Marianas Variety (7/14, Villahermosa) reports that Representative Jose Itibus, chairman of the House Committee on Health, has "introduced a resolution urging the U.S. Embassy in Manila to permit the re-entry of six CW-1 nurses from the Philippines who have been granted a 240-day extension to stay in the CNMI during the processing of their renewals by U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services." Gov. Ralph D.L.G. Torres also "wrote a letter stating that the nurses should be allowed re-entry to the CNMI based on USCIS rules." Itibus introduced House Resolution 20-12 last week, "and it is expected to be adopted in the next session." The resolution "states that the six nurses are undergoing CW petition processing right now for fiscal year 2018."

Congresswoman's DC Office Responds To Medicaid Criticism.

The Talanei \(ASM\) (7/12) reports that Congresswoman Aumua Amata Radewagen's office "refutes charges by American Samoa's Medicaid chief that Radewagen to effectively fight for more Medicaid funding for the territory, and is compromised by GOP efforts to cut Medicaid funding." The Congresswoman's office "stresses, Radewagen's positions has 'ALWAYS' been to get Medicaid funding for American Samoa on par with that of the states."

Current Revenue Shortfall Is At Least $2.3M Per Month For Government.

Samoa News (7/11, Sagapolutele) reports that "a presentation last Thursday by the ASG Revenue Task Force to Fono leaders and several lawmakers revealed that the government is currently faced with a shortfall of at least $2.3 million to $2.5 million a month, to cover monthly expenditures." The issue was "reiterated during the governor's address at yesterday's joint session of the Fono." According to the article, "in his address, the governor said the shortfall will have to come from payroll cuts — referring to the reduction of working hours — 80 hours to 70 hours — for ASG employee's whose salaries are funded by local revenues."

The Same Pacific Island, 23 Years Apart.

The Conversation \(UK\) (7/17, Lavers, Bond) reports on Henderson Island, the "South Pacific island of rubbish". According to the article, it is "a place littered with plastic garbage, washed there by ocean currents." The change began relatively recently. In a span of 23 years, the island went "from pristine South Pacific gem to the final resting place for enormous quantities of the world's waste."

Top National News

White House Touts Efforts To Encourage US Manufacturing.

Monday's White House event featuring products from all 50 states and President Trump's declaration of this week as "Made in America" week receives relatively light, and mostly unfavorable, media coverage. Most — although not all — reports highlight the fact that while the Administration is showcasing products manufactured in the United States, products carrying the Trump name are manufactured overseas, a point critics were quick to emphasize. For example, CNN (7/17, Klein) reports on its website that as it kicked off the week, "it didn't take long for the administration to come under fire for criticism that products made by President Donald Trump and Ivanka Trump's eponymous brands are made elsewhere." Juliana Goldman said on the CBS Evening News (7/17, story 5, 2:10, Mason) that Trump-branded items were "notably absent" from the event as Trump and his daughter "have outsourced manufacturing of their products to countries around the world where labor is cheaper and there are fewer regulations."

Hallie Jackson said on NBC Nightly News (7/17, story 4, 2:20, Holt) that Trump critics "argue he didn't put his money where his mouth is in his own business." Kristin Fisher reported on Fox News' Special Report (7/17) that Trump's effort to promote American-made products "is being met by claims of hypocrisy from his critics," and USA Today (7/17, Jackson) says Democrats "derided the event as the height of hypocrisy."

Politico (7/17, McCaskill) similarly says the event "brought renewed emphasis to the president and first daughter's respective businesses, which manufacture products abroad, accentuating a disconnect between the messenger and the message," while the Washington Times (7/17, Boyer) says the White House is "trying to fend off criticism that Trump-branded products, including merchandise from the line of presidential daughter Ivanka Trump, are typically made overseas." Citing that criticism, Ryan Lizza of The New Yorker said on CNN's Situation Room (7/17) that this is "one of those events where they are taking a little bit of a political risk in putting this forward because it is a reminder of his own lack of consistency on this issue."

The New York Post (7/17, Schultz, Fredericks) says the White House "struggled to explain why so many Trump-branded products were manufactured overseas." Another Washington Times (7/17, Boyer) story reports that White House press secretary Sean Spicer said, "I think he actually understands in a very unique way the challenges that our regulatory system and our tax system put on businesses that want to hire here, want to grow here." The Washington Examiner (7/17, Westwood) reports that Spicer told reporters, "With respect to his own companies, obviously it's inappropriate to discuss how anything would affect their own companies," but he "said in certain cases 'supply chains or scalability' necessary to the operation of companies like Trump's might not be available in the US."

John Harwood said on CNBC's Closing Bell (7/17) that Spicer's argument is "exactly what Ford and Carrier and Walmart and every other American company that has supply chains overseas...argues about their products." Similarly, on immigrant labor, companies argue that "there aren't Americans willing to do that work, and the response from the Trump White House has been, 'Well, raise wages enough and people will be willing to do that work.'" Spicer, Harwood added, "is justifying practices" for the Administration that the Administration "does not accept from other multi-national companies." Jonathan Karl said on ABC World News Tonight (7/17, story 3, 0:40, Muir) that Spicer "did not say...if there would be more commitment from the Trump companies to buy more American-made goods."

The Washington Post (7/17, Gold, Harwell), meanwhile, reports that while the White House is “champion[ing] a ‘hire American’ agenda, the administration wants to slash funding” for the Bureau of International Labor Affairs, which “many US companies say they rely on to stay ahead of foreign rivals.” According to the Post, the Administration “is seeking to nearly gut funding” for the Labor Department bureau, which is “unpopular among some conservatives, who criticize its backing for groups that support labor unions.”

In a story that was the lead on the Drudge Report early Monday evening, Reuters (7/17, Rampton) reports that Trump promised “he would take more legal and regulatory steps during the next six months to protect American manufacturers, lashing out against trade deals and trade practices he said have hurt US companies.” While the President “did not give details about what his administration would do to protect manufacturers,” he “railed against tariffs charged by other countries and unfair trade practices.” Townhall (7/17, Pavlich) reports that Trump “made brief remarks about the importance of deregulation and tax reform in order to allow business to grow and manufacture in the United States,” saying, “We’re gonna stand up for our companies and maybe most importantly for our workers. ... American workers, farmers and innovators are really the best in the world. ... Every member of my administration shares the same goal, to provide a level playing field for American workers.”

Several local reports highlight businesses whose products were featured at the event. For example, the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (7/17) reports that “Paul Swenson, president of Sandy-based Colonial Flag, showed off flags made at his Utah business along with pictures and videos of fields of red, white and blue and large-scale US flags.” WWJ-TV Detroit (7/17) reported on its website that military parts manufacturer Milton Manufacturing of Detroit was “celebrated,” and on its website, KWQC-TV Davenport, IA (7/17) said that “Iowa’s own RMA Armament [was] one of the businesses being honored.”

Company Featured At White House Event Is Under Federal Investigation. The Daily Beast (7/17) reports that construction and farming equipment manufacturer Caterpillar, which was also showcased at Monday’s event, “recently laid off thousands of US workers and is under Trump administration investigation over alleged tax-dodging.” The company “stores its replacement parts in Peoria, IL, where the company is headquartered, but its parts business is owned by a Swiss subsidiary, and profits derived from that business are not subject to US taxes,” which has “led to allegations of tax-dodging, and triggered federal investigation into the company.” There was no response from the White House press office “to questions about those allegations and how they squared with the message of what the White House is calling Made in America Week.”

NYTimes A1, WPost Analyses: Trump Wrong In Claiming He’s Signed More Bills Than Any President. The New York Times reports on its front page that Trump “repeatedly boasts of the bills he has signed” into law since entering the White House – “42 as of this week.” The Times says that Trump – speaking on Monday during “a ‘Made in America’ event at the White House” – stated, “We’ve signed more bills – and I’m talking about through the legislature – than any president, ever.” However, the Times says that “Trump is slightly behind the lawmaking pace for the past six presidents, who as a group signed an average of 43 bills during the same period. And an analysis of the bills Mr. Trump signed shows that about half were minor and inconsequential, passed by Congress with little debate. Among recent presidents, both the total number of bills he signed and the legislation’s substance make Mr. Trump about average.”

Under the headline “No, President Trump, You Haven’t Signed More Bills Than Any Other President,” Washington Post (7/17) fact-checker Glenn Kessler similarly debunks Trump’s claim, saying “he’s way off the mark and actually falling behind in legislative output.”

Administration Lays Out Objectives For NAFTA Renegotiation.

The Office of the US Trade Representative on Monday released a report laying out the Administration’s objectives for renegotiating NAFTA. Coverage is generally positive, although several reports highlight criticism from Democrats who argued that the President’s goals do not go far enough. The AP (7/17, Boak) says the new objectives “contain the first specifics for a Trump administration that has made bold promises on trade,” but the Wall Street Journal (7/17, Mauldin) say the plan moves away from Trump’s passionate campaign rhetoric concerning trade with Mexico and Canada as the Administration is seeking a deal that can win congressional approval. The Washington Post (7/17, Swanson) points out that “many of the goals were described in general language, highlighting the challenge Trump faces in transforming his criticism of current trade deals into concrete policy proposals that live up to his promises.”

Reuters (7/17, Wroughton, Lawder) says the US “outlined a tough negotiating strategy,” and “for the first time in a US trade deal said it would seek to deter currency manipulation by trading partners.” USTR Lighthizer said in the “much-anticipated document” that the Administration “aimed to reduce the US trade deficit by improving access for US goods exported to Canada and Mexico." USA Today (7/17, Yu) highlights other "key demands" from the summary, including "updat[ing] the rules of origin"; increasing "opportunities for US firms to sell US products and services into the NAFTA countries" by "establishing fair and transparent rules in government"; maintaining "the ability of the US to enforce its trade laws, including antidumping laws"; and "commitments not to impose customs duties on digital software, music and video."

Bloomberg News (7/17, Martin) says the summary "turns into policy a pledge that Trump made repeatedly during the campaign, when he complained about unfair trade practices by America's rivals and vowed to tear up trade deals that weren't in the country's interests." The Detroit Free Press (7/17, Spangler) reports that while the summary "avoided threats such as those made by Trump to put in place steep tariffs against American auto companies moving or expanding operations in other North American countries," it "still made the case for renegotiating the agreement, saying, 'The America that existed when NAFTA was signed is not the America that we see today.'" The Los Angeles Times (7/17, Lee) says it "contained none of the harsh language or threats to pull out of NAFTA that marked Trump's rhetoric during the campaign and into his presidency," and many of the objectives "are vaguely stated, likely reflecting the administration's reluctance to make commitments that at this stage could make things more difficult politically and at the bargaining table."

The New York Times (7/17, Rappeport) reports that while the Administration claimed it wants a "much better deal for all Americans," some Democrats expressed disappointment "in the list of objectives and felt that the Trump administration was not going far enough." Politico (7/17, Palmer, Behsudi, Cassella) says House Democrats, "blasted the objectives as overly vague and said they made it seem as if the administration 'is only seeking to bevel the edges of a trade pact in need of an overhaul.'"

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (7/17) reports that Sen. Sherrod Brown, "a vocal critic of NAFTA, said he wants to see more details of the proposal and looks forward to discussing them with Lighthizer." Said Brown, "The real test will be whether President Trump puts American workers over corporate profits once negotiations begin. ... I will continue pressing the Administration to secure the best deal for Ohio workers." Rep. Marcy Kaptur said, "The President spoke a lot about trade issues on the campaign trail in Ohio and throughout the Midwest, and he promised a good deal for the American people. ... Our job in Congress is to make sure he follows through."

Media Analyses: Trump's "That's Politics!" Defense Of Son's Meeting Hurts White House.

President Trump's Monday morning tweet defending Donald Trump Jr.'s meeting with Russian figures during the presidential campaign is portrayed in coverage as both undermining the White House's efforts to move past the issue and as an unconvincing defense that is contrary to expert opinion. White House press secretary Sean Spicer's explanation of the meeting is also criticized as contrary to what emails released by Trump Jr. himself have shown to be the case.

ABC World News Tonight (7/17, story 2, 2:30, Muir) reported that the President "had major plans today to turn the page from the Russia investigation to 'Made in America.' But then he tweeted" about Trump Jr. "and that Russian meeting." ABC's Jonathan Karl: "Even as the President's aides try to shift the focus to American manufacturing, the President himself turned the subject right back to Russia, tweeting about his son's meeting with a Kremlin-connected Russian lawyer during the campaign." The CBS Evening News (7/17, story 4, 1:15, Mason) reported that the President "again defended the meeting his son, son-in-law, and campaign chairman had last year with a Russian attorney offering political dirt on Hillary Clinton."

The New York Times (7/17, Haberman) reports, "He ran on a promise to end politics as usual. But on Monday morning, President Trump posted a defense on Twitter of his son's meeting...was simply politics as usual." The President tweeted, "Most politicians would have gone to a meeting like the one Don jr attended in order to get info on an opponent. That's politics!" However, Politico (7/17, Conway) reports that "opposition researchers from both parties have contested Trump's claim that such activity is common or accepted practice." While campaigns "regularly seek out unflattering or compromising news stories about their opponents...experts said last week that accepting help from an adversarial foreign government is rare and a cause for concern."

Dana Bash said on CNN's Situation Room (7/17), "It's not politics. ... He is obviously fixated on putting this narrative out there that this is just business as usual. ... It is not business as usual." The Los Angeles Times (7/17) notes that "though Trump lauded his son's transparency, Trump Jr. only tweeted the emails after learning they would be published by the New York Times."

The Washington Times (7/17, Miller) briefly covers the tweet as well, while Rep. Will Hurd

(R-TX) said on CNN's The Lead (7/17), "I wouldn't have attended the meeting. ... The little bit of information that I have seen out in the press, I think they did believe that they were meeting with officials of the Russian government. But I'm going to withhold judgment." In a USA Today (7/17) op-ed, ACLU senior fellow Ellis Cose writes that while the President has insisted "on the presumption of innocence" for himself and his family, he "has rarely given that presumption to others."

Meanwhile, Bloomberg News (7/17, Olorunnipa) reports that Spicer said the meeting was about adoption policy for Russian children. Spicer told reporters, "There was nothing, as far as we know, that would lead anyone to believe that there was anything except for a discussion about adoption, the Magnitsky Act." Politico (7/17, Nussbaum) says that Spicer offered a "convoluted" defense, given that "emails released by Trump Jr. show that the meeting was planned with the intention of obtaining damaging information about Clinton." CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (7/17) said Spicer's explanation was "flat out false." Sen. Ron Wyden said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (7/17) that "it's hard to see how Spicer could say that with a straight face, because the subject line...makes it clear that it's private, that it's Russian, that it's confidential. That is not adoptions."

In the Washington Post (7/17) "The Fix," Aaron Blake looks at six defenses of the meeting, "each more dubious than the last," including the suggestion that 39-year-old Trump Jr. is "just a kid who should be given a pass," that it is not important because "it didn't yield any useful information," that "it's not collusion unless it's extensive or planned," and that the Secret Service did not stop the meeting from taking place. CNN's Situation Room (7/17) reported that the Secret Service said Sunday that it was not protecting Trump Jr. at the time, so it had no say. Sen. Chris Murphy said on CNN's Situation Room (7/17) that "blam[ing] the Secret Service for not vetting those people who went to that meeting" was an "act of desperation."

Christie On Meeting Story: "None Of It's Positive." USA Today (7/17, Racioppi) reports that during a 45-minute public appearance on Monday, Gov. Chris Christie said of the Trump Jr. story "that 'none of it's positive.'" However, he said that he "has been bothered by the quick conclusions people have drawn...when no formal determinations have been made in the ongoing investigation."

AP Analysis: Key Players' Attorneys Protecting Divergent Interests. The AP (7/17, Pace, Bykowicz) looks at the competing interests of attorneys hired by the President and other players in the Russia story, writing that "the interests of those lawyers – and their clients – don't always align, adding a new layer of drama and suspicion in a White House already rife with internal rivalries." With the President, Trump Jr., Jared Kushner, and others having retained counsel, "the result is a crowded group of high-priced attorneys bent on defending their own clients, even if it means elbowing those clients' colleagues."

WSJournal Says Trump's New Lawyer Should Release Everything On Russia. The Wall Street Journal (7/17) says in an editorial that one of the reasons President Trump defeated Clinton was because of the Clintons' history of scandal and obfuscation – and writes that the Trump White House risks following the same path. The Journal urges Trump's new lawyer Ty Cobb to release everything on Russia to the public before it can – and will – be leaked.

Elizabeth Drew Says Trump Scandals Could Be Worse Than Watergate. Politico Magazine (7/17) runs a piece by Susan Glasser headlined "Don't Compare Trump To Nixon. It's Unfair To Nixon." Glasser talks with reporter Elizabeth Drew, who documented President Nixon's downfall in her "Washington Journal." Drew said of President Trump, "I think we already have an obstruction of justice, certainly as an impeachable offense. ... [Trump] is a running crisis. The crisis is the President and his presidency." But she says Nixon "was smarter" than Trump, and "read books and cared about policy." She also "has come to believe that the Trump investigation could yield even more serious abuse of power or failure to execute the office than the years' worth of Nixon probes."

WPost Analysis: Mueller May Examine Kushner's "Evolving Disclosure Of Foreign Contacts." The Washington Post (7/17, Zapotosky) reports that special counsel Robert Mueller "is likely to be interested" in Kushner's "evolving disclosure of foreign contacts during the security clearance process, legal analysts said, and it is possible that the president's son-in-law could be in legal jeopardy for not fully detailing the interactions from the start." Kushner "has filed three updates to his national security questionnaire since submitting it in mid-January, according to people familiar with the matter. That is significant because the document...warns that those who submit false information could be charged with a federal crime and face up to five years in prison."

Sen. Chris Murphy said on CNN's Situation Room (7/17) that Kushner's security clearance should be "revoked immediately." Murphy argued that Kushner was either "holding information from his father-in-law, from every spokesman in the White House about being present in that meeting, or they knew about it and they were all lying." Sen. Richard Blumenthal told CNN's Situation Room (7/17) he also thinks Kushner's clearance should be revoked, saying, "What we have here is a signal at the highest levels of the Trump campaign, including Jared Kushner, that they were open to a compromising relationship, potentially in violation of federal criminal law. If it were anyone but Jared Kushner, the son-in-law of the President, he would be fired."

Flynn Has Returned To Childhood Hometown, Plans Legal Defense Fund. The AP (7/17, Smith, McDermott) reports that former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn has retreated to Middletown, Rhode Island, "the beach town where he grew up surfing and skateboarding." He has "spent recent weeks here surfing and figuring out his path forward, according to friends and family members." Bloomberg News (7/17, Pettypiece) reports that Flynn "plans to set up a fund to raise money to pay his legal bills stemming from multiple investigations into possible Trump campaign ties to Russia," according to a person close to him.

Manhattan DA Seeks Bank's Records On Loans To Manafort. The Wall Street Journal (7/17, Rothfeld) reports that the Manhattan district attorney's office has subpoenaed Federal Savings Bank regarding up to $16 million in loans made to ex-Trump campaign chair Paul Manafort. Neither the bank nor a Manafort spokesperson chose to comment.

Breitbart: Meeting Translator Worked For State Department While Clinton Was Secretary. Breitbart (7/17, Klein) reports that on Friday, the New York Times reported that "an individual named Anatoli Samachornov...was present at the meeting," but "did not provide any background on Samachornov beyond reporting his name and that he was a 'translator.'" However, according to his LinkedIn profile, he worked at a nonprofit group that worked with the State Department while Clinton was secretary of state. He "was listed as the program administrator for the State Department's International Visitor Leadership Program."

Rice Testimony Before House Intelligence Committee Postponed. Fox News (7/17) reports on its website that former National Security Adviser Susan Rice "is no longer expected to visit Capitol Hill on Tuesday for a meeting with the House committee probing allegations she 'unmasked' President Trump associates in Russian meddling probes." Rice was expected to appear before a closed-door session of the House Intelligence Committee, "but that session has apparently been postponed." CNN's Situation Room (7/17) reported that lawmakers are still likely to eventually question Rice.

McConnell Plans Clean ACA Repeal Vote After Defections Kill Latest GOP Bill.

In fast-moving events on Monday evening, Sens. Mike Lee and Jerry Moran announced their opposition to Senate Majority Leader McConnell's revised bill to replace the Affordable Care Act, and McConnell later said that the Senate will instead vote to repeal the ACA without a replacement – a strategy endorsed by President Trump. The AP (7/17) reports that McConnell said, "Regretfully, it is now apparent that the effort to repeal and immediately replace the failure of Obamacare will not be successful." He said the Senate will consider repealing the ACA after a two-year delay, but "is not saying when the vote will occur." The New York Post (7/17, Tacopino) reports that McConnell said the "delay would 'provide for a stable transition period to a patient-centered healthcare system.'"

David Nather of Axios (7/18) writes that a clean repeal is "highly unlikely to succeed, but conservative groups won't consider the GOP's health care promises to be fulfilled until Republicans have at least tried a straight repeal vote." Townhall (7/17, O'Brien) reports that "angry conservatives are letting the majority leader have it on Twitter" over the two-year delay. However, the Washington Post (7/17, A1, Sullivan, Bernstein) writes that the GOP "may be forced to grapple with the law's shift from a perennial GOP target to an accepted, even popular, provider of services and funding in many states, which could make further repeal revivals difficult."

At 10:17 p.m., after the two senators announced their opposition before McConnell's statement, the President tweeted, "Republicans should just REPEAL failing ObamaCare now & work on a new Healthcare Plan that will start from a clean slate. Dems will join in!" The Washington Examiner (7/17, Siegel) writes that his "call for Republicans to pursue a repeal before a replacement echoes a similar statement he made" on June 30, when he tweeted, "If Republican Senators are unable to pass what they are working on now, they should immediately REPEAL and then REPLACE at a later date." The Los Angeles Times (7/17, Mascaro, Levey) reports that a White House spokesperson said, "Inaction is not an option. We look forward to Congress continuing to work toward a bill the President can sign to end the Obamacare nightmare and restore quality care at affordable prices."

Politico (7/18, Dawsey) reports that the President "had no idea the statements [from Lee

and Moran] were coming," according to White House and congressional officials, and "his top aides were taken aback." But Trump "is fine" with a clean repeal, "said one White House aide – as 'long as something gets done.' To Trump, the Obamacare fight has always been about scoring a win. He doesn't care nearly as much about the specifics, people close to him say, and hasn't understood why legislators just won't make deals and bring something, anything, to his desk." The President "has privately wondered why legislators don't seem to listen to him, and the blow from Moran and Lee illustrated the limits of the president's capacity to master the art of the Washington deal."

Bloomberg News (7/17, Litvan, Dennis) reports that Moran "criticized the way the healthcare bill was written through a 'closed-door process' and said the Senate must 'start fresh' with open hearings and debate." Breitbart (7/17, Moran) reports that Lee said of the bill, "In addition to not repealing all of the Obamacare taxes, it doesn't go far enough in lowering premiums for middle class families; nor does it create enough free space from the most costly Obamacare regulations."

Sahil Kapur of Bloomberg News tweeted, "Mike Lee and Jerry Moran came out against BCRA at the exact same time. Sly move. Nobody wants to be #3 who sunk it." Nate Silver tweeted, "Gotta wonder if Lee & Moran took the plunge because: 1 – 10 or 12 senators hated the BCRA; 2 – They faced the least electoral risk of the 12." Dave Weigel of the Washington Post tweeted a GIF from the musical "Hamilton" with the lyric, "You don't have the votes."

Reuters (7/17, Holland, Cowan) reports that Sens. Susan Collins and Rand Paul had already announced their opposition, leaving McConnell short of 50 votes. The New York Times (7/17, A1, Kaplan) says the defections have the effect of "killing, for now, a seven-year-old promise to overturn" the ACA. The AP (7/17, Fram, Werner) reports that the opposition of Lee and Moran left the bill "fatally wounded."

USA Today (7/18, Singer) reports that Senate Minority Leader Schumer said, "This second failure of Trumpcare is proof positive that the core of this bill is unworkable. Rather than repeating the same failed, partisan process yet again, Republicans should start from scratch and work with Democrats on a bill that lowers premiums, provides long-term stability to the markets and improves our health care system."

Sen. Cory Booker tweeted, "Make no mistake – the failure of #Trumpcare is because so many of you spoke out against this cruel bill." Sen. Patty Murray tweeted, "#Trumpcare has been a failure since the start & it's now clearer than ever that writing a mean bill in secret is no way to get things done."

The Wall Street Journal (7/17, Peterson, Armour), McClatchy (7/17, Welsh), the Washington Times (7/17, Howell), the Washington Examiner (7/17, Siegel), and Politico (7/17, Everett, Haberkorn) also report on the collapse of the bill.

Before Collapse Of Bill, McCain's Return Was Key GOP Concern. All of these developments occurred well after the broadcast networks aired their newscasts. Their coverage focused on the health of Sen. John McCain, whose vote had been seen as crucial. ABC World News Tonight (7/17, story 4, 1:50, Muir) reported that McConnell had delayed a vote because of McCain's absence as he recovers from surgery to remove a blood clot. The CBS Evening News (7/17, story 8, 2:25, Mason) reported that McCain could be absent from Washington for at least a week. NBC Nightly News (7/17, story 3, 2:15, Holt) reported that Republicans feared an extended delay would give repeal opponents further time to organize. All three networks showed a clip of President Trump's remark about McCain: "We miss him. He's a crusty voice in Washington. Plus we need his vote." CBS' Anthony Mason said, "'A crusty voice.' That may be the nicest thing the President has said about John McCain."

USA Today (7/17, Estepa) reports that Diana Orrock, a Republican National Committee member from Nevada, favorably retweeted a Medium article that "called for the death" of McCain. Orrock later deleted the retweet.

Threatening Note Left At Heller Office In Nevada. Reuters (7/17, Simpson) reports that a threatening note was left at the Las Vegas office of Sen. Dean Heller over the weekend. Townhall (7/17, O'Brien) reports that the note "was from someone asserting that he would lose his health care if the key senator voted no and that he would die if that happened and would take Heller with him, a law enforcement source said."

Democrats Unified In Opposing Repeal, But Divided Over Single-Payer. The Washington Post (7/17, Weigel, Stein) reports that activists have been gearing up for continued action against repeal efforts. But McClatchy (7/17, Clark) reports that while Democrats "are showing uncommon unity" in fighting repeal, the party is divided over whether to back a single-payer system or to stick to more modest reforms.

WSJournal Analysis: Tax Reform Could Unite GOP Factions Divided By Healthcare Fight.

The Wall Street Journal (7/17, Seib) reports in an analysis that while the healthcare debate is dividing the three philosophical camps inside the Republican Party – which it identifies as the populists/nationalists, the movement conservatives and the Wall Street/establishment conservatives – tax reform could serve to unite those factions.

House Budget Panel To Mark Up Fiscal 2018 Budget Resolution Wednesday.

Roll Call (7/17, Staff) reports House Majority Leader McCarthy confirmed last week that the House Budget Committee “has scheduled its markup of the fiscal 2018 budget resolution for Wednesday at 10 a.m.”

NYTimes Analysis: Democrats “Perfect Art Of Delay” Over Trump Nominees.

The New York Times (7/17, Hulse) reports that when Senate Democrats in 2013 “drastically weakened the ability to filibuster presidential nominees,” a “new kind of delaying tactic was born, one meant not to block a particular nominee but to snarl the Senate and limit the number of people who can get confirmation votes.” The barrier, “as employed by both parties, is at the heart of an escalating fight over the pace of confirmations” for Trump appointees. The Times says that “because of their 2013 change, Democrats cannot indefinitely block nominees,” but they can “prolong the process to an excruciating degree.” In fact, Republicans “calculate that at the current rate, it would take 11 years and four months to fill all possible Trump administration spots.” Citing the same statistic, the Washington Examiner (7/17, Ferrechio) reports that “many of the nominees delayed by Democrats passed easily and with bipartisan support, calling into question the motive behind the delays.”

A separate New York Times (7/17, Yourish, Aisch) piece, however, says President Trump “has filled far fewer top jobs in cabinet or cabinet-level agencies than President Barack Obama had at this point in his presidency” because Trump has been “exceptionally slow in nominating people to serve in leadership positions below the secretary level.” According to a New York Times analysis, Trump has announced “36 percent of these positions, compared with 78 percent for Mr. Obama over the same period.”

NYTimes Analysis: America’s Decaying Infrastructure Problem Extends To Antarctica.

The New York Times (7/17, Gillis, Corum) reports that McMurdo Station, America’s research station on Antarctica, is “one of the glories of American science” as the “main hub for the most ambitious Antarctic research program run by any nation.” However, it faces material challenges in that the National Science Foundation has decided the inefficient, aging buildings must be replaced, and there is only one 40-year-old ice-breaking vessel in the US Coast Guard able to deliver supplies. When the boat soon goes in for repairs, the station will operate with a “skeleton” crew for more than a year. The Times says that the predicament “can be seen as an extension of the national infrastructure crisis that President Trump ran for office vowing to fix.” The Times also reports on the history, personnel, and layout of McMurdo.

Former Trump Adviser: Administration Is Bringing Reform To EPA Science Boards.

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (7/17), former Trump EPA transition team adviser Steve Milloy writes that the Administration’s decision in June not to renew the appointments of 38 additional EPA advisers did not demonstrate a so-called war on science but instead served as a much-needed conflict-of-interest reform for the agency’s advisory boards. Milloy argues that the Obama Administration filled the EPA’s two most prominent boards of outside advisers, the Science Advisory Board and the Clean Air Scientific Advisory Committee, with individuals from consulting firms and activist groups, many of whom are now agency grantees and favor more stringent environmental regulation, while appointing very few individuals with industry background. Milloy concludes that EPA Administrator Pruitt and the Administration, by not renewing certain EPA adviser appointments, are reaffirming the independence of the agency’s science advisory committees.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“A Brighter Future For Electric Cars And The Planet.” In an editorial, the New York Times (7/18, Board) calls the “slew of recent” electric car technology advancements “heartening” and a sign of "real promise." The Times says that the "potential environmental benefits of electric vehicles are huge," and adds that despite facing some challenges, the technology has "caught on much faster than was thought likely just a few years ago." The Times laments the fossil fuel industry in the US "will no doubt try to sabotage the electric car revolution," and "President Trump and Republican leaders in Congress" have "made clear that they do not see climate change as a major threat." Nonetheless, the Times concludes, opponents of the technology should know "that the most they can do is slow down the process" because electric vehicles have "already left the garage."

"In Congress, Obstructionists Are Obstructing Themselves." A New York Times (7/18, Board) editorial says Republican legislative leaders "appear to have failed for now in their goal of destroying the Affordable Care Act," but "their eagerness to shower tax breaks on the wealthy at the expense of health coverage for millions of Americans has cramped their ability to pass other fiscal legislation." The Times says "it is a stunning demonstration of incompetence that, with control of the House, the Senate and the White House for six months, Republicans have not only failed to enact any major bills but have also created a legislative logjam that is bound to get worse" in September, when "lawmakers will have less than a month to pass budget bills before the 2018 fiscal year begins on Oct. 1" or "risk a government shutdown." The Times says at least this time Republicans are "obstructing themselves, a good thing since it may limit their ability to do harm."

Washington Post.

"More Than 20 Million People Are At Risk Of Starving To Death. Will The World Step Up?" In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/17) argues that the international community and the United States need to offer more humanitarian aid to assist the 20 million people that are at risk of starvation from famine in Somalia, Yemen, Nigeria, and South Sudan in the coming months. The Post says that, although the US has responded "relatively generously" to UN appeals, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported that only 43 percent of the $6.27 billion needed has been raised. The Post also contends that public awareness is "still lagging" and accuses the Defense Department of "helping to exacerbate the crisis" by backing "a misguided military intervention led by Saudi Arabia that has choked imports of food and medicine."

"The Latest Nativist Trump Proposals Would Actually Hurt American Institutions." The Washington Post (7/17) in an editorial says the decision to increase the number of H-2B visas, mentioning that President Trump has used them "at his golf resorts in Florida and other properties," is, "in an administration that has led the chant to 'Hire American'...a welcome sign that reality can trump sloganeering." But, says the Post, the Administration is also considering "proposals to reassess procedures for foreign students already studying at U.S. colleges and universities and for visa-seekers overseas who would visit, work or seek refuge here." The Post says these are a result of "fear, nativism and the use of national security as a pretext for indulging xenophobia."

"With Her Shelter Plan, Bowser Is Succeeding Where Other DC Mayors Have Failed." In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/17) expresses support for DC Mayor Muriel E. Bowser's decision to replace the "decrepit" housing facility in the former DC General Hospital with six family homeless shelters, the first of which is now under construction. The Post also praises Mayor Bower for overcoming "opposition, personal attacks and other obstacles" to building the housing centers and for keeping her campaign promise to seek to close DC General.

Wall Street Journal.

"The Trumps And The Truth." The Wall Street Journal (7/17) argues in an editorial that with special counsel Robert Mueller and the House and Senate intelligence committees investigating the Russia matter, any material that is potentially damaging to the Trumps will come out. The Journal calls on lawyer Ty Cobb, who is managing Trump's Russia defense, to release everything before it is inevitably leaked.

"Lula And Brazil's Progress." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/17) argues that the ongoing anti-corruption campaign in Brazil that has resulted in the impeachment of previous President Dilma Rousseff, the indictment of current President Michael Temer, and the conviction last week of former President and current presidential candidate Lula da Silva indicates a positive trend of reform, The Journal adds, however, that Lula's conviction may present Brazil's rule of law its biggest challenge and contends that, should Lula win re-election in 2018, the sentence and legal appeal would be suspended until the end of his four-year term, truncating the gains made against corruption by Brazil's rising independent judiciary.

"America's Summer Labor Shortage." The Wall Street Journal (7/17) in an editorial says that the number of H-2B visas being added is insufficient given the tighter labor markets and low unemployment in many states. The Journal says the jobs generally have good pay but are seasonal and that causes few Americans to seek them. It also says teens who used to fill such jobs are now more likely to spend summers volunteering or studying.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Two More GOP Senators Oppose Healthcare Bill
US Companies Have A New 401\(k\) Fix: Spend More
Unable To Buy US Military Drones, Allies Place Orders With China
Netflix Surprises With Big Subscriber Gains, Shares Soar

New York Times:

Healthcare Overhaul Collapses As Two Republican Senators Defect
The Cost Of A Hot Economy In California: A Severe Housing Crisis
South Korea Proposes Military Talks With North At Their Border
Trump Says He Has Signed More Bills Than Any President, Ever, He Hasn't.
As Paperwork Goes Missing, Private Student Loan Debts May Be Wiped Away

Washington Post:

Treasury Chief Hurtles Toward Fiasco
US To Let In 15,000 Foreign Workers
Some District High Schools Didn't Record Suspensions
An Eclipse Chaser's Total Commitment
Defections May End Health Overhaul

Financial Times:

Davis Returns From Brexit Talks After Lightning Trip
KKR Positions Successors To Kravis And Roberts
China GDP Growth Points To 2017 Rebound
China's Railway Diplomacy Hits The Buffers

Washington Times:

Russia Election Meddling Controversy Swinging Past Voters In Swing States
Trump's Approval Ratings Break Traditional Ties To Economy, Policy Vs. Personality Trend
GOP Health Care Bill Dies In Senate After More Republicans Announce Opposition
Cousins, Redskins Miss Deadline For Long-Term Deal
Zero-Calorie Sugar Substitutes Linked To Weight Gain, Health Problems
To Undercut Iran, Russians Pressure Assad To Cut Syria's Longtime Ties To Hezbollah

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Minneapolis-Police Violence; Trump-Russia Meddling; WH-Made In America Week; Healthcare Reform Bill-McCain; Arizona Flash Flood; Weather Forecast; London Child-US Treatment; OJ Simpson Parole Hearing; US Visa Changes; Indiana-Murder Mystery; Dallas Police Violence Trial; Tampa-Sinkhole; Artificial Sweeteners-Weight; Martin Landau Dies; Dog Saves Deer.

CBS: Arizona Flash Flood; Dallas Police Violence Trial; Minneapolis-Police Violence; Trump-Russia Meddling; WH-Made In America Week; US Visa Changes; Afghanistan-US Deployment; Healthcare Reform Bill-McCain; Martin Landau Dies; Afghan Teens-US Robot Competition.

NBC: Minneapolis-Police Violence; Arizona Flash Flood; Healthcare Reform Bill-McCain; WH-Made In America Week; OJ Simpson Parole Hearing; Indiana-Murder Mystery; Amazon-Meal Delivery Service; Martin Landau Dies; British Royals Visit Poland; Dog Saves Deer; Adopted Ballerina.

Network TV At A Glance:

Minneapolis-Police Violence – 7 minutes, 10 seconds
Healthcare Reform Bill-McCain – 6 minutes, 30 seconds

Arizona Flash Flood – 6 minutes, 30 seconds
WH-Made In America Week – 5 minutes, 10 seconds
Trump-Russia Meddling – 3 minutes, 45 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Healthcare Reform Bill; Minneapolis-Police Violence; Atlanta-Restaurant Roof Collapse; Gasoline Price.

CBS: Healthcare Reform Bill; Iran Nuclear Deal; Iran-American Captive; Minneapolis-Police Violence; Bering Sea Earthquake; Wall Street News.

FOX: Healthcare Reform Bill; Iran Nuclear Deal-Trump; Minneapolis-Police Violence.

NPR: Healthcare Reform Bill; Iran Nuclear Deal; China-Political Shake Off; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Speaks with Sultan Qaboos bin Said al Said of Oman by telephone.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers the keynote address at the National Retail Federation's annual Retail Advocates Summit; participates in a life insurers roundtable.

US Senate: 9:00 AM Senate Finance Committee hearing on tax reform – Hearing on 'Comprehensive Tax Reform: Prospects and Challenges', with testimony from former Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury for Tax Policy Mark Mazur, Pamela Olson, Eric Solomon, and Jonathan Talisman Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://finance.senate.gov>

9:30 AM Senate Armed Services Committee considers reappointing Joint Chiefs vice chairman – Nominations hearing considers Gen. Paul Selva for reappointment to the grade of general and reappointment to be Joint Chiefs of Staff Vice Chairman Location: Rm G50, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Callista Gingrich to be U.S. Ambassador to the Holy See; Nathan Alexander Sales to be Coordinator for Counterterrorism, with the rank and status of Ambassador at Large; George Edward Glass to be U.S. Ambassador to Portugal; and Carl Risch to be Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers J. Paul Compton, Jr. to be Department of Housing and Urban Development General Counsel; Anna Farias to be Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity; Neal Rackleff to be Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for Community Planning and Development; Richard Ashooh to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration; Elizabeth Erin Walsh to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Global Markets and United States and Foreign Commercial Service Director General; and Christopher Campbell to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Financial Institutions Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:30 AM Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing on U.S. and North American energy and resource security – Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources hearing to examine the status and outlook for U.S. and North American energy and resource security, with testimony from International Energy Agency Executive Director Dr Fatih Birol; American Security Project CEO Brig. Gen. Stephen Cheney; American Nuclear Society President Robert Coward; Carmot Strategic Group Principal Dan McGroarty; Manhattan Institute Senior Fellow Mark Mills; and Boston Consulting Group Center for Energy Impact Senior Director Jamie Webster Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

10:30 AM Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup hearing – Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year 2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 124, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

11:00 AM Nominations hearing considers David Kautter to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Tax Policy Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://finance.senate.gov>

2:00 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Energy and Water Development Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year 2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 138, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:30 PM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearing on 'The Four Famines' – Multilateral International Development, Multilateral Institutions, and International Economic, Energy, and Environmental Policy Subcommittee hearing on 'The Four Famines': Root Causes and a Multilateral Action Plan', with testimony from USAID Office of Food for Peace Acting Director Matthew Nims; World Food Programme Executive Director David Beasley; United Nations Children's Fund Deputy Executive Director for Partnerships Justin Forsyth; International Committee of the Red Cross Director of Operations Dominik Stillhart; Mercy Corps South Sudan Director Dr Deepmala Mahla; and Refugees International President Eric Schwartz Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Senate Armed Services Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers John Gibson II to be Department of Defense Deputy Chief Management Officer; Ellen Lord to be Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics; Lucian Niemeyer to be Assistant Secretary of Defense for Energy, Installations and Environment; and Matthew Donovan to be Under Secretary of the Air Force Location: Rm G50, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

4:00 PM Senate Armed Services subcommittee hearing on a 355-ship U.S. Navy – Seapower Subcommittee hearing on 'Options and Considerations for Achieving a 355-ship Navy from Former Reagan Administration Officials', with testimony from former Secretary of the Navy John Lehman, Jr.; former Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Shipbuilding and Logistics Everett Pyatt; and former Office of Management and Budget Associate Director for National Security and International Affairs William Schneider, Jr. Location: Rm 222, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

US House: 10:00 AM Hearing on 'The Next Farm Bill: Pathways to Success for SNAP Households' Location: Rm 1300, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://agriculture.house.gov/>

10:00 AM Trade Subcommittee hearing on 'Modernization of the North American Free Trade Agreement' Location: Rm 1100, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://waysandmeans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/WaysandMeansGOP>

10:00 AM House Transportation subcommittee hearing on FAST Act implementation – Highways and Transit Subcommittee hearing on 'FAST Act Implementation: Improving the Safety of the Nation's Roads', with testimony from Federal Highway Administration Acting Deputy Administrator Walter Waidelich, Jr.; Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration Deputy Administrator Daphne Jefferson; National Highway Traffic Safety Administration Acting Deputy Administrator Jack Danielson; and National Transportation Safety Board member T. Bella Dinh-Zarr Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>

10:00 AM House Space subcommittee hearing on Mars Rover 2020 and Europa Clipper planetary missions – Space Subcommittee hearing on 'Planetary Flagship Missions: Mars Rover 2020 and Europa Clipper', with testimony from NASA Science Mission Directorate Planetary Science Division Director Dr Jim Green; Mars Rover 2020 Project Scientist Dr Kenneth Farley (California Institute of Technology); Europa Clipper Project Scientist Dr Robert Pappalardo (California Institute of Technology); NASA Psyche Mission Principal Investigator Dr Linda Elkins-Tanton (Arizona State University); and National Academy of Sciences Committee on Astrobiology and Planetary Science Co-Chair Dr William McKinnon Location: Rm 2318, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM House Natural Resources subcommittee latest oversight hearing on 'federal natural resources laws gone astray' – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee oversight hearing on 'Examining Impacts of Federal Natural Resources Laws Gone Astray, Part II', with testimony from Portland, OR, resident Patty Brandt; American University Washington College of Law Professor Amanda Leiter; Atchley Hardin Lane's Dr Amos Loveday; and International Association of Geophysical Contractors President Nikki Martin Location: Rm 1324, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Financial Services subcommittee hearing on 'the cost of being a public company' – Capital Markets, Securities, and Investment Subcommittee hearing on 'The Cost of Being a Public Company in Light of Sarbanes-Oxley and the Federalization of Corporate Governance', with testimony from NYSE Group President Thomas Farley; aTyr Pharma Senior Vice President of Finance John Blake; U.S. Chamber of Commerce Center for Capital Market Competitiveness Executive Vice President Thomas Quaadman; University of Denver Sturm College of Law Corporate and Commercial Law Program Director J. Robert Brown, Jr.; and Competitive Enterprise Institute Senior Fellow John Berlau Location: Rm 2128, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM House Education Committee hearing on ESSA implementation – Hearing on ‘ESSA Implementation: Exploring State and Local Reform Efforts’, with testimony from Government Accountability Office Director of K-12 Education Jacqueline Nowicki; Dysart Unified School District (AZ) Superintendent Dr Gail Pletnick; Alliance for Excellent Education Vice President of Policy Development and Government Relations Phillip Lovell; and Mississippi Department of Education State Superintendent Dr Carey Wright Location: Rm 2175, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://edworkforce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/EdWorkforce>

10:00 AM House Energy subcommittee hearing on the state of the electric industry – Energy Subcommittee hearing on ‘Powering America: Examining the State of the Electric Industry through Market Participant Perspectives’, with testimony from Duke Energy Corporation Senior Vice President of State and Federal Regulatory Legal Support Alex Glenn; NextEra Energy Executive Vice President for Federal Regulatory Affairs Joseph Kelliher; Public Service Enterprise Group Executive Vice President and General Counsel Tamara Linde; American Municipal Power Senior Vice President and General Counsel for Regulatory Affairs Lisa McAlister; Old Dominion Electric Cooperative President and CEO Jackson Reasor; EnerNOC Vice President of Regulatory and Government Affairs Ken Schisler; and Calpine Corporation Senior Vice President of Government and Regulatory Affairs Steven Schleimer Location: Rm 2123, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:15 AM House Commerce subcommittee hearing on HRSA oversight of the 340B Drug Pricing Program – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on ‘Examining HRSA’s Oversight of the 340B Drug Pricing Program’, with testimony from Department of Health and Human Services Assistant Inspector General for Evaluation and Inspections Erin Bliss; Government Accountability Office Director of Health Care Debbie Draper; and Health Resources and Services Administration Office of Pharmacy Affairs Director Capt. Krista Pedley Location: Rm 2322, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:30 AM Markup hearing on ‘FY2018 Homeland Security Appropriations Bill’ and ‘FY2018 Interior Appropriations Bill’ Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2359, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

10:30 AM House Administration Committee latest hearing on the Government Publishing Office – Hearing on ‘Transforming GPO for the 21st Century and Beyond: Part 2’, with testimony from Government Publishing Office Director Davita Vance-Cooks Location: Rm 1310, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://cha.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAdmnGOP>

12:00 PM House debates Ozone Standards Implementation Act – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including ‘H.R. 806 – Ozone Standards Implementation Act of 2017’, plus consideration of ‘H.R. 2786 – To amend the Federal Power Act with respect to the criteria and process to qualify as a qualifying conduit hydropower facility’, ‘H.R. 2828 – To extend the deadline for commencement of construction of a hydroelectric project’, and ‘H.R. 3050 – Enhancing State Energy Security Planning and Emergency Preparedness Act of 2017’ under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

2:00 PM House Workforce Committee members host panel discussion on hiring opportunity youth – House Education & the Workforce Committee members host bipartisan panel discussion with business leaders, advocates, and youth on the return on investing in opportunity youth, barriers to hiring opportunity youth, and employer-led solutions to youth unemployment. Participants include Opportunity Nation Executive Director Monique Rizer, Gap Executive Director of Community Leadership Gail Gershon, former Opportunity Youth and YearUp alumnus Taj Jackson, FSG Impact Hiring Initiative Executive Director Nicole Trimble, and Starbucks Global Social Impact Opportunity Youth Director Lt. Col. (Ret.) David Oclander Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2261, Washington, DC <http://edworkforce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/EdWorkforce>

2:00 PM House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on the Global Food Security Act – Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations Subcommittee hearing on ‘Implementing the Global Food Security Act’, with testimony from Acting U.S. Special Representative for Global Food Security Theodore Lyng; USAID Bureau for Food Security Administrator’s Assistant Dr Beth Dunford; and U.S. African Development Foundation President and CEO C.D. Glin Location: Rm 2172, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC

<http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

2:00 PM House Financial Services subcommittee hearing on terrorism, remittances, and money transfers – Terrorism and Illicit Finance Subcommittee hearing on ‘Managing Terrorism Financing Risk in Remittances and Money Transfers’, with testimony from Western Union Senior Vice President and Global Head of Financial Crimes Compliance Duncan DeVillie; Remitly President and CEO Matthew Oppenheimer; Foundation for the Defense of Democracies Center on Sanctions and Illicit Finance Board of Advisors member John Cassara; and Oxfam America Chief Humanitarian Policy Advisor Scott Paul Location: Rm 2128, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

2:00 PM House Natural Resources subcommittee oversight hearing on onshore oil and gas development in Alaska – Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee oversight hearing on ‘Promoting Onshore Oil and Gas Development in Alaska’, with testimony from International Brotherhood of Teamsters Local 959 Alaska Vice President Gary Dixon; Arctic Slope Regional Corporation Executive Vice President for Lands & Natural Resources Richard Glenn; and ConocoPhillips Alaska Vice President for External Affairs & Transportation Scott Jepsen Location: Rm 1324, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

3:00 PM House Dems host forum on voting rights and privacy under the Presidential Commission on Election Integrity – Congressional Black Caucus and House Committee on the Judiciary Democrats host forum on voting rights and privacy concerns related to recent requests made by Presidential Commission on Election Integrity Co-chair Kansas Secretary of State Kris Kobach, held ahead of the Commission’s first meeting tomorrow. Participants include CBC Chair Democratic Rep. Cedric Richmond, House Committee on the Judiciary Ranking Member John Conyers, and other Members of Congress, while panel features Kentucky Secretary of State Alison Lundergan-Grimes, Connecticut Secretary of State Denise Merrill, Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights’ Wade Henderson, Electronic Privacy Information Center’ Marc Rotenberg, Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law’s Kristen Clarke, and NAACP Legal Defense Fund Associate Director Counsel Janai Nelson Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2247, Washington, DC <https://cbc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/OfficialCBC>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 218, the King Cove Road Land Exchange Act’, ‘H.R. 2910, the Promoting Interagency Coordination for Review of Natural Gas Pipelines Act’, and ‘H.R. 2883, the Promoting Cross-Border Energy Infrastructure Act’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 8:00 AM Christians United for Israel Summit continues – Christians United for Israel Annual Washington Summit continues, with day two agenda including ‘View from the Hill’, with Republicans Sens. Joni Ernst and John Cornyn and Reps. Trent Franks, Louie Gohmert and Doug Lamborn, and the Donor Appreciation Banquet, with President’s Deputy Assistant Sebastian Gorka and Israeli Knesset Member Avi Dichter Location: Walter E. Washington Convention Center, 801 Mount Vernon Place NW, Washington, DC www.cufi.org/site/PageServer?pagename=2017Summit_Register <https://twitter.com/CUFI>

8:00 AM ISS R&D Conference continues – Annual International Space Station Research and Development Conference continues, with speakers today Democratic Sen. Gary Peters, Republican Rep. Brian Babin and NASA Astronaut Kate Rubins Location: Omni Shoreham Hotel, 2500 Calvert St NW, Washington, DC <http://www.astronautical.org/> <https://twitter.com/astrosociety>

8:20 AM The Hill hosts discussion on mental health policy at the federal, state, and local level – The Hill hosts ‘The State of Mental Health Care: Challenges and Solutions’ discussion, with Virginia Governor Terry McAuliffe and Republican Rep. Leonard Lance speaking on mental health policy at the federal, state, and local level, and the impact on patients and caregivers. Other speakers include Janssen Pharmaceuticals Central Nervous System President Michelle Wang Goodridge, McClendon Center Executive Director Dennis Hobb, Council of State Governments Justice Center Health Services and Systems Policy Director Fred Osher, mental health advocate Teresa Pasquini, National Council for Behavioral Health President and CEO Linda Rosenberg, Treatment Advocacy Center Executive Director John Snook, and American Psychiatric Association President-elect Dr Altha Stewart Location: Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC thehill.com <https://twitter.com/TheHillEvents> #StateofMH

9:00 AM Justice Action Network’s ‘Women Unshackled’ forum – The Justice Action Network hosts the ‘Women Unshackled’ forum, focusing on the ‘exploding number of women entering the criminal justice system’. Speakers include Democratic Sens. Kamala Harris and Cory Booker, Republican Rep. Mia Love, and Oklahoma Governor Mary Fallin Location: Newseum, 555

Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, Washington, DC www.justiceactionnetwork.org
<https://twitter.com/usjusticeaction>

9:00 AM Energy Secretary Perry and IEA head hold joint press conference – Secretary of Energy Rick Perry and International Energy Agency Executive Director Dr Fatih Birol hold joint press conference, discussing topics including ‘the critical role the U.S. plays in international energy’, ‘how the American shale revolution will provide energy security for not only the U.S. but also its trading partners and allies’, and ‘the centrality of the U.S. when it comes to global energy markets and energy security’ Location: The National Press Club, 529 14th St NW, Washington, DC www.energy.gov <https://twitter.com/ENERGY>

11:30 AM GOP Rep. Thomas Massie speaks at Heritage Foundation on modernizing the aviation system – Republican Rep. Thomas Massie speaks at the Heritage Foundation on ‘Cleared for Takeoff – How Pro-Market Reforms Can Modernize Our Aviation System’, followed by discussion with Right Turn Strategies President Chris Barron, Cato Institute Tax Policy Studies Director Chris Edwards, and Airlines for America Legislative and Regulatory Policy Vice President Jarrod Thompson Location: The Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org <https://twitter.com/Heritage>

7:30 PM Embassy of Afghanistan honors all-girl robotics team at reception – Embassy of Afghanistan hosts reception to honor Afghanistan’s all-girl robotics team, after the closing ceremonies of the FIRST Global International Robotics Competition. Event features a videotaped message from Afghan President Ashraf Ghani, and Amb. Hamdullah Mohib presenting awards to the girls Location: Embassy of Afghanistan, 2341 Wyoming Ave NW, Washington, DC www.embassyofafghanistan.org

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “ I don’t know if you heard the White House kicked off Made in America Week, dedicated to products made in the USA, which is funny that almost none of the products the Trump family sells are made in the USA. Donald Trump’s wife is not even made in the USA.”

Jimmy Kimmel: “Polls say President Trump’s approval rating is the lowest since 1947. Thirty-six percent still seems high to me. Some say they don’t care what he does. He would have to eat Kentucky fried bald eagle and wipe his face on a Confederate flag to go below 36 percent.”

Trevor Noah: “So last Thursday, the new healthcare bill came out, and much like last night’s ‘Game of Thrones.’ We were all anxiously awaiting to see how many people it would kill off and also if it would include Ed Sheeran for no good reason. And spoiler alert, healthcare winter is coming.”

Trevor Noah: “Basically, the Republicans created a bizarre lottery where everybody is waiting to find out how much they will lose.”

Trevor Noah: “Up to this plan, insurers have been pretty quiet about the Trump healthcare plan, but as soon as Ted Cruz chimed in, they were all, like, ‘This is the worst possible idea! We didn’t read it, but when we read his name, had to speak up.’”

Jimmy Fallon: “Did you see that last week, Trump’s son Don Jr. tweeted screenshots from the Russia lawyer who offered sensitive info to his dad’s campaign? When he heard that his son tweeted about an ongoing investigation, Trump was like, ‘The student has become the master.’”

Seth Meyers: “President Trump attended the US Women’s Open Golf Tournament this weekend, so just to be safe, the golfers got changed in their cars.”

Seth Meyers: “Meanwhile, the Russia scandal’s engulfed the White House after last week’s bombshell revelation that Trump’s son, Donald Trump Jr., met with a woman described as a Russian government attorney... One Trump ally called it a ‘category five hurricane,’ and White House officials said, ‘This is “Sum of all Fears” stuff. What we’ve all been dreading.’ Maybe you’ve been dreading it, but the rest of us have been waiting for it like the new season of ‘Game of Thrones.’”

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, July 25, 2017
Date: Tuesday, July 25, 2017 7:02:07 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, JULY 25, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Associated Press: Senate Approves Nominee For No. 2 At Interior.
- Daily Caller: Trump's Interior Dept To Chop Months Off How Long It Takes To Get An Oil Drilling Permit.
- Washington Post: Senate Democrats Call For An Investigation Of Climate Scientist Whistleblower Complaint.
- E&E Daily: Marathon Markup To Tackle 21 Land, Renewable Energy Bills.
- Daily Caller: Alaskans Want Feds To Stop Micromanaging Alaska Wildlife By Protecting Predators.
- E&E Publishing: Industry Lawyers Track Trump Admin's Evolving Policy Changes.
- Washington Post: Most Presidents Rely On Expertise. Trump Treats Experts Like The Enemy.

- Durango (CO) Herald: Every Kid Outdoors.
- NMPolitics (NM): Give The Public Access To Public Land.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- House Approves Changes To Casino Gambling Compact.
- 10th Circ. Stays Firm On DOI Tribal Gambling Reg Ruling.
- Gov't Insists It's Immune From Cherokees' Trust Suit.
- Ute Tribe Pulls Out Of Summit, Citing Issues About Treatment.
- Zuckerberg Meets Native American Poverty.

Bureau Of Land Management

- The Hill: Interior Department Announces Plan To Gut Federal Fracking Regulations.
- Allentown (PA) Morning Call: Helium Legislation Supported By Air Products Takes First Step Forward.
- Duluth (MN) News Tribune: Range Hosts Mining Hearing Tuesday.
- Prescott (AZ) Daily Courier: Deadline Extended On Kirkland Mine.
- Denver Post: Keep Oil And Gas Away From Dinosaur National Monument.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Keene (NH) Sentinel: Some Local Reservations In Wildlife Refuge's Plans For Expansion.
- U.S. News & World Report: Search On For Jumping Mouse As Some Seek To End Protections.
- Lewis-Clark Valley DailyFLY (WA): Protest Tomorrow In Lewiston Over Use Of "Cyanide Bombs" To Eradicate Wild Animals.
- Green Bay (WI) Press-Gazette: Sturgeon Bay Man Honored By Great Lakes Fishery.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Report: Florida Park Official Inappropriately Touched Worker.
- Auburn (NY) Citizen: Gillibrand Eyes Study To Establish Finger Lakes As National Heritage Area.
- NPR: Olympic National Park Targeting Mountain Goats For Removal.
- Washington Post: Part Of Beach Drive Will Reopen Next Month With New Road And Trail.
- KGO-TV San Francisco: Proposed Rule Aims To Ban Unleashed Dogs In Parts Of Bay Area.
- WNEP-TV Scranton (PA): Loaner Life Vest Program In The Poconos.
- WJCL-TV Savannah (GA): National Park Service Hosts Public Forums On Reconstruction-era National Monument.
- Daily Mail: Mesa Verde National Park Visitors Are Stealing Charcoal.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Virgin Islands Daily News: Mapp Seeks Assistance From Washington.
- Virgin Islands Daily News: DPNR Gets Federal Funds To Study Red Algae.

Top National News

- CBS: Trump: GOP Must Fulfill "Solemn Promise" To Repeal And Replace ACA.
- Associated Press: Kushner Meets With Senate Intel Panel, Says There Was No Collusion With Russia.
- Washington Times: Trump Reportedly Considering Replacements For "Beleaguered" Sessions.
- USA Today: USAToday Analysis: Border Wall Will Take Time, Be Expensive.
- Associated Press: Fed Likely To Discuss Low Inflation, But Rate Increase Unlikely.
- Washington Examiner: Trump Infrastructure Panel Will Focus On Energy Projects.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Democrats' Agenda, And The Art Of The Possible."
 - "Poland Pulls Back From The Brink, For Now."
 - "A Terrorism Trial In The Federal Courts."
- Washington Post.
 - "Congress's Drastic – But Necessary – Rebuke To Trump."
 - "Are Democrats Offering 'A Better Deal?' Not So Fast."
 - "Every Republican Healthcare Plan So Far Would Cause Great Harm To The Nation."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Can Republicans Govern?"

- "Farewell, Charlie Gard."
- "The Kushner Statement."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Senate Approves Nominee For No. 2 At Interior.

The AP (7/24) reports that the Senate in a vote of 53-43 on Monday confirmed David Bernhardt, a lawyer and former Interior Department official, as deputy Interior secretary. Democrats criticized Bernhardt "saying he continued to advise a California water district even after he withdrew his formal registration as a lobbyist last year." But Republicans "called Bernhardt a capable lawyer with vast experience in issues important to the West, including endangered species, water use and development of public lands."

The Hill (7/24, Henry) reports that "Bernhardt has defended his recusal standard, saying it's in line with the terms established for other officials." At his confirmation hearing in May, Bernhardt said, "If I get a whiff of something coming ... that involves a former client or my firm, I will make that item go straight to the ethics office and whatever they decide, that will be it for me." He said, "I have signed the exact same agreements my predecessors have, and I will stand by that."

The Los Angeles Times (7/24, Boxall) reports that in a statement Monday, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said: "Finally, after months of waiting for confirmation in the Senate, I'm excited to welcome David Bernhardt back to the department." Zinke said, "David's extensive experience serving under previous Interior secretaries, his esteemed legal career, and down-right love of our land and resources is exactly what is needed to help streamline government and make the Interior and our public lands work for the American economy."

Additional coverage was provided by Bloomberg BNA (7/24), CNN (7/24, Hauck), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/24, Fears), the Denver \(CO\) Post (7/24, Paul), and the Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (7/25, Webb).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Beloit \(WI\) Daily News (7/24), the Scottsbluff \(NE\) Star-Herald (7/24), the Seattle \(WA\) Post-Intelligencer (7/24), the Daily Mail (7/24), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/24), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/24, Press), U.S. News & World Report (7/24), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/24), the New Canaan \(CT\) News (7/24, Daly), the Fort Wayne \(IN\) Journal-Gazette (7/24, Daly), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (7/24, Daly), the Maysville \(KY\) Ledger Independent (7/24, Daly), the Seattle \(WA\) Post-Intelligencer (7/24, Daly), and U.S. News & World Report (7/24, Daly).

Trump's Interior Dept To Chop Months Off How Long It Takes To Get An Oil Drilling Permit.

The Daily Caller (7/24, Bastasch) reports that the Interior Department "plans on cutting wait times for oil and natural gas drilling permits on public lands to just 30 days, according to a senior agency official." Vincent DeVito, energy policy adviser to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, said, "We do want to shrink it down to 30 days and to make all the processes as short as possible, but at the same time, making sure our environmental stewardship is not breached, all of which is completely doable." DeVito said, "We intend to be a better business partner by harmonizing the environmental review process across the board, the one-stop-shopping type of model."

Senate Democrats Call For An Investigation Of Climate Scientist Whistleblower Complaint.

The Washington Post (7/24, Eilperin) reports that "eight Democrats on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee asked the Interior Department's deputy inspector general on Monday to investigate Secretary Ryan Zinke's decision to reassign roughly 50 senior career officials last month, on the grounds that it could constitute an 'abuse of authority.'" In the letter to Interior deputy IG Mary Kendall, which was "signed by all but three of the panel's Democrats, the senators note that one of the reassigned Senior Executive Service officials – Joel Clement, the department's top climate change official – has alleged he was punished for his work on the issue." The senators wrote, "Any suggestion that the Department is reassigning SES employees to force them to resign, silence their voices, or to punish them for the conscientious performance of their public duties is extremely troubling and calls for the closest examination." Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift "said in an email that the secretary makes no apologies for his decision to place a slew of experienced career officials in different posts." Swift said, "The president signed an executive order to reorganize the federal government for the future and the secretary has been absolutely out front on that issue. Senior executives are the highest paid employees in the federal government and signed up for the SES knowing that they could be called upon to work in different positions at any time. Congress meant for the SES to be a mobile force that are capable of taking on different assignments to meet the needs of the agency." In an email, Interior IG spokeswoman Nancy K. DiPaolo said that the office "just received the letter and will promptly access resources and methods to meet the request. We currently do not have any related work."

Marathon Markup To Tackle 21 Land, Renewable Energy Bills.

E&E Daily (7/24) reports that the House Natural Resources Committee will begin consideration of 21 bills on Tuesday, "including bipartisan legislation to promote renewable energy development on public lands and a measure that would develop a central database for federal land properties." Among the bills highlighted by the article is the "Public Land Renewable Energy Development Act of 2017" (H.R. 825), which "requires the Interior Department to identify 'priority areas' for wind and geothermal power development on federal lands." The panel will "also take up H.R. 2199, sponsored by Rep. Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.), which requires the Interior secretary to develop 'a single, uniform database' listing all 'federal real property.'"

Alaskans Want Feds To Stop Micromanaging Alaska Wildlife By Protecting Predators.

The Daily Caller (7/24, Pearce) reports that the Trump Administration is "considering loosening federal protections on predators like bears and wolves living on federal lands in Alaska, according to Alaska Dispatch News." The Interior Department "decided to review rules against aggressive predator control after, 'widespread criticism and concern from Alaskans about the previous administration micromanaging Alaska wildlife,' DOI press secretary Heather Swift wrote in an email to the Alaska Dispatch News."

Additional coverage was provided by KTOO-FM Juneau, AK (7/24, Bross).

Industry Lawyers Track Trump Admin's Evolving Policy Changes.

E&E Publishing (7/24) reports legal and regulatory certainty for the energy industry continues to be elusive, even as President Trump works to boost domestic production. Almost 900 lawyers gathered at the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Institute to discuss the legal developments this year and to try to find a path to negotiate the changes. Industry lawyers continue to look for broad reforms, including expedited environmental reviews and permitting, but the present concern is on the deregulatory efforts that are moving forward in federal agencies and courts.

Most Presidents Rely On Expertise. Trump Treats Experts Like The Enemy.

The Washington Post (7/24, Rocco) features commentary from political science Professor Philip Rocco concerning President Trump's efforts to deregulate and defund portions of the federal government that give experts a foothold in federal policy, including the suspension of advisory panels by the Interior Department. Rocco reports the Trump Administration has also reassigned policy experts and fired members of advisory panels in manners that he believes make it easier for the federal government to operate without expert input. According to Rocco, "American presidents doubt, or look to sideline inconvenient experts all the time. Yet Trump is going considerably further, by politicizing even very basic truth claims, and looking to use his opponents' reliance on expertise against them."

Every Kid Outdoors.

In an editorial, the Durango \(CO\) Herald (7/24) praises Rep. Scott Tipton for his support of the Every Kid Outdoors Act. The legislation, "introduced by a bipartisan group of lawmakers, asks the Department of the Interior to maintain a program that provides fourth-grade students, along with their families, free access to federally managed lands, waters and historic sites." The paper says that "we never know what will pique a student's interest, but among our forests, parks and monuments, there is something to interest every child." It argues that "a park pass is an invitation to explore and experience; It is an invaluable partnership with parents and teachers."

Give The Public Access To Public Land.

In an op-ed for NMPolitics \(NM\) (7/24, VeneKlasen), Garrett VeneKlasen, executive director of the New Mexico Wildlife Federation, writes in support of allowing hunters access to the Sabinoso Wilderness. He argues that “outfitters, guides and other local businesses in San Miguel County would get a boost from increased hunting activity in the area, and increased sales of licenses and tags would mean more resources for Game & Fish to devote to habitat and wildlife management statewide.” In coming weeks, the Interior Department will “decide whether to allow a private landowner to open up the Sabinoso.” According to VeneKlasen, “the land is now held in trust by a nonprofit, and all that is required to permanently integrate it into the Sabinoso is Secretary Zinke’s signature.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

House Approves Changes To Casino Gambling Compact.

The AP (7/24) reports that the House of Representatives has “approved amended agreements that could lead to Connecticut’s first casino on nontribal land.” Legislators “voted 118-32 on Monday in favor of amended compacts and memoranda of understanding between the state and the two federally recognized tribes, the Mashantucket Pequot and the Mohegans.” The Senate and Bureau of Indian Affairs also need to approve the agreements.

10th Circ. Stays Firm On DOI Tribal Gambling Reg Ruling.

Law360 (7/24, Powell) reports that “the Tenth Circuit declined on Monday to revisit its recent conclusion that the head of the U.S. Department of the Interior lacks the authority to approve procedures allowing the Pueblo of Pojoaque to continue its casino operations in New Mexico in the absence of a state gambling compact.”

Gov’t Insists It’s Immune From Cherokees’ Trust Suit.

Law360 (7/24, Westney) reports that “the federal government on Friday continued to urge an Oklahoma federal court to toss a lawsuit by the Cherokee Nation claiming the government hasn’t properly managed the tribe’s trust assets, saying the tribe hasn’t pointed to a federal statute that backs its claims or shown the government waived its sovereign immunity.”

Ute Tribe Pulls Out Of Summit, Citing Issues About Treatment.

The AP (7/24) reports that “leaders of the Ute tribe pulled out of the annual Native American Summit in Utah, saying they want state government to treat the tribe as a sovereign nation.” According to tribe councilman Shaun Chapoose, “even at the summit designed to foster cooperation between tribes and the state, the opening speech by Gov. Gary Herbert referred to working with the federal government on oil and gas development on tribal lands.” He said that the tribe “has its own relationship with the federal government and doesn’t need the state acting on its behalf.”

Zuckerberg Meets Native American Poverty.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (7/24, Anderson, Contributor), Terry L. Anderson, a senior fellow at the Stanford University Hoover Institution, writes that “Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg visited the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana last weekend, and took to Facebook to shed light on how federal policies have failed Native Americans with the current state of reservation economies.” According to Anderson, “Indian reservations are locked into colonialism with their land held in trust by the federal government on the grounds that Indians are ‘incompetent’ to manage their own resources.” Anderson agrees with Zuckerberg’s conclusion “that problems on the Blackfeet Reservation ‘comes back to the basic idea of freedom. If people have the freedom to do what they want — whether that’s taking a chance on a new idea or building their community — the inherent creativity and goodness in people will help different parts of society flourish.’”

Bureau Of Land Management

Interior Department Announces Plan To Gut Federal Fracking Regulations.

The Hill (7/24, Cama) reports the Trump administration seeks “to completely repeal Obama-era standards governing hydraulic fracturing on federal land." The Bureau of Land Management's proposal is expected to be published today in the Federal Register. The Obama-era rules "set standards in areas such as disclosure of fracking chemicals and integrity of well casing." The 2015 regulation "was the Obama administration's attempt to update decades-old regulations to account for the explosive growth in fracking for oil and natural gas in recent years." The Hill adds "the repeal is the latest in a long string of environmental regulations from Obama that Trump is working to undo."

The Washington Examiner (7/24, Siciliano) reports according to a pre-publication copy of the notice, "The BLM is now proposing to rescind the 2015 final rule because we believe it is unnecessarily duplicative of state and some tribal regulations and imposes burdensome reporting requirements and other unjustified costs on the oil and gas industry. ... This proposed rule would return the affected sections of the Code of Federal Regulations to the language that existed immediately before the published effective date of the 2015 final rule."

Additional coverage was provided by the Washington Times (7/24, Richardson), the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (7/24, Siciliano), the Daily Caller (7/24, Pearce), Natural Gas Intelligence (7/24, Passut), and the Central Valley \(CA\) Business Times (7/24).

Helium Legislation Supported By Air Products Takes First Step Forward.

The Allentown \(PA\) Morning Call (7/20, Wagaman) reports that Rep. Paul Cook "last week introduced a bill that encourages domestic helium production by companies such as Air Products in anticipation of a decision to shut down the federal helium reserve." The Helium Extraction Act of 2017 "would add two dozen words to the Mineral Leasing Act so the U.S. Bureau of Land Management can lease federal land for the purpose of helium production under the same lease terms as oil and gas." Cook "introduced the bill Tuesday — a day before the penultimate BLM auction of crude helium from its 91-year-old stockpile, which holds enough helium to account for roughly 40 percent of domestic demand but is scheduled to close in September 2021."

Range Hosts Mining Hearing Tuesday.

The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (7/24) reports that "after boycotting a hearing last week in St. Paul, supporters of copper-mining projects near the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness are planning to show up in force for another hearing on the issue Tuesday in Virginia." According to the article, "with one side refusing to attend, last week's hearing was dominated by dozens of speakers outlining their opposition to mining near the BWCAW, and raising concerns about the potential for pollution from a copper mine." The U.S. Forest Service is "holding the hearings to take public input on its plan for a two-year moratorium on mining near the BWCAW and a generic environmental review of potential copper-mining impacts on the regional watershed."

Deadline Extended On Kirkland Mine.

The Prescott \(AZ\) Daily Courier (7/24) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "extending the public comment period for the initial scoping process for the Kirkland Mining Company Pozzolan Mine Environmental Analysis an additional 30 days." According to the article, "due to public interest, the comment period, originally set to end July 25, will remain open until Aug. 25." BLM Phoenix District Manager Leon Thomas said, "We are wanting to be responsive to the community, since we received feedback from people in the community that they desired more time to provide input."

Keep Oil And Gas Away From Dinosaur National Monument.

In an op-ed for the Denver Post (7/24, Preston-Townsend), Charlie Preston-Townsend, the president of Friends of the Yampa, asks the Bureau of Land Management and Interior Secretary Zinke "to side with conservation by preserving and protecting Dinosaur National Monument." Currently, Preston-Townsend writes, the BLM is "proposing to lease lands for oil and gas drilling that are right next to the monument's visitor center and entrance road; these leases would significantly impair the renowned scenery, pristine night skies and natural quiet that makes the monument such a special place." Preston-Townsend asserts that "development on the doorstep of our national monuments should never be considered."

Additional coverage was provided by the High Country \(CO\) News (7/24, Shogren).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Some Local Reservations In Wildlife Refuge's Plans For Expansion.

The Keene \(NH\) Sentinel (7/24, DeWitt) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is looking to expand the Silvio O. Conte Wildlife Refuge. According to the agency's report, "the increased additions — hoped to be carried out through a combination of acquisitions and easements — are meant to protect intact ecosystems and allow wildlife corridors, habitat management and increased recreational use of land within the Connecticut River watershed." However, "some locals are pushing back, accusing the federal department of encroaching on the ability for townspeople along the river to fully enjoy the land for hunting and fishing." New Hampshire Gov. Chris Sununu has also "added to the criticism, expressing his opposition to continued federal purchases in New Hampshire in a May letter to Jim Kurth, the acting director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service."

Search On For Jumping Mouse As Some Seek To End Protections.

The AP (7/23) reports that "biologists are surveying the foothills of Colorado's Rocky Mountains for a threatened species of mouse that's emerged as a source of frustration for ranchers and the real estate industry." According to the article, "a recent search turned up no Preble's meadow jumping mice at the Rocky Flats National Wildlife Refuge outside of Denver." The article says that "similar efforts will continue through the summer."

Protest Tomorrow In Lewiston Over Use Of "Cyanide Bombs" To Eradicate Wild Animals.

The Lewis-Clark Valley DailyFLY \(WA\) (7/24, Carlson) reports that "a protest against the US Fish and Wildlife Service's reported use of 'cyanide bombs'" to control wildlife such as coyotes will be held Tuesday at the Lewiston Community Center. The article adds that "other such meetings are set for Wednesday and Thursday in Boise and Pocatello."

Sturgeon Bay Man Honored By Great Lakes Fishery.

The Green Bay \(WI\) Press-Gazette (7/24) reports that the Great Lakes Fishery Commission "honored Mark Holey of Sturgeon Bay with the Buzz Besadny Award for his work bringing people together in support of fishery management." According to a news release from the commission, "during Holey's 37-year career with the state Department of Natural Resources and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, he has provided leadership on sea lamprey control, sturgeon restoration, deep-water cisco restoration, tribal issues and Astroturf spawning reefs for lake trout." The award was presented by Commissioner Tom Melius, Midwest Regional Director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

National Park Service

Report: Florida Park Official Inappropriately Touched Worker.

The AP (7/24) reports that "a government report says a manager at a national park along Florida's Gulf Coast behaved inappropriately toward an employee, misused his position and created potential conflicts of interest." The report by the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General "documents allegations made in 2015 against a manager of De Soto National Memorial in Bradenton, Florida." The report, "the male manager touched a female worker inappropriately, made inappropriate comments and invaded her personal space." In the report, "the manager denies harassing the worker, saying he only touched her while hugging." He also "denied invading her personal space."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (7/24), the Washington \(DC\) Post (7/24, Press), the Washington \(DC\) Times (7/24), the Bradenton \(FL\) Herald (7/24), the Columbus \(IN\) Republic (7/24), Philly \(PA\) (7/24), and the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (7/24), the Daily Mail (7/24).

Gillibrand Eyes Study To Establish Finger Lakes As National Heritage Area.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (7/24, Harding) reports that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand has "launched a legislative effort aiming to designate the Finger Lakes region as a national heritage area." Gillibrand "visited Lakeside Park in Watkins Glen Monday to announce her bill that would require the National Park Service to study whether the Finger Lakes should become a national heritage area." Gillibrand said, "Thousands of tourists come from around the world to visit the Finger Lakes region to experience the beautiful landscape, rich history and culture and enjoy all that our local businesses have to offer. Designating the region as a national heritage area would help boost local tourism while conserving and protecting the region's precious natural, historic and cultural resources.”

Olympic National Park Targeting Mountain Goats For Removal.

NPR (7/24, Held) reports that on Monday, the National Park Service released a mountain goat management plan for Olympic National Park, “laying out three methods of dealing with the population, which park officials say not only is damaging the environment but is dangerous to people.” The preferred plan is a combination of two others: “killing the animals with shotguns or high-powered rifles” and “relocating them.” The preferred plan “would likely take years, said Louise Johnson, the park’s chief of resources management.”

Additional coverage was provided by the AP and KUOW-FM Seattle (7/24, Banse).

Part Of Beach Drive Will Reopen Next Month With New Road And Trail.

The Washington Post (7/24, Lazo) reports that “the stretch of Beach Drive that closed for improvements in September will reopen to vehicular traffic next month, officials said Monday.” However, “after the section between Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway NW and Tilden Street reopens, work will move to the next two miles of Beach Drive, in what will be another year of closures between Tilden Street and Military Road.” Officials with the National Park Service “say crews are also on track to finish the entire three-year project in the fall of 2019.”

Additional coverage was provided by WTOP-FM Washington (7/24, Domen) and Proposed Rule Aims To Ban Unleashed Dogs In Parts Of Bay Area.

KGO-TV San Francisco (7/24, Larsen) reports that “the fight over leash laws at Bay Area national parks is heating up again as a petition circulates to persuade federal officials to lay off the leashes.” According to the article, “more than 40,000 people signed the petition urging Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke to stop a dog management plan that would severely restrict access to dogs at Golden Gate National Recreation Areas in San Francisco, Marin, and San Mateo counties.”

Additional coverage was provided by KPIX-TV San Francisco (7/24), Loaner Life Vest Program In The Poconos.

WNEP-TV Scranton, PA (7/24, Mataloni) reports that “life jacket loaner racks can be found at all three beaches within the Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area.” It is “part of a new National Park Service safety initiative called the ‘Life Jacket Loaner Program.’” The program, which started “earlier this month” offers free vests to “children who come to the beach.”

National Park Service Hosts Public Forums On Reconstruction-era National Monument.

WJCL-TV Savannah, GA (7/24, Simkovic) reports that the National Park Service is holding public forums on Beaufort’s Reconstruction-era National Monument this week. Project Manager Justin Henderson said, “A lot of the questions revolve around learning more about the resources here in the community and why they’re historically significant and the stories the community would like to share with the American people.” he said, “It’s an opportunity for the community to provide their feedback and really help inform the overall planning process.”

Mesa Verde National Park Visitors Are Stealing Charcoal.

The Daily Mail (7/24, Collman) reports that Mesa Verde National Park is “dealing with an increase in vandalism, littering and graffiti.” According to the article, “in a recent Facebook post, park officials shared photos of the damage done to the park, which features some of the best preserved Ancestral Puebloan dwellings.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Mapp Seeks Assistance From Washington.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (7/25, Austin) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp “said Monday he is asking authorities in Washington to help provide funding for two new hospitals in the territory to replace the large and aging facilities on St. Croix and St. Thomas.” Mapp, “speaking during a press conference at Government House on St. Thomas, said he broached the subject with Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke on a recent trip to Washington.” Mapp said, “We’ve asked the secretary to prioritize new construction of small hospitals on both St. Croix and St. Thomas. The 250-bed units are too large, given how medicine is practiced today, and that is having a direct impact on our ability to operate those facilities in a cost-efficient manner, in addition to the problem that they're falling apart and we're putting millions of dollars in them to try to keep them functional and sustainable and certified."

DPNR Gets Federal Funds To Study Red Algae.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (7/24, Austin) reports that the Interior Department has "allocated $103,000 to address the emerging threat of red algae, known by its genus Ramicrosta." The money will also "let DPNR market and advertise the Reef Responsible Sustainable Seafood Initiative to promote preservation, moderation and conservation of certain critical seafood stock in the territory, and to build capacity of local natural resource management and support partnerships and information sharing through forums such as the U.S. Coral Reef Task Force."

Top National News

Trump: GOP Must Fulfill "Solemn Promise" To Repeal And Replace ACA.

President Trump, at a White House event and later while addressing the annual Boy Scout jamboree, warned Republican senators that they must fulfill their longstanding promise to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act. Most of the coverage of the President's White House remarks focuses on his tone, while reporting on his comments at the scouting event focuses on how unusual it was for a blunt political speech to be given in such a setting. Other coverage focuses on the challenges Senate Majority Leader McConnell will have in getting 50 votes to proceed, a task that may be made easier by Sen. John McCain's decision to return to Washington for the vote.

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (7/24, lead story, 2:35) by reporting that the President "is trying to resuscitate the biggest item on his domestic agenda: repealing and replacing Obamacare. The Senate votes [Tuesday] on whether to bring a bill to the floor for debate, and the President urged Republicans today to keep their campaign promises and his and, as he put it, 'do the right thing.'" Trump: "We as party must fulfill that solemn promise to the voters of this country, to repeal and replace, what they have been saying for the last seven years." CBS' Major Garrett: "But a repeal bill is stuck in legislative limbo. After failing to move the bill to the Senate floor last week, a divided Republican conference will try again tomorrow."

Lester Holt asked on NBC Nightly News (7/24, story 2, 2:30), "The Senate is headed for a key vote tomorrow, but what will they be voting to advance? At this hour, it's a mystery even to most senators." NBC's Hallie Jackson: "President Trump using the power of his presidential bully pulpit against the backdrop of the Blue Room and the faces of what the White House calls 'the victims of Obamacare.' ... With doom and gloom declarations, the President railed against the law of the land, not surprisingly swiping at Democrats." Trump: "They run out, they say death, death, death – well, Obamacare is death." Jackson: "But he saved a punch for his own party, too." Trump: "So far, Senate Republicans have not done their job in ending the Obamacare nightmare." Jackson: "The President's message meant for Capitol Hill, where Senate leaders say they will vote tomorrow to start debate on a bill. It's just not clear what that bill will look like."

The Washington Post (7/24, Wagner, Johnson) reports that Trump "made a late-hour appeal to senators – targeting members of his own party" – as he "implored fellow Republicans to make good on a promise to repeal" the ACA. The Wall Street Journal (7/24, A1, Radnofsky) reports that the President called Democratic promises about what the ACA would deliver "a big, fat, ugly lie." Regarding his own party's senators, he said, "They now have a chance. This is their chance to keep their promise." The Washington Times (7/24, Miller) reports, "Trump's dismay with congressional Republicans burst into public view Monday...as he searches for an elusive first major legislative win." But "the man who made his reputation as a deal-maker" has "struggled to sell his agenda even to his own party on Capitol Hill."

In a brief item, ABC World News Tonight (7/24, story 7, 0:45, Muir) reported on the President's remarks and said that McConnell is "trying to sway Republican holdouts, hoping to have enough votes to move forward," with "many senators tonight admitting they are unsure which healthcare version they are about to vote on." The AP (7/24, Fram) reports that the upcoming vote "seemed likely to go badly for the GOP." McConnell's decision not to "describe precisely what version of the GOP legislation senators would be voting on" has "caused confusion and frustration among some Republican senators." Reuters (7/24, Rascoe, Becker) also says that "it remained unclear" which version of the bill the senators would be voting on.

Bloomberg News (7/24, Litvan, Epstein) reports, "Republicans are struggling for a way to fulfill years of promises by party leaders to get rid of" the ACA, and Senate Majority Whip Cornyn said Monday "that the GOP won't give up" if Tuesday's vote fails. Cornyn said, "If for some reason we aren't able to muster the votes tomorrow, which I'm increasingly optimistic we will, it's not the end of it," he said.

McClatchy (7/24, Pugh) reports that opponents and supporters of the ACA "played to the cameras" on Monday "in an 11th-hour attempt to swing public opinion their way." While the President "was flanked by 'victims of Obamacare'" at the White House, ACA supporters "staged a Trumpcare 'Die-In'" at the Capitol. McClatchy says that the "not-so-subtle messaging on both sides was meant to ratchet up the already-intense pressure on Senate Republicans."

TIME (7/24) reports on its website that the President "seemed to have an endless supply of insults" for the ACA, and "labeled Democrats 'obstructionists.'" But the Huffington Post (7/24, Lavender) reports that he "spoke in vague terms about the GOP's health care plan, likely because it's not clear what that plan is." USA Today (7/24, Cummings) reports that during his Blue Room remarks, the President "made a Trumpian slip Monday, accidentally saying, 'For the past 17 years, Obamacare has wreaked havoc on the lives of innocent, hard-working Americans,'" adding a decade to the life of the law.

The Hill (7/24, Easley) reports under the headline "Trump Pressures GOP Ahead Of Healthcare Vote" that Trump "urged Senate Republicans to 'do the right thing' and vote this week to repeal and replace ObamaCare, even as the GOP effort appears hopelessly stalled." Roll Call (7/24, Bennett) headlines its report "Trump Turns Bully Pulpit On Senate Republicans." The Los Angeles Times (7/24, Mascaro, Levey) reports that the President "warned in a tweet that 'the repercussions will be far greater than any of them understand!' – hinting of political fallout for senators who vote against the measure." He later tweeted, "Any senator who votes against starting debate is telling America that you are fine w/ the #OCareNightmare!"

Trump Jokingly Threatens To Fire Price If Vote Fails. The AP (7/24, Bykowicz) reports that the President, addressing Boy Scouts at the 2017 National Scout Jamboree, "jokingly threatened to fire his health secretary if a crucial vote to repeal 'Obamacare' fails." Referring to HHS Secretary Price, who was by his side, Trump said, "Hopefully he's going to get the votes tomorrow to start our path toward killing this horrible thing known as Obamacare. By the way, you gonna get the votes? He better get 'em. Otherwise, I'll say: 'Tom, you're fired.'" The AP reports that the comment "drew laughs from the crowd and Trump gave Price a friendly pat on the shoulder, suggesting he'd been joking." The Huffington Post (7/24, Reilly), in its top Monday night story, reported on Trump's joking threat, while NBC's Chuck Todd tweeted, "Please @POTUS don't put the Boy Scouts in this situation. Keep politics out of the Jamboree. What a mess. Totally unfair to these kids."

USA Today (7/24, Jackson) reports that though the President "first told a huge crowd of Boy Scouts at a national jamboree Monday that he didn't want to talk politics...he couldn't help himself." The Washington Times (7/24, Miller) says that Trump took "jabs at errant Republican lawmakers, the news media and President Obama," and said of GOP senators, "After seven years of trying to repeal and replace and Obamacare, they better do it." The Hill (7/24, Easley) reports, "Media reports put the crowd size at 35,000, while Trump estimated about 45,000 were on hand."

As for Price, The Hill (7/24, Shelbourne) reports that he "praised President Trump's 'unprecedented' involvement in the process to repeal and replace" the ACA. Price told reporters, "This is the greatest amount of involvement by any president that I have ever witnessed with members of Congress one-on-one. We've had a number of conversations, obviously, over the weekend, and we're looking forward to a positive vote tomorrow in the Senate." The Wall Street Journal (7/24, Armour, Hackman) reports that Democrats have been critical of Price and HHS for publicly criticizing the existing law, calling it an improper use of federal resources.

Collins Says Trump Has Not Tried To Reach Her. Reuters (7/24, Cornwell) reports that though Trump "exhorted every Republican to vote yes" on repealing the ACA this week, Sen. Susan Collins, "one of his party's most vocal opponents of the bill...said he had made no effort to reach her." Collins told Reuters, "I've had conversations with Vice President Pence, and [CMS Administrator] Seema Verma, and Reince Priebus has called me a few times, to discuss the bill, but the President understandably I think is focusing on others."

Senate Expected To Proceed To Vote Tuesday Afternoon. USA Today (7/24, Collins) reports that a spokesman said McConnell "will move forward with a plan to hold a vote on repealing Obamacare 'early this week.'" The Senate may vote on the Better Care Reconciliation Act, which four Republicans are on record as opposing; or may vote on an ACA repeal that would take effect at a future deadline, which three Republicans have said they oppose. McConnell cannot lose more than two GOP votes, given united Democratic opposition. Reuters (7/24, Cowan, Becker) reports that Cornyn said that various options would be discussed before the first procedural vote.

McConnell tweeted, “Tomorrow, the #Senate will vote to start robust debate on how to fix America’s #healthcare problem, and move away from #Obamacare’s failures.”

Politico (7/24, Everett, Kim, Haberkorn) reports, “McConnell and his leadership team are urging the GOP caucus to cough up the 50 votes needed to begin debate.” Collins and Sen. Lisa Murkowski “are being treated as lost causes in informal whip counts.” The Las Vegas Review-Journal (7/24, Martin) reports that Sen. Dean Heller, who was “part of a group of moderate senators who opposed a previous version” of the GOP bill, is being closely watched.

The New York Times (7/24, A1, Kaplan, Davis) reports that if a procedural vote is approved, the Senate would begin debating the BCRA, its repeal-and-replace measure. However, the Times writes, “nobody expects that measure to reach a final vote.” But if McConnell “can muster 50 votes to begin debate on the House bill, he could quickly move to replace it with an entirely new bill to repeal the Affordable Care Act without a replacement.” While that would also be expected to fail, it would allow McConnell “to replace the bill that was passed in the House with a health bill that has been worked out in closed-door negotiations between Republican senators.” Roll Call (7/24, Dick) reports that passage of a motion to proceed “would kick off the so-called voterama after 20 hours of debate, a process under which virtually unlimited amendments could be offered from either party.”

Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), who chairs the House Freedom Caucus, said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (7/24), “I fully expect in the next 48 hours that [the Senate] will do what they call a motion to proceed. Have enough votes to say that at least they need to take it up, debate it in the Senate. And hopefully get this finally resolved before we go home in August.” Meadows added that “no one has worked harder than the President to try to get this done.”

The Washington Post (7/24) editorializes, “McConnell announced Monday afternoon that the chamber would vote Tuesday on... well, on something. The scrambling reflected a basic fact: Every major Republican proposal put forward so far would mean millions of Americans would lose access” to healthcare. The proposals under consideration “run the gamut from bad to horrendous, and the rushed process for proceeding to the floor has made a mockery of the ‘world’s greatest deliberative body.’”

By contrast, the Wall Street Journal (7/24) says in an editorial that McConnell is right to demand that senators go on the record with their support for, or opposition to, ACA repeal. The Journal says that it has become clear that some GOP senators would prefer to avoid any vote, but that voters have the right to know where they stand.

In a USA Today (7/24) op-ed, ex-Sen. David Durenberger, a Republican who represented Minnesota from 1978-1995, says that members of his party should not vote for a bill without knowing what is in it, “because there are no do-overs. The vote for the Motion To Proceed is likely a vote for final passage, and the House clearly stands ready to pass the Senate bill unchanged.”

The Huffington Post (7/24, Young) headlines its report “Senate Republicans Don’t Know What Health Care Bill They’re About To Vote For. That’s Nuts,” while a Washington Times (7/24, Howell) report is headlined “Mitch McConnell Begs GOP To Begin Debate On Health Care.” US News & World Report (7/24, Levy) also has a report.

McCain To Return To Washington For Healthcare Vote. USA Today (7/25, Hansen) reports that McCain said Monday that he will return to Washington for the vote. His presence “could bring the party closer to the 50 needed votes.” The New York Times (7/24, Kaplan) reports in a brief item that McCain’s office “said the senator ‘looks forward to returning’ to work on several legislative priorities, including defense spending and sanctions against Russia, Iran and North Korea – as well as health care.” McCain’s office tweeted a similar statement.

The Washington Post (7/24, Sullivan, Snell, Wagner) reports that “while it was unclear if McCain’s return would improve the chances” of the motion to proceed passing, “some Republicans were privately abuzz with speculation that leaders might be close to securing the votes they needed to at least keep alive a months-long effort that all but died last week.”

MSNBC’s Chris Hayes tweeted, “Last week McCain called for hearings and regular order but if he votes yes on the [motion to proceed] he didn’t actually mean it.”

Schumer Says Democrats’ Top Priority Is Healthcare, Not Russia. CNN (7/24, Watkins) reports on its website that Senate Minority Leader Schumer “denied Monday that his party is overly fixated on Russia as Democrats rolled out a new campaign focused on economics.” He told CNN’s Jake Tapper that “the party’s primary concerns are health care and ‘the economic well-being of the working family’ – not the various investigations into Russian meddling in the 2016 election.”

Farenthold Faults “Female Senators,” Says He Might Have Challenged Man To A Duel. The Dallas Morning News (7/24, Kelly) reports that during a Friday interview with a Corpus Christi, Texas radio station, Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-TX) “expressed frustration with female senators over the stalling of the Senate health care bill and suggested he would handle the situation with a duel, if they were men." In a clip aired by both the CBS Evening News (7/24, lead story, 2:35) and NBC Nightly News (7/24, story 2, 2:30), Farenthold said, "The fact that the Senate does not have courage to do some of the things that every Republican in the Senate promised to do is just absolutely repugnant to me. Some of the people that are opposed to this – there are some female senators from the Northeast. If it was a guy from South Texas, I might ask him to step outside and settle this Aaron Burr-style." CNN (7/24, Grieve) has a brief online report.

Kushner Meets With Senate Intel Panel, Says There Was No Collusion With Russia.

During a closed-door meeting Monday, President Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser Jared Kushner answered questions from the staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee who are investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 election. Kushner's testimony, and his comments to reporters at the White House following the meeting, receive heavy media coverage which universally highlights that he denied any collusion took place.

The AP (7/24, Jalonick) reports that Kushner is "the first member of the president's inner circle to face questions from congressional investigators as they probe Russian meddling in the 2016 election and possible links to the Trump campaign." Kushner denied colluding with Russians during Trump's campaign and "declared he has 'nothing to hide.'" Kushner "made a brief public statement back at the White House," in which he said, "Let me be very clear. ... I did not collude with Russia nor do I know of anyone else in the campaign who did so." The Wall Street Journal (7/24, Ballhaus) reports that Kushner told reporters his actions "were proper and occurred in the normal course of events in a very unique campaign." In the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (7/24, lead story, 4:20, Muir), Jonathan Karl said that Kushner "insisted that whatever happened with Russia, it had nothing to do with his father-in-law's victory." Kushner: "Donald Trump had a better message and ran a smarter campaign, and that is why he won. Suggesting otherwise ridicules those who voted for him."

The Washington Post (7/24, Rucker, Demirjian) says Kushner and the White House "used the grilling to offer their most detailed refutation – in the form of an 11-page written statement – of the idea that anyone in the campaign sought to coordinate with people acting on behalf of the Russian government." In the statement, Kushner "detailed four meetings he had with Russian officials or nationals during the 2016 campaign and transition period," describing them "as brief and unremarkable contacts in his role as the Trump campaign's liaison to foreign governments." The AP (7/24, Tucker) provides details of the four meetings.

McClatchy (7/24, Schofield) says Kushner's statement "addresses a broad range of reported allegations regarding Kushner that have surfaced in the last months." In it, Kushner said, "I did not collude, nor know of anyone else in the campaign who colluded, with any foreign government. I had no improper contacts." Reuters (7/24, Mason, Zengerle) says Kushner "portrayed himself as new to politics when he became a top adviser to Trump's campaign."

The Los Angeles Times (7/24, Cloud) says that while Kushner denied collusion, he "confirmed several damaging details, including that he sought to set up a communications line at the Russian embassy in December to speak directly with Kremlin authorities outside normal US channels. The Russian ambassador refused." However, Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (7/24, story 2, 2:20, Mason) that Kushner denied "reports that he tried to set up a secret back channel with Russia during the transition, but said he did ask the Russian ambassador if there was an existing communications channel at his embassy he could use to discuss the Syrian crisis. The ambassador said that would not be possible, so nothing else occurred."

The New York Times (7/24, A1, Apuzzo, Haberman) reports that "Kushner said he had been unaware that a June 2016 meeting he attended at Trump Tower was set up in the hope that a Russian lawyer would provide the Trump campaign with damaging information about Mrs. Clinton." He "said he went to the meeting at the request of the president's eldest son, Donald J. Trump Jr." and "did not read an email forwarded by the younger Mr. Trump saying that the Russian government was providing dirt about Mrs. Clinton as part of its effort to help the Trump campaign." The Times adds that he "flatly denied any collusion." Bloomberg News (7/24, Talev, Pettypiece) quotes Kushner's statement as saying, "I have not relied on Russian funds to finance my business activities in the private sector," an assurance which Sen. Ron Wyden questioned, saying, "His description of his financial relationships with individuals and businesses tied to Russia appears incomplete, at best. ... Notably, the comment 'I have not relied on Russian funds to finance my business activities in the private sector,' is clearly the work of a clever lawyer trying to protect his client."

Dana Bash said on CNN's Situation Room (7/24) that Kushner is using the "aw shucks defense. 'I'm new at this, we didn't have this establishment or the people around us who maybe we should have or could have had we been a more traditional campaign.' I think it's the best that he can do, and I'm sure it also has a lot of threads of truth to it." Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (7/24) that Kushner's "defense essentially is that 'I was naive, inexperienced, careless at times, clueless at times, rookie' and all of this. To me it rings true. ... There are a few phrases in there that are very lawyerly," but "overall, I thought it was a good statement and it looks like he's clean."

Dana Milbank takes a different view, writing in his Washington Post (7/24) column that Kushner "explained his repeated lapses – he had to amend one disclosure form three times – by saying, essentially, that he was new to politics and so terribly busy that he couldn't keep up with everything. And he used the hoariest excuse of all: He blamed his assistant." Kushner, Milbank adds, is "essentially arguing that he isn't corrupt – he's just in over his head. ... Coming from the man charged with handling everything from Middle East peace to opioids, this isn't reassuring."

Lester Holt said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/24, lead story, 3:15) that while Kushner "stated flatly today there was no collusion," it "has not stopped the questions." The Wall Street Journal (7/24) argues in an editorial that while Kushner is unlikely to have settled the matter given the level of media attention being given to the collusion issue, his statement detailing his contacts with Russians during the campaign is an example of disclosure the President and other campaign officials should follow.

Rep. Gregory Meeks said on CNN's Situation Room (7/24) said Kushner gave a public statement on his meetings "because he knows the facts will come out." He said it follows a pattern of Trump associates, including Kushner, Donald Trump Jr., Attorney General Sessions, and former campaign chairman Paul Manafort, "all...previously claim[ing] that they had nothing to do with Russia," and "as investigations continue, then it is revealed that, in fact, they did." By contrast, Brit Hume said on Fox News' Special Report (7/24) that Kushner has "one of the sharpest criminal defense lawyers" in Washington, so Kushner would not have voluntarily issued a statement – exposing himself to the potential risk of perjury in his testimony – unless his defense team was "convinced" he is telling the truth.

USA Today (7/24, Jackson) reports that Kushner will "face investigators in another private session on Tuesday, when members of the House Intelligence Committee will interview him." CNN senior congressional reporter Manu Raju said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (7/24) that Rep. Adam Schiff, the ranking Democrat on the House panel, "is telling our colleague...that [Tuesday's] session will not be enough, because there are a lot of members who have a lot of questions" and "the time frame allotted, a couple of hours, just will not be enough to get through all of the areas they want to talk about."

Sanders: Kushner Showed Russia Investigation Is A "Witch Hunt" And A "Hoax." The Washington Times (7/24, Miller) reports that the White House said the President was "very proud" of Kushner for giving the voluntary testimony. White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told reporters in Air Force One, "He thought Jared did a great job and was very glad that he was able to go through that process and lay everything out," adding that Kushner showed "the members of that committee as well as everybody else what a witch hunt and hoax this whole thing really is." In a USA Today (7/24) op-ed, Tomi Lahren, senior adviser for Great America Alliance, takes a similar view, writing that Democrats' "hypocrisy about the 'independent' Russian probe is ridiculous." Special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation, Lahren argues, is "purely partisan," and it is "a shame Americans must turn on cable news to hear the same tired Russia story ad nauseam for hours, days and months on end. That's not news, that's a witch hunt."

However, an opposing USA Today (7/24) editorial says that to believe such assertions from the White House "is to be like the White Queen in Alice Through the Looking Glass: You'd have to believe as many as six impossible things before breakfast." USA Today argues that "a president with nothing to hide would welcome an investigation that would find him faultless," and that "the public should ask itself this: If stories about Russian interference are really 'fake news,' then why are the president and many of his men acting so guilty?"

Rampell: Seize Assets Kushner Forgoes To Disclose. Catherine Rampell writes in the Washington Post (7/24) that Kushner has, "for the 39th time...revised his financial disclosure forms," disclosing "77 additional assets, collectively worth millions of dollars." According to a document released by the White House, the items "were 'inadvertently omitted' from previous versions of his federal forms." Rampell argues for a "banana republic rule" under which any assets valued at more than $ 1 million "that are 'forgotten' on federal disclosures can be seized by Uncle Sam."

Senate Judiciary Committee Reaches Deal With Trump Jr., Manafort. CNN's Situation Room

(7/24) reported the Senate Judiciary Committee has made a deal with former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort and Donald Trump Jr. "to have a private interview before any public session" and to "get records" from them ahead of the private interview. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, the ranking member of the committee, is "saying there will absolutely be a public hearing with those two men," something she expects after the recess.

Blumenthal: Trump Does Not Have The Power To Pardon Himself. Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/24), "Any of us who have dealt with the Constitution generally know there are few powers if any that are absolute. There's never been a court case on the pardon power as it applies to the president himself, and there's nothing in the Constitution that specifically and explicitly deals with it. My feeling is the better argument is on the side that he lacks that power, to pardon himself. And, in fact, if he pardons assistants, it could well be regarded as an obstruction of justice, if done for improper reasons. I feel he lacks the power to pardon himself. You know, he could be pardoning himself for all kinds of crimes that do not even relate to his official duties, and I think there are some limits on the pardon power."

Ryan Defends Mueller. Breitbart (7/24, Key) reports that in a radio interview Monday, House Speaker Ryan "defended special counsel Robert Mueller and his investigation." In response to a listener who asked "why Republicans in Congress are not doing more to defend Trump against 'what is becoming an obvious witch-hunt,'" Ryan said, "Remember, Bob Mueller is a Republican, who was appointed by a Republican, who served in the Republican administration, and crossed over – I mean and stayed on until his term ended. ... I don't think many people are saying Bob Mueller is a person who is a biased partisan. He's really, sort of, anything but."

Blumenthal: Firing Mueller Would Trigger A "Firestorm." Blumenthal also said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (7/24) that if Trump were to fire Mueller, "there would be an absolute firestorm, cataclysmic reaction on both sides of the aisle, and I would help to lead efforts to establish legislation that put in place a special prosecutor, much as happened in Watergate, with very likely a three-judge panel picking the special prosecutor. Nothing novel or unprecedented about it. That would have very strong bipartisan support. One thing for sure is this investigation will not end if it the President fires Bob Mueller. It will continue."

William McGurn argues in the Wall Street Journal (7/24) that while lawmakers should not seek to undermine Mueller's investigation, they should not allow him to undermine theirs. Congress, he writes, has a range of tools at its disposal to delve into the Russia matter and hold people accountable if it chooses to do so.

Trump Reportedly Considering Replacements For "Beleaguered" Sessions.

A tweet from President Trump Monday in which he referred to Attorney General Sessions as "beleaguered" and questioned why the Justice Department isn't investigating Hillary Clinton's connections to Russia is the subject of heavy media coverage, much of which casts it as the latest in a series of criticisms of the Attorney General and speculates about whether Trump is trying to prompt Sessions' resignation. Meanwhile, several reports say Trump and his advisers have discussed replacing Sessions and that Sen. Ted Cruz and former New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani have been mentioned as possible replacements.

The Washington Times (7/24, Noble) sees the tweet as part of "what appears to be new line of attack against the attorney general for not going after Mr. Trump's former Democratic opponent," while the AP (7/24, Lemire, Colvin) describes the tweet as "a remarkable new swipe at his own attorney general." Trump, the AP adds, "has speculated aloud to allies in recent days about the potential consequences of firing Sessions," according to "three people who have recently spoken to the president and demanded anonymity to discuss private conversations."

Kristen Welker reported in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (7/24, lead story, 3:15) that Trump "has repeatedly lashed out at Sessions for recusing himself in the Russia matter," and USA Today (7/24, Estepa) reports that the tweet is the "latest in a string of high-profile criticism Trump has leveled at Sessions in recent days."

While the Washington Post (7/24, Johnson) says Trump "has been attacking" Sessions "for his decision months ago to recuse himself from the investigations into possible connections between Trump's campaign and Russia," the Los Angeles Times (7/24, Tanfani) calls the tweet "a fresh public slap" of Sessions, who is facing "increasing questions about his future." To the New York Times (7/24, Sullivan), the tweet is "remarkable because if the attorney general...is beleaguered of late it is largely because of Mr. Trump himself."

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said that Trump is "very disappointed" by Sessions' decision to recuse himself from the Russia matter, The Hill (7/24, Easley) reports. Speaking to reporters on Air Force One, Sanders said, "I think the president has been extremely clear about his position, I know I've answered this question a number of times over the last week. ... He's very disappointed that attorney general Sessions chose to recuse himself and there's not much more to add." Reuters (7/24, Rampton) reports that Sanders said that Sessions was at the White House on Monday but did not meet with the President. Sara Murray said on CNN's The Lead (7/24) that White House communications director Anthony Scaramucci "said the President is disappointed with Sessions. He said they have to sit down face to face and either have a reconciliation or decide what the future is going to be for Sessions. So leaving it open-ended and, frankly, a little ominous for the future of the Attorney General."

Chris Cilizza said on CNN's Situation Room (7/24), "I think Trump either doesn't want to or is concerned about what it would look like if he fired Jeff Sessions but is at the point where he's making it so uncomfortable for Jeff Sessions to hold the job that he hopes Jeff Sessions resigns." Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News' Special Report (7/24), "The only reason possibly for Trump to refer to the AG the way he did is that he wants his resignation and it seems to me he will get it fairly soon." However, Jeff Pegues reported on the CBS Evening News (7/24, story 3, 1:50, Mason) the Justice Department "insists that Sessions is not preparing to resign, despite the apparent rift with the President, and new reports of an alleged conversation with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak during the 2016 election campaign at a previously undisclosed meeting between the two."

Trump tweet comes as he and his advisers are, according to another story in the Washington Post (7/24, Horwitz, Zapotosky, Costa), "privately discussing" replacing Sessions, "and some confidants are floating prospects who could take his place were he to resign or be fired." The Post cites "people familiar with the conversations" who say Cruz and Giuliani are "among the names being floated as possible Sessions replacements." The Post says "some Trump associates" see replacing Sessions as "part of a strategy to fire special counsel Robert S. Mueller III and end his investigation." The AP (7/24, Lemire, Colvin) also reports that Trump "has spoken with advisers about firing" Sessions, but adds that he "often talks about making staff changes without following through, so those who have spoken with the president cautioned that a change may not be imminent or happen at all." The New York Post (7/24, Tacopino) and The Hill (7/24, Thomsen) also report on the speculation, citing the Post story.

Axios (7/24, Allen) says Giuliani "would have a tough time" getting the 50 Senate votes he would need for confirmation, because he was "such an early and ardent Trump backer that he wouldn't be seen as an independent guardian of the department in these tumultuous times." On its website, CNN (7/24, Diamond, Treyz) reports that Giuliani "swatted away" the Axios report, saying there is no truth to it. Giuliani also "said Sessions made the right decision to recuse himself from the Russia investigation."

Trump To Reporter: "Quiet." The AP (7/24) reports that as Trump posed for photographs with interns on Monday, he "rolled his eyes" when a White House reporter asked if Sessions should resign. The reporter then "asked the president if he had a message on health care," to which Trump said "quiet" and "then told the interns that the reporter 'was not supposed to do that' and was 'breaking a code.'" Philip Bump writes in an analysis for the Washington Post (7/24) that this is "precisely" what the press is "supposed to do – ask questions about the White House in service to the American people." Bump adds, "At some point Trump needs to come to terms with the fact that providing honest information to the media will work out better for him than obfuscating and misleading."

WPost Analysis: Buffeted By Controversies, Trump And GOP Point To Hillary Clinton. Under the headline "Trump And The Republicans Just Can't Stop Running Against Hillary Clinton," the Washington Post (7/24, Wagner) reports, "The national political debate is consumed with allegations of collusion with a foreign government, playing dirty in the election and giving preferential treatment to family and friends. Familiar charges, no doubt, but there is a twist: In each of these cases, President Trump and his allies are making the accusations, and their target is Hillary Clinton." The Post adds, "For many Republicans, the 2016 election is" serving as "a go-to counterargument as Trump's agenda bogs down and questions around the Russia scandal multiply. The latest example came Monday in a tweet from Trump, in which he asked why investigators and his 'beleaguered' Attorney General Jeff Sessions aren't 'looking into Crooked Hillarys crimes & Russia relations?'"

NYTimes Analysis: Trump Has "Moved The Bar For Outrage." A New York Times (7/24, Baker) analysis says that while no "president in modern times [has] sought to prosecute the candidate he beat at the ballot box," when Trump "publicly declared last weekend that his Justice Department should investigate Hillary Clinton, his exhortation generated relatively little reaction." The Times says Trump "has crossed so many lines, discarded so many conventions, said and done so many things that other presidents would not have, that he has radically shifted the understanding of what is standard in the White House." Trump "has moved the bar for outrage" and "now, it takes more to shock."

Scarborough: Trump Sounds "Beleaguered And Frightened." The Hill (7/24, Savransky) reported that in the wake of Trump's "beleaguered" tweet targeting Sessions, MSNBC's Joe Scarborough tweeted, "Our president sounds beleaguered and frightened this morning. You can sense his fear in every terrified tweet. Justice must be closing in."

USAToday Analysis: Border Wall Will Take Time, Be Expensive.

In an analysis of the Administration and Congress' ongoing attempts to build a US-Mexico border wall, USA Today (7/24, Hansen) reports that Congress is currently attempting to secure $1.6 billion in funding and that the President said this month that "the nearly 2,000-mile border with Mexico could be secured with as little as 700 miles of wall." USA Today largely highlights the different factors contributing to the project's widely differing cost estimates, which range from $10 billion to $60 billion, such as environment, barrier type, political and social aspects, and bidding from contractors, some of whom are now creating 18-to-30-foot wall prototypes for the Department of Homeland Security.

Fed Likely To Discuss Low Inflation, But Rate Increase Unlikely.

The AP (7/24, Crutsinger) reports that the Federal Reserve will "likely" discuss low inflation during their Wednesday policy meeting but that "no one expects" the meeting to result in another interest rate increase in the immediate future, reflecting some analyst predictions that there will be "no further rate increase this year." Other analysts believe there will be another rate increase this year, such as DS Economics Chief Economist Diane Swonk who says an increase is probable but only if inflation rebounds, and Moody's Analytics Chief Economist Mark Zandi, who argues that the Fed will act before the end of the year "in part because of concerns that stock prices and other asset prices have been lifted too high by investors who have become too optimistic about how long the Fed will delay its tightening of credit."

NYTimes Analysis: Continuing Low Inflation Doesn't Benefit Economy. In an analysis, the New York Times (7/24, Appelbaum) writes that a recent drop in US inflation "may be a sign of fresh economic weakness and is perplexing to Federal Reserve officials who are now wrapping up the central bank's stimulus campaign," marking the sixth straight year of inflation failing to meet the Fed's 2 percent target. The Times asserts that some inflation provides important economic benefits, spurring people to engage in the economy in ways that increase growth, and highlights expert opinion concerning low inflation's persistence since 2012. The Times also reports that analysts "expect the Fed to announce in September that it will start to reduce its holdings of Treasuries and mortgage bonds" and "to leave its benchmark interest rate unchanged at least until December."

Trump Infrastructure Panel Will Focus On Energy Projects.

The Washington Examiner (7/24, Siciliano) reports that President Trump announced the formation of a council of infrastructure advisers last Thursday. The advisory panel's charter will be made official on Tuesday. The council will be responsible for responding to specific questions drafted by the Commerce Department focused on "federal government funding, support, and delivery of infrastructure projects in several sectors," particularly "renewable energy generation, electricity transmission, and pipelines."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Democrats' Agenda, And The Art Of The Possible." In an editorial, the New York Times (7/24) says the Democrats' agenda "actually shares some ideas – job training, lowering drug prices, help for working families – with the Republicans' stated but so far unrealized priorities. But the minority Democrats won't accomplish much, if anything, on this list without Republican assistance." The Times adds, "If Democrats believe their ideas will provide middle-class people with better jobs, wages and futures, they should do everything possible to move them through Congress, and worry later about who gets credit."

"Poland Pulls Back From The Brink, For Now." A New York Times (7/25, Board) editorial calls Polish President Andrzej Duda's veto of "two bills that would have ended the judiciary's independence and crippled the rule of law” a “heartening” move, “but not the end of the problem.” Poland’s ruling Law and Justice party and Jaroslaw Kaczynski “will not relent in their efforts to eliminate any opposition, and they still have strong popular support,” the Times explains, and adds that President Trump’s visit earlier this month only served to encourage “their antidemocratic, nationalist, anti-immigrant push.” If the Polish government renews “its offensive against the rule of law,” the Times concludes, then the European Union must respond with a “credible threat of invoking Article 7.”

“A Terrorism Trial In The Federal Courts.” The New York Times (7/25, Board) editorializes that Attorney General Sessions most likely agreed “to try Ali Charaf Damache in a federal court in Philadelphia” not because the Administration has “come to see the value of federal trials for terrorism suspects,” but because it “most likely had no choice.” The Times argues “Spain, like many other countries, sees Guantánamo as the moral catastrophe and legal black hole that it is, and would have refused to hand Mr. Damache over without a guarantee that he would not be sent there to face a military commission.” Nonetheless, the decision “was the right move,” says the Times, which expresses hope that Damache’s trial will show President Trump “that the federal court system is far better equipped to handle such prosecutions than military commissions at Guantánamo Bay will ever be.”

Washington Post.

“Congress’s Drastic – But Necessary – Rebuke To Trump.” A Washington Post (7/24) editorial says if Congress passes the Russia sanctions legislation, “it will be a major rebuke to the president,” but “is nevertheless essential” because “it has become all too evident that Mr. Trump cannot be trusted to protect vital US interests against persistent Russian aggression.”

“Are Democrats Offering ‘A Better Deal?’ Not So Fast.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (7/24) says of the Democrats’ new agenda, “The question is whether their ‘A Better Deal’ offers an alternative to Trumpism that is both clear and well-calculated to cure what really ails the American economy.” The Post adds that “the Democratic response, as sketched so far, is less than compelling: Its declared premise, that the economy is ‘rigged’ against middle-class people” appears “better calculated to placate the party’s ascendant left wing than to start a serious policy conversation. American capitalism needs reform, not delegitimization.” The Democrats, adds the Post, largely “rehash ideas that Mr. Trump himself has embraced at least rhetorically (massive new infrastructure spending; tougher negotiations between Medicare and the pharmaceutical companies) or play small ball (a tax credit for business to do job training).”

“Every Republican Healthcare Plan So Far Would Cause Great Harm To The Nation.” The Washington Post (7/24) editorializes, Senate Majority Leader McConnell “announced Monday afternoon that the chamber would vote Tuesday on... well, on something. The scrambling reflected a basic fact: Every major Republican proposal put forward so far would mean millions of Americans would lose access” to healthcare. The proposals under consideration “run the gamut from bad to horrendous, and the rushed process for proceeding to the floor has made a mockery of the ‘world’s greatest deliberative body.’”

Wall Street Journal.

“Can Republicans Govern?” The Wall Street Journal (7/24) says in an editorial that Senate Majority Leader McConnell is right to demand that senators go on the record with their support for, or opposition to, ACA repeal. The Journal says that it has become clear that some GOP senators would prefer to avoid any vote, but that voters have the right to know where they stand.

“Farewell, Charlie Gard.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (7/24) laments British medical and legal officials, by challenging Charlie Gard’s parents, effectively conveyed their condemnation of the family’s desire to seek out a second medical opinion. The Journal cautions that the justice system’s delay and its elevation of a judge’s opinion over that of Gard’s parents should not come as a surprise because any system – in this case, Britain’s – that is responsible for healthcare spending will inevitably assume responsibility for life-and-death decisions as well.

