get out of there! And take your cat with you! Because he's grabbing it!"

Stephen Colbert: "Yesterday, congressional Republicans signaled that they would be open to banning gun conversion kits called 'bump stocks,' which takes advantage of a semiautomatic gun's natural recoil, allowing it to bounce back and forth off a shooter's trigger finger and unleash up to 100 rounds in seven seconds. It's great for hunting, if you've got seven seconds to kill every animal in the forest."

Trevor Noah: "Tim Murphy would make the world's worst spy. He would be undercover. Some dude would be like, 'Are you Tim Murphy?' 'You got me! I have been leaking secrets to other governments!' ... Whether you are pro-choice or pro-life, I think we can all come together to laugh at this man."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump has more Twitter followers than Pope Francis, but the Pope doesn't mind. He said, 'My boss only had 12 followers, and he's still pretty popular.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to the New York Times, people close to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said he had to be convinced not to resign on more than one occasion, while others at the White House have to be convinced every morning."

Seth Meyers: "Vice President Mike Pence will visit Puerto Rico tomorrow. Pence will survey the damage caused when Donald Trump made landfall. That's right. Vice President Mike Pence plans to visit Puerto Rico tomorrow, and somehow he's already sunburned."

Seth Meyers: "Pence will also visit the Virgin Islands tomorrow, where he will remind them to stay the Virgin Islands until marriage. 'Stay away from Turks and also Caicos. I don't trust those fellas.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump and First Lady Melania had dinner with senior military leaders at the White House. And if there's one thing Melania loves, it's a man in uniform. 'Officer, please help me!'"

Seth Meyers: "Vice President Pence said in an op-ed yesterday that the US will lead in space again under the Trump Administration. Space? It took him two weeks to figure out how to get to Puerto Rico."

Conan O'Brien: "The Spanish region of Catalonia is expected to declare independence on Monday. On Tuesday, they'll be looking for a job. And by Wednesday, they'll be back in Spain saying, 'Hey, can I crash here for a month?'"

Interior Secretary Details Trump's Priorities In Alaska Native Country.

KTUU-TV Anchorage, AK (10/19, Baird) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke addressed the Alaska Federation of Natives on Thursday. Zinke said the priorities of the Trump Administration are to "clean up contaminated lands in rural Alaska, get strong Native voices into positions of power, and make sure the thousands of Vietnam-era Alaska Native veterans finally receive land they were promised," according to the article. Saying that "there is already progress on one of those fronts," Zinke noted that he recently "appointed Inupiat Tara Sweeney to serve as assistant secretary of the Interior Department, leading the Indian Affairs office." Zinke said, "I'm proud that we're nominating the first Alaska Native to any Senate confirmed position."

Democrats Fail To Block Arctic Reserve Oil Drilling.

Reuters (10/19, Gardner) reports Senate Democrats failed to pass a measure blocking oil and gas drilling in parts of the Arctic National Wildlife Reserve, losing 48-52 on a mostly party-line vote. The amendment, sponsored by Sen. Maria Cantwell, would have eliminated a budget measure directing the Senate energy committee to find $1 billion in revenue over 10 years.

The Washington Examiner (10/19, Siegel) reports that Sen. John McCain, "who in 2005 voted against allowing drilling in the refuge, provided a decisive vote this time, refusing to vote with Democrats who tried to block it." Sen. Susan Collins, "who also voted against drilling in the refuge before, did the same Thursday night, siding with Democrats." Sen. Joe Manchin voted with Republicans.

The Hill (10/19, Henry) reports Cantwell said during the floor debate, "The notion that we, tonight, after 60-plus years, would give up what is a biologically important area, a critical habitat for polar bears, a breeding ground for caribou, migratory birds and over 200 species — for what? For oil we don't need?" Sen. Lisa Murkowski countered, saying, "Those who would support this amendment will deny us the opportunity to do something constructive in this country, when it comes to our opportunities to produce energy, to produce wealth." Sens. Joe Manchin and Susan Collins both crossed party lines on the measure.

The Huffington Post (10/19, Visser) reports Sen. Ed Markey said in a statement, "Republicans are trying to use the budget process to ram through drilling in the crown jewel of America's wildlife refuge system because they know they don't have the votes to do so through regular order. ... Republicans are moving forward with a budget that includes this poison pill to hand over the wildest place left in America to Big Oil. This is nothing more than fossil fuel folly."

Trip Van Noppen, president of Earthjustice, said, "This is a blatant attempt to use the budget reconciliation process to pass a divisive and controversial proposal that would lead us in the wrong direction on climate."

The Washington Post (10/19, Eilperin) reports that the vote "represented a victory for the GOP and a defeat for environmentalists." It adds that "environmentalists said they would continue to fight any move to drill in the refuge, which has been subject to fights in Congress for years."

Senators Introduce Bipartisan Bill To Combat Wildfires.

The Hill (10/19, Henry) reports that "a bipartisan group of senators introduced a bill Thursday to address severe wildfires in the West." The bill "establishes a strategy for combating future wildfires like those that have burned millions of acres of forest so far this year." It "provides $100 million to help at-risk communities prepare for wildfires and requires firefighting agencies to use unspent suppression funds for preparedness activities ahead of future wildfire seasons." The legislation "also establishes a pilot program for the U.S. Forest Service and the Interior Department in which the agencies would 'treat' the top 1 percent most at-risk and least-controversial forest lands for future fires."

The Washington Examiner (10/19, Siegel) reports that "five Western senators introduced a bill that is intended to be a compromise between competing factions in Congress who are weighing how to help fund wildfire response while imposing forest management changes that can prevent fires from starting." The legislation was "quickly endorsed by the timber industry, firefighting, and conservation groups, including the American Forest Resource Council, the International Association of Fire Chiefs, and the National Wildlife Federation." However, "the big test will come in the House, where Republicans have called for a more comprehensive forest management response."

Also reporting are the Daily Caller (10/19, White), the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (10/19, Grandoni) and the Washington Post (10/19, Grandoni).

Four National Monuments Cover 10,000 Square Miles, And This Group Wants Them Gone.

The Daily Caller (10/19, Pearce) reports that "a group of 37 free-market organizations, trade associations, businesses, former federal officials and current lawmakers signed a letter sent Wednesday requesting that President Donald Trump completely rescind four national monuments that cover more than 10,000 square miles." The National Center for Public Policy Research "sent the letter to the White House in response to a Department of the Interior review of 22 national monuments over the summer, after which Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke suggested changes to six designations and rollbacks to four others, according to an early draft of his report obtained by The Washington Post." The letter calls for a full rescission of Bears Ears National Monument, Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, and Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument.

Blackfeet Hesitant About Proposed National Monument At Badger-Two Medicine.

Montana Public Radio (10/19, Hegyi) reports the Blackfeet Nation is "hesitant to fully embrace" a recommendation by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to create a new national monument at Badger-Two Medicine "before having a say in how the proposed monument is managed." Blackfeet Tribal Chairman Harry Barnes "says making Badger-Two Medicine a national monument allows the land to fall under further federal control." Ideally, members "want the land returned to the tribe but Barnes says that's unlikely. So the council opposes the designation unless the Interior Department allows them to co-manage the monument."

King Cove And Feds Exploring Options To Build Road Without Congressional Approval.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (10/19, Sobel) reports that "the city of King Cove is working closely with the Trump administration to find a way to build a road to Cold Bay through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge." However, "city leaders are taking issue with a recent Washington Post article that describes the administration attempting to conceal a behind-the-scenes deal to build the road." According to the article, they are hoping for a deal that "could avoid Congress entirely."

Additional coverage was provided by KTOO-FM Juneau, AK (10/19, Sobel).

Lara Trump Swings White House Behind Pets For Vets Campaign.

The Washington Examiner (10/19, Bedard) reports that “a building ‘pets for vets’ campaign to link troubled war veterans with abandoned pets in shelters won a huge White House backing Wednesday when Lara Trump, the president’s daughter-in-law, hosted an unprecedented West Wing meeting to get key Cabinet officials on board.” According to the article, “in an hour-long Roosevelt Room session hosted by Trump, top presidential aides, two cabinet secretaries, House lawmakers pushing legislation on the issue and the president of the Humane Society of the United States pledged to take the therapy dog campaign nationwide.” The article says that “Trump, long a passionate campaigner for animals, was joined by presidential advisor Kellyanne Conway, and brought in Veterans Affairs Secretary David Shulkin, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Rep. Ron DeSantis, author of the PAWS Act, and others together to show support for efforts to help warriors suffering from PTSD and other ailments by teaming them with shelter animals.” The article notes that “Zinke attended because he has a policy allowing dogs at the office, and is also a retired Navy SEAL leader.”

House Panel: 15 Trump Agencies Yet To Provide Travel Costs.

The AP (10/19, Yen) reports the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform is “demanding” that 15 federal agencies – including the White House – provide adequate information regarding senior officials’ air travel after reports of expensive trips by Cabinet secretaries. In letters sent this week, the committee threatened to subpoena the Departments of Agriculture and Justice if officials failed to provide requested information, and warned that 13 other agencies have only partly responded to information requests. For all 15 agencies, the panel “also requested additional travel information for the time period of Jan. 1 to Jan. 19.”

Spotted.

Politico Influence (10/19, Meyer) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was seen at a National Geographic forum on ocean conservation Wednesday afternoon at the Library of Congress.

Public Getting Raw Deal On Royalties.

In an op-ed for the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/20, Alexander), Ryan Alexander, President Of Taxpayers For Common Sense, writes that “for decades, industry has been picking up land for pennies on the dollar, thanks to outdated Bureau of Land Management rental and royalty rates that allow oil and gas companies to rent federal lands at $1.50 per acre and pay outdated royalties that are far lower than many western states, including New Mexico, charge.” Alexander hopes that the Royalty Policy Committee will “recognize how the current system is in dire need of reform and takes steps to ensure that New Mexicans are receiving the money they deserve when industry drills, mines and produces on our public lands.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Federal Officials Target Harassment In Arizona Tribes.

The AP (10/19, Silber) reports that “a scathing new report released this week by the U.S. Department of Interior casts a critical light on the Bureau of Indian Affairs response to sexual harassment complaints by Colorado River Indian Tribes workers and members involving a bureau employee.” The report by the department’s Office of Inspector General “states BIA officials took insufficient action after an employee sent Tribes workers and members sexually explicit text and Facebook messages.” Officials “released the summary of the report, which highlights the BIA officials’ lack of response among supervisors, managers and human resources regarding the employee’s actions.”

Additional coverage was provided by KNXV-TV Phoenix (10/19).

Native American Leaders Seek Federal Climate Change Action.

The AP (10/19) reports that “Native American leaders are asking the Trump administration to do more to combat climate change.” According to the article, “tribal leaders attending this week’s National Congress of American Indians in Milwaukee told Wisconsin Public Radio that recent wildfires and hurricanes are a sign of rising global temperatures.” They want the federal government “to take action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.” John Tahsuda, an Interior Department official, said “federal agencies are working to understand the science behind climate change,” according to the article. Tahsuda said, “What is the science of it, what’s going on, because if we don't understand the science, then we don't know how to address it adequately."

Sisseton Man Sentenced To Prison In Grazing Fraud Scheme.

The AP (10/19) reports that "a Sisseton man has been sentenced to nearly four years in prison for his role in a cattle grazing fraud scheme." According to authorities, "Keith Hagen and his former wife, Amanda Holy Bull, provided custom grazing services to ranchers on land they leased from the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs." U.S. Attorney Randolph Seiler "says the two entered into fraudulent contracts and pocketed the money, defrauding ranchers out of $236,000."

Bureau Of Land Management

Report Expresses Concern About Methane Emissions In Oklahoma.

The Oklahoman (10/19, Wilmoth) reports that Earthworks and the Coalition for Oklahoma's Renewable Energy called emissions from methane a threat to the public's health in a new report. The report "said efforts by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management and Environmental Protection Administration to roll back methane emissions could harm Americans." Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association VP of Regulatory Affairs A.J. Ferate said that the "oil and gas companies do not want methane emissions flowing away." "Oil and gas companies do a very good job and work hard to control the methane emissions that come off the wells. The reason is very simple. If they don't, they are letting money float away."

Kudos For Wild Horse Operation.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (10/19, Harmon) reports that "speakers lauded the Little Bookcliffs Wild Horse Area during comments to the Bureau of Land Management's Wild Horse and Burro Advisory Committee, which heard public comments Tuesday in Grand Junction." Callie Hendrickson, speaking on behalf of the Wild Horse and Burro Rangeland Coalition, told the committee that "the handling of the Little Bookcliffs band of horses is 'one of the best examples of management' of wild horses in the nation." Also, "the Cloud Foundation, which opposes euthanasia, praised the Little Bookcliffs approach to managing the horses."

Bureau Of Reclamation

NMSU, Bureau Of Reclamation Host Desalination Workshop.

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (10/19) reports that New Mexico State University and the Bureau of Reclamation will hold a workshop on Tuesday, Oct. 24 to discuss "the future role of desalination." According to the article, "members of the New Mexico Water Resources Research Institute will discuss current desalination research in the Mesilla Basin."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

More Oil Spilled Into Gulf Of Mexico By LLOG Than Originally Estimated.

The AP (10/19) reports that the US Coast Guard, in a news release Thursday, "said...that offshore oil and gas operator LLOG Exploration Offshore reports about 16,000 barrels of oil were discharged" after originally estimating that between 7,950 to 9,350 barrels spilled into the Gulf of Mexico. According to the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, oil spilled out from a fractured underwater pipe last Saturday. Clean Gulf Associates and Marine Spill Response Corporation have skimming vessels on standby.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Jefferson County Receives $15.8 Million For Dune Restoration.

The Beaumont \(TX\) Enterprise (10/19, Teitz) reports that "an almost $16 million grant will go to restore the dunes and coastal habitat at McFaddin Wildlife Refuge, Jefferson County announced Thursday." The grant, "which will fund about one-third of the $45 million project to rebuild lost beaches and dunes along 20 miles of the Gulf Coast, is part of the settlement funds from the 2010 BP Deepwater Horizon oil spill.”

Also reporting are the Port Arthur \(TX\) News (10/19) and KFDM-TV Beaumont \(TX\) Beaumont, TX (10/19, Scott, Cunningham).

Sandhill Crane Hunting Resolution Introduced By Gratiot County House Rep.

The Mt. Pleasant \(MI\) Morning Sun (10/19, Bradley) reports that “a Sandhill crane hunting season has been proposed by House Rep. Jim Lower in an effort to control its population and reduce crop damage.” House Resolution 154 would “encourage the Michigan Natural Resources Commission to add Sandhill cranes to the game species list and seek approval from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for a hunting season in Michigan,” according to a news release from Lower. The House of Representatives adopted the resolution on Wednesday.

Additional coverage was provided by the Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (10/19, Nie).

Endangered Red Squirrels Might Be Unable To Recover From Arizona Wildfire.

The Arizona Daily Star (10/19, Davis) reports that “a top U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service official said Wednesday that he’s ‘not optimistic’ about the endangered Mount Graham red squirrel’s ability to survive in the wild after a new survey estimated its numbers have fallen to 35.” According to the article “the annual survey estimated the squirrel population has dropped from a 2016 estimate of 252 squirrels because of the impacts of this summer’s Frye Fire.” Steve Spangle, Arizona field supervisor for the wildlife service, said, “We’re very worried about a critter going extinct under our watch. It doesn’t mean we won’t do what we can.”

In Puerto Rico, A Hopeful Sight: Endangered Parrot Spotted After Hurricane Maria.

NBC News (10/19, Gamboa) reports that “since Hurricane Maria hit Puerto Rico about one month ago, a team of scientists has trekked daily into El Yunque National Forest hoping to pick up signs or sounds of endangered Puerto Rican Parrots.” On Wednesday, 28 days after Maria, “someone spotted a cotorra, the Spanish word for parrot, with a radio collar and an orange leg band in Barrio Caguitas in Aguas Buenas.” The article notes that “before the hurricane, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had counted 56 to 60 parrots, the highest number of the parrots since 1967, thanks to a program to restore the species.”

National Park Service

National Park Service Kills Proposed New Rules For Dog Access In GGNRA.

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/20, Johnson) reports that the National Park Service “pulled the plug Thursday on a 14-year-long process for restricting dog access in the 80,000-acre Golden Gate National Recreation Area, 10 months after revelations emerged that agency officials had improperly corresponded about the process from their personal email accounts.” The NPS “abandoned its effort to draw up new rules for where dogs can be walked off-leash and said it would stick with regulations that have been in effect since 1979.” Acting park service Director Michael Reynolds said in a statement, “We can do better and in the interest of upholding the highest standard of transparency and trust with our Bay Area neighbors. We have determined that it is no longer appropriate to continue with the current dog management rule-making process.”

Additional coverage was provided by the San Francisco Chronicle (10/19) and the Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (10/19, Prado).

A City Campsite, Amenities Included.

The New York Times (10/19, Stapinski) reports on the rise of “glamping” or “glamour camping.” The article highlights Camp Rockaway, “the second of two glamping pilots this year.” Daphne Yun, a spokeswoman for the National Park Service, said, “At this point we don’t know what the future holds. But everything’s on the table.”

Maryland Continues Commitment To ‘Every Kid In A Park’.

The Southern Maryland News Net (10/19) reports that “the Maryland Department of Natural Resources once again is partnering with the U.S. Department of the Interior’s Every Kid in a Park program, which provides fourth-grade children and their families free admission to Maryland state parks along with national parks and other federal lands across the country.” The Maryland Park Service will “accept this year’s Every Kid in a Park pass now through August 31, 2018 at all 72 state parks.”

YNP To Replace Sewer Line Related To Arsenic Lawsuit.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (10/20, Wright) reports that Yellowstone National Park will “replace a stretch of sewer line sometime over the next two years in an attempt to solve arsenic problems that led to a lawsuit against the park last year.” A U.S. Department of Interior lawyer “sent a letter to an attorney for the Gardiner-Park County Water and Sewer District that says Yellowstone plans to remove 2,700 feet of clay sewer line near Mammoth Hot Springs and replace it with PVC pipe.” The Interior attorney, Colleen Burnidge, “wrote that the pipe project may take two years to complete, but they think it will help solve the problem.”

Gateway Arch Shows Off Progress On Visitor Center And Museum.

The Riverfront \(MO\) Times (10/19, Hayes) reports that the Gateway Arch Park Foundation and the National Park Service on Thursday “provided a media tour of the renovations for the Arch’s visitor center and museum.” According to the article, “even though renovations are still underway, workers have added a 46,000 square-foot multi-level addition and significantly reshaped the monument’s connection to downtown St. Louis.” The article says that “Rhonda Schier, chief of museum services with the National Parks Service and Ryan McClure, director of communications and activation at Gateway Arch Foundation, led the tour.”

NPS Approves Plans For New Yellowstone Youth Campus.

Yellowstone Insider (10/19, Reichard) reports that Yellowstone National Park has “approved a new plan for the Yellowstone Youth Campus, following a period of public comment earlier this year.” The park will “opt to build a new campus in Mammoth Hot Springs to replace the current one.” Superintendent Dan Wenk commented, “The youth campus will be funded through a combination of philanthropic donations received by our non-profit partner, Yellowstone Forever, and federal support. The campus we build together will teach sustainability. It will facilitate high quality learning experiences and inspire students to be life-long learners and stewards of Yellowstone long into the National Park Service’s second century.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Livingston \(MT\) Enterprise (10/19).

Seashore Releases Visions For Ranchlands.

The Point Reyes \(CA\) Light (10/19, Guth) reports that “six alternative strategies that could guide the Point Reyes National Seashore’s management of lands currently leased for ranching and dairying were released on Monday, marking the first step toward amending the seashore’s General Management Plan.” The release commenced “a 30-day public comment period that will end on Nov. 15.” According to the article, “two public meetings have been scheduled to share information and gather input on the alternatives, including one alternative that has been chosen as the seashore’s ‘initial proposal.’”

Assateague Nonprofit Aims To Save Island Horses From Human Food.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (10/19, Shelton) reports that “in July, Assateague Island National Park lost one member of its most well-known pony herd: a 7-year-old mare, which was found dead in a campground.” Investigation by NPS “officials revealed the mare – known officially as N2BHS-AI, but more affectionately as ‘Chama Wingapo’ – had ingested large amounts of dog food, which caused an intestinal blockage, and then a rupture which led to its early death.” According to the article, “in an effort to prevent any further deaths of the island’s iconic horses, the nonprofit Assateague Island Alliance is working to address food related to wildlife and human interactions through a program called ‘A Fed Horse is a Dead Horse: A Project to Protect Assateague’s Wild Horses.’”

Longtime Park Ranger Tells Tales Of History, Natural Beauty.

The AP (10/19, Soergel) reports on Craig Morris, lead ranger at the Fort Caroline National Memorial and at the Theodore Roosevelt Area. According to the article, “Morris joined the park in 1987, when he was 25 years old.” Now, 56, he “has bucketfuls of good stories to tell, and a natural storyteller’s way of spinning them.”

Have You Seen This Man? He Is Suspected Of Stealing Firefighters’ Equipment.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/19, Egel) reports that “El Dorado County Sheriff’s deputies are searching for a man who allegedly stole two backpacks’ worth of firefighting equipment from outside a Placerville hotel." According to the Sheriff's Office, "pictured in a white-and-red gingham shirt, vest and shaved head in security footage, the man stole two 'Mystery Ranch' backpacks out of the back of a U.S. National Park Service fire truck the night of Oct. 10."

Additional Coverage: Sperry Chalet Stabilization Nearly Finished.

Additional coverage that "Glacier National Park construction crews were wrapping up a project this week to stabilize the Sperry Chalet for the winter" was provided by the Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (10/19, Peterson).

Congress Must Fund Glacier National Park Repairs Now.

In an op-ed for the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (10/19, Cuffe), Rep. Mike Cuffe calls on Congress to "dedicate funding to our national parks to fix years of neglect and wildfire devastation." Cuffe notes that "our National Park System needs $11.3 billion for deferred infrastructure repairs" and argues that "postponing maintenance can be more expensive in the long run." Cuffe urges Congress to pass the National Park Service Legacy Act, which "offers a practical solution to reduce infrastructure backlog at national parks."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Interior Hosts FAS Economic Forum.

Marianas Variety (10/20) reports that Interior Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Doug Domenech "on Wednesday hosted several presentations focused on economic performance, policies, and possibilities for the Freely Associated States of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Republic of Palau." Domenech said, "Today's presentations are meant to inform and encourage policy discussions for the U.S. government and the governments of the FSM, the RMI, and Palau. We are committed to the partnerships we have under the Compacts of Free Association and to working collaboratively towards enhanced social and economic development for the people now and into the future."

Curfew Hours Changed, St. Croix Schools To Reopen.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (10/19, O'CONNOR) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp "extended curfew hours Wednesday back to where they were about a week ago during a radio address from Government House on St. Croix." According to the article, "residents of St. Thomas, St. Croix, St. John and Water Island now have a window of between 5 a.m. and 8 p.m. each day — 15 hours — to conduct business outside of their houses."

Guam Business, Political Leaders Push For Lifting Of Jones Act.

Marianas Variety (10/17, Losinio) reports that "business and political leaders on island are saying that now may be the best time for Guam to push for exemption from the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, or the Jones Act, after President Trump suspended the Jones Act for Puerto Rico to facilitate hurricane aid shipments bound for the storm-battered commonwealth." Bobby Shringi, chairman of the board for the Guam Chamber of Commerce, "said the recent shipping issues with Puerto Rico and the lifting of the Jones Act open the door for Guam to pursue exemptions for the marine law, which was enacted nearly a century ago." He said, "However, it's more than the adverse impacts during times of disasters, as our residents pay dearly at the registers because of the Jones Act on a daily basis. With the recent decision of Delta Airlines to end services on Guam, what is truly needed are changes towards cabotage laws in general."

Military Seeks To Dispel 'Misconceptions'.

Marianas Variety (10/20, O'Connor) reports that "military officials on Guam are continuing their efforts to dispel what they called 'misconceptions' about the plan to build facilities for almost 5,000 Marines who are being moved to the island from Okinawa." At a Mayors' Council of Guam special monthly meeting Wednesday, Col. Brent Bien, head of the Marine Corps on island, said, "There's a few misconceptions and three primary ones. One you may be hearing is that the military is bad for the environment. The other is we're closing down Ritidian, and that our plans look to potentially destroy the cultural sites in that area." Bien contends the arguments by activist groups are "the main 'misconceptions' about the buildup."

Illegal Withdrawals Made From Marshall Island's US-based Trust Fund.

Public Finance International (10/19, Rensch) reports that “almost a million dollars have been illegally removed from the Marshall Islands government’s US-based trust fund, officials have reportedly said.” The article says that “a series of 12 unauthorised withdrawals from the fund at Boston’s State Street Bank were sent – $982,265 to bank accounts in Ireland and Malaysia in June and July, local media has reported.” According to newspaper Marianas Variety, “the withdrawals of $273,883 to Ireland were recovered but the $708,382 to accounts in Malaysia is yet to be returned.”

Forum Focuses On Firefighters’ Health.

The Guam Daily Post (10/18, Losinio) reports that “around 50 representatives gathered for the 6th Annual Western Pacific Islands Association of Fire Chiefs (WPIAFC) Training Forum at the Lotte Hotel.” According to Tom Jenkins, president of the International Association of Fire Chiefs, “firefighters are at risk of post-traumatic stress disorder, depression and suicide as part of their job.”

30 Coconut Trees On Rota Flagged For Rhino Beetle Infestation.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (10/19) reports that “the Department of Lands and Natural Resources has identified 30 coconut trees in the Twerksberry area on Rota as habitats of the invasive coconut rhinoceros beetles.” According to the article, “to contain the insect and prevent infestation of other coconut trees, DLNR will be closing off the Twerksberry area starting at 6:30pm everyday.”

Making The Decision To Migrate In The Marshall Islands.

In a piece for NewSecurityBeat (10/18, De Souza), Mickael De Souza, an undergraduate student at Concordia University in Montreal, Canada, writes that “the specter of climate change” threatens Republic of the Marshall Islands, “raising sea levels, salinizing soils, and sapping freshwater resources.” De Souza “assisted with a study spearheaded by Maxine Burkett, a Wilson Center global fellow and a professor at the William S. Richardson School of Law at the University of Hawai’i, that sought to find out how the impacts of climate change have affected decisions within the Marshallese community that migrated to Hawai’i.” The study “found that to date, Marshallese do not perceive climate change as playing a large role in the decision to migrate.”

US Geological Survey

‘Great ShakeOut,’ World’s Largest Earthquake Drill, Helps Millions Prepare For Disaster.

NBC News (10/19, Chuck) reports that “millions of people dropped to the ground and crouched under their desks Thursday as part of the world’s largest earthquake drill.” The “Great ShakeOut” was held “at 10:19 a.m. local time around the world.” According to the article, “about 21 million people practiced what to do if a quake strikes, with more than 10.2 million of them in California — which experts say is likely to experience a massive quake in the next several decades.” David Schwartz, a geologist with the United States Geological Survey, said, “The Bay Area sits right in the boundary zone between the Pacific plate and the North American plate. They’re sliding past each other at about 40 millimeters a year, a little less than 2 inches. Doesn’t sound like a lot, but over the years, that builds up to a lot of stress and motion.”

Kelly Offers Impassioned Defense Of Trump’s Phone Call To Soldier’s Widow.

White House Chief of Staff Kelly’s unexpected appearance at the daily White House briefing, where he defended President Trump’s phone call to the widow of Sgt. La David Johnson, gets heavy and mostly laudatory coverage. Kelly is described as speaking in very personal terms about what it is like to be informed that one’s child has been killed in action, and reports offer extended segments from his remarks with little commentary. This is undercut somewhat by the initial response to President Trump’s late-night tweet about Rep. Frederica Wilson (D-FL), who had publicly criticized Trump’s comments on the call. Several journalists tweeted in response that Trump’s tweet undid some of what Kelly had achieved.

In opening ABC World News Tonight (10/19, lead story, 5:20), David Muir called Kelly’s appearance a “deeply personal moment,” while on the CBS Evening News (10/19, lead story,

4:45), Anthony Mason opened by calling it “an extraordinary scene at the White House.” Muir reported that Kelly defended Trump’s phone call, “and in doing so, Gen. Kelly talking about the loss of his own son” in Afghanistan, and then “blasted the congresswoman who said the family was offended by the President’s call.” On CBS, Mason reported that “Kelly said he’d recommended early on that the President not call families of the fallen, but Mr. Trump told him [that] he wanted to call the families of the four soldiers killed two weeks ago in Niger.” Kelly: “And he said to me, ‘What do I say?’ I said to him, ‘Sir, there’s nothing you can do to lighten the burden on these families. But let me tell you what I tell them. He was doing exactly what he wanted to do when he was killed. He knew what he was getting into by joining that one percent. He knew what the possibilities were, because we’re at war.’”

In opening NBC Nightly News (10/19, lead story, 3:50), Lester Holt called it an “extraordinary moment” when Kelly, “a Gold Star father, broke his public silence over the deaths of four American soldiers in Niger in deeply personal terms.” NBC’s Peter Alexander reported that Kelly “fiercely denounc[ed] criticism” by Wilson. Kelly: “I was stunned when I came to work yesterday morning, and brokenhearted. It stuns me that a member of Congress would have listened in on the conversation. Absolutely stuns me.”

The AP (10/19, Lemire, Lucey) says that Kelly “delivered an extraordinary denunciation” of Wilson “in an unexpected and emotional appearance in the White House briefing room.” USA Today (10/19, Przybyla) reports that Kelly said the comments Trump made to Myeshia Johnson “were similar to those spoken to him after his son was killed in Afghanistan. ... Kelly said that the conversation in the aftermath of a military death is one of the only aspects of American life that has not been politicized.” The Washington Times (10/19, Miller) quotes Kelly saying, “Let’s try to somehow keep that sacred. But it eroded a great deal yesterday by the selfish behavior of a member of Congress.”

The Washington Free Beacon (10/19, Rutz) reports that Wilson responded by saying that Kelly “‘will say anything’ and is trying to keep his job.” The Miami Herald (10/19, Daugherty) reports that Wilson also responded to Kelly’s criticism that she bragged about getting the funding for an FBI building at its dedication; the building was being named for two slain agents. Wilson said, “He shouldn’t be able to just say that, that is terrible. This has become totally personal.”

The President weighed in on Twitter at 10:53 p.m., tweeting, “The Fake News is going crazy with wacky Congresswoman Wilson (D), who was SECRETLY on a very personal call, and gave a total lie on content!” Blake Hounshell of Politico tweeted in response, “So I had thought that Kelly had put a coda on this story today, but I guess Trump wants it to continue.” CNN’s Jim Acosta similarly tweeted, “Appears POTUS wants to have last word on this... not Kelly.” NBC News’ Benji Sarlin tweeted, “Kelly put himself in a deeply uncomfortable place to lend some small dignity to this story and this is how he’s repaid within hours.”

In other coverage of Kelly’s remarks, the New York Times (10/19, Shear) reports that Kelly “delivered an emotional, personal defense of President Trump’s call” to Myeshia Johnson “after Mr. Trump and the White House were consumed by criticism after the president’s actions this week.” Kelly defended Trump “by offering a detailed, even excruciating description of what happens to those killed in combat,” and “testified to the deep pain that parents feel when they get an early-morning knock on the door from an official there to tell them that their son or daughter has been killed in action.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/19, Bennett) also says Kelly “gave an emotional defense of Trump’s calls,” saying that Trump “was echoing words that Kelly had suggested.” The New York Post (10/19, Fredericks) says Kelly “gave a powerful defense of President Trump’s handling” of the call, while McClatchy (10/19, Daugherty, Kumar) calls it “a somber but passionate defense.” Kelly “recalled how difficult it is for presidents to speak with the families of veterans killed in action” and “said that Trump made a ‘brave’ decision to call the four families” of soldiers killed in the Niger ambush. Breitbart (10/19, Spiering) says that Kelly “delivered a stirring speech.”

The CBS Evening News (10/19, story 2, 3:25, Mason) aired a long clip of Kelly’s remarks that ran about three minutes. The Washington Post (10/19, Gearan, Rucker, Wagner) reports that Kelly spoke for about 18 minutes, “answering a few questions before departing, and ignoring others that were shouted at him as he left.” The Wall Street Journal (10/19) says in an editorial that Kelly elevated the discussion and brought the focus back to the bravery of the soldiers, where it should be.

The AP (10/19, Kellman, Burns) writes in an analysis, “The public controversy this week clearly was painful for Kelly, whose son had been awarded the Purple Heart.” Trump’s “willingness to raise the tragedy set many in the military community seething.” Obama Administration Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel told the AP, “To use Gen. Kelly and his family in this disgusting political way is sickening and beneath every shred of decency of presidential leadership." In an interview with USA Today (10/19, Brook), Hagel said, "I'm offended by the way he's handled it. You just don't use the families of the fallen to score political points."

Ex-Defense Secretary, CIA Director, and White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said on CNN's Situation Room (10/19), "I have a lot of respect for John Kelly" and "I understand where John was coming from." However, "I think he was trying to do damage repair here on this whole issue." Panetta later said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (10/19), "I would wish that the focus would be on those men and women who are willing to serve and put their lives on the line and on the families that have lost loved ones, that's where the focus ought to be."

The Washington Examiner (10/19, Westwood) reports, "Trump has denied saying anything insensitive." But in his Washington Post (10/19) column, Eugene Robinson writes, "Trump is a weak, narcissistic man in a job that requires strength and empathy. I'm not sure that empathy is a concept he even understands. He acts as if he believes that feeling someone else's pain is strictly for losers, not winners." The AP (10/19, Woodward, Davies) reports that it "tried to reach the families of all 43 people who have died in military service since Trump became president and made contact with about 20 families. More than half said they had not heard from Trump."

Bloomberg News (10/19, Talev, Sink), Politico (10/19, McCaskill), The Hill (10/19, Fabian), the Daily Caller (10/19, Pfeiffer), and the Washington Free Beacon (10/19, Beck) also have brief reports consisting mainly of Kelly's comments.

Senate Passes Budget Blueprint With Key Provision For Tax Reform.

The New York Times (10/19, Kaplan) reports that, in "a significant step toward rewriting the tax code," the Senate passed a budget blueprint that prevents Democrats from filibustering a $1.5 trillion tax cut. The measure also allows drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska "can pass with only Republican votes." The blueprint passed 51-49, with Sen. Rand Paul, complaining about excessive spending, the only Republican voting against it. The budget debate offered Republicans the opportunity "to showcase their main goal in the coming months:" a tax overhaul. Meanwhile, Democrats "lamented the approach that Republicans are taking on taxes, which mirrors the strategy that they employed in their failed effort to repeal the Affordable Care Act."

The Washington Post (10/19, Viebeck) reports that "by agreeing to the massive tax cut, Senate Republicans have officially moved the party far away from its promised goal of ensuring that the tax plan would not add to the deficit," as, in search of "a political win after months of frustration on Capitol Hill" GOP "abandoned longstanding party orthodoxy of deficit reduction." Before the budget blueprint was approved, the Senate saw about six hours of amendment votes "in which Democrats sought to call attention to controversial aspects of the GOP tax plan." Democratic plans focuses on highlighting "four key tax-reform topics intended to make Republicans cast politically awkward votes: tax cuts for the wealthy, tax increases for the middle class, reductions to Medicare and Medicaid spending, and increases to the budget deficit."

In an analysis piece, the New York Times (10/19, Kaplan) reports that "perhaps all that really matters" is the language that would allow passing a tax overhaul with only Republican votes; everything else in the bill "even Republicans admit, is filler." The Times adds, "Senators are not even pretending that plotting out the government's finances is the task at hand." Similarly, the Washington Times (10/19, Sherfinski) reports, "Republicans said [the budget resolution's] numbers were probably irrelevant." Meanwhile, top GOP leaders "expressed doubt" there is time to pass a tax overhaul this year. Sen. Roy Blunt, the vice chairman of the Senate GOP conference, even said, in the Times' words, that "they'll be able to take a 'second look' at reforming the tax code in 2019 or 2020."

The AP (10/19, Taylor) reports, "Republicans have said failure on taxes would be politically devastating in next year's midterm elections, when control of the House and Senate are at stake."

Also covering this story are the Wall Street Journal (10/19, Andrews, Peterson, Rubin), the Los Angeles Times (10/19, Mascaro), and The Hill (10/19, Carney, Elis).

Ryan, McConnell Said To Have Reached Bicameral Budget Deal. Politico (10/19, Bade, Everett, Ferris) reports multiple sources in both chambers said that House Speaker Ryan and Senate Majority Leader McConnell have reached "a bicameral budget deal allowing Congress to swiftly move to tax reform." GOP leaders, House Budget Chairman Diane Black, and Senate Budget Chairman Mike Enzi "crafted a Senate amendment full of House-requested tweaks" that was approved by the Senate.

Barrasso: Trump To Meet With GOP Senators. The Washington Times (10/19, Dinan) reports Sen. John Barrasso, head of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, announced that President

Trump will meet with Republican senators next week, in the Times' words, to "rally them ahead of a months-long push to approve a massive tax reform deal." The event will also allow Trump "to meet with many of his chief Capitol Hill critics."

GOP Hoping Aggressive Timeline Will Prevent Loss Of Support For Tax Plan. The New York Times (10/19, Tankersley) reports GOP "party leaders are preparing to move ahead on a timeline" to pass tax reform "even more aggressive than their unsuccessful attempts to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act," despite few having seen the bill and "key details" remaining unsettled. The GOP seeks to move with "striking – and strategic" – speed in the hopes that their narrow Senate majority will be kept together by the "breakneck pace" amid the anticipated "deluge of lobbying and Democratic criticism." Part of the issue is that campaign donors, business groups, and the White House are pressuring congressional Republicans "to deliver a major legislative victory."

Van Hollen: Democrats Willing To Work On Tax Reform, Not Helping The Rich. Sen. Chris Van Hollen said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/19), "The President is running around the country telling people that this is going to reduce the tax burden on the middle class. Uh-uh, that's not the case." Van Hollen added that the GOP plan "will increase taxes on tens of millions of folks in the middle, in order to finance tax breaks for the folks at the very, very top, the top one percent." He also said, "So we're all in, if we're talking about simplifying the tax code and helping folks in the middle. We're not in, if we're talking about increasing taxes on folks in the middle to finance tax breaks for millionaires."

Pompeo: North Korea Months Away From Perfecting Nuclear Capabilities.

The AP (10/19, Riechmann) reports CIA Director Pompeo warned Thursday that North Korea is "months away from perfecting its nuclear weapons capabilities." Addressing a national security forum in Washington, Pompeo said, "They are close enough now in their capabilities that from a US policy perspective we ought to behave as if we are on the cusp of them achieving" their objective of being able to strike the US. However, he stressed that "there's a difference between having the ability to fire a single nuclear missile and the capability of producing large amounts of fissile material and developing an arsenal of such weapons." Speaking at the same event, National Security Adviser McMaster said, "We are in a race to resolve this short of military action. We are not out of time, but we are running out of time." CNN's Situation Room (10/19) said McMaster made a "veiled threat" when he said President Trump is "not going to accept this regime threatening the United States with a nuclear weapon."

North Korea Threatens "Unimaginable Nuclear Strike" On The US. Reporting from inside North Korea, NBC Nightly News (10/19, story 5, 2:15, Holt) Kier Simmons said the North is "not backing down from the international condemnation of their nuclear program." Simmons was able to speak with North Korea's vice foreign minister, Pak Myong Guk, who told him "negotiation is only possible if US nuclear weapons are also on the table. A nonstarter in Washington." Meanwhile, when Simmons asked a North Korean lieutenant colonel about President Trump, the military official said, "He is mentally ill," and added, "If there is a war, we will win." The remarks come as a "furious" North Korea is "warning that it will unleash an 'unimaginable nuclear strike on the US'" after American military forces, including an aircraft carrier, conducted joint drills with South Korea this week.

Scarborough: Trump Should Learn From JFK How To Handle A Nuclear Crisis. Joe Scarborough writes in the Washington Post (10/19) that 55 years ago today, President John F. Kennedy was navigating the Cuban Missile Crisis, and the US now faces another nuclear showdown, this time with North Korea. In an address to the nation at the height of the crisis, Kennedy said, "Our goal is not the victory of might, but the vindication of right. Not peace at the expense of freedom but both peace and freedom. ... God willing, that goal will be achieved." Scarborough writes, "That is the kind of White House address US presidents once gave. A speech of hope, not hyperbole. A speech that sought peace instead of flirting with war. A speech seeking solutions instead of stirring up the anger of an embittered political base."

Jobless Claims At Lowest Level In 44 Years.

The AP (10/19, Wiseman) reports "the number of Americans collecting unemployment benefits fell last week to the lowest level since Richard Nixon was president." The Labor Department said yesterday that "claims for jobless aid dropped by 22,000 to 222,000, fewest since March 1973. The less volatile four-week average slid by 9,500 to 248,250, lowest since late August." In a story that led the Drudge Report last night, Bloomberg News (10/19) also notes "filings for unemployment benefits plunged last week to the lowest level since 1973."

EPA Chief Tells Oil, Gas Leaders That Agency Not Like Previous Administration.

The Houston Chronicle (10/19, Stuckey) reports that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt spoke at the Texas Oil and Gas Association's annual Lone Star Energy Forum yesterday, where he "gave a succinct message to oil and gas industry leaders: The Trump administration's agency will be nothing like the last." He said that the Trump administration is "focused on results and that's been the primary focus of my first months at the EPA," and referred specifically to the EPA's fast pace in approving waste removal from the San Jacinto Waste Pits after years of inaction.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Self-Dealing Presidency Of Donald Trump." The New York Times (10/19) editorializes about the lawsuit alleging that President Trump has violated the emoluments clauses of the Constitution, one prohibiting officials from accepting "any present, emoluments, office, or title, of any kind whatever" from foreign governments without congressional approval, and another that "bars presidents from getting payments from federal or state governments other than their salaries." The Times argues that "Presidents have been generally transparent about their financial holdings, placing assets in blind trusts and releasing their tax returns," but President Trump, "whose global empire of hotels, real estate, golf courses and other businesses is awash in foreign money," has "refused to take those steps." The Times contends that "even if the case is thrown," Trump "is still a walking emoluments-clause violation," and "he still refuses to release his tax returns and other financial records, preventing the public from seeing the full extent of his business entanglements, debts and interests."

"A Chance To Defuse The Catalonia Crisis." A New York Times (10/19) editorial says the crisis "started spiraling out of control on Thursday," but stresses that "the door is not yet closed. Mr. Rajoy has not said exactly what he intends to do at the emergency cabinet meeting he called for Saturday." Puigdemont's government also "has not unequivocally declared independence. Both sides can still offer concessions, or at least conciliatory signals, that could move them back from the brink."

Washington Post.

"Strike Three." The Washington Post (10/19) editorializes that "once again, the courts have blocked President Trump's travel ban from going into effect." On Tuesday, a federal judge in Hawaii "stopped the ban from taking effect," and a federal judge in Maryland "followed suit on Wednesday, blocking enforcement of the ban as applied to travelers with 'bona fide' ties to the United States." The Post notes that the Supreme Court "just dismissed a suit against the second version of the travel ban last week, and will likely do so with another challenge at the end of October when the existing ban on refugee admissions expires." The Post adds that "both judges noted" that "the administration has failed to provide any evidence that nationality has anything to do with the security threat an individual poses." According to the Post, the ban "alienates many while achieving nothing," and it concludes that "the wisest move for the administration would be to let the ban fade away."

"Hailing A Subsidy For Mass Transit." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/19) reports that the Chicago City Council's new proposed fee on ride-hailing companies, such as Uber, would provide needed revenue to the city's aging transit infrastructure and offers a concept that "makes sense and merits consideration in other cities, including Washington." The Post argues that because ride-hailing service "are used disproportionately by wealthier passengers," such a fee would support a transit system serves everyone, including poorer passengers.

"A Superpower For Liberty." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/19) praises George Soros for his three decades of support for civil society organizations and for his $18 billion in contributions over recent years – but disclosed only this week – to his Open Society Foundations. The Post adds that Soros' work is "urgent now as President Trump turns his back on decades of U.S. support for democracy and human rights," and concludes that for all Soros' contributions to democracy, "it would be doubly good if the government of the United States were walking in tandem with him, and it is a tragedy that it is not."

Wall Street Journal.

"A Fed For A Growth Economy." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/19) urges Trump to select a Fed chairman who supports faster economic growth, and casts Powell as too similar to Janet Yellen. The Journal, which blames Yellen and Obama-era economic policies for the slow GDP growth over the last decade, goes on to defend the potential nominations of Kevin Warsh and John Taylor.

“Another Republican Retirement.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/19, Board) calls Tiberi’s decision a bad sign for GOP hopes of maintaining its House majority in next year’s elections, and argues that if Republicans don’t pass tax reform, it will likely further hurt the party in 2018.

“John Kelly’s Heroes.” The Wall Street Journal (10/19) says in an editorial that Kelly elevated the discussion and brought the focus back to the bravery of the soldiers, where it should be.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Everyone be careful. We got snakes and fire and everything. ... That was the Coney Island Circus sideshow, or members of Donald Trump's cabinet, I'm not sure."

Trevor Noah: "I don't know if you know, but there's a guy named Donald Trump who is the President. From day one of his presidency, he's possessed an ability to conjure scandal out of thin air. ... How do you start so clear and veer off-track? He was handed the baton, and instead of staying in his lane, he walks off the track, drives a car down the cliff, gets out and dusts himself off and says, 'Why didn't Obama drive?'"

Trevor Noah: [Referring to the controversy with President Trump's call to the fallen soldier in Niger] "Do you think a phone is going to magically transform [President Trump] into an eloquent man? Like Trump will be talking about all these losers and haters, bing, bing, bong, bigly! 'Hold on, I've got to make a call. Greetings and salutations! My soul is awash in a great flood of sorrow as I reflect upon your circumstance. Fare thee well. Right, where was I? Little Rocket Man!' It's not going to happen."

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump sucks at making these calls, which is unfortunate, because I don't know who at the White House can make these calls, right? Jared Kushner can't do it because he's on the line, one fixing the Middle East. You don't want Sarah Huckabee Sanders calling because she'll tell you your son didn't die. Then 30 other people can't do it because they've all been fired."

House Panels Investigating $300M Puerto Rico Power Grid Contract.

The Hill (10/26, Cama) reports two committees in the US House and the Department of Homeland Security's Office of Inspector General "have started investigating a $300 million repair contract that Puerto Rico's electricity utility signed with" Whitefish Energy of Montana. The investigations "come amid growing questions in Puerto Rico and the mainland about how" the company, "which had only two employees before Hurricane Maria decimated the island, got the contract, and how it is managing the task of restoring electricity to millions of residents who have been without power for more than a month." The CEO of the company Andrew Techmanski "is from the same town as Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and the two know each other, but they have denied that Zinke played any role in Whitefish getting the no-bid contract."

The Washington Examiner (10/26, Siegel) reports Rep. Greg Walden and Rep. Rob Bishop, both Republicans, are both seeking information on the "controversial contract." Walden wrote to the company, "In light of the questions that have been raised about your company's involvement in recovery efforts, however, it is important to develop a clear understanding of the facts. Therefore, to assist the committee with our ongoing oversight of hurricane response and recovery efforts, we request Whitefish provide a briefing for committee staff." Several prominent House Democrats joined him in the request. Bishop is demanding PREPA provide documents to "show under what circumstances PREPA has authority to deviate from normal contracting and procurement processes." Bloomberg News (10/26, Smith) reports, "Prepa's hiring of Whitefish contrasted with recovery efforts in the wake of other recent hurricanes, where utilities in Texas and Florida tapped into a mutual assistance network of other major utility companies."

The Hill (10/26, Savransky) reports Sens. Maria Cantwell and Ron Wyden have also "sent a letter to the Government Accountability Office (GAO) requesting a probe."

USA Today (10/26, Dorell) reports Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló wants the DHS IG "to look into a contract." He has also "asked his own Office of Management and Budget to audit the Whitefish contract to make sure it followed Puerto Rico and federal law."

Additional coverage was provided by CNN (10/26, Marsh, Wallace).

Whitefish Energy Apologizes After Arguing With San Juan Mayor. The Hill (10/26, Savransky) reports Whitefish Energy has apologized after it "feuded with the mayor of San Juan, Puerto Rico, over Twitter and threatened to pull out of recovery efforts on the island." In a statement the company said, "Mayor Cruz and everyone in Puerto Rico – on behalf of our employees, we would like to apologize for our comments earlier today, which did not represent who we are and how important this work is to help Puerto Rico's recovery." After Cruz had criticized the contract, Whitefish wrote on Twitter, "We've got 44 linemen rebuilding power lines in your city & 40 more men just arrived. Do you want us to send them back or keep working?"

Democrats Seek Investigation Of Whitefish Energy Contract. NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 7, 2:25, Holt) reported that as President Trump "has signed a $36 million emergency aid bill, which includes relief money for Puerto Rico." there are "growing calls" among Democrats "for an investigation into how a small company landed the largest government contract to restore the island's power." NBC (Gutierrez) added, "A founding partner a private equity firm that finances Whitefish donated thousands of dollars to the Trump campaign," and "Democrats demanding an investigation as they ask for more federal aid." House Minority Leader Pelosi: "This next bill will be very, very substantial. Not at the mercy of cronyism and incompetence as I believe the Whitefish contract was."

A New York Times (10/26) editorial says the Whitefish contract undermines confidence that Puerto Rico's power grid will be rebuilt quickly.

Trump Nominates Mining Engineer To Be Top Federal Coal Mine Regulator.

The Hill (10/26, Henry) reports that the White House on Thursday announced the nomination of J. Steven Gardner, the president of engineering firm ECSI, LLC, to be the director of the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke lauded the nomination, calling Gardner "an unbelievable asset to coal country and the entire team at the Department of the Interior." Gardner said in a statement Thursday, "My whole life, I have been involved with mining on multiple levels, and I understand the importance of these issues to the communities we serve."

The AP (10/26, Lovan) reports that Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul said the nomination is a "welcome relief" to the coal industry. However, "environmentalists criticized Gardner's lack of experience as a government regulator and defense of mountaintop removal mining, a controversial mining technique that alters landscapes with blasting and dumping into valleys."

Also reporting are Reuters (10/26, Volcovici), the Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (10/26, Ward), the Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (10/26), and Montana Public Radio (10/26, Speier).

GOP Targets Environmental Rules After Wildfires.

The AP (10/26, Daly) reports that House Republicans are "targeting environmental rules to allow faster approval for tree cutting in national forests in response to the deadly wildfires in California." Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy "said lawmakers will vote next week on a bill to loosen environmental regulations for forest-thinning projects on federal lands." The Republican bill “includes reforms to keep our forests healthy and less susceptible to the types of fires that ravaged our state this month,” McCarthy said Thursday.

Firefighting Is Eating Up The Forest Service Budget. Courthouse News (10/26, Buchman) reports that “battling wildfires is sapping the U.S. Forest Service of 50 percent of its funding and threatening its ability to fight wildfires in the future, the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works heard Wednesday.” The Forest Service and the Interior Department “must pay for wildfire response out of their own budgets.” Dylan Kruse, policy director at the nonprofit Sustainable Northwest, “warned senators that ‘reactive, not proactive’ wildfire response will devour 67 percent of the budget in 2021 unless Congress takes action.”

Wildfires At Your Doorstep. In an op-ed for the New York Times (10/26, Kodas), Michael Kodas, associate director of the Center for Environmental Journalism at the University of Colorado, Boulder, offers suggestions to combat the issue of wildfires. He suggests “focusing forest thinning operations and prescribed burns on overgrown woodlands near communities.” Also, he argues that “modernizing the airpower used to hold back wildfires and carefully considering when and how to use it will make airborne firefighting safer and more effective, as will new technologies aiding the firefight every year.” He concludes that “most important, however, is an ‘all hands on deck’ engagement from everyone who lives or works in our nation’s increasingly fire-prone lands.”

Senate Hearings Expected As Bipartisan Concerns Rise Over National Park Fee Hikes.

The Washington Examiner (10/26, Siciliano) reports that Senate Energy and Natural Resources Chairwoman Lisa Murkowski “said Thursday morning she is concerned about the Interior Department’s proposed doubling of entrance fees for 17 of the most popular national parks and will be looking at holding a hearing on the National Park Service proposal.” The committee’s top Democrat, Sen. Maria Cantwell, “raised the issue at Thursday’s hearing on protecting the electric grid from cyberattack.” According to the article, “Murkowski agreed with Cantwell and said she would look into the increased costs.”

Additional coverage of the proposal was provided by E&E Publishing (10/26, Hotakainen), the Washington Post (10/26, Ingraham), the Washington Post (10/26, Fears), U.S. News & World Report (10/26, Daly), the Christian Science Monitor (10/26, Fonseca), the San Francisco Chronicle (10/25, Alexander), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (10/26, Raymond), U.S. News & World Report (10/26), the Arkansas Times (10/26, Brantley), the Wilson \(NC\) Times (10/26, Funt), the San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (10/26), the Huffington Post (10/26, Peterman), MSNBC (10/26, Benen), Slate (10/26, Wiegand), and WNIJ-FM DeKalb \(IL\) DeKalb, IL (10/25, Ryssdal, Bodnar).

Trump Administration Plans To Approve Southern California Solar Farm.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (10/26, Roth) reports the Trump administration is planning “to approve a massive solar power plant in the Southern California desert.” The Interior Department announced Thursday “it will move forward with the Palen solar farm, which...would be built on public lands between Joshua Tree National Park and Interstate 10, in the open desert east of the Coachella Valley.” However, the Desert Sun says “some environmental groups have spent years fighting Palen, saying it would disrupt sensitive desert ecosystems and harm lizards, tortoises, birds and other animals,” while Native American groups have said the project “would destroy ancient tribal artifacts and sacred sites.”

Trump Pledges To Speed Up Lake Okeechobee Dike Repairs.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (10/26, Bennett) reports that President Trump has “agreed to speed up repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike around Lake Okeechobee, a top priority of Florida Gov. Rick Scott, the White House announced Tuesday night.” The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is “scheduled to complete a $1.7 billion renovation of the earthen berm in 2025, but Scott has pressed for the project to be completed by 2022.” The article notes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “called dike repairs ‘a priority’ during a visit to Palm Beach County this month.”

Susan Combs Again Delayed For Trump Administration Post.

The Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (10/26, Recio) reports that Susan Combs, who was nominated in July to be the Interior Department’s assistant secretary for policy, management and budget, is still waiting to be confirmed. She is “now in the thick of a much larger political fight over appointees that has delayed her confirmation vote in the Senate for nearly three months – with no end in sight.” According to the article, “the latest hurdle to Combs’ new job was erected by Sen. Jim Inhofe.” Inhofe and Environmental Protection Agency administrator Scott Pruitt “want to ensure Senate approval for several controversial free-market advocates who President Donald Trump nominated to key EPA leadership positions – and to gain leverage, Inhofe has held up a Democratic nominee to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.”

Trump’s Push For Coal Mining Will Endanger Dinosaur Discoveries In Utah, Scientists Fear.

The Los Angeles Times (10/26, Finnegan) reports that “more than two dozen new species of dinosaurs [have been] discovered in [Utah’s] Grand Staircase-Escalante in the 21 years since President Clinton preserved it as a national monument.” The majority of the “1.9 million acres of desert wilderness, one of the world’s richest fossil sites for studying the age of dinosaurs, remains unexplored. But scientists now fear President Trump will soon spoil it. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, ordered by Trump to reassess the biggest national monuments named since 1996, has proposed shrinking Grand Staircase-Escalante. Whatever area is removed would be open to coal mining, oil drilling and mineral extraction.”

Interior Sets Strategic Goals Absent Data To Verify Its Work.

E&E Publishing (10/26) reports a draft of the Interior Department’s fiscal 2018-2022 strategic plan “details the agency’s priority goals and performance metrics.” Six “mission areas” outlined in the document include topics such as “land and water conservation, recreation expansion, and border control. Interior’s second mission area, revenue generation and natural resource utilization, is heavily geared toward oil, gas and mineral extraction – although renewables are mentioned as well.” The plan says DOI “will continue to expand production of both offshore and onshore conventional and renewable U.S. energy resources while ensuring safety and reliability through efficient permitting, appropriate standards, assessment, and oversight.” According to E&E Publishing, the phrase “climate change” does not appear in the draft document, but it does contain one important new keyword: “energy dominance.”

Interior, EPA Each Outline Efforts To Reduce Regulatory Burdens.

PennEnergy (10/26, Snow) reports the US Department of the Interior and the Environmental Protection Agency “separately reported energy regulatory burdens discovered within their operations and steps under way to relieve them.” The reports were in response to a March executive order “directing departments and agencies across the government ... to review and possibly change rules that impede in the nation’s energy development.” Interior Sec. Ryan Zinke said, “Developing our energy resources to grow our economy and protecting the environment are not mutually exclusive. However, while conducting the review outlined in the executive order, we found that several costly and burdensome regulations from the past threaten that balance by hampering the production or transmission of our domestic energy.” EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said, “We can be both pro-jobs and pro-environment. At EPA, that means we are working to curb unnecessary and duplicative regulatory burdens that do not serve the American people—while continuing to partner with states, tribes, and stakeholders to protect our air, land, and water.”

The Energy 202: GOP Lawmakers Want More Alaska Drilling. The Trump Administration Isn’t Waiting.

The Washington Post (10/26, Grandoni) reports in continuing coverage that the Interior Department announced it will lease 900 tracts encompassing 10.3 million acres in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska. The sale will offer all available blocks, adding substantially to the 1.4 million acres that are currently leased for drilling.

Also reporting are the Washington Examiner (10/26, Siegel), Axios (10/26, Geman), the Washington Examiner (10/26, Siciliano, Seigel), the AP (10/12), and E&E Publishing (10/26).

Activists At Meehan’s Office Protest Drilling In The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Delaware County News Network \(PA\) (10/26, Carey) reports six environmental advocates met with staff of US Rep. Patrick Meehan (R-PA) Wednesday to encourage him to protect the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge from oil or gas drilling. The effort, led by the Sierra Club, “was being replicated at approximately 20 other congressional offices throughout the country to coincide with a rally in Washington, where advocates for the Gwich’in community were meeting with lawmakers to lobby on behalf of preserving the area.”

NPR-A Promises Wealth Of Oil And Strong Presence In Arctic. In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (10/26, Mack), Andy Mack, commissioner of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, writes that the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska is “magnificent and its oil resource potential is world class.” Mack suggests three things necessary “to increase positive momentum for NPR-A oil exploration." First, he says "we need Alaskans in the pilot seat when it comes to developing plans for the NPR-A." Second, he argues "we need to empower local groups to have more control of the process." Finally, he writes that "we need to think long term."

William Thornton: Why America Needs The Antiquities Act.

In an op-ed for the Arizona Daily Star (10/27, Thornton), William Thornton, vice president of the Friends of Ironwood Forest, raises concerns about HR 3990 as a "a new threat to public lands." Thornton writes that "despite gloom and doom predictions by naysayers who have consistently opposed their creation, they continue to create billions of dollars of economic benefits for states that host them." He urges readers to contact lawmakers and "respectfully request that they oppose HR 3990."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

High-Ranking BIA Official Addresses Rocky Mountain Tribal Leaders Council Quarterly Meeting.

Char-Koosta News (10/26, Azure) reports that John Tahsuda III, Principle Deputy Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, "gave an introductory address at the Rocky Mountain Tribal Leaders Council quarterly meeting held the past week at the KwaTaqNuk Resort and Casino." In his address to nearly 50 attendees, Tahsuda said, "I am only in my sixth week on the job and I am still learning. I ask for your patience. I want to do the best job for you. I am a big proponent of self-governance. The decision-making should be left with the tribes – you should have control over your destiny."

Tribes Say They Want An Open Dialogue To Protect Cultural Sites In Wyoming.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/26, Richards) reports that representatives from the Eastern Shoshone and Northern Arapaho tribes attended a meeting Wednesday before the Wyoming's Select Federal Natural Resource Management Committee "to explain why tribal consultation about energy development on federal land matters to the Native American tribes that once lived or hunted in Wyoming." According to the article "after a full day of testimony, the sentiment that landowners had a legitimate issue and that federal agencies needed to do a better job was clear." But "what any changes could mean for tribal consultations on historic sites was less so."

Complaint Filed To Block Illegal Camp 4 Agreement.

The Santa Barbara \(CA\) Edhat (10/26) reports that "a complaint was filed against the County of Santa Barbara to prevent it from allowing the Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians to develop over 1,400 acres of agricultural land in the Santa Ynez Valley known as Camp 4." The complaint claims "that the County cannot agree to a development that violates the Santa Ynez Community Plan."

Additional coverage was provided by the Santa Barbara \(CA\) Independent (10/26, Brugger).

Texas Attorney General Sues Feds, Seeks To Help Family Adopt Native American 2-Year-Old.

The Texas Tribune (10/26, Svitek) reports that Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton is "suing the federal government over a law that seeks to keep Native American children from being separated from their families." Paxton claims in a lawsuit that the Indian Child Welfare Act is "unconstitutional and should be struck down." According to the article, "the lawsuit is on behalf of a non-Native American foster family from Texas that wants to adopt a Native American boy."

Tribes Say DOI Already Gave Them OK For 3rd Conn.

Casino. Law360 (10/25, Westney) reports that "a company co-owned by the Mohegan and Mashantucket Pequot tribes on Wednesday assailed former U.S. Department of the Interior Secretary Ken Salazar's recent warning that the tribes' proposed third Connecticut casino might jeopardize their revenue sharing with the state, saying the tribes already have federal approval for needed changes to their tribal-state gaming compacts."

Bill To Build Grand Canyon Tram Goes Before Navajo Lawmakers.

The AP (10/26) reports that "Navajo Nation lawmakers are scheduled to take up legislation to build an aerial tram into the Grand Canyon next week." Navajo Nation Council spokesman Jared Touchin "says the Grand Canyon Escalade is the only item on Tuesday's special session agenda so far."

Federal Agent Describes Car Break-In That Led To The Killing Of Kate Steinle With Stolen Duty Weapon.

The San Francisco Examiner (10/26, Barba) reports, "The federal ranger whose stolen weapon was used to shoot a woman in San Francisco triggered a chain of events that led to the killing, a defense attorney for the undocumented immigrant charged with the crime argued Thursday." Bureau of Land Management ranger John Woychowski "testified Thursday that he and his family had stopped in San Francisco on a trip up the California coast when someone busted into two rear windows of his car, stealing a fully loaded handgun he stashed in a backpack underneath the driver's seat." The Examiner says the police officer "who tested [Jose Ines] Garcia Zarate's hands for gunshot residue after police arrested him also testified in court Thursday." Officer Andrew Clifford "said in court that he took the samples within an hour of the arrest," and the samples "resulted in the San Francisco Police Department crime lab finding just one gunshot residue particle." The AP (10/26) reports Garcia Zarate's attorney Matt Gonzalez "told the jury Monday that the negligent storage of the gun started a chain of events that led to the accidental shooting of Steinle."

Fox News (10/26) reports the prosecution "brought out a P239 weapon as evidence which Woychowski confirmed was his and showed the jury how it worked, adding that he'd never had trouble with it." Fox News says SFPD Officer Craig Dong took the stand on Wednesday. Dong was "on the scene on the day of the shooting and worked on enhancing video from a nearby fire station that appeared to capture video of Zarate and also [Kate] Steinle and her father at the moment of shooting." During Dong's testimony, "jurors saw a video that showed Steinle falling, the suspect walking away and something splashing in the water." During the part of the video that showed Steinle falling, "people in the gallery of the court room could be heard gasping."

Defense Wants 'Domestic Terrorism' Out Of Bundy Case.

The High Country \(CO\) News (10/26, Wiles) reports that "when the third in a series of trials over the 2014 Bundy Ranch standoff in Nevada gets underway, prosecutors will be able to use testimony from an expert in extremism and domestic terrorism, the judge in the case has ruled." HCN says "defense attorneys for one of the accused Bundy supporters, Ryan Payne, of Montana, had sought to keep much of the federal agent's testimony out of the case, saying his expertise on militias and terrorism would prejudice the jury." HCN notes that "jury selection for the trial – which includes Payne, Cliven Bundy and his sons Ammon and Ryan – begins next week."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

New Oil Drilling Potential Concerns Gaetz.

Northwest Florida Daily News (10/26, Blanks) reports that Rep. Matt Gaetz "said Thursday he was 'very concerned' about a Trump administration proposal that would make 77 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico available for lease by federal oil and gas companies." According to the article, "though the waters off Florida are protected from drilling for at least the next five years thanks to the existence of the military mission line, Gaetz said statements made by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke alarmed him." Gaetz said, "Zinke told me that the moment the military mission line goes away, he intends to issue oil and gas leases nine miles off of Florida's shores. That would be catastrophic to our military, and to our local tourism economy."

Del Mar Takes Stand Against Trump's Vision For Offshore Drilling.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (10/26, Montes) reports that Del Mar is "taking a stand against President Donald Trump's efforts to loosen restrictions on offshore drilling and energy exploration in federal waters – the first city south of Los Angeles County to do so." The Del Mar City Council "unanimously agreed on Oct. 16 to call on California's congressional delegation to join the city in making clear that expanded offshore drilling poses too great a threat to the state's $44.8 billion ocean economy."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Groups File Lawsuit To Halt Chimney Hollow, Windy Gap Project.

The Loveland \(CO\) Reporter-Herald (10/26, Johnson) reports that “a coalition of environmental groups has filed a lawsuit in federal court to stop construction of Chimney Hollow Reservoir southwest of Loveland, calling the project ‘a terrible idea’ and claiming it will cause irreparable damage the Colorado River.” The lawsuit filed Thursday “asks the judge to throw out the records of decision by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation and the U.S Army Corps of Engineers, claiming they violated the National Environmental Policy Act and the Clean Water Act in approving the project.” Gary Wockner, who heads both Save the Colorado and Save the Poudre environmental groups, said, “The idea that you could take more water out of this river system that is already severely degraded and drained in addition to the prediction that climate change is going to take even more water out of the river is just insane.”

Also reporting are the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (10/26, Johnson), the Greeley \(CO\) Tribune (10/26, Silvy), the Estes Park \(CO\) Trail-Gazette (10/26, Johnson), and KUNC-FM Greeley \(CO\) Greeley, CO (10/26, Runyon).

Delta Tunnel Project Decision Time Has Arrived.

In an op-ed for the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/26, Lund), Jay Lund, a Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering and Director of the Center for Watershed Sciences at UC Davis, writes that due to recent developments, California’s WaterFix proposal “could shrink to become a single-tunnel state-only project supported mostly by urban water users and some Tulare basin agricultural contractors.” Lund argues that “there are no perfect solutions.” He concludes that “sustained state leadership is needed to craft imperfect but workable solutions among the Delta’s many conflicting interests.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

US Considers Overhauling Offshore Drilling Rules.

Argus Media (10/26) reports the Trump Administration is considering revising parts of offshore drilling safety regulations that were implemented to prevent the type of blowout that led to the Deepwater Horizon spill. The Administration says the changes will look to “strike the appropriate balance” between safety, the environment, and energy production. However, critics say the plan to let operators reduce blowout prevention tests by 50 percent is increasing the risks of another major oil spill.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Records: Tentative Deal Reached On Deadly ‘Cyanide Bombs’.

The AP (10/26, Brown) reports that “U.S. officials have reached a tentative deal with wildlife advocates trying to stop the use of predator-killing traps, including devices called ‘cyanide bombs’ that earlier this year injured an Idaho teenager and killed his dog, according to court documents filed Thursday.” Government lawyers “asked U.S. District Judge Dana Christensen to put on hold for 60 days a lawsuit over the poisoned traps pending final approval of the agreement by senior officials at the Interior Department.” Terms were not disclosed.

Judge Rejects Challenge To Part Of Jaguar Recovery Plan.

The AP (10/26) reports that “a federal judge has rejected a challenge to the federal designation of parts of New Mexico and Arizona as critical habitat for the endangered jaguar.” Judge Kenneth Gonzales’ order Wednesday “rejects farming and ranching groups’ arguments that the Fish and Wildlife Service’s inclusion of 181 square miles (469 sq. kilometers) in New Mexico’s Hidalgo County and Arizona’s Cochise County was arbitrary and capricious.”

Additional coverage was provided by Courthouse News (10/26, Prieskop).

Wetlands Group Donates 107 Acres To Patoka Wildlife Refuge.

The AP (10/26) reports that the Patoka River National Wildlife Refuge has “grown by 107 acres (43 hectares) after conservation groups donated a tract to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.”

The land was donated by Wetlands America Trust and Ducks Unlimited.

Chincoteague Refuge Leader Retiring.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (10/26, Vaughn) reports that Kevin Sloan is “retiring after more than three decades with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” Sloan, “whose last day at work is Oct. 27, has been project leader at Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge since October 2014.”

National Park Service Veteran Named To Head Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/26, Alexander) reports that “Laura Joss, a 27-year veteran of the National Park Service who has led the agency’s West Coast office for the past year and a half, was appointed to the top post at the Golden Gate National Recreation Area on Thursday.” Joss said, “I’m thrilled to have the opportunity to work in an iconic park like Golden Gate. There’s such a diversity here, from the beaches to Muir Woods, a quiet hike or an urban experience. I’m looking forward to welcoming visitors and getting to know the park better myself.”

Coast Guard Veteran Hired To Oversee Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore.

MLive \(MI\) (10/26, Champion) reports that “David Horne, Chief Ranger for the Southeast Region of the National Park Service with 23 years of experience,” has been selected as the next superintendent of the Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore. Regional Director Cam Sholly said in a statement, “We are very pleased to welcome Dave as the new Superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore. He has a proven track record of successfully managing complex operations, building strong teams, and collaborating closely with communities and partners.”

Meet Glacier National Park’s First Female Packer.

The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (10/26, Scott) reports that Jill Michalak “landed a job” at Glacier National Park this season “as the first female packer in the program’s century-old history.” Glacier’s lead packer Dave Elwood said, “We hired two young people this summer, including Jill, and we got really lucky. She’s just excellent, with a lot of experience and a lot of energy.”

The Future Of Minnesota’s Only National Park.

KSJR-FM Collegeville, MN (10/26, Weber) reports that Bob DeGross, superintendent to run Voyageurs National Park, “joined MPR’s Tom Weber to talk about the first year of his tenure — and the future of Voyageurs.”

West Marin Ranchers On Edge As Lease Talks Begin.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (10/26, Prado) reports that “the debate over the future of ranching in federal park lands in West Marin is underway and support for the practice was voiced this week as hearings kicked off.” This week National Park Service officials “held a pair of public sessions — one in Point Reyes, the other in Sausalito — to look at the various alternatives for ranching.” The NPS’ “initial proposal would allow existing ranch families to continue beef and dairy operations with 20-year leases, the agency announced earlier this month.”

Gulf Islands National Seashore Announces New Entrance, Camping Fees.

The Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (10/26) reports that Gulf Islands National Seashore officials have “announced increased fees for admission into the park and for use of the Fort Pickens Campground.” Beginning Jan. 1, “admission to the park will be $20 per private vehicle, up from the current $15.” Also, “individuals on foot, on bicycle or in large non-commercial vehicles will pay $10 per person, as opposed to the current $7.” In addition, “motorcycle admission will increase from $10 to $15, and the cost of the annual pass will increase to $40.”

John Muir’s Gravesite Will Finally Open To The Public, Under A Very Muir-like Plan.

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/26, Keraghosian) reports that the National Park Service announced Wednesday “it will begin offering van tours to Muir’s Martinez gravesite sometime in December, four times a week.” Then, “when the 1.3-acre site is fenced off, it will open to pedestrians and bicyclists as well during daytime hours, though cars will not be allowed.” Visitors will be able to enter for free.

Dark Mass Discovered At Gulf Islands National Seashore On Perdido Key.

The Pensacola \(FL\) News Journal (10/26) reports that “a dark mass discovered at Gulf Islands National Seashore on Perdido Key on Wednesday has been determined to be naturally occurring peat mass, according to a National Park Service biologist.” Officials say it is not hazardous.

Well-known LA Mountain Lion Dead, New Male Found In Santa Monica Mountains.

The Orange County \(CA\) Register (10/25, Fonseca) reports that “a young, male mountain lion has been discovered in the Santa Monica Mountains — in the same area where an older male puma was recently found dead, federal wildlife officials said.” According to Kate Kuykendall, spokeswoman for the National Park Service’s Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, “the juvenile male, dubbed P-61, was captured last week ‘on the eastern end of the Santa Monica Mountains.’” Kuykendall said in a Facebook post, “We will be sending in tissue samples to determine how, if at all, he may be related to other lions in the area.”

KCAL-TV Los Angeles (10/26) reports that “the discovery comes after P-27 — described by NPS spokesperson Kate Kuykendall as ‘the dominant male in this area for the past few years’ — was found dead of unknown causes.” P-27 is “believed to have been dead for at least one month when his remains were discovered.”

Arches Proposes Flood Mitigation Work.

The Moab \(UT\) Sun News (10/26) reports that the National Park Service has “announced that its Environmental Assessment (EA) for the Salt Wash Rehabilitation Project in Arches National Park is now available for public review and comment.”

Doctor Noted For Role In Mississippi Beach Desegregation.

The AP (10/26, Pettus) reports that “the National Register of Historic Places now includes the office of an African-American physician who faced arrests and violence as he led a nearly decade-long effort to desegregate beaches on the Mississippi Gulf Coast.” The National Park Service “recently approved the listing for the office of Dr. Gilbert Mason Sr., who died in 2006.”

Former Stone Church In Lakota Listed In National Register.

The AP (10/26) reports that the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd in Lakota has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Take Atmospheric Nuclear Test Threat ‘Literally’, North Korea Diplomat Says.

The Sydney \(AUS\) Morning Herald (10/25) reports that “the North Korean foreign minister’s warning of a possible atmospheric nuclear test over the Pacific Ocean should be taken literally, a senior North Korean official has told CNN.” Ri Yong-pil, a senior diplomat in North Korea’s Foreign Ministry, said, “The foreign minister is very well aware of the intentions of our supreme leader, so I think you should take his words literally.”

Trump Administration Looking Into CW Issue.

Marianas Variety (10/27, Villahermosa) reports that Press Secretary Kevin Bautista “on Thursday said the governor was informed in early October that due to the language of H.R. 339 and the 'rhetoric regarding outdated unemployment figures from the congressional office,' U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services proposed a substantial reduction in the CW permits for fiscal year 2018." Bautista "said Gov. Ralph Torres spoke directly with the White House through the deputy chief of staff of the president and the White House Intergovernmental Affairs Office to request their assistance on behalf of the CNMI." Bautista said the Trump Administration "is looking at the CNMI's position" so it can base policy "on accurate and up-to-date information about our economy and the needs of the CNMI."

Was Jeff Flake's Reality Show Easier To Survive Than Donald Trump's Drama?

Bustle (10/25, Lahitou) notes that in 2014, Sen. Jeff Flake and Sen. Martin Heinrich appeared in a one-off reality show called Rival Survival. The show was filmed on a tiny island of the Marshall Islands called Eru. According to the article, "Flake had visited several times before, and pitched the Discovery Channel a show featuring himself and a Democratic senator spending a week there together, using Go Pro cameras to film some of their adventures." The senators said Rival Survival was "meant to demonstrate that two members of opposing political parties could still work together."

While Some VI Residents Suffer And DSNAP Rollout Delayed, MREs Are Sitting In Limetree Bay Parking Lot.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/24) reports that "during one of his many press briefings following the storms and before Oct. 14, Governor Kenneth Mapp announced that his administration would stop distributing meals ready to eat (MREs), because residents would have soon received their Disaster Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (DSNAP) checks, which he said most Virgin Islands households would qualify for, since approval was based on the loss of power, which would have caused refrigerated items to spoil." Mapp "also said he wanted to save some MREs because the hurricane season was still active." However, "even as there's no clear date for the DSNAP rollout, there are pallets of MREs and other relief supplies sitting in the Limetree Bay Terminals east parking lot, as the governor has decided that it's best to not distribute the remaining MREs, with no good reasons as to why."

Dept. Of Education Has Received 'Hundreds Of Requests' For Student Transcripts As Families Move Stateside.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/26) reports that "the Virgin Islands Department of Education, which was already struggling to retain teachers, maintain schools badly in need of repair, and keep essential curriculum in place because of the lack of funds, has found itself in a precarious position following Hurricanes Irma and Maria, with the department receiving hundreds of requests for student transcripts, as families move to the U.S. mainland seeking better education for their children and better lives for themselves." Dept. of Education Commissioner Sharon McCollum revealed a Senate hearing Wednesday "that of the 13,000 students in the territory, only half had returned to school." According to the article, "the department expects the number to increase as more schools open, but the timeline of reopening was hard to pin as many were condemned and are in need of repair."

Hurricane Maria Caused Largest-ever US Blackout.

The Hill (10/26, Cama) reports that according to the findings of a new report by the "economic consulting firm Rhodium Group," the "blackout caused by Hurricane Maria in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands is the United States' largest in history." The firm determined "that Maria caused 1.25 billion hours of electricity supply disruption to households, the most in recorded history." CNN (10/26, Levenson) reports the "analysis largely relies on data on electricity loss provided to the Department of Energy, as well as news reports for storms prior to 2000."

CU Boulder Study Links Raton Basin Earthquakes To Oil And Gas Wastewater Injections.

In continuing coverage, the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (10/25, Lewett) reports new research by the University of Colorado Boulder's Department of Geological Sciences links small earthquakes in the Raton Basin, located in southern California and northern New Mexico, to wastewater injections by oil and gas companies. The research supports "and builds upon the findings of two previous studies linking earthquakes to the wastewater injections in Raton Basin." CU doctoral student Jenny Nakai, the lead author of the study, said, "What makes our research different is by having established a causative mechanism for the seismic activity — which is the increase in pore pressure from the area's wells."

2.1 Million Americans Use Water Wells With Hazardous Levels Of Arsenic, USGS Estimates.

PBS NewsHour (10/26, Akpan) reports that "in a new report, the U.S. Geological Survey estimates 2.1 million Americans use water wells with high levels of arsenic, a naturally occurring metal linked to cancer, cardiovascular disease, diabetes and neurological deficits." According to the article, "this analysis offers one of the first nationwide appraisals for the groundwater contaminant and spotlights regulatory gaps in the nation's water infrastructure." The USGS model, "published in Environmental Science & Technology, predicts 2.1 million people drink from wells with arsenic at greater than 10 micrograms per liter of water, which is the maximum contaminant level allowed by the Environmental Protection Agency."

USGS Maps Identify Lava Inundation Zones For Mauna Loa.

West Hawaii Today (10/26) reports that researchers at the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaiian Volcano Observatory "have produced maps that will help Hawaii County Civil Defense and other emergency managers identify people, property, and facilities at risk during future eruptions." According to the article, "using detailed geologic mapping and modeling of how a fluid (in this case, lava) responds to surface topography, USGS-HVO constructed nine maps depicting 18 inundation zones on Mauna Loa. Each zone identifies a segment of the volcano that could erupt lava and send flows downslope."

Trump Declares Opioid Crisis A National Public Health Emergency.

Coverage of President Trump's declaration of the opioid crisis as a "national public health emergency" – but not a national emergency – is widespread, leading two broadcast network newscasts. Reports are somewhat critical, with many echoing Democratic charges that the President's action does not free up significant new funding and falls short of his earlier vow to declare a national emergency. Several reports more sympathetically highlight the President's comments about his late brother, who died of complications related to alcoholism in 1981.

NBC Nightly News (10/26, lead story, 3:00, Holt) opened by reporting on the "dramatic White House announcement and pledge for action in the face of a catastrophe, literally killing communities and destroying families across the country. ... Today the Administration elevated the fight, the President declaring it a public health emergency. ... More federal help comes as welcome news to cities and towns struggling under the weight of the burden. But even now, worries that today's declaration may fall short." The CBS Evening News (10/26, lead story, 2:50, Mason) similarly reported that Trump "declared a public health emergency to fight the epidemic, but critics were quick to say that does not provide the money to get the job done." CBS' Major Garrett: "President Trump stopped short of declaring the opioid crisis a national emergency, opting instead for a public health emergency declaration. It will streamline some access to addiction treatment, but provides few new resources."

ABC World News Tonight (10/26, story 2, 3:50, Muir) reported that Trump is "declaring war on the nation's opioid crisis...offering a very personal story. But the President was careful with his words, calling it a 'public health emergency,' and why the words he chose could determine how much money the government will spend to fight this." ABC's Cecilia Vega: "The declaration means patients in rural areas can reach doctors and obtain prescriptions to treat addiction by phone or Internet. Unemployed workers who lost their jobs because of addiction will receive job training and assistance. And it lifts bureaucratic red tape, allowing more funding for treatment centers in all 50 states. But the President stopped short of declaring a sweeping national emergency, something he has repeatedly promised."

WTOC-TV Savannah, GA (10/26, 4:12 p.m. EDT) reported that Trump declared "an opioid crisis, a national public health emergency. The President announced this afternoon that the Administration's goal is to reduce addiction to prescription pain medication and drugs like heroin and fentanyl. The declaration gives states the ability to shift funds away from other medical issues such as HIV, diabetes and even maternal care to provide more opioid treatment." Hundreds of similar reports aired across the country. Some typical examples include WYFF-TV Greenville, SC (10/26, 4:09 p.m. EDT), WGAL-TV Lancaster, PA (10/26, 4:02 p.m. EDT), and WPLG-TV Miami (10/26, 4:08 p.m. EDT).

The AP (10/26, Colvin, Johnson) reports, "In ringing and personal terms," Trump "pledged to 'overcome addiction in America,' declaring the opioid crisis a nationwide public health emergency and announcing new steps to combat what he described as the worst drug crisis in US history." Trump's declaration "will allow the government to redirect resources, including toward expanded access to medical services in rural areas. But it won't bring new dollars to fight a scourge that kills nearly 100 Americans a day." Reuters (10/26, Abutaleb, Mason) also reports that Trump "stopp[ed] short of a national emergency declaration he promised months ago that would have freed up more federal money," and as he "told Fox Business Network he would do" earlier this week.

USA Today (10/26, Korte) reports that Trump "tried to rally the nation to pay attention to a growing epidemic that claimed 64,000 American lives last year, and advocated for a sustained national effort to end to the addiction crisis," but "stopped short of declaring a more sweeping state of national emergency." The New York Times (10/26, Davis) reports that the President appeared at "an elaborate and emotional ceremony in the East Room of the White House, attended by families affected by opioid abuse, members of Congress and administration officials," but "his directive does not on its own release any additional funds...and the president did not request any, although his aides said he would soon do so."

The Los Angeles Times (10/26, Levey) reports under the headline "Trump Issues Limited Emergency Declaration To Combat The Opioid Epidemic" that Trump "has been under pressure for months to step up the federal government's response to the drug epidemic and has been promising since the summer that he would declare an emergency." The Hill (10/26, Roubein, Hellmann) reports the move "won't free up much additional federal funding," but will allow Acting HHS Secretary Hargan "to loosen certain regulations that he otherwise would not be able to."

The Washington Free Beacon (10/26, Lehman) reports that the designation will also "permit several medical policy shifts. It will expand telemedicine services, making addressing substance abuse in rural areas easier. And it will allow the shifting of resources to better address substance abuse among those with HIV/AIDS." The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Radnofsky) reports that Trump also said the Administration might bring lawsuits against unspecified "bad actor" companies, but it was not immediately clear what steps might be taken. Purdue Pharma, which sells OxyContin, said earlier this week that the US attorney's office in Connecticut was investigating the company over the drug.

The Washington Post (10/26, Johnson, Wagner) reports that the President "invoked the story of his late brother, Fred Trump, who died of complications related to alcoholism. The president credited his brother for warning him of the effects of drinking and said a concerted advertising campaign could keep people from becoming addicted to opioids and other drugs." Politico (10/26, McCaskill) reports, "Trump said Fred would frequently tell him 'don't drink' and 'don't smoke.' He said he listened because he respected his brother." The President said, "And to this day I've never had a drink, and I have no longing for it. I have no interest in it. To this day, I've never had a cigarette." Townhall (10/26, Rousselle) also reports Trump "said that due to his brother's warnings, he has never had a drink of alcohol nor has he smoked a cigarette, and he thinks that the best way to stem the crisis is to make it so that people never take these drugs to begin with."

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News Special Report (10/26) that the President delivered "a long and heartfelt speech," during which he "took a moment to speak passionately and personally about his older brother's struggle with alcoholism and his death at a young age. The President echoed the message many healthcare providers and elected officials say which is that the best way to stop people from dying from overdose and drug abuse is by not starting the first place."

Some GOP members of the House expressed their support on Twitter. Rep. Ken Calvert (R-CA) tweeted, "I agree with @POTUS, the opioid crisis is a public health emergency. Let's focus the efforts of all levels of gov't to tackle this epidemic." Rep. Neil Dunn (R-FL) tweeted, "I commend President Trump's call to action on the opioid epidemic." Rep. Chuck Fleischmann (R-TN) tweeted, "Opioids are taking lives & action is needed." Rep. Erik Paulsen (R-MN) tweeted, "The opioid epidemic affects communities across the US, including our own in #MN03. Glad the Admin is joining Congress to help those in need." Rep. Jason Smith (R-MO) tweeted, "In the last year, we lost 175 Americans per day to #opioid overdoses. Proud to support @realDonaldTrump in fighting this epidemic."

The Washington Free Beacon (10/26, Caralle) reports that before the President spoke, the First Lady said in opening remarks that "she looks forward to working more with these individuals and families and she knows there is a lot of work to do." The First Lady said, "This can happen to any of us. Drug addiction can take your friends, neighbors, or your family. ... Which is why my husband and his Administration has dedicated itself to combating this health crisis by using every resource available."

The New York Times (10/26) editorializes, "President Trump's brother died an alcoholic, so it's hard to dispute that Mr. Trump understands the horrors of addiction. But in what was billed as a major speech," the President "demonstrated that he has not grasped what's needed to combat the opioid problem and, more important, the ways in which his own policies impede recovery for millions of Americans. ... It is still not clear who will lead the response to the epidemic, since Mr. Trump has yet to appoint a number of officials who could do so." The Times concludes, "As deaths from addiction escalate," the President is "still just in the talking stages." In its editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/26) also approvingly highlights Trump's comments about his brother, and writes that the opioid crisis is a highly complex problem that can only be mitigated through innovation, not just through more federal spending.

In an editorial, the San Francisco Chronicle (10/26) writes that President Trump public health emergency declaration "has value beyond high-profile words," as his signature "will allow states and cities to redirect money from other sources and loosens laws and regulations in the drug fight." However, the move "falls short" because "there are no new funds for drug treatment, the biggest gap in efforts to repair the damage done by pain-killer drugs that are fatally abused." The Chronicle says Trump's declaration "begins the battle, but declaring a crisis doesn't solve it."

The Washington Examiner (10/27) editorializes that President Trump's plan to address the opioid crisis "doesn't rely on a magic bullet or even a handful of big policies," but rather reflects a "conservative mindset" as the Administration "has proposed more than a dozen small policies."

Physician Lloyd Sederer writes for US News & World Report (10/26, Sederer) that President Trump declared the opioid crisis a public health emergency "after considerable delay," and that is "yet another illustration of the administration's continual problem with turning words into action." Sederer argues the "cruel paradox about any grant money that may derive from a declaration of an opioid public health emergency is that the White House, HHS and the Republican Congress have been dead set on reducing funding for Medicaid, a principal payer for addiction and mental health services."

Facebook reaction was mostly negative, with most posting about the issue saying that Trump did not go far enough. Bloomberg News (10/26, Talev, Hopkins, Edney), the Washington Times (10/26, Howell), Roll Call (10/26, Rahman), and the Daily Caller (10/26, Pfeiffer) also report on the President's action and remarks.

The Washington Post (10/25, Keating) has an online interactive graphic about how common certain "deadly street opioids like 'elephant tranquilizer' have become," and the New York Times (10/26, Ugwu) reports on the online publication of an opioid overdose video "on the Facebook page of the Volusia County Sheriff's Office in Florida on Tuesday." By Thursday evening, the post had been viewed more than 50,000 times.

Democrats Say More Funding Is Needed. The Washington Examiner (10/26, King) reports, "Congressional Democrats urged President Trump to commit to more funding to fight the opioid epidemic, charging that his emergency declaration Thursday isn't enough." House Minority Leader Pelosi said, "It is deeply concerning that this declaration, which comes a full three months after the President's Commission on the Opioid Crisis' report, fails to authorize federal funding to help those Americans locked in a life-or-death struggle with opioid addiction." Sen. Maggie Hassan "called for additional funding to combat the epidemic," and said that HHS should negotiate lower prices for overdose reversal drug naloxone.

Sen. Joe Manchin said on CNN's The Lead (10/26), "I'm ground zero, West Virginia, I got more deaths per capita, more people addicted per capita. When sometimes the money gets divided up, it goes on population. ... This is like fighting a war. You have your soldiers on the front line fighting. You ration out all the bullets to all the bullets equally and you've got soldiers not fighting, the guys on the front line run out of the bullets."

The Hill (10/26, Beavers) reports New Hampshire Sens. Maggie Hassan and Jeanne Shaheen "are calling on President Trump to pledge financial resources to combat the widespread opioid crisis." Shaheen said Thursday on MSNBC's "Andrea Mitchell Reports," "I'm pleased he's designated this as a public health emergency, but I really want to see the resources" needed to fight addiction. Hassan called the health emergency a "first step," saying the lawmakers "will continue to push for real dollars to accompany this declaration so we can get people the treatment they so desperately need."

Rep. Cheri Bustos (D-IL) tweeted, "I welcome this announcement from @POTUS – but it's overdue, and we need to do more." Rep. Gerry Connolly (D-VA) tweeted, "Every day, we are losing more than 91 of our friends and loved ones to an opioid overdose. This is unacceptable and we must do better." Rep. Gene Green (D-TX) tweeted, "In order to confront the #opioidcrisis more funding and a comprehensive solution is absolutely necessary."

Rep. Nita Lowey (D-NY) tweeted, "@POTUS's announcement is a weak half-measure, insufficient to meet #OpioidEpidemic scale." Rep. Michelle Lujan Grisham (D-NM) tweeted, "The President finally called the opioid epidemic what it is: a public health emergency." Rep. Frank Pallone (D-NJ) tweeted, "President Trump's declaration is essentially meaningless w/out new $$$ to fight the opioid crisis." Rep. Chellie Pingree (D-ME) tweeted, "While I appreciate that @POTUS has finally taken a formal step, his #opioid declaration is short on specifics & lacks critical funding."

Melania Trump Taking Role In Fighting Opioid Addiction. USA Today (10/26, Puente) reports Melania Trump was front and center at the White House opioid event Thursday, "another indication that drug addiction will be her leading cause as first lady." While President Trump spoke for longer, Melania "spoke first and she was more focused in her brief remarks, sharing the stories of people she's met in recent weeks about how drug addiction hurts children and destroys families." USA Today says the first lady "praised her husband for declaring a public health emergency and directing the federal government to do everything to combat the opioid crisis."

Sessions: "People Should Say No To Drug Use." Reuters (10/26, Lynch) reports that during a question-and-answer session at the Heritage Foundation on Thursday, Attorney General Sessions "equated the opioid epidemic to a personal failing by many Americans who cannot 'say no' to drugs on Thursday, and he said that marijuana could be serving as a gateway to the problem." Sessions said, "People should say no to drug use. They have got to protect themselves first." Benjy Sarlin of NBC News tweeted, "'Just say no' makes little sense as an opioid crisis slogan, where people often start for clear medical reasons."

Holding Says DEA Did Not Express Concerns About Controversial Drug Legislation. McClatchy (10/26, Murphy) reports that Rep. George Holding (R-NC) says that "no one from the Drug Enforcement Administration expressed concerns to him about a now controversial drug bill that he co-sponsored twice before it became law." Holding co-sponsored the Ensuring Patient Access and Effective Drug Enforcement Act in 2013 and 2014, and though neither became law, "a Senate bill with the same name – and only small changes – unanimously passed both chambers of Congress in 2016 and was signed into law" by President Obama. The bill is now "in the spotlight after an explosive report from The Washington Post and '60 Minutes'" that said the measure made it harder for the DEA to stop illegal opioid sales. Holding said that the legislation was intended to clarify previous law.

Insys Therapeutics Founder Arrested In Illegal Opioid Distribution Case. USA Today (10/26, Wiles) reports that John Kapoor, the founder and majority owner of Insys Therapeutics and "one of Arizona's richest men," was arrested Thursday and "charged with the illegal distribution of a fentanyl spray intended for cancer patients and for violating anti-kickback laws." The CBS Evening News (10/26, story 2, 3:00, Mason) reported that Kapoor is "the most prominent pharmaceutical executive to be criminally charged in the opioid crisis after a lengthy investigation by federal prosecutors in Boston."

CDC: Overdose Deaths Doubled Over Last Decade, Fentanyl Drove Latest Spike. The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Whalen) reports preliminary data from the CDC show deaths linked to fentanyl and other synthetic opioids drove a 21% jump in annual drug-overdose deaths in the 12 months from January 2016 to January 2017. Carfentanil drove soaring overdose deaths in some parts of the country, including Ohio, Michigan and Florida.

House Passes Budget Resolution, Setting Stage For Tax Cuts.

In a story that generated no coverage on the major network newscasts, the Los Angeles Times

(10/26, Mascaro) reports "House Republicans on Thursday gave final approval to a 2018 GOP budget resolution, allowing for a $1.5-trillion deficit increase that sets the stage for President Trump's tax cuts." The House's "largely party-line vote was 216-212, with 20 Republicans joining all Democrats to oppose." According to the Washington Free Beacon (10/26, Meyer), meanwhile, the plan "balances within a decade, achieves a $9 billion surplus, and is projected to increase GDP growth by 2.6 percent." Politico (10/26, Scholtes, Bade) says that "by passing the measure...Republicans unlocked procedural powers that allow the Senate to pass a tax bill with just 51 votes – and evade Democratic filibusters," but the AP (10/26, Taylor) warns that Republicans' "legislative landscape is strewn with land mines...as GOP tax-writers pick winners and losers among interest groups, business sectors and rank-and-file voters."

The New York Times (10/26, Kaplan) also cautions that "overhauling the tax code is an exceedingly difficult task, as evidenced by the decades that have passed since it was last achieved." Moreover, "in the first year of Mr. Trump's presidency, Republican lawmakers already failed in their long-promised quest to repeal the Affordable Care Act, an outcome that makes the tax effort even more critical to the party's fortunes."

Along those lines, Reuters (10/26, Morgan, Cornwell) reports Republicans are "looking for a signature achievement to tout as the 2018 congressional election year approaches," and USA Today (10/26, Jackson) that they "have rejected rhetoric that characterized the plan as a giveaway to the rich, saying the final details would show how families across the country would benefit." As the New York Post (10/26, Schultz) reports, Democrats yesterday "blasted the plan as 'the billionaires' budget' that will roll back Medicaid and Medicare spending to deliver tax relief to the wealthiest Americans."

The Washington Post (10/26, Debonis) reports that "congressional tax writers have been quietly crafting the legislation behind closed doors for months," but "Thursday's vote formally kicks off the bill-writing process." The Washington Times (10/26, Sherfinski) notes "Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady, the House's top tax-writer, said the plan is now to release a tax bill next Wednesday, Nov. 1, and start marking it up in committee the following week." The White House "cheered the vote," with Press Secretary Sarah Sanders saying, "President Trump has always made cutting taxes for hard-working American families, creating more jobs for American workers, and simplifying the rigged and burdensome tax code a priority, and he looks forward to further cooperation with Congress to advance the administration's pro-growth and pro-jobs agenda." Roll Call (10/26) notes that the President also "called the adoption 'big news' in a Twitter post."

The Wall Street Journal (10/26, Rubin) also reports the story under the headline "House Approves Budget Plan, Paving Way For Tax Action," and The Hill (10/26, Elis, Marcos) notes that "most of the 20 [GOP] defectors were centrists hailing from populous states that could stand to lose from eliminating the state and local tax deduction." They "included Reps. Dan Donovan (NY), John Faso (NY), Brian Fitzpatrick (PA), John Katko (NY), Pete King (NY), Leonard Lance (NJ), Frank LoBiondo (NJ), Tom MacArthur (NJ), Chris Smith (NJ), Elise Stefanik (NY), Claudia Tenney (NY) and Lee Zeldin (NY)."

Steve Hayes of the Weekly Standard said on Fox News' Special Report (10/26), "The real question is what happens between now and November 13, if that is, in fact, the date the House votes on this. This is when all the details are going to be pounded out, not only in negotiations on Capitol Hill, but also in negotiations with the White House and, of course, with President Trump. Will he tweet about something that Republicans have in the package that he decides later he doesn't like that could potentially derail the process as we have seen it unfold so far?"

A.B. Stoddard of Real Clear Politics said on Fox News' Special Report (10/26), "I've spoken to so many Republicans in the Senate and the House...this week and I have not found one who is doubtful. They all say, 'We are going to this. We are really, really up for this this time. This is going to happen.' Then, I say, 'How?'," and they say, 'I have no idea'"

Cornyn: Senate May Vote On Tax Reform On Thanksgiving Week. Bloomberg News (10/26, Wasson, Litvan) reports "senators may have to change their Thanksgiving plans – they may wind up staying in Washington at least part of the week to pass a tax-cut bill, Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn said Thursday." Said Cornyn, "We need to get the tax bill out of the Senate by Thanksgiving."

Key Questions Remain Unresolved As Deadline To Offer Tax Bill Approaches. A front-page story in the Washington Post (10/26, A1, Debonis, Paletta) reports that GOP leaders and the White House are under pressure "to resolve major disagreements" about tax reform legislation "before a Wednesday deadline to introduce a bill." Lawmakers "have not resolved basic questions about how the tax overhaul would affect the wealthy, the middle class or lower-income earners."

Still unresolved were several questions: whether the legislation would moderate the expected benefits for the wealthy; whether it would cap or eliminate popular middle-class tax breaks like the state and local tax deduction or the tax benefit of 401(k) retirement plans; and how dramatically it would expand a child-care tax credit that helps working-class families. Also on the table were several critical questions about how the corporate tax code would change."

Trump Decides Against Full Release Of Remaining JFK Files.

All three broadcast networks covered the partial release of the remaining files on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (10/26, lead story, 3:25, Muir) reported that while President Trump on Wednesday tweeted that the remaining classified JFK assassination files would be released today, possibly providing details about Lee Harvey Oswald's trip to Mexico and his visits to the embassies of Russia and Cuba, Trump on Thursday "announc[ed] some of the secret documents scheduled to be released today will not be, because they pose a danger to national security." Roughly 2,800 files were still set to be released Thursday night, and the other files will be re-examined. The decision to withhold some of the documents "is now going to add more fuel to all those conspiracy theories." Chip Reid reported on the CBS Evening News (10/26, story 4, 1:05, Mason) that CBS has been told the reason some of the files will be subject to further review is that "numerous agencies, including the CIA and the FBI, have lodged protests" claiming those files "could endanger national security or law enforcement operations." However, NBC Nightly News (10/26, story 3, 2:05, Holt) showed Kennedy historian Philip Shenon saying, "We've heard about chaos on this issue the last couple of weeks with agencies going to the President to appeal. I will say, the government has had 25 years to prepare for this release. You got to believe it should have been handled in a more orderly fashion."

The Washington Post (10/25, Shapira) reports that "the papers could also reveal more about the careers and activities of Watergate burglars E. Howard Hunt and James McCord, both of whom were longtime CIA operatives," but "experts do not believe the documents will contain information to shake the Warren Commission's conclusion that Oswald, a troubled former Marine who'd temporarily defected to the Soviet Union at one point, acted as the lone gunman in Dealey Plaza." The Post adds that "it is not clear how many documents scheduled for release Thursday will be new and never seen before, and how many will be previously released but partially redacted files that will now contain fewer blanked-out sections."

CNN (10/26, Diamond, Liptak) reports that President Trump "wanted more of the documents" released, but "when the final requests from government agencies hit his desk on Thursday, there wasn't enough time to go through the hundreds of records the agencies wanted to keep secret, two US officials said." According to CNN, "as the deadline ticked away, Trump was confronted with a choice: release all of the 3,100 records without any redactions, or accept the redactions of intelligence and law enforcement agencies and release 2,800 of those documents." Trump "agreed to the second option, while also requiring agencies to conduct a secondary review of the information they believed should be redacted within 180 days," but he "was still miffed by his decision. 'He was unhappy with the level of redactions,' a White House official said, adding that Trump believed the agencies were 'not meeting the spirit of the law.'"

Media Selects Eclectic Revelations To Highlight In Early Analysis. Late on Thursday and into Friday morning, the media began to digest the documents that were released. Given the volume of the documents, the media selection of items to highlight tends to be fairly scattershot. As of their publication times, media outlets had not uncovered anything it was tagging as a significant revelation about either the JFK assassination or the era's politics. Among those items drawing media attention:

The Dallas Morning News (10/26, Tarrant) reports that an "initial review of the thousands of pages of material – including FBI interviews, reports of CIA activity and other official but long secret records – surfaced household names of the era," from Marilyn Monroe to "mobster Sam Giancana and, over and over, John F. Kennedy, whose death in Dallas spelled an end to an age of American innocence." However, the documents "reviewed late Thursday did offer significant information related to the investigation into Kennedy's murder, the figures involved in it, and a Cold-War era defined by the government's fight against communism as well as its fear of the burgeoning civil rights movement."

CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (10/26) reported that an initial examination of the released files shows there is a record of Oswald "calling a KGB agent while he was in Mexico City a few weeks before the assassination, asking about something going on in Washington, D.C. This seems to have been tied to his attempt to get a Russian visa or a Cuban visa, neither of which he obtained.”

Fox News (10/26, Chamberlain) reports that then-FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover “said it was ‘inexcusable’ that” Oswald “was shot and killed before he could be fully interviewed.” Hoover “made the comment in what appeared to be a dictated aide-memoire dated on the afternoon of Nov. 24, 1963, hours after Oswald was shot and killed by Jack Ruby,” a document that was among those released on Thursday. The Guardian \(UK\) (10/27, Yuhas, Dart) reports that the documents reveal “that the FBI had warned Dallas police about a threat to kill Lee Harvey Oswald, and claims that Soviet officials feared an ‘irresponsible’ US general could launch a missile strike in the wake of the crisis.”

The Guardian \(UK\) (10/27, Yuhas) reports that Hoover wrote that the FBI had warned Dallas police of a death threat against Oswald, “according to a memo by director J Edgar Hoover, but the police failed to protect him.” Hoover wrote on November 24, 1963, “Last night we received a call in our Dallas office from a man talking in a calm voice and saying he was a member of a committee organized to kill Oswald. We at once notified the chief of police and he assured us Oswald would be given sufficient protection. This morning we called the chief of police again warning of the possibility of some effort against Oswald and again he assured us adequate protection would be given. However, this was not done.”

USA Today (10/26, Editors, Today) runs a list of “highlights,” including: “There’s a 413-page document that details everyone that Secret Service was watching between March and December 1963, including Puerto Rican nationals, Klansmen and others. Each had a description of why they were angry at the president and their threat level. The document is a window into how Secret Service viewed potential threats.”

Cohn Tells Lawmakers White House Considering Gas Tax Hike To Pay For Infrastructure Plan.

The Washington Post (10/26, Halsey) reports “the White House is revisiting an increase in the federal gas tax to pay for infrastructure improvements President Trump promised to deliver on the campaign trail.” The Post adds that the “news was conveyed to House members Wednesday in a meeting by...Gary Cohn.” Says “a GOP House staff member familiar with the long-standing resistance to a gas tax hike by many” Hill Republicans, “Probably whatever we end up being able to do in Washington, it’s going to take administration leadership to get out there and push for it.”

Labor: Solar And Wind Energy, As Well As Oil And Gas Sectors, To Spark Jobs Bonanza.

The AP (10/26, Biesecker) reports that while the President “pledges to revive the nation’s struggling coal mines...new data from the federal agency that tracks employment growth suggests blue-collar job seekers would do better to look to clean energy.” According to “projections” by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, “the top growing job classification over the next nine years will be solar photovoltaic installers,” which “are expected to double by 2026.” Moreover, “wind turbine service technicians came in No. 2, with those jobs projected to grow by more than 96 percent.” The AP also reports that “employment is expected to continue to boom in the oil and gas sector.”

Studies: Climate Change Could Result In Larger, More Rapid Than Projected Sea Level Rises.

According to three new studies, climate change “could lead to sea level rises that are larger, and happen more rapidly, than previously thought,” the Washington Post (10/26, Mooney) reports. One study “suggests that previous high end projections for sea level rise by the year 2100 – a little over three feet – could be too low, substituting numbers as high as six feet at the extreme if the world continues to burn large volumes of fossil fuels throughout the century.” In another, a team of scientists in the Southern hemisphere detected “ancient iceberg ‘plough marks’ etched deep into the seafloor of Pine Island Bay,” which researchers believe “signal a very rapid retreat of Pine Island over roughly a thousand years.” A third study projected “future sea level rise in light of recent science suggesting that Antarctic ice in key regions could collapse relatively rapidly.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Words, Not Action From Mr. Trump On Opioids.” The New York Times (10/26) editorializes,

"President Trump's brother died an alcoholic, so it's hard to dispute that Mr. Trump understands the horrors of addiction. But in what was billed as a major speech," the President "demonstrated that he has not grasped what's needed to combat the opioid problem and, more important, the ways in which his own policies impede recovery for millions of Americans. ... It is still not clear who will lead the response to the epidemic, since Mr. Trump has yet to appoint a number of officials who could do so." The Times concludes, "As deaths from addiction escalate," the President is "still just in the talking stages."

"Powerless Puerto Rico." A New York Times (10/26) editorial says the Whitefish Energy's contract to restore power in Puerto Rico undermines confidence that island's power grid will be rebuilt quickly.

Washington Post.

"Looks Like Congress Is Bowing To The NRA Once Again." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/26) says the NRA's signals that "it was open to restrictions on the kind of devices the Las Vegas gunman attached to legal semiautomatic weapons to create the rapid fire that killed 58 people," were "nothing more than a gambit and, sad to say, it looks as if Congress is once again falling into line." After "the horror of those killed and wounded in Las Vegas receded slightly from the headlines," the NRA "announced its opposition to legislation that would ban the production and sale of bump stocks" and "it didn't take long for [House Speaker] Ryan to get the message, backing away from legislation supported by 20 House members from both parties in favor of a supposed regulatory fix."

"Gillespie's Ads Are Poisonous To Virginia And The Nation." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/26) blasts Virginia Republican gubernatorial candidate Ed Gillespie for airing an ad attacking Democratic candidate Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam for backing Gov. Terry McAuliffe's restoring of "voting and other rights" for felons, saying the spot "is in keeping with the recent thrust of" the Republican's "campaign, which, taking a page from the Trump playbook, has been more about scaring and dividing Virginians than inspiring and uniting them." The Post says, "Once known as a pragmatist and a centrist, Mr. Gillespie increasingly has been turning in his political advertising to President Trump's brand of divisive, scaremongering politics. It's a poisonous strategy for the nation and for Virginia."

"Could This 2-Month-Old's Death Have Been Prevented?" A Washington Post (10/26, Board) editorial.

Wall Street Journal.

"The Opioid Puzzle." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/26) approvingly highlights President Trump's comments about his brother when he declared the opioid crisis a national public health emergency, and writes that the opioid crisis is a highly complex problem that can only be mitigated through innovation, not just through more federal spending.

"Puerto Rico's Backlog." A Wall Street Journal (10/26) editorial faults the Jones Act for delaying the delivery of relief supplies to Puerto Rico and calls on Congress and the White House to support legislation to waive or permanently repeal the law.