“The Kushner Statement.” The Wall Street Journal (7/24) editorial argues in an editorial that while Jared Kushner is unlikely to have settled the Russia collusion issue given the level of media attention it is getting, his statement detailing his contacts with Russians during the campaign is an example of disclosure the President and other campaign officials should follow.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Trump Urges GOP Senators To Overturn Affordable Care Act
China Prepares For A Crisis Along North Korea Border
Google Parent Posts Strong Ad Growth, But Earns Less For Each Click
We Won't See You In Court: The Era Of Tort Lawsuits Is Waning

New York Times:

"I Did Not Collude," Kushner Says After Meeting Senate Investigators
Senate Braces For Health Showdown With McCain On Hand But A Plan Unclear
Democrats Try To Find Economic Message After Railing Against Trump
The Company Behind Many Surprise Emergency Room Bills
Poland's President Vetoes 2 Proposed Laws Limiting Courts' Independence
Economy Needs Workers, But Drug Tests Take A Toll
In San Antonio Smuggling Case, A Fatal Journey In A Packed And Sweltering Truck

Washington Post:

"I Did Not Collude," Kushner Asserts
Trump Team Weighs Options For Replacing Sessions
Russia Help Is Key To US Plan For Syria
In Congress, New Fears After Baseball Shooting
Migrants Relive Horrific Trip As Driver Is Charged

Washington Times:

Trump Implores Republicans For Legislative Victory
Defiant Kushner: Russia Charges Devised To Ridicule Trump Backers
Democrats Vow 'Better Deal' For Voters In Working Class
British Courts, Not Parents, Decided Fate Of Ailing Baby
Supreme Court Protestors Jailed For Repeated Cases Of Disruption
Rebels Fear Only Assad Benefits In Trump-Putin Truce

Financial Times:

Polish President To Veto New Laws On Judges
Jared Kushner Says He Has "Nothing To Hide"
Sweden Grapples With Leak Of Private Information
China's HNA Reveals Ownership Details After Stake Transfer

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Jordan-US Casualties; California-Live Stream Traffic Accident; US-China Planes Close Call; Raqqa Assault; Healthcare Reform Plan; Terminally Ill London Baby; Kayaking-Fiancée Murder; St. Louis-Carjacker Standoff; United Airline-Woman Restrained; Princess Diana Passing Anniversary; Marine-New Marriage.

CBS: Healthcare Reform Plan; Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Trump-Sessions Comment; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Kentucky-Abortion Clinic; California-Live Stream Traffic Accident; Terminally Ill London Baby; Princess Diana Passing Anniversary; Severe Weather; USS Constitution Restoration; All-Natural Materiel Property.

NBC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Healthcare Reform Plan; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Terminally Ill London Baby; Severe Weather; Vatican-Italy Drought; California-Live Stream Traffic Accident; Implanted Employee Card; Princess Diana Passing Anniversary; Community Pub.

Network TV At A Glance:

Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner – 9 minutes, 55 seconds
Texas-Immigrant Deaths – 7 minutes, 5 seconds
Healthcare Reform Plan – 5 minutes, 50 seconds
Terminally Ill London Baby – 5 minutes, 20 seconds
Princess Diana Passing Anniversary – 4 minutes, 40 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: McCain-Health Condition; Healthcare Reform Plan; Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner;

Texas-Immigrant Deaths.

CBS: McCain-Health Condition; Healthcare Reform Plan; Trump-Sessions Comment; Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Texas-Immigrant Deaths; Wall Street News.

FOX: McCain-Health Condition; Healthcare Reform Plan; Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner.

NPR: Healthcare Reform Plan; Russia Meddling Investigation-Kushner; Israel-Jordan Feud.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Hariri of Lebanon; participate in a salute to American heroes; participate in a Make America Great Again Rally.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a Great America Committee event.

US Senate: 8:30 AM Senate Agriculture Committee hearing on the 2018 Farm Bill – Hearing on 'Commodities, Credit, and Crop Insurance: Perspectives on Risk Management Tools and Trends for the 2018 Farm Bill', with testimony from witnesses including farmers Bruce Rohwer, and David Schemm; Evergreen Stock Farm owner and operator Kevin Scott; McMichen Farms owner and operator Nick McMichen; H & J Land Company owner and operator Jennifer James; Family Farm Partners owner and operator Meredith Rogers; Robert Rynning Farms owner and operator Robert Rynning; Schlemmer Farms owner and operator Ervin Schlemmer; Nobis Dairy Farm owner and operator Ken Nobis; Atkisson Land & Cattle owner and operator Dan Atkisson; Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation President Mark Haney; National Farmers Union President Roger Johnson; National Young Farmers Coalition co-founder and Executive Director Lindsey Lusher Shute; Crop Insurance Professionals Association Chairman William Cole; and Royal Bank Loan Officer and Crop Insurance Manager Brenda Kluesner Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 106, Washington, DC <http://agriculture.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee Executive Session – Executive Session, to consider nominations of J. Paul Compton, Jr. to be Department of Housing and Urban Development General Counsel; Anna Farias to be Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity; Neal Rackleff to be Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for Community Planning and Development; Richard Ashooh to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration; Elizabeth Erin Walsh to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Global Markets and United States and Foreign Commercial Service Director General; and Christopher Campbell to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Financial Institutions Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on marine debris – Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard Subcommittee hearing on 'Efforts on Marine Debris in the Oceans and Great Lakes', with testimony from Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and Fisheries David Balton; and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Marine Debris Program Director Nancy Wallace * Rescheduled from 22 Jun Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov>
<https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

10:00 AM Senate Judiciary Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Ralph Erickson to be U.S. Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit; Dabney Langhorne Friedrich to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Columbia; Stephen Schwartz to be a U.S. Court of Federal Claims Judge; and Brian Allen Benczkowski to be Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 226, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Environment & Public Works subcommittee hearing on clean energy technologies – Clean Air and Nuclear Safety Subcommittee hearing on 'Developing and Deploying Advanced Clean Energy Technologies', with testimony from Republican Sen. Lamar Alexander; West Virginia University Energy Institute Director Brian Anderson; Wyoming Infrastructure Authority Executive Director Jason Begger; Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory Global Security E-Program Manager Steve Bohlen; Oak Ridge National Lab Associate Director for Energy and Environmental Sciences Moe Khaleel; and Idaho National Laboratory Nuclear Science & Technology Directorate Associate Director Kemal Pasamehmetoglu Location: Rm 406, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

11:00 AM Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup hearing – Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year

2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 192, Washington, DC
<http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:00 PM 'Forced to Flee Burma: Stories of Rohingya in Bangladesh' Congressional briefing – 'Forced to Flee Burma: Stories of Rohingya in Bangladesh' briefing, co-hosted by the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission and the Senate Human Rights Caucus, featuring a panel of Refugees International Senior Advocate for Human Rights Daniel Sullivan, Simon-Skjodt Center for the Prevention of Genocide program manager Andrea Gittleman, and Human Rights Watch Fellow Richard Weir Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 385, Washington, DC

<http://tlhrc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/TLHRCommission>

2:30 PM Senate Intelligence CLOSED hearing. –

<https://www.intelligence.senate.gov/hearings/closed-briefing-intelligence-matters-175> Location: 219 Hart Senate Office Building <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Appropriations subcommittee markup hearing – Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year 2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 192, Washington, DC

<http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:30 PM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearing on North Korea – East Asia, the Pacific, and International Cybersecurity Subcommittee hearing on 'Assessing the Maximum Pressure and Engagement Policy Toward North Korea', with testimony from Acting Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Susan Thornton; Heritage Foundation Senior Research Fellow for Northeast Asia Bruce Klingner; and Social Science Research Council Northeast Asia Cooperative Security Project Director Leon Sigal Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Senate Armed Services subcommittee hearing on a 355-ship U.S. Navy – Seapower Subcommittee hearing on 'Options and Considerations for Achieving a 355-ship Navy from Naval Analysts', with testimony from Congressional Budget Office Senior Analyst for Naval Forces and Weapons Dr Eric Labs; Congressional Research Service Specialist in Naval Affairs Ronald O'Rourke; Center for a New American Security Defense Strategies and Assessments Program Director Dr Jerry Hendrix; and Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments Senior Fellow Bryan Clark Location: Rm 222, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

Senate expected to hold procedural vote on healthcare reform, although may lack support – Senate expected to hold procedural vote in an attempt to begin debate on a bill on healthcare reform, although both the 'Better Care Reconciliation Act' (Senate Republicans' legislation to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act) and the 'Obamacare Repeal Reconciliation Act' (House of Representatives-passed legislation to gradually repeal 'Obamacare' without a replacement) are thought to be likely to lack the necessary 50-vote support for a motion to pass – Republican senators including Susan Collins, Lisa Murkowski, Rand Paul, Mike Lee, Jerry Moran, and Rob Portman have previously announced their opposition to one or both plans, plus John McCain has been diagnosed with brain cancer and no Democrats support either bill * President Donald Trump has been urging Congressional Republicans to pass a bill, tweeting over the weekend that they must 'Repeal and Replace the disastrous ObamaCare' Location: Washington, DC
<http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 9:30 AM House Grid Innovation Expo – Grid Innovation Expo, hosted by the Edison Electric Institute, GridWise Alliance, and National Electrical Manufacturers Association, in conjunction with the House Grid Innovation Caucus. Features technologies and projects that are 'transforming the energy grid', with exhibitors including ABB, American Electric Power, CenterPoint Energy, Florida Power & Light Co., G&W Electric, General Electric, Innovari, Itron, Pacific Gas & Electric Company, Rappahannock Electric Cooperative, S&C Electric Company, Siemens, Southern California Edison, Tesla, Vermont Electric Power Company, and Xcel Energy Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rayburn Foyer, Washington, DC <http://www.eei.org> https://twitter.com/Edison_Electric

10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on technology and border security – Border and Maritime Security Subcommittee hearing on 'Deter, Detect and Interdict: Technology's Role in Securing the Border' Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

10:00 AM House Natural Resources subcommittee oversight hearing on LBJ Tropical Medical Center in American Samoa – Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee oversight hearing on 'Assessing Current Conditions and Challenges at the Lyndon B. Johnson Tropical Medical Center in American Samoa', with testimony from Department of the Interior Office of Insular Affairs Director of Budget Thomas Bussanich; LBJ Tropical Medical Center CEO-Director

Taufete'e John Faumuina, and Chief of Internal Medicine Dr Reese Tuato'o; American Samoa Medicaid Agency Director Sandra King Young; and Pago Pago, American Samoa, Department of Public Health Director Motusa Tuileama Nua Location: Rm 1324, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Financial Services Committee markup hearing – Markup hearing on 'H. Res. 442, Of inquiry directing the Secretary of the Treasury to provide certain documents in the Secretary's possession to the House of Representatives relating to President Trump's financial connections to Russia, certain illegal financial schemes, and related information', 'H.R. 1624, the Municipal Finance Support Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2864, the Improving Access to Capital Act', 'H.R. 3110, the Financial Stability Oversight Council Insurance Member Continuity Act', 'H.R. 3321, the National Strategy for Combating Terrorist, Underground, and Other Illicit Financing Act', and 'H.R. 3326, the World Bank Accountability Act of 2017' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on AUMF and current terrorist threats – Hearing on 'Authorization for the Use of Military Force and Current Terrorist Threats', with testimony from former Attorney General Michael Mukasey; former Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman's Legal Counsel Brig. Gen. (Ret.) Richard Gross; and former National Counterterrorism Center Director Matthew Olsen Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

10:00 AM House Transportation subcommittee latest hearing on USCG capabilities – Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee hearing on 'Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Coast Guard Sea, Land, and Air Capabilities, Part II', with testimony from U.S. Coast Guard Commandant Adm. Paul Zukunft, and Assistant Commandant for Acquisition and Chief Acquisition Officer Rear Adm. Michael Haycock; Government Accountability Office Director of Acquisition and Sourcing Management Marie Mak; National Academy of Sciences Committee on Polar Icebreaker Assessment Chair Rear Adm. (Ret.) Richard West; and Congressional Research Service Specialist in Naval Affairs Ronald O'Rourke Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>

10:00 AM Oversight Subcommittee hearing on 'IRS Electronic Record Retention Policies: Improving Compliance' Location: Rm 1100, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://waysandmeans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/WaysandMeansGOP>

10:00 AM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on the No Regulation Without Representation Act – Regulatory Reform, Commercial and Antitrust Law Subcommittee hearing on 'No Regulation Without Representation: H.R. 2887 and the Growing Problem of States Regulating Beyond Their Borders', with testimony from National Pork Producers Council CEO Neil Dierks; Atkinson, Andelson, Loya, Ruud & Romo associate Chad DeVeaux; National Taxpayers Union Interstate Commerce Initiative Director Andrew Moylan; and National Conference of State Legislatures President-elect Deb Peters Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM Communications and Technology Subcommittee hearing on 'Oversight and Reauthorization of the Federal Communications Commission' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Science subcommittees joint hearing on biofuels – Environment Subcommittee and Energy Subcommittee joint hearing on 'Examining Advancements in Biofuels: Balancing Federal Research and Market Innovation', with testimony from Oak Ridge National Laboratory BioEnergy Science Center (BESC) Director and Deputy-Division Director of Biosciences Dr Paul Gilna; University of Michigan Energy Institute (UMEI) Research Professor Dr John DeCicco; Growth Energy CEO Emily Skor; and Heritage Foundation Research Fellow in Energy and Environmental Policy Nick Loris Location: Rm 2318, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM House Oversight subcommittees latest joint hearing on 'Sue and Settle' agreements – Interior, Energy, and Environment Subcommittee and Intergovernmental Affairs Subcommittee joint hearing on 'Examining Sue and Settle Agreements: Part II' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

10:30 AM House Veterans' Affairs subcommittee hearing on VA service for vets with PTSD – Disability Assistance and Memorial Affairs Subcommittee hearing on 'PTSD Claims: Assessing Whether VBA is Effectively Serving Veterans' Location: Rm 334, Cannon House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

11:15 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

11:30 AM House Homeland Security Committee markup hearing – Markup hearing on ‘H.Res. 447, Directing the Secretary of Homeland Security to Transmit Certain Documents to the House of Representatives Relating to Department of Homeland Security Policies and Activities Relating to Businesses Owned or Controlled by President Donald J. Trump’, ‘H.R. 2626, Strong Visa Integrity Secures America Act’, ‘H.R. 2805, To Permanently Authorize the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Business Travel Card Program’, ‘H.R. 3202, Cyber Vulnerability Disclosure Reporting Act’, ‘H.R. 3284, Joint Counterterrorism Awareness Workshop Series Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 3328, Cuban Airport Security Act of 2017’, and ‘H.R. XXX, Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency Act of 2017’ Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

12:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including ‘H.J.Res. 111 – Providing for congressional disapproval under chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, of the rule submitted by Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection relating to ‘Arbitration Agreements’, plus consideration of ‘H.R. 3178 – Medicare Part B Improvement Act of 2017’, as amended, ‘H.R. 2182 – Plum Island Preservation Act’, and ‘H.R. XX – Russia, Iran, and North Korea Sanctions Act’ under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

1:00 PM House Democrats Steering & Policy Committee Hearing on healthcare – The Steering and Policy Committee will hold a hearing on ideas to update and improve the Affordable Care Act. Witnesses will discuss ways to lower healthcare costs for American families by stabilizing the marketplaces and ensuring coverage options for people everywhere in the U.S. Participants: Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi; Congresswoman Rosa DeLauro (D-CT), Co-Chair, Democratic Steering & Policy Committee; Congressman Eric Swalwell (D-CA), Co-Chair, Democratic Steering & Policy Committee; Members of the House Democratic Caucus; Gary Cohen, Former Deputy Administrator, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services; Douglas Elmendorf, Dean, John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University; Teresa Miller, Pennsylvania Insurance Commissioner. Location: Gabe Zimmerman Room, HVC-215 Capitol Hill

1:00 PM Bicameral Dems call on Congress to raise the minimum wage – House Committee on Education and the Workforce Ranking Member Bobby Scott, Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Ranking Member Patty Murray, Senate Budget Committee Ranking Member Bernie Sanders, and Congressional Progressive Caucus Vice Chair Democratic Rep. Keith Ellison discuss the Raise the Wage Act of 2017, via press conference also featuring Fight for $15 workers, Good Jobs Nation workers, and Restaurant Opportunities Center United (ROC) workers Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC democrats-edworkforce.house.gov <https://twitter.com/edworkforcedems> #RaiseTheWage

2:00 PM ‘Forced to Flee Burma: Stories of Rohingya in Bangladesh’ Congressional briefing – ‘Forced to Flee Burma: Stories of Rohingya in Bangladesh’ briefing, co-hosted by the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission and the Senate Human Rights Caucus, featuring a panel of Refugees International Senior Advocate for Human Rights Daniel Sullivan, Simon-Skjoldt Center for the Prevention of Genocide program manager Andrea Gittleman, and Human Rights Watch Fellow Richard Weir Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 385, Washington, DC <http://tlhrc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/TLHRCCommission>

2:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 3219, the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 2018’ (aka ‘Make America Secure Appropriations Act, 2018’) (meeting II) Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

2:00 PM House Armed Services subcommittee hearing on DoD equipment and uniform procurement in Iraq and Afghanistan – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on ‘Evaluating DOD Equipment and Uniform Procurement in Iraq and Afghanistan’, with testimony from Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction John Sopko; Department of Defense Assistant Inspector General Michael Roark; Government Accountability Office Director of International Affairs and Trade Jessica Farb; and Office of the Secretary of Defense for Policy Iraq Country Director Col. David Navratil, and Afghanistan (Resources and Transition) Director Peter Velz Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2212, Washington, DC www.armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

2:00 PM Transportation and Protective Security Subcommittee hearing on ‘Securing Air Cargo: Industry Perspectives’ Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

2:00 PM Iranian hostage Robert Levinson’s son testifies to House Foreign Affairs subcommittee – Middle East and North Africa Subcommittee hearing on ‘Held for Ransom: The Families of Iran’s Hostages Speak Out’, with testimony from Douglas Levinson – son of Robert Levinson; Babak Namazi – son of Baquer Namazi and brother of Simak Namazi; and Omar Zakka – son of Nizar Zakka * Over the weekend, the FBI issued a statement in response to media reports citing an anonymous official who said ‘many U.S. Govt officials believe Levinson is no longer alive’, saying that was ‘not accurate’ and that the U.S. Govt was continuing to call on the Iranian Govt to ‘locate him and return him home to his family’ Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov>

<https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

2:00 PM House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on FY’18 budget request for Europe and Eurasia – Europe, Eurasia, and Emerging Threats Subcommittee hearing on ‘Examining the President’s FY 2018 Budget Proposal for Europe and Eurasia’, with testimony from Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs John Heffern, and Deputy Assistant Secretary for Central Asia Daniel Rosenblum; and USAID Acting Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator for Asia Ann Marie Yastishock, and Bureau for Europe and Eurasia Administrator’s Acting Assistant Margot Ellis Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2200, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

4:00 PM House Natural Resources Committee markup hearing begins – Markup hearing begins on legislation including ‘H.R. 825, Public Land Renewable Energy Development Act’, ‘H.R. 873, Global War on Terrorism War Memorial Act’, ‘H.R. 1418, To amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to provide that Alexander Creek, Alaska, is and shall be recognized as an eligible Native village under that Act, and for other purposes’, ‘H.R. 1491, Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians Land Affirmation Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 2083, Endangered Salmon and Fisheries Predation Prevention Act’, ‘H.R. 2199, Federal Land Asset Inventory Reform Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 2316, Cooperative Management of Mineral Rights Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 2371, Western Area Power Administration Transparency Act’, ‘H.R. 2582, Confirming State Land Grants for Education Act’, ‘H.R. 2611, Little Rock Central High School National Historic Site Boundary Modification Act’, ‘H.R. 3279, Helium Extraction Act of 2017’, and ‘H.R. 3281, Reclamation Title Transfer and Non-Federal Infrastructure Incentivization Act’ * Concludes tomorrow Location: Rm 1324, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

6:00 PM Oceana host Capitol Hill event to celebrate shark conservation during ‘Shark Week’ – Oceana, in cooperation with Republican Rep. Ed Royce, hosts reception on Capitol Hill – during Discovery Channel’s ‘Shark Week’ – to celebrate sharks and discuss the future of shark conservation in the U.S., with guests able to experience virtual reality technology that ‘puts them in the water with sharks’ and view a new PSA starring actress and ocean advocate Nina Dobrev. Participants include Oceana Campaign Director Lora Snyder and mascot ‘Dusky the Shark’, Rep. Royce, Republican Rep. Blake Farenthold, Independent Rep. Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan, and other Members of Congress and special guests Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC www.oceana.org <https://twitter.com/Oceana>

President Trump’s son-in-law interviewed by House Intelligence Committee after meeting with Russian lawyer – House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence holds closed interview with White House Senior Advisor (and President Donald Trump’s son-in-law) Jared Kushner * Follows a meeting involving Kushner, President Trump’s son Donald Trump, Jr., former Donald J. Trump for President campaign manager Paul Manafort, and Russian attorney Natalia Veselnitskaya in June 2016 which emails released by Trump, Jr. have shown was supposedly for Russia to pass on information to ‘incriminate’ Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC intelligence.house.gov
<https://twitter.com/HouseIntelComm>

Other: 10:30 AM GOP Rep. Phil Roe discusses ‘free speech on campus’ at the Heritage Foundation – Republican Rep. Phil Roe speaks at the Heritage Foundation on ‘Doublespeak 101 – ‘Free Speech Zones’ and the Threat to Free Speech on Campus’, followed by panel discussion with Ethics and Public Policy Center Senior Fellow Stanley Kurtz, Goldwater Institute Vice President for Litigation Tim Sandefur, and Heritage Foundation Center for Education Policy Analyst Mary Clare Amselem Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org <https://twitter.com/Heritage>

12:25 PM Commerce Secretary Ross speaks at Economic Club of Washington – Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross speaks at the Economic Club of Washington, DC, on topics including his efforts on behalf of the Trump Administration to update and restructure NAFTA and resolve outstanding economic issues between the U.S. and China Location: The Ritz-Carlton, Washington, DC Hotel, 1150 22nd St NW, Washington, DC www.economicclub.org
<https://twitter.com/TheEconomicClub>

Post-Brexit U.S. free trade deal talks continue – Talks between U.S. and UK negotiators to 'prepare the ground' for a post-Brexit trade deal, featuring U.S. Trade Representative Amb. Robert Lighthizer and UK International Trade Secretary Liam Fox, continue into a second day * Secretary Fox's announcement of the talks earlier this month came in spite of rules in Brussels that ban deals being made between EU countries and others while a member state of the 28-nation bloc. He has maintained that there is nothing to stop the UK Govt 'scoping out' how a future relationship with the U.S. might look before Brexit takes effect in 2019 Location: Washington, DC www.gov.uk/government/organisations/department-for-international-trade <https://twitter.com/tradegovuk> #Brexit

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "On Friday, [Sean] Spicer resigned as White House press secretary. He wanted to spend more time not answering his family's questions."

Stephen Colbert: "Other White House staffers refer to [Anthony] Scaramucci as a 'joke' and as a Trump-world 'hanger-on' who isn't qualified for the job. Wait. Have you seen the Trump Administration?"

James Corden: "Before appearing in front of the committee, [Jared] Kushner released an 11-page statement denying that he colluded with the Russians. Now look, I'm not an intelligence expert, but if you need 11 pages to explain yourself, you so colluded."

Trevor Noah: "Meet Anthony Scaramucci, or as his friends call him 'the Mooch.' He grew up in a blue-collar family on Long Island, a three-foot putt away from Donald Trump's birthplace. The Mooch graduated from Harvard, started a successful hedge fund, and, like everyone else working in the Trump Administration, Scaramucci also spent seven years working at Goldman Sachs, which makes him think maybe Trump's plan to crack down on Wall Street is just to move Wall Street into the White House."

Trevor Noah: "I love this White House so much. Most presidents would try to get their team all on the same page, but Trump has his team try every page."

Jimmy Fallon: "That's right, Spicer stepped down, which means now we have to pretend like he hasn't had his resume ready for five months."

Jimmy Fallon: "You guys hear this over the weekend? New Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci deleted a bunch of old tweets that were critical of Trump's platform. Trump was shocked. He said, 'You can delete tweets?'"

Seth Meyers: "After months of 'will he or will he' speculation, Sean Spicer has finally stepped down as press secretary. I'm guessing so he can spend more time with the bushes outside the White House."

Seth Meyers: "Man, working for Trump is like doing crack cocaine. At first, it must be an amazing high. But eventually, your life falls apart and you start stealing appliances."

Seth Meyers: "There's no doubt Scaramucci is an experienced schmoozer with a much slicker style than Spicer. In fact, at the end of his marathon press conference where he talked about the President's karma and the love he has for the American people, Scaramucci bid goodbye to the press corps with an air kiss. So in summary, the Mooch gave us a smooch after Spicy screwed the pooch."

Seth Meyers: "We're six months into his presidency, and he's already talking about pardoning himself. At this rate, Trump is going to get impeached and resign in time to be on the next season of Dancing With the Stars."

Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, June 13, 2017
Date: Tuesday, June 13, 2017 7:02:52 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- USA Today: Interior Report Recommends That Trump Downsize Bears Ears Monument.
- Associated Press: Sununu Meeting With Members Of Trump Administration.
- Portland (ME) Press Herald: Maine AG Vows To Challenge Any Attempt To Undo Katahdin-Area Monument.
- CNN: What Trump's Cabinet Has Been Up To.
- Newsday (NY): Town Removes Barriers Blocking Disabled Access At Tobay Beach.
- The Guardian (UK): New Threats To Public Lands Endanger America's Unique Wildlife Corridors.
- NextGov: Additional Coverage: Interior Department's Plan To Stop Drones From Blocking Firefighters.

- Des Moines (IA) Register: America's Energy And Economic Destiny Will Be Up To The U.S., Not The U.N.
- Missoulian (MT): Zinke Betrays His Montana Roots.
- The Hill: Leave The Grand Staircase-Escalante Monument Alone.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribes Lash Out At Trump Administration For Lapses In Consultation.
- Interior Department Scrubs Climate Change From Agency Website. Again.
- Choctaw Nation Citizen Lands Senior Job At Bureau Of Indian Affairs.
- Donald Trump's Budget Threatens To Disrupt Indian Country.

Bureau Of Land Management

- E&E Publishing: Former Officials Slam Trump Admin's 'Cynical' Legal Position.
- Durango (CO) Herald: Public Comment Opens For Future Of King II Coal Mine.
- Emery County (UT) Progress: BLM-Utah Announces Ahmed Mohsen As The New Color Country District Manager.
- KKOH-AM Reno (NV): Bureau Of Land Management Finishes Horse Gather Near Boone Springs.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Hundreds Of Unused Oil And Gas Wells Dot Alaska. The State Wants Many Closed.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- The Ocean Threat You've Never Heard Of, But Trump Made Easier.
- Offshore Energy Exploration Is Safe, Has Been Going On For 81 Years.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Investigators: EPA Had No Rules For Working At Risky Mines.
- Feds Ask For Dismissal Of Challenge To Fish-Saving Efforts.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Additional Coverage: BSEE Extends Time For Operators To Retain Offshore Federal Leases.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Associated Press: Vast Georgia Wildfire Almost Out After Days Of Soaking Rain.
- Cape (DE) Gazette: Prime Hook Beach Restoration Among Top Projects In U.S.
- Central Valley (CA) Business Times: To Save Salamander, Feds To Protect 400,000 Acres In California.
- Santa Cruz (CA) Sentinel: US Fish & Wildlife OKs Scotts Valley Middle School Rebuild.
- Asheville (NC) Citizen-Times: NC Biologist Recognized For Work To Recover Endangered Species.

National Park Service

- WJLA-TV Washington: NPS Eliminates Free Parking On National Mall.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: St. Anthony Falls, Birthplace Of A City, Could Deliver New Visions Of An Urban River.
- U.S. News & World Report: Construction Begins On 17-Mile Iowa Bike Trail.
- Associated Press: Rivers In US West Turn Dangerous As Days Warm, Snow Thaws.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Honolulu Star-Advertiser: Interior Department Releases $7.8M To Help American Samoa.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Coal Industry Could Be In Store For A 'Rare Earth' Reboot.

US Geological Survey

- Associated Press: Mapping Project Tracks Challenges Coming To Colorado Plateau.

Top National News

- PBS: Trump Friend Says He's "Considering" Firing Mueller, Sparking Media Storm.
- Associated Press: Sessions Expected To Face Questions About Comey Firing, Meeting With Russian Envoy.
- NBC: Another Appeals Court Rules Against Travel Ban, Cites Trump Tweet.
- Washington Post: DC, Maryland AGs Sue Trump, Accuse Him Of Violating Emoluments Clause.

- Townhall: White House Pushes Jobs Agenda.
- Reuters: Trump Administration To Release This Week Plan To Reduce Manufacturing Regulations.
- Fox Business: US Budget Deficit Widened Through First 8 Months Of Fiscal Year.
- MarketWatch: Fed Expected To Raise Federal Funds Rate Wednesday.
- Wall Street Journal: Fed's Monetary Tightening Failing To Produce Intended Effects On Markets.
- McClatchy: McClatchy Analysis: Climate Change-Stoked Wildfires Draining Forest Service Budget.
- Washington Times: US Opts Out Of G-7 Pledge Committing To Paris Climate Agreement.
- Bloomberg BNA: Trump Administration Begins Efforts To Rollback Clean Power Plan.
- Washington Post: United States Enter New Period Of Climate Policy Isolation.
- Washington Examiner: EPA Delays Implementation Of Chemical Safety Rules.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Senate Hides Its Trumpcare Bill Behind Closed Doors."
 - "Emmanuel Macron's Unfettered Powers."
 - "Remember The Promise Of Good Jobs?"
- Washington Post.
 - "Children Continue To Be Traumatized By Shootings. When Will America Act?"
 - "Radical Centrism Dominates In France."
 - "The FDA Takes A Stand Against An Opioid That Fueled An Epidemic."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Cleaning Up the Superfund Mess."
 - "Trump's New Sugar High."
 - "South Korea's Defense Blunder."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Interior Report Recommends That Trump Downsize Bears Ears Monument.

USA Today (6/12, Korte) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "recommended Monday that President Trump vastly reduce the size of the Bears Ears National Monument in Utah, and seek congressional authorization to turn over the remaining landmarks to be co-managed with Native American tribes." Zinke's plan "would be the largest reversal of public land protections in the 111-year history of the Antiquities Act." The AP (6/12, Daly) reports "Zinke did not specify how much of the 1.3 million acres should be trimmed, but said he has no doubt the monument must be 'right-sized' significantly."

CNN (6/12, Merica) reports that Zinke informed "Trump on Monday that he was delaying his final decision on the controversial Bears Ears National Monument, putting off the final recommendation until later in 2017." In a memo to Trump, "Zinke says he has produced a '45-day interim report' on the national monument – as is requested in the executive order Trump signed in April – and will issue a 'more detailed final report' later this year." KSL-TV Salt Lake City (6/12, O'Donoghue) reports that "in the interim, the public comment period on the Bears Ears designation in southern Utah was extended" until July 10 "to coincide with input on 26 other monument designations up for review."

The Washington Post (6/12, Fears, Eilperin) reports that "speaking with reporters on Monday, Zinke emphasized that 'the recommendations were not made in a bubble in Washington, DC' but determined after 'we traveled by air, by car, by foot and by horseback.'" Zinke "said the current boundaries do not accord with the 1906 law's provision that any designation be confined to 'the smallest area compatible with the proper care and management of the objects to be protected.'" Added Zinke, "If you look at the Bears Ears as a whole, there's a lot more drop-dead gorgeous land than there are historic, prehistoric objects," which "can be identified, segregated and reasonably separated."

The Washington Times (6/12, Wolfgang) notes "the announcement immediately drew threats of lawsuits from environmental and conservation groups who said Mr. Zinke's plan will ruin some of the nation's most beautiful land by opening it up to energy exploration, and that the recommendations are a slap in the face to the tribal leaders who have been defending the monument." Randi Spivak, public lands program director with the Center for Biological Diversity, called the plan "a slap in the face to the tribes that sought protection for Bears Ears and any American who values our incredible public lands," as well as "yet another corrupt process from the Trump administration that ignores public sentiment and rewards polluting industries that view our public lands as simply another source of profit."

The AP (6/12, McCOMBS, DALY) reports that Zinke's recommendation was "applauded by the state's top Republican leaders but marked a stinging setback for a coalition of Western tribes that pushed for protection of lands they consider sacred." Several tribal leaders said "they weren't briefed on the plan and consider the idea to be an attempt to temper their criticism." The article says that "they joined environmental groups in vowing to file lawsuits if President Donald Trump accepts the recommendation and shrinks the monument."

Additional coverage was provided by the New York Times (6/12, Turkewitz, Davenport), the Wall Street Journal (6/12, Carlton), the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (6/12, Siciliano), The Hill (6/12, Cama, Henry), Reuters (6/12, Gardner), CBS News (6/12), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/12, Maffly), the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (6/12, MAFFLY, BURR), the Deseret \(UT\) News (6/12, O'Donoghue), the Deseret \(UT\) News (6/12, O'Donoghue), TIME (6/12, Daly), NPR (6/12, Siegler), Fronteras (6/12, Morales), Huffington Post (6/12, D'angelo), the Arizona Republic (6/12, DeMille), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/12, Gardner), the St. George & Southern Utah Independent (6/12), Southern California Public Radio (6/12, Siegler), The Guardian \(UK\) (6/12, Milman), the Daily Caller (6/12, Pearce), BuzzFeed (6/12, Dalrymple), Native News Online (6/12, Rickert), Utah Policy (6/12), the Highland \(CA\) Community News (6/12), Outside (6/12, Solomon), KSL-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, O'Donoghue), KGVO-FM Missoula \(MT\) Missoula, MT (6/12, Christian), KSL-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, O'Donoghue), KSTU-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, Winslow), KUTV-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, Weber), KTVX-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, Dotson), KTVX-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (6/12, Mills), and KPBS-TV San Diego \(CA\) San Diego (6/12, Siegler).

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by U.S. News & World Report (6/12), the New York \(NY\) Times (6/12, Turkewitz, Davenport), U.S. News & World Report (6/12, Daly), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/12, Daly), the Boston \(MA\) Herald (6/12), the Daily Mail (6/12), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/12, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (6/12, Daly), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/12, Matthew Daly |, Ap), the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/12, Daly), the Denver \(CO\) Post (6/12, Fears, Eilperin), ABC News (6/12, Daly), the Business Insider (6/12, Daly), CNBC (6/12), the Colorado Springs \(CO\) Gazette (6/12, Daly), the Economic Times \(IND\) (6/12), Fox News (6/12), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (6/12, Daly), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/12, Daly), the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (6/12, DeMille), the Ventura County \(CA\) Star (6/12, DeMille), and the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/12, Daly).

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by the AP (6/12, McCombs), the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (6/12, Freeman), the Chico \(CA\) Enterprise-Record (6/12, Smith), the Deseret \(UT\) News (6/12, O'Donoghue), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/12, Sambides), and KFBB-TV Great Falls \(MT\) Great Falls, MT (6/12, Crowspreadingwings)

Sununu Meeting With Members Of Trump Administration.

The AP (6/12) reports that on Tuesday, New Hampshire Gov. Chris Sununu is scheduled to meet with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. The Bedford \(NH\) Bulletin (6/12, Landrigan) reports that Zinke is "coming to Bass Pro Shops on Tuesday to formally announce the release of $1 billion from two federal trust funds that support fish and wildlife preservation across the country." Sununu is "expected to be at the event along with New Hampshire legislative leaders, the president of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and fish and hunting regulators from Arizona and other states."

Additional coverage was provided by New Hampshire Public Radio (6/12, Greene).

Maine AG Vows To Challenge Any Attempt To Undo Katahdin-Area Monument.

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (6/12, Miller) reports that Maine Attorney General Janet Mills called the Trump Administration's "review of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument

'fundamentally flawed' and vowed Monday to 'challenge any unlawful executive branch action' regarding the monument's designation." The article notes that "the Democratic attorney general's statements supporting the 87,500-acre monument also puts her squarely at odds with Republican Gov. Paul LePage." Mills wrote in comments submitted to the Interior Department as part of the review: "We are prepared to challenge any unlawful executive branch action that purports to abolish or reduce the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument. DOI should instead terminate its review of Katahdin Woods and Waters and reaffirm the agency's commitment to making the monument work well for all people, particularly the residents of the Katahdin region who are now counting on it for their economic future."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (6/13) and the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/12, Harrison).

Zinke Needs To Know This When He Visits Maine's Monument. In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/12, LeVasseur), Rick LeVasseur, owner of 5 Lakes Lodge, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "needs to understand that any claim of insufficient public outreach is, to be frank, ridiculous, as anyone who has lived in Maine for the past five or 10 years knows." He argues that "the monument and the park service offer huge economic and cultural assets for our communities." LeVasseur hopes Zinke will "listen to the overwhelming majority of Mainers, U.S. Sens. Angus King and Susan Collins and U.S. Rep. Chellie Pingree, all of whom oppose efforts to tamper with the monument."

What Zinke Should Learn From His Visit To The Katahdin Woods And Waters National Monument. In his column for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/12, Dutson), Lance Dutson writes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is "about to learn why Maine's outdoor heritage has captured the imagination of visitors since the days of Henry David Thoreau." Dutson argues that "the creation of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument is...a positive development." He hopes Zinke's experience is "profound, and that he sees for himself that this land is a treasure that deserves to be preserved and shared with our entire nation."

Additional Coverage. Additional coverage was provided by the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (6/13, Sambides).

What Trump's Cabinet Has Been Up To.

CNN (6/12, Payson-Denney, Wallace) reports that President Trump on Monday gathered his full cabinet and gave them the opportunity to speak about what they have been working on. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, the piece says, is "currently reviewing public lands designated under several recent presidents, setting the stage for a potential shrinking of federal holdings – possibly including the controversial Bears Ears National Monument designated by President Obama." When he spoke, Zinke said, "I am committed and optimistic that we can be both great stewards and be the world's largest producer of energy."

Town Removes Barriers Blocking Disabled Access At Tobay Beach.

Newsday \(NY\) (6/12, Olson) reports that "the Town of Oyster Bay has removed a turnstile and gate from an entrance to Tobay Beach that were at the center of a discrimination complaint alleging that they made access to an adjoining restroom difficult for people with disabilities." Andrew Hager "filed a complaint with the federal government against the town in July 2015."

12-TV Long Island, NY (6/12) reports that "federal officials found merit in Hawkins' complaint, and told the town in letter last April to come up with a plan to comply with the law." In April, "the town agreed to have a staff member open and close the gate during beach hours and leave it unlocked at other times." Then, "over the weekend, the town took its agreement of compliance one step further by taking down the turnstile and gate all together."

New Threats To Public Lands Endanger America's Unique Wildlife Corridors.

The Guardian \(UK\) (6/12, Milman) reports that "the nascent movement to safeguard wildlife corridors – vital for animals as diverse as wolves, bears, elk, tortoises and ground-dwelling birds – is now at risk." According to the article, "in recent years congressional Republicans have pushed for federal land in the western states to be handed over for development," and "with Donald Trump now in the White House, these ambitions could come to fruition." Conservationists are "increasingly turning their attention to private landowners to help promote and secure wildlife corridors."

Additional Coverage: Interior Department's Plan To Stop Drones From Blocking Firefighters.

Additional coverage that the Interior Department is building "Current Wildland Fires" database was provided by NextGov (6/12, Ravindranath) and the Porterville \(CA\) Recorder (6/12).

America's Energy And Economic Destiny Will Be Up To The U.S., Not The U.N.

In an op-ed for the Des Moines \(IA\) Register (6/12, Zinke), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke defends President Trump's decision "to pull the United States out of the poorly negotiated Paris Accord." Zinke argues that "developing American energy and achieving American energy dominance has three major benefits to the environment, economy, and national security." Zinke acknowledges that "people may be concerned about any environmental impact that development may have," but he argues that "good stewardship of our lands and waters and responsible use of our natural resources are not mutually exclusive." Zinke concludes that "working with industry partners and local governments," he is "confident that advancements in technology and smart regulations will allow the United States to continue responsible energy development and production and also continue to lower emissions."

Zinke Betrays His Montana Roots.

In his column for the Missoulian \(MT\) (6/12, Ochenski), George Ochenski criticizes Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for defending President Trump's budget proposal. According to Ochenski, "especially hard hit will be Montana, Zinke's home state that he professed to love and promised to protect." Ochenski urges Zinke "to take a good look in the mirror and remind yourself that you are a Montanan, where telling the truth and keeping your word are the traits by which you will be judged."

Leave The Grand Staircase-Escalante Monument Alone.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/12, Hedden, Contributor), Bill Hedden, the executive director of the Grand Canyon Trust, argues that "if President Trump and Utah's leaders are truly interested in solving problems rather than creating them, they should leave the Grand Staircase monument alone and, instead of attacking Bears Ears, take the opportunity to negotiate a similar land exchange for the state lands enclosed in that monument."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribes Lash Out At Trump Administration For Lapses In Consultation.

The Nation Sun News (6/13) reports that the Trump Administration is "coming under heavy fire as the new leader of the Department of the Interior makes a highly-anticipated appearance before the nation's largest inter-tribal organization." The mid-year session of the National Congress of American Indians "doesn't officially start until Tuesday but tribes were out in full force for a pair of listening sessions hosted by Interior on Monday." According to the article, "one by one, they slammed the department for moving forward with a reorganization without providing guidance to the sovereign governments most affected."

Interior Department Scrubs Climate Change From Agency Website. Again.

The Huffington Post (6/13, Visser) reports that the Interior Department has "removed almost all mentions of climate change from an agency website documenting efforts to address the phenomenon within government programs for Native Americans." A webpage for the Bureau of Indian Affairs' Tribal Climate Resilience Program, "originally tasked with 'mainstreaming climate change considerations into all Bureau of Indian Affairs activities,' was changed sometime over the past month." The program is "now called simply the Tribal Resilience Program and has a mission statement noticeably less science-forward."

Additional coverage was provided by BuzzFeed (6/12, Subbaraman).

Choctaw Nation Citizen Lands Senior Job At Bureau Of Indian Affairs.

The Nation Sun News (6/12) reports that Gavin Clarkson, "a citizen of the Choctaw Nation, will be serving as the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Policy and Economic Development at the BIA." Clarkson is "the first senior political hire at the agency since Secretary Ryan Zinke, the new leader of the Department of the Interior, came on board in March."

Donald Trump's Budget Threatens To Disrupt Indian Country.

In a piece for the Nation Sun News (6/12, Trahant), Mark Trahant criticizes President Trump's budget proposal as “a destructive document that would result in great hardship across the nation and Indian Country.” He thinks “it’s not too strong to say that this plan would mean an early death for too many people.” Trahant urges Congress to “do something better” or they will “face the consequences from voters in the 2018 elections.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Former Officials Slam Trump Admin’s ‘Cynical’ Legal Position.

E&E Publishing (6/12) reports that “a bipartisan group of former Interior Department officials is urging a federal court to continue weighing a legal dispute over the federal government’s hydraulic fracturing authority.” In a brief, “officials from the Obama, Clinton and both Bush administrations argue that the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals should hear oral arguments over Interior’s fracking rule and reverse a lower court’s conclusion that the government has no authority to regulate the oil and gas extraction process, which is used on 90 percent of wells on public lands.” The former officials said in the brief, “The district court’s erroneous ruling is also almost surely having a negative effect right now on BLM’s rulemaking processes and day-to-day supervision of public lands, and will continue to do so as long as it is allowed to stand.”

Additional coverage was provided by Law360 (6/12).

Public Comment Opens For Future Of King II Coal Mine.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (6/12, Romeo) reports that “La Plata County’s only operating coal mine is set to run out of reserves in about two years, prompting the company to ask for an expansion of 950 acres of underground workings about 20 miles west of Durango.” On Friday, the Bureau of Land Management “announced a 30-day public comment period on the proposal, which will end July 9.” According to the BLM, “if GCC Energy LLC – operators of the King II coal mine near Hesperus since 2007 – is not granted an expansion, the company could go out of business.” A public meeting will be held on June 20.

BLM-Utah Announces Ahmed Mohsen As The New Color Country District Manager.

The Emery County \(UT\) Progress (6/12) reports that Bureau of Land Management (BLM) Utah State Director Edwin Roberson “announced the selection of Ahmed Mohsen as the new Color Country District Manager.” Mohsen, “who previously served as the field manager for the Price Field Office, will report to his new position on July 9.” Roberson said, “I am proud to announce Ahmed Mohsen will serve as the new Color Country District Manager. Ahmed has a strong track record of working with local and state agencies, industry, and citizens in the management of our public lands and natural resources. I have great confidence in the experience and professionalism Ahmed brings into this vital role.”

Bureau Of Land Management Finishes Horse Gather Near Boone Springs.

KKOH-AM Reno, NV (6/12) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “finished a wild horse gather they were conducting for the last month near Boone Springs, approximately 40 miles southwest of Wendover.” According to the article, “96 horses in the Antelope Valley Herd Management Area were rounded up from private land, and 94 were sent to the Indian Lakes Off-Range Corral in Fallon, where they will be adopted out.” BLM officials “say 46 studs, 35 mares, and 15 foals were collected, but one stud was returned to the range, and one 13 year old mare died during the gather.”

Hundreds Of Unused Oil And Gas Wells Dot Alaska. The State Wants Many Closed.

Alaska Dispatch News (6/12, DeMarban) reports Cathy Foerster, chairwoman of the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, said that state inspectors are starting to require companies to properly close hundreds of unused wells that stopped producing a long time ago, some dating back to the 1960s. Foerster said that the agency has paid insufficient attention to properly closing wells, but the state is launching a two part initiative that should lead to a permanent shutdown for many wells, while ensuring there are sufficient surety bonds to protect the state if wells are not properly plugged. Companies in the state have struggled to plug wells amid market difficulties, and many have entered bankruptcy in recent years. The “state effort is separate from the federal Bureau of Land Management’s ongoing work to clean up ‘legacy’ wells dotting the 23-million-acre National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

The Ocean Threat You've Never Heard Of, But Trump Made Easier.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (6/12, Nelsen), Chad Nelsen, CEO of the Surfrider Foundation, warns that "our oceans are in grave danger." He notes that the Trump Administration "wants to expand seismic blasting and offshore drilling, wreaking havoc on our seas and jeopardizing coastal economies." Nelsen urges the US to harness "the resources and technologies to transition to clean energy now, before it's too late for our oceans."

Offshore Energy Exploration Is Safe, Has Been Going On For 81 Years.

In an op-ed for the Sunshine State \(FL\) News (6/12, Bishop), Barney Bishop III, president & CEO, Barney Bishop Consulting, writes that "the first step to exploring future offshore development opportunities is information gathering, which allows scientists to pinpoint our energy resources." He argues that "one safe way to do so is through seismic testing, a proven and efficient means to determine energy potential in the ocean." Bishop notes that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has "stated there is no documented scientific evidence that seismic testing causes harm to marine animals, since its inception 80 years ago." Bishop encourages the voting public "to support opportunities to explore our offshore energy resources."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Investigators: EPA Had No Rules For Working At Risky Mines.

The AP (6/12, Elliott) reports that "the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency had no rules for working around old mines when the agency inadvertently triggered a massive spill from a Colorado mine that polluted rivers in three states, government investigators said Monday." Investigators from the EPA's Office of Inspector General said that "the agency started work on safety standards after the spill and expects to finish them Friday." The article notes that "the inspector general's report disputed one key element in a previous review of the Gold King spill, by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, which was assigned to conduct an independent, outside assessment of what went wrong." The Bureau of Reclamation "said the EPA-led crew was attempting to insert a drain pipe through a debris pile blocking the entrance of the mine, and that the on-scene coordinator had pushed that work ahead despite the reservations of the other on-scene coordinator, who was not present that day." However, "the EPA inspector general said the crew was excavating loose rock around the mine entrance to see if the underlying rock was solid, not trying to insert a drain pipe."

Additional coverage was provided by the Denver \(CO\) Post (6/12, Finley), the Denverite \(CO\) (6/12), and the Daily Caller (6/12, Barton).

Feds Ask For Dismissal Of Challenge To Fish-Saving Efforts.

Law360 (6/12, Lidgett) reports that "the federal government asked a California federal judge on Friday to toss the remaining claims brought against it by a pair of California water districts over a decision to release extra water into a river to help preserve fish for Native Americans, saying the districts lack standing."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Additional Coverage: BSEE Extends Time For Operators To Retain Offshore Federal Leases.

Additional coverage that the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement "last Friday doubled the amount of time that oil and natural gas operators have to coordinate operations and retain their leases in federal waters of the Outer Continental Shelf" was provided by Natural Gas Intelligence (6/12, Passut).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Vast Georgia Wildfire Almost Out After Days Of Soaking Rain.

The AP (6/12, Bynum) reports that “a wildfire that burned vast acreage and at one point threatened hundreds of homes near the Georgia-Florida state line has been nearly extinguished after steady rains soaked the Okefenokee Swamp over the past week.” According to Susan Heisey, supervisory ranger for the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge, “the team fighting the blaze now considers it 90-percent contained and the flames that burned nearly 240 square miles (620 sq. kilometers) since April have been reduced to scattered piles of smoldering debris from trees cut down in the fire area’s southeast corner.” Heisey, a spokeswoman for the firefighting team, said Monday, “The water levels in the swamp are still below average, but the rains are really saturating the uplands.”

Additional coverage was provided by WJAX-TV Jacksonville, FL (6/12, Brown).

Prime Hook Beach Restoration Among Top Projects In U.S.

The Cape \(DE\) Gazette (6/12, MacArthur) reports that Prime Hook National Wildlife Refuge beach has been “named one of the five best restored beaches in the nation for 2017 by the American Shore and Beach Preservation Association.” The project was “one of the largest marsh restoration projects ever attempted on the East Coast.” Annabella Larsen, wildlife biologist at the refuge, said, “This is becoming a huge, great success story.”

To Save Salamander, Feds To Protect 400,000 Acres In California.

The Central Valley \(CA\) Business Times (6/12) reports that “some 400,000 acres of breeding ponds and adjacent uplands in California – much of it in the Central Valley – need protection from development, according to a final recovery plan for the threatened central California population of the California tiger salamander released by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.” The article notes that “the recovery plan — which comes more than a decade after the amphibian received Endangered Species Act protection — is in accordance with a legal settlement between the agency and the Center for Biological Diversity.” The plan “focuses primarily on alleviating the threat of habitat loss and fragmentation by permanently protecting breeding ponds and adjacent uplands throughout the salamander’s range.”

US Fish & Wildlife OKs Scotts Valley Middle School Rebuild.

The Santa Cruz \(CA\) Sentinel (6/12, Gumz) reports that “with a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service permit in hand for the $33 million Scotts Valley Middle School rebuilding project, Overaa Construction is moving full steam ahead.” On Monday, “about 25 workers were at the site, excavating and demolishing, said Juan Garcia, foreman for Overaa Construction, the contractor rebuilding the 75-year-old school.” Four days earlier, “the federal permit was granted for a habitat plan for the federally protected Mount Hermon June beetles on the school site.”

NC Biologist Recognized For Work To Recover Endangered Species.

The Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (6/12, Chávez) reports that The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service recognized Rachael Hoch, a biologist with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, “last week with its Recovery Champion award, in honor of her significant contribution to the recovery of federally threatened or endangered animals.” According to the article, “for the past five years, Hoch has coordinated the state’s Conservation Aquaculture Center at the Marion Fish Hatchery, where she oversees the propagation and rearing of some of the rarest fish and mussels in the state.” Jason Mays, aquatic biologist for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said, “When a plant or animal is placed on the endangered species list, the goal is to recover it so it no longer needs that protection. Rachael’s work, along with the work of many wildlife commission staff, is key to that effort. The work done in Marion is really foundational to getting some of these animals off the endangered species list.”

National Park Service

NPS Eliminates Free Parking On National Mall.

WJLA-TV Washington (6/12, Carter) reports that “free parking on the National Mall came to an end Monday with 90 new pay stations activated.” According to the article, “meters will cost $2 for a 3-hour time limit every day except for December 25 (the only day of the year that the National Mall is officially closed).” The National Park Service “says the reason for the change is to help eliminate congestion on the Mall that comes with offering free parking and encourage the use of public transportation.”

Additional coverage was provided by WRC-TV Washington (6/12).

St. Anthony Falls, Birthplace Of A City, Could Deliver New Visions Of An Urban River.

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (6/12, Marcotty) reports that the Upper and Lower St. Anthony locks were closed to two years "to protect Minnesota's northern lakes and rivers from the spread of Asian carp." Now, the Army Corps of Engineers is "undertaking a major review of what it will do with it and two others just downstream." This summer, "it will be open for tours conducted by the National Park Service."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (6/12) reports that the National Park Service is "drawing up ambitious plans to restore the Mississippi River and its waterfront above and below St. Anthony Falls now that Lock & Dam #1 has been turned into a visitor center."

Construction Begins On 17-Mile Iowa Bike Trail.

The AP (6/12) reports that "construction has begun on a 17-mile long bike trail that will link three southeast Iowa communities." Work started Saturday on the first segment of the Railroad Highway Multi-Use Trail. Brian Leaders, with the National Park Service's Rivers, Trails and Conservation Assistance Program, "said more than $4 million has been raised for the trail, which will be part of a larger network of trails that will cover about 100 miles."

Rivers In US West Turn Dangerous As Days Warm, Snow Thaws.

The AP (6/12) reports that "massive waterfalls in Yosemite National Park and rivers raging in mountains throughout the western United States are thundering with greater force than they have for years — and proving deadly as warm weather melts the deepest mountain snowpack in recent memory." According to the article, "record snowfall on towering Western peaks this winter virtually eliminated California's five-year drought and it is now melting rapidly." However, "it has contributed to at least 14 river deaths and prompted officials to close sections of rivers popular with swimmers, rafters and fishing enthusiasts."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Interior Department Releases $7.8M To Help American Samoa.

The Honolulu Star-Advertiser (6/12) reports that the Interior Department has "released the remaining $7.8 million in operational funds to support the daily operations of the American Samoa government, the LBJ Tropical Medical Center, the American Samoa Community College and the High Court of American Samoa." The Interior Department "said the money is what remained of $22.75 million released by the Office of Insular Affairs in the current fiscal year." Interior Acting Assistant Secretary for Insular Areas Nikolao Pula said in a statement, "These funds are critical for government operations in the territory of American Samoa. We are pleased to transmit the remaining funds on behalf of the administration."

Office Of Surface Mining

Coal Industry Could Be In Store For A 'Rare Earth' Reboot.

The Washington Examiner (6/12, Siciliano) reports the future of the coal industry "may have much more to do with building smartphones, wind turbines and missile defense radar than billowing smoke stacks and environmental finger pointing, say federal coal advisers and experts." The "direction" the industry is headed in "is aimed at harvesting what are known as 'rare earth elements,' for which the U.S. industry depends on China." The elements "are key ingredients in building complex electronics used in smartphones, jets, defense applications, advanced wind turbines and renewable energy, not to mention light-emitting diodes." The "bottom line" is that the United States "needs to diversify its supply of the minerals, and the coal industry is the nation's best ticket to do that." The Examiner adds that "the National Coal Council, a top federal advisory board to Energy Secretary Rick Perry," views "creating a new rare earth market as a necessary part in helping the coal industry recover."

US Geological Survey

Mapping Project Tracks Challenges Coming To Colorado Plateau.

The AP (6/12) reports that “researchers are working on a mapping project that will chronicle climate change, population growth, oil drilling and other factors in an area that stretches across Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah.” According to the article, “the research team from Northern Arizona University and the U.S. Geological Survey found that Flagstaff is among several areas considered a hotspot in the Colorado Plateau where high intensity land use overlaps with some of these factors.”

Top National News

Trump Friend Says He’s “Considering” Firing Mueller, Sparking Media Storm.

Following Newsmax editor-in-chief Christopher Ruddy’s appearance on PBS’ NewsHour (6/12), his statement that President Trump is considering firing Special Counsel Robert Mueller stirred a media storm – which apparently began to abate early this morning after reports indicating Ruddy based his observations on statements by a Trump attorney on ABC’s “This Week.” By then, however, lawmakers from both parties had expressed outrage about the possible firing, and media commentators had warned of an impending Watergate-level crisis. Jim Acosta, for example, said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/12) that if the story were true, “this is akin to events we saw during the Watergate era,” and that he knew “from a White House source that Trump is being counseled from all sides not to do this.”

Ruddy, described across the coverage as a close friend of the President’s, told PBS NewsHour (6/12, Hendry), “I think [Trump is] considering perhaps terminating the special counsel. I think he’s weighing that option. I think it’s pretty clear by what one of his lawyers said on television recently. I personally think it would be a very significant mistake, even though I don’t think there’s a justification...for a special counsel in this case.” Ruddy also said, “I think there’s a conflict there. ... He comes from a law firm that represents members of the Trump family,” and “the President...was looking at him potentially to become the next FBI director. ... And I think it would be strange that he would have a confidential conversation and then a few days later become the prosecutor of the person he may be investigating.”

Axios (6/13, Swan) reported last night that despite the “media storm,” Ruddy “never actually spoke to Trump about firing Mueller, a source close to Ruddy” said. Rather, he “was reading between the lines of what others had said,” referring to “comments from Jay Sekulow, one of Trump’s lawyers, who didn’t rule out that Trump might fire Mueller in an appearance Sunday on ABC’s ‘This Week.’” White House press secretary Sean Spicer “confirmed Trump hadn’t discussed the matter with Ruddy,” telling Axios, “Mr. Ruddy never spoke to the President regarding this issue.” The Daily Caller (6/12, Collins) also said the White House “refuted the idea that...Trump is considering dismissing...Mueller,” with a “senior administration official” saying in an email, “Chris speaks for himself. ... He did not meet or speak with POTUS today.”

The New York Times (6/12, A1, Shear, Haberman) also reports that Ruddy “was at the White House on Monday,” and the Times quotes spokeswoman Sarah Huckabee Sanders as saying that “Chris speaks for himself” but she declined “to comment further.” The Times adds that “allies of the president cast doubt on the idea that Mr. Trump would take such a drastic step, and White House officials said Mr. Ruddy had not met directly with the president while he was there.” Anderson Cooper said earlier on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (6/12), meanwhile, that Ruddy “came out of a meeting at the White House...and went on PBS Newshour and” made his statement.

Albert R. Hunt, in a piece for Bloomberg View (6/13), cited Ruddy’s comments and declared that “it’s pretty crazy in Washington these days. Soon it could get even crazier.” Jonathan Chait’s story in the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (6/12) was headlined “Trump Is Not Too Crazy To Fire The Special Prosecutor.” The Los Angeles Times (6/12, Bierman) also weighed in, indicating that “whether Trump has the legal authority to fire Mueller is untested,” as “Justice Department regulations say that a special counsel can be fired by the attorney general ‘for cause.’”

The New York Post (6/12, Tacopino) reports that “the ranking member of the House Intelligence Committee, Democrat Adam Schiff, responded forcefully by saying Mueller would be brought back ‘immediately.’” Said Schiff, “If President fired Bob Mueller, Congress would immediately re-establish independent counsel and appoint Bob Mueller. Don’t waste our time.” Politico (6/12, Wright, Cheney), meanwhile, reports GOP “lawmakers have a warning for...Trump: Don’t mess with...Mueller.” Said Sen. Lindsey Graham, “It would be a disaster. ... There’s no reason to fire Mueller. What’s he done to be fired?” Politico adds, however, that “Mueller’s investigation is widely considered the most threatening to Trump's presidency."

Under the headline "Trump Cheerleaders Turn On Special Counsel Mueller," the AP (6/13) reports that "Peter Carr, a spokesman for Mueller, declined to comment on Ruddy's remarks."

Reportedly giving credence to the story were comments by Trump allies. The Hill (6/12, Stange) reported that "prominent conservatives, including former Speaker Newt Gingrich, fired off salvos at...Mueller on Monday, insisting that the man leading the probe into allegations of links between the Trump campaign and Russia is out to damage the president." The Washington Examiner (6/12, Yilek) reports that Gingrich "has grown critical of...Mueller's ability to conduct a fair investigation into Russia's meddling in the 2016 special election," and tweeted yesterday, "Republicans are delusional if they think the special counsel is going to be fair. Look who he is hiring. check fec reports. Time to rethink."

Under the headline "Trump Surrogates Go After Mueller," Politico (6/12, Samuelsohn) reports "hardball complaints are coming at Mueller from several directions," and that a "wave of freelance attacks, which gathered steam over the weekend following Comey's dramatic testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee, echoes tactics used by Democrats in the 1990s to undercut special prosecutor Kenneth Starr's investigation into the Clinton White House." Said Dick Morris, "I think the idea of having an enemy when you're the object of a special prosecutor is a very important one. ... Clinton only survived a special prosecutor because he made Ken Starr the enemy."

Breitbart (6/12, Mason), meanwhile, reported "Mueller...had a shadow cast on his impartiality when Comey, a one-time mentee of Mueller's who succeeded him at the Bureau, revealed under oath that he deliberately leaked a potentially privileged memo to the press specifically to ensure the appointment of a special counsel."

Earlier Monday evening, Brit Hume said on Fox News' Special Report (6/12), "I think Bob Mueller, broadly speaking, has earned his reputation, which is a very good reputation. However, there is no question he and James Comey were close friends." Hume adds that "the role of his friend Comey and his credibility now have come into play and are probably going to be a piece of the investigation. It's a fair question to ask, whether Bob Mueller should be that guy leading the investigation into at least that piece of it."

Four Members Of Mueller's Team Have Donated To Democrats. The Hill (6/12, Beavers) reports that according to FEC filings, four members of Mueller's team "have donated to Democratic presidential campaigns and organizations." Michael Dreeben, who, according to the Washington Post, is "working on a part-time basis for Mueller," donated "$1,000 dollars to Hillary Clinton's Senate political action committee (PAC), Friends of Hillary, while she ran for public office in New York." Jeannie Rhee "donated $5,400 to Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign PAC Hillary for America." Andrew Weissmann "donated six times to political action committees for Obama in 2008 for a total of $4,700," and James Quarles "has donated to over a dozen Democratic PACs since the late 1980s."

Sessions Expected To Face Questions About Comey Firing, Meeting With Russian Envoy.

Monday's announcement from Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr and Vice Chairman Mark Warner that Attorney General Sessions will testify publicly Tuesday before their committee garners substantial media coverage with reports almost universally predicting that Sessions will face tough questioning over his contacts with the Russian ambassador during the 2016 campaign – and what role he played in the firing of former FBI Director Comey.

The AP (6/12, Tucker, Riechmann) reports that while there had been "some question as to whether the hearing would be open to the public," the Justice Department said Monday that Sessions requested it be public because he "believes it is important for the American people to hear the truth directly from him." The AP anticipates "sharp questioning for Sessions" and "some uncomfortable moments from the Trump administration." Reuters (6/11, Chiacu, Lynch) predicts "another potentially dramatic hearing," as Sessions "will likely face tough questions" over his dealings with Russian officials and what role, if any, he had in Comey's firing.

The New York Times (6/12, Huetteman) says Sessions "will face lingering questions about his meetings last year with Sergey I. Kislyak, the Russian ambassador, which were revealed after he denied meeting with anyone from the Russian government during his confirmation hearing." The Washington Times (6/12, Noble) reports that Sessions may also "use the public spotlight to refute another allegation made by the former FBI director – that the attorney general was silent and said nothing when Mr. Comey asked that he intervene and not allow Mr. Trump to interact privately with him."

Politico (6/12, Kim, Cheney) reports that the "increased scrutiny" of Sessions follows Comey's testimony last week "that he knew details about Sessions before his recusal from the Russia probe that would make his involvement in the investigation 'problematic.'" USA Today (6/12, Jackson) says Democrats say Sessions "needs to resolve conflicting evidence about contacts with Russians, and to explain if and why he recommended Comey's dismissal by Trump, an action that could be a violation of his recusal."

The New York Times (6/12, Hulse) reports that during his confirmation hearing, Sessions "seemed to escape" his former colleagues' "questioning relatively unscathed" but he "should expect no such senatorial courtesy" today. Democrats believe Sessions "repaid their earlier hospitality by lying to them — and the Senate — about his contacts with Russian officials, and they are now determined to extract clear answers." Peter Alexander similarly predicted on NBC Nightly News (6/12, story 2, 2:25, Holt) that Sessions will "face bruising questions," and, the Washington Post (6/12, Horwitz), which describes the hearing as a "high-stakes test" for Sessions, similarly predicts he "will face tough questions from his former colleagues on a number of fronts that he has never had to publicly address in detail." The Post adds that while Democrats "are skeptical that Sessions will divulge any explosive new details," they "hope the hearing offers a chance to at least get Sessions on the record as either answering or dodging questions about pivotal events related to Comey and the FBI's investigation." Brit Hume said on Fox News' Special Report (6/12), "I expect him to be an effective witness. He is seasoned at this. He was a prosecutor and a district attorney before he was a senator, so he knows the ways, he knows how to handle himself in these settings. I think he has probably got a story to tell and my guess is he will be an effective witness."

Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Dennis) cites "a person familiar with Sessions's plan" who said the Attorney General "has told the committee he will refuse to discuss his conversations with the president," which, Bloomberg says, "could infuriate lawmakers." Cecilia Vega said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/12, lead story, 3:15, Muir) "would not say whether Sessions would limit his testimony and invoke executive privilege." The AP (6/12, Tucker, Riechmann) reports that White House press secretary Sean Spicer said, "It depends on the scope of the questions. To get into a hypothetical at this point would be premature."

Sen. Rand Paul was asked on CNN's The Lead (6/12) if it would be a mistake for Sessions to invoke executive privilege during his testimony. Paul said, "I guess it depends on the questions. I don't really know what that will be about necessarily. I still think that, you know, we've got a special counsel. Let's let them do their job. The rest is all for show. This is political theater and those committees aren't getting anywhere. If there's anything done wrong it will come out of the special counsel, and my suspicion is very little, if anything, will come out of there."

Rep. Kathleen Rice said on CNN's Situation Room (6/12), "I worked in the Department of Justice as a federal prosecutor and I can tell you that the credibility of the agency itself is only as good as the person who's leading it. And right now it seems very clear to me that Jeff Sessions has no credibility when it comes to...running the agency."

Roll Call (6/12, Lesniewski) reports that Sessions was originally scheduled to appear before House and Senate appropriators this week "to defend the Justice Department's fiscal 2018 budget request" but "told the committees in a letter late Friday that he would instead meet with Senate Intelligence." According to Roll Call, "appropriators and members of the Judiciary Committee are not pleased with the decision." Meanwhile, USA Today (6/12, Kelly) reports that the House and Senate committees are considering "issuing more subpoenas for key witnesses and expanding the scope of their probes." USA Today cites Burr's comment following Comey's testimony that "This is nowhere near the end of our investigation," and says Sessions' testimony Tuesday is the "most immediate evidence of that." Moreover, Intelligence Committee member Sen. Dianne Feinstein, who is also the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, "is calling on the Judiciary panel to expand its probe to investigate all matters related to possible obstruction of justice."

Rogers Has Closed-Door Meeting With Senate Intel Panel. Newsmax (6/12) reports that NSA Director Rogers met in a closed session with the Senate Intelligence Committee Monday night. Senators "want Rogers to answer questions about any possible interference by Trump in the FBI's investigation into Russia's role in the 2016 election" after he and DNI Coats, who did not attend Monday's meeting, "refused to answer those questions last week in a public hearing."

Secret Service Says It Has No Recordings From Trump White House. Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (6/12, story 2, 2:15, Pelley) that Sessions may be "asked if the President really does have a recording system in the Oval Office, as Mr. Trump suggested in a tweet last month but refused to confirm again today." The Wall Street Journal (6/12, Radnofsky) reports that in response to a FOIA request, the Secret Service said Monday that it has no audio or transcripts of any recordings made inside the Trump White House. However, the Journal notes that the Secret Service response does not rule out the possibility that another entity created recordings. On NBC Nightly News (6/12, story 2, 2:25, Holt), Alexander said Trump's suggestion that he has such tapes is "still hanging over the White House," adding that "despite bipartisan calls he come clean, no timetable for an answer."

To the AP (6/12, Thomas), the President "has been coy" about the existence of recordings of his conversations with Comey. Last week, he told reporters "that he would discuss their potential existence 'in the very near future.'" On Monday, Spicer said there would be an announcement "when the president is ready to make it." The New York Post (6/12, Moore) quotes Spicer as saying, "The president made clear in the Rose Garden last week that he would have an announcement shortly."

Sen. Rand Paul was asked on CNN's The Lead (6/12) if he agrees with Sen. Susan Collins that if tapes of White House conversations exist, Trump should turn them over to the Senate Intelligence Committee and the special counsel. Paul said, "I personally am not a big fan of recording private information, private calls between people who don't know they are being recorded, and so many states have rules against this. The White House is in an unusual situation though where basically they call it a unitary executive. The President is in charge and whether he ought to do something is one thing and whether he has to do something is another. I don't think it was an appropriate thing to threaten Comey on it, but I think the interesting thing that is lost by some people about Comey's testimony is I think it completely vindicated everything the President had said."

Sen. Ben Cardin said on CNN's Situation Room (6/12) it's "not right" that the President is leaving unanswered the question of whether there are tapes of his conversations with Comey. Cardin continued, "This is not a matter that you have to investigate to see whether there are tapes or not. They know whether there are tapes or not. If there are tapes, the President needs to acknowledge it and make it available to the investigators. If there's no tapes, he has an explanation as to why he raised this particular issue."

Ryan Lizza of the New Yorker said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/12), "There are no tapes. This White House can barely put together a senior staff. And everything leaks out of this White House. If there were tapes we would know about it."

Spicer: Trump's Offer To Speak Under Oath Applied Specifically To Mueller Probe. The New York Post (6/12, Schultz) reports that White House press secretary Sean Spicer also reiterated that Trump "would agree to speak under oath about Russia – but not necessarily to Congress." According to Spicer, Trump's claim Friday "that he'd be '100 percent' willing to answer questions about the ongoing Russia investigation applied specifically to Special Counsel Robert Mueller." Spicer "declined to say" when he was asked if Trump "would appear before a congressional committee also investigating Russia." Vega said on ABC World News Tonight (6/12, story 2, 1:05, Muir) that Spicer "said he's not had further discussions with the President about this potential testimony. A very different answer from the White House today than the very adamant President Trump we heard from a couple of days ago."

In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (6/12), Justin Haskins, an executive editor at The Heartland Institute, argues that if Trump is going to "successfully fight off the allegations," Haskins adds, "he must do so by being humble and beyond reproach." First, he should go "directly to the people in a national address or through a massive commercial buy" and "apologize – to the people and, at least on some issues, to Comey – and own up to the mistakes he's made while firmly and respectfully denying the accusations of collusion made against him." However, Richard Cohen writes in his Washington Post (6/12, Cohen) column that while Republicans "await the messiah-like return of a splendidly presidential Trump," their "excuses are laughable and its defenses self-serving." Cohen argues that Republican lawmakers "demean politics with their silence. They are precisely what Trump thinks they are — swamp creatures who slink from taking a stand."

Ivanka: Trump "Felt Vindicated" By Comey's Testimony. Ivanka Trump said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/12), "My father felt very vindicated" by Comey's testimony "in all the statements that he has been making and feels incredibly optimistic. You know, at the White House and throughout the Administration, we were incredibly focused on the reason we all went to Washington and what we are fighting for. So last week, while it didn't get the level of headlines, it will ultimately have more impact, was infrastructure week. ... This coming week is about workforce development. So with all the noise with all the intensity of the media coverage and obviously what makes headlines, ultimately, we are really focused on why the American people elected Donald Trump as their President."

Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/12), "Let's talk about the things that we didn't learn the other day, that we didn't hear. ... We heard that Donald Trump is not under investigation, never was. All the media who said he was and that he misunderstood Jim Comey are yet to apologize. It was one little retraction that there is no evidence of obstruction of justice or collusion."

Sen. Rand Paul said on CNN's The Lead (6/12), "I think from Comey's testimony there were some pretty important things. Comey said that the President was not, you know, the point of any investigation, and the President responded petulantly probably and said, 'Tell everybody I'm not the object of your investigation,' and you can see where there are would be annoyance, but even by Comey's testimony, he's saying he told me he hoped I would finish it. Certainly doesn't sound like obstructing any kind of justice when you tell somebody that they hope they will finish their job."

In his Washington Post (6/12) column, Dana Milbank lists those Trump has accused of lying in addition to Comey, and argues that accusations of lying are "a bit rich coming from the man who has done more than any other to turn public discourse into a parallel universe of alternative facts." Milbank questions whether Trump, "who has established himself as one of history's most prodigious prevaricators," can "convince the country that the former FBI director, celebrated for his integrity, is just another lying liar."

Sherman Drafts Article Of Impeachment Against Trump. Rep. Brad Sherman has drafted an article of impeachment against President Trump arguing that he "obstructed justice by using his authority as president to hinder or terminate a criminal investigation into his former national security advisor Michael Flynn," Roll Call (6/12, McPherson) reports. The article cites Trump's requesting Comey "to curtail the bureau's investigation into Flynn and then later terminating Comey and admitting that his main reason for doing so was related to the Russia investigation." Politico (6/12, Caygle) reports that Sherman said that if the House Judiciary Committee does not consider his resolution, he will "bring it up as a privileged motion on the House floor." In a letter to his colleagues, Sherman wrote, "At that point, I expect there will be a motion to table, thus triggering our first impeachment-related vote." Such a move, Politico adds, "would fly in the face of efforts by House Democratic leaders to quell impeachment talk coming from the rank-and-file."

The New York Times (6/12, Chilkoti) describe Sherman's effort as "a long-shot attempt to oust President Trump," adding that it has "virtually no chance of succeeding given the strong majority Republicans hold in the House, where impeachment proceedings must begin."

Sherman's resolution comes as a poll released Monday by Democratic polling firm Public Policy Polling "shows that 47 percent of voters support Trump being impeached, while 43 percent oppose it," The Hill (6/12, Carter) reports. According to the poll, 51 percent "said Comey was the more trustworthy of the two men, while just 39 percent said Trump was."

Satter: Putin Sought To Undermine US Political System. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (6/12, Satter), David Satter, who is "affiliated with the Hudson Institute and Johns Hopkins University," argues that Russian President Vladimir Putin's aim was not to boost Trump over Clinton but to undermine the US political system.

Hearings Spotlight "Breakout" Democratic Stars. Politico (6/12, Debenedetti) says "the Democratic Party loves a breakout star" and "as a result of the high-profile nomination hearings and the nationally televised Trump-Russia inquisitions last week," the "hyper-attentive party base [is] seemingly elevating — and celebrating — a new standard-bearer every week." Among them: Sens. Kamala Harris, Al Franken, Mark Warner, and Amy Klobuchar, as well as Rep. Adam Schiff.

Federalist's Hemingway Questions Comey's Judgment On Obstruction Cases. In an piece for The Federalist (6/12), Mollie Hemingway takes issue with the media's portrayal of Comey as "a man of rectitude," a "boy scout who is very honest, and good at laying out obstruction of justice cases." Hemingway goes on to examine some of those obstruction cases "and whether they say anything about his current judgment," and concludes that "the idea that Comey should be trusted to lay out an impartial case for obstruction is going to be hard to swallow." Dershowitz Warns Criminalizing Political Opposition Is Dangerous. Townhall (6/12, Benson) reports that Harvard law "liberal Democrat" Alan Dershowitz, a Harvard law professor who is "by no means a supporter, or even an admirer, of the president," has been "making the rounds, in print and on air, explaining why hyperventilation about impeachable offenses and 'obstruction of justice' is at best premature, based on the available evidence." In a string of tweets Sunday evening, Dershowitz "went further, arguing that a fixation with criminalizing one's political opposition is dangerous for the republic."

Conway Denies Leaking Confidential Information At Party. Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/12) about a report that she leaked information from the White House by discussing it at a party. Conway said, "Well, if I were a great leaker I would get much better press, don't you think? Part of why I don't is because I won't divulge confidential information. ... The other thing is I never divulge what the President tells me. I never would. The President has said publicly that we'll all find out. We have to wait and see if there are tapes. I repeated that and said I convert it to no comment. I said that publicly. There is no confidential information there."

Republicans Pressing Grassley To Call Lynch Before Senate Judiciary Committee. The New York Post (6/12, Morrongiello, Schultz) reports that Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chick Grassley is under pressure from members of his committee "to ask former Attorney General Loretta Lynch to testify before the panel on whether she interfered with the Justice Department's investigation of Hillary Clinton's email server." According to an aide, Sen. Ted Cruz "wants Lynch to respond under oath to bipartisan concerns that she attempted to influence the Clinton probe." Two other members of the panel, Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Lindsey Graham, have also "publicly urged Grassley (R-Iowa) to summon Lynch."

Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (6/12), "What really caught my ear [Sunday] was Senator Dianne Feinstein, of course, a Democrat, saying that she would like to investigate further the fact that Jim Comey admitted under oath that he ceded to the wishes of Attorney General Loretta Lynch to lessen the description of what was surely a full blown investigation to a quote 'matter.' Taking something from an investigation, calling it a matter is no small thing and it's not a semantics difference." Conway added, "I really like the fact that we're talking about both attorneys general right now. Because I think the untold story from last week's testimony it reflected very poorly on members of the Obama Administration as well."

Another Appeals Court Rules Against Travel Ban, Cites Trump Tweet.

As the battle heads to the Supreme Court, media reports are casting yesterday's court ruling on the President's travel ban as yet another legal defeat for the Administration. NBC Nightly News (6/12, story 4, 0:15, Holt) reported that "soon the Supreme Court will decide whether it will take the case, and whether the government can begin enforcing the travel ban while it's on appeal." Reports also indicate that, in contrast to the ruling by the 4th Circuit, the 9th did not base its findings on Trump's public comments. Instead, notes the Los Angeles Times (6/12, Dolan), the judges "said Trump's revised executive order failed to justify a need for the ban" – or, as the Washington Post (6/12, Zapotosky) puts it, "lacked a sufficient national security or other justification that would make it legal." Politico (6/12, Gerstein) reports, meanwhile, that "as they marshaled evidence for their conclusion, judges turned to a notable source: a tweet Trump sent just a week ago," in which he wrote, "That's right, we need a TRAVEL BAN for certain DANGEROUS countries, not some politically correct term that won't help us protect our people!" Wrote the judges, "Indeed, the President recently confirmed his assessment that it is the 'countries' that are inherently dangerous, rather than the 180 million individual nationals of those countries."

McClatchy (6/12, Welsh) notes that the court said in its ruling, "Immigration, even for the president is not a one-person show." To Breitbart (6/12, Munro), however, the ruling came "even though prior presidents have raised and lowered the annual inflow of refugees without interference from the judges." Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Stohr) reports that White House press secretary Sean Spicer said that the Administration continues "to be confident the president's executive order to protect the country is fully lawful and will be upheld" by the Supreme Court. The Washington Times (6/12, Noble, Dinan) quotes Spicer as saying, "These are very dangerous times and we need every available tool."

USA Today (6/12, Gomez, Wolf) notes all three judges – Judges Michael Daly Hawkins, Ronald Gould, and Richard Paez – were "appointed by President Bill Clinton," and that their ruling amounted to "another in a string of legal setbacks" for Trump. ABC World News Tonight (6/12, story 10, 0:20, Muir) referred to "another setback" for Trump, the Los Angeles Times (6/12, Dolan) to "the latest in a string of legal defeats" for the White House, the New York Times (6/12, Liptak) to "the latest in a string of court rulings rejecting the administration's efforts," and the Washington Post (6/12, Zapotosky) to "another blow to Trump." The Wall Street Journal (6/12, Kendall), among other media outlets, runs a similar report on the ruling, which was very briefly noted last night on the CBS Evening News (6/12, story 5, 0:20, Pelley).

Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Stohr) reports that "separately Monday, two groups of challengers to Trump's stalled ban urged the Supreme Court to maintain the halt on the plan." Hawaii "said the court should leave in force the order from the judge in that state, saying Trump's executive order 'denigrates Muslims and effects a policy of religious intolerance in all its applications.'" A group "represented by the American Civil Liberties Union," meanwhile, "told the high court it shouldn't review the earlier appeals court decision." Said ACLU lawyers, "The blank check the government seeks in this case is not consistent with our Constitution." The AP (6/12, Sherman) and USA Today (6/12, Gomez, Wolf), among other news outlets, also note the filings to the Supreme Court by the ban's opponents.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee ranking member Ben Cardin said on CNN's Situation Room (6/12), "Every court decision is holding that the President exceeded his authority, that this was a veiled effort to impose a travel ban based upon religion, based upon being Muslim, that it was not in keeping with the values of America or the powers the President has, and he hasn't made a case that America will be safer as a result of the travel ban. So I think in all those cases, the President has lost in the courts. I don't see why we would expect a different decision from the Supreme Court."

Court Gives Trump "Olive Branch," Allows Vetting Review. USA Today (6/12, Gomez, Wolf) reports that the court "handed the Trump administration an olive branch that could do more harm than good: It overturned one part of a federal district court judge's ruling that the government claimed had blocked a 90-day review of current vetting procedures." USA Today adds that "that starts the clock on a process which could render the overall case moot in three months, if the Supreme Court has not ruled by then."

Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Stohr) also notes that the court "did side with Trump in one respect. It said the Honolulu judge who blocked the travel ban was wrong to prohibit the Trump administration from doing internal reviews of immigration-vetting procedures." The Hill (6/12, Wheeler) reports the court also "called the government's argument that the District Court erred in issuing an injunction that runs against the president himself 'well taken.'" Wrote the judges, "Generally, we lack jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties." The Hill added that "they vacated that part of the District Court's injunction to the extent the order runs against the president, but said it still applies to the remaining defendants and all their respective officers, agents, servants, employees and attorneys, and people in active concert or participation with them."

Politico (6/12, Gerstein) reports that "experts said tweaks the 9th Circuit made to the injunction it considered makes it more likely the justices will leave the lower court orders in place." The Supreme Court "usually accepts federal government requests to take up broad-based injunctions, but may do so at a slower pace given the appeals court ruling Monday." The New York Times (6/12, Liptak) similarly observes that "that may turn out to be important as the Supreme Court considers how to address the cases."

DC, Maryland AGs Sue Trump, Accuse Him Of Violating Emoluments Clause.

A lawsuit filed yesterday against President Trump by the attorneys general for Washington, DC and Maryland generated coverage on all three major network newscasts, as well as on major print media. The Washington Post (6/12, Davis) reports the suit by DC's Karl A. Racine and Maryland's Brian E. Frosh, both Democrats, alleges that "payments by foreign governments" to Trump's "global business empire violate anti-corruption provisions in the Constitution." According to the filing, "Trump's decision to retain ownership in his businesses 'calls into question the rule of law and the integrity of the country's political system.'" Speaking to reporters, the two "said Trump is 'flagrantly violating' the Constitution's emoluments clause, which prohibit US officeholders from taking anything of value from foreign leaders."

ABC World News Tonight (6/12, story 8, 2:30, Ross) said the "landmark suit claims" Trump "is using his official position to market his business enterprises with the focus on the Trump Hotel in Washington, which pitches foreign governments and their supporters to hold their big events here." NBC Nightly News (6/12, story 3, 2:05, Williams) said the "two Democratic attorney generals says Mr. Trump markets his property as President and benefits from payments by foreign countries for space in Trump Tower and for holding events and staying at his...hotel to seek his favor," and that is "too much of a conflict." NBC added that "legal experts say even if" the "lawsuit doesn't ultimately succeed, it could force the President to turn over revealing financial records." The CBS Evening News (6/12, story 3, 2:30, Brennan) similarly reported that "Trump has declined to follow the tradition of publicly releasing his tax returns," but "the attorneys general will ask the court to demand their release in order to show the extent of his business interests, including any loans."

CNN's Situation Room (6/12) showed Racine saying, "We know that foreign governments are spending money there in order to curry favor with the President of the United States. Just one example. The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, whose government has important business and policy before the President of the United States, has already spent hundreds of thousands of dollars at the Trump International Hotel.”

USA Today (6/12, Schouten) notes “Trump’s lawyers and the Department of Justice maintain that market-rate payments for goods and services at Trump’s hotels, golf courses and the other businesses he owns are not ‘emoluments’ as defined by the Constitution,” and “Lindsay Jancek of the Republican National Committee called the lawsuit ‘absurd,’” as well as “the kind of partisan grandstanding voters across the country have come to despise.” White House press secretary Sean Spicer, meanwhile, “said the Trump administration would ask the court to throw out the lawsuit.” Spicer, the New York Post (6/12, Moore) reports, “referred to a similar suit filed in January by Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, a DC-based watchdog group, and said ‘it’s not hard to conclude that partisan politics is behind this suit.’”

The Washington Times (6/12, Noble, Miller) quotes Spicer as saying, “It’s not hard to conclude that partisan politics may be one of the motivations behind the suit. ... We’ll move to dismiss this case in the normal course of business.”

Along those lines, Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/12), “I’m extremely skeptical that this will lead to anything serious in terms of an impact on...Trump. The Emoluments Clause has never been applied at least in the modern world and I just think this is a political attempt to interfere and damage the presidency.”

The Washington Times (6/12, Noble), however, reports in a separate story that though “both...Frosh and Mr. Racine are Democrats, they said the lawsuit was not a partisan action.” Said Frosh, “We do not sue the president of the United States casually. ... It’s unprecedented that the American people must question day after day if actions are taken to benefit the United States or to benefit Donald Trump.”

The New York Times (6/12, Lafranieri) notes DOJ “had no immediate response,” but “in a brief filed last week in response to the New York case, the department argued that the earlier lawsuit should be dismissed because the emoluments clauses were never intended to prohibit a president from owning a business while in office.” DOJ also “argued that the plaintiffs had shown no financial harm.”

To Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Van Voris), meanwhile the suit is “the first constitutional claim to be filed by a state government over Trump’s alleged business conflicts, ratcheting up pressure on the billionaire president.” According to “legal experts...Maryland and the District of Columbia have a better chance of having their claims considered by a court than non-government organizations.” Reuters (6/12, Levine) also says the latest suit “could stand a better chance in court as the first government action over allegations that Trump...violated the constitution’s so-called emoluments clause.”

The Los Angeles Times (6/12, Savage) notes “CREW’s lawyers are part of the suit filed Monday, and they argued that Maryland and DC are suffering real injuries because some of their hotels and meeting areas are losing business to Trump’s properties.” Said the lawyers, “The district and Maryland have the authority and right to vindicate their interest in providing and preserving a level playing field in the hospitality industry.”

Rep. Kathleen Rice said on CNN’s Situation Room (6/12), “This goes to the very core...of the public’s right to have faith that their commander in chief, the President of the United States, is beholden to only one master, and that is to the American people. If you are accepting money through your businesses from foreign entities, whether they are friend or foe, that gives the impression that any decision that the President makes could be influenced by that money, by that business, and I think a first grader can understand that.”

ABC News, CBS News Analyses: “Questions” About Pledge To Donate Foreign Profits To US Treasury. ABC World News Tonight (6/12, story 8, 2:30, Ross) reported that “Trump’s attorney has promised that all profits earned from foreign government will be donate to the US Treasury, but there are questions about how this is happening,” because “Trump’s sons say it’s not practical to keep track of the precise numbers, so they said they’ll make a rough estimate of the profits. But they have not said whether they will report those figures to the public or keep them secret.”

The CBS Evening News (6/12, story 4, 2:25, Pelley) reported that “anyone can book an event at a Trump golf club or hotel, with the profits going to...Trump through his trust,” and added (Goldman) added that “Turkish Airlines, half owned by the Turkish government, paid for its annual tournament at the President’s Miami golf course in April,” and that “a member of the ruling family of the United Arab Emirates and Turkish Airlines were among the sponsors last month of this Turkish-American conference at Trump International Hotel.” Sheri Dillon, attorney for the President, was shown saying, “He is going to voluntarily donate all profits from foreign government payments made to his hotels to the United States Treasury.” CBS added that “the Trump Organization created this glossy handout to guide its finance team, but some legal experts say the guidance is riddled with loopholes." For example, "it says banking, defense, energy, healthcare, and other sectors may not be reasonably identifiable as foreign government entities, and therefore may not be included."

Free Beacon Report: Suit Follows Strategy Outlined By Brock At Activists' Conference. The Washington Free Beacon (6/12, Shoffstall) reports "members of a group linked to liberal operative and Hillary Clinton loyalist David Brock are involved in" the lawsuit, as CREW was "once led by...Brock." The Free Beacon recounts that "earlier this year...Brock held a conference with more than 100 liberal donors at the posh Turnberry Isle Resort in Aventura, Fla., mapping out how Democrats would 'kick Donald Trump's ass,'" and adds that it "obtained a copy of a private and confidential Brock memo detailing the liberal operative's plans to attack Trump using CREW, Media Matters, Shareblue, and American Bridge."

White House Pushes Jobs Agenda.

Townhall (6/12, Pavlich) reports that the White House is "pushing forward a major jobs agenda that includes filling positions that do not require four year college degrees." In appearance on Fox News' Fox & Friends Monday morning, White House special advisor Ivanka Trump "laid out the Trump administration's goals to fill six million job vacancies in states across the country." She said, "There are six million available American jobs. So we're constantly hearing from CEOs that they have job openings but they don't have workers with the skill set they need to fill those jobs. ... With all the intensity of the media coverage and obviously what makes headlines, ultimately we're really focused on why the American people elected Donald Trump as their president and implementing that plan." Also Monday, Labor Secretary Acosta told reporters, "We're looking to push apprenticeships across the board. All people and industries. This is an opportunity for everyone. ... Apprentices hit the ground running when they start a job and tend to be more loyal to the employer."

Acosta: Trump To Announce Apprenticeship Initiative Wednesday. Breitbart (6/12, Wong) reports that Labor Secretary Acosta said Monday that President Trump will "announce an apprenticeship initiative on Wednesday that will aim to fill a gap between six million jobs currently available and American workers who can fill them." According to Acosta, "despite there being six million job openings in the US, there are not enough Americans workers with specialized skills to fill them." Speaking at a White House briefing, Acosta said, "Americans want to work. American companies want to hire. ... The issue is a mismatch between available jobs and prospective employee jobs skills."

Despite CEOs' Professed Confidence, Merger Activity Remains Low. The New York Times (6/12, Sorkin) reports that while the CEOs of the nation's largest companies have repeatedly expressed optimism about the economy, "there is a remarkable divergence between what chief executives have been saying aloud and what they are actually doing in practice." According to the Times, "merger and acquisition activity" remains "the ultimate truth serum when it comes to reflecting C.E.O. confidence," and "so far this year, the number of deals and their size are at the lowest level since 2013." The Times adds, however, that while CEOs "probably do" feel more optimistic, "that optimism has yet to manifest itself in its most visible form: big acquisitions."

Trump Administration To Release This Week Plan To Reduce Manufacturing Regulations.

Reuters (6/12) reports that "the Trump administration intends to unveil this week a plan to trim regulations it believes constrain U.S. manufacturing growth, potentially affecting environmental permits, worker safety and labor rules." Reuters adds, "The U.S. Commerce Department's regulations 'hit list' recommendations follow more than three months of study and consultation with industry on ways to streamline regulations and ease burdens on manufacturing firms." Public comments that the department received revealed priorities, "with numerous industry groups and firms complaining that EPA air quality permit rules for new facilities are often redundant." Reuters reports that the "National Association of Manufacturers said the EPA's review requirements for new sources of emissions such as factories can add $100,000 in costs for modeling air quality to a new facility and delay factory expansions by 18 months." Reuters adds, "Manufacturing groups including auto parts makers have also targeted labor rules that make it easier for unions to organize workers, expand the number of employees eligible for overtime and govern the reporting of workplace injuries."

US Budget Deficit Widened Through First 8 Months Of Fiscal Year.

Fox Business (6/12, Sparshott, Davidson) reports that "the U.S. budget deficit widened through the first eight months of the fiscal year, highlighting challenges for the Trump administration as it looks to cut taxes and rebalance spending priorities." Fox Business adds, "Government spending outpaced revenues by $433 billion from October through May, the Treasury Department said Monday, up from $405 billion during the same period a year earlier." The article also states that "earlier this year, the Congressional Budget Office forecast a 3% rise in receipts this year," and, "most of that revenue shortfall reflects smaller-than-anticipated tax payments from individuals and corporations, though the cause remains unclear."

Fed Expected To Raise Federal Funds Rate Wednesday.

MarketWatch (6/12, Morici) reports that "the Fed's policy making committee is expected to increase the target for the federal funds rate to 1% to 1.25% on Wednesday." MarketWatch adds, "Before Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin announced that Congress would have to raise the debt ceiling before its summer recess, the Fed was expected to push the policy rate another 25 basis points in September and to start gradually winding down its holdings of mortgage-backed-securities and Treasuries in December." The article also states that "now the September rate increase may be delayed until Congress and the administration sort out the debt-ceiling issue and agree on funding for the government past the end of the fiscal year," but adds, "the pause will be temporary, and the process of tightening will likely continue until the fed funds rate is in the range of 3%."

Fed's Monetary Tightening Failing To Produce Intended Effects On Markets.

The Wall Street Journal (6/11, A1, Harrison) reports that the Fed is expected to raise short-term interest rates for the fourth time since December 2015 at a meeting this week, but recent tightening policy efforts have yet to impact financial markets, where stocks have hit records this year and bond yields have fallen. Accommodative financial conditions – currently on par with those at the peak of Fed stimulus in early 2015 – put the market at risk for overheating and then snapping back.

Fed Expected To Update Guidelines On Unwinding Balance Sheet. Bloomberg News (6/12, Smialek) reports that the Fed wants to clearly communicate its strategy for unwinding its balance sheet, "and the next step in that process is releasing a fresh version of its 'Policy Normalization Principles.'" Minutes from the FOMC's May meeting "both foreshadowed an update to the principles and provided details on how the unwinding might proceed by describing a staff plan to slow the reinvestment of maturing securities via gradually rising caps."

McClatchy Analysis: Climate Change-Stoked Wildfires Draining Forest Service Budget.

McClatchy (6/12, Siripurapu) reports, "Climate change appears to be fueling more wildfires as forest service officials are increasingly concerned they don't have the funds to effectively handle another devastating season." In 1995, "16 percent of the Forest Service was dedicated to fire. ... Now, it's more than half." Chief Tom Tidwell said that the Forest Service "predicts that fire programs will be 67 percent of the budget by 2025."

US Opts Out Of G-7 Pledge Committing To Paris Climate Agreement.

The Washington Times (6/12, Wolfgang) reports the US yesterday "took its first concrete step toward" withdrawing from the Paris climate accord, "by formally rejecting the agreement on the world stage." G-7 environmental ministers "released a lengthy communique on climate change, including detailed commitments from each nation to reduce greenhouse gas emissions as part of their promises under the Paris deal." While the document was signed by the US, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt "included an addendum that makes clear America will not participate in the Paris pact." In the addendum, "the administration formally rejected both the Paris climate deal itself and the concept of Multilateral Development Banks." Politico (6/12, Stefanini) reports the footnote by the US said, "We the United States do not join those sections of the communiqué on climate and [multilateral development banks], reflecting our recent announcement to withdraw and immediately cease implementation of the Paris agreement and associated financial commitments."

Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Shankleman) reports President Trump's "plans to renegotiate a more favorable deal for the U.S. have been rebuffed by the leaders of Germany, France and Italy." On Monday, Canadian Environment Minister Catherine McKenna "echoed" the leaders of those countries and "pledged to move ahead with U.S. governors, mayors and executives who still support the accord." She told reporters, "It was very sad to see that the United States was relegated to a footnote on climate action. ... Let's be clear – the U.S. is bigger than one administration and we're going to be moving forward, as is the rest of the world, with the states, cities and businesses in the United States that are committed to serious climate action and committed to the Paris Agreement." Reuters (6/12, Jewkes) reports Pruitt "only attended the first day" of the environmental ministers meeting in Italy on Sunday, "held as an early summer heatwave settled over Italy, before flying back to Washington." In a statement on Monday, Pruitt said, "We are resetting the dialogue to say Paris is not the only way forward to making progress."

The AP (6/12, Santalucia, Winfield) reports Italy's environment minister Gian Luca Galletti said the Paris accord was "irreversible, non-negotiable and the only instrument possible to combat climate change." Galletti "said the other G-7 countries hoped to continue "constructive dialogue" with the U.S., but insisted on the Paris parameters." He stated, "Everything else for us is excluded."

Bloomberg Politics (6/12, Albanese) reports that according to German Environment Minister Barbara Hendricks, Pruitt "blamed former President Barack Obama for forging a bad Paris climate deal, leaving the U.S. with the job of extricating itself." Hendricks added that Pruitt's "line of argument was purely domestic." The Hill (6/12, Henry) reports the move "to not join the G7 commitment to climate change comes nearly two weeks after President Trump said he would pull the United States out of the Paris climate deal."

Kerry: US Can Still Meet Climate Goals Despite Trump Paris Withdrawal. Reuters (6/12) reports former Secretary of State John Kerry on Monday predicted the US "will achieve goals to limit climate change set by the Obama administration despite President Donald Trump's decision to quit a 2015 global pact." Kerry "said during a visit to Oslo that many U.S. companies, states and cities were pushing ahead with restrictions on greenhouse gas emissions despite Trump's pro-coal policies." Kerry said at a news conference, "We will meet the Paris standards, I believe, in the United States. ... So I want people not to be dismayed."

Rhode Island Governor Signs Order Committing State To Paris Accord. The AP (6/12) reports Gov. Gina Raimondo of Rhode Island "has signed an executive order" committing her state "to the goals of the Paris climate change accord." The Democratic governor "had already announced this month that Rhode Island will join the U.S. Climate Alliance, a bipartisan coalition of states committed to meeting the goals of the Paris Climate Agreement."

Trump Administration Begins Efforts To Rollback Clean Power Plan.

Bloomberg BNA (6/13, Childers) reports that the Environmental Protection Agency's rollback of Obama-era limits on carbon dioxide pollution from power plants will "kick off an inevitable battle with environmental groups over whether the EPA can simply rescind the carbon dioxide standards without issuing an adequate replacement." Moreover, it is possible that EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt could seek to reverse the endangerment finding that determined greenhouse gas emissions from vehicles should be regulated in an effort to halt power plant regulation, which would "slow down any attempt to replace the Clean Power Plan."

United States Enter New Period Of Climate Policy Isolation.

The Washington Post (6/12, Mooney) reports that after deciding to withdraw from the Paris climate deal, the US is "increasingly isolated as other nations reiterate their commitment to climate action in group statements" while the United States "says it isn't part of all that." At the G7 meeting of environmental ministers in Bologna, Italy, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt declined to "join" large sections of the communique. Moreover, the US also abstained from endorsing the "relatively uncontroversial Kigali amendment to the Montreal Protocol," which aims to reduce the use of hydrofluorocarbons, as well as efforts by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to cut emissions from the global aircraft fleet.

EPA Delays Implementation Of Chemical Safety Rules.

The Washington Examiner (6/12, Siciliano) reports that the EPA is delaying implementation of major Obama administration chemical safety regulations by nearly two years, making the new effective date for the rule Feb. 19, 2019.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Senate Hides Its Trumpcare Bill Behind Closed Doors." A New York Times (6/13, Board) editorial says that a "coterie of Republicans is planning to have the Senate vote before July 4 on a bill that could take health insurance away from up to 23 million people and make changes to the coverage of millions of others. And they are coming up with the legislation behind closed doors without holding hearings, without consulting lawmakers who disagree with them and without engaging in any meaningful public debate." While Republican leaders "seem to think they will gain a tactical legislative advantage if they can negotiate a deal behind the scenes and then suddenly spring it on the full Senate," the Times says "those gains will quickly evaporate when voters learn what they have done."

"Emmanuel Macron's Unfettered Powers." The New York Times (6/12) says in an editorial that French President Emmanuel Macron's "grip on political power seems unshakable after the first round of France's legislative voting on Sunday." The Times argues that "with the political opposition in tatters, and many political novices owing their seats to the president, Mr. Macron could face temptations to abuse executive power." The Times says Macron has drafted a bill to "permanently legalize much of the state of emergency declared by President François Hollande shortly after the terrorist attacks in Paris in November 2015," and calls on France's Constitutional Council not to "allow what was meant to have been an extraordinary, temporary suspension of citizens' rights to become permanent" lest "the promise of Mr. Macron's fresh start for France...result in a more repressive republic and set the stage for other abuses of executive power beyond his mandate."

"Remember The Promise Of Good Jobs?" The New York Times (6/13, Board) editorializes that the "prospect of good jobs at good pay has faded of late, and the government is only threatening to make things worse." The Times argues that "cutting taxes on the wealthy, especially by rescinding health insurance for millions, and deregulating Wall Street — the centerpieces of the Trump agenda — help those who need no help while depriving the government of resources that could help create well-paying jobs and bolster people's incomes. Such trickle-down economics encourages business policies that make the work force less secure."

Washington Post.

"Children Continue To Be Traumatized By Shootings. When Will America Act?" In an editorial encouraging the passage of common-sense gun-control legislation, the Washington Post (6/12) tells the story of an elementary school shooting in South Carolina last September that received limited national media coverage in "a sad sign of how accustomed the country has become to these shootings, especially when 'only' one child dies." In addition to the tragic death of a six-year-old boy, the Post says the incident left surviving students with "scars and struggles." The Post concludes by encouraging grassroots efforts to combat the gun lobby "because far too many children already have died — or been traumatized — by gun violence."

"Radical Centrism Dominates In France." The Washington Post (6/12) editorializes that in no other Western nation has the rise of populism "been more sweeping than" in France. "The most remarkable fact about" French President Emmanuel Macron's politics is his call for so-called "radical centrism," which the Post describes as "a pragmatic approach to tackling the structural problems that have held back France for decades, along with a similar commitment to unstuck the floundering European Union." If Macron succeeds in his domestic and EU reforms, his radical centrism "could revitalize European global leadership at a time when the United States under Mr. Trump looks erratic and unreliable." If German Chancellor Angela Merkel rejects Macron's "bold steps" and radical centrism fails, however, "it is likely to be supplanted by radical populism."

"The FDA Takes A Stand Against An Opioid That Fueled An Epidemic." The Washington Post (6/12) editorializes, "Opioids continue to ruin lives, and end them, in Maryland. ... Therefore it was welcome news" that the FDA "has told Endo Pharmaceuticals to remove its opioid Opana ER from the market. The agency concluded that 'the benefits of the drug may no longer outweigh the risks,' consistent with the judgment reached earlier by an FDA advisory panel." FDA Administrator Scott Gottlieb "acknowledged at his confirmation hearings in April that the FDA had been 'complicit, even if unwittingly,' in the opioid epidemic," and the Post says the "recommendation that Endo stop selling Opana ER is a sign that he intends" to change things.

Wall Street Journal.

"Cleaning Up the Superfund Mess." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/12) praises EPA Administrator Pruitt's efforts to speed up the clean up of toxic waste sites via the so-called Superfund program, which was established in 1980, rather than focusing on gestures to combat climate change. Obama-era agency staff have criticized the Administration for its planned cuts to the Superfund program, but the Journal says that even as the Obama-era EPA increased funds for the program, data on the completion of site cleanups showed a downward trend. Instead of cash flow, the main obstacle to project completion is bureaucratic inertia and legal and political disputes regarding payment responsibilities, according to the Journal.

“Trump’s New Sugar High.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (6/12) condemns the results of recent negotiations with Mexico on sugar prices that the Administration has framed as a major victory. The Journal says that while both Mexican and American sugar producers will benefit, millions of consumers will be hit with artificially higher prices. If the deal reflects President Trump’s planned approach to trade policy, the Journal says consumers can expect the government to enforce cartels that protect politically powerful producers at the expense of consumers.

“South Korea’s Defense Blunder.” The Wall Street Journal (6/12) editorial page is critical of the decision by newly-elected South Korean President Moon Jae-in to suspend the Thaad anti-missile system, and calls on him to reinstate it before he meets President Trump in Washington later this month.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Immelt Successor To Take Broad Review Of GE’s Businesses
Trump Team Proposes Broad Rethink Of Financial Rulebook
Can A Single Injection Conquer PTSD? The Army Wants To Find Out
The Snowballing Power Of The VIX, Wall Street’s Fear Index

New York Times:

Across Russia, Protesters Heed Navalny’s Anti-Kremlin Rallying Cry
Friend Says Trump Is Considering Firing Mueller As Special Counsel
Trump’s Cabinet, With A Prod, Extols The “Blessing” Of Serving Him
“No Such Thing As Justice” In Fight Over Chemical Pollution In China
A Stagnant General Electric Will Replace CEO Jeff Immelt
Why ‘Julius Caesar’ Speaks To Politics Today

Washington Post:

Senate Hearing Poses Test For Embattled Sessions
Protests Erupt Across Russia
Uber, Once Cruising, In Corporate Crisis Mode
State-Level AGs Step Up The Fight Against Trump
No Room For Dessert? Try No Room For Diners.

Financial Times:

Russian Opposition Leader Navalny Detained
Immelt To Step Down As GE Chief In Shake-Up
US Tech Stocks Extend Losses Despite Late Recovery
No Time To Waste In Brexit Talks, Barnier Warns UK

Washington Times:

Bears Ears Recommended For Land Cuts As Trump Starts Rollbacks Of Obama’s Designated Monuments
Court Finds No Proven Terrorist Link To 6 Countries, Uses Trump’s Words Against Him On Travel Ban
Persistent Putin Foe Alexei Navalny Is Arrested After Whipping Up Nationwide Protests On Russia Day
Last Stand For Islamic State Likely To Be Miles Away From Raqqa
Virginia Republicans See Governor’s Race As Last Chance To Keep Their State Purple

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions; Russia Meddling Investigation-WH; Bill Cosby Trial; Penn State Frat Death Trial; Severe Weather; Australia-Midair Emergency; Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered; Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit; Russia-Anti Putin Protest; Immigration Order-Legal Challenge; Oklahoma-Jail Escape Manhunt; Ohio-Family Murder; Georgia-Highway Crash; Uber Shake Up; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; Broadway Tony Award.

CBS: Bill Cosby Trial; Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions; Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit; Trump-Business Ties; Immigration Order-Legal Challenge; Russia-Anti Putin Protest; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; Obesity Crisis; New York Theater-Trump; Montana-Reporter Attack Sentence; Weather; Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered.

NBC: Bill Cosby Trial; Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions; Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit; Immigration Order-Legal Challenge; Russia-Anti Putin Protest; Penn State Frat Death Trial; Montana-Reporter Attack Sentence; Weather; Orlando Nightclub Shooting-Anniversary; Arthritis Treatment; Obesity Crisis; WH-Family Move In; Jimmy Carter-Public Appearance.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit – 9 minutes, 30 seconds
Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions – 7 minutes, 55 seconds
Bill Cosby Trial – 7 minutes, 10 seconds
Russia-Anti Putin Protest – 4 minutes, 35 seconds
Obesity Crisis – 2 minutes, 45 seconds
Weather – 1 minutes, 35 seconds
Afghanistan-US Soldiers Murdered – 1 minutes, 30 seconds
Immigration Order-Legal Challenge – 55 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-Special Counsel; Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit; Bill Cosby Trial; Arkansas-Police Shot; Wall Street News.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Sessions; Russia Meddling Investigation-WH; Trump-Special Counsel; Bill Cosby Trial; NBA Finals; Obesity Crisis; Wall Street News.

FOX: NBA Finals; Arkansas-Police Shot; Immigration Order-Legal Challenge; Pentagon-Defense Budget.

NPR: Immigration Order-Legal Challenge; Trump-Foreign Payments Lawsuit; Arizona fires; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Has lunch with members of Congress; makes a statement on healthcare; tours Waukesha County Technical College; leads a workforce development roundtable discussion; gives remarks at a Friends of Governor Scott Walker reception.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers remarks regarding health care; joins the President for lunch with members of Congress.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Defense Secretary Mattis testifies to Senate Armed Services Committee on budget posture – Hearing on 'Department of Defense Budget Posture', with testimony from Secretary of Defense James Mattis; and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford, Jr. Location: Rm G50, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Environment and Public Works Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Kristine Svinicki (reappointment), Annie Caputo, and David Wright to be Nuclear Regulatory Commission members; and Susan Bodine to be Environmental Protection Agency Assistant Administrator for Enforcement and Compliance Assurance Location: Rm 406, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee hearing on the cost of prescription drugs – Hearing on 'The Cost of Prescription Drugs: How the Drug Delivery System Affects What Patients Pay', with testimony from Avalere Health President Dan Mendelson; Pew Charitable Trusts Senior Director of Health Programs Allan Coukell; Manhattan Institute Director of Health Policy Dr Paul Howard; and Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine Professor Gerard Anderson Location: Rm 430, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'Review of the FY 2018 State Department Budget Request', with testimony from Secretary of State Rex Tillerson Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM CANCELED: Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources 'Hearing to examine the federal and state permitting processes' Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.energy.senate.gov

10:00 AM Hearing on 'President's FY 18 Budget and Revenue Proposals', with testimony from Secretary of the Treasury Steven Mnuchin Location: Rm 608, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://budget.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateBudget>

10:00 AM Deputy AG Rosenstein testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on DoJ FY'18 budget – Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Subcommittee hearing on 'Review of the FY2018 Budget Request for the U.S. Department of Justice', with testimony from Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein * Deputy AG Rosenstein replaces Attorney General Jeff Sessions at the hearing, with the latter appearing instead in front of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Location: Rm 192, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

10:00 AM Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee Executive Session – Executive Session, with agenda including nominations of Kevin Allen Hassett to be Council of Economic Advisers Chairman; and Pamela Hughes Patenaude to be Deputy Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:30 AM Agriculture Secretary Perdue testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on FY'18 budget – Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Subcommittee hearing 'To Review the FY2018 USDA Budget Request', with testimony from Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue; and U.S. Department of Agriculture Chief Economist Dr Robert Johansson, and Budget Officer Michael Young Location: Rm 124, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

12:00 PM 'Fighting for a High Wage America: Reinvesting in Innovation and the Industrial Heartland' The Century Foundation event – 'Fighting for a High Wage America: Reinvesting in Innovation and the Industrial Heartland' event sponsored by The Century Foundation, with speakers Democrats Sen. Bob Casey and Reps. Tim Ryan (invited) and Marcy Kaptur, University of California-Davis Professor of Sociology Fred Block, Heartland Capital Strategies Managing Director Tom Croft, The Washington Post journalist Amy Goldstein, Jobs to Move America Executive Director Madeline Janis, and TCF Senior Fellow Andrew Stettner and Bernard L. Schwartz Rediscovering Government Initiative Director Jeff Madrick Location: SVC 209-208, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.tcf.org <https://twitter.com/tcfdotorg>

2:30 PM Transportation Secretary Chao testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on FY'18 budget – Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies Subcommittee hearing on 'Review of the FY2018 Budget Request for the U.S. Dept. of Transportation', with testimony from Secretary of Transportation Elaine Chao Location: Rm 138, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:30 PM Senate Indian Affairs Committee Business Meeting – Business Meeting, to consider 'S. 772, a bill to amend the PROTECT Act to make Indian tribes eligible for AMBER Alert grants' and 'S. 825, a bill to provide for the conveyance of certain property to the Southeast Alaska Regional Health Consortium located in Sitka, Alaska, and for other purposes' Location: Rm 628, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://indian.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/IndianCommittee>

2:30 PM AG Sessions testifies to Senate Intelligence Committee to respond to fired FBI Director James Comey – Senate Select Committee on Intelligence hearing with testimony from Attorney General Jeff Sessions, who addresses matters raised by former FBI Director James Comey's testimony at a hearing on 'Russian Federation Efforts to Interfere in the 2016 U.S. Elections' last week * Comey – who was controversially fired by President Donald Trump last month – told the committee that President Trump was lying when he said that FBI agents had lost faith in him, repeated his claims that President Trump had said he hoped then-Director Comey could end his investigation into former National Security Advisor Mike Flynn, and detailed President Trump's requests for loyalty and his noncommittal responses Location: Rm 216, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Armed Services subcommittee hearing on U.S. Navy and Marine Corps aviation programs – Seapower Subcommittee hearing on 'Navy and Marine Corps Aviation Programs', with testimony from U.S. Marine Corps Deputy Commandant for Aviation Lt. Gen. Jon Davis; Naval Air Systems Commander Vice Adm. Paul Grosklags; and Department of the Navy Director of Air Warfare (OPNAV N98) Rear Adm. DeWolfe Miller III Location: Rm 222, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearing on 'state-sponsored cyberspace threats' – East Asia, the Pacific, and International Cybersecurity Subcommittee hearing on 'State-Sponsored Cyberspace Threats: Recent Incidents and U.S. Policy Response', with testimony from

Foundation for Defense of Democracies Senior Advisor Dr Samantha Ravich; and Harvard University Belfer Center For Science And International Affairs Co-Director Eric Rosenbach Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Secretary of State Tillerson testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on FY'18 budget – State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Subcommittee hearing 'To Review the FY2018 Budget for the U.S. Department of State', with testimony from Secretary of State Rex Tillerson Location: Rm 192, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:30 PM Senate Indian Affairs Committee legislative hearing – Legislative hearing on 'S. 1250, A bill to amend the Indian Health Care Improvement Act to improve the recruitment and retention of employees in the Indian Health Service, restore accountability in the Indian Health Service, improve health services, and for other purposes', 'S. 1275, A bill to improve the housing conditions and promote useful land uses within tribal communities, and for other purposes', and 'S. XXXX, HUD/VA Veterans Affairs Supporting Housing, and for other purposes' Location: Rm 628, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://indian.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/IndianCommittee>

Annual Hawaii on the Hill event, partly organized by Democratic Sen. Mazie Hirono Location: Washington, DC <http://www.hirono.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/maziehirono>

US House: 10:00 AM House Republican Conference post-conference media availability with House Speaker Paul Ryan and other GOP leaders Location: RNC Lobby, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://www.GOP.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseGOP>

10:00 AM House Appropriations subcommittee hearing on ICE and CBP budget – Homeland Security Subcommittee hearing on 'Immigration and Customs Enforcement & Customs and Border Protection FY18 Budget Request', with testimony from ICE Acting Director Thomas Homan; CBP Deputy Executive Assistant Commissioner John Wagner; and U.S. Border Patrol Acting Chief Carla Provost Location: Rm 2008, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

10:00 AM House Agriculture subcommittee hearing on 'small watershed infrastructure' – Conservation and Forestry Subcommittee hearing on 'Small Watershed Infrastructure: Continuing the Mission, Building upon Success' Location: Rm 1300, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://agriculture.house.gov/>

10:00 AM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on SCOTUS 'TC Heartland v. Kraft Foods Group Brands' decision – Courts, Intellectual Property and the Internet Subcommittee hearing on 'Examining the Supreme Court's TC Heartland Decision', with testimony from Culver Franchising System Vice President and General Counsel Steven Anderson; Santa Clara University School of Law Professor Colleen Chien; George Mason University Antonin Scalia Law School Professor Adam Mossoff; and Kellogg, Hansen, Todd, Figel & Frederick's John Thorne * U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 'TC Heartland v. Kraft Foods Group Brands' last month that Title 28 Section 1400(b) of the United States Code is the sole and exclusive provision governing venue in patent infringement actions Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM Communications and Technology Subcommittee hearing on 'Promoting Security in Wireless Technology' Location: Rm 2322, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on the U.S.-Saudi relationship – Middle East and North Africa Subcommittee hearing on 'Challenges and Opportunities for the U.S.-Saudi Relationship', with testimony from University of Pennsylvania Joseph H. Lauder Institute of Management and International Studies Senior Global Fellow (and former U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia) Joseph Westphal; Middle East Institute Director for Gulf Affairs (and former Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs) Gerald Feierstein; Harvard Kennedy School Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs Senior Fellow Karen Elliott House; and former Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor Tom Malinowski * Saudi Arabia was among countries that cut ties with Qatar last week, having accused it of destabilizing the region by supporting Islamist groups, including ending traffic to the country and expelling diplomats. President Donald Trump subsequently sent tweets appearing to take credit for the blockade, although there are 10,000 U.S. troops based in Qatar Location: Rm 2172, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

10:30 AM House Commerce subcommittee hearing on the Internet of Things – Digital Commerce and Consumer Protection Subcommittee hearing on 'Disrupter Series: Update on IOT Opportunities and Challenges' Location: Rm 2123, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC

<http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including ‘H.R. 2581 – Verify First Act’ and ‘S. 1094 – Department of Veterans Affairs Accountability and Whistleblower Protection Act of 2017’ Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

12:00 PM ‘Fighting for a High Wage America: Reinvesting in Innovation and the Industrial Heartland’ The Century Foundation event – ‘Fighting for a High Wage America: Reinvesting in Innovation and the Industrial Heartland’ event sponsored by The Century Foundation, with speakers Democrats Sen. Bob Casey and Reps. Tim Ryan (invited) and Marcy Kaptur, University of California-Davis Professor of Sociology Fred Block, Heartland Capital Strategies Managing Director Tom Croft, The Washington Post journalist Amy Goldstein, Jobs to Move America Executive Director Madeline Janis, and TCF Senior Fellow Andrew Stettner and Bernard L. Schwartz Rediscovering Government Initiative Director Jeff Madrick Location: SVC 209-208, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.tcf.org <https://twitter.com/tcfdotorg>

1:30 PM House Armed Services Committee staff brief on NDAA markups – House Armed Services Committee majority and minority communications offices host off-the-record session for credentialed media to discuss logistics for the FY18 NDAA markups, covering both subcommittee and full committee markups, release of legislation, and distribution of other materials Location: Rm 2118, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

2:00 PM Deputy AG Rosenstein testifies to House Appropriations subcommittee hearing on budget – Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Subcommittee ‘Department of Justice Budget Hearing’, with testimony from Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein * Deputy AG Rosenstein replaces Attorney General Jeff Sessions at the hearing, with the latter appearing instead in front of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Location: Rm 2359, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

2:00 PM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on ‘lawsuit abuse and the Telephone Consumer Protection Act’ – Regulatory Reform, Commercial and Antitrust Law Subcommittee hearing on ‘Lawsuit Abuse and the Telephone Consumer Protection Act’ Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

2:00 PM House Oversight subcommittees joint hearing on the Federal Information Technology Acquisition Reform Act – Government Operations Subcommittee and Information Technology Subcommittee joint hearing on ‘The Federal Information Technology Acquisition Reform Act (FITARA) Scorecard 4.0’ Location: Rm 2154, Rayburn House Office Bldg., Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 1215 – Protecting Access to Care Act of 2017’ Location: H-313, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

5:00 PM House Republicans to Hold Press Conference on VA Accountability – (Time approx) Republican Members of the U.S. House of Representatives will hold a press conference on the Department of Veterans Affairs Accountability and Whistleblower Protection Act – bipartisan reforms that allow the Secretary to dismiss “poorly-performing employees and those who engage in misconduct while ensuring appropriate due process protections for whistleblowers”. Participants include: Carl Blake, Paralyzed Veterans of America; Dan Caldwell, Concerned Veterans for America; House Republican Leadership; House Veterans Affairs Committee Chairman Phil Roe (R-TN); Republican Members of the U.S. House of Representatives; American Legion, Fleet Reserve Association, Military Order of the Purple Heart, the United States Army Warrant Officers Association, Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America (IAVA), and other Veterans Service Organizations. Location: Rayburn Room, the Capitol

Other: 3:30 AM International Summit on Borders – 2017 International Summit on Borders. Day one speakers include Secretary of Education John Kelly, on ‘Global Border Issues: How Cooperation Can and Is Enhancing Security and Facilitation’, along with Customs and Border Protection Acting Commissioner Kevin McAleenan, former CBO Commissioner Gil Kerlikowske, Singaporean Immigration & Checkpoints Authority Commissioner Clarence Yeo, and Australian Deputy Secretary of Immigration and Border Protection for Intelligence and Capability Maria Fernandez Location: The Army And Navy Club, 901 17th Street Northwest, Washington, DC <http://www.internationalsummitonborders.com>

7:45 AM Prudential Bank Regulation Conference – Prudential Bank Regulation Conference, co-hosted by SIFMA and The Clearing House, featuring Republican Sen. Mike Crapo as keynote speaker Location: Covington, One City Center, Washington, DC <http://www.sifma.org/> <https://twitter.com/SIFMA>

7:45 AM The Hill Events discussion on the impacts of outcomes-based care – The Hill Events hosts 'Prioritizing Patients: A Discussion on Outcomes-Based Care' discussion, with headline speakers Republican Sen. Bill Cassidy and Democratic Rep. Doris Matsui, and panelists Johnson & Johnson Global Health Policy Vice President Liz Fowler, GuideWell and Florida Blue CEO Patrick Geraghty, The University of Virginia Medical Center CEO Pamela Sutton-Wallace, and National Multiple Sclerosis Society President and CEO Cynthia Zagieboylo Location: Second Floor Conference Center, 1777 F St., Washington, DC thehill.com <https://twitter.com/TheHillEvents> #ValueforPatients

9:00 AM Dem Rep. Adam Smith speaks on Russia at AEI – 'Countering Putin's Russia' American Enterprise Institute discussion on the 'dangers posed by Putin's Russia and what the U.S. and its allies, partners, and others can do to deter and counter Moscow'. Speakers include Democratic Rep. Adam Smith Location: AEI, 1789 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.aei.org/> <https://twitter.com/AEI>

10:00 AM Dem Reps. DeLauro, Jayapal, Lee, and Yarmuth speak on 'the Trump and Congressional GOP Budgets' – Democratic Reps. Rosa DeLauro, Pramila Jayapal, Barbara Lee, and John Yarmuth speak on 'The Human Consequences of the Trump and Congressional GOP Budgets' at Center for American Progress Action Fund, discussing the proposed cuts, what's at stake for everyday Americans, and how to 'champion an agenda that works for everybody instead of just the 1%'. CAP Action Fund Poverty to Prosperity Program Managing Director Rebecca Vallas delivers opening remarks Location: CAP Action Fund, 1333 H St NW, Washington, DC www.americanprogressaction.org <https://twitter.com/CAPaction>

11:00 AM USGLC State Leaders Summit – U.S. Global Leadership Coalition State Leaders Summit. Speakers include Democrats Sens. Tim Kaine and Amy Klobuchar and Reps. Pramila Jayapal and Derek Kilmer, Republican Reps. Tom Emmer, Adam Kinzinger, and Ted Yoho, U.S. Trade and Development Agency Acting Director Enoch Ebong, MCC Acting CEO Jonathan Nash, U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator and U.S. Special Representative for Global Health Diplomacy Amb. Deborah Birx, former Secretary of the Treasury Jack Lew, USAID Administrator's Assistant Beth Dunford, former U.S. Ambassador to Afghanistan Ryan Crocker, former U.S. Ambassador to NATO Nick Burns, former U.S. Army Chief of Staff Raymond Odierno, ABC News Chief Global Affairs Correspondent Martha Raddatz, 'PBS NewsHour's' Judy Woodruff, The Washington Post Associate Editor David Ignatius, and The Atlantic Washington Editor at Large Steve Clemons Location: Marriott Marquis Washington, DC, 901 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, Washington, DC summit.usglc.org <https://twitter.com/usglc>

4:30 PM DE Gov. Carney speaks at U.S. Service Academy Reception – Delaware Governor John Carney delivers remarks at the U.S. Service Academy Reception, with attendees including Democratic Sens. Tom Carper and Chris Coons, and Rep. Lisa Blunt Rochester Location: Rm 202-203, U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, Washington, DC www.delaware.gov https://twitter.com/delaware_gov

5:00 PM American Foundation for Suicide Prevention Allies in Action Awards – American Foundation for Suicide Prevention Allies in Action Awards, honoring Members of Congress, federal agencies, mental health organizations, and state representatives who have done 'exemplary work in preventing this leading cause of death'. Awardees are Democratic Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, Harvard School of Public Health Injury Control Research Center Means Matter Campaign Director Catherine Barber, Sen. Chris Murphy's Senior Policy Advisor Joe Dunn, Sen. Bill Cassidy's Senior Public Health Advisor Brenda Destro, Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson Senior Legislative Assistant Carrie Palmer Swope, Missouri State Sen. Jill Schupp, Alaska State Sen. Lyman Hoffman, and Montana Department of Public Health and Human Services Suicide Prevention Coordinator Karl Rosston Location: Washington Court Hotel, 525 New Jersey Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.afsp.org/>

6:00 PM CASA Annual Justice Awards Night – CASA Annual Justice Awards Night, recognizing 'the achievements and struggles of community members as well as elected officials who have stood up for the rights of people in their communities'. Honorees include Democratic Rep. Elijah Cummings, Center for Community Change President Deepak Bhargava, immigrant Liliana Cruz Mendez, the Flower Branch Tenants Association, and the Iron Workers International Union. Includes keynote from former Rep. Donna Edwards Location: North Hall at Eastern Market, 225 Seventh St. SE, Washington, DC <http://wearecasa.org/> https://twitter.com/Somos_CASA

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "I'm going to guess things are really going poorly inside the White House right now because today [President Trump] had his first full cabinet meeting. They usually have them earlier than this, but it was hard to schedule around all their meetings with the Russian ambassador. But they got that ironed out."