"A Talcum Powder Tort Blowout." The Wall Street Journal (10/26) editorializes in favor of a judge's decision to dismiss a $417 million verdict against Johnson & Johnson in a case brought by a woman who claimed her ovarian cancer had been caused by using the company's talcum powder. A Los Angeles jury in August awarded the plaintiff $70 million in compensatory and $347 million in punitive damages, but on appeal, California superior court judge Maren Nelson dismissed the verdict, citing several reasons, including insufficient evidence. The Journal lauds the decision as a defeat for the torts bar.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "President Trump's approval rating is at a new low, or maybe I should say at a new, new low. According to the latest Fox News poll, President Trump has a 38 percent approval rating. And only 6 percent on Rotten Tomatoes. It's very low. Turns out, bringing the country to the brink of nuclear war while golfing every day isn't playing as well with the voters as he'd hoped. ... The poll is especially painful because it comes from Fox News. And they love Trump. This is the lowest rating Trump has ever been given by Fox. The good news is the President still has a very high opinion of himself. And that's all that really matters."

Stephen Colbert: "So why would this tiny company located in the woods of Montana win a massive contract to fix Puerto Rico? Well, it didn't hurt that Whitefish Energy is based in Whitefish, Montana, the hometown of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, and that Zinke's son had a summer job at one of the company's construction sites. ... It turns out it was a no-bid contract. No competition. None. That's like the last guy on Earth naming himself 'People's Sexiest Man Alive.'"

Stephen Colbert: "This week, on Twitter, Vice writer Eve Peyser compiled a list of all the words Ivanka [Trump] has used incorrectly, and it's a real fortnight. For example, when talking about her and Jared's morning routine, she said, 'My husband has incredibly long hours, so I try to keep mine on a relative basis.' You think she'd know how to use 'relative,' because her who career is on 'a relative basis.'"

Trevor Noah: "Congress unanimously passed a law – yeah, I said it – unanimously passed a law greatly cutting the DEA's power to go after these shady distributors. If you're wondering why would Congress pass a law helping to protect drug companies in the middle of a drug crisis? Because of the thing they're addicted to: money."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that President Trump did an interview with Lou Dobbs on Fox News last night. At one point, Dobbs said Trump is one of the most loved and respected Presidents in history. Even Trump was like, 'Now, that's fake news. I mean, that can't be true.'"

Seth Meyers: "Fox News host Lou Dobbs interviewed President Trump last night and told Trump he is, quote, 'one of the most loved and respected Presidents in history.' I don't know about that, but he's definitely in the top 45."

Seth Meyers: "White House Chief of Staff John Kelly reportedly told the Trump Administration that if it were up to him, the number of refugees admitted into the US would be between zero and one. Said Betsy DeVos, 'So, 13?'"

Conan O'Brien: "Today, President Trump had the JFK files declassified. Yeah. Trump said, 'I can take the class out of anything.'"

National Park Service Releases Review Of Chimney Tops 2 Fire.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) (8/31) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "issued an independent review on Thursday of the Chimney Tops 2 Fire that burned 11,410 acres in Great Smoky Mountains National Park in November 2016 and merged with other area fires, which caused 14 deaths and millions of dollars in damage in the Gatlinburg area." The report "outlines the origins and growth of the Chimney Tops 2 Fire within the boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park." Zinke said, "While visiting the Great Smoky Mountains National Park last week, I met with park staff, local officials, and members of the Gatlinburg community that were impacted by this devastating fire. Based on those meetings and my review of the report, I am satisfied that it accurately describes the unusual and unexpected conditions that resulted in the largest fire in the park's history and a series of other fires around the park, which caused so much devastation to the community of Gatlinburg. I am committed to leading efforts to ensure that the National Park Service, along with other land management agencies, state and local governments take the lessons learned from this horrific fire and make changes that will help us prevent tragedies like this in the future"

The AP (8/31, Mattise) reports that that the review said "drought-stricken Great Smoky Mountains National Park was not prepared for last year's catastrophic fire, and climate change is among the factors that will likely make conditions that led to the disaster the 'new normal' for the park, according to a federal review released Thursday." At a news conference, National Park Service officials "said it was impossible to predict that hurricane-force winds around 90 mph would blow the fire from the remote, rough terrain of the park into the Gatlinburg area in November." Zinke said via webcam at the news conference, "No one expected a tragedy of this scale 5.5 miles from the city to occur."

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (8/31, Ahillen, Lakin) reports that "because park rangers had never seen a fire on such a scale and amid such conditions, they failed to anticipate how quickly the flames could spread and how soon the blaze could erupt out of control, the review found." The report "found no wrongdoing by park crews, terming their actions 'commensurate within their knowledge and experience in fighting wildland fires in the region,' but urged 'enhanced preparedness on fire condition assessments and adherence to National Park Service wildland fire program(s) and policies.”

WBIR-TV Knoxville, TN (8/31, Hoar, Barclay, Erickson) reports “park officials said they learned they needed better communication between first responders, the park and police.” The NPS will be “working to upgrade the GSMNP’s radio communications system through a $2.5 million initiative funded through the Friends of the Smokies partnership.” The measure will “also issue portable radios and protective equipment to seven neighboring fire departments.”

Groups Gird For Legal Battle Over Monuments.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (8/31, O’Donoghue) reports that “although there’s been no formal announcement from the White House on what may happen to monument boundaries based on recommendations from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, a coalition of conservation groups Thursday said it’s readying a lawsuit.” Bryan Sybert, the foundation’s executive director, “moderated a teleconference hosted by the foundation on the looming announcement by the White House and the fear that monuments, particularly in Utah, will see significant boundary reductions.” He said, “The Conservation Lands Foundation and its partners are prepared to make every effort possible to ensure that our national monuments remain as they are. We are prepared to pursue that protection and defense in the courts if necessary.”

Bruce Babbitt Blasts Asarco Over Request For Ironwood Monument Land. The Arizona Daily Star (8/31, Davis) reports that “the former U.S. interior secretary and Arizona governor who helped create Ironwood Forest National Monument is blasting Asarco for seeking the removal of 11,000 acres from the preserve to mine copper.” The company is “simply trying to take advantage of a favorable political climate during the Trump administration, said Bruce Babbitt in an interview this week.” The article says that “while Asarco’s formal request was to modify the monument’s boundaries, Babbitt accused the company of framing its request in a way to make a case for its elimination.”

The Antiquities Act Is Not A Blank Check To Create Federal Land. For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (8/31, Hawley, Contributor), Erin Hawley, a legal fellow at the Independent Women’s Forum, argues that “the text and legislative history of the Antiquities Act...make clear the statute was not intended to set aside hundreds of millions of acres of federal land and water.” Hawley lauds Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for taking “the act’s limitations seriously” in his report following the review of national monument designations. Hawley concludes that the law’s “text includes clear internal limitations and the Trump administration is right to review prior designations for executive largess.”

Why Trump Should Leave National Monuments Alone. The San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (8/31) editorializes that “President Donald Trump has taken a monumentally bad idea and made it worse by shrouding it in secrecy.” The editorial adds that President Trump should “let go of his misguided notion” to reduce “the size of three or more national monuments” in order to open “them up to logging, grazing and oil and gas drilling.”

Montana Watchdog Group Sues For Records Related To Trump Official’s Calls To Alaska Senators.

The Alaska Dispatch News (8/31, Herz) reports that the Montana-based Western Values Project is suing Interior Department “to accelerate its request for records connected to reported threats to Alaska’s U.S. senators from a top Trump administration official.” The watchdog group is “asking the department for records and correspondence related to calls that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke made to Alaska’s two U.S. senators, Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan, both Republicans, amid the health care debate in July.” The Interior Department’s inspector general “on Tuesday said it had dropped a probe into the calls after Murkowski and Sullivan declined to cooperate.”

Court Stops Bid To Nix Obama Energy Rules.

The Daily Caller (8/31, Pearce) reports the US District Court of Northern California has blocked the Interior Department’s postponement of an Obama-era rule regulating royalties paid by companies operating on federal and tribal lands. Secretary Ryan Zinke had started repealing the Consolidated Federal Oil and Gas and Federal and Indian Coal Valuation Reform Rule to replace it with “more workable” regulations, but the court ruled the department violated the Administrative Procedure Act when it postponed the rule after it was in effect and did not seek public comment on its repeal. However, E&E Publishing (8/31) reports that Magistrate Judge Elizabeth Laporte did not vacate the delay because the agency’s more recent move to completely repeal the rule, which did go through notice and comment, takes effect on September 6.

Colorado’s Biggest Methane Emitter May Get A Discount.

The High Country \(CO\) News (8/31, Shogren) reports that “as Arch Coal struggles to survive in a declining coal market, it’s asking the federal government to reduce the royalties it pays on some of the coal it extracts.” Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper and some local officials “want to make methane capture a condition of the royalty cut.” The Bureau of Land Management is “poised to cut Arch’s royalties from 8 percent to 5 percent for a part of the mine where the geology makes extracting coal technically challenging and thus more expensive.” Hickenlooper has given “his support for the discount,” but he “wants the mine to commit to developing a strategy to capture its methane.” The article says that “although the BLM sought Hickenlooper’s input, the agency says the final decision, which it expects to release within a few weeks, is its own and it won’t require capturing methane as a condition of the discount.” Courtney Whiteman, a BLM spokeswoman, said, “For us, it’s a different issue and it’s not related to the royalty reduction.”

BLM Hands Over Land Patent To Virgin's 'Most Scenic Track'.

The St. George \(UT\) News (8/31, Reina) reports that "in a brief ceremony held at the Virgin BMX Track located at the foot of the Kolob Terrace section of Zion National Park Wednesday evening, the Bureau of Land Management officially handed over the land patent for the 10-acre parcel of land the track sits on to the town of Virgin." Brian Tritle, St. George Field Office manager with the BLM, said, "This came about by a grassroots effort, you know, a grassroots interest in riding BMX bikes. It was a group of riders who had a dream and said, 'Hey let's see if we can get a real track built.'"

Trial Date Set For Cliven Bundy, 6 Others In Nevada Standoff.

The AP (8/31, Ritter) reports that "an October date was set on Thursday for the trial of Nevada cattleman and state's rights figure Cliven Bundy and six other defendants in an armed standoff that stopped government agents from rounding up Bundy cattle near Bunkerville in 2014." Jury selection will begin "Oct. 10 in Las Vegas for Bundy, two of his sons and four other men, Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro decided." The trial will "include two defendants who were released to home detention after their recent retrial ended with no verdicts on assault on a federal officer and related firearm charges, but acquittal on other charges."

Scheme To Kill Nevada's Wild Horses Built On Greed: Opinion.

In an op-ed for the Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (8/31, Roe), Charlotte Roe, director of the Wild Horse and Burro Project for In Defense of Animals, opposes sending wild horses to slaughterhouses. According to Roe, "this despicable plan was conceived through propaganda, deception and what conservative columnist David Horowitz terms a takeover by the cattle lobby." Roe urges readers to press lawmakers "to maintain the ban on selling wild equines to slaughter and to oppose budget language that allows killing these iconic animals."

Harvey's Toll On Refineries Sparks Widespread Gasoline Shortages, Price Hikes.

The Houston Chronicle (8/31, Blum, Chronicle) reports that as floodwaters recede, Texas motorists are "returning to streets to realize there are potentially widespread gasoline shortages in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio." Regional fuel prices could also "spike by 50 cents a gallon in the coming days – and perhaps 40 cents nationally – after Harvey forced more than 20 percent of the nation's oil refining capacity offline...said Patrick DeHaan, senior petroleum analyst for GasBuddy." Reuters (8/31, Kumar, Renshaw) reports US fuel shortages are set to hamper Labor Day travel as a significant portion of gasoline stockpiles are held in places where it cannot be accessed because of floods or is too far away from where it is needed. Some of the supplies are also incomplete, and would need to be blended before going to gas stations. At least two East Coast refiners, Philadelphia Energy Solutions and Irving Oil, have already run out of gasoline for immediate delivery as they rushed to send supplies to the US Southeast, Caribbean, Mexico and South America.

The Wall Street Journal (8/31, Sider) reports gas prices rose to $2.46 a gallon Thursday, up 11 cents a gallon from last week, GasBuddy said. Prices in some cities could reach an average of $2.60 to $2.75 a gallon in the next 10 days, according to Tom Kloza of the Oil Price Information Service. Reuters (8/31, Seba, Kumar) reports Harvey's impact on the energy industry also "spread worldwide" as millions of barrels of fuel were rerouted "to the Americas to avert shortages." US gasoline futures RBC1 topped $2 per gallon on Thursday "for the first time since 2015, up more than 20 percent since just before the storm began." The AP (8/31, Lauer, Martin) reports service stations in Texas have already start to run out of gas and pump costs have risen dramatically. The Texas attorney general's office said anyone seeing gas over $4 should take pictures and report the stations as price-gouging. DeHaan said if people start hoarding gas, "that's going to make the problem worse, and prices shoot higher and the event will last longer, with more disruption and shortages." The AP (8/31) reports Dallas had the most expensive gasoline in Texas with an average of $2.37 a gallon. The Houston Chronicle (8/31, Blum) reports Texas Railroad Commissioner Ryan Sitton said there would be enough fuel if people avoiding panicking at the pump. He said the state has 230 million barrels of gasoline on hand, but it is not all in tanks beneath gas stations. The Dallas Morning News (8/31, Mosier) reports Jay Hatfield, portfolio manager of InfraCap's AMZA fund, said the "chances of this being a long-term shortage is zero. The only question is does it last one week, two weeks or three weeks, not a month, two months, three months."

The CBS Evening News (8/31, story 4, 2:05, Morgan) reported that "more than a dozen refineries across the Gulf are closed, including this Conoco-Phillips plant outside Houston and the Exxon-Mobil facility in Bay Town, the nation's second largest." In total, "about a third of the nation's refining capacity is offline on the Gulf Coast." The Hill (8/31, Henry) reports that as of Wednesday evening, up to 4 million bpd, 22 percent of total US refining capacity, was offline. Reuters (8/31, Seba) reports sources familiar with plant operations said Motiva's Port Arthur refinery may be shut for as long as two weeks for assessments and repairs. The company said, "Given the unprecedented flooding in the city of Port Arthur, it remains uncertain how quickly the flood waters will recede, so we cannot provide a timeline for restart at this time."

The Houston Chronicle (8/31, Blum) reports the Lake Charles refineries are planning to maintain operations. Phillips 66 and Citgo said area refineries are still running. Phillips 66 is already accessing some of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to keep crude supplies available while pipelines remain shuttered. The company said, "The SPR release will help ensure that we can maximize our refined product supply in order to provide reliable energy during a difficult time that includes supply and logistics challenges following Hurricane Harvey."

Reuters (8/31, Kumar) reports Colonial Pipeline said Thursday that its main lines east of Lake Charles, Louisiana will remain operating, while lines between Houston and Hebert, which were shut in by Harvey, are expected to return to service Sunday. The Hill (8/31, Manchester) reports that in an earlier statement, Colonial expected to completely shut down the line to the East Coast. The Daily Caller (8/31, Rodgers) also provided coverage.

Reuters (8/31, Ngai) reports Magellan Midstream Partners restarted limited service on a portion of its Houston crude pipeline and distribution system on Thursday. However, the Longhorn and BridgeTex pipelines remain shut in, while other refined products pipelines in the Houston are also remain suspended. Magellan is currently removing floodwater, assessing electric services and inspecting facilities at its Galena Park and East Houston assets, but there is no timeline for restart.

The Oklahoman (8/31, Wilmoth) reports "ONEOK Inc. said Wednesday its Mont Belvieu, Texas, complex is operational and has not experienced significant damage from the storm, but some...facilities are operating at reduced volumes."

About 13.5 Pct Of U.S. Gulf Oil Output Still Shut In By Harvey -BSEE. Reuters (8/31) reports that "about 13.5 percent of oil production in the Gulf of Mexico was shut in on Thursday due to Tropical Storm Harvey, the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said." Meanwhile, "17.6 percent of natural gas production in the region, or 568.09 million cubic feet per day has been shut in, BSEE said, down from 611.09 million on Wednesday."

The Southeast Can Take Harvey's Colonial Pipeline Cutoff ... For Now. Gadfly columnist Liam Denning writes in Bloomberg Business (8/31, Denning) that Harvey's biggest impact on the energy industry is on logistics and not raw supply. While the storm has depressed crude prices, the cost of refined products has surged over the inability to transmit over pipeline. Denning says that half the weekly gain in gasoline came on Thursday morning because Colonial Pipeline announced it was shutting down portions of its infrastructure carrying products from the Gulf Coast to the East Coast. Jim Collins writes a contributing piece for Forbes (8/31, Collins) saying that while the US has more refining capacity than it did in 1982, the compound annual growth rate in capacity has only increased 0.35 percent. Today, the US has 137 operable refineries, compared to 254 in 1982. Collins hopes that Harvey will call attention to the problem and cause a "refocus of priorities toward energy infrastructure."

$4.2 Million Penalty Approved In Deadly 2012 Platform Fire.

The AP (8/31) reports Black Elk Energy has been formally sentenced to a $4.2 million penalty for its connection to a 2012 offshore oil platform fire that killed three workers. The company agreed to the penalty in May and pleaded guilty to eight counts of violating federal laws on safety and pollution. However, it is not clear how much the government will collect, as the Justice Department's claim will be among those imposed by various creditors in bankruptcy proceedings.

Long Wait To Learn Fate Of Gulf Coast Wildlife Refuges Hit By Harvey.

Reuters (8/31, Szekely) reports that "as devastating as Hurricane Harvey was to people in Texas and Louisiana, they were buffered by wildlife-rich barrier islands and marshlands, where the extent of wind and flood damage will not be known for weeks." The article notes that "more than a dozen national wildlife refuges, home to water fowl, reptiles and migratory birds, line the Gulf coast where Harvey made landfall last Friday." According to Jeffrey Fleming, spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service's southeast region, "the full impact of Harvey to their environments and animals will be 'hard to know for sure until the water levels go down and get back to normal.'"

Feds Extend Comment Period On Sought NPPD Transmission Line.

The AP (8/31) reports that "federal officials are giving people more time to comment on a controversial transmission line that would run through the Nebraska Sandhills." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "decided extend the comment period by two months, through Nov. 7, on the Nebraska Public Power District's plan to build the 225-mile long, 345,000-volt transmission line." NPPD "says the line will alleviate congestion, increase reliability and allow for wind power development." However, "opponents say construction will disrupt wildlife and cultural gems, such as wagon ruts from the Oregon and Mormon trails, and that wind farms associated with the proposed line will destroy unspoiled vistas."

NPS Chief Scraps Climate-focused Order.

E&E Publishing (8/31, Hotakainen) reports that "in a move that's drawing fierce criticism, the acting head of the National Park Service has rescinded a 2016 order by the Obama administration that called for a focus on climate change in managing natural resources in U.S. parks." Former NPS Director Jonathan Jarvis "signed the order — formally known as Director's Order No. 100, or DO 100 for short — on Dec. 20, 2016, as one of the last acts of his tenure as director." Jeremy Barnum, an NPS spokesman, "said the order was rescinded by acting Director Michael Reynolds on Aug. 16 'to eliminate confusion among the public and NPS employees regarding current NPS policy in light of the Department of the Interior's new vision for the long-term protection of America's unparalleled national parks.'"

Gillibrand, Katko Visit Fort Ontario, Urge Senate To OK National Park Study.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (8/31, Harding) reports that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand and Rep. John Katko visited the Safe Haven Holocaust Refugee Shelter Museum on Thursday. They have "introduced legislation that would initiate a study to determine" whether Fort Ontario, "which was used as a military installation dating back to the French and Indian War, should receive national park status." The House passed the legislation, "but it didn't advance in the Senate." However, "because there weren't substantive concerns with the bill, Gillibrand is hopeful that it could be added to a larger spending bill in order to ensure passage."

Julie Galonska Named Superintendent At St. Croix National Scenic Riverway.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/28, Giles) reports that Julie Galonska, "a 23-year veteran of the National Park Service, is the new superintendent of St. Croix National Scenic Riverway." She was "appointed the park's acting superintendent in February 2016 when Chris Stein was assigned temporarily to the new Pullman National Monument in Chicago." Galonska will "guide the riverway into a challenging era beyond its golden anniversary next year."

Zion National Park Studies Feasibility Of Electric Buses.

The AP (8/31) reports that "a new electric bus has been added to Zion National Park's transportation fleet as part of a three-month pilot program to determine the feasibility of electric shuttle buses." The bus was "added this month, with officials eyeing a looming overhaul of the park's busing system." John Marciano, public information officer at the park, "says the bus will be evaluated on things like passenger comfort, driver efficiency, battery performance and charge time."

Mattis Says No Rift With Trump On North Korea.

Jennifer Griffin reported on Fox News’ Special Report (8/31) that Defense Secretary Mattis on Thursday “chastised” reports “suggesting that he and the President were not on the same page” regarding North Korea. Fox showed Mattis saying, “If I say six and the President says half a dozen, they’re going to say we disagree. ... My job is to provide military options. We are never out of diplomatic [options], diploma[cy] is a lot more than just the narrow slice of talking to North Korea. There was no contradiction there at all.”

Politico (8/31, Klimas, Morgan) reports Mattis “pushed back on the perception that he disagrees with the president,” and the Washington Post (8/31, Lamothe) likewise says Mattis “disputed...that there is daylight between him and President Trump on key issues,” and “also expressed frustration that a speech he gave recently to troops in Jordan was also interpreted as an indictment of Trump’s comments.” The New York Times (8/31, Gordon) reports asked if he had ever considered resigning because of policy differences with Trump, Mattis said, “I don’t care if it's Republican or Democrat, we all have an obligation to serve. That's all there is to it." He added that the President "is not a man who's immune to being persuaded if he thinks you've got an argument."

U.S. Flies Bombers, Fighters In Show Of Force Against North Korea. ABC World News Tonight (8/31, story 8, 0:20, Llamas) reported two days after North Korea tested a ballistic missile that flew over Japan, the US conducted a "show of force," with US bombers and fighter jets flying in the region "alongside Japanese and South Korean allies, releasing live weapons at a bombing range in South Korea."

NBC Nightly News (8/31, story 5, 2:00, Holt) reported the US and South Korea war planes that flew over South Korea "were visible inside North Korea" before they veered off to drop bombs on the South Korean range, sending a "clear message to Kim Jong-un about the firepower he could face." NBC (Engel) added, "And the US isn't just showing it can fight from the air. Today, American Marines were honing their skills in live fire exercises" with South Korean forces. Still, US military officials reportedly said they don't expect Kim "to back down after this," and "that it's now a game of one-upmanship with the next move likely to come from North Korea."

The AP (8/31, Tong-Hyung) reports the US show of force sent "clear warning" to North Korea, which "hates such displays of US military might at close range and will likely respond with fury."

The New York Times (8/31, Choe) reports Gen. Terrence J. O'Shaughnessy, commander of the US Pacific Air Forces, said, "This complex mission clearly demonstrates our solidarity with our allies and underscores the broadening cooperation to defend against this common regional threat," referring to North Korea. Reuters (8/30, Ali, Kim) also reports O'Shaughnessy's comments.

US Sees Signs Of North Korean Nuke Test. The Washington Free Beacon (8/31, Gutowski) reports that US intelligence agencies "recently detected increased activity at the North's main underground nuclear testing facility in the northeastern part of the country that signal preparations for a sixth underground test blast." According to US officials familiar with intelligence reports, the test "could come as soon as Sept. 9, coinciding with the anniversary" of the nation's founding.

U.S. Humanitarian Groups Say North Korea Travel Ban Hurts More Than Helps. Jennifer Griffin reported on Fox News' Special Report (8/31) that a new State Department travel ban to North Korea goes into effect Friday. The New York Times (8/31, Choe) reports that by imposing the travel restriction, "Washington hopes to discourage people from visiting North Korea...but at the same time, the sweeping ban threatens the efforts of hundreds of humanitarian workers in the North — Americans and those who collaborate with them — and the lives of North Koreans who badly need help."

Why Aren't We Talking About Regime Change In North Korea? Washington Post (8/31) columnist Jackson Diehl writes that the Administration's "principal response to North Korea, intentional or not, is sowing confusion," and that if "an actual US policy lurks beneath all that noise, it's a lot like that pursued by the Obama administration. ... Yet, as the experts keep pointing out, it has almost no chance of working." Instead, Diehl argues that "regime change is the only way to definitively end the North Korean nuclear threat."

'Territories Must Be Represented In Congress'.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (8/31, Encinares) reports that Delegate Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan said Wednesday "that he believes 'non-state areas' of the U.S. should have 'full representation in the U.S. Congress.'" In an email to Saipan Tribune, Sablan said he agreed with Sen. Justo Quitugua's "statement last Monday when asked for comments on the Republican National Committee's resolution pushing for 'equal U.S. citizenship.'" The resolution would be submitted to President. Trump, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, House Speaker Paul Ryan, and Senate Majority leader Mitch McConnell.

Palau Stresses New Radar System Designed For Commercial Protection, Not War.

The Australian Broadcasting Corporation (8/31) reports that "a matter of days before North Korea first warned that it planned to target Guam with long range missiles, government officials from Washington and Palau met to discuss the installation of new radar systems to monitor the skies and Palau's National Marine Sanctuary." Questions were raised "about how much the US initiative actually had to do with the long-standing concerns over the rogue state on the Korean Peninsula." However, President Tommy Remengesau Jr "has been at pains to explain that while the radar system may well make the country more secure, the American package has more to do with protecting Palau's economic interests when commercial fishing in its waters comes to an end."

KBE Council Wants To End US Control of Spending.

The Marshall Islands Journal (9/1) reports that "the Kili-Bikini-Ejit (KBE) Local Council wants to end US government oversight of its Resettlement Trust Fund." In a recent letter, KBE Mayor Anderson Jibas wrote to Isaac Edwards, the senior majority counsel for the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, "informing him that 'the time has come to end the Federal oversight of the Resettlement Trust Fund.'" Jibas "said the KBE Local Government was drafting a 'rescript' to show its official position for terminating US oversight of the trust fund as well as KBE's annual budget."

Watershed Volunteers Honored For Efforts.

The Clarksburg \(WV\) Exponent-Telegram (9/1) reports that "watershed volunteers were recognized for their efforts of working for clean water in West Virginia for the 19th year at Watershed Celebration Day, an event hosted by Friends of the Cheat and the West Virginia Watershed Network." Volunteers participated "in tours of the Cheat River watershed as they floated down the river to learn about the positive impact of tourism or hiked into the mountains to see how volunteers can plan, fund, and implement remedial projects that treat acid mine drainage." Rick Buckley of the Office of Surface Mining, "an original partner helping Friends of the Cheat clean up pollution from old coal mine drainage in the Cheat Watershed," said, "The Friends of the Cheat has been in existence for 23 years and are both locally and nationally recognized for their leadership role and determination to restore, preserve, and promote the outstanding natural qualities of the Cheat Watershed. It is exciting for us to have them host other volunteers and demonstrate the keys to their many successes."

Trump Could End DACA Program As Early As Today.

President Trump is expected to end President Obama's Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, possibly as early as Friday, though the White House says no determination has been made. Coverage is minimal and basically straightforward, though critics say the move could strain Trump's relations with the business community, and could also undercut his efforts to appear compassionate in the wake of Hurricane Harvey. For example, Ed Kilgore of the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (8/31) writes that "the timing isn't ideal, with Trump trying to show a compassionate side in the wake of the disaster in Houston, where an estimated 68,000 DACA-eligible immigrants live," and it "could curdle an already sour relationship between Trump and key elements of the business community." Re/code (8/31, Romm) reports that Trump has "renewed his long-simmering war with tech industry, which has fiercely defended immigration programs – in no small part because of the high concentration of foreign workers and families in tech hubs like Silicon Valley."

Reuters (8/31) reports that Trump is expected to end the "Obama-era policy that protects nearly 600,000 immigrants who entered the country illegally as children, but plans to let them stay until their work permits expire," according to "a senior administration official." Fox News (8/31) reports on its website that an official said Trump "is expected to announce the program's end but will allow so-called 'dreamers' currently in the program to stay in the US until their work permits expire." John Roberts said on Fox News Special Report (8/31) that the President "would allow the program to lapse, meaning so-called Dreamers could stay until their work permits expire, which for some could be as long as two years."

McClatchy (8/31, Kumar, Ordoñez) reports that a source said an announcement "could come as soon as Friday, just days before a deadline imposed by 10 states that threatened to sue" the federal government "if it did not stop protecting people brought into the country illegally as children." The Texas Tribune (8/31, Aguilar) reports that Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton's office said Paxton "was sticking with a Tuesday deadline" for Trump to act "or face a lawsuit." Townhall (8/31, O'Brien) also has a brief report on Trump's expected action.

Politico Magazine (8/31, Columbus) writes that Trump “once suggested that he intended to leave the Dreamers alone, but it’s clear that wasn’t an ironclad promise. Recent stories suggest [Trump] is ‘conflicted’ and ‘torn’ over DACA, and the fate of its beneficiaries weighs heavily on him. ... But if Trump has a bad hand to play, it’s because he dealt himself the cards.” The program “is imperiled only because Neil Gorsuch, who is likely skeptical of the program’s constitutionality, sits on the Supreme Court instead of Merrick Garland, who was likely not.”

Breitbart (8/31, Munro) reports under the headline “Left Protests Likely End Of DACA Amnesty” that “an activist at the Center for American Progress – which has very close ties to the Democratic Party – portrayed Trump’s enforcement of popular immigration reforms as a ‘white supremacist’ priority,” and “Democratic affiliated groups are also protesting Trump’s reform of the program.”

Pence Says Trump Will Make Decision With “Big Heart.” ABC News (8/31, Kelsey) reports on its website that Vice President Pence “says that the determination is one that Trump will make with ‘big heart.’” Pence told ABC, “President Trump has said all along that he’s giving very careful consideration to that issue and that when he makes it he’ll make it with, as he likes to say, big heart.” TIME (8/31, Abrams) reports that Press Secretary Sarah Sanders told reporters that Trump has yet to make a decision, and Politico (8/31, Conway, Restuccia) reports that homeland security adviser Tom Bossert said, “As soon as the President’s ready to announce the result of our policy process, he’ll do so.”

WPost Analysis: DACA’s Success Led To Obama’s Action That Brought Lawsuit. The Washington Post (8/31, Nakamura) writes that “in a cruel irony for those enrolled, DACA’s very success could lead to its undoing.” DACA was not meant to be permanent, but “buoyed by the program’s achievements, Obama moved in November 2014 to use more executive power to create another deferred action program for an additional 4 million immigrants, a decision made despite his own repeated public disavowals of the power to do so.” That led the states to file their lawsuit.

Tillis Working On Path To Permanent Residency For Dreamers. McClatchy (8/31, Ordoñez) reports that “conservative lawmakers led by” Sen. Thom Tillis “are crafting a bill they call the conservative Dream Act that would provide a path to permanent residency to people brought here illegally as children,” offering Trump “an escape hatch on one of his most vexing immigration challenges. The legislation creates an avenue for Trump to both fulfill a campaign promise to end an Obama-era program known as DACA while yielding to what appears to be his personal desire to let these immigrants remain in the country.” While details are still being worked out, the Tillis plan, like a House bill by Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL), “would offer an eventual path to US citizenship for immigrants who entered illegally before Jan. 1, 2012, and were 16 years old or younger.”

USA Today: “Let The Dreamers Be.” USA Today (8/31) editorializes, “Dreamers, more than any other immigrant group, are well integrated into American society.” And “unlike other undocumented immigrants, they did not make an affirmative decision to break the law. They merely followed the instructions of parents in coming here. ... Using 800,000 members of American society as political pawns is not the answer. The best answer is simply to let the dreamers be.”

White House: Revelation About Comey, Clinton Probe Vindicates Decision To Fire Him.

The revelation that then-FBI Director Jim Comey began drafting a statement exonerating Hillary Clinton in the investigation of her email use before the bureau had interviewed her or other key witnesses drew widespread coverage, particularly on conservative media outlets – though it wasn’t mentioned on any of the major network newscasts. The Washington Times (8/31, Boyer) reports that the White House on Thursday said that the revelation about Comey “provides more vindication of President Trump’s decision to fire him. White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said she wasn’t sure whether” Trump “had heard about the development revealed by Senate investigators. But she added, ‘If it is as accurate as they say it is, that would certainly give cause and reason that Jim Comey was not the right person to lead the FBI.’ She urged other media outlets to devote more coverage to the story.”

In what Bret Baier said on Fox News’ Special Report (8/31) is “a fascinating twist...on the...Clinton email investigation,” Senate Republicans “say they’ve got evidence that...Comey came to his conclusions on the Clinton case long before all the facts were in about Clinton’s mishandling of classified information.” Chief intelligence correspondent Catherine Herridge added that “senior Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee” say “FBI records indicate that...Comey drafted a conclusion apparently exonerating...Clinton in the email case two months before the investigation was over and before the FBI interviewed Clinton aide Cheryl Mills, IT specialist Brian Pagliano, and Clinton herself." FBI transcripts from interviews with "two senior Comey aides" came to light "after a records request from the Republican leaders on the Senate [Judiciary] Committee. They said it appears that in April or early May 2016, Comey had decided against criminal charges before 17 interviews were complete."

The Washington Examiner (8/31, Quinn) reports that the revelation came in a letter Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley and Judiciary Subcommittee Chairman Lindsey Graham wrote to the FBI. The GOP lawmakers are quoted as writing in the missive, "Conclusion first, fact-gathering second – that's no way to run an investigation. The FBI should be held to a higher standard than that, especially in a matter of such great public interest and controversy." The Examiner adds that the Judiciary Committee "reviewed transcripts, which were heavily redacted, indicating Comey began drafting the exoneration statement in April or May 2016, before the FBI interviewed up to 17 key witnesses, including Clinton and some of her close aides."

On its website, Fox News (8/31, Pappas) reported that Grassley and Graham "said they learned about Comey's draft 'exoneration statement' after reviewing transcripts of interviews with top Comey aides. 'According to the unredacted portions of the transcripts, it appears that in April or early May of 2016, Mr. Comey had already decided he would issue a statement exonerating Secretary Clinton,' the senators said. They added, 'That was long before FBI agents finished their work. Mr. Comey even circulated an early draft statement to select members of senior FBI leadership. The outcome of an investigation should not be prejudged while FBI agents are still hard at work trying to gather the facts.'"

McClatchy (8/31, Schofield) reports, "A statement accompanying the Grassley-Graham letter notes states: 'The draft statement also came before the [Justice] Department entered into immunity agreements with Cheryl Mills and Heather Samuelson where the Department agreed to a very limited review of Secretary Clinton's emails and to destroy their laptops after review.' Mills was a top aide to Clinton at the time. Samuelson, an attorney and former Clinton campaign worker, reportedly reviewed Clinton's emails before they kept as federal records, determining which were purely personal."

On its website, CBS News (8/31, Watson) reported that Grassley and Graham drew their "conclusion from transcripts of interviews with people close to Comey and provided by the Department of Justice's Office of Special Counsel (OSC)." Their "letter said OSC attorneys interviewed James Rybicki, Comey's chief of staff, and Trisha Anderson, the Principal Deputy General Counsel of National Security and Cyberlaw, as a part of an investigation into whether Comey's July 5 announcement violated the Hatch Act governing government officials' political activity. OSC dropped the probe when Comey was fired. The Republicans' letter included parts of the texts of the transcripts."

The Washington Times (8/31, Noble) reports, "Last July, Mr. Comey announced the closure of the Clinton probe and publicly described why the FBI opted not to bring charges against Mrs. Clinton or any of her State Department aides." Comey "testified earlier this year before he was fired that he took the unusual step because he believed that a June 2016 airport tarmac meeting between Attorney General Loretta E. Lynch and Mrs. Clinton's husband, former President Bill Clinton, had undermined the Justice Department's credibility to independently investigate the case. The transcripts cited by the Republican lawmakers indicates that a draft statement about the conclusion of the investigation was being circulated among a select group of FBI officials as early as April 2016."

Manu Raju said on CNN's Out Front (8/31) that "a source close to Comey [pushed] back on [the] assessment, saying he had not reached a conclusion and was looking at this as a possibility, that she would not be actually charged with anything criminally. But clearly possibly more fodder for the White House. Sarah Huckabee Sanders jumping on this report earlier today. Clearly, the White House sees this, as well, to give them covering in the firing of James Comey."

And in an online report, CNN (8/31, LoBianco, Brown, Mallonee) said, "A person familiar with the matter pushed back on the notion that Comey had already reached a conclusion that affected the investigation. The person said back in spring 2016, agents and Justice Department officials were talking about how the investigation would end and there was a belief that the evidence was going in a direction to not support bringing charges. This individual said by April 2016 the FBI had reviewed most of the evidence and didn't find evidence suggesting that Clinton had violated federal law." CNN added, "A second person familiar with the matter told CNN that Comey had not already made up his mind, and that it did not influence the investigation. The second source says the FBI had already reviewed much of the evidence by spring and it was becoming more clear that it was not likely to support bringing charges."

Politico (8/31, Gerstein) reported, "At a House hearing last September, Comey vehemently denied any decision had been made not to charge Clinton before the July 2 interview [with her]. He was not asked when he began preparing his public statement." The Daily Caller (8/31, Ross) reported that Clinton "was interviewed for several hours on July 2, just three days before Comey's announcement." The Washington Free Beacon (8/31, Russell) reported that Comey "ultimately called Clinton's actions regarding her private email 'extremely careless,' but announced in July 2016 that he would not recommend criminal charges against the former secretary of state." Under the headline "CONFIRMED: Comey Decided He Wasn't Going To Refer Hillary For Prosecution Long Before FBI Investigation Was Over," Townhall (8/31, Pavich) also reported on the story.

Trump Attorneys Argue To Mueller That Comey's Firing Wasn't Obstruction Of Justice. Under the front-page headline "Trump Attorneys Lay Out Arguments Against Obstruction-of-Justice Probe To Mueller," the Wall Street Journal (8/31, A1, Nicholas, Orden, Sonne) reports that attorneys for the President have held several meetings with special counsel Robert Mueller and presented memos contending Trump's firing of Comey wasn't an act of obstruction of justice and raising questions about Comey's trustworthiness as a possible witness, according to people familiar with the situation. For example, citing those people, the Journal says that in a June memo submitted to Mueller, Trump's attorneys charged that Comey tends to exaggerate, wasn't reliable when testifying before Congress, and leaked information to the news media.

Law Professor Lists Questions About Clinton, Comey That Russia Probes Should Address. On its website, Newsweek (8/31, Dunlap, Jr.), posted a piece that initially appeared on "Just Security," in which Duke Law School professor Charles J. Dunlap, Jr. offered a list of questions – a number pertaining to Clinton and Comey – that he says should be addressed by the various Russia probes. For example, Dunlap wrote, "In March of 2016, Hillary Clinton told CNN's Jake Tapper that foreign leaders had contacted her about wanting to endorse her to 'stop' Trump. ... Shouldn't the public know who those foreign leaders were who wanted to influence the outcome of the election?" And, for example, Dunlap asked of Comey, "Did his memos (about his conversations with President Trump regarding the Russia investigation) that he retained after leaving government service contain unmarked but actually classified information as some media have reported?"

Judge Orders FBI To Release Some Details About Clinton Email Probe. The Washington Times (8/31, Dinan) reports US District Judge James E. Boasberg on Thursday ordered the FBI to release more information about its investigation into "Clinton's secret email account." Boasberg ruled "court papers describing the grand jury subpoenas the FBI obtained to compel information from Mrs. Clinton's internet service providers can be made public," overruling Trump Administration objections insisting that "making the information public would violate grand jury secrecy rules." Judicial Watch President Tom Fitton questioned the Trump Administration's push for secrecy, saying, "President Trump ought to be outraged his appointees are protecting Hillary Clinton. The State Department should initiate action with the Justice Department – and both agencies should finally take the necessary steps to recover all the government emails Hillary Clinton unlawfully removed."

DeSantis Explains Reasoning Behind Legislation Aimed At Putting Time Limit On Mueller Probe. Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-FL) was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/31) about his legislation to put a time limit on special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. DeSantis said, "What we want to do is say very clearly we don't want to fund fishing expeditions. And when the Deputy Attorney General appointed Mueller, he issued an order that did not identify a crime. He identified a counter-intelligence investigation that Comey had been conducting." DeSantis added that "with the special counsel, it's not like the normal prosecutor, where have you all these other cases you have to worry about. This is all you're doing. If you don't have obvious evidence of a crime, your incentive is to just find something. So, my amendment basically says, 'Look, this thing needs to be limited to the campaign and Russia and it needs to have an end date.'"

Michael Cohen "Expected" To Testify Before House Investigators. Politico (8/31, Dawsey, Watkins) reported that longtime Trump attorney Michael Cohen, a lawyer for the Trump Organization, "is expected to appear in front of House investigators in upcoming weeks, according to sources briefed on the Hill investigations into Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election." Cohen plans "to testify privately, one of these people said, though a specific date hasn't been set. Cohen has provided reams of documents to investigators and is expected to provide more before the testimony, two people said." Politico added that Cohen has emerged as "a key player in the matter after emails showed he tried to reach Vladimir Putin's spokesman, Dmitry Peskov, over a Trump building project in Russia during the presidential campaign."

Robinson: Latest Revelations On Russia Probe “Quite Bad” For Trump. In his Washington Post (8/31) column, Eugene Robinson writes, “Just so there’s no confusion: Donald Trump’s longtime personal lawyer emailed Vladimir Putin’s personal spokesman? Seeking help from the Kremlin on a deal to build a Trump Tower in Moscow? During the presidential campaign? Yes, this really happened. While most attention was rightly focused on the devastating flood in Houston, there was quite a bit of news on the Russia front – all of it, from President Trump’s perspective, quite bad.” Meanwhile, “Politico reported that Mueller is now cooperating and sharing information with New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman. Presidents can only issue pardons for federal offenses, not state crimes. Uh-oh.”

Daily Beast “Exclusive:” IRS Criminal Investigations Unit Aiding Mueller With Probe. In an “exclusive,” Betsy Woodruff reports for the Daily Beast (8/31) that “Mueller has teamed up with the IRS. According to sources familiar with his investigation,” Mueller “has enlisted the help of agents from the IRS’ Criminal Investigations unit,” which “focus[es] exclusively on financial crime, including tax evasion and money laundering.” Woodruff adds that “it goes without saying that the IRS has access to Trump’s tax returns – documents that the president has long resisted releasing to the public.”

Manafort’s Notes From Trump Tower Meeting Reference Political Donations, RNC. Notes that former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort typed on a phone about the “controversial Trump Tower meeting with Russians during the campaign included a reference to political donations and ‘RNC,’” sources “briefed on the evidence” have told NBC Nightly News (8/31, story 6, 1:55, Holt). Investigators are now trying to determine whether there were any discussions of foreign donations to Trump’s campaign or to the Republican Party – “contributions that would be illegal.” NBC noted that “Manafort’s spokesman [is] telling NBC News the suggestion is 100 percent false.”

Russian Lobbyist At Trump Tower Meeting Testifies To Mueller Grand Jury. Bret Baier reported on Fox News’ Special Report (8/31), “A Russian-American lobbyist who attended the Trump Tower meeting last summer with Donald Trump Jr., Jared Kushner, and...Manafort has given secret testimony” to Special Counsel Mueller’s grand jury, according to the Associated Press. Baier noted that emails released by Trump Jr. “said he took the meeting expecting to receive damaging information about Hillary Clinton.”

Senate Intelligence Panel May Seek To Hear From Rohrabacher On Assange Meeting. On its website, CNN (8/30, Tapper, Raju, Lobianco) reported that the Senate Intelligence Committee “is considering calling” Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (R-CA) to discuss “his meeting earlier in August with WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange,” according to a pair of “congressional sources.” Rohrabacher “met with Assange earlier this month in the Ecuadorian embassy in London, where Assange was granted asylum after Sweden sought to question him in a rape investigation that has since been dropped. Assange said, according to Rohrabacher, that he was not behind the leak of Democratic National Committee emails last year.” Rohrabacher has “said he planned to debrief” President Trump on his meeting with Assange. Drawing from the CNN story, Roll Call (8/31, Garcia) reported that Rohrabacher “is by not any indication under investigation by...Special Counsel Robert Mueller.”

CBP Announces Four Bid Winners For US-Mexico Border Wall Prototype Construction.

The New York Times (8/31, Nixon) reports that DHS “took the first major step on Thursday toward building a barrier on the border with Mexico, a key campaign promise of President Trump, as officials announced that they had awarded contracts to build several prototypes of a concrete wall.” Customs and Border Protection said four companies “will each have 30 days to complete the projects after the agency gives them the order to proceed.” The Wall Street Journal (8/31, Caldwell, Meckler) reports that the four bid winners are Caddell Construction of Montgomery, Alabama; Fisher Sand & Gravel/Fisher Industries of Tempe, Arizona; Texas Sterling Construction of Houston; and W.G. Yates & Sons Construction of Philadelphia, Mississippi.

The Washington Post (8/31, Jan) reports that CBP Acting Deputy Commissioner Ronald Vitiello said, “Today we mark a significant milestone. This is the first tangible result of the action planning that has gone on. This is the use of the resources we had available for this year.” USA Today (8/31, Johnson) reports that Vitiello said construction “could begin in a matter of weeks in a stretch along the San Diego border sector.”

Breitbart (8/31, Moons) reports that the prototypes “will feature characteristics such as reinforced concrete and heights between 18 and 30 feet. They have been ‘designed to deter illegal crossings in the area in which they are constructed,’ according to a CBP press release.” The Washington Times (8/31, Dinan) also reports.

Mnuchin: Detailed Tax Plan Will Be Released In Coming Weeks.

Treasury Secretary Mnuchin told the Wall Street Journal (8/31, Rubin, Davidson) that the Trump Administration and lawmakers will release a more detailed tax plan in the coming weeks. While the bill is being written by congressional committees, Mnuchin indicated the Administration will remain engaged in the debate and will stand by its push for an overhaul of the tax code this year. Mnuchin was asked on CNBC Squawk Alley (8/31) why there is no tax reform package “or details about rates and things like that coming from the White House.” Mnuchin said, “First of all, there absolutely is a package. ... Since January, I’ve been working with Gary Cohn and the leadership on this plan. So we have a very detailed plan.” Mnuchin added that “we’ve been working on the details. ... We wanted to bring the three of us together, make sure that there was one plan with the Administration, the House and the Senate we’ve done that. The House and Senate are now socializing. The plan with their members. We’re going to release a blueprint and it’s going to go to committee and we’re going to turn this into a bill which the President will sign.”

Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (8/31) that “these Republican and Democratic senators and Members of Congress are accountable to their constituents and their constituents are telling them we need tax relief, and we want tax reform. We want a system that is simpler, fairer, get rid of this draconian, byzantine several thousand page tax code that people need to a flotilla of attorneys and accountants and lobbyists just to be able to navigate the code. And we want this to be a job bill. If you reduce the tax burden on job creators and job holders, you’re giving people a pay raise, and you’re helping them to create more jobs.”

NYTimes Analysis: Trump, Lawmakers Should Look To DC For An Example Of Tax Reform. The New York Times (8/31, Stewart) reports in an analysis that as Trump and Congress pursue tax reform, they should look at the city of Washington, DC, which “has done exactly that.” In 2014 the city council cut “corporate and business taxes, reduced individual rates for everyone earning less than $1 million and broadened the tax base by eliminating many loopholes” and in subsequent years, “economic growth and tax receipts have surged, enabling the city to accelerate cuts that were being phased in.” While the measure “was not revenue neutral, in the sense that broadening the tax base offset the reduction in rates,” in “a development that would surely warm the hearts of pro-growth Republicans, the economic lift was so strong that tax receipts increased, and last year hit a record.” Moreover, “the plan drew praise from across the ideological spectrum.”

State Officials Blast EPA Guidance On Climate Regulation.

Reuters (8/31, Hurley, Volcovici) reports that fourteen Democratic state attorneys general and “officials from six cities and counties” on Thursday “blasted” the EPA “for telling governors in what they describe as a ‘legally incorrect’ letter in March that they do not need to comply with a major climate change regulation.” They “said the guidance that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt sent to states on March 30 was misleading because the Clean Power Plan enacted under former President Barack Obama, a Democrat, remains on the books despite the Republican Trump administration’s plans to unravel it.” According to the officials, the regulation “remains the law of the land’ even if it is currently on hold and that Pruitt’s ‘unsolicited legal advice’ to governors was ‘premature and legally incorrect.’”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“How Federal Flood Insurance Puts Homes At Risk.” A New York Times (8/31) editorial says “it was clear long before Hurricane Harvey...that the National Flood Insurance Program...needed to be overhauled,” because it “fails to account for the full extent of flood risk, encourages development in areas known to be flood-prone and is not realistically funded.” The Times blames Congress for failing to act, and urges it to make “premiums reflect the actual overall risk.” However, it says “if Congress is unwilling to raise premiums, it ought to properly finance the subsidies.”

“Blocking A Bad Immigration Law In Texas.” The New York Times (9/1) editorializes, “Anyone watching the storm devastation in Texas had to be stirred by the mix of resilient victims and valiant rescuers – a mix of people from all backgrounds united in a struggle for survival. The heroic images of community resolve could not have been a more apt backdrop” for a federal judge’s decision to block a new law intended to “crack down on so-called sanctuary cities.” The new law “blocks local limits on immigration enforcement, allows the police to question the immigration status of people they detain or arrest, and seeks to punish uncooperative officials with fines, jail time and removal from office. ... The fate of the law’s draconian assault on civil rights will depend on further litigation. But it is impossible this week to ignore the contrast with struggling Texans...helping one another without demanding immigration papers.”

Washington Post.

“FEMA Avoids Disaster In Houston – So Far.” The Washington Post (8/31) editorializes, “Tragedy on this scale cannot be fully managed, and the response is only beginning.” FEMA Administrator Brock Long “warned before the hurricane hit that rebuilding would take years,” but “given the effort so far, Harvey may not become synonymous with government mismanagement, as Katrina did.” But “there are more tests ahead. ... Much of FEMA’s outrageous waste and mismanagement came well after Katrina’s floodwaters subsided. Even as recovery proceeds, the nation must also learn from Harvey as it did from Katrina.”

“In Guatemala, The Rule Of Law Strikes Back.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/31) writes that the investigations of the United Nations’ anti-corruption commission in Guatemala into President Jimmy Morales have “uncovered a staggering number of systemic scandals” – prompting Morales to issue an expulsion order on the principle investigator in a move the Post describes as “political suicide.” The Post concludes, “If the country’s Supreme Court and Congress agree to strip him of official immunity, his days in office, and possibly as a free man, may be numbered,” as may be “Guatemala’s systemic corruption.”

“Trump’s Homeland Security Department Gives Right-Wing Extremists A Pass.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/31) says the Trump Administration’s decision to rescind funding for a $400,000 grant awarded by the Obama Administration to Life After Hate, “a nonprofit dedicated to helping right-wing extremists move away from radical ideas,” seems “tragically shortsighted” in the wake of the violence in Charlottesville, and it “underlines the indifference of President Trump and his administration toward the problem of far-right violence.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Texas, Thou Hast Sinned.” A Wall Street Journal (8/31) editorial criticizes what it views as a political assault on Houston’s pro-growth development policies, which some are blaming for the severity of flooding in the city. The Journal argues that zoning regulations and the loss of wetlands are not responsible, and that no amount of flood control could have prevented damage from Harvey’s record-setting rainfall.

“Hopeful News Of The Week.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/31) writes that this week’s purchase of the cancer research pharmaceutical company Kite Pharma Inc. by Gilead Sciences offers encouraging news for cancer treatment innovation – particularly because of Kite Pharma’s CAR-T treatment, which has shown promising results in patients.

“L.A.’s Gift To Trump.” A Wall Street Journal (8/31) editorial criticizes the Los Angeles City Council for its decision to remove Columbus Day from the city calendar in favor of Indigenous Peoples Day. The Journal argues that the move puts the council on the side of the early 20th century the Ku Klux Klan. Which opposed memorials to Columbus because he was Catholic, and gives a gift to President Trump by showing that many on the left oppose Western civilization.

Wildfires In The West Revive Push To Thin Federal Forests.

The Washington Times (9/7, Richardson) reports that for years, "Republicans have sought to reduce the fire danger by thinning the overgrown federal forests, meeting with resistance every time from environmentalists, who insist the problem isn't too many trees, it's global warming." Now, "as treacherous late-season wildfires burn millions of acres from California to Montana, the level of frustration among elected officials and their constituents may have finally combine to break the political logjam." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue have "teamed to figure out ways to clear the dense thicket of litigation and regulation that has for years stalled projects aimed at cutting back the federal forests, many plagued with diseased and dying trees."

Interior Secretary Calls For 'Active Forest Management' To Check Wildfires. Montana Public Radio (9/7, Ripley) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was a guest on the Northern Broadcasting Network's radio program Voices of Montana Tuesday, and he took a question from a listener about wildfires. Zinke called for "active forest management," and asked for "a little help from my congressional friends to do it." Zinke said, "You go into Glacier, there's trees everywhere. And I'm not proposing we log Glacier, but other parks do use prescribed burns, they have mechanical extraction of timber, just to remove the fuel load."

This US Wildfire Season Is Among The Worst: Here's Why. The AP (9/7, Elliott) reports that "wildfires are chewing across dried-out Western forests and grassland, putting 2017 on track to be among the worst fire seasons in a decade." The article says that "a snowy winter across much of the West raised hopes that 2017 wouldn't be a dried-out, fire-prone year, but a hot, dry summer spoiled that." Meanwhile, "federal spending to fight fires appears to be headed for a record." The U.S. Forest Service and the U.S. Department of Interior "report spending of more than $2.1 billion so far." According to the article, "that's about the same as they spent in all of 2015, the most expensive wildfire season on record."

Gianforte Focuses Washington's Attention On Montana's Wildfires. KBZK-TV Butte, MT (9/7)

reports that Rep. Greg Gianforte “took to the House floor” yesterday “to bring attention to the wildfires in Montana.” Gianforte said, “I met with leaders and firefighters at five fires this summer and witnessed the destruction firsthand. I hope this image and the others from back home will make my colleagues more aware of the fires’ devastation and the need for relief in the Treasure State.”

Feds Release $4M To N Carolina County Over Unfinished Road.

The AP (9/7) reports that “the federal government has resumed paying a settlement to a North Carolina county over a never-completed road designed to replace one flooded decades ago for a dam near the Tennessee border.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Thursday announced that Swain County is “getting $4 million earmarked in a 2012 law but never released due to legal concerns.” Swain County “reached a $52 million settlement with the department in 2010 but had received only one-quarter of the funds.” Sen. Thom Tillis and Sen. Richard Burr “praised the release and said they’d keep working for remaining funds.”

Also reporting are the Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (9/7, Barrett), the Asheville \(NC\) Mountain Xpress (9/7, Daffron), and WLOS-TV Asheville \(NC\) Asheville, NC (9/7, Hart).

FERC, DOI Nominees Move One Step Closer To Confirmation.

Natural Gas Intelligence (9/7, Bradley) reports that a hearing was held Thursday by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee “to consider the nominations of Kevin McIntyre and Richard Glick to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and Joseph Balash and Ryan Nelson to positions at DOI.” At the conclusion of a hearing, Sen. Lisa Murkowski said, “It is my hope that we will be able to advance your names out of committee shortly.” Balash is nominated to be Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Land and Minerals Management; Nelson to be Solicitor at DOI.

Alaska Nominee To Interior Department Advances In Senate. The Alaska Dispatch News (9/7, Martinson) reports that Balash “pledged to work on speeding permits and allowing drilling and mining on some federal lands at his Senate confirmation hearing Thursday.” Balash “spoke of speeding permitting at the backlogged agency and allowing more drilling and mining on federal lands”

The Alaska Public Radio Network (9/7, Ruskin) reports that “Balash said he’s a consensus builder, a guy who likes to bring all sides to the table.” He “said he’s fully committed to listening to people affected by the Department’s decisions and really taking what they say into account.” Balash said, “I believe that you get much further when people come to an understanding, jointly, collaboratively, by first understanding the problems that each other has and then identify solutions together.”

Protesters Fail To Stall Hearing On Trump’s Energy Nominees. The Washington Examiner (9/7, Siciliano) reports that the hearing was interrupted by protesters that chanted “no eminent domain for private gain.”

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by Politico Morning Energy (9/7, Adragna) and the Idaho Business Review (9/7).

ND Gov. Meets With Feds To Advocate For Drought Relief.

The AP (9/7) reports that North Dakota Gov. Doug Burgum “says he has met with federal officials to advocate for drought relief for North Dakota.” Burgum says he met Thursday with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue.

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (9/7, Dalrymple) reports that “Burgum, who a month ago requested a presidential major disaster declaration for the severe drought affecting much of North Dakota, said Thursday the state may need to pursue a different avenue for federal funding.” The request for “a disaster declaration was sent to President Donald Trump through the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which is now responding to people affected by Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Harvey.” Burgum said, “There’s a very high probability that through the current path that we’re on with FEMA that there may not be money available.”

Additional coverage was provided by KXMC-TV Minot, ND (9/7, Kelly).

Emails Show Trump Appointees Undermined Facebook CEO Zuckerberg’s Glacier Visit.

The Washington Post (9/7, Rein) reports that “when Facebook’s communications chief approached the National Park Service to ask the agency to show company founder Mark Zuckerberg how the warming climate is melting ice sheets at Glacier National Park, scientists, park rangers and public affairs staff were giddy with excitement.” However, “their eagerness to accommodate Zuckerberg on his high-profile tour quickly turned into a high-wire scramble for Park Service staffers, as political appointees at the Interior Department, the Park Service’s parent agency, demanded that they walk back their generosity, according to documents The Washington Post obtained through a Freedom of Information Act request.” The Trump Administration was “far less keen on Zuckerberg — who has been increasingly vocal in his criticism of the president — and apparently balked at giving him the red-carpet treatment that national parks often roll out for lawmakers, potential donors and dignitaries.”

The Shrinking Glaciers At Glacier National Park. In a piece for the Huffington Post (9/7, Coplon-Newfield), Gina Coplon-Newfield, Director of Sierra Club’s Clean Transportation for All Campaign, writes that “only 26 shrinking glaciers remain” in Glacier National Park, “and these are expected to be completely gone by approximately 2030 —a mere 13 years from now.” Coplon-Newfield is “grateful” that park officials are engaged in “thoughtful work to protect the park for today and with an eye toward many generations to come.” Coplon-Newfield thanks them for not focusing “on the politics of the day but on serving the public and protecting the parks.”

Alaska Hatches Plan For Vast Road Network Across The Arctic.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (9/7, Harball) reports that Alaska has allocated $7.3 million in funding in this year’s capital budget “to plan the construction of a vast network of roads across the Arctic.” The Arctic Strategic Transportation and Resource Project is “being sold as a lifeline for both oil development and remote communities, but it’s already facing criticism.” The state “wants to get the project moving during today’s favorable political climate — the industry-friendly Trump administration is now reviewing its management plan for the National Petroleum Reserve.” Andy Mack, who heads Alaska’s Department of Natural Resources, “hopes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will be open to the idea of permanent roads across the Arctic.”

Utah Commission Under Scrutiny In Push For Lands Control.

The AP (9/7, McCOMBS) reports that “Utah lawmakers leading the push for the state to seek control of federal lands are under scrutiny again for their work with outside legal consultants, this time for a perceived lack of transparency about what the firm is doing as preparations for a lawsuit drag into a third year with no action.” The Campaign for Accountability on Thursday “called on the co-chairs of Utah’s Commission for the Stewardship of Public Lands to produce a full review of expenditures and accused the commission of allowing the $2 million set aside for the project to become ‘a slush fund.’” The group “said its numerous public records requests have been denied.”

Conservation Efforts Must Reckon With Diversity And Inclusion.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (9/7, Bryan, Contributor), Kevin T. Bryan, a senior policy director at the Keystone Policy Center, writes that grassroots organizations are “collectively” seeking to shape “the next 100 years of conservation” by “empowering constituents to see themselves in the natural world and to understand how nature shapes their lives.” Now, “traditional conservation groups are beginning to support these advocacy groups already working on the frontlines.” However, “they are by no means sufficient.” According to Bryan, “there is a need for broader dialogue about increasing access of communities of color to public lands.” he also calls for addressing “the lack of diversity among the workforce of public land management agencies, particularly at the federal level.”

My View: Bears Ears: Perhaps There’s A Third Way.

In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/7, Keshlear), Bill Keshlear, who was a manager last year of Democratic candidate Heidi Redd’s campaign bid for state Senate District 27, writes that there might be a “third way” to protect Bears Ears National Monument. He notes that “in June 2015, a group of ranchers, environmentalists, Native Americans, ATV riders, miners, hunters and archeology buffs — collectively known as the San Juan County Lands Council — produced a plan to protect the Bears Ears and Cedar Mesa area of southeastern Utah.” According to Keshlear, “while the results of the Lands Council efforts didn’t please everyone (shortly after the plan was adopted, a group of Native Americans submitted its own monument proposal to President Barack Obama), it demonstrated that a bit of face-to-face civility, transparency and a spirit of compromise can overcome even seemingly intractable, deeply held racial, cultural and political beliefs.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Fate Of Casino Still Undecided.

The Kings Mountain \(NC\) Herald (9/7) reports that the fate of a proposed Catawba Indian Nation resort and casino is “still undecided and that decision remains, as it has for four years, with the US Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, DC.” Thursday was “the fourth anniversary of the signing of an application by the Catawba Nation to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) for the securing of 16 acres of land on Dixon School Road off I-85 in Kings Mountain for the development of a casino.” The article says that “the rumor mill was grinding out more rumors during the past several weeks about a casino announcement coming soon,” but “there has been no announcement.”

Community Calls For Action And Justice On The Crow Reservation.

KULR-TV Billings, MT (9/7, Monte) reports that “a silent protest was held in front of the Bureau of Indian Affairs office in Crow Agency Thursday.” According to the article, “community members said they feel BIA is not doing enough to combat crime in the reservation.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Policy Shift Criticized For Giving Cadiz ‘Free Pass’ For Water Project.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (9/7, James) reports that opponents of Cadiz’s water “plan say they fear” a “federal policy change, which was formalized in a Sept. 1 memorandum, is one more step that could clear the way for the company to build a pipeline alongside a stretch of the Arizona and California Railroad to the Colorado River Aqueduct.” The memorandum, signed by Interior Department Acting Solicitor Daniel H. Jorjani, “does not refer to the Cadiz project but rather focuses broadly on the rights of railroads holding easements across public lands under the 1875 law.” The new opinion “follows another policy change by the Interior Department in March, when the agency announced it was scrapping guidelines that detail how officials are supposed to evaluate the uses of public lands running alongside railroads.”

In an op-ed for the Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (9/7, Clarke), Chris Clarke, the California Desert Program Manager for the National Parks Conservation Association, asserts that “any objective desert scientist would tell you that Cadiz probably means crucial springs drying up.” While the Trump Administration “appears undeterred in its efforts to advance the Cadiz proposal,” Clarke writes that “Californians have the opportunity to fight back by urging passage of AB 1000, the California Desert Protection Act.” If passed, the legislation “will require state agencies to further review Cadiz’s water claims.”

Parcel Next To ND’s Roosevelt National Park May Be Leased For Oil.

The AP (9/7) reports that “A parcel of land bordering Theodore Roosevelt National Park in North Dakota may be included in a federal oil and gas lease sale.” The Bureau of Land Management is getting pressure from conservationists to not include a 120-acre plot in the lease sale, according to a Bismarck Tribune report. North Dakota’s Land Commissioner Lance Gaebe said the plot’s surface is managed by North Dakota Department of Trust Lands and the minerals beneath the surface are owned by the Common Schools Trust Fund.

New Mexico Democrats Push Feds To Limit Drilling Near Chaco.

The AP (9/8) reports that “Democratic members of New Mexico’s congressional delegation are pushing federal officials to uphold an agreement that limits oil and gas leasing on public land near Chaco Culture National Historical Park.” The Bureau of Land Management “previously agreed to defer all leases within a 10-mile radius around the park as the agency works to update its resource management plan for northwestern New Mexico.” Sens. Tom Udall and Martin Heinrich and Rep. Ben Ray Lujan are asking Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “to maintain the buffer until the planning process is complete.”

Emmer, Nolan Add Amendment To Defund Mining Study.

The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (9/7, Myers) reports that Reps. Tom Emmer and Rick Nolan “late Wednesday successfully added an amendment to a House appropriations bill to defund a proposed U.S. Forest Service study of all mining near the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness.” Amendment No. 70 to the Interior Environment Appropriations portion of the omnibus bill “would prohibit the Forest Service from spending any money on the study.” The full bill was set for a House vote late Thursday or Friday.

BLM Seeks Input On Proposed Greater Phoenix Mine Project.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (9/7) reports that the public can submit comments “on Newmont’s USA Ltd.’s proposal to expand the existing gold and copper Phoenix Mine, which employs about 500 people and is approximately 12 miles southwest of Battle Mountain in Lander County.” The Bureau of Land Management “published a notice in the Federal Register of a Draft Environmental Impact Statement for the proposed expansion.” Comments will be accepted “during the 45-day public comment period that will end Oct. 16.”

DOI Should Be Allowed To Collect Royalties Owed To The Taxpayer.

For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (9/7, Alexander), Ryan Alexander, president of Taxpayers for Common Sense, urges Congress to allow the Interior Department to rewrite the Bureau of Land Management’s methane waste rule. Alexander opposes an amendment offered by Rep. Steve Pearce “that would prevent the agency from using any funds to enforce the new rule.” She says that “the government has a chance to get more natural gas to the market and increase revenue for federal and state governments.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

State Moves To Support OCS Leasing.

The Cordova \(AK\) Times (9/7, Bauman) reports that Alaska officials have “filed a motion in U.S. District Court in Anchorage to intervene in litigation to allow for offshore oil and gas leasing in the Beaufort and Chukchi seas.” Their “objective is to make sure that Alaska has future development opportunities in the Arctic OCS, said Gov. Bill Walker.” He said, “State agencies routinely balance environmental conservation and protection with responsible resource development and the Arctic OCS is no different. This gives the state a unique stake in the outcome of this litigation and puts us in the best position to defend those interests.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Kevin Moran: Bold Action Still Needed For The Colorado River.

In an op-ed for the Arizona Daily Star (9/8, Moran), Kevin Moran, the Senior Director for the Environmental Defense Fund’s Colorado River Program, writes that the Bureau of Reclamation “recently issued its annual projections for water levels at Lake Mead for the next two years.” The report “shows the tremendous progress that has been made on water conservation in the region and the Tucson Basin.” Moran argues that “we should use this brief reprieve to redouble our efforts to improve how we use, manage and share our limited supply of Colorado River water.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Monarchs In Western U.S. Risk Extinction, Scientists Say.

Reuters (9/7, Zuckerman) reports that “monarch butterflies west of the Rocky Mountains are teetering on the edge of extinction, with the number wintering in California down more than 90 percent from the 1980s, researchers said in a study published on Thursday.” The study, “published in the scientific journal Biological Conservation, was funded by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which is considering giving monarch butterflies Endangered Species Act protections.” Washington State University biologist Cheryl Schultz, the study’s lead author, said, “If the population continues to decline at that rate, we will lose migratory monarchs in the western United States over the next several decades.”

Additional coverage was provided by the San Francisco Chronicle (9/8, Fimrite) and the Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (9/7, Cary).

U.S. Fish & Wildlife Seeks Comments On State DNRC Plan.

The Belgrade \(MT\) News (9/7) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “seeking public comment on the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation’s application to amend an incidental take permit to authorize additional incidental take on 81,416 acres of proposed Habitat Conservation Plan land.” The amendment would “change incidental take numbers for the threatened grizzly bear, Canada lynx, bull trout, and unlisted westslope cutthroat trout as a result of the additional proposed lands.”

County Residents Deal With Feds Over Pocket Gopher.

The Nisqually Valley \(WA\) News (9/7, Perednia) reports that “desperately trying to build their home faster, one Thurston County couple created their own habitat conservation plan to mitigate impacts to the Mazama pocket gopher instead of waiting for the county to create one.” Deborah and Steve McLain were “unable to obtain permits without mitigating the impact construction would have on the gopher.” In order to do so, the McLains “had to work directly with the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife (USFW) to create a mitigation plan.” Their plan was “approved last month and has entered into a 30-day public comment period.”

National Park Service

All Charleston Area National Park Sites Will Be Closed Starting September 8.

The Charleston \(SC\) Moultrie News (9/7) reports that “all Charleston area National Park Service sites will be closed starting Friday, September 8, 2017 because of the potential threat of Hurricane Irma.”

Irma Forces Evacuation Of Cumberland Island. The Brunswick \(GA\) News (9/7, Jackson) reports that Hurricane Irma forced the evacuation of more than 20 campers from Cumberland Island National Seashore on Wednesday. Jill Hamilton-Anderson, “chief of interpretation, education and visitor services for the national seashore, said the National Park Service had to cancel more than 100 reservations to the island for this weekend because of the storm.” According to the article, “no date has been set for when the seashore will re-open.”

Park Service Using Lasers To Remove Jefferson Memorial’s Grimy Coating.

WTOP-FM Washington (9/7, Moore) reports that the National Park Service is “testing a high-tech treatment using lasers to remove a grimy, black film that has plagued the Jefferson Memorial for years.” The NPS “contracted with a Chicago-based company to test its laser-ablation treatment on a portion of the monument in an attempt to remove the filthy-looking coating, known as biofilm.” Beginning next week, the Conservation of Sculpture and Objects Studio, Inc. will “perform a test of its laser-ablation treatment on about 1,000 square feet on the northeast side of the memorial.” According to the article, “the full test will take about four weeks, but the park service said the results should be immediately noticeable.”

Mesa Verde Faces $65.7 Million In Backlogged Maintenance.

The Pine River \(CO\) Times (9/7, Mimiaga) reports that “a campaign by the Pew Charitable Trust to raise awareness of eroding infrastructure at national parks recently swung through Cortez.” Restore America’s Parks seeks “to address an estimated $11.3 billion worth of deferred maintenance needs across 400 national park units, according to a Pew Charitable Trusts report.” The National Park Service, “citing aging facilities, increased visitation and unreliable funding, hasn’t kept pace with infrastructure repairs, campaign organizer Michael Dabbs said during an Aug. 18 meeting at the WildEdge Brewing Collective in downtown Cortez.”

Zion National Park Remains On Pace For Record Visitation.

The AP (9/7) reports that “new numbers show the stunning red rocks at Zion National Park are on pace to set another record for visits, as park managers consider a first-of-its-kind plan to require reservations.” According to the article, “the official July count shows 2.7 million visitors to the park.” Park officials are “developing a visitor management plan to address overcrowding, with drafts suggesting a reservation system could be implemented.”

Carlsbad Caverns Elevator Service To Be Suspended For Work.

The AP (9/7) reports that Carlsbad Caverns National Park officials “say elevators to take visitors into the park’s underground cavern will be unavailable for use from Sept. 11-29 while structural work is being done." According to officials, "consulting engineers determined that structural steel beams need to be reinforced and anchoring clips replaced in the secondary elevators. Other work will include realignment of steel guide rails and replacement of one elevator's large control cable that travels up and down with the elevator."

Trails Reopen At White Sands After Cleanup From 2014 Crash.

The AP (9/7) reports that "two trails and other facilities at White Sands National Monument have reopened after being closed for three years for the cleanup of soil contaminated from the 2014 crash of an unmanned Air Force target jet." According to monument officials, "the Dune Life Nature and Playa trails and visitor facilities along Dunes Drive reopened Thursday."

National Park Service Confirms Weapon In Shooting Was An Air Pistol.

The Harrison \(AR\) Daily Times (9/7) reports that National Park Service officials have "confirmed that the Branson, Missouri, man shot and killed by a park ranger in August had an air pistol that looked like a real firearm." According to a statement released Thursday, rangers were "confronted by a white male, later identified as Jonathan Bolger, 34, of Branson, Missouri." The statement said, "The preliminary investigation has revealed that Bolger was armed with a Umarex XCP air pistol, which resembles a two-toned semi-automatic handgun, and does not have an orange tip to identify it as an air pistol."

Cape Hatteras National Seashore Open To Privately Run Businesses.

The Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (9/7, Hampton) reports that entrepreneurs are "taking advantage of the 'commercial use authorization' offered for decades at Cape Hatteras National Seashore." The park "allows private money-making operations within the 67 miles of beaches from Ocracoke to Bodie Island, including kayak excursions, off-road driving trips, photography classes, kite-boarding lessons and interpretive nature and history hikes." According to Sarah Merrill, management analyst for the park, "the park has 20 business ventures functioning, the average for recent years."

Park Service Plans Deer Kill.

The Gettysburg \(PA\) Times (9/8) reports that "from October 2017 through March 2018, the National Park Service (NPS) will continue managing white-tailed deer at Gettysburg National Military Park and Eisenhower National Historic Site." The sites are "reducing the number of deer in the parks directly by shooting. All venison will once again be donated to Gettysburg area food banks." Bill Justice, acting superintendent, Gettysburg National Military Park and Eisenhower National Historic Site, said, "We continue to manage the deer population at Gettysburg and Eisenhower parks to bring the deer density numbers to a level where we can preserve and protect historic woodlots and farm fields."

Fees At 2 Marin Headlands Campgrounds May Rise.

KPIX-TV San Francisco (9/7) reports that the National Park Service is "proposing overnight camping and day use fee increases at two campgrounds in the Marin Headlands in the Golden Gate National Recreation Area." According to the article, "fees at the Kirby Cove campground would increase from $25 to $30 per night, and day use fees at Kirby Cove would increase from $35 to $45 per day."

Trump, Pence, Long Tout Government Preparations For Irma.

The Washington Times (9/7, Boyer) reports President Trump said Thursday that emergency officials are ready for Hurricane Irma's expected impact on Florida. "Florida is as well-prepared as you can be for something like this," Trump told reporters at the White House. "Now it is just a question of what happens. We are with everybody in Florida. We are working very hard." Politico (9/7, Conway) reports Trump also said he is "very concerned" about Hurricane Irma, but "the people of Florida, like the people of Texas, Louisiana, you're seeing how the people of our country have reacted under this tremendous pressure.”

Vice President Pence similarly said in an interview with WTVJ-TV (9/7, 5:07 p.m. EDT), “I can assure all of your viewers that, at President Trump’s direction, we’re bringing the full resources of the United States to support all of the efforts of state and local officials as you prepare for Hurricane Irma.” Asked if the federal government is prepared to help South Florida, Pence said, “Rest assured the federal government has been making diligent preparations. ... If I had one message to your viewers it’s take this storm seriously. ... We just urge every one of your viewers, be confident that your state, local, and federal officials are making every necessary preparation, but take the warnings of your state and local officials seriously and please put your safety and the safety of your family first.”

FEMA Director Long said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/7), “The states of Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina all need to be monitoring this closely. We are already in good communication with all of those states and working with them to be prepared.” Long added, “I do know that the President has been in clear communication with Gov. Scott and other governors. ... Just like we had in Harvey, the President stands ready to support disaster declaration requests and communication lines are open and he has given me the authority I need to move forward.”

Florida Gov. Rick Scott said on Fox News’ Hannity (9/7), “I have spoken to the President multiple times over the weekend and this week. I’ve spoken to the Vice President. ... The President says he really cares about this state. I know he does. I appreciate everybody’s help. ... I am appreciative of everything they are doing.”

Trump Approves South Carolina Disaster Declaration. The Hill (9/7, Manchester) reports President Trump approved South Carolina’s request to declare a state of emergency in the state on Thursday, as Hurricane Irma approaches the East Coast. Earlier this week, Trump declared a “pre-landfall emergency” for Florida, Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands. Trump’s approval of the declaration allows DHS and FEMA to begin coordinating disaster relief efforts. Gov. Henry McMaster (R) “said a mandatory evacuation order will go into effect on Saturday morning, but has encouraged people to evacuate early.”

According to the Columbia \(SC\) State (9/7), the “latest projected track of Hurricane Irma has the powerful storm shifting to the west, with the center of the storm moving from Florida into Georgia, not South Carolina.” The State cautions that “while still too soon to predict with certainty, the latest track would spare South Carolina some of the highest winds and rain from the storm.”

On the CBS Evening News (9/7, lead story, 2:25, Glor), chief weather forecaster Lonnie Quinn likewise said, “The new information pushes things a little bit more to the west.” It now could continue “in some way, shape, or form right up the spine of Florida, up the East Coast, still maintaining its hurricane strength as it makes its way into Georgia sometime on Monday.”

Trump Issues US Virgin Islands Disaster Declaration. The Washington Examiner (9/7, Quinn) reports the White House said President Trump on Thursday approved a US Virgin Islands disaster declaration, which makes the territory eligible to receive federal aid as it recovers from Hurricane Irma damage.

FEMA Readies Relief Supplies For South Florida. The Miami Herald (9/7, Ostroff) reports FEMA said Thursday that it has readied “millions of supplies in Alabama to distribute in a disaster-relief mission” once Hurricane Irma has passed. FEMA has prepared “nearly 3 million gallons of water and 7.5 million meals, as well as medical supplies, infant care kits, cots, blankets, generators and tarps,” according to the agency. Most supplies are being stored at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Alabama, but “more than 500,000 meals and 264,000 gallons of water are also being stored in Selma, Alabama.” In addition, two emergency response teams are positioned in Tallahassee and one is in South Carolina, while “liaisons are also in North Carolina and throughout Florida and Georgia areas in Irma’s path.”

Irma To Test New Building Codes Put In Place After Andrew. The Wall Street Journal (9/7, Campo-Flores, McWhirter, Grant) reports that after Hurricane Andrew devastated parts of Florida 25 years ago, local and state officials responded by creating some of the strictest building codes in the country. The Journal says Hurricane Irma will pose the toughest test yet of those new codes.

Georgia Taps New Head Of Emergency Management. The CBS Evening News (9/7, story 6, 1:05, Glor) reported Georgia Gov. Nathan Deal is “taking no chances, ordering a mandatory evacuation for Savannah, as well as other coastal areas,” starting Saturday. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/7, Taylor) reports Deal’s “overhauled storm response strategy — and his new head of the state’s emergency management agency — face what could be their most significant weather-related challenge yet as Hurricane Irma barrels toward the Atlantic coast." The Category 5 storm "will be the biggest weather threat since Homer Bryson, a former corrections commissioner, was tapped to lead the state's emergency management agency." The storm will also "test Deal's weather response plan — and his better-safe-than-sorry mantra — in new ways." On Thursday, Deal ordered the mandatory evacuation of "much of coastal Georgia, activated 5,000 members of the Georgia National Guard," and declared a state of emergency in 30 counties.

Zakaria: Americans Should Stop Fearing More Government. In a Washington Post (9/7) column, Fareed Zakaria writes that the United States needs to stop being "wary of too much government" and embrace greater intervention, as highlighted by federal assistance needed after recent natural disasters. Zakaria concludes, "We need government to be more than a passive observer of these trends and forces. It needs to actively shape and manage them. ... I imagine that this week, most people in Texas, Florida and Puerto Rico would be delighted to hear the words 'I'm from the government, and I'm here to help.'"

USA Today: Government Should Make Flood Insurance Reflect Actual Risk. In an editorial, USA Today (9/7) writes that the National Flood Insurance Program – the government-run insurance fund for homeowners in flood-prone areas – is "costly and counterproductive" and "is certain to take a massive loss this year" after Hurricanes Harvey and Irma. USA Today argues that taxpayers "can't simply absorb ever increasing tabs for flood losses" due aid packages following low flood insurance payouts and that government should create more accurately-priced premiums that encourage people to build their homes in safe places by making flood insurance reflect actual risk.

In a responding USA Today (9/7, Brown) op-ed, National Association of Realtors President William E. Brown writes that although National Flood Insurance Program premiums "should accurately reflect a property's specific risk of flood," these premiums should not increase dramatically on homeowners who purchased properties not knowing the true risk. Instead, rates "should phase in gradually over time so homeowners have the opportunity to consider their options before reaching a 'full risk' rate."

Irma Causes Widespread Destruction In Caribbean.

The Washington Post (9/7, Achenbach, Berman, Alvarado) reports Hurricane Irma is "battering Caribbean islands, causing widespread destruction, as it barrels toward" the US mainland. Several islands "pummeled" by Irma on Wednesday "began to grapple with the monster storm's toll on Thursday." The storm is now "grinding onward toward the Bahamas with winds hitting 180 mph and higher gusts registered," according to the National Hurricane Center. ABC World News Tonight (9/7, lead story, 3:25, Muir) reported Irma left a "deadly and devastating path across the Caribbean." On the island of Barbuda, "nearly every building and home damaged or destroyed." In the Virgin Islands, Coast Guard teams "have been flying in and out...rescuing people."

In a second segment, ABC World News Tonight (9/7, story 3, 1:20, Muir) spoke with Gaston Browne, Prime Minister of Antigua and Barbuda, who said, "I never contemplated that we could have such damage. I mean, the Barbuda landscape is just totally decimated. Ninety percent or more of the buildings were damaged. It literally destroyed the country."

The New York Times (9/7, Times) reports that the death toll in the Caribbean was "at least seven on Thursday afternoon, and the authorities warned that the number could rise as communications improved." French Prime Minister Édouard Philippe said that four people were confirmed dead on St. Martin, "lowering a previous toll of eight deaths given by local rescue officials." A St. Martin official said on Wednesday night that "95 percent of the island is destroyed." The AP (9/7, Abiu, Coto) reports that French, British and Dutch rescuers "rushed aid to a heavily damaged string of Caribbean islands Thursday." Warships and military planes carrying food, water, and troops were dispatched to the region.

The CBS Evening News (9/7, story 2, 1:30, Glor) reported that in Puerto Rico, "Irma left thousands homeless and most of the island in the dark." NBC Nightly News (9/7, story 4, 2:10, Holt) reported from San Juan that Puerto Rico "was spared a direct hit, but raging winds tore down power lines" and "almost a million people are still without power."

Hurricanes Jose And Katia Could Hit Land This Weekend. The Washington Post (9/7, Samenow, McNoldy) reports that two other "menacing" hurricanes, Jose and Katia, are swirling in the Atlantic Ocean basin and are "forecast to strengthen and impact land areas late Friday into the weekend." Hurricane Jose "could hit some of the same small islands in the northern Lesser Antilles decimated by Irma," but the storm's exact track is "still somewhat in question."

Meanwhile, Hurricane Katia is "forecast to track westward toward Mexico and make landfall as a hurricane on Friday night in the state of Veracruz." ABC World News Tonight (9/7, story 7, 1:55, Muir) also reported Jose is "likely to impact some of the islands that were devastated by Irma. The last time this situation happened was back in 2010."

Irma Hits Trump's Vacation Home On St. Martin. The Fox News (9/7) website reports that "one of the casualties" of Hurricane Irma has been President Trump's vacation home, Le Chateau des Palmiers, on the island of St. Martin. The extent of the damage "is not known."

Trump: I'd "Prefer Not Going" Military Route With North Korea, But It "Could Happen."

NBC Nightly News (9/7, story 7, 2:15, Holt) reported as the White House is "bracing for the possibility of another missile test by North Korea," President Trump is "again leaving open the option of military force against Kim Jong-Un, saying if he did, and he hopes he doesn't have to, it would be what he called a very sad day for North Korea." Bret Baier reported on Fox News' Special Report (9/7) that President Trump on Thursday said war with North Korea is not inevitable. Trump was shown saying, "I would prefer not going the route of the military, but it's something certainly that could happen."

USA Today (9/7, Jackson, Przybyla) reports that during a joint news conference with the emir of Kuwait, Trump "refused to say whether he would demand that North Korea give up all its nuclear weapons, saying he did not want to reveal his negotiation strategy." Said the President, "I can tell you that North Korea is behaving badly and it's got to stop." The Washington Post (9/7, Gearan) says Trump also "cast doubt that further negotiations could work," saying that US presidents have been "talking and talking and talking" to North Korea for 25 years while North Korea has been developing its nuclear capability.

Roll Call (9/7, Bennett) reports Trump warned North Korea by saying the US military "has never been stronger," but notes that "as a candidate he said it was a force weakened by unwise wars as well as budgetary neglect by the Obama administration and Congress." Politico (9/7, Nelson) reports that he "boasted of the uptick in military spending since his inauguration," telling reporters that "each day, new equipment is delivered, new and beautiful equipment, the best in the world, the best anywhere in the world by far."

State Dept.: "Pressure Campaign" Against North Korea Working. The Washington Examiner (9/7, Kasperowicz) reports that the State Department said Thursday that the international campaign to pressure North Korea to abandon its nuclear and ballistic missile program "is working." Spokeswoman Heather Nauert said it's a "legitimate question" to ask if the international campaign is working, and responded, "Yes, I can say that the pressure campaign is working." She added, "Now, when you see a test that took place on Sunday, you may think, 'Goodness, that is not working.' But that is not the case, and here's why. It can take a long, long time for sanctions to work. It can take a long time for a pressure campaign to work. It is not an overnight thing."

China Agrees UN Should Action Against North Korea For Nuclear Test. Greg Palkot said Fox News' Special Report (9/7) there are reports that Kim Jong-un's assets "could be frozen by new US-backed UN sanctions," while "oil imports, textile exports, and North Korean foreign workers could be cut." Russia is "rejecting" the measures, and China is "dragging its feet," although it "agrees the UN Security Council should take further action." China, Reuters (9/7, Shepherd, Golubkova) reports, agreed Thursday that the UN "should take more action against North Korea after its latest nuclear test, while also pushing for dialogue to help resolve the standoff." The Washington Post (9/7, Rauhala) says the comments by Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi "suggested possible room for cooperation over US-drafted plans to increase pressures on North Korea after its nuclear test earlier this week."

UN Report: Sanctions Being Subverted By Member States. A draft UN report obtained by the Wall Street Journal (9/7, Talley) says member countries are helping North Korea evade international sanctions, including through prohibited trade in arms and commodities and financing. The Journal quotes the UN report as saying, "Despite an increased rate of member states' submission of national implementation reports to the Security Council, the actual implementation of the sanctions lags far behind what is necessary to achieve the core goal of denuclearization."

South Korea: North Korea Could Another Conduct ICBM Test Soon. The New York Times (9/7, Sanger) reports that South Korean Prime Minister Lee Nak-yon "is saying publicly what American officials will not: In the next few days, intelligence reports predict, North Korea will launch another intercontinental ballistic missile." At the White House and the Pentagon, however, US officials are "scrambling to decide how the United States should react, particularly if the North Koreans demonstrate without doubt that they can reach" Guam, or "even a distance equivalent to striking the West Coast of the United States."

Experts: North Korea Nearing Its Nuclear Goal. The AP (9/7, Talmadge) reports North Korea's latest nuclear test was "part theater, part propaganda and maybe even part fake. But experts say it was also a major display of something very real: Pyongyang's mastery of much of the know-how it needs to reach its goal of becoming a full-fledged nuclear state." However, it remains unclear whether North Korea tested, as it claims, a hydrogen bomb ready to be mounted on an ICBM.

North Korea Threatens Electromagnetic Pulse Attack For First Time. Breitbart (9/7, Nazarian) reports that North Korea, "for the first time, threatened to wage an EMP (electromagnetic pulse) attack" against the US. Shortly after North Korea launched its latest nuclear test using a hydrogen bomb, its state-run Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) claimed the weapon "is a multi-functional thermonuclear nuke with great destructive power which can be detonated even at high altitudes for super-powerful EMP (electromagnetic pulse) attack according to strategic goals." Breitbart warns that "such an attack has the potential to cause catastrophic damage to North America, Canada, the West, and many of its neighbors."

Analysts: South Korea's Moon "Sandwiched" By North's Threat. The Washington Post (9/7, Lee) reports South Korean President Moon Jae-in took office earlier this year "with a pledge to foster warmer ties with North Korea. But the North Korean nuclear threat has rapidly escalated in the months since his election," leaving him "sandwiched" between "his supporters' expectations and the realities of dealing with an increasingly volatile regime, analysts say."

Dennis Rodman Wants To "Straighten Things Out" With Friend Kim Jong-Un. The Washington Times (9/7, Blake) reports former NBA star Dennis Rodman said in an interview Wednesday with "Good Morning Britain" that he'd like to "straighten things out" with his friend, North Korea leader Kim Jong-Un. Rodman said, "I just want to try to straighten things out for everyone to get along together." Rodman, who was also a contestant on President Trump's reality television show, "The Apprentice," added, "I think if the president even tries to reach out for Kim, I think it will be a great possibility. Things can happen if Donald Trump, if they sit down, and have some type of mutual conversation."

The World's Parasites Are Going Extinct.

Here's Why That's A Bad Thing. The Smithsonian (9/7, Panko) reports that "in a study published this week in the journal Science Advances, researchers warn that climate change could drive up to one-third of Earth's parasite species to extinction by the year 2070." The article says "that kind of mass die-off could spell ecological disaster." Kevin Lafferty, "an ecologist with the U.S. Geological Survey who has extensively studied parasites and biodiversity, says the study raises important questions about our attitudes toward parasites as they face increasing risks of being wiped out." Lafferty said, "The field of conservation biology has moved to view species neutrally when considering the need for protection, and this view requires that parasites be protected alongside their hosts."

USGS Digs Trench On Teton Range Mountain To Study Fault Line.

KIFI-TV Idaho Falls, ID (9/7, Keleher) reports that "researchers came to Teton Village hoping to study the Teton fault line." Chris DuRoss, USGS Research Geologist, said, "What we're hoping to find here is a history of earthquakes over the past, say, 10,000 years. We're really interested in how many earthquakes have occurred in that period and how large they were. And that information together gets used to estimate the hazard from this fault."

At Least Two Die In Mexico Quake; Small Tsunami Triggered.

Reuters (9/8) reports that "an earthquake of magnitude 8.1 struck off the southern coast of Mexico late on Thursday, the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) said, killing at least two people, triggering small tsunami waves and damaging some buildings." CNN (9/8, Berlinger, Castillo) reports that "the quake, which was felt as far as Mexico City and Guatemala City, struck 74 miles (120 kilometers) off the Pacific Coast at 12:49 a.m. ET Friday." The epicenter was "southwest of Tres Picos, Mexico, which is 600 miles (1,000 kilometers) southeast of Mexico City."

USGS: Earthquakes Pepper Pecos, Snyder Areas.

The Midland \(TX\) Reporter-Telegram (9/7) reports that “there have been a total of six earthquakes in the last 10 days near Snyder and Pecos, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.”

Senate Approves Hurricane Relief Funds, Raises Debt Ceiling.

The Senate yesterday voted 80-17 to approve a bill providing $15.25 billion in hurricane relief, raising the federal debt ceiling and funding the government through December 8. The AP (9/7, Taylor) reports the House is expected to “easily pass” the measure on Friday, and Bloomberg News (9/7, Litvan, Wasson) that “even small-government Republicans in opposition predict it will pass because of the urgent need for storm funds.” The Senate vote received just 35 seconds of combined coverage on the major network newscasts, and ABC World News failed to mention it altogether. The CBS Evening News (9/7, story 7, 0:20, Mason) reported that “the Senate overwhelmingly approved” the aid package, and NBC Nightly News (9/7, story 6, 0:15, Holt) that the measure stems from “a surprise deal that the President cut with the Democrats.”

The AP (9/7, Taylor) reports “the aid money comes as Harvey recovery efforts are draining federal disaster aid coffers and Irma is taking aim at Florida,” and is “just the first installment on a recovery and rebuilding package for the twin hurricanes that could eclipse the more than $110 billion cost to taxpayers of Hurricane Katrina.” In a “surprise move late Wednesday,” Senate Majority Leader McConnell “added $7.4 billion in rebuilding funding to Trump’s $7.9 billion request.” The aid package is “crafted in such a way to free up another $7 billion in Federal Emergency Management Agency disaster relief funds.”

The New York Times (9/7, Kaplan) notes that the bill would also “extend the National Flood Insurance Program, which is to expire on Sept. 30,” and the Los Angeles Times (9/7, Mascaro) that the vote came “days before the Federal Emergency Management Agency was expected to run out of money.” According to Politico (9/7, Ferris), FEMA’s “disaster money” was “expected to run out as soon as Friday, and no later than Tuesday.”

The Washington Times (9/7, Dinan) calls the Senate vote the “first test of Mr. Trump’s willingness to undercut his own Republicans and work instead with Democrats on Capitol Hill.” The Times notes “all 17 ‘No’ votes came from Republicans who disliked the terms of the deal.” Among them, notes The Hill (9/7, Carney), were Sens. Lindsey Graham, John McCain and Rand Paul. Sen. Ted Cruz, “whose state was hit hard by Hurricane Harvey, supported the measure.” The Wall Street Journal (9/7, Peterson) quotes Cruz as saying, “I think it was a mistake to tie it to the debt ceiling, but I’m grateful that we have the first step in significant federal relief for the devastation wrought by Hurricane Harvey.” USA Today (9/7, Gaudiano) also reports “some Republicans balked at the package, with Sen. Ben Sasse of Nebraska calling it Schumer’s ‘art of the steal.’”

The Washington Post (9/7, Snell) reports McConnell “praised that agreement Thursday morning despite broad GOP concerns that Trump caved to Democrats on the their request that any deadline for extending the federal borrowing limit line up with a short-term spending package.” McConnell said on the Senate floor, “It will provide certainty and stability for first responder, state officials and the many others involved in preparing for and recovering from these storms with critically needed emergency funds that will not be interrupted by the prospect of a shutdown or default. ... Let’s work together and act on this legislation very quickly.” The AP (9/7, Taylor) reports “GOP leaders are fuming, but Ryan backed the idea on Thursday, telling reporters that the president didn’t want to have ‘some partisan fight in the middle of the response.’” In an interview with the New York Times (9/7, Rappeport), however, Ryan also said yesterday that “he continued to believe that short-term debt limit extensions were not a good idea.” Said Ryan, “I personally believe, for the credit markets’ sake, we should have longer extensions of these.”

Michael Crowley of Politico said on Fox News’ Special Report (9/7), “This poisons the well going forward. Republicans in Congress are never going to know when Trump might sell them out, when he might tell them one thing on Monday and doing something else Tuesday.” Under the headline “Trump’s Dealmaking Makes Him Look Unreliable To His Own Party,” Politico (9/7, Johnson, Everett, Caygle) reports “the president has made clear he has little interest in leading the Republican party – whether that means acting to defend its majorities or serving as its ideological ballast.” In fact, “Trump tends to govern more by sentiment than by substance, and he likes Schumer and Pelosi more than...Ryan and...McConnell, who have stomached him but never done a good job disguising the fact that he makes them nauseous.”

Laura Ingraham, however, said on Fox News' Special Report (9/7), "Where were [Republicans] for the last seven weeks? ... They kept telling...Trump for several months that 'don't worry, this is a complex process,' 'Obamacare repeal, but we've got it.' Then they said we almost have it on the skinny repeal. It's not as good, but it's going to be pretty good. McCain comes in and blows it up. Time after time after time...Trump trusted what was going on on Capitol Hill and they could not deliver a piece of legislation to his desk that actually could be signed. It wasn't possible. What does someone who is a conservative populist do when he wants to move the ball down the field, he's going to find another player to throw to. ... The Republicans have no one to blame but themselves."

The Washington Times (9/7, Dinan) reports, meanwhile, that "Democrats heaped praise on...Trump Thursday." The New York Times (9/7, Kaplan) notes Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer "continued to revel in the sudden deal with the president, describing the agreement as a 'ray of hope for both parties' and talking up the virtues of bipartisanship." Said Schumer, "This agreement is a reminder that we don't always have to wait until the 11th hour – risking shutdown, risking default – in order to compromise and do the right thing." The Los Angeles Times (9/7, Mascaro), meanwhile, quotes House Minority Leader Pelosi as saying, "Let's hope this is a sign of something to come. ... What I do know is that the world we live in is a giant kaleidoscope. ... Everybody you work with is a resource to you, or can be."

"Super Upbeat" Trump Calls Schumer And Pelosi, Dines With Ryan. Politico (9/7, Dawsey) reports that "in calls with...Schumer and...Pelosi Thursday morning, Trump raved about the positive news coverage it had received, according to people familiar with the calls, and he seemed very pleased with his decision." According to "one person familiar with the calls," Trump "seemed super upbeat." Politico adds that "another person familiar with the calls said Trump told Pelosi her coverage was even better than his." Moreover, "several White House aides said Trump seemed to be in a good mood Thursday morning, and was planning to have dinner Thursday night with...Ryan." Press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders "confirmed the calls with the Democratic leaders but declined to confirm the tweet or the contents."

Mulvaney Defends Deal, Says Both He And Trump Annoyed At GOP Leaders. Politico (9/7, Conway) reports that in an interview with Neil Cavuto on the Fox Business Network, OMB Director Mulvaney "said Thursday that the president is probably annoyed with members of the Republican leadership." Said Mulvaney, "Is he annoyed at Republican leadership? Yeah, I think he probably is. ... And believe me, as a Republican, so am I. ... As a citizen, I am too. I was promised that they would have repealed and replaced Obamacare by now." Mulvaney went on to defend the deal, "All we simply did is move this out of the way for now so that we could run the government during these very critical times. ... I don't think we ever had two major hurricanes hit the country in the same week. So there's other priorities right now. Moving it off to December is not burning any bridges, it's not meeting the swamp, it's simply looking at the realities of the day."

House Conservatives Blaming GOP Leaders, Not Trump, For Deal. The Hill (9/7, Elis) reports "conservatives are blasting the fiscal deal brokered by...Trump and Democratic leaders, but are blaming GOP leaders in Congress more than the White House." RSC Chairman Mark Walker wrote in a letter to Ryan, "While some have advocated for a 'clean' debt limit increase, this would simply increase the borrowing authority of the government while irresponsibly ignoring the urgency of reforms." The Hill notes "Walker's missive didn't mention Trump," and adds that "in a phone call following the deal's announcement, Tea Party Patriots co-founder Jenny Beth Martin said the deal was 'a fool's play, a trap, and Republicans should reject it out of hand.'"

To the Washington Post (9/7, Debonis), meanwhile, "on Wednesday...Trump sent the hard right a new message: Your enemy's enemy is not necessarily your friend." The deal "set the stage for a grand negotiation later this year that will hand leverage to the minority and frustrate the majority's governing ambitions," and "if history is any guide, that likely includes any hopes conservatives had for ambitious spending cutbacks and a thorough recalibration of the federal government's size and scope." While "outwardly, key conservative leaders blamed Ryan...and McConnell...for the concessions...others openly wrestled with the reality that Trump...would ultimately prove to be an unreliable partner."

Rep. Ted Deutch, meanwhile, said on CNN's Situation Room (9/7), "There is no question that Congress must – this isn't a question of whether or not Congress will – Congress must ensure that FEMA has the resources to be able to continue to help the people of Texas whose lives were devastated by the storm there last week, but this is a large, dangerous storm with high winds and high surge that's coming up potentially right through Florida. Six million people at risk in south Florida alone, 20 million people throughout the state. I know that FEMA has food and water and generators ready to come into the state...but they need to be funded and Congress needs to do that right now. We can't leave the people of Florida to wonder whether or not FEMA's going to be there for them. They have to be there for them."

Cole Defends Deal. Rep. Tom Cole said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/7), "I'm sort of thrilled. This is what I've been arguing for. I think the President made the right decision. I think getting the three months buys you the time to deal with the natural disasters we have bearing down on us right now. I think it also gives you the time to negotiate a larger appropriations deal. ... I think the President was wise to clear the decks. ... Again, count me as pleased with what the President did, and I think he's positioned us well as a party and frankly, has positioned the country well to come to a larger deal in November and December that will give us stability for a long stretch of time."

Democratic Leaders Working To Address Caucus "Discontent" About Deal. In a story mostly devoted to House conservative anger over the spending deal, Politico (9/7, Cheney, Caygle) also reports that "Democrats began grappling Thursday with the reality that they're likely going to be asked to provide the bulk of votes to support" it, and that "discontent simmered in their ranks as well." Politico adds that "some voiced frustration that their leaders may have bargained away leverage to protect" so-called Dreamers. In fact, "House Democrats from various Democratic caucuses – including representatives from the Hispanic, progressive, Asian-American, black and LGBT groups – met secretly Wednesday night to vent about the deal Democratic leaders cut with Trump." At any rate, "Democratic aides...have not done a formal whip count," and "say it's unclear how many members will actually vote against the bill."

Another Politico (9/7, Caygle, Kim, Schor) piece refers to "Democratic leaders...facing increased furor within their own ranks," as "a growing coalition of liberals and immigration advocates feel burned that the agreement did nothing to rescue nearly 800,000 Dreamers after Trump's decision this week to cancel protections for them after six months." Schumer and Senate Minority Whip Dick Durbin "popped in to the House Democratic whips' meeting – a rare move – to talk up the fiscal deal."

Robinson Refers To Trump's "Betrayal" Of GOP Leaders, Klain Says Democrats "Suckered Trump." In a column titled "Trump's Betrayal Of The Republican Leaders Should Surprise No One," Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (9/7), "Does it really surprise anyone that President Trump betrayed the Republican leaders who have been trying their best to carry water for him on Capitol Hill...and is playing footsie with their Democratic rivals? It shouldn't. ... I just hope Schumer and Pelosi know not to trust him the way Ryan and McConnell did."

Ron Klain, also in the Washington Post (9/7), titles his article "Schumer And Pelosi Just Totally Suckered Trump," and argues that "in creating a mechanism to require Trump to repeatedly seek Democratic support for must-pass legislation, Schumer and Pelosi have gotten themselves previously unimaginable future leverage. That's legislative genius, even without a genie."

NYTimes Analysis: Cooperation Between Trump, Democrats Unlikely To Last. A New York Times (9/7, Baker, Stolberg) analysis says there are "reasons to doubt whether Democrats would sustain a partnership with Mr. Trump beyond the deal they have cut to keep the government open for three months and paying its debts. The centrifugal forces of partisanship tug from the left as well as the right, and the liberal base has put pressure on Democratic lawmakers not to meet in the middle a president it loathes."

WPost: Bipartisan Deal "Encouraging." The Washington Post (9/7) writes in an editorial that while the deal "is hardly an ideal solution...the president's decision to reach out to Democrats to ensure against a disastrous default on the nation's debts is encouraging, both as a matter of responsible governing and for its bipartisan character." The Post concludes that "even better would be a serious bipartisan effort to come to grips with the nation's long and deep fiscal disorder, including a long-term solution for the debt ceiling and passage of a responsible 2018 budget. Too much to hope for? Probably. But for now, at least, the worst has been avoided."

Amid Trump Outreach, RNC Ad Slams Pelosi And Schumer. CBS News (9/7, Watson) reported on its website that a new RNC ad "for...Trump assails...Schumer and...Pelosi as 'career politicians' who are 'trying to stop him,' a day after Mr. Trump snubbed his own party to cut a deal with those same Democrats on the debt ceiling."

Trump-Schumer "Gentlemen's Agreement" Will Seek To End Debt Ceiling Votes.

Citing "three people familiar with the decision," the Washington Post (9/7, Paletta, Parker) is reporting that the President and Senate Minority Leader Schumer "have agreed to pursue a deal that would permanently remove the requirement that Congress repeatedly raise the debt ceiling."

The Post adds that "one of the people familiar described it as a 'gentlemen's agreement,'" and that "the two, along with House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi...agreed to work together over the next several months to try to finalize a plan, which would need to be approved by Congress." The Post also reports that "another person familiar with the meeting said Vice President Pence is open to changes he considers in line with the 'Gephardt Rule,'" which makes it "easier to tie raising the debt ceiling with Congress passing a budget."

Reuters (9/7) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders was asked about the possibility of such a deal, and said, "The president encouraged congressional leaders to find a more permanent solution to the debt ceiling so the vote is not so frequently politicized." Trump also addressed the topic yesterday. Roll Call (9/7, Lesniewski) reports Trump "signaled...he could support terminating the debt limit, a radical departure from Republican orthodoxy." Said the President, "For many years people have been talking about getting rid of the debt ceiling altogether and there are a lot of good reasons to do that. ... So certainly that is something that could be discussed. We even discussed it at the meeting we had yesterday." The Wall Street Journal (9/7, Peterson, Radnofsky) runs a similar report under the headline "Trump, Democrats Weigh Eliminating Need For Debt-Limit Votes."

To the Washington Times (9/7, Dinan), the potential deal is "part of a new detente Mr. Trump has struck with Democrats, who appear to have found a willing partner in a president still trying to gain his footing when dealing with Congress." Pelosi, says Politico (9/7, Dawsey, Everett), "appeared interested in the deal but was noncommittal." She "confirmed the conversation in a new conference on Thursday," saying, "The president even said, 'Has anybody thought about eliminating this vote?' ... We said, 'We'll take it back to our caucus.'"

Roll Call (9/7, Lesniewski) notes, however, that Speaker Ryan "may not be on board with such an effort." Ryan said yesterday, "I won't get into our private conversation that we had, but I think there's a legitimate role in the power of the purse and Article One powers and that's something that we defend here in Congress."

In an analysis piece, the Washington Post (9/7, Paletta) sees "a remarkable political evolution for Trump, who has long cheered weaponizing the debt ceiling, no matter the cost." In 2013, for example, he tweeted, "I cannot believe the Republicans are extending the debt ceiling – I am a Republican & I am embarrassed!" The Post adds that an agreement "could mark the end of Congress' greatest political weapon – a legislative hand grenade that has never exploded but unnerved financial markets for decades." Rory Cooper, "former top adviser to House GOP leadership, said Trump's reversal on the issue should come as no surprise, even if it insults the Republican leadership." Said Cooper, "There's definitely support on the Hill on the Democratic side and even among some Republicans for doing away with debt-limit votes altogether."

Graham, Cassidy To Introduce Revised Version Of ACA Replacement.

Bloomberg News (9/7, Litvan, Dennis) reports that Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy "said Thursday they will introduce a revised version of their proposal to replace Obamacare." The proposal "would send federal money to the states in block grants while repealing Obamacare's mandates that all Americans have insurance and most employers provide it." Cassidy said in an interview that President Trump "is supportive of the plan" and Majority Leader McConnell "has promised a vote in September if the senators can line up 50 of their colleagues to back the measure." However, the AP adds that the "longshot move" faces "significant obstacles, including Senator John McCain's insistence that any health-care plan go through 'regular order' of committee hearings and debate on amendments." Sen. Dean Heller is joining Graham and Cassidy in introducing the measure.

USA Today (9/7, Collins, Berry) calls the measure "a last-ditch effort to pass legislation" as senators "are running short on time because the budget procedure they would use to pass the legislation with a simple majority will expire at the end of the month." Reuters (9/7, Morgan) says Cassidy "told reporters he was optimistic the legislation could pass before a Sept. 30 deadline, if it can attract the bare minimum of 50 votes needed to succeed in the Republican-led Senate with tie-breaking support from Vice President Mike Pence." The Washington Examiner (9/7, King) says it is "unclear if Cassidy and Graham have enough support for the bill."

Meanwhile, Politico (9/7, Everett) reports that Senate Republicans "are throwing cold water on the idea of holding another" vote to repeal the ACA before the end of September. They say this would be nearly impossible, even though President Trump and some Republicans are urging a vote on the Graham-Cassidy plan. Politico says the proposal is still incomplete, "there is no Congressional Budget Office score, and some Republicans are working with Democrats on a bipartisan plan to shore up insurance markets." In addition, it remains unclear if such a bill would garner 50 votes, all of which "means the dream of repealing the law with all GOP votes is slipping away, at least for now." However, McClatchy (9/7, Dumain) describes Graham as being "on a lonely crusade to repeal and replace Obamacare," but says he "disputed the notion he's on a fool's errand," saying, "Here's what would be crazy for a Republican: The promise of repealing and replacing Obamacare for seven years, throwing your up hands and saying, 'Sorry, we can't do it.' ... This idea has never been tried. It's the best idea to replace Obamacare. It's never been given a shot. You want to kill the Republican party?" he continued. "You want to have us divided forever? Walk away from the promise to repeal and replace Obamacare without taking your best shot."

Trump To Dreamers: "You Have Nothing To Worry About" For Next 6 Months.

The AP (9/7, Werner) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi urged President Trump Thursday "to tweet reassurances" to the so-called Dreamers, and the President "obliged, in the latest instance of Trump doing the bidding of leaders of the opposition." Trump tweeted, "For all of those (DACA) that are concerned about your status during the 6 month period, you have nothing to worry about – No action!" Pelosi told reporters at her weekly news conference that Trump "has indicated his support and willingness to sign into law the Dream Act," but in response, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said only that Trump "is focused on responsible immigration reform and wants to work with both sides to achieve it."

Politico (9/7, McCaskill) says Trump "reassured" Dreamers, and the Washington Times (9/7, Dinan) says he "assured...Dreamers they remain safe for at least six more months."

The New York Times (9/7, Baker, Haberman) says Trump acted "at the request of...Pelosi," but "did not get the language of his tweet exactly as she wanted." Still the Times says it was "another sign of an effort by the president to work more closely with Democrats." However, USA Today (9/7, Estepa) says Sanders "did not confirm the reports about Pelosi's tweet request," but Breitbart (9/7, Spiering) says she did confirm "to White House reporters that Trump did speak with Pelosi," as well as Senate Minority Leader Schumer, Senate Majority Leader McConnell and House Speaker Ryan. "The President is committed to working across the aisle and doing what is needed to best serve the American people," Sanders continued. "The President is also having dinner with Speaker Ryan later tonight."

Reuters (9/7, Cornwell) reports Schumer said the President "said he wanted to help lawmakers pass legislation aimed at helping" Dreamers. Sen. Richard Durbin likewise said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/7), "I think the President can help us. We need his voice in support of a good approach, passing the DREAM Act, making sure that we do it in a bipartisan fashion."

The Washington Times (9/7, Dinan), meanwhile, reports Pelosi also said yesterday that the phaseout of DACA was part of a racist alt-right push for "purification of America."

Rep. Eric Swalwell said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/7), "I want to say that I believe that Donald Trump's wall and the premise for his well, yes, is racist. Having border security is a responsibility we have, but these Dreamers are a part of our country."

Bannon: Conservatives "Are Not Happy" With Trump's DACA Decision. Politico (9/7, Nelson) reports former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon "said he doesn't agree" with President Trump's decision to end the DACA program and "blasted" the Catholic Church's support for undocumented immigrants because "they need illegal aliens to fill the churches." In an excerpt of his upcoming interview with 60 Minutes aired on CBS "This Morning," Bannon said, "I don't agree with that DACA decision, but I understand how he struggled with it. I understand how he's giving a possibility of a legislative thing." He added, "The Catholic Church has been terrible about this. ... Because [they're] unable to really — to come to grips with the problems in the church, they need illegal aliens. They need illegal aliens to fill the churches."

Politico (9/7, McCaskill) reports Cardinal Timothy Dolan calls Bannon's comments so "preposterous," "insulting" and "ridiculous" that it doesn't merit a response.

Mnuchin, Ryan Predict Tax Overhaul Will Pass By Year's End.

Reuters (9/7, Chiacu, Heavey) reports that a day after President Trump "reached a deal with Democrats to avert an unprecedented default on US government debt, keep the government funded at the outset of the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 and provide aid to victims of Hurricane Harvey," Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and House Speaker Ryan "expressed confidence...that Congress will pass an overhaul of the US tax code by the end of this year." Reuters adds that the White House is hopeful that the deal Trump reached with Democrats "clears the decks for Congress to tackle the tax overhaul, a top Trump campaign promise."

Ryan told the New York Times (9/7, Rappeport) that "an outdated tax code was a drag on the economy and that the changes that Republicans are proposing would raise wages and accelerate economic growth." However he said that "Trump's call for a 15 percent corporate tax rate was unrealistic and suggested that the president's math did not add up." Ryan added that "getting the corporate tax rate to the mid to low 20 percent range was more likely and would make American businesses more competitive." Said Ryan, "He obviously wants to push that as low as possible. ... At the end of the day we have to make these numbers work." The Times adds that after "months of meetings between Trump administration officials and Republican leaders in the House and Senate, fundamental differences remain" including "whether the eventual legislation will be 'deficit neutral' and whether they would support temporary tax cuts that add to the deficit as a last resort."

EPA Expected To Finalize Review Of Clean Power Plan This Fall.

The Hill (9/7, Henry) reports that in a court filing yesterday, the EPA said that "federal officials expect to finalize their review of the Obama administration's climate rule for power plants this fall." Earlier this year, President Trump ordered the agency "to review and consider repealing the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan, which sets carbon reduction targets for states to apply to their energy sectors." The agency "is widely expected to formally order the rule off the books at the end of its review." The filing said, "At this time, EPA expects that the administrator will sign the proposed rule in the fall of 2017."

Senate Appropriations Committee Approves $10 Million For UN Climate Change Fund.

The Washington Examiner (9/7, Siegel) reports a "handful of Republicans" yesterday joined Democrats in a Senate Appropriations Committee vote "to give $10 million to the United Nations' climate change agency, defying President Trump, who had proposed eliminating the funding." The committee, "by a vote of 16 to 14," approved "an amendment providing funding for the U.N.'s Framework Convention on Climate Change in a spending bill for the State Department." Sen. Jeff Merkley said, "[This] fits in with Secretary of State [Rex] Tillerson's desire that we both continue to monitor the changes in the world's climate and that we keep a seat at the table." Republican Sens. Lamar Alexander, Susan Collins and Lindsay Graham "joined all Democrat committee members except Sen. Joe Manchin of West Virginia in supporting the amendment." E&E Publishing (9/7) reports that during the "rollout" of the budget earlier this year, "White House Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney dismissed climate science spending as 'a waste of your money.'"

Nordhaus: "Impossible Environmentalism" Precludes Realistic Approaches To Climate Change.

In an op-ed in USA Today, (9/7, Nordhaus) Ted Nordhaus, co-founder and executive director of the Breakthrough Institute, claims that some environmental groups "promote utopian fantasies" while utilizing tactics that preclude more pragmatic approaches to climate change, a strategy that he calls "impossible environmentalism." Nordhaus says "the targets vary but the tactics are the same: identify speculative or infinitesimally small health or environmental risks, exaggerate those risks wildly in the media, [and] ignore or downplay trade-offs and the far greater and more prosaic risks associated with present day production."

Lomborg: Costly Climate Change Measures Can Divert From More Meaningful Solutions.

In an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal, (9/7, Lomborg) Bjorn Lomborg, president of the Copenhagen Consensus Center, urges people to maintain a sense of perspective on climate change, arguing that overreactions to every social and economic ill tenuously linked to climate change can divert resources from more practical solutions. For example, Lomborg cites the argument that rising temperatures caused by climate change has increased the places malaria-carrying mosquitoes can become endemic. Although the science in the argument is unambiguous, he says that reducing temperatures in line with Kyoto Protocol would cost $180 billion while only saving 1,400 lives from malaria. Meanwhile, $500 million spent in one year on measures like mosquito nets, sprays, and treatment could save up to 300,000 lives.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Why The Return Of Bigger Banks Means Bigger Risks For Everyone Else." In an editorial, the New York Times (9/8, Board) criticizes the Administration for having "made it clear" it favors big financial institutions, “that Wall Street need have no real concern about Dodd-Frank’s provisions and that the lessons of the financial crisis will be ignored.” In particular, the Times blasts an upcoming Treasury Department report that is expected to recommend restricting the government’s ability to designate financial firms other than banks too big to fail. Such a move “would be blind to history,” as during the financial crisis “non-banks proved as unstable as banks.” The Times laments that “financial corporations are being given the nod to re-establish their unholy alliances,” spreading risk throughout the financial system. While the greater risk means greater potential returns for bank executives and traders, for everyone else it “means greater economic peril, including threatened destruction of jobs, pay, savings, home equity and career opportunity.”

“Myanmar Intensifies Its Abuse Of Rohingya.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/8) criticizes Myanmar for the resumption of “scorched-earth tactics against Muslim Rohingya.” The Times calls their “persecution...a colossal moral failure” by the nation’s government. In particular, the Times condemns Myanmar leader and Nobel Peace laureate Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, especially “her ridiculous accusation last week that international aid groups were supporting the insurgency.”

“School Lunch Without Shame.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/8, Board) praises New York City’s public school system for making free lunch available to all its students, calling the move “an important national example.” The change will not only ensure more children get proper nutrition, but “relieve the sense of stigma and shame that often leads children to refuse subsidized meals.” The Times also condemns other school systems’ “barbaric policies under which children are openly humiliated when their parents cannot pay lunch bills” as “cruel, counterproductive and costly.” The Times urges schools that serve poor children to register for the federal Community Eligibility Provision to “increase reimbursement for meals...improve nutrition, eliminate stigma and cut administrative costs.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Deal With Democrats Saves Us From Disaster – But Not For Long.” The Washington Post (9/7) writes in an editorial that while the President’s deal with Democrat leaders “is hardly an ideal solution...the president’s decision to reach out to Democrats to ensure against a disastrous default on the nation’s debts is encouraging, both as a matter of responsible governing and for its bipartisan character.” The Post concludes that “even better would be a serious bipartisan effort to come to grips with the nation’s long and deep fiscal disorder, including a long-term solution for the debt ceiling and passage of a responsible 2018 budget. Too much to hope for? Probably. But for now, at least, the worst has been avoided.”

“Another Cyberattack Alarm Is Going Off. We Need To Pay Attention.” The Washington Post (9/7) says in an editorial that the Dragonfly malware is the second instance this year of evidence “of a serious potential threat to electrical and industrial systems from cyberattack.” The Post says, “The latest disclosure should serve as yet another alarm that cyberattacks and intrusions are not just about stealing data or emails. They can lead to real-world damage.”

“School Officials Should Decide How Long Summer Vacation Is – Not Larry Hogan.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/7) criticizes Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan’s decision to open the state’s public schools after Labor Day, arguing that the postponement “caused child-care headaches for many parents, disrupted the operations of local school districts and may well have exacerbated the summer learning loss that is particularly pernicious for low-income students.” The Post contends that local school officials, not the governor, should have final authority to make such decisions.

Wall Street Journal.

“The DeVos Guidance Speech.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/7) defends Education Secretary DeVos, and casts her plans as an attempt to restore due process to the handling of campus sexual assaults.

“The Next Middle East War.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/7) writes that Israel’s airstrike on a Syrian military facility on Thursday – a facility linked with Iran – should draw focus to the fact that the danger of a proxy war or a direct war between Israel and Iran over southern Syria is steadily growing.

“Democrats And Dogma.” A Wall Street Journal (9/7) editorial is critical of Senate Democrats’ questioning of Notre Dame Law School Prof. Amy Barrett’s religious views, arguing it is part of a larger effort on the part of the left to exclude people with strong religious beliefs from public life.

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Said [Donald Trump Jr.] only took the meeting because he felt it was his responsibility to find out if the Russians had any information that could call into question 'the fitness, character or qualifications of a possible future President of the United States.' For real, that's what he, has he ever met his father?"

Stephen Colbert: "I'm going to say something a little weird right now, so bare with me. The Democrats won something. Because, during a White House meeting about the upcoming agenda in Congress, 'Trump sides with the Democrats on the debt limit and funding for Hurricane Harvey.'"

Stephen Colbert: "You guys remember the debt limit, right? We talk about it every so often, okay. It's the amount of debt America is legally allowed to carry, and, if we don't raise it every once in a while, we default on everything and America gets repossessed by China."

Stephen Colbert: "Steve Bannon, technically, I guess Bannon wasn't fired because on the day he left, the administration issued a statement 'White House Chief of Staff John Kelly and Steve Bannon have mutually agreed today would be Steve's last day.' Yes, it was mutual. Same way my college girlfriend and I mutually agreed that she'd be happier having sex with Gary."

James Corden: "Donald Trump went against his own party and sided with Democrats in a deal to raise the debt ceiling. And because it's Trump, the debt ceiling will not only be raised, it will also be covered in gold leaf and feature a tasteless painting of Donald Trump holding a sword riding a lion."

James Corden: "Former White House Chief Strategist Steve Bannon gave an odd interview to Charlie Rose where he criticized the Catholic church, saying they had been terrible on the issue of immigration and that they need illegal aliens to fill their churches. This is just in case you had any doubt that Steve Bannon is literally the Anti-Christ."

Trevor Noah: "We covered this part of the news last night on the show, Donald Trump making a deal with the Democrats. What we didn't know last night, though, is how it actually went down, because it seemed like the negotiation was a carefully choreographed ballet. Today we learned it was more like a Molly seizure at Bernie land."

Trevor Noah: "The President of the United States abandoned his party's legislative strategy because the words made him tired? If Donald Trump was Winston Churchill, Britain would have folded before tea time. 'We will fight them on the beaches, we will fight them...you know what? They can have the beaches. I'm tired.'"

US Wildfire Costs Hit Record $2.3 Billion; Season Isn't Over.

The AP (9/14) reports that "the U.S. government says it has already spent a record $2.3 billion fighting wildfires this year, and 64 major fires are still burning in 10 states." The Forest Service "said Thursday it has spent more than $2 billion, and the Interior Department says it has spent $345 million." The article notes that "the previous record for combined federal firefighting costs was $2.1 billion in 2015."

The AP (9/14, Daly, Elliott) reports that Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue "said the severe fire season means officials 'end up having to hoard all of the money that is intended for fire prevention, because we're afraid we're going to need it to actually fight fires.'" The Agriculture Department "has been asking Congress for years to change the way firefighting is funded so the Forest Service does not have to raid non-fire programs in bad years."

Oregon Legislators Ask For More Drones To Fight Fires. The Coos Bay \(OR\) World (9/14) reports that Sen. Ron Wyden and Rep. Peter DeFazio have "asked federal officials what's being done to deploy more unmanned aerial systems (UAS) to fight wildfires raging throughout Oregon and the West." The letter from Wyden and DeFazio "seeking answers about using UAS as a firefighting tool comes in the wake of their meetings last weekend in Oregon with emergency responders battling wildfires around the state." In their letter to Michael Huerta, Administrator for the Federal Aviation Administration, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Forest Service Chief Tony Tooke, the lawmakers wrote, "These tragic yet foreseeable events make it necessary to explore all ways to better fight wildfires. Unmanned Aerial Systems (UAS) have the potential to help this effort significantly."

Herbert: Zinke Signaled Grand-Staircase Should Be Shrunk.

The AP (9/14, PRICE) reports that Utah Gov. Gary Herbert “said Thursday that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has signaled that he’s recommending President Donald Trump shrink Utah’s two-decade old Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument.” Herbert “doesn’t specifically know what Zinke has recommended for the 1.9-million acre (7,700-square kilometer) area or Utah’s new Bears Ears National Monument, but the governor said at his monthly news conference, taped at KUED-TV Thursday, that Zinke felt former President Bill Clinton’s 1996 declaration of Grand Staircase-Escalante went too far.”

The Deseret \(UT\) News (9/14, O’Donoghue) reports that Herbert said the Grand Staircase-Escalante “could be reduced to two or possibly three smaller monuments.” Herbert said, “You won’t find 1.9 million acres in the Grand Staircase-Escalante that need protection. It doesn’t mean that there aren’t Bureau of Land Management lands and BLM doesn’t manage, but to have the enhanced protection of the monument, I think, was overreach.”

Also reporting are KSTU-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/14, Winslow) and KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/14, O’Donoghue).

National Mining Association To Hold Conference At Trump International Hotel: Report.

The Washington Examiner (9/14, Phillips) reports that the National Mining Association will “hold a private conference at Trump International Hotel in Washington, D.C., next month.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is scheduled to speak at the event. He also spoke at an oil industry event at the hotel in March.

Additional coverage was provided by the Intercept (9/14, Fang, Surgey).

Darby Appointed To U.S. Interior Department Advisory Panel.

The San Angelo \(TX\) Standard-Times (9/14) reports that Texas state Rep. Drew Darby “announced Thursday he has accepted an appointment to an advisory committee for the U.S. Department of Interior.” Darby “will be part of a group working with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on energy and mineral resource development on Indian and Federal lands, evaluating current and emerging issues.” Darby said, “It is my honor to accept an appointment from Secretary Zinke for the Royalty Policy Committee within President Trump’s administration. I will continue to fight for the best interests of Texas.”

2 Trump Advisers Slated For Conference.

The Williston \(ND\) Herald (9/15) reports that two senior advisers to President Trump will attend the North Dakota Petroleum Council’s annual conference. Vincent DeVito, the counselor on energy policy for the Interior Department, and Stephen Moore, economist for the Heritage Foundation and a policy adviser to Trump, “join more than 20 other distinguished panelists and speakers that include business leaders, innovators, regulators and policy makers.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Minot \(ND\) Daily News (9/14).

Hualapai Colorado River Settlement Bill Reintroduced In U.S. Senate.

KNAU-FM Flagstaff, AZ (9/14, Heinsius) reports that Sens. John McCain and Jeff Flake have “reintroduced a bill that would settle claims by the Hualapai Tribe to the Colorado River.” The agreement “between the Hualapai, federal government and other water users would allocate 4,000 acre feet, or 1.3 billion gallons, per year to the tribe.” The tribe has “limited access to groundwater, and says the $170 million project would benefit tourism and boost employment.” However, Interior Department officials “last year testified that the project’s costs would exceed estimates, and don’t justify the relatively small amount of water it would provide.”

What Arizona Needs To Secure Our Water Future. The Arizona Republic (9/14) editorializes that “with the kind of planning and foresight the state pioneered decades ago, Arizona can continue to have the water it needs for future prosperity and economic growth.” But “without a clear focus and willingness of diverse stakeholders to work for the greater good, Arizona could face water distribution and supply problems that make our state look risky to investors.” One key issue is the resolve tribal water rights. The paper says that the Hualapai Tribe Water Rights Settlement Act “helps move the state toward that certainty.”

Many Inspectors General Spots Vacant.

The Daily Caller (9/14, Tapscott) reports that “a dozen top federal departments and agencies have gone without Inspectors General (IG) — the government’s front line of defense against waste and fraud — for more than two years on average, including the Department of Interior, which has been without a permanent watchdog for 8.5 years, according to data compiled by the Project on Government Oversight.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribal Agencies Cite Progress On Audit Issues, Senators Want To See More.

The Havasu \(AZ\) News-Herald (9/14, Clair) reports that “leaders of federal agencies serving Indian Country told a Senate panel Wednesday they have made some progress on dozens of problems cited in Government Accountability Office audits, but lawmakers said much more needs to be done.” The GAO “put the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Indian Education and Indian Health Services on its ‘high-risk’ list of government areas in need of major improvement after nearly a decade in which the agencies addressed just two of a total of 41 recommendations on ongoing problems.” Officials from the three agencies “told the Senate Indian Affairs Committee they have started to address the issues in the GAO report, reducing bureaucratic roadblocks and implementing improved technology.” However, “the GAO’s Melissa Emrey-Arras testified that the number of problems identified at the agencies has grown from 41 when the high-risk list was published in February to nearly 50 after the completion of two additional reports on safety and construction in tribal schools.”

Alaska Communities Request Land Be Put Into Federal Trust.

The AP (9/15) reports that “two Alaska tribal communities are hoping to take advantage of a policy change that allows for land to be placed into federal trust.” The Gwichyaa Zhee Gwich’in Tribal Government for the village of Fort Yukon “submitted a request to place into trust a series of contiguous lots adding up to as much as 83,750 square feet (7,780 square meters).” Also, “the village of Ninilchik has requested to place 2.5 acres (10,100 square meters) into trust.”

Judge Trims Tribe’s Suit Over Okla. Fracking Approvals.

Law360 (9/14, Rodriguez) reports that “an Oklahoma federal judge on Thursday trimmed a slew of claims from the Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma’s lawsuit alleging the federal government approved oil and gas leases and fracking permits on the tribe’s land without properly considering their environmental impacts.” U.S. District Judge James Payne “granted the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Bureau of Land Management’s motion to dismiss the tribe’s claims relating to the lease approvals, but because the government did not address the permits in its motion, the claims related to those will proceed.”

Okla. Landowner Urges 10th Circ. To Revive Drill Permit Suit.

Law360 (9/14, Lidgett) reports that “an Oklahoma landowner on Wednesday urged the Tenth Circuit to reinstate his suit that claimed the Bureau of Indian Affairs granted an energy exploration company permission to drill on his land without first conducting a required environmental review, saying the lower court made various reversible errors.” Merrill Chance “filed an opening brief in his appeal of U.S. District Judge James H. Payne’s ruling that found Chance sued the BIA and the secretary of the interior almost two decades after the statute of limitations had passed.”

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM: Wyoming Working To Fulfill Trump Energy Agenda.

The Wyoming Tribune Eagle (9/14, Funk) reports that “with a very different energy agenda in the administration of President Donald Trump than his predecessor, the Bureau of Land Management in Wyoming is ready to adapt to those changes,” according to Duane Spencer, BLM of Wyoming deputy state director for minerals and lands. Spencer “spoke Wednesday during the 2017 BLM Industry and Government Conference in Rawlins.” Spencer said, “We have been working very closely with our Washington (D.C.) office to bring them up to speed on what Wyoming is working on, what resources we offer, and that we believe BLM Wyoming is strategically positioned to deliver on what some of the administration’s priorities are – in particular, the goal of making America safe through energy independence and contributing to economic development and local economies.”

46 Wild Horses Caught From Piceance Herd.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/15, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management on Thursday "rounded up 46 wild horses as it began work on trying to remove up to 100 horses that have wandered outside the designated Piceance-East Douglas Herd Management Area." The BLM "said it expects the work to last less than a week." According to BLM spokesman David Boyd, "no horses were hurt or injured as a result of the operation."

Protests Over BLM Timber Sale.

KOBI-TV Medford, OR (9/14, Jordan) reports that "an auction for logging rights to hundreds of acres of Bureau of Land Management property drew a crowd of protesters in Grants Pass." The BLM "says the land needs logging to prevent fires." But "protesters were concerned about the thinning of old growth trees."

Group Will Work With BLM To Repair Corral At Historic Ranch.

The Ontario \(OR\) Argus Observer (9/14) reports that Friends of the Owyhee will "work with the Bureau of Land Management to repair an old corral at the Birch Creek Historic Ranch on Sept. 22." The BLM will "supply all tools needed for the repair."

Company Submits Mine Plan.

The Ontario \(OR\) Argus Observer (9/14, Meyer) reports that Paramount Gold Nevada Corp. has "filed its mining plan of operation for its Grassy Mountain site with the Bureau of Land Management, which has launched its environmental review of the proposed mine."

What's Happening With Those Permits BLM?

In an editorial, the Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (9/14) says that the Bureau of Land Management has not been forthcoming about efforts "to speed up the onshore drilling permitting process." The paper says that the Trump Administration is "completely behind overhauling this bureaucratic, business-choking monstrosity of a permit process, which is why we're stunned that neither the Department of the Interior nor BLM has decided to take a call or email and tell our Energy magazine what they're up to."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Deep-Sea Study To Begin Off Southeast Coast.

The Coastal Review (9/14) reports that "a team of scientists is set to launch in the coming weeks a four-and-a-half year study of deep-sea coral, canyon and gas-seep ecosystems in the mid- and south Atlantic." The team will "travel aboard the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's ship Pisces to explore biological features and geological processes, such as corals and naturally occurring gas seeps and the organisms that inhabit them." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, the U.S. Geological Survey and NOAA's Office of Exploration and Research are "supporting the study intended to shed light on little-known natural resources of the deep ocean off the Southeast coast."

Guest Editorial: S.C. Opposes Efforts To Expand Drilling And Testing.

The Aiken \(SC\) Standard (9/14) publishes a guest editorial from The Sun News of Myrtle Beach, which says that "offshore oil drilling and exploration is overwhelmingly opposed along the U.S. Atlantic Coast, including off South Carolina, and the opposition has become increasingly bipartisan." The American Petroleum Institute "claims more production in the Atlantic, eastern Gulf of Mexico and the [Arctic] will strengthen national security, as well as create more domestic energy, jobs and government revenue. The fact is, the nation has more oil and natural gas than was imagined only a few years ago."

Bureau Of Reclamation

U.S. And Mexico Set To Sign Landmark Colorado River Water-sharing Deal.

USA Today (9/14, James) reports that "the U.S. and Mexican governments are close to signing a landmark Colorado River deal that will establish rules for sharing water over the next decade and lay out cooperative efforts intended to head off severe shortages." Officials have "scheduled a signing ceremony on Sept. 26 in Ciudad Juárez, officials at California water districts said this week." They said "that formal event will be followed by a ceremonial signing in Santa Fe, N.M., on Sept. 27 attended by representatives from the states involved."

Additional coverage was provided by the High Country \(CO\) News (9/14, Benson).

Editorial: Gov. Brown — Don't Demand A Decision On The Delta Tunnels.

In an editorial, the San Francisco Chronicle (9/14) reports, urges water agencies to oppose the WaterFix project. The paper claims that the twin tunnels project is "environmentally destructive." Furthermore, "the project financing is in question."

Fitzgerald: Feds Sneak Money To Tunnels.

In his column for the Stockton \(CA\) Record (9/14, Fitzgerald), Michael Fitzgerald notes that "federal auditors found mid-managers at the Bureau of Reclamation made $50 million of our money in roundabout payments to water contractors and gave $34.8 million (the number is variously reported) in water credits." He says that "the Bureau of Reclamation scandal shows again certain subservient officials enthusiastically put the public interest and the Delta's health second to pleasing special interests." For this reason, Fitzgerald asserts that the "tunnels won't work."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

To Repeal Or Not To Repeal: Reviewing The US Well Control Rule.

An analysis for Offshore Technology (9/14) discusses President Trump's "review of the Well Control Rule, which tightened requirements for blowout preventers on oil rigs as a result of failures found in the Deepwater Horizon explosion." Davies says, "The recent decision taken by Donald Trump to revise regulations implemented by Barack Obama did not come as much of a surprise. However, while Trump's attempts to repeal the likes of Obamacare have generated incalculable headlines in the mainstream media, the proposed rollback of offshore drilling rules has been met with less commotion." In the wake of Trump's announcement, "many groups, such as the American Petroleum Institute (API) and the National Ocean Industries Association (NOIA), voiced their support for the move, arguing that the regulations were too costly to implement and ineffectual, in any case."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Environmental Groups Challenge Use Of Waivers To Build At Border.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (9/14, Moran) reports, "A coalition of environmental groups on Thursday sued the Department of Homeland Security challenging the use of sweeping power under a federal law to ignore environmental laws in order to build walls, fences and roads on the border." The lawsuit was filed in federal court in San Diego by Defenders of Wildlife, the Sierra Club, and the Animal Legal Defense Fund. The Union-Tribune says the lawsuit "targets a section of the REAL ID Act of 2005 which granted the Secretary of Homeland Security the power to waive complying with federal laws such as the Endangered Species Act, Clean Air Act in order to expedite border security building projects." The lawsuit "contends that the use of the law was limited to a certain time period after it was passed by Congress, and was not meant to be a perpetual tool the government can use to avoid laws." The AP (9/14) reports the lawsuit "largely mirrors a lawsuit filed by another advocacy group, the Center for Biological Diversity, but the three organizations each say they have hundreds of thousands of members, bringing more attention and resources to a legal fight over one of President Donald Trump's key campaign pledges."

New Video Shows Wild Jaguar Roaming In Southern Arizona.

The AP (9/4) reports that "wildlife conservationists have released new video footage showing what is believed to be one of three jaguars to be seen in the United States in the past few years." The Center for Biological Diversity "released the video taken this summer on Thursday, saying the big cat was the same one first seen on camera in November 2016." Conservationists believe "the recent sightings are evidence that the jaguar is returning to the U.S."

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Star (9/14, Davis).

Feds Kill Wolf That Was Preying On Livestock.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (9/15, Moss) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “recently killed an endangered Mexican gray wolf, a rarely used tactic for managing an animal the federal government is charged with protecting.” The Arizona Department of Game and Fish “said in a monthly report issued Thursday that a female wolf, a member of the Diamond Pack in Arizona, was ‘lethally removed’ last month following a series of confirmed livestock deaths.” John Bradley, a spokesman for the FWS, “said the female wolf and her pack were responsible for eight livestock deaths since January, a number he called excessive.”

Researchers Fear Worst For Vole After Wildfire Burns Habitat.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/14, Brean) reports that “researchers are assessing the damage after a wildfire near the California-Nevada border burned through critical habitat for one of North America’s most endangered rodents.” Janet Foley, a veterinary professor at the University of California, Davis, said the fire burned 10 to 20 percent of the remaining natural habitat for the Amargosa vole, a small, brown critter found nowhere else in the wild.” Foley “said a member of her research team is headed to Tecopa to examine the burned area and check the neighboring marshes for any recent arrivals.”

Science Supports Keeping Grizzlies Endangered Species Protections.

In an op-ed for The Hill (9/14, Mattson), David Mattson, a researcher and teacher recently retired from the U.S. Geological Survey, claims that “some arguments for the removal of Endangered Species Act protections for Yellowstone’s grizzly bears have little to do with science and instead rely on innuendo and unsubstantiated assertion.” In particular, Mattson takes issue with Hoover Institution fellow Terry Anderson’s recent op-ed in The Hill. Mattson claims that “Anderson is not an expert on wildlife ecology, but rather has built a career promoting free-market capitalism.” Mattson asserts that “to secure the future of Yellowstone’s grizzlies, we need contiguous populations of thousands — not mere hundreds — of bears.”

National Park Service

National Park Service Uses Lasers to Battle Jefferson Memorial Grime.

WAMU-FM Washington (9/14, Lefrak) reports that the “workers are using lasers” to battle “biofilm” at the Jefferson Memorial. Chicago-based Conservation of Sculpture and Object Studio, Inc. will “use a laser ablation treatment to clean a test area of 1,000 square feet on the northeast side of the memorial.” According to the article, “the test will be carried out over the next four weeks.”

Additional coverage was provided by WRC-TV Washington (9/14, McGrath).

Berkeley Gets Black Panther Tribute $98K.

The Daily Caller (9/14, Krayden) reports that the National Park Service is “giving $98,000 to commemorate a violent student protest group: the Black Panther Party.” The NPS is “offering money to UC Berkeley so that it might ‘honor the legacy’ of the ‘60s-era organization that preached a communist revolution and upheld black nationalism.”

Additional coverage was provided by Fox News (9/14, Harrington).

Campsite Raiding Yellowstone Grizzly Bear Captured, Killed.

The AP (9/14) reports that “a grizzly bear that has been raiding backcountry campsites and chasing campers in Yellowstone National Park since last year has been captured and killed.” The National Park Service “says biologists killed the immature, male grizzly on Sept. 8 after their nonlethal attempts to alter its behavior failed.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (9/14, Wilson) and the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (9/14, Landers).

Mountain Goats In Olympic National Park: Their Days May Be Numbered.

The Seattle Times (9/14, Bush) reports that “officials are nearing a decision on what to do with an overpopulation of mountain goats — some of which are aggressive — in Olympic National Park.” The National Park Service has “published four plans for goat management.” It is “accepting public comment on goat management through Sept. 26.”

Elevators Down At Carlsbad Caverns.

The Carlsbad \(NM\) Current-Argus (9/14, Hedden) reports that the elevators at Carlsbad Caverns National Park are "closed again for maintenance." According to Valerie Gohlke, spokesperson for Carlsbad Caverns National Park, "workers are aiming to replace rusted structural steel on the secondary elevators, along with a traveling cable." Gohlke "said the park's $4.7 million modernization plan for the elevators should reduce down times for maintenance."

Water Pipeline Breaks Again At Grand Canyon National Park.

The AP (9/14) reports that "several locations within Grand Canyon National Park will be without water or on stored water until at least Monday while crews repair another pipeline break." Phantom Ranch will "be on stored water with standard water restrictions while Cottonwood Campground and Roaring Spring will be without water."

National Park Service Proposes Fee Increase At FDR Site.

The Kingston \(NY\) Daily Freeman (9/14, Kemble) reports that "National Park Service representatives are taking comments on a proposed $1 increase in the admission fee this January at the Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site in Hyde Park." The hike was "discussed at a Rhinebeck Town Board meeting Tuesday evening." Site Superintendent Larry Turk "said the increase, to $10, would only cover tours of the Roosevelt home." He said, "It would get us in line with the other historical homes around the local area. Right now we're less than they are, and we're just trying to ... bring in some revenue to help maintain the parks."

The 16-year Major Rehabilitation Of The Many Glacier Hotel In Glacier National Park Is Completed With The Unveiling Of The Helical Staircase.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (9/14, Dettmer) reports that "after 16 years of rehabilitation," the Many Glacier Hotel has "been restored to its original grandeur as the 'Gem of the West' in Glacier National Park." According to the article, "the multi-partner, multi-million dollar effort reached its completion this summer with the unveiling of the helical staircase, the final major rehabilitation project."

Beach Relocation Part Of Final Assateague Management Plan.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (9/14, Vaughn) reports that "an abbreviated version of the final general management plan for Assateague Island National Seashore has been posted on the National Park Service website." The article notes that "among the plan's elements is the relocation of the recreational beach on Assateague in Virginia about 1½ miles north of the existing beach area to a more stable part of the barrier island."

Mount Rainier National Park Releases Fish Management Plan.

The Nisqually Valley \(WA\) News (9/14) reports that the National Park Service has "prepared an environmental assessment that considers the implementation of a Fish Management Plan at Mount Rainier National Park." The objective of "the plan is to guide management of native and nonnative fish populations in the park, according to a news release."

Microburst Swamps, Sinks Powerboats, Jet Skis At Lake Powell.

The AP (9/14) reports that "a sudden, powerful downward gust of wind swamped or sank dozens of powerboats and jet skis Thursday at Lake Powell along the Arizona-Utah border." According to authorities, "at least three people were injured with a 60-year-old woman suffering a severe arm injury that required amputation."

Column: Time To Talk About Starved Rock Being A National Park.

Columnist Tom Collins pens an open letter in the Lasalle \(IL\) News Tribune (9/14, Collins) to Rep. Adam Kinzinger, urging him "to draw up legislation or convene a task force to weigh the merits of designating Starved Rock State Park a national park." Collins notes that "the park has long enjoyed great popularity and its average yearly attendance puts it squarely in the company of the most popular units of the National Park Service." But "the state of Illinois, mired as it is in ongoing budget problems, has failed to provide the resources needed to properly maintain the tourist infrastructure." Collins asserts that "Starved Rock is every bit as worthy of joining these glories and enjoying the resources and protections available only through the U.S. Department of the Interior."

North Korea Launches Missile Over Japan.

News Thursday evening that North Korea fired a missile towards Japan is generating significant media attention. Two of the three networks last night led with the story. ABC World News Tonight (9/14, lead story, 1:10, Muir) said Japanese television is “reporting the missile has passed over Japanese air space,” and “several population centers have now been warned. This launch is yet another provocative move on the part of North Korea.” NBC Nightly News (9/14, lead story, 1:25, Holt) said the launch “comes weeks after North Korea claimed it tested a hydrogen bomb. King Jong-Un continuing to rapidly develop his nuclear and missile programs, defiant from the face of threats from President Trump.” NBC’s Ron Allen said the missile “flew some 1,700 miles, in the air for about 14 minutes. Interestingly, the Japanese nor the Americans decided to try to shoot this missile down.”

Calling the latest launch “a direct challenge” to the US and China, the New York Times (9/14, Choe, Sanger) reports that the Administration “chose not to take out the missile on the launching pad, even though they saw it being fueled up a day ago.” According to the Times, “neither the United States nor Japan tried to shoot down the missile, perhaps because it was clear moments after the launching that it was not aimed at land.”

The CBS Evening News (9/14, story 4, 0:25, Mason) said it was not immediately “clear what type of missile” was fired, “or where it landed,” but USA Today (9/14, Eversley, Maresca) reports Japanese Foreign Minister Taro Kono “said it appeared to be an Intercontinental Ballistic Missile based on its range, according to NHK.” The White House said President Trump was briefed on the launch by Chief of Staff Kelly.

The Washington Post (9/14, Fifield, Lamothe) notes the launch marked “the second time in less than three weeks that North Korea sent a projectile over Japan.” While the “details were still emerging,” it “appeared similar to the previous launch, on Aug. 29” of an intermediate-range ballistic missile, and the Wall Street Journal (9/14, Landers, Jun) reports South Korea’s joint chiefs of staff said the missile was launched from a suburb of Pyongyang, the same site used for the Aug. 29 launch.

The Los Angeles Times (9/14, Stiles) reports that in a “show of defense, South Korean military officials said they immediately retaliated by sending a missile of their own about 150 miles into the East Sea, also known as the Sea of Japan — the same distance as the base where the North Korean missile originated.”

Tillerson Presses China To Use Oil As Leverage. The AP (9/14, Pennington) reports Secretary of State Tillerson on Thursday “urged China to use its leverage as North Korea’s principal supplier of oil to press” Pyongyang “into reconsidering its development of nuclear weapons.” Speaking to reporters in London, Tillerson said it was going to be “very difficult” to get China to consent to an oil embargo against of its neighbor, but he still urged China as a “great country and a world power” to use its leverage as its top oil supplier. “That is a very powerful tool and it has been used in the past,” Tillerson said at a news conference. “We hope China will not reject that.”

Zakaria: North Korea Unlikely To Give Up Nuclear Weapons Program. Fareed Zakaria writes in his Washington Post (9/14) column that Kim Jong-Un is the world figure he would like to interview, and “because I am unlikely to get that interview, I have decided to imagine it instead.” Zakaria writes that Kim would likely defend his nation’s nuclear weapons program as a means of survival and vow never to give it up, because “it’s all that is keeping us alive.”

Relief Supplies Flowing Into St. Maarten.

On ABC World News Tonight (9/14, story 3, 1:25, Muir), David Wright reported on the “devastation in St. Maarten...and the urgent effort to get people out.” Wright said that while “relief supplies are flowing in,” recovery “is going to take some time.” NBC Nightly News (9/14, story 5, 1:40, Holt) also reported on recovery efforts in the Caribbean.

Angry Mapp Chastises Community For Unreal Expectations.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (9/13) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp “led off his nightly press conference on Wednesday with an angry condemnation directed at members of the community he said have unreal expectations about the recovery efforts in the wake of Hurricane Irma.” On Wednesday, Mapp “first acknowledged the death of WAPA lineman Jason Julius before launching into a diatribe about the community’s complaints about the progress of recovery efforts.”

WAPA Halts All Hurricane Restoration Work Territory-Wide Following Death Of Lineman On Tuesday. The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) reports that “the Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority confirmed on Tuesday night that one of its linemen died today, while working in the Sugar Estate area as part of a Wide Power Restoration Effort September 11, 2017” The lineman’s “death was the fifth confirmed fatality since Hurricane Irma struck on September 6.”

Mapp Acknowledges Police Fell Down On The Job On STJ.

St. Croix Source (9/12, Kossler, Bogolub) reports that “police failed to do their jobs on parts of St. John in the first days after the storm, Gov. Kenneth Mapp said during his update on storm recovery efforts Tuesday evening.” Mapp said, “I understand tremendously the concern, particularly of folks on the eastern end of St. John and Coral Bay who are very concerned about the lack of a security presence in Coral Bay, particularly following the storm.” He continued, “There was some breakdown in the leadership in the early days following the storm at the VIPD and the commissioner, I and his chief had a conversation about that and I will leave that to the police commissioner to deal with those particular issues.”

U.S. Labor Department To Provide Immediate Grants And Assistance For Hurricane Irma Recovery Efforts.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/12) reports that “the U.S. Department of Labor, in cooperation with state and local partners, is setting aside funding and will be making grants to assess workforce needs in the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Florida, and other states in response to Hurricane Irma, the U.S. D.O.L. announced today.”

Fund Health Study On Surface Mines.

In an editorial, the Wheeling \(WV\) Intelligencer (9/15) calls on the Trump Administration to allow a “proposed $1 million study on the health effects of living near a surface mine” to proceed. The paper says that “this could be an important study — and it is not one commissioned in an attempt to harm the coal industry.” According to the paper, “a scientific, objective study could balance claims by some environmental radicals that people living near any coal mine are at risk,” and “if not, we ought to know it.”

Hoeven, Industry Want Study Of North Dakota Oil Potential.

The AP (9/14, Macpherson) reports North Dakota oil drillers and Sen. John Hoeven (R-ND) “want federal geologists to reevaluate the amount of recoverable crude oil in the state, saying a new assessment likely would show stronger production potential and attract investment." Hoeven "wants the USGS to take into account other formations in western North Dakota's oil patch that could be exploited using technology developed for the Bakken and the Three Forks directly below it." He is quoted saying, "The industry wants a broader study. ... The industry feels it will show a larger resource if the other formations are included."

As Right Lashes Out, Trump Says DACA Deal Would Include "Massive Border Controls."

Media coverage of the DACA talks between the President and Democratic leaders Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer highlighted the seeming sense of anger and betrayal on the part of some on the right. The contours of the emerging agreement reportedly include a legislative fix to the DREAMers' legal status and beefed-up border security – but not a border wall. The Hill (9/14, Easley), for example, described Trump's supporters as "apoplectic and lashing out at 'Amnesty Don,'" the New York Times (9/14, Peters) says he "came under withering attack...from some of his strongest supporters, who were outraged and unforgiving," and the Washington Post (9/14, Costa) that his "staunch conservative allies...have erupted in anger and incredulity." Rep. Steve King "issued a dramatic warning to the president after he scrolled through news reports," declaring Trump's base "blown up, destroyed, irreparable, and disillusioned beyond repair." Townhall (9/14, Pavlich) noted that King told CNN, "The base will leave him. They can't support him anymore." Ann Coulter, meanwhile, tweeted, "At this point, who doesn't want Trump impeached?" USA Today (9/14, Estepa) reports that she later added, "If we're not getting a wall, I'd prefer President Pence."

The President defended his actions yesterday, starting with three morning tweets. Trump wrote, "No deal was made last night on DACA. Massive border security would have to be agreed to in exchange for consent. Would be subject to vote." He also said "the WALL, which is already under construction in the form of new renovation of old and existing fences and walls, will continue to be built." Trump added, "Does anybody really want to throw out good, educated and accomplished young people who have jobs, some serving in the military? Really!....." White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/14), "The President has been very clear in what his position is. He wants to get a deal done. He wants to do that with DACA, but also to include massive border security and interior enforcements. That's what he's tweeted this morning. That was the message he relayed last night."

The Los Angeles Times (9/14, Mascaro, Bennett, Lauter) reports Trump further "defended his negotiations with Democratic leaders on immigration" later yesterday, telling reporters en route to Florida, "We're working on a plan – subject to getting massive border controls. We're working on a plan for DACA." The CBS Evening News (9/14, lead story, 3:25, Cordes) showed Trump saying, "There was no deal. They didn't say they had a deal." Roll Call (9/14, Bennett) noted that White House deputy press secretary Lindsay Walters also told reporters, "There was no deal made."

On the other hand, the AP (9/14, Werner, Colvin) quotes Trump as saying "he was 'fairly close' to a deal with congressional leaders." He added that "his promised wall along the US-Mexico border would 'come later,' but would need to happen soon." In fact, "after he landed in Florida, he declared repeatedly, 'If we don't have a wall, we're doing nothing.'" The CBS Evening News (9/14, lead story, 3:25, Cordes) reported that later Thursday, Trump "was back to criticizing the Democrats about the wall," telling reporters, "If the Democrats aren't going to approve it, then we're not going to do what they want." The Wall Street Journal (9/14, Meckler, Peterson) runs a similar story under the headline "Trump, Democrats Hagggle On Contours Of A 'Dreamers' Deal,"

ABC World News Tonight (9/14, story 4, 2:25, Vega) showed Trump saying, "We're talking about taking care of people, people that were brought here, people that have done a good job and were not brought here of their own volition. ... We're not looking at citizenship, we're not looking at amnesty. We're looking at allowing people to stay here." Breitbart (9/14, Spiering) reported that "on Air Force One, however, a White House spokesperson confirmed that 'legal citizenship over a period of time' for DACA recipients would likely be part of a deal." Pelosi, moreover, "insisted that the plan would offer them a 'path to citizenship.'" Politico (9/14, Nussbaum), meanwhile, reports "the White House is against 'amnesty,' but won't say what that means," and The Hill (9/14, Fabian) described Trump as "trying to soothe his base, which is incensed."

Eamon Javers said on CNBC's Closing Bell (9/14), "That's something that we haven't really seen much of in Washington since the Clinton Administration, but it looks like...Trump is trying a little triangulation here as well." The Washington Times (9/14, Dinan) reports, however, that the President also said yesterday that "GOP leaders in Congress are 'very much on board' the deal he's working with...Schumer and...Pelosi." The Washington Post (9/14, Viebeck, O'Keefe, Debonis) reports Speaker Ryan dismissed "the potential deal...as little more than a preliminary discussion," but also "agreed in broad terms with the president's goal of protecting hundreds of thousands of undocumented immigrants while postponing talk of a border wall but toughening US border security in other ways."

Sen. Bill Cassidy said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/14), "The American people obviously want the border security. But if you look at polls, the American people want something done with DACA in a way which doesn't kick out a lot of kids who came here when they were young. So, I think the President is probably looking at the polls and realizes the sweet spot is to work out that compromise. So, I think that's what the President seems to be aiming for."

Sen. James Lankford was asked on CNN's The Lead (9/14) if he could support a deal with Democrats on Dreamers that does not include funding for a border wall. Lankford said, "I would actually. ... I've been clear for years with people that the Dream Act is not going to pass, but it doesn't solve the problem to ignore the issue on the kids that are on DACA. ... As far as the issue of not having a border wall, that doesn't surprise me, quite frankly. ... The Department of Homeland Security has yet to explain to the" Appropriations and Homeland Security committees "exactly what the wall would look like, where they would put it exactly, how it'd be constructed, the final cost of it. All of those things are still up in the air. Until they can resolve those things, we shouldn't have a border wall funding issue. ... We're not ready for that at this point. We are ready to be able to deal with DACA."

Rep. Ted Yoho said on CNN's Situation Room (9/14), "I don't think any deal's been cut. I think there was talks. You can't fix a problem if we don't talk about it, but I can tell you one thing is border security has to happen. Enforcement of laws has to happen before you'll see this go anywhere. But to talk about it and bring it out on the table I think is a winner for all of America."

Rep. Louie Gohmert said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/14), "I refuse to talk about legalizing anybody until that border is secure. There are places we have got to have a wall, we've got to secure it, and once that is done, then we'll talk about this other stuff."

McClatchy (9/14, Glueck) describes Trump as "hedging on a border wall" and "threatening to betray core campaign promises in the process," though "according to the GOP base, this is all the fault of the Republican-controlled Congress." Along those lines, Joe Scarborough, in the Washington Post (9/14), calls King's comments yesterday "a primal scream" and mocks "poor

Ann Coulter," but adds that "Hannity, Bannon and King are about to learn the same lesson that Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio, Ted Cruz, Hillary Clinton, Jeff Zucker, Mika Brzezinski and I discovered in 2016: With Trump, it is never over. His base will stick with him no matter what."

Breitbart (9/14, Poor) noted that Rush Limbaugh did not join the choir of conservative criticism of Trump. Instead he said, "I'm asking myself: Would Trump really do that? Is he that...? Fill in the blank. But a lot of people do think it, a lot of people did think it, and right there pushing that narrative is the Drive-By Media – and certain Republicans are helping that narrative be pushed."

Rep. Tim Ryan said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/14), "These are kids. These are kids who came here with family members. They did nothing wrong, and we are trying to solve a problem. Of course we want to talk about jobs, but this is an immediate crisis that, quite frankly, the President created. He could have handled this in a much better way of just saying, let's figure out if he wants to go through the legislative process to formalize this. We could have done that without all the drama. But here we are."

Rep. Adriano Espaillat said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/14) that the President "doesn't have to send it back to Congress. In fact, in Congress, we've got several pieces of legislation that takes care of the problem. We have the DREAM Act that is sponsored by Congresswomen Lucille Roybal-Allard and Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, a bipartisan piece of legislation that seems to have the provisions in it that would resolve this problem. ... All he needs to do is a hop, skip, and a jump to the Capitol. Let's roll up our sleeves and go over the provisions in the bill. Let's see what's good and what's bad and make sure we pass it."

"Sources": House GOP Leaders Want Wall As Part Of DACA Deal. Politico (9/14, Bade) reports that according to "sources close to leadership...House Republicans plan to ask Trump to push for the wall as part of any DACA fix."

Meadows Tells Conservatives Not To Worry, Says Group "Working Very Closely" With White House. USA Today (9/14, Collins) reports Rep. Mark Meadows, chairman of the hard-line House Freedom Caucus, "says conservatives should not be concerned about reports...Trump has struck an immigration deal with Democrats, because the Freedom Caucus is taking the lead in drafting the bill." Meadows "downplayed talk of a deal Thursday, because he said members of his caucus are working in conjunction with the White House to get conservative legislative proposals drafted." Meadows told USA Today, "We're working very closely with the administration and conservative members of Congress...on how to address this (Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals) issue."

In fact, Politico (9/14, Cheney, Hesson) says "many conservatives on Capitol Hill made clear this week that there is, in fact, a window for the president to win buy-in from the right for a deal that would protect some undocumented immigrants...in exchange for stepped-up immigration enforcement measures." According to "interviews with more than a dozen conservative lawmakers...many envision a deal much like the one Trump and Democratic leaders purportedly reached." Politico adds that "the real test will be what kind of border security measures Democrats are willing to stomach, and whether the right will insist on a border wall despite Trump's decision to put it off."

Pelosi To Democratic Whips: "We Made A Deal To Make A Deal." Politico (9/14, Schor, Caygle) reports that Pelosi told "House Democratic whips that despite 'some misunderstandings in the press about a deal, we made a deal to make a deal. We made a deal to go forward.'"

House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/14), "My understanding, I wouldn't call it a deal. What I would say is a plan to get to a deal. I think it was very clear that the President understood and there was an agreement that the Dreamer Act would be the substance of whatever agreement is ultimately reached and also what was reached was that security, enhanced security at the border would be part of whatever program was ultimately agreed to."

Pelosi: "I Do Trust The President Is Sincere." Reuters (9/14) reports that Pelosi also said yesterday "she trusted...Trump's sincerity in working to protect so-called Dreamers." Pelosi told reporters, "When we're talking about this legislation to protect the Dreamers, yes I do trust that the president is sincere in understanding that the public supports that overwhelmingly, the public supports not sending these young people back."

Schumer On Hot Mic: "He Likes Us" Or "Likes Me Anyway." Roll Call (9/14, McKinless) reported that "the Senate chamber microphones picked up...Schumer commenting on his relationship with...Trump Thursday morning." Said Schumer, "He likes us. ... He likes me anyway." Politico (9/14, Nelson) says "it was not clear about whom Schumer was speaking."

Sources: Trump Has Difficulty Speaking To McConnell, Has Better Rapport With Schumer And

Pelosi. Politico (9/14, Bade, Dawsey) reports that "in recent weeks, Trump has complained in private that it's difficult to have any sort of relationship – or even make small talk – with...McConnell," and has "told staff that he finds...Ryan, whom he's dubbed a 'boy scout,' dry as well, but the two have some rapport." A "senior administration official" said "the only Republican in leadership with whom Trump has a personal connection is House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy." Politico adds that "by contrast, Trump can relate to Democratic leaders...Schumer and...Pelosi," and "wants to keep meeting with them." A "White House source" tells Politico, "Schumer just talks to him. You get Mitch and Paul in here, and they're trying to explain this or that, and there is no personal connection."

Breitbart: "Amnesty Don" Number One Trend In DC On Twitter. Breitbart (9/13, Binder) indicated, in fact, that "'Amnesty Don' peaked at the number one trend in Washington, D.C. on Twitter, the social media outlet the President is most known for using." Breitbart (9/14, Moons) also runs a series of pieces highly critical of Trump, including one titled "9 Family Members Of Americans Killed By Illegal Aliens Respond To Possible DACA Deal With Democrats."

Another Breitbart (9/14, Munro), titled "Trump Voters Throw MAGA Hats into Twitter Bonfire," warns the President that "the hat-burning may presage a huge demoralization among Trump's loyal followers, and cause his support to drop down to the basement levels achieved by President George W. Bush when he pushed for an amnesty in 2006 and 2007."

Hispanic Lawmakers, Immigration Activists Upset At Pelosi And Schumer. Politico (9/14, Schor, Caygle) reports "Democratic leaders are facing fresh trouble with their left flank after cutting their latest deal with President Donald Trump to protect Dreamers." Politico adds that "Hispanic lawmakers were blindsided by the Wednesday night announcement from" Pelosi and Schumer "that they'd support legislation to help the nearly 700,000 undocumented immigrants in exchange for an unspecified boost in border security," and "immigration activists were frustrated to see Democrats claim victory only days after calling for a stand-alone vote on a path to citizenship for Dreamers." Pelosi "sought to assuage her caucus' concerns Thursday morning."

WPost, USA Today, WSJournal Among Those Defending Trump. The Washington Post (9/14) editorializes that it "doesn't often agree with...Trump, but we're on board with his observation that most Americans oppose deportation for 'dreamers,'" and believe he is "right to ratchet up the pressure on Congress to extend" DREAMers "the protections he is set to withdraw." Democrats "should reciprocate in good faith by providing new funding for border security." USA Today (9/14) editorializes on the "fierce backlash from conservatives, as well as opposition from the far left, where anything other than resistance to Trump is considered treasonous." Yet it also concludes that "assuming a deal gets done, it will provide something for both sides."

In an editorial, meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (9/14) urges Trump to dismiss the criticism from some on the right, and predicts those same critics will be soon in his corner. To the Journal, an agreement on DACA would be a major accomplishment for the President.

Jim Acosta said on CNN's The Lead (9/14), "The President said he is getting close to a deal to help those Dreamers, but he did warn talking to reporters on Air Force One he's going to have to start working with Democrats if he's not getting enough cooperation from Republicans, and that capped a day of confusion for the White House as the President was being contradicted by his aides and vice versa all day long on the subject of immigration."

Juan Williams said on Fox News' Special Report (9/14), "Steve King, the Iowa congressman, said basically the President risks blowing up his base as this point. You think about that base...it's about 35, 40 percent. You think about the high retention of Republican support for the President. If that starts to deteriorate, if you get the Ann Coulter voices, the right wing talk radio voices pulling away from this President, that could crater what is not a high level of support for him in that base."

Tucker Carlson said on Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (9/14), "It would be a massive amnesty, maybe the biggest ever granted in American history. This is thrilling news for Democrats and for open borders advocates everywhere. In return for this concession, the President receives nothing, no reduction in overall immigration totals, no tightened restriction on foreign workers who take jobs from Americans, no E-Verify to prevent illegal immigrants from working under the table, no end to chain migration. The President isn't even getting a border wall, though he insisted he will somehow get one later, possibly."

Hannity: Schumer And Pelosi Will "Stab The President In The Back." Sean Hannity said in his opening monologue on Fox News' Hannity (9/14) that Schumer and Pelosi are essentially claiming that "the Democrats get everything they want, they get DACA and the President doesn't get his wall. It is the one thing everybody needs to understand about Schumer and Pelosi. They don't like this President. They can't stand him. They want the President to fail and they certainly don't have his best interests at heart or in mind. Schumer and Pelosi only care about scoring cheap political points because they want to gain seats in 2018. ... As soon as it doesn't serve them politically, I can promise you, Chuck Schumer, Nancy Pelosi, they are going to turn around and stab the President in the back. That's a fact."

NBC News Analysis: "No Formal Plan" To Build Border Wall, "Obstacles Piling Up." NBC Nightly News (9/14, story 4, 2:05, Alexander) reported that "eight months into his presidency, there's no formal plan for building the kind of wall the President's been touting for two years. ... NBC has learned the study...Trump ordered in January on how to fully secure the border yet to be finalized." Moreover, "the obstacles are piling up," with "many construction firms fearing political retaliation are shying away from what typically would be a highly sought after and lucrative contract." Moreover, there is, NBC continued, "a wall of opposition" to "one of the President's top priorities."

Trump Meets With Irma Survivors, Praises Federal And State Response.

The President visited Southwest Florida yesterday to meet with Hurricane Irma survivors. The trip sparked largely favorable coverage, particularly on Florida print outlets and local TV newscasts. Encapsulating the tone of the reporting across much of the media spectrum, Aaron Blake writes in the Washington Post (9/14) that the visuals from the trip show "a guy who is actually pretty adept at pressing the flesh with not-necessarily-Trump-supporters and doing the small-talk thing. These are all good images for the White House." A number of reports, however, take a more critical tone when addressing Trump's encouragement to Gov. Rick Scott to challenge Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson in next year's elections. The CBS Evening News (9/14, story 3, 1:35, Evans), for example, said Trump "couldn't resist injecting a little politics," the AP (9/14, Lucey, Thomas) that he "couldn't resist injecting a political flavor into his visit," and the Los Angeles Times (9/14, Lee, McDonnell) that he "raised some eyebrows by injecting politics into Thursday's visit."

As the Sunshine State \(FL\) News (9/14, Smith) notes, the President "thanked...Scott for his work, saying he's doing an 'incredible' job" and adding, "I hope this man right here, Rick Scott, runs for the Senate." Scott "returned the compliment, praising the president half a dozen times during his four-minute remarks for his support even while Irma was thousands of miles away." The New York Times (9/14, Sullivan) says "Scott's compliment was notable, as the federal government's response to hurricanes is regularly measured against its botched efforts after Hurricane Katrina hit Louisiana in 2005." Politico (9/14, McCaskill) reports Scott "has publicly said he is weighing a Senate run, but he has insisted that he feels little pressure to make an early decision."

The Naples \(FL\) Daily News (9/14, Stanley), meanwhile, reports that in Naples, Trump "handed out half-sandwiches and bananas with the first lady, vice president and...Scott," and "met with a handful of residents who sat waiting on front lawns of the mobile home community, with punched out windows, collapsed porches and wrecked carports." In Fort Myers, the President "thanked the Marines, Navy, Army, National Guard, Federal Emergency Management Administration and everyone who helped keep lives safe during the hurricane."

WTVJ-TV Miami (9/14, 6:16 p.m. EDT) described the President as "consoler in chief, hugging and handshaking with folks clobbered by the fist of Hurricane Irma," and WFTX-TV Fort Myers, FL (9/14, 6:05 p.m. EDT) reported "people" say that "even though they've lost everything, they are encouraged by some personal attention from the White House." WTXL-TV Tallahassee, FL (9/14, 6:03 p.m. EDT) showed Trump saying, "The job that everybody has done is incredible. I just want to thank everybody, the first responders. We've seen the devastation." WPEC-TV West Palm Beach, FL (9/14, 5:09 p.m. ET), meanwhile, showed Vice President Pence saying, "We are with you today. We are going to be with you tomorrow, and we are going to be with you until Florida rebuilds bigger and better than ever before."

Upon his arrival in Florida, USA Today (9/14, Jackson) reports, Trump spoke "in front of a Coast Guard helicopter at Southwest Florida International Airport" to thank "first responders and other officials working to rescue stranded residents, restore utilities and ensure public safety – even thanking the media for keeping people informed."

Reporting on Trump's Naples stop, the CBS Evening News (9/14, story 3, 1:35, Evans) showed a person in the crowd telling the President, "Where was Obama in the last hurricane? He was playing golf." Trump replied, "Was this a good vote?" The unidentified speaker responded, "Yes." Trump was shown saying, "He said best vote of his life." ABC World News Tonight (9/14, story 5, 0:25, Muir), meanwhile, only mentioned that Trump was in Florida "surveying the damage from...Irma" as the preface of a report on the path of Hurricane Jose, and NBC Nightly News (9/14, story 4, 2:05, Alexander) did the same at the tail end of a story that concluded

Trump is struggling to fulfill his campaign promises.

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (9/14) that Trump "did come face to face with some storm victims," and showed him saying, "We love the people of Florida. And they went through something I guess the likes that nobody's ever seen before. They've never seen a category like this coming. Because it came in really at a five. All you have to do is look what happened in the Keys. We love these people and we're going to be back and we're going to help and the job that everybody has done in terms of first responders and everybody has been incredible."

The AP (9/14, Lucey, Thomas) describes Trump as "brimming with enthusiasm for the state and federal response effort," and says he and the First Lady "encountered piles of broken siding and soggy furniture heaped on front porches, and residents who were happy to get a presidential visit." Said Trump, "We are there for you 100 percent. ... I'll be back here numerous times. This is a state that I know very well." NPR (9/14, Kelly) said that "the surrounding area was littered with downed trees and ripped-out signs; mobile homes were totaled; and tarps covered roofs, according to pool reports. Gas stations along the way advertised that they didn't have fuel."

The New York Times (9/14, Sullivan) similarly indicates that in his "third visit to storm-ravaged parts of the United States in the past few weeks after two major hurricanes," the President "again praised the federal government's performance," saying, "I think we're doing a good job in Florida." The Washington Times (9/14, Miller) notes he "commended" both Scott and the "fantastic" job FEMA "had done preparing and responding to the massive hurricane." Reuters (9/14, Oliphant) reports Trump also had praise for "first responders and local officials for their handling of the storm." Said Trump, "When you think of the incredible power of that storm, and while people unfortunately passed, it was such a small number. ... People thought thousands and thousands of people may have their lives ended and the number is a very small number, which is a great tribute to you." The Wall Street Journal (9/14, Ballhaus) runs a similar report.

The New York Post (9/14, Steinbuch) reports that "before leaving the White House on Thursday morning, Trump said that 'historically there's never been anything like this.'" He added, "But the United States Coast Guard, FEMA, working along with Gov. Scott, they've really done an amazing job. ... We have the largest assemblage of human beings ever in one area for power, and rapidly it's being turned on."

A couple of reports focused on Trump's offhand comments yesterday. Under the headline "Donald Trump Really Can't Stop Talking About His Hands," Vanity Fair (9/14, Weaver) reported that "Trump has been traveling to the southern parts of the country to respond to the first natural disasters of his presidency, or in his case, to talk about himself." When "he prepared to put on a pair of latex gloves while helping with Harvey relief earlier this month, Trump claimed 'his hands were too big' for the gloves," and "in a clear move to recycle his bit, he said the same thing while helping with Irma relief in Florida on Thursday." Business Insider (9/14, Abadi) ran a similar report.

Yoho Also Praises Recovery Effort. Rep. Ted Yoho said on CNN's Situation Room (9/14) that his district is "recovering. There's a stellar effort by everybody on the ground and I'm happy to report that all six of the counties in District 3 of north-central Florida got individual assistance where people can qualify for $33,000 of assistance, public assistance and hazard assistance." Yoho added, "We have got 21,000 MREs coming in later on today and 10,000 gallons of water. Power is being put up. The important thing is that the FEMA money is here to help alleviate hazard release, picking up trash and debris. We're happy with the progression and I think the greatest thing I saw was people coming together as Americans, as we always do in tough times like this to make a tough situation better."

Trump To View Irma Relief Efforts In Puerto Rico, US Virgin Islands. McClatchy (9/14, Daugherty) reports that the President will visit Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands "to view Hurricane Irma relief efforts first hand," Puerto Rican Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said Thursday. Rosselló "has been in regular communication with the White House over the past week and said that White House officials have pledged to support Puerto Rico's needs." According to McClatchy, Puerto Rico "sustained an estimated $1 billion in damage from Irma, up from an initial estimate of $600 million," and that "will play a role when Congress discusses an Irma relief package, which will cost billions of dollars after Irma moved through the Keys and along Florida's Gulf Coast."

Trump Dismisses Impact Of Climate Change On Hurricanes Harvey, Irma. The Hill (9/14, Henry) reports that following his visit to Florida, Trump "dismissed the impact of climate change on Hurricanes Harvey and Irma," telling reporters on Air Force One, "We've had bigger storms," and "ignor[ing] a question about his views on climate change, according to reporters traveling with him."

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (9/14) that Trump said "he is not changing his mind on the issue," though "the scientific community believes that there is a very strong likelihood that there is a connection between climate change and...these violent storms that we're seeing not only here in the United States, but around the world. ... This remains a tough issue for this White House where you have the President of the United States essentially saying hasn't changed his mind on the issue of climate change. Apparently, he still believes it's a hoax, while officials inside the Administration agree climate change is happening. They just don't know what to do about it, and they don't know how to change the President's opinion on it."

By 211-198, House Approves Spending Bill Boosting Military Spending.

The AP (9/14, Taylor) reports "the Republican-led House on Thursday passed a sweeping $1.2 trillion spending bill that provides billions more dollars for the military while sparing medical research and popular community development programs from deep cuts sought by President Donald Trump." The 211-198 vote moved forward a "massive measure that wrapped the 12 annual spending bills into one in advance of the end of the budget year on Sept. 30."

WSJournal Praises House Passage Of All 12 Spending Bills. A Wall Street Journal (9/14) editorial praises the House Republicans for passing all 12 individual spending bills for the first time since 2004 and argues that while the bills will face Democratic filibusters in the Senate, perhaps the House's responsible action will encourage the Senate to act.

Trump Dismisses Impact Of Climate Change On Hurricanes Harvey, Irma.

The Hill (9/14, Henry) reports that following his visit Thursday to Florida to survey the damage from Hurricane Irma, President Trump "dismissed the impact of climate change on Hurricanes Harvey and Irma," telling reporters on Air Force One, "We've had bigger storms," and "ignor[ing] a question about his views on climate change, according to reporters traveling with him."

NYTimes Analysis: Hurricanes May Be Changing GOP Thinking On Climate Change. In an analysis, the New York Times (9/14, Burns) reports that "an array of political leaders — including some members of Mr. Trump's party, along with emboldened Democrats and environmental activists — see the underlying dynamics of climate politics bending, as drastic weather events throw up practical challenges for red and blue states alike." Republican party strategists believe that to be safe, Republicans are "embracing proposals to mitigate certain effects of environmental change, while skirting debate about more drastic actions that experts see as essential." The Times continues, "That approach reached even the White House this week, with Thomas P. Bossert, Mr. Trump's Homeland Security adviser, declaring that the administration takes 'seriously the threat of climate change.' He added, somewhat vaguely, 'Not the cause of it, but the things that we observe.'"

Jim Acosta said on CNN's Situation Room (9/14) that Trump said "he is not changing his mind on the issue," though "the scientific community believes that there is a very strong likelihood that there is a connection between climate change and...these violent storms that we're seeing not only here in the United States, but around the world. ... This remains a tough issue for this White House where you have the President of the United States essentially saying he hasn't changed his mind on the issue of climate change. Apparently, he still believes it's a hoax, while officials inside the Administration agree climate change is happening. They just don't know what to do about it, and they don't know how to change the President's opinion on it."

CNBC (9/14) similarly reports, "Some see signs that the recent blitz of hurricanes is reshaping strategies in the Trump White House." After the flooding of Houston, "Bossert...said a new plan was being developed to insure federal money would not increase flood risks." In addition, as Irma weakened over Georgia on Monday, "Bossert used a White House briefing to offer more hints of an emerging climate resilience policy, while notably avoiding accepting climate change science: 'What President Trump is committed to is making sure that federal dollars aren't used to rebuild things that will be in harm's way later or that won't be hardened against the future predictable floods that we see. And that has to do with engineering analysis and changing conditions along eroding shorelines but also in inland water and flood-control projects.'"

Wenonah Hauter is executive director of the national advocacy organization Food & Water Watch, writes in a piece for The Hill (9/14, Wenonah Hauter —) that comments on climate change from Administration officials — like Bossert saying, "We continue to take seriously the climate change, not the cause of it, but the things that we observe" — are "no surprise: Trump has dismissed fossil fuel-driven climate change as a hoax, and stacked his administration with a who's-who of oil and gas industry backers." However, Hauter says, it's "clearer than ever that our climate has already been significantly altered by decades of fossil fuel carbon emissions. ... All we need now is the public and political will to act.”

Politico (9/14, Caputo) reported that Florida Gov. Rick Scott “is again weathering criticism over global warming in the wake of Hurricane Irma, and won’t say if he believes man-made climate change is real.” Politico quoted Scott as saying this week, “Clearly our environment changes all the time, and whether that’s cycles we’re going through or whether that’s man-made, I wouldn’t be able to tell you which one it is. But I can tell you this: We ought to go solve problems. I know we have beach renourishment issues. I know we have flood-mitigation issues.” Politico added, “In not taking a position on climate change, Scott’s views and responses to questions about” the issue “have remained markedly steady for years.”

Administration May Replace Obama Climate Rule Rather Than Repeal It.

Politico (9/14, Holden) reports that the Trump Administration is indicating that it may offer “its own replacement for former President Barack Obama’s landmark climate regulation — rather than just erasing it altogether.” Politico cites “a source close to the process” who said that the EPA “aims by early October to issue a proposal to undo Obama’s climate rule, along with a separate advance notice of its intent to consider a replacement.” Politico adds that while such a “mend-it-don’t-end-it approach on Obama’s 2015 rule could appease power companies that say the EPA needs to impose some kind of climate regulation,” it “would run afoul of demands from some conservative activists, who have pressured EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to reject the idea that climate change is a problem requiring federal action.”

Green Groups Intend To Sue EPA For Blocking Methane Emissions Limit.

E&E Publishing (9/13) reports that several environmental groups have already said they intend to sue the EPA for blocking implementation of Obama-era methane emission limits for the oil and gas industry. “EPA’s ongoing failure to control emissions from the vast majority of harmful pollution sources in the oil and gas industry violates the Clean Air Act,” the green groups said in the letter, which is dated Aug. 28.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“A Hypocritical Battle Over Blue Slips.” The New York Times (9/15, Board) editorializes that “now that Republicans control both the White House and Congress, top party officials, including Mitch McConnell, the Senate majority leader, are itching to eliminate the last remaining tool the minority party has to influence a president’s picks for the federal courts — the so-called blue slip.” The Times notes that “back in 2009, Mr. McConnell and the entire Republican Senate caucus — then in the minority — implored President Barack Obama to honor all blue slips.” The Times argues that “the blue slip is no longer the answer.”

Washington Post.

“Trump Dares To Dream Of A Deal.” The Washington Post (9/14) editorializes that it “doesn’t often agree with...Trump, but we’re on board with his observation that most Americans oppose deportation for ‘dreamers,’” and believe he is “right to ratchet up the pressure on Congress to extend” DREAMers “the protections he is set to withdraw.” Democrats “should reciprocate in good faith by providing new funding for border security.”

“Kris Kobach Is The Real Fraud.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/14) writes that Kris Kobach’s recent claims of New Hampshire voter fraud have “no evidence” to back them and that an examination of the data Kobach references as proof shows that “more than two-thirds of 5,900 day-of-election registrants who had out-of-state driver’s licenses lived in college towns, indicating most were students voting perfectly legally.” The Post argues that the “real fraud is Mr. Kobach himself...who will torture any truth, distort any data and fudge any fact in service to his long-standing goal of suppressing votes, specifically those likely to favor Democrats.”

“Israel’s Strike In Syria Should Be A Wake Up Call For Trump.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/14) writes Israel’s September 7 airstrike on an Iran-linked Syrian military facility highlighted the difference between US and Israeli interests in Syria, in light of President Trump’s statement the day of the strike that the US has “very little to do with Syria other than killing ISIS.” The Post argues that although the Administration still should preserve the Iranian nuclear deal, the US “should be taking its own steps to block the Iranian ‘entrenchment’ in Syria” about which Benjamin Netanyahu has spoken.

Wall Street Journal.

"One Last ObamaCare Try." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/14) concedes that Graham-Cassidy is not an ideal solution to the country's healthcare problems, but concludes it does signify progress toward undoing the ACA. Moreover, the Journal warns Republicans that if they miss this opportunity to repeal Obamacare, their voters will remember in 2018.

"The Return To Regular Order." A Wall Street Journal (9/14) editorial praises the House Republicans for passing all 12 individual spending bills for the first time since 2004 and argues that while the bills will face Democratic filibusters in the Senate, perhaps the House's responsible action will encourage the Senate to act.

"Trump's Dreamer Dealing." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/14) urges President Trump to dismiss the criticism from some on the right, and predicts those same critics will be soon in his corner. To the Journal, an agreement on DACA would be a major accomplishment for the President.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Almost every weekend since [Donald Trump] was sworn in, he has personally flown to Florida to make sure there were no hurricanes there. Sometimes he even carries a golf club to fend them off."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Hillary Clinton is promoting her new book. She told Anderson Cooper that a lot of people come up to her now to apologize for not voting. And when they do that, she says she doesn't forgive them. I guess she used all her forgiveness up on her husband."

Jimmy Kimmel: "White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders was asked about Clinton's book. She said she thought it was sad, which is true. I mean, I don't want to spoil it for anyone who's planning to read it, but at the end of the book, Donald Trump becomes President."

James Corden: "So big news out of the White House last night, Democratic leaders Chuck Schumer and Nancy Pelosi had dinner with Donald Trump, and they said that they struck a deal regarding immigration and border security that might not even include the wall Trump keeps promising. At the dinner, Pelosi and Schumer had the chicken while Trump ate his words."

James Corden: "Trump supporters were really angry today that it looks like he was making deals with the Democrats and abandoning the border wall. They said that Trump never betrays anyone, aside from Sean Spicer, Anthony Scaramucci, Reince Priebus, Steve Bannon, his two ex-wives, and that one daughter he never talks about."

James Corden: "Trump did try to reassure his supporters by tweeting this. He said the wall, which is already under construction in the form of new renovation of old and existing fences, will continue to be built. Now I'm sorry, you cannot fix an existing wall and then say that you built a wall. That is not how it works. That is like taking $14 million from your father and saying you are a self-made businessman."

Trevor Noah: "One deal, now he's Mr. Bipartisan? Okay, you can't call someone a philanthropist because they tossed a quarter at a homeless person. Doesn't work that way."

Trevor Noah: "Let's talk for a minute about the Twitter. It's a wonderful invention, but we have learned that if you ever tweet something that offends too many people, you could get fired from your job, or you could become President."

Jimmy Fallon: "Trump went on Twitter to criticize Hillary's new book. So she responded by saying she'd send him a copy of her children's book instead. Trump was like, 'Got anything shorter?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "Meanwhile, Ivanka Trump said that she doesn't speak out against her dad publicly because when you're part of a team, you're part of a team. I think what she meant to say was, 'When you're part of a will, you're part of a will.'"

Seth Meyers: "In an interview with CNN yesterday, Hillary Clinton said that the electoral college needs to be eliminated. 'Same with regular college,' said Betsy DeVos."

Seth Meyers: "So the big, beautiful wall that would be paid for by Mexico and begins construction on day one is now an old existing fence that will be paid for later because we all remember those famous chants from Trump rallies. 'What do we want?' 'To renovate old and existing fences.' 'And when do we want it?' 'A little bit later than now!'"

Seth Meyers: "That's right. Donald Trump is a party of one. Although, usually you hear that phrase associated with Eric Trump. 'Eric, party of one.'"

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump now says he wants the wealthy to pay more taxes and he wants undocumented minors to be allowed to stay in the country. That's what he said. Then this morning, Trump accused himself of being born in Kenya."

Conan O'Brien: "Trump supporters are angry, outraged over President's recent reversals on immigration. Trump supporters are very upset. This is the first time they've ever been this angry at a white male."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump was very busy all night last night tweeting about Hillary Clinton. As a result, Melania Trump spent all this morning thanking Hillary Clinton."

Conan O'Brien: "Facebook is under fire because during last year's election, Facebook sold lots of ad space to Russia. Facebook said the problem has been fixed. Now they're selling that ad space to a really nice lady named ISIS."

Conan O'Brien: "The US government has announced a deal to sell 18 fighter jets to Canada. Those jets will help Canada protect itself from its most hated enemy, bad manners."

Zinke Doles Out $94M To Showcase The Benefits Of Trump's Pro-Drilling Policy.

The Washington Examiner (9/21, Siciliano) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "added some sweeteners to his conservation push Thursday by handing out $94 million to states from payments the agency collects from offshore oil and natural gas drillers." Zinke "suggested that the funding was a test of the administration's pro-drilling policies that will seek to increase revenue to states as part of its energy dominance agenda." He said, "By advancing the administration's offshore energy goals, we will be able to generate more revenue for the [land conservation] fund to improve conservation and recreation opportunities for generations to come," Zinke said. The funding came from the Land and Water Conservation Fund program, which Zinke called "a resounding success" in making "physical investments in our communities."

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Rides Horses At Wilson's Creek, Announces Missouri Parks Grant.

The Springfield \(MO\) News-Leader (9/21, Schmitt) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Thursday "trekked through Wilson's Creek National Battlefield in Republic and announced a $1.75 million grant for outdoor recreation and conservation in Missouri." At Wilson's Creek, Zinke "rode a horse on a tour, met with local fourth-graders from Lyon Elementary, took part in a fence-building exercise, fired a Civil War-era cannon and spent time with U.S. Rep. Billy Long, R-Missouri, who did not ride a horse due to his injured foot." The article notes that "the students attending the event were the winners of an art contest meant to celebrate fourth-graders in the U.S. being allowed to enter national parks for free throughout the year, according to the Republic School District."

Is Sexual Harassment A Problem In Our National Park System? KSPR-TV Springfield, MO (9/21, Pettit) reports that during a tour of Wilson's Creek, Interior National Battlefield Thursday, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke discussed sexual harassment problems at national parks. Talking to Wilson's Creek employees, Zinke said, "There is a problem and I have a couple investigations on my desk that are credible about sexual harassment and intimidation." During a question and answer period, Wilson's Creek employee, Connie Langum "stood up and pressed the Secretary how exactly he is going to fix the problem." The article says that "she was relieved to hear Secretary Zinke's honesty and willingness to try to change that culture."

Secretary Zinke Declares October National Hunting And Fishing Month.

KAIT-TV Jonesboro, AR (9/21, Weston) reports that days before National Hunting and Fishing Day on September 23 Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “declared October will officially be recognized as National Hunting and Fishing Month at the Department.” The order “comes on the heels of several major sportsmen actions from Interior including Wednesday’s announcement of the addition of 600 acres of land in Arizona’s Santa Teresa Mountains to make Wilderness Areas accessible for hunting and fishing.” Zinke said, “Hunters and anglers are the backbone of wildlife and habitat conservation in America, and they contribute billions of dollars to conservation. From my perspective, the more sportsmen we have in the woods and waters, the better our wildlife and land will be. Formally recognizing the contributions of hunters and anglers to wildlife and habitat conservation is long overdue.” The declaration was signed Wednesday night at the grand opening of the Wonders of Wildlife Museum in Springfield, Missouri.

Industry Praises Zinke’s Land Moves.

Politico Influence (9/21, Meyer) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “moves to open up protected swaths of land and ocean to industry, recreational hunting, shooting and fishing” are receiving mixed reactions, according to The Wall Street Journal’s Jim Carlton. Environmental groups are “unhappy, while some trade groups are applauding Zinke’s moves toward scaling back former President Barack Obama’s national monument designations.”

Analysis Points Out What Zinke Failed To Tell Trump. E&E Publishing (9/21, Yachnin) reports that “when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommended that President Trump roll back the boundaries of a handful of national monuments last month, he pointed to the previously 18 instances in which presidents had struck land from memorials — more than 460,000 acres of federal land.” However, “a new analysis from conservation lobbyist Andy Kerr suggests Zinke’s comparison omitted a key fact: The bulk of that acreage remains under strict protections, with the majority now under the control of the National Park Service.” Kerr said “he hopes his analysis will assist conservationists and others who have vowed to challenge any attempt by the Trump administration to alter the monuments without congressional action.”

Navajo Nation Vows To Sue Trump If He Shrinks Bears Ears National Monument. The Washington Examiner (9/21, Siegel) reports that Navajo Nation attorney general Ethel Branch said Thursday the tribe is planning to sue the Administration if it attempts to reduce the size of the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah. The Navajo Nation “argues changing the boundaries of Bears Ears would violate the Antiquities Act, a century-old law that permits presidents to unilaterally protect sacred sites, cultural artifacts and other historical objects.”

Stewart Teases Compromise On Bears Ears, Other National Monuments. The St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (9/21, DeMille) reports that the Trump Administration and “members of Utah’s congressional delegation have a plan that could be a ‘win-win-win’ on the national monuments controversy in Utah,” Rep. Chris Stewart said on Thursday. Stewart “offered no details on the proposal but hinted that it ‘could surprise some people’ and would strike a balance between shrinking the actual boundaries of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante monuments and providing some level of protection for antiquities.” He said, “We think we’ve got a real, sincere win-win-win where those people who want to protect these incredible places, including antiquities, and those people who rely on tourism, I think are going to be really happy with this outcome. And we were able to protect the local communities.”

SUWA Files Lawsuit Against San Juan Commissioners Over Zinke Meeting. The Moab \(UT\) Times-Independent (9/21, Marcello) reports that “San Juan County’s commissioners are facing legal scrutiny for allegedly violating Utah’s Open and Public Meetings Act when they met this spring with Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke during his review of Bears Ears National Monument.” The lawsuit was filed Sept. 15 by the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance. Stephen Bloch, attorney for SUWA, said, “It’s clear the San Juan County Commission intentionally violated Utah’s Open and Public Meetings Act as a way to hide their conversations and negotiations with the Interior Department and Trump administration officials regarding the fate of Bears Ears. We are looking for an order from the court confirming that the commissioners violated the law and ordering them to follow the law moving forward.”

White House Proposals Put The Oceans At Risk. The editorial board of Bloomberg View (9/21) asserts that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “wrong – especially when it comes to the ocean monuments currently in the secretary’s sights.” It notes that “Zinke’s preliminary recommendation is to let commercial fishing resume in the Pacific Remote Islands and in the nearby Rose Atoll Marine National Monument." However, the board argues that "commercial tuna fishing is precisely what put these ecosystems under pressure."

Also reporting are Science Magazine (9/21, Pala) and WBUR-FM Boston Boston (9/21, Bodden, Chakrabarti).

Congress Must Challenge Ryan Zinke's Attack On National Monuments. The Seattle Times (9/21) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's report "goes beyond the scissoring of monument boundaries and recommends altering management plans designed to harmonize wildlife, recreation and public use. It's also riddled with inaccuracies, including basic details on hunting and fishing rights at two monuments in New Mexico." The paper notes that "only Congress has the power to shrink or abolish national monuments, not the president," and it urges lawmakers to give the report "the heave-ho."

Trump Administration Monument Recommendations Favor Extraction Over Conservation. The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (9/21) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's memo on national monuments is "less a thoughtful analysis and more the imposition of a mindset that nothing should be off limits to extraction, whether it be logs, fish, oil or coal." Moreover, the paper says that "the problem is, without Zinke formally releasing his recommendations, and explaining them, the public is left wonder what, if any, changes will be made to the Katahdin monument." It concludes that "Zinke and the Trump administration owes it to the region to explain their plans for Maine's monument."

Jeff Mitton: Archaeological Treasures In Bears Ears. In an op-ed for the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (9/21, Mitton), Jeff Mitton, a professor in the Department of Ecology and Evolutionary Biology at the University of Colorado, raises concerns about the recommendation to reduce the size of the Bears Ears National Monument. Mitton asserts that public lands "do not belong to the citizens who live adjacent to them, nor are they at the disposal of the state in which they reside, or the whims of current government officials." He concludes that "our parks and monuments have been established in perpetuity not only for us, but more importantly, for the generations of Americans to come."

Zinke's Got Shrinkage. In an op-ed for the Durango \(CO\) Telegraph (9/21, Mehall), Luke Mehall urges Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to change his national monument recommendations to President Trump.

Maryland Proposes $9 Billion Plan To Relieve Traffic Congestion.

Reuters (9/21, Shepardson) reports on Thursday, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) proposed "an ambitious $9 billion public-private partnership" to "add four new lanes to the Capital Beltway (I-495)...and four new lanes on Interstate-270." Hogan said he wants "private developers to design, build, finance, operate, and maintain" the new lanes. Hogan started this process during a recent meeting with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke.

The Washington Post (9/21, McCartney) reports the proposal "would also widen the Baltimore-Washington Parkway (MD 295) by four toll lanes after taking over ownership from the federal government." Under Hogan's proposal, "only the new lanes would have tolls; the others would remain free." Hogan said "the plan would not cost taxpayers any money" because of the private-sector involvement; "instead, he said, because of the toll revenue, the state could potentially reap billions of dollars of additional funds."

The Baltimore Sun (9/21, Cox) quotes Zinke spokesman Alex Hinson as saying, "Secretary Zinke and Governor Hogan recently had a wide ranging conversation about a number of issues of mutual interest. No decisions related to issues involving the Baltimore-Washington Parkway were made during that meeting." Hogan said, "It was actually the Department of Interior's decision to" hand over ownership of the B-W Parkway, adding, "we're happy to take it from them." Hogan said the Interior "doesn't love [the road] because they're in the park business and not the road business, and their intention is to dispose of all roads that they have under their control."

White House Begins First In Series Of Meetings To Shape Climate Goals.

A "White House representative" has confirmed to the Washington Examiner (9/21, Siciliano) that the White House on Thursday began "the first of a series of meetings...that will lead to the reshaping of the Trump administration's climate change goals and policy." The spokesman described the meeting between “the White House and officials from the Environmental Protection Agency, the Energy Department, State Department and the Department of Interior,” as “a forward-looking meeting on strategy and how to prioritize the administration’s climate goals and objectives moving forward.” The spokesman added, “This particular meeting was more big picture strategy,” and its purpose was to bring together “a whole group of stakeholders ... that are involved in climate issues and looking ahead to what policy initiatives we may put in place.”

Next Merman At Sip ‘n Dip Lounge Won’t Be Tester, Bullock, Daines, Fox, Baucus Or Zinke.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (9/21, Fraser) reports that “the Sip ‘n Dip Lounge announced on Twitter Monday it was looking to hire a new merman to swim in its live mermaid tank for Tiki Tuesdays.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke participated in “a tidal wave of tweets” that “included several other prominent state leaders, ... a former U.S. ambassador, and a Hollywood actor who will soon appear in a movie remake as a mermaid.” Zinke spokeswoman Heather Swift “said the tweets were ‘definitely not’ a planned attempt to boost the Sip ‘n Dip’s campaign.”

Don’t Speak For Westerners When Exploiting Public Lands.

In an op-ed for The Hill (9/21, Molvar), Erik Molvar, a wildlife biologist and serves as the executive director of Western Watersheds Project, criticizes those “calling for public land selloffs, tax breaks, and an end to government regulations.” According to Molvar, “it would seem that these folks have a direct line to the Trump administration, but conservation-minded westerners are starting to see the sham for what it is.” He says that “as more and more westerners rally to the defense of their public lands, the good old boys are losing their stranglehold on the public debate.”

Gun Lobby Co-opts Sportsmen’s Agenda With SHARE Act.

For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (9/21, Hartl), Brett Hartl, the government affairs policy director at the Center for Biological Diversity, claims that the Sportsmen’s Heritage and Recreational Enhancement Act, or SHARE Act, “does almost nothing to actually enhance sportsmen’s access.” However, he claims that “it does contain massive giveaways to the National Rifle Association and the gun lobby that would sweep aside common-sense measures to limit gun violence — not to mention continuing the assaults on the Endangered Species Act and environmental protections that have become the hallmark of the current Congress.” Hartl argues that “whatever legitimate grievances sportsmen’s groups have with access to hunting and fishing, this bill is a terrible way to address them.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Key Republican Revives Bill To Strip Bureau Of Indian Affairs Of Recognition Powers.

The Nation Sun News (9/21) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop is “once again pushing a bill that requires all tribes seeking federal recognition to go through Congress.” Bishop, the chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, “introduced H.R. 3744, the Tribal Recognition Act last week.” While the legislation “establishes standards for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to research petitions submitted by tribes seeking recognition, it bars the executive branch from making decisions on those petitions.”

Ownership Of Controversial Native American Artifacts Transferred To Peabody Essex Museum.

WBUR-FM Boston (9/21, Gorel) reports that “a controversial collection of about 150 Native American artifacts are staying at the Peabody Essex Museum.” The Andover Newton Theological School “announced Thursday it was transferring ownership of the collection to the museum where it’s been housed since 1946.” In a statement, the Peabody Essex Museum “pledged to complete the work to bring the collection into compliance with the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA).”

Browning Ordered To Give Assets To Montana’s Blackfeet Tribe.

The AP (9/21) reports that “a state judge has ordered the northern Montana town of Browning to turn over most of its assets to the Blackfeet Tribe to settle lawsuits between the two governments.” The settlement, “approved by District Judge James Reynolds last month, is part of Browning’s efforts to dissolve itself as a town.” According to the article, “Glacier County and the tribe will take over municipal services for Browning residents, including water, sewer and garbage services and fire protection.” The Blackfeet Law Enforcement Services and the Bureau of Indian Affairs will provide law enforcement.

Appeals Court Throws Out Case On Obama Fracking Rule, Citing Trump Repeal Effort.

The Washington Examiner (9/21, Siciliano) reports that the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed a case on whether the federal government is able to regulate fracking under an Obama Administration rule. The court dismissed the case “based on the Trump administration’s move to repeal the Bureau of Land Management regulation.” The court dismissal read, “Our proceeding to address whether the district court erred in invalidating the ... fracking regulation when the [Bureau of Land Management] has now commenced rescinding that same regulation appears to be a very wasteful use of limited judicial resources.”

Also reporting are the AP (9/21, Elliott), Reuters (9/21, Aubin), The Hill (9/21, Wheeler), the Denver Post (9/21), the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/22, Webb), and Law360 (9/21, Rodriguez).

Purchase Opens 32,600 Acres Near Coronado Forest To Hiking, Hunting.

The Cronkite News (9/21, Windes) reports that “the Interior Department’s purchase of a plot of private land will allow public access to 32,600 acres of previously isolated forest land, a move that drew praise from wilderness advocates and hunters alike this week.” The deal announced Wednesday “opens up two parcels of public land, one in the Coronado National Forest and one northwest of Safford, that had been inaccessible because they were surrounded by private property.” The Bureau of Land Management “worked with the Arizona Game and Fish Department, the South Eastern Arizona Sportsmen Club and the Trust for Public Land over several years to acquire the land needed for access.”

Nevada Bureau Of Land Management Rangers Helping In Puerto Rico After Hurricane Maria.

KTNV-TV Las Vegas (9/21) reports that “Bureau of Land Management Law Enforcement Rangers from Nevada are currently deployed to San Juan, Puerto Rico and are assisting with relief and search and rescue efforts in the wake of Hurricane Maria.” According to the article, “rangers Bill Hart from the Ely District and Paul Zohovetz of Fernley, who is assigned to the Carson City District, arrived in San Juan prior to Hurricane Maria, which blew ashore Wednesday morning as a Category 4 storm with winds of 155 mph.” Hart and Zohovetz are “among several other Bureau of Land Management officers nationally who were on a roster to assist with national emergencies through the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Emergency Support Function."

Cliven Bundy Wants To Fire Attorney Just Before Trial.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/21, Ferrara) reports that "Bunkerville rancher Cliven Bundy wants to fire his lawyer less than a month before he is to stand trial on charges related to a 2014 standoff with the Bureau of Land Management." Defense lawyer Bret Whipple, "whom Bundy retained, filed court papers Thursday asking for a hearing as soon as possible."

Cape Cod Environmental Group In Opposition To Atlantic Ocean Offshore Drilling Proposal.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) News (9/21, Gottlieb) reports that the US Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has proposed a five-year program allowing offshore exploration and drilling in the Arctic and Atlantic oceans. In response, the Association to Preserve Cape Cod (APCC) sent the acting BOEM director a letter within the public comment period stating that the area held too many inherent risks for drilling. APCC Executive Director Andrew Gottlieb said, "The relatively small amount of oil and gas that might be available offshore is not anywhere near worth the risk Cape Cod would be assuming were those resources allowed to be developed."

BSEE Director Charts Path For Robust Offshore U.S. Energy Production.

The World Oil (9/21) reports that Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Director Scott Angelle "discussed the work underway at BSEE with industry members at the Louisiana Oil & Gas Association Fall Meeting Tuesday in Lafayette." Angelle said, "We are in a time of change. Now is the time to move beyond the goal of energy independence to energy dominance." Angelle explained "that regulatory reform, integrating a risk-based protocol into the inspection program, and reviewing permit processes to increase efficiency are all efforts underway at BSEE." He said, "BSEE is clearly moving from creating hardships to creating partnerships, from an era of isolation to an era of cooperation. To safely develop our OCS energy resources as the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act requires, BSEE and industry must work together as partners recognizing that we have different roles, and collaborating to make it happen."

Industry Groups Sue FWS To Delist Endangered Beetle.

Law360 (9/21, Phillis) reports that "nonprofit and industry groups filed suit in Oklahoma federal court on Thursday against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service arguing that it hadn't addressed a petition to remove the American burying beetle from the endangered species list in a timely fashion and must do so."

'Adverse Effect' Up For Debate At Bottling Plant Hearing.

The Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (9/21, Reilly) reports on "day three of the Montana Artesian Water Company's water-use permit hearing in Kalispell." Attorneys "representing the company and its opponents remained focused on its request to draw up to 450 gallons per minute from the aquifer for a proposed bottling plant in Creston." Objectors sought "to show that these plans will have an 'adverse effect' on nearby water users."

Scientists Measure Damage To Endangered Species' Habitat.

The Victoria \(TX\) Advocate (9/21, Priest) reports that "when Hurricane Harvey made landfall last month, a game camera at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge snapped pictures about 5 miles from the eye of the storm." This week, Elizabeth Smith, senior whooping crane scientist with the International Crane Foundation, "found the camera unscathed and replaced it with another." Wade Harrell, whooping crane recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "said because there are no tide gauges at the refuge, Smith's pictures, along with the debris line, will help scientists estimate the height of the storm surge there."

Trump Says He Will Visit Puerto Rico To Survey Damage From Hurricane Maria.

During a meeting at the UN General Assembly Thursday, President Trump said "he plans to visit Puerto Rico to personally assess the devastation from Hurricane Maria," the Washington Times (9/21, Miller) reports. Trump, who "did not say when he would make the visit," said, "Puerto Rico is in very, very tough shape. Their electrical grid is destroyed. It wasn't in great shape to start with." Earlier Thursday, Trump "declared a major disaster in Puerto Rico that made federal funds available to those affected by the storm." A Washington Post (9/21) calls Trump's disaster declaration for Puerto Rico "a welcome and needed step as it will make federal assistance available to Puerto Ricans affected by the storm," and adds that his announcement that he will visit the island is "equally welcome" because "in doing so he sets an example for the rest of the country."

Vice President Pence said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/21), "With regard to Puerto Rico, we have people coming ashore now who were pre-positioned on ships. We're about to deliver eight million meals over eight million liters of water, 31 industrial generators. We are there with the people of Puerto Rico as President Trump has said and we are going to stay there until Puerto Rico and all the good people there build all the way back."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (9/21, De Córdoba, Campo-Flores, De Avila) reports on the damage Maria left in Puerto Rico and says officials have warned residents that a difficult road to recovery lies ahead. According to Abner Gómez, executive director of Puerto Rico's emergency-management agency, residents will likely have to do without aid for 72 hours, due to the severity of the damage and the demands on government resources. A front-page story in the Washington Post (9/21, A1, Schmidt, Somashekhar, Zezima) reports that on Thursday, "emergency management teams and the National Guard rescued dozens of residents, taking them to nearby shelters. But many more remained stuck in their homes with almost no cellphone reception, some of them waiting on their rooftops."

A front-page story in the New York Times (9/21, A1, Ferré-sadurní, Alvarez, Robles) says "the road to recovery just went from long to seemingly endless" for Puerto Rico, which has been "long crippled by enormous debt and an essentially bankrupt financial system." The island "faces a mountain of need in the coming months just as the federal government is stretched to the limit grappling with the destruction left by Hurricanes Harvey and Irma." The Miami Herald (9/21, Mazzei, Martínez) also reports on the devastation in Puerto Rico, saying "the enormity of Maria's destruction [is] still unknown even to the overwhelmed Puerto Rican government."

Carlos Mercader, executive director of the Puerto Rico Federal Affairs Administration was asked on CNN's The Lead (9/21) what the island's most immediate need is. Mercader said, "Right now, definitely that would be restoration of the communication on the island. Right now we're working with FEMA in what we call PREMA, which is the emergency agency in Puerto Rico, to reestablish down there in that location satellites so we can start getting communications. ... And also, obviously, electricity. Right now we have 100 percent of the island without electricity. Hospitals that are being operated with generators and other buildings that basically depend on generators. That's why we're also asking for more generators because we know that the infrastructure was hit so bad with the winds and the flooding that to restore that kind of infrastructure is going to take a long time."

NBC Nightly News (9/21, story 3, 0:15, Holt) reported that Maria "regained strength after it struck Puerto Rico" and is "expected to cut close to Turks and Caicos late tonight, and after that, the current track shows it barreling between the US east coast and Bermuda."

Maria Kills 15 On Dominica. On NBC Nightly News (9/21, lead story, 2:45, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported, "In hard-hit Dominica, officials confirm 15 people died from the storm." USA Today (9/21, Stanglin, Rice) says Dominica Prime Minister Roosevelt Skerrit, who "cried as he spoke to a reporter on the nearby island of Antigua," said, "We have buried in excess of 15 people. ... It is a miracle there were not hundreds of deaths."

ABC World News Tonight (9/21, story 3, 1:05, Muir) reported that there is "great concern for American medical students on Dominica" as the island has been "wiped out" by Hurricane Maria. ABC (Oquendo) added that there are many "missing in communities that are completely cut off." Yet, late Thursday, there was "word that 1,000 medical students, many of them American, whose condition was unknown, have been reached and are confirmed safe."

'We Need Help': U.S. Virgin Islands Governor On Devastation After Maria And Irma.

In an interview on WBUR-FM Boston (9/21), U.S. Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp talked about the recovery effort following the passage of Hurricane Maria. Mapp said, "We need help. With our FEMA partners and our cruise ship partners, we're bringing in a lot of food, water, tarpaulins, personal hygiene packs, cots and blankets. That's really the immediacy of the need. We're asking folks who can to go to USVI Recovery and they can donate there." He added, "I was able to speak to our Administrator William Brock Long of FEMA, and had a very good conversation with him, as well as the Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke, as we coordinate the relief for St. Croix."

Enviros Win Suit Forcing DOI To Inspect Va. Coal Mine.

Law360 (9/21, Phillis) reports that "a Virginia federal judge on Wednesday gave environmental groups a quick win in their request for an inspection of a Red River Coal Co. mine where elevated levels of selenium were recorded nearby, saying that the Department of the Interior ignored key data when it denied the request." Judge James P. Jones "granted the Southern Appalachian Mountain Stewards and the Sierra Club's summary judgment bid that sought a federal inspection of the Greater Wise No. 1 Mine."

Hurricane Irma: How Storm Surge Flooded The Florida Keys But Drained Tampa.

The Miami Herald (9/21, Staletovich) reports that a crew of six surveyors from the U.S. Geological Survey are racing "to find and measure water marks, the tiny traces of seaweed and sand that stick to walls, sign posts and anything left erect" in Hurricane Irma's wake. According to the article, "those marks provide the real-life evidence hurricane forecasters need to construct the powerful computer models used to issue warnings and keep people safe from a hurricane's most lethal weapon: storm surge." Jamie Rhome, who heads the National Hurricane Center's storm surge team, said, "In my 18 years here, I haven't seen a peak surge where it was measured by an instrument. You have to figure it out by surveying the damage."

USGS Geologist Says 15,000 Buildings Could Be Seriously Damaged If Major Quake Strikes LA.

The Epoch Times (9/21, Phillips) reports that "if a massive earthquake, like the one in Mexico City earlier this week, struck Los Angeles, it could be devastating, according to an expert." Dr. Ken Hudnut, with the U.S. Geological Survey, "cited a recent study that found some 15,000 Los Angeles structures are vulnerable to collapse during a significant earthquake, according to ABC7."

US, China Impose New Sanctions On North Korea.

Media coverage of the President's announcement Thursday of new sanctions against North Korea is generally positive. Reports cast China's cooperation as a significant development. Two of last night's network broadcasts reported the announcement. Calling it "a major victory for this White House," ABC World News Tonight (9/21, story 4, 2:00, Muir) said the President announced "tough new sanctions against North Korea, and with the promise of help from China." Jonathan Karl said, "After threatening to annihilate the entire nation of North Korea," the President "put aside war talk in favor of diplomacy."

On NBC Nightly News (9/21, story 5, 2:20, Holt), Kristen Welker said the US, Japan, and South Korea presented a "united front at the UN" as the President "ordered some of the toughest sanctions yet against North Korea." In what Welker called "a surprising move," the President "said China's central bank has ordered its other banks to cut off North Korea." Analysts say China's involvement "is critical." Reuters (9/21, Holland, Brunnstrom) reports Trump "stopped short of going after" China, and "praised its central bank for ordering Chinese banks to stop doing business with North Korea." Four sources told Reuters China's central bank "has told banks to strictly implement United Nations sanctions against North Korea."

However, the AP (9/21) reports that while Trump "praised China for instructing its banks to cut off business with Pyongyang...neither the Chinese nor Trump officials were ready to say so." Treasury Secretary Mnuchin said he spoke Thursday with the head of China's central bank, but "I am not going to comment on confidential discussions." If enforced, the AP says the "Chinese action Trump described could severely impede the isolated North's ability to raise money for its missile and nuclear development."

The Washington Examiner (9/21, Morrongiello) says Mnuchin "provided limited details about the latest sanctions...and the impact they will have with major North Korean trading partners like China," while the New York Post (9/21, Moore) reports Mnuchin said companies around the world "are now on notice" about doing business with North Korea.

The Washington Post (9/21, Phillip) reports Trump announced new financial sanctions "that target North Korea and foreign companies or individuals that do business" with the regime, and "significantly...said that Chinese President Xi Jinping had ordered Chinese banks to cease conducting business with North Korean entities." Trump praised Xi, calling the move "very bold" and "somewhat unexpected." The Washington Times (9/21, Boyer) similarly reports Trump thanked Chinese President Xi Jinping "for action Thursday by China's central bank," which he acknowledged "was a somewhat unexpected move." The Wall Street Journal (9/21, Radnofsky, Talley) also notes Trump's praise for China, which accounts for more than 90% of Pyongyang's trade.

Similarly calling China's move "a crucial step," Bloomberg News (9/21, Talev) says "it isn't clear what effect the heightened sanctions will have on North Korea," but the announcement it "shows that Trump, who earlier this week threatened to 'totally destroy' North Korea...is continuing to pursue economic and diplomatic means to address Pyongyang's nuclear and missile programs." Ambassador Haley said the new sanctions won't necessarily "change Kim's attitude," but "will slow down" the regime's weapons programs. The Los Angeles Times (9/21, Wilkinson) reports that the new measures target North Korea's "textiles, fishing industry and shipping. In fact, sanctions against those industries are already in place, so it was not clear what was different about the additional ones."

The Daily Caller (9/21) says the executive order signed Thursday by the President “significantly” expand sanctions on Pyongyang, while Politico (9/21, McCaskill, Nelson, Toosi) says the move “escalat[ed] the US campaign of economic pressure” against the regime. The Hill (9/21, Easley) reports Trump “expressed an urgency to curb North Korea’s nuclear and ballistics programs,” which he called “a grave threat to peace and security in our world.”

Trump, USA Today (9/21, Jackson) reports, “appeared to hold out the possibility of negotiations” with North Korea. When asked by a reporter if diplomacy was still possible, Trump responded: “Why not?” The New York Times (9/21, Baker, Sengupta) reports that some Trump critics “praised him...for focusing on diplomatic pressure rather than saber rattling.”

Vice President Pence said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/21) before the new sanctions were announced that “most Americans know and, frankly, the world knows that a strong, tough-minded, plain-spoken American President contributes to the security and peace in the world. I mean, the simple truth is that North Korea’s continued provocations, a nuclear test, ballistic missile test threats against the continental United States of America and allies in the region is unacceptable.” Pence added that “the world is in agreement: We cannot permit a rogue regime in Pyongyang to possess ballistic missiles and use nuclear weapons. That represents a threat to the United States, to our allies and other nations in the region and we’re going to continue to bring that pressure.”

David Ignatius, writing in his Washington Post (9/21) column, says US officials need “to decide how serious a threat North Korea truly poses to America.” If we see Kim “as a regional threat, rather than a global one,” Ignatius writes that “then perhaps the right response is an intelligence strategy that begins with the reality of his split with China – and takes off from there.” He notes that in 2003, China “suspended oil deliveries for several days (blaming the problem on a supposed pipeline malfunction) and North Korea quickly began negotiations. In the deniable realm of intelligence operations, it’s always possible that a pipeline could ‘malfunction’ again, or that other crippling difficulties could arise for Pyongyang and its mercurial leader.”

Kim Calls Trump “Deranged,” Warns He Will “Pay Dearly” For Threats. All three networks last night reported on North Korean leader Kim Jong-un’s reaction to President Trump’s address to the UN General Assembly earlier this week – during which he threatened to “totally destroy” North Korea and repeated his “Rocket Man” nickname for Kim. ABC World News Tonight (9/21, story 4, 2:00, Muir) said Kim responded to the President’s remarks, calling him “mentally deranged and said that he will make him pay dearly...for his speech at the UN.” The CBS Evening News (9/21, story 6, 2:30, Mason) said Kim “shot off his mouth, calling President Trump a ‘mentally deranged dotard,’ and warning he’ll pay dearly for his threats.” NBC Nightly News (9/21, story 5, 2:20, Holt) also reported the North Korean leader’s remarks, saying “for now, the war of words continues.”

The AP (9/21) says the “war of words” between the two leaders “escalated Thursday” when Kim, “speaking in a rare personal address on North Korean television”, called Trump a “rogue” and a “gangster.” Kim concluded his address vowing: “I will surely and definitely tame the mentally deranged US dotard with fire.” USA Today (9/21, Ventura) reports that soon after Kim’s address, Merriam-Webster tweeted the definition of “dotard” after it went viral as “a state or period of senile decay marked by decline of mental poise and alertness.”

Another USA Today (9/21, Estepa) report, meanwhile, examines Trump’s use of the nickname “Rocket Man” for Kim, noting that the President “isn’t the only US leader who loves nicknames.” Former President George W. Bush “shared that penchant and was known for it during his time in office.”

North Korean FM Warns Of Possible Hydrogen Bomb Test In Pacific. The AP (9/21) reports South Korea’s Yonhap news agency said North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho said Thursday on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly that his country may test a hydrogen bomb in the Pacific Ocean.

Lavrov Warns Against “Warlike Hysteria” Over North Korea. The Wall Street Journal (9/21, Sonne) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov warned against “warlike hysteria” over North Korea at the UN on Thursday. While he did not mention Trump by name, the Journal says his remarks were nonetheless an implicit rebuke to the President. “The escalation of wartime hysteria is not only a dead end but a ruinous path,” Lavrov said.

USA Today Analysis: Trump “Sets Up Showdown” With Iran, North Korea. A USA Today (9/21, Jackson) analysis says President Trump’s visit this week to the UN General Assembly “will likely be remembered for its unusual and unadorned attacks on Iran and North Korea that could set the stage for months or even years of nuclear-fueled tension and uncertainty.” While Trump “did make some headway Thursday on his push to pressure North Korea to back off its weapons program," it was his threats to "totally destroy" North Korea – and his "Rocket Man" nickname for its leader – "that drew headlines and fueled chatter on the sidelines of the United Nations." According to USA Today, "some allies are concerned about the war-of-words from both Trump and North Korea and want to see more of a diplomatic focus," while others fear he will soon withdraw from the Iran nuclear deal.

Russia, China Conducting Military Exercises 100 Miles From North Korean Border. The Los Angeles Times (9/21, Ayres) reports that the navies of Russia and China this week "engaged a maritime joint exercise less than 100 miles from the North Korean border with Russia." While Russia and China have been holding joint military exercises since 2012, the timing of the latest drills "is significant" amid rising tensions.

Spotlight On Murkowski And McCain As GOP Seeks 50 Votes For Graham-Cassidy.

ABC World News Tonight (9/21, story 6, 2:00, Muir) reported on "the new effort to kill Obamacare. The Senate has until next week to pull off this newest attempt." ABC's Mary Bruce said that the fate of the bill is expected to come down to four Republicans: Sens. Susan Collins, John McCain, Lisa Murkowski, and Rand Paul. USA Today (9/21, Collins) reports that much of the focus is on Murkowski. An ad urging her to oppose the bill "started airing on televisions across Alaska on Tuesday," and "supporters of Obamacare are showing up at her offices, calling, tweeting and blitzing her with ads asking her to vote against the Republican repeal bill. White House officials and her Senate colleagues are doing all they can to convince her to support it."