Stephen Colbert: "Trump says Comey's a coward. 'You want to attack somebody? Do it like a man, tweet it from the toilet.'"

James Corden: "It looks like President Donald Trump may be canceling a planned visit to the UK due to his lack of support there. He says he doesn't want to go somewhere where he is extremely unpopular. You know, like 48 out of the 50 states in America."

James Corden: "In other Trump news, First Lady Melania Trump was officially moved into the White House after five months living apart from her husband. Rumors say Melania was unhappy about moving into the White House but felt more reassured when Trump told her, 'Don't worry, I'm usually at Mar-a-Lago.'"

Trevor Noah: "Trump's presidency is basically like global warming. Every week is the worst week on record, and Republicans are trying to hard to deny it."

Trevor Noah: "Donald Trump gets away with saying things no other human being can say. 'I didn't say that, but if I did, it would be fine.' Can you imagine if Bill Clinton pulled that? 'I didn't have sexual relations with that woman, but if I did, hot damn. Hot damn, if I did, but I didn't.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that over the weekend, Melania Trump finally moved into the White House. This is a bad sign: She only brought a week's worth of clothes."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that yesterday, Puerto Rico voted to become America's 51st state. That's when you know things can't be in good Puerto Rico, when they see what's going on here and they're like, 'We're going to take our chances.'"

Seth Meyers: "First Lady Melania Trump and son, Barron, officially moved into the White House yesterday. Unfortunately, during the move, someone left the gate open and Sean Spicer ran away."

Seth Meyers: "According to a new poll, Americans find former FBI Director James Comey more trustworthy than President Trump. Also, more Americans prefer Pepsi to the bottle marked 'rat poison.'"

Seth Meyers: "President Trump on Friday accused former FBI Director James Comey of lying under oath during his testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee, as opposed to Eric Trump, who only lies under children's beds at night."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump held a cabinet meeting today in which each cabinet member took turns praising the President. After hearing this, Kim Jong-Un said, 'Man, even I'm not that insecure.'"

Conan O'Brien: "It's been reported that President Trump is so worried about protests that he is postponing his upcoming trip to England. Trump is also worried he doesn't have time to learn the language. That's something he's working on."

Conan O'Brien: "First Lady Melania Trump has officially, as of today, moved into the White House. In a related story, Donald Trump just moved from the Lincoln bedroom to the Lincoln couch."

Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, June 27, 2017
Date: Tuesday, June 27, 2017 7:10:52 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Washington Times: Paving The Path To U.S. Energy Dominance.
- U.S. News & World Report: Feds To Pay Local Governments $465 Million For 2017 Land Use.
- Associated Press: The U.S. Interior Department Has Granted Alaska Permission To Survey Wilderness Within A National Wildlife Refuge For A Possible Road.
- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Interior Secretary Zinke Says He'll Tour Nevada National Monuments In July.
- KTVH-TV Helena (MT): Zinke Announces Initiative To Combat Invasive Species.
- KPAX-TV Missoula (MT): Western Governor's Association Meets In Whitefish.

- Washington Post: Trump's Review Of Marine Monuments And Sanctuaries Is Now Open For Your Comments.
- Greenwire: Trump Administration May Struggle To Fulfill Requirement For Agencies To Update Strategic Vision.
- E&E Publishing: Obscure 2011 Law Creates Hurdle For Undermanned Trump Team.
- The Hill: Week Ahead: EPA Chief Faces More Questions Over Trump Budget.
- The Guardian (UK): Grand Canyon Is Our Home.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Arapaho Suffer Setback In Ruling That Says Feds Can Put Conditions On Tribal Funding Deals.
- BIA Looking To Replace Four Bridges.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Oil Company Cited For Improper Drilling In Colorado.
- Associated Press: Study: Wyoming Deer Avoid Oil And Gas Wells.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Oil And Gas Lease Sale In Wyoming Nets $2.6 Million.
- Associated Press: Drones Cause Problems For Arizona Wildfire Crews.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Week Ahead: Alaska Senator Has Dual Clout On Environment, Energy.
- State Sides With Helena Hemp Farmer Who Was Denied Federal Water.
- Our View: Mead's Bathtub Ring, Not Projections, Should Guide River Plans.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Much Of The Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill Has Disappeared Because Of Bacteria.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Los Angeles Times: Federal Agencies Greenlight Proposed Delta Tunnel Project.
- Sussex (DE) Countian: Senators Introduce Legislation To Fix Coastal Barrier Resources Map.
- U.S. News & World Report: Partnership To Preserve Portion Of US Military Supply Route.
- WWLP-TV Springfield (MA): Conservation Group, Interns And Others Join To Protect Water From Invasive Species In Westfield.
- Missoulian (MT): Trump Unleashes Triple Whammy On Montana.

National Park Service

- Politico: Park Service Behaved Appropriately Regarding Trump Crowd Reports, Watchdog Finds.
- New York Times: Fire May Be The Only Remedy For A Plague Killing Deer And Elk.
- U.S. News & World Report: Historic Grand Canyon Cemetery Closing To New Burials.
- Talequah (OK) Daily Press: Remember The Removal Ride Wins $25K Grant.
- U.S. News & World Report: Salinas Pueblo Missions National Monument HQ Is Vandalized.
- WATE-TV Knoxville (TN): National Park Investigating Vandalism In Great Smoky Mountains.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Diplomat: A Remote Pacific Island Faces Up To China.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: NOAA Program Seeks 7 Fellows.

Top National News

- Associated Press: Media Analyses: High Court Hands Trump "Partial" Win On Travel Ban.
- New York Times: Trump Warns Assad He Would Pay "Heavy Price" For Another Chemical Attack.
- Washington Times: Trump: Obama "Did Nothing About Russia," Collusion And Obstruction Did Not Happen.
- The Hill: Media Analyses: CBO Score Hurts Senate Healthcare Bill's Chances For Passage.
- Axios: Meadows Sees Growing Conservative Support For Deficit-Increasing Tax Cuts.
- Washington Post: WPost Analysis: Democrats "More Divided Than Ever" Over Wall Street Regulations.
- The Hill: Poll: Voters Want US To Seek New Climate Agreement.
- New York Times: Mayors Urge Federal Government To Rejoin Paris Climate Pact.
- Bloomberg News: Experts Hope US Budget Cuts To Scientific Research Don't Block Climate Data.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Travel Ban At The Supreme Court."
 - "Tweeting, Not Leading, The Response To Russian Hacking."
 - "A Children's Health Crisis Officials Overlook: Shootings."
- Washington Post.
 - "Want To Know The Worst Thing About The GOP's Healthcare Bill?"
 - "The Supreme Court Splits The Baby On Trump's Travel Ban – For Now."
 - "The Seal Of Bilingualism Is A Distinction Worth Celebrating."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Senate's Healthcare Hour."
 - "A Unanimous Rebuke To Judges On The Travel Ban."
 - "Religious Liberty Lives."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Paving The Path To U.S. Energy Dominance.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (6/26, Perry, Zinke, Pruitt), Rick Perry, secretary of the Energy Department, Ryan Zinke, secretary of the Interior Department, and Scott Pruitt, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, write that "this week, the Trump administration is hosting 'Energy Week' to discuss with state, tribal, business and labor leaders how we can pave the path forward toward U.S. energy dominance." According to the officials, "Trump wants America to utilize our abundant domestic energy resources and technological innovations for good, both at home and abroad." They argue that "an energy-dominant America means a self-reliant and secure nation, free from the geopolitical turmoil of other nations that seek to use energy as an economic weapon."

Trump Administration Marks 'Energy Week'. The Hill (6/26, Cama) reports "this week" has been designated by the Trump Administration as "Energy Week" in an effort "to promote the president's energy agenda." President Trump and members of his Administration at events throughout the week "will push their quest for 'energy dominance,' a term officials are using for their goal to become the world's energy superpower." On Monday, a White House spokeswoman said, "President Trump is committed to utilizing our abundant domestic energy resources both to create jobs and a growing, prosperous economy at home and to strengthen America's global influence and leadership abroad." An event on Thursday will "feature Trump, Energy Secretary Rick Perry, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt in an 'American Energy Dominance Panel,' followed by a speech by Trump on 'energy dominance.'" The Washington Examiner (6/26, Siciliano) reports that according to the spokeswoman "the week will be marked by a number of announcements...noting events and speeches by Trump and his Cabinet leading up to the July 4 holiday." Trump on Wednesday will "host governors and tribal leaders for a discussion about local and state energy, she said."

The Hill (6/26, Cama, Henry) also reports, "Energy Week is one of numerous designations that the White House has made in recent weeks to try to focus on particular pieces of Trump's agenda, such as infrastructure and technology." During those weeks, "other policy news dominated national headlines, including healthcare reform and the investigations into Russian involvement in last year's election." The "Energy 202" blog of the Washington Post, (6/26, Grandoni) the "Morning Energy" blog of Politico (6/26, Wolff) and the AP (6/26) also provides coverage. also previewed the week.

For A Guy Who Doesn't 'Pick Winners,' Ryan Zinke Sure Loves Fossil Fuels. The Huffington Post (6/26, D'angelo) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "repeatedly stressed that when it comes to powering America, President Donald Trump's administration doesn't play favorites." But "Zinke's schedule and social media presence since assuming his new post hardly suggest he's giving everyone a fair shake." According to the article, "he's met privately with a slew of oil and gas executives, as well as spoken at industry conferences and a trade group's board meeting." On Twitter, Zinke has "posted often about fossil fuels."

Feds To Pay Local Governments $465 Million For 2017 Land Use.

The AP (6/26) reports that the Interior Department will "pay nearly $465 million this year to local governments primarily in rural areas that have come to rely on the funds because they cannot levy taxes on federal lands." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke announced the figure in Nevada on Monday. The article notes that "the $13 million increase this year is slightly less than the average annual growth of $22 million over the last decade."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Daily Mail (6/26), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/26), Philly \(PA\) (6/26), and the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/26, Press).

Additional coverage was provided by the Wall Street Journal (6/26, Carlton), the Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (6/27, Drake) and the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (6/26).

The U.S. Interior Department Has Granted Alaska Permission To Survey Wilderness Within A National Wildlife Refuge For A Possible Road.

The AP (6/26, Joling) reports that Alaska Gov. Bill Walker "announced Monday that the Interior Department has granted Alaska permission to survey wilderness within Izembek National Wildlife Refuge for a possible road between two rural communities, King Cove and Cold Bay." Walker said in the announcement, "For far too long, King Cove residents suffering from medical emergencies have had to brave harsh elements just to get health care. They travel by boat or helicopter – often in inclement weather – to access the Cold Bay airport in order to be medevaced out. Our fellow Alaskans deserve better than that." However "environmental groups say the rural community has other, better alternatives, such as boats, and for decades have fought an intrusion into the refuge." Nicole Whittington-Evans of The Wilderness Society said, "Under previous administrations, the Interior Department has twice conducted exhaustive, science-based studies of the proposed road and determined it to not be in the public interest."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (6/26, Joling), Philly \(PA\) (6/26, Joling), U.S. News & World Report (6/26, Joling), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/26, Joling), the Daily Mail (6/26), the Washington \(DC\) Post (6/26, Dan Joling |, Ap), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (6/26, Joling).

Additional coverage was provided by Alaska Public Radio Network (6/26, Grove) and KYUR-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (6/26).

Interior Secretary Zinke Says He'll Tour Nevada National Monuments In July.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (6/26, Brean) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "didn't stop at any national monuments during his first official visit to Nevada, but he promised to return for a tour of Gold Butte and Basin and Range before the end of July." During an event in Pahrump on Monday, Zinke "said he wants to see the two Nevada monuments from the ground and talk to stakeholders before he decides whether the designations should be reduced or rescinded." Zinke "said he doesn't have any 'preconceived ideas' about Gold Butte or Basin and Range, though he indicated that his recent recommendations on Bears Ears National Monument in Utah provide a blueprint for what might happen here."

Additional coverage was provided by KTVN-TV Reno, NV (6/25, Jay).

Zinke Announces Initiative To Combat Invasive Species.

KTVH-TV Helena, MT (6/26, Garrison) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "announced Monday an initiative to protect area from threats posed by invasive mussels." Praising "the initiative, which is collaboration with western governors and federal, state and Tribal agencies," Zinke said, "Stopping the spread of invasive mussels and increasing our Federal-State-Tribal coordination are both critical priorities in order to ensure that we maintain hydropower as a clean, reliable, cost-effective source of energy for the West and protect our outdoor tourism economies. Protecting our waterways and ecosystems is not a partisan issue and I'm glad to work with governors as the states, tribes and federal government combat the spread of invasive species. By working as an integrated team to prevent, contain and control invasive mussels, Americans will be able to experience the full benefits of hydropower and enjoy their rivers, lakes and streams for recreation for years to come."

Western Governor's Association Meets In Whitefish.

KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (6/26, Miller) reports, "Governors from across the Western United States are gathering in Northwest Montana for a few days of discussion ranging from trade to infrastructure and natural resource development." Over the next couple of days, Gov. Steve Bullock will be hosting a series of roundtables including one with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "in the wake of President Donald Trump's proposed drastic budget-cuts to the Department of the Interior."

Additional coverage was provided by KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (6/26) and KMMS-AM Bozeman, MT (6/26, Brascia).

Trump's Review Of Marine Monuments And Sanctuaries Is Now Open For Your Comments.

The Washington Post (6/26, Fears) reports that the Trump Administration's "effort to weaken environmental protections continued Monday as the Commerce Department solicited public comment for a review that could lead to the reduction in size of 11 marine sanctuaries and monuments." Commerce "quietly published" a notice in the Federal Register as part of President Trump's America-First Offshore Energy Strategy, an executive order signed in April. Comments must be submitted by July 26. The Post notes that four of the monuments and sanctuaries were "designated or expanded" during the Bush Administration, while the rest were protected by the Obama Administration.

Additional coverage of the review of national monuments was provided by Courthouse News (6/26, Reynolds), the Vallejo \(CA\) Times Herald (6/26, Raskin-Zrihen), and KTNV-TV Las Vegas \(NV\) Las Vegas (6/26).

Commentary on the review appears in the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (6/26, Datko, Epstein, Fugere) and the Aspen \(CO\) Daily News (6/26, Wade).

Trump Administration May Struggle To Fulfill Requirement For Agencies To Update Strategic Vision.

Greenwire (6/26) reports the lack of appointees throughout the Trump Administration will risk violating a 2011 law requiring agencies to update long-term strategies by early next year. Currently, the EPA's 2014-18 strategic plan still says, "Climate change poses risks to human health, the environment, cultural resources, the economy and quality of life," while the Energy Department touts "international efforts to achieve significant global greenhouse gas emission reductions." The 2011 Government Performance and Results Modernization Act is designed to ensure that long term strategic visions are more stable through election cycles. However, with Trump's lack of administrative staff, agencies may have a hard time complying with the seven specific practices for effective strategic reviews laid out by the Government Accountability Office.

Obscure 2011 Law Creates Hurdle For Undermanned Trump Team.

E&E Publishing (6/26, Reilly) reports that lack of appointees throughout the Trump Administration will risk violating a 2011 law requiring agencies to update long-term strategies by early next year. The 2011 Government Performance and Results Modernization Act is designed to ensure that long term strategic visions are more stable through election cycles. However, with Trump's lack of administrative staff, agencies may have a hard time complying with the seven specific practices for effective strategic reviews laid out by the Government Accountability Office.

Week Ahead: EPA Chief Faces More Questions Over Trump Budget.

The Hill (6/26, Cama) reports that the House Natural Resources Committee's subpanel on oversight will "meet Wednesday to discuss the impacts of 'excessive' litigation against the Interior Department." On Thursday, "the energy and mineral resources subcommittee will hold a hearing on access to oil and natural gas development on federal lands."

Grand Canyon Is Our Home.

Uranium Mining Has No Place Here. In an op-ed for The Guardian \(UK\) (6/26, Tilousi), Carletta Tilousi, a member of the Havasupai tribal council, writes that their "lives and water are being threatened by international uranium mining companies because the US government and its 1872 mining law permit uranium mining on federal lands that surround the Grand Canyon." She writes that "the Havasupai people and citizens throughout the region have been gathering at Red Butte over the past two days to conduct prayer ceremonies and workshops, and to gain support and bring awareness to the poisonous legacy of uranium all around the Grand Canyon." Tilousi calls for support "to put an end to mining uranium in our home, which has always been the Grand Canyon."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Arapaho Suffer Setback In Ruling That Says Feds Can Put Conditions On Tribal Funding Deals.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/26, Rosenfeld) reports that "the federal government may jointly administer some services to the two tribes sharing Wyoming's Wind River Reservation, a U.S. District Court judge ruled last week." The holding "gives legal force to a long-running but disputed practice and could set a crucial precedent for the government's obligations to the Northern Arapaho and Eastern Shoshone tribes, two distinct governments given jurisdiction over the same reservation." Judge Brian Morris held that the Bureau of Indian Affairs "may take practical impact and financial cost into account when deciding whether to allow each tribe to operate federally funded services independently."

BIA Looking To Replace Four Bridges.

The Parker \(AZ\) Pioneer (6/26, Gutekunst) reports that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is "looking a replacing four bridges on the Colorado River Indian Reservation." A public meeting on the proposal was held June 22 at the BIA Colorado River Agency office near Parker. According to the article, "two engineering firms working on the project discussed the scope of the project and the environmental impact assessment."

Bureau Of Land Management

Oil Company Cited For Improper Drilling In Colorado.

The AP (6/26) reports that on Sunday, Bureau of Land Management officials ordered SG Interests to halt drilling and clean up spilled foam chemicals, hitting the company with three federal "non-compliance" notices for improper drilling. BLM spokesman Steven Hall said that SG Interests' permit required the company to capture all waste. Hall added that less than 2,100 gallons of waste spilled, but none spread beyond the immediate drilling area.

Additional coverage was provided by the Glenwood Springs \(CO\) Post Independent (6/26, Finley).

Study: Wyoming Deer Avoid Oil And Gas Wells.

The AP (6/26) reports a new study found that mule deer in southwest Wyoming are not adapting to oil and gas wells on their winter range and that there is a 36 percent decline in deer populations exposed to energy development. The study, which took 17 years, found that deer perceive energy infrastructure as risky, so they keep their distance, subsequently reducing their habitat. Hall Sawyer, a researcher on the project, said, "Twenty years ago we didn't really have a good idea of what was going to happen, if deer would avoid these areas or it would change anything or not. ... As development progressed, it became clear quickly that deer avoided well pads. It also became clear that mule deer numbers began to drop off."

Oil And Gas Lease Sale In Wyoming Nets $2.6 Million.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (6/26, Richards) reports that bidders in a "relatively small auction Thursday paid a total of $2.6 million for Wyoming land, with about half of the proceeds going to the federal government." The Bureau of Land Management "offered 26 parcels in five southern counties, or about 32,000 acres."

Drones Cause Problems For Arizona Wildfire Crews.

The AP (6/26) reports that "civilian drones are forcing firefighters to ground their aircraft, slowing their ability to fight Arizona wildfires." According to the article, "another unauthorized drone was spotted Sunday, temporarily halting aerial efforts to put out a fire northwest of Flagstaff." Public Information Officer with the Bureau of Land Management Dennis Godfrey "says it's the second drone that has been observed at the fire."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Week Ahead: Alaska Senator Has Dual Clout On Environment, Energy.

Bloomberg BNA (6/26, McCutcheon) reports that the Senate Appropriations' Energy and Water Development Subcommittee will "hold a Wednesday hearing to discuss the budget requests for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation." The White House budget proposal "calls for a 16 percent cut in corps funding and a 13 percent reduction for Reclamation."

Additional coverage was provided by E&E Publishing (6/26).

State Sides With Helena Hemp Farmer Who Was Denied Federal Water.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (6/26, Neuman) reports that the Montana Department of Agriculture on Monday "refuted a federal decision to deny irrigation water to a Helena Valley hemp farmer, department officials said." Kim Phillips, "the hemp farmer, is in full compliance with state and federal regulations on industrial hemp, and is not in violation of the Controlled Substances Act of 1970, according to Cort Jensen, attorney for the state agriculture department." Phillips was "denied access to water by the Helena Valley Irrigation District and Bureau of Reclamation on Thursday because her hemp seedlings are allegedly ineligible for federally controlled water."

Our View: Mead's Bathtub Ring, Not Projections, Should Guide River Plans.

The Havasup \(AZ\) News-Herald (6/26) editorializes that the Bureau of Reclamation "recently released new river water projections" for the Colorado River. The paper argues that "more concrete than any projections is the so-called bathtub ring around Lake Mead that shows a water level about thirty feet lower than it used to be." It says that "the calcium ring should guide public policy and household policy as much as bureau projections."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Much Of The Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill Has Disappeared Because Of Bacteria.

CNBC (6/26, Ferris) reports researchers are saying that a naturally occurring underwater bacteria has significantly contributed to the decline in the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. A new paper found that the chemical dispersants broke up the oil into small droplets, making them unable to float to the surface. The microbes were then able to attack a larger surface area of oil, making it easier to degrade the portions of pollution that did float to the surface or spread out on the ocean floor.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Federal Agencies Greenlight Proposed Delta Tunnel Project.

The Los Angeles Times (6/26, Boxall) reports that "federal fishery agencies Monday pushed forward a controversial water project that would change the way Northern California supplies are sent to the Southland." The San Francisco Chronicle (6/26, Lochhead) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and National Marine Fisheries Service "determined that the tunnel project, officially known as California Water Fix, would harm several endangered fish in the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta, but that an extra 1,800 acres of habitat restoration, on top of the 30,000 acres the project calls for, would offset the damage."

The AP (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith) reports that "Monday's decision moves Brown's project ahead to a decision by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation." David Murillo, the bureau's regional director, "indicated to reporters Monday that decision was months or more away." The article says that "among the issues Murillo said had yet to be resolved: concerns voiced earlier this month from a large group of Northern and Central California water agencies that wouldn't get water from the tunnels and don't want any part of the project."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by ABC News (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), Philly \(PA\) (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), CNBC (6/26), CBS News (6/26), the Annapolis \(MD\) Capital Gazette (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), the Provo \(UT\) Daily Herald (6/26, Knickmeyer, Smith), and KQVR-TV Sacramento \(CA\) Sacramento, CA (6/26).

Senators Introduce Legislation To Fix Coastal Barrier Resources Map.

The Sussex \(DE\) Countian (6/26) reports that Sens. Tom Carper and Chris Coons "introduced legislation to adjust the boundary of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act map unit for North Bethany Beach." The legislation would "implement a recommendation made by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service after its discovery during the recent digital mapping pilot project that a portion of the North Bethany Beach unit, which encompasses the South Shore Marina development, was included by mistake when the map was created in 1990.”

Partnership To Preserve Portion Of US Military Supply Route.

The AP (6/26) reports that “a remnant of U.S. military supply route linking Ohio and Michigan during the War of 1812 will be preserved under a new public-private partnership.” The cooperative management agreement “involves silica and sand company U.S. Silica, the National Park Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.”

Conservation Group, Interns And Others Join To Protect Water From Invasive Species In Westfield.

WWLP-TV Springfield, MA (6/26, Desrochers) reports that “a group from Silvio O. Conte National Fish and Wildlife Refuge, including several student interns, worked together to try and protect some of the city’s natural water habitat.” Interns from the Student Conservation Association, “who were guided by the Silvio O. Conte National Fish and Wildlife Refuge—a part of the US Fish and Wildlife Service—and the Westfield Conservation Commission, worked to clear Brickyard Ponds off Root Road of water chestnut.” According to the article, “the plant is an invasive species and conservation groups have been working to rid bodies of water of the plant before it ruins their ecosystems.”

Trump Unleashes Triple Whammy On Montana.

In his column for the Missoulian \(MT\) (6/26, Ochenski), George Ochenski criticizes the decision to remove Yellowstone area grizzlies from the endangered species list. Ochenski argues that “global warming is wiping out whitebark pines – and the nutritious seeds the bears rely on – which will lead to grizzlies changing to a more meat-based diet.” And “that, in turn, will likely lead to more human and livestock conflicts that will result in more dead grizzly bears.”

National Park Service

Park Service Behaved Appropriately Regarding Trump Crowd Reports, Watchdog Finds.

Politico (6/26, Nussbaum) reported, “The feud between the National Park Service and the Trump White House appeared to ease on Monday after a watchdog found that NPS officials did not alter inauguration crowd size estimates and that public affairs officials did not leak information about a phone call between President Donald Trump and the agency’s acting director.” The “report from the Department of the Interior Inspector General released on Monday found that NPS employees did not alter crowd size records and the NPS public affairs officials did not leak information to the press about the phone call. The report does not make clear who requested the investigation, which was initiated in February.”

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (6/26, Shelbourne), Roll Call, and BuzzFeed (6/26, Koerner).

Fire May Be The Only Remedy For A Plague Killing Deer And Elk.

The New York Times (6/26, Zimmer) reports that researchers on “developing plans to burn plots of National Park Service land in Arkansas and Colorado.” They are hoping to “spare some elk and deer a gruesome death” from chronic wasting disease. The researchers will test their hypothesis “by seeing if the prevalence of chronic wasting disease drops after they set their fires.”

Historic Grand Canyon Cemetery Closing To New Burials.

The AP (6/27) reports that National Park Service officials “say a historic cemetery at the Grand Canyon is closed to new burials because of a lack of space.” The park service says the Grand Canyon Pioneer Cemetery is “an important part of the national park’s history and will be protected and preserved.”

Remember The Removal Ride Wins $25K Grant.

The Talequah \(OK\) Daily Press (6/24) reports that “the 2017 Remember the Removal Bike Ride on the Trail of Tears National Historic Trail is among 21 national parks selected to receive a 2017 Active Trails grant from the National Park Foundation.” The $25,000 grant will “help cover costs of the tribe’s annual bicycle ride, which includes 13 Cherokee Nation cyclists riding 1,000 miles across seven states, retracing the northern route of the Trail of Tears that their ancestors were forced to make on foot more than 175 years ago."

Salinas Pueblo Missions National Monument HQ Is Vandalized.

The AP (6/26) reports that National Park Service officials "say several juveniles vandalized the Salinas Pueblo Missions National Monument headquarters in Mountainair." According to officials, "the youths damaged the statue of Saint Francis de Assisi, threw vegetation into the fountain along with cigarette butts and trash, pulled lights and branches off trees and broke pieces from artwork that adorns a sitting area." They "say the vandalism cost the park and taxpayers about $2,000."

National Park Investigating Vandalism In Great Smoky Mountains.

WATE-TV Knoxville, TN (6/26) reports that the National Park Service is investigating vandalism in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. Over the weekend, the park "said photos were taken along the Gatlinburg Trail that shows a man carving bark off of a tree."

Office Of Insular Affairs

A Remote Pacific Island Faces Up To China.

The Diplomat (6/26, Morris) reports that "in the traditional societies of Micronesia, customs hold strong," but it is a challenge for a "tiny" Pacific island like Yap "to retain its traditional culture and make its way peacefully in the world." With "new challenges on the horizon," many "fear the new, uncertain world to come in the next decade." The article notes that "in 2023, the substantial subsidies under FSM's Compact of Free Association with the United States comes to an end and if new assistance is not negotiated FSM will lose about half of its GDP overnight." Meanwhile, "the rise of China, just four hours' flight to the north, is beginning to draw attention."

NOAA Program Seeks 7 Fellows.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (6/27, Bautista) reports that the National Coral Reef Management Fellowship Program is "seeking seven men and women to complete a two-year fellowship program that seeks to build new leaders and capacity for effective coral reef management." Nova Southeastern University will "oversee the fellowship program, which is a partnership between NSU, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Coral Reef Conservation Program, the Department of the Interior's Office of Insular Affairs, and the U.S. All Islands Coral Reef Committee."

Top National News

Media Analyses: High Court Hands Trump "Partial" Win On Travel Ban.

Media analyses, including stories on all three major network newscasts, generally cast yesterday's Supreme Court ruling as a win for the Administration. Reports, however, dispute the President's characterization of the ruling as "a clear win for our national security," and tend to describe his legal victory as nuanced or "partial." Meanwhile, a small subset of stories – generally stemming from progressive outlets – dismissed the notion that the court's decision was in any way a victory for Trump. At any rate, the AP (6/26, Sherman) reports, following the court ruling "State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert said the ban would be implemented starting...Thursday morning."

The Washington Times (6/26, Dinan) notes that DHS "said it will soon provide more details about how it will carry out the new ruling," telling reporters yesterday that it would do so "after consultation with the Departments of Justice and State." Another Washington Times (6/26, Noble) story quotes Attorney General Sessions praising the court's "unanimous decision to revive the president's travel ban, saying it's an 'important step towards restoring the separation of powers between the branches of the federal government.'" Sessions also said, "The court's decision recognizes that the executive has the responsibility to protect the safety and security of the American people under the Constitution of the United States and its laws."

USA Today (6/26, Jackson) reports that the President called the decision "a clear victory for our national security," and cautions that "while the Trump administration said initially that the measure would only [be] temporary, Trump did not address that in his victory statement." Said

Trump, "As President, I cannot allow people into our country who want to do us harm. ... I want people who can love the United States and all of its citizens, and who will be hardworking and productive." Townhall (6/26, Roussele) described Trump as "quite pleased." The President later took to Twitter, where he wrote, "Great day for America's future Security and Safety, courtesy of the US Supreme Court. I will keep fighting for the American people, & WIN!"

Reuters (6/26, Hurley, Chung) reports the court "handed a victory to...Trump by reviving parts of his travel ban...and agreeing to decide its legality later this year." ABC World News Tonight (6/26, story 2, 3:20, Llamas) referred to "one of the biggest victories for...Trump's young presidency," and the CBS Evening News (6/26, lead story, 2:40, Crawford) reported that "the justices handed the President his first victory in the legal appeals over his travel ban." The Los Angeles Times (6/26, Savage) said the court "handed...Trump a victory," The Hill (6/26, Wheeler) that it was "a win" for the White House, and the New York Daily News (6/26, Brennan) that the ruling "will affect tens of thousands of potential travelers to the US." NBC Nightly News (6/26, story 3, 2:35, Holt), USA Today (6/26, Wolf, Gomez), Wall Street Journal (6/26, Kendall) and Politico (6/26, Gerstein), among other news outlets, referred to a "partial" victory for Trump, and The Atlantic (6/26, Epps) to a "very partial victory." Jake Novak, in a column for CNBC (6/26), warns his readers, "Don't let the qualified headlines or lead paragraphs in most of the news media fool you. Monday's decision...is a very significant victory" for the President.

Doug McKelway said on Fox News' Special Report (6/26) that the Supreme Court delivered a "stinging blow" to lower courts and "handed the Trump Administration a big victory." Jessica Schneider reported on CNN's Situation Room (6/26) that while the lower courts "wrote extensively about" Trump's tweets and statements on his executive order, the Supreme Court did not weigh in on them. Schneider added, "We'll see if that's something they factor in when they hear the arguments this fall."

On that topic, the Wall Street Journal (6/26) runs an editorial titled "A Unanimous Rebuke To Judges On The Travel Ban," which casts the decision as the start of a major rebuke of ideologically motivated courts rulings. To the Journal, the legal merits of the case are crystal clear in the Administration's favor, and adverse rulings were fueled merely by political reasons. The Los Angeles Times (6/26), meanwhile, headlines its editorial "Trump's Travel Ban Is Back, But It's Still As Bad A Policy As Ever," and goes on to call the ruling "disappointing."

Slate (6/26, Lithwick, Stern), on the other hand, termed the ruling "confusing and ambiguous," and added that "the only thing that's clear about" it "is that there is nothing clear about it." Along those lines, USA Today (6/26) writes in an editorial that "Americans hoping for some guidance from the high court on whether Trump's action was in reality a Muslim ban, something he promised voters he would deliver once elected, were left scratching their heads." Mother Jones (6/26, Levy) said "the Supreme Court may have found a way to appease both sides without handing a full victory to either," and the Huffington Post (6/26, Rotner) that "there is no clear winner or loser in" the decision. Sen. Richard Blumenthal concurred on CNN's Situation Room (6/26), saying, "I think there is less victory than meets the eye," because the "travel ban" remains "blocked for every one of the individuals who went to court to block it, and every other individual who has...a bona fide relationship with a person or an entity" in the US.

In an editorial, the New York Times (6/26) writes that Trump "was predictably quick to sound off in triumph," but "in reality, 'victory' for anyone in this case is far from clear." The Washington Post (6/26) similarly editorializes that "predictably, Mr. Trump hailed the court's interim decision as a famous victory; it isn't." Adds the Post, "Until the court issues a final ruling, later this year or next, the very constitutionality of the administration's action remains in doubt."

Brit Hume said on Fox News' Special Report (6/26) that the justices "are going to hear the case in full in the fall, so it's conceivable that the ruling could go a different way from the way it was pointed today, but unlikely. In order to lift most of the restrictions, lift the injunction, to basically reinstate most of the travel ban, the Court had to find that the Administration was likely to prevail on the merits when the case is fully argued. That means the Administration starts out with a leg up in the fall and the Court is likely to go in that direction." CNN (6/26, Cillizza), meanwhile, said "some legal observers suggested that the Court's initial ruling on the ban suggests that the nine justices will likely uphold the full ban come the fall," but "predicting what the Court will do is rarely a good gamble."

Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said on Fox News' Hannity (6/26) that the Court said "that the executive order as written was not, as the lower courts have said, unconstitutional. They did not find religious animus or religious ... They put in place a stay on the lower court injunctions that were issued. Basically 95 percent of the executive order was upheld...as constitutional. I suspect...when the entire case is argued, fully briefed, argued on the merits, it will be a 100 percent victory for the President."

The Washington Post (6/26, Barnes) reports "the action means that the administration may impose a 90-day ban on travelers from Libya, Iran, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen and a 120-day ban on all refugees entering the United States, with the exceptions noted by the court." The San Francisco Chronicle (6/26, Egelko) indicates that "the main subject of uncertainty was a statement by six of the nine justices that said, while Trump's executive order is in effect, officials can exclude residents of the targeted nations or refugees who lack 'a bona fide relationship with a person or entity in the United States.'" The Chronicle adds that "some advocates for immigrants and refugees said virtually all would-be entrants have established relationships with family members or organizations in the US and would be exempt from the ban." Wired (6/26, Lapowsky) similarly reported that "the travel ban is back on in theory, but in practice it will block only a small sliver of the people who seek to come to the US." Likewise, a Washington Post (6/26, Zapotosky) analysis says the ruling is "a win for the administration, but the impact will be far less severe than...Trump's initial version of the measure."

The National Review (6/26, French) disagreed, reporting that "the lower courts' injunctions remain only in the narrowest of categories," and that "the court's guidelines were strict" on what constitutes a "bona fide relationship," stating that "for individuals" it would be "a close familial relationship," and "for entities, the relationship must be formal, documented, and formed in the ordinary course."

The New York Times (6/26, Liptak) notes, however, that "Justice Clarence Thomas, joined by Justices Samuel A. Alito Jr. and Neil M. Gorsuch, dissented from" that "part of the court's opinion," saying "they would have revived the travel ban in its entirety while the court considered the case." Wrote Thomas, "I fear that the court's remedy will prove unworkable. ... Today's compromise will burden executive officials with the task of deciding – on peril of contempt – whether individuals from the six affected nations who wish to enter the United States have a sufficient connection to a person or entity in this country."

USA Today (6/26, Gomez) reports that in effect, "the ruling means officials at the Department of Homeland Security and State will have to begin sorting through each application submitted by travelers from the six targeted countries to determine if they have enough of a link to the US to enter." Along those lines, Bloomberg News (6/26, Larson, Mehrotra) quotes Cornell University Law School professor Stephen Yale-Loehr as saying, "I predict chaos at the border and new lawsuits as foreign nationals and refugees argue that they are entitled to enter the United States." According to Reuters (6/26, Chung, Torbati), Jeffrey Gorsky, "a former legal adviser to the State Department's Visa Office," warned "there's no precedent for something like this that I'm aware of," and the Seattle Times (6/26, Bush) notes that Jorge Barón, the executive director of the Northwest Immigrant Rights Project, said "it's going to be a little messy for the next few months."

Jonah Goldberg of National Review said on Fox News' Special Report (6/26), "This was politically a win and a vindication for...Trump and the travel ban. It was also a win for the plain letter of the law. Part of the reason why this was such a clear win for the White House is that the White House was just on the right side of a constitutional legal argument."

Gloria Borger said on CNN's Situation Room (6/26), "I think it's significant for the President because he can claim a victory, a partial victory. I mean, what the Supreme Court said is they are going to consider this in the next term. But for now, the President does have a partial victory because certain people will be prohibited from coming into this country unless they have a specific reason or a person they want to visit, et cetera, et cetera."

Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN's The Lead (6/26), "I was a little surprised, because the Court obviously did a little more than just decide to review the case. They modified the stay that had been in effect, in, I think, a rather clever way." Toobin added that "it is certainly a better result for the Trump Administration than it's had from any of the court of appeals so far, so certainly this is a better day for the Trump Administration in the Supreme Court than they've had."

But Neal Katyal, who represented Hawaii in its challenge of the travel ban, said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/26), "I was really surprised to hear...Trump declare a unanimous victory today, because in reality, he lost 6-3. The Supreme Court let stand the District Court's injunction blocking major sections of both his travel ban and his refugee ban."

The Washington Post (6/26, Svrluga) reports Mary Sue Coleman, the president of the Association of American Universities, said in a statement Monday afternoon, "While we are still reviewing the Court's decision, the Court has rightly recognized that students, faculty, and lecturers from the designated countries have a bona fide relationship with an American entity and should not be barred from entering the United States." She added, "This should make clear to the world that the United States continues to welcome the most talented individuals from all countries to study, teach, and carry out research and scholarship at our universities." Scientific American (6/26, Reardon) headlines its report "Scientists In Limbo As US Supreme Court Allows Modified Travel Ban," and says "universities have played a key role in fighting both versions of the travel ban."

Jim Acosta reported on CNN's Situation Room (6/26) that one of the "ramifications" of Trump not taking questions about the court's ruling today in the Rose Garden during a joint appearance with Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi is that "we did not get a chance to ask" Modi "what he thinks about this travel ban. After all, there are more than 100 million Muslims living in India."

Cardin, Pelosi: Ban "A Recruitment Tool" For Terrorists. Sen. Ben Cardin said on CNN's Situation Room (6/26) that by singling out "Muslim states, I think it's a recruitment tool for extremists." When asked if the Administration should "carve out an exception for Syrian refugees who are still under siege," Cardin replied, "Absolutely. The United States should continue to be a world leader in dealing with the refugee crisis." Doug McKelway said on Fox News' Special Report (6/26) that House Minority Leader Pelosi said the "blatant discrimination of the Muslim and refugee bans is unjust and dangerous, handing terrorists a powerful recruiting tool."

Rep. Eric Swalwell said on CNN's The Lead (6/26), "I disagree respectfully with the ruling. I still believe it is a Muslim ban, and I look forward to it getting a full hearing in front of the full court in the fall, and hopefully a resolution very soon." Swalwell added, "Let me just say [the ban] makes us less safe and it makes it less us. Less safe because countries who we need cooperation from to fight terrorism are going to be affected. It perpetuates the myth that the United States is not welcoming to Muslims, and less us just because we're a country that opens arms to refugees, and we're turning away from that if we continue to allow a policy like this to go forward."

WPost Analyses: Statute Behind Trump's Order Meant To Exclude "Jews And Communists." Under the headline "Trump's Travel Ban Is Built On A Law Meant To 'Protect' The US From Jews And Communists," the Washington Post (6/22, Friman) reports "Trump's order claims authority from the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act's (INA) Section 212 (f), which says the president can temporarily suspend alien entry." The Post adds that "the original intent behind the statute was to give the president broad discretion over alien entry, including targeted discrimination," and that its sponsors had "particular concerns about the threats posed by Jews and communists." In fact, "President Harry S. Truman reluctantly signed the refugee legislation, observing that it 'discriminates in callous fashion against displaced persons of the Jewish faith.'"

Trump Warns Assad He Would Pay "Heavy Price" For Another Chemical Attack.

The New York Times (6/26, Shear, Cooper, Schmitt) reports the White House issued a statement late Monday saying Syrian President Bashar al-Assad appears to be preparing another chemical weapons attack, and warned that he would "pay a heavy price" if one took place. In the statement, President Trump indicated that Assad's preparations "appeared similar to the ones that Western intelligence officials believe were made by the Syrian government before chemical attacks in April that killed dozens of Syrians, including children." Bloomberg News (6/26, Olorunnipa) quotes the statement as adding, "If, however, Mr. Assad conducts another mass murder attack using chemical weapons, he and his military will pay a heavy price."

The AP (6/26, Colvin) reports the White House "issued a stern warning" to Assad in "an ominous statement issued with no supporting evidence or further explanation," and the Washington Times (6/26, Muñoz) says White House officials "declined to provide specifics on the intelligence...nor what a US response would entail." The Wall Street Journal (6/26, Schwartz) notes that since the US strike in April, Administration officials have signaled that the US would be willing to take more military action in response to further chemical-weapons use.

The Washington Post (6/26, Phillip, Lamothe) reports that following the White House statement, Ambassador Haley "said Assad and its allies would be squarely blamed if such an attack occurred." Reuters (6/26) reports Haley said on Twitter: "Any further attacks done to the people of Syria will be blamed on Assad, but also on Russia and Iran who support him killing his own people." The New York Post (6/26, Tacopino) and Politico (6/26, Morin) report similarly on the White House statement.

Trump: Obama "Did Nothing About Russia," Collusion And Obstruction Did Not Happen.

In four tweets posted between 8:37 a.m. and 9:05 a.m. on Monday, President Trump wrote, "The reason that President Obama did NOTHING about Russia after being notified by the CIA of meddling is that he expected Clinton would win and did not want to 'rock the boat.' He didn't 'choke,' he colluded or obstructed, and it did the Dems and Crooked Hillary no good. The real story is that President Obama did NOTHING after being informed in August about Russian meddling. With 4 months looking at Russia under a magnifying glass, they have zero 'tapes' of T people colluding. There is no collusion & no obstruction. I should be given apology!" The tweets were covered by both ABC and NBC as well as several national newspapers. Most focus on Trump's assertion that his predecessor was at fault, but the Washington Times (6/26, Boyer) says Trump seemed to concede that Russia did aid in his campaign, while the New York Times (6/26, Qiu) says Trump's tweets contradict his own past statements.

ABC World News Tonight (6/26, story 3, 2:10, Llamas) reported, "President Trump going on the offense about Russia's meddling in the election, turning against his predecessor – blaming President Obama, saying he did nothing about it, accusing Obama of collusion and obstruction for political reasons." ABC's Jonathan Karl: "In a barrage of tweets beginning this weekend, the President hit his predecessor over Russia's meddling in the election." NBC Nightly News (6/26, story 4, 1:55, Holt) reported that the President "raised eyebrows by leveling explosive new allegations against his predecessor. While Mr. Trump acknowledged Russia's meddling in the US election, he placed blame on Mr. Obama, accusing him of purposefully doing nothing about it." NBC's Kristen Welker: "President Trump unleashing a new tactic on the Russia controversy, pointing the finger at President Obama." Trump: "If he had the information, why didn't he do something about it?" Welker: "While never formally acknowledging that Russia meddled in the race, now the President can't stop talking about it." Fox News Special Report (6/26) reported that Trump "for the fifth day in a row...blasted his predecessor."

Reuters (6/26) reports that the President "stepped up his criticism" of Obama's handling of the alleged Russian interference, "accusing his predecessor of collusion and demanding an apology from investigators." USA Today (6/26, Jackson) reports that in his tweets, "Trump criticized Obama for allegedly doing 'nothing' to stop the Russians from hacking Democrats close to candidate Hillary Clinton, while also defending himself against allegations that Trump campaign associates had links with Russia."

The New York Times (6/26, Thrush) reports that Trump, "who has taken to referring to himself as 'T' on Twitter, demanded on Monday that his critics give him 'an apology' for any suggestion that 'T people' have colluded with Russia or obstructed justice." However, the Washington Times (6/26, Boyer) reports that Trump "appeared to concede...hat Russia tried to help him win the 2016 election." Politico (6/26, Nelson) also covers Trump's tweets.

Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said on Fox News' Hannity (6/26), "We now know that the Obama Administration had the intelligence and the information regarding Russia's engagement in hacking other activities in the previous election. They knew it over a year ago. They had the information. They took no action of significance on the information because of the election, convinced that Hillary Clinton was going to win. Instead, Donald Trump becomes the President of the United States."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA), asked on CNN's The Lead (6/26) about Trump's claim that the Obama Administration did not respond to Russian meddling because of expectations that Clinton would win, said, "At least President Obama tried to do something, and we have a president right now who is either being deceitful or in denial about what Russia did."

In a fact check piece headlined "By Criticizing Obama, Trump Contradicts His Own Comments On Russian Meddling," the New York Times (6/26, Qiu) writes that Trump "has accused his predecessor of 'doing nothing' in response to Russia's interference in the 2016 election – a misleading statement that contradicts his previous comments." Trump "has consistently refused to acknowledge Russia's involvement, and his assertions about Mr. Obama and his own ignorance are highly misleading." Comments made since last summer indicate that both Trump and Obama "were aware of the malfeasance."

However, Richard Cohen writes in his Washington Post (6/26) column that for a "rare moment, the president was absolutely right. The Obama administration's response to Russian meddling was ineffective and oddly torpid. It was also secretive." But even though "some of the tougher penalties Obama ordered up but never used are on Trump's desk," Trump "continued to dismiss the unanimous finding of the entire US intelligence community that Russia meddled in the election."

Three Journalists Leave CNN Over Retracted Scaramucci Report. The New York Times (6/26, Grynbaum) reports, "Three prominent journalists at CNN resigned on Monday after the cable news network was forced to retract and apologize for a story on its website involving a close ally of President Trump." The article linked "Trump confidant" Anthony Scaramucci, a hedge fund manager, “to a Russian investment fund supposedly being investigated by the Senate.” CNN pulled the story from its website “after the network decided it could not fully stand by its reporting.” Politico (6/26, Gold) reports that “Pulitzer-prize nominee Thomas Frank, assistant managing editor Eric Lichtblau (who recently joined from the New York Times) and Lex Haris, the executive editor in charge of investigations, are all out.”

Breitbart (6/26, Boyle) quotes CNN's Brian Stelter as reporting that “an internal investigation by CNN management found that some standard editorial processes were not followed when the article was published,” according to those briefed on the results of the investigation. CNN Money (6/26, Stelter) reports, “This breakdown in editorial workflow disturbed the CNN executives who learned about it.” In a Monday staff meeting, “investigative unit members were told that the retraction did not mean the facts of the story were necessarily wrong. Rather, it meant that ‘the story wasn’t solid enough to publish as-is,’ one of the people briefed on the investigation said.”

Donald Trump Jr. told Breitbart (6/26, Boyle) on Monday, “The hypocrisy at CNN is astounding. Facing the biggest fake news scandal in the network’s history after an embarrassing retraction, nobody from the network is answering questions – even to their own reporters – and they have the audacity to demand on-camera press briefings from the White House to boost their ratings and make their personalities famous? Maybe Jeff Zucker should do an on-camera press briefing about CNN’s fake news scandal before the White House does any more of them.”

However, the Washington Examiner (6/26, Adams) reports, “The wronged party in this case responded well to the retraction. ‘[CNN] did the right thing. Classy move,’ Scaramucci said Saturday on social media. ‘Apology accepted. Everyone makes mistakes. Moving on.’” USA Today (6/27, James) says that “Scaramucci seemed appeased, and lauded CNN’s retraction.” The AP (6/26, Bauder) and the Los Angeles Times (6/26, Battaglio) also report on the resignations.

FBI Questioned Page Five Times In March. The Washington Post (6/26, Barrett) reports, “FBI agents have repeatedly questioned former Trump campaign adviser Carter Page about his contacts with Russians and his interactions with the Trump campaign, according to people familiar with the investigation.” Page “repeatedly denied wrongdoing” during five March meetings that totaled “about 10 hours of questioning,” according to “a person familiar with Page’s account.” Page “confirmed Monday that the interviews occurred, calling them ‘extensive discussions.’” He did not say if he has spoken to investigators since that time.

Politico (6/26, Wright) reports that Page said Monday, “During my extensive discussions with the FBI agents just weeks before [then-Director James] Comey’s departure, they acknowledged that I’m a loyal American veteran but indicated that their ‘management’ was concerned that I did not believe the conclusions of the fake January 6 intelligence report. ... Our frank and open conversations gave me confidence that there are still logical, honest individuals at the Bureau who respect civil rights and the Constitution, despite the recent devastating impact on our democracy by self-centered politicians at the top of the Clinton-Obama-Comey regime.”

Kushner Adds Lowell To Legal Team. Politico (6/26, Dawsey) reports that Jared Kushner “has hired Abbe Lowell, one of the country’s leading criminal defense lawyers, to represent him in the special counsel’s probe,” but will also “keep Jamie Gorelick, his current lawyer and a WilmerHale partner, on his legal team.” The New York Times (6/26, Apuzzo) reports that Lowell’s clients have included Jack Abramoff and John Edward, and he is currently defending Sen. Robert Menendez against federal corruption charges.

Photo Shows McCaskill Attended Reception At Kislyak’s Home. On its website, CNN (6/26, Raju) reported that in a tweet earlier this year, Sen. Claire McCaskill – “one of the most vulnerable Democrats up for reelection” in 2018 – “said she never once met with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak in her 10 years serving on the Senate Armed Services Committee.” But not long “after that tweet, it was revealed she did interact with the Russian ambassador.” CNN has learned that McCaskill attended “a black-tie reception at the ambassador’s Washington residence in November 2015” honoring a former Missouri congressman.

Kislyak Recalled To Russia. In its report on Trump’s criticism of Obama, NBC Nightly News (6/26, story 4, 1:55, Holt) briefly reported that Kislyak is “returning to Russia. US officials say it’s a long-planned move that now predates his highly scrutinized conversations with Trump aides.”

Media Analyses: CBO Score Hurts Senate Healthcare Bill’s Chances For Passage.

The CBO’s analysis of the Senate Republican healthcare bill, which was released late Monday afternoon, receives heavy media coverage, including more than 10 minutes of combined reporting on the three network news broadcasts – two of which led with the story. Generally, coverage casts the Senate bill in a negative light, focusing primarily on the agency's finding that it would leave 22 million people without coverage by 2026 and increase costs for millions of poor and sick people. Almost universally, reports say that with five Republicans already opposing the bill, the CBO report will make efforts by Senate Majority Leader McConnell to muster the 50 votes he needs to proceed even more difficult.

The Hill (6/26, Fabian) reports that the White House released a statement Monday evening in which it "slammed" the CBO, saying, "The CBO has consistently proven it cannot accurately predict how healthcare legislation will impact insurance coverage. ... This history of inaccuracy, as demonstrated by its flawed report on coverage, premiums, and predicted deficit arising out of Obamacare, reminds us that its analysis must not be trusted blindly." The Hill casts the statement as an effort to question the CBO's credibility "in order to stanch the political fallout from the score." USA Today (6/26, Collins) says the RNC also "attempted to counter-program minutes after the score was released with an email that said 'CBO's Long History Of Being Way Off.'" The email listed "a series of times that the CBO had not accurately modeled, including an incorrect estimate of the number of people that would enroll in the Obamacare exchanges."

The Washington Free Beacon (6/26, Meyer) reports that the CBO estimated that the bill would "reduce the deficit by $321 billion from 2017 to 2026." During that period, the CBO "also projects that spending will be reduced by $1 trillion and government revenues will be reduced by $701 billion."

The Washington Times (6/26, Howell) describes the CBO score as "only slightly less daunting" than its analysis of the House bill, adding that it "could spook centrists Republicans who aren't sure if they can back the draft plan" released last week. Politico (6/26, Cancryn) also says the estimates "may alarm Republican moderates," and adds that with Democrats "solidly lined up against the repeal bill, Republican leaders can only afford to lose support from two of their members." Similarly, Reuters (6/26, Abutaleb) reports that the CBO "assessment...will likely make it more difficult for the already-fraught legislation to win support for speedy passage," and the AP (6/26, Fram) says the estimates "pose yet another problem for" McConnell, who, as of Friday afternoon, "was facing public statements of opposition from five GOP senators – three more defections than he can afford and still win approval for the legislation over united Democratic opposition."

The Hill (6/26, Sullivan) calls the analysis "a hurdle for Republicans," while Roll Call (6/26) says it "will exacerbate McConnell's hurdles in gaining unity among his fractured GOP conference." However, Roll Call adds that "$202 billion in savings above the House plan could give McConnell and other supporters substantial flexibility to make deals and win the support of more moderate members of the conference," although those lawmakers "might insist on updated CBO scoring before voting for the motion to proceed."

McClatchy (6/26, Pugh, Clark) calls the CBO numbers "disappointing" and says that with their release, "the road to passage for the Senate Republican health care bill got a little steeper." On a more positive note, McClatchy adds that "the CBO's finding that the nation's individual insurance markets would remain largely stable under the bill could help shore up support for the legislation." The New York Post (6/26, Morrongiello, Fredericks) and the Wall Street Journal (6/26, A1, Armour, Peterson, Radnofsky) also report on the CBO analysis.

The Los Angeles Times (6/26, Levey) says the CBO report, which "outlines how the GOP plan would cause a widespread erosion in basic health protections," increases "the political challenge for Senate Republican leaders, who are scrambling to lock down votes" this week before Congress' July 4 recess. The Times adds that a "key moment" could occur Wednesday "with a procedural vote allowing the Senate to begin debate on the bill." It is unclear if McConnell has the 50 votes he needs to win that vote, and Bloomberg News (6/26, Tracer, Edney, Dennis) reports that McConnell's efforts to secure them "may be complicated not only by the CBO's projection that millions of people will lose insurance, but also by estimates that many Americans will face out-of-pocket costs and insurance premiums far higher than they are now." Bloomberg adds that after the CBO score was released, there were "signs of GOP discontent...from both the conservative and moderate side of the party."

Tom Llamas said in the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (6/26, lead story, 3:05) that the Senate bill "fac[es] an uphill climb." Mary Bruce added that while Republicans "can afford to lose just two votes," five GOP senators have said "they cannot support their own party's bill. Five more have voiced serious concerns." To Politico (6/26, Everett, Haberkorn), the bill is "on track to blow up before it even gets started." Even "overcoming the procedural hurdle is becoming a massive headache for Republicans leaders, and the Senate GOP seems more divided than ever after release of the Congressional Budget Office's analysis."

The Washington Post (6/26, A1, Goldstein) says the report "seemed to worsen the bill's prospects" as "no new senators immediately" said they would support it, and the Washington Examiner (6/26, King) says GOP leaders do not have the votes to move the bill as Sens. Rand Paul, Susan Collins, and Dean Heller "announced they would not support a procedural motion to advance" it. Collins, according to the Washington Times (6/26, Howell) announced that she will vote against the procedural motion in a trio of tweets (1, 2, 3) Monday. Her opposition, the Times adds, "could stall the repeal effort." Dana Bash said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (6/26) that she asked Sen. Ron Johnson "if and when the Senate Republican leadership moved to this bill this week, if he, too, would vote against a motion to proceed and he said he would also vote against it."

However, chief congressional correspondent Nancy Cordes reported on the CBS Evening News (6/26, story 2, 2:20, Mason) Sen. James Inhofe "predicts GOP hold-outs will come around." Inhofe: "The choice, is you want to go back home and say, well, I supported Obamacare over the Republican plan? And I don't think they do." A Wall Street Journal (6/26) editorial addresses the Republican holdouts, arguing that this may be the best opportunity to improve the country's healthcare system and they will be held accountable if it fails.

Meanwhile, Politico (6/26, Cheney, Schor) reports that Heller's "harsh critique" of the Senate bill has caused a divide among Democrats "between those who want to unseat him and those who prefer to lock in his 'no' vote." Heller on Friday "issued a stinging analysis" of the bill and indicated he may vote against it only to receive "vicious reviews from Democrats who sense a chance to defeat him in 2018." However, the attacks are not "sitting well with some of the party's staunchest Obamacare defenders," to whom "attacking one of the few Republicans likely to break ranks feels disturbingly off-key."

John Fund writes in a piece for National Review (6/25) that "many Republicans believe that survey data show voters will punish anyone who doesn't substantially alter Obamacare, making passage of some reform imperative." Fund adds that some polling does indicate that "a failure to vote for at least an overhaul and partial repeal of Obamacare is politically riskier than voting for it." Republicans, he adds, "find themselves in a tight corner" as they retook "control of Congress in large part due to their opposition to Obamacare," and "if a few of GOP senators block even the imperfect bill before them, the entire party will be blamed and will suffer at the polls for falsely advertising they would act on health-care reform."

However, Kasie Hunt reported in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (6/26, lead story, 2:50, Holt) that for senators "deciding how to vote," the CBO analysis showed "millions more uninsured than many had hoped." CNN political director David Chalian argued on CNN's The Lead (6/26) that "the biggest problem for Republicans besides just the bad headline of 22 million fewer with insurance, is that, again, the people, according to CBO in this report, most dramatically impacted are older people, lower income, 50 to 64-year-olds with lower income. We're talking about Trump voters here. ... I think that's a political problem." In a piece posted on its "The Health 202" blog before the CBO score was released, the Washington Post (6/26, Cunningham) reported that the Senate bill may "suffer from the same crippling unpopularity as the House version," pointing out that the CBO's analysis of the House measure, which "estimated that it would leave 23 million people uninsured...fed a major backlash against that bill."

Media Analyses: CBO Numbers Feed Democrats' Claims That GOP Bill Is Cruel. The New York Times (6/26, A1, Kaplan, Pear) says the CBO findings "will give fodder to Democrats who were already assailing the bill as cruel." That was evident Monday as Sen. Ben Cardin told CNN's Situation Room (6/26) that "22 million people losing their coverage" is "unacceptable. You're going to be increasing dramatically the number of people who are uninsured that use the system and don't have the ability to pay for it. Secondly, there are going to be a lot of people who get caught with inadequate coverage. ... You're creating a system where a lot of people are going to be hurt." Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Situation Room (6/26), "The Republicans have gone from total secrecy to total chaos, and now they have no way to square reality with what their promises have been."

Politico (6/26, Kim) reports that Democrats "launched yet another night of floor speeches on Monday night castigating the GOP's plan." The "talk-a-thon" was led by Sens. Patty Murray Mazie Hirono of Hawaii and "ran several hours after the Senate's 5:30 p.m. votes." Meanwhile, on the Capitol steps, Sen. Cory Booker and Rep. John Lewis streamed "their talk blasting the GOP's efforts to dismantle the seven-year-old health care law." Booker's "vigil on the steps attracted more and more senators, including Minority Leader Chuck Schumer of New York and Dick Durbin, the No. 2 Democrat, joined in." Other Democrats "including Sens. Chris Murphy of Connecticut, Brian Schatz of Hawaii, Kirsten Gillibrand of New York, Bob Casey of Pennsylvania and Jeff Merkley of Oregon — joined in for large chunks of the impromptu demonstration that attracted hundreds.”

A Washington Post (6/26) editorial echoes Democrats’ concerns, calling the CBO numbers “grim,” and arguing that each of the 22 million who would lose coverage “is gratuitous.” The Post also highlights what it says is the CBO’s “damning” conclusion that “none of this disruption is needed.” The ACA, the Post argues, “requires fixes, not a destabilizing ‘rescue.’” Eugene Robinson writes in his column for the Washington Post (6/26) “concerned citizens must make it known that the politics of this atrocious legislation are every bit as hazardous for the Republican Party as the underlying policies would be for the health of the nation.” While Republicans “worry about having spent seven years promising to ‘repeal and replace’ the ACA and then failing to follow through,” but “Democrats competing in the 2018 midterms will be able to turn that slogan around with a clarion call to ‘repeal and replace’ the American Health Care Act, or whatever the final legislation ends up being called.”

Meadows Sees Growing Conservative Support For Deficit-Increasing Tax Cuts.

Jonathan Swan writes in a piece for Axios (6/26) that House Freedom Caucus Chairman Rep, Mark Meadows told him there is “a growing acceptance among conservatives to expand the budget window to 20 years that would allow for more robust tax cuts.” A “non-traditional idea that’s gaining momentum in conservative circles” would “change budget rules so that tax cuts that add to the deficit can last for 20 years or longer, rather than expiring after 10 years.” This would enable Republicans “to cut taxes dramatically without worrying about raising new revenue to ‘pay for’ the cuts for at least two decades,” at which time, they believe, “the economy will be roaring from a streak of economic growth, and politicians will likely do another round of tax reform.”

WPost Analysis: Democrats “More Divided Than Ever” Over Wall Street Regulations.

The Washington Post (6/26) reports that Democrats, “who competed during the campaign to stake out the most aggressive stance toward policing” Wall Street, “now look hopelessly divided over which direction to head.” For example, when House Republicans brought their proposal for “gutting Dodd-Frank to the floor earlier this month, Democrats disarmed.” There has been “no talk at all about cranking the regulatory dial in the other direction — of tightening rules.” Instead, the Democratic position “was simply to defend the status quo.”

Poll: Voters Want US To Seek New Climate Agreement.

The Hill (6/26, Cama) reports over two thirds of voters “want the United States to work up a new international climate change pact to replace the Paris agreement.” On Monday, a new survey released by the “Harvard-Harris Poll provided to The Hill found that 72 percent of voters would prefer renegotiation over opting out of the climate pact process altogether.” Earlier this month, President Trump announced “that he would withdraw the U.S. from the 2015 pact and its nonbinding carbon dioxide emissions reductions, but he said he would be open to negotiating a new international agreement that better protects U.S. interests.” The online survey “found that 53 percent disagree with Trump’s decision to pull out of the Paris accord, while 47 percent support the president’s choice.”

Mayors Urge Federal Government To Rejoin Paris Climate Pact.

The New York Times (6/26, Alvarez) reports that during its annual meeting Monday, the United States Conference of Mayors approved resolutions to urge the federal government to rejoin the Paris climate agreement and to “redouble their own efforts to combat climate change and commit to renewable energy.” New Orleans Mayor and president of the conference, Mitch Landrieu, said, “If the federal government doesn’t act, it doesn’t mean we don’t have a national policy; the federal government doesn’t occupy the only place on this. Mayors have to respond to circumstances. We have to keep moving no matter what.” While Republican and Democratic mayors “came together to push their agendas on improving infrastructure, responding to gun violence and curbing opioid abuse,” the Times says “it was the climate change debate that provided the sharpest contrast” between the mayors’ priorities and “the skepticism of the Trump administration on the issue.”

Researchers: Carbon In Atmosphere Rising, Even As Emissions Stabilize. The New York Times (6/26, A1, Gillis) reports on its front page that climate researchers around the world are warning that carbon dioxide emissions “rose at the highest rate on record in 2015 and 2016,” and “a slightly slower but still unusual rate of increase has continued into 2017.” Scientists are concerned about the “cause of the rapid rises because,” because the “amount of carbon dioxide that people are pumping into the air seems to have stabilized in recent years, at least judging from the data that countries compile on their own emissions." Many scientists suspect an El Niño climate pattern that spanned those two years, "one of the strongest on record, may have caused the faster-than-usual rise in carbon dioxide, by drying out large parts of the tropics." However, they are "not entirely certain."

Experts Hope US Budget Cuts To Scientific Research Don't Block Climate Data.

Bloomberg News (6/26) reports that President Trump's proposed budget cuts for federally-funded science research has spurred research institutes and universities in Europe to informally pursue policies aimed recruiting American scientists. More consequential than a potential "brain drain" would be the impact of budget cuts on US climate data, particularly that generated by NASA's Earth-science research and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration research office. Satellite data, for example, is a "key area of U.S. leadership," according to Michael Oppenheimer, professor at Princeton University.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"The Travel Ban At The Supreme Court." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/26) writes that President Trump "was predictably quick to sound off in triumph" following the Supreme Court's decision on his travel ban, but "in reality, 'victory' for anyone in this case is far from clear."

"Tweeting, Not Leading, The Response To Russian Hacking." A New York Times (6/27, Board) editorial claims President Trump "has had unfettered access to intelligence on" Russia's efforts to influence the 2016 election, but he "has been not just cautious but also remarkably indifferent to what should have been a critical nonpartisan national security concern from his first day in office." The Times warns "Russia's meddling in global democracies is a deepening threat that requires a united response," but instead of protecting "the nation against threats from foreign adversaries," Trump "tweets from the sidelines."

"A Children's Health Crisis Officials Overlook: Shootings." In an editorial, the New York Times (6/27) notes Congress enacted a budget amendment two decades ago prohibiting Federal funds to be used "to advocate or promote gun control," and cites various studies on pediatric firearm injuries and deaths that stress the impact of firearm violence on public health. "It's as if lawmakers fear that knowledge and the Second Amendment are somehow incompatible," the Times asserts, and adds that the Republican-led Congress seemingly believes "that the less we know about gun violence, the better off we will be."

Washington Post.

"Want To Know The Worst Thing About The GOP's Healthcare Bill?" A Washington Post (6/26) editorial echoes Democrats' concerns about the Senate GOP's healthcare bill, calling the CBO score of the measure "grim," and arguing that each of the 22 million who would lose coverage "is gratuitous." The Post also highlights what it says is the CBO's "damning" conclusion that "none of this disruption is needed." The ACA, the Post argues, "requires fixes, not a destabilizing 'rescue.'"

"The Supreme Court Splits The Baby On Trump's Travel Ban – For Now." The Washington Post (6/26) editorializes that "predictably, Mr. Trump hailed the court's interim decision" on his travel ban "as a famous victory; it isn't." Adds the Post, "Until the court issues a final ruling, later this year or next, the very constitutionality of the administration's action remains in doubt."

"The Seal Of Bilingualism Is A Distinction Worth Celebrating." In an editorial, the Washington Post (6/26) writes that the "seal of bilingualism," which honors high school graduates who've demonstrated proficiency in English and another language, is "worth celebrating." The Post says the rest of America would "do well" to join in the movement, begun in California and now including DC and 26 states, as bilingualism and biliteracy "make individual students more competitive in the college application process and job market." Being immersed in a bilingual environment also help students become better learners and thinkers and can help shrink the achievement gap for native and non-native English speakers.

Wall Street Journal.

"The Senate's Healthcare Hour." A Wall Street Journal (6/26) editorial addresses the Republican holdouts on the Senate healthcare bill, arguing that this may be the best opportunity to improve the country's healthcare system and they will be held accountable if it fails.

"A Unanimous Rebuke To Judges On The Travel Ban." A Wall Street Journal (6/26) editorial casts the Supreme Court's decision on President Trump's travel ban as the start of a major rebuke of ideologically motivated judges. To the Journal, the legal merits of the case are crystal clear in the Administration's favor, and adverse rulings were fueled merely by political reasons.

"Religious Liberty Lives." A Wall Street Journal (6/26) editorial welcomes Monday's Supreme Court ruling that the state of Missouri could not deny a playground resurfacing grant to a church as a victory for religious freedom, but warns that the Justices are likely to see new challenges in this area.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Senate Health Bill Raises Uninsured By 22 Million, The CBO Says
Anxious Investors Try To Hedge Against A Big Selloff, Even As Good Times Roll
China's All-Seeing Surveillance State Is Reading Its Citizens' Faces

New York Times:

Senate Health Bill Reels As CBO Predicts 22 Million More Uninsured
Supreme Court Takes Up Travel Ban Case, And Allows Parts To Go Ahead
Justices To Hear Case On Religious Objections To Same-Sex Marriage
Carbon In Atmosphere Is Rising, Even As Emissions Stabilize Products At Center Of London Fire Faced Tougher Rules In US

Washington Post:

High Court Allows Limited Version Of Travel Ban
CBO: Bill Would Take 22 Million Off Rolls
Failure Rate In British Fire-safety Tests: 100% In Britain, All Edifices Tested For Fire Failed
O Say Can You Sing?

Financial Times:

Drug Price Gouger Shkreli Goes On Trial For Fraud
Berlin Leads Backlash Against Italian Bank Rescue
Activist Fund Aims To Spur Action At 'Staid' Nestlé
Supreme Court Gives Trump Partial Travel Ban Win

Washington Times:

Supreme Court Revives Trump Travel Ban: 'A Clear Victory For Our National Security,' President Says
Justice Gorsuch Immediately Asserts Himself On Right Of Supreme Court
CBO Says Senate Republican Health Care Plan Lowers Premiums But Cuts Coverage By 22 Million
Next Presidential Election, Economic Uptick Give Confidence To Brazilians After Years Of Crisis
Former Sheriff Arpaio Back In Court, This Time Accused Of Disobeying Order On Immigrants

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Healthcare Reform Bill; Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Russia Meddling Investigation; Heat Wave-Wildfires; US Destroyer Collision Investigation; Columbia-Tour Boat Sunk; AirAsia Mid-Air Scare; New Orleans-Tourist Attack; Minnesota Police Violence Trial; Six Flags Accident; Salvador Dali Remains; Teen Inventor.

CBS: Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Healthcare Reform Bill; Mosul Assault; North Carolina-Water Contamination; Meningitis Outbreak Trial; Minnesota Police Violence Trial; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Takata Airbag-Bankrupt; Madoff Ponzi Scheme; Airport Security-Lobster; Harry Potter Anniversary.

NBC: Healthcare Reform Bill; Healthcare Reform Bill-Impact; Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Russia Meddling Investigation; AirAsia Mid-Air Scare; Heat Wave-Wildfires; Columbia-Tour Boat Sunk; Health-Probiotics; Engagement Proposals.

Network TV At A Glance:

Healthcare Reform Bill – 10 minutes, 5 seconds
Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling – 8 minutes, 35 seconds
Heat Wave-Wildfires – 5 minutes, 45 seconds
Russia Meddling Investigation – 4 minutes, 5 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Healthcare Reform Bill; Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Salvador Dali Remains.

CBS: Syria-Chemical Attack; Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Iraqi Refugee Deportation Trial; Healthcare Reform Bill; Takata Airbag-Bankrupt.

FOX: Healthcare Reform Bill; Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Syria-Chemical Attack.

NPR: Immigration Order-Supreme Court Ruling; Syria-Chemical Attack; Healthcare Reform Bill; Meningitis Outbreak Trial.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Speaks with President Emmanuel Macron of France; speaks with Prime Minister Leo Varadkar of Ireland.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers the keynote address at the US-India Business Council's 42nd Annual Leadership Summit.

US Senate: 6:30 AM Senate Armed Services subcommittee marks up National Defense Authorization Act – Emerging Threats Subcommittee closed markup hearing on 'National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018' * Conducted at the secret level Location: Rm 232A, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

7:00 AM Senate Armed Services subcommittee marks up National Defense Authorization Act – Personnel Subcommittee closed markup hearing on 'National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018' * Conducted at the secret level Location: Rm 232A, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

7:30 AM Senate Armed Services Committee marks up National Defense Authorization Act – Closed markup hearing on 'National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018' * Conducted at the secret level Location: Rm 222, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

9:30 AM EPA Administrator Pruitt testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on budget – Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Subcommittee hearing 'To review the FY2018 budget request for the Environmental Protection Agency', with testimony from EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, and Administrator's Senior Advisor Holly Greaves Location: Rm 124, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

9:30 AM Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on the FISA Amendments Act – Hearing on 'The FISA Amendments Act: Reauthorizing America's Vital National Security Authority and Protecting Privacy and Civil Liberties', with testimony from Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Intelligence Stuart Evans; FBI National Security Branch Executive Assistant Director Carl Ghattas; Office of the Director of National Intelligence Acting General Counsel Bradley Brooker; National Security Agency Deputy General Counsel for Operations Paul Morris; IronNet Cybersecurity President of Business Development and Strategy Matthew Olsen; Center for a New American Security Senior Fellow Adam Klein; Brennan Center for Justice at New York University School of Law Liberty & National Security Program Co-Director Elizabeth Goitein; and Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board Member Elisebeth Collins Location: Rm 226, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

9:30 AM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on marine sanctuaries – Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard Subcommittee hearing on 'Marine Sanctuaries: Fisheries, Access, the Environment, and Maritime Heritage', with testimony from Circle H Outfitters owner Scott Hickman; former Morro Bay Commercial Fishermen's Association President Jeremiah O'Brien; and Aleutians East Borough, AK, Natural Resources Director Ernest Weiss Location: Rm 253, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC http://commerce.senate.gov
<https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

10:00 AM Senate Appropriations subcommittee hearing on FY'18 SEC and CFTC budgets – Financial Services and General Government Subcommittee hearing on 'Review of the FY2018 Budget Requests for the SEC & CFTC', with testimony from Securities and Exchange Commission

Chairman Jay Clayton; and Commodity Futures Trading Commission Acting Chairman J. Christopher Giancarlo Location: Rm 138, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

10:30 AM Labor Secretary Acosta testifies to Senate Appropriations subcommittee on FY'18 budget – Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee hearing on 'Review of the FY2018 Budget Request for the U.S. Department of Labor', with testimony from Alexander Acosta Location: Rm 192, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:45 PM POSTPONED: Clean Air and Nuclear Safety Subcommittee hearing on 'Developing and Deploying Advanced Clean Energy Technologies' Location: Rm 406, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

5:30 PM GOP Sen. Orrin Hatch hosts 'True Iran: The Coming Jihad' forum and documentary screening – Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch hosts 'True Iran: The Coming Jihad' forum and documentary screening, featuring a panel of Iranian Revolution founder Moshen Sazegara, covert operations operative Lt. Col. (Ret.) Bill Cowan, former National Security Council director Michael Doran, former CIA specialist Reuel Marc Gerecht, author Dr Emanuele Ottolenghi, U.S. Navy veteran Cmdr. (Ret.) Christopher Harmer, and Syria Institute Executive Director Valerie Szybala Location: South Orientation Theater, U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, Washington, DC

Business Meeting, with agenda including consideration of nomination of Mark Andrew Green to be USAID Administrator Location: S-216, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC
<http://foreign.senate.gov/>

US House: 9:00 AM Trans-Caspian East-West Trade and Transit Corridor Forum continues – Trans-Caspian East-West Trade and Transit Corridor Forum continues, with day two keynote from Republican Rep. Pete Sessions * Afternoon session takes place at the World Bank Main Complex Location: Rm 2203, Rayburn House Office Bldg., Washington, DC www.transcaspianforum.org
<https://twitter.com/AAChamberofcomm>

10:00 AM Markup hearing on 'H.R. 2997, 21st Century Aviation Innovation, Reform, and Reauthorization Act' Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'Clearing the Next Crisis: Resilience, Recovery and Resolution of Derivative Clearinghouses' Location: Rm 1300, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://agriculture.house.gov/>

10:00 AM House Natural Resources Committee markup hearing reconvenes – Markup hearing reconvenes on legislation including 'H.R. 218, King Cove Road Land Exchange Act', 'H.R. 289, Guides and Outfitters Act', 'H.R. 597, Lytton Rancheria Homelands Act of 2017', 'H.R. 1107, Pershing County Economic Development and Conservation Act', 'H.R. 1306, Western Oregon Tribal Fairness Act', 'H.R. 1399, American Soda Ash Competitiveness Act', 'H.R. 1719, John Muir National Historic Site Expansion Act', 'H.R. 1731, Revitalizing the Economy of Coal Communities by Leveraging Local Activities and Investing More Act of 2017', 'H.R. 1927, African American Civil Rights Network Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2053, Mining School Enhancement Act', 'H.R. 2156, Saint Francis Dam Disaster National Memorial Act', 'H.R. 2370, Escambia County Land Conveyance Act', 'H.R. 2425, Public Lands Telecommunications Act', 'H.R. 2936, Resilient Federal Forests Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2937, Community Reclamation Partnerships Act', and 'H.R. 2939, Water Rights Protection Act of 2017' * Began 22 Jun Location: Rm 1324, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Financial Services subcommittee first hearing on U.S. equity market structure – Capital Markets, Securities, and Investment Subcommittee hearing on 'U.S. Equity Market Structure Part I: A Review of the Evolution of Today's Equity Market Structure and How We Got Here', with testimony from The Capital Group Senior Vice President and Global Trading Manager Matt Lyons; Themis Trading partner Joseph Saluzzi; Global Trading Systems CEO Ari Rubenstein; Charles Schwab Senior Vice President for Legislative and Regulatory Affairs Jeff Brown; New York Stock Exchange President Thomas Farley; The Investors Exchange CEO Brad Katsuyama; Chicago Board of Options Exchange President and COO Chris Concannon; Instinet Head of Global Trading Research John Comerford; and NASDAQ Executive Vice President and Global Head of Equities Tom Wittman Location: Rm 2128, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM Digital Commerce and Consumer Protection Subcommittee hearing on 'Self-Driving Vehicle Legislation' Location: Rm 2123, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Appropriations subcommittee hearing on U.N. and international organizations budget – State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Subcommittee ‘United Nations and International Organizations – Budget Hearing’, with testimony from U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Amb. Nikki Haley Location: Rm 2359, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

10:00 AM Department of Defense Intelligence and Overhead Architecture Subcommittee closed hearing on ‘Ongoing Intelligence Activities’ Location: HVC-304, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseIntelComm>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM House expected to begin debate on Protecting Access to Care Act – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda expected to include beginning consideration of ‘H.R. 1215 – Protecting Access to Care Act of 2017’, as well as consideration of legislation under suspension of the rules (with agenda for the week including ‘H.R. 497 – Santa Ana River Wash Plan Land Exchange Act’, ‘H.R. 220 – To authorize the expansion of an existing hydroelectric project, and for other purposes’, ‘H.R. 1135 – To reauthorize the Historically Black Colleges and Universities Historic Preservation program’, ‘H.R. 1500 – Robert Emmet Park Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 1967 – Bureau of Reclamation Pumped Storage Hydropower Development Act’, ‘H.Res. 351 – Condemning the violence and persecution in Chechnya’, as amended, and ‘H.Res. 397 – Solemnly reaffirming the commitment of the United States to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization’s principle of collective defense as enumerated in Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty’) Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

12:00 PM ITIF ‘@Work’ event series continues, with keynotes from Reps. John Delaney and Randy Hultgren – ‘The Real State of Technological Disruption in the U.S. Labor Market and What Policymakers Should Do About It’ event – the latest in the Information Technology and Innovation Foundation ‘@Work’ series – discussing the interaction between automation, technology, and jobs, and exploring how policymakers can best help workers transition between jobs and occupations. Democratic Rep. John Delaney and Republican Rep. Randy Hultgren keynote, with panel featuring Council on Foreign Relations Senior Fellow Edward Alden, Urban Institute Income and Benefits Policy Center Senior Research Associate Lauren Eyster, University of Maryland Professor of History of Technology & Science Robert Friedel, and Mercatus Center at George Mason University Senior Research Fellow Adam Thierer Location: Rm 2325, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.itif.org #ITIFworkseries

2:00 PM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on the Stop the Importation and Trafficking of Synthetic Analogues Act – Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security, and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on ‘H.R. 2851, Stop the Importation and Trafficking of Synthetic Analogues Act of 2017’ Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

2:00 PM House Foreign Affairs subcommittees joint hearing on ‘the terrorist threat to Europe’ – Terrorism, Nonproliferation, and Trade Subcommittee and Europe, Eurasia, and Emerging Threats Subcommittee joint hearing on ‘Allies Under Attack: The Terrorist Threat to Europe’, with testimony from George Washington University Program on Extremism Deputy Director Seamus Hughes; Heritage Foundation Davis Institute for National Security and Foreign Policy Fellow Robin Simcox; National Defense University Center for Complex Operations Senior Research Fellow for Counterterrorism Dr R. Kim Cragin; and U.S. Institute of Peace Countering Violent Extremism Director Georgia Holmer Location: Rm 2172, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

2:30 PM Bipartisan Heroin Task Force discusses release of its legislative agenda – Bipartisan Heroin Task Force, led by Reps. Annie Kuster, Tom MacArthur, Brian Fitzpatrick, and Donald Norcross, hosts press conference on the release of its legislative agenda for the 115th Congress – ‘a compilation of bipartisan, commonsense legislation aimed at addressing the opioid epidemic from a health and law enforcement perspective’ Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC kuster.house.gov <https://twitter.com/RepAnnieKuster>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 3003 – No Sanctuary for Criminals Act’ and ‘H.R. 3004 – Kate’s Law’ Location: H-313, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 9:00 AM Dem Sen. Tom Udall and GOP Rep. John Shimkus keynote event on TSCA reform – ‘TSCA Reform: One Year Later’ discussion, exploring the federal government’s implementation of the Frank R. Lautenberg Chemical Safety for the 21st Century Act, which ‘significantly amended’ TSCA. Keynotes from Democratic Sen. Tom Udall and Republican Rep. John Shimkus * Co-Sponsored by the Environmental Law Institute, Bergeson & Campbell, P.C., Environmental Defense Fund, and George Washington University Milken Institute School of Public Health

Location: Milken Institute School of Public Health, GW, 950 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, DC www2.eli.org <https://twitter.com/ELIORG>

10:00 AM Dem Rep. John Lewis speaks at launch of initiative marking Memphis sanitation strike 50th anniversary – The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the Church of God In Christ launch 18-month initiative to honor the 1968 Memphis sanitation strike – when workers went on strike over fair wages and safe working conditions and were joined in solidarity by Dr Martin Luther King, who delivered his ‘I Have Been to the Mountaintop’ speech at the Mason temple, a day before he was assassinated. Speakers include civil rights activist Democratic Rep. John Lewis, AFSCME President Lee Saunders, COGIC Presiding Bishop Charles Edward Blake, and The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights President and CEO Vanita Gupta Location: AFSCME, AFL-CIO, 1625 L St. NW, Washington, DC
<http://www.afscme.org/> <https://twitter.com/AFSCME>

10:30 AM Gov. Kasich to join Gov. Hickenlooper to discuss the Senate’s national health care reform bill – Colorado Governor John W. Hickenlooper and Ohio Governor John R. Kasich meet tomorrow at the National Press Club to discuss the Senate’s version of the national health care reform bill. Reporters need to RSVP to jacque.montgomery@state.co.us as the National Press Club will need advance notice of those who will be in attendance. Location: National Press Club, Fourth Estate Room, 529 14th St., NW.

1:00 PM GOP Rep. Adam Kinzinger keynotes USIP / Heritage Foundation event on ‘The Future of Mosul and Iraq’ – ‘After the ISIS Flag Falls: The Future of Mosul and Iraq’ United States Institute of Peace / Heritage Foundation discussion, with keynote from Republican Rep. Adam Kinzinger. Other speakers include USIP Board of Directors Chairman Stephen Hadley, USIP President Nancy Lindborg, The Heritage Foundation Middle Eastern Affairs Senior Research Fellow James Phillips, USIP Middle East Programs Director Sarhang Hamasaeed, and former U.S. Army forces at Mahmoudiya, Iraq, Commander Col. Michael Kershaw Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave., Washington, DC www.usip.org <https://twitter.com/USIP>

1:00 PM GOP Rep. Steve King attends AVIAC launch at NPC – Advocates for Victims of Illegal Alien Crime launch at NPC news conference, with Republican Rep. Steve King attending * The group is aiming ‘to stop illegal alien crime’, which they say ‘can only happen with the deportation of all people in the country illegally’ Location: National Press Club, 529 14th St., NW, Washington, DC AVIAC.us <https://twitter.com/AVIACUSA>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: “According to the Washington Post, Barack Obama knew about the plot last August, and that it was based on Putin’s specific instructions to defeat or at least damage the Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton, and help elect her opponent, Donald Trump. And Putin was successful. The only person who did more damage to Hillary Clinton’s campaign was Hillary Clinton.”

Stephen Colbert: “Now reportedly, Obama agonized over what to do. He even authorized the planting of cyber weapons, the digital equivalent of bombs, I think, I’m not sure. I think that means they were playing minesweeper.”

Stephen Colbert: “That’s right, there was no Russian hacking, period, fake news. Wait, it was Obama’s fault. Russia stole our election and Obama let it happen. Thanks, Obama. No, seriously, thanks Obama, I’m President now, thanks.”

Stephen Colbert: “But with cameras banned from the briefing, CNN sent a courtroom sketch artist to cover Spicer’s briefing. Yeah, something tells me it won’t be the last member of the Trump Administration we see in a courtroom sketch.”

Jimmy Fallon: “President Trump said that Obama copied him by calling the Republican healthcare bill ‘mean.’ And then Obama said Trump copied him by spending the last six months doing nothing.”

Jimmy Fallon: “In a new interview, Ivanka Trump said that she would give her dad an ‘A’ as President. And Ivanka said, "'A' as in 'a series of unfortunate events.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that this weekend, Mike Pence officiated the wedding of Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin. Yep. Pence said, 'You may now kiss the bride.' Then he was like, 'Not you, Mr. President.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "The TSA is testing a new policy that makes passengers take out their books at airport security. The policy has already affected the three Americans who still read books."

Seth Meyers: "Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin got married this weekend for the third time. And the wedding was officiated by Vice President Mike Pence because if there's one thing Mike Pence stands for, it's the sanctity of a third marriage."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, November 7, 2017
Date: Tuesday, November 07, 2017 6:20:19 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- E&E Publishing: States Make Legal Plea As Fracking Rule Revival Looms.
- Great Falls (MT) Tribune: Secretary Ryan Zinke Commits To Sperry Chalet Rebuild In Glacier National Park After Season Of Wildfires.
- Washington Examiner: Rob Bishop Calls For Tougher Oversight Over Puerto Rico's 'Weird' Whitefish Contract Ahead Of Major Hearing.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Durango (CO) Herald: U.S. Department Of Interior Likely To Rescind Plan For Region's Oil, Gas.

- U.S. News & World Report: Environment Groups Challenge Pinyon-Juniper Removal Plans.
- Alaska Public Radio Network: BLM Is Moving Forward On Proposed Ambler Road Project.
- New York Times: Federal Trial Begins For The Nevada Rancher Cliven Bundy.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Committee To Advance Onshore-Offshore Energy Bill .
- U.S. East Coast Readies To Boost Offshore Wind.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- California May Press Ahead With Scaled-back Delta Tunnels.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Leave It Better Than You Found It Approach May Not Apply Much Longer For Sage Grouse Habitat.
- San Antonio Express-News: Texas Researchers Hope Grants Will Stop Spread Of Disease Threatening State's Bats.
- Fort Myers (FL) News-Press: Environmental Group Secures Land For Panthers, River Crossing.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Third Federally Protected Gray Wolf Killed In Oregon.

National Park Service

- Ventura County (CA) Star: Park Releases Plan To Deal With Harmful Plants.
- U.S. News & World Report: Yellowstone Closes Most Roads, Entrances For Winter.
- KLAS-TV Las Vegas: Scotty's Castle Flood Recovery Tours Being Offered.
- Oregonian: Portland's Peacock Lane Earns National Historic District Status.
- Newsweek: Additional Coverage: National Park Service Refuses To Honor Black Panthers After Police Union Complains.

US Geological Survey

- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Agencies Release Data Modeling Framework For Selenium In Kooconusa.

Opinion Pieces

- Trump Attacks Teddy Roosevelt's Grand Legacy.
- What Happened To Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Since Joining Trump Cabinet?
- Congress Should Pass A Narrow Bill To End Fire Borrowing.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Reuters: Trump Urges Japan To Buy US Equipment To Shoot Missiles "Out Of The Sky."
- Reuters: Trump Says Texas Shooting Caused By Mental Illness, Praises Person Who Fought Back.
- Washington Post: Administration Has Prepared Executive Order To Weaken ACA's Individual Mandate.
- Washington Times: House Ways And Means Panel Takes Up GOP Tax Bill.
- Associated Press: Official: US Will Continue To Participate In Climate Discussions.
- New York Times: Despite Signing Paris Accord, World Far From Climate Goals.
- New York Times: Scientists Who Worked On Latest US Report Warn Of Climate Change Risks.
- Reuters: Environmental Group, Children Sue DOE, EPA Heads Over Efforts To Repeal Clean Power Plan.
- Vice: Trump Ceding Political, Economic Power To China Through Climate Actions.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Trump Attacks Teddy Roosevelt's Grand Legacy."
 - "Ballot Proposals, Mayor, And New Jersey Governor: How To Vote."
 - "Mass Shootings Don't Have To Be Inevitable."
- Washington Post.
 - "Yes, President Trump, It's A Guns Situation."
 - "Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Is Getting Reckless."
 - "So, What Would Trump Pay?"
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Sorry State Of New Jersey."
 - "A Plumber With A Rifle."

- "Bad Marks For A Good Military."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

States Make Legal Plea As Fracking Rule Revival Looms.

E&E Publishing (11/6, Waldman) reports that in a filing made Friday, "Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and North Dakota asked the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to reconsider" a ruling that could "revive an Obama-era hydraulic fracturing rule" even as the Trump administration works to rescind it. The states' requests "may prompt the court to hold off on issuing that mandate and save the oil and gas industry from having to comply with the rule."

Calif., NM Warn BLM Over Suspending Methane Waste Rule. Law360 (11/6, Koenig) reports that "after convincing a federal judge last month to reactivate Obama-era regulations limiting methane gas emissions on public lands, the attorneys general of California and New Mexico on Monday warned the Bureau of Land Management that a formal suspension of those rules would similarly not hold up in court." California Attorney General Xavier Becerra and New Mexico Attorney General Hector Balderas "submitted public comments to the BLM arguing that the agency's plan to delay and suspend the Waste Prevention Rule lacks legal justification."

County Urges BLM To Delay Methane Rule. The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (11/7, Harmon) reports that "the Mesa County Commission on Monday endorsed a proposed rule that would reverse an Obama-era regulation governing flaring and venting of natural gas on federal and tribal lands." The commission "approved a letter to the Bureau of Land Management asking the agency to delay 'the most onerous and duplicative measures' of the rules governing venting and flaring of natural gas, or methane, as part of the recovery and treating process."

BLM's Methane Rule Draws Supporters In Durango. The Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/6, Romeo) reports that "nearly 100 people gathered at Durango's Buckley Park on Monday to show support for a new rule aimed at reducing the wasteful leaking of methane at oil and gas sites, which faces revocation under the Trump administration." Recently, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "proposed a one-year delay of the rules, though it's unclear if he intends to rewrite the regulations or scrap them." A public comment period on the matter ended Monday.

Farmington BLM Hears Citizen Support For Methane Rule. The Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (11/7, Petersen) reports that "more than a half dozen people voiced concerns about a federal rule to curb methane gas emissions today at Farmington's Bureau of Land Management field office."

It's Time For The Gas Majors To Tackle Methane. We Mean Business writes a contributing piece for the Huffington Post (11/6) saying the oil and gas sector needs to address methane emissions as natural gas becomes a more significant piece in the global energy mix. The latest World Energy Outlook from the IEA found 40-50 percent of current emissions from the fossil fuels industry could be avoided with no net costs. The IEA says it is possible to avoid 75 percent of total emissions, leading to a cash positive situation as companies sell captured methane. The Oil and Gas Climate Initiative, which includes Shell, announced its goal to work towards net zero methane emissions from the gas value chain.

Secretary Ryan Zinke Commits To Sperry Chalet Rebuild In Glacier National Park After Season Of Wildfires.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (11/6, Dettmer) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke met with Glacier National Park Superintendent Jeff Mow on Saturday to talk about "the effects of the Sprague Fire and what the future holds for Sperry Chalet." After the meeting, Zinke tweeted: "We're going to rebuild @GlacierNPS Sperry Chalet better to last the next 100 years." Heather Swift, press secretary for the Interior, "elaborated in an email saying Zinke reviewed footage and photos of Sperry Chalet before and after the fire and discussed stabilization, rebuild and funding options."

Rob Bishop Calls For Tougher Oversight Over Puerto Rico's 'Weird' Whitefish Contract Ahead Of Major Hearing.

The Washington Examiner (11/6, Siegel) reports that House Natural Resources Committee Chairman Rob Bishop has called for "tougher oversight" of what he described as the "weird" contract between Puerto Rico and Whitefish Energy. Bishop, whose panel is preparing "to question the island's power utility and oversight board at an upcoming hearing," called for "an independent financial oversight board created by Congress to work with the island's government and other stakeholders to ensure a similar situation never occurs again." Bishop told reporters, "There has to be some kind of oversight, there has to be some kind of transparency, so a situation like Whitefish does not occur again."

Bureau Of Land Management

U.S. Department Of Interior Likely To Rescind Plan For Region's Oil, Gas.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/6, Mimiaga) reports that a new directive by the Interior Department "jeopardizes a pending master-leasing plan in Southwest Colorado that would scrutinize oil and gas development near Mesa Verde National Park." In March, the Bureau of Land Management "approved development of a master leasing plan for 71,000 acres in Montezuma and La Plata counties." However, "in a report on energy policy released Oct. 24, the Department of Interior included master leasing plans as one of many regulatory 'burdens' to oil and gas development." The article says that "the agency is expected to rescind the policy authorizing them."

Environment Groups Challenge Pinyon-Juniper Removal Plans.

The AP (11/6) reports that "two environmental groups are challenging projects by the Bureau of Land Management which would remove pinyon-juniper in Hamblin Valley in southwest Utah." The BLM projects seek "to improve the rangeland health for sage grouse, wild horse and burros." The Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance and the Wild Utah Project are "critical of the BLM's plan to remove the trees by chaining or using a mastication machine that uproots and mulches trees, which they say will have an impact on the area."

BLM Is Moving Forward On Proposed Ambler Road Project.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (11/6, Bross) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "taking the lead on an environmental review of the state proposed Ambler Road." The project "would punch an industrial access road from the Dalton Highway west to the Ambler Mining district." According to the article, "the proposed 211-mile road already faces substantial opposition from many area residents."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (11/7).

Federal Trial Begins For The Nevada Rancher Cliven Bundy.

The New York Times (11/6, Turkewitz) reports from Las Vegas that "when Cliven Bundy refused to hand over his trespassing cattle to officials in 2014, he inspired an armed standoff that highlighted sharp divisions over the power of the federal government and the ways Americans use public lands." Bundy "is finally getting his day in court," as "his federal trial in Las Vegas begins" today, and "it is being watched closely because it could set the tone for how 640 million acres of public land owned by the federal government, including America's national parks, wildlife refuges and conservation areas, are managed." According to the Times, "a guilty verdict for Mr. Bundy could reinforce Washington's control of these acres, while an acquittal could embolden those who ignore federal rules."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP Reno, NV (11/6) and the Arizona Republic (11/6, Anglen).

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Committee To Advance Onshore-Offshore Energy Bill .

E&E Daily (11/6, Lunney) reports that the House Natural Resources Committee will consider legislation Tuesday aimed at boosting "onshore and offshore oil and gas drilling as well as wind energy development by reducing federal regulations, streamlining the permitting process and creating a revenue-sharing partnership with coastal states.”

U.S. East Coast Readies To Boost Offshore Wind.

Maritime Executive (11/7) reports that “the U.S. states of Massachusetts, New York and Rhode Island have released reports indicating that the Northeast has the potential for offshore wind deployment of between 4,000 to 8,000 megawatts by 2030 and the creation of up to 36,000 jobs.” The Northeast Offshore Wind Regional Market Characterization report “identifies the opportunities and challenges that will shape the offshore wind market.” Meanwhile, “the Carolinas are also exploring the potential of offshore wind power.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

California May Press Ahead With Scaled-back Delta Tunnels.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (11/6, Kasler) reports that “a coalition of environmental groups has endorsed a lone-tunnel approach” for California WaterFix but “scaling back the $17.1 billion twin tunnels plan” would “create complications of its own – and might not win over most of the opposition.” The article says that “the one-tunnel alternative has been floated for years but didn’t start to become a serious option until Westlands Water District, which serves farmers in a major swath of the San Joaquin Valley, rejected” Gov. Jerry Brown’s project in September. Meanwhile, “the Brown administration and its allies say they haven’t abandoned the twin-tunnels plan, which is designed to keep Delta fish from getting killed in the powerful pumps that ship water south while improving the reliability of those shipments.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Leave It Better Than You Found It Approach May Not Apply Much Longer For Sage Grouse Habitat.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (11/6, Richards) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “announced Tuesday that it was accepting public comment on revising or removing” the approach known as “net conservation gain,” from its mitigation policies. According to experts, “the immediate consequences of removing it are unclear.” The FWS is accepting public input until Jan. 5.

Texas Researchers Hope Grants Will Stop Spread Of Disease Threatening State’s Bats.

The San Antonio Express-News (11/7, Stuckey) reports that “about $600,000 in grants by the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation could help researchers stop” the spread of white-nose syndrome in Texas. That figure is “part of $1.36 million being handed out in the U.S. and Canada for six projects.”

Environmental Group Secures Land For Panthers, River Crossing.

The Fort Myers \(FL\) News-Press (11/6, Gillis) reports that “an environmental group secured the development rights to a key piece of land in the LaBelle area, a 460-acre tract that’s expected to move the Florida panther recovery forward by giving the cats easier access to lands to the north.” The Nature Conservancy “paid nearly $2 million to keep the land in an eternal state of farming and preservation, and these are lands panther managers and advocates hope will give the cats a secure location to cross the Caloosahatchee River.” Wendy Matthew, The Nature Conservancy’s project manager, said, “It is real critical to have a protected corridor and we’re hopeful that we can work with the landowners to the east and west to shore up this northern bank of the Caloosahatchee. And then they have a lot of ranch lands to the north that they can move into with lots of prey, lots of hogs and deer there.”

Third Federally Protected Gray Wolf Killed In Oregon.

The AP (11/6) reports that “another gray wolf has been found dead in Oregon, marking the third such death of a federally protected wolf in the past year, state and federal wildlife officials said.” The wolf, known to biologists as OR-25, was “found dead Oct. 29 in Klamath County on state forest land.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is “offering a $5,000 reward for information on the killing, authorities said Monday.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (11/6, Urness).

National Park Service

Park Releases Plan To Deal With Harmful Plants.

The Ventura County \(CA\) Star (11/6, Carlson) reports that the National Park Service “recently released an environmental assessment for a proposed Invasive Plant Management Plan in the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area.” The NPS “identified about two dozen plants to target in the Santa Monica Mountains, from Spanish broom shrubs to harding grass.” Public comments will be accepted until Dec. 1.

Yellowstone Closes Most Roads, Entrances For Winter.

The AP (11/6) reports that most roads in Yellowstone National Park “as well as the west, south and east entrances closed Monday for the winter to regular motor vehicle traffic.” On Dec. 15, the article says, “the park will be open to snowmobiles and snowcoaches, which are vehicles with treads that carry multiple passengers.”

Scotty’s Castle Flood Recovery Tours Being Offered.

KLAS-TV Las Vegas (11/6, Bleakley) reports that “after being closed for more than two years due to damage left by a massive flood, Scotty’s Castle will reopen for tours.” Now, the tours will “focus on the flood recovery efforts.” According to the article, “the ranger-led walking tours will give visitors a chance to see closed areas and see how the work is progressing and the National Park Service rebuilds and renovates the site.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas Review-Journal (11/6, Brean).

Portland’s Peacock Lane Earns National Historic District Status.

The Oregonian (11/6, Njus) reports that “Peacock Lane, the Southeast Portland street best known for its elaborate Christmas lights display, has been added to the National Register of Historic Places.”

Additional Coverage: National Park Service Refuses To Honor Black Panthers After Police Union Complains.

Additional coverage that the National Park Service has decided to not move forward with funding a project on the influence of the Black Panther Party was provided by Newsweek (11/6, Nazaryan).

US Geological Survey

Agencies Release Data Modeling Framework For Selenium In Kooconusa.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (11/6, Scott) reports that “leading researchers tracking the influx of mining contaminants in Lake Kooconusa have developed a modeling framework designed to guide water quality standards on the sprawling trans-boundary reservoir, which is increasingly threatened by Canadian coalmines.” Scientists with the U.S. Geological Survey “this week released a modeling framework for scientific collection and analysis of selenium data in Lake Kooconusa in Northwest Montana and British Columbia — essentially an ecologic flowchart showing how and at what levels the contaminant affects waters and fish species.” According to the article, “the modeling framework, funded by the state Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ), is designed to accommodate existing and future data to support a site-specific standard for selenium in the Lake Kooconusa reservoir.”

Opinion Pieces

Trump Attacks Teddy Roosevelt’s Grand Legacy.

A New York Times (11/6) editorial says that as he seeks to “expung[e] the legacy of Barack Obama,” President Trump “is on the verge of undermining the priceless conservation vision of Theodore Roosevelt as well.” Trump “is reported to have decided to greatly shrink two monuments covering millions of acres in Utah, weakening strict federal protections and reopening vast areas to possible commercial use.” The Times says the move “will result in a major legal counterattack by Native American tribal leaders and environmentalists that, in turn, will test the scope of the president's authority to abolish or significantly modify monument designations under the Antiquities Act of 1906," one of Roosevelt's "major conservation achievements."

What Happened To Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Since Joining Trump Cabinet?

In an op-ed for U.S. News & World Report (11/6, Rotherham), Andrew Rotherham, a cofounder and partner at Bellwether Education Partners, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's actions since taking office has disappointed conservationists who supported him during the confirmation process. According to Rotherham, "Zinke finds himself in political trouble that ranges from just plain odd to possibly illegal," "and, in the crucible, he hasn't turned out to be the defender of public lands many hoped for." In conclusion, Rotherham asks: "Is it Zinke the sportsman, who cares about clean air and water and preserving wild country, or Zinke the hunter and fisherman, skilled at the art of concealment and deception in the pursuit of game?"

Congress Should Pass A Narrow Bill To End Fire Borrowing.

In an editorial, the Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (11/6) urges Congress to pass a narrow bill to end fire borrowing. The paper acknowledges that the Resilient Federal Forests Act "does get at fire borrowing," but notes that "it also aims to speed up management practices such as thinning and salvage logging." As a result, the bill did not receive bipartisan support from Oregon lawmakers. The paper urges the Oregon delegation, Democrats and Republican, to "agree to work for legislation that at least just ends fire borrowing this session."

Additional Reading.

- Protecting Our Public Lands To Protect Our Economy. Sierra Star \(CA\) (11/6, Adest).
- Commentary: Higher Park Fees Create A Barrier To Recovery From War. Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/7, Bricker).
- Paving Over Yosemite And Other Great Ideas. San Francisco Chronicle (11/7, Garchik).

Top National News

Trump Urges Japan To Buy US Equipment To Shoot Missiles "Out Of The Sky."

Reuters (11/6, Holland, Lies) reports that President Trump, speaking after his meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, said that Japan "would shoot North Korean missiles 'out of the sky' if it bought the US weaponry needed for doing so." Trump "also pressed Japan to lower its trade deficit with the United States and buy more US military hardware." USA Today (11/6, Maresca) writes that "while Trump's comment might have been taken as part of his trademark bluster, the question of Japan's military role remains a crucial issue both in Japan and around the region, especially with provocations from North Korea and China's increasing assertiveness."

To the AP (11/6, Colvin, Lemire), the President "struck a hard line against North Korea's nuclear weapons program Monday and urged Japan to do the same," and the Washington Times (11/6, Boyer) quotes him as saying of the North's regime, "The regime continues development of its unlawful weapons programs, including its illegal nuclear tests and outrageous launches of ballistic missiles directly over Japanese territory. ... We will not stand for that." The New York Post (11/6, Moore) notes that Trump also reiterated that "the 'era of strategic patience' was over."

The CBS Evening News (11/6, story 8, 1:50, Brennan) reported Trump "reassured...Abe that the commitment to Japan is ironclad, and he defended his tough talk on North Korea." Trump was shown saying, "Some people said that my rhetoric is very strong, but look what's happened with very weak rhetoric over the last 25 years." CBS added that "the President and First Lady also met with the families of Japanese citizens kidnapped by North Korea. Mr. Trump seemed to extend an offer to dictator Kim Jong-un." Said Trump, "If he would send them back, that would be the start of something I think would be just something very special. If they would do that."

The New York Times (11/6, Landler, Davis) indicates that Trump, "drawing an explicit link between trade and security," said, "He will shoot them out of the sky when he completes the purchase of lots of additional military equipment from the United States. The prime minister of Japan is going to be purchasing massive amounts of military equipment, as he should. It's a lot of jobs for us and a lot of safety for Japan." Writing for The Diplomat (11/6) under the headline "Trump Wonders Why Japan Didn't Shoot Down North Korea's IRBM Launches," Ankit Panda says, "I'll keep it short and simple in this post: the reason Japan does not shoot down North Korean ballistic missiles like the Hwasong-12 is because it cannot shoot down these missiles. The two systems that Japan has procured since the late-1990s for ballistic missile defense...are Patriot batteries capable of intercepting short- and medium-range ballistic missiles at low altitudes."

The Los Angeles Times (11/6, Bennett) reports that Trump "pointedly teased Abe over the trade deficit between the two countries, and seemed to advocate a military buildup as a way to close the gap." Bloomberg News (11/6, Reynolds, Sink, Gordon) writes that "for all the apparent chumminess" between Trump and Abe, "it hasn't resulted in much concrete action to address Trump's main complaint: fixing what he sees as an unfair trade relationship with Japan. ... Throughout Trump's two-day visit, Abe publicly ducked any talk of major trade concessions even though Trump kept bringing it up."

The AP (11/6) reports the President has "has arrived in South Korea amid escalating tensions with North Korea." Trump and First Lady Melania Trump will "head to Seoul, where they'll participate in an arrival ceremony at the Blue House before Trump sits down for meetings with President Moon Jae-In." CNN (11/6, Berlinger) notes Jean Lee, "a global fellow at the Wilson Center and former Pyongyang bureau chief for The Associated Press," said yesterday, "It's crucial for Trump to show that he's willing to defend and protect South Korea because there's a lot of questions and concerns on the part of South Koreans about his commitment to that alliance, and that has fed fears here in South Korea that they may be abandoned." Along those lines, USA Today (11/6, Strother, World) interviews average South Koreans, who "cope with this anxiety through dark humor," and who "because of the recent uptick in rhetoric between North Korea's Kim Jong Un and...Trump...are talking more about war and they're getting worried."

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/6), "Part of what the President is doing on this historic trip is building on the successes thus far in his Administration. It's not like this is the first time he is interfacing with South Korea or with China for that matter. He has been developing these relationships over the course of really last year since he was elected and certainly since he took up job and residence here. So he is building on that. One of the five major goals of this trip for the President is denuclearizing North Korea. And that happens with China and South Korea's help. Also, he has trade very much on his mind. He wants to have a very pro-commitment to Asia, obviously, into the Pacific, but he is really building on his successes so far."

Abe Expresses Desire To Strengthen US-Japan Alliance. Through a translator, Prime Minister Abe said in an interview with Fox News Special Report (11/6), "The Japan and US alliance is the cornerstone for peace and stability here in the Asia-Pacific region. ... For that to have purpose in the last year after President Trump has won the election, I went to New York in November to meet with him and I was able to have good communication with him. Ever since then, for six times I have met with him, and this time as well I have enjoyed playing golf and as well as having had dinner with him. ... With President Trump's visit to Japan this time, I very much hope we will further solidify the US-Japan alliance. I hope to take time to discuss with President Trump on international challenges including North Korea."

On its front page, the Washington Post (11/6, Nakamura) says that Abe is "play[ing] the role of Trump's loyal sidekick," writing, "Since Trump took office, Abe has been his most consistent suitor, courting him with luxurious gifts...and constant attention." But as Abe "has lavished attention on Trump, their relationship has retained a subtext" in which Trump "insists on asserting his dominance in a passive-aggressive manner."