The Daily Caller (9/21, Donachie) reports that Sen. Lindsey Graham "specifically wrote his bill...to provide concessions" to Alaska, according to "a conservative Hill staffer with first hand knowledge and one conservative strategist," and Politico (9/21, Haberkorn) reports that the bill "may protect Alaska and up to four other sparsely populated states from major cuts to Medicaid through 2026." The New York Times (9/21, A1, Zernike, Abelson, Goodnough) calls the bill the "most far-reaching" of this year's ACA replacement measures, through which the GOP "has come up with a way to repackage the funding for the law it loathes into a trillion-dollar pot of state grants." Independent Journal Review (9/21, Byrd) headlines its report "Republicans Attempt To Buy Murkowski's Vote In New Draft Of Health Care Bill." Still, Axios (9/22, Owens) reports that a Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services estimate projects that Alaska "would lose 38% of federal funding for premium subsidies and Medicaid by 2026" under the measure.

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (9/21, Edgerton) reports that Republicans are working to win McCain's support "for a likely vote next week on the GOP's 'last best hope' for repealing" the Affordable Care Act, according to Senate Majority Whip Cornyn. USA Today (9/21, Sanchez) reports that President Trump called Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey on Saturday to urge him to support the bill; McCain has said that Ducey's opinion is important in his determination. Ducey now supports the legislation.

The Washington Examiner (9/21, Feldscher) reports that Rep. Matt Cartwright (D-PA) told voters in his district that he expects McCain to oppose "the latest attempt to overhaul Obamacare because 'he's staring death in the face right now.'" Cartwright said, "The governor of Arizona came out in favor of the Lindsey Graham-Bill Cassidy bill so that puts pressure on McCain. But, man, something tells me McCain, he's staring death in the face right now, so he's probably going to make good choices and he's not going to bend to political pressure."

The Washington Times (9/21, Howell) reports that Paul, who has criticized the bill for leaving too much of the ACA intact, is facing pressure from opponents of legal abortion to back the measure.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/21) says that Democratic arguments against the bill by Graham and Sen. Bill Cassidy are overwrought, and that Democrats' insistence that the process must be bipartisan flies in the face of liberals' own intransigence. But the Washington Post (9/21) says in an editorial that "even Republicans know their new health-care bill is horrible," citing Sen. Charles Grassley, "who candidly explained GOP thinking. 'I could maybe give you 10 reasons why this bill shouldn't be considered. ... But Republicans campaigned on this so often that you have a responsibility to carry out what you said in the campaign.'"

Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (9/21), "Motivated by the cynical aims of fulfilling a bumper-sticker campaign promise and lavishing tax cuts on the wealthy, Republicans are threatening to pass a health-care bill they know will make millions of Americans sicker and poorer. Do they think we don't see what they're doing?"

Graham Says Vote Will Take Place Regardless Of Expected Outcome. The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (9/21, Lovegrove) reports that Graham said Thursday that the Senate will vote even if there are not 50 firm votes in favor. Graham said, "We are going to vote. I don't think it's possible for the Republican Party not to try everything to repeal and replace Obamacare.”

Graham said on Fox News Special Report (9/21), “If you want money and power out of Washington, you want to end the march to single-payer healthcare, this is your last, best chance. ... I think we are going to get 50 Republicans to vote for federalism and I’ll make a prediction: a couple Democrats are going to come on board because their state does so well.”

AARP: Older Americans Could Pay More Than $16,000 More Per Year Under Bill. The Hill (9/21, Sullivan) reports that an AARP study “finds that older people could pay as much as $16,174 more per year for health coverage” under Graham-Cassidy as “a result of the possible elimination of two kinds of ObamaCare subsidies, which help people afford their premiums and out of pocket costs.”

Kimmel Continues To Criticize Graham-Cassidy. NBC Nightly News (9/21, story 7, 1:40, Holt) reported that the “war of words” between the sponsors of the legislation and ABC’s Jimmy Kimmel is continuing. Kimmel devoted 10 minutes of his Wednesday night show to the topic, and seven and one-half minutes on Thursday night. On Thursday’s ABC’s Jimmy Kimmel Live, he said, “I should not be the guy you go to for information on healthcare. And if these guys...would tell the truth for a change, I wouldn’t have to. ... We have until September 30 to dodge this.”

The New York Times (9/21, Qiu, Victor) writes, “A review of the factual statements in Mr. Kimmel’s Wednesday night monologue suggests he has a strong grasp on the proposal, though there are nits to pick.” The New York Times (9/21, Deb) also looks at past times when late-night hosts have gotten involved in political debates.

Cassidy was asked on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/21) if he can guarantee that under the Graham-Cassidy bill, governors will make sure that people with preexisting conditions are covered. Cassidy said, “The legislation says that nothing the governor asks for will be approved unless there is affordable and adequate coverage for those with preexisting conditions. President Trump tweeted last night he will not sign legislation unless it protects those with preexisting conditions.”

Graham, Cassidy To Debate Klobuchar, Sanders On CNN. CNN (9/21) reports that on Monday, CNN will host a 90-minute primetime town hall on the bill, with sponsors Graham and Cassidy facing off against Sens. Amy Klobuchar and Bernie Sanders.

NYTimes “The Upshot”: States Will Face Challenges In Building Health Systems. Margot Sanger-Katz writes in the New York Times (9/21) “The Upshot” that the Graham-Cassidy bill would require states to build their own health systems, which would be a complex process. After then-Gov. Mitt Romney’s plan was adopted in Massachusetts in 2003, “it took four years before Romneycare was fully up and running,” and the bill “would require every state in the country to make a similar soup-to-nuts evaluation of how they’d like their health care systems to work, to build such a system and be ready to open their doors in substantially less time – just over two years.”

Premiums Expected To Climb In Illinois, South Carolina. The Washington Free Beacon (9/21, Meyer) reports that the four insurers serving Illinois via the ACA exchange “have requested an average premium rate hike of 35 percent for next year,” requesting “a range of 15 to 43 percent in premium hikes.” The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (9/21, Sausser) reports that the South Carolina Department of Insurance said on Thursday that average ACA premiums in the state “will skyrocket 31 percent” next year.

White House Tax Cut Plan Gaining Momentum.

The Washington Post (9/21, Paletta, Debonis) reports that the White House’s tax cut plan “is gaining new momentum as Republicans attempt to set aside months of intraparty squabbling and unify behind a key part of President Trump’s agenda.” The effort is being aided by “a tentative deal” between “key Republicans” to “allow for as much as $1.5 trillion in tax reductions over 10 years,” as well as “a growing willingness within the GOP to embrace controversial, optimistic estimates of how much economic growth their tax plan would create.” However, there are still “numerous pitfalls...and Republicans have not yet agreed on major aspects of the plan.” The Washington Times (9/21, Sherfinski) says the deal struck by Sens. Bob Corker and Pat Toomey “paving the way for potentially $1.5 trillion in tax cuts over the next decade, suggest[s] broad outlines of a plan to be presented next week.”

The Los Angeles Times (9/21, Mascaró, Puzanghera) says that while Republicans have “a blueprint and principles” and have “held countless strategy sessions for what could be the biggest tax overhaul in decades,” Congress and the White House “have yet to agree on how to revamp the tax code, including how much to reduce corporate and individual tax rates, how tax cuts would be paid for or whether they will be offset at all.” The Times says a “key problem” is a continuing division within the party “between fiscal hawks who insist that any tax cut not add to the deficit and those who are willing to risk ballooning the debt in hopes that it will spur enough economic growth to cover the price tag.”

Stewart: Tax Reform Must Address The Biggest Tax Breaks. James B. Stewart writes in his “Common Sense” column for the New York Times (9/21) that when the Administration reveals details of its tax reform plan, rich taxpayers “will be under the microscope” because “they take advantage of so many tax breaks that few, if any, pay the top rate of 39.6 percent.” Eliminating some of those deductions “would make it possible to reduce tax rates for the highest earners (and everyone else) while raising the same or even more in total revenue.” Stewart calls long-term capital gains, capital gains at death, state and local taxes, and mortgage interest “the big four” deductions that “will cost the government $4.1 trillion over 10 years” and argues that “if proposed reforms don’t address the biggest tax breaks, there will be little room to reduce rates over all – which is the carrot to make reform more palatable.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“World Hunger Haunts The UN Festivities.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/22) writes that as “the leaders of the world posture and sermonize for the United Nations General Assembly this week, a growing global specter should spur common concern among them: World hunger, after a decade-long decline, spiked last year, because of scourges like global warming and civil conflicts that show little sign of abating.” Ahead of the meeting, a new UN report said the “number of undernourished human beings on the planet increased from 777 million in 2015 to 815 million in 2016.” The Times argues that if diplomats at the UN “are paying attention to the world out there, the report should prod them into a fresh look at hunger and an increased resolve to drive it back down.”

“Jake LaMotta And The Art Of Taking A Punch.” A New York Times editorial.

Washington Post.

“Don’t Forget Puerto Rico.” A Washington Post (9/21) calls President Trump’s disaster declaration for Puerto Rico “a welcome and needed step as it will make federal assistance available to Puerto Ricans affected by the storm,” and adds that his announcement that he will visit the island is “equally welcome” because “in doing so he sets an example for the rest of the country.”

“Even Republicans Know Their Healthcare Bill Is Horrible.” The Washington Post (9/21) says in an editorial that “even Republicans know their new health-care bill is horrible,” citing Sen. Charles Grassley, “who candidly explained GOP thinking. ‘I could maybe give you 10 reasons why this bill shouldn’t be considered. ... But Republicans campaigned on this so often that you have a responsibility to carry out what you said in the campaign.’”

“St. Louis Is What Happens When The Justice Department Won’t Do Its Job.” The Washington Post (9/21) argues in an editorial that, although the “specifics” of the case against former St. Louis police officer Jason Stockley for the shooting death of Anthony Lamar Smith “are unique...the questions it raises about racial bias in policing are grindingly familiar.” The verdict “demonstrates how hard it is for prosecutors to successfully bring cases against police officers.” The Post argues “the facts as they stand in St. Louis are more than enough to merit federal review of the city’s police force,” but Attorney General Jeff Sessions – in his “disdain for police reform” – has ordered the Justice Department to “roll back a program designed to assist local law enforcement with reforms.” The Post concludes, “Stockley’s case is one more reminder of how much is lost under a Justice Department that refuses to rise to the task.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Panic Over Graham-Cassidy.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/21) says that Democratic arguments against the healthcare bill by Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy are overwrought, and that Democrats’ insistence that the process must be bipartisan flies in the face of liberals’ own intransigence.

“Right To Work Isn’t Theft.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/21) writes that the West Virginia Supreme Court and Wisconsin’s District Three Court of Appeals both made recent decisions defending their states’ right-to-work legislation in what the Journal describes as the courts’ shooting down of unions’ legal campaign to save coerced dues

“The SEC’s Cyber Embarrassment.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/21) criticizes the SEC for revealing its EDGAR system breach in a four-line admission in the middle of a 4,000-word statement on cybersecurity released Wednesday – an admission the Journal describes as burying the lead. The Journal writes the disclosure provided little information after weeks of learning about the incident, and argues the disclosure was particularly embarrassing in the wake of the Equifax breach.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Because for Donald Trump, this isn't about the Graham-Cassidy bill. It's about getting rid of Obamacare, which he hates, primarily because Obama's name is on it. ... At this point, he would sign anything if it meant getting rid of Obamacare. He'd sign copies of the Quran at the Barnes & Noble in Fallujah if it meant he could get rid of Obamacare."

Jimmy Kimmel: "After I accused Bill Cassidy of not telling the truth, the President wrote a tweet of support for him personally. 'Senator (Doctor) Bill Cassidy is a class act who really cares about people and their health (care), he doesn't lie, he just wants to help people.' So I tweeted back, 'That's great news, Mr. President, does that mean he'll vote against the horrible bill he wrote?'"

Jimmy Kimmel: "People tell me, give [Senator Cassidy] the benefit of the doubt, and I do give him the benefit the doubt. I doubt all the benefits he claims are part of the new healthcare bill."

Jimmy Kimmel: "We haven't seen this many people come forward to speak out against a 'bill' since Cosby. Okay?"

Stephen Colbert: "One of the emails contains cryptic mentions of 'black caviar,' which investigator believe is a veiled reference to payments Manafort hoped to receive. Either that, or black caviar describes how Steve Bannon reproduces."

James Corden: "Today, North Korea's foreign minister responded to Donald Trump's speech at the United Nations, saying that Trump's threats to destroy their country are just, quote, 'the sound of a dog barking.' Now that's not a fair statement because when a dog barks, you actually understand what he is trying to communicate."

James Corden: "North Korea's foreign minister also added that he felt sorry for Trump's staff. So just to recap, a guy who works for the most oppressive dictator on the planet feels sorry for people who work for Donald Trump."

Trevor Noah: "Thanks to the Russian investigation, we've learned so many new ways to evade questions. Manafort with the stutter step. Mike Pence with the smoke screen. And if you really want to know how to not answer a question, there's only one man you can go to, Master Spice [Referring to Sean Spicer]."

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump is so screwed because with anyone else, they would probably just destroy the evidence. But with Sean Spicer, he'd try to start to burn the notebooks but then somehow end up setting himself on fire, and it just wouldn't work."

Jimmy Fallon: "Some good news for President Trump. A new poll shows that his approval ratings just rose three points. That's right, it's now at four points."

Jimmy Fallon: "Did you see this? North Korea's foreign minister said Trump's speech sounded like a dog barking. Trump didn't respond because he was chasing after a fire truck."

Jimmy Fallon: "In an interview today, Sean Spicer said that he has never knowingly lied to the American people. Then Spicer said, 'Starting now.'"

Seth Meyers: "Former White House Press Secretary Sean Spicer said in an interview today that he never knowingly lied to the American people while in office. Oh, really? Then how do you explain this? 'It's another busy day here at the White House.'"

Seth Meyers: "A teacher in South Carolina has been suspended after she gave her fifth grade class a homework assignment asking them to justify the KKK's treatment of African-Americans. Also suspended, the kid who got an 'A.'"

Seth Meyers: "[Donald Trump] talks about Middle East peace the way people talk about getting back together with their ex."

Seth Meyers: "The Affordable Care Act includes definitions, in law, of what's reasonable for an individual to spend on premiums, given his or her income. By comparison, the new GOP bill has none of those details. ... And I don't know if you've met the guy who will be signing this bill, but I'm not sure we should go by his definition of affordable."

Conan O'Brien: "Former White House Press Secretary Sean Spicer said he never knowingly lied to the American people. He then said, 'Damn it, I just lied again. I can't help myself. It's a habit.'"

Conan O'Brien: "This afternoon, North Korean leader Kim Jong-Un lashed out at President Trump, called him 'mentally deranged and a frightened dog.' As a result, Kim Jong-Un is now the Democrats' top pick for President in 2020."

Interior Department To Overhaul Obama's Sage Grouse Protection Plan.

The New York Times (9/28, Friedman) reports that the Interior Department is intending to issue a formal notice to change management plans for sage grouse habitats this week. The move "could lead to new mineral leasing, grazing and other commercial activities across the quirky bird's Western habitat."

The Hill (9/28, Cama) reports that "industries that use federal land have long complained that the management plans still go too far." Kathleen Sgamma, president of the Western Energy Alliance, said, "This Interior Department is much more willing to cooperate with states, and I think that is very positive for ensuring the sage grouse is protected without killing jobs and economic opportunities."

The Washington Examiner (9/28, Siegel) reports that League of Conservation Voters VP for Government Affairs Tiernan Sittenfeld said that "Secretary Zinke is turning his back on a bipartisan, collaborative conservation effort to protect the greater sage-grouse habitat and Western economies." Sittenfeld also said, "...Zinke is looking to sell out the sagebrush to his friends in the fossil fuel industry. This is yet another example of the Trump administration undermining sound management of our public lands."

Also reporting are the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (9/28, Landers), Courthouse News (9/28, Renda), Oregon Public Broadcasting (9/28, Flatt), and KUOW-FM Seattle Seattle (9/28, Flatt).

Interior Secretary Zinke Traveled On Charter, Military Planes.

Politico (9/28, Lefebvre) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and aides "have taken several flights on private or military aircraft, including a $12,000 charter plane to take him to events in his hometown in Montana and private flights between two Caribbean islands."

The Hill (9/28, Manchester) reports that "in addition to using charter flights, Zinke used a military to travel to Norway with his wife earlier this year, from which they flew to Alaska to attend events for the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee." Zinke also "used a military plane to survey wild fires in Montana last August, alongside Department of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue." According to a USDA spokesperson, "the two agencies said they would reimburse the Air Force."

The Washington Examiner (9/28, Correll) reports that Heather Swift, Interior Department spokeswoman, "said Zinke's use of these aircraft was scheduled when commercial flights did not fit Zinke's schedule." She added that the flights were "pre-cleared by career officials in the ethics office."

Also reporting are the Washington Post (9/28, Harwell, Rein), Reuters (9/28, Cornwell), the Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/29, Brea), the New York Daily News (9/29, Slattery), and Newsweek (9/28, Valencia).

FAA Restricts Drone Flights Over U.S. Landmarks.

Reuters (9/28, Shepardson) reports the Federal Aviation Administration said Thursday it was restricting drone flights over 10 US landmarks at the request of national security and law enforcement agencies. The FAA and Interior Department said they are restricting drone flights up to 400 feet within the boundaries of the USS Constitution in Boston, Gateway Arch in St. Louis, Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, Folsom Dam, Glen Canyon Dam, Grand Coulee Dam, Hoover Dam and Shasta Dam. The restrictions will be effective Oct. 5.

NPR (9/28, Gonzalez) reports the announce said it marks the first time the FAA has restricted drone flights over Interior Department landmarks. However, national parks banned "launching, landing or operating unmanned aircraft" in 2014.

Also providing coverage are the AP (9/29), The Verge (9/28, Deahl), CNET News (9/28, Musil), MarketWatch (9/28, French), Engadget (9/28, Lumb), and Quartz (9/28, Murphy).

Is Zinke Signaling A Shift From Solar? It's Complicated .

E&E Publishing (9/28) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke this week "delivered a string of comments" that suggest "large-scale solar power development might not be a wise use of public land." At a Clean Energy Week conference, "Zinke said the United States will be hooked on fossil fuels for the next two decades without better battery technology to store electricity generated by sun, wind and other renewable energy sources, so extraction of fossil fuels on public lands is going to be in the nation's best interest." He "then said land used to host solar panels has no other use outside of energy production, adding that rooftops — not public land — are the best platforms for producing solar power going forward." E&E adds that "conservation groups and public lands advocates jumped on Zinke's comments as further evidence the Trump administration does not view renewable energy development as a priority."

Energy Department Needs To Push Harder On Energy Development: Study.

The Washington Examiner (9/28, Siciliano) reports the Department of Energy isn't "pulling its weight when it comes to developing energy on its own lands," according to a National Academies of Sciences study released yesterday. The Interior Department "on the other hand" has "led by example on that front, primarily on renewable energy development." The report, which was sponsored by the DOE, said, "While other government agencies, such as the Department of the Interior, have examined and marketed opportunities to promote renewable resource development on public lands, [the Department of Energy] appears to have done much less." The report "said the Department of Energy, now led by former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, has the skills and technical ability to do a lot more." The study stated, "But with DOE's depth and breadth of skills and technical capabilities with energy resources, it too could leverage such opportunities and play a major role in forging private-public partnerships in land development serving the national interest."

Energy Industry Says 'No Thanks' To Trump Offer Of Marine Sanctuaries.

Reuters (9/28, Volcovici, Groom) reports that "President Donald Trump's administration is considering shrinking or eliminating 11 marine sanctuaries designed to protect 425 million acres of coral reefs, marine mammal habitats and pristine beaches." However, interviews with energy industry representatives signal the effort "will likely miss its target," because "opening up these areas would likely help wind power companies — which Trump has lambasted — more than oil producers, they say." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management estimates that there are 10 billion barrels of oil in the Pacific Offshore Continental Shelf, some of which "may overlap with marine sanctuaries off California's coast." Referring to four marine sanctuaries off California's coast, Western States Petroleum Association president Catherine Reheis-Boyd said, "Our members are not currently pursuing this opportunity."

Rob Bishop Asks Trump Administration To Review Obama Order Barring Mineral Withdrawals.

The Washington Examiner (9/28, Siegel) reports that House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop asked Interior Secretary Zinke and Agriculture Secretary Purdue Thursday "to review an Obama administration order blocking mineral access on more than 100,000 acres of federal land." In a letter to both secretaries, Bishop wrote, "Under the prior administration, mineral access on federal land was regularly and systematically blocked, harming our nation's economic and strategic potential. ... Indeed, millions of acres of federal lands were inappropriately withdrawn from mineral access due to false premises of environmental protectionism and the intentional misuse of statutory authority."

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (9/28, Cama).

Colorado's Delegation Urges Trump Administration To Help.

The Denver Post (9/28, Paul) reports that "nearly every member of Colorado's congressional delegation has signed a letter to the Trump administration asking for help with the emerging crisis of tiny invasive mussel larvae found in Green Mountain Reservoir." In a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, the delegation wrote, "We urge you to respond rapidly, deploy available resources and work with the state and local communities to prevent this initial detection from growing into a full infestation. A rapid response is critical during the window of opportunity immediately after the detection of invasive species." The letter, dated Thursday, was signed by Sens. Cory Gardner and Michael Bennet, as well as Reps. Diana DeGette, Scott Tipton, Doug Lamborn, Jared Polis, Ed Perlmutter and Mike Coffman.

Department Of Interior Investigating ADA Complaint In Clyde.

The Port Clinton \(OH\) News Herald (9/28, Carson) reports that the Department of Interior's Civil Rights Division has asked Clyde City "to address park accessibility issues raised in an American with Disabilities Act complaint filed by residents John and Jan Brewer." In a Sept. 19 letter, the department "asked City Manager Paul Fiser to address the alleged ADA violations and provide a timeline for fixing possible deficiencies by Oct. 31." According to the article, "concerns raised by the Brewers included multiple inclusion issues involving parking and ADA accessibility at Gus Wolf Park, Limerick Park, Community Park's upper and lower levels, Hurd Park's trail, Hendricks Park and the Anderson Depot Plaza."

Zinke Shows Thoughtful Approach To Wildfire.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/29) supports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's decision to pursue "a more aggressive approach to preventing wildfires." The paper acknowledges that "while he set no specifics, he did give agency leadership five goals, including using policy aggressively, working with other groups and agencies to use resources efficiently, and making sure that landscapes are restored and maintained." It adds that "what Zinke must know, but did not mention, is the need for more money if serious inroads against unhealthy, unsafe fuel loads are to be accomplished. That will have to come from Congress."

Federal Employees Honored At Gala Get Trump's Praise.

In his column for the Washington Post (9/28), Joe Davidson writes that it was "good, if not ironic, to see a top appointee of President Trump give his greetings to a formal banquet honoring federal employees, particularly given the disrespect, disappointment and dismay his administration has heaped on the workforce." Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney addressed the event, saying he is "honored to serve alongside you in government and have a great appreciation for your important contributions on behalf of the American people."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Sold For Sex: Senate Committee Investigates Human Trafficking Of Native Women And Children.

Rewire (9/28, Brewer) reports that on Wednesday, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs "heard testimony on the findings and recommendations of a Government Accountability Office (GAO) report examining the growing problem of human trafficking in Indian Country and among Native Americans, one of the most vulnerable populations in the United States." During the hearing, Sen. John Hoeven "announced that he is introducing several pieces of legislation aimed specifically at improving public safety in Native communities." Also, "members of the SCIA recently co-authored a bipartisan letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price, and Jonodev Chaudhuri, chair of the National Indian Gaming Commission, urging that the federal agencies bolster their training and education efforts among their employees to identify and respond to human trafficking and domestic violence in Indian Country."

Additional coverage was provided by the Arizona Daily Sun (9/28, CLAIR).

Bill Would Give Federal Recognition To Lumbee Tribe.

WUNC-FM Chapel Hill, NC (9/28, Michaels) reports that “a bill that would give full federal recognition to the Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina has gotten a hearing in Congress.” The Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, which has been opposed to Lumbee recognition, “says the Lumbee should go through the Office of Federal Acknowledgement in the Bureau of Indian Affairs rather than push for an act of Congress.” During the hearing this week, Lumbee Chairman Harvey Godwin said, “The petition process is long, expensive – very expensive – and riddled with issues of fairness. Requiring a petition for review by the OFA would be to further delay the justice we deserve.”

9th Circ. Urged To OK Challenge To Tribal Leadership Ruling.

Law360 (9/28, Lidgett) reports that “a faction of a California Native American tribe on Thursday urged the Ninth Circuit to revive its challenge to a U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs decision finding that a general council established to serve as California Valley Miwok’s governing body in 1998 isn’t the tribe’s valid representative.”

Cayuga Nation Evictions From Seneca Falls Properties On Hold.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (9/28, Craig) reports that “attorney Joseph Heath, who represents a group of Cayuga chiefs and clan mothers in opposition of Halftown and his council, said he filed paperwork last week in federal court in Washington D.C. challenging the Bureau of Indian Affairs’s decision to recognize Halftown’s council as the new leaders.” Heath “hoped to delay state Supreme Court Justice Dennis F. Bender’s earlier decision requiring the Seneca Falls properties be vacated by Tuesday, Sept. 26 and turned over to Halftown.”

Workshop Helps Local Tribal Artists With Marketing.

The Lake County \(MT\) Leader & Advertiser (9/28, Fox) reports that at a workshop held by the Interior Department on Sept. 20, representatives from the Indian Arts and Crafts Board “helped artists learn to market their authentic, hand-made goods against growing competition.” According to the article, “each of the workshop participants received a folder complete with pamphlets and printed slideshows containing information about various federal and State laws that protect Indian arts and crafts.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Enviros Get Hollow Victory In 10th Circ. Frack Rule Fight.

Law360 (9/28, Rodriguez) reports that “environmentalists are cheering the Tenth Circuit’s recent decision to toss a legal challenge to the U.S. Bureau of Land Management’s rule strengthening fracking regulations on federal and Native American lands, but experts say litigation delays and a BLM effort to revoke the Obama-era rule could prevent it from ever taking effect.”

BLM Asserts Ownership Of Abandoned Building.

The Price \(UT\) Sun Advocate (9/28, Sherman) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “disputed ownership of an abandoned building that Carbon County previously put on the auction block for back taxes.” During a meeting held September 20, Commission Chairman Jae Potter explained, “The BLM has contacted us and have staked a claim on the building that we discussed in our last meeting at the Wildcat load-out. So we are now going to need to enter into negotiations with the BLM and to establish ownership.” Commissioner Jake Mellor added, “The BLM told us one thing and now they’ve told us another.”

Additional Coverage: BLM Offers Grazers More Flexibility.

Additional coverage of the “outcome-based grazing demonstration program recently announced by the Bureau of Land Management” was provided by the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (9/28, Featherston), the Taos \(NM\) News (9/29, Hooks), and AGDAILY (9/28).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Cape Wind Has A New Lease On Life.

The Martha's Vineyard Times (9/28, Brennan) reports that "Cape Wind's lease of 46 square miles of Nantucket Sound was reaffirmed this week, even though the project has appeared dead in the water for several years." The decision, filed Wednesday by the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, "states that Cape Wind, which proposes to build 130 wind turbines in Horseshoe Shoal, has met the requirements to show that it's taken 'all practicable means to avoid or minimize environmental harm...'" The decision "came despite dozens of letters from political leaders, municipalities and the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound in opposition to the project."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Reclamation Official To Make Third Trip To The Basin.

The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (9/28, O'brien) reports that Alan Mikkelsen, the Bureau of Reclamation's deputy commissioner, "will be making a third trip this year to the Klamath Basin with the focus on working toward resolution myriad water issues." In a phone interview from his Washington, D.C., office on Wednesday, Mikkelsen said, "Believe it or not, when I was asked what other assignments I wanted from the Interior Secretary, I said resolving Indian water rights settlements and the Klamath Basin. I have been doing conflict resolutions on water issues for over three decades." Mikkelsen will "be in the Basin Oct. 8 through Oct 10. He plans to meet with Copco Reservoir landowners in California and with ranchers in the Upper Klamath Lake area. He also plans to tour the Sprague and Sycan rivers."

Sunday Deadline For Interest In Navajo Coal Plant Approaches.

The AP (9/28, Fonseca) reports that the Navajo Generating Station in Northern Arizona may close in 2019 without a new owner if Sunday's deadline is not met by interested buyers. The plant's current operator, the Salt River Project, said the deadline will help decide whether to plan for a tear down or to maintain the facility for long-term use. Peabody Energy owns the mine feeding the power plant and hired Lazard, an investment firm to find a new owner for the plant.

Fish Fry: Endangered Salmon Pay For Feds' Errors At Shasta Dam.

The Sacramento \(CA\) News & Review (9/7, Bland) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation has "blamed drought and technical failures at Shasta Dam for the second lowest return of endangered winter-run Chinook salmon in 20 years, but environmentalists say the federal agency has itself to fault." According to the California Department of Fish and Wildlife, "just 1,123 of the adult fish returned to the Sacramento River system to spawn in 2017."

Additional Coverage: US, Mexico Share Benefits And Burdens In New Colorado River Pact.

Additional coverage of the signing of Minute 323 was provided by the Arizona Daily Star (9/28, Davis).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Wildlife Managers Could Remove North-central Montana Grizzlies From Endangered Species Act.

KTVH-TV Helena, MT (9/28, Ambarian) reports that U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials "say they could soon make a proposal to remove grizzly bears in north-central Montana from federal protections under the Endangered Species Act." The announcement was made "Thursday during a presentation to the state Environmental Quality Council." Hilary Cooley, the FWS's grizzly bear recovery coordinator, "said there are still several steps to take before the Northern Continental Divide population can be formally delisted. That includes analyzing habitat in the area and getting a formal status evaluation."

Additional coverage was provided by KRTV-TV Great Falls, MT (9/28, Ambarian) and KXLH-TV Helena, MT (9/28, Ambarian).

Daines, Gianforte Urge For Prioritization Of Rock Creek, Montano Mines.

KWYB-TV Butte, MT (9/28) reports that Sen. Steve Daines and Rep. Greg Gianforte are urging the Trump Administration "to prioritize the Rock Creek and Montanore Mines, projects located in Lincoln County and Sanders County." The article notes that "both projects require additional analysis and coordination among the U.S. Forest Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service after decades of analysis and litigation." The lawmakers "say that the projects have been thoroughly vetted, researched and reviewed, beginning as early as the 1990s for Rock Creek Project and 2001 for the Montanore project."

Threatened Desert Tortoises Set Free South Of Boulder City.

The AP (9/29, Brean) reports that a dozen desert tortoises were "released Sept. 22 into the Boulder City Conservation Easement, a 86,423-acre swath of public land set aside in 1995 to conserve habitat for the federally protected reptile." Also, "another 26 tortoises were set free in the same general area, 16 of them with tracking devices glued to their shells." The article notes that "it was the first organized release by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and its partners in southern Nevada in two years."

Record Low Number Of Salmon Expected To Return To Coleman.

The Redding \(CA\) Record-Searchlight (9/28, Arthur) reports that "the number of salmon returning to spawn at Coleman National Fish Hatchery in Anderson could reach historic lows this year — a legacy of the five-year drought that ended last year." Officials with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service noted that "three years ago they disrupted their typical life cycle by hauling the fish down to the Bay Area." According to Bret Galyean, project leader at the hatchery, "the number of fish returning this year is low because in 2014 hatchery officials put all 12 million baby salmon from the hatchery into tanker trucks and drove them down to the Bay Area and released them at Rio Vista and Mare Island." Galyean said that "many of that year's brood will not make it back to Coleman, and instead they will likely spawn in other streams."

Lights On, Birds Safe.

The Kaua'i \(HI\) Garden Island News (9/28, Else) reports that "no seabirds were grounded during the first night football game during fledgling season in seven years on Kauai." The article says that "the first of the night games was held Friday, hours after the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the county regarding the night games." As part of the agreement between the two parties, "a trained team monitored Hanapepe Stadium Friday night for any downed Newell's shearwaters or Hawaiian petrels." That will "continue throughout the scheduled night games this season, using members of Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps to keep their eyes on the skies."

Opinion: Feeding 'Wild' Wolves.

In an op-ed for the Eastern Arizona Courier (9/28, Oliver), Dexter K. Oliver, a wildlife consultant, criticizes the recently released draft Mexican Wolf Recovery Plan. According to Oliver, "because the new recovery plan is demanding so many more Mexican wolves in the United States, more tax dollars will be necessary to pay for personnel providing these free meals." He expects that "the same problems will escalate." Oliver concludes that "having to provide food to 41 percent of the 'wild' wolves currently in Arizona and New Mexico, after two decades of reintroduction follies, is ludicrous."

National Park Service

Another Rockfall At El Capitan, Day After Person Killed.

NBC News (9/28, HELSEL, WALTERS) reports that "a new rockfall occurred at Yosemite National Park's famed 'El Capitan' monolith Thursday afternoon, park officials said, a day after a huge boulder broke free from the face and killed one person and injured another." It was unclear if anyone was injured. The National Park Service "said that a road was closed after the new rockfall."

March For Racial Justice And March For Black Women Will Converge In D.C. This Weekend.

The Washington Post (9/28, Stein) reports that “two marches aimed at highlighting racial injustices — particularly those facing women of color — will converge Saturday on the National Mall.” The March for Racial Justice and the March for Black Women will “have independent rallies in the nation’s capital, then meet at Lincoln Park in the Capitol Hill neighborhood before marching together to the Justice Department and the Mall.” The article notes that “both marches are waiting for final permits from the National Park Service, which is typical.”

Plan For Moccasin Bend Archaeological District Finalized.

The AP (9/28) reports that “a long-gestating general management plan to overhaul Tennessee’s Moccasin Bend National Archaeological District has received final approval.” The National Park Service “approved the plan to bring a national park visitor center to the new gateway site, add signs along trails to showcase area history, provide recreational opportunities and improve access to the hundreds of acres of historical land that played a key role in the Trail of Tears and Civil War on Sept. 14.” The project will be “completed over the next 15 to 20 years.”

New Fight Breaks Out Over Oil Drilling In Everglades.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel (9/28, Fleshler) reports that “a new fight has broken out over oil exploration in the western Everglades as environmental groups try to stop a Texas company from completing a search for oil at Big Cypress National Preserve.” Burnett Oil Co. has applied for a renewal of its state permit, but “four environmental groups oppose the permit renewal, filing letters with the Florida Department of Environmental Protection that describe the oil company’s work so far as a sloppy operation that has harmed the preserve.” They also claimed “National Park Service staff weren’t always able to keep ahead of the trucks, as required under the company’s permits, to head off disturbances to denning panthers, nesting birds or other wildlife.”

King District’s Visitor Center Shut Down For Repairs.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/28, Suggs) reports that “the Visitor Center at the Martin Luther King Jr. National Historic Site will be closed for two weeks for repairs starting Monday in anticipation of massive crowds in 2018.” From Oct. 2 to Oct. 16, “workers will clean the building’s HVAC system, remove and reinstall wall panels and repair and reseal the ceiling and floor.” Park Superintendent Judy Forte said, “It is our mission and goal to maintain and preserve the Visitor Center so it can continue to serve park visitors for many years to come.”

Park Fire Crews Help Out West.

The Mount Desert \(ME\) Islander (9/28, Broom) reports that “this year, the risk of wildland fires here has been low, so Acadia was able to send four firefighters and a fire truck to help battle blazes in Montana in July and August.” According to the article, “a crew from Acadia flew to Montana last week to help complete the fire-fighting operation and drive the park’s engine back home.”

Largest US Gumbo Limbo Tree In Danger After Irma.

WTSP-TV St. Petersburg, FL (9/28) reports that “the largest gumbo limbo tree in the United States is in Bradenton, but its future is now uncertain after Hurricane Irma.” The tree at DeSoto National Memorial “received two new cracks from the storm.” Nathan Souder, National Park Service Superintendent at DeSoto National Memorial, said “officials are looking at all options for saving the tree.”

Why Do We Tolerate The Mediocrity Of Independence Park?

Philly \(PA\) (9/28) editorializes that Independence National Historical Park, “designed to honor and celebrate the founding of modern democracy, is under stress.” The paper says that the park is “showing its wear.” The paper says that “it’s time to create an inspiring and uplifting experience that not only provides a coherent narrative of our founding, but inspires the next chapters of our democracy and our future.”

‘A Disturbingly Empty Space In The Very Center Of The City’. In a piece for Philly \(PA\) (9/28, Bilger), Oliver Bilger criticizes the “look” and feel of Independence Mall. He suggests that “a cultivated lawn would be an easy thing to begin with.”

How Independence Park Brought Drama From The Start. In a piece for Philly \(PA\) (9/28, Rowan), Tommy Rowan traces the history how Independence Hall and its nearby blocks have become “part of what we now know as Independence Mall.” Rowan describes it as “a saga of controversy and missteps.”

Lt. Gen. Buchanan To Oversee Relief Operation.

□ ABC World News Tonight (9/28, story 2, 2:55, Muir) reported that President Trump “has now sent a three-star Army general to command the relief operation, amid images of thousands of cargo containers sitting there, full of supplies, but not delivered.” Reuters (9/28, Respaut, Graham) reports that Lt. Gen. Jeffrey Buchanan will oversee operations and be the Pentagon’s link to FEMA. USA Today (9/28, Stanglin) reports that US Northern Command spokesman John Cornelio “said Buchanan is being sent to the island to better assess the situation so the military can provide the highest level of support for the disaster.” McClatchy (9/28, Ordoñez, Daugherty) reports that Sen. Marco Rubio had urged the appointment of a military supervisor.

Lawmakers Approve Tax Breaks For Harvey, Irma, Maria Victims. USA Today (9/28, Jackson) reports that the House and Senate on Thursday “approved reduced taxes for victims of Hurricanes Harvey, Irma and Maria...over the objections of some Democrats who said Superstorm Sandy victims did not get the same treatment.” The tax provisions were combined with a bill to extend the authorization for the FAA through March.

NFIP Depletes Borrowing Authority In Wake Of This Year’s Hurricanes. Politico (9/28, Warmbrodt) reports that in the wake of the “devastating hurricanes over the past several weeks,” the National Flood Insurance Program “has depleted its borrowing authority.” FEMA “said it notified Congress on Sept. 20 that it borrowed $5.8 billion from Treasury to fund losses this year,” and the balance of its remaining borrowing authority now stands at zero. A FEMA spokesperson said, “Ultimately, the claims payments on Harvey and Irma will exceed the current spending authorities of the National Flood Insurance Program. ... We will be collaborating with Congress so that every claim is paid in full.”

China Orders North Korean-Owned Businesses Closed.

The AP (9/28, McDonald) reports China on Thursday ordered North Korean-owned businesses “to close, cutting foreign revenue for the isolated North under UN sanctions imposed over its nuclear and missile programs.” China’s Ministry of Commerce ordered “North Korean businesses and ventures with Chinese partners” to close “within 120 days of the UN Security Council’s Sept. 11 approval of the latest sanctions,” which would be “early January.” Bloomberg News (9/28) says “non-profit and non-commercial public utility and infrastructure projects are not subject to the order,” the ministry said. The Wall Street Journal (9/28, Chin) notes that China accounts for more than 80% of North Korea’s trade.

Thornton: Chinese Enforcement Of UN Sanctions Improving. Reuters (9/28, Zengerle, Brunnstrom) reports that Acting Assistant Secretary of State Susan Thornton said Thursday that China is making progress in enforcing UN sanctions imposed on North Korea. “We are working closely with China to execute this strategy and are clear-eyed in viewing the progress – growing, if uneven – that China has made on this front,” Thornton told a Senate hearing. “We do see Chinese policy shifting,” she added.

Thornton, the AP (9/28, Lardner) reports, also “acknowledged Thursday that US intelligence agencies don’t believe North Korea will ever pull the plug on its nuclear program.” Thornton said the State Department and other federal agencies are “testing” the conclusion reached by the intelligence agencies by ratcheting up “international isolation and pressure” on North Korea, with help from China. “We’re trying to turn China’s position from looking at North Korea as some kind of asset, to looking at them as a liability,” Thornton said. “I think that [Secretary of State] Tillerson has made a lot of progress on that front.”

South Korea Expects More Provocative Acts By North Korea In Mid-October. Reuters (9/28, Kim) reports South Korea “expects more provocative acts by North Korea next month, to coincide with the anniversary of the founding of the North Korean communist party” and China’s Communist Party Congress. During a meeting with President Moon Jae-in on Thursday, national security adviser Chung Eui-yong “said he expected Pyongyang to act around Oct. 10 and 18, but gave no details.”

US To Send “Strategic Assets” To Seoul Amid North Korea Tensions. The Washington Post (9/28, Fifield, Lamothe) reports South Korean national security adviser Chung Eui-young said

Thursday that the US will send “strategic” military assets to South Korea “on a more regular basis” amid growing tensions with North Korea. Chung told lawmakers in Seoul that American “strategic assets” could be deployed to South Korea on a “rotational” basis before the end of the year. “This will help us expand our defense capabilities,” he told the lawmakers, without defining “strategic assets.”

The New York Times (9/28, Choe) reports South Korean President Moon Jae-in also said Thursday that the nation’s military “would speed up efforts to strengthen its pre-emptive strike, missile defense and retaliatory capabilities against North Korea.” In a speech to mark South Korea’s Armed Forces Day, Moon “said he would push for the South to move more quickly to retake wartime operational control of its military from the United States.”

Coroner: No Certain Cause For Oxygen Loss That Led To Warmbier’s Death. The Washington Post (9/28, Svrluga) reports that a coroner “could not determine what caused Otto Warmbier, the University of Virginia student who was imprisoned in North Korea, to suffer a dangerous loss of oxygen to his brain, according to a report released this week.” At some point “more than a year ago, Warmbier’s brain was starved of oxygen, but many causes could explain that, and the report from the Hamilton County coroner could not point to a definitive cause.” However, the coroner, Lakshmi Kode Sammarco, said, “I’m not denying that he was tortured. I don’t know that he was tortured or not tortured.” Sammarco added, “We didn’t have physical evidence of torture other than the anoxic encephalopathy in the brain,” using the medical term to describe oxygen deprivation in the brain.

The New York Times (9/28, Kolata) reports Warmbier’s parents appeared Tuesday on Fox News’ Fox & Friends, saying their son had been “tortured,” and after the interview, President Trump said in a tweet that Warmbier “was tortured beyond belief by North Korea.” The Times says the autopsy “did not find signs of torture,” but Sammarco “could not rule out the possibility.” Said Sammarco, “There are a lot of horrible things you can do to a human body that don’t leave external signs behind.”

Two North Korean Spies Arrested In Ukraine Attempting To Steal Missile Technology. The New York Times (9/28, Higgins) reports on the July 2011 arrest of a North Korean spy – first reported earlier this month by CNN – who posed as a member of his country’s trade delegation in Belarus. The spy, 56-year-old Ri Tae-gil, “thought he was photographing a secret scientific report on missile technology,” but the report “was a fake, part of a sting operation mounted by Ukraine’s security service to prevent the leak of missile secrets.” The Times says Ri’s arrest along with a fellow North Korean spy “shows the extent to which Pyongyang has scoured the world for foreign technology to reinvigorate what had been a faltering program to develop long-range missiles.”

Ignatius: Trump’s Asia Visit Offers A Clue To His Foreign Policy. Washington Post (9/28) columnist David Ignatius writes that “one simple rule for decoding foreign policy is that presidential trips often drive the agenda. So the fact that President Trump is planning to visit Beijing and other Asian capitals in just over a month may tell us more about what’s ahead in that region than all the tweets, rumors and palace intrigue.” Ignatius says it is unlikely Trump will fly to Beijing in November “through a cloud of nuclear fallout.” As for “ceaseless rumors” that Secretary of State Tillerson will be fired, Ignatius notes that Tillerson “was on his way to Beijing Thursday to prepare the way for the Trump visit,” so “it’s unlikely that the Sherpa will be thrown off the mountain before the president reaches the summit.”

US Geological Survey Crews Examine Extent Of Flooding From Irma.

WJXT-TV Jacksonville, FL (9/28, Peel) reports that “after Hurricane Irma, U.S. Geological Survey crews are making their way to Northeast Florida to find out the extent of damage.” Documenting water levels, USGS officials said, will allow the data to “be used for flood inundation maps.” USGS Field Office Chief Bill Hazell “said if storm damage ever gets this bad again, the USGS data will give the community an idea of how high the water can get before the storm hits.”

Administration Waives Jones Act For Puerto Rico Amid Calls For Stronger Response.

Coverage of the Administration's decision to waive the Jones Act for Puerto Rico for 10 days is somewhat critical, with most reports focusing on the delay in the decision and on complaints that the 10-day period will be too brief. Coverage focuses more strongly on continued criticism of the federal response to hurricane relief efforts there, and on congressional pressure for a more robust response.

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (9/28, lead story, 2:20) by reporting that "the Trump Administration, under growing pressure to speed things up, temporarily waived the Jones Act, allowing more foreign ships to deliver aid." On NBC Nightly News (9/28, lead story, 3:10), Lester Holt reported, "The Trump Administration today waived rules that prevented some ships from delivering goods, but the root of the problem runs much deeper." NBC's Gabe Gutierrez: "Thousands of shipping containers sit at San Juan's main port, a distribution bottleneck stifling the relief effort. ... With little phone service in Puerto Rico, communication is crippled, [and] private truckers aren't showing up for deliveries."

The AP (9/28, Coto, Kellman) reports that the President "cleared the way Thursday for more supplies to head to Puerto Rico...but on the island, food and water remained scarce in devastated towns where a growing number of people decried the federal response as an uncoordinated disaster." Jose Enrique Melendez, a member of the Puerto Rico legislature, "said the Trump administration had focused more on making a good impression on members of the media gathered at San Juan's convention center than bringing aid to rural Puerto Rico."

USA Today (9/28, Jansen) reports that members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus also "continued to blast the administration for a slow response and said the 10-day waiver isn't long enough." Rep. Luis Guterrez (D-IL) said, "This is Katrina 2017. Think of 3.4 million people who have no escape route from the island of Puerto Rico." The Hill (9/28, Zanona) reports, "Lawmakers in Congress since Monday have been pushing for a one-year waiver," and Reuters (9/28, Gardner) that Sens. Mike Lee and John McCain "introduced a bill on Thursday to permanently waive shipping restrictions on Puerto Rico, saying a temporary waiver from the Trump administration is 'insufficient.'"

Voice of America (9/28, Heinlein) reports on its website that Acting DHS Secretary Duke said in a statement, "This waiver will ensure that over the next ten days, all options are available to move and distribute goods to the people of Puerto Rico. It is intended to ensure we have enough fuel and commodities to support lifesaving efforts, respond to the storm, and restore critical services and critical infrastructure operations in the wake of these devastating storms." And Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló said earlier on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/28), "I can say that the President has been very diligent. He has been essentially talking to us every day." But the New York Times (9/28, A1, Cooper, Nixon, Robles) reports in a front-page story that the Administration is facing "increasing pressure on Thursday to mount a more aggressive response."

The Hill (9/28, Lillis) reports that House Democrats are pressing "both the administration and congressional Republicans to step up their response to Hurricane Maria." House Minority Leader Pelosi, "characterizing the devastation from Maria as 'almost Biblical in its proportions,'" said that the "response has been too slow." Bloomberg News (9/28, Wasson) quotes Pelosi as saying, "This is a national emergency. We want everything to move faster."

The Washington Post (9/28, Wagner) reports that Duke and others "offered a vigorous defense of the federal response." Duke "said she is 'very satisfied' with the federal response since Maria made landfall eight days earlier, calling it 'a good news story in terms of our ability to reach people and the limited number of deaths that have taken place in such a devastating hurricane.'" On CNN's Situation Room (9/28), Puerto Rico Del. Jenniffer Gonzalez responded, "This is not a good news story. ... I do understand the Secretary wants to project and to explain to people that all the federal efforts and agents are there, are doing the job, but we still need to see the things, the water, electricity, the medicines, the food to arrive to the direct hands of the people. That's what we're looking for."

The Hill (9/28, Zanona) reports that Homeland Security Adviser Bossert said that the Puerto Rico "waiver was granted 'immediately' after Rosselló had petitioned Trump for the exemption

Wednesday night." McClatchy (9/28, Ordoñez; Daugherty) reports that Bossert said 10,000 federal forces on are the island. Bossert added, "At this point, the federal government is there at every level providing assistance."

CNN (9/28, Diamond) quotes Bossert as saying, "I think we had more workforce in Puerto Rico than we did for any other storm in history. It's been an unprecedented storm, it's been an unprecedented response, and the President and I have absolutely 100% confidence in what Secretary Duke, and [FEMA Administrator] Brock Long, and the men and women of Puerto Rico are doing. We're going to get through this." On CNN's Situation Room (9/28), Bossert said the "logistics plan starts with the prioritization of goods and commodities. ... What FEMA and the local officials have to do is use the military presence that's there now to augment the diminished capacity...of the local authorities and state authorities to push out food and water first, and medicines."

USA Today (9/28) says in an editorial, "More than a week after Hurricane Maria blasted through Puerto Rico, the misery factor is broad and deepening. ... The first weekend after Maria struck, President Trump said almost nothing about the island's carnage and instead ignited a culture war over NFL protests. When he finally tweeted about Puerto Rico, he included irrelevant asides about the island's history of government debt. And, citing opposition from shipping interests, he hesitated in suspending" the Jones Act. By Thursday, "the administration seemed finally to grasp the gravity of the situation."

The CBS Evening News (9/28, story 3, 1:40, Mason) and NBC Nightly News (9/28, story 2, 1:50, Holt) both broadcast features on relief efforts in rural Puerto Rico.

Administration Will Not Charge Full Price For Evacuation Flights. Newsweek (9/28, Price) reports that the Administration "will not require impoverished Puerto Rican hurricane victims to pay full price for evacuation flights – contradicting earlier reports that it would maintain the pricey flight policy for the US territory." State Department policy "does force emergency evacuees to sign a promissory note for the full-fare flight before leaving."

WPost Analysis: US Responded "More Forcefully" To Haiti Earthquake. The Washington Post (9/28, A1, Davis, Lamothe, O'Keefe) writes that the US responded "more forcefully" to the 2010 earthquake in Haiti than to the Puerto Rico disaster. Immediately after the 2010 earthquakes, "the US military mobilized as if it were going to war. ... Within two days, the Pentagon had 8,000 American troops en route. Within two weeks, 33 US military ships and 22,000 soldiers had arrived," and "more than 300 military helicopters buzzed overhead, delivering millions of pounds of food and water. By contrast, eight days after Hurricane Maria ripped across neighboring Puerto Rico, just 4,400 service members were participating in federal operations."

White House Says At Least 16 Have Died In Puerto Rico. The Washington Times (9/28, Boyer) reports, "The White House said Thursday that at least 16 people have died in Puerto Rico in the wake of Hurricane Maria." Bossert "said Puerto Rican authorities have confirmed the deaths." The Washington Post (9/28, Wagner) reports that Bossert said at the White House, "No fatality's acceptable. If that number increases significantly, that will be a devastating blow. We are doing everything we can to prevent that."

Tesla Sending Battery Packs To Puerto Rico. Bloomberg News (9/28, Hull) reports, "Tesla Inc. is sending to Puerto Rico hundreds of its Powerwall battery systems that can be paired with solar panels. ... The equipment is sorely needed, since the island remains largely without electricity more than a week after Hurricane Maria made landfall."

McClatchy Examines Trump's Claimed Ties To New York Puerto Rican Community. McClatchy (9/28, Douglas) looks at President Trump's relations with the New York Puerto Rican community, noting that he has said, "I grew up in New York, so I know many people from Puerto Rico. I know many Puerto Ricans. And these are great people, and we have to help them." McClatchy writes that "Puerto Ricans don't recall him having a particular affinity for or ties to the predominately Democratic-leaning community." New York political consultant Jaime Estades said, "There are no footprints that are permanent in terms of his relations with the Puerto Rican or Latino community. ... Yes, he has met Puerto Ricans, he grew up in the city. But to have a permanent relationship? I don't think there are pictures of Trump with Puerto Ricans, unless they're with J-Lo."

Puerto Rican Korean War Veterans Stranded On Trip Home. The New York Times (9/28, Gonzalez) has a feature on the surviving members of the "Borinqueneers," the 65th Infantry Regiment that "has seen action from World War I through Korea, and was the last segregated military unit to be disbanded." Sixteen Korean War veterans were stranded "en route to Puerto Rico from South Korea, where they had been honored by its government for their wartime service, when Hurricane Maria devastated their island home, leaving them stranded with little word from relatives and friends."

NFL's Watson Donates First Game Check To Harvey Victims. ABC World News Tonight (9/28, story 12, 1:10, Muir) reported that rookie NFL player Deshaun Watson of the Houston Texans donated his first game check to three stadium cafeteria workers "whose homes were damaged by Harvey." NBC Nightly News (9/28, story 12, 1:35, Holt) reported that Watson "donated about $27,000 from his base salary of $465,000."

Trump Says Tax Plan Is Intended To Help "The Working People."

The President, Administration officials, and Republican lawmakers made a case Thursday for the Republican tax plan, arguing that it is aimed at helping the middle class and will spur economic growth. Coverage of the plan is much lighter today than it was yesterday and the tone is generally negative, with reports and analyses saying the plan will increase the deficit and will benefit the wealthy more than the middle class.

President Trump was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/28) who the tax plan is intended to help. Trump said, "Really, the working people. We say the working people. The middle class, the people that really haven't been treated right. ... Also it's going to be for businesses where they are going to bring in jobs. This is a tax plan for jobs and growth. ... It will be the largest reduction in terms of dollars of any plan ever in the history of the country."

House Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/28) that middle class families will see "lower tax rates. They can keep more of their money by doubling the standard deduction. We protect more of their dollars from being taxed at all. And as you know, we take the 10 percent bracket and make it zero so incredibly important for modest earning families as well."

The New York Times (9/28, Gelles) focuses on how the plan will benefit corporations, reporting, "corporate America had a long wish list" and Trump "gave companies just about everything they wanted." Business leaders were "quick to applaud the broad outlines of the proposal, claiming that tax cuts they would spur new investment and grow the economy," but "skeptics are questioning whether companies would actually invest tax savings in things like factories and jobs, and whether such cuts would meaningfully help the economy, which is already expanding." Reuters (9/28, Becker) says "Wall Street financiers could be unintended winners" from a section of the plan intended "to help mostly small, 'mom-and-pop' businesses." Trump's call for "a new 'pass-through' tax rate of 25 percent...could mean big savings for owners of sole proprietorships and partnerships who now pay 39.6 percent," but "it could also mean a windfall for partners in private-equity, venture-capital and hedge funds, unless Congress can figure out a way to block them from taking advantage of the new rate."

House Majority Leader McCarthy touted the economic benefits of the package on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/28) saying, "The last eight years under Barack Obama, if you take his very best growth year, that is actually lower than the worst year under Bill Clinton. We have got to get America moving again and that means a tax code that can be competitive. Today, American companies that are competitive around the world, our tax code forces them to take the money to invest in another country, instead of bringing it back to America and investing here." Likewise, Americans for Tax Reform president Grover Norquist told a Capitol Hill press conference Thursday that President Trump's tax reform proposal "can achieve 4 percent growth," the Washington Free Beacon (9/28, Meyer) reports. Norquist said, "We have a jobs bill in front of us if we keep these rates down, we'll go to 4 percent growth, that's what we had under Reagan. ... The big winner of tax reform and tax reduction are the millions of Americans who could not get a job in the last eight years and now will get jobs."

A Washington Post (9/28) editorial blasts the plan, calling it "another irresponsible GOP tax cut, paid for with magical thinking, that would erode the nation's fiscal health and burden future generations." According to the Post, "the plan is packed with giveaways to the wealthy and threatens to add even more to the debt." It is, the Post argues, tax reform "for dishonest political cowards."

Pence Pushes "Largest Tax Cut In American History" In Michigan And Wisconsin. The Detroit Free Press (9/28, Egan) reports that Vice President Pence visited Auburn Hills, Michigan on Thursday, where he "promoted what he said would be 'the largest tax cut in American history.'" Addressing a crowd of "close to 300 people," Pence said, "We're going to cut taxes across the board." He was joined by Gov. Rick Snyder, who has eliminated the state's business tax and replaced it with a corporate income tax that only "a minority of Michigan businesses are subject to."

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (9/28, Glauber) reports that Pence later "came to the Milwaukee area Thursday on a whirlwind visit to push for the Republican plan to overhaul taxes and raise campaign cash." At a welding and fabrication company alongside Gov. Scott Walker, Pence said, "Tax cuts create jobs. Tax cuts create growth. It works here in Wisconsin. and it's going to work all across the United States." He later attended a fundraiser to benefit the Trump Victory Fund and the Republican National Committee.

Cohn Will Not Guarantee That Every Middle-Class Family Would Get Tax Cut. Jonathan Karl reported on ABC World News Tonight (9/28, story 3, 2:25, Muir) that National Economic Council Director Cohn claimed Thursday that "Trump's tax plan could save the average American family up to $1,000 a year." Cohn: "If we allow a family to keep another $1,000 of their income, what does that mean? They can renovate their kitchen, they can buy a new car, they can take a family vacation." Karl: "But the details are still sketchy, and the President's top economic adviser today couldn't guarantee that every middle-class family would benefit." Cohn: "I guarantee you, you can find someone in this country, maybe one person, who their taxes may not go down."

NBC Nightly News (9/28, story 5, 1:50, Holt) reported that "the White House is facing a barrage of questions struggling to explain how the Republican tax plan matches up with the President's promises about benefits for the middle class and not breaks for the wealthy." NBC's Peter Alexander: "Will all middle-class Americans get a tax cut? Doubts fueled in part by the President's top economic adviser, refusing to say that's true." USA Today (9/28, Przybyla) reports that Cohn "refused to repeat Trump's Wednesday claim that the wealthy wouldn't benefit. Instead, he said the US taxpayers only care about their own pocketbooks." The Washington Times (9/28, Miller) also reports that Cohn said that he "could not guarantee that every middle-class American would pay less under the GOP tax reform plan, but that is the goal."

Cohn: Business Tax Rate Proposal Is GOP's "Final Offer." Politico (9/28, Nelson) reports that Cohn also said that the business tax rates outlined in the plan "represent the GOP's 'final offer'...unless Democrats are interested in cutting rates even further." Cohn said, "We were happy to start at 25 and we're happy to go lower, and we're happy to start at 20 on corporate and go lower. ... If [Senate Minority Leader Schumer] wants to counter something lower, we're very negotiable."

Price Apologizes For Using Private Planes For Official Business.

As the controversy surrounding HHS Secretary Price's use of private planes to travel on official business continued to grow Thursday, Price apologized and promised to discontinue the practice and repay taxpayers for the cost of his travel. The story led one of the network news broadcasts Thursday evening and garners heavy media coverage, nearly all of which is negative. Most reports focus on President Trump's displeasure with Price and many question whether his job is in danger. Several also point out that while Price, who is one of several Administration officials who have used charter flights and military aircraft, has said he will repay the cost of his seat on the chartered flights, the amount he is repaying will cover only a fraction of the total cost of the flights.

USA Today (9/28, Estepa) reports that Price "apologized for his use of private planes to travel on official business, vowing to put an end to the practice and promising to pay for his previous flights himself." The Washington Post (9/28, A1, Sun, Eilperin) reports that Price said "he would reimburse the government for a fraction of the costs of his flights on charter planes in recent months." According to an HHS official, Price "would write a check for $51,887.31, which appears to cover the cost of his seat on chartered flights but not those of his staffers." However, Politico "has estimated the total expense of these trips exceeded $400,000." The New York Post (9/28, Fredericks) says Price is paying back "only...a fraction of the hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars he blew on chartered flights."

Politico (9/28, Pradhan, Diamond) reports that the White House "approved the use of military aircraft" for trips by Price "to Africa and Europe this spring, and to Asia in the summer, at a cost of more than $500,000 to taxpayers." White House deputy press secretary Raj Shah said, "Use of military aircraft for Cabinet and other essential travelers is sometimes an appropriate and necessary use of resources." Jeff Zeleny said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (9/28), "Clearly, the White House is trying to get hands around a drip, drip, drip over the last several days."

The AP (9/28, Alonso-Zaldivar, Lucey) reports that in the wake of a "rebuke" from President Trump, Price "issued a public apology" as he "fought to keep his job." Price said in a statement, "I regret the concerns this has raised regarding the use of taxpayer dollars. ... I was not sensitive enough to my concern for the taxpayer." While Price "said he hopes to keep his job," White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "wouldn't go that far," telling reporters, "We're going to conduct a full review and we'll see what happens." This, after Trump said Wednesday that he is "not happy" about Price's use of charter flights.

The New York Times (9/28, Rogers, Thrush) cites “two people familiar with Mr. Trump’s thinking,” who said he “had been telling people around him that Mr. Price was wealthy enough to solve this problem by paying for the flights himself,” and that “this was the least the secretary could do to make up, or compensate, for what he believed to be turning into a damaging political story line.” The Washington Times (9/28, Howell) reports that the President “fumed at Mr. Price, causing many to wonder if the secretary’s job was in danger.” For their part, Democrats “called for his resignation.” The Hill (9/28, Weixel) says the controversy “seems to have put Price’s job at risk,” and Politico (9/28, Pradhan) reports that Trump “wouldn’t commit to keeping Price in his administration, saying only ‘we’ll see’ when asked whether Price would be fired.”

Asked on Fox News Special Report (9/28) if the President has spoken to him about the situation, Price said, “He has talked about and he has said publicly, he wasn’t happy. He expressed that to me very clearly.” Asked if he is concerned that he has lost the confidence of the President, Price said, “I work at the pleasure of the President.” Bloomberg News (9/28, Edney) reports that as Price arrived for a speaking engagement at the National Press Club on Thursday morning, Price told reporters, “We’re going to work through this. I think we’ve still got the confidence of the President and we continue to work on important issues like the flu.”

The Washington Post (9/28, Sun) says Price “declined to comment about whether his taxpayer-funded use of charter jets was appropriate, saying he is waiting for the outcome of an HHS inspector general review.” The Wall Street Journal (9/28, Stokols) reports Price said he would cooperate fully with the IG investigation and that he has launched a separate internal HHS review.

Gloria Borger said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/28), “This is somebody who just should have known better and it’s not surprising to me that the President and other members of the Administration are quite upset about this because the President clearly understands the optics of all of this, particularly in the middle of the fights they’re in the middle of, heading into tax reform.” Rebecca Berg of Real Clear Politics said on CNN’s Situation Room (9/28), “If I’m Tom Price, I don’t want to hear the President saying about my future, ‘We’ll see what happens.’ That’s not exactly a vote of confidence.”

Reuters (9/28, Cornwell) says Price is “one of a handful” of senior Administration officials “put on the defensive over reports about their use of charter flights and government aircraft, sometimes for personal travel, when they could have flown commercial for less money.” In addition to Price, EPA Administrator Pruitt and Treasury Secretary Mnuchin were also “in the spotlight for their travel habits.” Politico (9/28, Lefebvre) reports that Interior Secretary Zinke and aides “have taken several flights on private or military aircraft, including a $12,000 charter plane to take him to events in his hometown in Montana and private flights between two Caribbean islands.” According to a department spokeswoman, the trips “were booked only after officials were unable to find commercial flights that would accommodate Zinke’s schedule, and that all were ‘pre-cleared by career officials in the ethics office.’”

BuzzFeed (9/28, Parti) reports that watchdog groups and congressional Democrats are looking into whether SBA Administrator McMahon and Education Secretary DeVos “are violating the Antideficiency Act, a law that bars the federal government from accepting free services,” by using “private jets for government work, even though they say they’re paying for the travel themselves.” Julianna Goldman said on the CBS Evening News (9/28, story 7, 2:10, Mason) that because “Trump’s White House hasn’t issued guidelines for Cabinet member travel,” there is “a wide range of behavior.”

On NBC Nightly News (9/28, story 4, 1:55, Holt), Hallie Jackson described Republican senators as “concerned,” and in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (9/28, lead story, 3:00), David Muir said that “one top Republican is now delivering a stern warning to President Trump.” ABC’s Cecilia Vega added that Senate Judiciary Chairman Charles Grassley “wrote a letter to the President, saying, ‘I’m urging you to emphasize to cabinet secretaries the necessity of using reasonable and cost effective modes of travel.’”

In his Washington Post (9/28) column, Eugene Robinson criticizes Administration officials’ use of private jets, writing, “Trump may not have Made America Great Again for you or me, but he has made it pretty sweet for political appointees who want to jet around like billionaires at other people’s expense.” A New York Times (9/28) editorial expresses a similar sentiment. Citing Administration officials’ use of private jets as well as the use of private email accounts for government business, the Times says White House Chief of Staff Kelly should deliver an “all-hands lecture on the difference between public service and self-enrichment and the importance of sunlight as a disinfectant,” although they “seem to have already absorbed a more persuasive lesson from the chief executive – get it while you can and to hell with the rules.”

Democrats Seek Bipartisan Support For $500 Billion In Infrastructure Spending.

The Washington Post (9/28, Halsey) reports that Senate Democrats are seeking bipartisan support for a $500 billion investment in infrastructure. The Post describes the Democrats as “emboldened by the GOP’s failure to unilaterally pass a health-care bill,” and says they “hope infrastructure spending will emerge as a desirable legislative win for Congress and the White House.” On Thursday, Democrats on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee sent a letter seeking a meeting with Transportation Secretary Chao, “reminding her of her confirmation-hearing promise to work in bipartisan fashion in delivering on Trump’s campaign promise.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Private Emails, Private Jets And Mr. Trump’s Idea Of Public Service.” A New York Times (9/28) editorial cites Administration officials’ use of private jets as well as the use of private email accounts for government business, and says White House Chief of Staff Kelly should deliver an “all-hands lecture on the difference between public service and self-enrichment and the importance of sunlight as a disinfectant,” although they “seem to have already absorbed a more persuasive lesson from the chief executive – get it while you can and to hell with the rules.”

“Puerto Rico Deserves Better.” A New York Times (9/28) editorial says “far more and far faster help is needed” in Puerto Rico as the island struggles with “vast devastation that only the federal government has the resources to repair.” The Times welcomes President Trump’s agreement Thursday to temporarily waive restrictions on shipments by foreign vessels to the island’s ports and the appointment of “a three-star general to focus on faster distribution of emergency supplies, addressing one of the main problems on the wreckage-clogged island.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Tax ‘Miracle’: Cowardice And Dishonesty.” A Washington Post (9/28) editorial blasts the Republican tax reform plan, calling it “another irresponsible GOP tax cut, paid for with magical thinking, that would erode the nation’s fiscal health and burden future generations.” According to the Post, “the plan is packed with giveaways to the wealthy and threatens to add even more to the debt.” It is, the Post argues, tax reform “for dishonest political cowards.”

“This Tyrant’s Reach Knows No Borders.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/28) writes that Afghan Mukhtarli, a former independent journalist in Azerbaijan who had fled the country two years ago fearing government persecution, was abducted and brought back to Azerbaijan in May and now remains in detention. The Post condemns Azeri President Ilham Aliyev for his “tyrants’ reach.”

“Montgomery County Considers Risking Thousands Of Jobs.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/28) writes that Montgomery County, Maryland’s all-Democratic County Council “is pushing for a 30 percent minimum-wage hike, despite evidence it would cost thousands of jobs.” The Post highlights research showing about 47,000 residents would lose their jobs by 2022 if the minimum wage rose to $15 by 2020, and argues that council members should “resist the populist fervor that would put county jobs at risk.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Hazing Justice Gorsuch.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/28) writes that Justice Gorsuch already has drawn displeasure from the political left for the fact that he will likely rule against unions in the case Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, which will decide the fate of unions’ so-called agency fees. The Journal also argues that the left’s displeasure toward Gorsuch is highlighted in their vocal disapproval of his speaking before a conservative group at Trump International Hotel – a type of event, the Journal says, that is not out of the ordinary for justices.

“The Meaning Of ‘Xi Jinping Thought.’” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/28) writes that the next Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, starting October 18, will be noteworthy for two reasons: President Xi Jinping may defy tradition and seek to extend his tenure in power beyond the standard 10-year term, and the Congress may add the so-called “Xi Jinping Thought” phrase to the Party charter, which would place Xi’s importance on the level of Mao Zedong and further cement his authority.

“Macron’s European Dream.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/28) writes that although French President Emmanuel Macron was bold to tout the importance of the EU in a recent speech and is right to push for economic reforms in France, his dreams of a fiscal and economic union, harmonized corporate taxes, and EU regulation are a recipe for political failure.

Interior Won't Change Grand Canyon-Parashant National Monument Designation.

The AP (8/4, Daly) reported, "Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said Friday he is not recommending changes to Arizona's Grand Canyon-Parashant National Monument, the fifth site Zinke has removed from an ongoing review of national monuments for possible elimination or reduction." The AP noted, "Zinke is reviewing 27 national monuments designated by previous presidents. The review was ordered by President Donald Trump, who says many monument designations are unwarranted land grabs by the federal government. Zinke has removed five sites from review ahead of a final report due later this month. Others removed from consideration are in Montana, Colorado, Idaho and Washington state."

The Washington Examiner (8/4, Siciliano) quoted Zinke as saying Friday, "Today I'm announcing that Grand Canyon-Parashant National Monument's review process has concluded and I am recommending no changes be made to the monument." Zinke added, "The land has some of the most pristine and undeformed geological formations in North America, which show the scientific history of our Earth while containing thousands of years of human relics and fossils."

In a rundown of upcoming Congressional deadlines, E&E Publishing (8/4, Cahlink, Lunney) mentioned that "Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's final recommendations on whether to alter 27 national monuments is due Aug. 24.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Times (8/4, Wolfgang), the St. George \(UT\) News (8/5, Sullivan), and the Arizona Republic (8/4, Altavena, Devoid).

Under Trump, Coal Mining Gets New Life On US Lands.

A 2,700-word, front-page New York Times (8/6, A1, Lipton, Meier) report says the Trump Administration is “encouraging more coal mining on lands owned by the federal government – part of an aggressive push to both invigorate the struggling American coal industry and more broadly exploit commercial opportunities on public lands.” The Times comments, “companies and individuals with economic interests in the lands, mining companies among them,” have not “held such a strong upper hand” since “the so-called Sagebrush Rebellion during the Reagan administration.” In late June, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “visited Whitefish, Mont., to attend a meeting of Western governors, where he vowed to find a balance between extracting commodities from federal lands and protecting them.” Zinke said in a speech, “Our greatest treasures are public lands. It is not a partisan issue. It is an American issue.” Yet, according to the Times, “The alliance between Mr. Zinke and the coal industry is well documented in his campaign finance disclosures.”

Newsweek (8/6, Shaffer) covers the Times analysis, reporting that “Zinke has been in the state of Utah since Sunday talking with state and local officials and touring the Bears Ears National Monument and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, to help determine their future status under the Trump Administration.” Zinke said, “You know our nation can’t run on pixie dust and hope, and the last eight years showed that.” A tribe member is quoted as saying, “We don’t have money. But we have land, water and air. Snuff that out and we are gone.”

Interior Watchdog Reviewing Zinke’s Calls To Alaska Senators.

The AP (8/4, Daly) reported Interior Department Deputy Inspector General Mary Kendall said “her office is launching a ‘preliminary investigation’ of” Interior Secretary Ryan “Zinke’s July 26 calls to Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan” in which Zinke allegedly “warned the senators of repercussions for their state if Murkowski failed to support the” GOP healthcare bill. The AP added that “Zinke has called the notion that he threatened Murkowski ‘laughable,’ but he tweeted a photo Thursday of himself and Murkowski smiling over Alaskan beers at his Washington home. ‘I say dinner, she says brews. My friends know me well,’ Zinke wrote, adding a beer emoji and ‘thanks’ to Murkowski.”

CNN (8/4, Green, Marsh, Wallace) reported online that the IG’s preliminary investigation follows “a letter sent Thursday to Democratic Reps. Frank Pallone and Raul Grijalva, who initially requested the investigation on July 27.” Additional coverage was provided by Reuters (8/4, Volcovici) and the International Business Times (8/4, Prasad).

3 Goals Zinke Has During Time At Interior.

The Daily Caller (8/5) reported, “President Donald Trump’s Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke is frustrated with ‘the resistance’ to getting his senior leadership staff in place,” and he “most of the blame on the Office of Government Ethics, which many quietly report to be overzealously abusing its position to review nominees.” Zinke also told the Daily Caller News Foundation that he “has three goals for his time in the cabinet: He hopes to restore trust with all the partners of the Interior Department, improve the languishing infrastructure, and thin out the headquarters staff while bolstering the front line staff.”

Trump Says States Can Count On Federal Cash In Emergencies.

The AP (8/4, Thomas) reported, “President Donald Trump said Friday that states can count on his administration to dispense U.S. emergency funds efficiently.” Touring FEMA’s command center, Trump was “accompanied by Vice President Mike Pence, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, Energy Secretary Rick Perry, and Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price.”

The Battle Over Science In The Trump Administration.

CNN International (8/5, Green) reported online, “President Donald Trump has made no secret of his desire to roll back environmental regulations and change the playing field for the fossil-fuel industry,” and “his administration’s actions over its first six months have followed that lead, including what many scientists say is a full-fledged battle against research and facts.” CNN cited how “Joel Clement was director of the Office of Policy Analysis at the Interior Department, until three weeks ago. Now he's a senior adviser at the department's Office of Natural Resources Revenue – a position he labels an accounting job." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke told Congress in June that reassignments will be part of the process meant to reduce the department's "physical footprint."

Meanwhile, The Hill (8/5, Henry) said that "government employees are growing increasingly willing to criticize or defy the White House and President Trump's top appointees," citing how "a handful of current and former career staffers in the Interior Department and Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) have openly shredded their superiors within the last several weeks, continuing a trend that has developed throughout the government over the course of Trump's tenure in the Oval Office." The Hill specifically cited how "in the Interior Department...Clement, has filed a whistleblower complaint against Trump administration political appointees like Secretary Ryan Zinke, saying he was reassigned to the agency's revenue office because of his former research and advocacy over climate change." Yet, an "agency spokesman said last month that reassignments are 'conducted to better serve the taxpayer and the Department's operations.'"

Continuing Coverage: Interior Department Reaffirms Protection Of Upper Missouri River Breaks As National Monument.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (8/6, Lipton) reports, "The Interior Department announced Wednesday that the Upper Missouri River Breaks, a famous chunk of river in central Montana that holds a national monument designation, would remain fully protected by federal land-use restrictions." Zinke said, "The monument is one of the only free-flowing areas of the Missouri that remains as Lewis and Clark saw it more than 200 years ago." Zinke said in June, "There is no doubt that" the Bears Ears National Monument "is drop-dead gorgeous country and that it merits some degree of protection," before he added "that the Bears Ears site seemed too large and that different kinds of uses of the land are too restricted, meaning it is 'not the best use of the land.'"

The Sidney \(MT\) Herald (8/5, Jean) reported similarly, and the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/6) provides coverage in a brief.

Why Our Large-Scale National Monuments Should Stay Intact.

Pew Charitable Trusts VP Tom Wathen wrote in The Hill's (8/4, Wathen) "Pundits Blog" blog that as Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke considers elimination or modification of national land monuments, he should "recommend that the monuments under review remain as they are now for future generations." Wathen argued, "Not only are large-scale monuments vital to protect important 'objects,' but they also provide open spaces to find recreation or seek solitude, serve as habitat for thousands of plant and animal species, and strengthen the economies of surrounding communities."

CEO of adventure travel company "Off the Beaten Path" Cory T. Lawrence similarly wrote in the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/4, LAWRENCE) urging the protection of national park lands, opining that President Trump's proposed budget cuts leave "an annual operations shortfall of about half a billion dollars" for the Interior Department.

3 Killed, 2 Injured In Shootings On Montana Indian Reservation.

CBS News (8/6) reports online that Crow Tribal Chairman Alvin Not Afraid Jr. said in a statement that Methamphetamine "and gang activity were factors in a residential shooting that killed three people and injured two others on Montana's Crow Indian Reservation" on Friday. Not Afraid said in his statement on Saturday, "Drugs have a devastating affect on our communities, and yesterday's incident is a reminder of that." The FBI, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Montana Highway Patrol and the Big Horn County Sheriff's Office are investigating the shooting.

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (8/6) and the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/5, Kordenbrock).

A Hard-Fought Victory To Restore Tribal Land Faces New Threat In Trump Era.

In a 2,000-word analysis, Huffington Post (8/4, D'angelo) contributor Chris D'angelo wrote that although "Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke vowed to be an advocate for America's indigenous communities and their right to self-determination," "a major change to the Department of the Interior's Land Buy-Back Program for Tribal Nations...is the latest example of Zinke and the Trump administration not living up to their promises to native peoples, former Interior officials say." The Interior Department reportedly announced a "revised strategy" last week that it said "will more effectively allocate" the remaining $540 million from the landmark settlement in Cobell v. Salazar. D'angelo highlighted opinion that this was "a move that will widely impact Indian communities without any formal government-to-government consultation."

Cherokee Nation, BIA Place Ochelata Health Center Land Into Trust.

The Bartlesville \(OK\) Examiner-Enterprise (8/4, Day) reported, "The Bureau of Indian Affairs' Eastern Oklahoma Regional Office agreed to place 240 acres owned by the Cherokee Nation into federal trust." The deed was signed by Principal Chief Bill John Baker and BIA Deputy Regional Director Jessie Durham. The Examiner-Enterprise noted that "the $10 million facility was part of the tribe's $100 million health-care improvement program," and it "replaced a 5,000-square-foot health center in Bartlesville."

Cayuga Nation Leadership Battle Heads Back To Court.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (8/4) reported, "The ongoing battle for control of the Cayuga Nation in central New York is heading back to court," as the "Cayuga Nation Council on Friday said that the federal Interior Board of Indian Appeals had rejected a motion by the Unity Council seeking to overturn a federal decision recognizing Clint Halftown and his council as the official governing body of the Nation." In response, "Joseph Heath, the attorney for a Nation group formerly known as the Unity Council, filed a motion questioning the validity of the decision to the Interior Board of Indian Appeals." In addition, Halftown's group "said that it filed a complaint Friday in New York State Supreme Court seeking the return of properties, inventory and other assets taken from its control in 2014."

Creek Indian Tribe Breaks Ground On Native American Cultural Center.

The Northwest Florida Daily News (8/5, Adams) reported from Milton, Florida, "The Santa Rosa Creek Indian Tribe broke ground on their Native American Cultural Center Aug. 1 at their tribal grounds." The article described how "the cultural center will include an artifact museum with more than 3,000 Native American artifacts, including a peace pipe used in the signing of a treaty between the head of the Crow Nation and the head of U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs, and ashes and embers descended from a fire that burned in the Cherokee town of Tahlequah more than 1,000 years ago."

Trump Readies Repeal Of An Obama-Era Coal Rule Right After West Virginia Rally.

The Daily Caller (8/4) reported that the "Interior Department has filed a repeal of an Obama-era rule to raise mineral royalties on federal lands." In a Friday regulatory filing, "officials noted the royalties rule had 'several significant defects in the rule that would have undermined its purpose and intent' and made it ripe for repeal." President Trump had said at a rally Thursday night, "We are putting our coal miners back to work. We have ended the war on beautiful, clean coal. We have stopped the EPA intrusion. American coal exports are already up."

Greenwire (8/4, Marshall) reported similarly.

As E-Bikes Gain Popularity, Land Managers Ponder Future.

The AP (8/5, Condon) reported, "E-bike use has exploded over the past year," creating enforcement challenges in parks prohibiting motorized vehicles. Pitkin County Open Space and Trails director Gary Tennenbaum "said the program's rangers are receiving an increased number of reports of scofflaws on the trail." The AP added that the BLM "often accommodates mountain bikes and motorcycles on the same trails," and "many routes in the Crown, the popular mountain in the midvalley" in Colorado "are open to both uses." Roaring Fork Mountain Bike Association Executive Director Mike Pritchard commented that "when cyclists are huffing and puffing their way up a climb, it strikes some of them as cheating when they encounter an e-biker covering the same ground quicker and easier."

In Gold Butte In Nevada, Ancient Rock Art And Rugged Beauty.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/6, Caldwell) carries a 2,200-word analysis praising Gold Butte In Nevada, which "was deemed worthy of monument designation for historical and cultural assets but also for environmental and conservation reasons." The piece mentions that the BLM "designated routes for off-road vehicles and a main road, Gold Butte Road, which is designated as a National Backcountry Byway."

Utah Commission: Keep "Negro Bill Canyon" The Same.

The AP (8/6, McCombs) reported that the Utah Committee on Geographic Names said Friday that it "voted to recommend retaining the name of Utah's Negro Bill Canyon after receiving conflicting opinions about whether it is offensive." This "recommendation next goes to the U.S. Board on Geographic Names, which is expected to make a final decision on canyon's name later this year." The article noted, "Last September, the federal Bureau of Land Management administratively changed the signs at the 'Negro Bill' trailhead to read instead 'Grandstaff Trailhead.'"

Federal Court Orders Restoration Of 23,000 Acres For Wild Horses.

The Washington Times (8/6, Dinan) reports that the US Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia "delivered a victory to wild horse enthusiasts, ordering the U.S. Forest Service to restore 23,000 acres of critical land as protected horse country in California – and showed judges taking an increasingly dim view of agencies' decision-making." The Times notes, "The horse campaigners won another legal battle last year when a federal appeals court out west ruled that the Bureau of Land Management...illegally removed wild horses from Wyoming territory."

Interior's Rhetoric Ineffective Against Low Oil Prices.

E&E Publishing (8/4, King) reported that the Interior Department's pro-energy policies will not be effective as crude prices remain depressed below $50. Pavel Molchanov, SVP and equity research analyst at Raymond James, said, "If oil prices were as low as they were 18 months ago, the best rhetoric in the world could not change the fact that companies are suffering from low oil prices." The Interior is also restricted by the agency's scope, as the department controls drilling activity on federal land. However, the Permian and Bakken are primarily located on state and private land.

Denver Post Analysis: Permits Show Tensions Likely Between Communities, Producers.

A Denver Post (8/6, Svaldi) analysis of Colorado's drilling permits suggests that the clash between growing communities and energy production in northeastern Colorado will intensify in the coming years. The analysis found that pending and approved drilling permits are being issued for locations in and near towns and other populated areas twice as often as in remote locations. Eight of the 10 fastest growing towns and cities in the state, along with the two fastest-growing counties, are directly in the path of drilling.

Murray Energy CEO: Trump Supporting American Coal Industry, More Changes Needed.

Robert E. Murray, Chairman, President and CEO of Murray Energy Corp., writes at the Wheeling \(WV\) Intelligencer (8/6) that President Trump has followed through on his promises "to preserve coal jobs and low-cost, reliable electricity for all Americans." He discusses several of the actions Trump has taken, including the repeal of the Stream Protection Rule, an executive order directing agencies to repeal the Waters of the United States Rule, and the rescinding of the Clean Power Plan, among others. Moving forward, Murray says the Trump Administration should eliminate the Coal Combustion Residuals Rule, eliminate tax credits for windmills and solar panels, and end the electric utility Maximum Achievable Technology and Ozone regulations, among other actions. He concludes that "we must continue to fight for fair treatment of the coal industry by the United States government and a level, unsubsidized playing field for our coal in electric power generation."

Database Illustrates Safety Of US Drinking Water.

The CBS Weekend News (8/6, story 9, 2:20, Quijano) reported that a new database managed by the Environmental Working Group "allows consumers to go online and see exactly what contaminants are in the water in their area" – a tool that so far has shown, among other things, that "almost 19,000 water systems in the US have levels of lead that could affect formula-fed babies, and 93 contaminants in the nation's water are linked to an increased risk of cancer." CBS adds that although the EPA says that more than 90 percent of the nation's water meets its safety standards, the EWG says these standards are not “purely” health standards. The EWG also “says water filters can reduce or even eliminate many of the contaminants, but depending on what is in the water coming to your home, the price of a filter could be anywhere from about $20 to more than $1,000.”

Let Forest Fires Burn? What the Black-Backed Woodpecker Knows.

In a 1,700-word analysis, the New York Times (8/6, Gillis) reports that many scientists are calling for a new approach to combating wildfires that “basically involves letting backcountry fires burn across millions of acres” – an approach based on the idea that suppressing wildfires has imperiled certain plants and animals that prefer burned forest habitats and has damaged long-term health of forests that need periodic thinning. The same scientists argue that communities should redirect fire safety funds to fireproof homes. The Times adds, however, that such an effort would face political opposition and that “considerable disagreement remains among scientists about exactly how forests should be managed.”

Blanding Turtle Finds Safe Haven In Nebraska.

A 1,300-word AP (8/5, Ursch) report analyzed the classification of the Blanding’s turtle, which “is considered endangered throughout much of its range east and west of the Great Lakes and in Canada.” Assessing threats to the animal, the AP noted that “in 2013, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials reported that trade of the turtle appeared to be on the rise.”

D.C.’s Only Endangered Species Is Shy And Sightless, But It’s Having A Moment.

The Washington Post (8/4, Moyer) reported on the District of Columbia’s “lone endangered species: the mysterious Hay’s Spring amphipod.” FWS spokeswoman Meagan Racey indicated “the Hay’s Spring amphipod was discovered in 1938 on property belonging to the National Zoo. ... They were found at additional sites along Rock Creek in subsequent decades and act as metaphorical canaries in the coal mine.” Racey said, “They’re very sensitive to water quality. The fact that they exist here is good news.” Yet, the Post highlighted that much remains unknown about the animal.

Marion Refuge Open For Solar Eclipse Viewing.

KFVS-TV Cape Girardeau, MO (8/4, Ross) reported online, “The entirety of the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge” in Montana “will fall under the path for the majority of the August 21st solar eclipse.” KFVS added, “The refuge is not planning any organized public events, but viewers may view the eclipse on their own.”

Congressmen Oppose Texas Wildlife Refuge As Border Wall Site.

The AP (8/5) reported, “A group of Texas Democratic congressmen are questioning preliminary plans to build a section of President Donald Trump’s proposed border wall through” the Santa Ana National Wildlife Refuge. The congressmen say cutting through the refuge “could do serious environmental and economic damage,” and are calling for transparency.

Outdoors Notebook: Survey Shows Growth In Number Of Anglers.

The Dallas Morning News (8/5, Sasser) reported, “Americans took 855 million fishing trips last year, according to a report by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Outdoor Foundation,” which “showed fishing increased by 2.5 million anglers over the previous year.” FWS survey data also showed “that the average mourning dove hunter brought home 22.2 birds during that season, and the average white-winged dove hunter bagged 14.7 birds.”

With ‘Wind River,’ Taylor Sheridan Continues To Smash Western Stereotypes.

The Washington Post (8/5, O’Sullivan) reviewed filmmaker Taylor Sheridan’s latest film “Wind River,” which is “a loosely fact-based thriller about the investigation of the murder of a Native American teenage girl on Wyoming’s Wind River reservation,” and in which actor Jeremy Renner plays FWS officer Cory Lambert.

Deadline Nears For $70 Increase In NPS Passes.

The Columbus \(GA\) Ledger-Enquirer (8/4, Adams) continued coverage of the upcoming price hike for NPS lifetime senior park passes. The article explained, "U.S. citizens and permanent residents age 62 and older have until Aug. 27 to purchase a lifetime senior park pass for $10, rather than the $80 it will cost starting Aug. 28. The $10 fee has been in effect since 1994, but federal legislation passed last year increased the fee." The Cape Cod \(MA\) Times (8/4, Bragg) reported similarly.

Mixed Reactions, NPS Pass Sales Boom Ahead Of Price Hike. WLBZ-TV Bangor, ME (8/4) reported, "Acadia National Park is one of 59 parks across the country inundated with seniors trying to get their hands on lifetime passes. The demand for the passes, accepted at parks across the country, has overwhelmed National Park Service websites and info centers ahead of the anticipated price hike." NPS staffer "Dave Williams said he has been selling the passes nonstop at the Acadia Visitor Center." Acadia National Park spokesperson John Kelly said, "An increase from 10 to 80 dollars is a big leap. An increase in these fees is really part of the ability for the park service to raise funds to do good things for visitor services and other amenities in the park."

Martelle: Make A Reservation To Visit Yosemite Or Zion? It Might Become Necessary. Los Angeles Times (8/4, Martelle) contributor Scott Martelle wrote that Zion National Park "administrators are considering a reservation system for park entry, or for specific park attractions," and "as unappealing as that might be, it could be the best solution to a vexing problem that has been building for years." Martelle added, "A reservation system makes sense, but it may need to be done by lottery to truly be fair"; however, "reducing the load on the most-used and most-overrun of the parks is necessary." Martelle commented, "The parks system has for years faced underfunding problems, with $11.3 billion in deferred maintenance projects in a department with a $3.4-billion annual budget – which president Trump wants to slash to $2.6 billion."

"Wrong Turn" Kills Doctor In Grand Canyon Hike With Girls.

BBC News \(UK\) (8/4) reported 38-year-old Sarah Beadle "died after a 'wrong turn' when she ran out of water while hiking with her daughter and niece in the Grand Canyon, her husband has said." The NPS "confirmed that a woman's body was found on Wednesday less than a mile from the Phantom Ranch along the South Kaibab Trail." NPS spokesman Kirby Shedlowski "told WFAA-TV that although the South Kaibab trail is shorter, 'that trail has limited shade and no water accessibility on it.'" Officials said "rescuers, who had been searching since 1 August, found her backpack near the junction of the South Kaibab Trail and River Trail."

Jeff Schwartz, a ranger who works in the inner canyon, told the AP (8/5, Snow, Davenport) that "hiking there can be dangerous, with high temperatures at the canyon bottom routinely topping 100 degrees during the summer," adding, "There is no potable water available along the South Kaibab Trail between the South Rim trailhead and Phantom Ranch or even creek water to use for cooling." The AP added, "Schwartz said rangers advise hikers to hike in the morning or evening when temperatures are milder and there's more shade. Still, it's not uncommon to have one or two deaths a year primarily due to heat or dehydration." Schwartz said, "The environment down there is much less forgiving during the summertime."

One-Time Seasonal Worker Landed Dream Job At Yellowstone.

The AP (8/5, French) profiled Yellowstone National Park photographer Jim Peaco, chronicling his rise from garbage truck driver to obtain his "dream job" with the NPS. The AP said that over the course of Peaco's "career he's photographed presidents, flown over the park during the height of the 1988 fires, boated onto the 160-degree waters of Grand Prismatic Spring and captured shots of grizzly bears and geysers that have circulated around the world – one of which appeared in a text book."

After Zero-Tolerance Vow, A Park Chief Cited For Sexual Harassment Gets A Bonus And New Job.

The Washington Post (8/4, Rein) reported that although "in his first day in office, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke pledged 'zero tolerance' for sexual misconduct," the NPS gave former De Soto National Memorial Superintendent Jorge Acevedo "a new job and performance bonus" after investigators found he "made unwanted advances to a woman he supervised – with hugs, lingering handshakes, inappropriate comments about her appearance, and sitting or laying on her desk while she was trying to work." Acevedo "is no longer supervising employees but kept his $82,000-a-year salary, according to an agency official who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss a personnel issue." Acevedo has "denied the allegations and said his staff perceived his actions differently than he intended them."

At Statue Of Liberty, Words That Resonate Even If They're Unfamiliar.

The New York Times (8/4, Tarbell) covered a Wednesday debate between "Stephen Miller, a senior adviser to President Trump, and Jim Acosta, a reporter for CNN," who "argued about the meaning of the Statue of Liberty and its connection to" Emma Lazarus's 1883 poem, "The New Colossus." The Times said, "Acosta had asked if the administration's immigration policy conflicted with the ethos of the statue. Mr. Miller countered by noting that the poem was not in place when the statue was dedicated in 1886. Instead, the plaque was added to the pedestal in 1903." The Times reported that "Dennis Mulligan, who has been a ranger for 20 years with the National Park Service, which operates the statue, said 'The New Colossus' plaque had been in several locations" and "there are no photographs of its original location as part of the statue's pedestal, but it is believed to have been in one of the balcony areas of the colonnade."

Yellowstone To Create Temporary Bison Quarantine Facility.

The AP (8/4) reported, "Yellowstone National Park has decided to convert part of its bison capture facility into a temporary brucellosis quarantine facility after livestock and animal health officials resisted efforts to ship potentially disease-carrying bison across Montana to be quarantined." Yellowstone "Park Superintendent Dan Wenk said Thursday the park would bring a portion of the space up to federal and state standards to open a facility where animals could be certified as free of brucellosis, a disease that causes animals to abort calves." Meanwhile, "Park biologist PJ White said the biggest change will be lining two pens with an extra layer of fencing to ensure quarantined bison do not come into contact with other bison or elk, which also carry the disease."

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/4, Wright) reported similarly.

Geese Rounded Up From DC Park Will Be Made Into Meals.

The AP (8/4) reported that the NPS said "in a statement that meat from 116 Canada geese was donated to the D.C. Central Kitchen last week," which "will be used in meals the kitchen prepares for homeless shelters, rehabilitation clinics and after school programs." The AP added, "It's the second year the park service has donated goose meat to the kitchen." The NPS explained "the geese were caught in Anacostia Park and euthanized in July as part of an effort to manage the park's wetlands."

Nation's Oldest Coal-fired Steamboat Returns To Mystic River.

The AP (8/5, Eaton-Robb) reported that the 109-year-old coal-fired steamboat "The Sabino, billed by the Mystic Seaport maritime museum as the nation's oldest coal-fired steamboat in regular operation, resumed public cruises Wednesday from the maritime museum." The more than $1.1 million restoration of the steamboat "was paid for with public and private grant money, including...a National Maritime Heritage Grant of $199,806 administered by the National Park Service in partnership with the U.S. Maritime Administration."

Park Service To Host Civil War Railroad Program.

The Jackson \(WV\) Herald (8/4) reported that the "Petersburg National Battlefield and its park rangers will sponsor a lecture about the importance of railroads in the Civil War at the city's Southside Train Depot." The Herald explained, "This tour is part of a series of weekend programs offered by the National Park Service in Old Towne Petersburg throughout the summer."

Outdoor Industry In Colorado Aims To Become Political, Economic Force.

A 1,200-word Denver Post (8/6, Blevins) analysis says, "As the heavyweight Outdoor Retailer trade shows decamp for Colorado, the outdoor industry is" an increasingly powerful lobbying force. The Post adds that "with the Trump administration and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke plowing ahead with a review of national monuments that could result in downsizing swaths of federally protected open spaces, the outdoor industry is not about to ease up on the fight for public lands – the lifeblood of outdoor recreation, inspiring a lifestyle that prods Americans to buy more gear that is essentially researched and developed on those wildlands."

Historically Black Beach Enclaves Are Fighting To Save Their History And Identity.

The Denver Post (8/6, McMullen) writes, "Sag Harbor Hills and the neighboring districts of Ninevah Beach and Azurest are unique among beach communities in the Hamptons” because “they rank as the oldest African American developments in the Hamptons and are among a handful of beach communities in the United States with African American roots.” In contrast, in other cities, “As values soar in surrounding locations, pricing out many second home buyers, historically black beach enclaves from American Beach near Jacksonville, Fla., to South Carolina’s rural Sea Islands are seeing sharp increases in development and new home buyers.” The piece mentions that “though much of the island chain in South Carolina has been declared a Cultural Heritage Corridor by the National Park Service, that has not stopped developers from chipping away at waterfront locations.”

Century Of Progress Homes Tour, Plus Lots To Discover In Columbus.

The Chicago Tribune (8/4, Lamorte) reported, “The Century of Progress Homes Tour (Oct. 14-15) offers a rare glimpse inside five iconic houses that helped shape the way we live today.” The Tribune noted that “the homes were sold to private owners before coming into the possession of the National Park Service and then into the care of Indiana Landmarks, which subleases them from NPS.” The piece added, “If you’re just interested in a casual peek inside the homes, your best bet is a Saturday (Oct. 14) tour led by National Park Service rangers.”

Editorial: Zinke Should Leave Cascade-Siskiyou Protections In Place.

The Oregonian (8/6, Board) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke should preserve the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument designation, arguing “Scientists from a variety of disciplines have pushed since 2015 to extend the boundaries of the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in hopes of protecting a variety of rare species of plants, animals, butterflies and fish increasingly threatened by climate change and development.” The editorial further asserts that the monument has “helped attract tourists to the businesses that have operated successfully on the private land within the boundary,” and “in turn, the expansion holds the potential to link the Pacific Crest Trail to Ashland, providing an economic boost to a number of communities along the way.”

Pruitt: Obama EPA "Failed" To Protect Environment After Gold King Mine Spill.

During a visit to the site of the Gold King Mine spill in Colorado, EPA Administrator Pruitt said former President Obama's EPA "'failed' at its mission to protect the environment," Breitbart (8/6, Starr) reports. Pruitt said, "EPA should be held to the same standard as those we regulate. ... The previous administration failed those who counted on them to protect the environment." Pruitt added, "I think it's safe to say if this had been any other company, a BP-type of a situation, there would have been an investigation that would ensue by the agency and there would have been accountability. ... That didn't take place here. The federal government should not be able to hide behind sovereign immunity when the facts don't meet the protections. ... In my estimation, the EPA walked away from those folks and left them in a position of incurring damages without taking accountability."

Growing Skin In A Lab Has Benefits For Humans And Turtles Alike.

Popular Science (8/4, Baggaley) reported on the research of USGS wildlife disease specialist Thierry Work, who "is studying the virus responsible for a deadly disease called fibropapillomatosis, which causes tumors to grow all over sea turtles' skin and inside their bodies." Popular Science said, "Work's efforts represent the first time that scientists have engineered reptile skin," although researchers have been building "lab-grown versions of mammalian skin for decades." In addition, "now that reptile skin has been successfully grown in the lab, the technique could be put to work investigating other reptile and amphibian skin diseases." The piece speculated that Work's lab-grown reptile hide could "also be used instead of skin from actual snakes or alligators for bags and shoes."

How A 9.2 Earthquake In Alaska In 1964 Changed Our Understanding Is Explained In "The Great Quake."

The Los Angeles Times (8/4, Phillips) summarized Henry Fountain's "The Great Quake," which is a book "dedicated to the five terrifyingly convulsive minutes around dinnertime on March 27, 1964, when the forces of geological upheaval, normally beneath our threshold of perception, violently obtruded into human time, reconfiguring not only the landscape of south central Alaska but our understanding of earthquakes and the risk posed today by the Big One and Really Big One." The Times mentioned that the USGS tasked George Plafker to assess the quake-wrought destruction on the ground, and his work "supplies a master key for understanding not only earthquakes but 'all the geological features and processes that humans have wondered about for centuries,'" Fountain wrote.

Media Analyses: UN Vote Shows US Efforts To Isolate North Korea Are Working.

Media reports cast the unanimous vote at the UN Security Council over the weekend to impose new sanctions on North Korea, as well as comments Sunday by the Chinese foreign minister urging Pyongyang to halt its missile and nuclear tests, as signs that the Administration's efforts to isolate the nation are finding some success.

In its lead story, for example, the CBS Weekend News (8/6, lead story, 2:30, Quijano) reported, "The Trump Administration's effort to further isolate North Korea may be working. Today, China urged its outcast neighbor to make a smart decision and stop conducting nuclear tests. The scolding follows the passage of the UN resolution at the UN Security Council that imposes tough new sanctions on the regime that could cost the country a billion dollars in lost trade." CBS' Errol Barnett noted that Russia and China "didn't use their veto power and supported sanctions" in "a sign of diplomatic progress for the Trump Administration, which has been trying to convince China to use more of its economic leverage over Pyongyang." NBC Nightly News (8/6, story 2, 2:20, Snow) similarly said the Administration's strategy is "bolstered" by the new UN resolution. At an ASEAN summit in Manila on Sunday, "Even China, North Korea's only ally, told it publicly to stop being provocative."

Reuters (8/6, Shepherd, Mogato) reports Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said Sunday that new UN sanctions "were the right response to a series of missile tests, but dialogue was vital to resolve" the crisis, which he said was now at a "critical juncture." During what he described as "very thorough" bilateral talks with North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho, Wang said he had advised him to not carry out further nuclear tests.

On its front page, the Washington Post (8/6, A1, Morello) says the "US push to further isolate North Korea appeared to be reaping some dividends Sunday" as China urged Pyongyang to make a "smart decision" and stop conducting missile launches and nuclear tests. Said Wang, "Do not violate the UN's decision or provoke international society's goodwill by conducting missile launching or nuclear tests." Wang, however, quickly added, "Of course, we would like to urge other parties like the US and South Korea to stop increasing tensions." USA Today (8/6, Bacon) reports Wang said "the dual proposal is the most practical, viable and reasonable solution to de-escalate tensions on the Korean Peninsula while providing a 'way out' of the nuclear issue."

The Washington Examiner (8/6, Chaitin) reports South Korean President Moon Jae-in "requested a call Sunday evening with President Trump," and the two "welcomed the new international sanctions on North Korea unanimously passed" by the UN Security Council on Saturday.

The New York Times (8/6, Harris) reports Secretary of State Tillerson "hailed in his typically understated fashion the United Nations vote." Speaking to reporters in Manila, Tillerson said "with a smile" that "it was a good outcome." According to the Washington Times (8/6, Boyer), the Administration "says it has momentum to exert more international pressure on North Korea," following Saturday's unanimous vote. In a statement, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said President Trump "appreciates China's and Russia's cooperation in securing passage of this resolution," and "will continue working with allies and partners to increase diplomatic and economic pressure on North Korea to end its threatening and destabilizing behavior."

USA Today (8/5, Stanglin) reports Ambassador Haley said the vote "put the North Korean dictator on notice" and represented a "strong, united step holding North Korea accountable for its behavior." The Hill (8/6, Beavers) reports Haley also praised the new sanctions on Fox News Sunday Morning Futures, saying that it was time for North Korea to "realize we are not playing anymore."

The AP (8/6, Lederman) reports the Administration "cautiously embraced China's apparent newfound cooperation" after it voted Saturday in favor of new sanctions, "while putting it on notice that the US would be watching closely to ensure it didn't ease up on North Korea if and when the world's attention is diverted elsewhere." Still, there were "no signs the US would acquiesce to China's call for a quick return to negotiations."

Bloomberg News (8/6) reports Chinese President Xi Jinping "appears to again be back in Donald Trump's good graces – at least for now." Last week, "it looked as if the leaders of the world's biggest economies were on a collision course," but that "all changed with a breakthrough at the United Nations on Saturday." After a month of talks, the US and China agreed on new sanctions targeting North Korea's exports.

However, North Korea responded to Saturday's vote at the UN, the Wall Street Journal (8/6, Otto) reports, by telling China there would be no change in its policy. According to Chinese state media, North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho restated Pyongyang's policy on the nuclear weapons issue during talks with Wang, but indicated a "willingness to maintain communications with the China side on this point."

A Wall Street Journal (8/6, Watts, Otto) report says that while the US scored a victory with Saturday's passage of toughest new sanctions against North Korea, the challenge now is making them stick amid Pyongyang's continued efforts to improve its missile and nuclear programs.

The Washington Post (8/6, Whoriskey), meanwhile, reports the new sanctions plug "a loophole that allowed North Korea to sell coal to China under the guise of 'humanitarian' trade, even though much of North Korea's coal trade has been devoted to weapons development, not humanitarian purposes, according to recent US court filings." Documents from a recently unsealed US court filing, "combined with another federal case, suggest that much of the money China has paid to North Korea for coal over the years went toward the country's weapons and military efforts."

Mueller Impanels At Least Two Grand Juries In Russia Investigation.

As President Trump kicks off his summer vacation, coverage of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election intensified. The cable and network newscasts focused heavily on Mueller's decision to impanel at least two grand juries in what was cast as an overall broadening of the probe. Meanwhile, reporting in print and online examined other major developments, including revelations the FBI monitored the dissemination of "fake news" from Russia on Election Day and that Republican staffers from the House Intelligence Committee traveled to London this summer in an attempt to interview a former British intelligence operative behind a controversial dossier on the President's ties to Russia.

In the lead CNN's Situation Room (8/4, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) segment, Wolf Blitzer said Trump has begun "a 17-day vacation at the end of a tumultuous week that's seen a dramatic escalation to the Russian investigation by special counsel Robert Mueller"; a revelation that "House Intelligence Committee Republican staff members traveled to London hoping to speak with a former British intelligence agent who compiled a dossier of alleged Russian ties to...Trump's campaign"; and multiple sources' say that "the FBI monitored social media on Election Day last year in an effort to track a suspected Russian disinformation campaign spreading false stories and conspiracies, many aimed at Hillary Clinton."

According to USA Today (8/4, Johnson), Mueller "is using at least two grand juries – in Virginia and Washington, D.C. – to advance a wide-ranging federal inquiry into possible coordination between President Trump's campaign and Moscow, a lawyer involved in the case said Friday." USA Today adds that "the use of the grand jury located in Washington is potentially significant, analysts said, as it likely means investigators are probing activities that happened within that jurisdiction." Correspondent Kristen Welker said NBC Nightly News (8/4, story 3, 1:45, Holt) "confirmed special counsel Robert Mueller has multiple grand juries working on the investigation, including in Washington, DC and Virginia," although the President's legal team is "insisting they haven't been made aware of the grand jury, and say he's not under investigation."

CNN's Situation Room's (8/4, 6:15 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Wolf Blitzer reported that Mueller is also "already issuing subpoenas for financial records, other documents involving the Trump organization, seeing if there is any connection with the Russians." Sullivan said Mueller's question on whether investments in question had an impact on the election is "perfectly legitimate," and "really is investigation 101." Sullivan explained that Mueller "is following the money, and he wants to see where it leads." In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room's (8/4, 6:00 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) second segment, senior White House correspondent Jim Acosta said Mueller's probe is "ramping up" as Trump takes "time off." During his rally in West Virginia on Thursday, said Acosta, Trump "did not mention his eldest son, Jared Kushner, and campaign manager held a meeting with a Russian lawyer" in hopes of securing "promising research on Hillary Clinton."

CNN's Situation Room's (8/4, 6:39 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Blitzer acknowledged "some have suggested" Mueller is "going too far," and said the President "has suggested there is a red line," but he said CNN "went back and we looked at the instructions that Robert Mueller received from the Deputy Attorney General, Rod Rosenstein when he was appointed back in May. And it said that he should 'investigate any links and/or coordination between the Russian government and individuals associated with the campaign of President Donald Trump, and any matters that arose or may arise directly from the investigation, and any other matters within the scope of 28 CFR,' which is the special counsel authorization legislation, the law. So, this is wide open. He can basically go wherever the suspicion leads him." National security and legal analyst Susan Hennessey agreed that Mueller has "a very, very broad scope," so if the investigation "leads him to Trump businesses, Trump tax returns, Trump family members, anything else – any other indication of criminal activity," then "that's all completely fair game." While Breitbart (8/4, Mason) is critical of CNN's assessment, the piece says that "if Mueller does overstep the bounds of his commission it would fall to [Rosenstein] to recognize that occurrence and take steps to refocus the investigation."

However, ABC World News Tonight (8/4, story 3, 1:10, Muir) reported that just "hours after the news broke" Thursday that Mueller impaneled a grand jury, the President was "downright defiant during a campaign rally in West Virginia." CNN's Situation Room (8/4, 5:30 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast Trump saying, "The Russia story is a total fabrication." He continued, "Most people know there were no Russians in our campaign. There never were. We didn't win because of Russia, we won because of you. That I can tell you." The President added, "Have you seen any Russians in West Virginia or Ohio or Pennsylvania? Are there any Russians here tonight, any Russians?"

Bloomberg News (8/4, Olorunnipa) says "Trump and his allies are trying to rally his political base with warnings that any outcome other than vindication will be an attempt to thwart the will of voters." Bloomberg adds that the President "followed up" on his remarks with a tweet Friday morning "highlighting a cable news commentator predicting a national 'uprising' if a member of Trump's family is indicted." According to Bloomberg, "Trump is going on the offensive in seeking to cast the investigation into Russian meddling in last year's campaign in political terms." In an analysis, the Washington Post (8/4, Borchers) says that Trump's tweet of a clip from the "Fox & Friends" morning show featuring Jeanine Pirro, "Judge Jeanine," has "invited speculation that he or a family member could be indicted" by a grand jury.

Nonetheless, Politico (8/4, Conway) reports senior counselor Kellyanne Conway in an interview with Fox News' "Fox and Friends" on Friday "sought to downplay the investigation," saying, "Let me remind everyone what the president has said about this. It's a witch hunt. It's fake. Last night I believe [Trump] called it a fabrication. And we know that the nature of these types of investigations become fishing expeditions, where you're just throwing Jell-O up against the wall and hoping it will stick." Conway continued "this White House and everybody involved has said that they would comply and share whatever information that they do have." She added, "On this matter of the investigation, Ty Cobb, a special counsel to the president, has said that anything that accelerates the process, we are for. And we will continue to cooperate."

Meanwhile, The Hill (8/4, Concha) reports former House Speaker Newt Gingrich "ripped Robert Mueller on Thursday night, telling Fox's Sean Hannity that the special counsel in the Russia investigation represents 'the deep state at its very worst.'" Gingrich added, "The Mueller threat has probably been the most deadly [facing the Administration]. He has the power of the law, he has the ability to indict people, the ability to negotiate and let some people off if they'll testify against other people." Regardless, Gingrich asserted the President is "making progress every week, he's getting things done. He's beginning to move toward a tax cut bill that will be historic. He's gotten more judges approved than Obama had at this point, Obama and a Democratic Congress. Despite everything, I think the Trump system is beginning to work."

The Hill (8/4, Carney) "Floor Action" blog reports Sen. Lindsey Graham told Fox News on Friday that while he and Sen. Cory Booker have introduced legislation to protect Mueller from dismissal, he plans to "hold Mueller accountable" for any leaks. Graham stated, "If we get constant leaks coming out of the grand jury then he needs to be held accountable for that. That's not fair to the president." He added, "No American, including President Trump or his team, should have the contents of a grand jury leaked out into the press selectively."

The Daily Beast's Washington bureau correspondent, Jackie Kuchinich, said on CNN's Situation Room (8/4, 5:35 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that she viewed Trump's comments at the Thursday rally as not "just a rant," but an "us-versus-them message" that appeals to his base's unhappiness with the Administration's struggles.

NYTimes A1: Mueller's Team Has Asked White House For Documents On Flynn. The New York Times (8/4, A1, Rosenberg, Apuzzo, Schmidt) reports in a front-page article that investigators working for Mueller have "asked the White House for documents related to the former national security adviser Michael T. Flynn, and have questioned witnesses about whether he was secretly paid by the Turkish government during the final months of the presidential campaign, according to people close to the investigation." The Times states that while "not a formal subpoena, the document request is the first known instance of Mr. Mueller's team asking the White House to hand over records." According to the Times, Flynn declined to comment while Trump's special counsel Ty Cobb stated, "We've said before we're collaborating with the special counsel on an ongoing basis." Cobb added, "It's full cooperation mode as far as we are concerned."

FBI Tracked "Fake News" From Russia On Election Day. In an exclusive, CNN (8/4, Prokupecz, Brown, Perez) reports that on Election Day last year, "dozens" of agents and analysts at the Federal Bureau of Investigation "huddled at a command center arrayed with large monitoring screens at the FBI headquarters in Washington watching for security threats, according to multiple sources," and "monitored social media...in an effort to track a suspected Russian disinformation campaign utilizing 'fake news.'"

□ CNN's Situation Room (8/4, 5:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) crime and justice correspondent Shimon Prokupecz reported the counterintelligence analysts and investigators tracked social media activity and suspected Russian links revealing disparaging information about Hillary Clinton, "including about her health." Justice correspondent Pamela Brown said various agencies were "holding these conference calls every three hours" and that "some issues...popped up across the country," though FBI officials said no major incidents or disruptions to the vote took place and "the FBI has declined to comment on this one."

□ CNN's Situation Room's (8/4, 6:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Brown added "there certainly was coordination between the FBI, Homeland Security, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence," and that "those agencies were holding phone calls every three hours, we are told, with the team at the Situation Room in the White House to discuss any possible problems." Prokupecz stated that the FBI also concluded or at least suspected that the fabricated stories did indeed "come from entities from places associated with Russia," though they did not "necessarily come straight out of Russia."

Congressional Staffers Traveled To London To Interview British Spy Behind Trump Dossier.

Politico (8/4, Watkins) reports "two Republican House Intelligence Committee staffers traveled to London earlier this summer to track down the former British intelligence operative who compiled a controversial dossier on President Donald Trump and Russia, according to three people familiar with the matter." According to Politico, "The previously unreported trip underscores the importance of the 35-page dossier Christopher Steele wrote last year to congressional probes into possible collusion between Moscow and the 2016 Trump campaign." Politico says the trip has "inflamed simmering tensions between House and Senate investigators" since "House Intelligence Committee Republicans did not tell Democrats on the panel, the Senate Intelligence Committee nor special counsel Robert Mueller's office that the investigators were pursuing Steele."

Rep. Andre Carson told □ CNN's Situation Room (8/4, 5:20 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) he "was deeply disappointed" that Republican staff members did not inform Democratic staff members about their efforts to discuss the dossier with its author. Carson asserted, "If we're really concerned about digging into keeping America safe, we have to work together, both Republican staffers and Democratic staffers." He did not say whether he believed the Republican staffers tried to discredit the dossier, but lamented "it certainly causes me great discomfort."

Emails Show NYTimes, WPost Reporters "Less Than Enthusiastic" About Covering Clinton-Lynch Meeting. The Washington Examiner (8/4, Scarry) reports "the non-profit American Center for Law and Justice published emails Friday that showed reporters" from the New York Times and Washington Post asking Justice Department officials about "the controversial private meeting between then-Attorney General Loretta Lynch and former President Bill Clinton just months ahead of the 2016 election." The Examiner says that based on the emails, the reporters seem "less than enthusiastic about covering" the meeting.

Experts Warn Trump "An Easy Mark" For Foreign Spies. "Trump is proving to be an easy read for foreign intelligence services gauging how his mind works," McClatchy (8/4, Johnson) reports, according to former intelligence officials, as "the steady stream of tweets flowing from Trump's phone and the leak this week of candid conversations he's had with two foreign leaders throw open a window on Trump's views of the world, his moods and sensitivities." Former CIA director Michael Hayden said, "The president's tweets are an absolute gold mine of personal, detailed information on his personality and his emotional state." Meanwhile, McClatchy says that while "it would be tempting to believe that senior intelligence officials opposed to Trump may be leaking secret information to the Washington Post and New York Times," Hayden and other experts "cautioned against assuming the provenance of leaks." Hayden added, "I have consistently been emphasizing that the leak of intelligence information does not necessarily mean that the leaker is from the intelligence community."

Reuters Analysis: Trump, Pence Seemingly Disconnected On Russia. In an analysis, Reuters (8/4, Rampton) says while Vice President Pence pushed for new US sanctions against Russia during his four-day tour of Estonia, Georgia, and Montenegro this week, President Trump "took to Twitter to complain that the sanctions legislation, which he grudgingly signed, would send U.S.-Russia relations to 'an all-time & very dangerous low.'" However, Jarrod Agen, Pence's deputy chief of staff, insisted Trump and Pence are "completely aligned" on the issue of Russia. "It was the president's decision to send the vice president to the region. It was the president's decision to deliver the message that the vice president delivered," Agen asserted. Reuters also describes the apparent disconnect as “an anomaly,” and added that Pence typically “goes to lengths to emphasize his loyalty to his boss and to downplay any differences.”

Veselnitskaya Recounts Meeting With Trump Jr. The Washington Times (8/4, Sands) reports Natalia Veselnitskaya, “the Russian lawyer whose June 2016 meeting with Donald Trump Jr. and other top Trump campaign officials has become a prime focus of the Russian election collusion probe,” in a 10-minute interview with Russian news program Vesti “den[ie]d the meeting involved Hillary Clinton or the U.S. campaign, adding the congressional probes into the scandal are not interested in hearing her side of the story,” according to the Moscow Times on Friday. Instead, Veselnitskaya “said she sought the meeting as part of her efforts to help Russian businessman Denis Katsyv, a client who was accused of money laundering after the U.S. imposed new financial sanctions on Moscow in 2012.” Veselnitskaya asserted the meeting “had nothing to do with [then-candidate Donald Trump’s] rivals or the presidential election. ... That never happened. That’s not true.”

German Foreign Minister: New US Sanctions On Russia “More Than Problematic.” Reuters (8/4, Martin, Nasr) reports German Foreign Minister Sigmar Gabriel said Friday that new US sanctions against Russia “more than problematic” because “the draft law makes clear that they’re pursuing economic interests and we think that’s not acceptable.” He added, “Aggressively combining foreign policy issues with American economic interests and saying: we want to drive Russian gas out of the European market so we can sell American gas there is definitely not something we can accept.”

In an analysis headlined “Who Loses The Most In U.S.-Russia Sanctions Fight,” Bloomberg News (8/4, Arnold) says that whereas the sanctions impact on the Russian economy seems “less than dramatic, from all appearances,” the EU in contrast “could suffer collateral damage.” Bloomberg also notes that Russia is also expelling US diplomats and their families in retaliation.

Marcus Pledges Columns Castigating Trump “Will Continue Until The Danger Subsides.” In her Washington Post (8/4, Marcus) column, which is titled “Trump Is A One-man Assault On The Rule Of Law,” Ruth Marcus condemns the President for his reaction to learning that Mueller has impaneled a grand jury. She asserts that Trump dominates the topic of her columns because “his behavior is so extreme and so dangerous that to respond only episodically and occasionally is to risk allowing it to appear acceptable.” Marcus concludes “outrageous words and outrageous actions require expressions of outrage in return, each and every time. That will continue until the danger subsides.”

Pence Calls Report That He Is Readying A 2020 Campaign “Laughable And Absurd.”

In a Sunday morning statement, Vice President Pence strongly rebuked a New York Times report that he may be laying the groundwork for a 2020 presidential run. Most reporting is brief and focuses on the statement, but several commentators expressed skepticism via Twitter, and Politico’s Josh Dawsey tweeted, “Some in/close to Trump world perplexed by Pence statement pushing back on NYT story. ‘He’s just fueling the fire,’ one adviser said.”

On NBC Nightly News (8/6, story 3, 1:25, Snow), Kelly O’Donnell reported that on Sunday, “the adrenaline out of the Trump Administration came from...Pence after a New York Times report described a shadow campaign for 2020” with Pence as a possible presidential candidate. In a lengthy rebuke, the Vice President called the assertions ‘disgraceful and offensive to me,’ ‘laughable and absurd,’ and pledged his efforts to see “the President reelected.

On ABC World News Tonight (8/6, story 3, 0:35), Tom Llamas said, “Given the President’s current predicament, a growing number of Republicans are already testing the waters for a possible presidential run in 2020. And the Vice President is shooting down reports he’s one of them.” The CBS Weekend News (8/6, story 3, 0:20, Quijano) reported that Pence “strongly denied” the Times report. The New York Times (8/6, Baker) reports, “Danielle Rhoades Ha, a Times spokeswoman, said in response: ‘We are confident in the accuracy of our reporting and will let the story speak for itself.’”

The AP (8/6, Lucey) reports that the Times article “notes Pence’s political schedule and active fundraising, though it also says unnamed advisers have signaled that he’d only run if Trump doesn’t.” The Times also reported that Pence “raised about $1 million at a Washington fundraiser last month” for his own fundraising committee. USA Today (8/6, Gaudiano) reports that the Times “says Pence’s schedule is so full of political events that Republicans joke he’s ‘acting more like a second-term vice president hoping to clear the field’ for 2020.”

Sahil Kapur of Bloomberg News tweeted, “Pence is remarkably defensive about that NYT piece. He knows how sensitive POTUS is about even a hint or a perception of loyalty breach.” Bill Kristol tweeted, “It’s bold of Team Pence to plant the front-page NYT story on plans for 2020, then object vociferously. Multi-dimensional chess!" Columnist Clarence Page tweeted, "Does VP Pence protest too much???"

The Los Angeles Times (8/6, King) writes that "the vehemence" of Pence's statement "underscored how sensitive the White House is to any questioning of whether Trump will seek a second term." The Washington Post (8/6, Wagner) reports that Kellyanne Conway told ABC "that she has 'zero concern' about a 2020 campaign by Pence." Conway said on ABC's This Week (8/6), "It is absolutely true the Vice President is getting ready for 2020 – for reelection as vice president."

Reuters (8/6, Cornwell) writes that while Pence is "a Trump loyalist, and there is typically little distinction between his public statements and the policies of the president...as investigations deepen" into Russia's alleged role in the 2016 election, Pence "has put some distance" between himself and the President "on the best way to approach Moscow."

Kelly Tells White House Staff To Put Country Before Trump, Warns Against Leaks.

Bloomberg News (8/6, Jacobs, Talev) reports that in a meeting with about 200 White House aides on his fifth day as White House chief of staff, John Kelly "spelled out in blunt terms the way things are going to work in the West Wing he now oversees." Kelly told those gathered that "they all work for the president now...and they had to act as one team." Kelly added that "he expects all of them to put country first, the president second, and their own needs and priorities last." Citing the Bloomberg report, the Washington Examiner (8/6, Siciliano) says Kelly was "adamant that passing along even a small innocuous bit of classified information to someone without clearance constitutes a crime." Kelly "is also reining in the president in imposing new oversight to constrain Trump's Twitter account by offering advice on how to mitigate his often inflammatory tweets." However, "Trump has made clear that he reserves the right to ignore advice on tweeting."

In her Washington Post (8/6) column, Margaret Sullivan questions whether Kelly can "take on the hardest job of all – hacking through the thicket of lies that the Trump White House produces," and argues that "the prospects for that are grim." Sullivan adds that Kelly "may well be Trump's best hope for saving the White House from utter chaos," but "a grounding in reality – yes, truth – needs to be a part of that salvation."

"Face the Nation" host John Dickerson said on the CBS Weekend News (8/6, story 2, 1:35, Quijano) that "the reviews from [Kelly's] first week are good, both because General Kelly has been able to tighten up the White House staff, having meetings in which basically, he gets everybody moving in the same direction. He has gotten some of the fight of the egos, apparently in line, it's only been one week of course. And then his other challenge which he seems to be making some inroads on is, how to manage up, which is to say working with the President, a President who loves improvisation, but who is in a job where it is very hard to improvise and not cause chaos."

House Democrats From Border Districts Alarmed Over DHS Waiving Environmental Laws To Build Wall.

The Hill (8/4, Marcos) reports five House Democrats representing districts along the US-Mexico border raised concerns on Friday that the Trump Administration's plan "to waive certain environmental laws to build a wall could hurt wildlife." The Department of Homeland Security "announced earlier this week that it will use its authority under a 2005 law to bypass laws and regulations when necessary for enhancing infrastructure along the border." The Hill says the waiver "applies only to a 15-mile segment around San Diego" and "exempts projects to build infrastructure like fencing or a wall from laws like the Endangered Species Act, Clean Water Act, National Environmental Policy Act and Safe Drinking Water Act." Reps. Vicente González and Beto O'Rourke wrote a letter to Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Duke asking whether DHS was extending its authority over other areas of the southwestern border. Reps. Henry Cuellar, Filemon Vela, Lloyd Doggett and Joaquin Castro also signed the letter.

Collins: Keeping Up Pretense About Trump's Border Wall Will Mean Money Wasted. In her New York Times (8/4, Collins) column, Gail Collins writes that every day it seems like there is "a new dramatic development" regarding President Trump's border wall. This includes revelations his recent move to bar transgender people from the military was about "getting money to start building" the wall. Collins says Trump's vision for the wall keeps shifting and that it is unclear whether he thinks a wall "would do any good." She says "he certainly believes it makes him look good" and that "its all about image." She argues there is a "minimal" change the $20 billion wall will be built and that "keeping up pretenses will mean an enormous waste of money and effort."

Axios' Swan: Government May Shut Down Over Border Wall Funding Fight.

Jonathan Swan of Axios (8/6) reports that "sources inside and close to Republican Hill leadership...say there's a good chance of a government shutdown before the end of the year because of deep rifts over spending priorities. No one sees" President Trump's proposed US-Mexico border wall "getting much more than a symbolic nod." Swan writes that congressional leaders "have discussed ways to get Trump 'enough' on border security so he feels they're making enough progress to sign their funding bills," but the President "will accept no substitutes to a huge, long, physical wall, which he believes his voters viscerally want."

Infrastructure Borrowing Down As State, Local Governments Await Federal Plan.

Reuters (8/6, Respaud, Russ) says that while President Trump took office "having promised a bold $1 trillion infrastructure investment plan over 10 years," the Administration "has produced few details on the future of federal infrastructure funding, one reason why state and municipal governments have issued fewer bonds to improve roads, water systems and other projects so far in 2017." According to James Grabovac, a managing director at McDonnell Investment Management, "state and local governments may be 'reluctant to engage in long-term infrastructure financing given that there's a promise of a trillion-dollar federal investment program somewhere on the horizon.'" Reuters adds that the lack of "infrastructure-related bond issuance has left a 'bond picker's market,' with more buyers than sellers."

NYTimes: Trump's Infrastructure Promise "Hollow As A Pothole." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/6) calls Trump's campaign promise of "a $1 trillion investment" in infrastructure "one of the few practical job-building promises of the Trump presidential campaign," but adds that it is "turning out to be as hollow as a pothole" as Republicans "now concede that a fully detailed plan might not surface from the administration until next year, if ever."

WSJournal A1: Regulator Penalties On Wall Street Down In Trump's First Six Months.

The Wall Street Journal (8/6, A1, Eaglesham, Michaels, Dougherty) reports in a front-page analysis that in the first six months of the Trump Administration, Wall Street regulators have imposed lower penalties than in the first six months of 2016. Lawyers who defend financial cases attribute the decline to a more business-friendly agency stance under President Trump as well as delays due to the change in administrations and a slowing of cases from the financial crisis.

The Wall Street Journal (8/6) argues in an editorial that acting US Attorney Joon Kim made the right decision in dismissing charges against former J.P. Morgan Chase traders Javier Martin-Artajo and Julien Grout.

Cohn: US Must Cut Corporate Tax Rate To Below 23 Percent.

Bloomberg News (8/4, Leondis) reports National Economic Council Director Cohn in a Bloomberg TV interview Friday "suggested that the U.S. must cut its corporate tax rate by at least a third to compete with other developed countries." Cohn asserted, "We cannot be substantially higher than the OECD average tax rate," which is about 23 percent. Cohn added, "We've got to get in line with the rest of the world, we've got to entice capital to be invested in the United States." Cohn said, "My No. 1 priority for now until the end of the year is taxes. My second priority is taxes. And if you're confused, my third priority is taxes." According to Bloomberg, "Cohn's comments...may signal President Donald Trump's call for a 15 percent corporate rate – which would represent a far larger cut – is a starting point for negotiations as the administration and congressional tax writers begin drafting legislation."

Short: White House "Confident" Democrats Will Support Tax Reform. "Worried about the Republican Senate's inability to deliver on big campaign promises, the White House and its allies are making a strong push to get at least three vulnerable Senate Democrats to back the administration's tax reform agenda," McClatchy (8/4, Clark) reports, according to White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short, who said, "We are confident right now that we will be able to earn [Democrats'] support with our tax reform agenda." Short added the White House has "learned how difficult it is to thread the needle with 52 senators." McClatchy notes "Republicans were particularly cheered when Democratic Sens. Joe Donnelly of Indiana, Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota and Joe Manchin of West Virginia declined to sign a Senate Democratic caucus letter to Trump and congressional leaders detailing what is not acceptable in a tax plan, notably a tax cut for the top 1 percent of Americans. Every other Democrat and the two senators who caucus with them signed the letter."

Administration Is Considering Lowering Mortgage Deduction. Politico (8/4, Wilhelm) reports that "despite promises from the Trump administration in April that it would 'protect the homeownership...deductions,' multiple sources tracking tax reform said that the cap on the mortgage interest deduction – currently set at the interest on up to $1 million of mortgage debt – could be lowered in tax reform." Politico says such an action "would be a slap in the face to an industry that strongly supported President Donald Trump during his presidential bid." According to Politico, Cohn "and his lead deputy on tax reform, Shahira Knight," presided over a White House roundtable on tax reform on Monday and one attendee said, "'They're willing to ruffle some feathers. ... Everything was on the table,' including capping the deduction that the Trump administration has said it would preserve."

Hatch: Attaining Trump's Tax Reform Goals Would Be "Miraculous." The New York Post (8/6, Schultz) reports that Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch said in Sunday that "it would be 'miraculous' if President Trump could achieve his lower tax brackets for Americans." On Fox News' "Sunday Morning Futures," Hatch "cast doubt on the ability of Congress to pass legislation to lower tax rates to 10 percent, 25 percent and 35 percent." Said Hatch, "If we could get to those rates that would be miraculous." Hatch likewise, "poured cold water on Trump's plans to lower the corporate tax rate to 15 percent," saying, "We'd be lucky if we could get the corporate tax rate down to 20 percent, even 25 percent. ... But we're going to try. We're going to have to have some Democrat help to do it, so far that hasn't been materializing." Hatch also "said the wealthy shouldn't be optimistic either," warning, "They're not going to get anything – hardly anything – out of any tax reform that we do."

Samuelson: Economic Growth Predictions Should Be Viewed With Skepticism. In his Washington Post (8/6) column, Robert J. Samuelson writes that the White House's projected annual inflation-adjusted 3 percent GDP growth over the next decade should be viewed with some skepticism, noting that many economists assert that an aging population and slumping productivity will contribute to slower growth in the coming years. Samuelson adds, however, that observers generally should view economists' predictions of productivity with a degree of doubt because economists "have failed to predict major productivity changes" in the past. He concludes that the growth debate's larger significance is that growth will not likely support the White House's budget ambitions and that the country "can no longer grow" its way "out of serious conflicts."

US Formally Notifies UN Of Withdrawal From Paris Climate Deal.

The Financial Times (8/6, Crooks) reported that on Friday, the US State Department submitted notification to the UN that the US will withdraw from the Paris climate agreement, formalizing President Donald Trump's June announcement.

Obama Administration Spent Over $300,000 On Climate Change Museum.

Breitbart (8/5, Starr) reports the Obama Administration spent over $300,000 to create a climate change museum in Washington, DC in its final days. Breitbart says that according to the Washington Post, the museum was a "pet project" of former EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy, and was designed to focus on "an Obama administration-centric narrative." Nancy Grantham, the EPA employee that brought the museum to the attention of the Trump Administration, conceded that many of the museum's panels focused on the prior Administration and climate change may "be altered and possibly shelved."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Trying To Make America A Little Better." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/6) calls President Trump's campaign promise of "a $1 trillion investment" in infrastructure "one of the few practical job-building promises of the Trump presidential campaign," but adds that it is "turning out to be as hollow as a pothole" as Republicans "now concede that a fully detailed plan might not surface from the administration until next year, if ever."

"Trump Embraces A Senseless Immigration Proposal." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/7, Board) says a bill introduced by Republican Sens. Tom Cotton and David Perdue "would slash the total number of green cards issued by 41 percent in the first year and by 50 percent in the 10th year, with most of the cuts coming from family-based immigration." President Trump has endorsed the proposal, but the Times argues it "would do nothing to solve the country's immigration and economic challenges." Instead of taking a hostile position on immigration, the Times says, a better approach "to immigration reform would be bipartisan and comprehensive," and “include stronger enforcement, better worker protections and a pathway to citizenship for the country’s 11 million unauthorized immigrants.”

Washington Post.

“Does The Nation Still Need Affirmative Action?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/6) writes that the racial makeup of university students has changed modestly in recent years, with African American enrollment increasing from 32 to 35 percent from 2003 to 2015, Latino enrollment increasing from 24 percent to 37 percent, and white enrollment increasing by 15 percent. With these figures in mind in the context of the Justice Department’s examination into affirmative action policies, the Post argues that a wider federal effort “challenging affirmative action policies would represent a drastic change in the department’s priorities and, if the idea was to protect whites, a perversion of civil rights law meant to protect disadvantaged minority groups.”

“Police Chiefs Need The Freedom To Weed Out Bad Cops.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/6) writes that police chiefs should have the authority to fire officers in their ranks guilty of misconduct without the heavy influence of arbitrators pushing the reinstatement of problem officers following appeals required by union contracts. Although the Post acknowledges that “some of the responsibility for having to reinstate undesirable officers falls on police agencies that make careless errors during disciplinary proceedings,” it adds that there is “a tilt in the system that makes it difficult to hold officers accountable for bad acts.”

“Trump Promised A Trade War. Here’s What He’s Doing Instead.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/6) writes that the Administration’s NAFTA negotiation objectives laid out in a July 17 report to Congress “were in many respects necessary and proper” despite the President’s past rhetoric towards the trade agreement. The Post adds that trade experts say the negotiating blueprint has many similarities to the objectives established in the TPP talks but does include a harmful provision calling for the elimination of Chapter 19 of NAFTA’s dispute-resolution mechanism – a provision the Post concludes would constitute a “dealbreaker” for Canada.

Wall Street Journal.

“The United Auto Workers Lose Again.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/6) writes that the 2-to-1 vote late last week at a Canton, Mississippi Nissan plant against unionizing under the United Automobile Workers marks a defeat for a campaign characterized by race-baiting and for an effort to effect stifling work rules on a factory that has created jobs and lifted wages in the community. The Journal concludes that the reason for the UAW’s failure to organize workers in the South is that workers increasingly think that a union does not offer much and places their jobs at risk against global competition.

“The Morgan Whale That Got Away.” The Wall Street Journal (8/6) argues in an editorial that acting US Attorney Joon Kim made the right decision in dismissing charges against former J.P. Morgan Chase traders Javier Martin-Artajo and Julien Grout.

27 National Monuments Are Under Review. Here Are Five To Watch.

The New York Times (8/11, Friedman, Popovich, McCann) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “reviewing 27 national monuments to determine if previous administrations exceeded their authority in setting aside craggy vistas, ancient cliff dwellings and other large tracts of land for protection.” However, “not all of the monuments are truly in the administration’s cross hairs, and Mr. Zinke has already declared some of them safe from changes.” The article highlights five monuments to watch: Grand Staircase-Escalante, Bears Ears, Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks, Katahdin Woods and Waters, and Papahānaumokuākea.

Free Map Denotes Katahdin Woods & Waters National Monument. The AP (8/13) reports that Maine Gov. Paul LePage “isn’t allowing signs on highways to direct motorists to the Katahdin Woods & Waters National Monument,” but now there’s a map. The Friends of Katahdin Woods & Waters National Monument has “created a new topographical map that identifies key features, like the loop road.” The maps are “available for free at the monument’s visitor stations in Millinocket and Patten and at the Katahdin Area Chamber of Commerce.”

Whose National Monument Claims Are Disingenuous? Not Ours. In an op-ed for the Arizona Republic (8/11, Gosar), Rep. Paul A. Gosar attacks Rep. Raúl Grijalva for penning an op-ed criticizing a letter signed by 17 members of Congress providing comments on the review of national monuments. Gosar takes issue with Grijalva’s “eccentric far-left environmentalism” and his apparent conflicts of interest. Gosar urges Grijalva “to drop the partisan nonsense, debate these issues’ merits and let’s work together to solve problems facing hard-working Arizonans.”

Scientists Urge No Changes To Cascade-Siskiyou Monument (Guest Opinion). In an op-ed for the Oregonian (8/13, Parker, Trail, Williams), Michael Parker, Ph.D., professor and chair of the biology program at Southern Oregon University; Pepper Trail, Ph.D., a fellow of the American Ornithological Society and conservation co-chair of the Rogue Valley Audubon Society; and Jack Williams, Ph.D., the senior scientist for Trout Unlimited and a former Rogue River-Siskiyou National Forest Supervisor, urge Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to propose no changes to the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument. They urge Zinke “to respect the science, the grassroots collaboration and the sustained support of Senators Jeff Merkley and Ron Wyden and Gov. Kate Brown.”

In an editorial, the Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (8/13) also supports leaving the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument alone.

National Monuments Support Jobs, Innovation. In an op-ed for the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/12, Hayes), Marne Hayes, the executive director of Business for Montana’s Outdoors, writes that “Montana may have dodged a bullet” when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “declared the Missouri River Breaks safe from changes, but our western neighbors are still experiencing the fear and uncertainty of the ongoing review process.” According to Hayes, “that’s why business leaders from across the West converged in Montana last week to protest changes to western national monuments still in the crosshairs of Sec. Zinke’s review.” Hayes argues that “rolling back existing protections in any of these states is just not good for business. It also sets a dangerous precedent that undermines every other existing monument, including the Upper Missouri River Breaks.”

Fleeing To The Mountains. In his column for the New York Times (8/12, Kristof), Nicholas Kristof writes that “public lands are at risk today.” According to Kristof, “more aggressively than past administrations,” the Trump Administration is “systematically handing over America’s public lands for private exploitation in ways that will scar the land forever.” Kristof encourages readers to visit public lands to get a sense of “what is being lost.”

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (8/11), the Daily Caller (8/11, Pearce), the Arizona Republic (8/13, Loomis), the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (8/12, Breaun), and Montana Public Radio (8/10, Ripley).

Additional Coverage: Trump Appointee Wants More Hunting And Fishing On Federal Lands.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “wants to allow more hunting and fishing on federal wildlife refuges, relaxing regulations in some places, opening up moose and turkey hunting in other places,” was provided by the Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/11), U.S. News & World Report (8/11), and the Roseburg \(OR\) News-Review (8/11, Urness).

We Cannot Let Heinrich, VeneKlasen, Zinke And The Trumps Define Wilderness.

In an op-ed for the Santa Fe New Mexican (8/13, Bedner), Marc Bedner, a writer for Tea Party for Animals, writes opposes increasing access to the Sabinoso Wilderness for hunting. He argues that “increased public access to previously inaccessible areas is a threat to wild areas.” Bedner writes that “it is time for the 95 percent of the public who do not hunt to protect the few remaining wild areas and the wildlife who live there.”

They Protest Too Much, Methinks.

In an op-ed for the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/11, Walcher), Greg Walcher, president of the Natural Resources Group, writes that “nearly every new administration’s natural resources policy is immediately blasted by the environmental industry as a complete disaster,” and “in many cases, the bombast is so over-the-top that it loses all credibility.” Walcher highlights two recent examples: Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “order to revise management plans for the greater sage grouse” and the Interior Department’s “proposed repeal of the Obama BLM’s rule against fracking.” According to Walcher, “the accusation that anyone would purposely destroy nature, whatever side they’re on, reveals more about the accuser than the accused.” He concludes that “calling each other names (wilderness-rapists, eco-nazis or any other) does not enlighten the conversation; it just reveals the insincere agenda of those who protest too much.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

BIA, FWS Improved Dam Hazard Readiness, Watchdog Says.

Law360 (8/11, Powell) reports that “the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have successfully implemented a slew of recommended measures for boosting emergency preparedness at high-hazard dams, the U.S. Department of the Interior’s Office of Inspector General said Thursday.”

Drilling Halted At Van Hook Oil Well Site.

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (8/11, Holdman) reports that “drilling of a series of oil wells near the Van Hook Resort boat ramp has been stayed by the federal government at the request of the Three Affiliated Tribes.” The tribe appealed the federal permitting of the well site, known as the Torpedo pad, “because it violates tribal setback requirements from the lake, said Tribal Chairman Mark Fox.” The Interior Board of Land Appeals “stayed the project in response to the tribe’s appeal Thursday.”

Activists Challenge Federal Officials Over Proposed Elk Grove Casino.

The Elk Grove \(CA\) Citizen (8/11, Armstrong) reports that a casino watchdog group and “three Elk Grove residents are challenging the federal government’s decision to place land into trust for the proposed, $400 million Wilton Rancheria casino-resort in Elk Grove.” According to the article, “a record of decision approving the taking of 35.9 acres of land by Highway 99 and Kammerer Road into a federal trust for the tribe’s benefit was issued on Jan. 19.” However, “the plaintiffs seek to have that decision reversed, and have the land returned to the authority of the city of Elk Grove and the state.”

Washington’s Wild Grouse Chase.

The Wall Street Journal (8/11) editorializes that regulatory relief is the Trump Administration’s biggest economic policy achievement so far and cites as a recent example of this the greater sage grouse. The Journal says the Interior Department is considering revising 15 Federal land-use plans to better protect the sage grouse, including reducing some restrictions that can benefit conservation efforts, and lauds collaborative models in the Agriculture Department, which runs a Sage Grouse Initiative. The editorial acknowledges that the Interior Department deserves credit for seeking ways to preserve the sage grouse’s habitat while still spurring economic development.

Additional coverage of changes to sage-grouse management plans was provided by the Idaho Mountain Express (8/11, Moore).

Tribe Appeal Pushed Back.

The Falmouth \(MA\) Enterprise (8/11, Houghton) reports that “a US Court of Appeals First Circuit judge agreed this week to extend the opening of the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe’s pending appeal regarding its land in trust application.” Appellate judge O. Rogeriee Thompson “seeing no objections, agreed on Tuesday, August 8, to extend a deadline to November for the tribe to submit a status report.”

Cobell Family Welcomes Presidential Medal Of Freedom To Browning.

KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (8/11, Van Middendorp) reports that “former President Barack Obama awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Elouise Cobell in 2016, four years after her passing in 2011.” Welcoming the medal to Browning earlier this week, Cobell’s sister Joy Ketah said, “this is home for us, for all of us, and y’know it’s good to have it back with the Blackfeet people first.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Piece By Piece: New Bug-O-Nay-Ge-Shig School Comes Together In Sections.

The Bemidji \(MN\) Pioneer (8/13, Bowen) reports that “workers have been busy putting together a new, 45,000 square-foot Bug-O-Nay-Ge-Shig junior and senior high school using a new-to-the-area method that school and project leaders say is faster and cheaper than a more traditional build.” Mary Trapp, Bug-O-Nay-Ge-Shig’s superintendent, said that the Bureau of Indian Education and “school leaders drew up a $20 million construction plan several years ago that never came to fruition.” According to a Department of the Interior spokesperson, “the design that’s being realized now is about $14.5 million.”

The piece also appears at the Park Rapids \(MN\) Enterprise (8/13, Bowen).

Bureau Of Land Management

US Cattle Grazing Plan For Idaho National Monument Approved.

The U.S. News & World Report (8/11, Ridler) reports that "cattle grazing will continue" at Craters of the Moon National Monument and Preserve "following a challenge by an environmental group, federal officials announced this week." The U.S. Bureau of Land Management said in a statement Wednesday said grazing on BLM-administered portions of the monument "not covered by lava flows will stay at about 99 percent of current levels." The bureau said in a written statement, "The decision demonstrates the Trump Administration's effort to support traditional uses such as grazing on public lands while providing opportunities for recreation and promoting conservation."

BLM To Remove Horses Southeast Of Rangely.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/12, Webb) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has "approved a plan to remove up to 100 wild horses from private and other land southeast of Rangely this fall, a decision made more controversial due to activists' concerns that animals could end up being euthanized." The bureau "said Friday it plans to use a helicopter operation to round up horses that have strayed outside the designated Piceance-East Douglas Herd Management Area." The decision, "which is subject to a 30-day appeal period, also will allow future gathers to remove other horses outside the management area."

Additional coverage was provided by the Craig \(CO\) Daily Press (8/11).

Human Activity — Racing Included — Is Shrinking The Bonneville Salt Flats, U.

Researcher Says. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/12, Penrod) reports that "two years of research on unique ecosystem indicate speed racing, mining, government management and climate change may all be factors in depletion of salt crust" of the Bonneville Salt Flats. University of Utah geologist Brenda Bowen's "research still is incomplete — her first paper is expected out this fall, and a final report isn't due until 2018." However, "the more data Bowen collects, she said, the more she's convinced human activity is changing the landscape." Meanwhile, Louise Noeth, a spokeswoman for the Save the Salt Coalition, "believes mismanagement by the Bureau of Land Management is at least partly responsible for the salt flats' condition." Hannah Cowan, a spokeswoman for the BLM, "said the agency stands by its decisions on managing the Bonneville Salt Flats."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Offshore Air Gun Blasts Spark Debate.

The Thibodaux \(LA\) Daily Comet (8/12, Magill) reports that "environmentalists and oil industry representatives are sparring over a new federal report that says high-powered air gun blasts used to search for oil in the Gulf of Mexico can harm whales and other sea creatures." The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management "issued the preliminary environmental impact statement about two weeks ago as part of a settlement in a lawsuit filed by environmental groups." Environmentalists point to "the report as proof the oil companies' seismic testing harms marine life." On the other hand, "oil industry representatives counter the practice is safe and that environmentalists have exaggerated the federal report's findings."

Researchers Eye Marine Mammals In Offshore Surveys.

The Arctic \(AK\) Sounder (8/11, Oliver) reports that "bowhead whales and other marine mammals are the focus of a four-month survey project this summer in Arctic waters." According to the article, "led jointly by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the National Marine Fisheries Service, the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, the Department of Interior and the Marine Mammal Laboratory, the Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, this summer's research is part of a series of years-long studies of the region's biodiversity." The project, Aerial Surveys of Arctic Marine Mammals, "aims to gather data about the populations of these animals in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, specifically in areas where there is potential for future oil and gas development."

URI/BOEM Visit Block Island | Block Island Times.

The Block Island \(RI\) Times (8/12, Shuman) reports that a research study is "being conducted examining the effects of the Block Island Wind Farm on recreation and tourism in the Ocean State." Researchers were contracted by the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management "to conduct the study, which is titled 'Identifying Indicators of Offshore Wind Benefits.'" BOEM will "use indicators gleaned from the research in National Environmental Policy Act analyses to evaluate the effects of proposed offshore wind energy facility development."

Comment Period On Seismic Testing Leases Near Grand Strand Closing Aug. 17.

The Myrtle Beach \(SC\) Online (8/11, Johnson) reports that "environmentalists say the best way to stop oil drilling off the South Carolina coast is for Gov. Henry McMaster to file a statement as the federal government solicits comments." However, "McMaster, who has said before that he opposes offshore drilling, hasn't sent in a comment yet — and the window closes Aug. 17." According to the article, "the federal government relies heavily on the comments of governors as it reviews oil exploration. McMaster has previously said publicly that he is not in favor of oil drilling off the South Carolina coast, but has not yet submitted a comment to BOEM."

OBX Says No To Offshore Drilling.

Additional coverage that a hearing was held last Thursday in Manteo "to gather public comments on a new five-year plan to explore for oil and gas in the Atlantic" was provided by the Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (8/11, Hampton) and the Outer Banks \(NC\) Voice (8/11, Lay).

Service Companies Shift To Wind To Weather Downturn.

Offshore Magazine (8/11, Livingston) reports "many industry analysts do not expect offshore exploration activities" to grow "until sometime in 2018 at the earliest." Offshore adds that installed assets are expected to grow "45% less than 2014 levels." Meanwhile, "offshore services contractors are quickly filling their backlogs with wind-related projects."

Survey Says...Offshore Seismic Is Safe.

In a piece for Forbes (8/11, Bradley), Robert Bradley Jr. dismisses fears that seismic surveying in the Atlantic Ocean will negatively impact marine life. He argues that "Atlantic drilling would create economic benefits at virtually no environmental cost." Bradley concludes that "environmental groups who oppose seismic surveying are really fighting against good paying jobs – gainful employment that does not depend on government but free consumer choice."

Bureau Of Reclamation

U.S. And Mexico Finalizing Colorado River Water-sharing Deal.

USA Today (8/12, James) reports that U.S. and Mexican officials are "finalizing a water-sharing deal for the Colorado River, and a newly released summary of the accord's key points shows negotiators have agreed on a cooperative approach geared toward boosting reservoir levels and trying to stave off a severe shortage." The document, "which federal officials have circulated among water agencies, outlines a series of joint measures that build on the current 5-year agreement, which expires at the end of this year." The article says that "the new accord – titled Minute No. 323 to the 1944 Mexican Water Treaty – is expected to be signed sometime this fall, perhaps as early as September, and would remain in effect through 2026."

Federal Judge Clears Way For Completion Of Water Project.

The AP (8/11, Nicholson) reports that "a federal judge has cleared the way for completion of a $244 million project to bring Missouri River water to residents of northwestern North Dakota, though the state of Missouri and the Canadian province of Manitoba can appeal." U.S. District Judge Rosemary Collyer held Thursday "that the Northwest Area Water Supply project complies with federal environmental law." Collyer wrote, "This court's work is done because the Bureau of Reclamation has finally done its work."

Hydroelectric Plant Coming; 7.5 MW Facility Should Be Online Next Spring.

The Pueblo \(CO\) Chieftain (8/11, Pompia) reports that "in what's being hailed as an historic moment for the Southeastern Colorado Water Conservancy District, construction of a hydroelectric generation plant at Pueblo Dam will begin in September." The project is "the result of an agreement, signed Friday, between the district and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation."

In South Texas, Threat Of Border Wall Unites Naturalists And Politicians.

The New York Times (8/13, Hardy) reports that the specter of a border wall “has loomed over the Rio Grande Valley since 2006, when President George W. Bush signed the Secure Fence Act authorizing 700 miles of fencing along certain stretches of the southern border.” But Presidents Trump’s election “has spurred renewed concern about the economic and environmental consequences of such a wall.” Current plans have the wall running “through countless pieces of private property and bisect[ing] several major wildlife refuges.” Due to the “anticipated resistance from private landowners, the first sections of the border wall most likely will be built on federal land.”

Additional coverage of the border wall was provided by USA Today (8/12, Crow).

Federal Money Targets Water Pollution From Vessel Sewage.

The AP (8/13) reports that “federal grants totaling $2.5 million has been awarded to prevent sewage pollution in Washington state waters.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service grants will be “used to add more locations where recreational boaters and other vessels can pump out their vessel sewage.” According to the article, “nearly $1.5 million will go to projects on the coast, while $1 million will be used for inland waters.”

Wildlife Agency: Review Won’t Jeopardize Panther Protections.

The AP (8/13) reports that “wildlife officials say a federal review of the Florida panther’s endangered species status will not jeopardize protections for the big cats.” Panther biologist David Shindle said that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s “review aims to gather the best available data on panther biology, habitat and conservation plans, as well as threats to their survival.” According to Shindle, “any change to the panther’s status would require separate action from the wildlife service.”

Sen. Bill Nelson Introduces Manatee Protection, Research Bill.

The Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (8/12, Nealeigh) reports that “an email from Florida Democratic Sen. Bill Nelson’s campaign team signed by Nelson mourning the loss of Snooty the manatee also announced a new bill introduced by the senator.” On Aug. 3, Nelson introduced a bill “to authorize research and recovery activities to provide for the protection, conservation, and recovery of the Florida manatee, and for other purposes.” An email from Nelson for U.S. Senate said, “The outpouring of support that we’ve seen in the wake of Snooty’s tragic death shows just how beloved these gentle giants are. Yet despite the constant threats these iconic creatures continue to face throughout our state, the federal government has removed them from the endangered species list. Florida’s manatees are a special part of our state’s heritage, and I believe we should continue to protect them.”

Deschutes Conservation Planning Picks Up This Week; Public Meetings Slated For Madras, Bend This Week.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (8/13, Hamway) reports that “the next phase of the nearly decadelong process of creating a habitat conservation plan for the Deschutes River Basin will begin in Bend and Madras on Monday.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will be “hosting a total of four meetings — two in Bend, two in Madras — where members of the public can learn about the process of creating a long-term plan that will meet the needs of farmers and other water users, while also ensuring that the Oregon spotted frog and other threatened species living in the basin will be protected in the future.”

Saving Detroit River Is Dingell’s Legacy.

In a piece for the Detroit News (8/12, Finley), editorial page editor Nolan Finley writes that when John Dingell “weighs the impact of his life’s work, he doesn’t look to the Congressional Record, but to an undisturbed stretch of the Detroit River known as the Humbug Marsh,” which is now part of the Detroit River International Wildlife Refuge. Dingell, “who retired in 2015, is an avid outdoorsman who dreamed of seeing the Detroit River as again a haven for hunters and fishermen.” The refuge is planning “to open a visitor’s center in Humbug, and by spring hopes to complete a fishing pier that will stretch into the river and allow those without boats a chance at landing one of the trophy walleye or sturgeon that have returned to make the Detroit River a prime fishing venue.”

Wolf Recovery Plan Is Biased.

In an editorial, the Arizona Republic (8/11) criticizes the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s draft wolf recovery plan. The paper argues that “states shouldn’t have veto power” over wolf releases, and that “without wolf releases, the recovery effort is doomed.” The paper asserts that “final language should make it clear that the states can offer input, but do not have veto power over releases.”

National Parks Plan For Solar Eclipse.

The International Falls \(MN\) Daily Journal (8/12) reports that “America’s national parks will be premiere viewing sites for one of nature’s amazing natural phenomena, as a total solar eclipse crosses the continental United States on Aug. 21.” According to the article, “there are 21 parks and seven trails of the National Park System that are within the 60- to 70-mile-wide total eclipse pathway.” Also, “several national parks will stream live video during the eclipse.”

Also covering the eclipse are MarketWatch (8/14), Newsday \(NY\) (8/11, Whitehouse), the Charleston \(SC\) Moultrie News (8/13), and the Times of Northwest Indiana (8/13).

Park Police Briefly Detain Two Youths For Selling Bottled Water On Mall.

The Washington Post (8/11, Williams, Hermann) reports that “U.S. Park Police officers handcuffed a teenager and detained a second youth for attempting to sell bottles of water on the Mall this week, police officials acknowledged Friday.” The incident occurred “about 3 p.m. Tuesday near the intersection of Ninth Street and Constitution Avenue NW when a uniformed Park Police officer tried ‘to make contact with multiple individuals who were observed illegally selling water on the National Mall,’ according to a statement released by the Park Police.” The article notes that “Park Police were roundly criticized by city leaders earlier this summer after plainclothes officers handcuffed and detained two 17-year-olds and a 16-year-old for the same violation June 22.” On Friday, Park Police Chief Robert MacLean said in a statement, “In this incident, officers responded with a measured approach to ensure the safety of everyone involved. We hold ourselves to the highest standards of professionalism and strive to ensure that any contact with the public is tactful and considerate.”

US Mint To Feature Georgia’s Largest Island On A Coin.

The AP (8/13) reports that “the federal government plans to pay tribute to Georgia’s largest barrier island by issuing a special coin.” The National Park Service “says 25-cent coins with a design recognizing Cumberland Island will be produced by the U.S. Mint next year.” The coin’s design “features a snowy egret perched on a branch with a salt marsh in the background.” It’s scheduled to be released in August 2018.

Fire Blocks Route For Dozens In Glacier National Park Chalet.

The AP (8/12, Volz) reports that “a wildfire has cut off the return route for dozens of people staying in a Glacier National Park backcountry chalet, leaving them the choice of remaining until rangers tell them it’s safe or hiking out along a longer and more difficult trail, park officials said Friday.” Park rangers also “planned to lead out 39 other hikers who were staying in backcountry campsites near fires that broke out after a passing lightning storm on Thursday, Glacier spokeswoman Lauren Alley said.”

Additional coverage of the fire danger at the park was provided by the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (8/11, Puckett) and the Missoulian \(MT\) (8/11, Backus).

What’s In The Worst Shape At Rocky? The Stuff You Can’t See.

The Fort Collins \(CO\) Coloradoan (8/11, Marmaduke) reports that Rocky Mountain National Park will “celebrate its birthday next month with 102 candles and more than $75 million in deferred maintenance.” According to the article, “it’s the heftiest repairs backlog the park has seen in seven years, and a recent funding award from the Department of the Interior won’t do much to change that.” In the face of “a growing maintenance to-do list and an uncertain funding future, park officials say they’ll spend the next several years focusing on the nuts and bolts: waterlines and septic systems.”

Florida Congressman Helps Kill 5 Pythons In Everglades.

The U.S. News & World Report (8/12) reports that Rep. Francis Rooney “helped catch and kill five invasive Burmese pythons during a nighttime hunt in the Everglades.” Rooney “joined hunters hired by the South Florida Water Management District in the wetlands Thursday night.” He “said it’s important for the state to continue funding the hunting program because pythons pose a threat to Everglades restoration efforts.” Rooney “also said he’d like the U.S. Department of Interior to allow python hunting within Everglades National Park as well.”

Hopes High 1919 Events Make Parks List.

The Arkansas Democrat Gazette (8/13, Mulder) reports on dual efforts to “erect a memorial to all those killed” in the Elaine Massacre of 1919 and to save the Centennial Baptist Church. Committees have been formed “dedicated to each task: the Elaine Massacre Memorial Committee, which has gained nonprofit status, and the Centennial Church Foundation, which is seeking such status.” However, “only the Centennial Church Foundation has made park service overtures to congressional members.”

Here’s Your Chance To Weigh In On Plans To Move, Kill Mountain Goats In Olympic National Park.

The Olympian \(WA\) (8/11, Spegman) reports that “officials will discuss plans to manage the growing number of mountain goats in Olympic National Park at a meeting in Olympia next week.” Meetings also are planned “for next week in Everett, Port Angeles and Seattle.”

Volunteers Help To Restore Shoreline At De Soto National Memorial.

The Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (8/12, De Leon) reports that “dozens of volunteers joined the National Park Service and the University of Central Florida on Saturday in a project to help restore the living shoreline along De Soto National Memorial that has been eroded by tropical storms and boat wakes.” They “spent several hours placing bags of oyster shells, previously filled by volunteers, along the shore at different areas in the park. Later, young red and black mangroves, grown by volunteers, were planted behind them.”

America’s National Parks Offer Valuable Learning Experiences For Children.

In an op-ed for U.S. News & World Report (8/11, Mead), Sara Mead, a partner with Bellwether Education Partners, writes that national parks “provide abundant learning opportunities for both children and adults.” According to Mead, “by illustrating both the great moments and heroic figures and the less admirable parts of our nation’s history, these parks and historic sites can help both adults and children to know and value our history and to understand that the America we have today is not a foregone conclusion to be taken for granted, but a hard-fought patrimony that we as citizens have the opportunity and obligation to continue working to maintain and improve.” She adds that “at a time when many question the value of government, National Parks also illustrate what is possible when Americans, both in government and outside of it, work together to achieve a goal that is bigger than individual interest.” Mead calls for improving access to these “types of learning experiences” for “disadvantaged children.”

We’re Suffocating Yosemite; It’s Time To Consider A Reservation System For All Visitors.

In an op-ed for the Modesto \(CA\) Bee (8/12, Buckley), John Buckley, executive director Central Sierra Environmental Resource Center, argues that Yosemite National Park must confront its overcrowding issue. He argues that “allowing excessive vehicle congestion conflicts with park service mandates to ensure visitors can have a positive experience.” According to Buckley, “the challenge is to identify the best steps to take – not just to improve the deteriorating visitor experience, but more important, to truly protect the ecological health of Yosemite Valley, its Wild and Scenic River corridor, and other stressed resources.” He concludes that “visitors can support seasonal limits on vehicles if they recognize that with a reservation they can avoid traffic jams and actually stop, park and savor the precious natural cathedral of Yosemite Valley.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump: North Korea Will “Truly Regret” Attack On Guam, Warns US Military “Locked And Loaded.”

President Trump met on Friday with Secretary of State Tillerson, Ambassador Haley, and National Security Adviser McMaster and in a news conference, the President warned North Korean leader Kim Jong-un that he would “truly regret” any attack on US territories and allies, hours after Trump tweeted, “Military solutions are now fully in place, locked and loaded, should North Korea act unwisely. Hopefully Kim Jong Un will find another path!” The President’s remarks received saturation coverage on the cable and network newscasts, which all led with the story and devoted more than 13 and a half minutes combined, while print and online reporting was also extensive. Analyses and commentary were primarily negative of Trump’s continued aggressive rhetoric toward North Korea and portrayed his latest comments as an troubling escalation of the crisis.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (8/11, lead story, 3:15, Holt) segment, White House correspondent Kristen Welker reported that “flanked by his secretary of state, UN ambassador, and national security advisor,” Trump “turn[ed] up the heat on North Korea for a third time this week.” Bret Baier of Fox News’ Special Report (8/11, 6:09 p.m. EDT, Baier) similarly said at the joint news conference, Trump took “a number of questions” on several issues, including “the biggest issue at hand this moment,” the threat from North Korea. In its lead segment, Fox News’ Special Report (8/11, 6:00 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast the President, who said his meeting with Tillerson, McMaster, and Haley was “very good,” and that they “talked about North Korea as you can imagine. We are very much in agreement, we have been right from the beginning. This is something we have to stop. We all feel that very strongly.”

The Wall Street Journal (8/11, A1, Kesling, Radnofsky) reports on its front page that the President said the US is looking “very carefully” at military options and asserted, “I hope that [Kim is] going to fully understand the gravity of what I said. And what I said is what I mean.” CNN’s Situation Room (8/11, 6:07 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast Trump saying that the US is considering further, “very strong” economic sanctions against North Korea. When asked about North Korean state media outlets’ assertions that the US is easily defeated, Fox News’ Special Report (8/11, 6:06 p.m. EDT, Baier) broadcast Trump asserting, “Let me hear Kim Jong-un say it.” Asked whether his Administration is open to regime change in North Korea or Venezuela, Trump declined to comment because “they are very different places,” but he stressed his support for peace and safety, as well as “having to get very tough if we have to protect the American people and also to protect our allies.”

To the AP (8/11, Lemire, Talmadge), Trump “all but drew a red line that would trigger swift U.S. action” when the President warned if Kim “utters one threat in the form of an overt threat – which by the way he has been uttering for years and his family has been uttering for years – or he does anything with respect to Guam or anyplace else that’s an American territory or an American ally, he will truly regret it and he will regret it fast.” Reuters (8/11, Oliphant, Kim) reports that when asked about his tweet, Trump said, “Those words are very, very easy to understand.” According to Reuters, “The term ‘locked and loaded,’ popularized in the 1949 war film “Sands of Iwo Jima” starring American actor John Wayne, refers to preparations for shooting a gun.”

Meanwhile, CNN’s Situation Room (8/11, 5:56 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast the President saying that the US has “been working very closely with China and with other countries” on the matter, and that he planned to discuss the issue with Chinese President Xi Jinping later Friday night. Trump added that “as far as reassurance,” the South Korean peoples “probably feel as reassured as they can feel. Certainly they feel more reassured with me than with other presidents from the past because nobody’s really done the job they’re supposed to be doing, and that’s why we’re at this horrible situation right now.” Trump added that he also “think[s] Japan is very happy with the job we’re doing.” Although the President said he has not yet spoken with the governor of Guam, he added, “I feel they will be very safe. Believe me, they will be very safe. And if anything happens to Guam, there’s going to be big, big trouble in North Korea.”

The Washington Times (8/11, Boyer) reports Trump also “dismissed criticism that his rhetoric is raising the danger level of a potential confrontation.” He said, “My critics are only saying that because it’s me.” He added, “We have tens of millions of people in this country that are so happy with what I am saying, because they say finally we have a president that’s sticking up for our nation and frankly, sticking up for our friends and our allies. And this man [Mr. Kim] will not get away with what he is doing, believe me.”

According to a front-page New York Times (8/11, A1, Baker) article, Trump “continued to beat war drums on Friday against North Korea,” but despite his latest comments, “there were no indications of imminent action in either part of the world.” The Times reports that “for all the bellicose language emerging from the president’s golf club in Bedminster, N.J., the United States military was taking no visible steps to prepare for a strike.” The Times states that “the juxtaposition between the heated words and the lack of apparent preparations suggested that Mr.

Trump may still be counting on a resolution to the standoff with North Korea as it works to develop a nuclear arsenal capable of reaching the United States."

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (8/11, A1, Lamothe) similarly reports "the U.S. military does not appear to be moving toward a wartime footing with North Korea despite President Trump's repeated threats this week of military action against Pyongyang, with few if any additional military forces moving into the region and the Pentagon chief emphasizing diplomacy over bloodshed." According to the Post, "Among the signals that a major U.S. operation is not imminent is a trip just underway by Marine Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and a small cadre of his staff. He arrived Friday in Hawaii with plans to visit Japan, South Korea and China, all of which would be in peril if a war between North Korea and the United States explodes." The Post adds that "The aircraft carrier USS Ronald Reagan and its accompanying flotilla of destroyers and guided-missile cruisers also returned to port Wednesday in Yokosuka, Japan, the Navy announced."

USA Today (8/11, Wolf) reports that "as he has done all week, the president appeared more eager to herald U.S. military readiness," but senior White House correspondent Jim Acosta led CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) in reporting that although Trump "insists his team is on the same page," Defense Secretary Mattis on Thursday sought to "tone down the Administration's rhetoric emphasizing diplomacy."

In the lead CBS Evening News (8/11, lead story, 2:35, Mason) segment, chief White House correspondent Major Garrett said Tillerson and Haley sought "to reassure allies despite the President's tough talk," even as Mattis stated, "the American effort is diplomatically led, it has diplomatic traction, it is gaining diplomatic results. And I want to stay right there right now." Mattis conceded his "responsibility is to have military options should they be needed," but The Hill (8/11, Greenwood) reports Mattis recognized, "The tragedy of war is well enough known. It does not need another characterization beyond the fact that it would be catastrophic."

While CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:33 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) chief national security correspondent Jim Sciutto said Mattis "declined to give details on what military options he's given the president," in broadcast footage, Mattis asserted, "I don't tell the enemy in advance what I'm going to do. Our readiness – we are ready." Bloomberg News (8/11, Biggs, Sink) reports "a White House national security official... said the Pentagon has contingency plans for any crisis that are updated constantly to provide the president with options and that there was nothing new about the U.S. readiness stance." Former Deputy Assistant Secretary and retired US Marine fighter pilot Col. Stephen Ganyard told the lead ABC World News Tonight (8/11, lead story, 3:20, Vega) segment "the US military has been planning for North Korean aggression for 60 years. They're ready and they're not going to get caught off guard."

The Washington Post (8/11, Wagner, DeYoung, Johnson) reports that "as Trump continued his bellicose rhetoric Friday – a tactic criticized by some U.S. leaders and allies – North Korea kept up its verbal salvos as well." North Korea's state-run newspaper ran a commentary claiming that the "U.S. military warmongers are running amok" and warned "the U.S. and its vassal forces will dearly pay for the harshest sanctions and pressure and reckless military provocations."

According to CNN's Situation Room's (8/11, 6:18 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) Will Ripley, Trump's demand for an answer from Kim has thus far gone unanswered, and a recent North Korean statement omitted any mention of its "recent rhetoric" on Guam or any "direct response to President Trump like earlier this week. We haven't seen that kind of response from North Korea today. Also there are no indications, no imminent indications of a North Korean missile launch according to US intelligence. So at this point, North Korea is quiet. And what does that mean? We have to, of course, watch their words, but we also have to watch very closely what their actions are going to be."

Correspondent Will Ripley said as of Friday evening, CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:06 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) "did see statements from North Korea threatening to make the United States – the mainland – a stage for nuclear war, saying that President Trump is pushing the Korean Peninsula to the brink of nuclear war." Noticeably, Ripley said "what we did not hear today was any further detail about [North Korea's] supposed plan to simultaneously launch four intermediate range ballistic missiles to Japan, within 20 miles of Guam," which is "home to key US military assets and more than 160,000 American citizens. And this could be because North Korea has given this plan to Kim Jong-un, as they said he would, for his review – or it could be they're dialing back the rhetoric a bit."

CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:49 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) correspondent Brian Todd reported "there certainly is" evidence from US intelligence officials and outside analysts suggesting Kim Jong-un's family has a history of aggression, and they are suggesting Trump should not "push this dangerous man into a corner." Furthermore, Todd said, "analysts say it is possible North Korea's elites may get nervous and move against Kim if he keeps taking his country from one crisis to another. But one expert points out Kim keeps his elites and generals under such close surveillance, it's tough for them to gather forces against him." Todd added that Kim "has two sisters," and many "observers believe those are possibly the only people around him who he can really trust."

Trump Retweets US PACOM Pledging USAF Bombers On Guam "Stand Ready" To Support USFK. Politico (8/11, Nelson) reports that Trump on Friday "retweeted a post from U.S. Pacific Command that featured images of U.S. military aircraft and a message that '#USAF B-1B Lancer #bombers on Guam stand ready to fulfill USFK's #FightTonight mission if called upon to do so.'" Politico notes "USAF is an abbreviation for the U.S. Air Force and USFK stands for U.S. Forces Korea."

The Washington Post (8/11, Lamothe) reports the President's "message, including the dramatic hashtag, may sound ominous to the uninitiated. But combined with comments Thursday from Defense Secretary Jim Mattis and decades of history between North Korea and the United States, it suggests that while the present situation between Pyongyang and Washington is quite serious, Pacific Command is more signaling its readiness to fight if need be than spoiling for a battle within days." The CBS Evening News (8/11, story 3, 1:20, Mason) noted "American B-1 bombers flew from Guam to the Korean Peninsula last month in a show of force after the North's last ICBM launch."

Meanwhile, the CBS Evening News (8/11, story 2, 2:05, Mason) national security correspondent David Martin also reported, "When it comes to North Korea, the US military has been 'locked and loaded' for years. The motto of the 28,000 American troops in South Korea, as well as long-range bombers based 2,000 miles away on Guam, is 'fight tonight,' meaning be ready for an attack that could come with little or no warning." Martin added US officials say that if North Korea "fired a missile at the American homeland or a US military base overseas, the Pentagon would first try to shoot it down, and second, retaliate with an attack of its own, perhaps with a cyber weapon. In the unlikely event the North used a nuclear weapon, the US would mount a much more devastating attack." A New York Times (8/11, Doyle) analysis also considers how the US could intercept a ballistic missile bound for Guam or the continental US.

Administration "Quietly" Conducting Back Channel Negotiation With North Korea. According to the AP (8/11, Pennington), "the Trump administration has been quietly engaged in back channel diplomacy with North Korea for several months, addressing Americans imprisoned in the communist country and deteriorating relations between the long-time foes." The AP reports "people familiar with the contacts say the interactions have done nothing thus far to quell tensions over North Korea's nuclear weapons and missile advances, which are now fueling fears of military confrontation. But they say the behind-the-scenes discussions could still be a foundation for more serious negotiation." The AP adds that US officials say "the diplomatic contacts are occurring regularly between Joseph Yun, the U.S. envoy for North Korea policy, and Pak Song Il, a senior North Korean diplomat at the country's U.N. mission." However, Trump told reporters on Friday, "We don't want to talk about progress, we don't want to talk about back channels" and the State Department and White House both "declined to comment on Yun's diplomacy."

Correspondent Rich Edson of Fox News' Special Report (8/11, 6:11 p.m. EDT, Baier) noted Tillerson just returned from a diplomatic trip to Asia, and is "focused on North Korea while the president was conducting his own diplomacy from home." Steve Hayes of the Weekly Standard told Fox News' Special Report (8/11, 6:34 p.m. EDT, Baier) that Trump "brings a couple advantages to the debate, a global debate of North Korea. He is not going to settle for the failed diplomacy on North Korea that we've seen from three successive Administrations" in "the past 25 plus years." Hayes added that "there is a believability to the threats." Byron York of the Washington Examiner said Trump and Tillerson have seemingly adopted a "good cop, bad cop thing" over "the last several days," which is "consistent with stressing diplomatic solutions." Chief foreign affairs correspondent Andrea Mitchell of NBC Nightly News (8/11, story 3, 2:20, Holt) similarly stated, "The secretary of state has been playing good cop to the President's bad cop when it comes to talks." In video footage, Tillerson confirmed, "We have other means of communication open to them, to certainly hear from them if they have a desire to want to talk."

However, while The Hill (8/11, Fabian) acknowledges that "Tillerson has expressed openness to negotiations with Pyongyang if the authoritarian regime ceases ballistic missile tests," he "made enemies within the administration over his approach." The Hill highlights that Sebastian Gorka, a deputy assistant to the President, on Thursday "knocked Tillerson for offering a softer message than Trump on North Korea" as "nonsensical."

Pentagon: US-South Korea To Stage Annual Military Exercise Later This Month. Reuters (8/11, Ali) reports a Pentagon spokesman announced Friday that the annual joint US-South Korean military exercise, called Ulchi-Freedom Guardian, "is expected to go ahead as originally scheduled and will start on Aug. 21."

Guam Prepares Ahead Of Possible North Korean Attack. NBC Nightly News (8/11, story 2, 2:45, Holt) reported the "ramped-up rhetoric is being closely followed in Guam, the US territory that sits in striking distance of North Korea. Tonight, the 160,000 US citizens on the island have been given some grim warnings on what to do should the worst-case scenario occur, after North Korea threatened to land missiles just off Guam's coast." Correspondent Miguel Almaguer said that as tourists enjoy "the sun-drenched beaches," Homeland Security officials are issuing "stark warnings – what to do if North Korea carries out its threat to lob four ballistic missiles in this direction. In the event of a missile attack, 'do not look at the flash or fireball – it can blind you,' 'take cover under a concrete structure or below ground,' 'lie flat on the ground and cover your head – it could take 30 seconds or more for blast wave to hit,' and if caught outside, 'shower with lots of soap and shampoo to help remove radioactive contamination.'" The AP (8/11, Kelleher) and Reuters (8/11, Chiacu) report Guam's Office of Civil Defense on Friday began distributing the fact sheets titled "Preparing for an Imminent Missile Threat."

ABC World News Tonight's (8/11, story 2, 1:15, Vega) Jim Avela explained, "North Korea is four hours away by plane from here, but just 14 minutes by ballistic missile. Today on the island known as the 'tip of the spear,' families fully aware they are in the middle of two nuclear nations." He added that "Guam is always a target because of the military bases here, but this time, it's different because it's a very specific threat with a specific date in mid-August. And you can see from the local paper, Guam is taking this threat seriously." Guam Gov. Eddie Baza Calvo said, "We're staying calm, living our lives, but yeah, at the same time, making preparations."

The Wall Street Journal (8/11, Craymer) reports Calvo also said Guam is in "typhoon alley," so the island's residents are used to preparing for threats. He added, "Our buildings standards are the best in the U.S. – they're built out of concrete and reinforced steel." Calvo acknowledged, "The worst-case scenario for my community is obviously a missile attack, particularly if they had a nuclear payload," but he asserted, "I think that would be catastrophic not only for Guam but for East Asia."

"Amid fears over potential warfare," the AP (8/11, Bordallo, Vejpongsa) "asked several Guam residents what they want to know about the situation and what they want the people of North Korea and the United States to know about Guam," and although the New York Times (8/11, Ives) reports "some Guam residents told reporters that they worried what might happen if North Korea's leader, Kim Jong-un, were actually to follow through" on his threat, scientists in Guam "have at least one other major threat in mind: climate change." The Times adds that "like other Pacific islands, Guam may be affected in the coming decades as climate change prompts shifts in weather, temperature and oceanic acidity, according to the Environmental Protection Agency." In interviews with the Times, the "experts said...that the primary consequences may include people suffering heat stress because of an increase in heat waves, a rise in the intensity of tropical storms, and the damage or destruction of Guam's exceptionally biodiverse coral reefs."

Meanwhile, Washington Post (8/11, Park) social media editor Gene Park, a Guamanian, laments that "lots of people are asking 'What is Guam?'" but "nobody is asking 'Who is Guam?'" Park contends "the media has been sketching a caricature of sorts describing the people of Guam" this week because "they are powerless. Their voices are heard only whenever North Korea rattles its sword." Park argues Guam is "America's afterthought."

Moran Calls For Classified Briefing On North Korea, As Cicilline Urges Ryan To End Recess Early Over Threat. The Hill (8/11, Carney) "Floor Action" blog reports Sen. Jerry Moran, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Military Construction, Veterans Affairs, and Related Agencies, told KMAN-AM on Friday that he has asked the Administration to give him a classified briefing on North Korea in the coming weeks for "details on both the 'economic situation' in North Korea as well as potential military options and 'capabilities.'" He said, "What are our capabilities of taking out ... the silos, the locations of where these devices are, are they spread across the country, what do we know?" Moran added, "What are our capabilities for missile defense? ... Do we have the ability to bring that [North Korean] missile down before it does damage to the United States or our allies?"

Meanwhile, The Hill (8/11, Bowden) reports Rep. David Cicilline, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, sent a letter Friday to House Speaker Ryan asking him to "immediately" reconvene the House in the face of escalating tension between the U.S. and North Korea." Cicilline said, "In light of the ongoing standoff between the United States and North Korea, as well as President Trump's reckless words, I ask that you immediately call the House of Representatives back into session to debate legislation prohibiting the U.S. from conducting a preemptive nuclear strike without prior congressional authorization." The Hill adds Cicilline also "accused the president of making 'a dangerous situation even worse' in the Korean Peninsula with his promise that North Korea would face 'fire and fury' if it continued to threaten the U.S. and its allies."

Rep. Gregory Meeks, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, told CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:08 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that while Trump is "drawing red lines," he is "also acting like a child. When you look at Kim Jong-un, we don't go down to his level. That's what they've been doing forever." Meeks added Trump is "supposed to be the leader of the free world." Meeks also said Trump's "credibility is shot with reference to the North Koreans and the rest of the world in this sense. Listen, everybody knows how strong the United States of America is and the military fire power we have. Everybody knows." Meeks added that he hoped Tillerson, McMaster, and Haley would explain to Trump "in terms he will understand that he's being unpresidential, and he's not helping the scenario and in fact, endangering."

The Hill (8/11, Greenwood) reports Rep. Ted Lieu, a colonel in the Air Force Reserves, on Friday also "slammed President Trump's rhetoric toward North Korea as 'reckless' and urged him to pursue a diplomatic solution to Washington's escalating tensions with Pyongyang." In a video posted on Twitter by progressive advocacy group VoteVets, Lieu said, "We need to engage in diplomacy. That's the one thing that Donald Trump has not yet done." He added, "before the president takes us down the dark and bloody path of a catastrophic war, he needs to first engage in diplomacy. ... He owes that to the American people and I call on the president to do that first before issuing provocative and senseless and reckless statements."

US Allies, China, Russia Urge Trump To Proceed Carefully With North Korea Threats. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (8/11, A1, Deyoung, Wagner, Johnson) reports "calls for more intense diplomacy on North Korea vied Friday with threats of force, with little sense of what strategy would prevail in Washington or Pyongyang or which leader would blink first." The New York Times (8/11, Chan) reports German Chancellor Angela Merkel and other world leaders "expressed alarm on Friday at the bellicose language emanating from North Korea and the United States, but also [signaled] support for President Trump, as they sought to allay their citizens' fears of a nuclear war on the Korean Peninsula." The Times adds that "among America's allies, Australia was perhaps the most decisive in denouncing North Korea's weapons program." While Merkel "said diplomacy offered the only way out of the crisis," Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull asserted his country stands "shoulder-to-shoulder with the United States."

However, the New York Times (8/11, Sang-Hun) reports South Korea on Friday said that "the White House had agreed not to do anything on the Korean Peninsula that would catch the South off guard." Chung Eui-yong, the top national security adviser for South Korean President Moon Jae-in, spoke with McMaster by phone for 40 minutes on Friday morning. A spokesman for Moon said, "Both South Korea and the United States reaffirmed their promise that as they take step-by-step measures to ensure their security and the safety of their peoples, they will coordinate with each other closely and transparently."

The New York Times (8/11, Soble) reports Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe has been put in "a tough spot," as Trump has become "an American president who seems overtly eager to confront their mutual adversary, North Korea." Although "the latest escalation of tensions might seem to play into Mr. Abe's hands," the Times says that "Trump's combative language on North Korea makes matters trickier for Mr. Abe." The Times adds that because "North Korea's neighbors would probably bear the brunt of its attacks," in both Japan and South Korea, "support for military action against the North is low," which Trump's rhetoric "is hardly helping to change."

Meanwhile, Reuters (8/11, Solovyov) reports Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov "said on Friday the risks of a military conflict over North Korea's nuclear program are very high, and Moscow is deeply worried by the mutual threats being traded by Washington and Pyongyang." Lavrov stated, "Unfortunately, the rhetoric in Washington and Pyongyang is now starting to go over the top. We still hope and believe that common sense will prevail." He added, "Direct threats of using force are heard. ... The talk (in Washington) is that there must be a preventive strike made on North Korea, while Pyongyang is threatening to carry out a missile strike on the U.S. base in Guam. These (threats) continue non-stop, and they worry us a lot."

However, the Washington Post (8/11, Denyer) reports the Global Times, a Chinese state-owned newspaper, warned in a Friday editorial that "China won't come to North Korea's help if it launches missiles threatening U.S. soil and there is retaliation," but Beijing "would intervene if Washington strikes first." The Post adds "the Global Times newspaper is not an official mouthpiece of the Communist Party, but in this case its editorial probably does reflect government policy, experts said." Nonetheless, Reuters (8/11, Wen) reports Chinese tourists appear to be "undeterred by escalating tensions between Pyongyang and Washington rattling nerves" and continue to travel to North Korea. Reuters adds "tour operators said their industry remains robust."

Kissinger, Panetta, Mudd, Bolton, Gore Discuss Trump's Options On North Korea. In a Wall Street Journal (8/11, Kissinger) op-ed, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger lauds the UN Security Council for passing new sanctions on North Korea earlier this month, but warns the time for waiting is over and action is necessary to stop Kim from developing a full-scale nuclear capacity. While he urges the Administration to embrace restraint, Kissinger argues the US should not rule out the use of military force against Pyongyang. He also calls for China, South Korea, and Japan to step up and participate in the peace process.

Former Defense Secretary Leon Panetta told CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 6:22 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that Trump's rhetoric "raises a lot of concern," and that the North Korean threat poses "possibly the most serious crisis involving a potential nuclear war since the Cuban missile crisis." He said Trump must "speak in a steady and calm and stable and responsible way, because the rhetoric that's going on is simply fueling this situation and creating something that concerns me, which is that at some point there is a miscalculation, a mistake." Panetta continued that "one of the things we've learned over 60 years in dealing with various North Korean dictators is that you can't outbully a bully. And the reality is that rather than engaging in this kind of loose talk, which I think, very frankly, undermines the power and prestige of the United States of America," that "the rest of the world" is simultaneously "listening and trying to figure out what is going on."

Panetta added he finds "it hard to believe that countries throughout the world are not deeply concerned about what is happening here," because they "see the prospect of two countries, because of miscalculation, because of words, because of a misstep, that may wind up in a nuclear war, potential for a nuclear war. Nobody in the world wants that to happen. Nobody. And for that reason, I think there are a lot of nervous world leaders in countries around the world that are trying to figure out just exactly what's going to happen here. And I would certainly include Japan and South Korea and the countries in the South Pacific being worried about just exactly what's going to happen."

On CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:37 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), Philip Mudd, a former deputy director of the CIA's Counterterrorist Center and the FBI's National Security Branch as well as a former Director for Gulf Affairs on the National Security Council, said he does not believe Trump "is losing traction" on the matter, and "we have an end game." Senior political analyst Mark Preston said Jong-un's unpredictability constitutes the "big wildcard" right now. Mudd also acknowledged that intelligence on the North Korean threat "is difficult intelligence to acquire," because it entails "technical information" about a missile launch, which is "an intelligence bonanza" and "not golden intelligence." Second, "North Koreans don't get out of North Korea much," and finally, "I think people in this country don't understand well the power of propaganda." Mudd added that Trump is endangering national security because in his social media actions, he "threatening a fourth-rate national power and ensuring Kim Jong-un realizes the President is going to elevate his profile internationally by engaging in this game every day."

Meanwhile, The Hill (8/11, Delk) reports former Vice President Al Gore told Newsweek on Friday that Trump "can't be blamed" for the tensions with North Korea. Gore asserted, "I think it's only fair to point out he inherited this crisis." He added, "The previous three presidents were not able to find an adequate solution, so he can't be blamed for all of this." However, Gore warned Trump's "intemperate comments on North Korea were really unwise."

Former UN Ambassador John Bolton in a Breitbart (8/11, Hayward) interview "proposed reunification as the solution to the North Korean nuclear missile crisis." He said Trump "made it clear that this is a different president than the one that North Korea and China have faced for the last eight years," though Bolton cautioned "there's a limit to" the President's rhetoric, as Trump should understand that the more he "makes these kinds of remarks, it gets harder and harder to back away from a very tough stance without risking grave damage to his credibility." According to Bolton, "No amount of negotiation is going to talk North Korea out of it. We've tried that, mistakenly in my view, for 25 years. It's failed." He added, "Either we do something dramatically different diplomatically – my proposal is to convince China to reunite the Korean Peninsula – then you're down to military action. Nobody wants it, but nobody wants to be in the position Trump finds himself in after 25 years of failure."

WPost, Columnists, Analysts Consider Trump's Response To North Korea. The Washington Post (8/11) editorializes that President Trump ultimately has two options for dealing with North Korea and its leader, Kim Jong Un: "to live with a nuclear North Korea, as we have long lived with a nuclear China, hoping to deter its use of nuclear weapons by assuring Mr. Kim that his regime's destruction would immediately ensue. The other is to assemble a coalition of nations to impose economic sanctions sufficiently punitive and targeted at the regime that Mr. Kim decides he would be better off making a deal." The Post contends "it is worth trying the latter before accepting the former," but for this "to be successful, such a strategy also would require patience, diplomacy, coherence and quiet strength. Just to list those qualities is to acknowledge how unlikely success seems at this moment."

New York Times columnist Thomas Friedman said on CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:20 p.m. EDT, Blitzer), "I don't object to the President doing a little madman game here with the North Koreans. It's clearly got their attention," and appears aimed at compelling "the Chinese to act, because they really have the greatest leverage." Ultimately, however, "it's got to be connected to a diplomatic pathway, to a solution. The question is, is it?" Friedman explained Pyongyang will not likely offer a unilateral surrender, so "what's not clear to me here" is what Trump will offer in exchange. Friedman added (8/11, 5:27 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that Tillerson, McMaster, and Haley are "serious people," but "what worries me" is whether they constitute a team with "a coherent strategy" because "you see them often out in multiple directions."

Bloomberg View (8/11, Lake) columnist Eli Lake contends that "the most depressing aspect of the current North Korean crisis is that even if Donald Trump wins, he loses." Lake suggests "The president's recent bellicosity aims for deterrence and leverage," as "in substance, if not style, this is very similar to how past administrations have approached the Hermit Kingdom: threaten, cajole and bargain." While he acknowledges "the critics of war are correct. A pre-emptive strike is not worth the risk," Lake asserts "neither is another deal" for several reasons, namely that "the North Koreans don't keep their promises." Lake argues that "traditional 'regime change' should be off the table. But this should not stop the U.S. and its allies from helping to create conditions for the day when Koreans can take their country back. This requires some patience and imagination."

In her New York Times (8/11, Collins) column, Gail Collins states that "I believe I speak for a great many Americans when I say I am scared as hell of a confrontation between the head of the strongest nation in the world, who once wanted to play the president in 'Sharknado 3,' and a nuclear power dictator whose favorite house guest is Dennis Rodman." Collins contends "Let's just pray his current bellicosity is all hot air and no balloon" before concluding "our best hope [is] that the guy with the nuclear football is not necessarily the same person as the one sending out loopy messages on his smartphone. People who've dealt with the private Trump often say they found him less crazy than the public version."

In his New York Times (8/11, Egan) column, Timothy Egan urges Trump on behalf of the residents of California, Oregon, Washington state, Alaska, Hawaii, and Guam to embrace restraint because "We West Coasters can't go our separate way on nukes, as we're doing on climate change, vowing to adhere to the Paris accord even as you turn your back on the rest of the world. We don't have a shield. We don't control the nuclear code." He adds "sanctions, like those just approved by the United Nations, are a good deterrence" and although "diplomacy is hard. ... it beats the alternative."

Trump To Launch Investigation Of China Trade Policies Amid Growing Frustration With Beijing Over North Korea.

White House officials announced Saturday that President Trump this week will direct USTR Lighthizer to probe China's trade policies for intellectual property violations. Media coverage, which includes more than seven and a half minutes on the network newscasts, was also extensive in print and online. Reporting suggested that the investigation is an attempt by Trump to pressure China into taking a more forceful stance toward North Korea while appealing to the President's base at the same time.

In a front-page article on Trump's "diplomatic gamble," the New York Times (8/12, A1, Perlez, Baker) says that the President is "seeking to enlist China as a peacemaker in the bristling nuclear-edged dispute with North Korea at the very moment he plans to ratchet up conflict with Beijing over trade issues that have animated his political rise." In a separate article, the New York Times (8/12, Thrush, Rappeport) reports "Trump is planning to jab, not punch, China for allegedly stealing intellectual property from American businesses, part of an effort to fulfill his hard-edge campaign promises on trade without alienating Beijing during the crisis over North Korea's nuclear weapons program."

The Wall Street Journal (8/12, Schlesinger) reports White House officials announced the President will sign a directive on Monday ordering Lighthizer to begin the formal probe, which will investigate if the Chinese government and state-owned companies stole or otherwise coerced US companies into giving up patents and other IP. The Washington Post (8/12, Swanson) reports on its front page that the probe "could result in severe trade penalties, a threat the United States could wield to pressure Beijing into improving its economic behavior and doing more to contain North Korea's nuclear threat." According to the Post, the investigation "would seek to address what the U.S. business community has described as flagrant trade violations by China" and "may also prove to be a source of leverage to push China to do more to help contain a rising security threat from North Korea, which counts Beijing as its only powerful ally." However, analysts warned the Post that "the measure could also backfire, resulting in more hostility and tension between the world's two largest economies at a time when their cooperation is critical to a diplomatic resolution on North Korea."

While Reuters (8/12, Wroughton) reports an Administration official "insisted diplomacy over North Korea and the potential trade probe were 'totally unrelated,' saying the trade action was not a pressure tactic," Politico (8/12, Restuccia) states that the investigation "will mark the escalation of Trump's increasingly aggressive posture toward China." Politico adds that in response to North Korea's belligerence in recent weeks, "Trump has raged behind the scenes and in public, urged on by China hawks in his administration like trade adviser Peter Navarro and chief strategist Steve Bannon."

Media Analyses: Trump Unnerves Allies With Comments On North Korea. In an analysis, the AP (8/12, Lemire) says Trump thus far has "responded to perhaps the sternest international test of his presidency in precisely the way that some supporters had hoped and critics feared." The AP adds "the mix of plain-spoken bluster, spontaneity and norm-breaking risk defined his political rise, and it's guided his approach on North Korea. When the isolated communist nation punched, Trump tried to punch back harder, as he did in campaign debates. But this was not a Florida debate stage or a low-stakes celebrity Twitter spat of the sort Trump perfected before entering politics."

In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (8/12, A1, Thrush, Baker) says the President's "four-day fusillade of apocalyptic threats against North Korea [has] left many in Washington and capitals throughout the Pacific wondering whether it was more method or madness." According to the Times, "It was not the first time in his unconventional presidency that Mr. Trump had unnerved friend and foe alike, but never before had it seemed so consequential." The Times adds that some of the President's advisers "quietly asked each other in recent days if Mr. Trump's bellicosity toward North Korea is part of some thought-out strategy that they have not been told about or what they suspect is just more on-the-fly instinct. But some aides have found themselves surprised at other moments when Mr. Trump has done something unexpected and seemingly random, only to explain his thinking afterward in a way that indicated more calculation than they had thought."

USA Today (8/12, Maresca) reports that as the President "ramps up his bellicose rhetoric toward North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, leaders and ordinary citizens across Asia are watching with various states of alarm, unsure which man poses a greater danger to their safety." USA Today states that in Seoul, South Korea, "many say they aren't particularly concerned about the escalating threats coming from the North Korean government, which has long menaced its next-door neighbor," but in the Philippines, "many residents are watching the situation with concern." USA Today adds that "other reaction around the Asian region was a mixture of wariness and confusion."

In her New York Times (8/12, Dowd) column, Maureen Dowd calls the "precipice of bluster, threatening exchanges between" President Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un "particularly disturbing because they mirror each other in so many unhinged ways." She says much "of what Trump does may be loudmouth blather," but the North Korean threat "is real" and poses "the most severe test since the Cuban missile crisis."

New York Times (8/12, Douthat) columnist Ross Douthat outlines "the sequence of events that gave us the Cuban crisis," and posits President Trump's "showdown" with North Korea's Kim Jong-un "isn't the first time a reckless, lecherous U.S. president obsessed with his own vigor and out of his depth on foreign policy faced off against a thirtysomething dictator armed with nukes." The US ultimately "survived the Cuban missile crisis," Douthat says, so "there's probably a way to get through this one, too." He acknowledges "manifold" differences in the two scenarios, and suggests if the President averts "war, it will be because Trump is fundamentally a bluffer, who will issue threats on Twitter but won't overrule his advisers if they tell him not to give an order that will leave hundreds of thousands dead."

Xi Urges Trump To Embrace Restraint Against North Korea. Reuters (8/8, Oliphant, Blanchard) reports Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping spoke in a phone call Friday. According to Reuters, Xi "said there needs to be a peaceful resolution to the North Korean nuclear issue," telling Trump that "he urged all sides to avoid words or action that raise tensions." In a statement, the Chinese Foreign Ministry quoted Xi as saying, "Concerned parties must exercise restraint and avoid remarks and actions that escalate tensions on the Korean peninsula."

Reuters (8/12, O'Brien) reports the White House in a statement said Trump and Xi "reiterated their mutual commitment to denuclearize the Korean peninsula" and they "agreed that the recent adoption of a United Nations Security Council resolution on North Korea was an important step toward achieving peace and stability on the peninsula." The White House said Trump and Xi "agreed North Korea must stop its provocative and escalatory behavior," adding, the "relationship between the two presidents is an extremely close one, and will hopefully lead to a peaceful resolution of the North Korea problem."

NBC Nightly News (8/12, story 4, 2:25, Diaz-Balart) said many believe "China, with its strong ties in North Korea, may be key to reining in the regime." Reporting from Dandong, China, correspondent Janis Mackey Frayer explained, "North Korea's economic lifeline – the bridge connecting it to China. More than three-quarters of trade with the regime passes here." Mackey Frayer said as "severe United Nations sanctions could slash a third of North Korea's export revenue, at the choke point, this single-lane bridge, is business as usual. 'It's normal to trade with North Korea,' says this business owner. 'There's nothing to fear.' But these days, tension is running high. Deep suspicion of foreign journalists forced us to keep a low profile. As North Korea's biggest ally and trading partner, China's pressure is crucial. Those sanctions alone have never worked."

Washington Post (8/12, Von Drehle) columnist David Von Drehle says the North Korean crisis "is very much China's moment," and how it "handles the brinkmanship of Kim Jong Un is the most important test the Chinese have yet faced in their decades-long effort to take a place in the first rank of world powers." He explains the challenge will measure Beijing's reliability, economic strength, and "readiness to lead." Von Drehle says President "Trump's bellicose tone in recent days has been regrettable, but the underlying content of his words is entirely true: The United States possesses the power to destroy North Korea many times over," but in this crisis, "it is China that stands at the crossroads." Beijing's failure, Von Drehle cautions, will "set back China's rise for decades to come."

Trump, France's Macron Discuss Additional UN Sanctions Against North Korea. Errol Barnett of the CBS Weekend News (8/12, story 2, 2:00, Ninan) reported President Trump is "considering an additional sanctions package" against North Korea "that, in his words, would be as strong as they get." On Saturday, Trump spoke "with French President Emmanuel Macron about enforcing existing UN sanctions, as well as working together to achieve North Korean de-nuclearization."

Reuters (8/12, Rucker) reports the White House said in a statement that Trump and Macron "discussed the need to confront the increasingly dangerous situation associated with North Korea's destabilizing and escalatory behavior." North Korea Issues Another Threat Toward US.

ABC World News Tonight's (8/12, story 5, 3:10, Vega) chief global affairs correspondent Martha Raddatz reported that on Saturday, after almost "a week of threats on both sides," North Korean leader Kim Jong-un issued "a new warning" that was "clearly a response to President Trump's string of warnings." North Korean state-run media cautioned, "If the Trump administration does not want the American empire to meet its tragic doom...they had better talk and act properly."

The Washington Times (8/12, Taylor) reports Pyongyang's official KCNA news agency released the report "a day after – and appeared to be a response to – international headlines that Mr. Trump had made Friday by asserting that the U.S. is 'locked and loaded' and will take action against the regime of North Korean leader Kim Jong-un 'if he utters one threat.'"

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (8/12, A1, Fifield) reports "the Kim regime has a history of making bellicose threats that it cannot or does not make good on. This may well be one of those cases. Or it might not." According to the Post, "The problem with trying to figure out what Kim might do in a situation like this is severely complicated by the fact that the outside world knows almost nothing about him."

Trump Says US Stands With Guam "1,000 Percent," Predicts North Korea Threats Will Increase Tourism "Tenfold." The New York Times (8/12, Cagurangan) reports President Trump on Friday called Guam Gov. Eddie Calvo and told him he predicts the threats from North Korea will help the island territory increase tourism "tenfold." In a recording posted "on the Republican governor's Facebook page and other social media accounts," Trump said, "I have to tell you, you have become extremely famous all over the world. They are talking about Guam; and they're talking about you." The President added when that it comes to tourism, "I can say this: You're going to go up, like, tenfold with the expenditure of no money." Trump also asserted, "You are safe. We're with you 1,000 percent."

The Washington Post (8/12, Wagner) reports Calvo told Trump that "as the governor of Guam, representing the people of Guam, and as an American citizen, I have never felt more safe or so confident, with you at the helm." Breitbart (8/12, Spiering) reports he also "praised Trump for his leadership, lamenting the criticism coming from Washington, DC, bureaucrats and the media." Calvo said that despite "all the criticism going on over there, from a guy that's being targeted, we need a president like you, so I'm just so thankful, and I'm glad you're holding the helm, sir."

However, the Washington Post (8/12, Phillips, Wagner) reports "in talking about the heightened international attention to the island, Margaret Metcalfe, director of Calvo's Washington office, said: 'None of this is good publicity.'" In an interview, Metcalfe told the Post on Saturday, "I'm just saying that is the result of what's happening. Nobody asked for it. Nobody wanted it. It happened. We pray day and night. ... And we hope that calmness prevail and balance prevail. We certainly don't want to do anything that would put our families at risk." Metcalfe added, "I don't think anyone can really predict what our president may offer, because he is one of those thinkers outside the box. But right now, I can tell you, in Guam, our flights are arriving from South Korea and Japan. ... Tourists are coming as normal even with all these fights from the media."

USAF Commander: Guam Air Base Prepared To Respond To North Korean Attack. Vladimir Dunthiers, in a segment for the CBS Weekend News (8/12, story 3, 2:55, Ninan) "CBSN: On Assignment" special series, reported the Andersen Air Force Base in Guam, approximately 2,100 miles from North Korea, "has the largest stockpile of fuel and munitions in the Air Force" and "can respond to threats from the Middle East, Asia, and across the Pacific." Col. Sam White of the US Air Force said troops at the base "stand ready to respond to a wide range of things at the President's call. That's the reason why we have the continuous bomber presence mission, is to give the President of the United States sovereign options against threats to the US. So we're ready today." Dunthiers continued, "Due to North Korea's difficult mountainous terrain and deep bunkers, these types of munitions could be of vital importance in the event of a conflict."

Meanwhile, a Wall Street Journal (8/11, Cheng) analysis examines how South Korea would defend its 25 million citizens living in Seoul against an attack from North Korea. The AP (8/12, Riechmann) reports that although US intelligence officials "are pretty sure North Korea can put a nuclear warhead on an intercontinental missile that could reach the United States," experts "aren't convinced the bomb could make it all that way intact," as "they cite lingering questions about North Korean leader Kim Jong Un's nuclear know-how."

US Geological Survey

With 8 Threatening Volcanoes, USGS Says California Deserves Close Monitoring.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer (8/11, Ellison) reports "the many famous, prominent and dangerous volcanoes of the West Coast will be the subject of field trips and much discussion" at this upcoming annual meeting of the International Association of Volcanology and Chemistry of the Earth's Interior taking place in Portland, Oregon from August 14 to 18. According to the story, USGS says there are eight volcanoes in California worthy of close monitoring, and "among the 18 'very high threat volcanoes,' 11 are along the Cascade Range in three states (Alaska and Hawaii have the others)."

Trump, White House Under Bipartisan Criticism For Response To Charlottesville Violence.

Second-day coverage of President Trump's response to Saturday's violence in Charlottesville, Virginia was harshly negative, with near-universal criticism of the President's initial statement and many questions about why Sunday's White House follow-up was not made in the President's name. The two networks that ran Sunday evening newscasts opened with reports on the violence itself, but then ran stories on the bipartisan criticism of the President's remarks. Republican Twitter criticism dissipated somewhat on Sunday, but pundits and Democrats remained vocal. Brian Stelter of CNN's Reliable Sources (8/13) summed up the general mood: "You could make the case that Saturday was the worst day of the Trump presidency, with so many commentators – including major Republican commentators and GOP senators and congressmen – criticizing the President for his half-hearted response.”

ABC World News Tonight (8/13, story 3, 2:55, Llamas) reported that the President is “facing intense backlash for his response to all the violence, refusing to specifically condemn the hatred unleashed by the white supremacists.” ABC’s David Wright: “Today, the White House struggled to shore up the President Trump’s equivocal response to Charlottesville. ... ‘Of course that includes white supremacists, KKK, neo-Nazi and all extremist groups,’ an unnamed White House official explained today. But Trump has yet to call out those groups for inciting the violence in Virginia.”

NBC Nightly News (8/13, story 2, 2:40, Snow) reported, “President Trump called for unity after yesterday’s violence, but for some including members of his own party, the message fell flat, and today many called for a more forceful denouncement of white nationalism.” NBC’s Kelly O’Donnell: “For a presidency forged by blunt talk, what Donald Trump did not say is politically deafening. ... The President seemed alone in spreading blame for the violence. His omission, choosing not to call out white supremacist groups, some known to support him. A failure, according to critics and many Republicans.”

The Washington Post (8/13, Johnson, Demirjian) reports that though the White House said that Trump “condemned ‘all forms of violence, bigotry and hatred’ that were on display in Charlottesville this weekend ‘of course that includes white supremacists, KKK, Neo-Nazi and all extremist groups,’” that “clarification stopped far short of what a growing number of Republicans have urged the president to do: directly call out and condemn white supremacy.”

The Wall Street Journal (8/13, Radnofsky, Michaels) reports that the White House statement was not attributed to any specific official. The Washington Examiner (8/13, Feldscher) reports that “the spokesperson refused to go on the record with his or her name and would not give reporters in New Jersey a reason why the statement could not be attributed.” Politico (8/13, Cook) reports that the “clarification came less than 24 hours after Trump seemingly blamed both white supremacists and counterprotesters for the vitriol and clashes.” Kaitlan Collins said on CNN’s Reliable Sources (8/13, Stelter), “Why not attribute that to a White House official like Sarah Huckabee Sanders or another spokesman or the President himself, if he really does condemn hatred in all forms including neo-Nazism, and the KKK, why not put your name on that statement?”

The AP (8/13, Lemire) reports that the White House “scrambled Sunday to elaborate on” the President’s response “as he came under bipartisan scolding for not clearly condemning white supremacists and other hate groups immediately after the altercations.” The President “remained out of sight and silent, save for a few retweets.” Bloomberg News (8/13, House, Talev, Epstein) reports the President “faced a second day of criticism after failing to personally denounce” the white supremacists.

The New York Times (8/13, Thrush) reports that “criticism” of the President “intensified on Sunday, with lawmakers from both parties calling on him to explicitly condemn the role of white racists and agitators affiliated with the so-called alt-right, some of whom brandished pro-Trump banners and campaign placards during [the] violent protests.” Dan Merica said on CNN’s New Day Sunday (8/13), “What the President didn’t say yesterday is what is getting the most attention. Yes, President Trump did condemn the violence, the hatred that we saw on the streets of Charlottesville yesterday, but he didn’t condemn the alt-right and white nationalists that really started a lot of that violence.”

The Los Angeles Times (8/13, King) writes, “Sometimes what President Trump doesn’t say causes his aides more headaches than things he does.” The White House “defended the president’s failure to explicitly condemn white supremacists” as “criticism of the president poured in for a second day, including from some GOP allies who added their voices to the chorus of opprobrium from Democrats.” Breitbart (8/13, Spiering) reports, “Media and political figures were furious after the president failed to specifically condemn the white nationalist forces that triggered the violent uproar.”

Julie Pace of the AP (8/13) writes, “Why doesn’t President Donald Trump just unequivocally condemn white supremacists? It’s a jarring question to ask about an American president. But it’s also one made unavoidable by Trump’s delayed, blame-both-sides response. ... At times, his approach has seemingly inflamed racial tensions in a deeply divided country while emboldening groups long in the shadows.” The Hill (8/13, Manchester) reports that the White House “was forced to clarify” the President’s response. Reuters (8/13, Simpson) and the Daily Caller (8/13, Bennett) also report on the White House statement.

E.J. Dionne writes in his Washington Post (8/13) column, “There are not, as Trump insisted Saturday, 'many sides' to questions that were settled long ago: Racism, anti-Semitism, discrimination and white supremacy are unequivocally wrong. A president who cannot bring himself to say this immediately and unequivocally squanders any claim to moral leadership."

Petula Dvorak writes in her Washington Post (8/13) column, "President Trump lit every one of those torches in Charlottesville. ... When the mob of white men marched in Charlottesville carrying flaming torches Friday night shouting 'Heil Trump' as the curtain-raiser for a day of violent clashes with counterprotesters that left three people dead, they showed the world that America is once again playing with fire. And Trump was the one with the match."

Kelly Jane Torrance of the Weekly Standard said on CNN's New Day Sunday (8/13), "We have been waiting for months for Donald Trump really, if not more than a year, to condemn white nationalism and to say these people say that they are doing it in my name and they say they are supporters of me. We've been waiting for him to strongly disavow them and he hasn't done it. And I think it's really about time for him to do so."

Anne Applebaum tweeted, "No post-hoc White House statement makes up for Trump's cowardice. We now know exactly who and what he fears to criticize." Perry Bacon Jr. of FiveThirtyEight tweeted, "If Bannon is telling Trump to go with this weekend's approach, that matters. But I think we are over-covering staff. Trump is the decider." Fox News' Jediah Bila tweeted, "Trump shouldn't only publicly condemn white supremacists, but outright reject their support. They should find no safe space in his realm."

Conservative writer Erick Erickson tweeted, "Never forget how Trump's media propagandists tried to excuse and give cover to the alt-right." Matt Fuller of the Huffington Post tweeted, "People Trump has criticized more harshly than neo-Nazis: -Mitch McConnell -POWs -A Gold Star family -The Pope." Bill Kristol tweeted, "WH staff told Trump they had to put out a statement, but couldn't prevail on him to say it himself, in the first person. A revealing moment." Jeremy Peters of the New York Times tweeted, "The right said Obama was soft on terror for not calling it out, blaming Islamists. By extension, Trump is being soft on white nationalism." Amanda Terkel of the Huffington Post tweeted, "Trump White House, basically: All violence matters."

Pence Denounces White Supremacists While Defending Trump. The Wall Street Journal (8/13, Radnofsky) reports under the headline "Pence Goes Beyond Trump In Condemning White Supremacists" that Vice President Pence, who is in Colombia, made a more forceful and explicit statement on Sunday evening. The Washington Times (8/13, Boyer) reports that Pence said, "We have no tolerance for hate and violence from white supremacists, neo-Nazis or the KKK. These dangerous fringe groups have no place in American public life and in the American debate, and we condemn them in the strongest possible terms." However, Pence "also criticized those who have accused Mr. Trump of not speaking out strongly enough," saying that "Trump on Saturday 'clearly and unambiguously condemned the bigotry, violence and hatred which took place on the streets of Charlottesville.'"

Politico (8/13, Cohen) reports that Pence "criticized the media for its coverage" of Trump's remarks. He said, "I take issue with the fact that many in the national media spent more time criticizing the President's words than they did criticizing those that perpetrated the violence to begin with." Tim Alberta of Politico tweeted, "Typical needle-threading from @VP: Takes it further than Trump, while clarifying that Trump himself went plenty far enough."

McMaster, Pompeo, Bossert Defend Trump's Statement. On ABC's This Week (8/13), National Security Adviser McMaster said, "The President called out anyone...responsible for" encouraging "this kind of bigotry and hatred, racism and violence." He added that he thought the President "was very clear on that." On NBC's Meet The Press (8/13, Todd), McMaster was asked why the President didn't single out the neo-Nazi protesters. McMaster said, "When he condemned bigotry and hatred on all sides, that includes them." He said what was "important to the president" was "to bring all Americans together." On CBS' Face The Nation (8/13, Dickerson), CIA Director Pompeo said that he believed the President had been specific in condemning bigotry, hatred, and violence.

The Washington Times (8/13, Wolfgang) reports that White House Homeland Security Adviser Bossert, appearing on CNN's State Of The Union, "said he was proud of the president's comments on Saturday." Bossert said, "I, for one, was with the President yesterday and proud of the fact he stood up and calmly looked into the camera and condemned this violence and bigotry in all its forms."

USA Today: Ivanka Trump Issued "More Pointed Assessment." USA Today (8/13, Collins) reports, "The day after deadly protests that occurred in Charlottesville, Va. following a 'Unite the Right' white nationalist rally, Ivanka Trump issued a more pointed assessment of blame than her father." She tweeted, "There should be no place in society for racism, white supremacy and neo-nazis." The Washington Post (8/13, Phillips) says that she "tweeted a reaction with a level of specificity that was absent in her father's statement."

Gardner, Graham Urge Stronger Statement From Trump. Sen. Cory Gardner said on CNN's State Of The Union (8/13, Tapper) that he sent his own message that the white supremacy is evil and asserted that the same message "must be acknowledged as such by the White House." He called the behavior at the protest for what it is: evil. He said, that Trump "should use this opportunity to say this is terrorism." Sen. Lindsey Graham said on Fox News Sunday (8/13, Wallace) that President Trump "missed an opportunity to be very explicit here." He said that the supremacist groups seem to think they have a friend in the White House and he urges "the President to dissuade these groups that he's their friend."

The Washington Times (8/13, Wolfgang) reports that Sens. Ted Cruz, Orrin Hatch, Marco Rubio and other Republicans "condemned the deadly demonstration. But Mr. Trump's handling of the situation fueled commentary that he is comfortable with the support of white nationalist groups, some of which praised his remarks." Politico (8/13, Cook) reports, "Republicans joined civil rights leaders and Democrats who reacted angrily" to Trump's initial statement, "just the latest example of members of his party starting to carefully take on a president whose words and actions many chose to overlook after his surprise 2016 victory."

However, Rep. Tom Garrett (R-VA), who represents Charlottesville, said on Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures, "I think we ought to, on both sides of the aisle, take him at face value right now and not criticize whether the condemnation was condemning enough or what have you. Let's find something to unite over."

House Democrats Continue Criticism Via Twitter. Several House Democrats posted critical tweets about Trump's response, while Republicans were largely quiet on Sunday after some critical tweets on Saturday. Rep. Don Beyer (D-VA) tweeted, "Donald Trump's staff asked him to personally deliver a statement denouncing white supremacists. He refused." Rep. Susan Davis (D-CA) tweeted, "Many sides? This is about one side emboldened by Trump's hateful rhetoric. Must keep standing against violence & bigotry." Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) tweeted, "There are many sides to @realDonaldTrump, but why does he appear beholden to David Duke and Vladimir Putin?"

Rep. Jacky Rosen (D-NV) tweeted, "The fact President Trump failed to explicitly condemn the white supremacist ideology behind this evil from day 1 is beyond shameful." Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) tweeted, "Mr President, call it what it is: radical white supremacist terror." The Washington Examiner (8/13, Lim) reports that Rep. Maxine Waters (D-CA) "excoriated President Trump on social media...saying the White House is now the 'White Supremacists' House." She tweeted, "Trump has made it clear – w/ Bannon & Gorka in the WH, & the Klan in the streets, it is now the White Supremacists' House."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/13) links the violence to the rise of identity politics, and writes that Democrats seemed more interested in tarring Trump this weekend than in addressing racial and ethnic divisions.

Scaramucci: Trump "Needed To Be Much Harsher." Anthony Scaramucci said on ABC's This Week (8/13), "I think he needed to be much harsher as it related to the white supremacists. With the moral authority of the presidency, you have to call that stuff out." The Washington Post (8/13, Phillips, Wagner) reports that Scaramucci said, "He likes doing the opposite of what the media thinks he's going to do. I think he's also of the impression that there's hatred on all sides, but I disagree with it."

NYTimes: Trump Was "Placating White Supremacists" With His Statement. The New York Times (8/13) editorializes, "Let's discard the fiction that President Trump wasn't placating white supremacists by responding so weakly. ... The neo-Nazis heard his message loud and clear." Trump "is alone in modern presidential history in his willingness to summon demons of bigotry and intolerance in service to himself." His "fear of naming the source of Saturday's violence sharply contrasts with his eagerness to call out Islamist terror."

WPost Analysis: White Supremacists "Loved Trump's Remarks." The Washington Post (8/13, Wang) reports under the headline "One Group Loved Trump's Remarks About Charlottesville: White Supremacists" that the President's "choice of words – and the silence that preceded them – are being cheered by at least a few groups of people: neo-Nazis and white nationalists." The Daily Stormer, "a neo-Nazi website...declared the president's words as a signal of tacit support for their side: 'Trump comments were good. He didn't attack us. He just said the nation should come together. Nothing specific against us.'" (The hacker collective Anonymous took control of the Daily Stormer early Monday, vowing to shut it down permanently.)

Charlottesville Mayor Says Trump Courted White Supremacists During Campaign. The

Washington Times (8/13, Wolfgang) reports that Charlottesville Mayor Michael Signer said Sunday that Trump “deserves at least some of the blame.” Signer said on CNN’s State Of The Union, “Look at the campaign he ran. Look at the intentional courting, on one hand, of all these white supremacists, white nationalists...and look on the other hand at the repeated failure to step up, condemn, denounce, silence, put to bed all of these different efforts, just like we saw yesterday. This isn’t hard.”

DOJ Opens Civil Rights Investigation Into Car Attack. The Washington Times (8/12, Noble) reports that the Justice Department has opened a civil rights investigation “into the circumstances under which a vehicle plowed into a crowd of people” protesting on Saturday. Twenty-year-old James Alex Fields has been charged “with second-degree murder and other crimes” in the death of 32-year-old Heather Heyer. The Washington Post (8/13, Shapiro, Silverman, Vozzella, Cox) reports that Fields “long sympathized with Nazi views and had stood with a group of white supremacists hours before Saturday’s bloody crash.” His former history teacher said that Fields “had espoused extremist ideals at least since high school.” The New York Daily News Monday cover features a picture of Fields with the headline “The Nazi Trump Won’t Call Out.”

ABC World News Tonight (8/13, lead story, 4:05, Llamas) and NBC Nightly News (8/13, lead story, 3:50, Snow) opened by summarizing Saturday’s events and Fields’ arrest. ABC World News Tonight (8/13, story 2, 3:00, Llamas), Reuters (8/13, Woodall), and the New York Times (8/13, Caron) profile Heyer.

The Washington Post (8/13, Schneider, Soong) reports, “Activists throughout the country...held vigils Sunday in response to” both the white supremacist rally and the ensuing violence; NBC Nightly News (8/13, story 3, 2:40, Snow) ran a feature on how tensions rose in Charlottesville in recent months.

McAuliffe Defends Police Response. The New York Times (8/13, Stolberg) reports, “Gov. Terry McAuliffe on Sunday strongly defended the police response to the violent demonstrations here on Saturday, saying that law enforcement authorities had done ‘great work’ in ‘a very delicate situation.’” McAuliffe said police “estimated that 80 percent of those at the white nationalists’ rally and counterprotests – including members of self-styled militias in camouflage gear – were armed, ‘yet not a shot was fired.’” He added, “You can’t stop some crazy guy who came here from Ohio and used his car as a weapon. He is a terrorist.”