Veteran Democratic Lawmakers, Kerry Criticize Trump's Rhetoric On North Korea. The Hill (11/6, Mitchell) reports "a group of military veteran lawmakers is urging...Trump to back off from provocative statements and moves against North Korea following a Pentagon report on what a war with the isolated nation would entail." Said the lawmakers, "The President needs to stop making provocative statements that hinder diplomatic options and put American troops further at risk." The Washington Examiner (11/6, Quinn), meanwhile, reports that former Secretary of State John Kerry told CNN that "Trump has 'stepped over the line' with his rhetoric on North Korea, and is giving Pyongyang a reason to develop a nuclear weapon."

NBC Nightly News (11/6, story 5, 1:10, Holt) interviewed South Korean Foreign Minister Kang Kyung-Wha, who said of Trump, "I think every US administration wants to find the right phrasing for how it positions itself in the global scheme of things, and this is certainly Mr. Trump's phrase. But I don't think it's entirely new. I think it's just one way of underscoring America's interest in this. But it's not America alone, alone. It's America working with other countries."

White House Asks For Additional Funds To Counter North Korea. Politico (11/6, Ferris, O'Brien) reports "Trump has requested another $4 billion for the Pentagon to counter North Korean threats in a new budget amendment sent to Congress today." The White House "is asking for a total of an additional $5.9 billion, including $1.2 billion to support growing troop levels in Afghanistan." Politico, which has "obtained" the request, adds that it "includes another $700 million to repair damages to the Navy destroyers USS Fitzgerald and John McCain after the destroyers were involved in separate collisions in the Pacific that killed 17 sailors." USA Today (11/6, Korte, Jackson) and the Washington Times (11/6, Miller) also report the story.

Admiral: "Only Way" To Completely Destroy North Korean Nukes Is With Ground Invasion.

Breitbart (11/6, Kew) reports that "in response to a question from Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) about the escalating conflict," Admiral Michael Dumont wrote on behalf of the Pentagon Chiefs of Staff, "The only way to 'locate and destroy – with complete certainty – all components of North Korea's nuclear weapons programs' is through a ground invasion." Dumont "added that a ground invasion would increase the risk of a nuclear counter-attack as forces attempted to locate, and consequently disable, its 'deeply buried, underground facilities.'"

Trump Critics Pounce On Visit To Koi Fish. The Daily Caller (11/6, Phippen) reports "a number of journalists on Twitter lambasted...Trump for pouring an entire box of food into a pond of precious Japanese koi, some even suspecting that amount of food could damage the fish. ... Some even suggested that Trump's behavior at the koi pond could launch a 'diplomatic incident.'" The AP (11/6) says Trump's "visit to Japan briefly took a turn from formal to fishy," and adds that "as photos circulated, Trump's critics quickly seized on it as an example of his impatient style. But a closer look at the video of the moment shows that both leaders started gently spooning feed into the pond and then Abe lightly tossed the rest of his box in. After that, Trump more dramatically tipped his over."

NYTimes Analysis: Trump May Aid Xi's Aspirations In Raising China's Global Status. The New York Times (11/6, Perlez) writes that while Chinese leaders "have long sought to present themselves as equals to American presidents," Xi Jinping "has wanted something more: a special relationship that sets China apart, as the other great power in an emerging bipolar world." The Obama Administration "declined to play along, worried that it implied an American retreat from Asia." But Xi "may find a more willing partner in President Trump." Trump "has often cast China as an unfair trade rival," but he "has also spoken of China in almost reverential terms and elevated Beijing as a critical player to resolving the North Korean nuclear standoff. And there are signs of mutual admiration between the two leaders...both of whom see themselves as destined to restore their nations to greatness."

In his Wall Street Journal (11/6) column, meanwhile, Gerald F. Seib urges Trump to use his trip to Asia to pressure Russia and China to step up their involvement to diffuse the North Korean crisis.

Conway Mocks Expected Media Reaction To Trump-Putin Meeting. Conway was asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/6) what can be expected from the President's meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin. Conway said, "You can expect a lot of guessing and hand-wringing by the media, I am sure because, as you recall, in one of his last trips, he and President Putin sat down for three or four times the length that quote, was expected. I don't know who is expecting. They keep expecting things out of Trump out that are conventional and truly disappointed. I think they will continue the conversation. Obviously...Trump has said for a very long time that if there are big issues on which he can work with Russia, particularly keeping ISIS in full-on retreat if not defeat, then he will do that. But it's very important to discuss and engage each other. I'm very happy that that was able to be added to the agenda for this 13-day trip."

Trump Says Texas Shooting Caused By Mental Illness, Praises Person Who Fought Back.

Reuters (11/6) reports from Tokyo that President Trump said yesterday that "said the mass shooting in a Texas church that left at least 26 people dead was due to a 'mental health problem' and wasn't 'a guns situation.'" Said Trump, "We have a lot of mental health problems in our country, as do other countries. But this isn't a guns situation. ... Fortunately somebody else had a gun that was shooting in the opposite direction." USA Today (11/6, Jackson) notes Trump also described the shooter as "a 'deranged' man who should have received treatment."

The CBS Evening News (11/6, story 7, 2:10, Cordes) pointed out that "there is no evidence yet that the suspect was ever diagnosed with a mental health disorder, which may explain why he was able to obtain a Ruger AR-556 rifle within days of it being named the NRA's gun of the week. And while US levels of mental illness are comparable to those in other western countries, our rate of firearm homicides is six to 16 times greater."

The New York Times (11/6, Baker) similarly reports that "Trump's answer to the fifth-deadliest mass shooting in modern American history was much the same as his answer to the deadliest mass shooting in modern American history barely a month ago in Las Vegas." The Times adds that "for gun-rights supporters, the focus on mental health has become the standard response to shooting massacres, just as more gun control has been the standard response from the other side of the ideological divide." Under the headline "Yes, President Trump, It's A Guns Situation," the Washington Post (11/6) editorializes, "No doubt the angry young man who stormed the church in a ballistic vest was, as the president said, 'deranged,'" but "imagine what would have happened if he had been deranged – and armed with only a knife? What if, at least, he had had to stop and reload?"

The Hill (11/6, Fabian) indicates that "later at the news conference, Trump declared that 'it's a little bit soon' to discuss the issue of guns and suggested that more people would have been killed if another armed person had not opened fire on" the shooter. Said ABC World News Tonight (11/6, story 5, 2:30, Vega), "'Too soon.' He said the same thing in the wake of last month's Las Vegas massacre, despite his immediate call for changes in immigration policy in the wake of last week's truck rampage in New York City."

Along similar lines, USA Today (11/6, Godlasky) reports that "the FBI said Monday that it is not investigating the Sutherland Springs, Texas, church shooting as terrorism after more than two dozen were killed Sunday." Yet "the New York City truck attack that killed eight people just a few days earlier was called an act of terror almost immediately. Why the difference?" To USA Today, "it was yet another example of how "terrorism" is no longer simply a legal definition, but an increasingly politicized one." Trump, "for instance, proposed changes to immigrant vetting and visas within hours of the New York attack but hasn't suggested any government response to the Las Vegas shooting that killed 58."

Also in USA Today (11/6), Kurt Bardella, a political commentator who is a former spokesman for Breitbart News, accuses Trump of a "double standard" on the issue: "Why is it acceptable to start talking about changing policy in the immediate aftermath of an attack that killed eight people but it's considered 'premature,' as White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders put it, to have a policy conversation after an attack that killed 58 people? Why the double standard?"

As part of its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (11/6, lead story, 4:35, Gutman) reported that a local resident outside the church, Stephen Willeford, used his gun to hit Kelley as he got away, and "then got more help from another citizen, Johnnie Langendorf." The CBS Evening News (11/6, lead story, 3:20, Glor) showed Willeford saying, "I'm no hero. ... Every time I heard a shot, I knew that probably represented a life. I was scared to death." NBC Nightly News (11/6, story 4, 2:20, Jackson) reported that "Second Amendment advocates argue that is why the government shouldn't add more regulations, like on the kinds of semiautomatic weapons used in Aurora, Orlando, Las Vegas and Sandy Hook. Children died in them, too, 20 of them." NBC Nightly News (11/6, lead story, 3:35, Holt) had previously remarked on Texas "victims ranging in age from 18 months to 77 years," and noted "at least a dozen...were children."

Politico (11/6, Lima) reports that Kellyanne Conway on Monday "criticized Democrats for 'pointing fingers' and calling for increased gun control measures in response to the deadly Texas shooting over the weekend, saying the quick reaction is 'disrespectful to the dead.'" Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/6), "It's just like I said in Las Vegas over a month ago, you had families literally still looking for their loved ones through the rubble and remains in Las Vegas...and yet, people are taking to Twitter in the comfort of their very luxurious lives pointing fingers and as far as can I tell never really helped in between the tweet storms."

USA Today (11/6) writes in an editorial that "Americans may someday look back in shame at a time when their country was awash in guns, when every few weeks people were slaughtered en masse and when society repeatedly mourned its dead, even as it facilitated their murder with easy access to powerful weapons." Adds USA, "In one sense, Trump is absolutely right that 'this is a mental health problem at the highest level.' For the nation's top leaders to watch innocent people mowed down, and refuse to do anything to stop it, is indeed absolutely crazy." In an accompanying op-ed, Alan M. Gottlieb, founder of the Second Amendment Foundation and chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, writes in USA Today (11/6) that "Trump's suggestion that the tragedy in Texas is a mental health issue rather than a gun issue deserves more than an arrogant dismissal by gun control proponents. ... The president is right; this is a mental health issue that we have neglected and must address."

The Washington Post (11/6, Phillips, Bailey) reports that Carl Chinn, "who runs an extensive database on violence at places of worship," says "the shooting is likely the deadliest mass killing at a house of worship in modern US history." Chinn estimates "this shooting is the 14th mass murder (considered the killing of three or more people) at a house of worship in recent decades." Another Washington Post (11/6, Bailey) piece indicates "several prominent Southern Baptist pastors have...Trump's ear as members of his unofficial evangelical advisory council," but "it would be very surprising if Southern Baptists pushed for changes in gun policy, because it hasn't been a priority for the denomination in decades." The Post adds that "most conservative evangelicals don't believe specific gun policies are spelled out in the Bible," and "many of them don't believe gun-control measures are constitutional and can solve the problem of mass shootings, said Russell Moore, president of the Southern Baptist Convention's policy arm."

Texas AG, WSJournal Also Praise Armed People Outside Church. Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (11/6) that "people like this, who are willing to violate laws against murder and shooting people are unlikely to follow other gun laws. I don't have a problem with preventing people like this from attempting to get these. But, my guess is that he will find a way – this guy is evil. He will find a way around it." Paxton said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/6) that "what ultimately may have saved some lives is two people that were outside the church that actually had guns that may have slowed this guy down and actually pursued him. So, I would rather arm law-abiding citizen and make sure they can prevent this from happening as opposed to trying to pass laws that would prevent law-abiding citizen from having guns."

In an editorial, meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (11/6) praises Willeford, the local plumber who happened to be outside the church and used his rifle to engage the shooter.

Man Who Shot, Chased Gunman A Former NRA Instructor. The Washington Times (11/6, Richardson) reports that Willeford, "hailed as a hero," is "a former National Rifle Association instructor." The Los Angeles Times (11/6, Pearce) also notes Willeford is a former NRA instructor, and adds that "what happened next was a scenario nearly unheard of in mass shootings, but one often suggested by those in favor of a well-armed citizenry: An armed bystander got in a shootout with a mass killer and chased him out of town."

ABC News: Trump Rolled Back Rules Making It Harder For Mentally Ill To Buy Guns. ABC World News Tonight (11/6, story 5, 2:30, Vega) reported that "shortly after the President took office, he signed a measure, rolling back a regulation that made it harder for some people with mental illnesses to purchase guns." ABC added that "critics said the rule, which affected about 75,000 people, violated the Second Amendment."

Pence To Meet With Victims In Texas. The Washington Examiner (11/6, Morrongiello) reports "Vice President Mike Pence and second lady Karen Pence will travel to Texas on Wednesday to speak with victims of the mass shooting at First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs." Pence tweeted yesterday, "Karen and I will travel to Sutherland Springs on Wednesday to meet with families of the fallen, injured and law enforcement. We are with you Texas."

In his Wall Street Journal (11/6) column, William McGurn criticizes Democrats for ridiculing Republicans who offered "thoughts and prayers" to the Texas victims. To McGurn, the issue illustrates the disconnect between progressives and a large segment of the US population. In a column titled "The Blood Of Innocents Is On Our Hands," Eugene Robinson writes in the Washington Post (11/6), "'Thoughts and prayers' are fine. Locking arms 'through the tears and the sadness,' as...Trump prescribed, is all well and good. But none of this does a damn thing to stop, or even slow, the carnage."

Shooter Threatened Mother-In-Law Before Shooting, Broke Son's Skull In 2012. The San Antonio Express-News (11/6, Sabawi) reports that gunman Devin Kelley "had a 'domestic situation' going on with his wife's family," according to "Freeman Martin, the DPS commander in Region 6." Kelley "allegedly sent the woman's mother threatening text messages prior to the shooting." The woman, according to the Los Angeles Times (11/6, Jarvie, Pearce), "sometimes attended the First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs." The Washington Post (11/6, Moravec, Berman) further reports that "authorities...emphasized that the shooting did not appear to be fueled by racial or religious issues, as has been the case during other rampages at houses of worship." The New York Times (11/6, Montgomery, Delreal) quotes Martin as saying, "This was not racially motivated, it wasn't over religious beliefs, it was a domestic situation going on." Under the headline "Texas Church Shooter Was A Militant Atheist," however, the New York Post (11/6, Jaeger) reports "Kelley was a 'creepy' atheist 'outcast' who never fit in and berated religious believers on social media, according to former friends and classmates."

The Washington Times (11/6, Persons) and Daily Caller (11/6, Pickrell), among other news outlets, run similar reports this morning. Moreover, says USA Today (11/6, Bacon, Dearman, Network), "Kelley was court-martialed in 2012 for assaulting his spouse and their child, receiving a bad conduct discharge from the Air Force and 12 months of confinement." In fact, the New York Times (11/6, Philipps, Oppel) reports that Kelley was specifically "convicted of assaulting his wife and breaking his infant stepson's skull," and the CBS Evening News (11/6, story 2, 1:45, Martin) pointed out that "five other counts of domestic violence, including pointing a loaded gun at his wife, were withdrawn as part of his guilty plea." The Washington Post (11/6, Hawkins, Tate) also notes Kelley's past criminal actions, and the AP (11/6) that he "had been arrested for animal cruelty in Colorado in 2014."

The AP (11/6, Vertuno) notes that "based on evidence at the scene, investigators believe...Kelley died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound after he was chased by armed bystanders and crashed his car." The Houston Chronicle (11/6, Wallace) reports an autopsy "has confirmed" Kelley "suffered three gunshot wounds, including a self-inflicted blow to the head."

Air Force Mistake Allowed Kelley To Buy Guns. The Washington Times (11/6, Richardson) reports, "It turns out Holloman Air Force Base officials failed to enter...Kelley's 2012 court-martial and conviction on two counts of domestic assault into the federal database." The Air Force "announced Monday it had launched an investigation into its handling of criminal records in the aftermath of Sunday's mass shooting." The Washington Post (11/6, Horton) quotes Air Force spokeswoman Ann Stefanek as saying in a statement, "Initial information indicates that Kelley's domestic violence offense was not entered into the National Criminal Information Center database." The New York Times (11/6, Montgomery, Delreal) notes "the statement said Heather Wilson, the Air Force secretary, and Gen. David Goldfein, the Air Force chief of staff, had ordered the Air Force inspector general to 'conduct a complete review of the Kelley case.'" The Washington Examiner (11/6, Zupkus), among other news outlets, also reports the story.

The New York Times (11/6, Stolberg) reports that "in 1996, after a concerted push from Senator Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey, Congress made it illegal for anyone convicted of domestic abuse – even a misdemeanor – to buy a firearm." However, "in the two decades since, a large percentage of the perpetrators of mass shootings and other violent crimes have had run-ins with the law over spousal abuse – and have had little problem acquiring deadly arsenals." The Times adds that "Kelley's apparent breach of the background check system may show once again that the computerized program is only as good as the data that is put into it."

The San Antonio Express-News (11/6, Sabawi, Fechter) reports that Kelley "purchased two weapons from Academy Sports and Outdoors stores in San Antonio" in 2016 and 2017, and "in both cases were approved through the National Instant Criminal Background Check system, a store representative said in a statement. The store is cooperating with authorities in their investigation." These "legal purchases were made despite Kelley's bad conduct discharge from the Air Force in 2012, which followed a domestic violence conviction." He "went on to use one of those weapons to shoot and kill 26 people."

House Speaker Ryan said on Fox News' Ingraham Angle (11/6) that the Texas gunman "was not supposed to get a gun in the first place because we have laws on the books that prevent people like that from getting guns. That's what is frustrating about this is the laws are on the books but you have got to execute the law, you have got follow through the law, you have got to apply the law. ... The law is on the books to prevent a person like this from getting a gun and that didn't happen and we have got to get to the bottom of why that didn't happen. There are a lot of questions the Air Force has to answer."

Cornyn: Congress May Look Into Possible Gaps In Background Check System. Bloomberg News (11/6, Litvan, Dennis) reports that Senate Majority Whip Cornyn "said the massacre at a Texas church may prompt Congress to look into whether there are gaps in the firearms background-check system that allowed the gunman to get the weapon used to kill 26 men, women and children." Said Cornyn, "There's enough confusion here, but it looks like he shouldn't have been legally able to get and possess a firearm. ... I don't know if this is a failure of the current system to actually work or whether there are gaps in the way it's structured and the various parts aren't talking to each other."

Administration Has Prepared Executive Order To Weaken ACA's Individual Mandate.

The Washington Post (11/6, Eilperin) cites "people briefed on the matter" who say White House officials "have prepared an executive order that would weaken the Affordable Care Act's requirement that taxpayers demonstrate proof of insurance." These people suggest that President Trump will issue the order "if congressional Republicans cannot achieve the same goal through the tax reform process." Trump supports abolishing the individual mandate, but "cannot eliminate it unilaterally because it is enshrined in law." The draft order would expand the "hardship exemption" which was "established for those who face extraordinary circumstances, according to people familiar with the matter."

The Washington Examiner (11/6, Leonard) reports that Sen. Tom Cotton said the Administration has put the order on hold "to see whether repealing the penalties for going uninsured might be included in the Republican tax bill instead." While Cotton "had told the Washington Examiner that an executive order was sitting with the Office of Management and Budget waiting for approval...an official from the agency denied it." Cotton, however, "stood by the assertion that the executive order was ready, and said the administration might be being vague in its responses to maintain negotiating flexibility."

House Ways And Means Panel Takes Up GOP Tax Bill.

The Washington Times (11/6, Sherfinski) reports that the House Ways and Means Committee began debate Monday on the Republican tax reform legislation. Chairman Kevin Brady said, "Today, we stand on the doorstep of delivering the most sweeping tax overhaul in more than 30 years. ... Our committee has dedicated a substantial amount of time, energy, and work to the pursuit of one landmark goal – delivering comprehensive tax reform to the American people." Brady is hoping to pass the bill out his committee this week so a vote by the full House can occur before Thanksgiving. An AP (11/6, Gordon, Werner) story posted Monday night reports that following a day of "partisan bickering," the committee "approved late changes," which "restored the tax exemption for employees receiving child care benefits from their companies, but also put new requirements on a tax credit used by working people of modest means." The panel voted "24-16 along party lines to adopt" the amendment from Brady, capping "a rancorous marathon session in which Republicans and Democrats argued heatedly over the nearly $6 trillion plan."

The New York Times (11/6, Rappeport, Kaplan, Tankersley) says the "most significant changes" include "a provision that would aim to close the so-called carried interest loophole, which has been a source of ire among Democrats and some Republicans, who argue it is an unwarranted tax break for the wealthiest Americans." Earlier Monday, Brady told CNBC's Squawk Box (11/6) the intent was to "make sure it really is focused on those long-term, traditional real estate partnerships." Reuters (11/6, Becker) says the change "was one of many revisions that are expected as the House Ways and Means Committee amends the tax bill." Brady promised members "that they would have a chance to propose their own changes," telling the panel, "Let me assure you this is the beginning of the tax reform process."

The Washington Post (11/6, Debonis) reports that Brady's amendment did not make any "more costly changes to business taxation or repeal the Affordable Care Act's insurance mandate." While he did not "specifically rule out" repealing the mandate, he said that "we are not including various health-tax related measures as part of our tax reform efforts." The Post notes that the President "personally pushed Brady to include the mandate repeal."

Tax Policy Center Retracts Assessment Of Bill. The Washington Post (11/6, Long) reports that the Tax Policy Center retracted an assessment of the House GOP tax bill that had "showed that the bulk of the House GOP bill's benefits would go to the wealthy and that many working class households earning under $48,000 would see their tax bills rise in upcoming years." However, "someone familiar with the error who was not authorized to speak publicly said the revised report would likely come to a similar conclusion overall," just with different numbers on how many Americans are helped and hurt. TPC said there was "an error in the preliminary distributional analysis" that "involved the additional child tax credit component of the proposed legislation." Bloomberg News (11/6, Browning) and The Hill (11/6, Staff) also cover this story.

Analyses: Plan Benefits Some Millionaires, Hurts Others. The New York Times (11/6, Tankersley) reports that while Trump said last week, "The Democrats will say our tax bill is for the rich...but they know it's not," early analyses "do not support that claim." Several analyses found that "America's highest earners would, as a group, receive at least twice the tax cut that middle-class workers would get from the bill, as a percentage of their income." However, it "does not treat all top 1 percenters equally. An analysis using the economic modeling software TaxBrain suggests that a quarter of tax filers earning $1 million or more would see their taxes go up next year if the bill becomes law."

GOP Poll Finds Strong Support For Tax Plan. The Washington Examiner (11/6, Drucker) reports that a poll commissioned by the Republican group American Action Network, which is aligned with House Speaker Ryan, found that American voters support the GOP tax plan. Among the poll's key findings: "57 percent of likely voters said their taxes are too high; 84 percent favor reforming the federal tax code; and 81 percent said doing so should be an 'important priority,' if not the top priority."

Dana Milbank blasts the plan in his Washington Post (11/6) column, writing that "perhaps never before have corporations wielded their power as openly as they have" before the House Ways and Means Committee this week as "a trillion dollars of tax breaks for corporations are being passed by lawmakers who work for these very corporations." As "the corporate welfare is doled out," in the GOP tax bill, the legislation also "widens the gap between the rich and everybody else.”

Official: US Will Continue To Participate In Climate Discussions.

The AP (11/6) reports that Trigg Talley, the U.S. deputy special envoy for climate change, said in an address to delegates at the opening of the U.N. climate talks, that the US “will continue to participate in international climate change negotiations and meetings, including ongoing negotiations related to guidance for implementing the Paris agreement.” Talley added, “We look forward to working with colleagues and partners to advance the work here over these two weeks and beyond.” The AP notes that the two-week UN climate meeting that began Monday is the first key climate summit “since President Donald Trump said that the U.S. will pull out of the Paris accord unless his administration can secure a better deal.”

Fiji PM, Opening Climate Change Conference, Calls For Urgency. The AP (11/6, Moulson, Thiesing) reports that Fiji Prime Minister Voreqe Bainimarama “called for a sense of urgency in the fight against global warming Monday, telling negotiators ‘we must not fail our people,’ as he opened two weeks of talks on implementing the Paris accord on combating climate change.” Bainimarama, who is chairing the Bonn conference, “offered greetings ‘from one of the most climate-vulnerable regions on earth,’ underlining ‘our collective plea for the world to maintain the course we set in Paris.’” He added, “The need for urgency is obvious. Our world is in distress from the extreme weather events caused by climate change.”

G-7 Health Ministers Issue Statement Saying Climatic Factors Affect Health. The AP (11/6) reports that during the climate summit on Monday, health ministers from the G-7 nations “issued a joint statement that says climatic factors impact on human health.” The AP notes, “Italian Health Minister Beatrice Lorenzin told reporters on Monday that the ministers were able to work out wording acceptable to the United States during their ministerial meeting in Milan, while also recognizing the differences in opinion in light of the U.S. withdrawal from the Paris accords.”

UN Report Warns 2017 To Be Among Hottest Years On Record. Reuters (11/6, Doyle) reports that in a report issued by the UN’s World Meteorological Association on Monday, 2017 is set to be one of the three hottest years on record, with temperatures even with 2015 and slightly cooler than 2016. WMO head Petteri Talaas said of 2017, “We have witnessed extraordinary weather.” UN climate chief Patricia Espinosa “said ‘the very fabric of life on Earth is under threat’ from rising temperatures.” She added, “The message cannot get any clearer. We must act right here, right now.”

Despite Signing Paris Accord, World Far From Climate Goals.

The New York Times (11/6, Plumer, Popovich) reports, “Two years after countries signed a landmark climate agreement in Paris, the world remains far off course from preventing drastic global warming in the decades ahead.” So far, none of the major industrialized nations who signed the accord is “on track to fulfill its pledge” to curb greenhouse emissions by 2030. Furthermore, “even if governments do take further steps to meet their individual pledges, the world will still be on pace to warm well in excess of 2 degrees Celsius over preindustrial levels (3.6 degrees Fahrenheit), the threshold that world leaders vowed to avoid in Paris because they deemed it unacceptably risky.” UN Environment Program head Erik Solheim warned, “One year after the Paris Agreement entered into force, we still find ourselves in a situation where we are not doing nearly enough to save hundreds of millions of people from a miserable future.”

Scientists Who Worked On Latest US Report Warn Of Climate Change Risks.

In an op-ed in the New York Times (11/6, Horton, Hayhoe, Kopp, Doherty) climate scientists Radley Horton, Katharine Hayhoe, Robert Kopp, and Sarah Doherty, each of whom was involved in writing the US Global Change Research Program report issued Friday, argue that “this report confirms and strengthens what the vast majority of climate scientists have known for decades: that climate is changing and humans are primarily responsible.” They also point to the “growing reasons for concern” in the report, such as a faster rate of ocean acidification. However, they also point to “reason for optimism,” and conclude that ultimately, “all Americans need to understand the risks we face, and the impact our choices will have on our future.”

Environmental Group, Children Sue DOE, EPA Heads Over Efforts To Repeal Clean Power Plan.

Reuters (11/6, Flitter) reports that environmental group the Clean Air Council is supporting two children in their suit against President Trump, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, and Energy Secretary Rick Perry. The suit seeks to prevent the White House and federal agencies from repealing the Clean Power Plan. The plaintiffs, ages 7 and 11, are alleging that they are suffering the effects of global warming, and that no regulations should be allowed to be repealed that would “increase the frequency and/or intensity of life-threatening effects of climate change.” The Hill (11/6, Henry) also covers the story.

Trump Ceding Political, Economic Power To China Through Climate Actions.

Vice (11/7, Dembicki) reports President Trump is willingly surrendering political and economic power to China with his actions on climate change. Trump has appointed climate deniers in senior government positions, tried to prop up the coal industry despite the surge in renewable jobs, and left the Paris Climate accords. Meanwhile, China has plans to invest $361 billion in renewable energy sources by 2020, an effort its National Energy Administration says will create over 13 million jobs. China also spent $32 billion in 2016 outside its own borders to invest in clean energy, according to the Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Trump Attacks Teddy Roosevelt’s Grand Legacy.” A New York Times (11/6) editorial says that as he seeks to “expung[e] the legacy of Barack Obama,” President Trump “is on the verge of undermining the priceless conservation vision of Theodore Roosevelt as well.” Trump “is reported to have decided to greatly shrink two monuments covering millions of acres in Utah, weakening strict federal protections and reopening vast areas to possible commercial use.” The Times says the move “will result in a major legal counterattack by Native American tribal leaders and environmentalists that, in turn, will test the scope of the president’s authority to abolish or significantly modify monument designations under the Antiquities Act of 1906,” one of Roosevelt’s “major conservation achievements.”

“Ballot Proposals, Mayor, And New Jersey Governor: How To Vote.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/6) reiterates its endorsements of Phil Murphy in the New Jersey governor’s race and of New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio in his bid for reelection.

“Mass Shootings Don’t Have To Be Inevitable.” The New York Times (11/6, Board) editorializes, “In the aftermath of the Texas horror, politicians led by President Trump are trying to steer away from the obvious issue of what to do about the gun industry’s wanton sale of military-style rifles and pistols on the domestic market.” The Times accuses “the National Rifle Association, which warmly endorsed candidate Trump,” of driving “the diversionary talking point that we must first control for mental illness.” The Times concludes in saying that the current “level of pro-gun argument being offered by Republican leaders and some Democrats” is “made in service to the N.R.A. and the gun industry, not the American public.”

Washington Post.

“Yes, President Trump, It’s A Guns Situation.” The Washington Post (11/6) editorializes, “No doubt the angry young man who stormed the church in a ballistic vest was, as the president said, ‘deranged,’” but “imagine what would have happened if he had been deranged – and armed with only a knife? What if, at least, he had had to stop and reload?”

“Saudi Arabia’s Crown Prince Is Getting Reckless.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/6) writes that Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman’s “Western supporters imagine that Prince Salman is concentrating power so as to lead his deeply conservative, oil-producing country on a forced march to modernity.” However, his “resort to heavy-handed tactics and ill-judged adventures could easily undermine hopes for progressive reform and destabilize the kingdom.”

“So, What Would Trump Pay?” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/6) questions how the GOP tax plan “would personally benefit President Trump,” adding that determining that “would be easy for anyone following the tax-cut debate – if, that is, the public had access to the president’s tax returns.” However, since Trump “has broken with decades of bipartisan tradition and refuses to release his tax forms,” Americans “can only guess about the nature and size of his personal stake in the GOP tax plan.” The Post adds that while the House Ways and Means Committee has begun “several days of formal discussion on the GOP tax-cut plan,” that debate “should not have even started without some basic clarity about the president’s conflicts of interest.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Sorry State Of New Jersey.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/6) says that during his eight years as governor, Chris Christie had a little success in making good on vows to take on public unions and improve New Jersey’s economy. However, says the Journal New Jersey is again moving toward policies on taxes and spending that have long hurt the state’s economy and are likely to accelerate under Murphy, who’s expected to win Tuesday’s election.

“A Plumber With A Rifle.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/6) praises Stephen Willeford, a local plumber who happened to be outside the First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs, Texas, and used his rifle to engage the shooter.

“Bad Marks For A Good Military.” A Wall Street Journal (11/6) editorial criticizes a military judge’s recommendation that Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl be dishonorably discharged, demoted, and forfeit $10,000 in pay, saying that after members of unit were killed in the search for him, the sentence is demoralizing soldiers who do their duty. The Journal also says a Navy report which found that collisions of the USS Fitzgerald and USS John S. McCain with civilian vessels were “avoidable,” indicates insufficient training by the Navy.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Broadcom Bid Marks Upheaval In Chip Industry

Texas Gunman Had A Violent Past

Disney Approached 21st Century Fox To Buy Entertainment Assets

Amazon’s Roy Price Left Alleged Trail Of Sexual Harassment

New York Times:

Air Force Error Allowed Texas Gunman To Buy Weapons

One Minute They Were A Family Praying In Church. The Next, Eight Of Them Were Dead.

From Utah, Secretive Help For A Russian Oligarch And His Jet

After A Tax Crackdown, Apple Found A New Shelter For Its Profits

The ‘Click’ Moment: How The Weinstein Scandal Unleashed A Tsunami

Wooing Trump, Xi Jinping Seeks Great Power Status For China

Washington Post:

Texas Shooter Was In Domestic Dispute

Trump Likes To Remind Sidekick Abe Who’s The Alpha Male

For Hollywood’s Image Defenders, Harassment Furor Shreds The Script

Okla. Democrats Do Something Unusual: Win

United In Faith, Families Now Joined By Tragedy

US To End Protected Status For Nicaraguans

Financial Times:

Hostilities Loom As Qualcomm Set To Snub Broadcom’s \$130bn

‘Paradise Papers’ Spark Political Backlash Over Offshore Finance

Oil Climbs Above \$64 A Barrel After Saudi Crackdown

Washington Times:

FBI Originally Deemed Clinton ‘Grossly Negligent’ In Handling Of Secret Emails

Air Force Launches Review After Failing To Enter Texas Shooter’s Criminal History In FBI Database

Ivanka Trump Highlights Working Families In Sales Pitch For Republican Tax Plan

DHS To Cancel Special Immigration Status For 5,000 Nicaraguans, Delays On 86,000 Hondurans

Shrewd FARC Leader Seeks Colombian Presidency, Turns Rebel Group Into Influential Political Power

On Eve Of Virginia Elections, Gillespie And Trump Are Worlds Apart

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Texas Church Shooting; Texas Church Shooting-Eyewitnesses; Texas Church Shooting-Video; Texas Church Shooting-Gunman; Texas Church Shooting-Trump; Severe Weather; Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted; California-Escapees Manhunt; Florida-University Hazing; Burning Car Rescue; Texas Church Shooting-Recap.

CBS: Texas Church Shooting; Texas Church Shooting-Gunman Background; Texas Church Shooting-Gunman; Texas Church Shooting-Victims; Texas Church Shooting-Neighbor; Texas Church Shooting-Town; Texas Church Shooting-Congress; Trump-Asia Tour; Saudi Arabia Princes Jailed-Trump; Russia Meddling Investigation; Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted; Florida-University Hazing; Texas Church Shooting-Recap.

NBC: Texas Church Shooting; Texas Church Shooting-Eyewitnesses; Texas Church Shooting-Gunman; Texas Church Shooting-Trump; South Korea Foreign Minister Interview; Russia Meddling Investigation; Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted; Florida-University Hazing; New York City Marathon Winner; Texas Church Shooting-Recap.

Network TV At A Glance:

Texas Church Shooting – 39 minutes, 50 seconds
Sen. Rand Paul Assaulted – 3 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Texas Church Shooting; Colorado Walmart Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour; Florida-University Hazing; Wall Street News.

CBS: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour; Severe Weather; Wall Street News.

FOX: Texas Church Shooting; Trump-Asia Tour; Tax Reform Plan.

NPR: Texas Church Shooting; Tax Reform Plan; Trump-Asia Tour; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Has lunch with troops from the United States and the Republic of Korea; receives an operational briefing; participates in a bilateral meeting with President Moon Jae-In of the Republic of Korea; participates in a friendship walk with President Moon; participates in a joint press conference with President Moon; attends a state dinner.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a phone call with President Ashraf Ghani of Afghanistan; participates in a series of meetings with lawmakers.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Senate Governmental Affairs Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Ernest DuBester, Colleen Kiko, and James Abbott to be Federal Labor Relations Authority members Location: Rm 342, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

10:00 AM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on the Internet of Things in rural America – Communications, Technology, Innovation, and the Internet Subcommittee hearing on 'Advancing the Internet of Things in Rural America', with testimony from University of Mississippi Medical Center Telehealth Center Executive Director Michael Adcock; Cartasite founder and CEO David Armitage; Lindsay Corporation President and CEO Timothy Hassinger; and Zebra Technologies Chief Administrative Officer Michael Terzich Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

10:00 AM Executive Session, to consider 'S. 1591, the Banking Restrictions Involving North Korea (BRINK) Act of 2017' Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Armed Services Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Robert Behler to be Director of Operational Test and Evaluation; Dr Dean Winslow to be Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs; Thomas Modly to be Under Secretary of the Navy; and James Geurts to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Research, Development, and Acquisition Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm G50, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Helsinki Commission briefing on the Roma – 'The Situation of Roma: MEP Soraya Post Discusses Europe's Largest Ethnic Minority' Helsinki Commission briefing, with Member of the European Parliament for Sweden Soraya Post – one of only two Roma in the EU's legislative body – in conversation Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

10:00 AM GOP Sen. Joni Ernst discusses visit to Naval Station Norfolk – Republican Sen. Joni Ernst discusses her visit to Naval Station Norfolk via pen-and-pad and media conference call * Sen. Ernst's visits was to observe operations and discuss her provision in the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) to require the Secretary of the Navy to provide quarterly updates on the progress of the Navy's Physiological Episode Team and their efforts to combat physiological episodes in jets Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 111, Washington, DC www.ernst.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/senjoniernst>

2:30 PM Fed Chair Yellen presented with Paul H. Douglas Award for Ethics in Government – Democratic Sen. Dick Durbin and University of Illinois President Timothy Killeen host presentation of the Paul H. Douglas Award for Ethics in Government to outgoing Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen and former Fed Chair Ben Bernanke * President Donald Trump last week announced his choice of Jerome Powell as Yellen's replacement when her term ends next year Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm G50, Washington, DC illinois.edu https://twitter.com/Illinois_Alma

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Foreign Relations Committee top secret briefing on North Korea's cyber capabilities – Closed / Top Secret / Sensitive Compartmented Information briefing on 'North Korea's Cyber Capabilities and U.S. Policy Response', given by Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Cyber and International Communications and Information Policy Robert Strayer; and a CIA representative Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-217, Washington, DC
<http://foreign.senate.gov/>

US House: 9:30 AM Congressional Black Caucus 'Blue Collar STEM – The Future of the U.S. Workforce' staff briefing – Congressional Black Caucus 'Blue Collar STEM – The Future of the U.S. Workforce' staff briefing, presented by the co-chairs of the CBC Technology and Infrastructure Development Task Force and Education and Labor Task Force – Democratic Reps. Eddie Bernice Johnson, Val Butler Demings, Danny Davis, Frederica Wilson, and Bonnie Watson Coleman. Presenters are Morgan State University Vice President Dr Victor McCrary, The Learning Partnership President Dr Steve McGee, and Code.org Chief Academic Officer Pat Yongpradit Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, Congressional Meeting Room North, Washington, DC
<https://cbc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/OfficialCBC>

10:00 AM Helsinki Commission briefing on the Roma – 'The Situation of Roma: MEP Soraya Post Discusses Europe's Largest Ethnic Minority' Helsinki Commission briefing, with Member of the European Parliament for Sweden Soraya Post – one of only two Roma in the EU's legislative body – in conversation Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC
<http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

10:00 AM House Judiciary Committee hearing on anti-Semitism on college campuses – Hearing on 'Examining Anti-Semitism on College Campuses', with testimony from American Jewish Committee Director of International Jewish Affairs Rabbi Andrew Baker; American University Association for Jewish Studies President Dr Pamela Nadell; Simon Wiesenthal Center Associate Dean Rabbi Abraham Cooper; Wake Forest University Jewish Studies Program Director Dr Barry Trachtenberg; Kirkland & Ellis partner Paul Clement; Christians United for Israel Action Fund Chairwoman Sandra Hagee Parker; Anti-Defamation League CEO and National Director Jonathan Greenblatt; PEN America Executive Director Suzanne Nossel; and Justus & Karin Rosenberg Foundation Executive Director Ken Stern Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2141, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM San Juan mayor testifies to House Natural Resources Committee oversight hearing on Puerto Rico recovery – Oversight hearing on 'Examining Challenges in Puerto Rico's Recovery and the Role of the Financial Oversight and Management Board', with testimony from San Juan, Puerto Rico, Mayor Carmen Yulin Cruz Soto; Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico Executive Director Natalie Jaresko, and Revitalization Coordinator Noel Zamot; Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority Executive Director Ricardo Ramos; and Guaynabo, Puerto Rico, Mayor Angel Perez Otero Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1324, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Small Business subcommittee hearing on the SBIC Program – Agriculture, Energy, and Trade Subcommittee hearing on 'Investing in Small Businesses: The SBIC Program', with testimony from Small Business Investor Alliance President Brett Palmer; Aavin Private Equity partner Thies Kolln; Plexus Capital Managing Partner Michael Painter; and Ruxton Ventures Managing Director Mark Walsh Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2360, Washington, DC <http://smallbusiness.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SmallBizGOP>

10:00 AM House Energy subcommittee legislative hearing – Energy Subcommittee legislative hearing on a discussion draft of 'Energy Star Reform Act of 2017' and 'H.R. 3477, the Ceiling Fan Energy Conservation Harmonization Act', with testimony from Alliance to Save Energy President Kateri Callahan; Air-Conditioning, Heating and Refrigeration Institute Chairman Christopher Drew; Consumer Technology Association Vice President for Technology Policy Douglas Johnson; Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers President and CEO Joseph McGuire; and

Cree Vice President for Marketing and Public Affairs Greg Merritt Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Financial Services subcommittee latest hearing on housing finance reform – Housing and Insurance Subcommittee hearing on ‘Sustainable Housing Finance, Part III’, with testimony from AEI Senior Fellow and Fellow in Financial Policy Studies Peter Wallison; Moody’s Analytics Chief Economist Dr Mark Zandi; Cardiff Consulting Services’ Dr Michael Lea; Urban Institute Housing Finance Policy Center Co-director Alanna McCargo; and Milken Institute Center for Financial Markets Senior Fellow Ted Tozer Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on the DHS Science and Technology Directorate – Emergency Preparedness, Response, and Communications Subcommittee hearing on ‘How Effective is the Science and Technology Directorate?: Stakeholder Perspectives’, with testimony from City of New York Fire Department Weapons of Mass Destruction Branch Coordinator Timothy Rice; Texas A&M University College of Veterinary Medicine & Biomedical Sciences Associate Dean for Global One Health Dr Gerald Parker Jr.; Security Industry Association Director of Government Relations Jake Parker Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC <http://homeland.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

10:00 AM House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on the Middle East and North Africa – Middle East and North Africa Subcommittee hearing on ‘Democracy and Governance in the Middle East and North Africa’, with testimony from International Republican Institute Vice President for Programs Scott Mastic; National Democratic Institute Senior Associate and Regional Director for Middle East and North Africa Programs Leslie Campbell; International Foundation for Electoral Systems Regional Director for Middle East and North Africa Zeinab Abdelkarim; and Freedom House Vice President for International Programs and Vice President for Emergency Assistance Programs and Multilateral Initiatives Dr Robert Herman Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM Bipartisan lawmakers discuss legislation to modernize the sugar program – Bipartisan Reps. Virginia Foxx, Diane Black, Bob Goodlatte, Jeb Hensarling, Steve Chabot, Phil Roe, Bill Shuster, Susan Brooks, Charlie Dent, Earl Blumenauer, Danny Davis, and Jackie Speier and industry supporters discuss ‘upcoming legislation that will finish the reforms of the last Farm Bill by modernizing the gov’t’s last supply-management system – the sugar program’ via press conference Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC <https://foxx.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/virginiafoxx>

12:00 PM House debates Save Local Business Act – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including ‘H.R. 3441 – Save Local Business Act’, and consideration of ‘H.R. 3911 – Risk-Based Credit Examination Act’, ‘H.R. 2148 – Clarifying Commercial Real Estate Loans’, as amended, ‘H.R. 918 – Veteran Urgent Access to Mental Healthcare Act’, as amended, ‘H.R. 1133 – Veterans Transplant Coverage Act of 2017’, as amended, ‘H.R. 1900 – National Veterans Memorial and Museum Act’, ‘H.R. 2601 – VICTOR Act of 2017’, as amended, ‘H.R. 3634 – SERVE Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 3705 – Veterans Fair Debt Notice Act of 2017’, as amended, ‘H.R. 3949 – VALOR Act’, as amended, ‘H.R. 4173 – Veterans Crisis Line Study Act of 2017’, as amended, and ‘H.R. 2123 – VETS Act of 2017’ under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

2:00 PM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on sovereign immunity and the IP system – Courts, Intellectual Property and the Internet Subcommittee hearing on ‘Sovereign Immunity and the Intellectual Property System’, with testimony from Loyola Law School Professor Karl Manheim; Goodwin Procter partner and Co-Chair of Appellate Litigation William Jay; Johnson-IP Strategy & Policy Consulting Principal Philip Johnson; and Software and Information Industry Association Vice President for Intellectual Property and General Counsel Christopher Mohr Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2141, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

2:00 PM House Foreign Affairs subcommittees joint hearing on Russia – Terrorism, Nonproliferation, and Trade Subcommittee and Europe, Eurasia, and Emerging Threats Subcommittee joint hearing on ‘Russia: Counterterrorism Partner or Fanning the Flames?’, with testimony from RAND Corporation Political Scientist Dr Colin Clarke; American Foreign Policy Council Central Asia-Caucasus Institute Director Dr Svante Cornell; Harvard Kennedy School

Russia Matters Project Director Simon Saradzhyan; and Atlantic Council Dinu Patriciu Eurasia Center Nonresident Senior Fellow / University of Pennsylvania Biden Center for Diplomacy and Global Engagement Senior Director Dr Michael Carpenter Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

2:00 PM House Financial Services subcommittee hearing on Fed reform – Monetary Policy and Trade Subcommittee hearing on ‘Examining Federal Reserve Reform Proposals’, with testimony from Center on Budget and Policy Priorities Senior Fellow Dr Jered Bernstein; Berenberg Capital Markets Managing Director and Chief Economist Dr Mickey Levy; Hoover Institution Visiting Fellow Dr Charles Plosser; and Dartmouth College Professor of Economics Dr Andrew Levin Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC
<http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

2:00 PM House Natural Resources subcommittee legislative hearing – Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee legislative hearing on a discussion draft of ‘H.R. XXXX, To distribute revenues from oil and gas leasing on the Outer Continental Shelf to certain coastal States, to require sale of approved and scheduled offshore oil and gas leases, to establish offshore wind lease sale requirements, and to empower States to manage the development and production of oil and gas on available Federal land, and for other purposes’, with testimony from Argonne National Laboratory Environmental Specialist Ray Brady; North Dakota Industrial Commission Department of Mineral Resources Director Lynn Helms; Consumer Energy Alliance President David Holt; and Tulane Energy Institute A. B. Freeman School of Business Associate Director Eric Smith Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1324, Washington, DC
<http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 2201 – Micro Offering Safe Harbor Act’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H.R. 2874 – 21st Century Flood Reform Act’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

5:00 PM House Natural Resources Committee markup hearing begins – Markup hearing begins on ‘H.R. 995, 21st Century Respect Act’, ‘H.R. 1532, Poarch Band of Creek Indians Land Reaffirmation Act’, ‘H.R. 1800, To direct the Secretary of Agriculture to transfer certain Federal land to facilitate scientific research supporting Federal space and defense programs’, ‘H.R. 2504, To ensure fair treatment in licensing requirements for the export of certain echinoderms’, ‘H.R. 2907, Planning for American Energy Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 3469, To designate the bridge located in Blount County, Tennessee, on the Foothills Parkway (commonly known as ‘Bridge 2’) as the ‘Dean Stone Bridge’, ‘H.R. 3905, Minnesota’s Economic Rights in the Superior National Forest Act’, ‘H.R. 4239, Strengthening the Economy with Critical Untapped Resources to Expand American Energy Act’ (‘SECURE American Energy Act’), and ‘S. 140, To amend the White Mountain Apache Tribe Water Rights Quantification Act of 2010 to clarify the use of amounts in the WMAT Settlement Fund’ * Concludes tomorrow Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1324, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

Other: 8:00 AM CyberSat Summit – CyberSat Summit, dedicated to assessing the ever-evolving threat of cyberattacks in the satellite and aerospace landscape. Speakers include Republican Rep. Brian Babin, Homeland Security Advanced Research Projects Agency Cyber Security Division Program Manager Robert Hickey, Gen. John Raymond, and FBI Cyber Division Senior Intelligence Analyst Kristen Lane Location: Tysons Corner Marriott, 8028 Leesburg Pike, Tysons, VA Tysons’s Corner <http://www.cybersatsummit.com>

8:00 AM FDA Commissioner Gottlieb and Dem Sen. Jeanne Shaheen speak at The Hill event on ‘America’s Opioid Epidemic’ – The Hill hosts ‘America’s Opioid Epidemic: Strategies for Prevention’, to highlight ‘solutions to America’s urgent drug overdose crisis’ with policymakers, public health officials, medical experts and patient advocates, with The Hill Editor-In-Chief Bob Cusack and healthcare reporter Rachel Roubain leading discussions on steps that can be taken at both a local and national levels. Headline conversations feature Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Dr Scott Gottlieb and Democratic Sen. Jeanne Shaheen. Other speakers include The Johns Hopkins Center for Opioid Research and Education Director Marty Makary, National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors Executive Director Rob Morrison, Addiction Policy Forum President and CEO Jessica Hulsey Nickel, and Chronic Pain Research Alliance co-founder and Director Christin Veasley Location: 1777 F St NW, Washington, DC <https://twitter.com/TheHillEvents> #Strategies4Prevention

10:30 AM UK lawmaker speaks on Brexit at The Heritage Foundation – ‘Brexit and the Opportunities for a Deeper Anglo-American Alliance' Heritage Foundation discussion, with Member of the European Parliament for the UK Daniel Hannan Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org #Brexit

11:00 AM Dedication of 150 maple trees gifted to the U.S. by Canadian PM Trudeau – Dedication of 150 maple trees gifted to the people of the U.S. by Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau during his March 2016 official visit to the U.S., in honor of Canada's 150th anniversary. Canada Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. David MacNaughton and National Park Service National Capital Regional Director Bob Vogel attend Location: West Potomac Park, intersection of Ohio Dr SW and W Basin Dr SW, Washington, DC www.nps.gov <https://twitter.com/NatlParkService>

11:00 AM Iraqi VP Al-Nujaifi speaks at USIP on the country's future – Iraqi Vice President Osama Al-Nujaifi speaks at the U.S. Institute of Peace on the future of Iraq's democracy post Islamic State group, and the federalist system adopted after the fall of Saddam Hussein Location: U.S. Institute of Peace, 2301 Constitution Ave NW, Washington, DC www.usip.org #NujaifiUSIP

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: [Referring to President Trump's Visit to Asia] "This is a 12-day trip, the longest Asia trip by a President since George H.W. Bush back in 1991. Basically, the Republicans are trying to get this tax plan passed, and they're like, 'You know what, Mr. President? Go to Asia, eat steak, try not to start a war.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Donald Trump is on a 13-day trip through Asia. Fox and Friends has one less viewer."

Stephen Colbert: "No one has summed up the mood of the country better than a cyclist who went viral last week for giving the President's motorcade the finger. Long may she wave. Her name is Juli Briskman, and she just got fired for flipping off Trump's motorcade. But if you can't give people the finger in traffic, then what's the point of driving? That's how we say 'hello' in New York."

James Corden: "President Donald Trump arrived in Japan over the weekend to kick off a 13-day trip through Asia. Following the President's trip, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson will then kick off his own 13-day trip to apologize for everything Donald Trump has done."

Trevor Noah: "Yesterday was the New York City Marathon, and if you are an American, finally some good news. Congratulations to Shalane Flanagan, who just became the first American woman in 40 years to win the New York City Marathon. Congratulations. And I understand why people were loving this moment, an American woman ran a race in November and won. Wow. Yeah. Doesn't that feel good?"

Trevor Noah: [Referring to President Trump's visit to Asia] "Poor Japan, man. Once again they have to deal with an out-of-control monster with tiny hands."

Seth Meyers: "A Twitter customer support employee briefly shut down President Trump's profile on Friday on his last day at the company. Sadly, that employee has since died of high-fives."

Seth Meyers: "Trump's trip got off to a rough start on Friday when he flew to Hawaii, which is of course the state where former President Obama was born. And Trump's motorcade was greeted by protesters lining the streets reminding him of his past as a birther with signs like this one that read, 'Aloha POTUS, welcome to Kenya.'"

Conan O'Brien: "This morning, a woman was fired from her job because she was photographed flipping off President Trump. Yeah. True story. When asked for comment, Melania Trump said, 'I didn't like being first lady anyway. So it worked out.'"

radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, November 14, 2017
Date: Tuesday, November 14, 2017 6:22:51 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: After Trump Shrinks Bears Ears, It Will Still Be Larger Than Zion And Bryce Combined, Says Interior Secretary.
- Huffington Post: Interior Decorator: Zinke's Push To Redesign Flags And Accessorize With Dead Animals.
- Federal News Radio (DC): With 17 Existing Working Capital Funds, Some CIOs Excited About Added Flexibilities Of MGT Act.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribal Loan Program Needs More Oversight, Watchdog Says.
- Feds Fine Indiana County Over Native American Gravesite Dig.
- Coastal Village Moving To Higher Ground To Escape Tsunami, Flooding Threat.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Former Chemawa Staff Say Concerns Were Met With Retaliation, Bullying.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: BLM Hosts Sage Grouse Meetings In Utah Tues, Wed, Thurs.
- U.S. News & World Report: Land Policies To Be Tested In Bundy Standoff Trial In Vegas.
- Durango (CO) Herald: Montezuma County, BLM May Team Up For Sand Canyon Solution.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Fort Lewis College Professor Uses Robots To Go Where No Man Has Gone Before.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Agency May Decline To Enact Whistleblower Protections Aftkjer Deepwater Horizon Tragedy.
- Some Gulf Of Mexico Operations Shut In After Fire.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Natural Gas Intelligence: Senate Panel To Mark Up ANWR Proposal This Week.
- Duluth (MN) News Tribune: Bill Would Block Wisconsin Law Enforcement From Prosecuting Illegal Wolf Killings.
- San Antonio Express-News: Cattle Raisers Bring Tick Problem To Trump Administration.
- Wyoming Public Radio: Groups Battle Over Threatened Jumping Mouse Status.
- Bemidji (MN) Pioneer: Great Lakes Piping Plovers Had Record Year.

National Park Service

- NBC News: How Climate Change Is Wiping Out This National Park.
- U.S. News & World Report: Federal Court Rules In Favor Of National Park Service.
- Houston Chronicle: Proposal Would Protect Clam, Worm Harvest Around Acadia.
- U.S. News & World Report: Body Recovered At Grand Canyon; May Be Missing Utah Man.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Radio New Zealand: Child Nutrition Crisis In Marshall Islands Sparks Intervention Plan.
- Pacific News Center: Governor Says Our Veterans "Represent The Very Best Of America, Our Micronesian Region And Our Island."
- Hawaii Public Radio: Complicated U.S. Relations Leave Veterans Without Full Health Benefits.
- KUAM-TV Dededo (GUM): Underwood: FSM Did Well With Compact Of Free Association.
- Reuters: Taiwan President Visits U.S. Territory Of Guam Despite Chinese Ire.
- Vatican Radio: Pope Addresses Pacific Islands Forum Leaders.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): FEMA Approves VI Government's Application For Community Disaster Loan; DSNAP Sees 7,400 Applicants In Three Days.
- WBIR-TV Knoxville (TN): No Electricity, Homes In Ruins: A Reporter Goes Home And Finds Misery, Hope And Resilience In The U.S.
- Xinhua News Agency (CHN): Chinese-made Aircraft Delivered To Pacific Island Nation.
- KUAM-TV Dededo (GUM): Naturalization Ceremony Welcomes New Americans.

Office Of Surface Mining

- A Year After Trump's Election, Coal's Future Remains Bleak.

Opinion Pieces

- Trump's Proposed Fee Hike Will Create Class System At National Parks.
- Let The People Play!
- DOI Is 'Streamlining' Regulations, Straight Past Local Input.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Los Angeles Times: Sessions Considering Special Counsel To Investigate Clinton.
- The Atlantic: WikiLeaks, Trump Jr. Were In Contact During Campaign.

- Associated Press: Trump Touts Accomplishments Of "Fruitful" Trip To Asia.
- Roll Call: Trump Urges Lawmakers To Cut Top Tax Rate, Eliminate Individual Mandate In Tax Bill.
- NBC: Senate Republicans Call On Moore To Exit Senate Race.
- CBS: North Korea Says US Carriers Raise Threat Of Nuclear War.
- CBS: Protesters Disrupt White House Coal Presentation At UN Climate Talks.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Mitch McConnell Believes The Women. Good For Him."
 - "President Trump's Thing For Thugs."
- Washington Post.
 - "Mitch McConnell Believes The Women. Kellyanne Conway Doesn't."
 - "A New Deal With Russia Sounds Too Good To Be True. It Probably Is."
 - "Trump's Comments Create A Lose-Lose Position For Justice."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Great Progressive Tax Escape."
 - "Oh, No, A Pharma Exec."
 - "The Menu Label Cops Win."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

After Trump Shrinks Bears Ears, It Will Still Be Larger Than Zion And Bryce Combined, Says Interior Secretary.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/13, Burr) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "says he believes President Donald Trump will trim Utah's Bears Ears National Monument as he recommended but it will still be larger than Zion and Bryce national parks combined." Doing so "could mean a dramatic reduction from the current 1.35 million acres to somewhere north of 180,000 acres," since "Zion covers 147,000 acres and Bryce nearly 36,000 acres." State officials "had asked Trump to cut Bears Ears down to 120,000 acres." Zinke "noted that he believes Trump will follow his recommendations, which in the case of Bears Ears and Grand Staircase, would return hundreds of thousands of acres back to land managed by the Bureau of Land Management or the Forest Service and open access for oil and gas exploration and other uses that are blocked by the monument status."

Interior Decorator: Zinke's Push To Redesign Flags And Accessorize With Dead Animals.

The Huffington Post (11/13, D'Angelo) reports that "a week after taking over the Department of the Interior, Ryan Zinke inquired about redesigning the agency's flag, according to internal emails HuffPost has obtained." The emails also "shine more light on Zinke's revival of an obscure military flag-flying tradition." According to the article, "the flag inquiries by the former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL were part of a broader revamping at Interior that included outfitting his office with a slew of taxidermied creatures and a bronze bust of his hero Teddy Roosevelt."

With 17 Existing Working Capital Funds, Some CIOs Excited About Added Flexibilities Of MGT Act.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (11/13, Miller) reports that the Modernizing Government Technology (MGT) Act changes the "flexibility and specific requirements for using the money in the working capital fund." The article notes that "according to the White House budget request for fiscal 2017, 17 agencies currently have working capital funds," including the Interior Department. While the Interior Department "funds its CIO's office through a working capital fund and its no-year funding, the CIO is limited to how they can use the money." Sylvia Burns, Interior's CIO, said at the Partnership for Public Service event before the MGT Act passed, "the bill would give her office the ability to target funds to the most pressing areas." She said, "I think the potential change to the working capital fund that we have now, which we have to have much more conversations about, it could offer that capability of taking savings in IT, parking the money in a modernization fund, then we could have some sort of process, potentially similar to the process that OMB outlined in that legislation, about having a board with the proposals coming in and selections, monitoring and putting the resources to make it successful. That's potentially how we could do stuff in the future, but again, much more to talk about inside the department."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribal Loan Program Needs More Oversight, Watchdog Says.

Law360 (11/13, Crosby) reports that "a federal program meant to help tribes and individual Native Americans secure otherwise impossible-to-get financing has approved risky, oversized loans without first requiring proof that the money would benefit Native American communities, actions that unnecessarily put taxpayers on the hook, a federal watchdog said in a scathing report released Monday." The report by the Interior Department's Office for Inspector General "said that federal authorities inconsistently applied federal law governing the loan program."

Feds Fine Indiana County Over Native American Gravesite Dig.

The AP (11/13) reports that the Interior Department is "fining a central Indiana county for violating a federal law aimed at protecting Native American gravesites." According to the article, "the fine of about $6,500 against the Hamilton County Parks Department concerns work by archaeologists from Indiana University-Purdue University Fort Wayne at Strawtown Koteewi Park near Noblesville." The Indianapolis Star (11/13, Sikich) reports that "more than 90,000 artifacts associated with human remains and 200 human bone and teeth samples" were uncovered between 2001 and 2011.

Coastal Village Moving To Higher Ground To Escape Tsunami, Flooding Threat.

Northwest Public Radio (11/13, Banse) reports that the Quileute Tribe has started "logging and road building to relocate its coastal village out of the tsunami and flood zone, starting with the Quileute Tribal School." Project manager Susan Devine "said the tribe's priorities are to get children out of harm's way first by moving the school, then the elders by relocating the senior center, and then government offices and housing." Devine "said only the relocation of the tribal school is financed, thanks mostly to money from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs that the Quileutes secured through a highly-competitive grant application."

Bureau Of Indian Education

Former Chemawa Staff Say Concerns Were Met With Retaliation, Bullying.

Continuing its series on problems at the Chemawa Indian School, Oregon Public Broadcasting (11/13, Schick, Manning) reports that 20 staff members since 2010 have "said they experienced retaliation or hostility from campus leadership." According to the article, "any dysfunction at Chemawa is, in part, the product of dysfunction within the Bureau of Indian Education, an agency with a history of documented problems involving oversight of academics, facilities and finances at its 183 schools across the country." The article says that "with a rotating cast at the top and a firewall between teachers and the federal bureaucracy, disgruntled staff members have directed most of their criticism toward several veteran administrators: academic principal Amanda Ward, business manager Rachenda Reynosa and Ryan Cox, the assistant principal for federal programs."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Hosts Sage Grouse Meetings In Utah Tues, Wed, Thurs.

The AP (11/13) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is "hosting three public meetings in Utah this week to gather input on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's plans to reassess sage grouse management policies adopted under the Obama administration." The meetings are "scheduled Tuesday in Vernal, Wednesday in Cedar City and Thursday in Snowville.”

Land Policies To Be Tested In Bundy Standoff Trial In Vegas.

The AP (11/14, Ritter) reports that the trial is set to start Tuesday of “cattlemen Cliven Bundy, two of his sons and a co-defendant accused of leading a 2014 armed standoff against government agents.” The trial, which is “expected to be contentious,” “sets up as a test of public land policies in Western U.S. states such as Nevada, where the federal government controls about 85 percent of the land and juries have twice balked at full convictions of men who had guns during the tense April 2014 confrontation.”

Montezuma County, BLM May Team Up For Sand Canyon Solution.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/13, Mimiaga) reports that “a combined effort by Canyons of the Ancients Monument and Montezuma County could boost parking at the Sand Canyon trailhead from the current 20 spots to up to 60.” The monument and the Bureau of Land Management have “proposed a new parking lot and trailhead a quarter-mile east of the current one on County Road G.” However, “because of limited space pinched by cultural resources such as ancient ruins, the lot has enough room for only nine passenger vehicles and three oversize vehicles.” To make it bigger, “the county proposes using its wide right of way along County Road G to accommodate up to 30 more passenger cars, with space designed for oversize vehicles.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Fort Lewis College Professor Uses Robots To Go Where No Man Has Gone Before.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/13, Rupani) reports that Ryan Smith, professor of physics and engineering at Fort Lewis College, is “the winner of the 2017-18 Fort Lewis College Featured Scholar award for his work to monitor water quality across the region.” The Bureau of Reclamation “recently contacted Smith to gain insight on sending robots into abandoned mine corridors to create 3-D reconstructions.” According to the article, “Smith’s students are studying which types of robots could explore mines, what sensors they would need, and what the risk/reward ratio is.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Agency May Decline To Enact Whistleblower Protections Aftkjer Deepwater Horizon Tragedy.

The Houston Chronicle (11/13, Blum) reports a federal agency may decide Tuesday “to withdraw its recommendations to extend whistleblower protections for offshore oil workers made in the aftermath of the 2010 Deepwater Horizon tragedy in the Gulf of Mexico.” The US Interior Department’s offshore bureau “is refusing to enact the protections, arguing that they’re not a priority and possibly outside of the bureau’s authority.” The recommending agency, the US Chemical Safety and Hazard Investigation Board, “is considering canceling some of the 2016 proposals entirely.” BSEE Offshore Regulatory Program Chief Douglas Morris “told the CSB that it should instead work with industry groups like the American Petroleum Institute and the International Association of Drilling Contractors to develop voluntary worker participation and whistleblower guidelines for companies.”

Some Gulf Of Mexico Operations Shut In After Fire.

UPI (11/13, Graeber) reports that Hess Corp. said that Gulf of Mexico operations have been shut down following a recent platform fire. Meanwhile, there is “no immediate indication of a restart.” The company is working with Shell on “the Enchilada platform on the Garden Banks reservoir in the Gulf of Mexico,” which suffered a fire last week that injured two people. Shell said that although “the structure is visibly sound, crews will continue to determine the integrity of the platform and formulate a plan for damage repair.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Senate Panel To Mark Up ANWR Proposal This Week.

Natural Gas Intelligence (11/13, Passut) reports that “a Senate panel plans to meet this week to mark up a proposal to open a portion of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) to oil and gas development, which may require the Department of Interior (DOI) to hold at least two lease sales for the region over the next decade.” The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee has “scheduled a meeting Wednesday to consider reconciliation legislation attached to a $4 trillion federal budget bill for fiscal year 2018, which the Senate passed along mostly partisan lines on Oct. 19.” The measure “includes language to open 2,000 acres of the 1.5-million acre coastal plain portion of ANWR, a region also known as the 1002 Area, to energy development. ANWR covers 19 million acres in total.”

The Hill (11/13, Henry) reports while supporters say the plan is necessary to raise revenue, opponents say the region is too environmentally sensitive to risk drilling. E&E Publishing (11/13, Lunney) reports that opponents to drilling activities in the ANWR are hoping “to convince their colleagues over the next few weeks that energy development there threatens America’s entire wildlife refuge system, primarily for the sake of alleviating Alaska’s fiscal crisis.” During a press conference, top Democrat in the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and opponent to ANWR drilling Sen. Maria Cantwell (WA) asked what other wildlife refuge the country would be mandated for drilling. Cantwell also said that she thinks her “colleagues are understanding how that budget deficit [in Alaska] is part of the motivation.”

Also reporting are Al Jazeera English (11/13, Kestler-D’Amours) and the Arctic \(AK\) Sounder (11/10, Martinson).

Bill Would Block Wisconsin Law Enforcement From Prosecuting Illegal Wolf Killings.

The Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (11/13, Kremer) reports that “a group of Republican lawmakers from northern Wisconsin are pushing a bill that would block game wardens and police from investigating illegal wolf killings in the state.” According to the article, “in an email calling for co-sponsors for the measure, the authors said it’s an attempt to put pressure on Congress to pass pending federal legislation that would remove the gray wolf from the endangered species list.”

Cattle Raisers Bring Tick Problem To Trump Administration.

The San Antonio Express-News (11/13, Brezosky) reports that “Texas lawmakers appealed on behalf of the state’s ranchers to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for help containing” the cattle fever tick “in a Nov. 1 letter that sought assistance from the Trump administration, saying the Obama administration had not taken adequate steps against the spread of infestation.” They claim that environmental protections for wildlife at the Laguna Atascosa National Wildlife Refuge are also safeguarding the pest.

Groups Battle Over Threatened Jumping Mouse Status.

Wyoming Public Radio (11/13, McKim) reports that two conservation groups have filed a petition with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to continue protections of the Preble’s Meadow Jumping Mouse under the Endangered Species Act.” The petition by the Center for Biological Diversity and Rocky Mountain Wild “comes in response to another petition from a property rights group called the Pacific Legal Foundation, which “sought to delist the species in March, arguing the mouse isn’t truly threatened and that the critter’s protections have had significant negative economic impacts on property owners.”

Great Lakes Piping Plovers Had Record Year.

The Bemidji \(MN\) Pioneer (11/13, Myers) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said on Monday “that a modern record 76 breeding pairs” of piping plovers were “counted on Great Lakes beaches this summer.” The article also notes that “it was the first summer that piping plovers nested on all five Great Lakes since 1955, a benchmark the Fish and Wildlife Service called ‘a remarkable development for the recovery program.’”

National Park Service

How Climate Change Is Wiping Out This National Park.

For NBC News (11/12) reporter Anne Thompson visited “the Grinnell Glacier in Montana’s Glacier National Park, where our warming climate is on full display as one of nature’s masterpieces is disappearing before our eyes.”

Federal Court Rules In Favor Of National Park Service.

The AP (11/13) reports that “the U.S. Court of Appeals decided that the National Park Service does not need to substantively assess the elk hunt every year to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act.” The court held “last week that a decade-old plan, a 2007 environmental impact statement, was adequate.” The Jackson Hole \(WY\) News & Guide (11/13, Koshmrl) reports that appeals court concluded: “An agency is not required to make a new assessment under NEPA every time it takes a step that implements a previously studied action. The 2007 EIS was clearly sufficient to cover elk hunting during the ensuing fifteen years under the 2007 plan, absent a material change causing unforeseen environmental consequences.”

Proposal Would Protect Clam, Worm Harvest Around Acadia.

The AP (11/12) reports that Maine’s congressional delegation “says legislation is necessary to ensure clam and worm harvesters are allowed to keep plying their trade near Acadia National Park.” Sens. Angus King and Susan Collins are introducing the bill. They say “say clam and worm harvesters have raised concerns that they wouldn’t be able to continue their work due to enforcement from the National Park Service.” Reps. Bruce Poliquin and Chellie Pingree, have introduced a companion bill in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Body Recovered At Grand Canyon; May Be Missing Utah Man.

The AP (11/13) reports that “authorities say they’ve recovered a body within the Grand Canyon National Park and it’s believed to be that of a Utah man missing since late last month.” NPS officials “announced Monday that a man’s body was recovered below the South Rim between Pipe Creek and Mather Point.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Child Nutrition Crisis In Marshall Islands Sparks Intervention Plan.

Radio New Zealand (11/9, Johnson) reports that the President Hilda Heine and the Marshall Islands government has launched “a major effort to improve early childhood nutrition and health status.” The article notes that “a recently conducted national survey of young children in the Marshall Islands confirmed that poor nutrition has caused growth stunting in 35 percent of those surveyed, said officials in Majuro.” Heine said, “We need to focus on our people by providing earlier intervention. The first 1,000 days of a child’s life are critical and can impact their entire lives, both their physical and cognitive development.”

Governor Says Our Veterans “Represent The Very Best Of America, Our Micronesian Region And Our Island.”

The Pacific News Center (11/10, Ridgell) reports that in a special address in honor of Veteran’s Day, Governor Eddie Calvo “spoke about the importance of Veteran’s Day to remember the sacrifice made for the country by so many brave men and women.” Calvo said that veterans “represent the very best of America, our Micronesian region and our island.” He said, “From World War II to battles in Iraq, our people understand the price of war. We are intimately familiar with the price that had to be paid for the peace we have enjoyed for decades. You give us hope. You are freedom’s heroes, the defenders of justice, and promoters of peace.”

Complicated U.S. Relations Leave Veterans Without Full Health Benefits.

In a story on Hawaii Public Radio (11/9, Hiraishi) reporter Ku’uwehi Hiraishi “shares the story” of veterans from the Republic of the Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of Palau. The article notes that “serving in the U.S. military does not automatically qualify veterans for full health benefits.” Emi Chutaro, Executive Director of the Pacific Islands Health Officers Association or PIHOA, explained, “The three U.S. territories – Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas Islands because they’re U.S. territories, they are fully eligible for VA services cause they are U.S. citizens. It’s a different situation to the veterans that are coming from the freely associated states because they aren’t U.S. citizens.”

Underwood: FSM Did Well With Compact Of Free Association.

KUAM-TV Dededo, GUM (11/9, Licanto) reports that “thirty years after the signing of the Compact of Free Association,” Former congressman and current University of Guam president Dr. Robert

Underwood believes “the Federated States of Micronesia did well in its landmark deal with the United States.” Underwood “says he believes the US will strike a new deal with the FSM before the Compact expires in a few years” because “China is already making overtures, and building relationships with the federated states that the US cannot ignore.”

Taiwan President Visits U.S. Territory Of Guam Despite Chinese Ire.

Reuters (11/3, Maratita) reports that “Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen arrived on the U.S. Pacific island of Guam on Friday on her way back from visiting diplomatic allies in the Pacific – a trip that caused strong objections from China, which claims Taiwan as its own.” Beijing had “urged the United States not to allow Tsai to transit its territory on her trip, which included two days in Hawaii before she headed on to Tuvalu, the Solomon Islands and the Marshall Islands.”

Pope Addresses Pacific Islands Forum Leaders.

Vatican Radio (11/11) reports that “Pope Francis on Saturday shared the concerns of island, coastal and fishing communities, and called for global cooperation, solidarity and strategies to address issues such as the deterioration of the environment and the health of oceans.” According to the article, “meeting some 46 members of the Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat in the Vatican, the Pope shared the concerns of those exposed to frequent extreme environmental and climate events, and the impact of rising sea levels and the continuous deterioration of the barrier reef.”

FEMA Approves VI Government’s Application For Community Disaster Loan; DSNAP Sees 7,400 Applicants In Three Days.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (11/9, Gilbert) reports that “the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has approved the territory’s request for a community disaster loan, which makes available $500 million to the government over the course three fiscal years.” The money is “part of a $36.5 billion disaster relief measure Congress approved last month.”

No Electricity, Homes In Ruins: A Reporter Goes Home And Finds Misery, Hope And Resilience In The U.S.

Virgin Islands. WBIR-TV Knoxville, TN (11/9, Schouten) reports on the damage that Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Maria wrought on the U.S. Virgin Islands. Electricity “has not been restored to most the islands’ 105,000 residents,” while “telephone and Internet service remain spotty.” Meanwhile, “thousands of islanders, some seizing on free “mercy” flights and cruises in the storms’ immediate aftermath, have left — perhaps never to return.”

Chinese-made Aircraft Delivered To Pacific Island Nation.

Xinhua News Agency \(CHN\) (11/10) reports that “a Chinese-made Y-12E aircraft was delivered to the Federated States of Micronesia, an island nation on the Western Pacific, on Friday.”

Naturalization Ceremony Welcomes New Americans.

KUAM-TV Dededo, GUM (11/9, Paco) reports that 41 new citizens were “naturalized as U.S. citizens on Guam soil” on Thursday “during a special Veterans Day naturalization ceremony at the District Court of Guam.” They came from “Canada, El Salvador, the Federated States of Micronesia, Mexico, Palau, the People’s Republic of China, Peru, the Republic of the Philippines, South Korea, the United Kingdom, and the Vietnam.”

Office Of Surface Mining

A Year After Trump’s Election, Coal’s Future Remains Bleak.

A Reuters (11/13, Gardner) review of mining data shows the coal industry “has seen only modest gains in jobs and production this year – much of it from a temporary uptick in foreign demand for U.S. coal rather than presidential policy changes.” US utilities “are shutting coal-fired power plants at a rapid pace and shifting to cheap natural gas, along with wind and solar power. And domestic demand makes up about 90 percent of the market for U.S. coal.” The situation “highlights the limitations of presidential policy on major industries and global economic trends. As some energy experts have said all along, the forces that will make or break mining are well beyond the powers of the Oval Office.”

Opinion Pieces

Trump's Proposed Fee Hike Will Create Class System At National Parks.

In an op-ed for The Hill (11/13, Peterman), Audrey Peterman, a member of the Next 100 Coalition, criticizes the proposal to raise entrance fees at popular national parks. She warns that by hiking fees, the Trump Administration will "make it harder for modest-income families to visit these parks at 'peak season,' meaning around summer, when people have vacation time to visit, as well as comfortable weather." Peterman claims that "tiered entrance fees could create a class system in our national parks" and "could actively discourage the less affluent from visiting at all." She emphasizes that "the most vital reason of all is that the future of the park system completely depends upon the support of the American electorate, which is increasingly racially diverse." Peterman argues that "as more nonwhite representatives are elected to Congress, the chance of them voting to fund national parks when faced with pressing needs such as health care and education becomes increasingly slim."

Let The People Play!

The Park Service Plan To Ban Sports From The Mall Is All Wrong. In a piece for the Washington Post (11/13, Dvorak), Petula Dvorak opposes a proposal by the National Park Service to ban "all sports from the grounds surrounding the Washington Monument." Dvorak dismisses the reasoning by officials that crowds are keeping "the grounds from looking luxurious and rich." According to Dvorak, "if the Mall displays the achievements and grandeur of the American Dream, nothing embodies that more than watching everyday Americans play among the monuments and white marble."

DOI Is 'Streamlining' Regulations, Straight Past Local Input.

In an editorial, the Durango \(CO\) Herald (11/13) raises concerns after the Interior Department released a report last month titled "Review of the Department of the Interior Actions that Potentially Burden Domestic Energy." The paper says "that's a fair topic to review, especially if corresponding reviews exist of actions that potentially burden other uses on public lands that are managed for multiple use." However, it argues "that is not the agenda of the Trump administration, which wants to streamline – read: slash – regulations on gas and oil development." The editorial claims that "this administration is short-sighted in its singularly-focused effort to pay for tax cuts on the backs of our public lands, while ignoring local public input about all desired uses."

Additional Reading.

- We Just Discovered These Places (National Parks;) Now You Want To Take Them From Us?' Huffington Post (11/13, Peterman).
- Community Voices: National Parks On Public Lands Facing Relentless Attacks In Washington. Bakersfield \(CA\) Californian (11/13, León, González, Arce).
- Readers Agree, Proposed Fee Hike For Parks Is Stinky. Kitsap \(WA\) Sun (11/12, Blair).
- Tax Cuts For The Rich Are Threatening America's Sacred Places. Sky Valley \(WA\) Chronicle (11/13, Demientieff).
- First The Red River, Now The Rio Grande – The Battle For Private Land. McAllen \(TX\) Monitor (11/13, Sanchez).
- Editorial: Study Of Surface Mining, Health Issues Should Resume. Huntington \(WV\) Herald-Dispatch (11/14).
- Reject Seismic Testing Off S.C. Coast2. Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (11/14).
- Opinion: Lease Sales Critical To Energy Dominance. Houma \(LA\) Courier (11/13, Weinstein).

Top National News

Sessions Considering Special Counsel To Investigate Clinton.

The news late Monday that Attorney General Sessions is considering the appointment of a special counsel to investigate allegations surrounding Hillary Clinton garners heavy media coverage. The tone of much of the coverage is negative, highlighting President Trump's calls for Sessions to investigate Clinton and the Democrats and questioning whether Trump is using the Justice Department to investigate his political rivals or distract attention from special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 election.

The Los Angeles Times (11/13, Tanfani) reports that in a letter to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Robert Goodlatte, Assistant Attorney General Stephen Boyd said that senior prosecutors are examining whether a special counsel should investigate "the Clinton Foundation, Clinton's use of a private email server while secretary of State, former FBI Director James B. Comey's decision not to prosecute Clinton, and a 2010 decision by the Obama administration regarding sales of uranium to a Russian company." Boyd wrote that prosecutors will "evaluate certain issues" surrounding the foundation and recommend possible investigative steps – "including the appointment of a special counsel." The Washington Times (11/13, Dinan) reports that Sessions said the review will help him and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein determine "whether any matters merit the appointment of a special counsel."

Axios (11/13, Swan) quotes a "senior administration official" as saying, "This Justice Department under this Attorney General is not going to play the James Comey game and confirm, or even deny, the existence of criminal investigations – but this letter makes it clear that Sessions is taking the Uranium One issue very seriously."

The Washington Post (11/13, Zapotosky) reports that the consideration comes in response to an inquiry from Goodlatte, "who in July and again in September called for Sessions to appoint a second special counsel to investigate concerns he had related to the 2016 election and its aftermath." The Hill (11/13, Beavers, Solomon) reports that Goodlatte "had particularly taken aim at Comey after revelations surfaced earlier this year that he had drafted a statement ending the agency's investigation into Clinton's email server before over a dozen key witnesses, including herself, had been interviewed about the issue." The New York Post (11/13, Li) also reports on the story, citing the Washington Post report.

The Washington Examiner (11/13, Correll) says that President Trump "has criticized Sessions for not looking into the allegations against Clinton, and publicly told reporters earlier this month the Justice Department 'should be looking at the Democrats.'" However, the AP (11/13) says that the appointment of a new special counsel, "particularly in response to calls from members of Congress or from President Donald Trump, is likely to lead to Democratic complaints about an undue political influence on the department's decision-making."

Similarly, the New York Times (11/13, Schmidt, Haberman) says Sessions' decision "raises questions about whether Mr. Trump is trying to use the Justice Department to investigate his political rivals and distract from the special counsel's investigation into his presidential campaign." Reuters (11/13) likewise reports that Democrats have "accused Republicans of launching a spurious investigation of Clinton, the 2016 Democratic presidential candidate, to divert attention from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into alleged links between President Donald Trump's presidential campaign and Russia."

Politico (11/13, Gerstein) says the letter "was sent one day before Sessions is scheduled to make his first-ever appearance before the House Judiciary Committee." The move "could assuage not only the concerns of Republican lawmakers, but also those of President Donald Trump, who has repeatedly taken to Twitter with urgent calls for the Justice Department to delve into the alleged illegality." Business Insider (11/13, Sheth) says Trump "has repeatedly called Sessions a 'weak' attorney general and pushed him to investigate Clinton and the Democrats as the FBI investigates Trump and his campaign for possible collusion with Moscow during the 2016 election."

Word that Sessions is considering a special counsel comes as Reps. Jim Jordan and Matt Gaetz on Monday "delivered an ultimatum" telling Sessions to "either to name a special counsel to investigate FBI Director James Comey's handling of last year's election, or else resign to clear the way for someone who will," the Washington Times (11/13, Dinan) reports. The lawmakers said that there are mounting questions over "the way Mr. Comey conducted the investigation of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's secret emails and the FBI's treatment of an anti-Trump dossier." In a piece for FoxNews.com, they wrote, "It's time for Jeff Sessions to name a Special Counsel and get answers for the American people. If not, he should step down."

Browder Says Fusion GPS Assisted Kremlin Efforts To Have Him Killed. The Daily Caller (11/13, Ross) reports that London-based banker Bill Browder, who "spearheaded the Magnitsky Act," was "the target of a Fusion GPS opposition research investigation" and is accusing the firm "of assisting the Kremlin in its effort to have him 'imprisoned and killed.'" Browder's allegation comes "in response to the recent revelation that Fusion GPS and its founder Glenn Simpson compiled what he says is false information about him that was given to Yuri Chaika, Russia's prosecutor general, and to Donald Trump Jr. during the infamous June 2016 Trump Tower meeting." Browder said, "If it is true that Glenn Simpson was supplying information about me to the Russian government, it's far more serious than smear campaigning or Foreign Agents

Registration Act violations. ... It would mean that Simpson was assisting the Putin regime in their plot to get me back to Russia to have me imprisoned and killed."

Lawmakers Interested In Fusion GPS' Funders. The Washington Times (11/13, Boylan) reports that when Fusion co-founder Glenn Simpson is interviewed by the House Intelligence Committee on Tuesday, "the firm's tangled web of funders is likely to be a main topic of interest." Committee investigators have "pushed for an explanation of who supported the hiring of ex-British intelligence officer Christopher Steele to compile" the so-called Trump dossier.

House Panel To Grill Sessions Over Papadopoulos' Claims. USA Today (11/13, Johnson, Kelly) reports that after Attorney General Sessions told a Senate panel last month "that he had no knowledge of Trump campaign contacts with Russia," Democratic and Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee "are preparing a strong challenge to Sessions' assertions at a hearing Tuesday, based largely on the guilty plea of George Papadopoulos," who "admitted to the FBI he attended a national security meeting in March 2016 with then-candidate Donald Trump, Sessions and other advisers." Tuesday's hearing "represents yet another crucial test for an attorney general seeking to bolster his standing with three separate and important constituencies: Congress, President Trump, and special counsel Robert Mueller." McClatchy (11/13, Irby) says Democratic leaders are "unlikely" to call for Sessions' resignation as doing so "could give Trump the opportunity to appoint a new attorney general who is not recused, and therefore could impede the investigation."

WikiLeaks, Trump Jr. Were In Contact During Campaign.

The Atlantic (11/13, Ioffe) reports on "a long – and largely one-sided – correspondence between Wikileaks and Donald Trump Jr. that began in Sept. 2016 and "continued until at least July 2017." The Atlantic says the messages show Wikileaks "actively soliciting Trump Jr.'s cooperation. Wikileaks made a series of increasingly bold requests." While Trump Jr. largely "ignored the frequent messages from Wikileaks, he at times appears to have acted on its requests." On the day he "received the first message from Wikileaks, he emailed other senior officials with the Trump campaign, including Steve Bannon, Kellyanne Conway, Brad Parscale, and Trump son-in-law Jared Kushner, telling them Wikileaks had made contact" and "forwarded the email to campaign communications staffer Hope Hicks. At no point during the 10-month correspondence does Trump, Jr. rebuff Wikileaks."

David Muir reported on the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (11/13, lead story, 3:10) that ABC News has confirmed The Atlantic story which found that Trump Jr.'s communications with Wikileaks "began during the campaign and continued well after his father was in the White House." Mary Bruce described the messages between Trump Jr. and Wikileaks as "shocking," as "the President's son communicat[ed] with Wikileaks, a group the intelligence community believes was used by Russia to spread information about Hillary Clinton and influence the election."

The Wall Street Journal (11/13, Ballhaus) says this is the first evidence of any direct contact between senior Trump campaign officials and Wikileaks, and on NBC Nightly News (11/13, story 3, 2:15, Holt), Kristen Welker described "stunning new revelations of months of correspondence during the campaign between" Trump Jr. and Wikileaks. This, as the Trump Administration "has consistently denied any coordination with Wikileaks." Vice President Pence: "I think all of us have, you know, have had concerns about Wikileaks over the years. And it's just a, it's just a reality of America, life today, and of life in the wider world." Jeff Pegues reported on the CBS Evening News (11/13, story 3, 1:55, Mason) that during the campaign, then-candidate Trump "frequently praised the controversial website Wikileaks for releasing hacked emails and damaging information about Hillary Clinton and her campaign." Pegues added, "A lawyer for Trump Jr. did not respond to a request for comment, but in a statement to the Atlantic, he said, 'We have no concerns about these documents.'"

The Daily Caller (11/13, Rodgers) reports that in the wake of The Atlantic report, Trump Jr. "released all of his messages with Wikileaks Monday night." Politico (11/13, Griffiths) reports that Trump Jr. posted his chain of messages with Wikileaks in a series of tweets (1, 2, 3) Monday, writing, "Here is the entire chain of messages with @wikileaks (with my whopping 3 responses) which one of the congressional committees has chosen to selectively leak. How ironic!" USA Today (11/13, Cummings) also reports on Trump Jr.'s contacts with Wikileaks citing The Atlantic report.

Pence Denies Knowledge Of Trump Jr.'s Contacts With Wikileaks. Politico (11/13, Nussbaum) reports that Vice President Pence's office said in a statement Monday that Pence was not aware of communications between Trump Jr. and Wikileaks during the campaign. Pence's press secretary,

Alyssa Farah, said in a statement, "The Vice President was never aware of anyone associated with the campaign being in contact with Wikileaks. ... He first learned of this news from a published report earlier tonight." In October 2016, Pence was asked if the Trump campaign was "in cahoots" with WikiLeaks, to which he replied, "Nothing could be further from the truth." Politico also points out that Monday's statement is "just the most recent time Pence has claimed to be out of the loop on critical information related to Trump associate's communications that could be linked to the Russia probe."

Media Analyses Cast Skeptical Eye On Trump Comments On Russian Meddling. Two of the three networks continued coverage of President Trump's clarifying remarks regarding his views of Russian interference in the 2016 election.

The CBS Evening News (11/13, story 4, 2:00, Mason) reported that in Vietnam, Trump "made nice with Russian President Vladimir Putin, who denied interfering in the US election despite the opposite conclusion from the US intelligence community." Trump: "I believe that President Putin really feels, and he feels strongly, that he did not meddle in our election. What he believes is what he believes. What I believe is that we have to get to work." ABC World News Tonight (11/13, story 5, 2:10, Muir) reported, "President Trump said he's made real progress on trade and North Korea. But the final weekend of his trip to Asia was overshadowed by a familiar topic. Russia." Like CBS, ABC reported on Trump's remarks on his meeting with Putin. When asked to clarify whether he believes "the US intelligence community, which says Putin ordered the meddling, or Putin, who denies it," Trump responded: "I think he believes that Russia did not meddle in the election. As to whether I believe it or not, I'm with our agencies, especially as currently constituted with their leadership." John Roberts reported on Fox News' Special Report (11/13) that while Trump "didn't definitively say he thinks President Putin is not telling the truth...it certainly appears to be...as close as he's ever come to saying that."

By contrast, when CNN's Situation Room (11/13) reported on Trump's same clarifying comment, Trump was cast as "waver[ing] again" on whether Russia interfered. CNN also reported that Trump cast former CIA Director John Brennan, former FBI Director James Comey, and former DNI James Clapper as "political hacks." Clapper and Brennan responded on CNN's "State of the Union." Brennan said he thinks Trump is "giving Putin a pass, and I think it demonstrates to Mr. Putin that Donald Trump can be played by foreign leaders who are going to appeal to his ego and try to play upon his insecurities." Clapper added that Putin "is committed to undermining our system, our democracy, and our whole process. And to try to paint it in any other way is, I think, astounding, and in fact poses a peril to this country."

Dana Milbank writes in the Washington Post (11/13) that President Trump's defense of Putin "against the unanimous view of the FBI and US intelligence agencies that Russia meddled in the U.S. elections," leads to the "obvious conclusion" that Trump "knows full well that Russia meddled, but he's worried the special counsel's investigation, which has already ensnared Trump campaign aides, will implicate him," or he is "incredibly credulous."

Sen. Chris Coons said on CNN's Situation Room (11/13), "This was Veterans Day weekend, and it was striking to me to hear our president on foreign soil taking the word of a former KGB colonel Vladimir Putin," who is "the leader of a country that really does not share our interest." Coons added that publicly disrespecting former DNI James Clapper and former FBI Director James Comey "was uncalled for, unprecedented, and something that puts our national security at risk."

Coons Has "Real Concerns" Trump Won't Implement New Russia Sanctions. During an interview with Sen. Chris Coons on CNN's Situation Room (11/13), Wolf Blitzer noted that the Administration missed the deadline to impose new sanctions on Russia in response to its election meddling, and that Trump on Sunday "questioned whether new sanctions were even necessary." Coons said he has "real concerns" Trump won't enforce the law he signed on Aug. 2, even though it "was passed by an overwhelming vote here in the Senate, 98-2." Coons said that if Trump does refuse to carry out the law, Congress can respond by "refusing to move forward on confirmations, [or] taking steps in terms of budget."

Drudge Fires Back At WPost Over Story Linking Him To Russia. Breitbart (11/13, Wong) reports that Drudge Report creator Matt Drudge on Monday "fired back" at the Washington Post over "a story he said accused him of acting as a Russian operative." Drudge tweeted, "I've linked to @washingtonpost over 10,000X in 25 years of doing DRUDGEREPORT. I currently give them 37% of their referral traffic, according to <http://similarweb.com>. It's a brutal business. Not even a thank you. Instead: YOU'RE A RUSSIAN OPERATIVE!" The tweet came in response to a Post story last week which was headlined, "One of the busiest websites in the US in 2016 regularly linked to Russia propaganda." According to the story, "over the course of the election, Drudge was 'not shy' about linking directly to RT and Sputnik News – 'content-sharing arms of the Russian government.'"

RT Moves To Register As A Foreign Agent. The Washington Post (11/13, Barrett) reports that T&R Productions LLC, the company which operates the Moscow-headquartered RT website and television channel, "has filed paperwork registering with the Justice Department as a foreign agent – a step it had said it would be forced to take in order to keep operating in the United States." The move "follows an acrimonious back-and-forth between RT," which the US accuses of being a propaganda arm of the Kremlin, "and the Justice Department about whether they should have to file paperwork under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, known as FARA."

Former CIA Officers Say Administration Is Ignoring Threat Posed By Russian Aggression. In an op-ed for the New York Times (11/13), Cindy Otis, who worked for the CIA for 10 years as a military analyst; Ned Price, who was a CIA analyst from 2006 to 2017 and served as a special assistant to President Barack Obama; and John Sipher, a former chief of station for the CIA with 27 years' experience in Russia, Europe and Asia; lament "the troubling state of our country's leadership and the dangerous implications for our national security." Russian aggression, they argue, "is a real and present threat, the denial of which for political gain will only invite additional Russian interference. Our country is at risk every day the administration chooses to ignore this threat."

Trump Touts Accomplishments Of "Fruitful" Trip To Asia.

The AP (11/13, Lemire, Colvin) reports President Trump is "winding down his lengthy Asia trip with an international summit and a series of meetings with Pacific Rim allies." Trump jointly met Monday with Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Trump also "raved about his accomplishments on his five-nation journey, including on trade and North Korea, but said he would wait until his return to Washington" Wednesday to elaborate with a "major statement." Said the President, "We've made some very big steps with regard to trade – far bigger than anything you know." Reuters (11/13) likewise says Trump claimed "he had made significant progress on trade issues" during the trip he called "fruitful" that saw governments welcome him lavishly. "It was red carpet like nobody, I think, has probably ever seen," he said.

The AP (11/13, Lemire, Colvin) reports Trump also touted his stamina during the "grueling" five-nation trip. "A lot of people said it's almost physically impossible for someone to go through 12 days," Trump told reporters aboard Air Force One. He added, "Anybody that took the bet, pick up your money, OK?"

The Washington Times (11/13, Boyer, Taylor) reports that while Trump's visit to China "was viewed as the marquee stop of his five-nation tour," his speech to South Korea's national assembly "was arguably the biggest moment of the trip." Analysts said Trump "succeeded in lowering tensions while showing firm resolve in his demand to denuclearize North Korea." According to CNN (11/13, Griffiths), Trump's trip "went off without major incident and generally met critics' relatively low expectations." If the "primary purpose...was to shore up relations" with the countries he visited "and their leaders, the trip can be judged a success, even though actual policy wins were in scant supply."

On ABC World News Tonight (11/13, story 5, 2:10, Muir), Jonathan Karl reported, "Trump said he's made real progress on trade and North Korea, but the final weekend of his trip to Asia was overshadowed by a familiar topic: Russia."

Hudson Institute fellow Walter Russell Mead writes in the Wall Street Journal (11/13, Mead) that Americans, regardless of party, should wish the President success on his trip, because the consequences of failure could be extreme.

Trump Touts "Great Relationship" With Duterte. Media coverage of President Trump's meeting Monday in Manila with Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte focuses on his praise of their "great relationship," as well as on the apparently contrasting claims by the Administration and Manila about the role human rights played in their discussions. Reuters (11/13, Holland), for example, reports Trump said Monday he had a "great relationship" with Duterte, "while a White House official said human rights got only a brief mention when the two met on the sidelines of an Asian summit." A Duterte spokesman, however, "said there was no mention at all of human rights or extrajudicial killings during their conversation." The spokesman, Harry Roque, told reporters Duterte "had explained his antidrug policy at length to Trump," who he said "seemed to be appreciative of his efforts." Roque added, "There was no mention of human rights, no mention of extrajudicial killings."

On ABC World News Tonight (11/13, story 5, 2:10, Muir), Jonathan Karl said the President "struck up an incredibly warm relationship" with Duterte, and the CBS Evening News

(11/13, story 4, 2:00, Mason) said Trump “appeared to give [Duterte] a pass on human rights,” and “did not shy away from praising” the “controversial” leader.

The Los Angeles Times (11/13, Bierman) says Trump “ignored reporters’ questions about human rights.” Press secretary Sarah Sanders “said Trump briefly discussed human rights with Duterte,” but Roque “denied that human rights came up at all.” USA Today (11/13, Jackson, Maresca) quotes Sanders as saying, “Human rights briefly came up in the context of the Philippines’ fight against illegal drugs.” After the meeting, the US and Philippines released a joint statement saying both sides “underscored that human rights and the dignity of human life are essential, and agreed to continue mainstreaming the human rights agenda in their national programs to promote the welfare of all sectors, including the most vulnerable groups.”

The New York Times (11/13, Davis) reports the two leaders “declined to answer questions during brief remarks to reporters,” but “as they sat side by side,” Trump and Duterte “projected a friendly dynamic, ribbing members of the news media as they prepared to speak privately.” As journalists shouted questions about whether Trump would press Duterte on human rights, “the Philippine president quickly silenced them.” The Washington Post (11/13, Nakamura, Rauhala) similarly says that “on two occasions,” Trump “declined to answer shouted questions from reporters about whether he had pressed Duterte on human rights.” The Post says that as Trump “pivoted to talking about the nice weather in Manila, Duterte cut off the American reporters who tried to press Trump on human rights,” saying, “Whoa, whoa. This is not a press statement. This is the bilateral meeting.”

Breitbart (11/13, Martel) reports the “two did not take questions from reporters,” who Duterte “dismissed” as “spies.” Jim Acosta reported on CNN’s Situation Room (11/13) that Trump “laughed” when Duterte referred to the media as “spies.” Sen. John McCain responded by tweeting (11/13), “Human rights obviously not a priority. ... Sad.” Acosta said the stop in Manila “was another example...of Mr. Trump taking a pass on standing up for American principles.” On Fox News’ Special Report (11/13), John Roberts cast the meeting with Duterte as “the most controversial of the many meetings [Trump has] had in the past 11 days.”

Bloomberg News (11/13, Calonzo, Jacobs) reports the two leaders “bonded” over their “common dislike for Barack Obama,” but the White House “didn’t immediately respond to a question on whether the leaders discussed Obama.” The Wall Street Journal (11/13, Watts) similarly says the two leaders found common ground, but avoided difficult issues, like human rights and tensions in the South China Sea. The AP (11/13, Lemire, Colvin) reports that with his Asia trip “down to its final days,” Trump “opted Monday to keep his public focus on top priorities such as trade and combating terrorism rather than human rights, declining to shine a spotlight on the violent drug war” overseen by Duterte.

A Washington Post (11/13, Nakamura, Rauhala) analysis says that as the trip “neared its end Monday, President Trump had yet to utter a word about the vicious military campaign against the Rohingya Muslim ethnic minority in Burma.” During stops in Vietnam and Manila, “human rights issues were barely discussed – if at all.” Instead, the Post says, Trump focused his trip “primarily on tough talk about trade, terrorism and North Korea’s nuclear program, while saying little about chronic human rights abuses in a region that is home to some of world’s most brutal authoritarian regimes.”

A New York Times (11/13) editorial says “authoritarian leaders exercise a strange and powerful attraction for President Trump. As his trip to Asia reminds us, a man who loves to bully people turns to mush – fawning smiles, effusive rhetoric – in the company of strongmen.” The Times says Trump’s “obsessive investment in personal relations may work for a real estate dealmaker,” but the “degree to which he has chosen to curry favor with some of the world’s most unsavory leaders, while lavishing far less attention on America’s democratic allies, hurts America’s credibility and, in the long run, may have dangerous repercussions.”

After Trump Visit, US Ambassador Visits Okinawa. The Washington Post (11/13, Fifield) reports that the new US Ambassador to Japan, William Hagerty, “embarked on a careful visit to Okinawa Monday, meeting with the governor who wants the American military presence on the southern island prefecture sharply reduced.” American bases on Okinawa are “the most sensitive part in the two countries’ security alliance, which President Trump and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe celebrated during their meetings in Tokyo last week.” Okinawa Gov. Takeshi Onaga, who “has been campaigning against the relocation of the huge Marine Corps air station at Futenma,” used the opportunity “to make his case to Hagerty.”

Sources: Trump Personally Asked Xi To Help Resolve Case Of UCLA Players. The Washington Post (11/13, Nakamura) reports President Trump “personally asked” Chinese President Xi Jinping to help resolve the case of three UCLA men’s basketball players who were arrested for shoplifting while in Hangzhou for a tournament last week, "people familiar with the situation" said Monday. Trump raised the arrests during his visit to Beijing, arriving a day after the players were arrested. After Trump raised the matter, Xi "promised to look into the case and ensure that the players are treated fairly and expeditiously, said a US official." Chief of Staff Kelly has also "been in touch with the families of the players and has spoken with UCLA coach Steve Alford, and Kelly remains in contact with Chinese authorities, the official added." The Los Angeles Times (11/13, Bennett) also reports the story, citing the Post.

Susan Rice: "Trump Is Making China Great Again." Former National Security Adviser Susan E. Rice writes in the New York Times (11/13) that President Trump's trip to Asia "had the potential to advance important American security and economic interests," but "instead, it left the United States more isolated and in retreat, handing leadership of the newly christened 'Indo-Pacific' to China on a silver platter." Rice says the trip "began with solid performances in Japan and Korea," but in China, "the wheels began to come off his diplomatic bus" as the Chinese leadership "played President Trump like a fiddle, catering to his insatiable ego and substituting pomp and circumstance for substance." Trump's "lighthearted embrace of a self-proclaimed killer," Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte, "was the nadir of a high-stakes trip that set back American leadership in Asia. But it was, perhaps, the perfect if unintended coda to the president's 'Make China Great Again' tour."

Trump Urges Lawmakers To Cut Top Tax Rate, Eliminate Individual Mandate In Tax Bill.

President Trump on Monday urged lawmakers to cut the top tax rate and eliminate the ACA's individual mandate, tweeting, "I am proud of the Rep. House & Senate for working so hard on cutting taxes {& reform.} We're getting close! Now, how about ending the unfair & highly unpopular Indiv Mandate in OCare & reducing taxes even further? Cut top rate to 35% w/all of the rest going to middle income cuts?"

Roll Call (11/13, Bennett) says that with the tweet, Trump "laid down a marker for House and Senate Republicans as they continue work on their separate bills." However, White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "said the president would prefer the provision be included, but it is not necessary to garner his signature on the tax bill," and White House Director of Legislative Affairs Marc Short "said the White House expects to deal with the mandate when it tries again on a health care overall bill."

The Washington Times (11/13, Persons) reports that some say Trump's call to reduce the top rate "contradicts his claims that the tax cuts will be entirely focused on the middle class," while Reuters (11/13, Becker, Cornwell) reports that the prospects for the provisions Trump advocated "were uncertain." The Senate bill "calls for keeping seven tax brackets but cutting rates, including the top tax rate for the highest earning taxpayers, to 38.5 percent from 39.6 percent," while the House "wants to reduce the number of brackets, but leave the 39.6 percent top rate alone." In addition, "Republican aides and lobbyists have said it would be difficult to include" a repeal of the individual mandate "in a tax effort complicated by intraparty differences and intense business lobbying."

The New York Times (11/13, Rappoport) says that as Republicans "worked toward a delicate compromise," Trump "threw himself back into the discussion" with his tweet. The Times adds that his "wishes, often expressed on social media, have at times steered the internal deliberations over the bill off course." Similarly, Politico (11/13, McCaskill) says Trump's tweet "potentially throw[s] up new hurdles for legislation moving in Congress," and Breitbart (11/13, Carney) says Trump "Added new complications to tax reform efforts."

Trump To Meet With House Republicans Thursday On Capitol Hill. Ylan Mui said on CNBC's Closing Bell (11/13), "NBC News confirmed President Trump will be coming to Capitol Hill on Thursday. He'll be speaking to House Republicans ahead of the planned floor vote on the tax reform bill." According to The Hill (11/13, Fabian), the President "will speak to members of the House Republican Conference at a meeting 11:30 Thursday morning."

Mnuchin, Ivanka Trump Pitch Tax Reform. Politico (11/13, Jennings) reports that at an event in New Jersey Monday, Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and Ivanka Trump pitched tax reform, casting the effort as "bringing relief to the middle class and stimulating business growth and competition by cutting corporate tax rates." Mnuchin said that the effort was "very, very close. ... There are some specific differences, but generally the two bills are very close and, more important, the objectives are the same, which is middle income tax cuts and making business competitive." Trump said, "We believe that cutting the rate of taxes on corporations, medium-sized and small businesses is going to accomplish the goal of putting more money back in the pockets of America workers."

USA Today Analysis: History Shows Tax Cuts Don't Make Presidents More Popular. A USA Today (11/13, Przybyla) analysis says that while President Trump "is betting that a major tax cut will help his anemic approval ratings and bolster his party ahead of the 2018 midterm elections," history "shows that tax cuts do not actually make presidents more popular." The "historical link between tax cuts and political benefits for the party championing them is weak. A review of presidential approval ratings following some of the biggest tax cuts in modern history – in 1981 and 2003 – shows they did little to correct or prevent declining approval ratings for Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush."

Senate Republicans Call On Moore To Exit Senate Race.

The campaign of Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore on Monday continued to be buffeted by allegations of sexual misconduct. Senate Majority Leader McConnell said he believes Moore's accusers and that the GOP nominee should step aside in the race; National Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee chief Sen. Cory Gardner said Moore should be expelled from the Senate, if elected; several other Republicans said Moore should withdraw from the race. Meanwhile, another accuser came forward charging that Moore groped her when she was 16 years old.

On NBC Nightly News (11/13, story 2, 2:00, Holt), Kasie Hunt reported that Washington's GOP "leaders are saying no to Roy Moore." McConnell was shown saying, "I believe the women, yes." Hunt added, "The Senate Majority Leader with a forceful denunciation, opening the floodgates. Republican Senators Orrin Hatch and Susan Collins, tweeting that Moore should drop out. And Colorado Sen. Cory Gardner, who is in charge of electing Republicans to the Senate went even further, saying in a statement, 'If Moore refuses to withdraw and wins, the Senate should vote to expel him. Because he does not meet the ethical and moral requirements of the United States Senate.'"

The Louisville \(KY\) Courier-Journal (11/13, Sayers) reports that McConnell, speaking with reporters in Kentucky, said "he believes the women who accused...Moore of pursuing romantic relationships with them when they were teenagers" and "also urged Moore to bow out of" the contest, "the second time he's made that call since the allegations were reported last week. 'I believe the women, yes,' McConnell" told reporters after being asked about the allegations.

The Washington Post (11/13, Sullivan, Viebeck) reports that McConnell said Moore should withdraw from the race, "following allegations that he initiated a sexual encounter with a 14-year-old girl when he was 32. 'I think he should step aside,' McConnell said. His comments marked the most definitive position he has taken on Moore's candidacy since The Washington Post reported the allegations on Thursday."

Bloomberg News (11/13, Litvan) reports, "Last week, McConnell and most other Republicans said that if the allegations were true, Moore should step aside." Yesterday, however, McConnell "dropped that qualification and said a write-in campaign is a possibility to oppose Moore in the Dec. 12 election. 'That's an option we're looking at, whether or not there is someone who could mount a write-in campaign successfully,' McConnell said."

The Washington Times (11/13, Dinan) reports that McConnell "had been an opponent of Mr. Moore's throughout the race, backing" appointed Sen. Luther Strange (R) "in the GOP primary earlier this year." The Huffington Post (11/13, Reilly) reported, "When asked if Republicans are encouraging a write-in campaign for another GOP candidate, McConnell said it's 'an option we're looking at, whether or not there is someone who could mount a write-in campaign successfully.'" McConnell, however, "declined to say if that someone would be...Strange."

Roll Call (11/13, Garcia) reported that Strange "is reportedly considering mounting a write-in effort." However, The Hill (11/13, Thomsen) reported that Strange on Monday "said it is 'highly unlikely' that he will stage a write-in campaign...according to multiple media reports." In another report, The Hill (11/13, Carney, Savransky) said, "Even if Moore withdraws from the Senate race – something he has said he will not do – Republicans are stuck with his name remaining on the ballot. The deadline for the party to remove Moore's name from the ballot passed in October, though Republicans could mount a write-in challenge."

The Montgomery \(AL\) Advertiser (11/13, Brown) reports that NRSC chief Cory Gardner on Monday "said the Senate should vote to expel...Moore should he refuse to withdraw from the race and wins on Dec. 12. 'I believe the individuals speaking out against Roy Moore spoke with courage and truth, proving he is unfit to serve in the United States Senate and he should not run for office. If he refuses to withdraw and wins, the Senate should vote to expel him, because he does not meet the ethical and moral requirements of the United States Senate,' Gardner said in a statement released on the NRSC website."

The Washington Times (11/13, Dinan) reports that Gardner's statement is "the furthest any Republican has gone in rejecting Mr. Moore." The Times adds, "Expelling a senator is a striking move, and the last ones to be successfully ousted came during the Civil War, when southerners were expelled for rebelling against the US." USA Today (11/13, Berry) reports that if Moore wins the election, "McConnell and his colleagues could push him out." University of Louisiana at Lafayette political scientist Pearson Cross told USA Today that "under the Constitution the Senate has 'total control' over who sits as members. 'It's based on the will of the body,' he said." He added, "If they don't want to seat him they don't have to."

The Hill (11/13, Carney) reported that "the move, assuming every Democrat voted to expel Moore, would require the support of at least 19 Republican senators to reach the two-thirds threshold – considerably more than were willing to publicly back the option on Monday. More than a dozen GOP senators either stopped short or refused to comment on questions about if the Senate should expel Moore if he wins."

However, in an online "analysis" for CNN (11/13, Cillizza), Chris Cillizza wrote that "it's hard to see how Moore ever actually holds a Senate seat. Gardner's pledge to vote to expel him if he wins means that such a motion would almost certainly pass. What senator – Democrat or Republican – could or would vote against expelling Moore at this point?"

The Washington Times (11/13, McLaughlin) reports, "Republicans in Washington went to war Monday with...Moore," citing the remarks of McConnell and Gardner. Moore, meanwhile "says he is sticking out the election. ... It's a frustrating scenario for a party that fears losing a rock-solid Republican seat – particularly after a series of other races have slipped away in recent years." The Hill (11/13, Bolton, Carney) reported that the comments of McConnell and Gardner "pointed to an emerging strategy: oppose Moore's candidacy, but find a way to keep the Senate seat in the Republican column."

The AP (11/13, Taylor) reports, "Senate Republicans are confronted with a limited, unappealing set of options in responding to...Moore," who "can't be removed from the ballot, even if the Alabama Republican Party wanted to." One possibility, "albeit difficult, for Republicans to retain the seat would be to mount a successful write-in candidacy." If Moore wins, adds the AP, "the Senate could immediately move to expel him, though the chamber hasn't taken such a step since the Civil War."

Politico (11/13, Kim) reported on the remarks of McConnell and Gardner, and added that Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) on Monday said "said he sides with McConnell," and Senate Majority Whip John Cornyn (R-TX) "also announced he was withdrawing his endorsement of Moore, adding that the best course of action is 'to leave the final judgment in the hands of Alabama voters.'" Even so, said Politico, "there are no signs the pressure from Washington will sway Moore." Indeed, the Wall Street Journal (11/13, Hook) reports that in the wake of McConnell's comments, the Moore camp said on Twitter, "The person who should step aside is @SenateMajLdr Mitch McConnell. He has failed conservatives and must be replaced. #DrainTheSwamp."

The Hill (11/13, Smilowitz) reported that Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) on Monday "withdrew his support from...Moore, saying allegations of sexual misconduct should be looked at by prosecutors." Speaking with reporters, Cruz said, "As it stands, I can't urge the people of Alabama to support a campaign in the face of these charges without serious, persuasive demonstration that the charges are not true. Both last week and this week, there are serious charges of criminal conduct that if true, not only make him unfit to serve in the Senate but merit criminal prosecution."

The Washington Examiner (11/13, Lim) further quoted Cruz as saying, "The people of Alabama deserve to have the option of voting for a strong conservative who has not committed criminal conduct. If these allegations are not true, then Judge Moore needs to come forward with a strong, persuasive rebuttal demonstrating that they are untrue." Cruz added, "Grown men don't typically sign high school girls' yearbooks. As the father of two young daughters, this is a disquieting allegation, but let me repeat Judge Moore is entitled to present a defense."

Reuters (11/13, Whitesides) reports that Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) "joined McConnell in calling for Moore to drop out, saying she was not convinced by his denials." The Washington Times (11/13) reports that Sen. Bill Cassidy (R-LA) on Monday "joined the growing list of Senate Republicans withdrawing endorsements...Moore." In a tweet, Cassidy said, "Based on the allegations against Roy Moore, his response and what is known, I withdraw support."

The Hill (11/13, Beavers) reported that Sen. Todd Young (R-IN) on Monday "called on his colleagues to 'protect the integrity' of the upper chamber if...Moore does not step aside." Young said in a pair of tweets, "After giving Roy Moore ample time to unequivocally deny the disturbing allegations against him, those allegations remain far more persuasive than the denials. Roy Moore should immediately drop out of the race. The appearance of grossly reprehensible behavior disqualifies him from service in the United States Senate. If he does not step aside, we need to act to protect the integrity of the Senate."

The New York Post (11/13, Schulz) reports that Sen. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) on Monday said “he would rather see a Democrat win Alabama’s open Senate seat than accused teen groper Roy Moore – and compared the GOP candidate to former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke.” Flake is quoted as saying, “If the choice is between Roy Moore and a Democrat, if I were in Alabama I’d vote for the Democrat. There was a time when Republican senators would go and campaign for a Democrat rather than seat a Republican who would be so repugnant to the party and would diminish the party’s chances in the future. That happened in the ‘90s in Louisiana with David Duke.”

Under the headline “More Than 20 Republicans Have Called For Roy Moore To Step Aside,” CNN (11/13, Schwarz) reported on its website, “Since the most recent accuser came forward Monday, the number of Republicans calling for Moore to drop out of the race has grown.” CNN offered a look at “some of their responses,” and listed Sens. John McCain (R-AZ), Lindsey Graham (R-SC), and Chuck Grassley (R-IA) and Reps. Barbara Comstock (R-VA) and Tom Cole (R-OK) as among those “who say Moore should step aside or be removed from office if he is elected.”

Axios (11/13, Lawler) reports that HUD spokesman Raphael Williams, responding to questions about HUD Secretary Ben Carson’s “past support for...Moore,” said in a written statement, “The Secretary believes any man that assaults any woman is unfit for public office.” Carson “was the only member of President Trump’s cabinet to voice support for Moore during the Alabama Republican primary.”

The Washington Times (11/13, Sands) reports that during a Monday appearance on CNBC, Jeb Bush said Moore should withdraw from the race. Said Bush, “I think we have to acknowledge dating teenagers when you are a 32-year-old assistant district attorney is just wrong.”

Sean Hannity said on Fox News’ Hannity (11/13), “The allegations against...Moore are very serious. We need truth. They need to be investigated. The voters in Alabama deserved the truth before they decide who to cast their ballots for. And as I said Friday, if that means moving back the election, then so be it. Whatever it takes. And if these allegations are true, Judge Moore needs to step aside.”

Sen. Chris Coons (D-DE) said on CNN’s Situation Room (11/13), “I respect the fact that the Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and the head of the Republican campaign committee have both called for Roy Moore to step down. ... I believe the women who have come forward and provided detailed testimony about his heinous acts while he was a young prosecutor, but in his 30s, and attempting to date very young women, women who were teenagers or even 14 or 15 years old. I do think that it’s important for the standards of the Senate of the United States that a person who has been accused credibly of this kind of horrible behavior not be seated in the United States Senate.”

WPost Lauds McConnell Remarks, Blasts Conway, Mnuchin. In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/13) contrasts McConnell’s Monday remarks with those of White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway, “who said Sunday that she takes ‘very seriously allegations like this, particularly when they involve somebody who happened to be one of my daughters’ ages’ and that she has ‘tried to be a very loud voice for a very long time against sexual impropriety’ – but that Mr. Moore should not ‘just be cast aside as guilty.’ Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin was similarly perplexed: ‘If these allegations are true, then absolutely, this is incredibly inappropriate behavior.’ These non-condemnation condemnations serve as much to cast doubt on Mr. Moore’s accusers as they do to denounce Mr. Moore’s alleged behavior.” The Post says McConnell “deserves credit for treating these accusations with seriousness and the accusers with respect.”

In an editorial, the New York Times (11/13) also praises McConnell’s Monday remarks and adds, “Let’s acknowledge the Republicans who affirm the honesty of Mr. Moore’s accusers, and reject him, even if it means victory for his Democratic opponent. ... And let’s hope, against the odds, that the acceptance of these women’s stories sets an example for how such accusations can be dealt with for all women.”

New Accuser Claims Moore Sexually Assaulted Her In 1977. Meanwhile, on ABC World News Tonight (11/13, story 2, 4:15, Muir), Tom Llamas reported that Moore is “refusing to drop out even as a new woman comes forward, accusing him of sexually assaulting her when she was just 16.” Llamas added that Beverly Nelson “says she met Moore when he was an assistant district attorney and she was a high school student, working part-time as a waitress. ... Nelson says Moore offered to give her a ride home after work. ... But instead, Nelson said Moore drove her around back.” Nelson was shown saying at a news conference, “It was dark, and it was deserted. I was alarmed, and I immediately asked him what he was doing. And instead of answering my questions, Mr. Moore reached over and began groping me.”

The CBS Evening News (11/13, lead story, 2:30, Mason) broadcast a clip of Nelson saying, "Mr. Moore reached over and began groping me, putting his hands on my breasts. Instead of stopping, he began squeezing my neck, attempting to force my head on to his crotch." CBS' Manuel Bojorquez added, "Nelson is the fifth woman to accuse Moore of pursuing teenage girls when he was in his 30s. One says he groped her when she was 14. Moore has denied any wrongdoing and calls it all a witch-hunt."

NBC Nightly News (11/13, lead story, 2:45) broadcast a clip of Nelson saying of Moore, "I tried to open my car door to leave, but he reached over, and he locked it so I could not get out. I tried fighting him off, while yelling at him to stop. But instead of stopping, he began squeezing my neck." NBC's Lester Holt added, "All this proving too much for a growing number of prominent Republicans tonight who are insisting Moore must drop out of the race despite his sizable support still among many voters."

The Montgomery \(AL\) Advertiser (11/13, Lyman) reports that Nelson on Monday said that "Moore, then 30, groped and assaulted her in an attempt to have sex with her when she was 16." Speaking at a press conference in New York, Nelson – "sitting next to attorney Gloria Allred" – said "that Moore, then a Gadsden assistant district attorney, was a regular patron of a diner where she worked in 1977 and offered her a ride home one evening. 'He stopped his car,' Nelson said," and "began grabbing her breasts, then locked the car door when she tried to get out. Nelson said Moore then squeezed her neck and 'attempted to force my head into his crotch.'"

The New York Times (11/13, Stolberg, Martin) reports that Nelson is the "fifth woman" to accuse Moore "of making sexual or romantic advances toward her when she was a teenager." Nelson "said Mr. Moore warned her that 'no one will believe you' if she told anyone about the encounter in his car." Politico (11/13, Debenedetti) reported that Nelson "said her neck was 'black and blue and purple' for the following days. 'I did not tell anyone about what would happen – I was scared,' she said. 'I felt that if I told anyone, Mr. Moore would do something to me or my family.' Allred, who said Nelson approached her, called for the Senate Judiciary Committee to subpoena Moore and hold a hearing with him within the next two weeks. She said Nelson would volunteer to testify."

Breitbart (11/13, Mason) quoted Nelson as saying of Moore, "I thought he was going to rape me. At some point, he gave up." Breitbart added that Nelson "produced a high school yearbook which she says is signed by Moore. 'To a sweeter, more beautiful girl I could not say 'merry Christmas,' the inscription reads. The note is signed 'Roy Moore, D.A.,' and includes the date and venue of their purported interaction." The Los Angeles Times (11/13, Agrawal) reports, "This is the first time Nelson is disclosing the allegations publicly, though she said she had previously told her sister, mother and husband about her encounter with Moore."

The AP (11/13, Fram, Schreiner) reports that Moore "abruptly called a news conference in Gallant, Alabama, after a tearful...Nelson's detailed the new allegations to reporters in New York. 'I can tell you without hesitation this is absolutely false. I never did what she said I did. I don't even know the woman,' Moore said. He signaled he has no intention of ending his candidacy, calling the latest charges a 'political maneuver' and launching a fundraising appeal to 'God-fearing conservatives' to counter his abandonment by Washington Republicans." The Hill (11/13, Beavers) reported that Moore also "denied knowing where the Olde Hickory House restaurant in Gadsden, Ala., 'is or was,' the diner Nelson named as the place where the incident took place."

The Washington Examiner (11/13, Quinn) quoted Moore's campaign as saying in a statement, "Gloria Allred is a sensationalist leading a witch hunt, and she is only around to create a spectacle. Allred was the attorney who claims credit for giving us Roe v. Wade which has resulted in the murder of tens of millions of unborn babies."

USA Today (11/13, Hafner) reports, "With a new sexual assault accusation against...Moore, waves of women on Twitter aim to underscore the allegations against the former judge with the hashtag #MeAt14. ... 'Not old enough to drive. Not old enough to work without a permit. Not old enough to see an R-rated movie,' user Mary Ann Campbell tweeted Sunday along with a photo of a young girl with a cat on her shoulders. 'Not old enough to consent.'"

New Yorker: Local Sources Say "They Had Heard" Moore Was Banned From Gadsden Mall.

Writing for the New Yorker (11/13, Bethea), Charles Bethea says, "This past weekend, I spoke or messaged with more than a dozen people – including a major political figure in the state – who told me that they had heard, over the years, that Moore had been banned from the [Gadsden Mall] because he repeatedly badgered teen-age girls. Some say that they heard this at the time, others in the years since. These people include five members of the local legal community, two cops who worked in the town, several people who hung out at the mall in the early eighties, and a number of former mall employees. ... The stories that they say they've heard for years have been swirling online in the days since the Post published its report."

Under the headline "Gadsden Locals Say Moore's Predatory Behavior At Mall, Restaurants Not A Secret," Alabama Live (11/13, Vollers) reports that Moore's "penchant for flirting with teen girls was 'common knowledge' and 'not a big secret' around Gadsden, according to some area residents. ... 'These stories have been going around this town for 30 years,' said Blake Usry, who grew up in the area and lives in Gadsden. ... 'It's not a big secret in this town about Roy Moore,' he said. 'That's why it's sort of frustrating to watch' the public disbelieve the women who have come forward, he said." Under the headline "Report: Alabama Mall Banned Roy Moore In The '80s For Pursuing Teens," the Daily Beast (11/13) reported on the New Yorker piece and the story by Alabama Live.

Despite Allegations, Poll Shows Moore Leading Jones 55%-45%. The Hill (11/13, Savransky) reported that an Emerson College poll of 600 Alabama voter, taken Nov. 9-11, "after The Washington Post published its report in which a woman accused Moore of initiating sexual contact with her in 1979, when she was 14 and he was 32," shows Moore leading ex-US Attorney Doug Jones (D) 55%-45%. The Hill added, "The poll does show improvement for Jones from the last survey conducted in September. That survey gave Moore a 22-point advantage."

National Democrats Taking Cautious Approach. Writing for US News & World Report (11/13), David Catanese reported, "As national Republicans continue to disavow...Moore," Democrat "are taking a more strategically nuanced approach in order to avoid overplaying their hand in a reliably conservative state. On a day when the leader of the Republican Senate campaign committee made the extraordinary call for the expulsion of Moore from the Senate if he" wins, Senate Minority Leader Schumer "downplayed the role of the national party in the newly competitive contest." Schumer told reporters, "It's an Alabama race and they're running it. If they ask us for things, we're going to try to help them, but it's an Alabama race and the Jones campaign is running it on its own."

Roll Call (11/13, McPherson) also reported on Schumer's remarks, and added, "National Democrats have noted the uphill battle for winning a traditionally Republican state like Alabama. Asked twice last week if the party would devote more resources to the" race, DNC chief Tom Perez "declined to directly answer the questions. He instead pointed to resources sent to every state party last month as part of an effort to boost organizing efforts on the ground. That was, however, before the Post story broke."

Will: Democrat Jones Deserving Of Senate Seat. In his Washington Post (11/13) column, George Will praises the background of Jones and criticizes the candidacy of Moore, who "campaigns almost entirely about social issues – National Football League protests, the transgender menace – and the wild liberalism of Jones, a law-and-order prosecutor and deer and turkey hunter who says he has 'a safe full of guns.'" Will says that Jones is deserving of the Senate seat.

Some "Smashing" Their Keurigs In Protest Of Company Pulling Ads From "Hannity" Show. The Indianapolis Star (11/13, Mack, Star) reports, "Some conservatives are destroying their Keurig coffee machines in protest of the company pulling ads from Sean Hannity's show over his coverage of the sexual misconduct allegations levied at...Moore." The Star adds, "On social media, many used the hashtag #BoycottKeurig to slam the company for pulling its ads. Some posted videos of themselves smashing their Keurig machines and others vowed never to use the coffee maker again. Hannity tweeted that he was 'humbled and speechless,' by the videos and the calls to boycott Keurig." Bloomberg News (11/13, Kaplan) reports, "Hannity and Moore loyalists posted photos of themselves smashing the company's single-serve coffee brewers. Hannity himself tweeted that he is purchasing 500 coffee makers to give away."

Bill Clinton-Accuser Broadrick Blasts Chelsea Handler Over Moore Tweet. The Daily Caller (11/13, Randall) reported that Juanita Broadrick on Sunday blasted comedian Chelsea Handler "over a tweet the comedian made imagining what it must be like for an alleged rapist to be elected to a seat of power. Handler's tweet referenced the allegations against...Moore and asked what message young girls might receive if a man can molest a young girl and then get elected to the US Senate. She told her followers to imagine that scenario." In response, Broadrick tweeted, "Yeah, @chelseahandler I can imagine. I was raped by the Arkansas AG who then becomes Governor & President and NBC held my interview explaining the rape until after his impeachment hearing. But I'm sure you don't want to go there." Broadrick "alleged years ago that former President Bill Clinton raped her while he was the Arkansas attorney general."

NYTimes' Michelle Goldberg: "I Believe Juanita." Under the heading "I Believe Juanita," Michelle Goldberg writes in her New York Times (11/13) column, "In this #MeToo moment, when we're reassessing decades of male misbehavior and turning open secrets into exposes, we should look clearly at the credible evidence that...Broaddrick told the truth when she accused Clinton of raping her." Goldberg adds, "Five witnesses said she confided in them about the assault right after it happened. It's true that she denied the rape in an affidavit to Paula Jones's lawyers, before changing her story when talking to federal investigators. But her explanation, that she didn't want to go public but couldn't lie to the FBI, makes sense. Put simply, I believe her."

North Korea Says US Carriers Raise Threat Of Nuclear War.

The CBS Evening News (11/13, story 5, 2:00, Mason) reported the US has deployed three aircraft carrier strike groups just off the Korean Peninsula in "the largest display of US naval strength in the western Pacific in a decade." The AP (11/13) reports North Korea said Monday that the "unprecedented" deployment "taking up a strike posture" around the peninsula is "making it impossible to predict when nuclear war will break out." North Korea's UN Ambassador, Ja Song Nam, said in a letter to Secretary-General Antonio Guterres that the joint military exercises are creating "the worst ever situation" around the peninsula. He also complained that the US has reactivated round-the-clock sorties with nuclear-capable B-52 strategic bombers "which existed during the Cold War times." Reuters (11/13, Nichols) reports Ja described current conditions as "the worst ever situation," and said the US "was to blame for escalating tensions."

Senate To Hold Hearing On Trump's Ability To Authorize Nuclear Strike. The New York Post (11/13) reports the Senate will hold a hearing Tuesday on the President's ability to authorize a nuclear strike. "This discussion is long overdue," Sen. Bob Corker said in a statement announcing the hearing, which is being held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The AP (11/13, Burns) reports on a "question rarely raised before Donald Trump ran for the White House" – if the President ordered a pre-emptive nuclear strike, could anyone stop him? The answer, it says, is no. Bruce Blair, a former nuclear missile launch officer and expert on nuclear command and control, says, "The protocol for ordering the use of nuclear weapons endows every president with civilization-ending power."

North Korean Officials Want To Know If Trump Is Crazy. Brian Todd reported on CNN's Situation Room (11/13) that North Korean officials have been secretly meeting with American experts in an effort to "figure out how to read President Trump." CNN played audio of Suzanne DiMaggio, one of the experts on the team meeting with the North Koreans, saying, "They really want to know what is [Trump's] end game. They want to know if he's crazy or if this is just an act" – if he's doing "a good cop/bad cop routine that he's doing with [Secretary of State] Tillerson." Politico Magazine (11/13, Glasser) also reports on the remarks by DiMaggio, who said, "They follow the news very closely; they watch CNN 24/7; they read his tweets and other things."

American Detained Trying To Enter North Korea; North Korean Soldier Defects To South. The Washington Post (11/13, Fifield) reports that the Demilitarized Zone "saw an unusual amount of action Monday, with an American man unsuccessfully attempting to cross into the North and a North Korean soldier successfully defecting to the South." A 58-year-old man from Louisiana was arrested by South Korean forces Monday for crossing the Civilian Control Line, just outside the DMZ, as part of an attempt to get into North Korea "for political purposes," authorities said. The US Embassy in Seoul said it was aware of the report and was looking into it. In a separate incident, a North Korean soldier "manning a guard post on northern side of the Joint Security Area" defected to the South. The New York Times (11/13, Choe) reports the soldier was shot as he tried to escape, but succeeded in reaching the South. The Los Angeles Times (11/13, Stiles) reports the American detained at the border was not identified.

Protesters Disrupt White House Coal Presentation At UN Climate Talks.

The CBS Evening News (11/13, story 6, 2:30, Mason) reported, "At a UN climate conference in Germany today, the Trump Administration talked up fossil fuels, including coal," putting the US "at odds with 194 other nations." Politico (11/13, Holden) reports protesters "repeatedly interrupted" a White House-sponsored panel Monday at the talks "as US officials tried to promote fossil fuels and nuclear power." An estimated "100 people launched into a song accusing the US speakers" of greed that's "killing across the world for that coal money," sung the tune of "God Bless the USA." Bloomberg News (11/13, Shankleman, Dlouhy) reports that after singing, the protesters eventually walked out of the room.

The Hill (11/13, Henry) reports the White House and energy industry officials on Monday "defended the Trump administration's support for fossil fuels and nuclear power at a United Nations (U.N.) climate change conference." A group of officials led by Trump's chief energy and environment assistant "told attendees at the Bonn, Germany, conference that nuclear power and fossil fuel technologies designed to capture carbon emissions are essential to the global energy sector, even as it pushes to tackle climate change.”

The Washington Examiner (11/13, Siegel) reports the protesters also “stood up and faced away from a seated panel of Trump Administration officials,” including George David Banks, President Trump’s special assistant on energy and environment. The New York Times (11/13, Friedman, Plumer) quotes Banks as saying, “Without question, fossil fuels will continue to be used, and we would argue that it’s in the global interest to make sure when fossil fuels are used that they be as clean and efficient as possible. This panel is controversial only if we chose to bury our heads in the sand.”

In what the Washington Times (11/13, Hill) calls “a sign of the tensions brought on by President Trump’s June decision to pull out of the Paris Climate Accord, UN security officials watched helplessly as nearly half the audience in the lecture hall stood, sang and waved their arms to interrupt the presentation.”

Another Washington Times (11/13, Wolfgang) story, meanwhile, reports that California Gov. Jerry Brown is “one of the most prominent American officials” at the conference “in lieu of representatives from the Trump Administration.” The Democratic state leaders, joined by former Vice President Al Gore and “numerous Democratic lawmakers, are trying to push the notion that state and local governments will stand by the global Paris climate treaty.”

Report Shows Carbon Emissions Rise As Climate Talks Enter 2nd Week. The AP (11/13, Jordans) reports that as a new report showed the world “backsliding on curbing carbon emissions, observers at global climate talks said Monday it might fall to ministers to break a deadlock over issues such as compensation for countries hardest-hit by global warming.” The talks in Bonn, Germany, now in their second week, “are intended to hammer out some of the nitty-gritty details for implementing the 2015 Paris climate accord,” including “what emissions-cutting measures are necessary before 2020.”

The Washington Times (11/13, Wolfgang) reports the Paris climate pact is “off to a rocky start due to a huge increase in Chinese pollution this year, researchers said Monday in a report that finds US emissions are still dropping despite President Trump’s decision to pull the nation from the global agreement.” Several studies released by the Global Carbon Project and presented Monday at the talks in Bonn “say that worldwide carbon emissions are projected to rise about 2 percent in 2017 after they’d been flat for three years,” due to “a massive uptick in pollution” from China.

The Washington Post (11/13, Kaplan), meanwhile, reports that in late 1992, “1,700 scientists from around the world issued a dire ‘warning to humanity.’” To mark the letter’s 25th anniversary, researchers have issued “a bracing follow-up.” In a communique published Monday in the journal BioScience, “more than 15,000 scientists from 184 countries assess the world’s latest responses to various environmental threats,” and “once again, they find us sorely wanting.”

Nations Attempt To Firm Up “Vague” Paris Commitments In Bonn This Week. The New York Times (11/13, Ellis) reports negotiators from nearly 200 countries are meeting this week for the Bonn climate conference. On the agenda is filling in the details of pledges from the Paris climate conference. “They are voluntary, vague, and not easily verifiable. The diplomats in Bonn hope to firm up the countries’ commitments and make it easier to measure progress.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Mitch McConnell Believes The Women. Good For Him.” In an editorial, the New York Times (11/13) praises Senate Majority Leader McConnell’s Monday remarks about Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore and adds, “Let’s acknowledge the Republicans who affirm the honesty of Mr. Moore’s accusers, and reject him, even if it means victory for his Democratic opponent. ... And let’s hope, against the odds, that the acceptance of these women’s stories sets an example for how such accusations can be dealt with for all women.”

“President Trump’s Thing For Thugs.” A New York Times (11/13) editorial says “authoritarian leaders exercise a strange and powerful attraction for President Trump. As his trip to Asia reminds us, a man who loves to bully people turns to mush — fawning smiles, effusive rhetoric — in the company of strongmen.” The Times says Trump’s “obsessive investment in personal relations may work for a real estate dealmaker,” but the “degree to which he has chosen to curry favor with some of the world’s most unsavory leaders, while lavishing far less attention on America’s democratic allies, hurts America’s credibility and, in the long run, may have dangerous repercussions.”

Washington Post.

“Mitch McConnell Believes The Women. Kellyanne Conway Doesn’t.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/13) contrasts Senate Majority Leader McConnell’s Monday remarks about Alabama Senate candidate Roy Moore with those of White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway, “who said Sunday that she takes ‘very seriously allegations like this, particularly when they involve somebody who happened to be one of my daughters’ ages’ and that she has ‘tried to be a very loud voice for a very long time against sexual impropriety’ – but that Mr. Moore should not ‘just be cast aside as guilty.’ Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin was similarly perplexed: ‘If these allegations are true, then absolutely, this is incredibly inappropriate behavior.’ These non-condemnation condemnations serve as much to cast doubt on Mr. Moore’s accusers as they do to denounce Mr. Moore’s alleged behavior.” The Post says McConnell “deserves credit for treating these accusations with seriousness and the accusers with respect.”

“A New Deal With Russia Sounds Too Good To Be True. It Probably Is.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/13) writes that a new deal with Russia requiring the withdrawal of Iranian forces from Syria and internationally supervised elections, “like the multiple accords about Syria” former Secretary of State Kerry made with Russia, “sounds too good to be true,” and, “most likely, like all those previous deals, it is.” The Post warns that Russian leader Vladimir Putin “consistently disregards the deals he strikes” and instead works “to block U.S. objectives and demoralize and divide Western democracies.” The Post concludes that Secretary “Tillerson ought to avoid the foolish error of Mr. Trump: assuming that Mr. Putin, in offering improbable assurances, ‘means it.’”

“Trump’s Comments Create A Lose-Lose Position For Justice.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/13) writes that while the Justice Department may have a legitimate antitrust reason for reportedly pushing Time Warner to sell CNN as a condition of a corporate merger, President Trump’s “disdain” for the network “raises the specter of political retaliation, which in turn increases the need for transparency in the antitrust decision-making process.” The Post calls for a Senate subcommittee on antitrust, competition policy and consumer rights hearing on the matter, which will either inform the public of “improper” White House “influence over the Justice Department in the interest of punishing a political enemy” or dispel suspicions of such. The Post concludes, “The White House has put itself in a position where the nation may reasonably presume bad faith” and not must earn the public’s trust.

Wall Street Journal.

“The Great Progressive Tax Escape.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/13) writes that the wealthy are leaving high-tax states, showing how seeking revenue from them to finance the entitlements and government programs ends up hurting citizens of all levels.

“Oh, No, A Pharma Exec.” The Wall Street Journal (11/13) argues in an editorial that while President Trump’s choice to head HHS, Alex Azar, drew criticism for raising drug prices as a pharma executive, he was paid by shareholders to make money, which in turn fosters innovation and leaders to better treatments. The Journal adds that while Senate Democrats will scour his record, it is possible that his knowledge of the industry makes Azar the right person to regulate it.

“The Menu Label Cops Win.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (11/13) criticizes draft Food and Drug Administration guidance on calorie boards at chain restaurants, calling the rules crazy and for Congress to intervene.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Number Of Systemically Important Banks To Decline Under Senate Deal
GE Cuts Dividend, Slashes Profit Goals Amid Restructuring
Hobby Lobby Scion Spent Millions On Biblical Relics—Then Came A Reckoning
IPOs Roar Back World-wide, With Asia Driving The Boom

New York Times:

Justice Dept. To Weigh Inquiry Into Clinton Foundation
Fifth Woman Accuses Senate Candidate Roy Moore Of Sexual Misconduct

She Took On Colombia's Soda Industry. Then She Was Silenced.
Navy SEALs Investigated In Green Beret's Death Also Under Scrutiny In Theft
Under New Guidelines, Millions More Americans Will Need To Lower Blood Pressure
Debilitated Players Accuse NFL Of Stalling On Settlement Payments
Iran-Iraq Earthquake Kills More Than 450

Washington Post:

Mexican Traffickers Making NYC A Fentanyl Hub
GOP Leaders Press Moore To Leave Race
Debating Suitability Of Cellphone Use In Lower Grades
Gaddafi's Cousin Sees Opening, Plots Comeback
Sessions Considering A Second Special Counsel

Financial Times:

Earthquake On Iran-Iraq Border Kills More Than 400
GE Boss Unveils Dividend Cut And \$20bn Asset Sales
Broadcom Qualcomm Deal Moves Closer To Open Hostility
China Recovery Pushes Greenhouse Emissions To Global Record

Washington Times:

Senate Republicans Denounce Roy Moore In Dilemma Posed By Alabama Nominee
Paris Deal Failing? Global Emissions Up 2% Despite U.S. Drop; Chinese Pollution Skyrockets
Trump Promises Major Announcements On Trade, North Korea After 'Fruitful' 12 Days In Asia
Trump Team's Tax Cut Message Falls Flat Among Middle Class
'Happy News' From Doctors: Sex Is No Risk Factor For Sudden Heart Attack
Berlusconi Returns To Italian Politics — This Time As Likely Kingmaker

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump Jr.; Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Penn State Univ-Hazing; Middle East Earthquake; Trump-Asia Tour; Orlando Airport-Battery Explosion; High Blood Pressure-New Guideline; Walmart-Online Price Disparity; Weather Forecast; Indiana-House Explosion; Cancer Survivor-Go Fund Me.

CBS: Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; High Blood Pressure-New Guideline; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump Jr.; Trump-Asia Tour; US-North Korea; UN Climate Conference; Penn State Univ-Hazing; Middle East Earthquake; Golden Girls-Friendship.

NBC: Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations-GOP; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump Jr.; Mali-Navy SEAL Murder Investigation; Penn State Univ-Hazing; Middle East Earthquake; NSA-Cyber Security; Biden-Possible Presidential Bid; High Blood Pressure-New Guideline; India-Extreme Air Pollution; Post Hurricane Reunion; Police-Friendship.

Network TV At A Glance:

Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations – 11 minutes, 30 seconds
Russia Meddling Investigation- 7 minutes, 20 seconds
High Blood Pressure-New Guideline- 5 minutes, 20 seconds
Middle East Earthquake- 2 minutes, 45 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Russia Meddling Investigation; Trump-Asia Tour; Health Secretary Pick.

CBS: High Blood Pressure-New Guideline; Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Tax Reform Plan; Baseball News; Amazon-Lord Of The Rings.

FOX: Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Menendez Trial-Jury Deadlock.

NPR: Roy Moore Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Middle East Earthquake; BitCoin Surge; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in the 12th East Asia Summit Head of State and Government Luncheon; participates in the 12th East Asia Summit plenary session; returns to Washington, D.C.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Meets with U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley, Director of the Office of Management and Budget Mick Mulvaney, and United States Agency for International Development (USAID) Administrator Mark Green; delivers remarks at the Wall Street Journal's 10th Annual CEO Council Meeting.

US Senate: 8:30 AM 'The Positive Economic Impact of Historically Black Colleges and Universities' study unveiled – UNCF (United Negro College Fund) hosts forum to unveil new study 'HBCUs Make America Strong: The Positive Economic Impact of Historically Black Colleges and Universities', which examines the economic impact of the nation's HBCUs by looking at the spending and employment impacts of the nation's HBCUs in total – and for 100 HBCUs individually – on their local and regional economies, as well as the lifetime earnings of the 2014 class of HBCU graduates. Speakers include UNCF President and CEO Dr Michael Lomax, Vice President for Research and Member Engagement Dr Brian Bridges, and Senior Vice President for Public Policy and Government Affairs Cheryl Smith, Members of Congress, and HBCU presidents Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 902, Washington, DC <http://www.uncf.org/> #HBCUStrong

9:30 AM Business Meeting, with agenda including nomination of Kirstjen Nielsen to be Secretary of Homeland Security Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 342, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

9:30 AM U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico governors testify to Senate committee on hurricane recovery – Hearing on 'Hurricane Recovery Efforts in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands', with testimony from U.S. Virgin Islands Governor Kenneth Mapp; Puerto Rico Governor Ricardo Rossello; Assistant Secretary of Energy for Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability Bruce Walker; U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Deputy Commanding General for Civil and Emergency Operations Maj. Gen. Donald Jackson Jr.; Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority Executive Director Ricardo Ramos; Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority Executive Director and CEO Julio Rhymer Sr.; and Comision de Energia de Puerto Rico Comisionado Asociado-Presidente Interino Jose Roman Morales; and Oversight & Management Board for Puerto Rico Revitalization Coordinator Noel Zamot Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.energy.senate.gov

10:00 AM Senate Committee on Environment & Public Works legislative hearing – Senate Committee on Environment & Public Works legislative hearing on 'S. 1857, a bill to establish a compliance deadline of May 15, 2023, for Step 2 emissions standards for new residential wood heaters, new residential hydronic heaters, and forced-air furnaces', 'S. 203, the Recognizing the Protection of Motorsports (RPM) Act of 2017', 'S. 839, the Blocking Regulatory Interference from Closing Kilns Act of 2017', and 'S. 1934, the Alaska Remote Generator Reliability and Protection Act', with testimony from United States Stove Company Business Intelligence Vice President Paul Williams; Specialty Equipment Market Association President and CEO Christopher Kersting; Henry Brick Company President Davis Henry; George Washington University Law School Professor of Law Emily Hammond; and Natural Resources Defense Council Clean Air Director John Walke Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 406, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee hearing on gene editing – Hearing on 'Gene Editing Technology: Innovation and Impact', with testimony from Stanford University Associate Professor of Pediatrics Dr Matthew Porteus; Editas Medicine CEO and President Katrine Bosley; and Johns Hopkins Berman Institute of Bioethics Director Dr Jeffrey Kahn Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee Business Meeting, hearing on authority to order the use of nuclear weapons – Business Meeting, with agenda including 'S. 1928, Multilateral Aid Review Act of 2017' and the nomination of Eric Ueland to be Under Secretary of State for Management * Immediately followed by hearing on 'Authority to Order the Use of Nuclear Weapons', with testimony from former U.S. Strategic Command Commander Gen. (Ret.) C. Robert Kehler; Duke University Professor of Political Science and Public Policy Dr Peter Feaver; and former Acting Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Brian McKeon Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Armed Services Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Anthony Kurta to be Principal Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness; James McPherson to be Department of the Army General Counsel; and Gregory Maggs to be a U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces Judge Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm G50, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Helsinki Commission briefing on intercountry adoptions – 'Working Together to Reverse the Decline in Intercountry Adoptions' Helsinki Commission briefing, exploring reasons for the decline in intercountry adoptions, Congressional intent behind the Intercountry Adoption Universal Accreditation Act of 2012, the impact of the initial implementation of the Act by the State Department, and legislative and other solutions to ensure that the maximum number of children in need are connected with families in the U.S. offering permanent homes. Panelists are John Carver – a father of six children adopted from the OSCE region, Nightlight Christian Adoptions Executive Director Ron Stoddart, and Kathleen Strottman – former Legislative Director for then-Sen. Mary Landrieu Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

1:00 PM Helsinki Commission briefing on the internet freedom – ‘Internet Freedom in the OSCE Region: Trends and Challenges’ Helsinki Commission briefing, examining declining internet freedom globally and in the OSCE region and its impact on broader democracy and human rights, growing cyberattacks against human rights defenders in Russia and the former Soviet sphere, and govt use of social media to manipulate discussions and attack critics. Panelists are Freedom House Freedom on the Net Director Sanja Kelly, Mohyla School of Journalism (Ukraine) Senior Lecturer Dariya Orlova, McCain Institute Human Rights Defenders Program Coordinator Berivan Orucoglu, and Global Network Initiative Policy Director Jason Pielemeier Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

2:30 PM CLOSED Senate Intelligence hearing. – <https://www.intelligence.senate.gov/hearings/closed-briefing-intelligence-matters-190> Location: 219 Hart Senate Office Building. <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee fourth hearing on U.S. leadership in the Asia-Pacific – East Asia, The Pacific, and International Cybersecurity Policy Subcommittee hearing on ‘American Leadership in the Asia-Pacific, Part 4: View from Beijing’, with testimony from Hudson Institute Center for Chinese Strategy Director Michael Pillsbury; Harvard Kennedy School Professor of Government Dr Graham Allison; and former U.S. Ambassador to China Max Baucus Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on agritech – Consumer Protection, Product Safety, Insurance, & Data Security Subcommittee hearing on ‘Technology in Agriculture: Data-Driven Farming’, with testimony from Oklahoma State University Associate Professor Dr Shannon Ferrell; University of Florida Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering Chair Dr Dorota Haman; Janzen Agricultural Law President Todd Janzen; Kansas Association of Wheat Growers Vice President Justin Knopf; and Farmobile co-founder and CEO Jason Tatge Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

US House: 10:00 AM House Financial Services Committee markup hearing – Markup hearing on legislation including ‘HR 1153, the Mortgage Choice Act of 2017’, ‘HR 1638, the Iranian Leadership Asset Transparency Act’, ‘HR 3093, the Investor Clarity and Bank Parity Act’, ‘HR 3221, the Securing Access to Affordable Mortgages Act’, ‘HR 3299, the Protecting Consumers’ Access to Credit Act of 2017’, ‘HR 3978, the TRID Improvement Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4015, the Corporate Governance Reform and Transparency Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4247, the Restoring Financial Market Freedom Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4258, the Family Self-Sufficiency Act’, ‘HR 4267, the Small Business Credit Availability Act’, ‘HR 4270, the Monetary Policy Transparency and Accountability Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4278, the Independence from Credit Policy Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4279, the Expanding Investment Opportunities Act’, ‘HR 4281, the Expanding Access to Capital for Rural Job Creators Act’, ‘HR 4292, the Financial Institution Living Will Improvement Act of 2017’, ‘HR 4293, the Stress Test Improvement Act of 2017’ Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM Environment Subcommittee hearing on ‘Response and Recovery to Environmental Concerns from the 2017 Hurricane Season’ Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Technology subcommittee hearing on govt cybersecurity – Oversight Subcommittee hearing on ‘Bolstering the Government’s Cybersecurity: A Survey of Compliance with the DHS Directive’, with testimony from Assistant Secretary of Homeland Security for Cybersecurity and Communications Jeanette Manfra; NASA CIO Renee Wynn; Department of Defense Deputy CIO for Cybersecurity Essye Miller; and Georgetown University Edmund Walsh School of Foreign Service Associate Teaching Professor Dr Mark Jacobson Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2318, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM House Government Reform subcommittees latest joint hearing on Regulatory Reform Task Forces – Health Care, Benefits, and Administrative Rules Subcommittee and Intergovernmental Affairs Subcommittee joint hearing on ‘Regulatory Reform Task Forces Check-

In: Part II', with testimony from Office of the Secretary of Agriculture Senior Advisor Rebeckah Adcock; Office of the Secretary of Education Senior Counselor Robert Eitel; and Associate Deputy Secretary of Health and Human Services Charles Keckler Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

10:00 AM Helsinki Commission briefing on intercountry adoptions – 'Working Together to Reverse the Decline in Intercountry Adoptions' Helsinki Commission briefing, exploring reasons for the decline in intercountry adoptions, Congressional intent behind the Intercountry Adoption Universal Accreditation Act of 2012, the impact of the initial implementation of the Act by the State Department, and legislative and other solutions to ensure that the maximum number of children in need are connected with families in the U.S. offering permanent homes. Panelists are John Carver – a father of six children adopted from the OSCE region, Nightlight Christian Adoptions Executive Director Ron Stoddart, and Kathleen Strottman – former Legislative Director for then-Sen. Mary Landrieu Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

10:00 AM Ways & Means Dems, Pelosi, MomsRising on GOP Tax – House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi, Ways & Means Committee members Suzan DelBene (D-WA), and Judy Chu (D-CA) and Rep. Lois Frankel (D-FL), will join with MomsRising families to highlight real examples of the Republican tax legislations "disastrous" impacts on Americans across the nation. Contact: Brett Abrams, 516-841-1105, brett@unbendablemedia.com Location: 234 Cannon Office Building.

10:00 AM House Administration Committee hearing on chamber's sexual harassment policies and mechanisms – Hearing on 'Preventing Sexual Harassment in the Congressional Workplace', with testimony from bipartisan Reps. Jackie Speier and Bradley Byrne; and House of Representatives Office of House Employment Counsel Gloria Lett, and Office of Compliance Chair of the Board of Directors Barbara Childs Wallace Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1310, Washington, DC <http://cha.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/HouseAdmnGOP>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'Oversight of the Department of Justice', with testimony from Attorney General Jeff Sessions Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2141, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on 'the current threat at the U.S.-Canada border' – Border and Maritime Security Subcommittee hearing on 'Looking North: Assessing the Current Threat at the U.S.-Canada Border', with testimony from Assistant Secretary of Homeland Security for Border, Immigration, and Trade Policy Michael Dougherty; U.S. Border Patrol Acting Deputy Chief Scott Luck; Immigration and Customs Enforcement Special Agent in Charge Kevin Kelly; and National Congress of American Indians Colville Business Council Chairman Dr Michael Marchand Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

11:00 AM 'Community Schools: An Evidence-Based Strategy for ESSA School Improvement' briefing on Capitol Hill – 'Community Schools: An Evidence-Based Strategy for ESSA School Improvement' briefing, hosted by the Coalition for Community Schools and sponsored by House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer. Panel – including Learning Policy Institute Research and Policy Associate Anna Maier, AFT National Vice President Zeph Capo, Forest Park High School (Baltimore) Community School Director Shanelle England and 12th grade student Camilla Gavin, and Coalition for Community Schools Director Jose Munoz and Director of Public Policy Mary Kingston Roche – discuss 'the ways in which community schools improve student learning while also providing health and social supports, developing authentic family and community engagement, and supporting collaborative leadership and practices' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2045, Washington, DC www.communityschools.org
<https://twitter.com/CommSchools>

12:00 PM House debates 21st Century Flood Reform Act and FY'18 NDAA – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including 'H.R. 2874 ' 21st Century Flood Reform Act' and the Conference Report to Accompany 'H.R. 2810 – National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018', as well as consideration of 'H.R. 1207 – To designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 306 River Street in Tilden, Texas, as the 'Tilden Veterans Post Office', 'H.R. 3109 – To designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 1114 North 2nd Street in Chillicothe, Illinois, as the 'Sr. Chief Ryan Owens Post Office Building', and 'H.R. 3893 – To designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 100 Mathe Avenue in Interlachen, Florida, as the 'Robert H. Jenkins Post Office' under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

1:00 PM Helsinki Commission briefing on the internet freedom – ‘Internet Freedom in the OSCE Region: Trends and Challenges’ Helsinki Commission briefing, examining declining internet freedom globally and in the OSCE region and its impact on broader democracy and human rights, growing cyberattacks against human rights defenders in Russia and the former Soviet sphere, and govt use of social media to manipulate discussions and attack critics. Panelists are Freedom House Freedom on the Net Director Sanja Kelly, Mohyla School of Journalism (Ukraine) Senior Lecturer Dariya Orlova, McCain Institute Human Rights Defenders Program Coordinator Berivan Orucoglu, and Global Network Initiative Policy Director Jason Pielemeier Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-215, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

2:00 PM Oversight hearing on ‘The Need for Transparent Financial Accountability in Territories’ Disaster Recovery Efforts’ Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1324, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

2:00 PM POSTPONED – House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on Brexit – Europe, Eurasia, and Emerging Threats Subcommittee hearing on ‘Brexit: A Negotiation Update’, with testimony from Heritage Foundation Margaret Thatcher Center for Freedom Director Dr Nile Gardiner; U.S. Chamber of Commerce Vice President for European Affairs and U.S.-U.K. Business Council Executive Director Marjorie Chorlins; and Financial Times Washington Columnist and commentator Edward Luce Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – This measure has been postponed subject to the call of the Chair. The Committee will not meet tomorrow. – Hearing on ‘H.R. 4243 – VA Asset and Infrastructure Review Act of 2017’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

7:15 PM Bipartisan lawmakers discuss the War in Afghanistan at viewing of ‘War Machine’ – Democratic Reps. Walter Jones and John Garamendi host a viewing of ‘War Machine’, followed by a panel discussion on the ‘need for Congressional debate on the War in Afghanistan’ and the ‘poignant problems with the current strategy in Afghanistan’. Speakers include Democratic Reps. Jackie Speier, and Rick Nolan, Republican Rep. Thomas Massie, film director David Michod, and producers Jeremy Kleiner and Dede Gardner Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC 215, Washington, DC <https://twitter.com/repwalterjones>

Other: 8:00 AM The Hill forum on ‘Digitalizing Infrastructure’ with GOP Sen. Shelley Moore Capito – The Hill hosts ‘Digitalizing Infrastructure: Building a Smart Future’ forum, on how advancements in smart technology are changing the way investors view infrastructure. Speakers include Republican Sen. Shelley Moore Capito, delegate to the House of Representatives from the U.S. Virgin Islands Democratic Rep. Stacey Plaskett, Oracle Public Sector North America Strategic Government Programs Director Franco Amalfi, Kansas City, MO, Chief Innovation Officer Bob Bennett, American Society of Civil Engineers Government Relations and Infrastructure Initiatives Managing Director Brian Pallasch, Bechtel Chief Innovation Officer David Wilson, and ABB Chief Digital Officer Guido Jouret Location: 1777 F St NW, Washington, DC thehill.com <https://twitter.com/TheHillEvents>

9:00 AM Transatlantic Apprenticeship Exchange Forum – Transatlantic Apprenticeship Exchange Forum, ‘Reaching for the Moon: Can America Deliver 5 Million Additional Apprenticeships?’, hosted by Urban Institute and Franklin Apprenticeships, to address the idea of the ‘moonshot’ to create five million apprenticeships in the U.S. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Michael Bennet, Transatlantic Apprenticeship Exchange Forum President Tom Bewick, MAXIMUS Vice President Michael Bolton, Opportunity America President and CEO Tamar Jacoby, Kentucky Secretary of Labor Derrick Ramsey, Franklin Apprenticeships CEO Kimberly Nichols, and National Skills Foundation CEO Andy Van Kleunen Location: Urban Institute, 2100 M St NW, Washington, DC www.urban.org <https://twitter.com/urbaninstitute> #LiveAtUrban

9:00 AM Dem Sen. Michael Bennet speaks on school choice at Brookings – ‘Outcomes and challenges in US cities with public school choice’ Brookings Institution Brown Center on Education Policy and CRPE panel discussion on the current state of urban school choice. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Michael Bennet, Center on Reinventing Public Education Director Robin Lake, Tennessee Charter School Center CEO Maya Bugg, and DC Public Schools Chancellor Antwan Wilson Location: The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.brookings.edu> <https://twitter.com/BrookingsInst> #SchoolChoice

9:00 AM CANCELED: GOP Rep. Jeff Duncan speaks on Venezuela’s oil industry at Atlantic Council – CANCELED: ‘Venezuela’s Oil Industry: How Can It Survive?’ Atlantic Council Adrienne Arsht Latin America Center and Global Energy Center discussion on ‘Venezuela’s declining oil industry, the increasing presence of Russia and China in the country, and what lies ahead’.

Speakers include Republican Rep. Jeff Duncan, and Atlantic Council Energy Advisory Group Chair and Atlantic Council Adrienne Arsht Latin America Center Nonresident Senior Energy Fellow David Goldwyn Location: Atlantic Council, 1030 15th St NW, Washington, DC
<http://www.atlanticcouncil.org/> #ACVenezuela

9:30 AM NAACP, Clean Air Task Force and NMA report on impact of oil and gas pollution on African-American communities – NAACP, Clean Air Task Force and the National Medical Association release 'Fumes Across the Fence-Line' report at NPC news conference, on the growing threats to the health of African American communities across the country from airborne oil and gas pollution, and quantifying the health risks, including cancer and respiratory illnesses, which are caused by emissions from the natural gas supply chain. Speakers include Democratic Rep. Al Green, report co-authors Marcus Franklin (NAACP Environmental & Climate Justice Program) and Lesley Fleischman (Clean Air Task Force), and National Medical Association President Doris Browne Location: National Press Club, 529 14th St NW, Washington, DC <http://www.naacp.org> <https://twitter.com/NAACP>

9:30 AM Former Rep. Ronald Dellums speaks at GW – George Washington University Elliott School of International Affairs Institute for African Studies hosts conversation with former Rep. Ronald Dellums, who discusses 'the role Elliott School students and fellow universities can play in promoting meaningful change on a global scale' Location: George Washington University Elliott School, 1957 E St NW, Washington, DC elliott.gwu.edu <https://twitter.com/elliottschoolgw>

12:15 PM Dem Sen. Elizabeth Warren speaks on tax reform and small business at CAP Action Fund – 'Small Businesses and America Can't Afford the Republican Tax Deal' Center for American Progress Action Fund and Main Street Alliance Action Fund panel discussion on tax reform and small business. Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren keynotes, with panelists including Main Street Alliance Executive Committee members David Borris, ReShonda Young, and Deborah Field Location: Center for American Progress, 1333 H St NW, Washington, DC
www.americanprogressaction.org <https://twitter.com/CAPaction>

3:30 PM Alliance for American Manufacturing 10th Anniversary Celebration – Alliance for American Manufacturing 10th Anniversary Celebration, hosted by CNN Chief Political Correspondent Dana Bash, with speakers including United Steelworkers President Leo Gerard, Shinola President Jacques Panis, Marble King CEO Berl Fox, Green Endeavor President Chandra Brown, United Steelworkers Allegheny County District 10 Council Representative DeWitt Walton, ArcelorMittal Burns Harbor Maintenance Technician Electrical William Hill, and Alliance for American Manufacturing President Scott Paul. Guests include Democratic Sens. Sherrod Brown and Chris Murphy and Rep. Tim Ryan Location: National Union Building, 918 F St NW, Washington, DC www.americanmanufacturing.org <https://twitter.com/keepitmadeusa>

6:00 PM Washington Diplomat Ambassador Insider series event with Panama Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Emanuel Gonzalez-Revilla Location: The Darcy Hotel, 1515 Rhode Island Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.washdiplomat.com/> <https://twitter.com/diplomatnews>

6:30 PM GOP Sen. John McCain honored at 'Salute from the Chief' – Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark Milley hosts 'Salute from the Chief', honoring Republican Sen. John McCain for his 63 years of service to the nation and the U.S. Navy Location: Joint Base Myer-Henderson Hall, Commy Hall, VA <http://mdwhome.mdw.army.mil/> https://twitter.com/MDW_USARMY

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "Last week, allegations surfaced that, when [Roy] Moore was an assistant district attorney in the 1970s, he had sexual contact with a 14-year-old, which would be appropriate only if he were a 14-year-old assistant district attorney."

Stephen Colbert: "According to a recent poll, Alabama evangelicals are more likely to support Roy Moore after sexual assault allegations. Oh, I see. So 'Alabama evangelical' is like 'Long Island iced tea.' It isn't what it says it is, and it makes me want to puke."

Stephen Colbert: "This afternoon, a new Roy Moore accuser claimed he violently assaulted her when she was 16. And this latest accuser has proof that Moore knew exactly how old she was because he signed her yearbook. 'To A sweeter more beautiful girl I could not say Merry Christmas. Christmas 1977. Love, Roy Moore, DA.' So very disturbing. But it could still play well with evangelicals 'cause he didn't say 'Happy Holidays.'"

Stephen Colbert: "At the meeting, Trump got to the bottom of Russian interference in the 2016 election by using his most powerful investigative tool: asking Putin if he did it. 'He said he didn't meddle. Every time he sees me, he says I didn't do that.' Yeah, you can always trust a guy who repeatedly denies allegations. Look at Weinstein, Cosby, Ailes, O'Reilly, Louis C.K., Brett Rattner, Bill Clinton, future-Senator Roy Moore."

James Corden: [Referring to the war of words between President Trump and Kim Jung-Un] "Right now, we are this close to Kim Jong-Un and Trump doing 'yo momma' jokes on Twitter. 'Yo momma so stupid she couldn't get into Trump University.'"

Trevor Noah: [Referring to Roy Moore's sexual assault allegations] "So Roy Moore defines himself completely by the Bible, except for the part about 'thou shall not be gross.'"

Trevor Noah: "If anything, this Roy Moore story has made it crystal clear that there is a group of Christians who only use religion when it suits them. Gays, burn in hell. Roy Moore, forgive him, Father. Hillary, lock her up. Roy Moore, send him up to Washington. Turn the other cheek, but not like a gay cheek, the other cheek."

Jimmy Fallon: "I saw that President Trump is wrapping up his two-week trip to Asia. Yep. Trump said he couldn't wait to get home, put on his pajamas, and tweet in his own bed."

Jimmy Fallon: "Get this, Trump said that he asked Putin if he meddled in our election, and Putin denied it. Is Trump the guy who should be leading that investigation? It's like telling Kevin Spacey to keep an eye on Roy Moore."

Seth Meyers: [Referring to the growing nationwide sexual harassment allegations] "Researchers believe that women are less likely to receive CPR in public than men because people are reluctant to touch a stranger's breast. 'Touch a stranger's breast? I'll do it,' said these men."

Jordan Klepper: "And now that 'liberal Democrat accuser,' who just happens to be a Republican Trump voter, has thrown the election into chaos. Now gutless establishment Republicans are, of course, calling for Moore to step aside. Even Mitch McConnell is now saying that he 'believes the women.' Believing five women over one man? That's just not Republican math."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, November 21, 2017
Date: Tuesday, November 21, 2017 6:01:01 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Los Alamos (NM) Daily Post: 'Finally!' Secretary Zinke Welcomes Confirmation Of Reclamation Nominee Brenda Burman.
- Politico: 'UGH!': Zinke's Wife's Travel Caused Headaches For Interior Staff.
- Palm Springs (CA) Desert Sun: Ryan Zinke Extends Comment Deadline.
- Washington Post: The Energy 202: New 'Acting Director' At Interior Office Worries Public Lands Advocates.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: What Does Kane County Want In A Redrawn Grand Staircase-Escalante Monument?

- Washington Times: Navy SEALs Remember Christian Lambertsen, Humble Beginnings Of Swimmer-commandos.
- Daily Caller: US Forest Service Internal Review Finds 34 Cases Of Sexual Harassment.
- Snopes: Is This Ryan Zinke Posing With A Dead Elephant?
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Additional Coverage: Mille Lacs Band Rallies For Police.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- DOI Still Seeking Cobell Claimants As Deal Deadline Looms.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Chemawa Staff, Students Question Hiring Practices And Non-Native Administration.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Law360: BLM Tells 10th Circ. No Need To Revisit Frack Rule Decision.
- KNPR-FM Las Vegas: Burning Man, BLM To Study Festivals Impact On Black Rock Desert.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Panel's Approval Of Offshore Drilling Bill Could Threaten Ban Off Florida.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- The Hill: Greens Sue Trump Over Elephant Trophy Decision.
- U.S. News & World Report: Before Elephants, US Loosened Limits On Lion Trophies.
- Anderson (SC) Independent-Mail: Docks To Be Expanded At Green Pond Landing Before Bassmaster Classic.

National Park Service

- WATE-TV Knoxville (TN): Sevier County Wildfires: Lessons Learned.
- Omaha (NE) World-Herald: 'A Great Gift To America': After Long Journey, Tractor Belonging To Last Homesteader Is On Display In Nebraska.
- Fresno (CA) Bee: Giant Sequoias: Trees Suffered In California Drought.
- Clark County (WA) Columbian: Vancouver Barracks Renovation Underway.
- Government Video: GV Expo: Staying Within The Budget When Creating Video.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- New York Times: Small Island Nations Losing Faith In Global Efforts Against Climate Change.
- NPR: Tourists Are Returning To The U.S. Virgin Islands As Recovery Is Still Happening.
- Virgin Islands Daily News: Mapp Makes Case For $7.5 Billion To Senate Committee.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): Medical Evacuees And Their Caretakers Say They've Been Neglected By Mapp Administration.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: CW-1 Cap Delay 2nd-Longest In Program's History.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wildlife Agencies Meet On Guam To Discuss Brown Tree Snakes.
- Washington Post: Spend A Day With The Longest Serving Ambassador To The U.S. He's From Palau.

US Geological Survey

- Washington Post: The Case For Flowing Water On Mars Is Drying Up.
- Additional Reading.

Opinion Pieces

- Tribune Editorial: Bring The Government To The People?
- Kudos To Air Force, Donors For Operation Christmas Drop: Our View.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Bloomberg News: Trump Names North Korea A State Sponsor Of Terrorism.
- Associated Press: Trump Promises Tax Reform By Christmas.
- Associated Press: Yellen To Resign From Federal Reserve Board.
- Associated Press: Nebraska PSC Approves Alternative Keystone XL Route.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.

- "Justice At Last For The Youngest Inmates?"
- "Only Morons Pay The Estate Tax."
- Washington Post.
 - "Children Are Starving In Yemen. This White House Should Intercede."
 - "Time For Republicans To Denounce This Tax Nonsense."
 - "A Judge Makes The Right Call On Trump's Would-Be Transgender Ban."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Have They Got A Bond For You."
 - "North Korea, Terror Sponsor."
 - "Angela Merkel's Failing Center."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

'Finally!' Secretary Zinke Welcomes Confirmation Of Reclamation Nominee Brenda Burman.

The Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (11/20) reports that the U.S. Senate last Friday confirmed Brenda Burman as the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation. Burman is "the first woman to ever lead the Bureau." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Finally! After more than 142 days, I'm excited to welcome Brenda Burman to lead the Bureau of Reclamation. Brenda is a veteran of the Bureau and her extensive experience on water projects across the country will be an incredible asset for the Department. After senseless and unprecedented hold-ups in the Senate, we can finally move forward with key water projects across the country."

Arizona Public Media (11/20, Maxedon) reports that Burman said, "The men and women of Reclamation have helped the West work through our most difficult water issues for more than 100 years. I look forward to working with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke."

Additional coverage was provided by the Klamath Falls \(OR\) Herald And News (11/20, Dillemath) and Federal News Radio \(DC\) (11/20, Wing).

'UGH!': Zinke's Wife's Travel Caused Headaches For Interior Staff.

Politico (11/20, Lefebvre) reports new records – which the "liberal watchdog group" The Western Values Project says "uncover the potential misuse of government resources" – show that Lola Zinke, wife of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, "has frustrated department staffers by saddling them with extra work when she traveled with him on official business." The records last-minute show requests by Mrs. Zinke "to join high-level dinners and additions to the guest list for a conservative group's event near the couple's home in Southern California earlier this year." Politico adds that "the documents shed new light on the outsize profile Lola Zinke has established compared with the typical Cabinet secretary's spouse."

The AP (11/19) reports that the Interior Department "denied any wrongdoing." The department said Mrs. Zinke "pays her own way when she accompanies her husband on trips, and the travel is approved by ethics officials in advance."

Also reporting are the Washington Post (11/20, Eilperin), the Washington Examiner (11/20, Siegel), and Raw Story (11/20, AL-SIBAI).

Ryan Zinke Extends Comment Deadline.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (11/20, Roth) reports that the Trump Administration has "given the public an extra month to comment on its proposal" to raise fees popular national parks. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "originally set a comment deadline of Thanksgiving Day, November 23, giving the public just one month to weigh in." However, "as of Monday evening, the public comment page on the National Park Service's website had been updated to show a deadline of December 22 at 11:59 p.m."

Cantwell: Upping National Park Admission Fee To $70 Is 'Unconscionable'. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer (11/20, Connelly) reports that a proposal to raise fees at popular national parks was panned by Sen. Maria Cantwell on Monday. Cantwell said, "The outdoor economy has been an unbelievable juggernaut as it has reached 201,000 jobs in the state of Washington, $7.6 billion in wages, $28 billion in consumer spending, and $2.3 billion in state and local tax revenue." She added, "To me, this price increase is unconscionable."

Additional Coverage. Also reporting on the proposal are the Bellingham \(MA\) Bulletin (11/20, Johnson) and WVLA-TV Baton Rouge \(LA\) Baton Rouge, LA (11/20, Scheidt).

The Energy 202: New 'Acting Director' At Interior Office Worries Public Lands Advocates.

The Washington Post (11/20, Grandoni) reports that the Interior Department's pick to temporarily run the Bureau of Land Management has "raised eyebrows among public land advocates." Last week, Interior named Brian Steed to be interim BLM director. The article notes that "before that appointment, Steed was chief of staff for Rep. Chris Stewart (R-Utah), an advocate for land transfer who co-founded a congressional caucus called the Federal Land Action Group, intent on crafting legislation to put federal holdings under local control." But "in an email, an Interior Department spokeswoman, Heather Swift, said Zinke has not wavered in his stance on public lands." Swift wrote, "The Secretary's position is unchanged."

What Does Kane County Want In A Redrawn Grand Staircase-Escalante Monument?

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/20, Maffly) reports that it obtained a version of a map "indicating roughly 200,000 acres that county officials believe are worthy of monument status" for the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument presented by Kane County staff to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke. Officials had "refused to release it, arguing it's an incomplete draft that could mislead the public." According to the article, "the map offers a glimpse into how Zinke may have arrived at his recommendations, which remain shrouded in secrecy, to the frustration of local businesses and pro-monument groups."

Navy SEALs Remember Christian Lambertsen, Humble Beginnings Of Swimmer-commandos.

The Washington Times (11/20, Boylan) reports that "prominent former SEALs," including Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, last week gathered at the Omni Shoreham Hotel above Rock Creek Park to mark the 75th anniversary of a "top-secret World War II-era experiment" that was "the critical opening chapter in the evolving history of the U.S. Navy SEALs."

US Forest Service Internal Review Finds 34 Cases Of Sexual Harassment.

The Daily Caller (11/20, Volpe) reports that "after decades of denying it, the US Forest Service has finally acknowledged it has systemic problems with sexual harassment." The agency said, "Since implementing an updated anti-harassment policy in September 2016, the agency has carefully reviewed and resolved over 400 cases of alleged harassment." The agency added that of the 400 cases, 83 have been substantiated.

Is This Ryan Zinke Posing With A Dead Elephant?

Snopes (11/20, Evon) examines whether a photograph purportedly showing Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke posing with a dead elephant is true. The website concludes that "image is genuine," but it does not show Zinke. Rather, the man is identified as Ian Evans.

Additional Coverage: Mille Lacs Band Rallies For Police.

Additional coverage of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's visit to the Mille Lacs Indian Reservation last Friday was provided by the Minneapolis Star Tribune (11/19, Smith), the Grand Forks \(ND\) Herald (11/20, Davis), and the Worthington \(MN\) Daily Globe (11/20, Davis).

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

DOI Still Seeking Cobell Claimants As Deal Deadline Looms.

Law360 (11/20, Lidgett) reports that "with a looming deadline for Native American tribal members to make a claim for a bite of the landmark Cobell settlement over the alleged mismanagement of tribal trust funds, the federal government said on Friday it is still looking to identify thousands of possible claimants." The Interior Department "said in an announcement that it is in the final stages of identifying where about 17,000 Native American individuals who could make claims for settlement compensation are before a court-imposed Nov. 27 deadline."

Additional coverage was provided by the Farmington \(NM\) Daily Times (11/21, Smith) and the Pierre \(SD\) Capital Journal (11/21).

Bureau Of Indian Education

Chemawa Staff, Students Question Hiring Practices And Non-Native Administration.

Continuing its series on problems at the Chemawa Indian School, Oregon Public Broadcasting (11/20, Schick, Manning) reports that "in interviews, emails and court documents, Chemawa staff members said they have observed nepotism and favoritism over the past several years within the Bureau of Indian Education that formed a roadblock to accountability." They claim "it also raised doubts about whether the federal government's hiring processes are truly designed to ensure the most qualified staff are in place to serve the students who arrive at Chemawa." Meanwhile, "as Chemawa retained a largely non-Native administration, students have questioned why a school for Native youth has so few examples of Native people in positions of leadership."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Tells 10th Circ. No Need To Revisit Frack Rule Decision.

Law360 (11/20, Rodriguez) reports that the Bureau of Land Management on Monday "urged the Tenth Circuit not to grant four states' request that it revisit its rejection of their challenge to an Obama-era hydraulic fracturing rule for federal and Native American lands."

Burning Man, BLM To Study Festivals Impact On Black Rock Desert.

KNPR-FM Las Vegas (11/20) reports that "the organizers of Burning Man will assist the federal Bureau of Land Management in conducting an environmental impact study of the event's impact on the Black Rock Desert." The study is "part of the process of applying for a new ten-year permit to continue holding the event." The new analysis will "evaluate the potential impact on Black Rock of possible changes in the size of Burning Man."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Panel's Approval Of Offshore Drilling Bill Could Threaten Ban Off Florida.

The Fort Myers \(FL\) News-Press (11/20, King) reports that Florida Republican Rep. Francis Rooney said he's concerned about a new House proposal to open offshore drilling along Florida's Gulf Coast. Rep. Rooney is hoping to rally support among fellow lawmakers in Florida to back an amendment making the moratorium on drilling within 125 miles of Florida's coast permanent, saying, "We cannot have drilling in the Eastern Gulf. It will destroy our tourist economy." Meanwhile, American Petroleum Institute President and CEO Jack Gerard said, "The eastern Gulf is in close proximity to existing production and infrastructure, and opening it would most quickly spur investment and economic activity, which could create thousands of jobs and provide billions of dollars in government revenue."

The Naples \(FL\) Daily News (11/20, King) also carried the story.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Greens Sue Trump Over Elephant Trophy Decision.

The Hill (11/20, Cama) reports that the Center for Biological Diversity and Natural Resources Defense Council on Monday filed a lawsuit against the Trump Administration "over its decision to allow hunters to import trophies from hunting African elephants and lions in Zimbabwe." The lawsuit claims that the Fish and Wildlife Service "violated the Endangered Species Act when it reversed Obama administration policies banning hunters from bringing into the U.S. heads or other body parts from elephants and lions they killed in the southern African country."

Also reporting are Reuters (11/20, Simpson), Reuters (11/20, Simpson), Politico (11/20, Gerstein), the Washington Examiner (11/20, Siegel), the New York Post (11/20, Musumeci), and Courthouse News (11/20, Solis).

Additional coverage of the controversy was provided by the Washington Post (11/20, Fears), the Washington Post (11/20, Medina), the Washington Post (11/20, Ingraham), Bloomberg News (11/20, Wallbank), the Sunshine State \(FL\) News (11/20, Derby), and The Hill (11/20, Samuels).

Before Elephants, US Loosened Limits On Lion Trophies.

The AP (11/20, Biesecker) reports that “one month before the Trump administration sparked outrage by reversing a ban on trophies from threatened African elephants, federal officials quietly loosened restrictions on the importation of heads and hides of lions shot for sport.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “began issuing permits Oct. 20 for lions killed in Zimbabwe and Zambia between 2016 and 2018.” The FWS is “also currently studying whether to add three additional countries to the list – Mozambique, Namibia and Tanzania.”

Docks To Be Expanded At Green Pond Landing Before Bassmaster Classic.

The Anderson \(SC\) Independent-Mail (11/20, Brown) reports that “Anderson County officials announced Monday that they have received $650,000 in federal money for improvements at Green Pond Landing and Event Center, which will host the Bassmaster Classic next year.” The Sports Fish Restoration Act funding from the Fish and Wildlife Service will “cover the bulk of the $866,000 cost for expanding courtesy docks at the Lake Hartwell venue.” The rest of the funds “for the dock expansion will come from accommodations tax revenues, according to a statement issued by the county Monday.”

National Park Service

Sevier County Wildfires: Lessons Learned.

WATE-TV Knoxville, TN (11/20) reports that “an extensive after-action review completed by the Interior Department found that, while no wrongdoing was found by Great Smoky Mountains National Park crews, there were ‘weaknesses in the park’s response.’” The park is “now embarking on a $2.5 million effort to replace park communications to allow officials to not only more effectively communicate within the park, but also speak to emergency responders outside of park boundaries.” Cassius Cash, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park superintendent, said, “We did assign some of our ground folks to ride around together and make decisions, but that’s not the most effective way you do that under these kind of dark conditions.”

‘A Great Gift To America’: After Long Journey, Tractor Belonging To Last Homesteader Is On Display In Nebraska.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (11/20, Hendee) reports that “homesteader Ken Deardorff’s 1945 Allis Chalmers Model C tractor joined the collections of Americana preserved by the National Park Service when it went on permanent exhibit Monday at Homestead National Monument of America near Beatrice.” A crowd of about 160 people witnessed “the unveiling of America’s most famous tractor at its balcony perch overlooking the museum.” A National Park Service team “financed by the Friends of Homestead National Monument recovered the tractor from the western interior of Alaska in mid-June.”

Giant Sequoias: Trees Suffered In California Drought.

The Fresno \(CA\) Bee (11/20, Calix) reports that a “study shows California’s Giant Sequoia trees may not survive severe droughts and warming temperatures much longer.” The article says that “while the historically resilient trees managed to largely withstand the die-off that was prevalent in California forests, they did so at a price: depleting their underground water storage, according to a study conducted by the U.S. National Park Service, the Sierra Nevada Research Institute at UC Merced and the Chinese Academy of Sciences and Sun Yat-sen University.” Koren Nydick, a coauthor of the study and the science coordinator at Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks, said, “Giant Sequoias have this mystique, that once they reach maturity, they are practically immune to the forces that kill other trees. But during and just after the recent severe drought, we’ve seen a small number of sequoias die, at least in part to the dry conditions. It’s an important wake-up call.”

Vancouver Barracks Renovation Underway.

The Clark County \(WA\) Columbian (11/20, Vogt) reports that five historic buildings at Vancouver Barracks are undergoing renovation. Alex Patterson, facility manager at Fort Vancouver National Historic Site, explained that means “a nice, tight roof and exterior” for the structures. The total contract cost is $485,820.

GV Expo: Staying Within The Budget When Creating Video.

The Government Video (11/20, Scutt) reports that Mathew John, “an audiovisual production specialist with the National Park Service, will address Government Video Expo attendees at 10:15 a.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 29.” His session “National Park Service Centennial — Thinking Outside the Box With a Low or No Budget” will “take a look at how he created the signature video to celebrate last year’s NPS Centennial on a very tight budget and share strategies for other institutions to do the same.” In an interview, John talked “about his work with the National Park Service.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Small Island Nations Losing Faith In Global Efforts Against Climate Change.

The New York Times (11/17, Plumer, Friedman) reported that small island nations “are among the smallest contributors to climate change, producing less than 1 percent of global greenhouse gas emissions,” but they “are among the most vulnerable nations to global warming.” Leaders of small islands say the industrialized world “owes some recompense for the disasters these vulnerable nations will suffer in the years ahead,” but as the United Nations climate talks “on bolstering the Paris agreement draw to a close, island leaders say” the island décor in the conference hall “seems a cruel taunt.” Hopes among island nation leaders that they “will see a major increase in financial support to help address the consequences of climate change” also are waning, as are efforts “to expand ways for nations to adapt to future disasters.” As a result, some island officials, including those in Seychelles, “frustrated by the slowness of the United Nations process, have decided to take matters into their own hands.”

Tourists Are Returning To The U.S. Virgin Islands As Recovery Is Still Happening.

NPR (11/17) reports the U.S. Virgin Islands “welcomed back the first cruise ships since Hurricanes Irma and Maria tore through.” The article says that “tourists are coming back, but there are other parts where recovery efforts are still moving slowly.” In an interview, Gov. Kenneth Mapp discussed the recovery efforts.

Mapp Makes Case For $7.5 Billion To Senate Committee.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (11/16, O’CONNOR) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp “worked to dispel criticism of past WAPA actions and bring senators around to supporting disaster funding for the territory at a U.S. Senate hearing on Tuesday.” Appearing before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Mapp and Puerto Rico Gov. Ricardo Rosselló “made the case for not just repairing the infrastructure of both territories to where it was pre-storm – as mandated by the Stafford Act, the central disaster recovery law of the United States – but also improving it.” Mapp said, “We cannot squander this opportunity to rebuild a better and stronger and more resilient Virgin Islands to simply rebuild it quickly. If we do, we will only compound the suffering that so many of our citizens have endured. With your support, that won’t happen.”

Medical Evacuees And Their Caretakers Say They’ve Been Neglected By Mapp Administration.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (11/17) reports that “over two months following Hurricanes Irma and Maria, and medical evacuees from the U.S. Virgin Islands keep pouring into the state of Georgia at various facilities, including hotels, for medical care.” However, “medical evacuees and their caretakers, a number of whom recently made contact with The Consortium, continue to complain about the lack of communication from the Mapp administration relative to their wellbeing and, importantly, a timeline on when they will be returning home.”

CW-1 Cap Delay 2nd-Longest In Program’s History.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (11/17, Encinares) reports that the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services has “yet to release a numerical limit on the CNMI’s foreign workforce fiscal year 2018.” The article notes “that makes it the second-longest delay in the program’s history since 2013.”

According to a previous statement from the administration of Gov. Ralph DLG Torres, "the delay is possibly due to the White House's investigation on the CNMI economy."

Wildlife Agencies Meet On Guam To Discuss Brown Tree Snakes.

The AP (11/15) reported that wildlife agencies were meeting last week on Guam "to provide updates on numerous projects targeting the invasive brown tree snake, which has proved detrimental to Guam's native bird population." Among the main topics of discussion were "increased inspections, awareness programs and effective baiting methods."

Spend A Day With The Longest Serving Ambassador To The U.S. He's From Palau.

A video posted by the Washington Post (11/16), highlighted the service of Palauan Ambassador Hersey Kyota, who has been "representing his island nation for two decades."

US Geological Survey

The Case For Flowing Water On Mars Is Drying Up.

The Washington Post (11/20, Kaplan) reports that "in 2015, NASA announced that it had 'the best evidence yet' for water flowing on the surface of Mars: Dark, apparently damp streaks spotted on the Red Planet contained salts associated with liquid water." However, "in a study published Monday in the journal Nature Geoscience," U.S. Geological Survey scientists says "that those promising streaks are merely marks made by flowing sand or dust." Lead author Colin Dundas said, "This new understanding . . . supports other evidence that shows that Mars today is very dry."

Also reporting are CNN (11/21, Strickland), CNET News (11/20, Kooser), Stuff \(NZL\) (11/21, Kaplan), the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (11/21, Smith), ABC Radio Australia (11/21, Smith), and SlashGear (11/20, Roston).

Additional Reading.

- Finding Fault(s): Geologists Keep Finding More Nearby Earthquake Makers. KUOW-FM Seattle (11/20, Banse).
- Magnitude 6 Earthquake Strikes Off Samoa, American Samoa. AP (11/20).
- Will The World Shake With More Large Earthquakes In 2018? Time Will Tell. Popular Science (11/20, Griggs).

Opinion Pieces

Tribune Editorial: Bring The Government To The People?

In an editorial, the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/20) argues that a proposal to relocate the agencies in the Interior Department to the West should receive serious consideration. The paper points out "with modern communication technology, there is not the need there was 200 years ago to have all the executive agencies in close physical proximity to one another and to Congress." The editorial also acknowledges that "the risk" is that "even with the latest in online teleconferencing, we might reach an out-of-sight-out-of-mind situation where Congress — and the national press — would begin to neglect their oversight responsibilities." In conclusion, the paper think the idea is "reasonable" and the pros and cons should be carefully weighed.

Kudos To Air Force, Donors For Operation Christmas Drop: Our View.

In an editorial, the Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (11/17) lauds Operation Christmas Drop, "the Department of Defense's longest-running humanitarian airlift operation." The paper notes that "air drops are made to more than 50 islands in the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, Federated States of Micronesia and Republic of Palau." It commends "the Air Force for its continued commitment to Operation Christmas Drop for the past 65 years, and hope to see it continue for many years to come."

Additional Reading.

- Why Trump's Right On Banning Elephant Trophies. New York Post (11/20, Lowry).
- Editorial: A Welcome Retreat On Elephant Trophies. Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (11/20).

- Trump's Best Decision So Far: Doubling Down On Banning Elephant Trophies. Los Angeles Times (11/20, Hall).
- Donald Trump & Trophy-Hunting Ban – Trump Is Right To Keep The Ban. National Review (11/21, Lowry).
- Don't Hunt Elephants, Hunt These 5 Animals In America Instead. Washington Examiner (11/20, Rogan).

Top National News

Trump Names North Korea A State Sponsor Of Terrorism.

Media reports cast President Trump's announcement Monday that he will designate North Korea a state sponsor of terrorism as symbolic, but still likely to further increase tensions with Pyongyang. Bloomberg News (11/20, Sink), for example, says the move "at least symbolically ratchets up the roiling standoff between the US and North Korea," and USA Today (11/20, Jackson, Shesgreen) says it comes as the President "seeks to ratchet up the pressure on North Korea over its nuclear weapons program." Speaking during a Cabinet meeting, Trump said, "In addition to threatening the world by nuclear devastation, North Korea has repeatedly supported acts of international terrorism including assassinations on foreign soil." He also said the designation "should have happened a long time ago."

All three networks reportedly briefly on the move. NBC Nightly News (11/20, story 4, 1:10, Holt) called it "a major reversal in US policy," but Kristen Welker noted that former President George W. Bush "lifted the terror designation to foster diplomatic talks over its nuclear program. That effort failed. So will this attempt work, or is it purely a symbolic move?" On the CBS Evening News (11/20, story 5, 1:05, Mason), Margaret Warner said the action "has no direct link to North Korea's nuclear program."

The Washington Post (11/20, Nakamura) reports Trump called it "a very critical step" that "should've happened a long time ago," and vowed Pyongyang will face further sanctions that will amount to the "highest level of sanctions by the time it's finished." According to the Los Angeles Times (11/20, Bierman, Wilkinson), Trump said the designation would include "a very large" new sanction on Tuesday and "increase in intensity over the next two weeks." The New York Times (11/20, Shear), however, says that it is still "unclear whether the terror designation will provide the president with new and powerful leverage to force nuclear negotiations or will simply deepen the rhetorical war of words" between Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un.

In the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (11/20), Kristin Fisher reported the designation is "accompanied by a sweeping set of sanctions," but North Korea is "already so heavily penalized by the United States" that Secretary of State Tillerson "acknowledged this new designation can only do so much." The AP (11/20, Pennington, Miller) reports Tillerson said the designation was a "very symbolic move" with limited practical effects, although it could close a "few loopholes" in existing sanctions. The AP says the move is also "likely to exacerbate sour relations between Washington and Pyongyang." Reuters (11/20, Mason, Brunstrom) reports that "experts say the designation will be largely symbolic...a reality that...Tillerson seemed to acknowledge." Said Tillerson, "The practical effects may be limited but hopefully we're closing off a few loopholes with this."

In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room's (11/20) first hour, Jeff Zeleny said that Tillerson called the move a "peaceful pressure campaign," and ABC World News Tonight (11/20, story 7, 0:20, Muir) reported briefly that he also said the "two-month pause since North Korea's last missile test shows there is still hope for diplomacy."

Politico (11/20) too says the move "could exacerbate tensions among North Korea, its neighbors and the US amid escalating concern about the isolated nation's nuclear ambitions."

The Washington Times (11/20, Miller) reports that in making the announcement, Trump referenced the regime's assassination of leader Kim's half brother and the death of American Otto Warmbier, who was held in North Korea for 17 months and died after suffering severe brain damage. House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Ed Royce "applauded the President's move."

The Hill (11/20, Fabian) quotes Royce as saying, "Over the past year alone, Kim Jong Un and his regime brazenly assassinated his brother with a chemical weapon and brutally tortured Otto Warmbier, leading directly to his tragic death. These aren't isolated incidents, but are examples of a consistent pattern of terror." The Wall Street Journal (11/20, Schwartz, Cheng) reports the move was welcomed by Republican lawmakers, including Royce.

The Daily Caller (11/20, Pickrell) notes the President "mull[ing] relisting" North Korea as a state sponsor of terror during his recent trip to Asia, and had announced he would make a decision upon his return. The Washington Post (11/20, Taylor), meanwhile, notes that "this isn't North Korea's first time on the list. The country was designated a state sponsor of terrorism in 1988 and stayed on the list until it was removed in 2008."

A Wall Street Journal (11/20, Board) editorial also welcomes the move by the Administration, which it says rights a wrong made by the Bush Administration when it removed North Korea from the list in 2008.

Steve Hayes of the Weekly Standard said on Fox News' Special Report (11/20), "It is a significant action and it's long overdue in my view. President Bush was wrong what he said in June of 2008 about North Korea's actions." Hayes added, "If you look at North Korea's activities since they been taken off the list," it is "not a country that's behaved as if it wants to stay off the terror list."

Mara Liasson of NPR said on Fox News' Special Report (11/20), "What's interesting about the move today, I think it is symbolic. That's what Rex Tillerson said on a rare visit to the White House briefing room. He also said that as a practical matter, it might not make that much difference since North Korea already is the subject of so much tough sanctions, but it does send a signal that the US is going to be tough about this and it's just one more punishment that we can put on North Korea."

North Korean Nuclear Tests Pose Radiation Threats. Deutsche Welle (11/20, Kretschmer) reports North Korea has conducted six nuclear tests since 2006 in Punggye-ri. The latest test in September "marked a significant upgrade of the nation's nuclear program" and has sparked concerns about nuclear contamination. Suh Kyun-ryul, professor of nuclear engineering at Seoul National University, warns, "If the North Koreans continue to test similarly heavy nuclear bombs on the same site, sooner or later they will lead to a premature collapse, where radioactive material could reach and contaminate both the groundwater and the surface of the earth."

Kim Disciplines Top Military Organization. The New York Times (11/20, Choe) reports North Korean leader Kim Jong-un is "disciplining the leadership of his country's most powerful military organization, the latest sign of his efforts to tighten his grip on party elites and the armed forces," South Korea's intelligence agency said Monday. During a closed-door parliamentary briefing Monday, South Korea's National Intelligence Service told lawmakers that the North's General Political Bureau was being "audited" by the country's leadership for the first time in 20 years, and that the organization's director, Vice Marshal Hwang Pyong-so, and his deputies were "punished." South Korean intelligence officials said the organization was being audited for "impure attitude."

Trump Promises Tax Reform By Christmas.

The AP (11/20, Superville) reports that in remarks for a Cabinet meeting Monday, President Trump "promised a tax overhaul by Christmas," saying, "We're going to give the American people a huge tax cut for Christmas – hopefully that will be a great big, beautiful Christmas present." His comments came "a day after the White House signaled its willingness to strike" a repeal of the ACA's individual mandate from the legislation if it hinders passing it. The repeal "has emerged as a major sticking point for Republican Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, whose vote the White House needs." However, removing the provision "would blow a big hole in the senators' tax cut plan, leaving them $338 billion short of their revenue goal over the next 10 years."

NBC Nightly News (11/20, story 5, 1:05, Welker) reported that tax reform was "front and center at the cabinet meeting," but Kristen Welker added that "with a razor-thin majority in the Senate, the President could be imperiling the tax bill by waging wars with his fellow Republicans on Twitter." At least five Republicans "have expressed skepticism about the tax plan," and they "can only afford to lose two votes to pass the legislation. A senior official says the President will work the phones to try to win over votes." The Washington Times (11/20, Miller) says Trump on Monday "scolded Democratic lawmakers for their lockstep opposition to the GOP tax reform plans," saying, "With the Democrats giving us no votes on tax cuts for purely political reasons – obstructionism – it will be up to the Republicans to come through for America. ... I think they will, I hope they will, it's up to the Senate."

Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (11/20), "We feel very confident, but it is up to those legislators who for years, if not decades, have been promising their constituents they are going to get meaningful tax cuts and tax overhaul. And we are very happy that the House and Senate have come up with what I call Trump speed, not swamp speed, in getting their bills to the floor fairly quickly. We feel really great that both bills adhere to the President's four core principles for tax cuts and tax relief: repatriation, simplification, middle-class tax cut, and reducing that corporate cut tax rate so that we're below the average for developed countries instead of the highest in the entire OECD."

Attention Turns To Group Of Undecided GOP Senators. The New York Times (11/20, Kaplan) reports that Republican tax reform efforts rest "in the hands of a small number of fence-sitting senators with disparate concerns, like how small businesses are taxed and whether health insurance costs will spike after the repeal of the Affordable Care Act's requirement to have coverage or pay a penalty." If Democrats are unified against the bill, Senate Majority Leader McConnell "can afford only two defections." Currently, undecided Republicans include Sens. Jeff Flake, Ron Johnson, Susan Collins, and Lisa Murkowski.

Trump: Healthcare, Infrastructure, Welfare Reform Will Follow Tax Overhaul. Reuters (11/20, Mason) reports that Trump "said he plans to take up healthcare, infrastructure and welfare reform issues soon after Republicans' tax overhaul is finalized, which the party has pledged to complete by the end of the year." He said, "We'll be submitting plans on healthcare, plans on infrastructure and plans on welfare reform, which is desperately needed in this country, soon after taxes." White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Monday that the Administration will provide details of its welfare reform plan in the first weeks of 2018, Reuters (11/20, Oliphant) reports. Sanders said, "This is something that the president has a great deal of interest in and I think you can count on probably the first part of next year seeing more specifics and details come out on that."

Yellen To Resign From Federal Reserve Board.

The AP (11/19, Crutsinger) reports that "Janet Yellen submitted her resignation from the Federal Reserve board to President Donald Trump on Monday, announcing that she will leave when her successor is sworn in as Fed chairman." The move "gives Trump in his first year in office the chance to fill five positions on the Fed's seven-member board, in addition to picking Powell to be the next Fed chairman." Yellen called serving in the Fed system for more than three decades a "great privilege and honor."

Nebraska PSC Approves Alternative Keystone XL Route.

The AP (11/20) reports that on Monday the Nebraska Public Service Commission voted and approve a route for TransCanada's Keystone XL oil pipeline. Although a route was approved, it is "five miles longer" than the company's preferred path and also requires another pumping station. In a statement, TransCanada CEO Russ Girling said the company will be studying "how the decision would impact the cost and schedule of the project." The 3-2 PSC decision will likely face a legal challenge and may also require another route analysis performed for federal approval. The only Democrat in the PSC, Crystal Rhoades said that the company did not show how the project was in the public interest. Rhoades also expressed concerns over the alternative route that was approved as it relates to landowners. Meanwhile, TransCanada will now be able "to gain access to the land of holdout landowners through eminent domain proceedings."

Reuters (11/20, O'Hanlon, Lou) reports that the Nebraska PSC has lifted "the last big regulatory obstacle for the long-delayed project that U.S. President Donald Trump wants built." Nebraska Democratic Party Chair and Bold Alliance President Jane Kleeb said "we are going to fight like hell to make sure this pipeline never gets built." The PSC's decision leaves it "unclear whether the alternative route lacks any state or federal permits that the preferred route had already obtained, a situation that could drag out the regulatory process." In response to the PSC decision, Alberta Premier Rachel Notley said the project "will mean greater energy security for all North Americans."

The AP (11/20) also reports that, following the Nebraska PSC decision, Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate Tribal Chairman Dave Flute "said Monday his tribe will stand with other tribal nations to oppose pipelines." Keystone XL opponents say that approving the alternative route provides more legal "actions that could indefinitely block the project." The attorney for environmental groups Ken Winston said the vote "opens up a whole new bag of issues that" can be raised. The AP (11/20) reports that South Dakota's Republican Gov. Dennis Daugaard said he hopes those choosing to exercise their First Amendment rights following the Nebraska PSC decision should do so peacefully. Daugaard said he is planning to support the project so "long as it can be built and operated safely." Meanwhile, the Republican US Sen. Mike Rounds of South Dakota said that he is concerned about last week's 210,000 gallon oil spill although he still supports Keystone XL and other pipelines.

CNN (11/20, Hackney, Yan) reports that Kleeb said "TransCanada did not get their preferred route which means years of new review and legal challenges are now on the table." The proposed project would start in Hardisty, Alberta and reach to Steele City, Nebraska.

CNBC (11/20, DiChristopher) reports that groups opposing the project are able to “appeal the commission’s decision in state district court.” In a statement, Oil Change International Executive Director Stephen Kretzmann said that “today the Nebraska PSC chose to stand with Trump, climate denial, and Big Oil.” Kretzmann added “good luck with that.” Also in a statement, Association of Oil Pipe Lines CEO and President Andy Black said that “Nebraska recognizes the Keystone XL pipeline is in the public interest bringing good paying jobs and more affordable energy for U.S. consumers.”

Bloomberg News (11/20, Harris, Vamburkar, Orland) reports that the alternative route “could throw more uncertainty into the mix for the long-delayed” pipeline. Moody Investors Service VP Gavin MacFarlane said that “while today’s Keystone XL pipeline approval is an important milestone, it does not provide certainty that the project will ultimately be built and begin operating.” MacFarlane added that “pipeline construction would negatively affect TransCanada’s business risk profile through increased project execution risk, and would likely put pressure on financial metrics.” Bloomberg News (11/20) website posts a video of Bloomberg anchor David Weston’s discussion with NextGen Climate founder Tom Steyer on the Keystone XL pipeline project approval. Steyer said the decision is a “tragic mistake.” Steyer added that “this kind of decision, where it will lead to the old fashioned kind of pollution, is also incredibly short sighted and just plain dumb.”

Bloomberg News (11/20, Vamburkar, Harris) reports that a lawyer for landowners opposing TransCanada Brian Jorde said the Nebraska PSC decision was actually “an incredible victory” and said that “they won nothing.” Jorde also said the approved route is one that TransCanada said is an inferior path. Meanwhile, the landowners who are now affected by the alternative route could argue due process “before the state commission, said Katie Bays, an analyst at Height Securities LLC in Washington.” Bay added that “by making this a due process issue, you can involve a federal court” where there is a chance for a more favorable panel. Bold Alliance issued a statement that said they might petition for a rehearing before the PSC within 10 days or file an appeal in Nebraska within 30 days.

The Los Angeles Times (11/20, Schneider) reports that during a conference call this month, Girling discussed the Keystone XL pipeline and said that “production of Canadian heavy oil continues to grow, and the need for new pipeline transportation capacity remains high.” Meanwhile, some analysts are projecting “that even with the Nebraska go-ahead, the pipeline will not be built.” Regarding the financial feasibility of the project, Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis Director of Finance Tom Sanzillo said “there is no economic rationale, no validity to the investment calculation, no positive bottom line.” Sanzillo added, “our view is that TransCanada is unlikely to build it.”

The Washington Times (11/20, Wolfgang) reports that American Petroleum Institute President and CEO Jack Gerard reacted to the Nebraska PSC decision and said the commission “set an example for how to carefully evaluate critical energy infrastructure projects, even in the face of strongly held views and opinions.”

UPI (11/20, Graeber) reports that the decision from the Nebraska PSC said that “after careful evaluation and consideration of all the evidence adduced, and the careful weighing of all the issues, factors and aspects of the proposed routes of the Keystone XL pipeline, we find that the alternative mainline route is in the public interest and shall be approved.” The Washington Post (11/20, Mufson) reports that in the dissenting opinion by Commissioner Rhoades, she said “all human-made infrastructure degrades and fails over time.” Rhoades also wrote that “no infrastructure ever designed has lasted for eternity and there is no reason to believe this pipeline will be an exception.”

The Canadian Press (11/20) reports that project opponents “say the pipeline would pass through the Sandhills, an ecologically fragile region in Nebraska of grass-covered sand dunes, and would cross the land of farmers and ranchers who don’t want it.”

Politico (11/20, Lefebvre) reports that Kleeb said a legal challenge will be raised and also said “we will challenge a foreign corporation being given eminent domain in the county courts, with every intent to bring it to the Supreme Court if needed.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/20, Matthews, Monga), E&E Publishing (11/20, Gilmer), BBC News \(UK\) (11/20), NPR (11/20, Dwyer), the Daily Caller (11/20, White), Vox (11/20, Irfan), the Washington Examiner (11/20, Siegel), the Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (11/20, Hammel), Voice of America (11/20), the York \(NE\) News-Times (11/20, Wilkinson), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (11/20, Hart), WOWT-TV Omaha, NE (11/20), Columbus News Team \(NE\) (11/20, Jordan) also report.

State Department May Need To Reapprove Keystone XL Pipeline. The Washington Examiner

(11/20, Siegel) reports that “the State Department is considering whether it needs to reapprove the Keystone XL pipeline” following Monday’s decision. State Department spokesperson Vincent Campos said, “we won’t know about any impacts until we learn precisely the extent of any changes, something we are currently engaged in.” The Hill (11/20, Henry) reports that as the Nebraska PSC decided to approve the Keystone XL pipeline’s alternative route, “the State Department is reviewing its cross-border permit” for the project. Meanwhile, two federal agencies must “still...approve permits for” the Keystone XL project.

Rogan: Celebrate Nebraska PSC Decision. In a column for the Washington Examiner (11/20, Rogan), Tom Rogan suggests that “you should celebrate the Nebraska Public Service Commission’s decision Monday to approve the Keystone XL pipeline.” Rogan argues that although the PSC did not approve the preferred route, it “was the last major regulatory hurdle standing in the way of the oil pipeline’s construction.” While liberals suggest “that conservative energy policies are bad for the environment,” they “ignore the fact that technologies like fracking offer far more sustainable (I.E. not economy destroying) carbon-reduction potential than the Paris accord Ponzi schemes endorsed by China and Germany.”

Withering Supplies From Venezuela, Mexico Strengthens Argument For Keystone XL.

Bloomberg News (11/20, Nussbaum) reports that one of the strongest arguments to support the building of the Keystone XL pipeline is the “withering supplies of heavy crude from Venezuela and Mexico” that is “making U.S. Gulf Coast refineries more dependent on the thick, sticky bitumen that Keystone XL would” provide from Canada’s oil sands. Refineries have been built to process the thicker grades “and adapting them to the light grades that are pumped from American shale fields requires costly revamping work.” According to Bloomberg’s compiled data, “since the start of the decade, U.S. imports of heavy crude have fallen by more than a third from Venezuela, and by almost half out of Mexico.”

The Houston Chronicle (11/20, Osborne) reports that Wood Mackenzie Refining and Oil Markets Research Analyst Zachary Rogers said that “the pipeline’s commercial viability is strengthened as declining heavy oil production in Mexico and ongoing Venezuelan risk has recently tightened the heavy-crude market in the Gulf Coast.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Justice At Last For The Youngest Inmates?” The New York Times (11/20) editorializes that the Supreme Court should categorically ban sentences of life-without-parole for juveniles when it considers the matter on Tuesday. The Times approves of the recently “developing awareness that young people are ‘constitutionally different’ from adults — less in control of their emotions and more able to change over time — and should be punished differently.” The Times warns that if the Court does not act, prosecutors in a few states will still adhere to the older view of those types of sentences and ignore the so-called “mitigating qualities of youth.”

“Only Morons Pay The Estate Tax.” A New York Times (11/20) editorial argues against repealing the estate tax, saying it “would provide a tax windfall of more than $3 million apiece for the top 0.2 percent of earners, and more than $20 million for the wealthiest Americans,” but would offer “nothing for middle-class people, except more evidence of Mr. Trump’s and Republicans’ bad faith.”

Washington Post.

“Children Are Starving In Yemen. This White House Should Intercede.” A Washington Post (11/20) editorial urges the Administration to “act immediately” and compel Saudi Arabia to end its land, sea, and air blockade on Yemen. The Post concedes Yemen was already “suffering from the world’s worst humanitarian crisis” when the blockade was imposed, but cautions that the situation is rapidly deteriorating, “and yet the Saudis persist with their siege.” The Post notes the State Department “has objected to the ongoing blockade and called for ‘unimpeded access’ for humanitarian supplies,” but adds that “many in Yemen suspect, with some reason, that the White House is tolerating, if not encouraging, the crime.” The Post argues that “the White House has the leverage to put a stop” to its indulgence of the Saudi leadership, and if it does not, “it will be complicit in a crime against humanity.”

“Time For Republicans To Denounce This Tax Nonsense.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (11/20) says OMB Director Mulvaney on Sunday said that Republicans “are trying to ‘game the system’ by pretending that expensive tax cuts will expire in several years, arguing that the pretense is necessary to 'shoehorn the bill into the rules' of the Senate." The Post calls this "a gut-check moment for any senator who has ever claimed to care about the debt," and calls on senators "from whom the public should expect more – such as Susan Collins (R-Maine), Bob Corker (R-Tenn.), Jeff Flake (R-Ariz.), John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska)" to "finally denounce this nonsense."

"A Judge Makes The Right Call On Trump's Would-Be Transgender Ban." The Washington Post (11/20) editorializes that a recent federal court ruling against President Trump's proposed ban on transgender people in the US military "is a welcome blow to this pointless and cruel policy." The Post applauds the US District Court for the District of Columbia's ruling's assertion that "there's little evidence to support Mr. Trump's declaration that the 'medical costs and disruption' of transgender service necessitated the ban." The Post concludes by opining that if James Mattis' review of the policy "is fair, he will conclude that there is no reason these men and women should not continue to serve."

Wall Street Journal.

"Have They Got A Bond For You." The Wall Street Journal (11/20) editorializes that investors who invest in Chicago's sales-tax bonds, set to be issued next month, or Connecticut's new bonds secured by state income taxes shouldn't be surprised if the investments don't pay off later. The Journal points out that Chicago might be authorized to declare bankruptcy at some point, and Connecticut may seek to renegotiate some of its debt, making both bonds risky in the editorial board's opinion.

"North Korea, Terror Sponsor." A Wall Street Journal (11/20, Board) editorial welcomes the Administration's designation of North Korea as a state sponsor of terrorism, which it says rights a wrong made by the Bush Administration when it removed North Korea from the list in 2008.

"Angela Merkel's Failing Center." The Wall Street Journal (11/20) editorializes that the collapse of German Chancellor Angela Merkel's talks to form a coalition government is a good thing, in part because the parties involved in the negotiations are starkly divided on a number of issues. The Journal says that German voters had hoped for more political competition in September's election, and the establishment of a tenuous coalition is not the preferred way to assuage those voters and meet their desires.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

US Files Lawsuit Challenging AT&T-Time Warner Deal

US To Label North Korea As 'State Sponsor Of Terrorism'

Takeovers Roar To Life As Companies Hear Footsteps From Tech Giants

Germany's Political Impasse Will Stymie Further European Change

New York Times:

Trump Returns North Korea To List Of State Sponsors Of Terrorism

Germany Plunged Into Political Crisis After Coalition Talks Fail

US Sues To Block AT&T-Time Warner Merger

After Late Help For Elephants, A Question: Why?

Trump Administration Ends Temporary Protection For Haitians

Charles Manson Dies At 83: Wild-Eyed Leader Of A Murderous Crew

Washington Post:

8 Women: Charlie Rose Harassed Us

US Sues Over AT&T's Bid For Time Warner

Trump Relists N. Korea As A Terrorism Sponsor

US Ending 60,000 Haitians' Provisional Residency Status

597 Days. And Still Waiting.

Financial Times:

Merkel Refuses To Resign Despite Breakdown Of Coalition Talks

Robot Army Is Transforming The Global Workplace

Uber To Buy 24,000 Volvo Cars For Driverless Fleet

Washington Times:

Higher Cable Bills, Less Innovation: Justice Department Says AT&T Decision Not Trump's
Haitians Get Notice Of End To Protected Status, Must Go Back Home By July 2019
Navy SEALs Remember Christian Lambertsen, Humble Beginnings Of Swimmer-Commandos
Merkel's Failure To Form German Government Puts Chancellorship In Serious Doubt
Nebraska's Approval Of Keystone XL Route Is No Guarantee Of Pipeline's Completion

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Roy Moore Campaign; Al Franken Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations; NYC-Factory Explosion; US Border Patrol Ambushed; Argentine Submarine Missing; Trump-North Korea; AT&T-Time Warner Merger Blocked; Freed Taliban Hostage Family Mother; Charles Manson Dies; Black Friday Shopping; Weather Forecast; Pesticide Company Ruling; Della Reese Dies; Georgia Dome-Demolition; Girls-Charity Race.

CBS: US Border Patrol Ambushed; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; Russia Meddling Investigation; Trump-North Korea; AT&T-Time Warner Merger Blocked; Argentine Submarine Missing; Charles Manson Dies; Uber-Driverless Car; Della Reese Dies; Georgia Dome-Demolition; British Queen-Anniversary.

NBC: Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; Al Franken Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Trump-North Korea; WH-Tax Reform Plan; Argentine Submarine Missing; Charles Manson Dies; NYC-Factory Explosion; US-Afghanistan Deployment; Black Friday Shopping; Della Reese Dies; Georgia Dome-Demolition; WH-Turkey Pardon; Thanksgiving Charity.

Network TV At A Glance:

Roy Moore Campaign – 8 minutes, 15 seconds
Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations – 6 minutes, 35 seconds
Charles Manson Dies – 5 minutes, 50 seconds
Argentine Submarine Missing – 4 minutes, 5 seconds
Trump-North Korea – 2 minutes, 35 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-North Korea; Sanctuary Cities-California Court; Immigration Policy-Protected Status; Roy Moore Campaign; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations.

CBS: Al Franken Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; Trump-North Korea; Russia Meddling Investigation; Della Reese Dies.

FOX: Las Vega Shooting-Hotel Lawsuit; Trump-North Korea; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations; Al Franken Sexual Misconduct Allegations.

NPR: Trump-North Korea; Immigration Policy-Protected Status; AT&T-Time Warner Merger Blocked; Charlie Rose Sexual Misconduct Allegations.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with the President of the National Turkey Federation; participates in the National Thanksgiving Turkey Pardoning Ceremony.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a phone call with EU High Representative and Vice President Federica Mogherini.

US Senate: 11:00 AM Senate convenes for a pro forma session

1:15 PM Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee field hearing on VA services in Ohio – Field hearing on 'The State of VA Services in Ohio', with testimony from Ohio Department of Veterans Services Director Chip Tansill; Veterans of Foreign Wars Commander-in-Chief Keith Harman; Benjamin Fitzgerald of Westlake, OH; James Powers of Massillon, OH; Melissa Twine of Batavia, OH; Veterans Benefits Administration Assistant Deputy Under Secretary for Field Operations Ronald Burke, and Education Service Director Robert Worley; and Veterans Health Administration Deputy Executive Director of Provider Relations and Services Dr Kameron Matthews, and Veterans Integrated Service Network 10 Director Robert McDivitt Location: Columbus Metropolitan Library, 96 S Grant Ave, Columbus, OH Columbus <http://veterans.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/VACHair>

Senate on recess until 27 November.

US House: 11:00 AM House of Representatives meets for a pro forma session

House on recess until 27 November.

Other: 11:00 AM New Afghanistan and Iraq engravings on the U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial shown via press conference – Press conference held to give a first look at the newly-carved engravings of the Afghanistan and Iraq campaigns on the U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial – the first campaigns to be added since 1996. Participants include Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke, U.S. Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Robert Neller, The Carlyle Group co-CEO David Rubenstein, National Park Service Acting Director Michael Reynolds, National Park Foundation President and CEO Will Shafroth, and George Washington Memorial Parkway Superintendent Alex Romero
Location: U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial, (Iwo Jima), Arlington, VA Arlington www.nps.gov
<https://twitter.com/NatIParkService>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: “You might remember that while [President Trump] was in China, Trump asked China’s President Xi Jinping to release three UCLA players who had been arrested for shoplifting from a Chinese mall? Easily, the most scandalous thing to happen in a mall that didn’t involve Roy Moore.”

Stephen Colbert: “[President Trump] tweeting, ‘Now that the three basketball players are out of China and saved from years in jail, Lavar Ball, the father of LiAngelo, is unaccepting of what I did for his son and that shoplifting is no big deal. I should have left them in jail!’ Mr. Trump, maybe now’s not the best time to be implying that someone’s kid should go to jail for what their dad did.”

Stephen Colbert: “[Sen. Jeff] Flake was caught on camera dissing his own party. ‘If we become the party of Roy Moore and Donald Trump, we are toast.’ Senator Flake, that’s a little too hard on toast. May I remind you, sir, toast doesn’t cruise the mall looking for dough that hasn’t risen yet.”

James Corden: “This weekend, President Trump lashed out at NFL running back Marshawn Lynch after photos showed Lynch at a game in Mexico where he was standing during the Mexican national anthem, but sitting during the US national anthem. By the way, ‘Marshawn Lync stood for the Mexican anthem’ is also the sentence that will start 70 percent of your Thanksgiving fights this year. No question. I mean, I’m surprised Donald Trump could even see Marshawn sitting down in Mexico, through that big border wall he built. Oh wait, that’s right, it doesn’t exist.”

James Corden: “Trump, of course, shot back [at Sen. Jeff Flake] on Twitter, saying, ‘Sen. Jeff Flake(y), who is unelectable in the great state of Arizona, was caught (purposely) on ‘mike saying bad things about your favorite President.’ Favorite President? Jeff Flake said bad things about Rutherford B. Hayes?”

James Corden: “Trump also attacked a man named Lavar Ball, the father of one of the UCLA basketball players arrested for shop lifting in China, after Ball failed to recognize Trump’s role in his son’s release. Trump tweeted he ‘is unaccepting of what I did for his son. I should have left them in jail!’ And there he is. America’s favorite President, ladies and gentlemen. ‘I should have left them I jail!’ At which point, Paul Manafort and the rest of Trump’s campaign staff were like, ‘Haha, okay, let’s not talk about leaving people in jail.’”

Jimmy Fallon: “It came out that national security adviser H.R. McMaster called President Trump an idiot, and said he had the intelligence of a kindergartner. And Trump said, ‘Oh, yeah? Then why am I reading at a first-grade level?’”

Jimmy Fallon: “This weekend, Trump sent a tweet where he criticized Senator Jeff flake for saying bad things about ‘Your favorite President.’ People were like, ‘He said bad things about Obama?’”

Jimmy Fallon: “Meanwhile, [Sen.] Al Franken said that he isn’t resigning, but will spend the next few days reflecting. Reflecting is a political term meaning, 'Hoping someone else gets busted and this whole thing blows over.'"

Seth Meyers: "The White House has announced that President Trump will pardon two turkeys at a ceremony tomorrow, despite the fact that both turkeys lied under oath about meeting with Russian officials."

Seth Meyers: "The flagship location of Macy's in New York this year will require children to schedule an appointment to sit on Santa's lap. 'No line to sit on this lap,' said a man running for Senate."

Seth Meyers: "Today, a second woman came forward to accuse Franken of inappropriately touching her, telling CNN that he grabbed her buttocks while taking a photo at the Minnesota state fair. She said, 'You just feel gross like, ew, I wanna wash that off me.' And you know it's bad when you're the grossest thing at a state fair. That's where they deep fry Twinkies."

Seth Meyers: "Today, White House counselor Kellyanne Conway went on Fox to slam Moore's Democratic opponent, Doug Jones. And while she didn't explicitly say it, she seemed to be urging people to vote for Moore. ... So according to Kellyanne Conway, there's now a lower bar of entry for the Senate than a mall in Alabama. 'Hey, creep we told you. You're not welcome in this mall.' 'Well, then I guess I'll be off to Washington, DC, where people aren't so picky.'"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, November 28, 2017
Date: Tuesday, November 28, 2017 6:02:44 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: 'We've Gotten So Bureaucratic': Secretary Zinke Plans To Use His Military Experience As A Blueprint For Reorganizing His Department.
- E&E Publishing: Former Zinke Backers Dismayed By Department's Direction.
- High Country (CO) News: Interior Department Mired In Investigations (Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Faces Investigations).
- E&E Daily: Lawmakers Study Rule-Killing Panels At EPA, Interior And DOE.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- BIA Prevails In Spat With Calif. Group Seeking Tribe Status.
- Justices Pass On Challenge To Oneida Casino Land Grant.
- Tribe Wants Building In 'Trust' Status.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Washington Post: A Flat-Earther's Plan To Launch Himself In A Homemade Rocket Has Been Postponed — Again.
- Reuters: Nevada Uprising Leader Vowed 'Whatever It Takes' To Stop Government: Recording.
- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Rancher, BLM Collaborate On Grazing Research.
- Las Cruces (NM) Sun-News: BLM To Repair Access Road To Picacho Peak Recreation Area.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Proposed Law Could Mean More Drilling Off Calif Coast.
- Jerry Brown Has Meeting In Norway About California's Offshore Wind Potential.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- VIDEO: Reclamation's Testing Capabilities For Structural Concrete.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Charlotte (NC) Observer: Senate Committee Wants To End NC Wolf Recovery Program.
- Washington Post: The Grizzlies Are Coming.

National Park Service

- Hartford (CT) Business Journal: Coltsville Crawls Toward Formal National Park Status.
- Philly (PA): Valley Forge Rejects Deer Birth Control, So Hunting Continues.
- Marin (CA) Independent Journal: Muir Woods Parking Comes Into Focus At Community Meeting.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Breaking Down Migration Data.
- Australian Broadcasting Corporation: A Poison In Our Island.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): U.S. Senate's $1.5 Trillion Tax Cut Bill Includes Reductions For Rum Industry, Exposing VI Bonds To Volatility.
- Hellenic Shipping News Worldwide (GRE): Palau Registry Sails Into Top Spot In Terms Of Pace Of Annual Growth.
- Arkansas Democrat Gazette: Northwest Arkansas' Marshallese Work To Send More Of Their Own To College.
- World Crunch: Why The Vatican Is Now "Off Limits" For Chinese Tourists.
- Interpreter (AUS): Time For Australia To Forge Free Compact Agreements In The Pacific.
- Hollywood Reporter: 'Island Soldier' Review.
- CleanTechnica: New Zealand Proposes Special "Climate Refugee" Visas For Pacific Islanders Forced From Homes By Rising Seas.

Opinion Pieces

- Where Hunters And Anglers (Still) Stand On Public Lands.
- Preserve National Parks.
- Endangered Species Act Bureaucrats Are Playing Word Games That Cost Billions Of Dollars.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Associated Press: Trump Derides Warren As "Pocahontas" At Event Honoring Native Americans.
- USA Today: Mulvaney Begins Work At CFPB As English Challenges His Appointment.
- USA Today: Trump Meets With Senators As GOP Leaders Seek To Line Up Tax Bill Votes.
- USA Today: Hawaii To Begin Testing Nuclear Attack Sirens.
- Daily Caller: Sen. Schumer Opposes Federal Gas Tax Increase To Fund Trump Administration Infrastructure Plan.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "What Congressmen Are Hiding."

- Washington Post.
 - "A Hug That Says Volumes About The Situation In Syria."
 - "The GOP Tax Bill Just Keeps Looking Worse."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Leandra Costanza."
 - "America's New Energy Diplomacy."
 - "An Income Tax By Any Other Name."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

'We've Gotten So Bureaucratic': Secretary Zinke Plans To Use His Military Experience As A Blueprint For Reorganizing His Department.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (11/25, Burr) reports that Interior Department Secretary Ryan Zinke "plans to use his military experience as a blueprint for reorganizing the department to better serve the public and manage the lands and resources it oversees." One of the changes to tackle bureaucratic inefficiencies "could include moving agency headquarters out of Washington and into the interior." The Interior Department could also be form "joint teams to work across agencies to streamline decisions among the Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife Service and the Bureau of Reclamation."

Former Zinke Backers Dismayed By Department's Direction.

E&E Publishing (11/27) reports that "nine months into the job, many of those who initially supported" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "say they are surprised by his actions in office." Lawmakers, environmentalists, and sportsmen "express dismay over Zinke's review of national monuments, his decision to reopen debate over Obama-era greater sage grouse conservation plans, and the targeting of dozens of policies as 'burdensome' to oil and gas development." Also, "some Senate Democrats who voted for Zinke expressed regret."

Interior Department Mired In Investigations (Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke Faces Investigations).

The High Country \(CO\) News (11/27, Gilpin) reports that "after only eight months in office," Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "taxpayer-funded travel, meetings with political donors and other actions have led to several official probes." The article notes that "though the investigations are serious, watchdog agencies and legal experts say they're unlikely to result in criminal charges or impede Zinke's plans to remake Interior." However, "the barrage of charges and countercharges further erodes trust in the federal government."

Lawmakers Study Rule-Killing Panels At EPA, Interior And DOE.

E&E Daily (11/27) reports that "House lawmakers this week will extend their probe of rule-cutting efforts across the federal government to the three agencies responsible for issuing the bulk of environmental regulations: U.S. EPA, the Interior Department and the Department of Energy." Two House Oversight and Government Reform subcommittees will "hold a hearing Wednesday on the regulatory reform task forces at those agencies." Among those testifying will be Interior Department deputy secretary David Bernhardt.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

BIA Prevails In Spat With Calif. Group Seeking Tribe Status.

Law360 (11/27, Westney) reports that "a California federal judge Monday tossed a suit against the Bureau of Indian Affairs by members of the proposed Ukiah Valley Pomo Indian Tribe, saying the agency reasonably found that the group was only a part of the federally recognized Pinoleville Pomo Nation and therefore couldn't vote to organize as a separate tribe."

Justices Pass On Challenge To Oneida Casino Land Grant.

Law360 (11/27, Lidgett) reports that "the U.S. Supreme Court on Monday said it won't hear bids from a New York town and a nonprofit to review a Second Circuit decision approving the federal government's decision to take land into trust for the Oneida Indian Nation — a decision that Justice Clarence Thomas said he disagreed with."

Tribe Wants Building In 'Trust' Status.

The Gillette \(WY\) News Record (11/27, Bendtsen) reports that the Northern Arapaho Tribe has requested the Bureau of Indian Affairs "to take a Riverton property it owns into trust status." However, "in a letter to the local BIA superintendent, Wyoming senior assistant attorney general Erik Petersen asked the BIA to deny the request, noting that the parcels are 'located outside the boundaries of the Wind River Indian Reservation.'" Fremont County Commission chairman Travis Becker "also protested the tribe's request in a letter to the BIA, saying the tribe 'has failed to demonstrate adequate need for additional land.'"

Bureau Of Land Management

A Flat-Earther's Plan To Launch Himself In A Homemade Rocket Has Been Postponed — Again.

The Washington Post (11/27, Wang, Selk) reports that "a variety of roadblocks have forced" a man to postpone his plan to launch himself "in his homemade scrap-metal rocket" to prove that the Earth is flat. The Bureau of Land Management told Mike Hughes "he couldn't launch his rocket on public land, even though Hughes insisted that the federal agency had given him verbal permission more than a year ago." A BLM spokeswoman "said its local field office had no record of speaking with Hughes and that he had not applied for the necessary special recreation permit to hold an event on public land." BLM spokeswoman Samantha Storms said, "Someone from our local office reached out to him after seeing some of these news articles [about the launch], because that was news to them." Hughes said he was moving the experiment "to private property, albeit still in Amboy, and that it would take place sometime in the coming week."

Nevada Uprising Leader Vowed 'Whatever It Takes' To Stop Government: Recording.

Reuters (11/27, Smith) reports that "weeks before Nevada rancher Cliven Bundy led an armed standoff of militia supporters against federal agents in 2014, his son vowed to do 'whatever it takes' to keep the family's cattle out of government hands, according to a recording played in court by prosecutors on Monday." The conversation between Ryan Bundy and Bureau of Land Management agents "occurred on March 27, 2014, ahead of a confrontation that galvanized right-wing militia groups challenging federal authority over vast tracts of public land in the American West." During testimony on Monday, Bureau of Land Management agent Robert Shilaikis "said he concluded from the call that 'Mr. Bundy was going to stop this at all costs.'"

Rancher, BLM Collaborate On Grazing Research.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (11/27, O'Connell) reports that the Bureau of Land Management and "a local ranching family have completed the first three-year cycle of a planned nine-year collaborative study using management-intensive grazing to restore native perennial plants to landscapes where they've been choked out by invasive weeds." The land "along Interstate 84 from Twin Falls to Mountain Home is covered by invasive annual cheatgrass and medusahead, which overwhelm native plants and burn readily." BLM Ecologist Joe Sirotnak "said the partners in the project have scheduled a meeting for Dec. 6 to evaluate data from the first full three-year rotation of the Rattlesnake project." Sirotnak said, "I think ultimately cooperating with ranchers is the best way to do this (research). I think it would be really wise to expand this type of thing to different habitats."

BLM To Repair Access Road To Picacho Peak Recreation Area.

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (11/27) reports that the Bureau of Land Management Las Cruces District staff will start "repairing the access road to Picacho Peak Recreation Area" on Tuesday,

Nov. 28. According to the BLM, "the road was damaged from this year's monsoon rains."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Proposed Law Could Mean More Drilling Off Calif Coast.

The Los Angeles Daily Breeze (11/24, Williams) reported that "lawmakers representing California are clashing with federal regulators over proposed legislation known as the Strengthening the Economy with Critical Untapped Resources to Expand American Energy Act," or SECURE ACT. Proponents say offshore drilling has huge potential profit opportunity, with some estimates claiming there is at least one billion barrels of oil untapped in the shelf off of Southern California. Opponents note the significant capital investments and technical upgrades needed to modernize California's offshore oil rigs, as well as the environmental risks.

Jerry Brown Has Meeting In Norway About California's Offshore Wind Potential.

The San Diego Union-Tribune (11/24, Nikolewski) reported that Gov. Brown met with Statoil executives earlier this month to "discuss the possibilities of developing the first offshore wind project in California." Statoil developed the first floating wind farm in the world earlier this year. Due to the geography of the coast of California, floating wind turbines could capture an estimated terrawatt of electricity, "13 times more capacity than all the land-based wind farms across the country."

Bureau Of Reclamation

VIDEO: Reclamation's Testing Capabilities For Structural Concrete.

Hydroworld (11/27) reports that as a component of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's Technical Service Center "located in Denver, Colorado, USA, the Engineering and Laboratory Services Division, utilizes the Concrete, Geotech and Structural Laboratory to test aspects of concrete." In a video, Erika Focht, administrative assistant for two TSC groups, "gives a brief explanation of the structural testing capabilities of Reclamation's five-million-pound universal testing machine."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Senate Committee Wants To End NC Wolf Recovery Program.

The Charlotte \(NC\) Observer (11/27, Henderson) reports that the Senate Appropriations Committee has asked the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "to end a 30-year effort in North Carolina to save endangered red wolves from extinction." It was part of the committee's $32 billion spending bill for the Department of Interior and environmental agencies, released last week. Sen. Thom Tillis, "who had previously recommended the program be ended, wrote the provision and submitted it to the committee for inclusion in the bill, his staff said."

The Grizzlies Are Coming.

The Washington Post (11/27, Brulliard) reports that "since 1975, when this icon of the American West was listed as an endangered species, grizzlies in the Yellowstone National Park ecosystem to the south have more than quadrupled their range and population." In the north, "grizzlies in the Glacier National Park region also are spreading out." They are "now migrating so far that they are viewed as the vanguard of a possible union between the two populations, a connection that could help ensure the bears' health and genetic diversity."

National Park Service

Coltsville Crawls Toward Formal National Park Status.

The Hartford \(CT\) Business Journal (11/27, Radelat) reports that "while the creation of the Coltsville National Historical Park has been at a snail's pace, the National Park Service hopes to take some major steps soon, including the hiring of a permanent, full-time park ranger and the establishment of a temporary visitors center at the park that honors the innovative entrepreneurship of Sam and Elizabeth Colt." Rep. John Larson, "who championed the idea of turning Coltsville into a national park and sponsored the legislation that would do so, said he plans to meet with park Superintendent James Woolsey next month to determine if there is anything that could speed things up." Larson " said most of the slowdown can be attributed to the need to obtain agreements between the National Park Service, and the city of Hartford, the state and Colt Gateway, the owner of much of the Colt complex who has turned former factory buildings and worker housing into apartments and commercial office space."

Valley Forge Rejects Deer Birth Control, So Hunting Continues.

Philly \(PA\) (11/27, Bond) reports that "at Valley Forge National Historical Park, U.S. Department of Agriculture sharpshooters have killed more than 2,000 deer since the culling program started seven years ago, and about 170 deer are estimated to remain there." For the second year, park officials have "met their goal of 31 to 35 deer per square mile." Park officials "maintain they will limit their hunting when an 'acceptable' reproductive-control method emerges that meets their criteria."

Muir Woods Parking Comes Into Focus At Community Meeting.

The Marin \(CA\) Independent Journal (11/27, Prado) reports that "a soon-to-be-launched parking reservation system at the Muir Woods National Monument and environmental impacts at the park will be the subject a public hearing Tuesday." Carey Feierabend, deputy superintendent with the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, said, "Making a parking and shuttle reservation will be fast and easy. The new system will improve the overall visitor experience by allowing visitors to plan their trip in advance while enhancing the protection and preservation of the surrounding natural resources."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Breaking Down Migration Data.

The Marshall Islands Journal (11/24) reported that "a newly published survey of Marshall Islands migration to the United States estimates there are close to 27,000 Marshallese living in the US." According to the article, "the new statistical profile shows that 23,444 people identified themselves as 'Marshallese' in the 2010 US census and in later follow up counts known as the American Community Survey (ACS) through 2015." However, "the number goes up to 26,856 when people who identified themselves as 'Marshallese' are added to those choosing 'Marshallsese' in combination with other groups."

A Poison In Our Island.

The Australian Broadcasting Corporation (11/27, Willacy) reports that "rising seas caused by climate change are seeping inside a United States nuclear waste dump on a remote and low-lying Pacific atoll, flushing out radioactive substances left behind from some of the world's largest atomic weapons tests." Buried on Enewetak Atoll is "85,000 cubic metres of radioactive waste — a toxic legacy from the dawning of the thermonuclear age." A report commissioned by the US Department of Energy in 2013 "found that radioactive materials were leeching out, threatening the already tenuous existence of Enewetak locals."

U.S. Senate's $1.5 Trillion Tax Cut Bill Includes Reductions For Rum Industry, Exposing VI Bonds To Volatility.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (11/26) reports that "in the U.S. Senate's version of the Republicans' $1.5 trillion tax cut bill, lawmakers have proposed excise tax reductions for liquor, wine and beer." According to the article, "while it is unclear how much the USVI would lose if the law were to pass with the Senate line item, it puts on unstable ground the USVI's most dependable source of income to pay bondholders."

Palau Registry Sails Into Top Spot In Terms Of Pace Of Annual Growth.

Hellenic Shipping News Worldwide \(GRE\) (11/23) reports that Palau International Ship Registry has "become the fastest growing flag in the shipping world with an impressive 43.2% growth in the number of vessels joining the registry since 2013 according to Fairplay magazine."

Northwest Arkansas' Marshallese Work To Send More Of Their Own To College.

The Arkansas Democrat Gazette (11/23, Holtmeyer) reports that the Marshallese community in Arkansas is “working to send more of its people into higher education.” Several families participated “in a financial literacy course Wednesday, the first of many to be offered through a new program providing up to $200 each for college savings accounts for up to 200 of the community’s children.”

Why The Vatican Is Now “Off Limits” For Chinese Tourists.

World Crunch (11/24, Lin) reports that “Chinese tourist agencies will be severely punished for organizing tour groups to St. Peter’s Square and the Sistine Chapel (as well as the tiny Pacific island of Palau).” The new directive by China’s National Tourism Administration is “regarded as a way for China to put pressure on the Vatican to sever its official ties with Taiwan.”

Time For Australia To Forge Free Compact Agreements In The Pacific.

In a piece for the Lowy Institute (11/25, Colton), Greg Colton urges Australia to forge free compact state agreements with Pacific island nations. According to Colton, “if Australia were to incorporate Nauru, Tuvalu and Kiribati into a compact of free association, it would deny China the ability to become the dominant external influence in these three countries.” And “this would in effect extend and deepen the second island chain formed by the US Free Compact States and enhance Australia’s alliance with the US.”

‘Island Soldier’ Review.