Rally Organizer: “Violence Rules Over Speech” In Charlottesville. USA Today (8/13, Bacon) reports that Jason Kessler, the organizer of the Unite The Right rally, “tried to hold a news conference Sunday in front of Charlottesville City Hall – and it quickly descended into chaos.” He later tweeted, “I tried my best but once again violence rules over speech and ideas in #Charlottesville. The first amendment is finished it seems.” The Wall Street Journal (8/13, Kesling, Belkin) reports that Kessler was booed off stage as he tried to address reporters.

Virginia GOP Senate Candidate: “Let’s Condemn Both Sides.” The Washington Examiner (8/13, King) reports that Virginia Senate candidate Corey Stewart, a Republican, “said politicians and the media didn’t focus at all on violence perpetrated by left wing people counter-protesting a white supremacist rally.” He said, “You hear all this condemnation of neo-Nazis and all the people that came out there, and they should have been condemned. There are a whole lot of left-wing agitators that went down there. When we are condemning, let’s condemn both sides.”

The Washington Post (8/13, Vozzella, Nirappil) reports that Stewart “criticized fellow Republicans who condemned the white nationalists,” telling the Post, “All the weak Republicans, they couldn’t apologize fast enough. They played right into the hands of the left wing. Those [Nazi] people have nothing to do with the Republican Party. There was no reason to apologize.” The Washington Post (8/13, Weigel) reports that “alt-right” and “far-right media” have been warning of left-wing activists “as a rising danger to law and order, a justification for alt-right organizations to organize armed rallies.”

Twitter Account Working To Identify White Supremacist Demonstrators. The New York Post (8/13, Perez) reports, “White nationalists who appeared at the deadly demonstrations in Charlottesville are being outed on social media – with at least one being fired from their job after his name and picture was posted online.” The “Yes, You’re Racist” Twitter account, with more than 180,000 followers, has been working to identify participants in the demonstrations.

Seattle “Pro-Trump” Rally Met With Counter-Demonstrators. The Seattle Times (8/13) reports, “The pro-Trump Patriot Prayer group and counter-protesters held opposing demonstrations in downtown Seattle” on Sunday afternoon. The two groups “converged at Westlake Park where police reported stopping people carrying shields and backpacks. Officers spritzed several protesters with pepper spray.” NBC Nightly News (8/13, story 4, 1:30, Snow) reported on the protests.

Trump Condemns “Hatred, Bigotry” After Charlottesville Violence, But Fails To Blame White Nationalists.

After at least three people died and 19 others were wounded at a white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Virginia on Saturday, President Trump condemned the “egregious display of hatred, bigotry and violence on many sides, on many sides” in a speech and series of tweets. Media coverage, which included more than 21 minutes on the network newscasts, was also heavy in print and online. While Trump was lauded for calling for unity, reporting was generally critical of the President for not denouncing the white nationalists, neo-Nazis, and Ku Klux Klan members responsible for organizing the rally.

Typical of the coverage was the Washington Post (8/12, Wagner, Johnson), which says that Trump “condemned ‘in the strongest possible terms’ the spate of violence unfolding in Charlottesville and called for ‘a swift restoration of law and order’ – but avoided placing blame on any particular party for the hate-fueled upheaval.” Politico (8/12, Cook) similarly reports the President “never denounced by name the extremist group, or called their behavior unacceptable.” Politico adds that “the furthest Trump went in protesting the white nationalists’ ‘Unite the Right’ rally was to say that his administration wanted to ‘get the situation straightened out in Charlottesville and we want to study it and we want to see what we’re doing wrong as a country, where things like this can happen.’” The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports Trump said, “It’s been going on for a long time in our country. Not Donald Trump, not Barack Obama. This has been going on for a long, long time.”

Bloomberg News (8/12, House, Epstein) reports the President spoke at his golf club in Bedminster, New Jersey “after two days of violent protests capped by an incident, details of which are still emerging, where a car at the scene plowed into the crowd, leaving one person dead and the driver under arrest.” According to USA Today (8/12, Johnson), “Trump, interrupting a signing ceremony for legislation benefiting veterans...called the street clashes, ending with a car plowing through a group of counter-protesters, ‘very, very sad.’”

The Washington Times (8/12, Dinan) reports the President also “called for unity,” asserting, “the division must stop, and must stop right now.” The Wall Street Journal (8/12, Radnofsky) reports he added, “No matter our color, creed, religion or political party we are all Americans first.”

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (8/12, Blake) reports Trump “weighed in” earlier in the day on Twitter, saying, “We ALL must be united & condemn all that hate stands for. There is no place for this kind of violence in America. Lets come together as one!” The President continued, “Am in Bedminster for meetings & press conference on V.A. & all that we have done, and are doing, to make it better-but Charlottesville sad!” In another tweet, he said, “Deepest condolences to the families & fellow officers of the VA State Police who died today. You’re all among the best this nation produces.” Trump added, “Condolences to the family of the young woman killed today, and best regards to all of those injured, in Charlottesville, Virginia. So sad!”

The Hill (8/12, Greenwood) reports First Lady Melania Trump “was the first member of the administration to respond, drawing a line between ‘freedom of speech’ and violence.” Breitbart (8/12, Starr) reports the First Lady tweeted, “Our country encourages freedom of speech, but let’s communicate w/o hate in our hearts. No good comes from violence. #Charlottesville.” Vice President Pence tweeted, “I stand with @POTUS against hate & violence. U.S is greatest when we join together & oppose those seeking to divide us. #Charlottesville.” Pence also retweeted the first lady and continued, “As @POTUS Trump said, “We have to come together as Americans with love for our nation... & true affection for each other.” #Charlottesville.” Pence added, “Karen & I saddened by the loss of lives in Charlottesville. Thoughts & prayers w/ families of officers & young woman. Also w/ injured victims.”

The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports Attorney General Sessions issued a statement denouncing the violence, saying, “We stand united behind the President in condemning the violence in Charlottesville and any message of hate and intolerance.” Sessions added, “This violence is totally contrary to American values and can never be tolerated.” He also pledged that the Justice Department “would support local and state officers on the scene ‘in any way possible.’”

While NBC Nightly News (8/12, story 2, 2:40, Diaz-Balart) reported the President struck “a different tone than we’ve heard from him in recent days” with his “call for unity,” Kelly O’Donnell said that despite referring to “bigotry,” Trump “did not specifically rebuke or describe racially motivated protesters, some of whom brought weapons to a planned demonstration.” ABC

World News Tonight 's (8/12, story 4, 3:25, Vega) David Wright reported the President's use of "on many sides" in his statement "troubled a lot of people because it [was] ambiguous. Many people heard it as him creating a moral equivalence between the white nationalists and the counterprotesters, blaming both." Wright added the White House now "says the President was condemning hatred, bigotry, and violence from all sources and in all forms."

The AP (8/12, Lemire) reports Trump's position was not how Charlottesville Mayor Michael Signer "assessed the chaos that led the governor to declare a state of emergency, contending that Trump's campaign fed the flames of prejudice." Instead, Signer "said he was disgusted that the white nationalists had come to his town and blamed Trump for inflaming racial prejudices with his campaign last year." He asserted, "I'm not going to make any bones about it. I place the blame for a lot of what you're seeing in American today right at the doorstep of the White House and the people around the president." In its lead segment, the CBS Weekend News (8/12, lead story, 2:45, Ninan) broadcast Signer criticizing the "outsiders coming here who've traveled all across the country to try and make Charlottesville a target for their ideology." Signer added, "I refuse to be intimidated."

The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports a number of Republican lawmakers also "went after...Trump on Saturday over his statement on violent clashes in Charlottesville." The Hill adds Sen. Cory Gardner went "as far as saying Trump needed to call it a 'terror attack by white supremacists.'" In a separate article, The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports Gardner tweeted, "Mr. President – we must call evil by its name. These were white supremacists and this was domestic terrorism." According to The Hill, Sen. Jeff Flake joined Gardner in condemning the aims of the rally, tweeting, "The #WhiteSupremacy in #Charlottesville does not reflect the values of the America I know. Hate and bigotry have no place in this country."

The Hill (8/12, Seipel) reports Sen. Orrin Hatch also criticized Trump's comments on the rally, tweeting, "We should call evil by its name. My brother didn't give his life fighting Hitler for Nazi ideas to go unchallenged here at home. -OGH." The Hill (8/12, Thomsen) "Briefing Room" blog reports Sen. Marco Rubio "tore into President Trump Saturday for refusing to single out white supremacists at a white nationalist rally in Virginia." Rubio tweeted, "Very important for the nation to hear @potus describe events in #Charlottesville for what they are, a terror attack by #whitesupremacists."

The Hill (8/12, Carter) reports House Speaker Ryan condemned the rally, tweeting, "The views fueling the spectacle in Charlottesville are repugnant. Let it only serve to unite Americans against this kind of vile bigotry." The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports Sen. Ted Cruz in a statement said, "The Nazis, the KKK, and white supremacists are repulsive and evil, and all of us have a moral obligation to speak out against the lies, bigotry, anti-semitism, and hatred that they propagate. ... Having watched the horrifying video of the car deliberately crashing into a crowd of protesters, I urge the Department of Justice to immediately investigate and prosecute this grotesque act of domestic terrorism."

The Hill (8/12, Bowden) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog that Democratic lawmakers also "urged President Trump to condemn" the rally, with Senate Minority Leader Schumer tweeting, "March & rally in Charlottesville against everything the flag stands for. President Trump must condemn in strongest terms immediately." Schumer followed up, "Of course we condemn ALL that hate stands for. Until @POTUS specifically condemns alt-right action in Charlottesville, he hasnt done his job." Rep. Steve Cohen, a member of the House Judiciary Committee, tweeted, "Charlottesville alt.right gathering is reminiscent of 1930's Germany and the President needs to condemn it. Make America great; Speak out!"

The Hill (8/12, Thomsen) "Briefing Room" blog reports former Vice President Joe Biden similarly "took aim at President Trump's comments that 'many sides' led to [the] violence." Biden tweeted, "There is only one side. #charlottesville." The Hill (8/12, Thomsen) "Briefing Room" blog reports former President Obama tweeted the Nelson Mandela quote "No one is born hating another person because of the color of his skin or his background or his religion..."

The Hill (8/12, Thomsen) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog that Hillary Clinton "condemned the 'incitement of hatred' which she said led to [the] violence," tweeting, "My heart is in Charlottesville today, and with everyone made to feel unsafe in their country." She continued, "But the incitement of hatred that got us here is as real and condemnable as the white supremacists in our streets." Clinton added, "Every minute we allow this to persist through tacit encouragement or inaction is a disgrace, & corrosive to our values." She concluded, "Now is the time for leaders to be strong in their words & deliberate in their actions."

The Hill (8/12, Bowden) reports the NAACP and the Congressional Black Caucus also both "swiftly shot back" at Trump. The NAACP tweeted, "Guess it's hard to disavow bigots and hate when they are amongst your key strategists. #Charlottesville." The CBC tweeted,

“.@realDonaldTrump: “Both sides, law & order...” Your false equivalency, dog whistles are sad. White supremacy is to blame. #Charlottesville.” According to The Hill, “the reference is to White House chief strategist Steve Bannon, who formerly ran Breitbart News. Bannon has been called a white nationalist before by Trump’s critics, most notably by House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) in November.”

A Washington Post (8/12, Board) editorial also criticizes Trump and shares what “a presidential president would have said” following the violence in Charlottesville.

The Washington Post (8/12, Nirappil) reports on how the various Virginia candidates responded to the rally and violence while USA Today (8/12, Miller) shares “a look at how social media reacted to the #Charlottesville violence.”

Police: Three Deaths Linked To Rally, 19 People Injured When Car Strikes Counter-Protesters. In a front-page article, the Washington Post (8/12, A1, Heim, Silverman, Shapiro, Brown) reports “a chaotic and violent day turned to tragedy Saturday as hundreds of white nationalists, neo-Nazis, Ku Klux Klan members – planning to stage what they described as their largest rally in decades to ‘take America back’ – clashed with counterprotesters in the streets and a car plowed into crowds, killing one person and injuring 19 others.” Angela Taylor, a public information officer at the University of Virginia Medical Center, told USA Today (8/12, Stanglin, Cavallaro) “that 20 patients were taken there and one died. The conditions of the other 19 were not yet determined.” USA Today adds that “about three hours after the car crash, the Virginia State Police’s Bell 407 helicopter crashed about 7 miles from the scene” and according to police reports, “two people on board died.”

While the AP (8/12, Rankin) reports “the chaos boiled over [when] what is believed to be the largest group of white nationalists to come together in a decade” gathered in order “to protest plans to remove a statue of the Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee,” Breitbart (8/12, Spiering) says the violence erupted “after leftist Antifa protesters attacked a protest of white nationalists.” USA Today (8/12, Rossman) states that “Twitter dispatches showed a violent scene with protesters wielding shields, sticks and flags in massive scuffles that left people bloodied.” USA Today adds “there were also reports of urine being tossed at reporters and the air was said to be filled with pepper spray, mace and tear gas.”

A front-page New York Times (8/12, A1, Stolberg, Rosenthal) article reports “by 11 a.m., after both sides had made their way to Emancipation Park, the scene had exploded into taunting, shoving and outright brawling.” According to the Times, after Charlottesville police cleared the area, “witnesses said a crowd of counterdemonstrators, jubilant because the white nationalists had left, was moving up Fourth Street, near the mall, when a gray sports car came down the road and accelerated, mowing down several people and hurling at least two in the air.” In the lead ABC World News Tonight (8/12, lead story, 3:00, Vega) segment, Eva Pilgrim reported a “silver Dodge Challenger with Ohio plates seen here in this video barreling down a hill. Witnesses say it only stopped after it hit a van and another car. Blocked in, the silver car went in reverse to get away.” Pilgrim added the driver “was picked up just a short distance from the scene, not very far at all. Witnesses telling us whoever the driver was, they did not hesitate. They put their foot on the gas and kept going.”

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (8/12, Blake) reports Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe “declared a state of emergency late Saturday morning moments before the ‘Unite the Right’ rally and counterprotests were scheduled to begin” in order to “to aid state response to violence.” He subsequently tweeted, “The acts and rhetoric in #Charlottesville over past 24 hours are unacceptable & must stop. A right to speech is not a right to violence.”

The Hill (8/12, Manchester) reports McAuliffe at a press conference later Saturday “ripped white supremacists who sparked violence in Charlottesville, Va. on Saturday, saying there is no place for them in the country.” He asserted, “I have a message to all of the white supremacists and the Nazis who came into Charlottesville today. Our message is plain and simple. Go home. You are not wanted in this great commonwealth. Shame on you. You pretend that you’re patriots, but you are anything but a patriot.” McAuliffe added, “My message is clear. We are stronger than you. You will not succeed. There is no place for you here, there is no place for you in America.”

The Hill (8/12, Seipel) reports Attorney General Sessions announced Saturday that the Justice Department “has opened up a federal investigation into the deadly events in Charlottesville, Va. on Saturday after a car plowed into a crowd of protestors and left one dead.” In a statement, Sessions said, “I have talked with FBI Director Chris Wray, FBI agents on the scene, and law enforcement officials for the state of Virginia. The FBI has been supporting state and local authorities throughout the day. U.S. Attorney Rick Mountcastle has commenced a federal investigation and will have the full support of the Department of Justice. Justice will prevail.” The Hill adds that the US Attorney’s office for the Western District of Virginia and the Richmond Field Office of the FBI confirmed the probe. ABC World News Tonight (8/12, story 3, 0:20, Vega) also briefly reported an investigation into the helicopter crash is underway.

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (8/12, A1, Hermann, Heim, Silverman) says Charlottesville police have also come "under criticism for failing to keep apart warring white nationalists and counterprotesters who battled it out in the city streets Saturday amid what at first seemed an anemic response from authorities." The Post adds that "anger over how the police responded came from all directions and intensified after the death of a woman struck by a car that plowed into a group of counterprotesters. Experts said police appeared outnumbered, ill-prepared and inexperienced."

David Duke: Charlottesville Protests About "Fulfilling Promises Of Donald Trump." The Hill (8/12, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports former Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard David Duke "appeared at the 'Unite the Right' rally...prior to [the] violent clashes, saying that the event represented fulfilling the promises of President Trump." Duke said, "This represents a turning point for the people of this country. We are determined to take our country back, we're going to fulfill the promises of Donald Trump, and that's what we believed in, that's why we voted for Donald Trump, because he said he's going to take our country back and that's what we gotta do."

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (8/12, Belkin, Kesling, McWhirter) reports Jason Kessler, the leader of Unity and Security for America, helped organize the demonstration and said in an interview that he wants the President to speak out because Virginia officials and the counter protesters denied the First Amendment rights of Trump's supporters.

Detroit Red Wings Condemn White Nationalists Over Use Of Modified Logo. The Washington Post (8/12, Bonesteel) reports the "anti-immigrant group called the Detroit Right Wings, which has co-opted" a "bastardized" version of the NHL's Detroit Red Wings logo, prompting the team to issue a statement on Saturday "condemning the use of their logo in such a hateful way and threatened legal action."

White Nationalists Have Held Three Demonstrations In Charlottesville So Far This Year. ABC World News Tonight's (8/12, story 2, 2:45, Vega) Stephanie Ramos reported the rally turned "a major American college campus...into a battlefield." Ramos added that the tensions started Friday night at 10 p.m. as "torches in hand, [the white nationalist's] chants [began] echoing across the historic campus" of the University of Virginia. In the lead NBC Nightly News (8/12, lead story, 3:50, Diaz-Balart) segment, Tom Costello said the "tensions began simmering [Friday] night when white nationalists carried torches in the city, eerily reminiscent of Nazi Party propaganda events in the '20s and '30s."

According to USA Today (8/12, Penzenstadler, Toy), this weekend's violent demonstrations in Charlottesville mark "the third time white nationalist groups gathered there this year." USA Today says the groups oppose the City Council's decision to sell a statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee and rename the Lee and Jackson parks. USA Today says that while "statues of Confederate leaders nationwide have been removed in recent years as communities viewed them as symbols of slavery," its analysis in May found that "more than 700 Confederate monuments in 31 states still stand."

In an analysis of race relations in the US, NBC Nightly News' (8/12, story 3, 2:30, Diaz-Balart) Morgan Radford reported that "one of the most striking things we found when doing research for this piece is that data reveals that we've come to a point in our country where whites see anti-white bias as more prevalent than anti-black bias." Radford added, "experts on race relations say that this moment, this tension we're seeing will actually pass, but that it might get worse before it gets better."

Lexington Mayor Accelerates Removal Of Confederate Statues In Wake Of Charlottesville. The Hill (8/12, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog Jim Gray, the mayor of Lexington, Kentucky, announced Saturday that he "is accelerating his plans to remove Confederate statues from key locations in the city due to violence spurred by white nationalists in Charlottesville."

Trump: US May Consider Military Option To Venezuelan Crisis.

On Friday, President Trump met with Secretary of State Tillerson, Ambassador Haley, and National Security Adviser McMaster to discuss North Korea and Venezuela. While reporting on the joint news conference that followed focused predominately on the North Korean threat, Trump's assertion that he has not ruled out a possible military option in Venezuela received moderate coverage, most of which cast the approach as a strategy that is unlikely to succeed.

The Washington Post (8/11, Johnson, Wagner) reports Trump asserted he will not "rule out a military option" to confront Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro and the nation's deepening economic and political crisis during the news conference. CNN's Situation Room (8/11, 5:56 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) broadcast Trump calling Venezuela “a mess” and “a very sad situation.” Trump also stated that the US has “troops all over the world in places that are very, very far away. Venezuela is not very far away, and the people are suffering, and they’re dying. We have many options for Venezuela, including a possible military option, if necessary.”

Trump provided few details about the potential military option, the Wall Street Journal (8/11, Kesling, KurmanaeV, Venezuela) reports, but his amplified threat of a possible armed response came just a day after Maduro called for talks with Trump by phone or during a visit next month for the United Nations General Assembly. Ahead of Trump’s remarks on Friday, the White House said the President rejected that request until Maduro restores democracy in the nation.

Senior Pentagon correspondent Barbara Starr of CNN’s Situation Room (8/11, 6:14 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) noted that “there is a long history, decades-long, of some not very favorable feelings by many governments there about the US military,” which “could be pretty problematic” for such a strategy. She added that “to go into Venezuela with US military force and try and change the political and security landscape in Venezuela using American troops, which is what a typical military option is, I think at the moment the Pentagon is not thinking about doing that.”

Elise Labott of CNN’s Situation Room (8/11, 6:57 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) also said she does not believe the US will pursue that approach, and “in fact, his National Security Adviser, H.R. McMaster, just said in an interview within the last 24 to 48 hours or so that there is not a US military option” on the table. She said that “obviously the situation in Venezuela, the democracy, the human rights violations, is awful and they’re trying to get some kind of diplomacy together. The US earlier this week imposed sanctions on some members of the Venezuelan government, there’s been talk about oil sanctions on Venezuela, but even H.R. McMaster said if there was a military option, it would be up to countries lower in the hemisphere, like Brazil, like Columbia to be involved in.”

Former Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said on CNN’s Situation Room (8/11, 6:26 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) that Trump’s hint of possible military options in Venezuela goes against the need for the President “to speak with some degree of steadiness and responsibility.” He cautioned that “loose talk” in fact “does send mixed signals to the world, and very frankly, it undermines our power.”

Byron York of the Washington Examiner told Fox News’ Special Report (8/11, 6:52 p.m. EDT, Baier) that Trump’s remarks about Venezuela “kind of surprised me” because he “was not asked about a military option Venezuela. He was asked about the situation there and the United States has actually gotten some good reviews from some of the things it’s done lately, imposing sanctions on some prominent Venezuelans,” but then Trump “just volunteers” the possibility of a military option.

The Miami Herald (8/11, Mazzei) says Trump’s hard line on Venezuela “has steadily gained allies” in Latin America, however, and in an “unusual” and “striking” display of unity, the foreign ministers of 17 nations gathered in Lima this week “to make the rarest of admissions: When it comes to Venezuela, they agree with President Donald Trump. At least for now.” After the White House publicly labeled Venezuela a dictatorship, “other countries followed.” The “unexpected support explains in part why the White House has appeared to take a more deliberative approach to escalating its response against Venezuela,” says the Herald.

Sources: Russia Poised To Benefit From Venezuelan Crisis. In a special report, Reuters (8/11, Parraga, Ulmer) examines how “Moscow is using its position as Venezuela’s lender of last resort to gain more control over the OPEC nation’s crude reserves, the largest in the world,” even as numerous multinational firms “have all but written off their Venezuelan operations amid the nation’s tanking economy and chronic shortages of raw materials.” According to two people familiar with the discussions, the Venezuelan state-owned oil firm Petroleos de Venezuela “has been secretly negotiating since at least early this year with Russia’s biggest state-owned oil company, Rosneft,” and even offered “ownership interests in up to nine of Venezuela’s most productive petroleum projects.” Reuters says Maduro’s government now relies on “Russia’s money to finance everything from bond payments to imports of food and medicine amid severe national shortages,” and Rosneft has positioned itself “to acquire Venezuelan oil assets on the cheap.”

WPost A1 Analysis: Economic Collapse Poses Greatest Threat To Maduro. The Washington Post (8/11, A1, Faiola, Krygier) reports on its front page that Venezuela “is edging toward the economic brink after an internationally condemned election last month created an all-powerful congress loyal to Maduro,” causing the bolivar to fluctuate “more wildly than ever, a significant feat for a country saddled with the world’s highest inflation rate” and doubling “street prices for staples like bread and tomatoes” in under two weeks. According to analysts, “Maduro’s longevity in office may now depend less on surviving an opposition challenge than on his ability to sidestep a catastrophic debt crisis," the threat of which the Post says "looms larger than any other."

Ousted Venezuelan Attorney General Continues Investigations Into Officials. The Wall Street Journal (8/11, Kurmanaev, Magalhaes, Alonso) reports that in the weeks leading to Venezuelan opposition Attorney General Luisa Ortega's flight from her office, she prepared and secured digital copies of documents that she says are crucial in proving that government officials were involved in corruption and conducted human rights abuses against activists. Ortega said she and the Justice Department are now sharing evidence, and attorneys and human rights activists suggested her inquiries could lead to additional sanctions against Maduro's regime, further isolating it financially.

Trump: "Unacceptable" That McConnell, Senate Republicans Failed To Pass Healthcare Reform.

Politico (8/11, Lima) reports President Trump on Friday said he felt it was "unacceptable" that Senate Majority Leader McConnell and Senate Republicans failed to pass legislation to repeal the Affordable Care Act. According to the President, "People have been talking about repeal-and-replace for seven years, long before I ever decided to be doing what I'm doing. Seven years they've been talking repeal-and-replace and it didn't happen. And not only didn't happen, it was a surprise, and it was a horrible surprise." Trump added he was "not impressed" by the unsuccessful congressional effort to pass a healthcare bill.

House Freedom Caucus Calls For New ACA Repeal Vote. The AP (8/11, Fram) reports the House Freedom Caucus "began an uphill fight Friday to force a fresh House vote this fall on erasing much of" the ACA without a replacement, which "seemed to have no chance of passing Congress." According to the AP, "the GOP-led Senate turned down a similar repeal-only bill last month, and top House Republicans have little interest in refighting a health care battle they were relieved to put aside after their chamber approved legislation in May." Rep. Jim Jordan insisted the petition for the vote is "not about calling out anyone, it's about doing what we said. ... I do think people deserve to see if their member of Congress is going to do what they campaigned on." He also told Breitbart (8/11, Moran) in an exclusive interview that GOP lawmakers should "act like Republicans, let's simply repeal Obamacare and do what we told the voters what we said we would do. Let's keep our promise." Jordan added, "I think if this is brought up to the floor, really, that many people are going to vote for the same bill they voted for 18 months ago. That's why we started this effort. We'll see how it unfolds."

Meadows, MacArthur In Talks On Cost-Sharing Reductions. The Hill (8/11, Sullivan) cites Axios in reporting House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows and Rep. Tom MacArthur are engaged "in talks for a bill that would stabilize ObamaCare markets." According to The Hill, "The measure would fund key ObamaCare payments known as cost-sharing reductions, possibly in exchange for expanded flexibility favored by conservatives for states to waive ObamaCare regulations through broadening an existing provision known as 1332 waivers." Alyssa Farah, a spokeswoman for the House Freedom Caucus, said, "I'd emphasize it's merely in discussion phase between MacArthur and Meadows and hasn't been discussed by the Freedom Caucus."

GOP Lawmakers Facing Criticism Over Healthcare Vote At Town Halls. "The long August congressional recess, which Republicans hoped would begin a conversation about tax reform and must-pass budget measures, has so far seen another round of angry town halls focused on President Trump and the stalled effort to repeal the Affordable Care Act," the Washington Post (8/11) reports, as illustrated by the recent experiences of Reps. Earl "Buddy" Carter, Mark Meadows, and Doug LaMalfa.

Poll: Majority Of Americans Want Administration To Stop Undermining ACA. The AP (8/11, Fram) reports the Kaiser Family Foundation's new Kaiser Health Tracking Poll of 1,211 "adults" (8/1-8/6) has a "resounding" message for "Trump and congressional Republicans: Stop trying to scuttle the Obama health care law, and start trying to make it more effective." According to the poll, "around 4 in 5 want the Trump administration to take actions that help Obama's law function properly, rather than trying to undermine it." The poll also found "just 3 in 10 want Trump and Republicans to continue their drive to repeal and replace the statute." The AP adds that "ominously for the GOP, 6 in 10 say Trump and congressional Republicans are responsible for any upcoming health care problems since they control government. ... And by nearly 2-to-1, most say it's good that the Senate rejected the GOP repeal-and-replace bill last month."

White House Committed To Releasing Tax Reform Outline In September.

Bloomberg News (8/11, Sink, Kapur, Gura) reports that according to a White House official,

“White House tax negotiators and congressional leaders are still planning to release a document in September outlining agreed-upon principles that will serve as a framework for a tax bill” and is “expected to expand on a two-page press release last month from the so-called Big Six involved in tax discussions.” Meanwhile, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady said Friday during an interview with Bloomberg TV “that House and Senate tax writers were continuing to work on the details of a revamp over the August recess.” Brady asserted, “We are on schedule to move this to the president’s desk this year. ... It is an aggressive timetable, no question about that.”

GOP Considers Including Retroactive Cuts In Tax Reform Bill. “Republicans are debating whether parts of their tax-reform package should be retroactive in order to boost the economy by quickly putting more money in people’s wallets,” The Hill (8/11, Jagoda) reports, as “some Republicans argue that having tax changes take effect as early as January [2018] could help their case.” According to The Hill, “The House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees are weighing the issue as they write legislation that can be introduced after the August recess.” While “several prominent Republicans” have expressed support for “retroactive tax changes in recent days,” The Hill acknowledges that “even if tax changes aren’t retroactive, taxpayers might still be able to see a tangible benefit from lower rates before the midterm elections.” National Economic Council Director Cohn last week said, “The way the American public will know that we’re successful is when they get their first check in 2018, they can have more disposable income in their check.”

DeVos: Tax Reform Discussions Include School Vouchers. The AP (8/11, Ho) reports Education Secretary DeVos said Wednesday in a interview that school vouchers are “certainly part of our discussion” regarding tax reform. The AP states that President Trump and DeVos have both “promoted the scholarships as a way to give parents greater choice in deciding where their children will go to school.”

Politico Analysis: Trump Aides Anticipating “Really Tough” September.

Politico (8/13, Dawsey) reported that “senior officials” in the White House are describing September “as ‘brutal,’ ‘bad’ or ‘really tough’ because of the confluence of complicated issues” coming next month. Politico said, “Aides hope to have a better blueprint for how” President Trump wants to move forward “on a series of thorny issues – the nation’s debt ceiling, the 2018 federal budget, tax reform, infrastructure spending and perhaps another stab at repealing Obamacare – after a series of meetings in New York this week. Their goal is to partially temper Trump’s expectations, hammer out some compromises and get a competing band of aides on the same page.”

US Labor Force Participation Continues To Rise.

USA Today (8/13, Davidson) reports that US employers added 209,000 jobs in July, pushing the labor force participation rate from 62.7 percent to 62.9 percent and representing what many observers consider a “vibrant labor market” that is continuing “to draw hundreds of thousands of Americans back into the labor force” and that is “especially lifting less-educated workers in their prime working years.” The trend “could have significant implications for wage growth and interest rates,” as rising labor force participation slows the decline of the unemployment rate, helping to prevent the acceleration of average pay increases and to temper inflation, “which could prompt the Federal Reserve to put off an anticipated third interest rate hike in 2017.”

Summers: Next Fed Chair Likely To Face Recession. In his Washington Post (8/13, Summers) column, Harvard economist Lawrence Summers writes that the end of Federal Reserve Chairwoman Janet Yellen’s term in February brings to light the importance of the Administration selecting a successor equipped to address an economy that likely “will go into recession during the next Fed chair’s four-year term,” with the odds of a recession in the next term at “about two-thirds.” Summers highlights several economic indicators – slow underlying growth, low unemployment, high asset prices, and an uncomfortable inflation- targeting framework – and argues that the Fed must be ready “to improvise through a combination of rhetoric and direct market intervention.”

Samuelson: Middle-Aged Capitalism Slowing Economy. In his Washington Post (8/13) column, Robert J. Samuelson writes that the “persisting puzzle” that the US economy can harbor both robust innovation yet only 2 percent annual growth comes from the fact that the economy is divided between “youthful” companies – such as Google and Apple – that spur innovation, and “middle-aged” companies that have “slowed the recovery.” Samuelson argues that these claims are bolstered by a new study from the Journal of Economic Perspectives that examined all US public companies from 1975 to 2015 and found that profits have become increasingly more concentrated in large tech firms and that corporate capital investment has dropped. Samuelson concludes that the Administration's efforts to accelerate economic growth through change in government policies may not reach success if the weaknesses of "middle-aged capitalism" persist.

Pruitt Calls For "Objective" Evaluation Of National Climate Assessment Report.

Politico (8/11, Holden) reports EPA Administrator Pruitt said that his agency will review the accuracy of the National Climate Assessment. In a radio appearance, Pruitt called for "peer-reviewed, objective-reviewed methodology and evaluation," adding that "Science should not be politicized." Researchers claim the report is already peer reviewed by a 14-person committee at the National Academies, and worry that the EPA will attempt to suppress their findings.

As EPA's Pruitt Works In Relative Secrecy, California Sues For Answers. In a front page article, the New York Times (8/11, A1, Davenport, Lipton) details the "extraordinary measures" that Pruitt is taking "to conceal his actions," as he works to reverse the agency's "activist agenda." According to Christopher Sellers, an expert in environmental history who interviewed several agency employees, "There's a feeling of paranoia in the agency – employees feel like there's been a hostile takeover and the guy in charge is treating them like enemies." While "Such tensions are not unusual," the Times concedes, "they seem particularly bitter at the EPA." The piece goes on to detail problems that Pruitt's approach may cause, including confusion among employees and difficulty implementing policy.

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (8/11, Harris) reports California has sued the EPA "to compel it to say what steps were taken to ensure its rule making and procedures remain impartial." The state's attorney general accuses Pruitt of becoming "the head of the agency responsible for implementing the very same rules that he had been working to overturn just moments earlier," and wants to know how Pruitt complied "with federal ethics rules and who can assume Pruitt's powers in the event he's disqualified from participating in a matter or recuses himself."

Gore: Trump Has Increase Momentum Of Climate Movement. Reuters (8/11, Mills) reports former Vice President Al Gore said on Friday that President Trump's rejection of the Paris climate agreement is "driving much more momentum in the climate movement." He added, "The entire world the next day re-doubled their commitments to the Paris agreement and in the U.S, the governors of our largest states and hundreds of mayors, thousands of business leaders all stood up to fill the gap."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Hate He Dares Not Speak Of." The New York Times (8/13) editorializes, "Let's discard the fiction that President Trump wasn't placating white supremacists by responding so weakly" to the violence in Charlottesville. "The neo-Nazis heard his message loud and clear." Trump "is alone in modern presidential history in his willingness to summon demons of bigotry and intolerance in service to himself." His "fear of naming the source of Saturday's violence sharply contrasts with his eagerness to call out Islamist terror."

"Mr. Macron's Homefront Flub." A New York Times editorial says the domestic outcry over French President Emmanuel Macron's campaign promise to grant official recognition to the nation's first lady effectively forced Macron on Tuesday "to abandon the idea." In light of Macron's diminishing popularity, the timing of the president's abandonment of the idea "could hardly have been worse," the Times says. Macron's government is now pushing for a "charter of transparency" to grant the first spouse a clearly-defined role, but he will soon face "the hard part" of his "promised agenda – budget cuts and labor reforms." The Times contends the first lady proposal is "not a bad idea," but says Macron cannot afford "squandering any more of his dwindling political capital."

"The Real Suspense In Kenya." The New York Times (8/13) editorializes, "Kenya's national elections last Tuesday were closely watched around the world, less for the results than for the threat of violence that has marred past elections." Raila Odinga, "a perennial loser, began crying foul long before the election commission declared that President Uhuru Kenyatta was re-elected" by a nine-point margin. Odinga's "unsubstantiated claims have already touched off rioting in parts of the country, and the violence could spread." The Times says that Odinga has "fanned the embers of ethnic strife," which is "disgraceful and unnecessary."

Washington Post.

“The Specter Of Civil War In Venezuela.” The Washington Post (8/13) editorializes, “Miserable as the people of Venezuela may be under the increasingly repressive and irrational rule” of President Nicolás Maduro, “they had fresh reason for hope last week – until President Trump’s blundering words on Friday.” The Post says that “the damage Mr. Trump did is mostly intangible,” but he “should not give the regime any new excuses to rally its dwindling band of loyalists – or to enforce obedience on everyone else.”

“Don’t Ignore A Major Threat To The Chesapeake Bay.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/13) writes that Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan should proceed with his plan announced last week to conduct limited dredging behind the Conowingo Dam – the power station stopping the Susquehanna River and the source of much of the fresh water flowing into the Chesapeake Bay – but only if he also addresses the bay’s nitrogen and phosphorus pollution, which the Post considers “the bay’s biggest problem.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Poison Of Identity Politics.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/13) links the violence in Charlottesville to the rise of identity politics, and writes that Democrats seemed more interested in tarring President Trump this weekend than in addressing racial and ethnic divisions.

“Dan Loeb’s Political Offense.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/13) argues that a recent poorly phrased Facebook post by activist hedge-fund investor and charter school supporter Daniel Loeb has drawn heavy criticism not because of Loeb’s choice of language but because of his support for charters in New York. The Journal asserts that unions and their political subsidiaries – particularly, AFT President Randi Weingarten and New York Mayor Bill de Blasio – are choosing to attack Loeb on grounds of racism because they cannot defend their own record of not addressing failing public schools.

“Philadelphia’s Soda Tax Bust.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/13) writes that a recent Tax Foundation report found that Philadelphia’s new 1.5 cent-per-ounce soda tax is harming low-income earners and generating less revenue than proponents anticipated. The Journal highlights lost income and jobs by truck drivers, supermarkets, and gas stations as a result of the post-tax 45 percent decline in soft drink sales; the $6.9 million less revenue in expected tax collections; and the rise in beer purchases as soda consumption has shifted to ale.

U.S. National Monument Review To Test Key Land Protection Law.

Reuters (8/20, Volcovici) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke faces an Aug. 24 deadline to "recommend whether to eliminate or shrink nearly two dozen national monuments, creating the first major test" for the 111-year-old Antiquities Act. Zinke is "expected to recommend that at least some of the national monuments under review – which were all created since 1996 – be rescinded or shrunk in size, responding to an order by President Donald Trump, who believes there should be greater opportunity to increase local resource development and economic opportunities." The article notes that "no president has ever revoked a previous designation." Previous presidents "did reduce the size of some existing monuments," but "this time, environmental groups are prepared to challenge any changes in court – something that has not happened before."

The Hill (8/19, Henry) reports that as the "review of national monument designations reaches a close," Zinke is "facing more heat than ever from conservationists and outdoor groups." Critics of the review claim "it could close off America's natural treasures to the public, and have poured more than $2 million into ads targeting Zinke, urging him not to rescind large national monuments established under the last three presidents." However, "industry officials and conservatives want Zinke to loosen the federal government's grip on huge swaths of acreage around the country, and propose reforms to the monuments law."

Additional coverage of the review was provided by The Guardian \(UK\) (8/20, Tobias), Newsmax (8/19, Reyner), Bloomberg BNA (8/18, McCutcheon), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (8/20, Lochhead), the San Luis Obispo \(CA\) Tribune (8/20, Ferreira), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (8/20, Miller), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Business First (8/18, Sapin), and National Geographic (8/18, Parker).

Oil Speculation Booms In Area Of No Oil. The Daily Caller (8/19, Pearce) reports that "millions of acres worth of requests for oil speculation on federal lands were submitted in Nevada just years before former President Barack Obama designated two national monuments in the state, the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) found Friday." The Nevada Expression of Interest documents are "mostly worthless and a waste of taxpayer money, however, according to CBD Nevada state director, Patrick Donnelly." Donnelly said that "CBD is using the information as evidence President Donald Trump's review of national monument designations, and its potential to roll back some of those, is 'a complete sham.'"

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Criticized For Vacationing During Monument Task. In a piece for the Denver Westword (8/18, Prendergast) Alan Prendergast writes: “with just a week left until the date Zinke is supposed to conclude his review, he has only visited eight of the 27 targeted monuments. And he isn’t likely to meet with stakeholders for the others before the announced deadline. As the Denver-based Center for Western Priorities points out in a recent broadside, Zinke is currently on a Mediterranean vacation with his wife, Lola.”

Marine Monuments Legally Established By Presidents Must Be Preserved. For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (8/18, Schiffer, Contributor), Lois Schiffer, an environmental attorney and former General Counsel of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, decries the review as “unprecedented,” and warns that it “could lead to unlawful decisions to rescind, substantially reduce in size, or change the management.” Schiffer raises concerns that “such decisions would also undermine one of our nation’s most important conservation tools.” Schiffer rejects arguments that “presidents cannot designate them in the ocean, and some of these monuments are too big.”

COMMENTARY: Trump Administration’s Review Of National Monuments Could Set A Dangerous Precedent. In an op-ed for the Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/18, Guzman, Madrigal), Peter Guzman, president of the Las Vegas Latin Chamber of Commerce, and Norberto Madrigal, vice president of the Latin Chamber, they attended the “Western Businesses for National Monuments” roundtable discussions in Montana because it was important “to discuss how losing national monument protections might affect small businesses who rely on tourism and outdoor enthusiasts visiting protected public lands.” Their goal in Montana was “to connect with other local businesses and share our stories of innovation and job-creation fueled by public lands.” They write that “the big takeaway was unequivocal: The monument review is a dangerous path and threatens future economic development.”

Kevin Timm, the co-founder of Seek Outside, writes similarly in the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/20, Timm).

Commentary: The Antiquities Act Was Meant To Protect Indian History. In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/18, Cachora, Wright), Lorey Cachora, a member of the Fort Yuma Quechan Indian Tribe, and Aaron Wright, a Preservation Archaeologist at Archaeology Southwest in Tucson, Arizona, write that the review threatens “the heritage of Native Americans – the groups whose histories the Antiquities Act of 1906 was intended to protect.” They write that if “Trump’s concern is one of scale, he should take the time to listen to Native communities – something Secretary Zinke continuously fails to do – and perhaps his narrow vision could grow to be more inclusive.” According to the authors, “many iconic national monuments in the American West – including some of the ones Trump and company have in their crosshairs – remind us that scale is relative to cultural perspective.” They conclude: “Vast tracts of former tribal lands are now public lands, and national monuments serve to safeguard the cultural heritage of many Native communities. A threat to reduce or eliminate any of them adds to a long list of transgressions against Native Americans.”

Commentary: There Is Much This Native Potato Can Teach Us. In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/19, Wilson), Cynthia Wilson, the Traditional Foods Program Director at Utah Diné Bikéyah, writes that “a native potato recently discovered by two university researchers” could “be one of the most compelling reasons to validate and protect Utah’s two threatened national monuments.” According to Wilson, “this native potato tied to indigenous farming practices dating back 11,000 years is a celebration of, and a plea to keep intact Utah’s two national monuments, Grand Staircase-Escalante and Bears Ear.” She continues, “This potato illustrates in scientific and indigenous terms how important Bears Ears is to Native people, and it also helps us understand how important traditional knowledge is to the stewardship of public lands.”

Additional Commentary. Additional commentary appeared in Huffington Post (8/18, Arce, Contributor), the Huffington Post (8/18, Peterman, Contributor), the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (8/19, Haab, Briggs), the Bakersfield \(CA\) Californian (8/20, Salvaggio), the Redlands \(CA\) Daily Facts (8/18, Miller), the Whittier \(CA\) Daily News (8/20, Duane), the San Gabriel Valley \(CA\) Tribune (8/20, Duane), the Pasadena \(CA\) Star-News (8/20, Duane), and the Durango \(CO\) Herald (8/19, Thibodeau).

Interior’s Orders Troubling For Hunters, Anglers.

In an op-ed for the Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (8/21, Findling), Karl Findling, the owner of Oregon Pack Works in Bend, writes that “when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was confirmed by the U.S. Senate back in March, hunters and anglers felt their interests would be well-represented by the agency responsible for managing 500 million acres of the nation’s public lands, including our national parks, wildlife refuges and Bureau of Land Management lands." But "five months later, unless we see some major shifts at Interior — and soon — it's looking as if Zinke will go down as yet another politician who fooled the sporting community by pretending to be one of us, someone who legitimately cares about the future of wildlife habitat and public lands." According to Findling, "ever since the secretary moved into his new D.C. office, hunters and anglers have watched a steady stream of anti-sportsman and anti-wildlife orders flow from his desk." He concludes: "With energy, monument and sage grouse conservation decisions looming in the coming weeks and months, the time is now for the sporting community to judge the secretary. And it's time for Zinke to show that he cares."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

In Montana's Indian Country, Tribes Take Opposite Sides On Coal.

Reuters (8/21, Volcovici) reports that the Crow Nation and Northern Cheyenne, who "stand on opposite sides of U.S. President Donald Trump's pro-energy agenda," illustrate the "broader divide on drilling and mining among America's 567 federally recognized tribes." According to the article, "for tribes such as the Crow, Trump's rise marks an opportunity to tap more of the vast energy reserves beneath their lands for a needed economic boost." But "for other tribes including the Northern Cheyenne, the administration poses a threat by too forcefully injecting its fossil-fuel agenda into tribal policy while ignoring environmental and social concerns."

Federal Government Denies A Native American Tribe Millions.

NPR (8/19) reports that the federal government is denying NookSack Tribe in the Pacific Northwest "tens of millions of dollars and have shut down their casino and are taking over tribal health care." That's because the Interior Department "says the tribe improperly disenrolled an extended family of 300 people." The Interior Department "says the tribe does not have a government" and they also "aren't recognizing the disenrollments."

Comanche Nation Sues Over New Chickasaw Casino Near Texas Border.

The Oklahoman (8/19, Bailey) reports that the Comanche Nation is "suing the federal government over a rival casino the Chickasaw Nation is building two miles north of the Texas border in the Jefferson County town of Terral." The lawsuit claims the Interior Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs "allowed the Chickasaw Nation and other tribes to skirt requirements to place off-reservation land into trust for new casinos, depriving smaller tribes such as the Comanche Nation of their share of the gaming market." The lawsuit claims, "BIA officials moved the goal line so close to the Chickasaws and other privileged tribes in Oklahoma that they have needed only to fall into the end zone and open up shop, secure in the knowledge that the score was virtually certain to hold up without any replay."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Tribes Hope For Renewal In Solar Eclipse; Not All Will Watch.

The AP (8/19, Fonseca) reports that "across the country, American Indian tribes are observing the eclipse in similar and not-so-similar ways." According to the article, "some tribal members will ignore it, others might watch while praying for an anticipated renewal, and those in prime viewing spots are welcoming visitors with storytelling, food and celebration." U.S. Bureau of Indian Education spokeswoman Nedra Darling "said the agency's schools, most of which are on the Navajo Nation, were given the option of closing Monday."

Bureau Of Land Management

Enviros Want Governor To Oppose Mine Royalty Request.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/20, Webb) reports that "environmentalists are calling on Gov. John Hickenlooper to oppose Arch Coal's request for a reduced federal royalty rate for part of its West Elk Mine operations in the North Fork Valley, arguing that supporting it would run counter to his recently announced initiative to fight climate change." The Bureau of Land Management "wrote to Hickenlooper Aug. 3 to say it is proposing approving the company's request to reduce the rate to 5 percent from the standard underground coal mine rate of 8 percent in part of the mine because of adverse geological and mining conditions." The BLM "asked Hickenlooper for his comments on the proposal within 30 days."

Drilling Proposal Draws Heat.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/21, Harmon) reports that "environmental organizations are gearing up to battle a company's plan to drill 108 oil wells in the Whitewater Basin area, while local governments are looking to the project as a potential boon." The Mesa County Commission is "to consider a letter to the Bureau of Land Management regarding the drilling plan proposed by Fram Operating LLC to produce about 8.7 million barrels of oil in 20 years, creating as many as 70 jobs." The BLM is "accepting comments on the environmental study of the Fram proposal until Aug. 28."

At Bundy Ranch Trial, Questions On Guns And Violence.

The High Country \(CO\) News (8/18, Wiles) reports that the "trial of Cliven Bundy's armed supporters in Nevada is raising thorny issues around the threat of violence and its relationship to free speech." According to the article, "defendants in the first of three Bunkerville trials, which wrapped up this week, have described their actions as being protected by the First and Second Amendments to the Constitution." However, "prosecutors say the trial is about men who used the threat of violence to defy law enforcement, and that the law does not protect people who intimidate, threaten or assault others."

BLM Seeks Comment On Proposed OHV Trail System In Western RBC.

The Rio Blanco \(CO\) Herald Times (8/19) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "seeking comments from the public before beginning the environmental analysis for a proposed 364-mile off-highway vehicle trail system primarily in Rio Blanco County." BLM White River Field Manager Kent Walter said, "The BLM strives to be a good neighbor, and we welcome and value diverse views from the communities we serve. Comments on this proposal will be most helpful if received by September 11, 2017."

Burning Man Might Be More Fun Than Usual this Year, Here's Why.

The San Francisco Chronicle (8/18, Graff) reports that "the dust will be present as always this year" at Burning Man, "but due to the heavy winter rains, it could be less of a nuisance." Kyle Hendrix, a spokesperson for the Bureau of Land Management, said, "The conditions present the potential for a less dusty event."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

With Comment Period Over, Interior Mulls 5-year Lease Plan.

E&E Publishing (8/18) reported that with the public comment period closing on revisions for the current five-year offshore drilling lease plan, the Interior Department will have to consider what changes to make. Acting assistant secretary for Interior Katharine MacGregor said the BOEM is still a long way from issuing any final decisions. The department will now review the comments and issue a draft plan for additional public review.

Don't Open Restricted Waters To Oil, Gas Drilling. The AP (8/20) reports Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey is opposing a new five-year national offshore oil and gas leasing program that would include more acreage. Healey filed public comments with the BOEM expressing concern that opening the Atlantic to drilling could threaten the state's economy and coastal environment. She said an oil spill could "devastate" the commercial fishing industry, while harming the state's recreation and tourism industries.

Governor Roy Cooper Voices His Opposition To Oil And Gas Drilling Off North Carolina Coast.

The Wilmington \(NC\) Port City Daily (8/18, Kane) reported North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper sent a letter to the BOEM and state Department of Environmental Quality Secretary Michael Regan opposing offshore drilling. Cooper cited opposition from residents at public hearings, a coastline that is not conducive to drilling, and an economy that is driven by tourism as reasons to oppose additional leases. The letter said, "Because offshore drilling threatens North Carolina's critical coastal industries and unique coastal environment with limited benefits for our citizens, it is a bad deal for North Carolina. ... Accordingly, I ask that you respect the wishes of our state and maintain in the new OCS Leasing Plan the current prohibition of oil and gas drilling off North Carolina's coast."

Attorney General Becerra To Trump Administration: Drilling Off Of California's Coast Is A Non-starter. Orange County \(CA\) Breeze (8/19) reported that California Attorney General Xavier Becerra submitted comments opposing any attempts to open California's coast to new offshore drilling. Becerra said, "Californians have made it clear that they do not want new drilling off the shores of California's coast. ... As their Attorney General, I will do everything possible to protect our state's pristine natural resources. This decision does not make sense since the oil and gas industry have no interest in exploring and developing off California's shore."

Houston Firm's Plan Moves Ahead To Become First To Drill In Arctic Waters.

The Dallas Morning News (8/19, Shankman, Email) reported that "a proposal for the first oil and gas drilling in federal offshore waters of the Arctic is taking a step forward, even as regulators raise concerns." The article stated that the Liberty Project, "proposed by Houston-based Hilcorp," would allow the energy company "to build a 24-acre gravel island in about 19 feet of water, from which it would drill up to 16 wells." The article pointed out that the Bureau of Oceans and Energy Management projects that the new facility would ultimately "produce 58,000 barrels a day." Concerns raised by regulators include fears that the project "could negatively impact marine mammals and the communities that rely on them."

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Caller (8/18).

Bureau Of Reclamation

Sacramento County Sues State Over Delta Tunnels.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/18, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that "Sacramento County led a cascade of area governments suing the state in an effort to block the Delta tunnels, saying the $17 billion project would harm local farmers, endangered fish and low-income communities at the south end of the county." According to the article, "elected officials in the Sacramento area long have opposed the project and have formed an alliance, called the Delta Counties Coalition, dedicated to fighting the tunnels." Sacramento County filed its lawsuit last Thursday, "as did the Placer County Water Agency, the cities of Stockton and Antioch and a consortium of commercial fishermen's groups." The article says that "additional lawsuits were expected to be filed by Monday, the legal deadline for attacking the tunnels project with a CEQA suit."

Horsefly Irrigation District Looks To Convert Canal System.

The Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (8/18) reports that "the Horsefly Irrigation District has been awarded a WaterSMART Water and Energy Efficiency Grant through the Bureau of Reclamation to assist with converting approximately 1.68 miles of open canal to subterranean piping." The bureau has "released a Draft Environmental Assessment to disclose potential environmental effects and is seeking public comment on the proposed project."

EDITORIAL: Things Looking Up — At Least Temporarily — On Colorado River – Las Vegas Review-Journal.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/20) views last week's projection by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation "that, thanks to heavy snow in the Rockies, Lake Mead's water levels will remain high enough through 2019 to avoid a federal shortage declaration," as "good news" for "Clark County's water supply." The paper credits "conservation efforts along with more efficient agricultural practices."

Guest Opinion: Don't Dam Yellowstone River.

In an op-ed for the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/20, Skoglund, Poole), Matt Skoglund, director of the Natural Resources Defense Council's Northern Rockies office, and Kate Poole, director of NRDC's Water and Wildlife Project, opposes a proposal by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Bureau of Reclamation to build "a permanent concrete dam near Glendive." According to the authors, "it will likely cause the last 125 wild pallid sturgeon to lose access to needed spawning grounds and put the nail in the coffin for this species that has survived since the age of the dinosaurs." They urge the agencies "to revise their proposal to adopt better alternatives to a dam."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Nebraska To Get Nearly $600,000 For Wildlife Conservation.

The AP (8/19) reports that "Nebraska will receive nearly $600,000 in federal funding to help with wildlife conservation projects in the state." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "recently announced that Nebraska agencies will share $590,000 to help create habitat for different species."

Ga. Awarded $1.3 Million For Wildlife Protection Projects. The Marietta \(GA\) Daily Journal (8/19) reports that "Georgia has been awarded more than $1.3 million in federal funds to support wildlife conservation projects in the state."

Asian Carp Found Near Lake Michigan Got Past Barriers.

The AP (8/18, Flesher) reports that "an adult Asian carp found in a Chicago waterway near Lake Michigan this summer began its life far downstream and apparently got around a series of electric barriers intended to keep the invasive species out of the Great Lakes, officials said Friday." According to the Asian Carp Regional Coordinating Committee, "autopsy results and a scientific analysis showed the silver carp, which was caught June 22, was a 4-year-old male that originated in the Illinois/Middle Mississippi watershed." Charlie Wooley, the Midwest deputy regional director for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said that "it could have hatched anywhere along a roughly 200-mile (320-kilometer) stretch of the Illinois River before migrating northwest."

Additional coverage was provided by the Chicago Tribune (8/18, Flesher).

Endangered Sea Turtle Nest On Maui Relocated.

Maui \(HI\) Now (8/19) reports that "on Friday, the US Fish and Wildlife Service and the Hawai'i Wildlife Fund rescued a nest of Hawksbill Sea Turtles (honu 'ea) on the island of Maui." According to the article, "the nest of 241 critically endangered turtle eggs was within inches of collapsing into the surf when the team of biologists and volunteers performed the emergency nest relocation."

Coconino Voices: State Management Of Mexican Gray Wolves Not Based On Science.

In an op-ed for the Arizona Daily Sun (8/19, CRUMBO, BAHR), Kim Crumbo, the Western Conservation Director of Wildlands Network, and Sandy Bahr is Director, Sierra Club-Grand Canyon Chapter, questions Arizona Game and Fish Commission (AZGFD) Chairman Jim Ammon's assertion that "the recently released Mexican wolf draft recovery plan is based on the 'best available science.'" According to the authors, "the draft plan would allow Mexican wolves to lose protection under the Endangered Species Act with fewer than half the number that scientists say are needed for recovery." They conclude that "given the science supporting wolf recovery in three U.S. populations, not to mention the improper — if not illegal — political interference in what should be a scientific analysis of what is needed for the Mexican wolf's survival, a credible scientific recovery plan is needed, not this recovery sham."

National Park Service

National Park Service Ends Policy Encouraging Parks To Ban Plastic Water Bottle Sales.

The Hill (8/19, Carter) reports that the National Park Service has "ended a policy encouraging national parks to end the sale of plastic disposable water bottles that was aimed at reducing pollution and plastic waste." Acting National Park Service director Michael T. Reynolds said in a statement, "While we will continue to encourage the use of free water bottle filling stations as appropriate, ultimately it should be up to our visitors to decide how best to keep themselves and their families hydrated during a visit to a national park, particularly during hot summer visitation periods." The article notes that "the announcement came after the recent Senate confirmation of David Bernhardt as deputy secretary for the Department of the Interior." Bernhardt is "a former lobbyist who worked for a law firm that represented one of the largest water bottle companies in the country, according to The Washington Post."

In an editorial, the Washington Times (8/20) supports the move. It notes that “the ban on water puzzled critics, who observed that it didn’t do away as well with sales of bottled sugary drinks at the parks’ restaurants and concession stands since the advertised aim of the prohibition was to reduce the litter of recyclable plastic bottles.” It also argues that “deploying recycling bins is far less costly than the plumbing required to put in water fountains throughout more than 400 national parks.”

Additional coverage was provided by The Guardian \(UK\) (8/20, Glenza) and Breitbart (8/20, Rodriguez).

New Mexico, Tribes To Share In Historic Preservation Grants.

The AP (8/19) reports that “New Mexico and nearly a dozen tribes in the state will share more than $660,000 in federal grants for historic preservation projects.” The National Park Service is awarding the funding “to help communities protect historic places, traditions and cultures.” In total, “federal officials say the National Park Service has funneled $58 million in historic preservation funding to states and tribes this year.”

National Park Service Set To Hire Contractor For Washington Monument Renovation.

WRC-TV Washington (8/18, MacFarlane) reports that the National Park Service is “expected to hire a contractor to complete a major elevator repair inside the Washington Monument by the end of August.” The contractor, “once formally selected and announced, will also construct a visitor screening center for the popular attraction.” An agency official said “an announcement will happen by Thursday, Aug. 31.”

Lawmakers Urge Removal Of Robert E. Lee Statue At Antietam.

Politico (8/19, Wright) reports that “amid the national firestorm over Civil War monuments, Maryland lawmakers are pressing the National Park Service to remove a statue of Robert E. Lee that some view as an egregious attempt to sanitize Confederate history.” Also, “key House Democrats are threatening legislation if the Park Service won’t act on its own to take down the statue at Antietam National Battlefield, site of the bloodiest single-day battle in U.S. history.” Rep. John Delaney said, “The history of this piece, which now resides on this sacred ground, certainly makes it clear it was recently erected by a private citizen out of pro-Confederacy enthusiasm and not to provide historical context or under the direction of a battlefield historian. I don’t think that taxpayer resources should serve that end.”

National Robert E. Lee Memorial Gets A Rewrite. The Atlantic (8/16, Berman) reports that the National Park Service has changed the description of “Arlington House, the Robert E. Lee Memorial” in Virginia. Before August 14, the NPS described the memorial to honor Lee, and made no mention of the oppression he was fighting for. The description was updated on August 14 to include the “most difficult aspects of American history.”

Jefferson Memorial Exhibit Update Will Acknowledge Slavery Record.

The Washington Examiner (8/20, Gehrke) reports that the Trust for the National Mall has announced that “an exhibit alongside the nation’s chief memorial to Thomas Jefferson will receive an update that reflects ‘the complexity’ of his status as a founder of the United States and a slaveholder.” The Trust’s president, Catherine Townsend, said in a letter, “In the coming weeks and months, the physical symbols of American history and democracy will be scrutinized and challenged. When that happens, we will work with our partners to ensure the National Mall continues to be a vibrant and relevant place where Americans can learn about our history and imagine our future, together.”

Red Paint Thrown On DC Statue Of Confederate General.

WRC-TV Washington (8/18, Fitzgerald, Cook) reports that “someone has thrown red paint on a statue that honors a Confederate general in Washington, D.C.” Toward the end of a protest last Friday, someone threw red paint on the statue for Albert Pike. U.S. Park Police are investigating the vandalism. D.C. Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton “said she plans to meet with the National Park Service to discuss removing the statue.”

Mostly Peaceful Crowd Turns Out For Demonstration.

The Hot Springs \(AR\) Sentinel-Record (8/20, Bryan) reports that “a demonstration in support of Confederate monuments held Saturday in Hot Springs National Park drew, at its peak, between 350-400 demonstrators and counterprotesters and resulted in only a handful of arrests, mostly for disorderly conduct, city and National Park Service officials said." The rally, "the fourth of its kind this year, drew more attention than the earlier gatherings given the events of the week before, when violence broke out at a Charlottesville, Va., rally to protest the removal of a Gen. Robert E. Lee monument."

Tubman National Park In Auburn: Another Legal Hurdle, Preservation Work And More Visitors.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (8/20, Harding) reports that "there is another agreement that needs to be finalized between the Harriet Tubman Home and National Park Service" for the establishment of the Harriet Tubman National Historical Park. Karen Hill, president and CEO of the Harriet Tubman Home in Auburn, "said both sides are negotiating what she referred to as an implementation agreement." According to the article, "while the arrangements were detailed in the general agreement signed in January, a more formal accord was required to outline the roles for each party."

City May Donate South Dakota Land To National Park Service.

The AP (8/19) reports that "a city in southeast South Dakota is considering giving a portion of city-owned land to the National Park Service to provide additional access to the Missouri National Recreational River." The Yankton City Commission "discussed a proposal Monday to draft an agreement for transferring more than 30 acres of land on the Nebraska side of the Missouri River to the park service." River Superintendent Rick Clark "said that getting the land could be a huge boost to the park's ability to obtain funding for trail improvements."

Beach Drive Rehab Progress: Nearly 2 Miles Of Roadway Rebuilt, 4.6 Miles To Go.

The Washington Post (8/19, Lazo) reports that the reopening of "a newly reconstructed portion of Beach Drive" at the end of the month will "mark completion of a third of a three-year project to rehabilitate the 6.5-mile Beach Drive." According to the article, "in the past year, 1.82 miles in the southernmost portion of the route was rebuilt," but "there are still two years and 4.6 miles to go." At 1 p.m. Sunday, the National Park Service will "welcome neighbors and other road users for a car-free party at the National Zoo entrance on Beach Drive."

Dinosaur Nat'l Monument Creek Due To Septic Line Break.

The AP (8/18) reports that "a popular fishing spot in Dinosaur National Monument has been closed because of a broken septic line at a fish hatchery." The National Park Service "said Thursday that Jones Hole Creek near the Colorado-Utah border has been temporarily closed to fishing and swimming because of the leak." The article adds that "the adjacent hiking 4-mile trail from the Jones Hole Fish Hatchery to the Green River is also closed."

Nonnative Fish To Be Poisoned Off In Yellowstone River.

The AP (8/19) reports that Yellowstone National Park officials are "about to deliberately poison off nonnative fish species in one of the park's major river drainages." According to the article, "the operation along the upper Gibbon River begins Monday and will include lakes in the river drainage." Park officials are "targeting lake-dwelling grayling as well as rainbow trout and brook trout. They plan to reintroduce native species after the operation is finished."

Indiana National Park: Take Those Painted Rocks Elsewhere.

The AP (8/20) reports that the George Rogers Clark National Historical Park is "discouraging visitors from taking part in a scavenger hunt-type fad where people paint rocks and leave them places." Joe Herron, the park's chief ranger says "that park employees have 'had to be a party pooper' and pick up and remove painted rocks left in the park that honors a Revolutionary War hero because they aren't consistent with the National Park Service's 'leave it as you found it' policy."

Rescue Effort Frees Whale Stranded In Olympic National Park.

The Chinook \(WA\) Observer (8/19) reports that "a rescue effort during high tide late Friday night freed a young gray whale that had been stranded on a remote beach in Olympic National Park and Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary for about three days.”

Woman Becomes Glacier National Park’s First Female Packer.

The AP (8/19, Scott) reports that Jill Michalak is “bucking convention at Glacier National Park, where this season she landed a job as the first female packer in the program’s century-old history.” Glacier’s lead packer Dave Elwood said that “Michalak possesses the mettle of a packing pro; she regards the trade’s traditional roots with deep esteem, she possesses all of the skills and knows how to use them, and she understands the importance of maintaining public lands and wilderness.” Elwood said, “As long as we have wilderness, we’ll have packers, and we need young packers like Jill to carry on the legacy to future generations. I think our forefathers saw the mechanized world coming, and they had the foresight to set some of this aside. It’s up to us and the National Park Service to preserve that.”

North Korean Threat Revitalizes Opposition To US Military Expansion In Guam.

The Wall Street Journal (8/18, Craymer) reported the North Korean nuclear threat has rekindled a local movement in Guam opposed to a planned US military expansion on the island, which the Pentagon announced in 2006 but delayed over environmental concerns and a series of legal challenges and opposition actions. Activists argue Guam’s security has been jeopardized because of its status as a US territory and residents’ lack of a voice in Washington.

Hagerty Says US, Japan Committed To Calming Rhetoric Over North Korea. Reuters (8/18, Kelly) reports that on Friday, the US Ambassador to Japan, William Hagerty, met with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Hagerty lamented his visit comes at a difficult time, but that the US-Japanese alliance “is rock solid, in fact in my personal view this is the greatest alliance on earth.” He stressed that the US sought to cooperate with Japan to “calm the rhetoric” over the North Korean threat. On Thursday, Secretary of State Tillerson, Defense Secretary Mattis, and their Japanese counterparts also agreed “to work more closely on North Korea.” Tillerson remarked, “Our effort is to cause them to want to engage in talks but engage in talks with an understanding that these talks will lead to a different conclusion than talks of the past.”

The New York Times (8/18, Rich) says Abe is keenly aware that Japan “needs the United States as its primary protector in a volatile region,” but analysts suggested he is beginning “to consider a more independent role for Japan in Asia: one that looks beyond the current White House as Japan prepares for an era in which American influence may be waning.” The Times points to Japan’s involvement in the Trans-Pacific Partnership and pledge to cooperate with China’s “One Belt, One Road” infrastructure project as evidence that the nation may be distancing itself. According to some analysts, however, Japan will not likely sever its close relations with the US, in large part because of the military constraints under Japan's pacifist constitution.

US, South Korea To Conduct Joint Military Exercises. Reuters (8/18) reports the Pentagon said Friday that from Aug. 21 through Aug. 31, about 17,500 US troops will join South Korean forces in a joint military exercise dubbed Ulchi Freedom Guardian, which the Pentagon described as a "computer simulated defensive exercise designed to enhance readiness, protect the region and maintain stability on the Korean peninsula." Troops from Australia, Britain, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, New Zealand, and the Netherlands will also participate. Reuters notes the joint exercise comes amid escalating tensions "over North Korea's missile and nuclear weapons program."

USA Today (8/18, Michaels) reports North Korea's official media outlet, Central News Agency, warned that the US-South Korean joint exercise will "further drive the situation on the Korean Peninsula into a catastrophe." Pyongyang's ongoing threats have "triggered a stern warning from Washington," including from Defense Secretary Mattis, who on Thursday asserted, "In the event of a missile launch towards the territory of Japan, Guam, United States, Korea, we would take immediate, specific actions to take it down."

Rohrabacher Urges Pentagon To Conduct "Massive Cyberattack" On North Korea. The Washington Times (8/18, Blake) reports that on Thursday, House Subcommittee on Europe, Eurasia and Emerging Threats Chairman Dana Rohrabacher called on the Pentagon to conduct "a coordinated, massive cyberattack on North Korea's infrastructure, disabling the dictatorship's communications and its missile-launch capabilities." Rohrabacher explained, "The ultimate goal, of course, must be regime change, and we may hope that North Korea's sponsors in China also recognize that necessity."

Survey To Track Pacific Migrants.

The Honolulu Star-Advertiser (8/19, Nakaso) reports that the Interior Department "by December 2018 plans to count the number of people who travel under the Compacts of Free Association in Hawaii, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and American Samoa to determine how much federal money Hawaii and the U.S. territories will receive to offset 'the economic and social impacts of these migrants.'" Trump Expected To Announce Afghanistan Troop Increase In Televised Address.

Coverage of the White House announcement that President Trump will address the nation about Afghanistan on Monday evening is brief and straightforward owing to the lack of detail in the statement. Reports say that it appears the President will announce an increase in troop strength, probably by 4,000 troops. Most sources stick to the basic facts, though several look at the ongoing debate within the Administration over Afghanistan policy – as well as the President's own reported reluctance to continue the war there.

The CBS Weekend News (8/20, lead story, 2:05, Quijano) reported, "Exactly seven months into his presidency, with his economic agenda eclipsed by political turmoil, President Trump is shifting focus to America's longest war. The President will address the nation Monday night with a new strategy for the war in Afghanistan. It could include sending thousands more US troops." On NBC Nightly News (8/20, story 3, 2:20, Diaz-Balart), Kelly O'Donnell reported that "the President will unveil his plan...after a strategy session with his top advisers at Camp David Friday." In a brief report, ABC World News Tonight (8/20, story 4, 3:00, Llamas) said Trump "has repeatedly expressed a desire to bring America's longest war to a close, but his generals are telling him that the job is not finished." The Washington Post (8/20, Morello, Wagner) reports, "Trump has given Mattis authority to set troop levels in the country, but Mattis has been waiting for Trump to decide a strategic focus before he sends any more troops."

The New York Times (8/20, Gordon) reports that Defense Secretary Mattis said that Trump, "who had been accused by lawmakers of dragging his feet on Afghanistan, had settled on a new strategy after a 'rigorous' review." On an overnight flight to Jordan, Mattis told reporters, "The President has made a decision. I am very comfortable that the strategic process was sufficiently rigorous." The Washington Post (8/20, Morello, Wagner) reports, "Trump has given Mattis authority to set troop levels in the country, but Mattis has been waiting for Trump to decide a strategic focus before he sends any more troops."

USA Today (8/20, Collins) reports that "options on the table include proposals to send roughly 3,000 to 5,000 more US troops. ... The top commander in Afghanistan, Gen. John Nicholson, has said several thousand additional troops are needed." The AP (8/20, Baldor, Burns) reports that Nicholson "hailed the launch of the Afghan Army's new special operations corps" on Sunday, an "exhortation of continued support for the Afghans [that] suggested the Pentagon may have won its argument that America's military must stay engaged in the conflict." The Hill (8/20, Manchester) says an addition of "4,000 troops to the 8,400 now deployed" is expected.

The Wall Street Journal (8/20, Nicholas, Lubold) and other sources note that the President called for a troop drawdown as a candidate, but that military advisers and Secretary of State Tillerson counseled against it. Politico (8/20, Griffiths) reports that the "seemingly endless conflict in Afghanistan has been the subject of significant debate within the administration. The president has at times expressed skepticism about the possibility of winning a war there." Breitbart (8/20, Mora) says Trump "inherited a chaotic situation in Afghanistan from his predecessors."

Jonathan Swan of Axios (8/20) writes, "Trump's top national security advisers all agree the only way they'll win their missions in Afghanistan is to modestly increase troop levels, keep training the Afghan military, and keep a strong CIA and special forces presence to run aggressive counter-terrorism operations." Mattis has reportedly "been using this line in meetings: 'Mr. President, we haven't fought a 16-year war so much as we have fought a one-year war, 16 times.'" Swan writes that despite his reluctance, Trump "doesn't want to be the president who loses the country to the terrorists."

Reuters (8/20, Ali) reports that Sen. Tim Kaine said on CBS' Face The Nation, "The troop strength question is sort of cart before the horse. The real question is what is our strategy? And then when you lay out the strategy, the troop strength question can kind of answer itself." Sen. Ben Cardin said on Fox News Sunday (8/20, Hemmer) that he had not seen the new strategy by the White House but that "our objective needs to be that we have a regime in Afghanistan that can maintain some semblance of security so that we don't see" a growth of "terrorist organizations again within Afghanistan."

The Los Angeles Times (8/20, Hennigan) headlines its report "Trump To Announce New Strategy – And Probably More Troops – For Afghanistan." The Washington Times (8/20, Boyer, Muñoz), the Washington Examiner (8/20, Cohen, Chaitin), and the Daily Caller (8/20, Pfeiffer) also have reports.

Trump Praises Boston Protesters Rallying Against "Bigotry And Hate," Condemns "Anti-Police Agitators."

President Trump in a series of tweets on Saturday lauded protesters in Boston "speaking out against bigotry and hate" while criticizing "'anti-police agitators." Coverage of the President's remarks was limited, although reports contrast his remarks to comments last week following violence in Charlottesville and compared the violence at that rally to the peaceful demonstrations in Boston.

The Hill (8/19, Greenwood) reports Trump "heaped praise on counterprotesters in Boston," tweeting, "Our great country has been divided for decades. Sometimes you need protest in order to heal, & we will heal, & be stronger than ever before!" He added, "I want to applaud the many protesters in Boston who are speaking out against bigotry and hate. Our country will soon come together as one!"

However, Bloomberg News (8/19, Hamilton) reports that "an hour before lauding Saturday's protesters, Trump, who's spending the weekend at his Bedminster, New Jersey, golf resort, was less magnanimous." Politico (8/19, Griffiths) reports he tweeted, "Looks like many anti-police agitators in Boston. Police are looking tough and smart! Thank you." The Hill (8/19, Manchester) reports the President in another tweet "also praised Boston's mayor and law enforcement officers amid the protests." Trump said, "Great job by all law enforcement officers and Boston Mayor @Marty_Walsh." In the lead ABC World News Tonight (8/19, lead story, 3:05, Llamas) segment, Stephanie Ramos said the President's remarks amounted to "some mixed messages."

According to a front-page New York Times (8/18, A1, Seelye, Blinder, Bidgood) article, "thousands of demonstrators, emboldened and unnerved by the fatal eruption of violence in Virginia last weekend, surged into the nation's streets and parks on Saturday to denounce white supremacy and Nazism." The Times says that "the demonstrations were loud but broadly peaceful, even as tensions and worries coursed through protests that unfolded from Boston Common, the nation's oldest public park, to Hot Springs, Ark., and the bridges that cross the Willamette River in Portland, Ore. Other protests were expected on Saturday in Chicago, Dallas and Houston." The Times adds that "Boston faced dueling demonstrations, but a rally to promote 'free speech' was brief and unamplified," as does the Wall Street Journal (8/19, Levitz, Kamp) in an article titled "Right-Wing Rally Is Overwhelmed By Counterprotests In Boston."

The Washington Post (8/19, Lowery, Pazzanese) reports that “in anticipation of potential violence, city officials corralled more than 500 police officers onto the Common, installed security cameras and constructed elaborate barriers to separate the free-speech rally from the massive demonstration in opposition to it.” The Post adds that “the handful of rally attendees gathered beneath a pavilion near the center of the Common, surrounded by metal barriers and dozens of police. Several hundred feet away, thousands of counterprotesters surrounding them carrying signs declaring ‘Black Lives Matter’ and ‘Hate Has No Home In Boston,’ while mockingly chanting ‘we can’t hear you’ when it appeared the ralliers had begun to speak.” In the lead NBC Nightly News (8/19, lead story, 2:50, Diaz-Balart) segment, Morgan Radford interviewed participants of both the “Free Speech” rally and the counterprotesters.

On the lead story of the CBS Weekend News (8/19, lead story, 2:10, Ninan), DeMarco Morgan reported “there were some skirmishes” and “a Trump supporter had to be escorted to safety by police.” The Boston Globe (8/18) reports the rallies ended early “with few injuries and 27 arrests, officials said at a late afternoon press conference.” The Globe adds “a throng of demonstrators that at times was 2 miles long marched from Roxbury to protest the rally, whose lineup included speakers with extremist ties, and which had prompted fears of a repeat of the violence that rocked Charlottesville, Va., earlier this week. Police estimated that 30,000 to 40,000 people ended up in and around the Common.”

The Hill (8/19, Greenwood) “Briefing Room” blog reports that after the demonstrations, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh said, “I want to thank all the people that came out to there that message of love, not hate. To fight back on racism, to fight back on anti-Semitism, to fight back on the supremacists that were coming to our city, on the Nazis that were coming to our city” The Hill (8/19, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog separately reports Boston Police Commissioner William Evans also “said on Saturday that the vast majority of people who came out to protest a conservative free speech rally were there ‘for the right reason.’” Evans said, “Ninety-nine point nine percent of the people here were here for the right reason, and that’s to fight bigotry and hate for the most part here today.”

Twitter Users Mock Trump For “Heal” Typos. USA Today (8/19, Miller) reports that “when sending out a response to the counterprotest in Boston that quelled a ‘Free Speech’ rally on Saturday, President Trump attempted to tweet a message about the country needing protest in order to ‘heal,’” but he misspelled the word three times and “some Twitter users captured the typos in screenshots.” USA Today highlights some of the critical responses to the President’s mistake.

Haley: “We All Have A Responsibility To Stand Up And Condemn” Hate. Ambassador Haley “told staff in an email – seen by” Reuters (8/18) on Friday – that “everyone must stand up and condemn hate.” Haley said, “Those who march spewing hate are few, but loud. We must denounce them at every turn, and make them feel like they are on an island and isolate them the same way they wish to isolate others.” Reuters added “Haley, a former governor of South Carolina, said the ‘horrible acts’ seen in Charlottesville ‘took me back to sad days dealing with the Charleston tragedy in 2015.’” Haley also asserted, “People aren’t born with hate. We all have a responsibility to stand up and condemn it.” Haley continued, “While we should respect diversity of viewpoints, it is incumbent on us to challenge hate with the values we cherish. And it is incumbent on us to never, ever countenance violence as we do so.”

WPost A1: GOP Lawmakers Divided Over Trump Following Charlottesville Response. The Washington Post (8/19, A1, Balz) reports on its front page that following Trump’s response to the violence in Charlottesville last weekend, “Republican lawmakers and leaders face the most unpalatable set of choices yet in their relationship” with the President, as “they are caught between disgust over his failure to unequivocally condemn neo-Nazism, a desire to advance a conservative agenda and fears of rupturing the Trump-GOP coalition ahead of the 2018 elections.” According to the Post, “many GOP leaders are now personally wrestling with the trade-offs of making a cleaner separation with the president, while finding no good options” and “to some in the party, the hesitancy to act more boldly...falls short of what they believe this moment demands.” However, the Post acknowledges “interviews with Republicans around the country since Charlottesville highlight the dilemma elected officials face.”

Sasse Worries “It Feels Like Violence Is Coming.” The Hill (8/19, Bowden) “Briefing Room” blog reports Sen. Ben Sasse on Friday “in an extensive Facebook post...shared thoughts he said were prompted by the violence last weekend in Charlottesville, Va. that left three dead and multiple injured.” In particular, Sasse “warned that ‘it feels like violence is coming’ and the president won’t be able to calm the nation in the face of it.” The Hill adds Sasse also “unloaded on...Trump and his administration over the response to the incident, which Sasse called out as motivated by white supremacists.”

Bera Expresses Support For Censuring Trump Over Charlottesville Response. The Los Angeles Times (8/19, McGreevy) reports Rep. Ami Bera at a town hall meeting on Saturday called “Trump’s actions and comments in response to racist violence in Virginia...embarrassing” and he suggested “a case could be made for censuring the president.” Bera said, “I think given his actions, his words post-Charlottesville, you can very well make the case, and we are starting to talk about that, of censuring the president. We can’t do that without Republicans finding the political courage to join with us.” He added, “I, at this particular point, am embarrassed by our president and some of his actions, some of his words.”

NYTimes A1: Trump Supporters Unfazed By His Charlottesville Response. Under the headline “A Deal Breaker For Trump’s Supporters? Nope. Not This Time, Either,” the New York Times (8/19, A1, Tavernise) states on its front page that although “there are signs that Mr. Trump’s support among Republican leaders and some Republican voters is weakening,” his core supporters are sticking with him despite his comments on the violence in Charlottesville.

NYTimes A1: Charlottesville, Trump’s Reaction Has Redefined Virginia Gubernatorial Race. In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (8/19, A1, Martin) reports “the bloody white supremacist rally in Charlottesville, Va., has thrust race and history to the forefront of this year’s campaign for governor in Virginia,” as has the President’s response to the violence, and the outcome will “inevitably...be read as a harbinger for the 2018 midterm elections.” The Times adds that the unrest will “ensure that the nation’s highest-profile campaign this fall will also be fought in part along the highly combustible lines of racial politics.” However, the Times says both parties will be “somewhat discomfited, both because of Virginia’s bifurcated demography and the cautious nature of the two candidates,” Lt. Gov. Ralph S. Northam (D) and Ed Gillespie (R).

NYTimes: Trump “A Prince Of Discord Who Seems Divorced From Decency And Common Sense.” The New York Times (8/19) editorializes that “with each day, President Trump offers fresh proof that he is failing the office that Americans entrusted to him,” even as “the rolling disaster of his presidency accelerated downhill last week with a news conference on Tuesday at which he seemed determined to sow racial strife in a nation desperate for a unifying vision.” The Times says Trump’s defense of white supremacists shows “in essence, is where we are now: a nation led by a prince of discord who seems divorced from decency and common sense.” The Times takes comfort in “some signs that our democratic system is working to contain Mr. Trump,” but concludes “the deeper question, to Mr. Trump’s remaining supporters, is not political but moral. It is whether they will continue to follow a standard-bearer who is alienating most of the country by embracing extremists.”

Bannon Ends Tenure As Chief Strategist, Returns To Breitbart.

The White House announced Friday that Strategist Steve Bannon has left the Administration to reclaim his post as executive chairman for Breitbart News. Coverage of Bannon’s departure reached saturation levels in print and online, while the network newscasts, which all led with the story, devoted nearly 12 and a half minutes combined to the announcement. While reporting hailed Chief of Staff Kelly for securing Bannon’s resignation, many analyses cautioned Bannon could pose a serious threat to his opponents who remain in the Administration from his position at Breitbart and highlighted that conservatives are upset with his removal.

The Washington Post (8/18, A1, Parker, Rucker, Costa, Paletta) reports on its front page that although Bannon had been “an architect” of Trump’s election, the President dismissed “his embattled chief strategist...in a major White House shake-up that follows a week of racial unrest.” The Post adds that “Trump had been under mounting pressure to dispense with Bannon, who many officials view as a political Svengali but who has drawn scorn as a leading internal force encouraging and amplifying the president’s most controversial nationalist impulses.” The Wall Street Journal (8/18, A1, Bender) reports in a front-page article that the President had stuck with his chief strategist through previous controversies, but Bannon’s recent interview with the American Prospect likely forced Trump’s hand.

In the lead CNN’s Situation Room (8/18, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) segment, senior White House correspondent Jim Acosta said that according to sources, Bannon’s interview “irked the President” because it “seemed to undercut Mr. Trump’s message.” In the lead story for CNN’s Situation Room’s (8/18, 5:03 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) second hour, Acosta said “Bannon was supposed to be fired two weeks ago” because he disagreed with White House Chief of Staff Kelly’s “disciplined power structure for the White House,” but it was the “interviews that seemed to undercut Mr. Trump’s message” on North Korea that constituted the last straw.

In the lead Fox News’ Special Report (8/18, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Baier) story, chief White House correspondent John Roberts similarly said “an Administration official told Fox News the interview, quote, ‘Didn’t help Bannon’s case.’” CNN’s Situation Room (8/18, 5:07 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) White House reporter Kaitlan Collins also said Bannon’s interview with the American Prospect, in which he contradicted Trump’s message on North Korea and claimed “he could make personnel changes at the State Department,” had “infuriated” Trump in part because Bannon was effectively “acting like he was the president.”

Politics editor at large Chris Cillizza of CNN’s Situation Room (8/18, 5:32 p.m. EDT, Blitzer) said that interview was, in his opinion, the final straw for Trump not only because Bannon “granted an extended interview with a liberal magazine,” but because he was touting how he was “moving people around” and contradicting Trump’s message on North Korea. Fox News’ Special Report’s (8/18, 5:04 p.m. EDT, Baier) Bret Baier quoted Bannon as stating in the American Prospect interview, “There’s no military solution [to North Korea’s nuclear threats], forget it. Until somebody solves the part of the equation that shows me that ten million people in Seoul don’t die in the first 30 minutes from conventional weapons, I don’t know what you’re talking about, there’s no military solution here, they got us.”

Charles Krauthammer told Fox News’ Special Report (8/18, 6:39 p.m. EDT, Baier) that Bannon’s ouster was the result of “several strikes” against him over the interview, notably over his remarks on “North Korea, the undermining of the President’s policy, basically saying it’s a bluff and it’s an empty bluff. The China part, where he said we’re at war, economic war with China. Just when the President is trying to use Chinese influence on the North Korea problem.”

In a front-page article, the New York Times (8/18, A1, Haberman) reports that prior to an official announcement, the President “told senior aides that he had decided to remove Mr. Bannon, according to two administration officials briefed on the discussion.” However, the Times says “a person close to Mr. Bannon insisted that the parting of ways was his idea, and that he had submitted his resignation to the president on Aug. 7, to be announced at the start of this week,” but the violence in Charlottesville, Virginia delayed the announcement even as “Bannon’s many critics bore down after the violence in Charlottesville.” The Times adds “human rights activists demanded that the president fire so-called nationalists working in the West Wing. That group of hard-right populists in the White House is led by Mr. Bannon.”

However, the Washington Times (8/18, Boyer) says the White House “portrayed the move as a mutual parting.” Breitbart (8/18, Moons) reports White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders in a statement said: “White House Chief of Staff John Kelly and Steve Bannon have mutually agreed today would be Steve’s last day. We are grateful for his service and wish him the best.” Politico Magazine (8/18, Johnson) reports that “Trump himself, who hates firing people, has not spoken to Bannon personally since his dismissal, according to a White House aide.”

Bloomberg News (8/18, Sink, Talev) reports Bannon’s “exit caps a tumultuous four weeks in which a slew of senior officials have announced their departures, including the former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus, former press secretary Sean Spicer and former communications director Anthony Scaramucci, who was hired and fired within the space of 11 days.” The AP (8/18, Lemire, Colvin) states that “just seven months in, Trump has forced out his hardline national security adviser, his chief of staff, his press secretary (whose last day will be Aug. 31) and two communications directors – in addition to the FBI director he inherited from Barack Obama.” The AP characterizes Bannon’s departure to be “especially significant since he was viewed by many as Trump’s connection to his base of most-committed voters and the protector of the disruptive, conservative agenda that propelled the celebrity businessman to the White House.”

Reuters (8/18, Mason, Holland) describes Bannon as “a powerful and controversial figure known for far-right political views” who was “behind some of Trump’s most contentious policies, including a travel ban on people from several Muslim-majority nations, and has fought with more moderate factions inside a White House riven with rivalries and back-stabbing.” Reuters adds that the 63-year-old Bannon is “a champion of economic nationalism and a political provocateur” as well as “a former U.S. Navy officer, Goldman Sachs investment banker and Hollywood movie producer.”

In pieces chronicling Bannon’s tenure, Bloomberg News (8/18, Green) asserts he was “Trump’s most important political relationship” and Reuters (8/18, Oliphant) says that for the President, the removal of Bannon “was almost like bidding goodbye to a part of himself,” as “Trump’s most polarizing stances on matters such as immigration and national security closely tracked Bannon’s ‘America First’ anti-globalist worldview.”

On the CBS Evening News (8/18, story 2, 2:00, Mason), chief Washington correspondent and "Face the Nation" anchor John Dickerson said that on "issues like immigration, trade, taxes, where Bannon's view was different than the orthodox Republican view – that's now no longer got a champion in the White House. And the same on foreign policy." Dickerson added Bannon "was against the kind of adventurism that we've seen in previous Republican politics. He also was the one who encouraged the President's counter-punching instincts. He was a risk taker during the campaigns." According to Dickerson, "Now that he's out, he may very well become a fierce opponent of the White House from the outside."

Nonetheless, a more than 2,100-word Politico (8/18, Dawsey, Karni, Nussbaum) analysis contends that "in the end, it was Steve Bannon's ego that did him in." In the lead ABC World News Tonight (8/18, lead story, 4:00, Muir) segment, senior White House correspondent Cecilia Vega said Bannon "seemed to have so much power Time magazine called him 'the great manipulator.' And of course, SNL portraying him as the real mastermind in the Oval Office. It did not sit well with the President, who told the 'Wall Street Journal' in April Bannon was just, quote, 'a guy who works for me.' And just this week, the President making it clear he won the election on his own."

Meanwhile, according to USA Today (8/18, Jackson, Przybyla), "Bannon's departure triggered immediate speculation as to whether he would seek to retaliate against Trump and enemies inside the White House via Breitbart News or other outlets aligned with the now-former adviser." In an interview with Bloomberg News (8/18, Green), "Bannon said in his first public remarks since his ouster" asserted, "If there's any confusion out there, let me clear it up: I'm leaving the White House and going to war for Trump against his opponents – on capitol hill, in the media, and in corporate America."

The New York Times (8/18, A1, Grynbaum, Peters) reports on its front page that Bannon on Friday also resumed his role as chairman of "the hard-charging right-wing website" Breitbart News and he led Breitbart's evening editorial meeting. The Hill (8/18, Easley) reports Breitbart News editor-in-chief Alex Marlow in a statement said, "The populist-nationalist movement got a lot stronger today. ... Breitbart gained an executive chairman with his finger on the pulse of the Trump agenda." Breitbart President and CEO Larry Solov said, "Breitbart's pace of global expansion will only accelerate with Steve back. ... The sky's the limit."

Politico (8/18, Isenstadt) reports that "in the days leading up to his exit Friday, Steve Bannon told associates that he felt profoundly constrained by the limits of the federal government and was itching to return to the outside world." Politico adds that "it was time, he told friends, to get ready for 'Bannon da barbarian.'" Breitbart (8/18, Shaw) cites Axios in reporting that a source close to Bannon stated that "this week is a good window into what Bannon outside the [White House] would look like: A strong defense of POTUS and 'fire and fury' for enemies of The Trump agenda."

A Washington Post (8/18, Borchers) analysis predicts Bannon "could have even more of an impact" on the Administration from the outside. While the President may achieve "another amiable split" and retain Bannon as "a valuable ally," the Post warns that Bannon still "could focus his fury on former White House rivals who pulled the president in different directions." The Hill (8/18, Easley, Fabian) also reports that "while the chief strategist's ouster is a victory for...Kelly and his goal of eliminating leaks and bringing order to the Oval Office, some believe Bannon could be an even more disruptive force for the Trump administration from the outside."

Charles Hurt of the Washington Times told Fox News' Special Report (8/18, 6:38 p.m. EDT, Baier) that Bannon may be the White House's "new enemy" who "is not going to quit." However, Hurt acknowledged Trump has "been unshakeable in his commitment to those things that he and Steve Bannon have both been fighting for, for a long time. I think in the other areas like Afghanistan and some of these global affairs issues or trade with China, things like that. I think that's where we are going to see a lot of the fireworks."

Washington Post (8/18, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump states that "if Bannon decides to train his well-honed ability to mobilize anger at the White House," he is unlikely to target Trump, "a president who largely agrees with the Breitbart agenda (thanks, in part, to being an avid consumer of it)," but rather may take aim at "the people around Trump who might try to turn him back into the Manhattan moderate he once was."

McClatchy (8/18, Kumar) reports "several former Trump advisers" are worried that Bannon will target "a trio of top aides he clashed with at the White House: Gary Cohn, director of the National Economic Council and a registered Democrat who is one of the less conservative voices in the White House; National Security Adviser H.R. McMaster; and Dina Powell, deputy national security adviser for strategy." In the lead CBS Evening News (8/18, lead story, 2:30, Mason) segment, Margaret Brennan reported "Bannon was unafraid to feud with other White House officials, particularly the President's son-in-law, Jared Kushner, economic adviser Gary Cohen, and National Security Advisor H.R. McMaster."

Conservatives "Expressed Fury And Dismay" Over Bannon's Removal. The Hill (8/18, Easley) reports "a number of conservatives expressed fury and dismay on Friday after news broke that President Trump has parted ways with his chief strategist, Stephen Bannon," who they view as "a hero on the right [for] harnessing Trump's message of economic populism during the campaign." According to McClatchy (8/18, Welsh), "leaders of the far-right movement raged against Steve Bannon's ouster from the White House, warning the West Wing is now dominated by fake conservatives led by" Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner. In a Twitter live stream on Friday, "well-known far-right activist Mike Cernovich" asserted, "It's a full on coup now, guys" and he "directly blamed 'Javanka' – the nickname for Ivanka Trump and Kushner – for the ouster of the administration's nationalist ideologue." In addition, Cernovich and "Jack Posobiec, a voice associated with the far-right," told McClatchy "they thought Vice President Mike Pence could be responsible for the effort to oust Trump's inner circle from the administration."

Politico (8/18, Cheney, Bade) reports Bannon's departure "is alarming conservative lawmakers and their allies, who no longer have a direct pipeline to the Oval Office." Politico acknowledges that he "forged an especially close relationship with the House Freedom Caucus – the influential bloc of hard-line House Republicans – during a bruising health care fight in the spring" as Bannon had "played a central role in keeping the Freedom Caucus in the president's good graces when the group initially appeared to blow up the House's Obamacare repeal-and-replace effort in April."

The Hill (8/18, Kamisar) reports Rep. Lee Zeldin in a Fox News interview on Friday "lamented...Bannon's departure from the administration Friday, defending the controversial aide and conservative media figure against accusations of racism." Zeldin asserted Bannon has been "getting a really bad rap, characterizing him as a racist," which is "just not accurate from the person that I have had an opportunity to spend some time with." Zeldin added Bannon is "passionately pro-Israel, very consistent with the president's vision in regards to trade policy or moving in a better direction on the Iran nuclear deal. He's someone who brought a lot of talent and wisdom. He understands world history like few others do in this country."

Tucker Carlson, in an appearance on Fox News' Special Report (8/18, 6:21 p.m. EDT, Baier), said that Bannon's departure "is a big deal" and "is being framed in terms of identity politics: is Steve Bannon a racist or is he not? But the real story has to do with ideas and politics. Bannon was one of the only populist conservatives in the White House," and he was "at odds with the majority on virtually every possible policy topic," such as "energy, climate, trade, immigration, foreign policy." Carlson added Bannon "was one of the people fighting against H.R. McMaster on sending more troops to Afghanistan," and "he would have fought against, I think, any attempt to send troops to Venezuela, something the President mentioned."

The Washington Post (8/18, Weigel) reports that even with Bannon's dismissal, "the leaders of the 'alt-right,' which Bannon elevated and then denounced, predicted that their movement would continue." Richard Spencer, "the white nationalist who popularized the term 'alt-right' to rebrand the white nationalist movement," said, "I'm sad to see Bannon go, but I was never sure who Bannon was ideologically and politically. ... He's a fighter, to be sure, and a populist in a basic sense, but what he actually believed was never clear."

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (8/18, Boyer) reports Tea Party Patriots President Jenny Beth Martin, Americans for Limited Government President Richard Manning, UrbanCure President Star Parker, American Family Association President Tim Wildmon, ConservativeHQ.com Chairman Richard Viguerie, Center for Security Policy President Frank Gaffney, and other "influential conservatives" sent a letter to the President that praised Bannon and senior counselor Kellyanne Conway as "instrumental in helping him to keep his agenda on track." They said, "While the media buffets your presidency on a daily basis, we take comfort in knowing that Steve Bannon and Kellyanne Conway are both ably working for you to assist you in weathering these unfair attacks and keeping your agenda front and center."

Moderate Republicans, Democratic Lawmakers Laud Bannon's Removal, Call On Trump To Make More Changes. In the lead NBC Nightly News (8/18, lead story, 2:45, Holt) story, Hallie Jackson reported Bannon's departure was "cheered by civil rights groups, Democrats, even some Republicans." McClatchy (8/18, Glueck, Kumar) reports "Republicans exhaled on Friday after President Donald Trump ousted controversial strategist Steve Bannon from the White House – a move that will help ease lawmakers' return to Washington after a damaging and polarizing period many blame in part on the former Breitbart chairman." McClatchy adds that while "certainly, some GOP insiders warned that blame for the difficult nature of this White House ultimately sits with Trump," other "operatives inside Washington and out said Bannon's exit signaled chief of staff John Kelly might be successful in bringing some order to what has been a chaotic White House prone to self-inflicted distractions that throw the entire Republican Congress off of its agenda."

Meanwhile, The Hill (8/18, Manchester) "Briefing Room" blog reports "Democrats are cheering the news that Stephen Bannon is out as White House chief strategist." In a separate article, The Hill (8/18, Lillis) reports House Minority Leader Pelosi hailed "Bannon's firing [as] welcome news," but she warned in a statement that "it doesn't disguise where President Trump himself stands on white supremacists and the bigoted beliefs they advance." Pelosi added, "President Trump's growing record of repulsive statements is matched by his repulsive policies. ... Personnel changes are worthless so long as President Trump continues to advance policies that disgrace our cherished American values."

The Hill (8/18, Lillis) reports Rep. Cedric Richmond, the head of the Congressional Black Caucus, similarly said in a statement that Bannon's removal "is not enough because the issue of him working in the White House has never only been about him." Richmond added, "It's also been about the racist and discriminatory policies he's helped draft and implement which hurt African Americans and other communities or color."

The Hill (8/18, Greenwood) "Briefing Room" blog reports Derrick Johnson, the NAACP's interim president and CEO, in a statement said, "The NAACP is glad to see Steve Bannon out of the White House." However, he added, "Ousting one key staffer...can't erase the words used by President Trump this week in defense of domestic terrorists, neo-Nazis and white supremacists. President Trump provided permission for these hate groups to exist."

Sources Say Trump Is Considering Removal Of Gorka. Bloomberg News (8/18, Talev, Sink) reports "Sebastian Gorka, an ally of ousted White House chief strategist Stephen Bannon, also faces possible removal from his post as a counterterrorism aide to President Donald Trump, two people with knowledge of the situation said Friday."

Stock Market Rises On Announcement Of Bannon's Departure, But Fails To Maintain Momentum. The AP (8/18, Jay) reports that while "stocks briefly turned higher following reports that President Donald Trump's chief strategist, Steve Bannon, left his White House post," the market "slumped in the final minutes of trading Friday and ended a rough week with more losses," as does the Wall Street Journal (8/18, Driebusch, Yang). Breitbart (8/18, Carney) similarly reports that while the announcement of Bannon's removal "sent up a round of cheers on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange," the major indexes "shortly after...began to slide." Breitbart suggests this "may have been a classic case of 'buy the rumor, sell the news.'"

NYTimes, WSJournal, WPost Welcome Bannon's Removal. The New York Times (8/18) editorializes that while "it would be nice to think the departure of Steve Bannon, chief strategist in a strategy-free White House, signals that President Trump is oh-so-gradually closing the door on white nationalist sentiments," to do so "would require forgetting that Mr. Trump fostered birther lies and racist memes long before he worked with Mr. Bannon, who saw in him a vessel for a more developed nativist agenda." Nonetheless, the Times acknowledges "Bannon's exit is, of course, a relief" and concludes "good riddance, and let's hope other unqualified ideologues, like Sebastian Gorka, the Islamophobic foreign policy adviser, follow Mr. Bannon out the door."

The Wall Street Journal (8/18) editorializes that Bannon's departure provides President Trump with an opportunity to salvage his Administration by abandoning the Breitbart coalition. However, the Journal concludes Trump still needs to adopt more discipline if he wants to achieve his agenda.

The Washington Post (8/18) editorializes that with Bannon's departure, "it is at least conceivable that both policy and process will improve with Mr. Bannon no longer among the personnel who are responsible for both" and suggests that "there is some reason to hope that the more moderate, stabilizing figures around the president – that is, the officials with whom Mr. Bannon did relentless bureaucratic battle – may now have more influence." According to the Post, Bannon's ouster "removes a cause of embarrassment (and a constant source of political harassment) for mainstream Republicans in the House and Senate – but it does not end their moral dilemma" because "Trump is still president. And he still does what he feels like doing, to include standing before television cameras and pronouncing on the moral equivalency of neo-Nazi marchers and those who marched against them." The Post concludes "the ultimate benefit of Mr. Bannon's departure may be to clarify the lines of accountability."

However, in his Washington Post (8/18, Dionne) column, E.J. Dionne Jr. contends Trump's decision to dismiss Bannon "sends a clear signal that the president's 'populism' has always been a ruse" and "underscores that for all of Trump's talk about workers and jobs, his administration's substantive actions have mainly benefited corporate interests." Dionne concludes "the president's defenders will cheer this decision as an effort to create a more orderly and predictable administration," but "just as likely, we are witnessing yet another erratic move from a leader who doesn't know what he believes and was uneasy with an aide who dared imagine that there was a point to his presidency."

On NBC Nightly News (8/18, story 2, 1:05, Holt), political director and moderator of "Meet the Press" Chuck Todd also cautioned, "I don't know if it's going to change that much. In many ways, Steve Bannon had been sidelined or marginalized a bit over the last three months." He suggested, "I think on the staff front, it should mean maybe fewer staff in-fights, but I'll tell you, look, it's not as if Steve Bannon...created the Donald Trump ideology. They were kindred spirits. They found each other." He added, "I think just because Steve Bannon goes doesn't mean it somehow changes the President's comments, for instance, on his belief of what happened in Charlottesville, on his belief on the culture sort of aspects of things. So I don't think this changes the President. This simply keeps the White House a little less choppy internally."

Report: Trump Disbands Federal Advisory Panel On Climate Change.

The Washington Post (8/20, Eilperin) reports the Trump Administration will "disband the federal advisory panel for the National Climate Assessment, a group aimed at helping policymakers and private-sector officials incorporate the government's climate analysis into long-term planning." On Sunday, the charter for the Advisory Committee for the Sustained National Climate Assessment expired. On Friday Ben Friedman, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's acting administrator, "informed the committee's chair that the agency would not renew the panel." The next assessment is "due for release in 2018," and "already has become a contentious issue for the Trump administration."

The Washington Examiner (8/20, Cohen) reports the committee "includes academics, local officials and corporate representatives." The move by the Administration "follows the so-called leak of a sweeping federal climate change draft report earlier this month, which actually has been available online since January, that shows the dramatic rising of temperatures" in the US. Scientists are concerned "the Trump administration will attempt to squash conclusions from the draft report, as it has expressed skepticism toward climate change." NOAA communications director Julie Roberts said "this action does not impact the completion of the Fourth National Climate Assessment, which remains a key priority." The Hill (8/20, Manchester) also provides coverage of this story.

Some Republicans Moving Away From GOP's Climate Change Opposition.

Politico (8/19, Siders) reported on an "unlikely surge" of Republicans "taking steps to distance themselves from the GOP's hard line on climate change." Detailing some recent efforts by the bipartisan House Climate Solutions Caucus, the piece suggests that some lawmakers may be building up "moderate credentials ahead of the 2018 elections." While few analysts "expect climate change to factor more significantly in 2018 than the economy, health care or myriad other issues," some "Democrats are already hitting Republicans on the issue in competitive districts." Despite this, some activists say the shift is a "sign of GOP movement on climate change."

Trump Keeping His Promise To Cut Regulations.

The Hill (8/19, Wheeler) reported that President Trump has kept his promise to cut regulations, examining his efficiency in reducing regulations so far. In discussing the Congressional Review Act, The Hill said that before Trump, the 1996 law "had only ever been successfully used once before." And Republicans "are now using it to repeal the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's attempt to prevent banks and credit card companies from stripping consumers of their right to join class action lawsuits."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"After The Terror In Barcelona." The New York Times (8/21) editorializes, "The hard truth is that there is no sure defense against young men filled with resentment and fired up with the lethal propaganda of militant Islam, especially as they turn to rudimentary weapons" like vehicles. Though ISIS "claimed responsibility, it does not require a global network or intricate training to drive a van into a crowd. Just blind hatred. So we know there will be more attacks...so long as terrorist organizations like the Islamic State or Al Qaeda continue to spread their murderous blend of religious extremism, victimhood, vengeance and violence among disaffected youths."

"Gov. Cuomo's Wise Move On Congestion Parking." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/20, Board) backs a plan for "a system of tolls and taxi fees, known as congestion pricing," in New York City, and says that in supporting some version of it, Gov. Andrew Cuomo "has taken an important step forward. State lawmakers" and Mayor Bill de Blasio "ought to help the governor come up with, and pass, a credible plan."

Washington Post.

"Trump May Be Planning To Make A Very Bad Decision On The Iran Deal." A Washington Post (8/20) editorial says while the Administration has done "little to counter Iranian aggression," Tehran's "toxic ambition" has "been relatively contained" in one area, "the production of material for use in nuclear warheads." The Post accuses President Trump of "matching his passivity toward Iran's regional meddling with an apparent determination to torpedo" the 2015 nuclear deal. The Post says experts "puzzle over what Mr. Trump could hope to accomplish by announcing that Iran is noncompliant," because the move "would rekindle a dormant Iranian threat while tolerating its truly dangerous behavior."

"The White House's Secretiveness Is Getting So Bad, It's Probably Illegal." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/20) writes that a new lawsuit from the advocacy group Public Citizen contends that the Administration is refusing to release White House visitor records – a refusal that "is likely illegal and certainly wrong." The Post argues that, by rejecting Public Citizen's information requests, the White House is defying its statement in April that it would release on request visitor records "relating to agencies not technically under the executive office of the president." The Post concludes, "It should not fall on the courts to enforce basic transparency from the public's elected leaders. But with this administration, the judiciary may have an essential role to play."

"The ACLU Is Half-Right About Metro's Violation Of Free Speech." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/20) writes that the ACLU's new First Amendment lawsuit against the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority's ban on "issue-oriented advertising" is partially correct in that WMATA did reject certain advertisements because of the viewpoints of the advertisers rather than issue advocacy. The Post argues that the lawsuit "goes too far," however, "in arguing for WMATA to accept its advertisements and those of PETA," which "really were issue ads prohibited by WMATA's legally acceptable guidelines." The Post concludes that WMATA "should approve advertisements for all products and services that meet WMATA's other guidelines, no matter how controversial the views behind those products may be."

Wall Street Journal.

"Texas Political Prosecution." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20) writes that the prosecution of Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton over indictment of securities fraud represents another example of Texas' habit of pursuing politicized prosecutions. The Journal notes Paxton's history of challenging state Republican leadership and argues that unless new evidence emerges justifying the case against him, Paxton is almost definitely not guilty despite the legal assault from opponents in the GOP establishment.

"The Seattle Tax Fight." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20) writes that the Seattle City Council's passage last month of an ordinance instituting an income tax on residents earning more than $250,000 violates the city charter and Washington state law – which statutorily prohibits a tax on net income – and represents a first step towards the larger goal of the state's progressives to create a statewide income tax. The Journal notes the Freedom Foundation's lawsuit against the city over the tax and Washingtonians' rejection of a income tax ballot measure and concludes by describing the new tax as manifestly illegal.

"The Teamsters' Impunity." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/20) writes that members of the Boston chapter of the Teamsters last week were found not guilty of extortion after allegedly threatening and demanding jobs from staffers of the "Top Chef" cable-TV show in June 2014 – a ruling that the Journal argues resulted from a legal loophole in the 1973 Supreme Court case US v. Enmons allowing unions to engage in behavior resembling extortion. The Journal contends that the Teamsters ruling further enforces unions' impunity, and concludes that Massachusetts lawmakers should consider enacting prohibitions on threatening behavior by unions in labor disputes.

Trump's Monument Plan Remains "Shrouded In Secrecy."

The Hill (8/26, Cama) reports that the Trump Administration's plans to possibly shrink some national monuments "remain shrouded in secrecy." Zinke "was expected to reveal his proposals publicly Thursday as well. But he did not, instead releasing a two-page summary of the process behind his considerations and telling the Associated Press that he's recommending reductions in the size of an unspecified 'handful' of national monuments." The Hill says that withholding the recommendations "spurred a new flurry of condemnation from Trump's opponents and charges that the administration is not living up to its promises of transparency in the monument review process."

The Telluride \(CO\) Daily Planet (8/25) reported that "almost immediately" after Zinke's announcement, "the Center for Western Priorities, a Denver-based land conservancy organization, shot back in a news release: 'More than 2.7 million Americans told Secretary Zinke what they think – the least he can do is return the favor. This secrecy shows the Trump Administration knows their attack on national monuments is wildly popular.'"

Copper Industry, Environmentalists Battle Over Arizona Monuments. The AP (8/27) reports Arizona's copper industry, environmentalists, and recreation groups "are fighting over the future of three national monuments in the state." As the Interior Department "reviews the size of 21 national monuments across the country, the multinational mining company Asarco is asking that more than 11,000 acres be pulled from the 129,000-acre Ironwood Forest National Monument northwest of Tucson so it can mine more copper there, next to the company's Silver Bell copper mine, the Arizona Daily Star reports." The state mining industry "also is trying to shrink two other Arizona national monuments that were named by President Bill Clinton: the Sonoran Desert National Monument lying north of Ironwood in Pinal County and the Vermilion Cliffs National Monument in Coconino County." Rep. Raúl Grijalva (AZ-D) "said the Trump administration will be sued if it decides to shrink Ironwood and other monuments."

WPost: Trump, Zinke Threaten Irreplaceable National Monuments. In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/27) writes that Interior Secretary Zinke's approach to addressing which national monuments deserve protection – by identifying and separating areas that have significant objects – rejects the approach of previous administrations which aimed to preserve "spectacular, irreplaceable and integrated natural landscapes, not just one butte or cliff dwelling at a time." The Post argues that President Trump and Secretary Zinke should not remove national monument protection from the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument and Bears Ears National Monument – both of which the Post describes as "unique and irreplaceable."

LA Times: Trump Should Zinke Monument Plan In Recycling Bin. The Los Angeles Times (8/25, Board) editorializes that there's "obviously reason to be concerned" about Zinke's secret proposals, which "were made in response to Trump's order in April for a sweeping review of more than two dozen national monuments that were created or expanded under the Antiquities Act of 1906." The Times said Zinke's two-page report summary, "which the administration did release Thursday, makes it clear that his recommendations are based on second-guessing the decisions of prior administrations that he accuses of overstepping their authority to set aside land for special protections." The Times urges the president to make the report public, "and then, assuming it cuts back protections for important, sensitive, majestic, historic, one-of-a-kind areas of vast open space, throw it in the recycling bin."

Association Heads Applaud Monument Review. Conservation Policy at Boone and Crockett

Club Co-Chairman Paul Phillips, National Wild Turkey Federation CEO Rebecca A. Humphries, and Wild Sheep Foundation CEO Gray Thornton wrote for The Hill (8/26, Phillips, Humphries, Thornton, Contributors) reports in its "Pundits Blog" blog that while sportsmen have serious concern over regarding the federal government's review, and those concerns "are legitimate in a broad sense, there needs to be some education on why these reviews actually could be better for the natural resources, wildlife and the public who enjoy them." The authors wrote that the Department of the Interior's review "brings forward vital issues of assuring the future of federal public lands and improving their ecological, economic and recreational value." They said they "applaud the review of these and other monuments and urge the Department of Interior to use its results to strengthen the legacy of federal public lands in the United States."

Editorial: National Monuments Survive Trump Administration Review. The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/27) editorializes that "members of the environmental lobby should be ecstatic that the Interior Department's review of 27 national monuments resulted in minimal changes. But in today's world of all-or-nothing politics, they're instead speed-dialing their attorneys and wringing their hands because a handful of these nature reserves may still be partially downsized."

Editorial: Secretary Zinke's Decision Could Balance Monument Designation. The Deseret \(UT\) News (8/26) editorializes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "apparently is recommending two national monuments in Utah be reduced in size to more precisely conform to the spirit and letter of the 1906 Antiquities Act, which grants presidents the power to declare monuments." The article added, "We hope the Trump administration will take its stated intentions seriously and provide a credible review of these monuments before making a final decision."

Gov. Brian Sandoval Talks Climate Change, National Monuments. The Reno \(NV\) Gazette-Journal (8/25) provided a video of Republican Gov. Brian Sandoval of Nevada discussing "GOP policy on climate change and the review of national monuments by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and President Donald Trump."

Monuments Review Spurs Call To Overhaul Antiquities Act. Roll Call (8/25) reported the Interior Department's "conclusion of a contentious review of national monuments might give Congress some impetus to revisit the Antiquities Act of 1906, which presidents of both parties have used to designate monuments through executive action." House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop on Thursday "called for Congress to overhaul the Antiquities Act to place 'reasonable limits' on the way presidents use the statute." Bishop's statements "came shortly before the Interior Department submitted recommendations to the White House after an executive-ordered review of monument designations made over the last two decades."

Mojave Desert Land Trust Response To Department Of The Interior Withholding Recommendations For California Desert National Monuments. The Highland \(CA\) Community News (8/25) reported the Mojave Desert Land Trust responded to the Interior Department's review by saying, "The Department of the Interior claimed they wanted to involve the public in the review process, and yet they are cutting the public out of the final recommendations," commented Danielle Segura, Executive Director, MDLT. She added, "The 2.7 million people who submitted comments to Secretary Zinke deserve to know the recommendations. And the Mojave Desert community deserves to know whether Secretary Zinke listened to us when we said our desert monuments deserve full protection."

Additional coverage of Zinke's monument plan is provided by the Washington Times (8/25, Chumley), USA Today (8/25), the Circleville \(OH\) Herald (8/25), the Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/27), KNPR-FM Las Vegas (5/10), the Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (8/27), and NPR (8/25).

Oregon Girds For Lawsuit If Trump Shrinks National Monument.

The Washington Times (8/25, Selsky) reported Oregon's attorney general "said Friday she is ready to take legal action if the Trump administration tries to shrink a national monument in this Pacific Northwest state. Oregon Gov. Kate Brown and other political leaders were seeking a copy of a draft report Friday on 27 national monuments that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke gave to President Donald Trump this week, the governor's press secretary, Bryan Hockaday, said in a telephone interview. So far, no copy has been made available, he said."

The Oregonian (8/25) reported Oregon Gov. Kate Brown "asked the state attorney general to be prepared to go to court if the Trump administration tries to shrink a national monument in this Pacific Northwest state. Brown and other political leaders awaited word Friday on whether the Trump administration will reduce the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument, or leave the 112,000-acre (45,730-hectare) monument along the border with California alone."

KOB-TV Medford, OR (8/25) reported that Oregon Governor Kate Brown "is calling on the White House to preserve the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument." The Governor "released a statement late Thursday after reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has recommended President Trump reduce the size of the monument covering parts of southern Oregon and northern California." She said, "I am deeply concerned about the future of Oregon's Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument. ... Although the Secretary of the Interior has yet to publically release recommendations for potential changes to national monuments, the signal from D.C. is that Oregon's public lands are in the crosshairs of the federal administration."

The Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/25) and the Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (8/25) also reported.

Interior Secretary Zinke's Secret National Monuments Report Comes Under Legal Attack. The Think Progress (8/25) reported that Zinke's recommendation "could open hundreds of thousands of acres of public lands to oil and gas drilling and mining, according to leaked copies of a report prepared by the Department of the Interior." In the recommendations, the Interior Department "calls for shrinking the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments in Utah and the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in Oregon, according to the Washington Post. Zinke reportedly did not recommend eliminating any of the national monuments he reviewed." The Western Values Project "filed an expedited Freedom of Information Act request with the Interior Department on Thursday seeking information on the monument review that was submitted to the White House." And on Friday, "the Sierra Club filed its own Freedom of Information Act request seeking details on recommendations from Zinke on the future of public lands protected as national monuments."

Patagonia Joins Forces With Activists To Protect Public Lands From Trump. The Guardian \(UK\) (8/26, McCarthy) reported that environmental activists, Native American groups, and a coalition of outdoor retailers "have vowed to redouble their efforts to protect public lands, after the US interior secretary, Ryan Zinke, recommended on Thursday that Donald Trump change the boundaries of a 'handful' of national monuments." Advocates "fear that Zinke's recommendation, which has not been revealed beyond its most basic outline, could mean the largest reversal of federal monument status in history and the first alteration of any national monument boundary since 1964."

Tribes Call Interior Secretary's Monument Recommendations 'An Insult,' Vow Lawsuits.

The Washington Times (8/25, Wolfgang) reported tribal leaders on Friday "blasted Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, saying his plan to shrink Utah's Bears Ears National Monument is 'an insult' and shows blatant disregard for their concerns." In a statement, "the Bears Ears Inter-Tribal Coalition – a governing body established by the Obama administration to oversee the massive 1.5 million-acre Bears Ears site – said they plan to sue." Carleton Bowekaty, Zuni councilman and Bears Ears Inter-Tribal Coalition co-chair said, "Secretary Zinke's recommendation is an insult to tribes. He has shown complete disregard for sovereign tribes with ancestral connections to the region, as well as to the hundreds of thousands of people who have expressed support for Bears Ears National Monument."

The Washington Times (8/27, Wolfgang) reports that "other coalition leaders said they're prepared for a lengthy legal battle with the administration. 'The designation of Bears Ears National Monument was a celebratory moment where our voice was finally heard, and our cultural and spiritual heritage was respected,' said Davis Filfred, Navajo Nation council delegate. 'Our tribes stand together and are willing to go into battle in terms of litigation and we are here to fight for our monument.' The threats, which were echoed by environmental groups, came just hours after Mr. Zinke officially completed his review of more than two dozen monuments across the country."

Gasoline Prices Spike As Harvey Shuts Refineries.

Bloomberg News (8/27, Summers) reports gasoline surged to the highest level in two years, while oil was steady as Tropical Storm Harvey flooded refining centers along the Texas coast. Gasoline futures jumped as much as 6.8 percent, while oil sat around $48. Andy Lipow, president of Lipow Oil Associates said, "With pipeline operators beginning to shut down their crude oil and refined product infrastructure, I expect to see further curtailment of refinery operations, resulting in less product being available. A spike in gasoline and diesel prices will drag up crude oil prices."

USA Today (8/27, Davidson), Washington \(DC\) Post, (8/27, Mufson) AP (8/25, Koenig), and San Antonio \(TX\) Express-News (8/25) also contained coverage that gasoline prices are expected to rise.

Experts Say Gas Prices Going Up Five To 25 Cents Per Gallon. The AP (8/26, Koenig) reported that even before the Harvey made landfall late Friday, “dozens of oil and gas platforms had been evacuated, at least three refineries had closed and at least two petrochemical plants had suspended operations.” The piece added, “How soon they reopen depends on the severity of flooding and the resumption of power to the areas.” And experts “say it’s still too early to say, with the storm still moving through the region Saturday evening. But they believe gas prices will increase 5 cents to 25 cents per gallon.”

EPA Issues Emergency Waiver To Combat Fuel Shortage From Hurricane Harvey. The Houston Chronicle (8/26) reported the Environmental Protection Agency “announced late Friday it was waiving environmental standards on fuel, ‘to address shortages resulting from Hurricane Harvey.’” The agency said, “Extreme and unusual fuel supply circumstances exist in portions of Texas as a result of the hurricane.” EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt “has granted a temporary waiver to help ensure an adequate supply of gasoline is available in the affected areas until normal supply to the region can be restored.”

Sage Grouse Proposal Draws Mixture Of Praise And Alarm.

The Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (8/27) reports President Trump’s Administration “has opened the door to industry-friendly changes to a sweeping plan imposed by his predecessor to protect a ground-dwelling bird across vast areas of the U.S. West.” Wildlife advocates “warned that the proposed changes would undercut a hard-won struggle to protect the greater sage grouse.” However, “representatives of the ranching and energy industries cheered the policy shift as needed to give states flexibility.”

Democrats Might Not Lose Any Ground In The Senate.

The Washington Post (8/25, Rubin) reported in its “Right Turn” blog that Trump “undercut his party’s chances of picking up a seat. He selected as his interior secretary former congressman Ryan Zinke (R-Mont.) and potential Montana challenger to Sen. Jon Tester (D-Mont.)”

Congressman Wants Columbus Statues For Federal Park If City Takes Them Down.

The New York Post (8/25) reported a Staten Island congressman “wants an iconic statue of Christopher Columbus relocated to federal park land in his borough if the city takes it down in Manhattan in a frenzy of political correctness. ‘Christopher Columbus is a permanent fixture of our national history. Rarely can we trace the wheels of progress over 500 years back to the actions of a single person,’ said Rep. Dan Donovan (R-SI/Brooklyn).” Donovan and his office “spoke with senior U.S. Department of Interior officials on Thursday afternoon about the matter.”

Sale Of Interior Secretary’s Motor Home Raises $25K Question.

The AP (8/28) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “dormant congressional campaign committee recently sold a 2004 motor home at a steep discount to an old friend in the Montana Legislature.” But a “seemingly ordinary transaction between friends, when seen through the optics of stringent campaign finance laws, can raise a bevy of questions – especially when those friends are politically high-powered and well-connected.” After learning about the transaction, campaign finance watchdogs “are raising a $25,000 question: Why would Zinke’s campaign committee sell the Kountry Star Freightliner for half the price of its apparent $50,000 market value?”

Interior’s High-Profile Whistleblower Gets A Boost From OSC And Legal Community.

Government Executive (8/25) reported the federal government’s whistleblower protection office “is investigating the claims of retaliation against perhaps the civil service’s most famous whistleblower in the Trump administration, and he has new backing from a group of legal scholars.” The article adds, “Joel Clement made a name for himself by writing an op-ed in The Washington Post claiming the Interior Department reassigned him to a job for which he was ill suited after he spoke out on the potential dangers of climate change for Native Alaskans. He filed a complaint on the alleged reprisal to the Office of Special Counsel, which handles cases involving potential whistleblower retaliation, and has since told Government Executive that OSC has opened an investigation. On Friday, 13 law school professors with varying experience in federal service and with groups advocating good government submitted a letter to OSC advocating for Clement’s case as a whistleblower.”

Ryan Zinke's Daughter Goes After Trump For Transgender Military Ban.

The Washington Examiner (8/26, Mayfield) reported Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's daughter "went after Trump following his announcement of the transgender military ban, calling the president a 'disgrace.'" Jennifer Detlefsen "wrote in an Instagram post in July that was widely circulated Friday." The Examiner said, "Like her father, Deltefsen is a Navy veteran and was frequently mentioned by Zinke as he ran for re-election in the House. Zinke was chosen to head the U.S. Department of Interior by Trump following the election."

Additional coverage is provided by The Daily Mail (8/26), The Hill (8/26, Bowden), and the Missoulian \(MT\) (8/25).

Zinke's Wife's Tweet Suggests Endorsement In Senate Race.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (8/25) reported that a Republican candidate "challenging Democratic U.S. Sen. Jon Tester in 2018 has garnered the support of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's wife, Lola Zinke." On the social media website Twitter on Friday, "Lola Zinke shared Big Sky entrepreneur Troy Downing's first campaign video and said, 'Great choice for #mtpol.' The hashtag '#mtpol' is a method Twitter uses to gather statements on one feed for particular issues – in this case Montana politics."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Kevin Brown Re-elected To Mohegan Tribal Council, Bozsum Ousted.

The New London \(CT\) Day (8/27) reports that Kevin Brown, "the retired Army colonel elected chairman of the Mohegan Tribal Council in 2013, won re-election to a second four-year council term in voting among tribal members that concluded Sunday, according to tribal sources who asked to remain anonymous." Brown "and three other incumbents – Kathy Regan-Pyne, William Quidgeon Jr. and James Gessner Jr. – were elected along with a newcomer, Sarah Harris, the daughter of Roland Harris, a former council chairman and first selectman of Griswold." Sarah Harris "is a former chief of staff in the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs. In 2016, the National Center for American Indian Enterprise Development named her one of 40 emerging leaders under the age of 40."

Pipeline Company Response To Settlement Offer Not Disclosed.

The AP (8/25) reports the company "that built the Dakota Access pipeline has responded to an offer by North Dakota regulators to settle state allegations that it improperly reported the discovery of American Indian artifacts during construction." But the response from Energy Transfer Partners "isn't being disclosed yet." According to North Dakota Public Service Commissioner Julie Fedorchak, the agency is meeting with the company on Monday to discuss the response.

Lawmakers Say BLM Inhibiting Oil And Gas Development To Protect View From Native American Sites.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (8/26) reported state lawmakers in Wyoming "say a new interpretation of federal rules is inhibiting oil and gas development near Native American sites on private land." At issue "is section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act, which seeks to avoid, minimize or mitigate 'adverse effects' to historic sites. ... 'The concern is that nothing has actually changed,' said Sen. Brian Boner, R-Douglas, who's heard from a number of his constituents about the issue." Boner also said, "The federal statute hasn't changed. The only thing that seems to have changed is the BLM's interpretation of the current rules and regulations. There's no public comment. They just showed up with the landowners one day and said 'This is how it's going to be.'"

Civil Rights Commission Reviews Alaska Native Voting Rights.

KYUK-TV Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta, AK (8/25, Eurich) reported the State of Alaska is "under a court order to provide the translation of election materials into Native languages to Yup'ik communities in the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta, the Bristol Bay region, and Gwich'in country in the Interior." On Thursday, the Alaska Advisory Committee of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights "held a hearing in Anchorage to review the state's work and to look at the implications of a plan to shift the state to voting by mail." The state "unveiled an impressive amount of work accomplished since the court order was handed over to the Walker Administration." However, at Thursday's hearing, she "heard from election workers in Koliganek that the Yup'ik Ballot they got was unusable by local elders who use another dialect that election workers did not know about." And that's "just one example of the kind of changes the state is making after the 2013 court decision that found Alaska in violation of the Voting Rights Act because it did not provide election materials in Alaska Native languages."

Oklahoma City Council To Vote On Indian Cultural Center Agreements.

The Oklahoman (8/28) reports the Oklahoma City Council "is to vote Tuesday on agreements intended to clear the way to completing and opening the American Indian Cultural Center and Museum." The latest plans "are to open to the public on April 1, 2021. The museum's primary focus is to be on the cultures and histories of Oklahoma's 39 federally recognized tribes."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Most AZ Native Americans Now Speak Only English At Home.

The Eastern Arizona Courier (8/26) reported that families "in more than half of Native American homes in Arizona now speak only English at home, according to new numbers from the U.S. Census Bureau." American Community Survey data "covering 2011-2015 showed that 53 percent of people who identified as American Indian in the state said they speak only English at home, up from 49 percent in the previous five-year survey."

Bureau Of Land Management

Report: Democrat Backs BLM Move West.

Politico Morning Energy (8/25, Adragna) reported that Sen. Michael Bennet "became the latest Colorado politician to back moving three federal agencies – the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service – to the Denver area, according to a report in Western Wire, a project of the Western Energy Alliance." He is quoted saying, "I think anything we can get out of Washington, D.C. and into Colorado, I'm for." Republican Sen. Cory Gardner and Gov. John Hickenlooper "are among the other proponents of the move west."

BLM Headquarters Could Move To Denver. The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/26) reported US Sen. Cory Gardner's (R-CO) proposal to move the Bureau of Land Management headquarters out of Washington, DC "gained support from Gardner's counterpart, Sen. Michael Bennet, even as discussion emerged that the headquarters of three federal agencies might move to Denver. ... Bennet, a Democrat, said Friday that he supported the idea of moving the BLM, and possibly other agencies, out of the Beltway."

BLM Agent Accused Of Taking Valuable Stones Held As Evidence.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/25) reported a Bureau of Land Management agent "who has been scrutinized for past behavior took valuable stones held as evidence and handed them out 'like candy' to colleagues and a contractor, federal investigators said in a report made public Thursday." US Department of Interior investigators "also found Love told an employee to delete some emails that contained bureau information requested by then-U.S. Rep. Jason Chaffetz. Though the report does not name Love, Chaffetz confirmed Thursday that his request had been directed to Love. Chaffetz did not specify the nature of the request."

Idaho State Journal (8/24) and KSL-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (8/27) also reported.

Bureau Of Reclamation

Lake Mead Able To Avoid Water Shortage For Another Year.

Fox News (8/25, Craft) reported there could be "some promising relief for those residents living in the southwestern United States after a new report declared there will be no water shortage at Nevada's Lake Mead in 2018." A new study by the Bureau of Reclamation "found that water flows slightly improved compared with recent years. A good winter and early spring on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains provided an adequate snow pack, which will eliminate the prospects for a water shortfall for next year."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Harvey Reduces Gulf Of Mexico Output.

Reuters (8/27, Scheyder) reports the BSEE said about 22 percent of US Gulf of Mexico oil production is offline on Sunday because of Harvey. Output levels rose slightly from Saturday, when approximately 25 percent of production was offline. On Sunday, 378,633 barrels of the 1.75 million bpd produced in the Gulf was offline. Approximately 26 percent of the Gulf's natural gas production is shuttered, about 828 million cubic feet per day. Around 105 platforms in the region have been evacuated so far. The AP (8/27) reports the BSEE said it has been monitoring and working with offshore operators so that the storm does not threaten commercial activities in the Gulf. The Houston Chronicle (8/26, Eaton) reported BP slowed output from its Atlantis and Mad Dog Platforms in the Gulf, while Noble Energy evacuated non-essential personnel from its offshore and Eagle Ford operations. ConocoPhillips halted operations and production in the Eagle Ford and evacuated workers from the Magnolia platform, and BHP Billiton shut its upstream and midstream shale facilities. ExxonMobil evacuated all of its offshore workers that were in the path of the storm and shut its Hoover and Galveston 209 production platforms. Reuters (8/25, Scheyder) reported BP's Gulf production was affected by the shutdown of the Cameron Highway Oil Pipeline System, controlled by Genesis Energy LP, which was shut down because of the storm. The company said without the pipeline, Gulf operations could not pump crude out of its Atlantis and Mad Dog platforms.

Cheniere Does Not Expect Sabine Pass Operations To Be Interrupted. The Houston Chronicle (8/27, Hunn) reports Cheniere Energy said that as of Sunday, Hurricane Harvey had not significantly affected production at its Sabine Pass facility. Spokesman Eben Burnham-Snyder said early inspections of the company's Corpus Christi expansion site revealed only minor damage. Cheniere evacuated and locked down its Corpus Christi construction site on Thursday, closed Houston offices on Friday and reduced Sabin Pass personnel to essential workers only. Burnham-Snyder said the company does not expect the Sabine Pass facility to close, and will continue operations through the storm. Burnham-Snyder said, "Bottom line. ... we did a lot of work to prepare and respond to the storm, and we appear to be lucky with impacts."

Engineering News-Record (8/25) reported personnel "have been evacuated off 89 offshore production platforms, or 11.67 % of the manned platforms in the Gulf of Mexico, according to the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement. People have also been evacuated from four of the 10 rigs operating in the Gulf, while one dynamically positioned rig has moved off location. BSEE estimates 21.55 % of the current oil production in the Gulf of Mexico has been shut-in, or 377,117 barrels of oil per day."

Argus Media (8/25) reported Cheniere said on Friday that the storm was not expected to impact production at Sabine Pass. The company said, "While at this time we do not expect production to be affected at our Sabine Pass LNG facility, we will continue to monitor the storm, stay in close contact with local emergency officials, and respond with safety as the paramount concern. ... Cheniere's gas supply and trading unit has activated its emergency protocols and will ensure that all gas flows and contractual obligations needed for production will be met." Cheniere did not discuss if ship loadings would be affected. Platts (8/25) reported feedgas nominations for delivery to the plant were 1.96 Bcf on Friday, higher than the average nominations in August so far of 1.81 Bcf/d. Atlantic-based trading sources said demand for spot cargoes in the basin were not changed and that there were no expected disruptions to normal trading activity. Natural Gas Intelligence (8/25) reported Burnham-Snyder said, "Cheniere's Gas Supply and Trading unit has activated its emergency protocols and will ensure that all gas flows and contractual obligations needed for production at Sabine Pass LNG will be met."

Platts (8/25) and Platts (8/26) also provided coverage.

New Mexico Commission Supports Wolf Recovery Proposal.

The Washington Times (8/25) reported the New Mexico State Game Commission “has voted to support a federal proposal to recover an endangered wolf species that once roamed parts of New Mexico, Arizona and northern Mexico.” The vote “came Thursday after commissioners received an update from the state Game and Fish Department on the recovery planning process for the Mexican gray wolf. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is under a court order to have a completed recovery plan by the end of November.”

Toxic Algae Prompts Health Advisory For SW Idaho Lake.

The AP (8/26) reported visitors at a southwest Idaho lake “shouldn’t enter the water due to toxic algae.” Southwest District Health “tells the Idaho Press-Tribune in a story on Saturday that high concentrations of blue-green algae at Lake Lowell led to the health advisory.” Officials “say coming in contact with the algae can cause nausea, vomiting, liver damage and other problems.” The piece adds, “Lake Lowell is part of the Dear Flat National Wildlife Refuge that’s managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.”

$2.4M Grant To Help Preserve Land In Schuylkill Highlands.

The Norristown \(PA\) Times Herald (8/27) reports that a federal program “aimed specifically at preserving naturally and culturally valuable land in the East Coast highlands region has awarded more than $2.4 million for the acquisition of land in the seven-county Schuylkill Highlands.” The grant of $2,420,000 “was announced by the office of U.S. Rep. Ryan Costello, R-6, and will be provided to the Pennsylvania Department of Conservation and Natural Resources through the federal Highlands Conservation Act.”

Sen. Alexander Praises Interior Secretary For Working To Solve National Park Maintenance Problem.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) (8/25) reported Senator Lamar Alexander (R-TN) on Friday “hiked the Rainbow Falls Trail at the Great Smoky Mountains National Park with Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke, park volunteers, and young conservationists to mark the 101st anniversary of the U.S. National Park Service.” Senator Alexander “praised the secretary for his efforts to address the growing maintenance needs in national parks and on public lands and the more than 2,200 Park volunteers who help reduce the maintenance backlog in the Smokies.” He said, “Secretary Zinke is trying to solve a big problem – our national parks are struggling with a backlog of maintenance needs that are not being addressed. The maintenance backlog – which includes roads, buildings, campgrounds, trails, water systems and more – limits access to our national parks and diminishes visitor experiences.”

WATE-TV Knoxville, TN (8/25) reported US Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “stopped in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park on Friday to celebrate the 101st anniversary of the founding of the National Park Service.” Zinke said, “As a former Seal commander, there’s two things that our government needs to fund: our military and our parks.” In his first visit to the park as secretary, he “expressed the need for more funding of our national parks,” saying, “We’re looking at prioritizing and delivering more money on the front line where I think it belongs, more money for our rangers. ... We’re too short in the field. We’ve been regionalized, so our rangers are feeling like they don’t have the right resources, the right manpower, the right funding on the front line, as well as the park system as a whole, we need to catch up and reinvest in our greatest treasures.”

USA Today (8/25, Ahillen) reported Sen. Alexander “hiked Rainbow Falls Trail in the park with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on the 101st anniversary of the National Park Service, and offered comments on several other topics.”

Ryan Zinke Promises Big Effort To Avoid Another Devastating Fire In Gatlinburg. The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (8/25) reported Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke “said the National Park Service could have done some things better on battling the Nov. 28 wildfire and vowed to do what it takes to make sure a devastating fire doesn’t happen again here.” He is quoted saying during a visit to Great Smoky Mountains National Park on Friday, “I’m convinced people participating in it did as good as they could. ... A lot of people tried to do the right thing.”

Unfortunately, we lost some lives and had 2,500 structures destroyed. ... There were a lot of lessons learned. There are things we'll get better at. Hopefully, we'll put the right things in place so that it is never repeated."

US Must Invest In Its Public Lands, Interior Secretary Zinke Says. The Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (8/25) reported, "It's past time to take care of an $11.5 billion maintenance backlog for America's national parks, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said during a visit here Friday to commemorate the 101st anniversary of the National Park Service." He "said his goal is to eliminate the backlog in park infrastructure needs in five years." Zinke is quoted saying, "We're going to catch up. We deserve as an American citizenry and country to make sure that we maintain the park experience."

Also reporting on the 101st anniversary were Yahoo! News (8/25, Staff) and WDBJ-TV Roanoke, VA (8/26).

Grand Teton Sees Record Burst Of Visitors During Eclipse.

The AP (8/25) reported that Monday's total solar eclipse "turned out to be a record-breaking event for Grand Teton National Park as people from around the world jammed into the northwest Wyoming park to get a glimpse of the eclipse against a backdrop of scenic mountain peaks." The weekend before the eclipse and the day of the eclipse "resulted in the 'busiest weekend in the history of the park,' park spokeswoman Denise Germann said Friday." Park traffic data "indicates that there was about a 40 percent increase in park visits, or about 10,000 extra people, in the park on Monday."

Leaked Emails Show The NRA Has A Close Relationship With The Interior Department.

Business Insider (8/27) reports the National Park Service "raised serious concerns in late June over a bill backed by the National Rifle Association, but they were disregarded entirely by the agency's overseer, the Department of the Interior." According to a memo obtained by McClatchy, "the NPS's acting director, Michael Reynolds, pushed back against provisions that would prohibit his agency from managing commercial and recreational fishing within park parameters. He also objected to language that would prevent the NPS from giving input on certain development projects, and regulating the hunting of bears and wolves in Alaska wildlife preserves." And Interior's response to the memo "was less than accommodating. Casey Hammond, a political appointee of President Donald Trump, simply crossed out Reynolds' comments."

Republicans Want More Hunting On Federal Lands.

Esquire Magazine (8/25) reported, "It appears that the U.S. Department of the Interior has decided to turn the National Parks into free fire zones, the equivalent of taxpayer funded game ranches similar to the one at which Dick Cheney once ventilated his friend's face. McClatchy has all the details."

Drone Illegally Buzzes Grizzly Bears In Grand Teton Park.

U.S. News & World Report (8/25) reports Grand Teton National Park rangers "are investigating the illegal use of a drone that buzzed a grizzly bear and her two cubs in the northwest Wyoming park. The incident occurred Wednesday evening." Park spokeswoman Denise Germann "tells the Jackson Hole News & Guide that rangers and others saw the drone hover close to the grizzlies."

Zion National Park Requests Comments On Management Of Bighorn Sheep.

The St. George \(UT\) News (8/26) reported that desert bighorn sheep "are an iconic animal found at Zion National Park, and catching glimpses of them on the red cliff faces is a sought after part of a trip to the park. However, with reductions in habitat quality and disease across portions of their range, there were no documented sightings of bighorn sheep in the park between 1953 and 1973. In 1973, in cooperation with the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources and other agencies, bighorn sheep were reintroduced to the park." The biggest threat to Zion's wild bighorn sheep "is disease. ... In order to mitigate this risk, Zion National Park, in collaboration with the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources, proposes to transplant desert bighorn sheep from the population inside the park to support other parts of the state's bighorn population, and decrease the risk of disease transmission and potential for large scale mortality in the Zion herd, while contributing to the success of the regional population."

Forest Service Approves Exploratory Mining Near Mount St. Helens.

KUOW-FM Seattle (8/25) reported that US Forest Service "is moving forward with a plan to allow exploratory mining near Mount St. Helens." The agency "issued a draft decision approving Canadian company Ascot Resources Ltd.'s plans to drill for copper and gold in Washington's Gifford Pinchot National Forest." The decision "opens a 45-day period for the public to object to the U.S. Forest Service's draft decision."

Many Texas Beaches Likely To Erode, Be Overwashed, Or Inundated By Hurricane Harvey.

GISuser (8/27) reports that "new projections from the U.S. Geological Survey indicate Hurricane Harvey is likely to cause significant beach erosion along the Texas coastline, with water overtopping dunes and in some cases inundating areas." As of Friday morning, the USGS Coastal Change Forecast model is predicting that 94 percent of Texas's 367 miles of coastline will undergo "some level of beach erosion from the storm surge and large waves Hurricane Harvey will produce." USGS Research Oceanographer Joseph Long is quoted saying, "Significant coastal erosion along the coastline of Texas is expected due to the rapid strengthening of Hurricane Harvey. ... While the forecasts are subject to change as Harvey approaches land, we are making these forecasts to help inform emergency managers and communities on the potential coastal erosion hazards to be prepared for during the storm."

USGS: 75 Million Americans At Live In Areas Of Seismic Risk.

The Wall Street Journal (8/25, Helferich) discussed the risks earthquakes pose to people in Americans and around the world. The Journal cites the USGS saying that 75 million Americans across 39 states live in areas of "significant seismic risk."

U.S. Geological Survey: Small Earthquake Shakes Summerville.

The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (8/25) reported a magnitude 2.4 earthquake "occurred late Friday morning in Summerville." The US Geological Survey "confirmed the quake's strength."

U.S. Military Finds Small Ally To Watch North Korea's Kim Jong Un With Big Radars.

Newsweek (8/24, O'Connor) reported the US "has found a new ally in its quest to undermine North Korea's Kim Jong Un, whose nuclear and ballistic weapons arsenal has increasingly frustrated Washington." The piece added, "The tiny Pacific archipelago nation of Palau and the U.S. Embassy in Koror released a statement Monday announcing the two were preparing to install U.S. radar towers that will give the Pentagon a more expansive look across the Asia-Pacific. While the statement said the plan was devised prior to North Korea's recent threats against the nearby U.S. island territory of Guam, the proposal reportedly came days after North Korea tested its first intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) and days prior to its second test."

Trump To Visit Texas On Tuesday As Hurricane Recovery Gets Underway.

Coverage of the Trump Administration's response to Hurricane Harvey indicates that President Trump is projecting an image of focus and engagement in dealing with the first major storm to hit the US mainland since 2005. The President returned to the White House from Camp David early, and convened a second Cabinet meeting late Sunday. The President also plans to visit the affected areas on Tuesday. Most of the coverage deals with Trump's 20 tweets or retweets since Saturday morning, 16 of them about the storm – though the President also faced mild criticism for also tweeting on several other subjects.

The New York Times (8/27, Landler), for example, reports that though the President "wrapped up a sparkling late-summer weekend" at Camp David, "to judge by his Twitter feed and the photos and statements released by the White House, he did little other than monitor" Harvey. The President "posted regular updates on the status of the storm and praise for the government's response" in "a calculated display of energetic presidential leadership – one hardly unique to the Trump administration. But it also revealed a president who was genuinely engaged by the drama unfolding in Texas." The President also "did not wait long to start doling out praise. On Saturday, as relief efforts were just gearing up, the president tweeted to Long, 'You are doing a great job – the world is watching! Be safe.'" The Times says that "echoed...Bush's premature endorsement of his FEMA chief, Michael Brown – ‘Brownie, you’re doing a heck of a job’ – in 2005.

Politico (8/27, Dawsey) also reports that Trump “sought to project tough competence in the face of the biggest natural disaster of his presidency. ... Trump’s friends say he has a short attention span...but he sought to present himself as focused on Texas, posting online about the hurricane repeatedly.” One “close adviser” said, “He enjoys playing the role even if he’s never handled anything like this. He knows what a president is supposed to look like during something like this.”

Coverage of the storm took up the entirety of all three of the broadcast network newscasts, with each spending about two minutes on the White House response, and the remainder on storm coverage, forecasts, and recovery efforts. ABC World News Tonight (8/27, story 7, 1:45, Llamas) reported that the President plans to “travel to the storm region Tuesday.” ABC’s Mary Bruce: “President Trump today returning from Camp David, with a wave. ... He’s been monitoring the storm response via video conference. Harvey is a major test for the President. And from the flood zone today, warm words from the Texas governor.” Gov. Greg Abbott: “We could not be more appreciative of what the federal government has one, from the President on down.” Bruce: “On Twitter, the President is touting the great coordination, saying, ‘We have an all-out effort going, and going well!’ But he’s is also tweeting about everything from a book by a controversial political ally to the border wall, NAFTA, and his upcoming visit to Missouri, a state he, quote, ‘won by a lot.’”

NBC Nightly News (8/27, story 7, 2:05, Holt) reported, “The White House announced late today that President Trump will visit Texas on Tuesday. The President tweeted his comments on the storm today, praising the coordination between the federal, state, and local government, and saying effort was going well.” NBC’s Kelly O’Donnell: “President Trump returned to the White House from Camp David, where he held a second video link conference with senior officials planning the federal government response. But the President did not respond to shouted questions about the storm. ... Instead, he let social media do the talking with a burst of tweets. And just four words appeared to frame the scope of this crisis: ‘Major rescue operations underway.’ He also seemed eager to get high marks on the response in real time. ‘Good news is that we have great talent on the ground.’ A more urgent, even dire tone came from FEMA Administrator Brock Long.” Long: “We are deep into the life safety mission of helping people be rescued through swift water, swift water rescue, search and rescue.”

The CBS Weekend News (8/27, story 8, 1:35, Strassmann) reported that Trump has been “briefed regularly about the storm.” Long: “I’d like to say that President Trump is extremely concerned about this.” The Hill (8/27, Mitchell) reports that the President “held a second Cabinet meeting on Hurricane Harvey to shore up response and recovery efforts, according to the White House.” The President and Vice President Pence “led a video teleconference with Cabinet and senior administration officials ‘to discuss ongoing federal support for Hurricane Harvey response and recovery,’ the White House press office said in a statement.”

White House Homeland Security Adviser Tom Bossert told ABC’s This Week (8/27) that Long was “coordinating federal efforts across different departments and agencies” to help aid in the relief and rescue efforts. On CBS’ Face The Nation (8/27, Garrett), Bossert said, “I think there’s two messages for me today. First is that we’re focused on life safety operations, and the second is that we’re not going to lose our focus as the next days and weeks unfold and people need continued assistance.” USA Today (8/27, Berry) reports, “Federal officials warn the danger is far from over.” Bossert said rain “is expected to continue upward of 30 inches.” Bossert told CBS, “We’re going to posture ourselves for the long-term care of the medical needy, of the elderly, of the weak and then we’ll put ourselves in the position to provide the resources to rebuild and recover.” The Washington Post (8/27, Baddour) reports that by Sunday afternoon, the National Weather Service “was predicting that parts of Texas could receive nearly 50 inches of rain, the largest recorded total in the state’s history.”

ABC World News Tonight (8/27, lead story, 4:50, Llamas) reported Harvey has caused “disaster” that “is staggering by every measure.” Houston is “a city in crisis” and the “911 system [is] overwhelmed.” The CBS Weekend News (8/27, lead story, 3:10, Strassmann) reported that the “monster storm, roughly 600 miles wide, is also unleashing tornadoes, though officials say the biggest threat now is the catastrophic flooding.” NBC Nightly News (8/27, story 4, 1:45, Holt) meteorologist Dylan Dreyer said, “It’s an incredible amount of rain.” The CBS Weekend News (8/27, story 11, 0:20, Strassmann) briefly mentioned that “we may not have reached the halfway point in this slow-moving catastrophe. ... Some places may get two more feet by Friday.”

The AP (8/27, Yen) reports that Trump said “his administration was handling its responsibilities well, approving of the effort in a series of weekend tweets that showcased his personal involvement. He marveled over the size of the storm like a TV host and, in a tangential aside, hawked a book on race and crime in America written by a supporter." Long warned of "a 'landmark event' that could require years to get damaged areas back on track." The AP says the Trump Administration seeks "to offer a contrast" to President Bush's response to Hurricane Katrina. Long said FEMA "is now 'vastly different' than in 2005 and that he has the power he needs to mobilize forces and coordinate staffing." The Washington Examiner (8/27, Shepherd) reports that Long told CNN, "This disaster is going to be a landmark event. We're setting up and gearing up for the next couple of years."

The Washington Post (8/27, Phillip) reports that the President "praised the federal government's response to Hurricane Harvey on Sunday morning, comments that came as millions still face the threat of deadly floods from the storm." The Los Angeles Times (8/27, King) reports that Trump said he would visit Texas "as soon as it was possible to do so without interfering with rescue efforts." The Washington Times (8/27, Sherfinski) reports that Trump tweeted, "I will be going to Texas as soon as that trip can be made without causing disruption. The focus must be life and safety." The Houston Chronicle (8/27, Ellis) and Politico (8/27, Nelson, Cohen) also briefly report on the trip announcement.

Long: FEMA Will Be In Texas "For Years." Long said on CNN's State Of The Union (8/27, Tapper) that FEMA was focused on Houston right now. Long said that FEMA has "nearly five thousand people from the federal government on site in Texas and Louisiana, fulfilling missions." He said that they are not only working on safety and rescue but "care" missions, as well. Bloomberg News (8/27, Niquette, Schoenberg) reports that Long said FEMA "is prepared to be in the Houston area 'for years' as the fourth largest US city takes the brunt of rainfall and flooding from the 'landmark' storm."

The Washington Post (8/27, Achenbach) writes that Long "said in an interview a few weeks ago that there was one thing that worried him most when it comes to natural disasters: 'You know what's keeping me up at night? This country has not been hit by a major hurricane since 2005.' That was the right thing to worry about, it turns out." Long, who has been in his job for just two months, is now coordinating the federal response to "the first Category 3 or greater storm to hit the US in 12 years – and its lethal aftermath." Long told the Post on Sunday, "This will be a devastating disaster, probably the worst disaster the state's seen." The Los Angeles Times (8/27, Pearce, Jarvie) reports that Long "said that although Houston was taking the brunt of the catastrophic rainfall, it was important to remember that 'there are many communities inside the state of Texas that are hurting.'"

The New York Post (8/27, Brown) reports that Long said FEMA is "hunkering down for a years-long recovery effort in Texas." Long told CNN, "FEMA is going to be there for years. This disaster recovery – this disaster is going to be a landmark event." The Washington Times (8/27, Sherfinski) reports that Long added, "This event is nothing like Katrina. This is completely different. Every storm impacts different jurisdictions differently. Every Category 4 storm is different. This is a storm that the United States has not seen yet." The Hill (8/27, Savransky) reports that Long "added he has 'great lines of communication' with President Trump."

Ex-FEMA Director James Lee Witt writes in USA Today (8/27), "Trump, who is facing his first hurricane but certainly not his last natural disaster," made an "excellent and experienced choice" in Long, "who knows what buttons to push – and when – to get things done. It is Long's day-to-day responsibility to support the local and state efforts to house and feed those who cannot go home and get the lights turned back on, the toilets working, the roads cleared and the schools open."

The Wall Street Journal (8/27) editorializes that while the cost of recovery will be great, the United States has the resources to do it, which is one of the reasons the Journal editorial page advocates for policies that foster economic growth and the wealth to which it leads.

Abbott Praises Federal Response. Abbott told NBC Nightly News (8/27, story 6, 1:30, Holt), "This is really unprecedented. But we're going to find a way to deal with it. We've dealt with hurricanes and storms before. We will rebuild here. One thing that will help us rebuild is that I quickly asked for a presidential declaration of a disaster. We are already getting help from FEMA." Abbott said on CNN's State Of The Union (8/27, Tapper) that the President had responded to his request for a state of emergency and sent the resources needed. Abbott said on Fox News Sunday (8/27, Wallace) that the damage "is large and growing larger, it will be in the billions of dollars but we really will not be able to tell for the next couple of days when better assessments can be made." Abbott said his biggest challenge was "working to save lives and to keep as many people as safe as possible in the Houston area."

The Washington Times (8/27, Sherfinski) reports that Abbott "said he has spoken to President Trump several times and that Texans are getting 'absolutely everything we need' from the federal government." Townhall (8/27, Rousselle) reports that Abbott said, "I give FEMA a grade of A+, all the way from the President down." Abbott also discussed the storm and recovery efforts on ABC's This Week (8/27) and the CBS Weekend News (8/27, story 2, 2:00, Strassmann).

USA Today (8/27, Homer, Bacon) reports that Abbott has "activated 3,000 National Guard troops in addition to hundreds of other state emergency personnel aiding local first responders. He said 600 boats were aiding rescue efforts, and the Coast Guard said at least 16 helicopters were tapped for air rescues."

The Washington Times (8/27, Sherfinski) reports that Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner said at a news conference, "I don't need to tell anyone this is a very, very serious and unprecedented storm. We have several hundred structural flooding reports. We expect that number to rise pretty dramatically." ABC World News Tonight (8/27, story 2, 1:50, Llamas) reported that Turner is "facing criticism for telling residents Friday to stay put." Reuters (8/27, Thevenot) reports that the storm has now killed at least two people.

The Houston Chronicle (8/27, Carroll, Harden, Blakinger), the Texas Tribune (8/27, Najmabadi), the Wall Street Journal (8/27, Olson, Campo-Flores, Bustillo), and Bloomberg News (8/27, Sullivan, Skerritt, Carroll) are among the sources detailing storm damage. The New York Times (8/27, Fernandez) has a feature on early cleanup efforts in Rockport, the coastal town of 11,000 where Harvey made landfall; Matt Gutman of ABC World News Tonight (8/27, story 6, 2:10, Llamas) said that the destruction in the town is "mind-numbing." On its front page, the Washington Post (8/27, Craig) profiles Corpus Christi Mayor Joe McComb, who "knows the power of water."

Trump Tweeted About McCaskill On Sunday. USA Today (8/27, Singer) reports, "Trump and his top aides have said he is intently focused on the government response to Hurricane Harvey this weekend, but Trump still took a moment Sunday to poke a Missouri Democratic senator" on Twitter, tweeting regarding Sen. Claire McCaskill, "I will also be going to a wonderful state, Missouri, that I won by a lot in '16. Dem C.M. is opposed to big tax cuts. Republican will win S!" USA Today writes that that "political tweet posted" while Long "was on CNN describing the government's response to Hurricane Harvey and Trump's focus on the storm." Politico (8/27) reports that Trump had "an extremely busy Twitter morning."

Shut-Down Refineries Likely To Mean Higher Gas Prices. ABC World News Tonight (8/27, story 8, 0:25, Llamas) briefly reported on "a possible aftershock to the unfolding disaster in Texas: a spike in oil and gas prices. Dozens of oil rigs in the Gulf and several refineries shut down ahead of the storm. Today, Exxon closing its refinery complex in Houston, the second largest in the country. Experts predict gas prices could go up five to 25 cents per gallon." USA Today (8/27, Davidson) reports, "Refineries in the Houston and Corpus Christi areas shut down before the storm hit Friday to minimize damage. ... Nationally, regular unleaded gasoline averaged $2.36 a gallon Sunday, up from $2.35 Saturday and $2.33 a week ago."

The Washington Examiner (8/27, Shepherd) reports that about one-quarter of all the oil and natural gas produced in the Gulf Coast region of Texas is now offline. For oil, "that's the equivalent of about 430,000 barrels of oil per day." Tom Kloza of the Oil Price Information service said "gas prices nationwide could see a 5 to 15 cent increase, and that could spike even further if a major refinery suffered direct damage." The Wall Street Journal (8/27, Molinski, Matthews) reports that Valero Energy said its two Corpus Christi-area refineries did not sustain significant damage, so the company was looking for ways to restart operations. However, that requires the port to also be functional, and Valero offered no timeline.

Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick said on Fox News' Sunday Morning Futures (8/27, Bartiromo) that as far as he knows, no refineries have been damaged but that a third of the refineries were offline. He said, "All of those people who work on those refineries are focused on their families and their homes." He added that the storm will likely cause the refineries to remain "offline longer than people felt."

Politico Magazine: US Has Not Yet "Learned The Lessons Of Katrina." Politico Magazine (8/27) runs a 5,000-word piece called "Why America Still Hasn't Learned The Lessons Of Katrina" in which Annie Snider writes, "From the way Congress appropriates money to the specific rebuilding efforts that federal agencies encourage, national policies almost uniformly look backwards, to the last storm, rather than ahead to the next. And the scale of the potential damage has caused agencies to become more risk-averse in ways that can obstruct, rather than help, local communities' attempts to protect themselves." However, "as the effects of climate change play out, the risks posed by storms like Katrina and Harvey only stand to get worse."

Delta Tunnels Sued Over SMUD Hydro Power.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/25) reported that Sacramentans “enjoy cheap electricity compared to most Californians, thanks in part to a string of hydroelectric dams along the American River. Which is why SMUD, the Sacramento Municipal Utility District, joined the deluge of regional governments, environmentalists and others suing the state in an effort to block its Delta tunnels project.” Although the project “would have obvious impacts on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, SMUD said it is concerned about the impact the tunnels, known officially as California WaterFix, would have on its water supplies on the American.”

Tillerson: Trump “Speaks For Himself” On Values.

The Washington Post (8/27, Gearan) reports that Secretary of State Tillerson “became the latest and highest-ranking administration official to distance himself from President Trump” on Sunday, telling Fox News that the President “speaks for himself” in his response to racial hatred and violence. Tillerson was asked on “Fox News Sunday” whether he thought Trump was “expressing American values of tolerance and equality” in his handling of the violence in Charlottesville earlier this month. “The president speaks for himself,” Tillerson said. Asked by host Chris Wallace if he “separating himself” from Trump’s remarks, Tillerson answered, “I’ve made my own comments as to our values.”

The New York Post (8/27, Schultz) reports Tillerson “distanced himself – and the nation – from President Trump’s response,” while the AP (8/27) says the Secretary of State appeared to “repudiate the president’s response,” marking “the second White House official in recent days to appear to more explicitly criticize Trump.” The New York Times (8/27, Weiland) reports Tillerson’s remarks “stood in stark contrast to those” of Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, who “defended Mr. Trump’s response.”

The Washington Times (8/27, Sherfinski) and Breitbart (8/27, Key) also report similarly on Tillerson’s remarks, while Politico (8/27, Nelson) reports Tillerson also “panned the letter released last Friday by ousted White House national security aide Sebastian Gorka,” who wrote that “outside of yourself, the individuals who most embodied and represented the policies that will ‘Make America Great Again,’ have been internally countered, systematically removed, or undermined in recent months.” Asked about Gorka’s letter, Tillerson said it was “completely wrong.”

Axios Report: Trump’s Frustration With Tillerson “Rising Fast.” According to Axios (8/27, Swan), “officials inside and close to the White House” say Trump “has been growing increasingly frustrated” with Tillerson, and his “jaw-dropping comments” to Fox “will likely only worsen their relationship.” Axios reports that “we’ve been hearing for weeks, from sources who’ve spoken to the president, that Trump is getting more and more fed up with Tillerson, who has still yet to staff his agency,” but spokesman R.C. Hammond told Axios it’s because “the system is busted. The Secretary sends over recommendations and they sit on the dock.”

Breitbart: Trump’s Inner Circle Disparaging Him. Breitbart (8/27, Boyle) reports that several members of President Trump’s inner circle have “disparaged” him in recent days and he “has done nothing public to stop them.” In addition to Tillerson, National Economic Council director Gary Cohn told the Financial Times, “Citizens standing up for equality and freedom can never be equated with white supremacists, neo-Nazis, and the KKK.” Breitbart adds that “others in the White House have banded together to form the ‘West Wing Democrats,’” a group which sees “their role as moderating the president’s campaign positions to protect the established order and status quo in Washington.” Breitbart says this “display of lack of control of his own supposed allies weakens his position heading into what is likely to be one of the bloodiest legislative months in recent history.”

Trump Renews Vow To Make Mexico Pay For Border Wall.

After threatening last week “to trigger a government shutdown if Congressional Republicans don’t include funding” for his promised wall along the US-Mexico border in a spending bill due Sept. 30, President Trump on Sunday reiterated his promise to make Mexico pay for the construction of the wall, Bloomberg News (8/27, Talev) reports. Trump tweeted, “With Mexico being one of the highest crime nations in the world, we must have THE WALL. ... Mexico will pay for it through reimbursement/other.” However, he “did not elaborate on how Mexico would cover the cost.” The tweet followed Trump’s comments at a rally last week in Phoenix where he told supporters, “If we have to close down our government, we’re building that wall,” and that “one way or the other, we’re going to get that wall.”

The New York Post (8/27, Schultz, Brown) reports that White House aide Tom Bossert was asked on ABC's This Week if Trump's threat to shut down the government "meant he is conceding that Mexico is not going to pay for the wall." Bossert "claimed that's not the case," saying, "What we'll do here is go through the mechanism of getting the initial money that we need for that capital project from Congress through an appropriations process and we'll responsibly construct a barrier on the border. ... As we work with the Mexicans and other policies and trade policies and such, we'll determine ways for us to make that right." The Hill (8/27, Manchester) also reports on the tweet and says that during a phone call earlier this year, Trump "pleaded with Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto...to stop saying publicly that his country would not pay for a wall on the border, according to a transcript of the conversation obtained by The Washington Post."

Brown: "I've Never Supported" Building Wall. Sen. Sherrod Brown was asked on NBC's Meet the Press (8/27, Todd) if he supported the building of a wall between Mexico and the United States. He said, "No...I've never supported that."

Trump Moving Ahead On Nuclear Overhaul.

The New York Times (8/27, A1, Sanger, Broad) reports on its front page that the Air Force last week "announced major new contracts for an overhaul of the American nuclear force: $1.8 billion for initial development of a highly stealthy nuclear cruise missile, and nearly $700 million to begin replacing the 40-year-old Minuteman missiles in silos across the United States," both programs that were developed during the Obama Administration but were "seized on" by the Trump Administration, "with only passing nods to the debate about whether either is necessary or wise." The Times adds that as the Obama Administration "nurtured the programs," Obama "argued that by making nuclear weapons safer and more reliable, their numbers could be reduced." Trump "has not spoken of any such reduction, in the number of weapons or the scope of the overhaul," and it is "moving full speed ahead on the nuclear overhaul" while "critics are warning of the risk of a new arms race and billions of dollars squandered."

Perry: Administration Focused On Texas Having Everything It Needs.

Fox News (8/27) reports President Trump yesterday "said he is planning a trip to storm-ravaged Texas and praised the government response to Hurricane Harvey including emergency crews that have rescued 'thousands,' as storm water rises and strands residents across the state." Energy Secretary Rick Perry said yesterday on Fox News' "Fox & Friends," "The administration is being very focused on making sure the state has everything it needs." The former Texas governor "was like Trump careful to make clear that Texas is leading the storm-recovery efforts, praising Republican Gov. Greg Abbott's response, as flood waters reach dangerous levels in Houston, where evacuations are expected to continue for days." Perry said, "We need to be prepared for a really long recovery."

Perry Among Those That Participated In Saturday Teleconference Call. CNN (8/26, Landers, Taum, Meier) reports the White House on Saturday held a teleconference call, "led by homeland security adviser Tom Bossert, in which Trump asked a lot of questions on a range of issues, including about flooding and mass power outages, an administration official said." Key "administration and Cabinet officials joined the teleconference call from the White House Situation Room, including Bossert, Vice President Mike Pence, chief of staff John Kelly, acting Homeland Security Secretary Elaine Duke, Federal Emergency Management Agency Administrator Brock Long, Health and Human Service Secretary Tom Price and Energy Secretary Rick Perry, according to photos of the meeting released by the White House."

UVI: Pay Raises Plus Budget Cuts Equals Personnel Cutbacks.

The St. Thomas Source (8/25) reported "pay increases last year combined with budget cuts this year will force the University of the Virgin Islands to shed faculty and staff, UVI President David Hall told senators during budget hearings Thursday." The "unfortunate development appears to bear out concerns some senators raised about the sustainability of government raises last year, before the Legislature ultimately voted to approve them. Other government agencies appear to be absorbing this year's budget cuts without substantial staff reductions thus far."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Looking Beyond The Obamacare Debate To Improve Health Care." The New York Times

(8/26) editorializes that with Republicans temporarily abandoning efforts to repeal the Affordable Care Act, "it seems like a good time for lawmakers to come up with plans to fulfill their promises to increase access to health care and to lower costs." The editorial discusses a number of potential options that lawmakers can pursue, which includes offering the increasingly popular single payer option, or what Sens. Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren call "Medicare for All," allowing people to buy into Medicare earlier, and increasing subsidies for Obamacare exchanges. The editorial concludes that the "Republican campaign to repeal Obamacare, for all its waste of time and energy, has at least gotten people to talk seriously about proposals to improve the health care system."

"The Rush To Exploit The Arctic." A New York Times (8/26) editorial says the passage of the Russian tanker Christophe de Margerie "carrying liquefied natural gas through the warming Arctic without an icebreaker escort marks a critical milestone in a centuries-old yearning for a shorter, faster route between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans" and "a major triumph for President Vladimir Putin." While it is "probably too much to hope that the success of the Russian tanker will change" President Trump's position on climate change, the Times says, "it should open his eyes to the need to make sure that the struggle for territorial and commercial advantage" in the Arctic "does not get out of hand."

Washington Post.

"The District's Death Wish For Metro." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/26) warns that "just as the region has started coming to grips with reversing Metro's years-long death spiral, top officials in the District are throwing a wrench in the works that could kill any chance of righting a transit system whose maintenance and safety problems have imperiled its future and the region's." The Post criticizes DC Council Chairman Phil Mendelson (D) and others for proposing "a radical overhaul of the funding formula in place since Metro's founding in the 1970s" that would require "a massive transfer of the cost-sharing burden from the District to the suburbs, especially Northern Virginia," which the editorial contends "is a recipe for impasse, inaction and inertia, the very ingredients that, over the course of decades, led to Metro's impoverishment and meltdown." The Post concludes "A game of brinksmanship with the District's suburban partners amounts to a death wish for Metro – not exactly the right strategy for a system already on the brink."

"A Judge Ruled Texas's Second Try At Voter ID Laws Is Illegal. She's Right." The Washington Post (8/26) editorializes that US District Judge Nelva Gonzales Ramos was right in ruling – again – that Texas' voter ID law is illegal. The Post discusses that Ramos ruled once against the "toughest-in-the-nation ballot ID law," which an appeals agreed with, and she has ruled again that a revised law is "not good enough." According to the editorial, it was "unsurprising" that Ramos found the law to be discriminatory "not only in effect, but also in purpose." Given Ramos' ruling, the Post criticizes as shameful the Justice Department's "switching sides," from "Texas's challengers to the state's defenders."

"How Republicans May Break Their Promise That Their Tax Plan Won't Raise The Debt." The Washington Post (8/26) editorializes that Republicans have repeatedly said their tax reform plan will be "revenue-neutral," which is "Washington-speak" for the rewritten tax code raising "as much money for the government as the old one, so as not to increase the national debt." The Post says, however, there are "signs this promise of fiscal responsibility might be about to get, well, bent." The editorial discusses how the Senate has yet to decide whether to follow the House Budget Committee, which passed a bill requiring that tax reform "produce as much revenue" as "'current law' baseline projects," and that some Republicans are urging lawmakers to "define revenue neutrality down, via adoption of a more fiscally permissive standard known as the "current policy" baseline." The Post argues that for "Republicans to act as though none of those words had any meaning would confirm that not only promises were made to be broken, but rules were, too."

Trump To Scale Back 2 National Monuments In Trip To Utah.

The AP (12/4, LUCEY, THOMAS) reports that President Trump is "announcing plans to scale back two sprawling national monuments in Utah, responding to what he has condemned as a 'massive federal land grab' by the government." Trump is "traveling to Salt Lake City on Monday to outline his intention to shrink the Bears Ears and the Grand-Staircase Escalante national monuments spanning millions of acres in Utah." His "plans to curtail the strict protections on the sites have angered tribes and environmentalist groups who have vowed to sue to preserve the monuments."

The Washington Times (12/3, Wolfgang) reports that the debate over the moves has been viewed by many as a debate over energy development; "environmentalists believe the Trump administration wants to open up land currently in the Bears Ears monument for uranium mining and areas in Grand Staircase to coal mining," while Trump supporters view the moves as an effort to roll back executive overreach by past presidents. Democratic lawmakers and environmentalists plan to explore legal challenges to the moves.

The CBS Weekend News (12/3, story 5, 2:15, Quijano) reported that "thousands rallied in Salt Lake City...this weekend to protest" Trump's plan to shrink the monuments. However, many local residents support the decision to roll back the Grand Staircase Escalante National Monument because it has limited their ability to extract minerals, graze cattle, and build roads.

NBC Nightly News (12/3, story 5, 2:05, Snow) reported that "the plans have united opposition groups from environmentalists to Native American tribes, who considered the land sacred, stoking fears it could open coal rich areas like the plateau in Grand Staircase to mining." However, "in southern Utah, hundreds rallied in support of the reductions."

Additional coverage was provided by NBC News (12/4, BENNETT, STELLOH, PATTERSON), the Los Angeles Times (12/1, Schneider), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/30, Maffly), NPR (12/3), the Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/30, Mimiaga), National Geographic (12/4, Nordhaus), and KSL-TV Salt Lake City (12/3, Romboy).

Protesters Call For Trump To Preserve Utah Monument Areas. Reuters (12/2, Means) reports that over 5,000 people protested at the Utah State Capitol in Salt Lake City on Saturday in opposition to President Trump's "expected shrinking of" the Bears Ears National Monument and the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, which he is expected to announce in a visit on Monday.

The AP (11/22) reports that “crowds converged on the steps of the Utah State Capitol to denounce Trump’s decision, many chanting and holding signs with messages such as ‘Protect Wild Utah.’” According to the article, “speakers who addressed the throngs of demonstrators included a state lawmaker and an official with the Navajo Nation.”

Also reporting are Fox News (12/3, Betz), the Huffington Post (12/3, Papenfuss), and KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (12/2, Leonard, Cortez).

Utah’s Tenacious Efforts To Take Back Federal Land Stand Out. The AP (12/3, Riccardi) reports that “in an American West that has a love-hate relationship with the federal government’s ownership of a checkerboard of parks, monuments, forest and desert in states from Washington to New Mexico, Utah stands out.” President Trump is “considering changes to other Western monuments as well, as recommended by his interior secretary, Ryan Zinke.” However, “no state has been agitating for reductions like Utah.” According to the article, “the reasons range from geography to politics to Utah’s unique Mormon history and culture.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/3, Burr).

Democrats To Trump: Ask Forest Service Before Shrinking Monuments. The Hill (12/1, Henry) reports Sens. Debbie Stabenow and Michael Bennet on Friday sent a letter to President Trump asking him “why he plans to shrink some national monuments without getting the U.S. Forest Service’s recommendation to do so first.” In their letter, the lawmakers said, “In advance of any decision to attempt to modify the boundaries of national monuments, we write to seek specific details regarding your plans for treatment of certain acres within five national monuments that are managed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s (USDA) Forest Service.” They also “said the Forest Service...did not specifically recommend Trump trim any of the monuments.”

Also reporting are the Washington Post (12/1, Eilperin) and ABC News (12/1, Ebbs).

Interior Secretary Vows To Slash Red Tape For Coastal Restoration Projects In Louisiana.

The Baton Rouge \(LA\) Advocate (12/2, Hardy) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “vowed to use his clout to fast-track coastal restoration projects during a Saturday visit to Louisiana.” He told reporters at the Water Institute of the Gulf, “Louisiana and the coastline are important, and we’re losing too much of it. ... There’s a lot of things that Interior can do.” Members of the Louisiana congressional delegation invited Zinke “to demonstrate current restoration efforts and ask for federal assistance.”

The Houma \(LA\) Courier (12/2, Mire) reports that Zinke joined Sen. Bill Cassidy and Rep. Garret Graves “at the Wetlands Acadian Cultural Center in the Jean Lafitte National Historical Park and Preserve in Thibodaux.” According to the article, “they met with representatives from organizations such as the Louisiana Coastal Protection and Restoration Authority, Greater Lafourche Port Commission and Water Institute of the Gulf. Saturday’s tour of the state also included Baton Rouge and Ama.” Zinke “noted the national importance of oil and gas production but said he wants to make sure it’s done correctly.” He said, “It’s a working coast. Right now it seems to be a disappearing coast. But there’s the fishing industry here, there’s the shipping industry, there’s the sugar-cane industry, there’s the refining industry. A lot of it rests upon revenue from offshore, but not all of it. We’re here to make sure we take everything into consideration and be a partner rather than an adversary. Some of it is just learning people’s names and listening to what they have to say, why it’s important to them. I think that makes better government.”

Local TV coverage was provided by WBRZ-TV Baton Rouge, LA (12/2).

Interior Secretary Meets With Offshore Regulators In New Orleans On Friday. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (12/1, Schleifstein) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke last Friday was scheduled to have lunch with executives of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management and the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement at their joint offices in Elmwood, a spokesman for the BSEE confirmed. Following lunch, he was set to “hold an ‘all hands’ meeting with regional staffs of the two agencies, the spokesman said.”

Trump’s Interior Raised $1 Billion More Revenue Leasing Fed Lands For Energy Development.

The Daily Caller (12/1, Pearce) reported the Interior Department has increased revenue from energy and mineral leases by almost $1 billion over 2016 levels. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, “Under President Trump’s American Energy Dominance agenda, we’ve increased energy funds by a billion dollars in our first year alone. ... That money goes right back to communities for things like public works projects, educational improvements, conservation and parks, and infrastructure upgrades." The Office of Natural Resource's Revenue recorded $7.11 billion in 2017, of which $1.44 billion went to states, $676 million went to private owners and tribal governments, and $950 million went to the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

Feds Disband Trinity River Project Watchdog Group.

The Eureka \(CA\) Times Standard (12/2, Houston) reports that a recent decision "to effectively disband a watchdog group tasked with overseeing a multi-million dollar, publicly funded habitat restoration project for the Trinity River surprised and concerned group members, tribes and government agencies." The Interior Department's reasoning behind the group's disbanding has also come under scrutiny. Interior Department Press Secretary Heather Swift "said the department's decision to deactivate the Trinity River Adaptive Management Working Group was made because the group did not file paperwork justifying why it should continue operating." However, the group's Chairman Tom Stokely, "said the group was never asked to submit such a memo by either the Interior Department or the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which has acted as a sort of liaison between the working group and the Interior Department."

Rising Seas May Eventually Submerge Some Important U.S. Historical Landmarks.

The Washington Post (12/1, Choi) reports that rising sea levels this century may threaten "more than 13,000 archaeological and historical sites on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts," according to a new study. According to the article, "to assess what effect rising sea levels might have on archaeological and historical sites, the researchers analyzed data from the Digital Index of North American Archaeology, which collects archaeological and historical data sets developed over the past century from multiple sources." The article says that "if projected trends continue, there could be a 3.3-foot rise in sea level by 2100, submerging thousands of archaeological and historical sites in the southeastern United States alone, the scientists predicted."

Stefanik Seeks Funding To Combat Invasive Species That Attacks Hemlocks.

The Glens Falls \(NY\) Post-Star (12/1, Goot) reports that Reps. Elise Stefanik and Peter Welch wrote a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "asking him to identify strategies and funding to combat the arrival of the invasive species hemlock woolly adelgid." Stefanik said in a news release, "This invasive insect threatens the health of forests in our region and it is critical that we respond quickly to its arrival in our region. As the co-chair of the Invasive Species Caucus, I will continue to work at the federal level to ensure that our natural ecosystems are protected from invasive species that threaten the health of our district's pristine wildlife."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Hopi Last Of Arizona Tribes To Sign Gambling Agreement.

The AP (12/1, Fonseca) reports that "the Hopi Tribe has signed an agreement with Arizona that allows it to lease or operate up to 900 slot machines – the last of the state's tribes to do so." Hopi Chairman Herman Honanie "signed the compact a day before leaving office, contemplating the loss of up to 85 percent of the tribe's budget with the expected closure of a coal mine in 2019." The Bureau of Indian Affairs "now has 45 days to review the compact that is standard among Arizona tribes, said Caroline Oppleman, a spokeswoman for the gaming department."

9th Circ. Asked To Affirm Tribal Leadership Decision.

Law360 (12/1, Lidgett) reports that "the federal government and a faction of a California tribe both urged the Ninth Circuit on Wednesday not to revive a rival faction's challenge to a U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs' decision that found a general council established to serve as the tribe's governing body in 1998 isn't the tribe's valid representative."

Aquinnah Assists Mashpee Tribe In Land In Trust Bid.

The Falmouth \(MA\) Enterprise (12/2, Houghton) reports that "the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe received a helping hand from a neighboring tribe in Aquinnah in an effort to secure land in trust in Mashpee and Taunton." Chairman Cheryl Andrews-Maltais of the Wampanoag Tribe of Gay Head, Aquinnah, "issued a letter of support for the Mashpees to the Office of the Solicitor of the US Department of the Interior." The letter, sent October 30, "further supports the Mashpee tribe in its claim that it was under federal jurisdiction in 1934, and thus eligible for a reservation under the Indian Reorganization Act.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Indian Education Officials Meet With School Leaders In Oklahoma.

The Tulsa \(OK\) World (12/3, Felder) reports that “officials with the Bureau of Indian Education held a town hall Tuesday at Riverside Indian School in Anadarko to present a draft of a new strategic plan, inviting feedback from educators and tribal leaders.” BIE Director Tony Dearman said, “When you look at our system, we have had such a high turnover with directors, that without a plan, every time we lose a director, we lose momentum. With this document ... no matter who is in the director position, it is going to continue moving forward.”

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Considering Revised Sage Grouse Plans To Emphasize State Issues.

Natural Gas Intelligence (12/1, Nemec) reports that “rejecting the state-federal collaboration on greater sage grouse protections hammered out by the Obama administration in 2015, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management (BLM) is taking comments in an effort to emphasize state concerns.” According to the article, “BLM’s notice of intent to amend the plans seeks to eliminate what has been characterized as a “one-size-fits-all” approach by the Obama administration and allow states to address issues regarding protection of the ground-dwelling birds’ habitat.”

Additional coverage of the proposal to amend sage grouse plans was provided by the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (12/1, Richards), the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (12/1, Richards), the YubaNet \(CA\) (12/1), KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (12/3), KHSL-TV Chico \(CA\) Chico, CA (12/1), and KHSL-TV Chico \(CA\) Chico, CA (12/1).

Southern Utah County Suing To Control Hotly Contested Road.

The AP (12/1) reports that San Juan County in southern Utah is “suing for control of a canyon road that’s been a longtime flashpoint in the debate over federal control of public lands.” The county “argues in the Wednesday lawsuit that longtime use of Recapture Canyon road gives them legal title to the road on federal land.”

Trash, Lawlessness Targeted At Shooting Range Near Las Vegas.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/3, Brean) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “launched a new effort to address the growing trash and safety problem” at a shooting range near Las Vegas, “with little success so far.” Steph Clark, “chief law enforcement ranger for the BLM in Southern Nevada, said it will take ‘a culture change’ to get the mess cleaned up and get shooters where they are supposed to be.” So far this year, the BLM has “hosted a pair of volunteer cleanups at the site, one in May with the National Rifle Association and another in early November.” The bureau “also has teamed with the Metropolitan Police Department and the Nevada Highway Patrol to step up patrols in the area.”

Reward Offered To Catch Vandals Of Historic Mine Buildings.

The AP (12/1) reports that “federal officials are offering a reward to help catch vandals who did an estimated $25,000 in damage to two historic brick buildings originally used to house explosives for a former Black Hills gold mine.” A Bureau of Land Management employee conducting “a monthly check at the property last summer discovered remnants of a backwoods party at one of the powder houses nestled among the pines and aspens southwest of Lead.” After bureau officials “re-secured the buildings, vandals knocked gaping holes in the brick exteriors of two of them.” BLM officials have “offered a reward up to $1,000 for information leading to the conviction of those responsible after the second break-in was recently discovered.”

Illegal Immigrant Acquitted Of Murder In San Francisco, Trump Slams Verdict.

Reuters (11/30, Dobuzinskis) reports that an undocumented immigrant from Mexico “was acquitted of murder and manslaughter by a San Francisco jury on Thursday in the fatal shooting of a woman that Donald Trump used as a rallying cry against ‘sanctuary cities’ during his presidential campaign.” Jose Ines Garcia Zarate, who had been deported to Mexico five times, “was charged in the July 1, 2015, killing of Kate Steinle on a San Francisco pier.” Defense attorneys said Garcia Zarate “found the gun and it accidentally discharged, the bullet ricocheting off the ground...before striking the woman.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Developer Abandons Plans For Long-Stalled Cape Cod Wind Farm.

The AP (12/1) reported Cape Wind Associates of Massachusetts is ditching “its long-stalled plans for a wind farm” off the coast of Cape Cod. The company “notified the federal Bureau of Ocean Energy Management this week that it has ceased operations and was surrendering its federal lease for 46 square miles in Nantucket Sound.” Dennis Duffy, vice president of Cape Wind Associates, “disclosed the official notice Friday.” The company “proposed the nation’s first offshore wind farm with a 130-turbine project 16 years ago, but it was dealt major setbacks including the termination of critical agreements with utility companies in 2015.”

Bloomberg News (12/1, Ryan) reported Cape Wind has “suffered a slow death.” According to Bloomberg “efforts to develop the 468-megawatt offshore farm, proposed to supply power to Cape Cod and the islands of Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket, began in 2001 but came up against relentless opposition from a mix of strange bedfellows including the Kennedy family and billionaire industrialist William Koch.”

The Boston Globe (12/1, Chesto) reported that the “first devastating blow for the ambitious offshore installation for Nantucket Sound came in early 2015, when National Grid and Northeast Utilities – which had agreed to buy electricity from Cape Wind – canceled their contracts with the developer.” In 2016, “state regulators yanked permission for a power line connection, further reducing the already slim prospects of the project moving forward.” Later that year, “Cape Wind foes successfully lobbied lawmakers on Beacon Hill to prevent its backers from benefitting from a major energy bill that requires utilities to buy large amounts of offshore wind.”

Senate Passes Sweeping Revision Of U.S. Tax Code.

In a breakdown of the Senate tax bill’s provisions, the Wall Street Journal (12/2, Rubin, Hughes) reports lawmakers voted to preserve an amendment opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) to oil drilling. Reuters (12/2, Gardner) reported that Republicans attached a measure introduced by Alaskan Senator Lisa Murkowski to the tax bill to open a portion of Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which Murkowski called “critical milestone in our efforts to secure Alaska’s energy future.”

However, The Hill (12/1, Cama) reports 12 House Republicans on Thursday came out in opposition to the proposal, which “puts them squarely opposed to most congressional Republicans, who for years have sought to open a small area of ANWR to drilling.”

Also reporting are The Hill (12/3, Cama), the Washington Examiner (12/2, Siegel), the Huffington Post (12/2, D'Angelo), the Huffington Post (12/1, D'Angelo), and Alaska Dispatch News (12/2, Herz).

Endangered Species Protection Stalled In Year 1 Of Trump.

Courthouse News (12/1, YOUNG-GRINDLE) reports that “a leading environmental group has compiled a list of 63 congressional actions introduced in 2017 that they say attack protections for species or undermine the Endangered Species Act.” The article notes that “after months of inaction regarding at-risk species, Fish and Wildlife – the agency tasked with protecting land-based species – said last month it had determined 25 species did not warrant Endangered Species Act protection, according to the Center for Biological Diversity.” Noah Greenwald, endangered species director for the Center for Biological Diversity said, “You couldn’t ask for a clearer sign that the Trump administration puts corporate profits ahead of protecting endangered species. The Pacific walrus, Florida Keys mole skink, eastern boreal toad and 22 other species are now one step closer to extinction. We’re going to challenge as many of these bogus findings as we can.”

Advocates Say Saving Rare Mussel Could Help Restore River.

The AP (12/2) reports that “conservationists are hoping efforts to save a rare mussel found in southeast New Mexico could lead to restoring a struggling desert river.” According to the article, “an 8-mile (13-kilometer) stretch of the Black River south of Carlsbad is home to about 48,000 Texas hornshell mussels.” Hornshells were “once plentiful in areas near Carlsbad and Roswell, but now they occupy about 12 percent of their historic range in the state.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “requested for the mussel to be listed as an endangered species last year” and “a final determination is expected in February.”

Good News For Mexican Wolf? US Thinks So.

The Arizona Daily Star (12/2, Davis) reports that “the approval of a new federal plan to dramatically boost populations of the Mexican wolf does little to quell the longstanding scientific debate over how the embattled animal should be managed.” Last Wednesday, “the plan was greeted by formal threats of lawsuits from two teams of environmental groups who see the plan as a path to extinction. The groups, including the Tucson-based Center for Biological Diversity, Western Watersheds Project, Wildlife Guardians and Defenders of Wildlife, want far more wolves released into a much bigger area.” On Thursday, Sen. Jeff Flake, “who has supported ranchers’ efforts to hold down the plan’s scope, issued a news release calling the plan ‘yet another federal regulatory nightmare for ranchers and Arizona’s rural communities.’”

Texas Suit To Delist Warbler As Endangered Trimmed.

Law360 (12/1, Jahner) reports that “a Texas federal judge on Thursday pared a state agency’s lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service down to one claim, ruling the 1990 determination that the golden-cheeked warbler is endangered falls under sovereign immunity and maintaining that status does not require an environmental impact study.”

Rare Fish Only Found In Area May Receive Federal Protection.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) Times Free Press (12/3, Pace) reports that the Center for Biological Diversity has petitioned to protect the trispot darter, “which spawned the decision by the Fish and Wildlife Service to review its protection.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “proposing to list the species as threatened under the Endangered Species Act, which is the final step before it is officially listed.”

Ferret Species Once Thought Extinct Making Modest Comeback On Prairie.

The AP (12/2) reports that “a ferret species once thought to be extinct is making a modest comeback on the prairie, thanks to the work of staff at a Kansas nature center and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologists.” The Prairie Park Nature Center and “volunteers from various institutions across Kansas have surveyed the black-footed ferret recovery site in Logan County annually for the last decade.” Prairie Park staff members “feel optimistic after a November trip to the 1,100-acre tract in western Kansas, where crews help capture, tag and vaccinate wild-born ferrets.”

Newfound Stoneflies Lack Political Clout.

The Gillette \(WY\) News Record (12/2, Koshmri) reports that “entomologists have discovered a previously undetected species of stonefly in the Teton Range’s glacial-fed streams, a find that expands the known range of the bug and that could halt federal protections.” The article notes that “the expanded range – the new finds are up to 500 miles south of Glacier – prompted the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to re-solicit comments from the public.” The FWS is “still examining the 2-inch-long specialized insect for potential ‘threatened’ status under the Endangered Species Act.”

Effort To Fix Aging Arlington Memorial Bridge Receives A $227 Million Boost.

The Washington Post (12/1, Aratani) reports on the announcement Friday from the National Park Service “that it had approved a $227 million project to repair and rehabilitate Arlington Memorial Bridge,” which serves as a crossing point for 68,000 vehicles every day. Calling the announcement “a rare bit of good news for the Washington region’s aging transportation infrastructure," the Post says the bridge was structurally deficient to the point "that in 2015 officials barred large vehicles, trucks and buses from using it." The project received a $90 million Fastlane grant last year, but "for the past six years, NPS and the Federal Highway Administration have made emergency temporary repairs of the Arlington Memorial Bridge while planning the larger rehabilitation."

Researchers Say National Park Fee Hike Could Cost Montana.

The AP (12/1) reports that University of Montana researchers say the Interior Department's "proposal to more than double the cost of the seven-day pass for national parks could cause economic harm to neighboring communities." Economists at the university's Institute for Tourism and Recreation Research "say the fee increase would decrease annual spending by $3.4 million in the surrounding communities within 60 miles (100 kilometers) of Yellowstone National Park." Institute director Jeremy Sage "says the effects found from their research on Yellowstone would likely carry over to other parks and communities."

WTTG-TV Washington (11/30) reports that "while a viral photo posted and shared on social media shows many empty chairs in the crowd" during this year's lighting the National Christmas Tree, "the image may be a bit misleading." The National Park Service "explained that no-shows are not uncommon for the National Christmas Tree Lighting." According to the NPS, "of the 20,000 tickets given out, it is believed on average that 12,000 to 15,000 people attend the tree lighting ceremony each year."

The Washington Post (12/1, Rosenberg) reports work orders for the White House "reveal the building to be, if not dumplike, well...a little bit worn, like so many other old houses around the country." The Post says NBC Washington obtained "dozens of documents" unveiling "mice infiltrations" in both "the White House's Navy mess food service area and Situation Room," along with "at least four reports of cockroaches on the White House grounds, and ants in the chief of staff's office."

Charred Smokies Town Rebounds, Doubts Fires Are 'New Normal'.

The AP (12/2, Mattise) reports that a year after a fire "killed 14 people and damaged or destroyed about 2,500 buildings in the Gatlinburg area," local residents and businesses are "forging ahead, even after a National Parks Service report said the conditions that let flames burn into the city could become the 'new normal.'" According to the article, "they say it's unlikely that Gatlinburg will again endure a perfect storm of factors that caused the blaze."

Battlefield Teams Up With Preservation Crew To Build Cabin.

The AP (12/1, Hogan) reports that "a crew of carpenters from the Historic Preservation Training Center in Frederick has spent the last five weeks inside the Thomas barn at Monocacy National Battlefield re-creating a French Creole cabin typical of early settlers along the Mississippi River." The cabin will be "shipped to St. Louis to join a series of new exhibits at the museum of the Gateway Arch at the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial." According to the article, "sending the crew down to St. Louis to build the cabin...would have been more expensive than building it locally and shipping the completed structure."

Some Entry Fees Could Rise At Seashore.

The Brewster \(MA\) Cape Codder (12/3) reports that the National Park Service is "proposing a fee increase for 2018 for the per person and motorcycle daily fees to enter Cape Cod National Seashore." According to the article, "the per person daily fee would increase from $3 to $10, and the motorcycle daily fee would increase from $10 to $15." The move is "in response to the NPS effort to standardize entrance fees across the National Park System."

Elwha River Takes Out Olympic Hot Springs Road.

The Seattle Times (12/1, Mapes) reports that “new flood damage” has closed the Olympic Hot Springs Road “not long after the National Park Service spent $450,000 on a temporary fix to reopen it after the last flood.” According to Penny Wagner, spokeswoman for Olympic National Park, “decisions on repairs to the road won’t be made until conditions subside enough to get a good look at the damage this time.”

Yellowstone Superintendent To Receive Honorary Degree At MSU.

The AP (12/3) reports that Yellowstone National Park Superintendent Dan Wenk is “set to receive an honorary doctorate degree in letters from Montana State University.” The university says Wenk “supports land-grant universities and has deepened the relationship between Yellowstone’s research unit and faculty and students.” University president Waded Cruzado says Wenk “has reinforced the long-standing ties between Yellowstone National Park and our university, strengthening MSU’s status as the ‘University of the Yellowstone.’” Wenk will “receive the degree during MSU’s fall commencement on Dec. 16.”

Interior Gives Bikini Leaders Powers Over Resettlement Trust Fund.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (12/4) reports that Interior’s assistant secretary for Insular Areas Doug Domenech has “authorized full decision-making powers for the mayor and Council of the Kili-Bikini-Ejit local government in the Republic of the Marshall Islands over the annual budget of the Bikini Resettlement Trust Fund for and on behalf of the people of Kili, Bikini, and Ejit atolls.” Domenech said, “One of Interior Secretary Zinke’s priorities is to restore trust and ensure that sovereignty means something. Today, we recognize the leadership role and responsibility for which the people of Bikini have elected the mayor and council leaders and henceforth, will defer to them to fully assume a decision-making role over the Resettlement Trust Fund. It is appropriate that decision-making for the well-being of the people of Bikini be transferred to people of Bikini, rather than be dependent upon policy makers in Washington, D.C. However, our decision today in no way precludes any future consultations between our offices, as partners, for the benefit of the people of Bikini.”

Study: Quakes Spurred On Faults Dead For 300 Million Years.

The AP (12/1, Wallace) reports that “earthquakes that have swarmed North Texas in recent years occurred on faults awakened by human activity after they had been dormant since dinosaurs roamed the area, according to a new university study.” The study by Southern Methodist University researchers “supports recent assertions that the earthquakes were induced by human activity, not naturally.” Michael Blanpied, associate coordinator of the Earthquake hazard program of the U.S. Geological Survey and a co-author of the SMU report, said, “The study’s findings suggest that the recent Fort Worth Basin earthquakes, which involve swarms of activity on several faults in the region, have been induced by human activity.”

Opinion Pieces

Trump Is Vandalizing Our Wild Heritage.

In a New York Times (12/1, Babbitt) op-ed, former Interior Secretary and Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt accuses President Trump of “vandalizing” the country’s “wild heritage.” Babbitt says Trump on Monday is expected to say he is “repealing protections for as many as two million acres of public land in the American West, an area more than six times the size of Grand Teton National Park, including vast portions of two national monuments in the state, Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante.” He adds that “this theft of our heritage should awaken us to the damage being piled up across our public lands under this administration.”

Trump Parrots Obama’s Enthusiasm For One-Branch Government.

In his column for the Washington Times (12/1, Fein), Bruce Fein criticizes President Trump’s move to “unilaterally diminish national monument designations of his predecessor issued under the Antiquities Act of 1906.” Fein argues that like his predecessor, “Trump is claiming limitless presidential power to flout the plain words of the statute by treating them as homonyms: The words sound the same as when they were enacted, but now mean something different or even the opposite.” Fein asserts that if Trump “can’t convince a Republican-controlled Congress that certain national monuments should be abolished or rolled back, then he must accept the status quo until he unearths better arguments that do the job.”

When Trump Guts Two Utah National Monuments Next Week, He’ll Trigger A New Conservation War.

In an op-ed for the Los Angeles Times (12/1, Trimble), Stephen Trimble, who serves on the board of Grand Staircase-Escalante Partners, writes that President Trump is planning “to wreak destruction on public lands he knows nothing about.” Trimble claims that Trump is only motivated because “he can nullify one more Obama accomplishment.” According to Trimble, “the administration’s attack on national monuments has fired up a national coalition of public lands and Native American rights defenders.” He warns that if Trump goes through, “he will disrupt management on the ground and trigger a years-long taxpayer funded court battle the anti-monument folks will likely lose.”

CONSERVATISM MEANS TO CONSERVE: Why Trump Is Wrong To Reclassify National Monuments.

In an op-ed for the Daily Caller (12/3, Shirley), Craig Shirley argues that the reasoning behind Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s recommendation to reduce national monuments – “that less federal land means less federal government – is flawed.” Rather, Shirley claims that “reducing federal land in this case would make corporations slobber over their new found pickings” and “corporations hardly ever have the working man in their best interest.” Shirley writes that “Ronald Reagan, the Westerner, understood that conservatism also meant to conserve – our natural resources, our cherished lands, our natural treasures.” Shirley concludes that “these monuments are more than just landscapes or places to gaze pretty sunsets, but essential parts of American history and American identity.”

When Public Lands Are Sacred Lands.

In an op-ed for the Daily Caller (12/3, Koa), Kambree Kawahine Koa, a radio and television contributor based in California, writes that she has “been an enthusiastic supporter of Donald Trump since the moment he started his campaign for President,” but she asserts that “any effort to reduce the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah is absolutely wrong.” She empathizes with indigenous people and their “special bond and relationship with the land.” Koa urges President Trump “to stand with Native peoples, defend our traditions and defend our sacred lands.”

National Parks Were My Family’s Door To America. Doubling The Entry Fees Would Limit Access To Immigrants Like My Father.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (12/1, Tam), Ruth Tam writes about her family vacations growing up, which “involved road trips across the United States, hitting national parks, battlefields and historic sites.” According to Tam, “these national parks and sites — which would become less accessible if the Trump administration implements a proposal to increase entry fees — did more than history classes ever could: They made us feel American.” She writes if a proposed fee hike is implemented, “the doorway may narrow for families like mine, who visited not just for the views but for a greater understanding of our mixed cultural identity.”

US Oil And Gas Boom Will Actually Help Spur Energy Revolution.

In an op-ed for The Hill (12/1, Graham), Crosswind Media & Public Relations President and CEO Thomas Graham stated that as “most of our gas will be exported to China, India and Southwest Asia” it will assist those countries in dropping their “dependency on far dirtier coal” and will lower the globe’s carbon emissions. An International Energy Agency study, reported by Fortune, states that reducing hydrocarbons is becoming more difficult for the US as prices are decreasing and production has more than doubled. Graham argues that exporting natural gas as the world’s largest exporter will bring an “economic boost at home,” which “will drive technological advances not just in energy, but in sciences and infrastructure.”

Media Analyses: Trump’s Weekend Tweets Raise Specter Of Obstruction Of Justice.

President Trump’s Sunday morning tweets, in which he said the FBI’s “reputation is in Tatters,” charged that a “Tainted (no, very dishonest?) FBI ‘agent’s role in [Hillary] Clinton probe under review,” and cited a report that an “ANTI-TRUMP FBI AGENT LED CLINTON EMAIL PROBE,” contributed to Sunday show conversation about the plea agreement made by former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn. The President’s earlier tweet that he fired Flynn “because he lied to the Vice President and the FBI” and another saying that he “never asked [then-FBI Director James] Comey to stop investigating Flynn” drove the bulk of the discussion, which dealt with whether the President is imperiling himself with such tweets and if the President’s apparent admission that he knew Flynn had lied constitutes obstruction of justice.

ABC World News Tonight (12/3, lead story, 3:25, Llamas) reported that the President is “again firing back at critics...taking aim at FBI leadership, calling their reputation in ‘tatters,’ and the worst in history.” The “tough tweets” come “on the heels of his former national security adviser pleading guilty to lying to the FBI." ABC's David Wright: "The White House is racing to explain this tweet from @realDonaldTrump that appeared to admit, for the first time, that the President knew his former national security adviser had committed a crime. ... The President tweeted, 'I never asked Comey to stop investigating Flynn. Just more fake news covering another Comey lie!'"

The CBS Weekend News (12/3, lead story, 2:25, Quijano) reported, "Hours before the rooster crowed Sunday, President Trump was ruffling feathers again on Twitter. He railed about the Russia investigation, defended his firing of Flynn, "and railed on James Comey. The President also took aim at a FBI agent removed from the Russia investigation for sending anti-Trump texts. But another weekend tweet is intensely analyzed." CBS' Errol Barnett reported that Trump "implied via Twitter" that he knew Flynn "lied to the FBI before making the decision to fire him. But that tweet, sources tell CBS News, was drafted by the President's lawyer John Dowd, who didn't mean to imply that the President knew Flynn had lied to the FBI at the time."

NBC Nightly News (12/3, lead story, 3:50, Snow) reported, "All weekend long, President Trump has been weighing in on Friday's big news. ... The President insists he is not worried about what Flynn might tell investigators, but on Saturday, a tweet from the President's account about why he fired Flynn was scrutinized. And today, a top Republican warned the President to be more careful." Sen. Lindsey Graham: "You tweet and comment regarding ongoing criminal investigations at your own peril. I'd be careful if I were you, Mr. President, I'd watch this." NBC's Kristen Welker: "Tonight, the top Democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee." Sen. Mark Warner: "I believe FBI Director Comey. I think he was very credible in his testimony and his private meetings with us." On CNN's State Of The Union (12/3, Tapper), Warner said there is "mounting evidence, almost every week." He said that while he will withhold judgment on the matter until the investigation concludes, "there has never been, in modern American history, a political campaign that had this much outreach to a foreign government, and a foreign adversary, in this case, throughout the campaign, and throughout the transition."

The New York Times (12/3, A1, Shear) reports that Trump "lashed out at the F.B.I.," and "in an extraordinary attack on the top law enforcement body in his own government...accused the F.B.I. and its career investigators of having a bias against him." The Washington Post (12/3, Wagner) reports that Trump "issued a fresh denial" that he asked Comey to halt the Flynn investigation, and "also seized on news that Peter Strzok – the former top FBI official assigned to special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's probe" – was taken off that job earlier this year "after his bosses discovered that he and another member of Mueller's team had exchanged politically charged texts disparaging Trump and supporting" Hillary Clinton. The Los Angeles Times (12/3, Wigglesworth) reports that the President's "comments closely echoed language used during Sunday morning's episode of Fox News' 'Fox & Friends,' which aired a report on Strzok under the banner, 'Agent's role in Clinton probe under review.'"

The Los Angeles Times (12/3, King) calls Trump's tweets "a risky gambit," putting the President "on record to directly dispute his former FBI chief's sworn contention that the president had sought to derail" the investigation. Julie Pace of the AP said on CNN's Inside Politics (12/3) that the White House is "leaning hard on this idea that the Flynn court documents don't provide a smoking gun on collusion and that is true. But what they do do is continue to undermine the initial White House explanations about why Flynn was fired and what he was up to during the transition."

Politico (12/3, Restuccia) reports that the tweets "combined to reignite fears among people close to Trump that the president is not taking the special counsel's investigation seriously enough and is getting bad advice from his legal team." The President's "supporters, former campaign aides and former administration officials are beginning to privately raise red flags that the White House can't keep up with the president's own tweets and doesn't have a coherent messaging strategy on the Russia investigation."

Reuters (12/3, Bigg), the Washington Times (12/3, Boyer, Noble, Richardson), and Business Insider (12/3) also report.

Feinstein: Senate Judiciary Committee Sees Possible "Case Of Obstruction Of Justice." USA Today (12/3, Jackson) reports, "During a weekend-long series of tweets...Trump attacked the FBI" and Comey "over different aspects of the Russia investigation, including Flynn's role," and "further complicated matters by tweeting that he knew Flynn had lied to the FBI when he fired him. Lawmakers said that raises a possible obstruction of justice claim, given Comey's statement that Trump had asked him to drop the Flynn investigation."

The AP (12/3, Thomas) reports that Sen. Dianne Feinstein, "the top Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the panel is beginning to see 'the putting together of a case of obstruction of justice' against Trump." The Wall Street Journal (12/3, Sonne) quotes Feinstein saying, "I think we see this in the four indictments, the indictments and pleas and some of the comments that are being made. I see it in the hyper-frenetic attitude of the White House, the comments every day, the continual tweets. And I see it most importantly in what happened with the firing of Director Comey, and it is my belief that that is directly because he did not agree to lift the cloud of the Russia investigation. That's obstruction of justice." Feinstein also said on NBC's Meet The Press (12/3, Todd) that she assumes that many people in the White House are under investigation.

Reuters (12/3, Rampton) reports that Trump attorney John Dowd said in an interview that he had drafted the tweet stating that Trump fired Flynn for lying to the FBI, which, Ben Zimmer of The Atlantic (12/3) writes, "set off a new round of incredulous chatter. Would the president's lawyer really compose a tweet like that on his client's behalf, especially one that seemed so incriminating?"

The Washington Post (12/3, A1, Leonnig, Wagner, Nakashima) reports on its front page that Dowd said Trump "knew in late January" that Flynn "had probably given FBI agents the same inaccurate account he provided to Vice President Pence about a call with the Russian ambassador." Dowd "said it was inaccurate to say the president was told that Flynn had lied to the FBI."

USA Today (12/3) editorializes, "Flynn's guilty plea does not look good for President Trump. ... But those Democrats and never-Trumpers who see this as the next step toward impeachment should cool their jets. No judgment should be made until special counsel Robert Mueller presents his full case. And even then, the American people should have a say on the matter."

Schiff: Flynn Deal "Not The End Of It By Any Means." House Intelligence Committee ranking member Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) said on ABC's This Week (12/3) that the Flynn plea deal tells him "that Bob Mueller must have concluded he was getting a lot of value in terms of Gen. Flynn's cooperation." Schiff added, "I think it indicates to me, at least, that this is not the end of it by any means."

Scott Says Trump Should Not Pardon Flynn. Sen. Tim Scott said on CNN's State Of The Union (12/3, Tapper), "I think we'll find out the truth before, hopefully by the end of this year or early next year." He added, "At the end of the day...we have to have a way to restore confidence of the American people in their elected officials and the leaders of this country." The Hill (12/3, Manchester) reports that Scott also said that Trump should not pardon Flynn.

Newsmax's Ruddy: Mueller Probe "An Existential Threat" To Trump Presidency. The Hill (12/3, Thomsen) reports that Newsmax CEO Chris Ruddy, a "longtime friend of President Trump," told ABC that "Mueller's investigation 'poses an existential threat to the Trump presidency.'"

"Conservative Operative" Offered To Assist In Setting Up 2016 Trump-Putin Meeting. The New York Times (12/3, Fandos) reports that an unnamed "conservative operative trumpeting his close ties to the National Rifle Association and Russia" contacted Trump campaign adviser Rick Dearborn in May 2016 to say that he "could arrange a back-channel meeting" between Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin. The operative said he was seeking advice from Dearborn and then-Sen. Jeff Sessions "about how to proceed in connecting" the two men.

House Intelligence Committee Threatens DOJ, FBI With Contempt. The Washington Times (12/3, Noble) reports that House Republicans could draft a resolution to hold Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein and FBI Director Wray "in contempt of Congress as soon as Monday for failure to turn over documents sought as part of an intelligence committee investigation." House Intelligence Chairman Devin Nunes accuses the FBI and DOJ of "months of stonewalling...as his panel sought access to records related to federal investigators' use of the salacious Trump dossier." Bloomberg News (12/3, House) and the Daily Caller (12/3, Ross) have similar reports.

In related news, the Washington Times (12/3, Scarborough) reports that though "the Trump-Russia dossier may be sleazy and inaccurate," there is "no US election law that expressly prohibits such work by a foreign national," according to the Federal Election Commission.

Russia-Backed Sputnik Adds Second Washington Radio Station. The Washington Post (12/3, Moyer) reports that the "Russia-funded radio station" Sputnik has added a second Washington-area station "after its partner, a Virginia-based radio company, registered with the Justice Department as a foreign agent." Sputnik has been broadcasting on 105.5 FM since June, and 1390 AM, "a former Spanish-language station based in Capitol Heights, Md., began carrying Sputnik on Saturday."

"SNL" Opened With Baldwin In Flynn-Related Sketch. USA Today (12/3, Moniuszko) and the Washington Post (12/3, Izadi) both briefly summarize this weekend's "Saturday Night Live" cold open, a parody of "A Christmas Carol" in which Alec Baldwin's Donald Trump was visited by Flynn as “the Ghost of Witness Flipped,” as well as spectral versions of Billy Bush, Putin, and Hillary Clinton.

Trump Says That He Fired Flynn For Lying To Pence And FBI, But Laments Former Aide’s Suffering.

President Trump, in response to former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn’s announcement on Friday that he will plead guilty to lying to the FBI about his conversations with former Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak, told reporters on Saturday he is “very happy” and remains convinced Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s investigation will prove there was “absolutely no collusion” between the Russian government and his campaign. Coverage of the President’s remarks became drastically more negative after Trump tweeted that he fired Flynn because he lied to Vice President Pence and the FBI, which several lawmakers, former officials, and legal experts suggested could potentially result in obstruction of justice charges against the President.

NBC Nightly News (12/2, story 3, 1:40, Diaz-Balart) Jose Diaz-Balart said the President, in his first public remarks about Flynn, insisted “he is not worried about” Flynn’s plea and maintained “there’s still no proof of any collusion between his campaign and the Russians.” The Wall Street Journal (12/2, Sonne) reports that Trump told reporters, “There’s been absolutely no collusion, so we’re very happy.” He added, “We’ll see what happens.” The Hill (12/2, Cohn) reports that Trump, asked if he is worried about what Flynn will tell Mueller’s investigation, asserted, “No, I’m not.”

However, Politico (12/2, Griffiths) highlights that later in the day, Trump “defended” Flynn’s actions as “lawful.” Reuters (12/2, Mason, Wolfe) reports Trump tweeted, “I had to fire General Flynn because he lied to the Vice President and the FBI. He has pled guilty to those lies. It is a shame because his actions during the transition were lawful. There was nothing to hide!”

The AP (12/3, Woodward, Thomas) reports that by “suggesting he knew at the time that Flynn had lied to the FBI as well as...Pence about [Flynn’s] contacts with Russians during the presidential transition,” Trump has “changed his story” justifying his dismissal of Flynn. According to the AP, the new explanation is “a turnabout from his initial explanations that Flynn had to go because he hadn’t been straight with Pence about those contacts.” The Hill (12/2, Fabian, Manchester) says that the “apparent shift from the reasons Trump stated at the time of Flynn’s ouster” represents “a discrepancy that will catch the attention of prosecutors on Mueller’s team looking into whether the president tried to obstruct the investigation.”

The New York Times (12/2, Haberman, Schmidt, Shear) reports that although Trump “has long asserted that he fired Mr. Flynn in February, less than a month after he took office,” because Flynn had lied to Pence, “by saying on Twitter...that Mr. Flynn’s lies to the F.B.I. had also contributed to his firing, some took that to mean that Mr. Trump was acknowledging that he had known in February that Mr. Flynn was untruthful with the bureau’s agents.” The Times adds that “any such admission would be important in light of Mr. Trump’s effort that month to persuade the bureau’s director at the time, James B. Comey, to drop the investigation into Mr. Flynn.”

In the lead story for the CBS Weekend News (12/2, lead story, 2:35, Ninan), justice reporter Paula Reid asserted the President effectively “acknowledged for the first time that he knew Flynn had lied to federal investigators before he was fired.” Reid added that Trump’s “tweet also suggests that he knew Flynn had committed a felony when, on Feb. 14, he asked...Comey to shut down the investigation into Flynn.” The Washington Post (12/2, Phillips, Blake) says the new “tweet indicates [the President] knew that Flynn lied to the FBI when he fired him, but that wasn’t reported by The Washington Post until three days after his dismissal. At the time, Trump cited only that Flynn had misled Vice President Pence.”

USA Today (12/2, Jackson) similarly reports “some critics pointed out that Trump’s tweet implies he knew Flynn had lied to the FBI when he fired him – and before he reportedly asked former FBI Director James Comey to go easy on Flynn,” which The Hill (12/2, Thomsen) says “prompted ethics experts and political observers to question whether Mueller could probe the president for obstruction of justice.”

Bloomberg News (12/2, Strohm, Pettypiece) reports “Democratic lawmakers seized on the president’s tweet.” Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking member of the House Intelligence Committee, tweeted, “If that is true, Mr. President, why did you wait so long to fire Flynn? Why did you fail to act until his lies were publicly exposed? And why did you pressure Director Comey to ‘let this go?’” Sen. Richard Blumenthal tweeted, “Trump’s claim today that he fired Flynn because of lies to FBI, as well as Pence, shows knowledge of lawbreaking he concealed – never before disclosed.” He added, “Obstruction of justice in the Oval Office unfolding before our eyes in real time – as Trump seemingly admits to covering up Flynn’s lies to FBI about Russian contacts.” The

Hill (12/2, Manchester) reports Rep. Ted Lieu tweeted, "THIS IS OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE. @POTUS now admits he KNEW Michael Flynn lied to the FBI. Yet Trump tried to influence or stop the FBI investigation on #Flynn."

The Hill (12/2, Carter) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog that Walter Shaub, the former director of the US Office of Government Ethics, asked whether Trump's tweet was an admission he knew of Flynn's lies to the FBI and said, "Before we slipped into an alternate universe of unabashed corruption, this tweet alone might have ended a Presidential administration." Shaub continued, "Tell us, @realDonaldTrump, did you know Flynn had lied to the FBI when Counsel to the President Don McGahn snubbed Yates as she tried to warn the White House Flynn had been compromised? Did you know Flynn had lied to the FBI when you fired Yates days after her whistleblowing?" In addition, The Hill (12/2, Carter) "Briefing Room" blog reports Matthew Miller, a Justice Department spokesman during the Obama Administration, tweeted, "Oh my god, he just admitted to obstruction of justice. If Trump knew Flynn lied to the FBI when he asked Comey to let it go, then there is your case."

John Dowd Claims Authorship Of Trump's Tweet On Flynn Firing, Says Comment "Paraphrases" Ty Cobb's Statement. The Washington Post (12/2, Blake) reports the President's tweet on Flynn "was authored by Trump's personal lawyer, John Dowd, according to two people familiar with the situation." Dowd later said, "The tweet just paraphrases what [White House lawyer] Ty Cobb issued yesterday. I refer you to Comey's testimony about Flynn's answers. I have nothing further." The Post concedes "the fact that Dowd authored the tweet could limit its salience to the investigation," but "Cobb's comments Friday didn't address the timeline like Trump's tweet does. Cobb merely said Friday that the 'false statements involved mirror the false statements to White House officials which resulted in his resignation in February of this year.'"

Trump: "Rigged System" Has "Destroyed" Flynn's Life, Spared Hillary Clinton. The Hill (12/2, Greenwood) reports Trump, in a series of tweets on Saturday night, "suggested Flynn had his life 'destroyed' for lying to the FBI, while former Democratic rival Hillary Clinton has got off free after deleting emails." The President tweeted, "So General Flynn lies to the FBI and his life is destroyed, while Crooked Hillary Clinton, on that now famous FBI holiday 'interrogation' with no swearing in and no recording, lies many times...and nothing happens to her? Rigged system, or just a double standard?" He added, "Many people in our Country are asking what the 'Justice' Department is going to do about the fact that totally Crooked Hillary, AFTER receiving a subpoena from the United States Congress, deleted and 'acid washed' 33,000 Emails? No justice!"

Trump: "Never Asked Comey To Stop Investigating Flynn." Reuters (12/3, Bigg) reports the President "said in a tweet on Sunday he never asked former FBI director James Comey to stop investigating...Flynn." Trump asserted, "I never asked Comey to stop investigating Flynn. Just more Fake News covering another Comey lie!"

Trump's Legal Advisers Believe Flynn Cannot Incriminate Trump, Source Says. The Washington Times (12/2, Scarborough) reports a source close to the President's legal team "said that Special Counsel Robert Mueller filings on Friday is the extent of Mr. Flynn's incriminating statements about White House and campaign officials." The source told the Times, "There is simply no factual basis to implicate the president. He's got nothing else. What you see in the criminal information is it. He's empty." The source also "said that if Mr. Flynn was prepared to testify against the president, that fact would have been part of the pleading." They asserted Mueller would have made Flynn "plead to something that he did with the president," but the filings "contain nothing about the president. That's the key."

Sekulow: "There Is No Crime Of Collusion." The Hill (12/2, Bowden) reports Jay Sekulow, "one of President Trump's top lawyers," in an interview with the New Yorker asserted "it doesn't matter if members of the Trump campaign colluded with Russia as long as no crimes were committed." He said, "For something to be a crime, there has to be a statute that you claim is being violated." Sekulow added, "There is not a statute that refers to criminal collusion. There is no crime of collusion."

Trump Advisors Divided Over Cobb's "Play Nice" Approach To Mueller. Politico (12/2, Samuelsohn) reports that "as Mueller's probe moves deeper into the president's inner circle, some of Trump's longtime advisers are urging him to stick with the approach outlined by White House lawyer Ty Cobb," and continue to "play nice with" Mueller, but "some of Trump's old campaign hands and longtime loyalists...argue that now is the time to ditch Cobb's approach and get more aggressive with Mueller." According to Politico, Cobb and the President's other attorneys believe "cooperation with the Russia probe...is the best path to the exoneration Trump has craved all year – a way not just to get things over with quickly, but also to signal to prosecutors that the administration has good intentions and nothing to hide."

NYTimes A1: Emails Show Flynn Did Not Act Alone In Outreach To Russia. A front-page New York Times (12/2, A1, Schmidt, Lafraniere, Shane) article reports that while the White House had portrayed Flynn “as a renegade who had acted independently in his discussions with [Kislyak] during the presidential transition and then lied to his colleagues about the interactions,” emails from “top transition officials, provided or described to The New York Times, suggest that Mr. Flynn was far from a rogue actor.” The Times says the emails as well as interviews and new court documents “showed that Mr. Flynn was in close touch with other senior members of the Trump transition team both before and after he spoke with” Kislyak about the US sanctions on Russia, including K. T. McFarland. In the lead ABC World News Tonight (12/2, lead story, 4:20, Vega) segment, David Wright said that according to the Times, McFarland wrote, “If there is a tit-for-tat escalation Trump will have difficulty improving relations with Russia, which has just thrown U.S.A. election to him.” Wright added the White House’s response to the Times was that “‘there’s nothing illegal or unethical about the transition team’s actions,’ and that McFarland was expressing concern about how the Democrats were likely to spin this.”

WPost A1: McGahn Met With Mueller On Thursday. The Washington Post (12/2, A1, Costa, Leonnig, Dawsey) reports on its front page that “with his stealth morning arrival Thursday, White House Counsel Donald F. McGahn II became the latest in a string of high-level witnesses to enter the secretive nerve center of special counsel Robert S. Mueller III’s investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election.” The Post calls their meeting, when coupled with Flynn’s guilty plea twenty hours later, “the latest indication that Mueller’s operation is rapidly pursuing an expansive mission, drilling deeper into Trump’s inner circle.” The Post adds “among the topics that have been of keen interest to investigators: how foreign government officials and their emissaries contacted Trump officials, as well as the actions and interplay of Flynn and Jared Kushner, the president’s son-in-law.”