The Hollywood Reporter (11/22, Linden) reviewed the documentary Island Soldier, which explores how Micronesia “has become a ‘recruiter’s paradise’ for the American military.” The film “examines the ways geopolitics shapes lives in Micronesia, a former U.S. territory that’s still deeply tied to this country, and whose citizens can serve in the American armed forces.”

New Zealand Proposes Special “Climate Refugee” Visas For Pacific Islanders Forced From Homes By Rising Seas.

CleanTechnica (11/21, Ayre) reports that “the creation of special ‘climate refugee’ visas for Pacific Islanders forced from their homes by rising sea levels were proposed by New Zealand, the country’s new climate change minister has revealed, as the UN climate talks in Bonn, Germany, concluded.” James Shaw, the climate minister of New Zealand, stated: “We want to get ahead of this before it turns into a real problem ... we want to start a dialogue with the Pacific Island countries about this notion of migrating with dignity, if things get to that point.”

Opinion Pieces

Where Hunters And Anglers (Still) Stand On Public Lands.

For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (11/27, Fosburgh), Whit Fosburgh, the president and CEO of the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, criticizes “efforts to eliminate or seriously undermine America’s 640 million acres of public lands, places that one-third of all American hunters depend on for their access.” Put simply, Fosburgh writes that America’s hunters and anglers “want to keep public land public and well-managed.” He argues that “Congress cannot keep starving the federal agencies of the funding they need to manage our public lands and expect better management, especially as the costs of managing our public lands continue to increase.”

Preserve National Parks.

This Land Is Your Land, Florida. In an op-ed for the South Florida Sun Sentinel (11/27, Richard G. “Dick”, Ring), Richard G. “Dick” Ring, the former Superintendent of the Everglades and Dry Tortugas National Park, and a member of the Coalition to Protect America’s National Parks, raises concerns “about federal efforts that would undermine efforts to establish and protect new national parks and monuments.” He hopes members of Congress will stand “up to these attacks” and protect the Antiquities Act. According to Ring, “it shows real leadership to look beyond the partisanship consuming Congress to ensure that future generations can access our great outdoors.”

Endangered Species Act Bureaucrats Are Playing Word Games That Cost Billions Of Dollars.

In an op-ed for the Daily Caller (11/27, Schiff), Damien Schiff, a senior attorney with Pacific Legal Foundation, writes that “in the 44 years since the Endangered Species Act became law, federal officials have applied it to cover more than 2,000 plants and animals, spent billions of dollars in administering it and imposed tens of billions in economic costs by forcing vast areas of land out of productive use in the name of habitat protection.” Schiff claims that the “decision-making” has not been “careful and scientifically rigorous.” In fact, “Endangered Species Act regulators have never even bothered to provide official definitions for their key criteria in adding plants and animals to the protected list.” Schiff asserts that “the government’s environmental scientists must start behaving more like real scientists and less like politicized bureaucrats.” He concludes that “we all need to know—we all deserve to know — what they mean by the words they use.”

Additional Reading.

- War On Fossil Fuels Needs To Be Ended. Washington Times (11/27, Dayaratna).
- Connelly: $70 Proposed National Park Fee Is Part Of ‘Push For Privatization’. Seattle Post-Intelligencer (11/27, Connelly).
- Why America Doesn’t — But Should — Spend More Time Remembering Reconstruction. Clarksburg \(WV\) Exponent-Telegram (11/27, Harvey).
- Fruit-ful Force For Presevation. Gettysburg \(PA\) Times (11/27, Small).
- A Letter From The National Park Service. Skagway \(AK\) News (11/27, Tranel).
- Guest Column: New Partnership Commits To Improving Lobo Gardens. New Mexico Daily Lobo (11/26, Motsinger).
- Five Ways Congress Can Make The Endangered Species Act Better. Idaho Statesman (11/25, Barker).
- OPINION – Guest Writer: Wise Investment. Arkansas Democrat Gazette (11/27, Blick).

Top National News

Trump Derides Warren As “Pocahontas” At Event Honoring Native Americans.

Media reports on President Trump’s revival of the nickname “Pocahontas” to describe Sen. Elizabeth Warren during an Oval Office event honoring Navajo code talkers from World War II are generally negative toward the President, casting it as a racially insensitive comment delivered at an inappropriate time.

After calling the Native American veterans “incredible” and “very special people,” the AP (11/27) reports, Trump added, “We have a representative in Congress who they say was here a long time ago. They call her Pocahontas. But you know what, I like you.” To Reuters (11/27), Trump’s use of the name “Pocahontas” was “an apparent derogatory reference” to Warren. Politico (11/27, McCaskill) says Trump “spoke in front of a portrait of Andrew Jackson, the former president who signed the Indian Removal Act,” as he “mocked” Warren.

The New York Post (11/27, Fredericks) says Trump’s comment “was met with silence,” and the Washington Times (11/27, Boyer) cites a reporter who attended the event who said that “there was an ‘awkward silence’ among the Navajo members after Mr. Trump made the remark.” Bloomberg News (11/27, Epstein, Jacobs) says while some in the audience laughed, “the Navajo veterans didn’t react.”

Warren was quick to denounce the comments, telling MSNBC (11/27), “This was supposed to be an event to honor heroes, people who put it all on the line for our country, who, because of their incredible work, saved the lives of countless Americans and our allies. ... It is deeply unfortunate that the president of the United States cannot even make it through a ceremony honoring these heroes without having to throw out a racial slur.”

To Jonathan Karl on ABC World News Tonight (11/27, story 2, 1:55, Muir), the President “issued a racially charged insult.” Lester Holt said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (11/27, lead story, 2:25) that while Trump often uses the “derogatory nickname” to attack Warren, “the place and moment has the White House tonight defending the President from accusations of racial insensitivity.” Likewise, the Los Angeles Times (11/27, Bierman) says while Trump “has used the insult, which many Native Americans find offensive, before, tweeting or retweeting the name 12 times,” using it “at a White House event honoring Native American service to the country crosses a new threshold for the president.”

The New York Times (11/27, Davis) says Trump’s use of the term “has drawn objections in the past from a number of Native Americans, many of whom regard his mention of the historical figure as offensive and divisive.” Similarly, the Boston Globe (11/27, Kellman, Lucey) reports

Trump's past attacks on Warren have been called "offensive and distasteful" by Native American leaders. Boston Magazine (11/27, Buell) reports that John Norwood, of the Alliance of Colonial Era Tribes, "condemned Trump's use of 'Pocahontas,'" saying it is "insulting to all American Indians" and "smacks of racism."

The Wall Street Journal (11/27, Nicholas) reports that Navajo Nation President Russell Begaye, who was in the Oval Office for the ceremony, said in a statement, "In this day and age, all tribal nations still battle insensitive references to our people. The prejudice that Native American people face is an unfortunate historical legacy." Nancy Cordes said on the CBS Evening News (11/27, story 3, 1:50, Mason) that "the National Congress of American Indians called it a slur that overshadowed the Native American war heroes the President was there to honor."

The Hill (11/27, Fabian) says White House press secretary Sarah Sanders "defended his comment, saying 'Pocahontas' is not a racial slur." USA Today (11/27, Estepa) reports that Sanders "said she didn't think it was appropriate for the president or anyone to make racial slurs, but noted that was not the intent of the president's 'Pocahontas' comment." Sanders added that "what's offensive" here is "Sen. Warren's lying about her heritage to advance her career." The Daily Caller (11/27, Johnson) says Sanders "declared...forcefully" that Warren "was the offensive one," arguing, "Senator Warren was very offensive when she lied about some things specifically to advance her career and I don't understand why no one's asking about that question and why that isn't constantly covered."

Mollie Hemingway of the Federalist said on Fox News' Special Report (11/27) that Warren "claimed she had Native American heritage that she actually didn't have, and at Harvard and other schools she was at proudly said that she had that. She's never given a good answer for how she came to be doing this falsely." The San Francisco Chronicle (11/27, Pereira) says Warren "has maintained that she is of Native American heritage, but critics are divided as whether or not that claim has actually advanced her career. In any case, Warren has stated that she believes the term is a 'slur.'"

Warren said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (11/27), "I never used it to get ahead, I never used it to get into school, I never used it to get a job. Look, this is just a way for Donald Trump to be able to try to get somebody talking about something other than what he's doing, which is advancing a terrible tax plan, trying to gut the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau."

Axios' Kight: Trump Family Hid German Heritage After WWII. Stef W. Kight writes on Axios (11/27) that after World War II, the President's brother Fred "claimed their family was Swedish, hiding their German heritage to avoid any problems selling apartments to Jewish customers, the Boston Globe reported last year." As late as 1987, Donald Trump "was still claiming Swedish heritage," writing in the "Art of the Deal," that "his grandfather came to the US from Sweden." This is significant because Sanders on Monday defended the President, saying, "I think what most people find offensive is Elizabeth Warren lying about her heritage to advance her career."

More Criticism Of Trump. In an analysis on CNN's (11/27) website, Chris Cillizza writes that Trump "insulted his way to the White House." Trump's path to the Republican nomination "was defined by his bullying of rivals – from 'Low Energy' Jeb Bush to 'Lyn' ' Ted Cruz," and he "spent the general election doing much of the same with 'Crooked' Hillary Clinton." Cillizza adds that "despite pledges to be so presidential we would all be bored, Trump has turned from an insult-driven candidate to an insult-driven president." Cillizza made similar comments on CNN's Situation Room (11/27), saying, "It's a combination of bad optics, but also just a president who I think conflates...not being politically correct with civility. He seems to think, 'Well, I'm just saying it how it is and people will laugh at this,' and people will laugh at it, some. That doesn't make it right. That doesn't make it a way in which a president I think should act. And I think it will have lasting consequences well beyond the four or eight years that Donald Trump is President – how he is willing to mainstream incivility, insult and bullying."

In his Washington Post (11/27) column, Richard Cohen does not address the "Pocahontas" controversy, but describes Trump as "a mess of a man but brimming with self-regard," who "probably already sees himself up there with Washington, Jefferson, Teddy Roosevelt and Lincoln," but who "will be lucky if he can get his face on a mug in the gift shop." Cohen adds that in 1962, historian Arthur M. Schlesinger Sr. "surveyed 75 of his fellow historians on the subject of presidential greatness. They came up with eight categories," and Trump "whiffs every one, the last being the requirement that he 'possessed a profound sense of history.'"

Mulvaney Begins Work At CFPB As English Challenges His Appointment.

OMB Director Mulvaney showed up Monday for his first day as acting Director of CFPB amid a continuing controversy over whether he or Leandra English, who former director Richard Cordray said would temporarily replace him after his resignation last week, legitimately holds the title. Coverage focuses on Mulvaney's actions, including his directive that staff ignore orders from English and his 30-day freeze on regulations and hiring. Reports also note English's meetings with Democrats on Capitol Hill and her lawsuit seeking a restraining order to block Mulvaney from taking the position.

USA Today (11/27, Estepa) reports that English and Mulvaney both "showed up to work, each trying to assume the title of acting director." While the Washington Post (11/27, Merle) says "Mulvaney's arrival represented a new escalation of tensions over who ultimately will lead the agency," Politico (11/27, Lima) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders told reporters, "Director Mulvaney has taken charge of that agency and he has the full cooperation of the staff and appeared there this morning and things went very well."

The Washington Times (11/27, Boyer) says Mulvaney "showed up for work at the CFPB's office...determined to show he's in charge of the agency." He issued a memo telling CFPB staff "to ignore orders from a rival bureaucrat who also is claiming to lead the agency." The memo read, "Please disregard any instructions you receive from Ms. [Leandra] English in her presumed capacity as Acting Director. ... If you receive additional communications from her today...please inform the General Counsel." Mulvaney's memo came after English, "who claims to have taken over for former director Richard Cordray, welcomed back staff Monday morning in an email she signed 'acting director.'"

The New York Post (11/27, Moore) says Mulvaney was asked during a news conference Monday what the President wants him to accomplish. Said Mulvaney, "He wants me to fix it and wants me to get it back to the point where it can protect people without trampling on capitalism, without choking off financial services. ... We both share the belief that under the previous administration this bureau had gone too far to strangle access to capital." Bloomberg News (11/27, Mott) reports that Mulvaney, who once called the CFPB the "worst kind" of government entity, promised "to keep the agency operating as its acting director while making changes that protect people without choking off capitalism." The Los Angeles Times (11/27, Puzanghera) says that despite English's lawsuit "challenging his legitimacy," Mulvaney "moved swiftly...to order a 30-day halt of new regulations issued by the federal watchdog agency." Mulvaney also "said he was instituting a 30-day hiring freeze."

Saying that "elections have consequences at every agency, and that includes CFPB," Mulvaney, the Washington Examiner (11/27, Morrongiello) reports, "said Monday he plans to overhaul the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau as much possible while he is at its helm." Juliana Goldman said on the CBS Evening News (11/27, story 2, 2:05, Mason) that President Trump "has consistently criticized the bureau," which has "been a punching bag for Republicans who say it saddles banks with unnecessary regulations." The Wall Street Journal (11/27, Hayashi, Clozel) says the Administration is ultimately expected to nominate a new director who will face Senate confirmation.

Meanwhile, the New York Times (11/27, Rogers) reports that amid the confusion at the CFPB, English "headed to Capitol Hill to meet with at least four lawmakers about her plans. Among those lawmakers: Senator Chuck Schumer, the Democratic leader, and Senator Elizabeth Warren, the Democrat of Massachusetts who proposed the bureau and helped set it up, according to a spokeswoman for Ms. Warren." Warren said on CNBC's Closing Bell (11/27), "As I understand it, since [English] is the new director, acting director, of the agency. She's done exactly as she should, and that is she's come to Capitol Hill to talk about her plans as director of the agency. She reached out to both Republicans and Democrats, and Republicans, so far as I know, have not agreed to meet with her, but the Democrats have because we want to hear about her plans."

The AP (11/27, Sweet, Lucey) reports that English's lawsuit seeks "a temporary restraining order to block Mulvaney from taking over the bureau." Judge Timothy Kelly, who was appointed by President Trump and confirmed recently by the Senate, "heard arguments on the case late Monday afternoon but didn't immediately rule." The Washington Post (11/27, Hsu) says Kelly asked English's attorney, Deepak Gupta, "why the court should undertake the 'extraordinary remedy' of enjoining the president from exercising the power of his office." Gupta said, "I don't deny it's extraordinary. This is an extraordinary case." Gupta "argued that English properly took over under an explicit plan of succession set out by the Dodd-Frank law when it created the CFPB, providing for a deputy to serve as acting director until a successor is confirmed." However, Brett Shumate, deputy assistant attorney general for federal programs, argued "that the Federal Vacancies Act, enacted in 1988, gave the president the authority to appoint Mulvaney, citing a Friday memorandum by the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, and a memo distributed Monday by the bureau's current general counsel."

Reuters (11/27, Rucker, Cowan) reports that Kelly "said the issues raised were 'extremely important and complicated.'" He and the two sides "said they hoped to see the case decided within the next few days." Pete Williams said on NBC Nightly News (11/27, story 4, 2:10, Holt) that Kelly "says he'll rule quickly, so for now, Mulvaney remains in charge." ABC World News Tonight (11/27, story 7, 0:35, Muir) reported briefly on the conflict, saying both sides believe "the law is on their side," while William McGurn argues in the Wall Street Journal (11/27, McGurn) that from a legal standpoint, the Administration has the stronger case.

However, in an op-ed for the New York Times (11/27), Peter H. Schuck, an emeritus law professor at Yale, takes a different view, arguing that "while the president normally has control over appointments in the executive branch, in this case, Ms. English is right." Congress "intentionally gave" the bureau "an unusual degree of autonomy." While limiting the bureau director's power "to appoint his own interim successor will be a core goal of any Republican effort to reform the agency," Congress "has to take that step, through legislation – not the president, through fiat."

A Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorial likens English to George Costanza in the "Seinfeld" episode in which he refused to leave his job after he was discovered to be faking a disability. The Journal argues that Trump is on solid legal ground in appointing an acting director and English's refusal to accept the decision is justification for her dismissal. Mollie Hemingway of the Federalist said on Fox News' Special Report (11/27), "Republicans have long claimed that this bureau is corrupt and unaccountable and unconstitutional. This response we are seeing from that bureaucracy and Democrats on the Hill seems to be saying that's exactly how we want it and that's how he designed it to be."

CFPB General Counsel Backs Trump's Authority To Appoint Acting Director. The Washington Free Beacon (11/27, Harrington) reports that CFPB general counsel Mary McLeod, who Cordray praised as having a "wealth of experience" and "tested judgment" when he hired her in December 2015, "sent a memo agreeing the White House has full legal authority to appoint Mick Mulvaney as acting director, bypassing Cordray's plan to pick his own replacement." McLeod wrote, "I advise all Bureau personnel to act consistently with the understanding that Director Mulvaney is the acting director of the CFPB," adding that the "statutory language, legislative history, precedent from the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice, and case law all point to the conclusion that the president may use the Vacancies Reform Act to designate an acting official, even when there is a succession statute under which another official may serve as acting."

WTimes Analysis: Current Fight Is Third Constitutional Battle Involving CFPB. A Washington Times (11/27, Dinan) reports that the current fight over "competing claims to be the acting director," is "the third major constitutional battle to break out over the board, which was created only seven years ago but has been continuously mired in controversy." The "unprecedented independence of the bureau and its director...has landed the agency in legal hot water time and again." The first was in 2012 when President Obama "used recess appointment powers to name Mr. Cordray the director." Another battle continues "in the US Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, where a three-judge panel has ruled the structure of the CFPB to be unconstitutional."

Robinson: Trump Dislikes CFPB Because It Was Established By Obama. Eugene Robinson writes in his Washington Post (11/27) column that the Administration is not implementing a "systematic move toward small government that conservatives have long sought" but "a lurch toward bad government, inadequate government, incompetent government." Robinson argues that the likely reason for Trump's criticism of the CFPB "is that it was established while Barack Obama was president. Trump has been unable to establish a proper legacy of his own, so he is intent on erasing his predecessor's."

NYTimes Analysis Sees "Banker-Friendly" Approach Prevailing Since Trump Took Office. A New York Times (11/27, Goldstein, Cowley) analysis casts the battle over who will serve as CFPB director as "the most recent example of the banker-friendly approach that has gripped Washington." It comes amid "subtle but steady efforts at the White House, in federal agencies and on Capitol Hill to lessen the regulatory burden on banks and financial firms since President Trump took office." The Times attributes the changes to "a combination of forces: business-friendly appointments by the president, a lack of financial and personnel resources at many federal agencies, minute changes in rules imposed by regulators and a relaxation in how bank examiners supervise large institutions," as well as "a dramatic change in tone from the White House."

Trump Meets With Senators As GOP Leaders Seek To Line Up Tax Bill Votes.

USA Today (11/27, Jackson, Jackson) reports that President Trump “met Monday with Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee. He heads to Capitol Hill on Tuesday for lunch with the full Senate Republican Conference.” The Washington Times (11/27, Miller) reports that Senate Republicans emerged from the meeting “sounding optimistic, or at least hopeful, that the tax cut bill will get finished before the end of the year.” Sen. Pat Toomey said, “There is growing momentum for this and I’m confident we will get it done soon.”

The New York Times (11/27, A1, Tankersley) reports that “with several Republican senators not yet committed to supporting the $1.5 trillion tax plan, the week is expected to be punctuated by behind-the-scenes arm twisting and deal-making as Republican leaders work to find enough votes to pass the bill along party lines.” Reuters (11/27, Morgan) reports that Senate Majority Whip Cornyn said a vote is expected this week, though the Washington Examiner (11/27, Ferrechio, Lawler) reports that “Republicans are not done negotiating the details of the bill.” Sens. Steve Daines and Ron Johnson “said they can’t vote to pass the bill unless small business tax breaks are expanded,” and The Tennessean (11/27, Jackson, Jackson) reports that Sen. Bob Corker “is among a handful of Senate Republicans still on the fence about the bill.”

The Wall Street Journal (11/27, A1, Rubin, Hughes) reports that Sens. Susan Collins, Jeff Flake, James Lankford, John McCain, Jerry Moran, Lisa Murkowski, and Marco Rubio have also expressed concerns about parts of the bill. The Washington Times (11/27, Sherfinski) reports, “Leaders did get a boost Monday when Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky – the lone Republican senator who voted against the 2018 budget plan last month – announced that he supports the tax package as it stands now.”

On ABC World News Tonight (11/27, story 3, 0:35, Muir), Jon Karl reported that with unanimous Democratic opposition, GOP leaders “can only afford to lose two Republican votes in the Senate.” Jonathan Swan of Axios said on Fox News Special Report (11/27), “Tomorrow, there’s a budget vote which is kind of a proxy for this. They will be watching Corker and Johnson. They are not there yet, and they are worried. ... The fact is they don’t have the votes and they are concerned.” NBC Nightly News (11/27, story 2, 0:35, Welker) and the New York Post (11/27, Fredericks) also had similar items on the hunt for votes.

WPost: Bill Would Increase Deficit, Cost Americans Health Coverage. The Washington Post (11/27) says in an editorial that the Congressional Budget Office “has once again delivered a message Republicans do not want to hear but should seriously consider: Their latest tax bill would balloon the deficit while significantly reducing the number of Americans with access to health care. ... Passing this bill would be more of a confirmation that Republicans are incapable of governing than passing no bill at all.”

Krugman: Bill Is “Biggest Tax Scam In History.” Paul Krugman writes in the New York Times (11/27) that “the bill Republican leaders are trying to ram through this week without hearings, without time for even a basic analysis of its likely economic impact, is the biggest tax scam in history. ... One way or another, the bill would hurt most Americans. The only big winners would be the wealthy” through “a huge redistribution of income from lower- and middle-income families to corporations and business owners.”

Merck CEO: Senate Tax Bill Eliminates US Companies’ Disadvantage. In a Wall Street Journal (11/27) op-ed, Merck Chairman/CEO Kenneth Frazier writes that the Senate GOP tax bill would be good for US business by creating a so-called “territorial” tax system that does not tax profits earned abroad. Frazier writes that this is how foreign competitors tax their companies, and that the current US system puts American companies at a disadvantage.

Hawaii To Begin Testing Nuclear Attack Sirens.

USA Today (11/27, Bacon) reports Hawaii on Friday will begin testing “a warning siren to prepare for the possibility of nuclear attack, state officials say.” Vern Miyagi, administrator for the state’s emergency management agency, said the sirens would notify the public to “get inside, stay inside and stay tuned” for more information. The first test will take place Friday and will take place “the first business day of each month after that.” The Washington Post (11/27, Lyte, Wootson) says officials in Hawaii are “walking a delicate line — planning for a catastrophe while assuring residents and tourists alike that they can keep sipping beverages from coconuts without alarm.” The tests, says the Post, “will be an audible example of the growing strife with North Korea.”

Russia Encouraged By Lull In North Korean Weapon Tests. The Washington Post (11/27, Taylor) reports that during a visit to South Korea Monday, Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Igor Morgulov “warned that the situation on the Korean Peninsula could become ‘apocalyptic’ but added that he had one key reason to be hopeful: North Korea had not tested any weapons in more than two months." Said Morgulov, "We greatly value that North Korea preserves the regime of silence for two months already, and Russia actively works to make sure that the current regime continues as long as possible." The Post says his comments reflect "a rare burst of optimism in the ongoing standoff over North Korea's weapons program," but cautions that North Korea's "break in weapons testing may be seasonal, rather than strategic."

South Korea's Loudspeakers Blast Word Of Defecting Soldier's Ill Health. The Los Angeles Times (11/27, Stiles) reports that South Korea's latest announcement on its "high-decibel loudspeakers" on the border with North Korea says that a soldier "defected two weeks ago in a daring afternoon escape." The messages proclaim that the soldier — who was shot at least four times as he escaped and has been treated at a hospital near Seoul — "is expected to recover from his injuries, according to South Korean military officials." The messages "also say the soldier suffered from life-threatening malnutrition." The Times says word of the soldier's ill health "could be an especially demoralizing message to North Korea's front-line troops and others within earshot of the speakers."

Japan Suspects "Ghost Ship" Washed Ashore Was Occupied By North Korean Defectors. The Washington Post (11/27, Wootson) reports that a "ghost ship" washed ashore recently on the coast of Japan, and investigators suspect the bodies of those aboard may have been trying to defect from North Korea. It is unclear, however, "how long those who were aboard had been there or when they died." According to Sky News, "more than 40 boats full of dead people have washed up this year" in Japan.

Sen. Schumer Opposes Federal Gas Tax Increase To Fund Trump Administration Infrastructure Plan.

The Daily Caller (11/27, White) reports that Sen. Charles Schumer, a Democrat from New York, opposes efforts led by Republicans "to raise the federal gas tax...to help finance the Trump administration's effort to resuscitate the country's highways." In discussing the push to increase the gas tax, Schumer said "the bottom line is that we don't want to raise taxes on working people right now." Schumer added, "as it stands now that is where we are at. Income distribution is so bad, I would rather pay for infrastructure by taking the money that comes from overseas [repatriation] and putting it into infrastructure." Meanwhile, Republicans in California are leading the charge against a gas tax increase championed by California's Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"What Congressmen Are Hiding." A New York Times (11/27) editorial says that "decades of hushed-up complaints show sexual misconduct is as terrible an open secret in Congress as in Hollywood. Legislators have a chance to correct their poor handling of a national problem. They should seize it."

Washington Post.

"A Hug That Says Volumes About The Situation In Syria." The Washington Post (11/27) editorializes that, regarding efforts to resolve the civil war in Syria, "Russia has supplanted the United States as the convening power of the...conflict." The Post criticizes President Trump's endorsement of Vladimir Putin's plans that "nominally entail new negotiations between the Assad regime and opposition groups over a new constitution," but could also advance Putin's goals of "sustaining the regime in power indefinitely, providing a new platform for Russia in the Middle East and marginalizing the United States." The Post labels Trump's stance, following President Obama's poor record on Syria, "an acceleration of the collapse of U.S. global leadership."

"The GOP Tax Bill Just Keeps Looking Worse." The Washington Post (11/27) says in an editorial that the Congressional Budget Office "has once again delivered a message Republicans do not want to hear but should seriously consider: Their latest tax bill would balloon the deficit while significantly reducing the number of Americans with access to health care. ... Passing this bill would be more of a confirmation that Republicans are incapable of governing than passing no bill at all."

Wall Street Journal.

"Leandra Costanza." A Wall Street Journal (11/26) editorial likens Leandra English, who claims she is the legitimate acting director of CFPB, to George Costanza in the "Seinfeld" episode in which he refused to leave his job after he was discovered to be faking a disability. The Journal argues that Trump is on solid legal ground in appointing an acting director and English's refusal to accept the decision is justification for her dismissal.

"America's New Energy Diplomacy." A Wall Street Journal (11/27) editorial welcomes a five-year deal signed last week by Poland, which wants to reduce its reliance on Russian energy, to buy American liquefied natural gas. The agreement, it says, highlights how the US energy boom from the fracking can serve the nation's interests overseas.

"An Income Tax By Any Other Name." The Wall Street Journal (11/27) editorializes that a King County Superior Court ruling against a 2.25% tax imposed against wealthy residents of Seattle was a pleasant development. Judge John Ruhl of the Superior Court only ruled on the statutory case against the law, not the constitutionality of it. The Journal calls the decision a win for the rule of law.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Senators Seek Changes To Tax Bill As Busy Week Kicks Off
Trump Appointee Asserts Control Over CFPB For Now
Wells Fargo Bankers, Chasing Bonuses, Overcharged Clients
Produce Or Else: Wal-Mart And Kroger Get Tough With Food Suppliers On Delays

New York Times:

Senators Scramble To Advance Tax Bill That Increasingly Rewards Wealthy
2 Bosses Show Up To Lead The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau
How A Radio Shack Robbery Could Spur A New Era In Digital Privacy
Prince Harry Casts Aside Ghosts Of Royal Marriages Past
What's In That Can Of Chock Full O'Nuts? 'No Nuts,' Can Promises

Washington Post:

Standoff Over The Control Of CFPB
Post Was Approached With False Claim About Moore
American Says Yes To Harry, And To A New World
Critics Seek More Light On Hill Harassment
Justice Dept. Portrays HBO As A Juggernaut, But Is It?

Financial Times:

Bitcoin Stirs Volatility Fears As It Heads For \$10,000
New York Trial Threatens To Aggravate Turkey-US Relations
Meredith Looking To Dismantle Time Inc After \$2.8bn Takeover

Washington Times:

Fight Over CFPB A Constitution Clash As Trump's Pick, Liberal Fight In Court
With Powers Over Biggest U.S. Corporations, CFPB A Magnet For Constitutional Clashes
Grijalva's Secret Deal With Ex-Staffer Exposes Capitol Hill 'Hush Fund' To Cover Up Bad Behavior
Anti-Semitism Panel Featuring Palestinian Activist Linda Sarsour Stokes Left's Split On Israel
GI Bill Students Caught In Bureaucratic Battle Over For-Profit Ashford University

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Prince Harry Engagement 1; White House-Code Talkers; White House-Tax Reform; Al Franken Sexual Allegations; John Conyers Sexual Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; CFPB Appointment; Russia Meddling Investigation; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Pope-Myanmar Visit; Holiday Shopping; Texas-Mall Shooting; Florida-Freight Train Derailing; White House-Christmas Tree; Prince Harry Engagement 2.

CBS: Prince Harry Engagement 1; CFPB Appointment; White House-Code Talkers; Al Franken Sexual Allegations; Massage Chain Sexual Allegations; Saudi Arabia-Gender Equality; Anti-Smoking TV Ads; Holiday Shopping; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Dictionary. Com Word Of The Year; Prince Harry Engagement 2.

NBC: White House-Code Talkers; White House-Tax Reform; Prince Harry Engagement; CFPB Appointment; Al Franken Sexual Allegations; John Conyers Sexual Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; Holiday Shopping; Indonesia-Volcano Eruption; Florida-Freight Train Derailing; Massage Chain Sexual Allegations; Golden Globe Award Host; White House-Christmas Tree; Meteor Sighting; Teen School Charity.

Network TV At A Glance:

Prince Harry Engagement – 12 minutes, 45 seconds
White House-Code Talkers – 6 minutes, 10 seconds
CFPB Appointment – 4 minutes, 50 seconds
Indonesia-Volcano Eruption – 3 minutes
AI Franken Sexual Allegations – 2 minutes, 35 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation; White House-Code Talkers; White House-Tax Reform Plan; Supreme Court-Maryland Gun Ruling.

CBS: White House-Tax Reform Plan; White House-Code Talkers; Walter Scott Shooting Trial; Prince Harry Engagement; Navy Recruitment Requirement.

FOX: Congress-Sexual Harassment; AI Franken Sexual Allegations; CFPB Appointment.

NPR: AI Franken Sexual Allegations; Roy Moore Campaign; Pope-Myanmar Visit.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Speaks with the Republican Senate Caucus; meets with congressional leadership.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers keynote remarks at Israel's Mission to the United Nations event celebrating the 70th anniversary of the UN's vote calling for the establishment of a Jewish State in the Land of Israel; delivers remarks at the Hudson Institute's 2017 Herman Kahn Award Dinner.

US Senate: 9:45 AM Senate Banking Committee considers Fed governor nominee – Nominations hearing considers Jerome Powell to be Federal Reserve System Chairman of the Board of Governors * President Donald Trump announced Powell's nomination at the beginning of the month, and, if confirmed, he will replace Janet Yellen in February after she has served just one term * Nominations hearing immediately follows Executive Session, with agenda including nominations of Brian Montgomery to be Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for Housing and Federal Housing Commissioner, Robert Hunter Kurtz to be Assistant Secretary for Public and Indian Housing, and Suzanne Israel Tufts to be Assistant Secretary for Administration Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee hearing on Higher Education Act reauthorization – Hearing on 'Reauthorizing the Higher Education Act: Examining Proposals to Simplify the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA)', with testimony from National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators President Justin Draeger; Colorado Community College System President Dr Nancy McCallin; Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center Senior Fellow Dr Kim Rueben; Columbia University Teachers College Associate Professor of Economics and Education Dr Judith Scott-Clayton; and YWCA of Richmond Shelter Diversion Specialist Elaine Williams Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'S.1241: Modernizing AML Laws to Combat Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing' Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 226, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Public Works subcommittee considers TVA nominees – Clean Air and Nuclear Safety Subcommittee nominations hearing considers Kenneth Allen, A.D. Frazier, Jeffrey Smith, and James Thompson III to be Tennessee Valley Authority Board of Directors members Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 406, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Christopher Ashley Ford to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Non-Proliferation; and Yleem Poblete to be Assistant Secretary of State for Verification and Compliance Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

1:00 PM President Trump attends Senate Republican policy lunch – President Donald Trump addresses Republican senators at their weekly policy lunch, discussing tax reform legislation and the fall legislative agenda Location: U.S. Capitol, Mansfield Rm, Washington, DC

<http://src.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateGOP>

2:30 PM Senate Budget Committee considers FY'18 budget resolution legislation – Business Meeting, to consider 'S. XX, To provide for reconciliation pursuant to title II of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2018' Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 608, Washington, DC <http://budget.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateBudget>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

US House: 10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee field hearing on securing public areas of transportation systems – Transportation and Protective Security Subcommittee field hearing on 'Securing Public Areas of Transportation Systems: Stakeholder Perspectives', with testimony from Delaware River Port Authority Public Safety Director of Homeland Security and Emergency Management Charles Cunningham; Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) Transit Police Chief Thomas Nestel III; New Jersey State Police Special Operations Section Lieutenant Douglas Lemanowicz; and New Jersey Transit Police Chief Christopher Trucillo Location: Trenton City Hall, 319 E State St, Trenton, NJ Trenton homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:30 PM House Oversight Committee field hearing on combating the opioid crisis – Field hearing on 'Combating the Opioid Crisis', with testimony from President's Commission on Combating Drug Addiction and the Opioid Crisis Chairman (and outgoing New Jersey Governor) Chris Christie; Office of National Drug Control Policy Acting Director Richard Baum; Baltimore City Health Commissioner Dr Leana Wen; and Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health's Dr Caleb Alexander Location: The Johns Hopkins Hospital, 1800 Orleans St, Baltimore, MD <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

2:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including consideration of 'H.R. 2768 – Fowler and Boskoff Peaks Designation Act', 'H.R. 1491 – Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians Land Affirmation Act of 2017', as amended, 'H.R. 3115 – Superior National Forest Land Exchange Act of 2017', as amended, 'H.R. 995 – 21st Century Respect Act', as amended, 'H.R. 2228 – Law Enforcement Mental Health and Wellness Act of 2017', as amended, and 'H.R. 2615 – Gulf Islands National Seashore Land Exchange Act of 2017' under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 3017, the Brownfields Enhancement, Economic Redevelopment, and Reauthorization Act of 2017' and 'H.R. 3905, the Minnesota's Economic Rights in the Superior National Forest Act' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

7:15 PM House Democratic Caucus holds informal holiday reception with media – House Democratic Caucus Chairman Joe Crowley and Vice Chair Linda Sanchez host informal, off-the-record 'Reporters & Representatives holiday reception', giving Democratic members an opportunity to socialize with the Capitol Hill press corps Location: U.S. Capitol, , HVC-201, Washington, DC <http://www.dems.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseDemocrats>

Other: 8:00 AM CyberCon – CyberCon 2017: Beyond Cybersecurity – 'forum for dialogue on strategy and innovation to secure federal and defense networks, as well as private sector networks that hold their sensitive data'. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, Republican Rep. Elise Stefanik, State Department Policy, Liaison, and Training Office Director Deborah Pierre-Louis, GSA Federal Systems Integration and Management Center (FEDSIM) Homeland Sector Director Jim Piche, Cisco Technical Solutions Architect Joey Muniz, and Federal Times and Fifth Domain Editor Aaron Boyd Location: The Ritz-Carlton, Pentagon City, 1250 S Hayes St, Arlington, VA <http://cybercon.federaltimes.com/> <https://twitter.com/FederalTimes>

8:30 AM GOP Rep. Kevin Brady speaks on tax reform at AEI – 'Opportunities for tax reform' American Enterprise Institute discussion with House Committee on Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady, who speaks on 'the prospects for, opportunities of, and challenges posed by fundamental tax reform' Location: American Enterprise Institute, 1789 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC www.aei.org <https://twitter.com/AEI>

2:00 PM Dem Rep. John Larson speaks on carbon tax at Brookings – 'Can tax reform include a carbon tax?' Brookings Institution Tax Policy Center and Cross Brookings Initiative on Energy and Climate panel discussion on the prospects for tax reform and the potential to include a carbon tax in a broader bipartisan bill. Speakers include keynote Democratic Rep. John Larson, and Brookings Institution Economic Studies Senior Fellow Adam Looney, and The Niskanen Center

President Jerry Taylor Location: The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.brookings.edu> <https://twitter.com/BrookingsInst> #CarbonTax

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "Today, President Trump met with Native American World War II heroes and met with them to apologize for America's history and the way it has treated...no, just messing with you. He made it worse."

Trevor Noah: "Now as a Democrat, you would be loving this, because going after Trump for siding with a sex offender is like shooting fish in a barrel. The only problem is that Democrats are in a barrel of their own. ... Now, Michigan Rep. John Conyers, the longest-serving member on Capitol Hill, he voted for the original Voting Rights Act. While he was making history, he was doing it all without pants."

Trevor Noah: "Turns out even congressional icons have gone to the school of Weinstein. What makes it weirder in this story is [Rep. John Conyers is] not wearing pants, but he's still wearing his shirt, like a civil rights Winnie the Pooh."

Jimmy Fallon: "The other day, President Trump tweeted that he turned down an offer to be Time magazine Person of the Year. That's not all. Today, he said that he turned down the chance to marry Prince Harry. ... But as I mentioned, Trump's still saying Time magazine called to offer him Person of the Year, and he turned it down. I'm not sure if the call is genuine, because if you listen, you can hear Hillary laughing on the other end."

Jimmy Fallon: "The White House Christmas tree arrived the other day. And it will stay there for about six weeks, which will make it the longest-serving member of the Trump Administration."

Jimmy Fallon: "You guys, today is Cyber Monday. It's the day millions of Americans go online and enter their credit card info. Or as Russia calls it, 'It's the most wonderful time of the year.'"

Seth Meyers: "According to Vanity Fair, during their visit to the Vatican in May, Pope Francis was very warm and kind to First Lady Melania Trump, but not to others in the family. Though, as a rule, the Pope is always kind to people who swing open the cathedral door and scream 'Sanctuary!'"

Seth Meyers: "The FBI received over 200,000 requests for instant gun background checks on Black Friday, setting a new record for the most ever in a single day. So whatever you do on Christmas morning, don't shake your presents."

Conan O'Brien: "At 93 years, 167 days old, President George W.H. Bush is now the longest-living President in history. ... After hearing this, Melania Trump said, 'Please, God, don't tell me they all live that long.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Time magazine has been bought by the billionaire right-wing Koch brothers. Critics say buying Time magazine could give the Koches unparalleled political influence over America in 1986."

Jordan Klepper: "The terminally ill New York Times is reporting that Donald Trump has been telling people since January that the famous Access Hollywood tape is not authentic. ... And also, Trump said it was locker room talk, in this conversation that allegedly happened on a bus. A locker room that's also a bus? What is it, 'The Jetsons'?"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, October 3, 2017
Date: Tuesday, October 03, 2017 7:03:06 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Los Angeles Times: Zinke Under Investigation For Taxpayer-Funded Flights.
- E&E Publishing: Zinke Champions Oil And Gas During Clean Energy Week.
- Federal News Radio (DC): How Interior, NGA, DHS Provided A Common Picture For Hurricane First Responders.
- Knoxville (TN) News Sentinel: Secretary Of Agriculture Wants Firefighting Funding Restructured.
- Law360: Statoil Loses Challenge To DOI Royalty Reports Penalty.
- Daily Beast: The Inside Story Of How Palmer Luckey Scored A Meeting With The Interior Secretary.
- Forbes: With His National Monument Proposal, Zinke Proves He Is No Teddy Roosevelt.

- Washington Post: Disloyalty Slur Latest In Series Showing Trump Administration's Mistrust Of Feds.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Auditors Say Montana Tribe Can't Account For $3.5 Million.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Daily Yonder: BLM Backs Out Of Sage-Grouse Pact, Possibly Prompting Litigation And Lost Revenue.
- Associated Press: New Mexico Oil Producers Concerned About Permit Backlog.
- Bismarck (ND) Tribune: BLM Recommends Including Minerals Near Theodore Roosevelt National Park In Lease Sale.
- Daily Caller: Anti-Frackers Go For Broke Against Trump.
- Southwest Colorado Journal: Proposed Hovenweep Drilling Criticized For Harm To Views, Night Sky.
- U.S. News & World Report: Supreme Court Won't Weigh In On Cliven Bundy Lawyer Issue.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Drillers Decline Trump's Marine Sanctuary Offer.
- New York To BOEM: Here's Where We Can Build Offshore Wind.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Delta Tunnels Money Fight Wrapped Up In Water History.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Plattsburgh (NY) Press Republican: Gillibrand Proposes Bill To Combat Invasive Beetle.
- Hilton Head Island (SC) Packet: Savannah Wildlife Refuge Closed 3 Weeks After Irma. Here's Why.
- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Tests Verify Western Washington Has A Wolf.
- VTDigger (VT): Margolis: Scott Appeals To His Base With Conte Refuge Stance.

National Park Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Court Backs Hovercraft Ban In Alaska's National Preserves.
- New York Times: Nude Sculpture Four Stories Tall Planned For National Mall.
- Cody (WY) Enterprise: County, State Miss Out On Revenue From Park.
- Sacramento (CA) Bee: Proposed Fence Faces Opposition At Former Tule Lake Internment Camp.
- U.S. News & World Report: Yellowstone National Park Bison Numbers Down From Last Year.
- Delmarva (MD) Daily Times: 100 Sea Turtles Hatch At Assateague, Head Out To Sea.
- Idaho State Journal: On Mountain Goats And Burros.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- USA Today: Trump To Visit Puerto Rico Tuesday.

US Geological Survey

- San Jose (CA) Mercury News: Can Scientists Predict Yosemite Rock Falls?
- KSJR-FM Collegeville (MN): Study: Chemicals Affecting Fish In Great Lakes Rivers.

Top National News

- ABC: Media Analyses: "Somber" Trump Delivers "Measured" Remarks On Las Vegas Shooting.
- New York Times: "Top Officials": GOP Can't Rule Out Tax Increase For Some Middle Class Taxpayers.
- Politico: Trump Considers Executive Order On Welfare.
- The Hill: Poll Finds Most Americans Want Federal Government To Address Climate Change.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Chaos In Catalonia."
- Washington Post.
 - "Catalonia Held A Referendum. Russia Won."
 - "Trump Could Help Refugees. Instead He Shrugs."
 - "The Worst Kind Of American Exceptionalism."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "An Act Of Pure Evil."
 - "Of Judges And Gerrymanders."
 - "Fruit Flies And Your Insomnia."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Zinke Under Investigation For Taxpayer-Funded Flights.

The Los Angeles Times (10/2, Halpe) reports that the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General has launched an investigation into whether Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "taxpayer-funded flights on private planes...were a legitimate government expense." The investigation comes in the wake of "news reports late last week that revealed a $12,375 flight Zinke chartered from Las Vegas to an airport near his home in Montana, where he spent the night." The AP (10/2) says the investigation came at the request of Rep. Raul Grijalva, the senior Democrat on the House Natural Resources Committee, and Rep. Donald McEachin, the "top Democrat on the panel's subcommittee on oversight and investigations." Politico (10/2, Lefebvre) quotes Nancy K. DiPaolo, spokeswoman for Interior's Office of the Inspector General, as saying the IG has "received numerous complaints."

In a speech to the Heritage Foundation on Friday, Zinke "denied any inappropriate travel" and "said his travels were approved by 'career employees,'" Reuters (10/2) reports. Zinke "called reports about his recent use of chartered private flights 'a little B.S.'"

Also reporting are the Washington Examiner (10/2, Siciliano), the Washington Post (10/2, Rein), CNN (10/2, Marsh), the Huffington Post (10/2, D'Angelo), MarketWatch (10/2, Schroeder), the Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (10/2), the New York Post (10/2, Fredericks), Federal Computer Week (10/2, Gunter), Vice (10/2), the Daily Beast (10/2), and the Daily Beast (10/2, Markay).

Zinke Champions Oil And Gas During Clean Energy Week.

E&E Publishing (10/2, King) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke opened and closed the National Clean Energy Week with a promotion for developing fossil fuels on public lands. Secretary Zinke "touted oil and gas operators' progress on hydraulic fracturing." Secretary Zinke noted that "progress is being made" in renewable energy sources, yet without a breakthrough on storing the energy with batteries, the US must rely on traditional energy sources.

How Interior, NGA, DHS Provided A Common Picture For Hurricane First Responders.

Federal News Radio \(DC\) (10/2, Miller) reports that at the request of FEMA, an interagency team – made up of officials from DHS, the NGA, and the Department of Interior – launched the Homeland Infrastructure Foundation Level Data (HIFLD) to serve "as a hub to aggregate and disseminate open data to support the mapping activities for hurricane response and recovery." Tod Dabolt, the geospatial information officer in the Office of the CIO at Interior, "said this geospatial effort is making information sharing easier, better and faster than ever before." He added that while the initial platform was for first responders and others with knowledge of geospatial information, Interior and its agency partners hope to see how HIFLD, as it matures, "can use search and other forms of technology to improve the navigation for non-GIS users."

Secretary Of Agriculture Wants Firefighting Funding Restructured.

The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (10/2, Ahillen) reports that Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue "spent the weekend in the East Tennessee area, visiting the several departments at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville on Saturday then heading to the Tellico Plains area Sunday for a round table with U.S. Forest Service personnel and local forest partners in the morning before touring the Quarry Creek fire site just south of Tellico Plains in the afternoon." The U.S. Forest Service has "spent more than $2 billion on fire suppression this year, and that is a situation that doesn't please Perdue." The article notes that "during a visit to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in August, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke advocated a campaign to clear away undergrowth in national forests and parks as a way to prevent massive wildfires." Perdue said Sunday, "I agree wholeheartedly. We are doing a better job in the southeast with undergrowth and prescribed burning than we are doing out west. That is one of the real challenges we have."

Statoil Loses Challenge To DOI Royalty Reports Penalty.

Law360 (10/2, Lidgett) reports that "a Texas federal judge tossed as premature Friday a Statoil unit's claims that by issuing the harshest penalties for inadvertent reporting errors, the U.S. Department of the Interior subverted the congressionally approved civil penalty structure for companies that fail their federal oil and gas royalty obligations." U.S. District Judge Vanessa D. Gilmore "granted the DOI summary judgment against Statoil USA E&P Inc."

The Inside Story Of How Palmer Luckey Scored A Meeting With The Interior Secretary.

The Daily Beast (10/2, Resnick) reports that obtained from a Freedom of Information Act request detail how technology entrepreneur Palmer Luckey was able to set up a meeting with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke in April. The article says that "cash was indeed a factor...but the extent of it is not clear." The meeting was "officially labelled as a discussion of 'border wall building plans.'"

With His National Monument Proposal, Zinke Proves He Is No Teddy Roosevelt.

In a piece for Forbes (10/2, Burke), Monte Burke writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke can't call himself "a Teddy Roosevelt guy" after his recommendation to "shrink four National Monuments and modify at least six others." Burke argues that "this potential action by the Trump administration should be seen for what it is: An effort to undermine existing National Monument protections, and a favor to the oil and gas industries that comes at the expense of the American public, in general, and American sportsmen, in specific." Burke says that if Zinke "really is a Teddy Roosevelt guy, he should start" listening to sportsmen "now before it's too late."

Disloyalty Slur Latest In Series Showing Trump Administration's Mistrust Of Feds.

In his column for the Washington Post (10/2, Davidson), Joe Davidson writes that "while Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's accusation about the loyalty of his workforce is the Trump administration's most outrageous statement about federal employees, it fits a deplorable pattern of verbal aggression against them." Davidson says that "Zinke's declaration that 'I got 30 percent of the crew that's not loyal to the flag' is an escalation that demands denunciation." According to Davidson, "Zinke's comments leaves his staff dismayed, on edge and offended."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Auditors Say Montana Tribe Can't Account For $3.5 Million.

The AP (10/2, Brown) reports that a Montana Indian tribe and the Bureau of Indian Affairs "can't fully account for $3.5 million primarily in federal funds, including money for a corruption-plagued water project that's resulted in numerous convictions, according to government audits and federal officials." The audits by the Office of Inspector General of the Interior Department "examined $3.7 million for Chippewa Cree Tribe transportation programs and a $2 million contract for repairs and maintenance of the tribal water system." According to the article, "in both cases, tribal leaders were unable to fully document how they spent the money or provided inadequate records to justify the spending, federal officials said. "

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Backs Out Of Sage-Grouse Pact, Possibly Prompting Litigation And Lost Revenue.

The Daily Yonder (10/2, Oates) reports that as the Bureau of Land Management decided to back out of a sage-grouse habitat agreement in September, the federal Treasury added another $15,000 in public-land leases. However, the government may now have to spend much more in legal fees over legal actions relating to the agreement's dissolution. According to Department of the Interior officials, other sage grouse habitats may be leased across the West.

Wyoming Governor Concerned By Anticipated Sage Grouse Changes. The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/2, Richards) reports that Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead expressed his concerns Friday regarding the potential sage grouse management plan changes. Gov. Mead reiterated that the western states of the US should be consulted regarding any changes. Gov. Mead commented on the topic "after the New York Times leaked information Thursday about the Trump Administration's plans to make significant changes to sage grouse management in the coming days."

New Mexico Oil Producers Concerned About Permit Backlog.

The AP (10/2, Bryan) reports that oil producers in New Mexico are concerned about the US Bureau of Land Management's permit processing backlog. Oil and gas fees have recently increased for operations on public and tribal land, yet permitting delays have cost both the federal government and New Mexico money in the form of taxes and royalties. The New Mexico Oil and Gas Association "estimates nearly $1.5 million in federal royalties and another $831,000 in state severance taxes are deferred daily due to administrative issues."

BLM Recommends Including Minerals Near Theodore Roosevelt National Park In Lease Sale.

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (10/2, Dalrymple) reports that the Bureau of Land Management "recommends including a 120-acre parcel in McKenzie County bordering the North Unit" of the Theodore Roosevelt National Park "in a lease sale scheduled for March 2018." The BLM has "published an environmental assessment of leasing the federal minerals and is accepting public comments through Oct. 30." The BLM "said in a news release its recommendation of including the parcel in the lease sale is consistent with the 'administration's goals of promoting America's energy independence' and also follows approved resources management plans."

Anti-Frackers Go For Broke Against Trump.

The Daily Caller (10/2, White) reports that an environmental group said Monday protests are planned for later in the year against the Trump Administration's move in allowing hydraulic fracking on public lands in Utah. The group will protest against "the Bureau of Land Management's (BLM) failure to address how fracking will worsen pollution and public health in a sparsely populated portion of Utah." Center for Biological Diversity Senior Attorney Diana Dascalu-Joffe said, "this leasing plan disregards grave risks to public health and endangered species in favor of short-term profits for fossil fuel companies."

Proposed Hovenweep Drilling Criticized For Harm To Views, Night Sky.

The Southwest Colorado Journal (10/2, Mimiaga) reports that the Utah office of the Bureau of Land Management released an environmental analysis on a proposal "to lease 51,400 acres of federal minerals in southeastern Utah for possible oil and gas development." The proposal includes "Parcels 50 and 51, totaling 2,665 acres, located on the eastern Utah border, north and west of Hovenweep National Monument archaeological sites in Colorado and Utah." Environmental groups have criticized the lease sale proposal.

Supreme Court Won't Weigh In On Cliven Bundy Lawyer Issue.

The AP (10/2) reports that the Supreme Court is "declining to weigh in on conservative activist Larry Klayman's efforts to represent state's rights figure Cliven Bundy during a trial over the 2014 standoff near Bundy's Nevada ranch." The high court "said Monday that it won't address a dispute in which Klayman claims he was improperly prevented from joining Bundy's defense team. Bundy, two sons and four other defendants are scheduled to go on trial Oct. 10."

Meanwhile, the High Country \(CO\) News (10/2) reports that Roger Stone, "an on-and-off adviser of President Donald Trump, has become a public supporter of Nevada rancher Cliven Bundy and his co-defendants, who are currently awaiting federal trial." Stone "made public appearances in July in Nevada to urge Trump to officially pardon the Bundys, and name-dropped them at a conservative leadership conference in Las Vegas in mid-September." The article says that "Stone is an odd bedfellow for the Bundys, since he is a longtime Washington, D.C., insider with no obvious connection to ranching or public-lands issues."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Drillers Decline Trump's Marine Sanctuary Offer.

Oil Price (10/3, Slav) reports that the Trump administration has begun a review that could culminate in the opening of 11 marine sanctuaries for oil and gas drilling. While the American Petroleum Institute has "only had praise for the new administration's initiatives so far, this time reactions are more lukewarm." Oil Price reasons that "it's not too difficult for Big Oil to imagine the public and shareholder backlash against any oil company bold enough to drill in a previously protected offshore area," as well as the "public relations nightmare that would undoubtedly ensue."

New York To BOEM: Here's Where We Can Build Offshore Wind.

North American Windpower (10/2, Lillian) reports that "New York State has asked the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) to consider identifying and leasing at least four new Wind Energy Areas off New York's Atlantic Coast." The proposal asks "that BOEM use the Area of Consideration for an Area Identification process, through which BOEM would delineate specific Wind Energy Areas for future leasing through engagement with stakeholders and local communities, as well as the completion of federal and state regulatory reviews."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Delta Tunnels Money Fight Wrapped Up In Water History.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/2, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that a deal made in 1939 that "paved the way for much of the Central Valley Project" has "formed the basis, nearly 80 years later, of a major funding impasse that threatens to unravel California WaterFix." The article says that "the issue came to a head when the board of Westlands Water District, the largest of all the water agencies served by the Central Valley Project, voted Sept. 19 against paying for its share of the expected $17.1 billion cost of the tunnels." Westlands' decision was "rooted in a cost-allocation formula imposed by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation – a formula that has its origins in the 1939 deal and serves as a reminder of the convoluted nature of water distribution in California."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Gillibrand Proposes Bill To Combat Invasive Beetle.

The Plattsburgh \(NY\) Press Republican (10/2, Raymo) reports that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand is "introducing legislation to add the emerald ash borer to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's list of injurious wildlife so importers bringing the invasive species into the United States can be held accountable." Her legislation "would strengthen federal regulations that have not been updated in 117 years." Gillibrand said, "We need to pass this law to keep species like the emerald ash borer from coming here in the first place."

Savannah Wildlife Refuge Closed 3 Weeks After Irma. Here's Why.

The Hilton Head Island \(SC\) Packet (10/2, Wilson) reports that "most of the Savannah National Wildlife Refuge remains closed three weeks after Tropical Storm Irma swept across the Lowcountry." Citing "a news release posted on the website of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and information posted on the refuge's Facebook page," the article says that "the storm surge paired with high 'king tides' topped the levees at the refuge in Jasper County by nearly 2 feet, making roads unstable and breaching dikes."

Tests Verify Western Washington Has A Wolf.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/2, Jenkins) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "confirmed that an animal in eastern Skagit County is not a hybrid and is Western Washington's first known gray wolf in decades." The Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (10/2, Landers) reports that the FWS "says a GPS collar placed on the wolf captured in June shows the 100-pound black male has remained in Skagit County." According to FWS spokeswoman Ann Froschauer, "it's not clear where the gray wolf came from because DNA samples don't find a connection with known wolf packs in Eastern Washington, Idaho or British Columbia."

Margolis: Scott Appeals To His Base With Conte Refuge Stance.

In his column for VTDigger \(VT\) (10/2, Margolis), Jon Margolis analyzes Gov. Phil Scott's stance on the proposal to expand the Silvio O. Conte Wildlife Refuge. To Margolis, it seems Scott is trying to cater to both conservationists and loggers. That is why "the governor of Vermont feels he has to write a letter addressed to the secretary of the Interior but also aimed at Vermont loggers and foresters, letting them know he appreciates them," while also saying that he's not "against expanding the Conte refuge."

National Park Service

Court Backs Hovercraft Ban In Alaska's National Preserves.

The AP (10/2, Joling) reports that "the National Park Service can ban hovercraft operating on Alaska rivers that flow through national preserves, a federal Appeals Court ruled Monday, in a case that has implications for who will manage state waterways." A three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals "concluded said the Park Service has regulatory authority over a river in a preserve even as Alaska since statehood has owned the riverbed." The panel wrote, "On remand from the Supreme Court, we again conclude that the federal government properly exercised its authority to regulate hovercraft use on the rivers within conservation system units in Alaska."

Nude Sculpture Four Stories Tall Planned For National Mall.

The New York Times (10/2, Caron) reports that "activists are working to bring a steel sculpture of a 45-foot-tall nude woman to Washington, where she will temporarily face the White House from a perch on the National Mall." The sculpture was "created for the Burning Man festival in 2015 but is being repurposed for Catharsis on the Mall, a gathering in Washington that seeks to bring about social change." Catharsis on the Mall is "scheduled for Veterans Day weekend, Nov. 10-12, but the sculpture would remain in place for up to four months to raise awareness about the Equal Rights Amendment, organizers said." The National Park Service is "still reviewing the group's proposal, Russell Newell, a spokesman for the Department of the Interior, said in an email."

County, State Miss Out On Revenue From Park.

In the first part of a two-part series about taxes in Yellowstone National Park, the Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (10/2, Miller) reports that "a jurisdictional peculiarity linked to Yellowstone's founding allows outside concessionaires to sidestep paying state and local taxes when they make multi-million dollar improvements to private property within the Park's confines." According to the article, "like his predecessor Douglas Brandt, under whom he served as a deputy, Park County assessor Pat Meyer said he believes concessionaires in Yellowstone aren't paying their fair share in taxes." Yellowstone is one of the only national parks to be granted "exclusive federal jurisdiction." According to public information officer Jonathan Shafer, "Yellowstone owes its special tax status partially to the fact that it was created prior to Wyoming statehood."

Proposed Fence Faces Opposition At Former Tule Lake Internment Camp.

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (10/2, Magagnini) reports that "a three-mile, 8-foot-high barbed-wire fence planned around a rural airport on the site of the old Tule Lake War Relocation Center has spawned a national protest by hundreds of Japanese Americans who say it would taint the place where many of their families were locked up during World War II." Barbara Takei, CFO of the Tule Lake Committee, which is leading the protest, said, "The fence is a desecration of a site we feel is spiritual, a site where people go to mourn, a site that is for remembrance. With the fence, we will be shut out from where our families lived and permanently reminded of the racism and hostility that put us there in the first place." However, "both the county and airport operator Nick Macy say the fence – which would be partially paid for with federal funds after an environmental impact report is completed – is needed to keep animals off the single runway."

Yellowstone National Park Bison Numbers Down From Last Year.

The AP (10/2) reports that Yellowstone National Park biologists "say bison numbers are down from last year after its largest cull in nearly a decade." According to parks spokesman Jonathan Shafer, "biologists' surveys counted about 4,800 bison that live in the park, 700 less than last year." State, federal and tribal government agencies are "working to lower to the bison population at the park down to 3,000."

100 Sea Turtles Hatch At Assateague, Head Out To Sea.

The Delmarva \(MD\) Daily Times (10/2) reports that "nearly 100 tiny sea turtle hatchlings from one nest at Assateague Island National Seashore successfully made their way out to sea, the National Park Service announced." the agency "said a loggerhead sea turtle nest successfully hatched at the National Seashore with about 100 hatchlings emerging from one nest site in the Maryland Over Sand Vehicle zone." According to the NPS, "although multiple sea turtle nesting attempts have been documented within the National Seashore in past years, this is the first confirmed hatch and the largest number of hatchlings ever recorded."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (10/3).

On Mountain Goats And Burros.

In his column for the Idaho State Journal (10/2, Carlson), Chris Carlson writes that the National Park Service's plan to address the overpopulation of mountain goats in Olympic National Park by "shooting them" is likely to bring negative public scrutiny. Carlson wouldn't be surprised if the Fund for Animals, "founded by Cleveland Amory in the early 1970s, doesn't file suit and seek a temporary restraining order (TRO) that will suspend the program pending a hearing and possible trial."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump To Visit Puerto Rico Tuesday.

While the mass shooting in Las Vegas prompted speculation that President Trump might cancel his scheduled visit to Puerto Rico on Tuesday, Trump has confirmed that "he still plans to visit and defend his administration's efforts to supply Puerto Rico with sufficient power, food, and potable water," USA Today (10/2, Jackson) reports. USA Today adds that "the visit may prove a critical test of Trump's leadership," in the wake of criticism of the Administration response to Hurricane Maria. John Roberts reported on Fox News' Special Report (10/2) that while he is in Puerto Rico, the President is expected to meet with San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulin Cruz, who he "accused...on Twitter of 'poor leadership,' lumped her in with 'politically motivated ingrates' and claimed she has 'now been told the Democrats you must be nasty to Trump.'" Cruz said she would be happy to meet with the President and seemed to have shifted her opinion of the federal response." Cruz: "I have been quite complimentary of the people from HHS and FEMA. Their heart is in the right place, but we have to cut the red tape."

Business Insider (10/2, Lockie) reports that Homeland Security Adviser Bossert sent a memo to the White House that "urged a cheery media narrative that starkly clashed with Trump's own comments on the situation." Bossert "laid out a plan to 'pivot hopefully to a theme of stabilizing' the situation with temporary housing and increasing the reach of power and commodities on Monday and Tuesday and then to 'start a theme of recovery planning for the bright future that lies ahead for Puerto Rico.'" However, "While Bossert's memo reflects a carefully coordinated and genial recovery effort with Puerto Rico, Trump used Twitter to attack" Cruz.

Alex Perez reported on ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 15, 2:10, Muir) that FEMA Administrator Long was in Puerto Rico Monday "telling reporters he didn't see anyone in a life-threatening situation. This, after President Trump slammed the recovery response by local officials in a series of tweets this weekend, writing, 'They want everything to be done for them when it should be a community effort.'"

According to Bloomberg News (10/2, Litvan), Bossert said only 45 percent of Puerto Ricans have access to drinkable water, and the New York Post (10/2, Golding) reports that on the eve of the President's visit, "nearly all of Puerto Rico remained blacked out" and "the US Energy Department offered a grim forecast for the restoration of electricity." According to officials, "little more than 5 percent of electrical customers had service on the storm-ravaged island" and the head of its power utility said "that number would rise to just 15 percent over the next two weeks."

The New York Times (10/2, Fausset) reports on recovery efforts in Puerto Rico, saying, "the response to the storm has reminded them of the strength of their culture, and its grace notes of solidarity, neighborliness and pride." Meanwhile, many "are wondering just how much stress the island can take, given the social problems it was saddled with before the storm, including a 45 percent poverty rate, 10 percent unemployment and the second worst murder rate in the nation in 2016, behind Washington, D.C."

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/2), Tevi Troy, a former deputy secretary of health and human services, writes that presidential leadership is about consistent efforts in the face of continuing challenges, and while the Administration received well-deserved good reviews for its response to the hurricanes in Texas and Florida, it will be remembered for the one in which it faltered.

US Geological Survey

Can Scientists Predict Yosemite Rock Falls?

The San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (10/2, Krieger) reports that “as the giant granite El Capitan briefly slumbers, scientists are racing to identify any areas of dangerous new instability on a popular but restless climbing route that last week released enough rubble to fill 750 dump trucks.” U.S. Geological Survey civil engineer Brian Collins is currently in Yosemite with U.S. Park Service geologist Greg Stock studying the rockfalls. According to the article, “in addition to computer analyses, Collins and Stock have measured the influence of temperature swings by roping up, climbing a slab of unstable rock and installing a long thin wire that measures strain.”

Study: Chemicals Affecting Fish In Great Lakes Rivers.

KSJR-FM Collegetown, MN (10/2, Marohn) reports that “chemical compounds from human activity are affecting fish in rivers that feed into the Great Lakes, a new study shows.” According to the article, “these compounds, known as contaminants of emerging concern, come from a variety of sources including pharmaceuticals, personal care products, flame retardants and pesticides.” The study was a joint project with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Geological Survey and the Great Lakes Restoration Initiative.

Top National News

Media Analyses: “Somber” Trump Delivers “Measured” Remarks On Las Vegas Shooting.

The mass shooting on the Las Vegas Strip early Monday morning, which is now the deadliest such incident in modern US history, dominates all forms of media. While the bulk of the coverage deals with the attack itself and emerging information about the shooter, President Trump’s comments, as well as the White House’s assertion that the moment is not right for a discussion of gun policy, are also covered. Reports call the President’s statement “measured” and “somber,” and some of the more critical assessments contrast it with Trump’s remarks following past shootings.

ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 7, 1:25, Muir) reported that “a somber President Trump...call[ed] the massacre in Las Vegas ‘an act of pure evil.’” ABC’s Cecilia Vega: “He never said the gunman’s name, instead focusing on the victims and survivors. ... But was this terrorism? The White House won’t say. Does the President believe that what happened amounts to an act of domestic terrorism?” White House press secretary Sarah Sanders: “We are still in a fact-finding mission. It would be premature to weigh in on something like that before we have any more facts.” ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 10, 3:05, Muir) reported, “At this White House this afternoon, a moment of silence. The White House staff all there for the solemn ritual. The President will travel here to Las Vegas on Wednesday.”

The New York Times (10/2, Landler, Sullivan) says that Trump delivered “a rigorously muted performance,” in contrast with his performance as a presidential candidate, when he “sometimes seized on mass shootings to warn of the threat of ‘radical Islamic terrorism’ and to justify banning people from predominantly Muslim countries. ... But Sunday’s shooting was fundamentally different from those in Orlando and San Bernardino: The assailant was an older white man, not a Muslim immigrant.” McClatchy (10/2, Irby) reports that Trump’s response to the killing of 49 in Orlando as president-elect “was widely criticized, by Democrats and Republicans alike.”

The Washington Post (10/2, Scherer, Rucker) writes, “Trump appeared Monday at something of a loss for words.” He “somberly followed the practiced script of past presidents in times of crisis,” but “identified no clear villain. He issued no call to action. A president typically quick to make black-and-white declarations spoke instead in shades of gray.” The Post says that the “emerging facts prevented Trump from following his typical playbook – to rally his supporters against Islamic extremism while speaking and tweeting in a combative, even belligerent tone to try to project strength and resolve. Rather, Trump uttered just 574 words on Monday and tried to play the role of uniter.” His sole tweet of the day read, “My warmest condolences and sympathies to the victims and families of the terrible Las Vegas shooting. God bless you!”

On the CBS Evening News (10/2, story 7, 2:05, Mason), Major Garrett reported, “President Trump spoke somberly of sadness and faith.” Trump: “Scripture teaches us the Lord is close to the broken-hearted and saves those who are crushed in spirit.” Garrett: “The President also spoke of togetherness...and the struggle to comprehend madness.” NBC Nightly News

(10/2, story 6, 0:20, Holt) reported, "In honor of the victims, President Trump led a moment of silence at the White House this afternoon. He also condemned this attack as 'an act of pure evil' and ordered flags to fly at half-staff." Breitbart (10/2, Spiering) reports that the President and First Lady led the moment of silence on the White House front lawn along with Vice President Pence and Karen Pence.

The AP (10/2, Lemire, Lucey) reports, "Speaking slowly and somberly from the White House, Trump declared that the nation would rally together in the face of the latest act of senseless violence." The AP says Trump delivered a "measured statement." USA Today (10/2, Przybyla, Jackson) reports that Trump "called for national unity in the wake of the deadliest mass shooting in modern US history," and "the first mass killing under Trump's watch." USA Today (10/2, Przybyla) writes in a second piece that Trump "made no mention of an epidemic of gun violence making the US unique among advanced industrial nations. While Trump once supported a ban on assault weapons, his views have changed significantly over the past decade, and it's unlikely he'd support stricter US gun laws now."

Politico (10/2, Karni) reports that Trump's "somber statement from the Diplomatic Room, a moment of silence on the South Lawn, and a dormant-for-a-day Twitter feed didn't make a tragic situation worse." His "words and actions, Democrats and Republicans said, were in line with what any other National Rifle Association-backed president would do." But Trump will soon "be forced to navigate a thorny political situation as he reacts to the first mass shooting to unfold on his watch."

On the CBS Evening News (10/2, story 16, 2:15, Mason), Jim Axelrod said, "The President condemned the shooting...but he didn't call it terrorism." As the nation "absorbs the worst mass shooting in US history." Richard Cohen, Southern Poverty Law Center: "The label does matter and it's important that we get it right, because it tells us what type of response we as a country need to have in order to address these incidents." Axelrod: "Strictly speaking, there is narrow legal definition for terrorism: 'violence designed to intimidate a civilian population or influence the policy of a government.'"

The Washington Times (10/2, Boyer), the Washington Examiner (10/2, Westwood), The Hill (10/2, Fabian), and Roll Call (10/2, Bennett) also cover the President's remarks.

Sanders: Now Is Not Time For Gun Policy Debate. The Washington Times (10/2, Miller) reports, "President Trump is not reopening a political debate on gun control in the immediate aftermath of the shooting massacre in Las Vegas, the White House said Monday." Sanders said, "There is a time and place for a political debate but now is the time to unite as a country." Politico (10/2, Lima) reports that Sanders also "warned against drafting 'laws that won't create or stop these type of [shootings] from happening.'" Jeff Zeleny said on CNN's Situation Room (10/2) that Sanders "did leave the door open to the possibility of some kind of discussion in the future bipartisan legislation."

NBC Nightly News (10/2, story 12, 2:00, Holt) reported, "As the shock of yet another mass shooting reverberates across the country, in Washington, the debate over gun control is raging once again. Some saying the immediate aftermath of a tragedy like this, there's no time for this sort of debate, while others say it's precisely the appropriate time." The CBS Evening News (10/2, story 14, 2:25, Glor) reported, "Supporters of tighter gun control laws were quick to push for new laws. Hillary Clinton tweeted, 'Our grief isn't enough. We can and must put politics aside to stand up to the [National Rifle Association], and try to stop this from happening again.'" CBS' Nancy Cordes: "Until 13 years ago, the federal assault weapons ban would likely have outlawed so some of the firearms and high-capacity magazines used by the Las Vegas gunman, but the ban lapsed in 2004, and attempts to reinstate it or pass other restrictions have failed."

USA Today (10/2) editorializes, "In America, the Second Amendment protects gun ownership, but it allows for reasonable regulation. After every mass shooting, the refrain from the gun lobby is the same: Whatever measures are proposed would not have stopped that particular shooting. ... But solutions don't have to match a particular shooting. They simply need to limit future carnage while balancing constitutional rights."

The Washington Post (10/2) editorializes, "Opponents of gun control say there is no easy fix. True. They say no law will stop every person who is intent on doing harm. True again. But America has no monopoly on evil or sick people, yet it loses far more people to gun violence." Other countries "have demonstrated the possibility of bans on assault weapons and other common-sense restrictions. What makes America unique is the absence of political will and leadership."

In its editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/2) focuses on the first responders and others who were selfless and courageous in getting people to safety.

Democrats Press For Action On Gun Control. Kayla Tausche said on CNBC's Closing Bell (10/2), "Democrats in Congress are already calling for action. Congressman Seth Moulton of Massachusetts boycotted the moment of silence on Capitol Hill today because he said he wants real action to actually come out of this." The Washington Times (10/2, Chasmar) reports that Moulton, who "made a similar move last summer after the deadly terror attack at Pulse nightclub in Orlando," said in a statement, "I will not be standing with my colleagues in a moment of silence that just becomes an excuse for inaction in the House of Representatives today. I will work to do something about this problem so that it doesn't happen again."

USA Today (10/2, Theobald) reports that Sen. Chris Murphy "castigated his congressional colleagues for failing to challenge the gun industry." He said in a statement, "It is positively infuriating that my colleagues in Congress are so afraid of the gun industry that they pretend there aren't public policy responses to this epidemic." Murphy "has been vocal on gun control after the 2012 shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School, in his home state, which claimed the lives of 20 children and six faculty and staff." The Washington Times (10/2, Dinan) reports that House Minority Leader Pelosi "called for a new special select congressional committee to combat gun violence."

Rep. Steve Israel (D-NY) writes in the New York Times (10/2), "In the wake of one the deadliest mass shooting in our nation's history, perhaps the most asked question by Americans is, 'Will anything change?' The simple answer is no. The more vital question is, 'Why not?'" The NRA, "once a supporter of sensible gun-safety measures, is now forced to oppose them because of competing organizations. More moderation means less market share." And congressional redistricting "has pulled Republicans so far to the right that anything less than total subservience to the gun lobby is viewed as supporting gun confiscation."

Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) said on Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight (10/2), "I think when you watch so many people who are helpless and running you think that our lawmakers under the Capitol dome, we are not helpless. Before the trigger is squeezed you are actually able to do something. Whether it's universal background checks, whether its ammunition restrictions, whether its making sure we don't have silencers or of course making sure that a weapon of war is only in the hand of a warrior." Swalwell tweeted, "#ThoughtsAndPrayers aren't enough. #LasVegas is about all of us. It's long past time to act."

Rep. Suzan DelBene (D-WA) tweeted, "This morning's news from #LasVegas is shocking and a devastating tragedy. We must stand united against this senseless loss of life." Rep. Jared Huffman (D-CA) tweeted, "This is a time for mourning & for action – Congress can offer thoughts, prayers, AND policy to prevent gun violence." Rep. Alan Lowenthal (D-CA) tweeted, "The US cannot tolerate slaughter on this scale or with this frequency. Violence has many causes but we MUST address free availability of the most powerful weapons." Rep. Stephen Lynch (D-MA) tweeted, "Congress must work together to pass common-sense gun laws. We cannot continue to stand by as Americans are killed." Rep. Nydia Velazquez (D-NY) tweeted, "Let us honor the innocent lives lost in #LasVegas by complementing our words with action. We need a Select Committee on Gun Violence."

Pence Still Scheduled For Arizona Fundraiser On Tuesday. CNBC's Christina Wilkie tweeted, "Pence will travel to Phoenix to headline a GOP fundraiser tomorrow, per WH. Optics just a day after #LasVegas could be dicey."

Budget Proposal Under Increased Critical Scrutiny Following Shooting. CNN (10/2, Kopan) reports on its website that an Administration proposal to sharply cut funding for programs which "seek to prevent domestic terrorism and prepare localities to respond...has come under increased scrutiny by critics in the wake of the deadliest mass shooting in modern US history." Among other things, the proposal would eliminate FEMA budget funding for two grant programs, Countering Violent Extremism and Complex Coordinated Terrorist Attacks, although Administration "budget documents say the program goals can be achieved" by awarding grants through the State Homeland Security Program and the Urban Area Security Initiative Program. Administration officials, however, have proposed large budget reductions for both programs.

At Least 59 Dead; Shooter's Motive Not Yet Known. Extended broadcast network newscasts and heavy reporting in national newspapers detailed the shooting and profiled the emerging facts about the perpetrator. ABC World News Tonight (10/2, lead story, 4:40, Muir) opened from "the scene of the worst mass shooting in American history – a lone gunman from a 32nd floor hotel window, shooting at thousands of helpless concert-goers below. ... At least 59 now killed, more than 500 injured." The CBS Evening News (10/2, lead story, 4:15, Mason) reported, "Police say the gunman, 64-year-old Stephen Paddock, of Mesquite, Nevada killed himself before they arrived. They have not determined a motive, but they say they have found no links to terrorism." Lester Holt said in opening NBC Nightly News (10/2, lead story, 4:00), "The hearts of our nation ache tonight with a sickening familiarity: another mass murder, another taking of innocent lives on an unimaginable scale."

The AP (10/2, Ho, Cano) reports, "Country music star Jason Aldean was performing at the Route 91 Harvest Festival when the gunman apparently used a hammer-like device to smash out windows in his room and opened fire. ... The crowd, funneled tightly into a wide-open space, had little cover and no easy way to escape." The CBS Evening News (10/2, story 3, 1:35, Mason) and NBC Nightly News (10/2, story 3, 2:40, Holt) carried some eyewitness accounts, while the CBS Evening News (10/2, story 6, 2:10, Mason) also reported on how members of the crowd helped one another.

The Las Vegas Sun (10/1) reports that Clark County Sheriff Joseph Lombardo "said police believed the shooting was a 'lone wolf' attack but were looking for a roommate of Paddock for questioning. Police subsequently said they had located the woman, 62-year-old Marilou Danley, and did not believe she was involved in the incident." The Las Vegas Review-Journal (10/2, Hill) reports that a law enforcement source said that Danley "has been out of the country for the past two weeks. Investigators were trying to arrange for her to come to Las Vegas so they can talk to her further."

USA Today (10/2, Onyanga-Omara) reports that Lombardo "described Paddock, the son of a 1960s bank robber who was on the FBI's most-wanted list after escaping from prison, as 'a distraught person intent on causing mass casualties.'" The New York Times (10/2, Times) reports, "At least 23 firearms, including a handgun, were found in Mr. Paddock's hotel suite," according to Las Vegas police, and a federal law enforcement official "said there were at least 20 rifles in the suite, along with hundreds of rounds of ammunition, including two rifles outfitted with scopes and set up on tripods in front of two big windows. Another official said that among the weapons were AR-15-style assault rifles."

The Washington Post (10/2, Bui, Zapotosky, Barrett, Berman) reports, "Gun purchase records indicate Paddock legally bought more than two dozen firearms across a period of years, according to a person close to the investigation." The Washington Post (10/2, Rosenwald, Barrett, Horton) further reports, "One of the weapons Paddock apparently used...was an AK-47-type rifle, with a stand to steady it for firing," and "video from the attack suggests Paddock may have used at least one fully automatic rifle, marking the first time such a weapon has been wielded by a public mass shooter in the United States."

On ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 6, 2:00, Muir), Pierre Thomas said, "The shooting from the 32nd floor coming from at least one rifle functioning like an automatic machine gun." NBC Nightly News (10/2, story 7, 2:10, Holt) also reported that "law enforcement sources" say that Paddock "may have been using semiautomatic weapons converted to fire in a full automatic mode." The Washington Times (10/2, Boyer, Persons) writes that "fully automatic weapons cannot be obtained in the US as easily as other firearms, and none of the major US mass shootings in recent decades involved one."

On ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 3, 3:00, Muir), Brian Ross reported that Paddock's motive "remains a mystery. ... His family remembers him as a man who grew up without convictions...and the FBI says no connection either to any overseas terror group. ... Adding to the mystery, federal officials tell ABC News, Paddock sent tens of thousands of dollars in the last few weeks to the Philippines. Paddock's only real passion appears to have been gambling. His brother Eric says Paddock recently won a $40,000 jackpot, and was a multimillionaire." ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 8, 3:20, Muir) showed a clip of Eric Paddock saying, "There's absolutely no way I can even conceive that my brother would shoot a bunch of people. ... He doesn't even have parking tickets. He has no criminal record, he has no record of any affiliations, he has nothing." On the CBS Evening News (10/2, story 4, 2:20, Mason), Jeff Pegues reported, "Until last night's mass shooting, Stephen Paddock's only run-in with law enforcement was this 2009 parking ticket."

ABC World News Tonight (10/2, story 9, 2:30, Muir) reported that Paddock's niece Nicole Paddock wrote on Facebook, "I want to express my deepest sympathies to everyone affected by this massacre. I'm as shocked and appalled as anyone. I cannot speak to what would motivate someone to do something like this, nor what his specific motivations may have been. He never came across as religious or political. My family and I are still in shock by this news, and my heart goes out to all of those who lost or had loved ones injured in this tragedy."

The Washington Post (10/2) reports that Eric Paddock "knew his brother owned a couple of handguns but was shocked at the rapid-fire weapon apparently used." ABC World News Tonight

(10/2, story 4, 2:20, Muir) and NBC Nightly News (10/2, story 4, 2:35, Holt) profiled some of the victims. Reuters (10/2, Kumar, Sage) and the Los Angeles Times (10/2, Tchekmedyan, Pearce, Branson-Potts) also have reports.

Terror Experts Puzzled By ISIS Claim Of Responsibility. The Hill (10/2, Williams) reports that ISIS took credit for the mass shooting in “a statement that puzzled terror experts. ... So far, there is no evidence that ISIS was involved beyond the group’s own assurance that Paddock was ‘a soldier of the Caliphate.’” ISIS has traditionally “not been arbitrary in the attacks it claims have been carried out by its supporters. Experts who track the group closely say that when it comes to attacks in the West, if ISIS is claiming responsibility, there typically was some kind of connection between the perpetrator and the group.”

Las Vegas Hospital Trauma Center Faced “Controlled Chaos.” The New York Times (10/2, Fink) reports on the “controlled chaos” at University Medical Center in Las Vegas, “the only level-one trauma center in Nevada and one of only a few free-standing trauma units in the nation. ... But even with 11 trauma bays, three operating rooms, a CT scanner, a trauma intensive care unit and a pediatric intensive care unit all under one roof, the trauma center had never faced a torrent like this.”

On the CBS Evening News (10/2, story 2, 2:35, Mason), Carter Evans reported, “More than 100 gunshot victims poured into University Medical Center.” Trauma surgeon Jay Coates: “With so many people coming in so fast, we did damage control, which is stopping the process of dying.” Evans: “Move on to the next one?” Coates: “Get next one in. We did that all night.”

NRA Delays Virginia Campaign Ad Buy. Politico (10/2, Robillard) reports that the NRA “has delayed a week’s worth of television advertising in Virginia’s 2017 elections” that were set to begin airing on Tuesday. The NRA “has endorsed the entire statewide Republican ticket in Virginia,” as well as candidates for the state legislature. The ads will now begin on October 10.

Gunmaker Shares Climbed On Monday. USA Today (10/2, Shell) reports, “Shares of gunmakers jumped more than 3% Monday after a deadly mass shooting in Las Vegas.” Sturm Ruger shares were up 3.5% and American Outdoor Brands shares were up 3.2%. USA Today says that it is “not uncommon for shares of gunmakers to rise after high-profile shootings, and oftentimes the initial price moves are sparked by computer-driven trades that buy on the news.”

CBS Legal Executive Fired Over Facebook Comment About Victims. The Daily Caller (10/2) reports that Hayley Geftman-Gold, “a top legal executive at CBS,” was fired after writing on Facebook, “If they wouldn’t do anything when children were murdered I have no hope that Repugs will ever do the right thing. I’m actually not even sympathetic [because] country music fans often are Republican gun toters.” The Washington Times (10/2, Richardson) reports that CBS said in a statement, “This individual, who was with us for approximately one year, violated the standards of our company and is no longer an employee of CBS. Her views as expressed on social media are deeply unacceptable to all of us at CBS. Our hearts go out to the victims in Las Vegas and their families.” Townhall (10/2, Vespa) has a brief report.

Las Vegas Native Kimmel Addresses Gun Control In Monologue. The Daily Beast (10/3, Wilstein) reports, “Jimmy Kimmel thought he might finally get to be silly again this week,” but the Las Vegas native’s “eyes were already welling up with tears by the time he opened his mouth to speak on Monday.” Kimmel said, “Of course there’s something we can do about it. There are a lot of things we could do about it. But we don’t. Which is interesting, because when someone with a beard attacks us, we tap phones, we invoke travel bans, we build walls, we take every possible precaution to make sure it doesn’t happen again. But when an American buys a gun and kills other Americans, then there’s nothing we can do about that.” The full segment on ABC’s Jimmy Kimmel Live (10/2) ran 10 minutes.

“Top Officials”: GOP Can’t Rule Out Tax Increase For Some Middle Class Taxpayers.

The New York Times (10/2, Tankersley) reports that while the President and GOP leaders have pushed their tax plan as “a way to cut taxes on the middle class,” some “top officials are now saying the plan may not benefit everyone in that income group,” an acknowledgment that “could complicate the administration’s ability to sell the tax plan.” An analysis last week by the Tax Policy Center “found that nearly 30 percent of those in the middle class could see their taxes increase as a result of changes to the deductions and exemptions many middle-class Americans rely on to lower their tax bills.” The Times adds that “top officials acknowledged this weekend that a tax cut for everyone in the middle class may not be achievable.”

Trump Considers Executive Order On Welfare.

Politico (10/2, Restuccia) cites “two administration officials” who say the Administration is considering “an executive order that would instruct federal agencies to review low-income assistance programs, part of a coming effort to make sweeping changes to the country’s welfare system.” The White House has begun circulating a draft order to federal agencies, which according to one official, “calls on agencies to review existing regulations and propose new rules that conform to a set of broad welfare principles, including tighter work requirements that encourage recipients to shift back into the labor force.” In addition, the order “calls for streamlining or eliminating duplicative services and establishing metrics for holding agencies accountable for program performance.” While one officials said supporters within the Administration hope the President will sign the order before Thanksgiving, another “cautioned that the conversations about the order are ‘very preliminary at this stage,’ adding that the final outcome is uncertain.”

Poll Finds Most Americans Want Federal Government To Address Climate Change.

The Hill (10/2, Cama) reports that a poll by The Associated Press-NORC Center and the Energy Policy Institute at the University of Chicago has found “more than 6 in 10 Americans believe that climate change is a problem that the federal government needs to address.” The poll “found a large majority of Americans in both major parties believe that climate change is happening.” However, it is “less clear” what Americans believe should be done to address it. Around “51 percent of respondents were willing to pay $1 a month to combat global warming, a figure that dropped to 18 percent when the prospective monthly fee increased to $100.” The Hill adds that “opinions were not entirely clear on hot-button climate policy issues, either.” Just “17 percent of respondents said they support” hydraulic fracturing, but “if the pollster said it would save the respondent significantly on natural gas bill, support averaged 41 percent.” The AP (10/2, Borenstein, Swanson) reports that “forty-two percent of those surveyed said they oppose getting out of” the Paris climate pact, “while 28 percent favored the withdrawal and 28 percent had no strong opinion.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Chaos In Catalonia.” The New York Times (10/2) says in an editorial that the actions of Spanish police during the Catalanian independence referendum “succeeded mostly in deepening a political crisis.” Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy “had the law largely on his side,” but Barcelona “now has the television images and the solidarity and sympathy they generate, leaving the prime minister looking like an intransigent bully and rendering any possible political resolution of the conflict more remote.” The Times argues that while “political solutions, probably involving greater autonomy for Catalonia,” exist, “so long as Mr. Rajoy and Mr. Puigdemont remain intransigent, these will remain out of reach.”

Washington Post.

“Catalonia Held A Referendum. Russia Won.” A Washington Post (10/2, Board) editorial says that “the Catalan nationalists’ only backers are separatist-ruled Scotland, the pariah government of Venezuela and Russia’s intelligence and propaganda apparatus,” which “evidently perceives the Catalan movement as another vehicle for dividing and weakening the democratic West.” The Post calls for “negotiations between Barcelona and Madrid,” and says “the two sides could agree on a legal means for Catalonia to hold a fair, free and legitimate vote.”

“Trump Could Help Refugees. Instead He Shrugs.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/2) writes that despite the “staggering scale” of the world’s refugee crisis, the ability of the United States to admit refugee such refugees, and the positive signal such admission would send to the world about US leadership, the Administration is failing to address the crisis. The Post argues that the message the US is sending to the world by failing to admit more refugees is dangerous and that “there is no suppressing the fact that the United States is turning its back on the world, and the world’s neediest, under the Trump administration.”

“The Worst Kind Of American Exceptionalism.” The Washington Post (10/2) editorializes, “Opponents of gun control say there is no easy fix. True. They say no law will stop every person who is intent on doing harm. True again. But America has no monopoly on evil or sick people, yet it loses far more people to gun violence.” Other countries “have demonstrated the possibility of bans on assault weapons and other common-sense restrictions. What makes America unique is the absence of political will and leadership.”

Wall Street Journal.

“An Act Of Pure Evil.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/2) focuses on the first responders and others who were selfless and courageous in getting people to safety during the Las Vegas shooting.

“Of Judges And Gerrymanders.” The Wall Street Journal (10/2) editorializes about the case of Whitford v. Gill, scheduled for arguments before the Supreme Court today, which highlights a challenge to partisan gerrymandering in Wisconsin. After examining prior rulings on similar challenges, the Journal argues that the court should not intercede too much in partisan disputes, and should avoid making itself the arbiter of political redistricting efforts by states.

“Fruit Flies And Your Insomnia.” A Wall Street Journal (10/2, Board) editorial.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Las Vegas Shooting Leaves At Least 59 Dead, More Than 520 Injured
In Las Vegas, Concertgoers Faced Barrage Of Bullets, Confusion
Goldman Sachs Weighs Trading Cryptocurrencies
China, With Methodical Discipline, Conjures A Market For Electric Cars

New York Times:

A Burst Of Gunfire, A Pause, Then Carnage In Las Vegas That Would Not Stop
Stephen Paddock, Las Vegas Suspect, Was A Gambler Who Drew Little Attention
Gunman’s Vantage Point And Preparations Opened The Way For Mass Slaughter
GM And Ford Lay Out Plans To Expand Electric Models

Washington Post:

Russia Exploited Ad Tool Tailored For Corporate America
Confusion, Then A Tumble Into Chaos At Concert
Arsenal And High Perch Made This Attack So Lethal
Retiree With Money To Burn Was A Gambler And Always On The Move

Financial Times:

Weapons Cache Found At Vegas Shooting Suspect’s Home
Brussels Wants Airbus-Style Consortium To Lead Battery Revolution
US Scientists Win Nobel Medicine Prize For Body Clock Research

Washington Times:

FBI Says No Terror Ties In Las Vegas Shooting Despite ISIS Claim: At Least 59 Dead, 527 Wounded
Authorities Fear Las Vegas Shooter Used Fully Automatic Machine Gun
Las Vegas Hospitals Shift Into Full Gear For Unprecedented Medical Crisis
As Abu Khattala Trial Opens, Agent Testifies About Losing Stevens And Smith In Benghazi Fire
Adversaries Challenge America’s Drone Dominance

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Enforcement Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect; Las Vegas Shooting-Victims; Las Vegas Shooting-Medical Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Weapons; Las Vegas Shooting-White House Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect Details; Las Vegas Shooting-Eyewitness Accounts; Las Vegas Shooting-Trump Visit; Las Vegas Shooting-NYC Security; Las Vegas Shooting-US Mass Shootings; Las Vegas Shooting-Congressman Comment; Las Vegas Shooting-Survival Comments; Hurricane Recovery-Trump Puerto Rico Visit; Navy Plane Crash; Cuba-US Embassy Sonic Attacks; Russia Meddling Investigation-Facebook; Tom Petty Hospitalized; Las Vegas Shooting-Citizen Response.

CBS: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Victims 1; Las Vegas Shooting-Eyewitness Accounts 1; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect’s Neighbors; Las Vegas Shooting-Citizen Response; Las Vegas Shooting-White House Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Eyewitness Accounts 2; Las Vegas Shooting-Responses; Las Vegas Shooting-Recap 1; Las Vegas Shooting-Enforcement Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Victims 2; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect’s Family; Las Vegas Shooting-Congress Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Expert Comments; Las Vegas Shooting-Terrorism Label; Hurricane Recovery-Trump Puerto Rico Visit; Tom Petty Hospitalized; Las Vegas Shooting-Recap 2.

NBC: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect; Las Vegas Shooting-Eyewitness Accounts; Las Vegas Shooting-Victims; Las Vegas Shooting-Medical Response; Las Vegas Shooting-Weapons; Las Vegas Shooting-US Mass Shootings; Las Vegas Shooting-Recap; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect Details; Las Vegas Shooting-Eyewitness Accounts 2; Las Vegas Shooting-Gun Control Debate; Las Vegas Shooting-Expert Comments; Las Vegas Shooting-Artist On Stage; Las Vegas Shooting-City; Las Vegas Shooting-Medical Response 2; Las Vegas Shooting-Recap 2.

Network TV At A Glance:

Las Vegas Shooting – 100 minutes, 40 seconds

Las Vegas Shooting-White House Response – 6 minutes, 55 seconds

Hurricane Recovery-Trump Puerto Rico Visit – 3 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Suspect; Las Vegas Shooting-White House Response; Hurricane Recovery-Trump Puerto Rico Visit; Russia Meddling Investigation-Facebook.

CBS: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Responses; Las Vegas Shooting-Trump Visit; Cuba-US Embassy Sonic Attacks; New Orleans Flooding; Mexico Earthquake Casualty; Wall Street News.

FOX: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Responses; Equifax-Cyber Security Breach.

NPR: Las Vegas Shooting; Las Vegas Shooting-Responses; Las Vegas Shooting-Gun Control Debate.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Receives a briefing on Hurricane Maria relief efforts; receives a briefing on Hurricane Maria relief efforts; visits Cavalry Chapel; meets with the Governor Kenneth Mapp of the US Virgin Islands; participates in a briefing with senior military personnel, Governor Ricardo Rosselló of Puerto Rico, and Governor Kenneth Mapp of the US Virgin Islands; participates in a greeting with the Navy and Marine Corps.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Meets with local businesses, community leaders, and Arizona families to discuss the need for tax reform; participates in a Republican National Committee reception.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Nominations hearing considers John Mitnick to be Department of Homeland Security General Counsel Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 342, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

10:00 AM Joint Economic Committee hearing on tax reform and entrepreneurship – Hearing on 'The Startup Slump: Can Tax Reform Help Revive Entrepreneurship?', with testimony from Center for American Entrepreneurship founder and President John Dearie; VentureOhio CEO Falon Donohue; Tax Foundation President Scott Hodge; and Small Business Majority CEO and founder John Arensmeyer Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1100, Washington, DC www.jec.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/JointEconCmte>

10:00 AM Senate Finance Committee hearing on international tax reform – Hearing on 'International Tax Reform', with testimony from University of Houston Law Center Professor Bret Wells; Reed College Professor of Economics Dr Kimberly Clausing; Harvard University Law School Senior Lecturer Stephen Shay; and Georgetown University Law Center Professor Itai Grinberg Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://finance.senate.gov>

10:00 AM Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on administration decision to end DACA – Hearing on 'Oversight of the Administration's Decision to End Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals', with testimony from Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division Chad Readler; Assistant Secretary of Homeland Security for Border Immigration and Trade Policy Michael Dougherty; and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services Acting Director James McCament Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee hearing on ESSA – Hearing on 'The Every Student Succeeds Act: Unleashing State Innovation', with testimony from Tennessee Department of Education Commissioner Dr Candice McQueen; Louisiana State Superintendent of Education John White; New Mexico Secretary of Education Christopher Ruszkowski; and Johns Hopkins Institute for Education Policy Executive Director Dr David Steiner Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Nominations hearing considers Kenneth Ian Juster to be U.S. Ambassador to India Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'Wells Fargo: One Year Later', with testimony from Wells Fargo & Company CEO and President Timothy Sloan Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 538, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Defense Secretary Mattis briefs Senate Armed Services Committee on Afghanistan – Hearing on 'Political and Security Situation in Afghanistan', with testimony from Secretary of Defense James Mattis; and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford, Jr. Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, SD-G50, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:15 AM Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Business Meeting – Business meeting to consider nominations of Bruce Walker to be Assistant Secretary of the Department of Energy for Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability; and Steven Winberg to be Assistant Secretary of the Department of Energy for Fossil Energy Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

10:30 AM Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources hearing on energy storage technologies – Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources hearing to examine energy storage technologies, with testimony from Pacific Northwest National Laboratory Electrochemical Materials & Systems Group Technical Group Manager Dr Vincent Sprenkle; AES Energy Storage Vice President Praveen Kathpal; Benchmark Mineral Intelligence Managing Director Simon Moores; and Voith Director of Engineering John Seifarth Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

11:30 AM Bicameral, bipartisan legislators announce legislation on retired miners' pensions – United Mine Workers of America press conference with Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin and Rep. Peter Welch, and Republican Sen. Shelley Moore and Rep. David McKinley, who announce new legislation to address retired miners' pensions. UMWA International President Cecil Roberts and retired miners also speak Location: U.S. Capitol, Rm S-120, East Capitol St, NE & First St SE, Washington, DC <http://www.umwa.org/>

2:00 PM Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Peter Henry Barlerin to be U.S. Ambassador to Cameroon; Eric Whitaker to be U.S. Ambassador to Niger; Michael James Dodman to be U.S. Ambassador to Mauritania; Nina Maria Fite to be U.S. Ambassador to Angola; Daniel Foote to be U.S. Ambassador to Zambia; and David Dale Reimer to be U.S. Ambassador to Mauritius, and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as U.S. Ambassador to the Seychelles Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

2:00 PM Female Dem senators speak at rally in support of the DREAM Act – Democratic Sens. Kamala Harris, Mazie Hirono, Tammy Duckworth and Amy Klobuchar speak at rally in support of the DREAM Act, focusing on women, families and the LGBTQ community. Other speakers include United We Dream Executive Director and Co-Founder Cristina Jimenez, Center for American Progress Action Fund Executive Vice President for External Affairs Winne Stachelberg, Human Rights Campaign Government Affairs Director David Stacy, National Latina Institute for Reproductive Health Executive Director Jessica Gonzalez-Rojas, and MomsRising Vice President Monifa Bandle Location: Capitol Lawn, Washington, DC www.americanprogressaction.org <https://twitter.com/CAPaction>

2:30 PM Helsinki Commission hearing on combating kleptocracy – Helsinki Commission hearing on 'Combating Kleptocracy with Incorporation Transparency', with witnesses – Hudson Institute Kleptocracy Initiative Executive Director Charles Davidson, Delegation of the European Union to the U.S. Deputy Head Caroline Vicini, and FACT Coalition Executive Director Gary Kalman – examining the development of the EU's beneficial ownership transparency provisions and the success of their implementation as relates to corruption as a vector for authoritarian influence in Europe, and addressing transparency and anti-money laundering policies in the U.S. as they relate to U.S. foreign policy Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 562, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

2:30 PM Senate Energy subcommittee legislative hearing – Energy Subcommittee legislative hearing on 'S. 186, Fair Ratepayer Accountability, Transparency, and Efficiency Standards Act', 'S. 1059, Responsible Disposal Reauthorization Act', 'S. 1337, Capitalizing on American Storage Potential', 'S. 1457, Advanced Nuclear Technologies Act', 'S. 1799, Energy Technology Maturation

Act', 'S. 1860, Parity Across Reviews Act', and 'H.R. 1109, To amend section 203 of the Federal Power Act', with testimony from Federal Energy Regulatory Commission General Counsel James Danly; and Department of Energy Deputy General Counsel for Energy Policy Bernard McNamee Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>
2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

3:15 PM VeteransAgainstAlzheimer's Network launched at Congressional Reception – VeteransAgainstAlzheimer's Network launched at Congressional Reception with Republican Sens. Shelley Moore Capito, Susan Collins, Thom Tillis, Pat Toomey and ROger Wicker, Democratic Sens. Ed Markey, Kirsten Gillibrand (invited) and Mark Warner (invited), and Veterans of Foreign Wars National Veterans Service Director Ryan Gallucci Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 106, Washington, DC www.usagainstalzhaimers.org <https://twitter.com/usagainstalz>

Senate HELP Committee Executive Session – Executive Session, with agenda including nominations of Patrick Pizzella to be Deputy Secretary of Labor; Janet Dhillon and Dr Daniel Gade to be Equal Employment Opportunity Commission members (with Dhillon to be chair, upon confirmation); and Carlos Muniz to be Department of Education General Counsel Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

US House: 10:00 AM Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on 'H.R. 3400, Recreation Not Red-Tape Act' – Federal Lands Subcommittee legislative hearing on 'H.R. 3400, Recreation Not Red-Tape Act', with testimony from former Congressman Nick Joe Rahall; Outdoor Alliance Policy Director Louis Geltman, Western River Expeditions President Brian Merrill, and Southwest Conservation Corps Associate Director Kevin Heiner Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on the DHS's cybersecurity mission – Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Protection Subcommittee hearing on 'Examining DHS's Cybersecurity Mission', with testimony from Department of Homeland Security National Protection and Programs Directorate Senior Official Performing the Duties of the Under Secretary Christopher Krebs; DHS National Protection and Programs Directorate Assistant Secretary for Cybersecurity and Communications Jeanette Manfra; and Department of Energy Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability Acting Assistant Secretary Patricia Hoffman Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

10:00 AM Joint Economic Committee hearing on tax reform and entrepreneurship – Hearing on 'The Startup Slump: Can Tax Reform Help Revive Entrepreneurship?', with testimony from Center for American Entrepreneurship founder and President John Dearie; VentureOhio CEO Falon Donohue; Tax Foundation President Scott Hodge; and Small Business Majority CEO and founder John Arensmeyer Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1100, Washington, DC www.jec.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/JointEconCmte>

10:00 AM House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on online sex trafficking and the Communications Decency Act – Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security, and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on 'Online Sex Trafficking and the Communications Decency Act', with testimony from U.S. Naval Academy Assistant Professor Jeff Kosseff; Catholic University Columbus School of Law Professor of Law Mary Leary; and Engine Executive Director Evan Engstrom Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM FHFA Director Watt testifies to House Financial Services Committee – Hearing on 'Sustainable Housing Finance: An Update from the Director of the Federal Housing Finance Agency', with testimony from FHFA Director Mel Watt Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM House Technology Committee hearing on electric grid resiliency – Hearing on 'Resiliency: The Electric Grid's Only Hope', with testimony from University of Illinois Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering head Dr William Sanders; Pacific Northwest National Laboratory Electricity Market Sector manager Carl Imhoff; Houston Advanced Research Center Clean Energy Policy Program director Dr Gavin Dillingham; and Texas Public Power Association executive director Walt Baum Location: Rm 2318, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM House Infrastructure subcommittee hearing on USCG stakeholders' perspectives – Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee hearing on 'Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Coast Guard Stakeholders' Perspectives and Jones Act Fleet Capabilities', with testimony from U.S. Coast Guard Assistant Commandant for Human Resources Rear Adm. William Kelly; Assistant Commandant for Engineering and Logistics Rear Adm. Melvin

Bouboulis; American Maritime Partnership Chairman Thomas Allegretti; Seafarers International Union Executive Vice President Augustin Tellez; Tote President and CEO Anthony Chiarello; Crowley Senior Vice President Michael Roberts; and Shipbuilders Council of America President Matthew Paxton Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>

10:00 AM Former Equifax CEO testifies to House Commerce subcommittee – Digital Commerce and Consumer Protection Subcommittee hearing on 'Oversight of the Equifax Data Breach: Answers for Consumers', with testimony from former Equifax CEO Richard Smith, who retired with immediate effect between the announcement of the hearing and today * Follows Equifax data breach that potentially exposed the personal information of 143 million Americans Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC
<http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:15 AM House Democratic Leaders to Hold Post-Caucus Press Conference – Participants: Linda Sánchez (D-California), Vice Chair of the Democratic Caucus; Mike Thompson (D-California), Chair of the Gun Violence Prevention Task Force; Michelle Lujan Grisham (D-New Mexico), Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus. Location: HVC Studio A — Capitol Visitor Center

10:15 AM House Energy and Commerce subcommittee hearing on patient access to investigational drugs – Health Subcommittee hearing on 'Examining Patient Access to Investigational Drugs', with testimony from Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Dr Scott Gottlieb; Republican Rep. Brian Fitzpatrick; Goldwater Institute Healthcare Policy Director Naomi Lopez-Bauman; Cognition Therapeutics President and CEO Kenneth Moch; and Friends of Cancer Research Chairperson and Founder Dr Ellen Sigal Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2322, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

11:00 AM GOP Rep. Walter Jones announces FOIA lawsuit regarding 2000 V-22 crash – Republican Rep. Walter Jones announces the filing of a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit seeking all records pertaining to the 2000 V-22 Osprey crash in Marana, AZ, that claimed the lives of 19 Marines. Rep. Jones is joined by attorney Mark Zaid and the widows and family of Marines Brooks Gruber and John Brow in his call for the release of documents 'that may explain why they were unfairly and incorrectly blamed' for the crash Location: U.S. Capitol, House Triangle, East Capitol St NE & First St SE, Washington, DC jones.house.gov
<https://twitter.com/repwalterjones>

11:30 AM Bicameral, bipartisan legislators announce legislation on retired miners' pensions – United Mine Workers of America press conference with Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin and Rep. Peter Welch, and Republican Sen. Shelley Moore and Rep. David McKinley, who announce new legislation to address retired miners' pensions. UMWA International President Cecil Roberts and retired miners also speak Location: U.S. Capitol, Rm S-120, East Capitol St, NE & First St SE, Washington, DC <http://www.umwa.org/>

12:00 PM House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing on Iraq and Syria – Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations Subcommittee hearing on 'Iraq and Syria Genocide Emergency Relief and Accountability', with testimony from former Rep. Frank Wolf; Yazidi survivor of the Islamic State group enslavement 'Shireen'; and Chaldean Catholic Archdiocese of Erbil Director of Internationally Displaced Persons Assistance Stephen Rasche Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

12:00 PM House of Representatives meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including 'S. 652 – Early Hearing Detection and Intervention Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2408 – Protecting Girls' Access to Education in Vulnerable Settings Act', 'H.R. 1918 – Nicaraguan Investment Conditionality Act (NICA) of 2017', 'H.R. 1624 – Municipal Finance Support Act of 2017', and 'H.R. 36 – Pain-Capable Unborn Child Protection Act' Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

12:00 PM 45th March for Life theme announced at Capitol Hill briefing – March for Life Education and Defense Fund announce the theme for the 45th annual March for Life (19 Jan), via Capitol Hill briefing hosted by Republican Rep. Diane Black and panel discussion with March for Life Education and Defense Fund President Jeanne Mancini, Northwest Center Executive Director Susan Gallucci, Charlotte Lozier Institute President Chuck Donovan, and Alliance Defending Freedom Director of Alliance Relations Alison Howard Centofante Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-201, First St NE, Washington, DC www.marchforlife.org
https://twitter.com/March_for_Life

1:00 PM House Armed Services Committee hearing on defense strategy in South Asia – House Armed Services Committee hearing on ‘U.S. Defense Strategy in South Asia’, with testimony from Secretary of Defense James Mattis and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2118, Washington, DC armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

2:00 PM House Energy subcommittee latest hearing on ‘Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry’ – Energy Subcommittee hearing on ‘Part II: Powering America: Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry’, with testimony from American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity CEO Paul Bailey; American Petroleum Institute Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer Marty Durbin; American Wind Energy Association CEO Tom Kiernan; Nuclear Energy Institute CEO Maria Korsnick; Natural Resources Defense Council Energy & Transportation Program Sustainable FERC Project Director John Moore; Solar Energy Industries Association President and CEO Abigail Ross Hopper; Energy Storage Association CEO Kelly Speakes-Backman; and Chelan County PUD General Manager Steve Wright (on behalf of National Hydropower Association) Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

2:00 PM House Oversight and Government Reform / Armed Services subcommittees joint hearing on use of canines in security – House Homeland Security Committee Subcommittee on Transportation and Protective and House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform Intergovernmental Affairs Subcommittee hold joint hearing on ‘Innovations in Security: Examining the Use of Canines’, with testimony from American Kennel Club Vice President of Government Relations Sheila Goffe; Orlando Police Department Lt. Scott Smith; and University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine Penn Vet Working Dog Center Director Cynthia Otto Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

2:00 PM House Oversight subcommittee hearing on ‘Cybersecurity of the Internet of Things’ – Information Technology Subcommittee hearing on ‘Cybersecurity of the Internet of Things’, with testimony from U.S. Chamber of Commerce Cybersecurity Policy Executive Director Matthew Eggers; Atlantic Council Cyber Statecraft Initiative Director Josh Corman; The Software Alliance Senior Director of Policy Tommy Ross; and VMware Chief Technology Officer Ray O’Farrell Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2247, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

2:30 PM Helsinki Commission hearing on combating kleptocracy – Helsinki Commission hearing on ‘Combating Kleptocracy with Incorporation Transparency’, with witnesses – Hudson Institute Kleptocracy Initiative Executive Director Charles Davidson, Delegation of the European Union to the U.S. Deputy Head Caroline Vicini, and FACT Coalition Executive Director Gary Kalman – examining the development of the EU’s beneficial ownership transparency provisions and the success of their implementation as relates to corruption as a vector for authoritarian influence in Europe, and addressing transparency and anti-money laundering policies in the U.S. as they relate to U.S. foreign policy Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 562, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on ‘H. Con. Res. 71 – Establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2018 and setting forth the appropriate budgetary levels for fiscal years 2019 through 2027’ Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

3:30 PM House Armed Services subcommittee hearing on ‘securing the peace’ after the fall of the Islamic State group – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on ‘Securing the Peace After the Fall of ISIL’, with testimony from Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for Stability and Humanitarian Affairs Mark Swayne; Joint Staff J-5 Middle East Division Director USMC Brig. Gen. James Bierman; State Department Deputy Assistant Secretary for Iraq Joseph Pennington; State Department Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS Director Pamela Quanrud; former U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Ryan Crocker; American Enterprise Institute Resident Scholar Dr Kenneth Pollack; and George Washington University Professor of Political Science Dr Marc Lynch Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2212, Washington, DC www.armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

4:00 PM House Natural Resources Committee markup hearing begins – Markup hearing begins on ‘H.R. 210, Native American Energy Act’, ‘H.R. 424, Gray Wolf State Management Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 717, Listing Reform Act’, ‘H.R. 1274, State, Tribal and Local Species Transparency Act and Recovery Act’, ‘H.R. 1488, The Indiana Dunes National Park Act’, ‘H.R. 2600, To provide for the conveyance to the State of Iowa of the reversionary interest held by the United States in certain land in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, and for other purposes’, ‘H.R. 2603, Saving

America's Endangered Species Act' ('SAVES Act'), 'H.R. 2897, To authorize the Mayor of the District of Columbia and the Director of the National Park Service to enter into cooperative management agreements for the operation, maintenance, and management of units of the National Park System in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', and 'H.R. 3131, Endangered Species Litigation Reasonableness Act' * Concludes tomorrow Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/NatResources>

5:30 PM 'Syria's Disappeared: The Case Against Assad' TLHRC screening and panel discussion – Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission hosts 'Syria's Disappeared: The Case Against Assad' film screening and panel discussion, with opening remarks from TLHRC Co-Chair Rep. James McGovern and panelists former U.S. Ambassador-at-Large for War Crimes Issues Stephen Rapp and Syrian survivor of torture Mazen Alhumada. The film tells the story of tens of thousands of men, women and children who disappeared at the hands of the Assad regime into a network of clandestine detention centers Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1539, Washington, DC <http://tlhrc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/TLHRCCommission>

Other: 8:45 AM Bipartisan Reps. Ed Royce and Eliot Engel at 'Hezbollah's Role in Iran's Global Illicit Networks' event – 'Hezbollah's Role in Iran's Global Illicit Networks' breakfast event, hosted by the Foundation for Defense of Democracies and its Center on Sanctions and Illicit Finance. Speakers include House Committee on Foreign Affairs Chairman Ed Royce and Ranking Member Eliot Engel, former Drug Enforcement Administration Special Operations Division Special Agent in Charge Derek Maltz, and FDD Senior Vice President Jonathan Schanzer and Center on Sanctions and Illicit Finance Director of Analysis Yaya Fanusie Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2200, Washington, DC www.defenddemocracy.org <https://twitter.com/FollowFDD>

9:00 AM Washington Post Live Cybersecurity Summit – Washington Post Live Cybersecurity Summit, convening govt leaders, business executives and security experts to discuss and debate top issues in cybersecurity. Speakers include Republican Rep. Will Hurd, former Special Adviser to the President on Cyber Security Richard Clarke, former National Security Agency Director and CIA Director Gen. (Ret.) Michael Hayden, White House Cybersecurity Coordinator Rob Joyce, Ridge Global President Christopher Furlow, Center for Democracy and Technology's Freedom, Security, and Technology Project Deputy Director Michelle Richardson, and national security journalist Marcy Wheeler Location: The Washington Post, 1301 K St NW, Washington, DC
<http://www.washingtonpost.com/> <https://twitter.com/washingtonpost>

10:00 AM 'Gill v. Whitford' Rally – Schwarzenegger – Rally outside the Supreme Court to oppose partisan gerrymandering. Participants: Arnold Schwarzenegger, Actor, athlete, former Republican Governor of California; Gerry Hebert, Gill v. Whitford litigator, Senior Director, Voting Rights and Redistricting, Campaign Legal Center; Wendy Sue Johnson, Gill v. Whitford plaintiff, Wisconsin resident; Karen Hobert Flynn, President, Common Cause, filed amicus brief in the case; Rachel Brewer, Represent. Us, the nation's largest grassroots anti-corruption campaign which filed amicus brief on the case; David Jolly, Republican former U.S. Representative for Florida's 13th Congressional District; John C. Yang, Executive Director, Asian Americans Advancing Justice, signed on to civil rights' groups amicus brief in support of fair maps; Wylecia Wiggs Harris, CEO, League of Women Voters; Will Fischer, VoteVets; Michele Jawando, Center for American Progress Action; Sachin Chheda, Fair Elections Project (Wisconsin), helped organize and launch the case; Kristen CI Location: In front of the United States Supreme Court Building 1 First Street, NE.

12:00 PM Media Conference Call on Needed Safety Fixes to Senate AV Bil – Coalition of leading safety and consumer advocates, and families of victims of deadly vehicle defects, will call on the U.S. Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation to include "much needed changes" to a bill on autonomous vehicles (AV) which allows "hundreds of thousands of self-driving cars to get exemptions from federal motor vehicle safety standards". Participants: U.S. Senator Richard Blumenthal (D-CT), Member of the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation; Senator Ed Markey (D-MA), Member of the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation; Laura Christian, mother of Amber Marie Rose, who was killed in a GM ignition switch defect crash in 2005; Angelina Sujata, victim of defective Takata airbag; Joan Claybrook, Former Administrator, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration; Steve Hargarten, emergency physician and Medical College of Wisconsin professor; Jackie Gillan, President, Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety; Jack Gillis, Director of Public Affairs, C Location: TBD

2:30 PM House Republican Study Committee members speak at Heritage Foundation on tax relief – Heritage Foundation hosts 'Tax Relief for the American People' conversation with members of the House Republican Study Committee, including Chairman Rep. Mark Walker and fellow GOP Reps. Jim Banks, Andy Barr, and Jeff Duncan Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC www.heritage.org <https://twitter.com/Heritage>

Bureau of Industry and Security annual Update Conference – Update 2017: Department of Commerce Bureau of Industry and Security 30th Annual Conference on Export Controls and Policy, this year themed 'Protecting American Technology – Growing American Industry'. Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross keynotes, with other speakers including Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisitions, Technology and Logistics Ellen Lord Location: Washington Hilton, 1919 Connecticut Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.commerce.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/CommerceGov>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "There are a lot of things we can do about it. But we don't, which is interesting because when someone with a beard attacks us, we tap phones, we invoke travel bans, we build walls to take every possible precaution to make sure it doesn't happen again. But when an American buys a gun and kills other Americans, then there's nothing we can do about it. The Second Amendment, I guess, our forefathers wanted us to have AK-47s is the argument."

Jimmy Kimmel: "The White House Press Secretary Sara Sanderson said this morning it was not the time for political debate. I don't know. We have 59 innocent people dead. It wasn't their time either."

Stephen Colbert: "Last week, Rep. Steve Scalise returned to the floor and was greeted with a bipartisan, hero's welcome. It was the kind of moment that gives hope that Congress might work together for the common good. And the bar is so low that Congress can be heroes by doing literally anything."

Stephen Colbert: "You know you work for the Trump administration when one of the worst disasters in history seems like a good news story to you."

Trevor Noah: "Every time there is a shooting, you got to look at something else. Is it Muslims? Is it their religion, is that what it is? Is it blacks? It is a black-on-black crime, it is mentally ill people, is it white nationalists? Every time, it's a different question. And now, now after this incident in Las Vegas, we're asking a new question. Is it hotels?"

Trevor Noah: "Just to give you an idea of how far away America is from actual gun control, this week Congress is going to vote on deregulating gun silencers. Because I guess Congress is thinking gun violence is out of control, they were like, 'How can we make it quieter?'"

Trevor Noah: "Earlier this week, the Secretary of State revealed that he has a direct line of communication with North Korea, which is a big deal considering North Korea is threatening to launch a nuclear weapon at the US. Unfortunately for the rest of us, President Trump has a direct line of communication with Twitter."