Plea Deal Keeps Flynn On “Very Short Leash.” ABC World News Tonight (12/2, story 2, 0:35, Vega) reported Flynn pleaded guilty on Friday to a single count of lying to the FBI; however, correspondent David Wright said, Flynn is “on a very short leash – required to check in weekly with the authorities and still consulting with the special counsel’s team.” The crime to which Flynn pleaded guilty “carries a maximum prison term of five years,” and “his deal is contingent upon his continued cooperation.”

Mueller Removed FBI Agent From Investigation This Summer Over Potential Bias Against Trump. A front-page Washington Post (12/2, A1, Demirjian, Barrett) article reports Special Counsel Robert Mueller removed Peter Strzok, the deputy head of counterintelligence at the FBI, from the investigation into Russian election interference “this summer after his bosses discovered he and another member of Mueller’s team had exchanged politically charged texts disparaging President Trump and supporting Hillary Clinton, according to multiple people familiar with the matter.” The sources told the Post that Strzok had been “a key player in the investigation into Clinton’s use of a private email server to do government work as secretary of state,” and at the time had been “involved in a romantic relationship with FBI lawyer Lisa Page, who worked for Deputy Director Andrew McCabe.” The Post adds “the extramarital affair was problematic, these people said, but of greater concern among senior law enforcement officials were” their politically charged text messages.

The New York Times (12/2, Schmidt, Apuzzo, Goldman) reports that “Strzok was reassigned...to the F.B.I.’s human resources department, where he has been stationed since.” A spokesman for Mueller’s office said: “Immediately upon learning of the allegations, the special counsel’s office removed Peter Strzok from the investigation.” The Times adds “the inspector general’s office at the Justice Department said that as part of a larger inquiry it was conducting into how the F.B.I. had handled investigations related to the 2016 election, the office was ‘reviewing allegations involving communications between certain individuals, and will report its findings regarding those allegations promptly upon completion of the review of them.’”

The Wall Street Journal (12/2, Wilber) reports the FBI also issued a statement insisting its investigation into the matter is consistent with its standard investigations of employee conduct while Attorney General Sessions in a statement said “the allegations that the Inspector General has confirmed are part of his ongoing investigation, if proven to be true, would raise serious questions of public trust.” The Journal notes Mueller’s spokesman said Page had left the investigation prior to the office learning of the allegations against her and Strzok.

House Republicans Draft Contempt Resolution Against FBI, DOJ. Bloomberg News (12/3, House) reports House Intelligence Chairman Devin Nunes announced Saturday that his committee is “drafting a contempt of Congress resolution against Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein and FBI Director Christopher Wray, claiming stonewalling in producing material in the Russia-Trump probes and other matters." In a statement, Nunes said, "Unless all our outstanding demands are fully met by close of business on Monday, December 4, 2017, the committee will have the opportunity to move this resolution before the end of the month." He added, "In light of today's press reports, we now know why Strzok was dismissed, why the FBI and DOJ refused to provide us this explanation, and at least one reason why they previously refused to make Deputy Director McCabe available to the Committee for an interview."

ABC News Apologizes, Suspends Brian Ross Over Incorrect Reporting. ABC World News Tonight (12/2, story 3, 0:40, Muir) released a statement on Saturday that read: "'We deeply regret and apologize for the serious error we made yesterday. The reporting conveyed by Brian Ross during the special report had not been fully vetted through our editorial standards process. As a result, our continued reporting over the next several hours ultimately determined the information was wrong, and we corrected the mistake on air and online. It is vital we get the story right and retain the trust we have built with our audience. These are our core principles. We fell far short of that yesterday."

The AP (12/3, Noveck) says ABC News suspended Ross for four weeks without pay for erroneously reporting that an unnamed confidant of Flynn claimed the former national security adviser would testify "then-candidate Donald Trump had directed Flynn to make contact with the Russians," only to say several hours later "that his source now said Trump had done so not as a candidate, but as president-elect."

According to the New York Times (12/2, Wang), the initial report "would have been a bombshell revelation in the continuing investigation into whether Mr. Trump's campaign colluded with Russia to interfere in the presidential election." In an interview with the Times, Kathleen Culver, the director of the Center for Journalism Ethics at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, criticized ABC News and said, "This error plays right into the hands of people who callously try to say that news media all just lie." Culver added, "This is the kind of thing you can see being brought up again and again and again at appearances by the president, where he will take one situation in which something was wrong, and blow that out into a condemnation that all news media are fake."

However, The Hill (12/2, Seipel) reports the President praised ABC News. Trump tweeted, "Congratulations to @ABC News for suspending Brian Ross for his horrendously inaccurate and dishonest report on the Russia, Russia, Russia Witch Hunt. More Networks and 'papers' should do the same with their Fake News!" The Hill (12/2, Manchester) reports in a separate article that in contrast, Donald Trump Jr. earlier in the day tweeted, "@ABC retracts their misleading 'bombshell' and removes their tweet approximately 12 hours after they knew it to be false. I know it's rare for you guys to get more than 200 RTs so I guess you milk it when you can?!?! #fakenews." In addition, former White House press secretary Sean Spicer on Friday tweeted, "@ABC 'news' owes it viewers an apology. Calling false reporting a 'clarification' is a cop out and just another reason for the decline in trust of the media."

Western Governors "Shrugged Off" Impact Of Flynn Plea Deal. Politico (12/2, Siders) reports that although "Flynn's downfall roiled Washington" on Friday, the Republican and Democratic leaders of 10 states "shrugged off the former national security adviser's guilty plea" during a Western Governors Association meeting. Politico acknowledges "efforts to minimize controversy are not uncommon at bipartisan gatherings of politicians who share common regional interests," but the fact that so many governors avoided the "moment of near-hysteria in Washington in the Russia probe also served as a reminder of how much controversy consuming the capital has failed to break through outside of D.C."

Flynn Pleads Guilty To Lying To FBI In Russia Probe.

Former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn on Friday pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI about his contacts with former Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak. The long-anticipated announcement dominated coverage, which included the lead segments on all three network newscasts with nearly 25 minutes combined, and was extensive in print and online. Reporting examined how Flynn's cooperation with Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation could impact the ongoing probe of President Trump and other White House officials, including Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner, who allegedly directed some of Flynn's conversations. In addition, analyses suggested that the plea appeared to come as a surprise to the White House and Trump.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (12/1, lead story, 4:00, Holt) segment, justice correspondent Pete Williams reported that there were "no handcuffs for Michael Flynn. He surrendered and walked into the federal courthouse in Washington to plead guilty to a single charge – lying to the FBI." Williams added that "in a statement, Flynn says his plea is, quote, 'in the best interests of my family and of our country.' He says, 'I recognize that the actions I acknowledged in court today were wrong and through my faith in God, I am working to set things right.'" Reuters (12/1, Layne) reports that in the statement, which was issued by the law firm representing him, Flynn "said it was 'painful to endure' the 'false accusations of 'treason' and other outrageous acts' over the past several months but that he recognized 'that the actions I acknowledged in court today were wrong.'"

In a more than 2,600-word article, Politico (12/1, Gerstein, Nussbaum, Meyer) labels Flynn's plea "a devastating moment for the Trump White House, which has at various times dismissed Russian interference in the election as 'fake news' and predicted that the investigation would wrap up by the end of the year." Politico says that at the court hearing on Friday, prosecutor Brandon Van Grack "offered additional details that appeared to connect Flynn's Russian contacts to the highest levels of the Trump transition team," but "prosecutors did not allege that anyone told Flynn to lie about his talks with the Russian ambassador, which is the crime the former national security adviser admitted to Friday."

CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 6:07 p.m. EDT, Keilar) justice correspondent Evan Perez said Flynn received "an incredible deal" because according to court documents, he allegedly "made four false statements," but he only faced charges for one. In addition, The Hill (12/1, Williams) states that Flynn "for the time being...will remain free – although the charge he faces carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison." The Daily Caller (12/1, Pfeiffer) notes that "Flynn is the fourth former Trump campaign official to be charged by special counsel Robert Mueller's wide-ranging probe into alleged Russian election interference."

The New York Times (12/1, A1, Shear, Goldman) reports on its front page that in pleading guilty to lying to the FBI about his conversations with Kislyak, Flynn became "the first senior White House official to cut a cooperation deal in the special counsel's wide-ranging inquiry into election interference." The Times says these discussions also amounted to "part of a coordinated effort by Mr. Trump's aides to create foreign policy before they were in power, documents released as part of Mr. Flynn's plea agreement show." In addition, the actions "undermined the existing policy of President Barack Obama and flouted a warning from a senior Obama administration official to stop meddling in foreign affairs before the inauguration."

The AP (12/2, Tucker, Day) reports Flynn also "said members of the president's inner circle were intimately involved with – and at times directing – his contacts" and Brianna Keilar led CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 5:01 p.m. EDT, Keilar) in reporting that an FBI statement revealed Flynn had "communicated with the ambassador at the request of a senior trump transition official," who sources identified as Kushner.

In the lead segment for the second hour of CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Keilar), Keilar stated that the developments constitute "the clearest picture yet of coordination between Flynn and other Trump advisers and their contact with Russian officials aimed at influencing international policy before the President took office." According to CNN's Situation Room's (12/1, 6:48 p.m. EDT, Keilar) Brian Todd, the court documents reveal Kislyak told Flynn that the Russian government last year had agreed not to "retaliate immediately to US sanctions" after having "specifically" received a request from Flynn to refrain from doing so.

In the lead CBS Evening News (12/1, lead story, 3:40, Mason) segment, Jeff Pegues reported the court papers reveal that "on Dec. 22, 2016, Flynn called Kislyak to urge Russia to delay or defeat a United Nations resolution concerning Israeli settlements." Pegues added, "a week later, Flynn spoke to Kislyak again. This time, about new sanctions imposed by the Obama Administration on Russia. He relayed to the ambassador that the Trump team did not want Russia to escalate the situation. Flynn made that call after consulting with someone court papers identify as a 'senior transition official.'" Sources told CBS News that this individual was "Flynn's deputy, K.T. McFarland." Bloomberg News (12/1, Pettypiece) notes Flynn brought McFarland into "to the transition team and later to the White House," where she "served as deputy national security adviser until being asked to step down in April by Flynn's replacement, H.R. McMaster." Bloomberg adds Trump in May nominated her as ambassador to Singapore, but "her nomination is still awaiting confirmation by the Senate."

CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 5:08 p.m. EDT, Keilar) justice correspondent Evan Perez reported McFarland "has gone in to provide information to the special counsel's office." The documents appear to show that she spoke with Flynn ahead of that meeting "to get a sense of what he should talk to the Russians about, what information he should share, and then he calls back and gives a report on what he learned in his conversation with Kislyak." Perez said that the concern at that time "appeared to be, at least from the Trump transition, was the fact that the Obama Administration was putting these sanctions, it would essentially tie the hands of incoming Administration." Meanwhile, "we're hearing from people close to the White House" about a "different version, certainly the version that perhaps Jared Kushner testified to," that the phone call related to Israeli settlements. Perez warned the differing accounts could leave Kushner in legal jeopardy.

The Wall Street Journal (12/1, A1, Viswanatha, Harris) reports on its front page that after Flynn spoke with Kislyak on Dec. 29, 2016, the court documents reveal he spoke to the unnamed official, identified by sources as McFarland. The Journal adds that she was at Mar-a-Lago for meetings with Trump, who at the time was President-elect, and senior advisers Stephen Miller and Kellyanne Conway as well as former White House Chief Strategist Steve Bannon and former White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus, according to a Trump spokesman at the time.

The New York Times (12/1, Schmidt) reports the day after this call with Kislyak, Russian President Vladimir Putin "announced that Moscow would not retaliate against the United States for its latest round of sanctions, surprising some in the Obama administration who had expected an aggressive response from Mr. Putin," and prompting Trump to praise the Russian leader. The Washington Times (12/1, Noble, Boyer) notes Trump tweeted, "Great move on delay (by V. Putin) – I always knew he was very smart!" ABC World News Tonight (12/1, story 3, 1:15, Muir) chief legal analyst Dan Abrams explained this is "a technical violation of something called the Logan Act, which prevents a private citizen from intervening in foreign affairs, but I think it's unlikely they're going to rest it on that."

Meanwhile, a front-page Washington Post (12/1, A1, Dawsey, Barrett) article states that "in an ominous sign for the White House," Flynn "said he is cooperating in the ongoing probe of possible coordination between the Trump campaign and the Kremlin to influence the 2016 election." In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (12/1, lead story, 4:15, Muir), chief investigative correspondent Brian Ross reported Flynn is now "telling associates he is prepared to testify, if needed, against President Trump and others in the White House." A confidant of Flynn's said "he is prepared to testify that Trump did direct him to contact the Russians during the transition, initially as a way to work together against ISIS."

Reuters (12/1, Lynch) reports "Flynn's decision to cooperate with Mueller's team marked a major escalation in a probe that has dogged the president since he took office in January." While Flynn's admission "set Washington abuzz with speculation as to who in the Republican leader's inner circle might next be in Mueller's sights," AFP (12/1, Handley, Blanc) reports the White House "rejected the idea that Flynn could implicate 'anyone' else."

Jonathan Karl of ABC World News Tonight (12/1, story 2, 1:45, Muir) reported that after the news broke, Trump ignored questions about the indictment, and then "the White House abruptly canceled a planned photo-op with the Libyan prime minister, avoiding questions altogether." Karl added Trump, top White House officials, and Trump's legal team "learned of this when they read it in the news," so the development "came as a surprise," and a source told NBC Nightly News (12/1, story 2, 3:15, Holt) Kristen Welker "the White House was completely blindsided by this news." Politico (12/1, Restuccia, Karni, Cook) similarly reports "no one in the White House was prepared" for the announcement of Flynn's plea deal as "there were no leaks in advance." According to Politico, although the President "told associates as recently as last weekend – while he was visiting his Mar-a-Lago resort for Thanksgiving – that he isn't worried about the outcome of Mueller's probe into Russian meddling in the 2016 election, which has grown to encompass his response to the investigation," there is "a growing sense of dread among Trump's closest confidants that the noose is tightening – if not around the president, then around his closest advisers and family members."

On the CBS Evening News (12/1, story 3, 0:50, Mason), chief White House correspondent Major Garrett reported that Trump "was notified this morning, and he considered it a sad event, for sure, for Gen. Flynn and a serious crime for a three-star general, retired, to admit to. But the President still believes nothing that was revealed today threatens either him or his administration." Garrett added Trump, "we are told, is still clinging to the belief, reinforced by his legal team here, that the special counsel's investigation will be concluded relatively soon."

In the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (12/1, 6:01 p.m. EDT, Baier), Catherine Herridge reported that Flynn's decision to fully cooperate with investigators "raises the stakes" for the President and Kushner "and other members of his inner circle." According to chief White House correspondent John Roberts, the White House is "turning against Michael Flynn," and "doing its best to diminish Michael Flynn's role here." He added the White House adopted "a nothing-to-see-here approach" to Flynn's guilty plea, and "a source tells Fox News that the White House is absolutely confident that there is nothing else will come to light that they don't know about."

The Hill (12/1, Fabian) similarly reports the White House on Friday “insisted...Flynn’s guilty plea will not implicate President Trump or anyone else in the White House,” but CNN’s Situation Room (12/1, 5:34 p.m. EDT, Keilar) senior White House correspondent Jim Acosta said, “it’s clear today that the Russia investigation is creeping closer to the President. A senior White House official insisted there is no anxiety here about what Michael Flynn might tell investigators, but we’re also told there are worries inside the White House as to where this investigation might go next.” Acosta added that Trump “was silent when asked about” Flynn’s guilty plea, but White House attorney Ty Cobb issued a statement in which he “described Flynn as a former National Security Adviser at the White House for 25 days during the Trump Administration, and a former Obama Administration official.” Reuters (12/1, Rampton, Oliphant) reports Cobb said, “Nothing about the guilty plea or the charge implicates anyone other than Mr. Flynn.” He asserted that “the false statements involved mirror the false statements to White House officials which resulted in his resignation in February of this year” and added Flynn’s plea “clears the way for a prompt and reasonable conclusion” of the investigation.

However, CNN’s Situation Room (12/1, 5:03 p.m. EDT, Keilar) national security correspondent Jim Sciutto said that “while the White House today, and for some time, has tried to portray Flynn as something of a freelancer here, in fact there is a lot of evidence in this plea agreement that not only was Flynn keeping the Trump transition informed of the conversations he was having and lying about, but that he was being directed in some of these conversations by very senior members of the transition team.”

In addition, CNN’s Situation Room (12/1, 6:28 p.m. EDT, Keilar) Acosta said that “the White House statement ignores the fact that Obama warned the incoming President to stay away from Flynn in the oval office two days after the election.” Acosta added that senior White House officials have “said the Obama Administration, quote, authorized Flynn’s conversation with Kislyak, but a former Obama Administration national security official just told me that that claim from the Trump White House is, quote, laughable. As for the President, we are told he feels, quote, ‘sorry for Michael Flynn tonight’ and that he is thinking about Flynn and his family.”

The Los Angeles Times (12/1, Megerian), in a profile of Flynn’s career, says he was defined by testing the rules, but “on Friday, it became clear that Flynn broke one rule too many.” The Times calls his guilty plea “the latest dip in Flynn’s roller-coaster career – an up-and-coming battlefield intelligence officer in Iraq and Afghanistan, promoted to a three-star Army general, named to head the Defense Intelligence Agency and then fired in 2014 for what the White House said was mismanagement.”

Democrats Demand Answers Following Flynn Plea As Republicans Largely Silent. Politico (12/1, Cheney, Schor, Watkins) reports that while Congressional Republicans “had little to say Friday about” Flynn’s plea deal, Democrats “pounce[d]” on the announcement that he may have “illegally interfered with American foreign policy during last winter’s presidential transition,” with “many” focused on whether he “violated the Logan Act, a 1799 law that prohibits U.S. citizens from attempting to influence ongoing disputes with a foreign government.” The Democrats also “said Flynn’s testimony that Trump transition officials directed his contact with Moscow also raises their suspicions about possible collusion with Russia – and will draw new scrutiny from the three congressional committees investigating the issue.” In a statement, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said, “It’s critical that we determine whether Flynn spoke with the Russians on his own initiative and who knew and approved of his actions.”

Reuters (12/1, Mitchell) reports Sen. Mark Warner, the ranking member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, told reporters that lawmakers will want to interview Kushner and other Administration officials in light of Flynn’s plea deal, but “added that he remained confident in the panel’s Republican chairman, Richard Burr.”

Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN’s Situation Room (12/1, 5:11 p.m. EDT, Keilar) he views Flynn’s “acknowledgment of criminal guilt is a shattering moment for the Trump presidency, because Michael Flynn is one of the inner circle, one of the top advisers, not just on any old topic, but national security. And he is a potential witness against Jared Kushner, against other top officials, if they fail to be truthful with compelling knowledge and deep credibility because of his position.” Blumenthal continued, “It is increasingly apparent that Jared Kushner knows more than he’s telling,” and thus “a subpoena is more necessary than ever now for him by the Judiciary Committee.” Blumenthal added, “One of the mysteries here” is how President Trump “could tolerate for as long as he did someone who potentially was subject to blackmail by the Russian government as his chief National Security Adviser. That is reckless and irresponsible in the extreme” and places “our troops, our nation in jeopardy in that way is, really – call it improper, call it illegal.”

Blumenthal also told CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 5:23 p.m. EDT, Keilar) that "Flynn's conversations themselves at this sensitive time, betraying American foreign policy, are really a mystery. But as to why he lied about those contacts, clearly he understood they were wrong. They were illegal and improper and he wanted to cover them up. He wanted to hide them. And he also possibly wanted to spare others in the transition team, possibly Jared Kushner or others, like the Vice President Michael Pence, himself who was part of the transition team. The embarrassment and potential legal exposure of knowing about these calls. The calls were clearly a violation of the Logan Act, on and they betrayed the American interests and national security that Michael Flynn himself worked so hard over those many years to advance. So there are mysteries here, mistakes, but some clarity as to what the motive must have been in lying to the FBI."

Sen. Ed Markey told CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 6:10 p.m. EDT, Keilar) that the guilty plea signals "that Bob Mueller is continuing to proceed very methodically." With guilty pleas from both Flynn and Papadopoulos, and indictments of Manafort and Gates, "it's clear that he is moving step by step. But in Flynn, he just may have the master key that unlocks the doors to the campaign that Donald Trump was running." Markey added that if news of Kushner's alleged involvement in trying to sway Russia on the Israeli settlement vote is in fact verified, then "Kushner should not longer have a security clearance," and a "full investigation of this issue" is necessary. Markey added that it "doesn't get any closer than that to the President."

The Hill (12/1, Bowden) "Briefing Room" blog reports Sen. Tim Kaine, Hillary Clinton's 2016 running mate, "ripped" into Flynn on Friday after being "asked about an incident where Flynn joined the crowd at the Republican National Convention in a chant of 'lock her up' over Clinton's use of a private email server." Kaine said Flynn "would not give the benefit of a fair legal process to anybody else but he gets the benefit of fair legal process."

Meanwhile, The Hill (12/1, Delk) reports in its "Briefing Room" blog that House Minority Leader Pelosi in a statement called Flynn's plea deal a "a dark moment in our nation's history." She added, "All Americans should be alarmed by reports of President Trump's consistent efforts to obstruct the Special Counsel and Congressional investigations."

The Hill (12/1, Bowden) reports Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking member of the House Intelligence Committee, in an interview with CNN on Friday "said Friday that it will be difficult for...Trump and other members of the White House to distance themselves from...Flynn after his guilty plea." Flynn stated, "This is the national security adviser of the country, the chief adviser to the President in terms of protecting our country and basically he has admitted that he was a liar." Schiff added Flynn's actions reflect "part of a broader pattern in which the administration officials as well as campaign officials have dissembled or outright lied about their contacts with Russians." Schiff continued Flynn "told senior transition officials about this, those people all became part of that White House. So it's not going to be that easy for the White House to simply say, 'nothing to see here.'"

The Hill (12/1, Manchester) reports Rep. Jerrold Nadler, a member of the House Judiciary Committee, in a statement called on Chairman Bob Goodlatte to investigate "the President's obstruction of justice" and "begin our oversight work without delay." Nadler added, "This development adds further weight to our suspicion of President Trump's corrupt motives when he approached former FBI Director Comey about the Flynn investigation and asked that he 'let it go.'"

Media Analyses: Mueller Closes In On White House With Flynn Plea Deal. A Washington Post (12/1, Blake) analysis contends that while the White House had previously embraced "credulity-straining defenses" distancing the Administration from Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort and campaign adviser George Papadopoulos, these excuses are "not going to work now that former White House national security adviser Michael Flynn has pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI." The Post says that "in Flynn, we have someone who not only actually served in the White House, but someone for whom Trump clearly maintained a huge affinity even after being forced to fire him." The Post adds "Mueller's decision to actually charge Flynn, then, is clearly a significant escalation of an investigation that has already led to charges against Manafort and his deputy, Rick Gates, and a similar guilty plea for making false statements by Papadopoulos."

Washington Post (12/1, Bump) correspondent Philip Bump similarly asserts that the White House's attempt to "distance itself from" Flynn is "nonsense both because of what we know about Flynn's time with Trump, and because of how hard Trump once fought to defend his friend."

CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 6:39 p.m. EDT, Keilar) White House reporter Kaitlan Collins said Trump "really seems to defend Mike Flynn so often," and "we've seen this affinity from the President for Mike Flynn in ways we haven't seen when other people." Collins posited, "is it because Flynn knows so much, or feels a sense of loyalty to him, or is it a little of both? It's an interesting dynamic because we've seen him not distance himself from Flynn in the way he's done with others" implicated in the investigation.

The Washington Post (12/1) editorializes that "with Mr. Flynn's guilty plea, Mr. Mueller's probe into possible collusion between the Trump campaign and the Russian government continues to draw closer to the White House." The Post says "investigators must now determine, if they have not already, who else was involved in this plot and how much the president-elect himself knew." According to the Post, "Any direct involvement by Mr. Trump would cast in an even more concerning light the president's pressuring of then-FBI Director James B. Comey to drop the investigation into Mr. Flynn, along with his subsequent firing of Mr. Comey."

A New York Times (12/1) editorial says the President "should be very, very concerned" with Flynn's plea deal because "Mueller has no reason to go easy on Mr. Flynn unless Mr. Flynn has valuable information to share." The Times concludes "Trump built and sustained his long, gaudy career by demanding loyalty from people to whom he gave nothing in return. He is not used to being on the short end of that deal."

In an editorial that asks whether Flynn's plea could be "the beginning of the end of the Trump Administration," the Los Angeles Times (12/1) says that although he may not end up providing "evidence implicating President Trump or other administration officials in criminal wrongdoing," his admission of guilt "certainly bodes badly for the White House, and provides further evidence that the inquiry into what Trump has dismissed as a 'hoax' is a serious one." The Times continues that the probe therefore "must be allowed to run its course without further interference from the White House."

In her Washington Post (12/1, Marcus) column, Ruth Marcus says that with Flynn's plea deal, "the special counsel's probe inches ever closer to the White House and President Trump." She contends that Flynn's decision to cooperate with Mueller "feels earth-shaking, and for good reason. It may be the moment everything changed."

In her Washington Post (12/1, Parker) column, Kathleen Parker asserts "the questions raised by Flynn's guilty plea are titillating as well as disturbing: What else was Trump worried about? What was the content of Flynn's conversation with the ambassador that made him feel it was necessary to lie?" According to Parker, "If Trump was worried 10 months ago – and we haven't even mentioned his own alleged sexual misconduct – by now he must be wishing he had lost the election, as he may have expected."

On CNN's Situation Room (12/1, 6:32 p.m. EDT, Keilar), former National Security Agency attorney Susan Hennessey pointed to "the range of exposure Flynn had," and "reports about a pretty astonishing range of potentially illegal conduct from not filling out forms properly, violations," and "the alleged plot to kidnap a Turkish cleric." In light of that alleged illegal conduct, Hennessey said, "this is a pretty good plea deal" for Flynn. Chuck Todd of NBC Nightly News (12/1, story 3, 1:10, Holt) said, "The information that Mike Flynn may have observed or spoken with or knew about, it has to do with dots that are above his head. And when you start thinking about who was above Mike Flynn during the campaign, during the transition, there's only a few dots to connect. One is Jared Kushner, one is Donald Trump Jr., and one is the President. That's why this is so serious."

On the CBS Evening News (12/1, story 2, 1:35, Mason), chief White House correspondent Major Garrett similarly said the significance of Flynn's guilty plea "reveals the high-level status of talks with the Trump transition and Russia and suggests, or certainly points to, an openness and an easy level of engagement with a rival nation already suspected at that time, and confirmed by some US officials, of meddling in the 2016 elections. Still, these revelations today do not necessarily suggest that either Jared Kushner or K.T. McFarland committed a crime. "

Bloomberg News (12/1, Kocieniewski, Farrell, Pettypiece) characterizes Flynn's plea as "a major step for Mueller's quickly advancing investigation" and suggests it "casts a renewed spotlight on Attorney General Jeff Sessions." Legal experts told McClatchy (12/1, Gordon) that Flynn's guilty plea "signals that he already has provided federal prosecutors with incriminating information about...Trump or senior members of his inner circle, marking an explosive turn in the investigation into whether Trump's 2016 campaign collaborated in Russia's election meddling."

In addition, 11 "practicing attorneys, law school professors, legal consultants," and other experts came to a similar conclusion for a more than 2,300-word Politico Magazine (12/1) article, as do a USA Today (12/1, Heath, Korte, Johnson) piece titled "Michael Flynn's Guilty Plea Brings Mueller Investigation To Trump Inner Circle" and an article in The Hill (12/1, Williams) headlined "Flynn Plea Brings Mueller Closer To The White House."

Meanwhile, Harvard Law School professor Alex Whiting told the Boston Globe (12/1, Finucane) that Flynn “probably will not spend a day in jail for lying to FBI agents – and that may say a lot about what he had to offer prosecutors investigating possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia.”

A New York Times (12/1, Savage) analysis suggests that “in trying to figure out what happened with Russia and the Trump campaign, Mr. Mueller appears to be following a strategy of starting at the fringes and moving inward, pressuring people to cooperate.” Fox News’ Special Report’s (12/1, 6:08 p.m. EDT, Baier) Chris Wallace said, “We believed that Michael Flynn was in jeopardy on a variety of issues, including money he got from Russia he did not report and from the Turkish government he didn’t report.” Wallace said that because those allegations did not surface on Friday, Mueller “went easy on Michael Flynn,” perhaps because he thinks Flynn “has good information and he has a promise of cooperation.” He added “you can’t over-state how important Michael Flynn was in the early days throughout the campaign” as Trump’s “right-hand man on foreign policy. If there is anything between the President and the Russians – and we don’t know there is – Michael Flynn could be the key figure.”

Jonathan Swan of Axios said on Fox News’ Special Report (12/1, 6:45 p.m. EDT, Baier) that Flynn’s guilty plea is “telling in several ways. One is that by all accounts, Mueller has treated Flynn gently. The question is, what deal has been done? What does he believe he can get in return for the information?” On ABC World News Tonight (12/1, story 4, 1:00, Muir), senior justice correspondent Pierre Thomas said “make no mistake. Mueller approved this deal to get something. He is an aggressive, cagey prosecutor who has been targeting the Trump campaign, the transition, and potentially the White House inner circle. Flynn now faces hours of FBI interrogations in the coming months, subject to lie detector tests along the way to prove he’s telling the truth.”

On the CBS Evening News (12/1, story 4, 1:30, Mason), justice reporter Paula Reid commented, “Former federal prosecutors tell me an investigation of this scope could take years. And don’t forget, the special counsel is still investigating whether or not the President or anyone else could have possibly obstructed justice in trying to tamp down this inquiry into Mike Flynn.” Reid added, “Robert Mueller is a man of secrets and surprises,” and his ability “to keep his cards really close to the vest, that should really concern anyone in this investigation who has something to hide.”

In a front-page article, the Washington Post (12/1, A1, Helderman, Hamburger, Deyoung) reports “Mueller is now expected to explore who knew what in the White House about Flynn’s interactions with the Russians – and whether any other Trump aides lied about that knowledge.” CNN’s Situation Room (12/1, 5:43 p.m. EDT, Keilar) political reporter Rebecca Berg said she believes “Mueller wants at this stage to strike fear into the White House officials that he is going to go back and interview because he wants the full story from them right now. He wants – he wants them to think he has – he knows things they don’t know.”

Writing in the New York Times (12/1, Painter, Eisen), Richard Painter, the chief White House ethics lawyer in the George W. Bush Administration and the vice-chairman of Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), and Norman Eisen, the White House Special Counsel for Ethics and Government Reform under former President Obama and CREW board chair, consider who Mueller is targeting next. They concede that “it is not yet clear who those individuals are, but transition officials and members included Jared Kushner and Donald Trump Jr. as well as Vice President Mike Pence, Representative Devin Nunes of California; the former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon, and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin.” They add Kushner is “probably...in greatest jeopardy now,” though “Trump Jr.’s exposure is also deepened by the Flynn plea.”

Bloomberg View (12/1, Lake) columnist Eli Lake similarly speculates Kushner will be “the first person” Flynn is “likely to jeopardize.” He says that if Mueller is only pursuing Flynn under a Logan Act investigation, “then the whispers of collusion will look foolish.” However, Lake warns this “may be enough to take out not only Flynn, but also the man who married the president’s daughter.”

In his Washington Post (12/1, Ignatius) column, David Ignatius also asserts “say what you like about Flynn, but an ex-general follows the chain of command.” Ignatius adds that “given his seniority as the designated national security adviser, there are only two people who would likely have authorized this contact with Russia: Jared Kushner, the president’s son-in-law and senior adviser, who had been conducting his own extensive back-channel contacts with Kislyak and other Russians, and the president-elect himself, who had said throughout the campaign that he wanted to improve relations with Russia.”

However, The Hill (12/1, Greenwood) “Briefing Room” blog reports former US Attorney

Preet Bharara said in a CNN appearance on Friday that Mueller's team is likely "looking at every member of the campaign." Bharara added, "I think they're looking at every member of the transition team. I think they're looking at everyone up to the president of the United States himself."

In another article, The Hill (12/1, Anapol) reports retired judge and Fox News analyst Andrew Napolitano called Flynn's guilty plea a "nightmare" for Trump. He asserted, "I think this is probably the tip of a prosecutorial iceberg, so to speak," and added the announcement "keeps the Russia story front and center at a time when the president is beginning to move towards the achievements of his legislative agenda."

In a list of "10 key takeaways" from Flynn's plea deal, Harry Litman, a former US Attorney and deputy assistant attorney general and current lecturer at UCLA Law School, writes in the New York Times (12/1, Litman) that the "seismic event" "portends the likelihood of impeachable charges being brought against the president of the United States." According to Litman, "The repercussions of the plea will be months in the making, but it's not an exaggeration to say that the events to which Mr. Flynn has agreed to testify will take their place in the history books alongside the Watergate and Iran-contra scandals."

In his Washington Post (12/1, Eliason) column, former Assistant US Attorney Randall D. Eliason, a professor of white-collar criminal law at George Washington University Law School, similarly says that "given what we know about the nature of these types of investigations, Friday's news has to worry the White House." Eliason adds that like "the charges unveiled against Manafort and Papadopoulos several weeks ago, Flynn's plea has all the hallmarks of the latest step in a classic white-collar investigation that is methodically building cases against people on the lower rungs, flipping them, and moving up the ladder. And once you get as far up the ladder as Flynn, there aren't that many rungs remaining."

Fox News Tucker Carlson Tonight (12/1, 8:00 p.m. EDT, Carlson) host Tucker Carlson called the revelation "a major development" and "a betrayal of trust and possibly a betrayal of this country's vital national interest." Carlson called Flynn's actions "appalling behavior," adding that it is "depressingly common in Washington, which may be why Flynn has not been prosecuted for it. It's so conventional, nobody considers it wrong – though it is wrong." However, Carlson stresses that Flynn's guilty plea does not mean the Trump campaign colluded with Russia during the election, and in fact "undercuts" that claim. Carlson added (12/1, 8:06 p.m. EDT, Carlson) Americans generally assumed that the point of Mueller's investigation "was they believed there was some conspiracy to subvert the election," but the charges against Flynn "undercut that completely." Former federal prosecutor Robert Ray said that it is "a possibility that one of the reasons he may have been lying was because with regard to conduct that occurred in December during the transition, because it was a politically difficult thing to do, he didn't want to disclose to the public or anybody else the fact that there in fact were contacts with Russian government officials. That doesn't mean that it was a crime." Carlson said if that was the extent of the problem, then the investigation is "a complete waste of time."

In his Washington Post (12/1, Rogers) column, political consultant Ed Rogers, a veteran of the Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush White Houses, calls Flynn's guilty plea "a major disappointment for Democrats" because while "consequential," the documents do not "suggest any collusion occurred and it doesn't even get close to confirming that Donald Trump or his campaign was somehow complicit in a nefarious scheme."

Meanwhile, Breitbart (12/1, Key) reports Breitbart News Senior Editor at Large Joel Pollak during an appearance on MSNBC on Friday called for Trump to replace and "sue his lawyer, Ty Cobb, for malpractice, because he promised this would all be over by Thanksgiving ... Mueller's basically on a very long fishing expedition."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/1) questions why Flynn was only charged with lying to the FBI given that his action, meeting with a foreign ambassador as the member of a presidential transition, is not unusual or illegal. The Journal suggests waiting for additional evidence before speculating that Trump or Kushner were involved in collusion.

In his Washington Post (12/1, Milbank) column, Dana Milbank says that if Fox News host Bret Baier "is correct – as I believe he is – that Trump gets more outrageous when he feels cornered, then this means the nation is entering a perilous period." According to Milbank, "We can expect Trump to grow more dangerous and desperate in his distractions as he hears Mueller's footsteps. Although Trump's erratic behavior is damaging in its own right to alliances and civility, the greatest danger is that while we chase Trump's distractions, we lose sight of real calamity."

In a Washington Post (12/1, Borchers) analysis, Callum Borchers predicts "the coming refrain from Trump defenders: The media is obsessed with Russia, but voters don't really care. What about all the other, more important things that ought to be covered?"

Mueller's Probe Exceeds $5 Million Thus Far. ABC News (12/1, Thomas) reports "Mueller's investigation into the Russian government's efforts to interfere with the 2016 election has cost more than $5 million," which includes "money for a staff of more than 16 attorneys, dozens of FBI agents, support staff, travel and office supplies."

However, a Bloomberg View (12/1) editorial asserts Flynn's plea deal "gives a clear view of the strategy of special counsel Robert Mueller – and makes it all the more imperative that he be allowed to continue his work without interference." According to Bloomberg, "The worst scenario would be for Trump to pardon Flynn or fire Mueller (or, shockingly, both)." Bloomberg concludes "Trump will have to resist the impulse – or risk forcing Congress to act to ensure that the investigation proceeds."

Markets Volatile On News Of Flynn's Guilty Plea, Senate Tax Bill Progress. Liz Claman of Fox Business Network told Fox News' Special Report (12/1, 6:14 p.m. EDT, Baier) that the market reaction to Flynn's guilty plea "was truly fascinating to watch." She said when ABC News "put out the flash just before noon eastern time that perhaps it would be Michael Flynn who would testify against President Trump," the markets responded "very poorly," with the Dow Jones Industrial Average tanking "from its highs" and resulting in "the most volatile day of the year." The market "started to climb right back as soon as that news was digested. A resilient market." NBC Nightly News (12/1, story 6, 0:15, Holt) similarly reported, "It was a wild day on Wall Street when the news surrounding Michael Flynn sent the Dow plunging 350 points, but it did climb back up after the Senate GOP said it had the votes for its tax bill, eventually closing with a loss of just over 40 points."

Flynn Admits To Working For Turkish Government. The Wall Street Journal (12/1, Nissenbaum) reports Flynn in his plea deal acknowledged that he worked as a private consultant for the Turkish government while had been advising Donald Trump's presidential campaign.

Diplomats: Flynn, Kushner Had Lobbied Several Countries On UN Vote Critical Of Israel. Reuters (12/1, Nichols) reports Flynn "admitted on Friday that he asked Russia to delay a U.N. vote seen as damaging to Israel, but diplomats said it was not the only country he and presidential adviser Jared Kushner lobbied." Reuters states that "Flynn also phoned the U.N. missions of Uruguay and Malaysia, and Kushner spoke with Kim Darroch, the British ambassador to the United States, according to diplomats familiar with the conversations, who spoke on condition of anonymity." However, Reuters notes their efforts ultimately "failed, with the Security Council adopting a resolution demanding an end to Israeli settlement building on land Palestinians want for an independent state. The vote was 14 in favor and one abstention by the United States."

Supporters Of Nuclear Middle East Touted Flynn's Support. "Backers of a U.S.-Russian plan to build nuclear reactors across the Middle East bragged after the U.S. election they had backing from Donald Trump's national security adviser Michael Flynn for a project that required lifting sanctions on Russia, documents reviewed by" Reuters (12/1, Strobel, Layne, Landay) show, and they also reveal "the proposed involvement of a Russian company currently under U.S. sanctions to manufacture nuclear equipment. That company, major engineering and construction firm OMZ OAO, declined to comment." However, the documents "do not show whether Flynn...took concrete steps to push the proposal with Trump and his aides."

Comey Posts Biblical Quotation Following Flynn Plea Announcement. The New York Times (12/1, Chokshi) reports former FBI Director James Comey, "in what has become an occasional habit," on Friday "offered what appeared to be a quotation of relevance to the day's unfolding news, in this case a biblical verse about justice." The Times says "the early afternoon tweet and Instagram post came after Mr. Flynn pleaded guilty on Friday to lying to Mr. Comey's F.B.I. about conversations he had with the Russian ambassador last December." However, the Times acknowledges "all subtweets – the term of Twitter art for critical tweets with unnamed targets – have deniability."

Trump Jr. To Meet With Senate Intelligence Committee On Russia Probe. The Hill (12/1, Greenwood) reports Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr confirmed to NBC News on Friday that Donald Trump Jr. "will meet with Senate Intelligence Committee staff this month as part of the panel's investigation into Russia's role in the 2016 presidential election."

House Intelligence Committee Approves Bill To Crack Down On "Unmasking." The Washington Times (12/1, Dinan) reports that in reviewing legislation to renew Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, the House Intelligence Committee "approved a bill Friday to crack down on political "unmasking," with Republicans saying the Obama administration abused foreign intelligence to embarrass private citizens and insisting the practice had to stop." Rep. Adam Schiff, the committee's ranking member, "said the GOP was derailing the 702 reforms by tackling the politically charged issue of unmasking." The Times notes "the biggest name to emerge [from unmasking by the Obama Administration] was Michael Flynn, who was then a top national security adviser to Mr. Trump."

Waters Calls For Update On Investigation Of Deutsche Bank, Trump Over Russia Ties.

Bloomberg News (12/1, Farrell) reports Rep. Maxine Waters, the ranking member of the House Committee on Financial Services, in a letter to Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, asked for an update on the Justice Department's "inquiry into Deutsche Bank AG's $10 billion mirror trading scheme," which she worried has "gone dormant." She asserted, "Given Attorney General Sessions's refusal to recuse himself from the investigation and the apparent delay by the Department to take action against the bank, I write to request your assurances that the investigation is being carried out to the fullest extent of the law, free from interference, and that it remains a priority for the department."

Russian Lawmakers Unveil Plan To Bar American Media From Parliament In RT Retaliation. The Washington Post (12/1, Roth) reports "Russian lawmakers declared Friday that they probably will ban all U.S. media from entering both houses of the Russian parliament in retaliation for a U.S. decision to block Moscow-funded broadcaster RT from Congress." The Post calls the looming decision "part of escalating tit-for-tat actions that began in October with a Justice Department order to add RT to a list of media entities that must register as foreign agents." According to Russian news agency Interfax, the ban "would affect at least 21 news outlets," including "state-funded Radio Free Europe and Voice of America, private news agencies such as Bloomberg News and the Associated Press, and other media entities including The Washington Post, the New York Times, CNN, CBS and NBC." Reuters (12/1, Nikolskaya) reports Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov "said on Friday [the Russian government] fully understood why the Russian lower house of parliament planned to discuss banning representatives of U.S. media organizations in retaliation for what it says is U.S. mistreatment of Russian media." Peskov "said Russian media had been subjected to 'outrageous' attacks in the United States which violated freedom of speech."

Meanwhile, the Washington Post (12/1, Moyer) reports the Russia-funded radio station Sputnik, which has been "broadcasting around the clock from a K Street office in June on 105.5 FM," has "found a second home on the dial in Washington after its partner, a Virginia-based radio company, registered with the Justice Department as a foreign agent." To secure a permanent frequency, "1390 AM, a former Spanish-language station based in Capitol Heights, Md., began carrying Sputnik on Saturday" after the company that owns 105.5 FM "was directed to register with the Justice Department under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, a move met with criticism by some of Sputnik's on-air personalities."

Senate GOP Passes Tax Reform Bill.

Senate Republicans, with Vice President Pence presiding, voted 51-49 early Saturday morning to pass tax reform legislation following hours of negotiations and rewrites to the bill. While most of the coverage was updated following final passage to highlight the historic nature of the vote, former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn's guilty plea for lying to the FBI overshadowed the reporting.

The Washington Post (12/1, Paletta, Werner) reports that "after a frantic round of negotiations" late Friday night, Senate Republicans "passed a $1.5 trillion tax bill early Saturday morning that bestows massive benefits on corporate America and the wealthy while delivering mixed blessings to everybody else." According to the Post, "The final vote was 51 to 49, with Sen. Bob Corker...the lone GOP holdout. No Democrats voted for the bill." On the CBS Evening News (12/1, story 6, 2:10, Mason), chief congressional correspondent Nancy Cordes said Corker opposed the measure after he was unable to persuade his colleagues "to scale back the bill" in response to "bipartisan number crunchers," who had "determined that the tax cuts would only spur enough economic growth to cover about a third of the $1.4 trillion price tag."

According to the New York Times (12/1), Sens. Susan Collins, Jeff Flake, Steve Daines, and Ron Johnson voted for the bill. NBC Nightly News (12/1, story 4, 2:25, Holt) Hallie Jackson stated that to secure Flake's vote, he received "a personal promise from" Pence that Flake will be "involved in immigration negotiations down the road."

The Senate "passed the most sweeping tax rewrite in decades," which will "will touch almost every corner of the United States economy, affecting families, small business owners and multinational corporations, with the biggest benefits flowing to the highest-earning Americans," a front-page New York Times (12/1, A1, Tankersley, Kaplan, Rappeport) article reports, "after lawmakers received a rewritten version, which contained significant changes from the original bill that passed two Senate panels last month along party lines." The Times says these "last-minute revisions prompted an outcry from Democrats, who said it was impossible – and irresponsible – for lawmakers to read and digest a significant piece of legislation in such a short period of time.” Senate Minority Leader Schumer “called the Republican approach ‘a process and a product that no one can be proud of and everyone should be ashamed of.’”

However, in a front-page article, the Wall Street Journal (12/1, A1, Hughes, Rubin, Peterson) reports Senate Majority Leader McConnell in an interview said, “In the end it all came together and we’re pretty excited about what we’ve been able to accomplish for the American people.” He added, “We’ve got a corporate rate at 20% that we think makes us competitive in the world again and provided substantial middle income tax relief.” He also insisted the House and Senate bills “are not all that different. ... We tried to move ours somewhat in the House direction.”

The Hill (12/2, Carney, Jagoda) reports “Pence presided over the final passage vote. GOP senators, who stayed on the Senate floor until the vote closed after midnight, broke out into applause after Pence announced the bill had passed.” McConnell, at a 2 a.m. press conference, declared, “This is a great day for the country.” He added, “We have an opportunity now to make America more competitive, to keep jobs from being shipped off shore and to provide substantial relief for the middle class.” In an interview with Politico (12/1, Kim, Faler, Wilhelm), McConnell said, “I think one reason we were able to get there was because there’s widespread interest. ... Every single member of our conference wanted to get to yes, and all but one did.” Politico notes President Trump “praised McConnell and Senate Finance Chairman Orrin Hatch in a tweet after the bill passed, adding, ‘We are one step closer to delivering MASSIVE tax cuts for working families across America.’”

Nonetheless, ABC World News Tonight’s (12/1, story 5, 2:40, Muir) Mary Bruce conceded “there are still significant differences between the Senate and House versions that have to be worked out. Republicans know this is do or die for them politically, but there still isn’t a lot of time left.” In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (12/1, A1, Appelbaum) says “the political imperative to pass what would be the only major piece of legislation of President Trump’s first year, along with a near-religious Republican belief in tax cuts,” was able to “override their previous concerns about fiscal prudence.”

Trump: Democrats Oppose GOP Tax Bill Because Measure Is “Too Good.” The Hill (12/1, Seipel) reports President Trump took to Twitter on Friday morning to praise Republican efforts “to pass tax reform and accused Democrats of attempting to block the legislation ‘because it is too good.’” He tweeted, “Republicans Senators are working hard to pass the biggest Tax Cuts in the history of our Country. The Bill is getting better and better. This is a once in a generation chance. Obstructionist Dems trying to block because they think it is too good and will not be given the credit!”

Media Analyses: Flynn’s Guilty Plea Overshadows Passage Of Tax Reform. The New York Times (12/1, A1, Baker, Haberman) reports on its front page that former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn’s guilty plea for lying to the FBI “came on a day that should have been a moment of triumph for the president,” given he “secured enough votes to pass his tax cut plan in the Senate, advancing what, if it ultimately reaches his desk, will be his most far-reaching legislative accomplishment since he took office.” The Times adds the plea “dampened any celebration over developments in Congress” and “raised uncomfortable questions about what Mr. Flynn might be telling the special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III. And it could easily distract a president not exactly known for a disciplined political and policymaking operation.” A front-page analysis titled “Trump’s Best And Worst Day As President,” the Washington Post (12/1, A1, Tumulty) similarly says “Trump’s young presidency entered a new, surreal dimension Friday, with his 315th day in office delivering both his greatest achievement to date and his darkest omen of peril ahead.”

NYTimes A1: Unclear Whether Tax Reform Will Save GOP Seats In 2018. In a front-page analysis, the New York Times (12/1, Hulse, Stolberg) reports “Senate Republicans got what they so desperately needed Friday when an ugly process and a series of last-minute concessions put them within reach of a significant legislative victory in the form of major tax legislation,” but “it remained to be seen whether the result – a convoluted measure that would cut corporate taxes and have mixed benefits for individual taxpayers – will spare Republicans from an emerging political backlash that was evident in Democratic election victories around the country last month.”

AP Analysis: Trump Unlikely To Pay More Under GOP Tax Plan. In an analysis, the AP (12/1, Boak) reports that contrary to President Trump’s claims, he is unlikely to pay more under the GOP’s tax plan. The AP argues that Trump “would enjoy a bonanza of lavish tax cuts,” including a lower business tax rate, lower personal income rate, and a removal of the alternative minimum tax. The article goes on to say that "it's possible that Trump and other ultra-wealthy taxpayers could lose certain itemized deductions under the legislation," but adds that "those losses would almost surely be dwarfed by the benefits they would enjoy.."

Analyses Suggest Corporations, Wealthy To Benefit From GOP Tax Reform. The Wall Street Journal (12/1, Francis) reports multinational corporations will benefit from the GOP tax reform, despite several provisions that may have a negative impact. The article goes on to outline five changes with the greatest impact on corporate activity: a drastically lower corporate rate will help companies with primarily US-based income; a one-time levy on offshore profits encourages them to bring money back to the US; a provision incentivizes returning intellectual property to US parent companies; a "global minimum tax" that punishes overseas tax-law arbitrage; and an additional 20% tax on payments from US companies to foreign affiliates to prevent tax base erosion.

In a front page article, the Washington Post (12/1, Long) reports on how the GOP tax plan disproportionately benefits "wealthy individuals and corporations." Though many studies believe the law would generate economic growth, "the question remains whether working-class Americans will ultimately reap additional benefits or whether most of the gains will go to the top," the Post adds. The piece highlights the Senate plan's expiring individual tax cuts as a primary example of the law's unequal treatment of taxpayers, and warns that "some economists fear that the inequality created by the bill will deepen social divisions."

NBC Nightly News (12/1, story 5, 1:55, Holt) analyzed the bill, citing "accusations that the Republican tax plan will hurt, not help, middle class Americans." NBC's Tom Costello explained that tax cuts for "people making between $75,000 and $100,000...will largely disappear over 10 years, even though corporations will keep their tax cuts." He added that at a recent gathering of business leaders in Washington, "only a few CEOs" said they would increase investment as a result of the law. What's more, "CNBC survey finds most will use the money to buy back stock."

Senate GOP Repeals Obamacare Mandate In Tax Bill. The Hill (12/2, Sullivan) reports Senate Republicans on Saturday "approved the repeal of ObamaCare's individual mandate as part of their tax-cut bill, a major step forward toward ending an unpopular part of the healthcare law." Sen. John Barrasso asserted, "Families ought to be able to make decisions about what they want to buy and what works for them – not the government. ... I believe if people don't want to buy the Obamacare insurance, they shouldn't have to pay a tax penalty to the IRS."

Senate Bill Fixed To Benefit Mortgage Lenders. Bloomberg News (12/1, Light) reports Sen. Mike Rounds introduced a last-minute measure to the Senate tax bill "designed to appease mortgage lenders who worried that the legislation could cost them billions of dollars and drive some small firms out of the business." The change exempts "mortgage service rights from new income inclusion rule," a provision lenders said "would have cost them billions of dollars." The article adds that policy analysts "expected the fix and suspected the provision's impact on mortgage lenders wasn't realized by lawmakers until housing trade groups identified it last weekend."

Senate Rejects Provision To Exempt Hillsdale College From Excise Tax On Endowments. The Hill (12/2, Carney) reports Sens. Susan Collins, Lisa Murkowski, Deb Fischer, and John Kennedy joined with Democrats on Saturday to "nix a provision in the Senate tax bill...that would exempt Hillsdale College, a leading conservative college in Michigan, from an excise tax on schools with more than 500 students or large endowments." Politico (12/1, Stratford) reports Sen. Pat Toomey had proposed the amendment that sought to exempt "all colleges that don't accept federal student aid from the endowment tax," but "Democrats immediately cried foul over the plan because it appeared to benefit only a single college, Hillsdale College, whose president, Larry Arnn, is influential in conservative intellectual circles." Politico adds that Democrats noted the school's connections to Education Secretary DeVos, as her brother, Erik Prince, is an alumnus.

Meanwhile, writing in Politico Magazine (12/1, Warner), Douglas Warner, a former chairman of JPMorgan Chase and a member of the Yale Corp, criticizes the tax bill for taking "the unprecedented step of taxing the income of certain private universities – specifically, it imposes a 1.4 percent tax on net endowment income for universities with endowments larger than $250,000 per full-time student." He warns this will have "dire consequences...that would frustrate everything from access to college in America to the top-notch university research that creates U.S. jobs."

Senators Vote Down Rubio-Lee Child Tax Credit Expansion. The Hill (12/1, Jagoda) reports the Senate on Friday night voted 29-71 to reject Sens. Marco Rubio's and Mike Lee's "closely watched amendment to the GOP tax reform bill...that would expand the child tax credit." The Hill states that the "amendment, which received criticism from both Republicans and Democrats, would make the child tax credit refundable to payroll taxes and would pay for it by raising the bill's corporate tax rate from 20 percent to 20.94 percent." The Hill notes the two lawmakers "have been pushing for a more robust child tax credit for years, and their efforts have been supported by first daughter and White House adviser Ivanka Trump."

CBO: Senate Tax Bill To Raise Deficit By $1.4 Trillion. The Hill (12/2, Carney) "Floor Action" blog reports a new analysis by the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) released late Friday forecast "the Senate GOP tax plan will increase the deficit by more than $1.4 trillion over a decade." The Hill adds "an earlier CBO estimate on the version of the Senate tax plan passed by the Senate Finance Committee also found the bill would increase the deficit by roughly $1.4 trillion."

House Tax Plan Provision Changes Tax Treatment Of Alimony Payments. The Wall Street Journal (12/1, Saunders) reports the GOP House tax plan includes a provision that would remove the tax deductibility of alimony payments in order to prevent "divorced couples from reducing income tax through a specific form of payments unavailable to married couples." If implemented, the change "would change the economics of many divorces," American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers head Madeline Marzano-Lesnevich explains. However, the Journal notes that it is unclear if it will be included in a final bill since the Senate plan doesn't have a similar provision.

House Tax Plan Provision To Hurt Affordable Housing Development, Experts Warn. Bloomberg News (12/1, Braun) reports the GOP House tax plan eliminates the tax benefits of private-activity bonds, "wiping out a key tool used to finance more than half of" affordable housing projects according to the National Council of State Housing Agencies. Real estate consultancy Novogradac & Company LLP warns that the change could reduce "the number of affordable rental units built nationwide over the next decade...by as much as 880,000."

57 Percent Of DC Lobbyists Working On Tax Reform, Analysis Finds. Reuters (12/1, Sanders) reports 57 percent "of the registered lobbyists in Washington have worked on tax issues in 2017," according from data released by advocacy group Public Citizen on Friday. The report also detailed the number of lobbyists hired by industry groups and companies, noting that the US Chamber of Commerce leads the list with 100 lobbying hires.

WSJournal: Conference Committee, Lower Top Rate For GOP Tax Plan. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/1) details of the GOP tax plan as the Senate prepares for a Friday night vote to pass the their version of the bill. The Journal goes on to support a conference committee to combine the best elements of the House and Senate bills, and calls on lawmakers to lower the top tax rate to offset the state-and-local income tax deduction cuts to make the bill as pro-growth as possible.

Dionne: GOP Tax Reform Is Unfair, Reckless. In his Washington Post (12/1, Dionne) column, E.J. Dionne Jr. criticizes the GOP tax plan, calling it "entirely partisan, full of breaks for favored interests and punishments for those the party regards as its political enemies." He warns that it is "so filled with gimmicks, carve-outs and penalties for various sectors of our economy that its impact will be far greater than the Republican tax cuts of the 1980s and early 2000s." He concludes that "anyone who votes for this bill is endorsing government for the few imposed by the reckless."

House Republican Plan Delays Government Shutdown, Buying Time For Negotiations.

The AP (12/2, Taylor) reports House Republicans have unveiled a plan to avoid a government shutdown next weekend and keep it running through December 22. The measure also includes a "short-term fix" for state Children's Health Insurance Programs and "would buy time for bipartisan talks on a bigger budget agreement," which Democrats insist must include protections for illegal immigrants brought to the country as children.

NYTimes: Republicans Should Ignore Trump, Compromise To Pass Spending Bill. In an editorial, the New York Times (12/2) calls on Congress to "agree on a new spending bill" and prevent a government shutdown. The Times goes on to say that even though Trump doesn't "see a deal" happening, lawmakers have "a pretty fair chance of success" to compromise because "Republicans are not solidly arrayed against" issues that Democrats want to address and many "worry that a government shutdown could cancel out" the benefits of their tax bill "and damage their chances for re-election next year." The Times concludes that Republicans should "work around their unreliable president and...deliver the solutions Americans are waiting for."

McMaster: Risk Of War With North Korea "Increasing Every Day."

On its website, Fox News (12/2) reports National Security Adviser McMaster and CIA Director Pompeo spoke at the fifth annual Reagan National Defense Forum. The event launched Saturday morning and “featured eight panels throughout the day of retired generals, sitting senators and members of Congress.”

The Hill (12/2, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports McMaster, in remarks to Fox News host Bret Baier, said the potential of war with North Korea is “increasing every day.” McMaster commented, “The greatest immediate threat to the United States and to the world is the threat posed by the rogue regime in North Korea,” as every time leader Kim Jong-un “conducts a missile launch, a nuclear test, he gets better.” Fox News (12/2, Pappas) reports online that McMaster stressed that “it’s immensely important that we work together with all of our allies, partners, everyone internationally, to convince Kim Jong Un that the continued pursuit of these capabilities is a dead end for him and his regime.”

On its website, CNN (12/2, Browne, Starr) reports McMaster said the increasing threat posed by North Korea “means that we are in a race, really, we are in a race to be able to solve this problem.” While the US has “ways to address this problem short of armed conflict,” McMaster continued, “it is a race because he’s getting closer and closer, and there’s not much time left.” He said the US is not asking China “to do us or anybody else a favor,” but it is “asking China to act in China’s interest, as they should, and we believe increasingly that it’s in China’s urgent interest to do more.”

The Washington Examiner (12/2, Tritten) reports McMaster was also asked whether North Korea was in fact improving its nuclear program, as reports suggested the Hwasong-15 missile tested last week did not successfully re-enter the atmosphere. Said McMaster, “Whether it is a success or failure isn’t as important as understanding that over the years he’s been learning from failures, improving and thereby increasing his threat to all of us.”

North Korea Accuses US Of “Begging” For Nuclear War. Bloomberg News (12/2, Lee) reports North Korea’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued a statement Saturday accusing the US of “begging” for nuclear war by planning the “largest-ever” joint US-South Korea aerial drill shortly after concluding a military exercise with nuclear-powered aircraft carriers. The ministry’s statement was issued “after Yonhap News reported that six U.S. Raptor stealth fighters planes arrived in South Korea on Saturday for a joint air drill named ‘Vigilant Ace’ scheduled for Dec. 4 to 8.” In the “show of force,” US and South Korean militaries will “stage simulated attacks on mock North Korean nuclear and missile targets, according to Yonhap.”

UN Security Council To Discuss North Korean Human Rights Abuses, Nuclear Threat. Reuters (12/2, Nichols) reports the United Nations Security Council is expected to meet on Dec. 15 to discuss the North Korean nuclear and missile threat. In a separate meeting on Dec. 11, the ministers will “discuss human rights abuses in the North Asian country, an annual meeting that its ally China has tried to prevent for the past three years.” At last year’s meeting, the US “angered North Korea by blacklisting its leader Kim Jong Un for human rights abuses” alleged in a 2014 UN report. UN Commission of Inquiry chairman Michael Kirby “said at the time that the crimes the team had cataloged were reminiscent of those committed by the Nazis during World War Two,” and that North Korea’s security chiefs “should face justice for overseeing” the abuses.

North Koreans Celebrate Latest ICBM Launch. NBC Nightly News (12/2, story 5, 0:20, Diaz-Balart) reported briefly that North Korea held a “massive government-sponsored celebration” in Pyongyang “to mark the successful launch of a new intercontinental ballistic missile on Wednesday after the country’s latest long range missile test.” The US has “said North Korea would be utterly destroyed if a war breaks out.”

Rogers, Smith Suggest MDA May Install THAAD On West Coast. Reuters (12/3, Stone) reports that according to Reps. Mike Rogers (R-AL), a member of the House Armed Services Committee and chair of the Strategic Forces Subcommittee, and Adam Smith (D-WA) the Missile Defense Agency is examining west coast sites for possible installation of Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) anti-ballistic missiles. Rogers said, “It’s just a matter of the location, and the MDA making a recommendation as to which site meets their criteria for location, but also the environmental impact.” MDA Deputy Director Rear Admiral Jon Hill issued a statement saying, “The Missile Defense Agency has received no tasking to site the Terminal High Altitude Air Defense System on the West Coast.”

LLNL Finds Ways To Improve Chances Of Surviving Nuclear Attack. NBC Nightly News (12/2, story 6, 2:40, Diaz-Balart) asked, “With North Korea’s drumbeat of nuclear threats, just how survivable would such an attack, however unlikely, actually be?” NBC answered, “It could be survivable for millions – if you do the right thing.” Miguel Almaguer cited “Brooke Buddemeier and his team at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory,” for finding that in a city, “There’s a lot of shelter opportunities" adding, "A concrete structure is the best shelter. The middle floors of a building are safest," and "If there's a basement, it's your best protection." Ventura County has "created public service announcements and an 18-page guide for its residents, with one idea: Get inside, stay inside, stay tuned."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The FCC Wants To Let Telecoms Cash In On The Internet." The New York Times (12/3) editorializes that "the chairman of the Federal Communications Commission wants to let Comcast, Verizon and other broadband companies turn the internet into a latter-day version of cable TV, in which they decide what customers can watch and how much they pay for that content." The Times believes that this is what will result from chairman Ajit Pai's proposal to scrap network neutrality rules. The Times anticipates that during the coming federal court battle over the proposal, "judges will be very skeptical of his rationale for getting rid of net neutrality rules and putting nothing in their place."

"Art, Freed From Guantanamo." A New York Times (12/3) editorial says the Pentagon "allowed its nose to be knocked out of joint by a free exhibition in Manhattan: a display of 36 paintings, drawings and sculptures that eight Guantánamo prisoners produced in the last few years." Art classes have been held at Guantánamo for at least eight years, and detainees were "permitted to give their works to their lawyers, sometimes as thank you gifts. But now the Pentagon says that, while the art instruction will continue, any new creations" will stay at Guantánamo, a spokesman said, and "remain the property of the US government." The Times, however, calls on the Pentagon to allow the American public to view their work.

Washington Post.

"Metro Handcuffs Its Inspector General." The Washington Post (12/3) editorializes that the Washington Metro's efforts to limit the autonomy of its Office of Inspector General "may protect Metro from embarrassment, but it's no way to run the nation's second-busiest subway system." Among other allegations, the Post claims that Metro has hampered the office "by screening its job applicants; forcing it to use Metro's procurement office (rather than hiring its own outside experts); and denying OIG its own lawyer, thereby ensuring that Metro's lawyers, duty-bound to protect the agency, will vet findings that may cause embarrassment to the agency." The Post opines that a proposal to place Metro's OIG at the federal Transportation Department is "an idea worth exploring and one that might give the inspectors the independence they need to do their jobs."

"Trump's Crusade On Immigrants Is An Attack On America." The Washington Post (12/3) editorializes that the Trump Administration's efforts to target immigration and immigrants are "largely a resurrection of xenophobia that coincides with a spike, nearly 50 years in the making, in the number of foreign-born residents living in the United States." The Post opines that "the administration's goal is not to reshape America's immigration policy but to prune immigration itself." The Post concludes by asserting that "the Trump administration's crusade against immigration and immigrants is not just a quest to diminish the influence of the 'other'; it is an assault on the nation's future and prospects."

Wall Street Journal.

"Let Them Not Bake Cake." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/3) argues that in the case of a Colorado baker who contends that his Christian faith prohibits him from making wedding cakes for same-sex couples, the Supreme Court should respect the pluralistic tradition in the US that allows people of good faith to disagree. After an examination of several legal precedents, the Journal urges the court to rule for the baker, arguing that failure to do so could encourage other governmental burdens on First Amendment religious rights.

"Lois Lerner's Secrets." The Wall Street Journal (12/3) editorializes that Lois Lerner's deposition in a recently-settled lawsuit regarding IRS targeting of conservative groups should be made public. The Journal notes that the plaintiffs, the defense, and the Cincinnati Enquirer all want the deposition to be disclosed, leaving Lerner isolated.

"The Coming Aluminum War." The Wall Street Journal (12/3) editorializes that the Commerce Department's self-initiated investigation into Chinese dumping of aluminum imports in the US serves as another data-point to suggest that the Trump Administration was preparing to launch a trade war that would not benefit Americans. According to the Journal, tariffs on aluminum imports would serve primarily to increase costs for US manufacturers, who remain heavily dependent on aluminum imports from overseas. Job loss in the manufacturing sector due to these higher costs would likely not be offset by any corresponding hiring in the aluminum sector. At the same time, the Journal warns, if tariffs are levied as a result of the investigation, the US risked being subjected to new duties on US exports by China in retaliation.

Trump Approves Disaster Declaration As California Fires Continue.

The Los Angeles Times (12/8, Etehad, Sahagun, Vives, Serna, Kohli) reports President Trump on Friday approved a disaster declaration in response to wildfires in California, which lets the state access federal aid and "put[s] the Department of Homeland Security and the Federal Emergency Management Agency in charge of disaster relief efforts."

Meanwhile, according to a front-page New York Times (12/8, A1, Fuller) article, "around 8,700 firefighters continued working on several fronts on Friday in Southern California as the largest of six major fires – 143,000 acres burned, with 10 percent containment — spread from Ventura County into Santa Barbara County." The Times reports "officials said that fire, which has already claimed at least one life and destroyed 401 structures, was threatening thousands more buildings in several towns." The Times adds that "in San Diego County, where a grass fire that started Thursday morning quickly consumed 4,100 acres, the blaze was only 15 percent contained as of late Friday. Dozens of buildings there were destroyed, thousands of people were forced to evacuate and around 25 racehorses were killed." The Wall Street Journal (12/8, A1, Carlton, Phillips) reports on its front page that half a dozen fires raged across southern California, leaving $27.7 billion worth of homes at risk, according to Irvine, California-based analytics firm CoreLogic.

In the lead NBC Nightly News (12/8, lead story, 2:50, Holt) segment, Miguel Almaguer reported "this epic firefight spans 200 miles, from San Diego to Santa Barbara. In Ventura county, a staggering 400 structures destroyed." ABC World News Tonight's (12/8, story 2, 2:50, Muir) Matt Gutman reported "the Thomas Fire in Ventura County so explosive it looked like a volcano." He added, "Because this fire has been so relentless, firefighters no longer can hope to stop it at its source, so they're trying to cut perimeter lines to create a buffer as far as 10 miles out." The Washington Post (12/8, Wilson, Berman) reports that "as the fires spread for a fifth day, much of the region also faced a lingering threat posed by the dense smoke."

The Wall Street Journal (12/8, Carlton, Phillips, Malas) reports more than 100,000 people have fled their homes so far. In addition, the New York Times (12/8, Medina, Jordan, Smith) reports that "on Friday night, the Ventura County Medical Examiner's Office confirmed the first known, fire-related death this week" and said in a statement "that the remains of Virginia Pesola, 70, of Santa Paula, were found at the site of a car crash on an evacuation route."

However, on the CBS Evening News (12/8, story 2, 2:10, Glor), Carter Evans stated that in San Diego on Friday, "firefighters took advantage of calm winds by cutting fire lines and water-dropping helicopters doused hot spots.” On NBC Nightly News (12/8, story 2, 2:00, Holt), Lester Holt reported that “in the steep canyons north of us in Ojai, where fires are still burning, the winds continue to howl. And just as troubling for firefighters, they are rapidly shifting directions.” ABC World News Tonight’s (12/8, story 3, 0:40, Muir) Rob Marciano reported there are still “some gusty winds at the higher terrain, but we’re looking for a bit of a break. But long term, it’s not good. Take a look. That pesky high still in control across the inner-mountain West. That means we’ll continue to be dry. No rain in the forecast. And red flag warnings up with dangerously low levels of humidity.”

Nonetheless, NBC Nightly News’ (12/8, story 3, 1:35, Holt) Kristen Dahlgren said “the one thing almost as fast as the flames is the community that galvanized in an instant to lend a hand.”

Zinke: Reports On Helicopter Use Are ‘Total Fabrications’.

The Hill (12/9, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Saturday “called reports that he used helicopters to fly between his Washington, D.C. office and nearby locations at taxpayer expense ‘total fabrications.’” Zinke tweeted, “Here are the #facts the DC media refuses to print.” In an attached statement, Zinke said, “Recent articles about official Interior Department helicopter usage are total fabrications and a wild departure of reality.”

The AP (12/8, Daly) reports that Sen. Maria Cantwell, the top Democrat on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, “said the Interior’s inspector general should add Zinke’s use of taxpayer-funded helicopter rides to an ongoing investigation of Zinke’s travel practices.” Cantwell said, “If the secretary misused public funds, he should write the treasury a check for the full amount and apologize.”

CNN (12/8, Wallace) reports that the Interior Department Inspector General’s Office “declined to say Friday whether its investigation, which began earlier this year after Zinke’s trips to the US Virgin Islands and Las Vegas combined work with political events, includes the helicopter uses.” Nancy DiPaolo, the inspector general’s spokeswoman, said, “We are taking a comprehensive look at the secretary’s travel since he took office.”

Also reporting are The Hill (12/9, Manchester), The Hill (12/9, Delk), Politico (12/9, Lefebvre), the Washington Times (12/8, Wolfgang), the Washington Examiner (12/9, Leach), CNN (12/9, Diaz, Wallace), MSNBC (12/8, Benen), the Huffington Post (12/9, D’Angelo), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (12/8, Raymond), the Daily Mail (12/8), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (12/8), The Cut \(NY\) (12/8, Paiella), and Government Executive (12/8, Clark).

Republicans Say Resizing Of Utah Monuments Will Not Lead To Energy Extraction.

The Washington Post (12/7, Karklis, Berkowitz, Meko) reported President Trump drastically reduced the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments, which contain oil, gas, uranium, coal and other archaeological and paleontological finds. The day after Trump’s announcement, Utah’s governor and several House Republicans sought to emphasize that the changes would not lead to additional energy development. Rep. John Curtis proposed banning mineral extraction in the original boundaries, while Rep. Bob Bishop said, “The idea that we’re going to give these over to oil and gas companies is a false narrative.”

The Washington Post (12/8, Eilperin) reports that “a uranium company launched a concerted lobbying campaign to scale back Bears Ears National Monument, saying such action would give it easier access to the area’s uranium deposits and help it operate a nearby processing mill, according to documents obtained by The Washington Post.” Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and “top Utah Republicans have said repeatedly that questions of mining or drilling played no role in President Trump’s announcement Monday that he was cutting the site by more than 1.1 million acres, or 85 percent.” However, the article notes that “the nation’s sole uranium processing mill sits directly next to the boundaries that President Barack Obama designated a year ago when he established Bears Ears.” According to the article, the documents “show that Energy Fuels Resources (USA) Inc., a subsidiary of a Canadian firm, urged the Trump administration to limit the monument to the smallest size needed to protect key objects and areas, such as archeological sites, to make it easier to access the radioactive ore.”

Scientists Decry Trump’s Move To Strip Fossil Treasures From Utah’s Grand Staircase Monument. The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/10, Maffly) reports scientists are concerned that Trump’s move will risk one of the world’s most important paleontological areas, leading some researchers to sue the federal government to halt the order. The Society of Vertebrate Paleontology joined the Conservation Lands Foundation and Grand Staircase Escalante Partners in a federal lawsuit looking to block the Interior Department from resizing the monuments.

Patagonia, Outdoor Retailers Fight Trump On US Monuments.

The AP (12/8, PRICE) reports that “outdoor clothing giant Patagonia and other retailers have jumped into a legal and political battle over President Donald Trump’s plan to shrink two sprawling Utah national monuments.” Patagonia and outdoor firm like The North Face and REI have “protested Trump’s actions online and through social media.” Patagonia also “filed a lawsuit Wednesday that claims Trump’s order is illegal and threatens natural treasures that the company’s employees and customers use and value.”

The Washington Times (12/9, Wolfgang) reports that “Republicans in the White House and on Capitol Hill declared war on Patagonia this week after the outdoor clothing giant sued President Trump and told its customers the commander-in-chief ‘stole your land’ by reducing two highly controversial national monuments in Utah.” Republicans in Congress “sent out emails Friday taking direct aim at Patagonia and pushing back hard against its claims that public land had been stolen from American citizens, marking the latest instance of a high-profile company going toe-to-toe with the GOP in a political battle.”

Also reporting are Bloomberg News (12/8, Bhasin, Mosendz), the Huffington Post (12/9, D’Angelo), GO (12/9, Darby), and Outside (12/8, Strep).

Tribe Wary Of Monument In Montana As Others Reduced By Trump.

The AP (12/9, Brown) reports that the Trump Administration is “pursuing creation of a new monument” in the Badger-Two Medicine area in Montana, even though officials from the Blackfeet Indian tribe “remain wary of the idea.” Blackfeet Chairman Harry Barnes “sees a ‘workable solution’ in Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s proposal to co-manage the area with the tribe, but stressed that the Blackfeet have never sought a national monument designation for the land.” Zinke “says he’d seek co-congressional approval for the co-management proposal...but Barnes cautioned that the tribe would be unwilling to surrender treaty rights dating to the 1800s that let its members hunt, fish and gather timber from the Badger-Two Medicine.”

Interior Secretary Pushing Controversial Road Project.

CNN (12/10, Bronstein, Griffin) reports that the Interior Department is pushing a plan that would allow a new road through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge, according to internal government emails. Local officials “say the road is needed to transport residents of the tiny, isolated city of King Cove to hospitals in the event of medical emergencies.” However, critics claim “it would be disastrous, not just for the Izembek refuge but in setting a precedent for construction in wilderness areas nationwide.” Interior Department press secretary Heather Swift said, “The absence of the road has meant life-and-death for the inhabitants of King Cove. The careful construction of an 11-mile single lane gravel road in a manner that conforms with all applicable environmental laws, rules, and regulations ... makes sense.”

Interior No. 2 Details His Intention And Rationale For Reassigning More Senior Executives.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (12/8, Ogrysko) reports that “more than six months after the Interior Department reassigned 30-to-50 of its senior executives, the agency’s deputy secretary is offering more insight into the role he foresees for DOI’s most experienced career leaders.” In a Dec. 4 memo to all Interior senior executives, Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt outlined “his vision for the agency’s Senior Executive Service members.” According to the article, though the memo “didn’t explicitly announce plans to reassign more senior executives, it’s clear Bernhardt sees these rotations as a potentially valuable management tool.” Bernhardt wrote, “It is my view that potentially greater cross-bureau collaboration and innovation can be achieved by bringing new leadership perspectives to our operations by rotating SES members from bureaus to headquarters, from headquarters to the field and across different functional areas and disciplines. Going forward, I will seek to strike a balance between leadership continuity and achieving fresh perspective by reassigning SES employees across bureaus and offices.”

Senator Proposes Act To Subtract From Wilderness Study Areas.

The AP (12/10) reports that Sen. Steve Daines “introduced the ‘Protect Public Use of Public Lands Act’ to remove more than 700 square miles (1,819 square kilometers) from the state’s Wilderness Study Areas.” Daines describes the West Pioneer Wilderness Study Areas, Sapphire Wilderness Study Area, Middle Fork Judith Wilderness Study Area, Big Snowies Wilderness Study Area and the Blue Joint Wilderness Study Area as “improperly managed public lands.”

Feds Flexing Against Mussels.

The Havasup \(AZ\) News-Herald (12/11, Messick) reports that “the development of a containment strategy for the invasive quagga mussel has been identified as a top priority for the U.S. Department of the Interior.” A two-day meeting was held in Lake Havasu City last week “between a number of state and federal agencies” could lead to more funding and “new initiatives to stop the little mussel from invading waters in other western states.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Industry Celebrates Trump Rollback Of BLM Venting And Flaring Rule.

The Carlsbad \(NM\) Current-Argus (12/8, Hedden) reported that the oil and gas industry is celebrating the Trump administration’s delay of BLM’s venting and flaring rule. According to BLM deputy director of policy and program, Brian Steed, “By holding off on certain requirements, the BLM now has sufficient time to review the 2016 final rule while avoiding any compliance costs on industry that may not be needed after the review.” Meanwhile, the American Petroleum Institute touted its new voluntary industry program to reduce methane emissions, known as the Environmental Partnership. According to API director of Upstream and Industry Operations, “The environmental partnership will target the greatest sources of emissions, as identified by research and collected data from the EPA and industry sources. To that end, the partnership’s first initiative is focused on further reducing emissions of methane and volatile organic compounds associated with natural gas and oil production.”

The AP also reports that the rollback of the BLM rule “comes as the oil and natural gas industry announced a voluntary partnership to reduce methane emissions at drilling sites nationwide.” The American Petroleum Institute announced the program and its 26 members on Tuesday. API President and CEO Jack Gerard said the new partnership “seeks to accelerate emissions reductions and we’re headed in the right direction.”

Oil And Gas Lease Sale Nets $30M For New Mexico.

The AP (12/9) reported that the latest quarterly oil and gas lease sales by the Bureau of Land Management on parcels in southeastern New Mexico resulted in more than $30 million in competitive bids. According to the BLM, the parcels include 2,100 acres in Lea and Eddy Counties that partially include the Permian Basin. Federal Abstract Co. offered the highest bid, $40,001.00 per acre, which “set an agency record for the highest bid per acre.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Artesia \(NM\) News (12/8).

Critics Of Oil, Gas Leasing Near Chaco Sense Déjà Vu.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (12/9, Romeo) reports that “an oil and gas lease sale that would sell off more than 4,400 acres in the Greater Chaco region in March is again raising tension between resource development and cultural preservation interests.” On Wednesday, the Bureau of Land Management’s Farmington field office “announced the beginning of a protest period on the lease sale, which would offer 25 parcels covering 4,434 acres in northern New Mexico.” The protest period runs until Jan. 4.

Wyoming Sage Grouse Leaders Say Debate With Feds Over The Bird Is Improving.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (12/10, Richards) reports that “some of Wyoming’s sage grouse leaders say the discord that began after the Interior Department announced it would review the bird’s protections in the West is giving way to Wyoming’s collaborative approach.” The comments were made at a meeting of the state’s Sage Grouse Implementation Team last week. Environmentalists attending the meeting “said they hoped that change was happening and that the federal approach would be methodical.” However, “they’d wait and see what comes out of the government’s response to public comment in January before they felt optimistic.”

Burning Man May Eventually Grow To 100,000.

The AP (12/8) reports that “Burning Man organizers are seeking permission for as many as 100,000 people to attend the annual counter-culture festival in future years.” The Bureau of Land Management “currently caps attendance at the annual event in the Black Rock Desert north of Reno at 68,000.” Burning Man officials are “proposing their new special use permit be expanded to allow at least 80,000 participants and eventually as many as 100,000.” The BLM is “reviewing the criteria used to set the attendance cap and other guidelines that regulate the festival so as to minimize environmental and other impacts on the high desert and surrounding communities.” The BLM plans “to issue a rough draft of the new conditions in about a year with a final draft scheduled to be released for public comment in early 2019.”

Additional coverage was provided by KOED-FM San Francisco (12/8, Myrow).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Some Are Salivating At Chance To Drill Off Florida.

The Miami Herald (12/9, Hiassen) reported that twelve House Republicans co-signed a letter asking Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to remove a provision allowing oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge from the tax reform bill. Although Rep. Carlos Curbelo of Miami is among those opposed to expanding oil and gas development in the ANWR, the article suggests that Curbelo is mainly motivated by a desire to prevent offshore oil drilling in the Gulf of Mexico and off Florida from becoming the next region where protections are rolled back.

Possible Wind Farm Sites 17 Miles Off Hamptons Identified.

Newsday \(NY\) (12/9, Harrington) reports the federal Bureau of Ocean Energy Management “has identified a swath of the South Shore 17 miles off the coast of the Hamptons as a potential area for new offshore wind farms.” If chosen, “the site would encompass 211,839 acres of ocean waters 15 nautical miles from land, from Center Moriches to Montauk.” In recent years, “interest in the waters around Long Island and the Northeast has been heating up.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Black Canyon Reservoir Maintenance Requires Drawdown.

The Emmett \(ID\) Messenger-Index (12/8) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation is “lowering Black Canyon Reservoir to perform repairs identified during routine, scheduled maintenance.” Vicki Hoffman, Middle Snake Field Office Operations and Maintenance Program Manager said, “The post-irrigation season is an important time of year for Reclamation and irrigation districts to perform maintenance activities. We want to remind folks to be aware of changing river flows downstream of the dam and to be cautious around the reservoir edge and riverbanks since they may be unstable and pose safety hazards to people and pets.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

How Arctic Drilling, Stymied For Decades, Made Surprise Return In Tax Bill.

The New York Times (12/9, Hulse) reports Republicans are trying to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to energy exploration as part of their tax reform plan. The move “is expected to generate $1 billion over 10 years for the government,” and for drilling proponents has the added benefits of avoiding a Democrat filibuster “because of special rules being applied on the floor for considering the tax bill” and securing Sen. Lisa Murkowski’s critical vote in favor of the legislation. Though previous efforts to open the refuge to drilling have failed, other political news has deflected attention from the issue and “the ranks of Republicans willing to side with the conservation groups have been depleted in the years since drilling was last seriously considered.” Even if the measure is approved, the Times notes, “it is unclear that the current economics of the oil business would make it worthwhile for oil companies to lease the land and invest in costly exploration.”

Additional coverage was provided by PBS NewsHour (12/7) and the Washington Post (12/8, Grandoni).

Some Are Salivating At Chance To Drill Off Florida. The Miami Herald (12/9, Hiassen) reported that twelve House Republicans co-signed a letter asking Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to remove a provision allowing oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge from the tax reform bill. Judge Stops US From Allowing Destruction Of Miami Forest.

The AP (12/8) reports that “a federal judge has temporarily blocked a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service decision that would have allowed the destruction of a rare forest near Miami to build a shopping center and apartments.” U.S. District Judge Ursula Ungaro “issued an order Friday stopping the clearing of about 50 acres of pine rockland forest that is home to about 20 endangered species, including the Miami tiger beetle.” Ungaro “said the lawsuit filed Friday by the Center for Biological Diversity against the service will likely succeed, so she stopped bulldozers that had begun tearing down trees this week shortly after the wildlife service approved the development.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (12/9), the Miami Herald (12/8, Staletovich), the Huffington Post (12/10, Golgowski), and Law360 (12/8, Bayles).

Wildfire Threatens Sensitive California Condor Population.

The Los Angeles Times (12/8, Sahagun) reports that “federal biologists were concerned Friday that a wildfire that has already consumed 143,000 acres was marching toward a California condor nest where a turkey-sized fledgling was close to taking its first flight.” Kirk Gilligan, deputy project leader of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s Hopper Mountain California Condor Recovery Program, said, “There are limited opportunities to protect that nest, which is in a cave on a hillside. But, if necessary, aerial water drops could cool things down.” He added, “This fledgling is expected to take its first flight out of the nest any day now. Trouble is, condors don’t generally get very far on their first flight.”

Alaska Suffers Resurgence Of Tree-killing Beetle.

The AP (12/8) reports that “the Kenai region experienced a resurgence of the spruce bark beetle this year, an insect with a history of causing tree deaths.” Entomologist Matt Bowser of the Kenai National Wildlife Refuge said, “It’s not a surprise at all — it’s just a matter of when. This is a beetle that’s been here a long time. It’s not a new thing. This is one of the forest happenings we understand better than a lot of others — we know that all it takes is susceptible trees — a mature enough forest — and then runs of warm summers. If you have those things put together, you have at least the potential for an outbreak.”

Biologists With Drones And Peanut Butter Pellets Are On A Mission To Help Ferrets.

NPR (12/10, Hegyi) reports that in central Montana, “drones are dropping peanut butter pellets on prairie dog colonies” as “part of an effort by biologists to save North America’s most endangered mammal — the black-footed ferret.” According to the article, “a team of scientists and engineers have spent this year vaccinating prairie dogs in central Montana against the plague using drones.”

Ex-US Fish And Wildlife Employee Sentenced For Theft.

The AP (12/8) reports that “a former employee of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has been sentenced to three years’ probation for two felony theft convictions.” John Cochnar, 59, was sentenced Friday in Hall County District Court. According to authorities, Cochnar “burglarized the service office of the Platte River Whooping Crane Trust office on March 21.”

National Park Service

Lawmaker Wants To Add This Word To Rock Creek Park’s Name.

WTOP-FM Washington (12/8, Moore) reports that under legislation D.C. Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton introduced Thursday, Rock Creek Park would be renamed Rock Creek National Park. The article notes that “the name change would be largely symbolic” since “Rock Creek is already owned and managed by the National Park Service.” However, Holmes Norton said renaming the park “will highlight its significance to the nation.”

Tubman National Park In Auburn: ‘We’re Bringing Resources Into The Community Now’.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (12/10, Harding) reports that Frank Barrows, the superintendent of Fort Stanwix National Monument in Rome and project lead for the Harriet Tubman National Historical Park in Auburn, “said the National Park Service has been invited to more community events in the Auburn area.” Barrows “recently participated in a discussion at Seymour Library about the progress of the park.” During a recent interview, Barrows “outlined three targets for the National Park Service: public programs, capacity building and building relationships in the community.”

Study On Proposed Park Fee Increase Marks Uncertainty For Gateway Communities.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (12/10, Kendall) reports that “a recently released study on the effects of a National Park Service proposal to increase entrance fees at a handful of national parks across the country has businesses concerned about the potential economic impacts on gateway communities.” However, “tourism organizations in the gateway communities around Yellowstone don’t appear overly worried by a potential drop in spending.” On the other hand, “as tourism groups take a wait-and-see approach, local tour guide companies are sweating the proposed changes.”

National Park Service Proposes Fee Increase At Golden Spike Historic Site.

The Ogden \(UT\) Standard-Examiner (12/9, Kokesh) reports that the National Park Service is seeking public comments on its proposal to hike entrance fees at Golden Spike National Historic Site. The NPS “proposed eliminating seasonal entrance fee prices and replacing them with one year-round price.” The park service said, “The new revenue generated from any future fee increases may be used to provide enhanced visitor services including repair and maintenance of facilities, capital improvements, updated amenities, resource protection and additional visitor programs and services.”

Garfield Historic Site Gets Underground Railroad Designation.

The Willoughby \(OH\) News-Herald (12/9) reports that the National Park Service has “announced that James A. Garfield National Historic Site has been designated as a contributing site on the National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom.” Site Manager Todd Arrington said, “This is a wonderful recognition of Garfield’s long support for the abolition of slavery as well as the civil rights of the formerly enslaved during his time in Congress. President Garfield addressed civil rights during his inaugural address, reminding the nation that while much had been accomplished in this area during the Civil War and Reconstruction, there was still a great deal of work to be done.”

$18K Awarded To Aid Restoration Of Constitution Hall.

The AP (12/10) reports that “an $18,000 grant from the National Park Service has moved a nonprofit closer to refurbishing the facade of a building where slavery opponents met during the Bleeding Kansas era.” Grant Glenn, president of the nonprofit Friends of the Free State Capitol Inc., “said the group will have sufficient funds to begin the work on Topeka’s Constitution Hall if it receives a $90,000 grant from the Kansas Heritage Trust.” The funds from the National Park Service is “earmarked for the restoration of the front doors and windows.”

Steamtown National Historic Site Hit Hard By Tree-killing Beetle.

The Scranton \(PA\) Times Tribune (12/10, Singleton) reports that the National Park Service has “removed almost 60 dead or dying ash trees — more than half of the trees” in and around the parking lot at Steamtown National Historic Site — after finding they were infested by the emerald ash borer. According to park Superintendent Debbie Conway, “the trees taken down in recent weeks by park employees were ‘predominately dead’ and posed a potential safety hazard.” In addition, “most of the remaining trees display clear signs of borer infestation, including the distinctive D-shaped holes adult beetles leave in the bark when they emerge.”

Soda Butte Creek Set To Be Removed From Impaired List.

The AP (12/10) reports that “a creek that flows into the northeastern corner of Yellowstone National Park is set to be removed from a list of impaired waterways next year.” Officials with the Montana Department of Environmental Quality “say that Soda Butte Creek now meets quality standards for heavy metals thanks to abandoned mine cleanups that started in the 1990s.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Scars Of The Past: Cleaning Up Abandoned Mines, And The Fight Over The Funding To Do It.

The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (12/10, Wright) reports that a mine reclamation fee “expires in 2021 and a major industry association that views it as an unnecessary burden on business and a fund that states have been misusing is pushing for the fee to disappear.” Luke Popovich, a spokesman for the National Mining Association, “said the funds have been misdirected while hazardous abandoned coal sites remain." However, "some feel that funding for state-based reclamation programs is as important now as ever." Bonnie Gestring, the northwest program director for Earthworks, "said she worries what the Trump administration's proposed cuts may mean for federal abandoned mine lands programs, and that the funding for state programs is critical."

US Geological Survey

USGS Scientists Share Their Research With Community At Open House.

The Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (12/9, Zonszein) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey on Saturday held an open house at the Pacific Coastal and Marine Science Center. The center "focuses on issues such as coastal erosion, tsunami hazards and offshore research." Rex Sanders, a physical scientist and director of communications for USGS, said, "We love talking about this stuff. It's a good chance to show our own friends and neighbors and family what we do."

Opinion Pieces

The Looting Of America's Public Lands.

The New York Times (12/9) editorializes that President Trump "is doing what [former Vice President Dick] Cheney always wanted to get done" by removing environmental protections and withdrawing land from two Utah national monuments. The Administration argues that "America needs the energy buried beneath these lands," but this argument is "spurious: Coal is in free fall as an energy source. ... Oil, meanwhile, is in such plentiful supply that America's net imports are at their lowest since 1970." The Times argues that "a small handful of Utah lawmakers" is behind the shrinking of the two Utah monuments, and that the move has "shredded what little is left of [Interior Secretary] Zinke's reputation in the environmental community."

Ryan Zinke Just Made Himself Sky Rodeo Clown.

In his column for the Washington Examiner (12/8, Wegmann), Philip Wegmann criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for recent controversies over his use of private planes and helicopters. Wegmann argues that the nation does want "flashy secretaries of the Interior." He urges Zinke to step away from "the limelight" if he "wants to keep his job."

Bears Ears Is Here To Stay.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (12/8, Baca), Angelo Baca, a cultural resources coordinator for the organization Utah Dine Bikeyah, criticizes the Trump Administration for reducing the size of Bears Ears National Monument. Baca writes that the decision "strikes at the heart of a concerted effort to protect the ancestral land of these tribes and others whose histories permeate this land." Baca also asserts that "this reduction of the national monument by a shortsighted president is ultimately illegal (because only Congress has the authority to make such a change under the Antiquities Act), and will not survive a court challenge."

Commentary: Utahns Won't Benefit From More Oil And Gas Production.

Stanley Holmes, co-founder and outreach coordinator for Utah Citizens Advocating Renewable Energy, writes an oped in the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/10, Holmes) saying the citizens of Utah will not benefit from additional oil and gas production. Holmes says federal subsidies have stimulated production and consumption of fossil fuels beyond market forces. Holmes argues that additional drilling in the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments will only lead to additional subsidies for the fossil fuel industry.

Trump Says Tax Bill “Getting Closer And Closer,” But Analyses Say Much Work Remains.

President Trump touted the Republican tax plan in a Sunday morning tweet, writing, “Getting closer and closer on the Tax Cut Bill. Shaping up even better than projected. House and Senate working very hard and smart. End result will be not only important, but SPECIAL!” In addition, House Majority Leader McCarthy expressed optimism about a vote by the end of next week. However, coverage and analyses focus on the substantial differences between the House and Senate versions, pointing out that there is a lot of work to be done in a short time.

NBC Nightly News (12/10, story 4, 1:20, Snow) reported, “Members of the House and Senate will meet this week to come up with final tax bill. President Trump tweeted, ‘The bill is shaping up even better than projected.’ He said the end result will be not only important but special. There are some sticking points, however.” NBC’s Hallie Jackson: “The President and the Republicans in Congress are hoping for a big win with this $1.5 trillion tax cut bill. ... But when you look at what’s actually the sticking points here, there’s a few of them. One surrounds capping deductions for state and local taxes. That is something that affects people in high tax states the most, places like California and New York. So Republicans, especially in the House, who represent those areas have some real concerns. Lawmakers are also deciding on just how big that corporate tax rate cut should be, 20% or 22%.”

On the CBS Weekend News (12/10, story 5, 2:05, Quijano), Errol Barnett reported, “Trump tweeted this morning about the stock market’s record highs, the unemployment rate...and the tax cut bill getting closer. He then played golf in West Palm Beach with Republican Sen, Lindsey Graham in an effort to shore up GOP support amid mounting headwinds. ... Sen. Susan Collins is withholding support until she sees the final version. Collins wants her amendment to eliminate automatic cuts to Medicare included.”

The AP (12/10, Superville) reports that Trump “sought Sunday to gloss over the difficult work ahead for lawmakers laboring to finalize tax cut legislation he can sign by his self-imposed Christmas deadline.” Trump and Graham “discussed the tax bill and upcoming budget talks after they teed off, said White House spokesman Raj Shah.” Bloomberg News (12/10, Jacobs) reports that the President is expected to “deliver a closing argument for the proposed Republican tax overhaul in a speech on Wednesday.”

Collins Will Wait Before Deciding On Vote. The Washington Times (12/10, Sherfinski) reports that Collins said that she “plans to wait until the final conference report on the tax bill is released before she makes a decision on how she’ll vote.” Collins said on CBS’ Face The Nation (12/10, Dickerson) that she “always waits” to see the final version of the bill before deciding. She added, “I also obviously care very much about amendments that I was successful in getting in the bill that particularly helped middle income families and I’m also concerned about agreements that I have.” Reuters (12/10, Volcovici) says that Collins’ “support was crucial in passing the Senate tax reform bill earlier this month.”

David Leonhardt of the New York Times (12/10) writes, “A couple of weeks ago, Collins made a classic Collins deal” that “tried to split the difference between Democratic and Republican positions.” Collins “said that she would vote for the recent Senate tax bill so long as Republicans leaders promised to pass other legislation – in the near future – that would reduce the bill’s knock-on damage to health care programs.” But “within days of the Senate vote on the tax bill, conservative House Republicans started saying that they didn’t care about her deal.” Bloomberg News (12/10, Niquette) reports briefly on Collins’ remarks.

McCarthy Anticipates Final House Vote Next Week. The Washington Times (12/10, Sherfinski) reports McCarthy “said Sunday that congressional Republicans are hopefully on track for final passage of their tax bill next week, which would be in line with” Trump’s deadline. McCarthy said on Fox News’ Sunday Morning Futures, “We made great progress.” He added that we “moved the House come back in” and “we were not supposed to start until Tuesday of last week, but we came in Monday.”

The Washington Times (12/10, Sherfinski) reports, “As Mr. McCarthy indicated, there are a number of differences. For example, the Senate-passed bill includes a repeal of Obamacare’s individual mandate, and the House’s does not.” Both plans also “restore a deduction of up to $10,000 for local property taxes that had been on the chopping block, but negotiators are now looking at going even further to potentially allow taxpayers a choice between applying the money to their property taxes or to their income taxes.”

WPost Analysis: GOP’s Speed Leaves Bill Open To Errors, Loopholes. The Washington Post (12/10, A1, Werner) writes that Republicans “are moving their tax bill toward final passage at stunning speed,” leaving it “vulnerable to...expensive problems already popping up in their massive and complex plan. Questionable special-interest provisions have been stuffed in along the way,” and “drafting errors by exhausted staff are cropping up in need of fixes.” The Post writes, “Veterans of congressional tax overhauls, particularly the seminal revamp under President Ronald Reagan in 1986, have been stunned and in some cases outraged at how swiftly Republicans are moving.”

The Wall Street Journal (12/10, Rubin) reports that as drafted, the Senate bill could see some high-income business owners facing marginal tax rates above 100%. The Los Angeles Times (12/10, Koren) looks at how the plans “would affect the tax returns of a grad student, a single renter, married renters and middle-class homeowners.”

Sen. Bernie Sanders said on NBC’s Meet The Press (12/10, Todd), “One of the absurdities of this whole process is Republicans made a decision to go forward without any Democratic Party input, and they made a decision to do so operate behind closed doors.”

Former Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers writes in the Washington Post (12/10), “The tax-cut legislation now in conference committee on Capitol Hill exacerbates every important problem it claims to address.” Tax cuts “may prolong the sugar high a bit. But they are no substitute for the new economic foundation we desperately need.”

WTimes Analysis: Bills May Allow Those In US Illegally To Continue To Claim Child Tax Credit. The Washington Times (12/10, Miller) reports that Trump “has been willing to accept almost anything to close the deal on his giant tax cut bill before Christmas, including staying mum about a measure that would allow illegal immigrants to pocket the more generous child tax credit included in the package.” Both the House and Senate bills “neglect to require that the worker have a Social Security number to claim the credit but require only that the qualifying child have a Social Security number.”

House Bill’s Medical Deduction Elimination Would Affect Millions. The Washington Post (12/10, Long) reports that the House bill would eliminate the medical deduction, which was used by 8.8 million Americans in 2015. The Senate bill “would keep it (and even make it a bit more generous). It’s a key difference that must be reconciled before the final legislation goes to President Trump.”

USA Today Poll: Just 32% Back Tax Plan. USA Today (12/10, Page) reports that “Americans remain unconvinced that the measure will cut their own taxes or significantly boost the economy.” A USA Today/Suffolk University Poll “finds just 32% support the GOP tax plan; 48% oppose it. That’s the lowest level of public support for any major piece of legislation enacted in the past three decades.” In addition, 53% predicted that “their own families won’t pay lower taxes as a result of the measure, and an equal 53% say it won’t help the economy in a major way.”

USA Today (12/10) editorializes, “Though many Republican lawmakers have doubts about the tax package working its way through Congress, it is easy to see why many see a yes vote on a final version negotiated between the House and Senate as a political imperative, no matter what’s in the final package.” A “no” vote “risks a potential Republican primary challenge from President Trump’s base” and “could shut off the cash flow from angry GOP donors.” But “the tax measure is – to put it mildly – wildly unpopular,” and supporters who represent even “remotely competitive states or districts” might be “burdened by a grossly unfair tax cutting plan such as this.” However, F.H. Buckley of George Mason University’s Scalia Law School argues in a USA Today (12/10) op-ed that the bill “is good news for most middle-class Americans,” and that it will “give firms an incentive to invest in the United States.”

WSJournal Says Electric Car Credit Should Be Ended. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (12/10) calls the electric car tax credit an indulgence for wealthy citizens and urges the US Senate and House to remove it as they work to reconcile their respective tax bills. The Journal says the credit is a prime example of a government policy that subsidizes business, wastes money and also creates additional complications in the tax code.

Trump Honors Civil Rights Heroes At New Mississippi Museum.

President Trump on Saturday traveled to attend the opening of the new Civil Rights Museum in Jackson, Mississippi where he praised the “true American heroes” of the movement. While media coverage credited Trump for staying on message during his speech, reporting highlighted that a number of black leaders boycotted the ceremony over his invitation while others took part in protests about his Administration’s civil rights record.

The Washington Post (12/9, Brown, Wootson) reports that “amid backlash and boycotts, President Trump addressed an invitation-only gathering Saturday at the Mississippi Civil Rights Museum in Jackson – instead of attending the public opening ceremony.” The Jackson \(MS\) Clarion Ledger (12/9, Pender) describes Trump as “uncharacteristically reserved during his brief visit to Jackson on Saturday – a visit arranged by Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant for the state’s bicentennial celebration and opening of two long-planned state landmarks, the Civil Rights and Mississippi History museums.” The Clarion Ledger adds the President “did not mention the protests or boycotts” and he “eschewed politics of the day – also uncharacteristic – [in his] erudite speech to several-hundred people before the main ceremony outside the museum attended by thousands.”

The New York Times (12/9, Shear, Fentress) says the President’s “presence jolted the opening” of the museum by “generating boycotts from some leaders in the movement and small protests by activists as the state’s attempt to confront its racially violent past clashed with more recent divisions wrought by Mr. Trump’s presidency.” However, according to the Times, “Trump gave brief remarks, largely sticking to his prepared script as he hailed the icons of the civil rights movement and rejected the racism and hatred on display in the new museum.” Trump said, “The civil rights museum records oppression, cruelty and injustice inflicted on the African-American community.” The President continued, “Here we memorialize the brave men and women who struggled to sacrifice and sacrificed so much so that others might live in freedom.”

Reuters (12/9, Mason) reports Trump added, “We want our country to be a place where every child from every background can grow up free from fear, innocent of hatred and surrounded by love, opportunity and hope.” Trump, referencing murdered civil rights activist Medgar Evers and other civil rights leaders, said: “Today we strive to be worthy of their sacrifice. We pray for inspiration from their example.” He also “acknowledged Evers’ wife Myrlie and brother Charles in the audience.” Politico (12/9, Cook) says that in his “restrained, formal remarks,” the President “spoke specifically of Evers’ bravery, his love for his family, and his civil rights work for the NAACP in Mississippi.” According to Politico, he also hailed “Martin Luther King, Jr. a ‘man who I studied and watched and admired for my entire life’ and paid tribute to the nine students who protested segregation at the Jackson Public Library.”

Bloomberg News (12/9, Pettypiece) reports the President “spent about 40 minutes at the museums, including his remarks, accompanied by Mississippi Governor Phil Bryant, a Republican, and Housing Secretary Ben Carson, among others.”

In addition, NPR (12/9, Booker) reports that “following the event, Trump tweeted that it was an ‘honor’ to celebrate the museum’s opening.” The President said, “It was my great honor to celebrate the opening of two extraordinary museums—the Mississippi State History Museum & the Mississippi Civil Rights Museum. We pay solemn tribute to our heroes of the past & dedicate ourselves to building a future of freedom, equality, justice & peace.”

Black Lawmakers, Jackson Mayor Boycott Museum Opening Over Trump Appearance. The Hill (12/9, Delk) “Briefing Room” blog reports Trump’s “highly scrutinized appearance...was boycotted by some Democratic lawmakers,” including Reps. John Lewis and Bennie Thompson, who in a joint statement Thursday said the President’s attendance “attendance and his hurtful policies are an insult to the people portrayed in this civil rights museum.” The Hill adds Jackson Mayor Chokwe Antar Lumumba (D) “echoed Lewis’s remarks on CNN, calling Trump’s visit ‘ill-considered,’ and saying that Trump and ‘the policies he espouses are disrespectful to the legacy and history that is to be portrayed in this museum.’”

ABC World News Tonight ’s (12/9, story 3, 2:55, Llamas) David Wright reported that “in Jackson, an echo of the civil rights struggle. A peaceful protest of a president who has fanned racial tensions attending the opening of a new civil rights museum.” Wright added that “because Trump was there, civil rights legend John Lewis was not. Congressman Lewis, one of the heroes of Bloody Sunday in Selma, called President Trump’s attendance ‘an insult to the people portrayed in this civil rights museum.’”

CNN (12/9, Diaz) reports that although the President stayed “on message” in his address at the museum, speakers “at a news conference protesting Trump’s visit on Saturday hit the President on his White House record, including his efforts to repeal Obamacare and enact a travel ban, saying his moves contradict the work of the civil rights movement.” The Jackson \(MS\) Clarion Ledger (12/9, Harris) reports Lumumba, speaking alongside NAACP President Derrick Johnson, “denounced” the President and “called Trump’s stances an affront to the movement’s goals.” Lumumba said, “It is my appreciation for the Mississippi martyrs not here – the names both known and unknown – that will not allow me, that will not allow many of us standing here today to share a stage with a president who has not demonstrated a continuing commitment to civil rights.”

The Washington Times (12/9, Boyer) reports Johnson “called Mr. Trump’s appearance ‘a distraction,’ and other black leaders also stayed away from the grand opening in protest.” The Times notes the “civil-rights icon” Lewis skipped the public ceremony “in protest of the president’s visit, calling it a ‘mockery’ of black leaders’ efforts.” The Hill (12/9, Manchester) “Briefing Room” blog reports the Rev. Al Sharpton, in an appearance on MSNBC, said Trump’s visit was “a missed opportunity,” as he “could have addressed the issue of today that he mentioned people fought for to bring us to today.”

On NBC Nightly News (12/9, story 4, 2:00, Diaz-Balart), Peter Alexander acknowledged “Trump has struggled to win over African-American support.” Alexander added Trump before he ran for office “champion[ed] the conspiracy of birtherism of President Obama. And once in office, reigniting divisions after the racial violence in Charlottesville.” The Huffington Post (12/9, Levine) highlights that “lawyers for his Justice Department are defending a voting law in Texas that a district court judge found intentionally discriminated against black and Latino voters.” The HuffPost adds that “the Texas case is just one of a series of examples of how the Trump administration so far has failed to advance a key civil right: the right to vote.”

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (12/9, Radnofsky) reports White House spokesman Raj Shah last week expressed regret that the lawmakers had decided to boycott in protest and said, “We think it’s a little unfortunate that a moment like this that could be used for unification and bringing people together, some folks are choosing to play politics with it but that’s not going to deter us from honoring heroes of the civil rights movement.” Shah added that the President’s visit was “about honoring icons of the movement; that would include Mr. Lewis.”

AP Analysis: Trump Made False Statement On Black Homeownership At Florida Rally. An AP (12/9, Boak, Rugaber) “Fact Check” that reviews Trump’s remarks at his rally in Pensacola, Florida on Friday says the President “falsely stated that black homeownership has hit a record high under his stewardship.” While Trump said: “black homeownership just hit the highest level it has ever been in the history of our country,” the AP contends his assertion is “not true or even close,” as US Census data shows “the black homeownership rate peaked during 2004, when 49.7 percent of black households owned homes (the rate for all races that year reached 69.2 percent, also a modern record). The black homeownership rate stayed in similar territory until the recession, when it dropped to the mid-40s.” The AP adds the black homeownership rate this year was “42.7 percent in the first quarter, 42.3 percent in the second and 42 percent in the third.”

That's an uptick from last year but far from a record." On the CBS Weekend News (12/9, story 3, 2:10, Ninan), Errol Barnett similarly highlighted the President's comments on black homeownership at the rally and said "it seems the key audience for the President's speech were Gulf Coast Republicans, primarily those heading to the polls next week in Alabama's special election."

Trump Signs Short-Term Spending Bill Ahead Of Strong Jobs Report.

President Trump on Friday signed a short-term spending bill in order to prevent a government shutdown hours before the Labor Department released its jobs report for November, which showed nonfarm hiring rose by 228,000 jobs over the previous month. While media coverage was largely favorable about the economy's performance, reporting on the President's action to avert a shutdown was largely straightforward and portrayed his decision as a stopgap measure that funds the government through December 22 and gives Congress more time to reach a deal on major budget disputes.

Typical of the tone of his coverage was Bloomberg News (12/8, Wasson, Litvan), which reports Trump signed "a two-week extension of federal funding that averts a government shutdown this week but defers contentious decisions on spending on defense and domestic programs." The Washington Post (12/8, Debonis) similarly reports the bill "does not resolve a standoff between Republicans and Democrats over federal spending levels" and does not "include any agreement on immigration or other policy issues that have divided the parties."

The Hill (12/8, Fabian) says the President "signed the measure without fanfare." Reuters (12/8, Cowan, Rampton) notes White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders announced in tweet that Trump had signed the bill.