Trevor Noah: "Wow, really? The hurricane-ravaged people of Puerto Rico are lazy. This coming from a man who spent 71 days of his presidency at a golf course, really? A sport where you are so lazy you need an assistant."

Seth Meyers: "In a new interview, House Speaker Paul Ryan said he thinks President Trump's heart is in the right place on race relations. Oh, sorry, I misread that, his heart is in the white place."

Seth Meyers: "A new media study has found that only one in ten stories offered a positive assessment of the Trump Administration, while the other nine were true."

Seth Meyers: "Former California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger will speak at a rally tomorrow against gerrymandering. Admission is free, but I would still pay $1,000 just to hear him say 'gerrymandering.'"

Seth Meyers: "After President Trump tweeted yesterday that Secretary of State Rex Tillerson is wasting his time trying to negotiate with North Korea, Politico published an article titled, 'Should Rex Tillerson Resign?' Replied Tillerson, 'I resigned months ago, has nobody noticed?'"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, October 10, 2017
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2017 7:08:06 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- USA Today: Nate Batters Weary Southeast With Heavy Rains, Flooding.
- Washington Examiner: House Preps Bill Curbing Presidential Power To Create Monuments.
- Breitbart: Zinke Says No Monuments To Be Removed From Federal Land.
- Associated Press: Interior Secretary Zinke: Trump Committed To Everglades Projects.
- CNN: Obama Interior Secretaries Spent Over $971,000 On Non-commercial Air Travel.
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Interior Secretary Zinke Invokes Teddy Roosevelt As Model, But His Public Land Policies Don't.
- Politico: Watchdog Group Requests Hatch Act Probe Of Zinke's Appearance At Virgin Islands.

- Washington Post: The Energy 202: Here's How Trump's Sage Grouse Fix Could Backfire.
- Sierra (CA) Sun: Nevada Gov. Sandoval Backs BLM Decision To End Sage Grouse Lands Withdrawal.
- Portland (ME) Press Herald: Storm Brews Over New England's National Monument Offshore.
- Denver Post: National Parks Need Investment From Private Companies To Thrive.
- Washington Post: Interior Department Worked Behind The Scenes With Energy Industry To Reverse Royalties Rule.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Northern Cheyenne Tribal Council Votes To Oust President.
- U.S. Attorney Declined To Step Into Fort Peck Civil Rights Case, BIA Says.
- Review Of Dakota Access Oil Pipeline To Extend Into Spring.
- Native Community To Honor Indigenous People's Day.
- Federal Court Recommends Dismissal Of Homeless Claims.
- Economic Development Surging In New Mexico Tribal Community.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Utah Rep. Smith's Chief Of Staff Named BLM Deputy Director.
- Reuters: Nevada Trial Of Cliven Bundy Postponed After Las Vegas Massacre.
- Associated Press: BLM Approves Master Plan For Drilling In North Fork Valley.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Wyoming Oil And Gas Operators Pleased By Federal Walk Back On Methane Rule.
- Houston Chronicle: Montana Pipeline Proposed To Transport CO2 For Oil Recovery.
- Parker (AZ) Pioneer: BLM Plans Prescribed Burnings In Parker Area.
- Bend (OR) Bulletin: BLM Broke Law In Plan To Sterilize Herd Of Wild Horses.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Victims Of 2013 Colorado Floods Claim U.S. Government Opened Dam Without Warning, Destroying Homes.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Bloomberg News: Trump Quietly Stalls Safeguards For Dozens Of Endangered Species.
- High Plains and Midwest AG (KS) Journal: Celebrate National Wildlife Refuge Week Oct. 8 To 14.
- Detroit Free Press: Michigan Forests Vital To Threatened Species.
- Associated Press: Mussel, Once Feared Extinct, Brought Back To Ohio River.

National Park Service

- Baltimore Sun: Designed Wisely, Express Lanes Can Reduce Travel Time, Bring Revenue.
- Associated Press: Colorado River Rafting Contract Awarded To Different Company.
- Naples (FL) Daily News: Texas Company Seeks To Renew Permit To Look For Big Cypress Oil.
- Associated Press: Puerto Rico Slum Transformed By 'Despacito' Seeks To Revive.
- Beckley (WV) Register-Herald: New App Brings History To Life In The New River Gorge Region.
- Washington Times: Donald Trump's Lewd 'Access Hollywood' Tape Played On Repeat Near White House.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Pasquines (PRI): House Committee Discusses Situation In Puerto Rico And US Virgin Islands After Irma And María.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Montana Coal Mine Appeals Ruling That Could Trigger Layoffs.

US Geological Survey

- Los Angeles Times: Magnitude 4.1 Earthquake Shakes Bay Area.
- Los Angeles Times: Earthquake: 3.2 Quake Strikes Near Bryn Mawr.

Top National News

- ABC: Pruitt Announces Repeal Of Clean Power Plan.
- NBC: Wildfires Burn Across California, Killing At Least 10.
- Associated Press: Northeast Sees Wind, Rain From Remnants Of Hurricane Nate.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "On Immigration, Mr. Trump Shows Congress It's On Its Own."
 - "A Peace Prize That Honors The Quest."
 - "Want To Vote Next Year, New York? Act Now!"
- Washington Post.
 - "What To Do With An Unfit President."
 - "Trump's Cruel Sabotage Of The Dreamers."
 - "Trump's NFL Bullying Is Filtering Down To America's Schools."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Immigration Bait And Switch."
 - "Ireland Falls For A Lousy T-Shirt."
 - "The Truth About Trump And Corker."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Nate Batters Weary Southeast With Heavy Rains, Flooding.

USA Today (10/8, Bacon, Stanglin) reported that Hurricane Nate "blasted onto the Gulf Coast and lashed much of the Southeast with heavy rains and winds Sunday, fading to a tropical depression but still knocking out power to more than 100,000 people and driving rivers of water through the streets of many communities." Crews "were plucked off drilling rigs in the Gulf of Mexico and other rigs were moved out of the storm's path before Nate hit, the Interior Department said."

CBS News (10/9) reports that "more than 40 percent of manned oil- and gas-producing platforms in the Gulf of Mexico have been evacuated, according to an update from the Interior Department."

Bloomberg News (10/8, Doan) says a government report says that "'no damages have been reported.' If that holds true, Monday's report may show a jump in oil and natural gas production in the Gulf of Mexico." Chevron Corp. and Enbridge Inc. "were already returning workers to offshore platforms Sunday, and the U.S. Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said in Sunday's report that it expected facilities to be 'brought back on line immediately' after operators had done the standard checks."

The Chicago Sun-Times (10/6) reported that the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement's New Orleans office "said in a news release that as of midday Thursday, six production platforms, out of the 737 manned platforms in the Gulf, had been evacuated. No drilling rigs were evacuated, but one moveable rig was taken out of the storm's path."

Additional coverage is provided by the Los Angeles \(CA\) Times (10/7, Press), the Denver \(CO\) Post (10/6), the Washington \(DC\) Post (10/6), U.S. News & World Report (10/8, Parraga, Seba), the Orange County \(CA\) Register (10/6, Galeano), Philly \(PA\) (10/6), and the Boston \(MA\) Globe (10/7, Amy).

About 85 Percent Of U.S. Gulf Oil Output Offline Due To Nate: Agency. Reuters (10/9) reports that about 85 percent of US Gulf of Mexico oil production "is offline in the aftermath of Hurricane Nate, the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement (BSEE) said on Monday." That amounts to "about 1.49 million barrels per day in production that is offline, according to BSEE," who also said that about 65 percent of Gulf natural gas production remains offline.

Reuters (10/8, Parraga, Seba) reported Nate "forced the closure of more than triple the volume of Gulf offshore crude production than Hurricane Harvey did from late August to early September, according to the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement."

Natural Gas Intelligence (10/9, Davis) reports, "Nate, which traversed a rich natural gas and oil production area of the GOM before coming ashore, through midday Monday still was forcing the shut-in of 64.78%, or 2.086 Bcf/d of natural gas, based on operator reports submitted to the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement."

Ahead of Nate, Reuters (10/6) reported, that "about 71 percent" of US Gulf of Mexico oil production was offline, according to the BSEE, while "about 53.2 percent" of Gulf natural gas production remained offline.

Hurricane Nate Shuts In 92 Pct Of U.S. Gulf Of Mexico Oil Output. Reuters (10/7) reports that by Saturday, Hurricane Nate had "shut in 92 percent of oil output and 77 percent of natural gas production in the U.S. Gulf of Mexico on Saturday, according to the latest U.S. government estimate." The storm had "halted offshore production amounting to 1.61 million barrels per day of oil and 2.48 billion cubic feet per day of natural gas, the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement said on Saturday."

The Daily Mail (10/7) reports, U.S. News & World Report (10/7)

Oil Prices Stable As OPEC Says Market Is Rebalancing. Reuters (10/10) reports that oil prices "were steady on Tuesday as OPEC said there were clear signs the market was rebalancing and as U.S. production remained offline following Hurricane Nate." US West Texas Intermediate (WTI) crude futures "were trading at $49.66 per barrel at 0442 GMT, up 8 cents, or 0.2 percent, from their last close." Brent crude futures "were up 7 cents, or 0.1 percent, at $55.86 a barrel." Reuters adds that short-term price support "was also coming from the United States, where 85 percent of U.S. Gulf of Mexico oil production, or 1.49 million barrels a day, was offline following Hurricane Nate, according to the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement late on Monday."

House Preps Bill Curbing Presidential Power To Create Monuments.

The Washington Examiner (10/9, Siegel, Ferrechio) reports that House lawmakers on Wednesday will vote "to advance legislation that would limit the power of the president to designate public land as national monuments." The National Monument Creation and Protection Act "'standardizes and limits the president's power to reshape monuments,' according to the House Natural Resources Committee, which introduced the bill Monday and has scheduled a panel markup for Oct. 11." The article notes that President Trump "ordered the Interior Department to undertake a review of 27 national monuments shortly after his inauguration. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke issued a report to Trump in August, but the White House has not yet acted on the review."

The Hill (10/9, Henry) reports the legislation "comes as the Interior Department recommends President Trump shrink a handful of large monument designations made since the 1990s." The Natural Resources Committee on Wednesday "will also consider ranking Democrat Raúl Grijalva's (Ariz.) resolution requiring Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke share with Congress more information related to his national monuments review."

Zinke Says No Monuments To Be Removed From Federal Land.

Breitbart (10/8) reports that in an exclusive interview with Breitbart's Amanda House, Interior Secretary Zinke "ruled out bowing to activist pressure to tear down historical monuments" at federal lands and parks. When asked to weigh in on calls to remove monuments to George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, or even Christopher Columbus, Zinke said, "No monuments are going to be removed from federal land. ... I think we should never hide from our history or erase our history. I think we should embrace the history and understand the faults and learn from it. But when you try to erase history, what happens is you also erase how it happened and why it happened and the ability to learn from it."

Decarlo: Attacks On Columbus In Fact May Threaten Values Of Western Civilization. In a Wall Street Journal (10/8) op-ed, former Chicago Tribune reporter Angela Rocco Decarlo writes that Christopher Columbus was a pioneering individual whose accomplishments helped usher in the Renaissance and provided a key point in the development of Western civilization. Decarlo argues that those seeking to delegitimize Columbus' legacy in fact may be targeting the values and achievements of Western civilization he helped progress.

Interior Secretary Zinke: Trump Committed To Everglades Projects.

As part of a trip to Florida to "assess hurricane damage and Everglades restoration projects," the AP (10/6), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "said President Donald Trump was committed to fast-tracking costly and long-delayed Everglades restoration projects. He said the administration would remove bureaucratic obstacles to restoring natural freshwater flows through the wetlands." Preserve employees "applauded Zinke's announcement that new park service uniforms better suited to the humid, mosquito-infested climate were being designed."

WFOR-TV Miami (10/7) reports, "More work is still needed to repair damage done by Hurricane Irma to the Florida Everglades and on Saturday, Senator Marco Rubio and U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke got a first-hand look." Zinke is quoted saying, "We all understand how important our parks are, not only for stewardship and protection of American lands, but also for the local communities. ... Our park employees have been devastated, too."

Additional coverage is provided by the Naples \(FL\) Daily News (10/6), the Naples \(FL\) Daily News (10/6), and the Washington \(DC\) Times. (10/6, Kay)

Oil Exploration In Everglades To Resume. The South Florida Sun Sentinel (10/9, Flesher) reports that Burnett Oil Co., after gaining approval from the Florida Department of Environmental Protection, is set to resume testing for the presence of oil. The company is planning to test a 110-square-mile region with steel plates, within the Big Cypress National Preserve in the Everglades. Environmental groups objected to the testing argue it could harm wildlife habitats.

Obama Interior Secretaries Spent Over $971,000 On Non-commercial Air Travel.

CNN (10/9, Marsh) reports, "Just over $971,000 was spent on non-commercial travel for interior secretaries in the Obama administration during a seven-year period, according to records obtained by CNN." That includes "travel on both chartered planes as well as on Interior Department aircraft." The Interior Department "submitted records detailing the non-commercial travel of former secretaries Ken Salazar and Sally Jewell to the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee, saying $971,634 was spent on 81 trips." The non-commercial travel for current Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has so far cost $72,849 on six trips since he took office in March."

Additional coverage is provided by the Washington Examiner (10/9, Siciliano), WPIX-TV New York \(NY\) New York (10/9), and Newsmax (10/9, Morrison).

Trump's White House Wrestles With Cabinet Costs. The Boston Globe (10/9, Harwell) reports the Trump Administration, "one of the wealthiest in modern US history, is facing widening criticism over travel expenditures among some of the billionaires, budget hawks, and business executives who head federal agencies." Inspectors general "have opened at least five investigations into charter or military flights by Cabinet officials amounting to millions in federal spending." Zinke, "a former Montana congressman and Navy SEAL commander, flew for official business but spoke in Las Vegas to a campaign donor's hockey team, spent a few weekends near his homes out West, and attended political fund-raisers from Montana to the Virgin Islands. His wife, Lola, often accompanied him on the trips." An Interior spokesman "said the department 'has always and will always work to ensure all officials follow appropriate rules and regulations when traveling.'"

Additional coverage is provided by the Montana Standard (10/9), Business Insider (10/10), Bloomberg View (10/8, Hunt), the Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (10/8, Pearson), the Boston Globe (10/9, Harwell), MSNBC (10/6), CNN International (10/6, Marsh, Wallace, CNN), Reuters (10/6, Reuters), the Washington \(DC\) Post (10/6, Bump), Reuters (10/6, Volcovici), Yahoo! News (10/6, Editoreditor), the Washington \(DC\) Post (10/6, Dennis), the Financial Times (10/6, Lynch), and NBC News (10/6).

Zinke's Private Flight Could Hurt His Political Aspirations In Montana. The Bozeman \(MT\) Daily Chronicle (10/6) editorialized that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "dismissal of a private charter flight on the U.S. taxpayers' dime as 'a little BS over travel' smacks of the kind of arrogance that infests the 'swamp' the Trump administration has vowed to drain." However, "Zinke is reminded that if he has a political future after the Trump administration, it will most likely lie in the hands of Montana voters. And if he comes back home to run for office, the kind of baggage that comes with dismissing the needless spending of $12,000 in taxpayer money as 'a little BS' is not going to sit well with those voters."

Interior Secretary Zinke Invokes Teddy Roosevelt As Model, But His Public Land Policies Don't.

Boise State University Professor and Andrus Center for Public Policy Executive Director John Freemuth writes in the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (10/6, George Danby |, BDN) that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "recommendations to shrink four national monuments and allow fossil fuel development activities on others is just the latest sign that this administration sees natural resource use and extraction as the highest priority for public lands." Freemuth says that while Zinke has invoked Teddy Roosevelt as a model, some say that so far he is "all Roosevelt hat and no Roosevelt action."

Watchdog Group Requests Hatch Act Probe Of Zinke's Appearance At Virgin Islands.

Politico (10/6, Juliano, Lefebvre, Whieldon) reported that a watchdog group “is asking the Justice Department’s Office of Special Counsel to open a Hatch Act investigation into Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke after POLITICO reported he had appeared at a political fundraiser in the U.S. Virgin Islands while on an official trip less than a month after being confirmed.” Politico adds that “donors who gave the Virgin Islands Republican Party between $1,500 and $5,000 per couple were invited to get their photos taken with Zinke at the March 30 event, according to a copy of the invitation seen by POLITICO and Zinke’s official schedule.” The nonprofit Campaign Legal Center “says that activity may have run afoul of the federal law prohibiting federal officials from using government resources to engage in partisan political activity.”

The Energy 202: Here’s How Trump’s Sage Grouse Fix Could Backfire.

In continuing coverage, Dino Grandoni writes in the Washington Post (10/6) saying, “Another day, another regulatory rollback from the Trump administration: This week, the Interior Department took another step toward reopening a conservation controversy over the sage grouse.” However, “unlike most other regulatory changes undertaken by the Trump administration, this one doesn’t have the full endorsement of local Republican politicians representing states with energy interests.” And with good reason: “It could backfire, impose even more stringent regulations on Western states and energy companies operating in them and reshape the region’s economy in way those governors never asked for.”

Additional coverage is provided by the Southwest Colorado Journal (10/6), the St. George \(UT\) News (10/6), KMGH-TV Denver \(CO\) Denver (10/6), and KSL-TV Salt Lake City \(UT\) Salt Lake City (10/9).

Nevada Gov. Sandoval Backs BLM Decision To End Sage Grouse Lands Withdrawal.

The Sierra \(CA\) Sun (10/7) reports that Gov. Brian Sandoval “says he supports the decision by the Bureau of Land Management to cancel the withdrawal of western lands in six states from mining and exploration activities.” Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke “signed an order Thursday, Oct. 5, loosening the restrictions on energy development and mining activities in sage grouse habitat areas. The new ruled also offer states more flexibility in managing the grouse population.”

Nevada Appeal (10/6) reports that Sandoval said in a statement, “Mining has not been identified as a widespread, significant threat to the sage grouse and I appreciate the Department of Interior recognizing the overreach of this action, which had such significant economic impact on our state mining and exploration industries.”

Storm Brews Over New England’s National Monument Offshore.

The Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (10/8) reports that “ever since President Trump announced he would review his predecessor’s creation of national monuments, Mainers have been focused on the future of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument in northern Maine.” But a second New England monument “also fell under the review conducted by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, one that scientists and conservationists say is essential for understanding the rapid changes going on in the Gulf of Maine and northeast Atlantic.” The article says that Zinke “has recommended that the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument...be opened to commercial fishing, a move proponents say would defeat its purpose.”

National Parks Need Investment From Private Companies To Thrive.

Frank Hugelmeyer writes in the Denver Post (10/6, Hugelmeyer) that as “millions of Americans will head to America’s iconic public lands and waters to soak up what’s left of warmer weather and get a glimpse of fall’s renowned foliage,” it’s “time our national parks, waterways and other public outdoor spaces get the attention they deserve.” Improvements to “our outdated recreation infrastructure have gone largely unaddressed by both political parties for decades, no matter who lives in the White House or is in the majority on Capitol Hill,” and it is “time for that to change.” The good news “is Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is trying something different. He has laid out a course of action that addresses the nearly $20 billion maintenance backlog crippling many of our outdoor spaces and emphasizes the need to modernize services, lodging, marinas and campgrounds. His proposal invites Americans to fully utilize their public outdoor spaces and leverage proven public-private partnerships.”

Interior Department Worked Behind The Scenes With Energy Industry To Reverse Royalties Rule.

The Washington Post (10/6, Eilperin) reports that top Interior Department officials “worked privately with energy industry representatives during the first weeks of the Trump administration to suspend a new accounting system that would have forced companies to pay millions of dollars more in royalties to the government, documents show.” The push to suspend the Obama-era rule, “which is the subject of three federal lawsuits in Wyoming, took on a sense of urgency after an attorney for the coal company Cloud Peak Energy first suggested the move in late January.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Northern Cheyenne Tribal Council Votes To Oust President.

The AP (10/9) reports a Montana Indian tribe “has voted to oust its president for reportedly neglecting his duties and violating tribal bylaws. But President Jace Killsback said he plans to stay in office after a tribal court ruled last week that the complaint against him was not sworn under oath and not specific enough.” It was “not clear Friday if the Bureau of Indian Affairs would recognize the council’s vote. Spokeswoman Nedra Darling did not return phone calls seeking comment. The BIA office was closed for a federal holiday on Monday.”

The article was also picked up by the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (10/9), U.S. News & World Report (10/9), the Washington \(DC\) Times (10/9), and the Helena \(MT\) Independent Record (10/6).

U.S. Attorney Declined To Step Into Fort Peck Civil Rights Case, BIA Says.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/8) reports the US Attorney’s Office in Montana “declined to pursue a civil rights case before an investigation into the so-called ‘wino roundup’ was completed on the Fort Peck Reservation, according to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.” In addition to launching an Internal Affairs investigation, the BIA “alerted the FBI and the U.S. Attorney’s Office in Montana, according to a BIA spokeswoman. While the investigation was still ongoing, federal prosecutors declined to take action.”

Review Of Dakota Access Oil Pipeline To Extend Into Spring.

The AP (10/9, Nicholson) reports it “probably will take until next spring for the Army Corps of Engineers to finish court-ordered additional environmental study of the Dakota Access oil pipeline, agency attorneys said in court documents filed Friday.” The Corps “had anticipated completing the task by the end of the year, but Justice Department attorney Matthew Marinelli said it will take longer than expected to get needed information including spill modeling from Texas-based pipeline developer Energy Transfer Partners and possibly from at least one unspecified American Indian tribe.”

Native Community To Honor Indigenous People’s Day.

The AP (10/9, Press) reports Native American organizers “are spending Columbus Day spreading awareness of a campaign to support legislation in Baltimore to change the name of the holiday to Indigenous People’s Day.” The event “will take place on Monday at the Baltimore American Indian Center, where leaders from the Baltimore Native American community will share information about the campaign.”

The AP (10/9) reports a central Kentucky community “is planning a ceremony and other festivities to recognize Native American heritage.” A statement from the Kentucky Native American Heritage Commission “says the city of Stanford will celebrate its first Indigenous Peoples’ Day at the Lincoln County Courthouse on Monday.”

Federal Court Recommends Dismissal Of Homeless Claims.

The San Francisco Chronicle (10/8) reports that a federal court “is recommending dismissal of a civil complaint filed on behalf of more than two dozen homeless residents of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation who were jailed to prevent them from panhandling during a rodeo weekend in Wolf Point in 2013.” US Magistrate Judge John Johnston “granted attorney Daniel Flaherty’s motion to withdraw on Sept. 19 after he reported being unable to contact lead plaintiff Reba Demarrais.” A 2014 Bureau of Indian Affairs investigation “concluded that four tribal law enforcement officers illegally arrested and detained 29 people in violation of their civil and Constitutional rights.”

Economic Development Surging In New Mexico Tribal Community.

The AP (10/7) reported that “an entire neighborhood dating back to the mid-1900s is being remodeled. ... There's a building boom going on throughout Zuni Pueblo, signs that economic development has found its way to the western New Mexico tribal community." While the pueblo "has been traditionally against developing casinos on the reservation, the previous administration sought a gaming compact with New Mexico in 2014 and the Bureau of Indian Affairs approved it in August 2015."

The article was also picked up by the Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (10/7), U.S. News & World Report (10/7), and the Washington \(DC\) Times (10/7).

Bureau Of Land Management

Utah Rep. Smith's Chief Of Staff Named BLM Deputy Director.

The AP (10/6) reports that Utah Rep. Chris Stewart's chief of staff Brian Steed "has been named a deputy director at the U.S. Bureau of Land Management." The St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (10/6) reported the appointment "signals an increased Utah influence at the federal agency just as it takes on key issues such as Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's recommendation that President Donald Trump reduce the size of the Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante national monuments."

Nevada Trial Of Cliven Bundy Postponed After Las Vegas Massacre.

Reuters (10/7, Coffman) reports a federal judge in Nevada "postponed the trial of rancher Cliven Bundy for his role in an armed standoff with U.S. government agents, after defense lawyers argued that the Las Vegas mass shooting could influence jurors, his attorney said on Friday."

The AP (10/7) reported that defense attorneys "argued that the attack would cast a shadow over the trial, which was set to start Tuesday in Las Vegas. On Friday, the judge rescheduled it for Oct. 30."

Additional coverage is provided by the Washington \(DC\) Post (10/6, Sottile) and NPR (10/6).

BLM Approves Master Plan For Drilling In North Fork Valley.

The AP (10/6) reported the Bureau of Land Management "has approved a plan for oil and gas development in the works for nearly a decade in Colorado's North Fork Valley." Citing the Daily Sentinel, the AP said the master plan "calls for eventually building 146 wells about 30 miles (48 kilometers) northeast of Paonia (pay-OWN'-yuh) to the south of McClure Pass." However, the BLM "has only granted permission for one well to be built so far in the nearly 20,000 acre (8093.9 hectare) Bull Mountain project."

Wyoming Oil And Gas Operators Pleased By Federal Walk Back On Methane Rule.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/8) reports the Bureau of Land Management's methane waste reduction rule "has been causing confusion." But "two decisions that impact the future of the controversial rule came within hours of each other on Thursday. The Interior announced its intention to try to delay the rule again, this time according to the federal process. Hours later, a federal court in California sided with environmental advocates that the Interior had unlawfully delayed the rule the first go round, and decided that the rule would be in effect immediately."

Montana Pipeline Proposed To Transport CO2 For Oil Recovery.

The Houston Chronicle (10/8) reports that an energy company "is seeking federal approval to build a pipeline in eastern Montana that would transport the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide for use in oil production along the North Dakota border." The $150 million pipeline "would begin near the Wyoming border and stretch 110 miles to the Cedar Creek Anticline, an aging oil field near Baker, Montana, Denbury Resources spokesman John Mayer said." The US Bureau of Land Management "is seeking public comment on the Montana proposal through Nov. 3." Bureau of Land Management spokesman David Abrahams "said further details on the company's application would not be released except under a freedom of information request."

WDAZ-TV Grand Forks, ND (10/8) also reports.

BLM Plans Prescribed Burnings In Parker Area.

The Parker \(AZ\) Pioneer (10/9) reports the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), Lake Havasu Field Office "is planning to conduct prescribed burning on the Parker Strip, October 9 through April 1, 2018, as weather conditions allow. The burn area is located seven miles northeast of Parker, Ariz., and half a mile west of Parker Dam Road near Crossroads, on the California side of the Colorado River.”

BLM Broke Law In Plan To Sterilize Herd Of Wild Horses.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (10/8) reports the Bureau of Land Management “violated environmental law in its plan to sterilize a herd of wild horses in southwestern Idaho, according to a recent ruling from a federal judge.” US District Judge Edward Lodge “ruled Friday the BLM failed to analyze consequences of the action and ordered the agency to reconsider its decision.” Lodge wrote, “The BLM’s decision in this case is arbitrary and capricious because it did not consider the significant impacts its decision may have on the free-roaming nature of the herd nor explain why its decision is appropriate despite those impacts.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Victims Of 2013 Colorado Floods Claim U.S. Government Opened Dam Without Warning, Destroying Homes.

KMGH-TV Denver (10/9) reports that three victims of the 2013 flooding in Colorado “have filed a lawsuit blaming the U.S. Government for opening floodgates that they say washed away homes downstream from the Olympus Dam.” According to the lawsuit, “the Department of Interior’s Bureau of Reclamation, which operates the dam, made the call to release a massive amount of water from the dam to protect its integrity, as it overflowed with floodwater from a heavy storm that continued to dump water on Sept. 12, 2013.” The plaintiffs in the suit “say had they been warned of the massive release, they would have been able to move some of their property, but instead they were surprised to find homes literally washed away.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Trump Quietly Stalls Safeguards For Dozens Of Endangered Species.

Bloomberg News (10/6, Levin) reported the Trump administration “has quietly withdrawn dozens of pending actions to protect endangered species ranging from the green sea turtle to plants in the Florida Everglades, something conservationists say may violate federal law requiring the government to act.” The US Fish and Wildlife Service “withdrew a total of at least 42 pending regulatory actions pertaining to endangered species, many of which detailed how to protect animals or plants already deemed to be in peril, according to Office of Management and Budget data compiled by Bloomberg.”

The Hill (10/7, Manchester) reports that the US Fish and Wildlife Service “has moved to remove Endangered Species Act protections from Pacific Walruses, citing their ability to adapt and persist during changes in their climate and environment.” The USFWS said, “The Pacific walrus population has persisted through past climate change events however, the ability of the Pacific walrus population to adapt to or cope with increasing stress in the future is uncertain.” The agency “goes on to say there is not enough evidence to suggest that the animals need to be listed as ‘threatened’ or ‘endangered.’” However, “environmentalists have spoken out against the move, equating it to a death sentence for the animals.”

The AP (10/9, Joling) reports that US Fish and Wildlife Service officials “said they cannot determine with certainty that walruses are likely to become endangered ‘in the foreseeable future,’ which the agency defines as the year 2060.”

The Aspen \(CO\) Times (10/6, Fixler) reported that “the eastern boreal toad population in the high elevations of Colorado and other Rocky Mountain states may be in decline, but it will not be granted protected status under the national Endangered Species Act.” The US Fish and Wildlife Service announced Thursday “its rejection of 25 species from threatened or endangered listing, including the subalpine amphibian. Within the federal agency’s Mountain-Prairie Region, the Great Sand Dunes tiger beetle and Northern Rocky Mountain fisher were under review for protection as well, but were also left unlisted.”

Celebrate National Wildlife Refuge Week Oct. 8 To 14.

The High Plains and Midwest AG \(KS\) Journal (10/7, Poetry, Kreger) reported on the National Wildlife Refuge System, which is being celebrated this week. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke “kicked off Refuge Week early today while visiting with staff and touring Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge.” Zinke is quoted saying, “Americans are fortunate to have access to an unparalleled network of national wildlife refuges close to where they live. ... Whether you are hunting, fishing or just enjoying the great outdoors, I encourage everyone to get out and visit a refuge near you. One of my top priorities is to open up access wherever possible for the public to enjoy these lands so that more families have the opportunity to pass down that heritage as I have with my children.”

Michigan Forests Vital To Threatened Species.

The Detroit Free Press (10/9) reports that the future of the Karner blue butterfly – “now a federally threatened species in the Great Lakes State – lies with the Michigan Department of Natural Resources intentionally setting fires known as ‘prescribed burns’ to restore the oak savannas that once dominated these landscapes.” The DNR, US Fish and Wildlife Service and US Forest Service “work together with conservation groups and private landowners to manage habitats that are more conducive to the blue, nickel-sized butterfly.”

Mussel, Once Feared Extinct, Brought Back To Ohio River.

The AP (10/7) reported that a mussel “as rare as its name is colorful, the purple cat’s paw pearly mussel once could be found throughout the lower Ohio River and many of its larger tributaries, including the Muskingum River in Ohio, the Green River in Kentucky and the Middle Cumberland River in Tennessee.” Patricia Morrison, biologist for the Ohio River Islands National Wildlife Refuge, is quoted saying, “Museum collections show that the purple cat’s paw was once found in the Ohio River from here to Cincinnati.” A century ago, the mussel “was also once found in streams as distant as Illinois, Indiana and Alabama, according to a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service fact sheet.” The mussel is now being brought back to the Ohio River.

National Park Service

Designed Wisely, Express Lanes Can Reduce Travel Time, Bring Revenue.

Discussing Gov. Larry Hogan plans to “add hundreds of miles of express toll lanes on the Capital Beltway, Interstate 270 between Washington and Frederick, and the Baltimore-Washington Parkway to decrease congestion and collect more money,” the Baltimore Sun (10/4, Campbell) reports that Hogan’s plan for the Baltimore-Washington Parkway “is contingent upon the National Park Service turning ownership of the road over to Maryland. The Department of the Interior, which oversees the parks service, did not respond to a request for comment.”

Colorado River Rafting Contract Awarded To Different Company.

The AP (10/8) reported the National Park Service “has awarded a rafting contract for the Colorado River to a subsidiary of concessionaire giant Aramark — and took the deal away from an Arizona company that has long offered rafting.” Colorado River Discovery “has led rafting trips from the Glen Canyon Dam to Lees Ferry in northern Arizona since the park service awarded it the concession contract in 2006, the Arizona Daily Sun reported.” The decision announced last week “was a surprise to company officials who said the rafting trips make up the majority of services they offer.”

Texas Company Seeks To Renew Permit To Look For Big Cypress Oil.

The Naples \(FL\) Daily News (10/7, Staats) reports a Texas company has asked state environmental regulators “to allow crews to resume their hunt for oil beneath Big Cypress National Preserve despite deep muddy ruts and damaged trees left behind by the company’s earlier work in the spring.” Several groups have “asked the Florida Department of Environmental Protection to not renew the Burnett Oil Co.’s state permit.” Burnett spokeswoman Alia Faraj-Johnson is quoted saying, “These groups are recycling the same kinds of claims that have been rejected by the National Park Service and the federal court.” DEP spokeswoman Dee Ann Miller “said the agency’s deadline for making a decision on the company’s permit renewal is Oct. 24.” The DEP “plans to send inspectors along with the National Park Service when work to repair the damaged wet prairies is underway, but that won’t happen until the landscape flooded by Hurricane Irma dries out, Miller said.”

Puerto Rico Slum Transformed By ‘Despacito’ Seeks To Revive.

The AP (10/9, Coto) reports that La Perla, “a seaside slum” in Puerto Rico that had been transformed by the song "Despacito" is seeking revival after being hit hard by Hurricane Maria. The AP adds, "With tourism to Puerto Rico as a whole abruptly halted, the only visitors to La Perla since the Sept. 20 storm have been people like the U.S. National Park Service workers who came to distribute bottles of water."

New App Brings History To Life In The New River Gorge Region.

The Beckley \(WV\) Register-Herald (10/9, Cobbs) reports highlights a new app that travelers can download that "brings history to life in the New River Gorge region." The app, when downloaded, "gives users an overall map of the 17 sites, as well as directions between sites." Lizzie Watts, the superintendent of the New River Gorge National River, is quoted saying, "History only becomes history if you remember to tell it and we remember to share it." According to Dave Bieri, "also with the park service, project partners met and chose individual topics and then matched sites accordingly."

Donald Trump's Lewd 'Access Hollywood' Tape Played On Repeat Near White House.

The Washington Times (10/6, Chasmar) reported that the women's advocacy group UltraViolet "played President Trump's infamous 'Access Hollywood' footage on repeat for 12 hours straight near the White House on Friday." The Washington Post (10/6, Stein) reported the National Park Service "issued permits for the group to bring the equipment to the Mall and play the video, said Mike Litterst, a spokesman for the agency. In its permit, UltraViolet described the video display as a First Amendment demonstration 'against Trump being a sexual predator.'"

Office Of Insular Affairs

House Committee Discusses Situation In Puerto Rico And US Virgin Islands After Irma And María.

Pasquines \(PRI\) (10/6) reported that United States House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop (R) of Utah "organized an informal roundtable yesterday for the members of the committee to discuss the situation in Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands after hurricanes Irma and María." USVI Delegate Stacey Plaskett was quoted saying, "The Office of Insular Affairs will play a prominent role in our recovery efforts."

Office Of Surface Mining

Montana Coal Mine Appeals Ruling That Could Trigger Layoffs.

The AP (10/6, Brown) reported, "The 'clock is running' on layoffs at one of the largest underground coal mines in the United States, its owners said Friday, as they asked a federal appeals court to reverse a judge's order that could bring some work at the mine to a halt later this month." Signal Peak Energy "says as many as 30 workers from the Bull Mountain Mine could run out of work by the end of October and 50 more workers by March under an August ruling from U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy." Molloy "sided with environmentalists who said that in approving the expansion, the Department of Interior's Office of Surface Mining had not adequately considered how burning the mine's coal would contribute to climate change."

US Geological Survey

Magnitude 4.1 Earthquake Shakes Bay Area.

The Los Angeles Times (10/9, Grad) reports a magnitude 4.1 earthquake "struck Monday near San Jose." According to the US Geological Survey, "it was felt over a large swath of Silicon Valley and the Bay Area. No damage was reported."

Earthquake: 3.2 Quake Strikes Near Bryn Mawr.

The Los Angeles Times (10/8, Quakebot) reports that a "shallow magnitude 3.2 earthquake was reported Sunday evening near Bryn Mawr, Calif., according to the U.S. Geological Survey. The temblor occurred at 11:39 p.m. PDT at a depth of 10.6 miles."

Top National News

Pruitt Announces Repeal Of Clean Power Plan.

ABC World News Tonight (10/9, story 7, 0:20, Muir) reported EPA Administrator Pruitt said Monday he would repeal the 2015 Clean Power Plan – President Obama’s “signature climate policy” – starting Tuesday. Before the repeal of the plan, which aimed to cut carbon emissions by 30 percent, there will be a public comment period.

The New York Times (10/9, Friedman, Plumer) reports that at an event in eastern Kentucky, Pruitt “said that his predecessors had departed from regulatory norms in crafting the Clean Power Plan.” He added, “The war on coal is over.” The repeal proposal, set to be filed in the Federal Register Tuesday, “fulfills a promise President Trump made to eradicate his predecessor’s environmental legacy” and “makes it less likely the United States can fulfill its promise as part of the Paris climate agreement to ratchet down emissions.”

USA Today (10/9, King) reports that according to climate change expert David Doniger, the repeal of the Clean Power Plan will not be a rapid process. In a Monday blog post, Doniger wrote, “Today’s proposed repeal of the Clean Power Plan just begins the battle. ... Pruitt’s EPA must hold hearings and take public comment, and issue a final repeal – with or without a possible replacement. He must respond to all legal, scientific, and economic objections raised, including the issues we lay out here.”

Reuters (10/9) reports that the National Association of Manufacturers and other trade organizations “praised” Pruitt’s announcement. Environmental groups, however, “criticized Monday’s announcement and praised” the Clean Power Plan. Sierra Club Executive Director Michael Brune said, “No matter who is in the White House, the EPA is legally required to limit dangerous carbon pollution, and the Clean Power Plan is an achievable, affordable way to do that.”

The AP (10/9, Biesecker, Beam) reports that a “coalition of left-leaning states and environmental groups” are promising to fight the Administration’s plans to end the Clean Power Plan. New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman – among those who have said they will sue – said, “The Trump Administration’s persistent and indefensible denial of climate change – and their continued assault on actions essential to stemming its increasing devastation – is reprehensible, and I will use every available legal tool to fight their dangerous agenda.”

Pruitt Calls For End Of Tax Credits To Wind Industry. Bloomberg News (10/9, Natter) reports Pruitt on Monday also called for the elimination of tax credits to the wind industry. Responding to a question about the effectiveness of renewable energy, Pruitt said he would let wind energy companies “stand on their own and compete against coal and natural gas and other sources.”

China Invests In Solar. The CBS Evening News (10/9, story 4, 2:05, Quijano) reported that as Pruitt announced Monday that the US would repeal Obama-era limits on carbon emissions from power plants, China “is doing the opposite.” China recently launched the world’s largest floating solar installation, built on top of a lake, “created by an abandoned coal mine” – a project, like many others, that has helped China double its solar capacity in the past year. According to Panda Green Energy Executive President Maggie Qiu, 28 solar power plants now operate in China. Additionally, the government is “spending hundreds of billions of dollars to subsidize renewable energy as China tries to wean itself off coal, still its dominant power source and the reason for its notoriously toxic air.”

Wildfires Burn Across California, Killing At Least 10.

NBC Nightly News (10/9, lead story, 2:40, Holt) reported that at least 15 wildfires burned in California on Monday, “destroying homes and sending people fleeing for their lives along smoke-obscured highways, all fueled by unrelenting winds” as gusts topped 50 miles per hour. Gov. Jerry Brown has declared a state of emergency, “mobilizing the National Guard joining the thousands of firefighters already on the front lines.” In northern California’s wine country, more than a thousand homes have been destroyed. Across the region, one person has died, and at least 1,500 homes and businesses now are destroyed.

ABC World News Tonight (10/9, lead story, 3:00, Muir) reported that the fires “only ignited late last night and exploded to over 80,000 acres in just 18 hours.”

The CBS Evening News (10/9, lead story, 2:40, Quijano) reported that 20 major fires are burning, with 15 alone started in the past 24 hours. 20,000 people have been forced to evacuate. The worst hit is Northern California’s wine country. The San Francisco Chronicle (10/9, Tucker) reports that “neighborhood after neighborhood is gone” in Santa Rosa, with nearby stores and restaurants destroyed as well.

The Washington Post (10/9, A1, Kerr) reports the wildfires have killed “at least 10 people” and have injured “numerous others.” In a news conference during which he declared a state of emergency in three counties, Gov. Jerry Brown said, “This is really serious; it’s moving fast. ... The heat, the lack of humidity and the winds are all driving a very dangerous situation and making it worse. It’s not under control by any means. But we’re on it in the best way we know how.” The New York Times (10/9, A1, Fuller, Bromwich, Victor) reports Gov. Brown “issued emergency proclamations for Butte, Lake, Mendocino, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Sonoma and Yuba Counties, saying the fires had damaged critical infrastructure and threatened thousands of homes.” Brown “also asked President Trump to declare a major disaster.”

ABC World News Tonight (10/9, story 3, 0:45, Muir) reported the “simple answer” behind the wildfires’ spread is wind. Some gusts have been “upwards of 70-miles-per-hour.”

ABC World News Tonight (10/9, story 2, 1:55, Muir) reported mandatory evacuations were declared in Anaheim Monday night, as home after home burned to the ground. Massive amounts of smoke were “seen today at nearby Angels Stadium and hovering over Disneyland.” The first evacuation orders “were issued within 15 minutes of when this fire was first reported.” At least one firefighter has been injured.

NBC Nightly News (10/9, story 2, 1:00, Holt) reported the wind is “so strong” in parts of Anaheim that fires are “traveling from house to house, neighborhood to neighborhood at lightning speed.”

Northeast Sees Wind, Rain From Remnants Of Hurricane Nate.

The AP (10/9) reports that the Northeast US saw wind and rain Monday from the remnants of Hurricane Nate. The tropical depression’s center was “near the eastern shore of Lake Erie,” and “forecasters said parts of Pennsylvania and New York could receive 2 inches (5 centimeters) of rain or more.” In the Southeast US, “utilities said crews had restored electrical service to all but a few thousand of the more than 100,000 homes and businesses that lost power because of Nate in Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Florida.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“On Immigration, Mr. Trump Shows Congress It’s On Its Own.” A New York Times (10/9) editorial calls the White House immigration proposals “the latest flip-flop for the administration and a demoralizing turn for what seemed like a possible bipartisan deal on an emotional issue.” The Times says a White House official told reporters “that the list of draconian proposals would be a fulfillment of Mr. Trump’s campaign promises, implying that this is what Americans want.” The Times points out, however, that Trump, “in case he forgot, lost the popular vote by millions, and his approval ratings are sputtering in the mid- to high-30s,” while “Americans overwhelmingly support letting Dreamers stay in this country.”

“A Peace Prize That Honors The Quest.” In an editorial, the New York Times (10/9) notes that the Norwegian Nobel Committee awarded the Peace Prize on Friday “to a group that worked on an international treaty to ban nuclear weapons, while acknowledging that the treaty would not in itself eliminate a single nuclear weapon.” The winner, the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN), promoted UN talks that resulted in a treaty banning the development, ownership or use of all nuclear weapons, but “the nations that actually possess such weapons, including the United States, boycotted the effort.” The Times reports, “We are realistic...we do not expect that this award will eliminate nuclear weapons. But...that is all the more reason to encourage those who seek a world with no nuclear weapons.”

“Want To Vote Next Year, New York? Act Now!” A New York Times (10/10, Board) editorial says the turnout in New York City’s “2013 mayoral election was 26 percent of registered voters, and that was stellar compared with the abysmal 14 percent in last month’s primaries.” Thus, “There’s every reason to assume that on Election Day, Nov. 7, New Yorkers will not exercise the franchise any more aerobically than they did four years ago.” The Times argues that “New York State effectively suppresses the turnout by making it harder to vote than is the practice in other jurisdictions” because it does not allow early voting or Election Day voter registration, and “New York lawmakers have resisted efforts to bring their rules more in line with practices elsewhere.”

Washington Post.

“What To Do With An Unfit President.” The Washington Post (10/9) writes in an editorial that “one avenue open to Congress would be to remove the president from office,” though “Congress is not ready to consider such an option – nor, in our view, should it be. Impeachment is an extreme measure that would roil the nation and should be embarked upon only with clear justification.” Congress should instead “seize the initiative on issues where it knows Mr. Trump is wrong” and “offer a contrast to what [Sen. Bob] Corker described as the ‘adult day care center’ at the White House simply by presiding over their branch with institutional dignity and respect for tradition.”

“Trump’s Cruel Sabotage Of The Dreamers.” The Washington Post (10/9) says in an editorial that President Trump’s “shape-shifting on the dreamers, as on so many other issues, is a symptom of his indifference to policy and absent moral compass.” The Post calls on Congress to “step in and resolve the plight of these nearly 700,000 young immigrants.”

“Trump’s NFL Bullying Is Filtering Down To America’s Schools.” A Washington Post (10/9) editorial blasts President Trump for what it describes as his “multi-week effort to shore up political support from his base by attacking the political expression of NFL players protesting police violence.” The Post says it is “unfortunate that the president has chosen to distort the moral authority of his office into a bully’s demand that others adhere to his preferred view of the world.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Immigration Bait And Switch.” A Wall Street Journal (10/9, Board) editorial says the White House’s demands may make it impossible to reach an agreement with Congress on Dreamers.

“Ireland Falls For A Lousy T-Shirt.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/9) denounces the Irish post office’s release of a stamp commemorating the 50th anniversary of the death of Ernesto “Che” Guevara Lynch. The Journal explains the Irish independence movement centered on political self-determination, property rights, and equality – issues completely unrelated to Guevara and his socialist cause.

“The Truth About Trump And Corker.” The Wall Street Journal (10/9) writes in an editorial that Sen. Bob Corker was intending to be helpful with his earlier criticisms of the Administration, trying to tell Trump things he did not want to hear. Trump has chosen to react in anger.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

GE Gives Activist Trian A Seat On The Board
Battered Dollar Roars Back, Catching Investors By Surprise
As Its Namesake Founder Becomes A Liability, Weinstein Co. Weighs Name Change
America’s Retailers Have A New Target Customer: The 26-Year-Old Millennial

New York Times:

EPA Announces Repeal Of Major Obama-Era Carbon Emissions Rule
How Russia Harvested American Rage To Reshape US Politics
Stephen Miller, The Powerful Survivor On The President’s Right Flank
Liberia’s Women Warn Male Presidential Candidates: Keep The Peace
Politicians With Puerto Rican Roots Challenge Trump In Push For Aid
China Hastens The World Toward An Electric-Car Future
Multimedia Feature: Digging Up The Dead: Probing The Ruins Of Mosul
Wildfires In Northern California Kill At Least 10 And Destroy 1,500 Buildings

Washington Post:

Trump Lashes Out At Allies, Putting Agenda At Risk
US Tensions With Turkey Boil Over In Wake Of Arrest
An Intruder, A Brutal Killing, Then The Fitbit Told Its Story.
Philippine Police Chief Resists The Call To Kill Drug Suspects
Google Finds Links To Russian Disinformation In Its Services
Deadly Wildfires Ravage Calif. Wine Country

Financial Times:

Turkish Lira And Istanbul Bourse Fall After US Suspends Visas

Ikea Turns To Ecommerce Sites In Online Sales Push

Richard Thaler Wins Nobel Prize In Economics

Washington Times:

Gillespie Pressures Northam On Sanctuary Cities In Virginia's Final Debate Of Governor's Race 'It's The Job Of Congress': Lawmakers Dismiss Trump's Strict Immigration Plan

Pentagon Budget Divides Republican Defense And Deficit Hawks, Giving Democrat 'Parity' An Edge

Through Presidential Crises, Stock Market Soars With Businessman In White House

Puerto Rico Hurricane Damage Threatens Medication Supplies On U.S. Mainland

Can A Middle Kingdom Nobleman Named Userhat Help Save Egypt's Tourism Industry?

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: West Coast Wildfires; West Coast Wildfires-Southern California; West Coast Wildfires-Tracking; Las Vegas Shooting Investigation; Trump-Corker Relations; Vice President Pence-NFL Walkout; EPA-War On Coal Over; Weinstein Sexual Scandal; White House-First Lady; NFL-Coach Using Drug Caught; American Air-Flight Cancellation; Nobel Prize In Economics Winner; Grand Father Volunteer.

CBS: West Coast Wildfires; Las Vegas Shooting Investigation; Trump-Corker Relations; China-Coal Alternatives; Vice President Pence-NFL Walkout; Syria-Raqqa Assault; Weinstein Sexual Scandal; White House-First Lady; Inspiring Rapper.

NBC: West Coast Wildfires; West Coast Wildfires-Southern California; Trump-Corker Relations; White House-First Lady; Las Vegas Shooting Investigation; Puerto Rico Hurricane Recovery; Opioid Epidemic; Weinstein Sexual Scandal; Walmart-Easier Store Return; ESPN Anchor Suspended; American Air Flight Cancellation; Las Vegas Shooting-Tribute.

Network TV At A Glance:

West Coast Wildfires – 12 minutes

Trump-Corker Relations – 6 minutes, 35 seconds

Las Vegas Shooting – 5 minutes, 55 seconds

White House-First Lady – 4 minutes, 40 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Texas Tech-Officer Shot; West Coast Wildfires; EPA-Clean Power Plan Rollback; Wall Street News.

CBS: West Coast Wildfires; Las Vegas Shooting Investigation; EPA-Clean Power Plan Rollback; Baseball News.

FOX: West Coast Wildfires; Texas Tech-Officer Shot; Las Vegas Shooting Investigation.

NPR: West Coast Wildfires; Texas Tech-Officer Shot; Tillerson-Lavrov Phone Call; Holiday Shopping-Retail Expectations; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with Dr. Henry Kissinger; has lunch with Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and Secretary of Defense James Mattis; greets the Stanley Cup Champions: The Pittsburgh Penguins; welcomes The Pittsburgh Penguins to the White House.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a political reception in Bakersfield, CA; participates in a briefing on Mojave Air and Space Port; tours the Virgin Orbit/Virgin Galactic/The Spaceship Company hangar; tours the Stratolaunch Systems carrier plane.

US Senate: 11:00 AM Dem Sen. Chris Coons speaks on Iran nuclear deal – Democratic Sen. Chris Coons speaks on the Iran nuclear deal, via media conference call, amid reports that President Donald Trump is set to decertify Iranian compliance with the agreement * President Trump faces a 15 Oct deadline to issue his latest certification to Congress that Iran remains in compliance with its obligations under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) on its nuclear program – signed by Tehran and six major world powers in 2015 Location: TBD
coons.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/SenCoonsOffice>

2:00 PM Helsinki Commission briefing on the refugee crisis in Europe and Turkey – 'Refugee Crisis in Europe and Turkey: Current Challenges and Responses' Helsinki Commission briefing, bringing together international experts and NGO representatives to assess the current humanitarian situation facing these refugees and the root causes of their flight. Speakers – United Nations High Commission for Refugees Regional Representative for the U.S. and the Caribbean Matthew Reynolds, International Organization for Migration (Washington, DC, office) Chief of Mission Luca Dall'Oglio, A21 Campaign Executive Director Philip Hyltdgaard, and Catholic Relief Services Senior Policy and Legislative Specialist Jill Marie Gerschutz-Bell – address the response of international organizations, receiving national govts, and civil society, and contribute their recommendations for action from domestic and international actors at all levels, including the U.S. Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 188, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

On recess until 16 October.

US House: 2:00 PM Helsinki Commission briefing on the refugee crisis in Europe and Turkey – 'Refugee Crisis in Europe and Turkey: Current Challenges and Responses' Helsinki Commission briefing, bringing together international experts and NGO representatives to assess the current humanitarian situation facing these refugees and the root causes of their flight. Speakers – United Nations High Commission for Refugees Regional Representative for the U.S. and the Caribbean Matthew Reynolds, International Organization for Migration (Washington, DC, office) Chief of Mission Luca Dall'Oglio, A21 Campaign Executive Director Philip Hyltdgaard, and Catholic Relief Services Senior Policy and Legislative Specialist Jill Marie Gerschutz-Bell – address the response of international organizations, receiving national govts, and civil society, and contribute their recommendations for action from domestic and international actors at all levels, including the U.S. Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 188, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

2:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including consideration of six U.S. Postal Service facility naming bills and one U.S. Border Patrol checkpoint naming bill under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'S. 585 – Dr. Chris Kirkpatrick Whistleblower Protection Act of 2017' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 10:00 AM Brookings Institution discussion on 'The path forward for dealing with North Korea' – 'The path forward for dealing with North Korea' Brookings Institution Center for East Asia Policy Studies and John L. Thornton China Center discussion, with keynote from former Deputy National Security Advisor Avril Haines. Other speakers include Wilson Center Global Fellow Jean Lee, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr partner David Cohen, author Michael Dobbs, Atlantic Council President and CEO Frederick Kempe, Yale Law School Visiting Lecturer Jake Sullivan, and Brookings Chair in Korea Studies Jung Pak, Thornton Center Nonresident Fellow Evan Osnos, and Center for East Asia Policy Studies Senior Fellow Jonathan Pollack Location: The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.brookings.edu> <https://twitter.com/BrookingsInst>

5:00 PM National Security Advisor Lt. Gen. McMaster speaks at CSIS on the future of the NSC – National Security Advisor Lt. Gen. H. R. McMaster speaks at The Center for Strategic and International Studies on 'The National Security Council at 70: Charting the Future of America's Security', with other speakers including former National Security Advisors Gen. (Ret.) James Jones Jr, Stephen Hadley and Henry Kissinger Location: Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.csis.org> <https://twitter.com/CSIS>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "What's the difference between Harvey Weinstein and the Pillsbury Dough Boy? When the Pillsbury Boy offers you a roll, he doesn't ask you to take a shower for it."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Trump wrote, 'I asked Vice President Pence to leave stadium if any players kneeled, disrespecting our country. I am proud of him and Second Lady Karen.' He can't let Mike Pence have credit for anything. 'I am so proud of Mike Pence for doing the awesome thing I told him to do.'"

Stephen Colbert: "Ultimately, Trump reflected on the suffering of the hurricane victims and acknowledged that from his position of privilege, he couldn't even comprehend what they're going through. Just kidding. He kept the focus on the real victim, himself."

James Corden: [Referring to Sen. Bob Corker's tweet against President Trump that White House is an adult daycare center] "[Sen. Bob] Corker's tweet is funny, but it is not entirely accurate. A daycare center would imply that someone there is actually in charge."

James Corden: "Yesterday, Vice President Mike Pence attended the Indianapolis Colts game for about 15 minutes. Pence left at the beginning of the game in protest to football players kneeling during the national anthem. Now let's be honest, Pence would have left anyway as soon as he saw an unmarried couple on the kiss-cam. Actually, the real reason Pence left the game early was because he found the mascot's outfit far too revealing."

James Corden: "Some shocking news out of Hollywood after new allegations emerge that he had engaged in decades of sexual harassment, Harvey Weinstein was fired from his firm the Weinstein Co. for violating the company's very strict '27 strikes and your are out' rule. ... The fact is, his behavior left room for only two options, fire him from the Weinstein Company or elect him President of the United States."

Jimmy Fallon: "Vice President Mike Pence left the Colts game yesterday after some of the 49ers kneeled during the national anthem. Also because he heard the phrase 'man on man' and got really uncomfortable."

Jimmy Fallon: "Get this. In his speech today, Trump called Christopher Columbus a skilled navigator. Then, at his Comic-Con speech, he called Darth Vader a good dad."

Seth Meyers: "Before walking into the football game yesterday, Vice President Pence reportedly told his press pool to wait outside of the stadium in anticipation of a potential early departure. Coincidentally, 'early departure' is the only form of birth control Mike Pence approves of."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, October 17, 2017
Date: Tuesday, October 17, 2017 7:01:49 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Native American Times: DOI Secretary Names Director Of Bureau Of Indian Affairs.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Alaska Native Corporate Leader Tapped By Trump For Top Indian Affairs Job.
- Associated Press: Colorado Official Hopeful Changes On Grouse Will Help Oil & Gas .
- McClatchy: Trump Touts Federal Response To California Wildfires.
- Oil and Gas Journal: US House Considers Moving Federal Onshore Oil, Gas Oversight To States.
- The Hill: Congressional Attack On National Monuments Ignores America's Conservation History.
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Zinke's Silence On The Monument Creates Uncertainty For Northern Maine.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Do No Harm To Our National Monuments.

- Washington Post: Trump's Cabinet Is The Absolute Best Of All Time. Ever.
- Federal News Radio (DC): Huh? Employee Engagement Scores Went Up?

Bureau Of Land Management

- Palm Springs (CA) Desert Sun: Trump Administration Green-lights Company's Desert Water Project.
- Elko (NV) Daily Free Press: BLM To Offer 208 Parcels In Oil And Gas Lease Sale.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wyoming Wild Horse Roundup Continues Amid Counting Dispute.
- Billings (MT) Gazette: Soil Recovery Project Aimed At Preventing Flooding In Wake Of Huge Fire Near Tiny Montana Town.
- U.S. News & World Report: Nearly Complete Fossilized Dinosaur Remains Flown To Museum.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- BOEM, Avangrid Finalize North Carolina Offshore Wind Lease.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Gulf Of Mexico Oil Spill May Be Largest Since BP Disaster.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Canadian Press: Yukon Chief Seeks Trudeau's Help To Stop U.S. Oil Drilling In Caribou Habitat.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wyoming Wildlife Managers To Hold Grizzly Management Circuit.
- KITV-TV Honolulu: Rare Hawaiian Crows Released Into Native Forests Of Hawai'i Isla.

National Park Service

- Hanover (PA) Evening Sun: Gettysburg National Military Park Names New Superintendent.
- Missoulian (MT): Stabilization Work Completed On Glacier's Sperry, Fundraising Goals Exceeded.
- Bismarck (ND) Tribune: Theodore Roosevelt National Park Holds Bison Roundup In South Unit.
- Marquette (MI) Mining Journal: Isle Royale National Park Reintroduction?.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wyoming Asking Yellowstone Workers To Register Vehicles.
- U.S. News & World Report: Man Believes Bodies In California Desert Are Son, Girlfriend.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Washington Examiner: CNN Poll: Trump's Approval Rating For Handling Hurricanes Drops 20 Points.
- Associated Press: Democrats Seek Tax Relief For Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Interior Pays Out $56M For FSM, Marshalls.
- Kaselehlie Press (FSM): Interior, Census Launch 2018 Enumeration Of Compact Migrants In Hawaii, Guam, Northern Mariana Islands And American Samoa.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): Governor Mapp Asks Congress For $5.5 Billion To Help Rebuild USVI.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): Mapp Announces 'VI Hurricane And Resiliency Advisory Group', Created To Guide Recovery Of USVI.
- Taiwan News: Taiwan President To Visit Marshall Islands, Tuvalu And The Solomon Islands.
- Radio New Zealand: US Pacific Delegates Highlight Plight Of Military Veterans.
- Task & Purpose: On An Island Halfway Around The World, Locals Enlist To Fight And Die For America.
- Kaselehlie Press (FSM): Perman Primes Pohnpei Municipal Speakers To Consider Diminishing Compact Returns.

US Geological Survey

- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Study: Preliminary Data Show Cattle, Sage Grouse Can Coexist.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- ABC: Media Analyses: Trump And McConnell Present United Front At News Conference.
- Associated Press: Trump: "Total Termination" Of Iran Deal Possible.
- CNN: North Korean Official Rules Out Diplomacy With US.
- New York Times: White House Economic Advisers Report: Corporate Tax Cuts Would Boost Wages.
- The Hill: EPA To Restrict Settlements With Environmental Groups.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
- "Under Mr. Trump, America Surrenders."

- Washington Post.
 - "Drug Dealers In Lab Coats."
 - "Starting From Scratch On The Travel Ban."
 - "One Fight Ends But Another Flares."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Assault On The Kurds."
 - "Austria's Not So Scary Right Turn."
 - "Liberals Embrace 'Dark Money.'"

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

DOI Secretary Names Director Of Bureau Of Indian Affairs.

The Native American Times (10/16) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Monday "announced the selection of Bryan Rice, a veteran federal administrator and citizen of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, as the new Director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs." Zinke said, "Bryan has a wealth of management expertise and experience that will well serve Indian Country as the BIA works to enhance the quality of life, promote economic opportunity, and carry out the federal responsibility to protect and improve the trust assets of American Indians, Indian tribes and Alaska Natives. I have full confidence that Bryan is the right person at this pivotal time as we work to renew the department's focus on self-determination and self-governance, give power back to the tribes, and provide real meaning to the concept of tribal sovereignty."

KOTV-TV Tulsa, OK (10/16) reports that Rice, who began his new position Monday, "was most recently serving as the head of the Interior's Office of Wildland Fire." The article notes that "his federal government career has spanned nearly 20 years, beginning with service on the Helena Interagency Hotshot Crew for the U.S. Forest Service in Montana."

Additional coverage was provided by the Tulsa \(OK\) World (10/17, Wingerter), Law360 (10/16, Lidgett), KTVH-TV Helena, MT (10/16), and KTVQ-TV Billings, MT (10/17).

Alaska Native Corporate Leader Tapped By Trump For Top Indian Affairs Job.

The Alaska Dispatch News (10/16, Demer) reports that Tara Sweeney, executive vice president of external affairs for Arctic Slope Regional Corp., is being nominated by President Trump to oversee Indian Affairs for the Interior Department. The Alaska congressional delegation, AFN leaders and Gov. Bill Walker all had "strong praise" for the nomination. The pick by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke was a good one, Sen. Lisa Murkowski said in a written statement with Sen. Dan Sullivan and Rep. Don Young. Murkowski said, "She is an expert on energy, infrastructure, broadband, economic development, Native self-determination, and a wide range of policy issues that will come before her. Secretary Zinke could not have chosen a better leader to help him fulfill the federal government's trust responsibility, and I know Tara has the heart and drive to excel in this position."

Colorado Official Hopeful Changes On Grouse Will Help Oil & Gas .

The AP (10/16) reports that as the Interior Department is considering changes to mining, drilling, and grazing regulations meant to protect the sage grouse bird habitat, Moffat County Commissioner Don Cook said the issue has implications for roughly 40 percent of Moffat County. The AP states that "Luke Schafer with Conservation Colorado says the changes announced by Interior could throw out years of work on sage grouse." Cook said that not much input from the local community was considered when the sage grouse regulations were adopted when President Obama was in office.

Trump Touts Federal Response To California Wildfires.

McClatchy (10/16, Kumar) reports President Trump said his Administration is “doing a good job” responding to the California wildfires “that have killed more than 40 people dead and displaced tens of thousands of people.” Trump also said he had spoken to California Gov. Jerry Brown, FEMA, the military, and first responders were on the ground in the Northern California.

Firefighters Hopeful On Wildfire Containment. NBC Nightly News (10/16, story 5, 2:10, Holt) reported, “Crews are hopeful they’ve finally gotten a handle on the flames” in California’s wildfires. NBC (Fryer) added that firefighters “hope that some of these fires will be fully contained by week’s end.” Meanwhile, “officials say it will be days if not weeks before some in the hardest-hit neighborhoods are able to return home for good.” The CBS Evening News (10/16, story 4, 2:10, Mason) reported, “A driver delivering water to the fire lines was killed when his truck flipped.” ABC World News Tonight (10/16, story 3, 2:20, Muir) also covered this story.

Cleanup From California Fires Poses Environmental And Health Risks. The New York Times (10/16, Johnson) reports public health officials and environmental cleanup experts are beginning to consider “the huge amount of debris and ash that will be left behind” once the California wildfires are gone. The clean is likely to have “its own thorny set of issues, in the costs, timetables and liability questions” with the large number of properties affected compounding the issues. Workers, responders, and the public may be exposed to all the chemicals and pollutants typically in a home, concentrated in the ash left behind. It isn’t year clear which local or state agencies will take leadership roles on the issue, and both the severity of the issue and costs of remediation are as yet undetermined. FEMA spokesman David Passey said, “There are more questions than answers.”

US House Considers Moving Federal Onshore Oil, Gas Oversight To States.

PennEnergy (10/16, Snow) reports that the House Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee is considering an initiative to allow the Department of the Interior to delegate regulation authority for oil and gas operations within federally managed lands to the states. Democrats have taken an opposition stance, while Republicans believe the initiative is overdue. Under the plan, the Secretary of Interior “also would delegate regulation of hydraulic fracturing to states and Indian tribes after each submitted its requirements to BLM for consideration.”

Congressional Attack On National Monuments Ignores America’s Conservation History.

For the “Congress” blog of The Hill (10/16, Hecht, Ruple), Sean B. Hecht, a professor at UCLA School of Law, and John Ruple, a professor at the University of Utah’s SJ Quinney College of Law, call the “National Monument Creation and Protection Act,” an “assault on our public land heritage.” They note that the Supreme Court has “twice unanimously confirmed that presidents may create national monuments, including landscape-scale monuments, to protect scenic areas and the geologic formations, plants, and animals they contain.” The authors conclude that H.R. 3990 “will neither create nor protect national monuments, but will only undermine them.”

In an editorial, the Durango \(CO\) Herald (10/16) criticizes “the legislative subterfuge that makes the bill read like it will accomplish the opposite of what its real intention implies.” As the bill moves through the legislative process, the paper challenges Rep. Rob Bishop, who introduced the bill, “to seek and consider public input from a wide range of stakeholders.”

Zinke’s Silence On The Monument Creates Uncertainty For Northern Maine.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (10/16, Dill), Maine state Senator Jim Dill writes that the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument has “created new demands and business opportunities in Millinocket, Medway and other communities near the monument.” However, “that promising start is jeopardized by a needless uncertainty that has hung over the monument since President Donald Trump was elected.” Dill writes that the people of Maine “deserve to know what the Trump Administration’s “plans are for this public land, and how those plans will benefit future generations of Mainers.”

Do No Harm To Our National Monuments.

In an op-ed for the Santa Fe New Mexican (10/16, Allison), Mark Allison, executive director of the New Mexico Wilderness Alliance, claims that when Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “paid a visit to Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks in July, he chose to spend most of his time meeting with the few opponents of the monument behind closed doors.” Allison also criticizes Zinke’s recommendations in his report on national monument designation, calling it “cynical, disingenuous and Orwellian.” He calls on President Trump “to side with voters rather than the radical proposals of U.S. Rep. Steve Pearce, R-N.M., D.C. lobbyists and special interests.”

Trump's Cabinet Is The Absolute Best Of All Time. Ever.

Dana Milbank mockingly writes in his Washington Post (10/16) column, "I'm very proud of Trump for recognizing the greatness of his Cabinet" during a meeting with them Monday, "but he is being modest. This isn't just 'one of the finest' Cabinets. There has never been a Cabinet like this before – and there probably will ever be one like it in the furniture." Milbank continues, "Never has a Cabinet incurred so many probes and reprimands in so little time. ... Never has a presidential team endured more humiliation with more aplomb."

Huh? Employee Engagement Scores Went Up?

In a piece for Federal News Radio \(DC\) (10/16, Temin), Tom Temin writes that federal employee engagement scores "rose to a six-year high," according to a survey distributed in May. Notably, engagement scores rose at "the low-ranking Interior Department, with its highly visible senior executive reassignments."

Bureau Of Land Management

Trump Administration Green-lights Company's Desert Water Project.

The Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (10/16, James) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has "approved a company's plan to build a water pipeline to carry billions of gallons from the Mojave Desert to California cities." The BLM "told Cadiz Inc. in a letter released Monday that the company won't need a permit to build the pipeline alongside a railroad." The bureau "rescinded a 2015 decision by President Barack Obama's administration that had blocked the project." Cadiz "said with no federal permit needed, it now plans to move ahead with designing and building the 43-mile pipeline from its property to the Colorado River Aqueduct."

Additional coverage was provided by the Los Angeles Times (10/16, Boxall) and the Highland \(CA\) Community News (10/16).

BLM To Offer 208 Parcels In Oil And Gas Lease Sale.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/16) reports that the Bureau of Land Management will "offer 208 parcels in Nye County totaling approximately 388,959.402 acres in the Ely District at its December quarterly oil and gas lease sale." Bidding will start Dec. 11.

Wyoming Wild Horse Roundup Continues Amid Counting Dispute.

The AP (10/16, Gruver) reports that "a roundup of wild horses continued Monday in the desert of southwestern Wyoming after a judge declined to stop it during a lawsuit over how the animals are counted." According to the article, "as of Sunday, U.S. Bureau of Land Management contract workers had rounded up 1,367 adult horses and 350 foals." The BLM "could reach its goal of capturing 1,560 adults plus the foals of captured mares this week, bureau spokeswoman Kristen Lenhardt said."

Soil Recovery Project Aimed At Preventing Flooding In Wake Of Huge Fire Near Tiny Montana Town.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/16, Kordenbrock) reports that "earlier this month, a helicopter took flight again over the site of the July fire in the Little Rocky Mountains, this time dropping mulch instead of water." In total, the Bureau of Land Management "covered 61 acres of burned soil on a northeastern slope of Sugar Loaf Butte with nearly 80,000 pounds of the mulch in order to mitigate the dangers flooding and erosion could pose to the town of Landusky below, where around 40 people live." According to Tom Darrington, field manager for the BLM's Malta Field Office, "the burn area emergency stabilization project, which also included the installation of lines made up of 75 straw wattles along the slope in August, cost $800,000."

Nearly Complete Fossilized Dinosaur Remains Flown To Museum.

The AP (10/16) reports that "the nearly complete fossilized remains of a tyrannosaurus found two years ago in southern Utah's Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument were airlifted to the Natural History Museum of Utah in Salt Lake City on Sunday." According to the article, "the 75 million-year-old Teratophoneus was covered in plaster and flown by helicopter in pieces Sunday to the Salt Lake City museum, where paleontologists will spend several years removing rock from the fossil."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

BOEM, Avangrid Finalize North Carolina Offshore Wind Lease.

North American Windpower (10/16, Lillian) reports that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management has "finalized a lease with Avangrid Renewables for a 122,405-acre wind area offshore North Carolina." In March, Avangrid submitted "a winning bid of $9,066,650 for the Kitty Hawk Wind Energy Area after 17 rounds of BOEM's competitive lease sale." BOEM "says it signed the lease on Oct. 10, and it goes into effect on Nov. 1."

Additional coverage was provided by the Windpower Engineering & Development (10/16, Froese) and the Triangle \(NC\) Business Journal (10/16, Ohnesorge).

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Gulf Of Mexico Oil Spill May Be Largest Since BP Disaster.

Bloomberg News (10/16, Grant) reports that, according to US Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement data, last week's oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico could be the largest since the 2010 BP Deepwater Horizon rig blowout. LLOG Exploration Co.'s Delta House production facility spilled between 7,950 and 9,350 barrels of oil last week. The New Orleans Times-Picayune (10/16, Schleifstein) reports the BSEE is convening a panel of inspectors, engineers and accident investigators to review the spill. Lars Herbst, director of the BSEE Gulf of Mexico region, said, "BSEE places great emphasis on making certain all oil and gas operations on America's Outer Continental Shelf are safe. ... This panel investigation is a critical step in ensuring BSEE determines the cause, or causes, of the incident and develops recommendations to prevent similar events from occurring in the future."

Oil, Gas & Petrochem Equipment (10/16) also provided coverage.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Yukon Chief Seeks Trudeau's Help To Stop U.S. Oil Drilling In Caribou Habitat.

The Canadian Press (10/16) reports Yukon First Nation Chief Bruce Charlie is asking Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to get the White House to stop its push for drilling in the Arctic caribou habitat. The Vuntut Gwitchin First Nation chief is looking to halt drilling plans in the ANWR, and would like Trudeau to address the issue in a November meeting with President Trump.

Wyoming Wildlife Managers To Hold Grizzly Management Circuit.

The AP (10/16) reports that "Wyoming wildlife managers are hosting a circuit of meetings around the state to talk about management of grizzly bears." The article says that "the meetings aren't designed to set policies, such as hunting regulations. They'll simply be for members of the public to share their feelings on the state's grizzly management."

Additional coverage was provided by Montana Public Radio (10/16, O'Brien).

Grizzlies Saved This Vietnam Vet's Life. Now He's Fighting To Return The Favor. The Huffington Post (10/16, D'Angelo) reports that a Vietnam veteran is a plaintiff in a lawsuit to restore federal protections for Yellowstone grizzly bears. According to Doug Peacock, "with the impacts of climate change becoming undeniable, it is a critical time for the Yellowstone grizzly." His "most immediate concern is hunting."

Rare Hawaiian Crows Released Into Native Forests Of Hawai'i Isla.

KITV-TV Honolulu (10/16, Ako) reports that "five young 'alala, two females and three males, were released into Pu'u Maka'ala Natural Area Reserve (NAR) on the Island of Hawai'i on Wednesday, October 11." The group of birds "joins a previous group that had been released into the forest at the end of September." Michelle Bogardus, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Geographic team leader for Maui Nui and the Hawai'i Islands, said, "Our efforts to bring this species back from the brink of extinction have been tremendously bolstered by our ability to protect a small population of 'alala in a conservation breeding program in Hawai'i. Now that we built up the population to more than 125 birds at the Hawaiian Bird Center we can begin the long road to recovering this incredible species in its native habitat."

National Park Service

Gettysburg National Military Park Names New Superintendent.

The Hanover \(PA\) Evening Sun (10/16, Levy) reports that Charles "Chuck" Hunt will serve as acting superintendent for Gettysburg National Military Park from Oct. 17 until January 2018. Hunt said in a news release, "I am very honored to have the opportunity to serve as acting superintendent for Gettysburg National Military Park and Eisenhower National Historic Site for the next few months. The stories, landscapes and resources of these two parks have inspired generations." According to a National Park Service official, "the former superintendent, Ed Clark, was reassigned in May in the best interest of regional and park needs." Clark is "on detail as the acting chief for the northeast regional office's park planning and special studies division."

Stabilization Work Completed On Glacier's Sperry, Fundraising Goals Exceeded.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (10/16, Backus) reports that "the race to shore up the charred rock walls, chimneys and gables of Sperry Chalet's dormitory before winter is done." According to the article, "a 10-person national park crew faced freezing temperatures, rain and snow over a two-week stint to brace the walls, sandwich the gables with plywood, and surround the chimney with collars of wood in an effort to protect the more than century-old structure from wind and snow." The article notes that "the stabilization work that was completed on the structure may not have been possible without the financial help of more than 700 donors from nearly every state and from countries as far away as Australia and the Ukraine." The fundraising effort to stabilize the chalet was spearheaded by the Glacier National Park Conservancy. Glacier National Parks spokesperson Lauren Alley said, "The conservancy was ready to help from day one. We were up against winter and we needed to be able to put people up there quickly. The generous donors helped make that happen."

Theodore Roosevelt National Park Holds Bison Roundup In South Unit.

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (10/16, Dalrymple) reports that Theodore Roosevelt National Park is reducing the size of its bison herd this week. According to the article, "staff at the South Unit of the park are conducting a bison roundup to cull the size of the herd from 500 to about 380 animals." The article says that "a majority of the animals will go to supplement herds of various tribes through the InterTribal Buffalo Council, which represents about 60 tribes across 19 states, according to Patrick Toomey, range technician for the Rapid City, S.D.-based organization."

Isle Royale National Park Reintroduction?.

The Marquette \(MI\) Mining Journal (10/16, Freedman) reports that a new study suggests that Canada lynx could "return to Isle Royale and survive there." According to a research team from the National Park Service and the University of Minnesota Duluth, "there is a high potential for a successful lynx reintroduction to Isle Royale if the animals are appropriately monitored and managed." The study said, "Isle Royale could continue its long and storied tradition as a site that leads to a better understanding of wildlife ecology and conservation."

Wyoming Asking Yellowstone Workers To Register Vehicles.

The AP (10/16) reports that "the Wyoming Department of Transportation, at the request of Gov. Matt Mead and members of Wyoming's congressional delegation, is pushing to get more Yellowstone residents and workers to follow state law and purchase Wyoming registrations and driver's licenses." The article says that "state and federal officials say they don't know how many of the about 550 permanent and more than 3,000 seasonal employees working for the National Park Service and Yellowstone's concessionaire, Xanterra Parks & Resorts need to get Wyoming plates." However, "with an average vehicle registration costing a couple hundred dollars, the state could theoretically be losing out on hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees each year, the Powell Tribune reported."

Man Believes Bodies In California Desert Are Son, Girlfriend.

The AP (10/16) reports that "the father of a missing California man said he believes the bodies of his son and his son's girlfriend have been found in Joshua Tree National Park, near the area where they vanished while hiking three months ago." However, "officials did not immediately confirm the identities of the two adults discovered Sunday in rugged terrain near a popular trail in the desert park." Gilbert Orbeso, "who was with searchers when the discovery was made, told KESQ-TV they are his son, Joseph Orbeso, 21, of Lakewood and his girlfriend, Rachel Nguyen, 20, of Westminster.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

CNN Poll: Trump’s Approval Rating For Handling Hurricanes Drops 20 Points.

The Washington Examiner (10/16, Correll) reports President Trump’s approval rating for overseeing the federal government’s response to several recent hurricanes has “dipped by 20 points in the past month,” according to a new CNN poll. Trump reached “a 64 percent approval rating for responding to Hurricane’s Harvey and Irma in mid-September, but now only 44 percent of Americans approve of his response to hurricanes, as Puerto Rico attempts to recover from Hurricane Maria.” The CNN Poll was conducted by SSRS from Oct.12-15 by telephone using a random sample of 1,010 adults.

Democrats Seek Tax Relief For Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands.

The AP (10/16, Gordon) reports that a group of Democratic lawmakers are asking for tax relief for hurricane-stricken Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, “saying people and businesses in the two US territories don’t enjoy the same benefits as those in the mainland.” The lawmakers are asking Rep. Kevin Brady, head of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, “to work on legislation that would, for example, extend the earned income tax credit for low- to moderate-income workers to Puerto Rico and increase the amounts paid under the low-income housing tax credit.”

Interior Pays Out $56M For FSM, Marshalls.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (10/13) reports that “a total of $30,819,840 from the U.S. Department of the Interior has been remitted to the Compact trust fund for the Federated States of Micronesia, according to assistant secretary for Insular Areas Doug Domenech.” Also, “a total of $16,854,600 has been paid out to the compact trust fund for the Republic of the Marshall Islands.” And “an additional partial payment of $9,070,200 was also provided separately to the Marshall Islands for ongoing use of the Kwajalein Atoll, a missile defense test site.”

Interior, Census Launch 2018 Enumeration Of Compact Migrants In Hawaii, Guam, Northern Mariana Islands And American Samoa.

The Kaselehlie Press \(FSM\) (9/1) reported that Interior Acting Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula has “signed a Statement of Work with the U.S. Census Bureau to carry out the next 5-year enumeration of migrants from the Freely Associated States in Hawaii, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) and American Samoa, as required by the Compact of Free Association Amendments Act of 2003 (Public Law 108-188).” Pula said, “The law requires that we work with the Census Bureau to conduct this enumeration every five years as the basis for the distribution of Compact Impact funds. I have reached out to Governors of Guam, Hawaii, the CNMI and American Samoa asking for their cooperation to ensure the enumeration is successful. We have also reached out to members of Congress.”

Governor Mapp Asks Congress For $5.5 Billion To Help Rebuild USVI.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/12) reports that “the cost to rebuild the U.S. Virgin Islands’ infrastructure after last month’s devastating Category 5 hurricanes is estimated at $5.5 billion dollars, Governor Kenneth Mapp said Thursday.” In a letter forwarded to congressional leaders, Mapp wrote, “On behalf of the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands, we are grateful for your concern and dedication to our recovery. After a comprehensive and thoughtful examination of our damages and recovery requirements, we believe that disaster assistance and support of approximately $5.5 billion would enable the territory to address the most essential needs of American citizens residing in the U.S. Virgin Islands.”

Mapp Announces ‘VI Hurricane And Resiliency Advisory Group’, Created To Guide Recovery Of USVI.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (10/16) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp on Monday “announced the creation of an expert advisory committee to help guide reconstruction and resiliency efforts in the U.S. Virgin Islands in the wake of Hurricanes Irma and Maria.” The VI Hurricane and Resiliency Advisory Group, “under the Office of the Governor, includes local officials and community members, as well as business and environmental experts, and thought leaders from around the United States." Members of the group will "determine, among other things, how the over $1.4 million collected through USVI recovery to aid with relief efforts, will be spent."

Taiwan President To Visit Marshall Islands, Tuvalu And The Solomon Islands.

Taiwan News (10/13, Strong) reports that Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen will "start on a journey to three allies in the Pacific – the Marshall Islands, Tuvalu and the Solomon Islands – later this month, the Presidential Office announced Friday." According to Deputy Foreign Minister Francois Wu, "Tsai will leave Taiwan on October 28 and return on November 4." The article notes that "due to pressure from China, Taiwan now only has 20 official diplomatic allies, mostly small or impoverished nations in Africa, the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean."

US Pacific Delegates Highlight Plight Of Military Veterans.

Radio New Zealand (10/12) reports that "the United States Congressional members from the three Pacific territories have called for an oversight hearing on American veterans living in the US insular areas as well as Samoa." The request was made to the US House Committee on Veterans Affairs in a joint letter from American Samoa's Congresswoman, Aumua Amata; Guam's Madeleine Bordallo; and the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas Gregorio Kilili Sablan. The letter "requests a hearing to look at the challenges facing those American veterans that reside in American Samoa, CNMI, Guam, Samoa, and the Freely Associated States."

Additional coverage was provided by the Guam Daily Post (10/13).

On An Island Halfway Around The World, Locals Enlist To Fight And Die For America.

The Task & Purpose (10/12, Leffler) reports that how the residents of the Federated States of Micronesia, Marshall Islands, and Palau "came to be a wellspring for U.S. military recruiters is the subject of Island Soldier," a new film. The documentary "takes a hard look at the reasons why islanders are signing up to fight — and in some cases die — for a country that isn't theirs." Island Soldier "also explores the impact their service has on their homeland and the people they leave behind, raising serious ethical questions about offering the uniform to a population from a distant and remote land."

Perman Primes Pohnpei Municipal Speakers To Consider Diminishing Compact Returns.

The Kaselehlie Press \(FSM\) (8/28) reports that Congressman Ferny Perman was a guest speaker "at the Officers of the Municipal Council Association (OMCA) meeting at the Sokehs Municipal Council Chamber on Friday, August 4." Perman "discussed the issue of the financial provisions of the Compact of the Free Association that will end in five years' time." Perman "said that US President Donald Trump and his new administration are not currently considering the possibility of renegotiating the Compact."

US Geological Survey

Study: Preliminary Data Show Cattle, Sage Grouse Can Coexist.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/16, O'Connell) reports that "spring cattle grazing doesn't appear to adversely affect sage grouse nesting success on public lands, according to initial findings of an ongoing, exhaustive research project involving ranchers throughout Idaho." The study, which has "concluded its fourth year," is "led by University of Idaho professor Courtney Conway, who also serves as director of the U.S. Geological Survey Idaho Cooperative Fish and Wildlife Research Unit — a partnership of UI, the U.S. Department of Interior and the Idaho Department of Fish and Game." Conway "described the study as 'the most rigorous and thorough of its kind in an unprecedented way' and said it should provide a more scientific basis for future Bureau of Land Management grazing policies in sage grouse habitat."

Additional Reading.

- Crews Search Air, Water For Missing Worker After Blast. San Francisco Chronicle (10/16).
- 3.6-magnitude Earthquake Rattles Part Of Arkansas. Arkansas Democrat Gazette (10/16).
- Earthquake Hits Rural Clatsop County. Oregonian (10/16).
- Earthquakes Pose A Serious Risk To Internet, Cellular Infrastructure. Government Technology

(10/16, Lee).

- BBC – Future – The Great Thaw Of America’s North Is Coming. BBC News \(UK\) (10/16, Goudarzi).

Top National News

Media Analyses: Trump And McConnell Present United Front At News Conference.

Coverage of what many news outlets call President Trump’s “impromptu” Monday news conference focuses on efforts by Trump and Senate Majority Leader McConnell to portray their relationship as friendly – and their interests as aligned. Several reports mention that the President had criticized Capitol Hill Republicans just an hour and a half earlier, and that he had repeatedly attacked McConnell on Twitter over the past two months. While McConnell focused mainly on the GOP agenda, stories highlight the President’s efforts to praise both McConnell and former chief strategist Steve Bannon, who has declared “war” on the party establishment.

ABC World News Tonight (10/16, lead story, 4:10, Muir) reported, “The President started the week with an impromptu press conference, summoning reporters to the Rose Garden today with little notice.” ABC’s Jonathan Karl: “After repeatedly lashing out at him, President Trump held a hastily arranged press conference with Mitch McConnell in the Rose Garden today to declare their relationship outstanding.” Trump: “We have been friends for a long time. We are probably now, despite what we read, we’re probably now, I think, at least as far as I’m concerned, closer than ever before.” Karl: “You’re okay with Bannon campaigning against Republicans running for re-election?” Trump: “I know how he feels, depends on who you are talking about. There are some Republicans frankly that should be ashamed of themselves. I can understand fully how Steve Bannon feels. ... Steve is doing what Steve thinks is the right thing. Some of the people he may be looking at, I’m going to see if we can talk him out of that because frankly, they’re great people.”

On NBC Nightly News (10/16, lead story, 2:35, Holt), Peter Alexander reported that Trump tried “to present a united front” with McConnell, “who he’s repeatedly trashed.” McConnell: “Contrary to what some of you may have reported, we’re together totally on this agenda to move America forward.” The CBS Evening News (10/16, story 3, 2:10, Mason) reported, “The President called reporters into the Rose Garden today to watch him mend a fence.” CBS’ Major Garrett reported that Trump and McConnell “strolled to the Rose Garden to bury the hatchet.” McConnell: “We have the same agenda. We’ve been friends and acquaintances for a long time.” Garrett: “It was a change in tone from just 90 minutes earlier, when Mr. Trump told his Cabinet [that] do-nothing Republicans were to blame for his stalled legislative agenda...in part echoing” Bannon, “who this weekend declared McConnell an enemy of grassroots conservatives.”

The New York Times (10/16, Shear, Stolberg) reports that during the “impromptu 45-minute Rose Garden news conference,” Trump and McConnell “both put on a display of bonhomie, waving aside reports of a disintegrating relationship that had included the president’s repeated use of tweets to publicly disparage Mr. McConnell’s legislative leadership.” Reuters (10/16) reports that both men “tried to move past the tensions that followed the collapse of the healthcare reform effort on Monday with a show of unity that focused on tax reform and other items on the Republican agenda.” The Wall Street Journal (10/16, Stokols) writes that the two effusively praised each other after months of tension, and the New York Post (10/16, Fredericks) reports that Trump and McConnell “made a show of telling the media what great pals they were.” Roll Call (10/16, Bennett) headlines its report “Trump, McConnell All Smiles, All The Time.”

However, the Washington Post (10/16, Sullivan) reports that “one uncomfortable element of the dynamic between McConnell and Trump continued to loom over the two men”: Bannon’s “effort to unseat Republican senators loyal to the majority leader in the midterms by backing insurgent primary challengers.” McClatchy (10/16, Clark) says that Trump “threw a life raft to the most unpopular Republican in Congress, publicly expressing his support for Mitch McConnell and pledging to ask his anti-establishment friends to leave the Senate leader and his friends alone.”

Breitbart (10/16, Spiering) reports that McConnell said of Bannon’s strategy, “You have to nominate people who can actually win because winners make policy and losers go home.” He listed “anti-establishment Senate candidates like Christine O’Donnell, Sharron Angle, Todd Akin, and Richard Mourdock” who lost winnable seats due to the perceived extremity of their views. The Washington Times (10/16, Persons) reports that White House Legislative Director Marc Short echoed McConnell in an interview with Fox News, saying, “We know that frustration is there, but in many cases a more productive path would be to partner to help make sure Republicans get the job done. And we think they're going to get the job done in 2018 before they face a midterm election."

Bloomberg News (10/16, Sink) reports that Trump "had launched Twitter attacks on McConnell as recently as August. And, earlier in the day, before a private lunch with McConnell, he said Republicans in Congress aren't getting the job done." The Washington Examiner (10/16, Morrongiello) reports that Trump "dodged a question on Monday about his criticism of McConnell, promising that the GOP leader 'is going to get [healthcare reform] done and get it done long before anyone else,'" and Politico (10/16, Lima) reports that Trump praised Bannon for his efforts.

USA Today (10/16, Jackson, Przybyla) writes that during the "free-form," "rambling" news conference, Trump "hurriedly grazed through a buffet of topics, including hurricane relief in Puerto Rico, condolence calls to the families of dead soldiers, the chances for a tax reform bill, and the alleged obstruction of the Democratic minority in Congress," but said "little" about each. NBC Nightly News (10/16, lead story, 2:35, Holt) reported, "Trump had plenty to share, from his frustration with the Russia investigation, to whether his predecessors reached out to families of the fallen, to his wish to see Hillary Clinton back in the political arena." NBC's Peter Alexander reported that among the other topics Trump addressed was whether he had "called the families of the four soldiers killed in Niger," leading Trump to launch "an unfounded attack at his predecessors," saying incorrectly that they did not make such calls. The Washington Times (10/16, Boyer) and The Hill (10/16, Fabian) also have brief reports on the news conference.

In Cabinet Meeting, Trump Faults Democrats And "Some Republicans" For Difficulties. The New York Times (10/16, Shear) reports that before his meeting with McConnell, Trump convened his Cabinet "in the hopes of kick-starting his stalled domestic policy agenda and complained that Democrats in Congress are obstructing his efforts on tax reform, health care and the confirmation of judicial nominees." Trump said, "The Democrats have terrible policy. They are very good at, really, obstruction." He also "lashed out – without naming them – at 'some Republicans' in the Senate, members he accused of refusing to go along with their party."

Cochran's Continued Absence Narrows GOP Senate Majority To One. The New York Times (10/16, Fandos) reports that Sen. Thad Cochran's continued absence from Capitol Hill as he recovers from a urological issue at home in Mississippi means that Senate GOP leaders "are down to a single-vote majority, 51, as they barrel toward a crucial late-week vote on a budget blueprint that would allow Congress to overhaul the tax code." Cochran's office did not say when the 79-year-old Appropriations Committee chairman might return.

Trump: "Total Termination" Of Iran Deal Possible.

The AP (10/16, Lee) reports President Trump on Monday "renewed his threat to fully withdraw" the US from the 2015 Iran nuclear deal, "while holding out the possibility that fixes to the accord may prevent an American pullout. Justifying his decision last week to decertify" the accord under US law, Trump said the US "had been taken advantage of in negotiations the Obama Administration conducted and that he was tired of it," which is "why he refused to confirm to Congress that the deal is in America's national security interest." Trump told reporters at the White House, "I feel strongly about what I did. I'm tired of being taken advantage of as a nation. This nation has been taken advantage of for many, many years, for many decades, frankly, and I'm tired of watching it. But the Iran deal was something that I felt had to be done."

Politico (10/16, Nelson) reports Trump said Monday that he is waiting for "phase two" of the deal, "one that will either improve it or prompt him to withdraw the US entirely." Of the latter option, the President said, "some would say that's a greater possibility."

YJ Fischer, who served as the assistant coordinator for Iran nuclear implementation at the State Department during the Obama Administration, writes in USA Today (10/16), "It was my job in the Obama administration to work with Iran and our allies on implementing the nuclear agreement. Based on everything I saw, President Trump is right that now is the time to be seeking new concessions. That's why it's confounding that Trump decided to decertify the 2015 nuclear agreement absent any evidence of Iranian violations, instead of building on a deal that's working and going back to the negotiating table for a broader follow-up agreement."

EU Reaffirms Support For Deal, Appeals To Congress. Reuters (10/16, Emmott, Baczynska) reports that the EU Monday "reaffirmed its support" for the 2015 accord and "urged US lawmakers not to reimpose sanctions on Tehran." EU foreign ministers meeting in Luxembourg said a failure to uphold an international agreement backed by the UN Security Council "could have serious consequences for regional peace, and also undermine efforts to check North Korea's nuclear ambitions." German Foreign Minister Sigmar Gabriel told reporters, "As Europeans together, we are very worried that the decision of the US president could lead us back into military confrontation with Iran."

The Washington Post (10/14, DeYoung) says differences over the Iran deal reveals "a widening chasm of mutual disdain between the United States and its traditional allies. Trump sees them as self-interested freeloaders who must be reminded of US power. They see him as an erratic force who must be managed as he squanders American leadership."

Iranian Lawmaker: Iran Should "Follow North Korea" After Trump Decertifies Deal. The Washington Free Beacon (10/16, Kredo) reports Alaeddin Boroujerdi, chair of the Iranian parliament's national security and foreign policy commission, "lashed out" at President Trump on Monday, "saying that Iran and other countries will have no choice but to 'follow North Korea' as a result of the decertification effort." Boroujerdi was quoted by state-run media as saying, "The US president showed by his remarks again that the US government is not trustworthy and the US behavior towards the nuclear deal persuades views of countries like North Korea."

Israeli Ambassador: Trump "Has It Exactly Right." Israeli Ambassador to the US Ron Dermer said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (10/16) that President Trump's approach to the Iran nuclear deal is correct. "We believe the President took the right course. If he can fix it, that would be great. If not, he's prepared to walk away. I think the President has it exactly right."

North Korean Official Rules Out Diplomacy With US.

CNN's Situation Room (10/16) reported that a "top" North Korean official "says Kim Jong-un is ruling out any diplomacy with the United States while his regime works on its nuclear and missile programs." The North will wait "until it tests a nuclear bomb above ground and has a ballistic missile capable of reaching the east coast of the US," the official said, adding that further missile tests or an above ground nuclear bomb test could happen "soon."

The AP (10/16) reports that North Korea's Deputy UN Ambassador, Kim In Ryong, also warned Monday that the situation on the Korean Peninsula "has reached the touch-and-go point and a nuclear war may break out any moment." Kim told the UN General Assembly's disarmament committee that North Korea is the only country that has been subjected to "such an extreme and direct nuclear threat" from the US, and argued that his country has the right to possess nuclear weapons in self-defense.

LATimes Analysis: Unclear Whether North Korean Missiles Can Hit Continental US. The Los Angeles Times (10/16, Rañoa, Quintero) reports that although recent missile tests indicate North Korea has made advancements in missile technology, "it's unknown whether its missiles can deliver an atomic weapon to the continental United States." The Times says "missile trajectory and payload make a big difference," and in "most of its longer-range tests, North Korea has flown missiles on near-vertical trajectories with lighter than standard payloads."

Seib: International Community Slow To Crack Down On North Korea. Wall Street Journal (10/16) columnist Gerald F. Seib writes that nations have been slow to exert economic pressure on North Korea. While President Trump has been criticized for his rhetoric on North Korea, Seib says he deserves credit for leading the economic crackdown on Pyongyang.

Blumenthal: Trump Should Visit DMZ During Trip To South Korea. Sen. Richard Blumenthal was asked on CNN's Situation Room (10/16) whether Trump should visit US troops along the DMZ when he visits South Korea next month, as Trump said he may do during a press conference on Monday. Blumenthal said Trump should, explaining, "I think that our US troops, which so ably serve and sacrifice for our country, should be visited by the President wherever they are, and no one should be intimidated, least of all the President."

White House Economic Advisers Report: Corporate Tax Cuts Would Boost Wages.

The New York Times (10/16, Tankersley) reports, "Highlighting a primary argument the administration will make in drafting and selling its tax plan," a report by the White House Council of Economic Advisers argues that Republicans' plan for corporate tax cuts "would increase a typical household's income by $3,000 to $7,000 a year." However, other research, including studies by the Treasury Department and Congressional Research Service, "cast doubt on the theory" that businesses would use tax savings to increase workers' wages. The Times adds that the report's "focus underlines how central a corporate tax cut is to the administration's overall plan."

Economist Supports GOP Tax Plan, Suggests Improvements. Edward Lazear, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers from 2006-09, in an op-ed in the Wall Street Journal (10/16) praises GOP plans for cutting tax rates and allowing immediate expensing of capital investments, arguing that economic growth will cover most of the costs and that it will help the middle class. Lazear argues the plan can be improved by permanently raising the expensing cap for non-C-corp business instead of cutting the pass-through tax rate. Such a move would cost less and concentrate tax cuts on small and midsize businesses while not providing benefits for the very wealthy, who receive much of the pass-through income.

EPA To Restrict Settlements With Environmental Groups.

The Hill (10/16, Cama) reports the Environmental Protection Agency is vowing “to crack down on settlements with environmental groups that sue the EPA.” In a statement EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt said, “The days of regulation through litigation are over. ... We will no longer go behind closed doors and use consent decrees and settlement agreements to resolve lawsuits filed against the agency by special interest groups where doing so would circumvent the regulatory process set forth by Congress.” Under the new directive from Pruitt, “the agency will post all lawsuits online, reach out to affected states and industries and seek their input on any potential settlements.”

Reuters (10/16, Gardner) reports Pruitt “sued the agency he now runs more than a dozen times in his former job as attorney general of oil producing Oklahoma.” The EPA “under former President Barack Obama quietly settled lawsuits from environmental groups with little input from regulated entities, such as power plants, and state governments, he argues.” Bloomberg News (10/16, Dlouhy) reports the directive “takes aim at a practice conservatives have long criticized as empowering environmental groups to force federal agencies to issue regulations and commit to timelines for imposing them.”

The Washington Post (10/16, Eilperin) reports that Pruitt “said he was taking action to ensure that consent decrees ‘are not used in an abusive fashion to subvert due process’ and to exclude the public from weighing in.” The Post observes that ending the so-called “sue and settle” practice “has long been a top priority for conservatives and business groups.” The Washington Times (10/16, Wolfgang) reports Pruitt said in a statement, “The days of regulation through litigation are over.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Under Mr. Trump, America Surrenders.” The New York Times (10/16) editorializes that while Americans have “long struggled with the question of whether this country should be more involved in world affairs, or less.” Since the end of World War II, “every president has chosen engagement rather than retreat,” but President Trump “is now taking a sledgehammer to that system. His argument, if that term can apply to such an inchoate position, is that America for too long has been ‘losing,’ a situation he has set out to correct with nonnegotiable demands and gratuitous confrontations. He promises both to achieve more and to retrench. He promises to put ‘America first’ while at the same time condemning it to a secondary role in global deliberations.”

Washington Post.

“Drug Dealers In Lab Coats.” A Washington Post (10/16) editorial calls the bill’s passage “disgraceful conduct,” and argues that Congress “must put teeth back in DEA enforcement. President Trump suggested Monday he will reexamine Mr. Marino’s nomination as drug czar. He should withdraw it, and Mr. Marino instead should be held to account for kneecapping the DEA’s opioid enforcement effort.”

“Starting From Scratch On The Travel Ban.” The Washington Post (10/16) editorializes that the Supreme Court last week “dismissed a suit against the second iteration of President Trump’s ban on travel, which targeted six majority-Muslim countries,” and that ruling “signals a quiet end to a potentially explosive case – for now,” but “the legal fight against the travel ban grinds on, with multiple challenges to the newest version of this nonsensical policy working their way through the courts.” The Post argues that “the latest version may be less obviously discriminatory against Muslims, but that doesn’t mean that limiting travel from a jumble of countries...will have any benefit to Americans’ safety.” The Post concludes that “on the third round of this legal battle, the lower courts have a chance to consider the president’s policy with cooler heads,” but “whether the Trump administration can successfully defend the revised travel ban in court is a separate question from whether the ban is good policy. That much is clear: It isn’t.”

“One Fight Ends But Another Flares.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/16) writes that the Iraqi government operation against Kirkuk “threatens to touch off a wider sectarian war” and that much now will depend on whether Iraqi forces, and the Shiite militias under Iranian command, “press their advantage or pause to negotiate.” The Post concludes that the seizure of Kirkuk and the potential future conflict are the result of Iraqi leaders and the US-led coalition under both the Obama and Trump Administrations ignoring the problems of ethnic cleavages in the country.

Wall Street Journal.

“Assault On The Kurds.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/16) writes that Iraqi forces’ seizure of Kirkuk from US-allied Kurds – an operation aided by Iranian forces – offers a victory for Iran in northern Iraq. The Journal argues that abandoning the Kurds would damage US credibility and President Trump’s ability to enlist allies against Iranian expansion in the Middle East.

“Austria’s Not So Scary Right Turn.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/16) says Sunday’s election victory by Sebastian Kurz of the center-right Austrian People’s Party (ÖVP) confirms that voters care about results, and an electorate supporting a fringe party, like the far-right Freedom Party which governed from 2000-05, out of frustration won’t follow it into an abyss.

“Liberals Embrace ‘Dark Money.’” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/16) says that despite Democratic railing against so-called “dark money” in politics, Fusion GPS cited its First Amendment rights by using the same arguments that have been used to defend dark money. The Journal says the company has no constitutional right to avoid the Russia probe.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

US Seeks To Stay Neutral In Iraq Conflict

Trump And McConnell Declare They Have A Common Agenda

Nordstrom Family Suspends Effort To Go Private

China’s Xi Approaches A New Term With A Souring Taste For Markets

New York Times:

Iraqi Forces Sweep Into Kirkuk, Checking Kurdish Independence Drive

Trump And McConnell Strive For Comity Amid Rising Tensions

As US Confronts Internet’s Disruptions, China Feels Vindicated

Deep In Trump Country, A Big Stake In Healthcare

Harvey Weinstein’s Fall Opens The Floodgates In Hollywood

LIGO Detects Fierce Collision Of Neutron Stars For The First Time

Stranded By Maria, Puerto Ricans Get Creative To Survive

Washington Post:

Jesus Keeps A Low Profile At High-Tech Bible Museum

Stars Collide, Bringing Forth A New Era Of Astrophysics

Baghdad Retakes Oil City Amid Dispute With Kurds

Backlash Over Drug Czar Pick

‘Impenetrable’? Mexicans Doubt It.

In NAFTA talks, Division Is Growing On The Vine

Financial Times:

Credit Suisse Targeted For Break-Up By Activist Hedge Fund

Neutron Star Smash Sets The Universe Quivering

IMF Crunches The Numbers For Possible Venezuela Rescue

Iraqi Forces Seize Control Of Kirkuk From Kurdish Fighters

Washington Times:

Iraqi Forces Retake Oil-Rich Kirkuk From Kurdish Control After Independence Referendum

After Revolt Against Establishment Republicans, Trump Stands By ‘Friend’ McConnell

From Press Leaks To Tweetstorms: Trump Changes Flow Of White House Information

Trump Dismantles Obama's 'Imperial' Presidency, Rescinds Dubious Orders
Bill Clinton Caught Up In Fallout From Harvey Weinstein Sexual-Assault Scandal
Egypt Moves Palestinians Toward Reconciliation, Pressuring Israel On Broader Peace Deal

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: White House-Impromptu Press Conference; Louisiana-Oil Rig Explosion; California Wildfires; New York City Bombing Trial; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Somalia Bombing; Weinstein Sexual Harassment Scandal; Kaepernick NFL Accusation; Hurricane Ophelia; Air Asia Flight Malfunction; Missouri-Escaped Inmates; New York City Traffic Accident; Missing Couple Bodies Found; Neutron Stars Collision; Soldier's Family.

CBS: Opioid Epidemic-White House; Opioid Epidemic-Congress; White House-Impromptu Press Conference; California Wildfires; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Syria-Raqa Assault; Somalia Bombing; Las Vegas Shooting-Gun Control; Air Asia Flight Malfunction; Hurricane Ophelia; Kaepernick NFL Accusation; Sexual Harassment Victims.

NBC: White House-Impromptu Press Conference; Opioid Epidemic-White House; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Louisiana-Oil Rig Explosion; California Wildfires; Kaepernick NFL Accusation; Weinstein Sexual Harassment Scandal; Health Insurance Tips; Air Asia Flight Malfunction; New York City Bombing Trial; Hurricane Ophelia; Neutron Stars Collision; Disabled Child-Prosthetic.

Network TV At A Glance:

White House-Impromptu Press Conference – 9 minutes, 35 seconds
Opioid Epidemic – 8 minutes, 5 seconds
California Wildfires – 6 minutes, 40 seconds
Kidnapped US Soldier Trial – 4 minutes, 40 seconds
Kaepernick NFL Accusation – 3 minutes, 25 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: White House-Private Email Scandal; White House-Impromptu Press Conference; Louisiana-Oil Rig Explosion; Mercedes Benz Recall; Wall Street News.

CBS: White House-Impromptu Press Conference; Sen. McCain-Liberty Medal; California Wildfires; Weinstein Sexual Harassment Scandal; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial.

FOX: California Wildfires; Louisiana-Oil Rig Explosion; Sen. McCain-Liberty Medal.

NPR: California Wildfires; White House-Impromptu Press Conference; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Louisiana-Oil Rig Explosion.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with Secretary of Defense James Mattis; meets with Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras of Greece; participates in a Diwali ceremonial lighting of the Diya; gives remarks to the Heritage Foundation's President's Club Meeting.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — participates in a political reception in Buffalo, NY.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year 2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 124, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee latest hearing on the cost of prescription drugs – Hearing on 'The Cost of Prescription Drugs: How the Drug Delivery System Affects What Patients Pay, Part II', with testimony from Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America Executive Vice President for Policy, Research & Membership Lori Reilly; Association for Accessible Medicines President and CEO Chip Davis Jr.; Healthcare Distribution Alliance Senior Vice President for Government Affairs and General Counsel Elizabeth Gallenagh; Pharmaceutical Care Management Association President and CEO Mark Merritt; and American Pharmacists Association Executive Director and CEO Thomas Menighan Location: Rm 430, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Judiciary Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Gregory Katsas to be U.S. Circuit Judge for the District of Columbia Circuit; Jeffrey Uhlman Beaverstock to be U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of Alabama; Emily Coody Marks and Brett Joseph Talley to be U.S. District Judges for the Middle District of Alabama; and Holly Lou Teeter to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Kansas Location: Dirksen Senate

Office Building, Rm 226, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Banking Committee hearing on consumer credit data security – Hearing on ‘Consumer Data Security and the Credit Bureaus’, with testimony from Covington & Burling partner Andrew Smith (on behalf of Consumer Data Industry Association); Electronic Privacy Information Center President Marc Rotenberg; and Congressional Research Service Analyst in Cybersecurity Policy Chris Jaikaran Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

11:15 AM Senate Dems speak on removing Arctic National Wildlife Refuge drilling from GOP budget legislation – Democratic Sens. Ed Markey, Michael Bennet, Al Franken, and Jeff Merkley call for the removal of any language in the Fiscal Year 2018 Republican budget resolution that would allow for drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, via press conference with environmental, wildlife, and natural resources organizations including the League of Conservation Voters (LCV), Alaska Wilderness League, and Gwich’in Tribal Council Location: U.S. Capitol, Senate Swamp, Washington, DC www.markey.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/MarkeyMemo>

2:30 PM Nominations hearing considers Christopher Sharpley to be CIA Inspector General Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

3:00 PM Homeland Security Subcommittee markup hearing on Fiscal Year 2018 appropriations bill Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 138, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateApprops>

US House: 10:00 AM Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission briefing on Qatar – Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission briefing on ‘Human Rights in Qatar’, with a panel of Project on Middle East Democracy Advocacy Officer Todd Ruffner, Human Rights Watch Middle East and North Africa Division Executive Director Sarah Leah Whitson, and Amnesty International USA Advocacy Director for Middle East and North Africa Raed Jarrar discussing the regional context, reviewing ongoing human rights concerns, examining the human rights impact of the measures imposed by the Gulf Cooperation Council, and offering recommendations for the U.S. Govt Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2456, Washington, DC <http://tlhrc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/TLHRCommission>

12:30 PM Dem Rep. Jamie Raskin at ‘Teach-In’ Against Hate Crimes – ‘Teach-In’ Against Hate Crimes, presented by the Greater Washington Muslim-Jewish Forum and Interfaith Action For Human Rights, with Democratic Rep. Jamie Raskin, rabbis, imams, interfaith leaders, and organizations focused on fighting bigotry convening to ‘discuss the growing peril hate crimes pose to Muslims, Jews, and Americans of diverse backgrounds’ and ‘call on the leadership of the House of Representatives to pass bipartisan hate crimes legislation introduced months ago and shamefully allowed to languish’ * Part of the 4th Annual Spread Hummus Not Hate daylong bus tour Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2168, Washington, DC www.facebook.com/gwmjf/

On recess until 23 October.

Other: 9:00 AM European Commission VP Katainen speaks on multilateral trade at the Atlantic Council – European Commission Vice-President for Jobs, Growth, Industry and Competitiveness Jyrki Katainen speaks at the Atlantic Council on ‘Why Multilateral Trade Matters’ Location: Atlantic Council, 1030 15th St NW, Washington, DC <http://www.atlanticcouncil.org/> <https://twitter.com/AtlanticCouncil>

9:30 AM Italian Army chief of staff lays wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier – Italian Army Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Danilo Errico participates in Army Full Honor Arrival ceremony at Joint Base Myer-Henderson Hall, hosted by U.S. Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark Milley (9:30 AM EDT) and lays a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery, hosted by Joint Force Headquarters-National Capital Region and the U.S. Army Military District of Washington Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael Howard, Arlington, VA (10:00 AM EDT) Location: TBD <http://mdwhome.mdw.army.mil/> https://twitter.com/MDW_USARMY

12:30 PM GW discussion on ‘Latest developments in the war in Ukraine and the Minsk process’ – ‘Latest developments in the war in Ukraine and the Minsk process’ George Washington University Elliott School of International Affairs discussion on current developments in the Russia-Ukraine conflict and future prospects for a diplomatic resolution. Speakers include Ukrainian Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Valeriy Chaly, Estonian Ministry of Foreign Affairs Political Director Paul Teesalu, Deputy Head of the European Union Delegation in the U.S. Caroline Vicini, and former U.S. Ambassador to Ukraine Amb. John Herbst Location: Cloyd Heck Marvin Center, 800 21st St, NW, Washington, DC elliott.gwu.edu <https://twitter.com/elliottschoolgw>

World Trade Credit and Risk Summit – World Trade Credit and Risk Summit, with speakers including former Treasurer of Australia Joe Hockey, Embassy of Canada Minister-Counsellor Colin Bird, Washington International Trade Association Executive Director Ken Levinson, American Security Project CEO Stephen Cheny, Bretton Woods II initiative at New America Director Tomica Tilleman, RAND Corp Center for Global Risk & Security Director Andrew Parailiti, CSIS Director Scott Kennedy, U.S. Chamber of Commerce Center for Global Regulatory Cooperation Senior Manager Kara Sutton, and Brookings Institution Senior Fellow Scott Melzer Location: Ronald Reagan Building and ITC, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC tradecreditrisks Summit.com

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "According to the President, Chicago is basically Syria but with different pizza."

Trevor Noah: "Does Chicago have the most murders? Yes, but it's also the third-biggest city. If you want to talk about cities that are the most dangerous, you have to look at murders per capita, the amount of violent crime relative to the size of the city. Think of it this way: Would you rather be in a big city with five Pennywise the Clowns, or in an Uber Pool with just one?"

Trevor Noah: "It's weird because there are other cities with higher murder rates. You know, like St. Louis, Baltimore, Cleveland. People aren't like, 'Don't go to Cleveland.' Well, they do, but not because of murder."

Trevor Noah: "Oh, now I get it. When there's shootings, Obama's from Chicago. All the other times, he's from Kenya. Now it makes sense."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, October 24, 2017
Date: Tuesday, October 24, 2017 7:21:02 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Greenwire: Deputy Takes Bigger Role While Department Awaits Nominee.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Trump Offered To Change Denali Back; "We Said, 'No!'"
- Associated Press: GAO: Climate Change Already Costing US Billions.
- Politico: Zinke Boosted Fortunes Of 'Scam PAC' Operators.
- E&E Daily: Rep. Gowdy Accuses DOE, Interior Of Failing To Comply With Email Requests.
- The Hill: Interior's Bad-Faith Plan For Wildlife Refuge Puts Future Reform At Risk.
- The Hill: Birth Control For Wild Horses Is The Obvious Alternative To Mass Killing.
- Billings (MT) Gazette: Time Is Ripe To Reconsider Historical Markers And Names, Historians And Natives Say.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribes Seek Reparations Over Oregon Site Destroyed For Highway Expansion.
- Native American Marine Vet Considered A Homeland Hero.
- Smithsonian Museum To Display Post From Dakota Access Pipeline Protests.
- Tribe Asks 10th Circ. To Revive Landowner's Drill Permit Suit.
- Oklahoma's Kickapoo Tribe Gets More Than $282K From EPA.
- Lander Man Sets Out To Document Wind River Wildland Fire Crews Before They Disappear.
- Water, Stone And History In Navajo Land.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Elko (NV) Daily Free Press: BLM Seeks Public Comment On Greater Sage-Grouse.
- Natural Gas Intelligence: House Committee To Hear How States Manage Sage Grouse Habitat.
- KTAR-FM Glendale (AZ): Plan Will Keep Most Of Arizona National Monument Open To Shooters.
- Arizona Republic: Two Bundy Ranch Standoff Defendants Reach Plea Deals.
- Utah Public Radio: Wyoming Mineral Rights Owners Look To Governor To Help Bring More Gas To Market.
- Associated Press: Court Rejects Appeal Of Utah ATV Protest Ride Convictions.
- Associated Press: Murder Trial Starts For Man Who Stoked US Immigration Debate.
- Washington Times: Some Analysts Say Trump Policies Could Accelerate Decline Of Coal.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Signed, Sealed, Delivered.
- Offshore Oil Drilling May Be Coming To A Coastline Near You.
- A Floating Wind Farm Could Generate Electricity Off Hawaii's Shores By 2025.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- As Dams Burst, Trump Seeks To Gut Key Safety Regime.
- Lawsuits Mount Against Feds Over Dam Water Release During Hurricane Harvey.
- D.C. Tackles Emissions With Bikes. Choose Your Color.
- If We Can't Build Two Tunnels To Bring Sacramento Delta Water To SoCal, Will One Suffice?
- Colorado AG Asks Court To Dismiss Lawsuit That Wants "Person" Status For Colorado River.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- LAGCOE 2017 Kicks Off This Week In Acadiana; Oct.
- McKibben: Citizens Climate Lobby Can Help Block ANWR Drilling.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- KCWY-TV Casper (WY): Ten More Bison Released On The Wind River Reservation.
- The Hill: GOP Senators Propose Wildfire Management Bill.
- USA Today: King Salmon Reign Becomes More Precarious On Changing Great Lakes.
- WXIX-TV Cincinnati: Orphaned Baby Manatees Explore New Home At Cincinnati Zoo.
- Daily Inter Lake (MT): State On The Lookout For A Miniature But Devastating Foe.
- Hampton Roads (VA) Virginian-Pilot: Smithfield Man Gets House Arrest For Shooting Bald Eagle, Fatally Running Over It With ATV.
- Associated Press: Not So Cold Duck? Man Keeps Looking For Bird Thought Extinct.

National Park Service

- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Yellowstone's Bison Dynamics Raise Questions.
- Greenwire: Spending The President's Money.
- Associated Press: Climbers Set Speed Record On Yosemite's Nose Of El Capitan.
- Fayette (WV) Tribune: National Park Service To Host Community Meeting On Climbing.
- New York Times: Missing Hikers Found Dead Of Gunshot Wounds, And Locked In An Embrace.
- Lakeland (FL) Ledger: Longtime Fla. Park Ranger Tells Tales Of History, Natural Beauty.

US Geological Survey

- KOMO-TV Seattle: New Simulations Show Best & Worst Places To Be If Major Earthquake Hits Pacific Northwest.

- Phys (UK): Routes Out Of Isolation For Yellowstone Grizzlies.
- Texas Monthly: UT Geologists Extract Potential Natural Gas Source From The Ocean Floor.
- Reuters: Low-Pitched, Rumbling Rocks Could Help Predict When Earthquakes Strike: Research Says.
- Bloomberg News: New Monitoring Available For Earthquakes.

Top National News

- USA Today: EPA Criticized For Pulling Scientists From Climate Change Panel Discussion.
- Washington Post: EPA Seeks To Repeal Obama-Era Emission Standards For Truck Components.
- E&E Daily: Senate Panel To Take Another Crack At Vote For NRC, EPA Nominees.
- Reuters: Nicaragua To Join Paris Climate Agreement, Leaving US And Syria As Only Non-Members.
- USA Today: Puerto Rico Still Dealing With Widespread Outages.
- Washington Post: Small Montana Company Secures $300 Million Contract To Restore Puerto Rico's Electrical Grid.
- Reuters: IRENA Says Solar Costs Will Fall Further, Powering Global Demand.
- Reuters: Lawmakers Ask Justice Department If Terrorism Law Covers Pipeline Activists.
- Washington Times: Trump Says Tax Plan Will Include "No Change" To 401(k) Plans.
- Politico: House To Vote On Senate Budget Resolution Thursday.
- Transport Topics: Chao Says Infrastructure Plan Will Be Unveiled After Tax Reform.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Honor The Truth John Kelly."
 - "The Little Guys Win One On Payday Loans."
- Washington Post.
 - "The Government's Grotesque Abuse Of Power Over A 17-Year-Old Seeking An Abortion."
 - "Kenya's Election Rerun Could Be A Major Setback For African Democracy."
 - "Doug Jones For Senator In Alabama."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Wages Of Corporate Taxes."
 - "Rule And Law In Catalonia."
 - "Japan's Election Warning To China."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Deputy Takes Bigger Role While Department Awaits Nominee.

Greenwire (10/23, Brown, Yachnin) reports Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift indicated that "Casey Hammond, the current deputy assistant secretary for fish and wildlife and parks, will temporarily help Deputy Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals Management Katharine MacGregor oversee various Interior agencies." Greenwire says Hammond will be "pulling double duty as the Senate has yet to confirm a permanent assistant secretary for land and minerals management." By "signing secretarial order No. 3357 on Tuesday, Deputy Interior Secretary David Bernhardt declared 'an immediate need for additional executive-level supervision and direction with respect to'" the BLM, BOEM, BSEE, and the OSMRE. Swift said, "The Senate minority is dragging its feet on getting qualified nominees like Joe Balash in leadership roles here at Interior. Rather than let that slow our progress, we are utilizing team members across the bureaus to move the ball forward for the American people."

The Politico Morning Energy (10/23, Adragna) briefing adds that "in related news, Virginia Johnson, an Interior beachhead staffer and princip[al] deputy secretary for fish wildlife and parks in July left for a job at the USO, according to her LinkedIn profile, and Interior earlier this month announced Jason Larrabee has been assigned that role. He is listed as acting assistant secretary on his LinkedIn profile." Politico notes that the US Senate is considering the confirmation of Joe Balash as secretary for land and minerals management.

Trump Offered To Change Denali Back; "We Said, 'No!'"

The Alaska Dispatch News (10/23, Martinson) reports that in a speech at the Alaska Federation of Natives' annual conference Saturday, Alaska Sen. Dan Sullivan (R) "offered up...previously unknown...information about a March meeting between him, Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R), Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and" President Trump. According to Sullivan, "One by one, regarding Obama administration executive actions for the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, the Arctic Ocean, a road out of King Cove, Trump would turn to Zinke and ask, 'well can we change that to help Alaska?'" ADN adds that to each question, Zinke replied, "Yes, sir." Sullivan said Trump "looked at [him] and said, 'I heard that [Mount McKinley] also had – also its name was changed by executive action. Do you want us to reverse that?'" To this, Sullivan said he and Murkowski "jumped over the desk" and "said, 'no! No. Don't want to reverse that.'" Sullivan "told the president that Denali was the name given to the mountain by the Athabaskan people more than 10,000 years ago." Sullivan said, "So he's like, 'all right, we won't do that.'"

In its "Energy 202" news rundown, the Washington Post (10/23, Grandoni) cites the Alaska Dispatch News (10/21, Demer) in reporting on Sullivan's comments on the hour-long meeting. Sullivan said, "We had maps and we were talking all about Alaska issues. So many issues. Our fisheries. Whaling, the culture of whaling in Alaska. The economy. The military." In response, The Hill editor Timothy Cama tweeted, "So pretty much everything Obama did, Trump wants to undo." Newsweek (10/23, Saul) also covers the ADN report.

GAO: Climate Change Already Costing US Billions.

The AP (10/23, Biesecker) reports that a GAO "report released Monday said the federal government has spent more than $350 billion over the last decade on disaster assistance programs and losses from flood and crop insurance," not including the sizable costs from this year's hurricanes and wildfires. The GAO report "says the fiscal impacts of climate change are likely to vary widely by region." The study said, "The federal government has not undertaken strategic government-wide planning to manage climate risks by using information on the potential economic effects of climate change to identify significant risks and craft appropriate federal responses." The AP adds that President "Trump has called climate change a hoax," and "has also appointed officials such as EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, Energy Secretary Rick Perry and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, all of whom question the scientific consensus that carbon released into the atmosphere from burning fossil fuels is the primary driver of global warming."

The New York Times (10/23, Friedman) says the GAO study warns that "fires, floods and hurricanes are already costing the federal government tens of billions of dollars a year and climate change will drive those costs ever higher in coming years." The report "urges the Trump administration to take climate change risks seriously and begin formulating a response." Sens. Maria Cantwell and Susan Collins, who requested the report, "asserted that the study should help move Congress and the administration past partisan fights over the science of global warming and toward a search for solutions – something they said could be problematic given that the Trump administration is rolling back many of former President Barack Obama's climate change initiatives."

Zinke Boosted Fortunes Of 'Scam PAC' Operators.

Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has directed millions of dollars in political contributions since 2014 to" Washington-area political operative Scott Mackenzie, organizer of Virgin Islands GOP PAC "VIGOP," which "hosted the secretary at a St. Croix fundraiser in March," according to a 2,300-word Politico (10/24, Lefebvre, Juliano) analysis of FEC filings as well as interviews with campaign finance lawyers and people familiar with VIGOP. Critics of Mackenzie "say he operates 'scam PACs' that raise small-dollar donations from conservative voters but then spend the bulk of the money on consultants and overhead." However, "none of the records indicate that Zinke violated the law or received any direct compensation from his association with Mackenzie, the Virgin Islands PAC or its consultants."

Rep. Gowdy Accuses DOE, Interior Of Failing To Comply With Email Requests.

E&E Daily (10/23) reports that House Oversight and Government Reform Chairman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) sent letters last week to four federal agencies saying they were not compliant with his panel's request for documents on private email use. He sent his letters to the Energy Department, Interior Department, Department of Veterans Affairs, NASA, and also followed up with the EPA.

Interior's Bad-Faith Plan For Wildlife Refuge Puts Future Reform At Risk.

Georgetown Law professor David A. Super writes a column for The Hill (10/23, Super) about last week's release "of internal Interior Department communications showing both an intent to disregard the law in building a road through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge on the Alaska Peninsula and a concerted effort to conceal these plans from Congress and the public." Super asserts, "The supposed rationale for this road – to facilitate medical evacuations from the small village of King Cove – does not bear serious examination." Rather, Super argues, "the true purpose of this road is hauling fish for a company in King Cove." Super concludes, "When the administration abuses...the discretion it already possesses to do covert, cynical favors for industry under false humanitarian pretenses, the only lesson that people who take environmental protection seriously will draw is that all flexibility must be systematically removed from statutes."

Birth Control For Wild Horses Is The Obvious Alternative To Mass Killing.

Former US congressman Bill Richardson and Center for Animals Director Allen Rutberg write in The Hill (10/23, Richardson, Rutberg) to oppose the House Appropriations Committee's authorization of "killing healthy wild horses and burros," which they say it did "with the full support of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke." They assert that while the BLM "scheme for managing protected wild horses and burros has never worked well, and has collapsed completely in the last 15 years," "the killing strategy is no more sustainable than the roundup and adopt strategy." Richardson and Rutberg predict public outrage against the committee's decision, and argue "the BLM must develop and put into practice locally tailored long-term plans to manage wild horses and burros with fertility control."

Time Is Ripe To Reconsider Historical Markers And Names, Historians And Natives Say.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/23, French) highlights opinions that the removal of confederate monuments should be reconsidered. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke reportedly "told Breitbart News that he will not remove any monuments from federal lands." Zinke said, "Where do you start and where do you stop? It's a slippery slope. If you're a native Indian, I can tell you, you're not very happy about the history of General Sherman or perhaps President Grant." Indian Country Today editor Simon Moya-Smith responded, "This is a perfect example of how divorced Secretary Zinke is from the Native community. Were he intimately familiar with Natives he'd already know that for decades we've called for the eradication of monuments to Native murderers like Andrew Jackson, Christopher Columbus, etc. ... Sec. Zinke should stop using Natives as an excuse to keep racist monuments erected."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribes Seek Reparations Over Oregon Site Destroyed For Highway Expansion.

The AP (10/23) reports that Justice Department attorneys "asked a federal judge Monday to dismiss a lawsuit filed by tribal elders who say a sacred site was destroyed to expand a highway near Oregon's Mount Hood." Justice Department attorney Ben Schiffman "said in a telephone hearing that the elders were not substantially burdened by the expansion of U.S. 26 and lacked standing to sue." According to the AP, "the elders from Yakama Nation and the Confederated Tribes of Grande Ronde claim the Federal Highway Administration violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act," and "their attorney Stephanie Barclay said the government in 2008 could have widened the road without bulldozing a site that included a stone altar and medicinal plants." The AP notes that "rather than money, the Native Americans are asking for a historical marker, a rebuilt altar and for the planting of new trees and plants."

Courthouse News (10/23, Brown) reports that US Magistrate Judge Youlee Yim You "seemed skeptical Monday about the government's argument that it was within its rights to destroy burial grounds and a ceremonial site sacred to members of the Klickitat and Cascade Native American tribes to widen a highway." CN adds that tribal members said "they repeatedly pleaded with the government not to disturb the stone memorial and sacred grove of trees," but "the government filed a motion to dismiss the case, claiming that it is legally allowed to do whatever it wants on land it owns. 'Many cases show that the federal government's use of its own property, as a legal matter, cannot constitute a substantial burden,' U.S. Attorney Reuben Schifman told" Judge You.

Native American Marine Vet Considered A Homeland Hero.

The AP (10/22, Scott) profiled Native American and US Marine Corps veteran Jesse DesRosier, highlighting his efforts to defend Blackfeet lands and culture. The AP said, "Today, Native Americans serve in the U.S. military at the highest rate per capita of any ethnic or cultural population, and Montana is home to more than 6,000 tribal veterans, many of them Blackfeet." The article mentioned that DesRosier "and dozens of other Native American veterans and active-duty members have petitioned U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to defend a sacred ancestral homeland known as the Badger-Two Medicine, a 130,000-acre area named for the two rivers that define it," seeking "permanent protections from oil and gas drilling."

Smithsonian Museum To Display Post From Dakota Access Pipeline Protests.

The AP (10/23, Nicholson) reports that the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of the American Indian in Washington DC will be displaying a 12-foot-tall mile-maker post, which was built by Dakota Access pipeline protesters to show how far people traveled to protest the project. Hickory Edwards donated the post to the museum, which he erected in September of 2016.

Tribe Asks 10th Circ. To Revive Landowner's Drill Permit Suit.

Law360 (10/23, Lidgett) reports that on Friday, the federal Tenth Circuit granted a bid from the Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma to file an amicus brief in support of Oklahoma landowner Merrill Chance's appeal of a ruling in favor of the BIA. Chance had claimed "the Bureau of Indian Affairs granted an energy exploration company permission to drill on his land without first conducting a required environmental review."

Oklahoma's Kickapoo Tribe Gets More Than $282K From EPA.

The AP (10/23) reports that the EPA "awarded the Kickapoo Tribe of Oklahoma more than $282,000 to curb water pollution." The "tribe will use the grant to control surface and groundwater pollution and establish protection programs that address indoor air, underground storage tanks and solid and hazardous waste management."

Lander Man Sets Out To Document Wind River Wildland Fire Crews Before They Disappear.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (10/22, Schmelzer) reported that former BIA employee Robin Whiteplume has been documenting the firefighting efforts of Eastern Shoshone and Northern Arapaho tribe members. Whiteplume said he "wanted to write down the group's history before the men and women are gone, taking their memories with them."

Water, Stone And History In Navajo Land.

Voice of America (10/23, Taboh) contributor Julie Taboh praises the beautiful views at the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area, managed by the NPS, which borders Navajo Indian territory. Mikah Meyer described his tour of the area and said, "It was a privilege to be able to experience these sacred Native American sites and I'm thankful that the National Park Service preserves them in a way that allows myself and so many people to experience them."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Seeks Public Comment On Greater Sage-Grouse.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (10/23) reports that the BLM "announced opportunities for the public to comment and share issues on the agency's consideration of potential amendments to its Nevada and California land use plans, specifically elements of land use plans that address greater sage-grouse conservation." The BLM announced meetings in "Northern Nevada, including one slated for Elko on Nov. 8."

House Committee To Hear How States Manage Sage Grouse Habitat.

Natural Gas Intelligence (10/23, Passut) reports, "The House Committee on Natural Resources is to hear from western state officials on Wednesday in an oversight hearing regarding management solutions for the greater sage grouse." The article notes that the BLM has "issued notices stating it intends to reconsider land use plans from 2014 and 2015 designed to protect habitat; withdraw protections from 10 million acres of habitat on federal land; and cancel an associated environmental impact statement (EIS)."

Plan Will Keep Most Of Arizona National Monument Open To Shooters.

KTAR-FM Glendale, AZ (10/23) reports online that the BLM "last week recommended closing 53,300 acres of the Sonoran Desert National Monument to recreational shooting, but keeping the remaining 443,000 open to shooters." The latest plan, published "Friday in the Federal Register, calls for making 11 percent of the monument's land off-limits to shooting," although "hunting is not affected by any of the proposals considered by the bureau, and would be allowed anywhere in the monument with the proper permits." BLM Arizona spokesman Adam Eggers said, "This is by no means the end of the process. ... Nothing has been finalized." He is paraphrased as indicating "Friday started a 30-day protest period for the public to voice concerns or support for the proposal, as well as a 60-day legal review by the governor."

Two Bundy Ranch Standoff Defendants Reach Plea Deals.

The Arizona Republic (10/23, Anglen) reports that "a legal saga that included two hung juries, two trials and months of testimony in Las Vegas ended Monday for two defendants in the Bundy Ranch standoff case with a misdemeanor plea deal." Eric Parker and O. Scott Drexler "pleaded guilty to obstructing a court order and will not serve additional time in prison, getting credit for time served." Parker and Drexler "initially were charged with conspiracy, extortion, carrying weapons during crimes of violence, assaulting and threatening federal officers, and interference with interstate commerce for their roles in taking up arms against the federal government." The Republic notes that Parker and Drexler, both of Idaho, "were among the first of six defendants to go to trial over the 2014 standoff, which pitted armed ranchers and militia members against Bureau of Land Management agents."

The AP (10/23, Gorman) reports similarly.

Wyoming Mineral Rights Owners Look To Governor To Help Bring More Gas To Market.

Utah Public Radio (10/23, Bringham) reports online that "some mineral-rights owners are looking to state governments to help save royalty earnings from natural-gas reserves" after the "Interior Department began the process of reversing Obama-era rules limiting the waste of methane – the primary component of natural gas – on public lands, arguing the regulations were an overreach of authority and cost jobs." Maggie McKenzie, a land and mineral-rights owner in southeastern Wyoming, said that "just because the feds say it's OK to waste millions of dollars in natural gas through leaks, venting and flaring, that doesn't mean Wyoming has to stand by and watch critical revenues vanish into thin air."

Court Rejects Appeal Of Utah ATV Protest Ride Convictions.

The AP (10/23, Whitehurst) reports that on Monday, the federal Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in Salt Lake City rejected arguments that Utah county commissioner "Phil Lyman's trial was tainted by the judge's friendship with a conservation group lawyer." The AP notes, "Lyman and blogger Monte Wells were convicted of federal misdemeanor charges for their roles in an ATV protest ride through parts of southern Utah's Recapture Canyon, which was closed to motor vehicles to protect ruins that are nearly 2,000 years old." Wells "said he's disappointed in the ruling in the case that he calls emblematic of frustrations over federal management of public land."

Murder Trial Starts For Man Who Stoked US Immigration Debate.

The AP (10/23, Elias) reports that alleged murderer "Garcia Zarate's trial began Monday with Deputy District Attorney Diana Garcia showing jurors the handgun that is accused of firing and said a ballistics expert will testify that the only way to fire it is to pull the trigger." The AP notes that the handgun belonged to a BLM "ranger who reported that it had been stolen from his parked car in San Francisco a week before Steinle was shot." The AP says the "shooting touched off a political furor during last year's presidential race, with President Donald Trump citing the killing of 32-year-old Kate Steinle as a reason to toughen U.S. immigration policies."

Some Analysts Say Trump Policies Could Accelerate Decline Of Coal.

The Washington Times (10/23, Wolfgang) reports on its front page that while President Trump "has dismantled much of his predecessor's environmental agenda and rolled back the regulatory war on coal," according to "analysts," "coal's long-term future is bleak and that the administration's friendly policies toward natural gas could speed up the decline." Analysts "say

Mr. Trump and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Scott Pruitt, despite their best efforts, simply cannot ward off market forces that have been building for years." Moreover, "research shows the administration's fossil fuel-centric energy policy – which is focused not just on coal but also on revving up oil and gas production on federal lands and loosening restrictions on private land exploration – could have adverse effects on coal."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Signed, Sealed, Delivered.

The Politico Morning Energy (10/23, Adragna) briefing reports that BOEM "approved a key step of Deepwater Wind's 144-megawatt Revolution Wind project that will enable the company to collect the biological and wind performance data it needs to file a construction plan." The briefing adds, "Massachusetts is slated to pick the winning contracts in July, and Deepwater Wind has said it could bring the project online by the end of 2023."

Offshore Oil Drilling May Be Coming To A Coastline Near You.

In EcoWatch (10/23, Stauffer), Surfrider Foundation Environmental Director Pete Stauffer predicted the expansion of offshore oil drilling in the US. Stauffer cites how "following an executive order earlier this year, Interior Sec. Ryan Zinke announced plans to revise the nation's Five-Year Offshore Drilling Plan, threatening the Atlantic, Pacific, Gulf of Mexico and Arctic Ocean with the prospect of new offshore oil rigs." Stauffer attacks these plans, writing, "The drilling, rigs and transportation tankers required for offshore drilling release a brew of toxic chemicals and leaked oil." Stauffer urges readers to "submit comments to the Department of the Interior and boldly voice their opposition to offshore drilling."

A Floating Wind Farm Could Generate Electricity Off Hawaii's Shores By 2025.

Behind a paywall, Pacific Business News \(HI\) (10/23, Mai) reports, "Hawaiian Electric, the state's largest utility, said in its power supply improvement plan it plans to utilize 200 megawatts of offshore wind power by 2030 and 800MW by 2045." The article mentions the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management.

Bureau Of Reclamation

As Dams Burst, Trump Seeks To Gut Key Safety Regime.

A 2,300-word Greenwire (10/23, Jacobs) analysis says American dams "are crumbling," citing failures at the Oroville Dam in California last year, two dams destroyed by Hurricane Harvey in Houston, and the spillway failure at the Guajataca Dam in Puerto Rico due to Hurricane Maria. Yet, "President Trump wants to zero out the Reclamation program's budget. Seemingly because it grew out of the Obama administration's climate change adaptation strategy." Greenwire praises the Reclamation program as "a natural fit for the bureau," saying that "for 40 years, Reclamation and the Army Corps of Engineers...have been the country's leaders in developing dam safety protocols that are passed along to industry and state regulators responsible for the vast majority of the country's dams."

Lawsuits Mount Against Feds Over Dam Water Release During Hurricane Harvey.

The Wall Street Journal (10/23, Randazzo) reports that a number of lawyers are pursuing dozens of lawsuits against the federal government – lawsuits seeking compensation for the damage Houston homeowners argue resulted from the US Army Corps of Engineers' decision to release water from two Houston-area reservoirs in the days following Hurricane Harvey's impact. With the estimated 10,000 homes affected by the reservoirs, the litigation potentially could result in billions of dollars in compensation, but the lawyers' arguments, based upon a small area of eminent domain law, likely will face challenges in court.

D.C. Tackles Emissions With Bikes. Choose Your Color.

Behind a paywall, ClimateWire (10/23, Jacobs) says, "It's morning rush hour in the nation's capital, and bicyclists crowd their lane six deep at an intersection. Clad in spandex and business suits, a few ride the bright green, orange, red or yellow bikes that signal a new phase of city cycling." The article mentions the Bureau of Reclamation.

If We Can't Build Two Tunnels To Bring Sacramento Delta Water To SoCal, Will One Suffice?

The Los Angeles Times (10/23, Board) editorializes in support of the two-tunnel plan for the Los Angeles WaterFix program, which aims to bring Sacramento water into Southern California. Yet, the Times opines, "the already-crippled delta needs more [water]. Whether it's to be one tunnel or two, the rest of us will have to learn to make do with less." The editorial adds, "It's now up to" California Gov. Jerry Brown (D), "with his unparalleled political capital, but entering the final year of his uniquely long tenure as California's leader – to decide how much less is still enough."

Colorado AG Asks Court To Dismiss Lawsuit That Wants "Person" Status For Colorado River.

The Denver Post (10/23) reports that the Colorado Attorney General's Office wrote to the US District Court in Denver, asking them to dismiss a lawsuit filed by environmental group Deep Green Resistance, which petitioned "to declare the Colorado River ecosystem a 'person' and represent its interest in court." The attorney general's office "said the questions of 'whether the ecosystem should have the same rights as people, and who should be allowed to assert those rights in federal courts, are matters reserved to Congress by the Constitution.'"

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

LAGCOE 2017 Kicks Off This Week In Acadiana; Oct.

24-26. KLFY-TV Lafayette, LA (10/23) reports online that the Louisiana Gulf Coast Oil Exposition (LAGCOE) starts this week in Lafayette, Louisiana. This year's keynote speakers are BSEE Director Scott Angelle and BP project general manager Ryan Malone. KLFY explains, "LAGCOE is an event industry leaders said is a way to introduce the oil and gas industry to Acadiana."

McKibben: Citizens Climate Lobby Can Help Block ANWR Drilling.

Bill McKibben, founder of 350.org, writes in the Los Angeles Times (10/23, McKibben) arguing against drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. McKibben is hoping the members of the Citizens Climate Lobby will sway the vote to prevent oil and gas drilling in the refuge. Arguing against the measure, McKibben says a new analysis found the government will generate $37.5 million by opening drilling, much less than the $1.8 billion proponents claim. Further, burning the fossil fuels present in the region will only exacerbate damage by carbon.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Ten More Bison Released On The Wind River Reservation.

KCWY-TV Casper, WY (10/23, Ford) reports online, "The restoration of bison in Fremont County, Wyoming "continues as more of them have been released into the Wind River Reservation." KCWY describes how "members from the Shoshone Tribe along with people in the community joined last week to release 10 more bison on the Wind River Reservation." FWS Project Leader Pat Hnilicka said, "Just returning those bison to their rightful place on the landscape and how there's so much meaning, again not just towards the animals themselves but to the human element to the tribes that are here. That's new to them, it's inter-woven in their culture for all these centuries it's just a very wonderful complete feeling."

GOP Senators Propose Wildfire Management Bill.

The Hill (10/23, Cama) reports that draft legislation unveiled Monday by Republican "Sens. John Barrasso (Wyo.), Orrin Hatch (Utah), John Thune (S.D.) and Steve Daines (Mont.)" is "aimed at preventing and mitigating wildfires by making it easier to cut down and remove trees and brush." The Hill says that "Republicans have long complained that when land management agencies like the Forest Service have to go through the arduous process of consulting with the Fish and Wildlife Service to allow logging in areas where endangered species live or are nearby, it delays the process of removing wood and brush that contributes to fires." The Hill adds that "provisions of the bill would reduce the obligations of the Forest Service to consult with the Fish and Wildlife Service," and "direct the Forest Service and Interior Department to create certain exclusions from environmental review for wood and brush removal."

King Salmon Reign Becomes More Precarious On Changing Great Lakes.

USA Today (10/23, Matheny) reports that the declining population of the alewife, a silvery herring, is threatening the population of chinook, or king salmon, which “almost exclusive[ly]” feed on the alewife. The article says the FWS’ Great Lakes Mass Marking Program aims to figure out where caught salmon come from. FWS Mass Marking Program fish biologist Matthew Kornis said, “Our biotechnicians on Lake Michigan are handling about 20,000 fish a year. It gives us the sample size we need.” A joint USGS-Michigan State University study “found that chinook stocking could be cut by an additional 50% with little resulting difference in overall salmon numbers.”

Orphaned Baby Manatees Explore New Home At Cincinnati Zoo.

WXIX-TV Cincinnati (10/23) reports online, “Orphaned manatees from SeaWorld Orlando have been sent to the Cincinnati Zoo and Botanical Garden to receive care before they’re eventually released into the wild.” WXIX notes that the “zoo is part of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s Manatee Rescue and Rehabilitation Partnership.” Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden Director Thane Maynard said, “We are extremely proud to be part of this conservation program and excited to welcome Pippen, Miles and Mathew to their new home in Cincinnati. There’s nothing better than being able to work with these amazing creatures and ultimately see them return to the wild.”

State On The Lookout For A Miniature But Devastating Foe.

The Daily Inter Lake \(MT\) (10/22, Reilly) reported on Montana’s efforts to keep out “quagga mussels that have crashed fisheries and clogged pipes across America.” The FWS “says an infestation could cost the region’s hydroelectric industry alone $300 million annually.”

Smithfield Man Gets House Arrest For Shooting Bald Eagle, Fatally Running Over It With ATV.

The Hampton Roads \(VA\) Virginian-Pilot (10/23, Daugherty) reports that Allen H. Thacker of Smithfield, Virginia “was sentenced Monday morning to one month of house arrest on charges that he shot a bald eagle and then ran over it multiple times with an all-terrain vehicle.” In an interview with the FWS, Thacker reportedly confessed “to shooting the eagle, arguing it was a menace.”

Not So Cold Duck? Man Keeps Looking For Bird Thought Extinct.

The AP (10/23, Borenstein) reports on British writer Richard Thorns’ search for a colorful duck, as he aims to prove they are not extinct. Thorns “is backed by the Global Wildlife Conservation group, which launched a hunt for ‘lost species’ – 25 quirky and elusive plants and animals beginning with the duck.”

National Park Service

Yellowstone’s Bison Dynamics Raise Questions.

A 1,500-word Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/23, French) analysis says that “when Yellowstone National Park did its summer count of bison this year, it was somewhat surprising to see that although the animals suffered their second highest culling and killing since 2000... was the untargeted central herd that shrank substantially and not the northern herd, which is the main target of the bison removals.” As a result, the NPS has “asked, as it has in the past, that tribal and sport hunters limit their harvest outside Yellowstone’s western boundary, which is all central herd bison.” In addition, Park officials are “recommending that no more than 1,250 bison be killed by hunters or shipped to slaughter this winter.”

Spending The President’s Money.

Greenwire (10/23, Hotakainen) reports that maintenance mechanic “Kenny Klipp appreciates that President Trump donated his first-quarter salary to the National Park Service,” and hopes it will enable him “to join the team of construction workers that will restore the historic Newcomer House at the Antietam National Battlefield in Sharpsburg using the president’s donation of $78,333 to pay for part of the project.” NPS Historic Preservation Training Center Superintendent Moss Rudley “said the renovation project originally set for 2019 has moved to a faster track, with work scheduled to begin next spring and some windows getting removed as early as February.” The article outlines the history of the Newcomer House.

Climbers Set Speed Record On Yosemite's Nose Of El Capitan.

The AP (10/23) reports, "Two climbers have set a new speed record for ascending the Nose route of El Capitan in Yosemite National Park, one of the world's most technical and dangerous verticals." Brad Gobright "and climbing partner Jim Reynolds raced up the nearly 90-degree, 2,900-foot (884-meter) precipice in 2 hours and 19 minutes." The AP notes, "More than two dozen people have been killed on El Capitan since 1905."

National Park Service To Host Community Meeting On Climbing.

The Fayette \(WV\) Tribune (10/23) says, "The National Park Service invites members of the public who have an interest in rock climbing at New River Gorge National River and Gauley River National Recreation Area to a public meeting on Nov. 4 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. at the Canyon Rim Visitor Center." The Tribune says the event will kick off "with a brief presentation, and then focus on how the park, climbing community, neighbors, government entities and others can work together to address issues that have impacts on the park and communities."

Missing Hikers Found Dead Of Gunshot Wounds, And Locked In An Embrace.

The New York Times (10/23, Caron) reports the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department said Friday that "the bodies of the hikers, Rachel Nguyen, 20, and Joseph Orbeso, 22, who had been missing since late July, were found embracing each other under a tree in Joshua Tree National Park. ... They had no water and seemed to have been rationing their food." The couple "died of gunshot wounds...in what appeared to be a murder-suicide."

Longtime Fla. Park Ranger Tells Tales Of History, Natural Beauty.

The Lakeland \(FL\) Ledger (10/22, Soergel) featured an interview with Fort Caroline National Memorial lead ranger Craig Morris, who told stories about odd events that happened at the park. The Ledger said, "Fort Caroline is a historical site, and Morris sees his main job as keeping that history alive – telling the stories of the Timucuan Indians who lived there for thousands of years, the French settlers who tried to make a go of it there in the 1560s, and the Spanish who quickly came along to wipe out the impudent French."

US Geological Survey

New Simulations Show Best & Worst Places To Be If Major Earthquake Hits Pacific Northwest.

KOMO-TV Seattle (10/23, Markovich) reports online, "Researchers with the University of Washington have released new simulations revealing the best and worst places to be when a possible 9.0 earthquake hits." The researchers said "the epicenter of the potentially catastrophic quake will be off the west coast between California and British Columbia, in an area known as the Cascadia Subduction Zone." USGS researcher Dr. Erin Wirth said, "What we've done differently in this research is we've run 50 computer simulations of what a magnitude 9 earthquake on the Cascadia mega thrust could look like." Wirth "will present her findings at the Geological Society of America's annual meeting in Seattle" today.

Routes Out Of Isolation For Yellowstone Grizzlies.

Phys \(UK\) (10/23) reports that the Interagency Grizzly Bear Study Team projected paths that "future bears might take to pass through (or bypass) human occupied territory around Helena, Butte, and Bozeman, hopping between islands of wildlands in developed farm and rangeland." Their results will be published in an article "next week in the Ecological Society of America's open access journal Ecosphere." Interagency Grizzly Bear Study Team leader and USGS ecologist Frank van Manen said, "We let the male bears tell us where they would be most likely to go, by looking at their movement characteristics. We had the luxury of huge datasets of location data from both populations. We could be very picky about our data selection."

UT Geologists Extract Potential Natural Gas Source From The Ocean Floor.

Texas Monthly (10/23, Hlavinka) reports, "In May, a group of scientists from the UTJSG, Ohio State, Columbia University, and the" USGS "embarked on a mission sponsored by the Department of Energy to extract" methane hydrate, "an icy, flammable substance, from the floor of the Gulf of Mexico." UT postdoctoral fellow Stephen "Phillips said scientists are interested in learning how methane hydrate plays into the carbon cycle in order to better understand its effects on climate change as well as its role in natural hazards, such as how it relates to submarine landslides." According to the article, the substance "could provide power to future generations."

Low-Pitched, Rumbling Rocks Could Help Predict When Earthquakes Strike: Research Says.

Reuters (10/23, Hares) reports that a study published Monday in Geophysical Research Letters, a journal published by the American Geophysical Union, found that "rocks under increasing pressure before earthquakes strike send out low-pitched rumbling sounds that the human ear cannot detect but could be used to predict when a tremor will strike." For the study, "researchers recreated powerful earthquake forces in a laboratory and used high-tech algorithms to pick out the acoustic clues amid all the other noise of a pending quake."

New Monitoring Available For Earthquakes.

Bloomberg News (10/23, Wethe) reports that TexNet now has "22 permanent" earthquake "monitoring stations and another 40 that are portable." According to the University of Texas, TexNet is the country's most advanced seismic monitoring system run by a state. University of Texas at Austin's Bureau of Economic Geology Director Scott Tinker said "small earthquake events have become more common in Texas recently." Tinker added that "we are now positioned to learn more about them and, hopefully, to understand how to mitigate their impacts in the future."

Top National News

EPA Criticized For Pulling Scientists From Climate Change Panel Discussion.

The EPA's decision to pull its scientists from a panel discussion at a Rhode Island conference highlighting the impact of climate change on the Narragansett Bay is drawing criticism, USA Today (10/23, King) reports. The move "has sparked fresh criticism about EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's skepticism toward the broad scientific community's conclusion that human-caused global warming is a proven fact and a growing concern." Rhode Island Sens. Jack Reed and Sheldon Whitehouse "criticized the EPA's decision during an appearance Monday at the conference in Providence, R.I." Whitehouse said, "This has traditionally been a bipartisan issue. ... So there is no reason for it to have to be this way. And it should not take away from the terrific scientific work that is being done, because at the heart of all this is not the politics, it's the knowledge." Reed "said he was 'disheartened and disappointed' that the EPA scientists were not allowed to publicly present their findings." The Washington Post (10/23, Dennis, Eilperin) says the Administration decision "gave the event a suddenly high profile, with protesters outside, media inside and angry lawmakers and academics criticizing the move."

The Washington Times (10/23, Wolfgang) reports the three scientists – "Autumn Oczkowski and Rose Martin, both of whom work at an EPA research laboratory in Rhode Island, and Emily Shumchenia, an agency consultant – are co-authors of a report on climate change and its effects on the estuary."

Reuters (10/22, Scott) reports Tom Borden, Narragansett Bay Estuary Program Director, said the agency gave "no specific reason" as to why the researchers weren't permitted to speak. The AP (10/23, Smith) reports that in a statement yesterday, EPA spokeswoman Nancy Grantham said, "EPA scientists are attending, they simply are not presenting; it is not an EPA conference."

Newsweek (10/23, Frankel), the Daily Caller (10/23, White) and CNN International (10/23, Vazquez, Marsh) also provide coverage of this story.

EPA Seeks To Repeal Obama-Era Emission Standards For Truck Components.

The Washington Post (10/23, Eilperin) reports that the EPA is seeking to repeal a rule adopted in the last months of the Obama Administration imposing tighter emissions standards on truck components. The OMB "posted a notice saying that on Saturday it received the proposal to rescind the rule," which "applies the standards now used for heavy-duty trucks to new truck components called gliders and trailers." The rule, the Post adds, "has been widely embraced by the trucking industry."

Senate Panel To Take Another Crack At Vote For NRC, EPA Nominees.

E&E Daily (10/23, Bogardus) reports that the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee is “taking a second shot at moving through a slate of President Trump’s nominees, including some controversial picks for U.S. EPA.” The committee “will also vote on Jeff Baran, up for another term at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.” The EPW committee was scheduled to vote on the nominees last week, “but Chairman John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) put off the [meeting] amid controversy over EPA’s plans for the renewable fuel standard.” Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA) “raised concerns about Wehrum over his answers to her questions regarding the RFS.” The markup is “Wednesday, Oct. 25, at 10 a.m. in 406 Dirksen.”

Nicaragua To Join Paris Climate Agreement, Leaving US And Syria As Only Non-Members.

Reuters (10/23, Pretel) reports that Nicaragua is set to join the Paris climate agreement, leaving the United States and Syria as the only nations who are not members of the global pact. The next round of U.N. climate talks will take place from Nov. 6-17 in Bonn, Germany, as government environment ministers work to create a set of international guidelines for the agreement.

Puerto Rico Still Dealing With Widespread Outages.

USA Today (10/23, Dorell) reports that more than a month after Hurricane Maria battered Puerto Rico “with 155-mph winds, three-quarters of the residents are still without power, lining up at banks for cash and gathering at shopping malls, hotels or government buildings just to charge their cellphones.” Gov. Ricardo Rosselló acknowledges “that his pledge to restore 95% of power by mid-December is ‘aggressive.’” The article adds, “Col. Jeff Lloyd of the Army Corps of Engineers in Puerto Rico, which the federal government is relying on to help the U.S. territory restore power, would not commit to Rosselló’s mid-December timeline. The Corps has ordered $130 million worth of supplies, including 62,000 telephone poles from the U.S. mainland.”

The AP (10/23, Shinkman) reports Lt. Gen. Jeffrey Buchanan, commander of U.S. Army North, “remains defiant in the face of critics who say the response has been too slow or too small, echoing President Donald Trump’s defenses of the relief effort thus far.” Buchanan said, “It’s hard to mass resources when you’re dependent on searift and airlift to get anything here. You can’t just drive down the road like what happened in Florida and Irma.”

Billionaire Richard Branson and Amory B. Lovins of the Rocky Mountain Institute, in a piece for the New York Times (10/23, Branson, Lovins), urge grid modernization as a way to prevent sustained outages following a severe weather event.

Small Montana Company Secures $300 Million Contract To Restore Puerto Rico’s Electrical Grid.

In a front-page story, the Washington Post (10/23, A1, Mufson, Gillum, Davis, Hernández) reports that as part of the effort to restore Puerto Rico’s electrical grid following Hurricane Maria’s damage, a small Montana company called Whitefish Energy has secured a $300 million contract with the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority “to repair and reconstruct large portions of the island’s electrical infrastructure” – the “biggest” contract yet issued in the effort. Whitefish announced Monday it had 280 workers on the island and “said it was close to completing infrastructure work that will energize some of the key industrial facilities that are critical to restarting the local economy.”

IRENA Says Solar Costs Will Fall Further, Powering Global Demand.

Reuters (10/23, Tan) reports the International Renewable Energy Agency said yesterday that costs for solar power will decrease “by another 60 percent over the next decade giving an already booming market another boost.” Solar power is in the middle of a “boom because of sharp drops in costs and efficiency improvements, pushing global capacity from virtually zero at the start of the century to 300 gigawatt (GW) by the end of 2016, a figure expected to rise again by 2020.”

Lawmakers Ask Justice Department If Terrorism Law Covers Pipeline Activists.

Reuters (10/23, Gardner) reports a bipartisan group of US representatives yesterday asked the Department of Justice “whether the domestic terrorism law would cover actions by protesters that shut oil pipelines last year, a move that could potentially increase political rhetoric against climate change activists.” Rep. Ken Buck “said in a letter to Attorney General Jeff Sessions, that damaging pipeline infrastructure poses risks to humans and the environment.” The letter said “operation of pipeline facilities by unqualified personnel could result in a rupture – the consequences of which would be devastating.” The letter “was signed by 84 representatives, including at least two Democrats, Gene Green and Henry Cuellar, both of Texas.”

The Washington Examiner (10/23, Siciliano) reports “the letter raises security concerns based on an incident last year in which a group of environmental activists attempted to disable pipelines that crossed the border between the U.S. and Canada in multiple states.”

Trump Says Tax Plan Will Include “No Change” To 401(k) Plans.

Amid reports that Republicans were considering reducing the amount workers can contribute to their 401(k) without paying taxes from $18,000 to $2,400, President Trump tweeted Monday, “There will be NO change to your 401(k). This has always been a great and popular middle class tax break that works, and it stays!” While media reports cast Trump’s stance as positive for people saving for retirement, several reports and analyses say the tweet further complicates Republicans’ already difficult task of finding agreement on a tax bill.

The Washington Times (10/23, Boyer) reports that Trump “said Monday he won’t allow Congress to reduce tax-exempt contributions to popular 401(k) savings plans,” and Ylan Mui said on CNBC’s Closing Bell (10/23) that Trump’s tweet “may have put the nail in the coffin” for the idea. Pete Alexander reported on NBC Nightly News (10/23, story 2, 1:10, Holt) that in the wake of Trump’s tweet, Republicans “are scrambling for other ways to try to pay for sweeping tax cuts without ballooning the deficit.”

A front-page story in the Washington Post (10/23, A1, Paletta, Debonis) says that for GOP tax writers, “Trump’s numerous tax promises are proving difficult to keep.” Charles Lane of the Washington Post said on Fox News’ Special Report (10/23), “I have had Republicans on Capitol Hill emphatically tell me over and over again, ‘We are doing this. We are getting it done. We have no choice. It is political death if we don’t.’ Having said all that, they have a problem which is unless you want to really, really, really blow up the deficit, you have to pay for at least some of this and it’s hard to do it without attacking some big, sacred cow in the tax code.”

Politico (10/23, Lima) reports that at a town hall on tax reform with Ivanka Trump in Pennsylvania on Monday, “US Treasurer Jovita Carranza reiterated the administration’s intent to retain current 401(k) rules.” Carranza said that although the plan is “always going to be under review, just like it is for corporate America, just like it is for all of the pensions in every state pension,” the Administration does not currently project an overhaul, despite House Republicans’ reported considerations. Carranza said, “That will be continued to be reviewed, but at this point I can say that the latest is that the 401(k) plan is going to stay as is.”

The Wall Street Journal (10/23, Rubin) reports that the Save Our Savings Coalition, which includes the AARP, American International Group Inc. and Northern Trust Corp., said it was “thrilled” by Trump’s tweet. USA Today (10/23, Shell) calls Trump’s tweet “good news for savers and taxpayers,” and Reuters (10/23, Heavey) says making changes to 401(k) plans “would risk alienating tens of millions of workers as well as Wall Street, which generates fees from managing the plans.” Moreover, it would “provide ammunition to Democrats, who have painted Trump’s plan, with its $6 trillion in tax cuts, as a gift to the rich and corporate America that would balloon the federal deficit.”

The New York Times (10/23, Sullivan, Tankersley) says Trump’s “shutdown of the proposal is the first of what many Republicans privately fear could be a presidential pattern that disrupts their efforts to pass a sweeping overhaul of the tax code.” Similarly, Roll Call (10/23, Bennett) says Trump’s tweet “further complicated Republicans’ quest to find agreement on a package of tax rate cuts and code changes.” Roll Call adds that GOP aides “have long worried that Trump’s tendency to post erratically on social media could undermine the tax effort and drive a wedge into negotiations between Congress and the White House.”

A New York Times (10/23) analysis says that while tax reform “was never going to be easy given that it requires targeting lucrative and politically popular tax breaks to mitigate the magnitude of cuts Republicans are envisioning,” supporters of the effort have said “publicly and privately” that Trump “is making a hard task even harder.” The Washington Post (10/22, Rucker, Sullivan, Kane) reports that “after nine months of struggling to broker agreements, lawmakers in both parties increasingly consider [Trump] an untrustworthy, chronically inconsistent and easily distracted negotiator.” Some Republicans “are openly questioning his negotiating abilities and devising strategies to keep him from changing his mind.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/23, Puzzaghera) reports that Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch “said on Monday that his panel ‘will not change the 401(k) retirement savings system in a manner that does not achieve the goals outlined in the unified framework; namely, to maintain or raise retirement plan participation for workers and the resources available for retirement.’” However, the AP (10/23, Gordon) reports that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Brady “indicated that changes to the 401(k) structure may still be on the table." Brady said, "I don't want to get ahead of the committee. That will all be part of the tax reform bill." Asked whether Trump's tweet "changes in any way what the panel was planning to do," Brady said, "No."

Conway: Trump's Priorities Are Middle-Class Tax Cut, Reducing Corporate Rate. Presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/23), "The President made clear his two major priorities are to make sure that this tax cut benefits the middle class and secondly to reduce that corporate tax rate because those are the job creators. The President wanted 15 percent. It's now at 20 percent, but it will no longer be 35 percent." Conway added, "The other thing to note here is that there aren't just three tax brackets, there are actually four when you count the zero percent. We'll have more Americans paying zero percent in taxes than currently do."

Reardon: Cut Rates For Pass-Through Corporations. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/23), Brian Reardon, a former White House official at the National Economic Council from 2003-2005, advocates for tax rate cuts for pass-through corporations, arguing that they employ the majority of US workers and are the basis of many local economies.

WSJournal: Left Attacks Hasset For Showing Corporate Rate Cut Will Raise Wages. A Wall Street Journal (10/23, Board) editorial assails economists on the left over their attacks on White House Council of Economic Advisers Chairman Kevin Hassett for presenting evidence that a cut in the corporate tax rate will benefit workers. The Journal suggests that the economists' criticisms may be due to the fact that their own policies to increase wages were unsuccessful.

Ivanka Trump Pitches Tax Reform In Pennsylvania. Politico (10/23, Lima) reports that Ivanka Trump pitched the Republican tax reform plan during a town hall in Bucks County, Pennsylvania on Monday, saying, "For me this tax plan really couples two things that are really core values as a country, which is work and supporting the American family." Trump called tax reform "long overdue" and "argued that working families cannot continue to bear their current tax burden without relief from the government." She said, "We have to support the American worker, we have to create jobs, we have to create growth, but we also have to support that American worker's family." In addition, she "stressed the importance of expanding the child tax credit – one of her biggest priorities since moving to Washington – but it's still unclear whether the proposal will win over fiscal conservatives in Congress."

Ivanka Trump said on Fox News' Hannity (10/23), "I think tax reform is so core to our goal of fueling the economic growth in this country. We need to be competitive. We need the tax code that's reflective with the modern reality of what our workforce looks like, including supporting our working families, the majority of which are now dual-income, which is why I am really excited about the realization of a large part of the Administration's working-family agenda through tax reform, the expansion of the child tax credit, doubling the standard deduction, eliminating the marriage penalty. There's so many critical elements that support our dual values of work and family. But we need to be competitive and, ultimately, we need growth, and that is going to come by ensuring that this is the country that everyone wants to grow their businesses in."

RSC Chairman Open To Leaving Top Tax Rate Intact. In what Bloomberg News (10/23, Wasson) describes as "a boost" for House tax writers, Republican Study Committee Chairman Mark Walker said Monday that "he is open to tentative plans for keeping the current top individual tax rate for the highest earners as part of a tax code overhaul set to be released as soon as next week." In an interview, Walker "said he could live with taxing the highest earners at the current top rate of 39.6 percent if that's needed to get a tax bill enacted." he said, "A key thing is making sure this benefits the middle- and lower-income individuals."

House To Vote On Senate Budget Resolution Thursday.

Politico (10/23, Ferris) reports that the House is expected to vote Thursday to "back the Senate's budget resolution, fast-tracking the GOP's effort to advance a tax overhaul with a simple majority in the Senate." While the Senate version "is not as fiscally conservative" as the House plan, House Republicans "are expected to easily clear" it, which will "unlock the powerful legislative tool known as reconciliation, which replaces the Senate's 60-vote threshold with a simple majority in some circumstances."

Chao Says Infrastructure Plan Will Be Unveiled After Tax Reform.

Transport Topics (10/23, Mulero) reports that Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao said at the American Trucking Associations' annual conference that the Trump Administration will unveil its infrastructure funding proposal after Congress reforms the tax code. Chao said, "Originally we anticipated the administration's infrastructure proposal by late fall 2017, but the Affordable Health Care Act was delayed" and lawmakers are currently working on tax reform. In her speech, Chao touted the benefits of public-private partnerships, suggesting it "better protects the taxpayers by identifying and mitigating risk." She also praised the Trump Administration's efforts in streamlining environmental regulations.

Fleet Owner (10/23, Abt) reports that Chao "said 16 federal agencies were involved in crafting the [infrastructure funding] proposal, and that she had met numerous times with trucking industry officials." Chao also said she is working with FMCSA to address the driver shortage. In her speech, Chao also shared her experiences with the hurricane damage in Texas, Florida, and Puerto Rico.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Honor The Truth John Kelly." In an editorial, the New York Times (10/23) writes that a video of a 2015 dedication of an FBI building in Florida "showed that [Rep. Frederica] Wilson had made none of the string of boasts that [White House chief of staff] Kelly put in her mouth. ... In the days since, he and the White House have added to his mistakes by refusing to correct them. All evidence to the contrary, they have continued to insist on Mr. Kelly's false version, compounding the grief of the Johnson family."

"The Little Guys Win One On Payday Loans." In an editorial, the New York Times (10/23, New York (NY), Times) writes that a new Consumer Financial Protection Bureau rule that limits how often and how much customers can borrow using so-called payday loans offers a victory for those who face financial difficulties. The Times adds, however, that the payday industry is lobbying Congress to overturn the rule, and that the Administration also "could undermine the regulations after the bureau's director, Richard Cordray, leaves office or when his term expires next summer." The Times concludes that consumer advocates "need to remain vigilant" against such possibilities.

Washington Post.

"The Government's Grotesque Abuse Of Power Over A 17-Year-Old Seeking An Abortion." The Washington Post (10/23) editorializes about the case of the pregnant 17-year-old immigrant living in a Texas shelter for undocumented minors who is seeking an abortion, which the federal government refuses to allow. According to the Post, "under the directorship of E. Scott Lloyd, an antiabortion activist appointed by President Trump to lead the Department of Health and Human Services' Office of Refugee Resettlement, ORR began preventing federally funded shelters from 'facilitat[ing]' access to abortion services unless Mr. Lloyd approved." The girl "received a Texas judge's approval to receive an abortion," but "the government is preventing her from leaving the shelter to receive the procedure." The Post argues that "Lloyd's behavior toward" the girl is "a grotesque abuse of government power over a vulnerable young woman far from her home," and it contends the ORR "should allow her access to the medical care to which she is legally entitled, immediately."

"Kenya's Election Rerun Could Be A Major Setback For African Democracy." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/23) cautions Kenya is "in danger of violent implosion," and if President Uhuru Kenyatta insists on moving forward with a presidential election rerun on Thursday, "mass protests and bloodshed" could result. The Post says the Kenyan Supreme Court's decision to annul the initial election result "could have strengthened Kenya's institutions," had Kenyatta and his primary opponent, Raila Odinga, "not both played a spoiling role." The Post explains Kenyatta's "insistence on going forward with the vote on Thursday, instead of delaying it and encouraging reforms by the election commission," is "self-defeating," and his assured defeat of Odinga would only leave him "with a weakened domestic mandate and a lack of international credibility."

"Doug Jones For Senator In Alabama." In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/23) endorses former US Attorney Doug Jones in the Alabama Senate race to replace Attorney General Sessions, calling him "a well-qualified, even-tempered former prosecutor" and condemns Moore as "one of the most divisive, counterproductive figures in US politics."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Wages Of Corporate Taxes." A Wall Street Journal (10/23, Board) editorial assails economists on the left over their attacks on White House Council of Economic Advisers Chairman Kevin Hassett for presenting evidence that a cut in the corporate tax rate will benefit workers. The Journal suggests that the economists' criticisms may be due to the fact that their own policies to increase wages were unsuccessful.

"Rule And Law In Catalonia." A Wall Street Journal (10/23) editorial argues that Spanish Prime Minister Rajoy has little choice but to suspend Catalonia's regional authority and call elections. A new election, it says, offers Catalans a path out of the current crisis.

"Japan's Election Warning To China." The Wall Street Journal (10/23) editorializes that Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's ruling coalition performed better than expected in Sunday's election due in large part to the threat from North Korea. The Journal argues that without the threat, Abe would have lost his supermajority, and possibly the election.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Amazon Says 238 Places Want to Host Its New Headquarters
U.S. Revises Timeline on Niger Battle
Supersized Family Farms Are Gobbling Up American Agriculture
Ill-Timed Uber Investment Roils a Giant Saudi Fund

New York Times:

Cutting Taxes Is Hard. Trump Is Making It Harder.
What It Could Mean If China's Leader Won't Name An Heir
Russia's Favored Outlet Is An Online News Giant. YouTube Helped.
New York To Replace MetroCard With Modern Way To Pay Transit Fares

Washington Post:

Army Widow Says Call From Trump 'Made Me Cry'
Team In Niger Ambush Waited An Hour For Jets
Trump's Promises Narrow GOP's Tax Bill Options
Biggest Maria Relief Contract Goes To A Small Montana Firm
How Princeton Became Less Preppy

Financial Times:

Deripaska Heads For Russia's First London IPO Since 2014
Harvey Weinstein: How Lawyers Kept A Lid On Sexual Harassment Claims
Mexico's Former First Lady Offers Break From Corrupt Rule
Merkel's CDU Party Says €100bn Wishlist Poses Budget Threat

Washington Times:

Studies Reveal Power Of Liberal Bias Among Politically Active Internet Giants
With Islamic State Out Of Iraq, U.S. Loses Remarkably Unified Coalition
Illegal Immigrant Who Paved Way For Massachusetts' 'Sanctuary' Policy Arrested In Stunning Robbery
Trump Energy Policies Push Market Forces To Crush Coal Industry
New Jersey Governor Candidate Embraces Trump's Stance Against Sanctuary Cities
FBI Informant's Testimony Sought As Clinton-Russia Uranium Case Re-Emerges

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; White House-Niger US Casualty; Sen. McCain Interview; Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt; Severe Weather; Miami-Foiled Terror Attack; Bill O'Reilly-Sexual Harassment Settlement; Cleveland-Kidnapper Manhunt; College Football Hazing; Philadelphia-Officers Injured; Breast Cancer Genes; Medal Of Honor Recipient.
CBS: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; White House-Niger US Casualty; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Bill O'Reilly-Sexual Harassment Settlement; Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt; Medal Of Honor Recipient; California Fire-Marijuana Farms; Boston College Scholarship; Loretta Lynn Public Appearance; Former Presidents Public Appearance; JFK Files Declassification.
NBC: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; Tax Reform Plan-Impact; Bill O'Reilly-Sexual Harassment Settlement; Severe Weather; Border Wall Designs; Fire Fighters-Health Risks; Kidnapped US

Soldier Trial; JFK Files Declassification; LA-Baseball World Series; French Government Meeting-Dog Peeing; Texas High School Baseball; Medal Of Honor Recipient.

Network TV At A Glance:

Niger-US Casualty Investigation – 10 minutes
Bill O'Reilly-Sexual Harassment Settlement – 7 minutes, 40 seconds
Medal Of Honor Recipient – 6 minutes, 10 seconds
White House-Niger US Casualty – 5 minutes, 10 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; Tax Reform Bill; Vegetable Recall.
CBS: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; Kidnapped US Soldier Trial; Tax Reform Bill; Tampa-Serial Killer Manhunt.
FOX: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; Failed Detroit Terrorist Lawsuit; Relief Budget; Medal Of Honor Recipient.
NPR: Niger-US Casualty Investigation; LA-Baseball World Series; Japan-North Korea Warning; Trump-Asia Tour; Weinstein Sexual Harassment Scandal.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in the minority enterprise development week White House awards ceremony; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for Callista Gingrich as U.S. Ambassador to the Holy See; participates in a Senate Republican policy lunch.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers remarks to the American Enterprise Institute; joins the President to participate in a swearing-in ceremony for Callista Gingrich as U.S. Ambassador to the Holy See.

US Senate: 10:00 AM Senate Intelligence Committee holds hearing with President Trump's personal attorney invited to testify – Senate Select Committee on Intelligence holds hearing with Michael Cohen – personal attorney to President Donald Trump – having been invited to appear * Cohen was originally scheduled to speak with the committee in a closed interview, but defied committee requests to refrain from public comment and released a public statement, leading the committee to postpone the interview and reschedule his appearance in an open session Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

10:00 AM Senate Environment and Public Works Committee Business Meeting, legislative hearing – Business Meeting, with agenda including nominations of Michael Dourson, William Wehrum, Matthew Leopold, and David Ross to be Environmental Protection Agency Assistant Administrators; Paul Trombino III to be Federal Highway Administration Administrator; and Jeffery Baran to be a Nuclear Regulatory Commission member (reappointment) * Immediately followed by legislative hearing on 'S. XXXXXX, the Wildfire Prevention and Mitigation Act of 2017' Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 406, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'The Economic Outlook with CEA Chairman Kevin Hassett' Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.jec.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/JointEconCmte>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee top secret briefing on Nigeria – Africa and Global Health Policy Subcommittee closed / top secret briefing on 'Nigeria Security Update', given by Acting Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Donald Yamamoto; and State Department Regional and Arms Transfers Office Director Mike Miller Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC-217, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Commerce, Science, & Transportation Committee hearing on the commercial satellite industry – Hearing on 'The Commercial Satellite Industry: What's Up and What's on the Horizon', with testimony from SpaceX Vice President of Satellite Government Affairs Patricia Cooper; ViaSat CEO Mark Dankberg; Intelsat CEO Stephen Spengler; and OneWeb founder and Executive Chairman Greg Wyler Location: Rm 253, Russell Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

10:30 AM Senate Governmental Affairs Committee votes on nominees for OPM and GSA heads – Business Meeting, with agenda including consideration of nominations of Jeff Pon to be Office of Personnel Management Director, and Michael Rigas to be Deputy Director; and Emily Murphy to be General Services Administration Administrator Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 342, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

11:00 AM Congressional Gold Medal presented to Filipino WWII vets – House of Representatives and Senate leadership present a Congressional Gold Medal in honor of Filipino veterans of World War II, for their service and sacrifice during the war. Event participants include House Speaker Paul Ryan, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi * Congressional Gold Medal is the highest civilian honor Congress can bestow. A single medal has been struck to honor all the vets
Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, Emancipation Hall, Washington, DC
<http://speaker.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SpeakerRyan>

2:30 PM Senate Aging Committee hearing on working and aging with disabilities – Hearing on 'Working and Aging with Disabilities: From School to Retirement', with testimony from Indiana University Professor Emeritus Dr David Michael Mank; University of Illinois-Chicago Professor Dr Tamar Heller; Jeff Smith; and Spurwink President and CEO Eric Meyer Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 562, Washington, DC <http://aging.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Senate Indian Affairs Committee legislative hearing – Legislative hearing on 'S. 1870, the Securing Urgent Resources Vital to Indian Victim Empowerment Act 2017', 'S. 1953, the Reauthorization of the Tribal and Law Order Act of 2010', and 'S. 1942, a bill to direct the AG to review, revise and develop law enforcement and justice protocols appropriate to address missing and murdered Indians' Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 628, Washington, DC <http://indian.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/IndianCommittee>

US House: 9:30 AM POSTPONED: House Natural Resources Committee oversight hearing on Puerto Rico recovery – POSTPONED: Oversight hearing on 'Examining Challenges in Puerto Rico's Recovery and the Role of the Financial Oversight and Management Board' Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1324, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Science, Space, and Technology subcommittees joint hearing on quantum technology – Energy Subcommittee and Research and Technology Subcommittee joint hearing on 'American Leadership in Quantum Technology', with testimony from National Institute of Standards and Technology Physical Measurement Laboratory Acting Director Dr Carl Williams; National Science Foundation Assistant Director of Computer and Information Science and Engineering Dr Jim Kurose; Department of Energy Acting Director of Science Dr John Stephen Binkley; IBM Systems Group Vice President and CTO for Quantum Computing Dr Scott Crowder; University of Maryland Department of Physics Professor Dr Christopher Monroe; and Argonne National Laboratory Nanoscience and Technology Division Director Dr Supratik Guha Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2318, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM POSTPONED: House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on cybersecurity – POSTPONED: Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security, and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on 'Cybersecurity and the Law: Protecting Consumers in the Digital Age' Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM House Financial Services subcommittee hearing on the federal gov't's role in the insurance industry – Housing and Insurance Subcommittee hearing on 'The Federal Government's Role in the Insurance Industry', with testimony from Germania Insurance President Paul Ehlhert; University of Minnesota Law School Professor Daniel Shwarcz; Shelter Insurance Companies President and CEO Rick Means; and Connecticut Insurance Department Commissioner Katharine Wade (on behalf of National Association of Insurance Commissioners) Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM House Commerce subcommittee hearing on HHS response to the 2017 hurricane season – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on 'Examining HHS's Public Health Preparedness for and Response to the 2017 Hurricane Season', with testimony from Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Principal Deputy Administrator for Operations Kimberly Brandt; Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Scott Gottlieb; Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Preparedness and Response Robert Kadlec; and CDC Office of Public Health Preparedness and Response Director Rear Adm. Stephen Redd Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Appropriations subcommittee oversight hearing on supporting NIH-funded research – Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee oversight hearing on 'The Role of Facilities and Administrative Costs in Supporting NIH-Funded Research', with testimony from University of Oklahoma Vice President for Research Dr Kelvin

Droegemeier; Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center President and Director Dr Gary Gilliland; University of Connecticut School of Medicine Dean Dr Bruce Liang; and University of California-San Francisco Vice Chancellor for Science Policy and Strategy Dr Keith Yamamoto Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2358-C, Washington, DC <http://appropriations.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAppropsGOP>

10:00 AM House Government Reform subcommittees joint hearing on Regulatory Reform Task Forces – Health Care, Benefits, and Administrative Rules Subcommittee and Government Operations Subcommittee joint hearing on 'Regulatory Reform Task Forces Check-In' Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

10:00 AM Democratic Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton hosts roundtable discussion on near-term and long-term risks of flooding in Washington, DC Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2253, Washington, DC www.norton.house.gov <https://twitter.com/EleanorNorton>

10:00 AM Markup hearing on 'H.R. X, Agricultural Guestworker Act' and 'H.R. 3711, Legal Workforce Act' Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

10:00 AM Democratic Rep. Nydia Velazquez hosts reception having proposed WWII rabbi for Congressional Gold Medal – Democratic Rep. Nydia Velazquez hosts reception to better acquaint her Congressional colleagues with the activities of Rabbi Michoel Ber Weissmandl, having co-sponsored a bill to posthumously award him the 2017 Congressional Gold Medal in recognition of his acts of valor during World War II in attempting to save Eastern European Jews during the Holocaust. Amud Aish Memorial Museum representatives and other advocates also attend, with artifacts and documents on display Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2360, Washington, DC www.house.gov/velazquez <https://twitter.com/NydiaVelazquez>

10:00 AM House Veterans' Affairs Committee legislative hearing – Legislative hearing, on 'draft legislation related to the Veterans Choice Program', 'draft legislation to modify VA's authority to enter into agreements with state homes to provide nursing home care to veterans, to direct the Secretary to carry out a program to increase the number of graduate medical education residency positions, and for other purposes', 'draft legislation to direct VA to conduct a study of the Veterans Crisis Line', 'draft legislation to direct VA to furnish mental health care to veterans at community or non-profit mental health providers participating in the Veterans Choice Program', 'The Department of Veterans Affairs' legislative proposal – the Veteran Coordinated Access and Rewarding Experiences (CARE) Act', 'H.R. 1133: Veterans Transplant Coverage Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2123: VETS Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2601: VICTOR Act of 2017', and 'H.R. 3642: Military SAVE Act' Location: Cannon House Office Building, Rm 334, Washington, DC <http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including 'H.R. 732 – Stop Settlement Slush Funds Act of 2017', and consideration of 'H.R. 3101 – Strengthening Cybersecurity Information Sharing and Coordination in Our Ports Act of 2017', as amended, 'H.R. 3972 – Family Office Technical Correction Act of 2017', as amended, and 'H.R. 3898 – Impeding North Korea's Access to Finance Act of 2017', as amended under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

12:00 PM Congressional Task Force on Election Security second public forum – Congressional Task Force on Election Security holds its second public forum, 'Securing America's Elections: Preparing for 2018 and Beyond', hearing from Rhode Island Secretary of State Nellie Gorbea, Virginia Department of Elections Commissioner Edgardo Cortes, and Election Assistance Commission Commissioner and Vice-Chair Thomas Hicks on steps states are taking to secure their elections and what the federal govt can do to do assist * Task Force was created to address 'the lack of action to protect electoral infrastructure following Russia interfering and attempting to influence the 2016 presidential election', and is chaired by House Committee on Homeland Security Ranking Member Bennie Thompson and Committee on House Administration Ranking Member Robert Brady Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1310, Washington, DC democrats-homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HomelandDems>

12:00 PM Dem Rep. Adriano Espaillat domestic violence awareness press conference – Democratic Rep. Adriano Espaillat holds domestic violence awareness press conference, to address initiatives to help support victims of domestic violence in communities around the nation. New York Latinas Against Domestic Violence participate as part of their annual 'Brides' vigil in honor of murdered New York bride-to-be Gladys Ricart, a victim of domestic violence who lost her life on her wedding day Location: House Triangle, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC espaillat.house.gov <https://twitter.com/espaillatny>

1:00 PM Dem Rep. Don Beyer hosts Half-Earth Day celebration – Democratic Rep. Don Beyer hosts celebration of Half-Earth Day, including a conversation on saving the nation's biodiversity with biologist Edward Wilson, and discussion on how wildlife corridors and other policies can protect the nation's wild creatures and places with Democratic Reps. Tom Udall, Raul Grijalva, and Alan Lowenthal and former National Park Service Director Robert Stanton Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, Congressional Auditorium and Atrium, Washington, DC beyer.house.gov/ <https://twitter.com/RepDonBeyer>

2:00 PM House Education and the Workforce / Homeland Security subcommittees joint hearing on educating a cyber workforce – House Committee on Education and the Workforce Higher Education and Workforce Development Subcommittee and House Committee on Homeland Security Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Protection Subcommittee joint hearing on 'Public-Private Solutions to Educating a Cyber Workforce' Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC <http://edworkforce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/EdWorkforce>

2:00 PM House Oversight subcommittee hearing on political advertisement laws – Information Technology Subcommittee hearing on 'Oversight of Federal Political Advertisement Laws and Regulations', with testimony from Center for Competitive Politics Legal Director Allen Dickerson; News Media Alliance President and CEO David Chavern; Law Offices of Jack N. Goodman owner Jack Goodman; Interactive Advertising Bureau President and CEO Randall Rothenberg; and Brennan Center for Justice Democracy Program Senior Counsel Ian Vandewalker Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

3:00 PM House Rules Committee emergency hearing – Emergency hearing on Senate Amendment to 'H. Con. Res. 71 – Concurrent resolution establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2018 and setting forth the appropriate budgetary levels for fiscal years 2019 through 2027' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC
<http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

3:00 PM Dem Reps. Don Beyer and Carolyn Maloney hold Gender Parity Forum – Democratic Reps. Don Beyer and Carolyn Maloney hold Forum on Gender Parity in Corporate Leadership, with Paradigm for Parity Founding Member Candace Duncan, Serena Fong (Catalyst), Kiersten Barnett (30 Percent Club), and Kymberlee Dwinell (Northrop Grumman) Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1539, Washington, DC beyer.house.gov/
<https://twitter.com/RepDonBeyer>

4:00 PM Office of the House Majority Whip holds its latest members-only briefing on tax reform, on corporate/international taxation Location: U.S. Capitol, HC-5, Washington, DC
<http://majoritywhip.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SteveScalise>

6:30 PM Lifetime hosts Capitol Hill screening of new TV movie about the Flint, MI, water crisis – Lifetime and Democratic Rep. Dan Kildee host viewing of new TV movie 'Flint' followed by panel discussion, attended by actress Betsy Brandt, Flint activists Melissa Mays and Nayyirah Shariff, executive producers Craig Zadan and Neil Meron, Rep. Kildee, and Democratic Rep. Keith Ellison * Movie was inspired by the Time magazine cover story 'The Toxic Tap', and follows the true story of three women from Flint, MI, who sought justice following the wrongdoing committed against the residents of the city who were unknowingly drinking and using lead-laden water Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, CVC Congressional Auditorium, Washington, DC Flint
<http://www.mylifetime.com/> <https://twitter.com/lifetimetv>

Other: 8:00 AM Bill Clinton keynotes SAP NS2 Solutions Summit – SAP NS2 Solutions Summit, themed 'Discover Real-Time Context, for Real-World Security Decisions', examining 'how emerging technology like machine learning can add unprecedented depth and context to data, turning information into understanding and providing us with the picture needed to decide and act in the moment of truth'. Keynote speaker is former President Bill Clinton Location: Falls Church Marriott Fairview Park, 3111 Fairview Park Drive, Falls Church, VA summit17.sapns2.com
<https://twitter.com/SAPNS2>

8:00 AM Bipartisan Reps. Katherine Clark and Markwayne Mullin speak at The Hill event on 'America's Opioid Epidemic' – The Hill hosts 'America's Opioid Epidemic: Aging & Addiction', to discuss the impact of opioid abuse in older adults. Headline conversations feature Democratic Rep. Katherine Clark and Republican Rep. Markwayne Mullin who review strategies 'to fight the opioid epidemic and deliver effective care for America's seniors.' Other speakers include Health and Human Services Deputy Inspector General for Investigations Gary Cantrell and Assistant Inspector General for Evaluations Ann Maxwell Location: Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, Washington, DC thehill.com <https://twitter.com/TheHillEvents> #Genes4Medicine

10:30 AM GOP Sen. David Perdue speaks on tax reform at Heritage Foundation – ‘The Business Perspective and Cost of Doing Nothing on Tax Reform’ Heritage Foundation panel discussion, on corporate tax reform proposals and the ‘significant benefits they will have on American workers and the economy’. Speakers include Republican Sen. David Perdue, and Business Roundtable President and CEO Joshua Bolten Location: Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington, DC www.heritage.org <https://twitter.com/Heritage>

12:00 PM Dem Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse speaks on climate change at New America – ‘As the Waters Come, Will Our Politics Rise to the Challenge?’ Future Tense book discussion, on Jeff Goodell’s book, ‘The Water Will Come: Rising Seas, Sinking Cities, and the Remaking of the Civilized World’. Event also features discussion on what Congress can do to ‘bridge the political divide to take action to guard the future against climate change’. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, and Rolling Stone Contributing Editor and author Jeff Goodell Location: New America, 740 15th St NW, Washington, DC <http://www.newamerica.org/> <https://twitter.com/NewAmerica>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “President Trump is planning to release a treasure trove, thousands of classified documents connected to the assassination of John F. Kennedy. And he said, ‘Will you release me too?’ ... This is a bombshell. The real killer is not Lee Harvey Oswald. It was a 16-year-old Hillary Clinton. Isn’t that something? The White House released a statement saying the President believes the documents should be made available in the interest of full transparency. And his tax returns, however, will remain secret forever, no matter what.”

Stephen Colbert: “This weekend, five former Presidents teamed up at a benefit to raise money for hurricane relief. ... President Trump couldn’t be there to help the victims of flooding because, and this is true, he was working on his own water hazards.”

Stephen Colbert: “Of course, Trump’s tweet that he would release the JFK files came right during the whole Gold Star family controversy. People say it might have been for a distraction or something like that. So now when Trump feels cornered, he’ll just declassify America’s biggest secrets. ‘Robert Muller is presenting the findings of the Russia investigation on Tuesday ... the same day I am giving away an alien plasma cannon from Area 51! Tenth caller wins!’”

James Corden: “Sen. John McCain appeared to take a swipe at Donald Trump’s lack of military service. He said that during the Vietnam War, a lot of rich people got out of the draft by claiming they had bone spurs. Now, as you may know, Donald Trump famously got out of service in Vietnam due to bone spurs. If you don’t know what bone spurs are, don’t worry, Donald Trump doesn’t know either. But seriously, bone spurs can make walking very difficult, unless you carry a bag of golf clubs, apparently. Then it’s fine.”

James Corden: “Did you guys see this conspiracy theory that was going around the internet last week? People claim that Melania Trump had a body double impersonate her during an appearance with her husband. And if you think that is weird, Donald Trump has been impersonating a President for almost a year.”

Trevor Noah: “What do you think Bush said to Obama that made him laugh so hard? I have been thinking about this the whole day. If he said one thing, what if he just leaned in, he was like, ‘Guess what, I did 9/11.’ And then Obama is like, ‘Well, I was born in Kenya.’”

Trevor Noah: “I am blown away by the fact that Bill O’Reilly had to pay one woman $32 million, one woman. And by the way, this is from his own money. Now I understand why he cranks out so many books – ‘Killing Kennedy,’ ‘Killing Jesus,’ ‘Killing Patton.’ He needed the extra cash. I should have known something was wrong when he published ‘Killing Big Bird.’”

Seth Meyers: “All five living former Presidents attended a benefit concert in Texas on Saturday to help raise money for hurricane victims. The only way it could have been better is if there had been six former Presidents.”

Seth Meyers: "First Lady Melania Trump visited a middle school in Detroit today where she began her anti-bullying campaign by speaking to the students and joining them for lunch. Meanwhile, Donald Trump had lunch in the White House cafeteria and clapped when someone dropped their tray."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump is going to Japan to meet with the prime minister and may play a round of golf. Or as Trump put it, he's going to Japan to play a round of golf and he may meet with the prime minister. He's got priorities."

Conan O'Brien: "Trump announced over the weekend that he will release over 3,000 classified files relating to the Kennedy assassination. Spoiler alert: Apparently Hillary did it."

Conan O'Brien: "The latest rumor in Washington is that Trump is looking for a replacement for Secretary of State Rex Tillerson. After hearing the job entails constant trips out of the country, Melania volunteered."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, October 31, 2017
Date: Tuesday, October 31, 2017 6:31:49 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2017 6:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Politico: Watchdog Urges Probe Of Whether Zinke Campaign Benefited Friend, Family.
- Wall Street Journal: FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract.
- Augusta (VA) Free Press: Kaine, Colleagues Urge Trump To Rescind Proposed National Park Fee Increase.
- Bloomberg News: Sportsmen Oppose Trump's Plan to Rescind Monuments: Fosburgh.
- New York Times: Loss Of Federal Protections May Imperil Pacific Reefs, Scientists Warn.
- The Hill: GOP In Uncharted Territory Rolling Back Rules Through Resolutions.
- Palm Beach (FL) Post: Gov. Scott Proposes Additional $50 Million For Lake O Dike.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Life And Death At Chemawa Indian School.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Judge In Vegas Says 4 Month Trial Expected In Bundy Standoff.
- E&E Publishing: Industry Asks Court To Block BLM Methane Rule Enforcement.
- Albuquerque (NM) Journal: National Organization Calls For Protecting Chaco Area.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Longtime Ally Of Offshore Drillers Oversees Safety Agency.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Bloomberg News: Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely To Be Bust For GOP Budget.
- U.S. News & World Report: Louisiana Could Be Key To Bat Survival Of White-Nose Fungus.
- Outer Banks (NC) Voice: Burr Tunes In To Problems At Mattamuskeet, Surrounding Hyde.
- Natural Gas Intelligence: FERC Gives Millennium Permission To Begin Constructing Valley Lateral Project.
- Natural Gas Intelligence: Atlantic Coast Pipeline To Have All State Permits By Mid-December, Dominion Says.
- Eastern Arizona Courier: Leopard Frog Population Bolstered In ASNF.
- Stockton (CA) Record: Fish Out Of (Normal) Water: Rare Sturgeon Seen In Stanislaus River.
- U.S. News & World Report: US Officials: Man Fined For Mailing Live Snakes To China.

National Park Service

- Associated Press: Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins On Halloween Eve.
- U.S. News & World Report: Park Service Drops Funding For Black Panther Party Project.
- Marquette (MI) Mining Journal: Horne Selected As Superintendent Of Pictured Rocks.
- Hagerstown (MD) Herald-Mail Media: Antietam National Battlefield Sees Record Crowds This Year.
- Madison (WI) Capital Times: Conservation Group Appeals Federal Ruling In Sauk Prairie Recreation Area Lawsuit.
- WTKR-TV Norfolk (VA): Cape Hatteras Fishing Pier To Be Removed In December.
- U.S. News & World Report: Century-Old Edgemont Home Listed In National Register.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Virgin Islands Daily News: Mapp Applauds Federal Relief Efforts, Defends Funding Request.
- Caribbean News Now!: US Senator Calls For Federal Assistance To Rebuild A More Resilient Puerto Rico And USVI.
- Guam Daily Post: Congress To Hold Hearing On Veterans' Health Care Issues.
- Marianas Variety: Trump Administration Looking Into CW Issue.
- Focus Taiwan: President Arrives In Marshall Islands As Part Of Pacific Trip.
- Focus Taiwan: Taiwan, Marshall Islands Sign Health Care Agreement.
- Radio New Zealand: Taiwanese Vessel Seized In Pacific Fisheries Surveillance Op.

US Geological Survey

- Missoulian (MT): Grizzly Roadmap: Studies Show Grizzlies Finding Their Way Around People.
- The Next Web: US Geological Survey Portal Is Like Google Maps For Rock Lovers.
- Additional Reading.

Dept. Of Interior Op/Eds & Editorials

- Trump's Energy Deregulation Head-Fake.
- In The Midst Of A Natural Paradise, A Deserted Federal School Fails Children.
- Finding A Method To The Methane Madness.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- ABC: Media Analyses: Papadopoulos Plea, First Indictments Signal Wide-Ranging Probe By Mueller.
- Reuters: Trump, Abe Agree To Work Together On North Korea.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Is The White House Scared Yet?"
- Washington Post.
 - "These Republicans Used To Pretend To Care About Debt. Not Anymore."
 - "Uzbekistan's New President Tiptoes Toward Liberalization."
 - "What A Presidential President Would Have Said About Mueller's Indictments."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Manafort Indictment."
 - "Europe Beats America."
 - "About That ObamaCare 'Sabotage.'"

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Watchdog Urges Probe Of Whether Zinke Campaign Benefited Friend, Family.

Politico (10/30, Whieldon) reports that the Campaign Legal Center, a watchdog group, has called for an FEC investigation into expenditures by "Ryan Zinke's congressional campaign committee." The group alleges that Zinke's committee "bought an RV from his wife then sold it to a friend a year later at a steep discount" in an effort "to convert political donations into personal cash." The group's complaint theorizes that the transaction may have violated federal law forbidding "using political donations for personal benefit in one of two ways:" The campaign may have overpaid for the RV when it was purchased from his wife in April 2016 for $59,100, or it may have accepted below-market payment from Zinke's friend when he purchased the RV for $25,000 in June 2017.

The AP (10/30, Brown) reports that "Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift – who was also Zinke's spokeswoman during the 2016 campaign – said the department cannot weigh in on political matters and declined further comment."

Also reporting are the Washington Examiner (10/30, Siegel) and Newsmax (10/30, Crowe).

FBI Is Probing Puerto Rico Power Contract.

The Wall Street Journal (10/30, Scurria) reports that the FBI is investigating PREPA's decision to award the contract to Whitefish Energy. Citing the Wall Street Journal report, the New York Times (10/30, Robles, Cumming-Bruce) says the FBI's San Juan field office is "looking into circumstances surrounding the disaster-recovery deal." In addition, a House committee is investigating and Rossello "has asked the island's comptroller and the inspector general of the Department of Homeland Security to also review the deal." USA Today (10/30, Gomez, Jervis) also mentions the FBI investigation, citing the Wall Street Journal report. On its website, CNN (10/30, Marsh, Wallace) cites "a source with knowledge of the inquiry" who said the FBI has opened a preliminary inquiry into the contract.

Also reporting are Reuters (10/30, Paul), the Washington Examiner (10/30, Siciliano), and The Guardian \(UK\) (10/30, Milman).

Whitefish Energy Hires Lobbyist Amid Puerto Rico Scrutiny. The Hill (10/30, Cama) reports Whitefish Energy has hired former Democratic congressman Dennis Cardoza, who is currently a federal lobbyist, "to represent it amid growing scrutiny of its hurricane recovery contract with Puerto Rico's electric utility." Cardoza, "works for the law and lobbying firm Foley & Lardner." In a statement of Whitefish spokesman Ken Luce said, "Right now the effort by Foley is being done so that Whitefish has representation in DC. ... Whitefish Energy has a reputation to uphold and we felt that Foley would help us in being able to have those conversations in a productive manner."

Politico (10/30, Lefebvre) reports "the law firm has advised Whitefish Energy on contract issues in the past, Cardoza said, but declined to say exactly when that business relationship began."

Kaine, Colleagues Urge Trump To Rescind Proposed National Park Fee Increase.

The Augusta \(VA\) Free Press (10/30) reports that Sen. Tim Kaine joined Sen. Maria Cantwell “and nine other colleagues in a letter to Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke requesting he withdraw his proposal to dramatically increase national park entrance fees at 17 national parks pending further review.” The senators wrote, “The National Park Service describes the fee increases ‘as part of its commitment to improve the visitor experience...’ We are unable to see how doubling or tripling a park entrance fee is anything other than an effort to exclude many Americans from enjoying their national parks. This proposal seems directly contrary to your often-stated goal of improving public access to our public lands.” They concluded, “We request that you provide us with the analysis and justification used to establish the proposed park entrance fees to allow Congress to assess the rationale and need for any fee increase. Pending this review, we ask you to withdraw the proposed park fee increases and work to support a strong National Park Service budget that will ensure that all Americans have affordable access to their parks.”

Additional coverage of the proposal was provided by the New York Times (10/31, Clarke).

Sportsmen Oppose Trump’s Plan to Rescind Monuments: Fosburgh.

Bloomberg News (10/30) published an interview with Whit Fosburgh, president and CEO of the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership. Fosburgh talked about the moves by the Interior Department “to open up national lands and monuments for commercial development.”

In an article titled “Conservative Hunters & Fishers May Help Determine The Fate Of National Monuments,” the Scientific American (10/30, Sneed) reports that “hunting and fishing groups have become increasingly politically active in recent years—an important development, since many of their members make up a significant part of the Republican base.” And “now that Republicans control Congress and the White House, hunting and fishing enthusiasts’ ideas about conservation may start to shape environmental policy more than in the past.”

Loss Of Federal Protections May Imperil Pacific Reefs, Scientists Warn.

The New York Times (10/30, Pala) reports the opinion of scientists studying “underwater mountains called seamounts in the middle of the Pacific Ocean” that the Trump Administration should not allow fishing in the remaining seamounts that are still under federal protection, as it has been considering doing. Dr. Daniel Pauly, a “fisheries scientist at the University of British Columbia,” said that “the only thing standing between these fleets and global depletion are these big no-take reserves, so this is the time to create more, not to open up the existing ones to fishing.” Paul Achitoff, “managing attorney for Earthjustice’s mid-Pacific office in Honolulu,” said that if “any of the protections to the Pacific marine monuments are lifted, we will be filing lawsuits, and we expect to win,” based on the theory that the Antiquities Act does not let presidents remove “protections from a previously designated monument.”

GOP In Uncharted Territory Rolling Back Rules Through Resolutions.

The Hill (10/29, Wheeler) reports that Republicans “are hoping to slam the door on future regulatory actions in an unprecedented campaign against federal regulations that could have an impact for years to come.” The use of the Congressional Review Act “is uncharted territory,” and some analysts believe that even the Republicans using the law are unclear about what it actually sets out to do. “What’s interesting is that regulatory experts say the CRA could extend to regulatory guidance in addition to rules.”

Gov. Scott Proposes Additional $50 Million For Lake O Dike.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (10/30, Miller) reports that Florida Gov. Rick Scott is “proposing an additional $50 million to expedite repairs to the Herbert Hoover Dike that surrounds Lake Okeechobee.” Scott “said the $50 million is part of his 2018-2019 recommended budget and is on top of the $50 million approved in the current year’s budget to kick-start repairs.” Last week, President Trump “pledged to speed up repairs to the dike.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Life And Death At Chemawa Indian School.

In the first part of a series on problems at Chemawa Indian School, KUOW-FM Seattle (10/30) reports that “based on dozens of interviews with former staff, students, tribal advisors and parents, Chemawa is breaking its promise to support and educate Native students.” According to the article, "for years, teachers complained about students being expelled for questionable causes, jeopardizing their education or sending them to unstable situations when they were safer on campus." Meanwhile, the article says, "others who remained at the school fell into cracks in the system as their physical and mental health deteriorated."

Bureau Of Land Management

Judge In Vegas Says 4 Month Trial Expected In Bundy Standoff.

The AP (10/30, Ritter) reports that Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro said the "trial could take four months for Nevada rancher and states' rights figure Cliven Bundy, his two sons and one other co-defendant accused of leading a self-styled militia to prevent federal agents from removing Bundy cattle from public rangeland." Navarro said "jury selection alone could take several days." The AP also reports that "court proceedings began with security exceptionally tight inside the federal courthouse in Las Vegas, and in the courtroom where observers are banned from having electronic devices including cellphones."

The Oregonian (10/30, Bernstein) reports from Las Vegas that the federal trial "began Monday with prosecutors and defense lawyers questioning potential jurors about their beliefs on guns, protests, the government, ranching and the impact of the Oct. 1 mass shooting." Ryan Bundy, "representing himself, had his leg shackles removed and then posed his own questions from a podium before a group of nearly 50 potential jurors." The Oregonian points out that "prosecutors waited almost two years before indicting the men in the Bunkerville standoff. The charges followed the Jan. 26, 2016, arrests of Ammon Bundy and Ryan Bundy in Oregon as organizers of the armed occupation of the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge." The Oregonian notes that last year, Ammon and Ryan Bundy and five others "were found not guilty of a federal conspiracy in the refuge takeover, a remarkable blow to the federal government."

Also reporting are the Washington Times (10/30, Richardson), the Los Angeles Times (10/30, Montero), Reuters (10/30, Smith), NPR (10/30, Siegler), NPR (10/30, Siegler), and KSNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (10/30, Rosch).

Industry Asks Court To Block BLM Methane Rule Enforcement.

E&E Publishing (10/30, Gilmer) reports that Independent Petroleum Association of America and Western Energy Alliance requested that a US District Court to grant a preliminary injunction blocking the Bureau of Land Management from applying and enforcing the Methane and Waste Prevention Rule on Friday. The effort is the most recent among other attempts to right the Obama-era methane rule. E&E Publishing adds that "Judge Scott Skavdahl rejected their request, finding that the groups had not shown they would face imminent irreparable harm because restrictions were phased in over time."

Additional coverage was provided by the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (10/30, Richards).

National Organization Calls For Protecting Chaco Area.

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/30, Smith) reports that "citing the need to preserve cultural properties and sacred sites from oil and gas drilling, the National Congress of American Indians has called for a moratorium on leasing and permitting in the greater Chaco area." The organization "issued its stance due to the significance of the area to tribes and pueblos, in addition to protecting the region's night skies, soundscapes and views." The organization is also urging the Interior Department "and its agencies to cooperate on the management of a protection zone and conduct government-to-government consultation with tribes and pueblos."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Longtime Ally Of Offshore Drillers Oversees Safety Agency.

The Wall Street Journal (10/30, B1, Mann) reports that Scott Angelle, the new head of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, is a longtime ally of the oil industry who wants to make rehabilitating relations with drillers part of his new duties. Angelle wants to reverse parts of the well-control rule, a regulatory change BSEE made to respond to Deepwater Horizon. Angelle's new approach to leading the Bureau has garnered support from oil industry representatives.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Arctic Refuge Oil Bonanza More Likely To Be Bust For GOP Budget.

Bloomberg News (10/31, Nussbaum) reports that “Congressional Republicans counting on a $1 billion windfall from selling oil-drilling rights in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to help pay for tax cuts may be in for a disappointment.” According to the article, “data from previous Arctic oil lease sales suggest the U.S. is likely to collect less than a fifth of that billion-dollar goal over the next decade-- about $145.5 million – from auctioning off territory in the sprawling northeast Alaska refuge where caribou calves and polar bears roam.” Oil firms may be driven “away by the controversies and costs of drilling in that remote and fragile terrain,” and “even if they aren’t, crude prices would have to be some $15 more per barrel than they are today to make the effort pay off at all.”

Louisiana Could Be Key To Bat Survival Of White-Nose Fungus.

The AP (10/30, Hardy) reports that white nose syndrome has “ravaged populations” of bats “across the eastern half of North America, but Louisiana could hold the key to keeping species alive.” According to the article, “Louisiana’s warm climate and lack of rock caves is giving scientists hope that the state’s particular ecosystem could shelter species that are dying out elsewhere.” Jeremy Coleman, the national white nose coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said in a written statement, “We are disappointed to find white-nose syndrome in another species, but hopeful that the southeastern bat may fare better than many of its more northern cousins based on how long it took to be diagnosed with the disease.”

Additional coverage was provided by Popular Science.

Burr Tunes In To Problems At Mattamuskeet, Surrounding Hyde.

The Outer Banks \(NC\) Voice (10/30, Kozak) reports that Sen. Richard Burr recently heard Hyde County’s “concerns about federal support for flood mitigation, hurricane recovery and restoration of Lake Mattamuskeet’s watershed and lodge.” According to the article “the state’s largest natural lake has drawn concern, with duck hunters and other users accusing the refuge of mismanaging water levels to the detriment of waterfowl populations.” Meanwhile, “the refuge has struggled to restore water quality and seagrasses suffering from pollution.”

FERC Gives Millennium Permission To Begin Constructing Valley Lateral Project.

Natural Gas Intelligence (10/30, Passut) reports that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission granted Millennium Pipeline Co. LLC the permission to start the Valley Lateral Project construction despite the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation’s (DEC) objections to the project. The DEC expressed concern over the project as it relates to impacts on the bog turtle. However, the FERC order said that Millennium submitted bog turtle survey reports to the DEC and have not gotten a response.

Atlantic Coast Pipeline To Have All State Permits By Mid-December, Dominion Says.

Natural Gas Intelligence (10/30, Shelor) reports Dominion Energy said Monday that it expects to have “all necessary state approvals” for the Atlantic Coast Pipeline by mid-December following the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission’s recent approval of the project, “despite pushback from project opponents.” Dominion Energy President, Chairman, and CEO Thomas F. Farrell II said, “We need permits in West Virginia and North Carolina and Virginia. We expect all those by the middle part of December as we’re going through the process.” Farrell also said that Dominion Energy Cove Point has “entered the final phase of start-up” for its LNG export terminal. Farrell said, “We will begin generating LNG next month, then conclude commissioning in December, and we expect to be in service by the end of the year.”

Leopard Frog Population Bolstered In ASNF.

The Eastern Arizona Courier (10/30) reports that “Chiricahua leopard frogs received extra help getting the hop on avoiding extinction after 454 of the threatened species were recently released into restored habitat on the Clifton Ranger District on the Apache-Sitgreaves National Forest.” The frogs were “released under a partnership of the Arizona Game and Fish Department, Arizona Center for Nature Conservation-Phoenix Zoo, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management New Mexico, U.S. Forest Service, USDA Agricultural Research Service Jornada Experimental Range, Turner Endangered Species Fund and the New Mexico Game and Fish Department.” Game and Fish biologist Audrey Owens said, “This project is a huge success toward safeguarding this species for future generations. The Chiricahua leopard frog nearly vanished from eastern Arizona due to habitat degradation, but these dedicated agencies and local ranchers each worked collaboratively to help restore wetland habitats in 2016. This important work has given this animal a true fighting chance.”

Fish Out Of (Normal) Water: Rare Sturgeon Seen In Stanislaus River.

The Stockton \(CA\) Record (10/30, Breitler) reports that “biologists have confirmed the presence of a green sturgeon – a threatened species under the federal Endangered Species Act – in the Stanislaus River near Knights Ferry.” The fish are “known to migrate and spawn in the Sacramento and Feather rivers, but this is the first time one of the bony, pointy-nosed bottom-dwellers has been confirmed in the more polluted and heavily diverted San Joaquin River region upstream of Stockton.” Laura Heironimus, a biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Lodi, said, “We’ve never seen a green sturgeon (in that area), and it’s not like we don’t try. This is really exciting.”

US Officials: Man Fined For Mailing Live Snakes To China.

The AP (10/30) reports that “federal prosecutors in western New York say a 28-year-old man has been fined $5,000 for mailing live snakes to China.” According to the U.S. attorney’s office in Buffalo, “Chaoyi Le, of Shanghai, China, sent seven ball pythons from Amherst, New York to China in 2014 using a fake name and labeling the package ‘belts, candy and chocolate.’” The package was intercepted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

National Park Service

Trump, First Lady Welcome Ghosts, Goblins On Halloween Eve.

The AP (10/30, Superville) reports the President and First Lady “greeted some of the 6,000 children and adults who were invited for trick-or-treating at the White House on Halloween eve.” The Trumps chatted with the trick-or-treaters while President Trump sometimes went in for high-fives or posed for pictures. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders made an appearance with her family, and several Cabinet members, including Education Secretary DeVos and VA Secretary Shulkin, appeared in costume. Additional coverage is provided by the New York Post (10/30, Fredericks).

Park Service Drops Funding For Black Panther Party Project.

The AP (10/30, Daly) reports that the National Park Service has “withdrawn plans to pay nearly $100,000 for a project honoring the legacy of the Black Panther Party after police groups complained to President Donald Trump.” The NPS “had pledged $98,000 to the University of California, Berkeley for a two-year research project on the black power group, which was founded in Oakland in 1966.” The Fraternal Order of Police “sent a letter to Trump expressing ‘outrage and shock’ that the park service would pay to honor a group associated with killing a park ranger.” NPS spokesman Jeremy Barnum “said Monday that a ‘cooperative agreement’ to fund the project was not finalized, and the agency withdrew funding ‘after an additional review of the project.’”

Horne Selected As Superintendent Of Pictured Rocks.

The Marquette \(MI\) Mining Journal (10/30) reports that David Horne will be the next superintendent of Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore. Horne is “a 23-year veteran of the National Park Service and currently the chief ranger for the Southeast Region of the National Park Service.” He will begin his new post in January.

Antietam National Battlefield Sees Record Crowds This Year.

The Hagerstown \(MD\) Herald-Mail Media (10/30, Greenfield) reports that “as the 155th anniversary of the Battle of Antietam winds down this year, visits to the Sharpsburg battlefield are up 5 to 10 percent in 2017 over 2016.” The Antietam Battlefield Advisory Committee “reported that not only are more people visiting the park, but the 26 volunteer tour guides have led more than 900 tours this year.” According to Battlefield Superintendent Susan Trail, “that number will likely jump to 1,000 by the end of the year.” She said, “We’re on target to break that record.”

Conservation Group Appeals Federal Ruling In Sauk Prairie Recreation Area Lawsuit.

The Madison \(WI\) Capital Times (10/30, Prinsen) reports that “a local conservation group is appealing a federal judge's decision to allow 'high-impact' recreation at the Sauk Prairie Recreation Area while its lawsuits challenging state and federal agencies' management of the property are pending." Sauk Prairie Conservation Alliance lawyers will "argue before the U.S. Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago on Nov. 9 that off-road motorcycle racing, dog training with firearms, and Army helicopter training exercises could cause irreparable harm to the state-owned property." The group will "ask the three-judge panel to restrict such activities until its lawsuits challenging state and federal agencies' management of the site are settled next spring."

Cape Hatteras Fishing Pier To Be Removed In December.

WTKR-TV Norfolk, VA (10/30) reports that "a project to remove the Cape Hatteras Fishing Pier, also known as Frisco Pier, will begin in December 2017, according to the National Park Service." The NPS said, "Structural failures continue as debris, including large timbers containing rusted lag bolts and nails, regularly falls off the structure and creates public safety hazards."

Century-Old Edgemont Home Listed In National Register.

The AP (10/30) reports that "an Edgemont home that was built around 1900 has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places." According to the article, "the Arthur and Ellen Colgan House in Edgemont was listed for its architectural significance."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Mapp Applauds Federal Relief Efforts, Defends Funding Request.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (10/26, O'CONNOR) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp "praised a financial aid package expected to head to President Donald Trump's desk for a signature next week, as well as other federal efforts in the territory." In an interview, "Mapp said his government could draw up to $1 billion from the $4.9 billion portion of the federal package, and the money would not only be destined for the central government — which has been twice rebuffed by capital markets within the last year — but also to government entities like the Water and Power Authority, local hospitals, and the Waste Management Authority. Mapp is out of the territory on personal leave time for a health issue." Mapp "said the goal is to eschew a one-time infusion of capital in favor of more gradual infusions."

US Senator Calls For Federal Assistance To Rebuild A More Resilient Puerto Rico And USVI.

Caribbean News Now! (10/27) reports that Sen. Lisa Murkowski has "called on leaders of the Senate to embrace long-term resilience in the rebuilding of the hurricane-impacted infrastructure in Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands." In a letter addressed to Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and Minority Leader Charles Schumer, Murkowski "requested federal assistance to allow communities to build more resilient and sustainable infrastructure that is less vulnerable to extreme weather." According to the article, "Murkowski told her colleagues that, while immediate assistance ought to focus on essential supplies to protect the safety of individuals, 'over the long-term we should help rebuild infrastructure — like the electric grid with modern technologies that are stronger and more resilient against extreme weather events.'"

Congress To Hold Hearing On Veterans' Health Care Issues.

The Guam Daily Post (10/29) reports that "veterans living on Guam, the Northern Marianas, American Samoa, Palau, the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Independent State of Samoa will be heard on the longstanding issues related to inadequate Veterans Administration health care on the islands." The chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, Dr. David P. Roe, agreed "to a joint request from Guam Delegate Madeleine Bordallo, Northern Marianas Delegate Gregorio 'Kilili' Sablan and American Samoa Delegate Aumua Amata Coleman Radewagen for a congressional oversight hearing." Roe acknowledged "that veterans living on the islands 'face a number of barriers to timely, accessible VA benefits.'"

Additional coverage was provided by the Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (10/30).

Trump Administration Looking Into CW Issue.

Marianas Variety (10/27, Villahermosa) reports that Press Secretary Kevin Bautista on Thursday "said the governor was informed in early October that due to the language of H.R. 339 and the 'rhetoric regarding outdated unemployment figures from the congressional office,' U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services proposed a substantial reduction in the CW permits for fiscal year 2018." Bautista "said Gov. Ralph Torres spoke directly with the White House through the deputy chief of staff of the president and the White House Intergovernmental Affairs Office to request their assistance on behalf of the CNMI." Bautista "said the Trump administration 'is looking at the CNMI's position' so it can base policy 'on accurate and up-to-date information about our economy and the needs of the CNMI.'"

President Arrives In Marshall Islands As Part Of Pacific Trip.

Focus Taiwan (10/30, Hsin-hui, Kao) reports that Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen "on Monday was greeted by Marshall Islands President Hilda Heine at the airport on arriving in the Pacific country." Tsai "expressed her belief that Taiwan and the Marshall Islands can develop closer ties." According to the article, "in return, noting the two countries share core values such as freedom, democracy, equity and justice, Heine said that the New Southbound Policy proposed by Tsai has helped Taiwan strengthen exchanges with 18 countries in the Asia Pacific region in the fields of culture, education, new energy and new technology."

Additional coverage was provided by Radio New Zealand (10/29).

Taiwan, Marshall Islands Sign Health Care Agreement.

Focus Taiwan (10/30, Hsin-hui, Liu) reports that "Taiwan's Taipei Medical University Shuang Ho Hospital signed an agreement with the Marshall Islands' Ministry of Health and Human Services on Monday to continue a medical internship program as well as establish a Hospital Information System (HIS) to enhance the quality of health care in the Pacific island country." Under the agreement, Shuang Ho Hospital will "help with the running of a clinical internship program for medical interns in the Marshall Islands as well as set up a HIS at Majuro Hospital, which is located in the country's capital city Majuro, to digitize patient records and other medical information."

Taiwanese Vessel Seized In Pacific Fisheries Surveillance Op.

Radio New Zealand (10/27) reports that "a Taiwan purse seining vessel suspected of illegal fishing was seized this month in the Federated States of Micronesia." The vessel was "boarded and inspected by one of FSM's three Patrol boats during the ten-day Operation Kurukuru 2017 earlier this month." According to the article, "an investigation is underway into whether the Taiwanese vessel's activity in Micronesia breached license conditions."

US Geological Survey

Grizzly Roadmap: Studies Show Grizzlies Finding Their Way Around People.

The Missoulian \(MT\) (10/30, Chaney) reports that "evidence has grown that grizzlies have almost bridged the gap between the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem north of Missoula and the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem south of Bozeman." The article notes that "Montana researchers Cecily Costello of Fish, Wildlife and Parks and Frank van Manen of the U.S. Geological Survey published a report on possible grizzly pathways out of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem in the journal Ecosphere." Their research "lends hope that the genetically isolated population around Yellowstone National Park may soon get a breeding boost as northern bears shake their family tree."

US Geological Survey Portal Is Like Google Maps For Rock Lovers.

The Next Web (10/30, Kaser) reports that the US Geological Survey offers a tool called the Coastal and Marine Video and Photograph Portal, "through which you can view some remote and scientifically fascinating regions of the country as easily as you would a street in Google Maps." According to the article, "it's like a Google Earth, complete with Street View, for the nation's rich geography regions."

Additional Reading.

- Magnitude 7.0 Undersea Quake Hits Near New Caledonia, No Tsunami. Reuters (10/30, Maler).

Dept. Of Interior Op/Eds & Editorials

Trump's Energy Deregulation Head-Fake.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (10/30, Hayes), David J. Hayes, Executive Director of the State Energy & Environmental Impact Center at the NYU School of Law, claims that the Interior Department and the Environmental Protection Agency are "using different, but equally effective, pseudo-deregulatory tools to benefit conventional energy providers over clean energy competitors." He argues that "rather than providing outright financial and market support like the Energy Department, Interior and EPA are taking a back door approach by selectively targeting fiscal and environmental responsibilities for elimination." But Hayes is encouraged by "progressive state attorneys general" who are "exposing the Trump Administration's false deregulatory narrative."

In The Midst Of A Natural Paradise, A Deserted Federal School Fails Children.

In commentary for the Daily Signal (10/30, Boccia, Burke), Romina Boccia, the national debt deputy director of Thomas A. Roe Institute for Economic Policy Studies, and Lindsey M. Burke, the Will Skillman fellow in education policy at The Heritage Foundation, write that Havasupai Elementary School is "closed much of the time," and "even when it is open, some parents don't like to send their children to it." The authors add that students "don't learn much, and they are far behind their grade level in reading, math, and other important subjects." The authors argue that "education savings accounts are particularly suitable to remote areas like Havasu Canyon." They conclude that "it's time to unlock educational opportunity for these children and students assigned to Bureau of Indian Education schools across the country, and empower families with education savings accounts."

Finding A Method To The Methane Madness.

Axios (10/30, Harder) contributor Amy Harder writes that as the "Trump administration is fumbling its attempts to repeal President Obama's methane emissions limits," the oil and gas industry is responding to the resulting regulatory vacuum. The American Petroleum Institute is reportedly "working to create a voluntary program aimed at addressing the issue, according to multiple executives in the oil industry whose companies are members of the group." According to API vice president for Regulatory and Economic Policy, Kyle Isakower, the group believes methane emissions can be lowered as a byproduct of an existing EPA regulation which limits other types of air pollution at oil and gas wells, thus direct regulation on methane emissions are unnecessary.

Additional Reading.

- Yosemite Fee Hike Woefully Inadequate As It Is Proposed. Manteca \(CA\) Bulletin (10/30, Wyatt).
- Huge Fee Hike Wrong Answer To National Parks' Ailments. Toledo \(OH\) Blade (10/30, Markey).
- Trump's Park Fee Hike Is Suspect, But Should Spark Needed Debate. Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (10/30, Conti).
- Our View: Higher Entry Fees Are Not The Fix For Our National Parks. Moscow-Pullman \(ID\) Daily News (10/31, Malott).
- Guest Column: Don't Let Public's Voice Get Cut Out Of Public Lands Conversation. Aspen \(CO\) Times (10/29, Zeringue).
- Don't Jump To Conclusions About Sage Grouse-cattle Study. Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/30, Wuerthner).
- Help California Rebuild By Managing Our Forests. Eugene \(OR\) Register-Guard (10/30, Zybach).

Top National News

Media Analyses: Papadopoulos Plea, First Indictments Signal Wide-Ranging Probe By Mueller.

The first indictments in Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into possible Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election receives saturation coverage, with a combined 33 minutes of coverage on the three broadcast networks, and multiple reports, analyses, and commentary pieces in major newspapers. While the indictments of Paul Manafort and Rick Gates led the headlines, many analyses focus on the unexpected revelation that George Papadopoulos, a foreign policy adviser to Trump's campaign, has made a plea deal. Analysts say that Papadopoulos – who had contact with Russians claiming to have “dirt” on Hillary Clinton – is a much greater danger to the White House than the two better-known figures. In addition, analyses and comments from former prosecutors indicate that Mueller's Monday actions strongly suggest that he is engaging in a broad-ranging investigation, with much more to come.

On ABC World News Tonight (10/30, story 3, 3:20), David Muir called it “the day the White House has been bracing for. President Trump today trying to shift the focus of the probe onto Hillary Clinton and the Democrats. At the same time, the White House attempting to downplay the roles of these men in the Trump campaign.” ABC's Jonathan Karl: “The White House was blindsided by today's news. Sources tell ABC News [that] the President had no advance notice from the Special Counsel. ... There is nothing about collusion, or the campaign, in the Manafort indictment. What the President didn't know there was another shoe to drop: Special Counsel Mueller later revealing his plea deal with George Papadopoulos, the campaign foreign policy adviser who, in fact, was talking with Russians about getting dirt on Hillary Clinton.” On NBC Nightly News (10/30, story 2, 2:10, Holt), Hallie Jackson reported, “The White House strategy now: distance and deflect. President Trump tweeting today, ‘Sorry, but this is years ago, before Paul Manafort was part of the Trump campaign. But why aren't crooked Hillary and the Dems the focus?’”

On the CBS Evening News (10/30, story 3, 2:20, Mason), Major Garrett reported, “The White House strategy to downplay connections to the three men ran into immediate factual problems. Press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders insisted George Papadopoulos had little impact on candidate Trump's campaign.” Sanders: “He was a volunteer on, again, a council that met once.” Garrett: “So his activities were entirely of his invention? No one asked him to do any of these things? Is that what you're telling the American public?” Sanders: “All I can tell you is, he asked to do things. He was, basically, pushed back or not responded to in any way. So any actions he took would have been on his own.” Garrett: “But the Papadopoulos plea agreement states he was not rebuffed by the campaign, quite the opposite. A Trump campaign supervisor told Papadopoulos, ‘I would encourage you to pursue contact with Russians,’ and that he had done ‘great work.’”

The AP (10/30, Superville, Miller) reports that the President “moved quickly Monday to distance himself and the White House” from the indictments, and “Sanders told reporters that the indictments have ‘nothing to do with the president,’ because ‘most’ of the alleged crimes occurred before they worked Trump.” USA Today (10/30, Korte) reports that the indictment “makes no mention of the Trump campaign or even of Trump himself.”

The New York Times (10/30, Shear) reports, “Trump and his representatives on Monday dismissed the charges. ... Jay Sekulow, a private attorney for Mr. Trump, said the president and his legal team were not worried about the indictments.” Sekulow told CNN, “No, not concerned. I'm completely convinced as I was from the outset that not only was there no Russian collusion, there was no obstruction.”

White House Chief of Staff Kelly said on Fox News' The Ingraham Angle (10/30), “All of the activities, as I understand it they were indicted for, [were] long before they ever met Donald Trump or had any association with the campaign. But I think the reaction of the Administration is let the legal justice system work, everyone is presumed innocent and we will see where it goes.” Reuters (10/30) reports that Kelly also said that a special counsel “should be appointed to investigate Democrats over a uranium deal during the Obama administration and a dossier compiled on Donald Trump” during the campaign.

In an interview with Fox News' Fox & Friends (10/30) before the indictments were announced, Kellyanne Conway said, “As the President has said, everybody is fully cooperating. ... But the President has also made clear as recently as this weekend that he considers it a hoax and people should be looking into in any coordination if not collusion between the Clinton campaign, the DNC, this Russian dossier.”

The Los Angeles Times (10/30, Decker) reports that with “his presidency facing fresh peril...Trump and his loyalists have adopted a twofold strategy to protect him against the indictment of two senior campaign aides and a guilty plea to the part of a third, more junior aide: distancing Trump from alleged wrongdoers and leveling new attacks” on Clinton. The Washington Times (10/30, Miller, Persons) reports, “The White House on Monday distanced itself [from Manafort]...and insisted any collusion with Russia was committed by the Clinton campaign.” Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (10/30) column, “Trump's standard line of defense in the Russia probe – we did not collude – suffered a bit of a blow Monday. ... But Trump's deficit of honesty is offset by a surplus of dexterity. Though not abandoning the there-is-no-collusion defense, the White House is already elevating a secondary position – the okay-maybe-we-colluded-but-Clinton-colluded-more defense.”

Fox News (10/30, Singman) reports on its website that Trump “fired back on Monday in an attempt to distance his White House from the grand jury indictments.” Townhall (10/30, Pavlich) reports that the “31-page Manafort indictment unsealed Monday morning does not reference his work as a chairman of the Trump campaign. Instead, it focuses on his business dealings.”

In a fact-check piece headlined “Trump Counters Indictments With Inaccurate Claims,” the New York Times (10/30, Qiu) writes, “While the charges do not mention the 2016 election, some of the alleged actions that spurred them do cover the time during which Mr. Manafort served as Mr. Trump’s campaign chairman.” As for Papadopolous, he “was named as a foreign policy adviser to the Trump campaign in March 2016 (he previously advised Ben Carson’s campaign) and was described by Mr. Trump in an interview with The Washington Post as an ‘excellent guy.’” Bloomberg News (10/30, Strohm) writes that while the Manafort indictment “captured the top headlines,” the Papadopoulos plea agreement “may have revealed more about the direction of [Mueller’s] secretive investigation.”

In addition, the AP (10/30) writes, “Trump claimed that the indictment against Manafort deals with activities ‘years ago,’ before Trump was running for president. Actually, some of the criminal behavior alleged in the charges is as recent as the early days of his presidency.” In its Monday lead story, the Huffington Post (10/30) writes that Trump and the White House “reverted to form Monday, falsely claiming that the alleged criminal actions were completely unrelated to him. ... Republican media relations professionals were baffled by the approach,” with Tim Miller, who ran communications for Jeb Bush’s 2016 campaign saying, “The White House’s strategy is shameless, bald-faced, indefensible lies. Lie about everything, admit nothing.” Rick Tyler, who worked for Sen. Ted Cruz’s 2016 campaign, said, “It’s really amazing the degree to which they think everybody else is an idiot.”

In an editorial, the Washington Post (10/30) considers “what a presidential president might have said” about the indictments, concluding, “Leaders in a democracy must work to earn the public’s trust anew every day. I hope my efforts to support the special counsel in his work will reassure all Americans of my commitment to our nation’s founding principles, no matter the circumstances of my election. I am humbled both by the great responsibility you have given me and by the knowledge that in a democracy, nobody is above the law – not even the president.”

“Seething” Trump Reportedly Reacted To Indictments “With Exasperation And Disgust.” The Washington Post (10/30, Costa, Rucker, Parker) reports that the President “woke before dawn on Monday and burrowed in at the White House residence to wait for the Russia bombshell he knew was coming,” and “digested the news of the first indictments...with exasperation and disgust,” according to sources. While “initially, Trump felt vindicated,” the unsealing of the Papadopoulos documents then “provide[d] the clearest evidence yet of links between Trump’s campaign and Russian officials.” CNN (10/30, Zeleny, Liptak) reports on its website, “Watching the developments unfold on the large television screens installed in his private residence, Trump was ‘seething,’ according to a Republican close to the White House.”

Jonathan Swan of Axios (10/30) writes, “I’ve had dozens of conversations about this subject with administration officials over the past months, and while nobody I’ve spoken to genuinely thinks collusion with Russia happened on the campaign, plenty worry about what Bob Mueller’s crack team of financial investigators will turn up on Trump and his allies.” The Wall Street Journal (10/30, A1, Palazzolo, Gershman) reports that former prosecutors and legal experts said that Monday’s news indicates that Mueller is looking beyond the Trump campaign alone into a much wider range of possible criminal activity.

Democrats Call For Action On Bill To Prevent Mueller Firing. The Washington Times (10/30, Persons, Dinan) reports that Senate Intelligence Vice Chairman Mark Warner and other Democrats “demanded Monday that Congress approve a bill preventing the special counsel from being fired.” Warner said in a statement, “Members of Congress, Republican and Democrat, must also make clear to the President that issuing pardons to any of his associates or to himself would be unacceptable, and result in immediate, bipartisan action by Congress.”

In an analysis, the New York Times (10/30, A1, Baker) writes that the indictments “raise the stakes in the special counsel investigation...and could prompt Mr. Trump to consider actions intended to short-circuit the probe before it threatens him or others close to him.” Politico (10/30, Schor, Cheney) reports, “Senators have introduced two bipartisan bills designed to protect Mueller should Trump attempt to fire him, although Republican leaders are unlikely to move such legislation to vote without a clear, new threat to the special counsel’s job from the White House.” However, The Hill (10/30, Fabian) reports that the White House on Monday said the President “had no plans to dismiss” Mueller. Sanders said, “There is no intention or plan to make any changes in regards to the special counsel.”

WPost A1 Analysis: Indictments Indicate That More Is To Come. In a front-page analysis, the Washington Post (10/30, A1, Barrett, Horwitz, Nakashima) writes that the first indictments are “designed to send a powerful message to everyone else caught up in the probe: the prosecutors aren’t bluffing.” Former federal prosecutor Patrick Cotter said, “This is the way you kick off a big case. ... They couldn’t have sent a message any clearer if they’d rented a revolving neon sign in Times Square. And the message isn’t just about Manafort. It’s a message to the next five guys they talk to. And the message is: ‘We are coming, and we are not playing, and we are not bluffing.’”

Randall Eliason of George Washington University writes in the Washington Post (10/30), “Mueller’s investigation continues to proceed aggressively, methodically and relatively rapidly. These charges likely are simply the first salvo. Their echoes will reverberate loudly through the corridors of Washington in the days ahead.”

Manafort, Gates Under House Arrest Following Not Guilty Pleas. The indictments themselves led all three broadcast network newscasts. The CBS Evening News (10/30, lead story, 3:15, Mason) reported, “The criminal investigation of Russian interference in the US election moved into a new phase today. The special council announced a plea deal with a former Trump campaign adviser who has agreed to cooperate. And a former campaign chairman and his deputy were indicted on charges that include money laundering.” ABC World News Tonight (10/30, lead story, 4:20, Muir) reported that “two former members of the Trump campaign [are] under house arrest,” and “a third man, an adviser to the campaign...pleading guilty, and now, cooperating with the FBI.” NBC Nightly News (10/30, lead story, 3:50, Holt) reported, “At the end of the day, it may be the separate plea bargain deal made public today between the feds and a former campaign adviser that gets us closer to the heart of the Russia influence question.”

The Washington Post (10/30, Helderman, Zapotosky) reports that Mueller revealed charges Manafort, Gates, and Papadopoulos, “marking the first criminal allegations to come from probes into possible Russian influence in US political affairs.” The Wall Street Journal (10/30, Viswanatha, Wilber) reports that the actions were the most public steps taken by Mueller since he was appointed nearly six months ago. USA Today (10/30, Johnson, Heath) reports that “while Mueller stopped short of alleging that Trump’s campaign colluded with Moscow during the election, the filings are first allegation by prosecutors that Trump’s campaign aides directly coordinated with people they believed were tied to the Russian government.”

The New York Times (10/30, Apuzzo) reports that Manafort and Gates surrendered to federal authorities on Monday morning, and the Los Angeles Times (10/30, Tanfani) reports, “In a court hearing Monday afternoon, Manafort and Gates both pleaded not guilty to the charges. Manafort was released on $10-million bail and Gates was released on $5-million bail.” Bloomberg News (10/30, Harris) reports that both men “were put under house arrest because they’re seen as a flight risk.”

The Washington Times (10/30, Persons) reports that Manafort’s attorney Kevin Downing “said there was ‘no evidence’ of collusion by Mr. Manafort or anyone in the Trump campaign, adding that Mr. Manafort’s activities in Ukraine were to ‘further democracy.’” The Washington Post (10/30) runs a question-and-answer feature about Manafort, while the New York Times (10/30, Sullivan) has a profile of Gates. Bloomberg News (10/30, Schatzker) reports that Gates has been fired by real estate company Colony NorthStar Inc.

McClatchy (10/30, Wieder, Hall) reports that Bade LLC, “listed in the indictment among 17 domestic entities that Manafort and Gates are alleged to have used to hide foreign earnings,” received funds from the Republican National Committee for work done in coordination with the Trump campaign. The firm was paid a total of $70,000.

The Wall Street Journal (10/30) editorializes that Manafort does face serious charges, but that they do not relate to the Trump campaign. The Journal also sees no indication that Manafort and Gates have information about collusion with Russia. But USA Today (10/30) editorializes, “If the charges are true, the two not only allegedly violated laws for personal profit but also undermined vital US national security interests. In essence, they abetted President Vladimir Putin’s efforts to make Ukraine a Russian puppet state, part of an overall plan to expand his autocratic presence.”

Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA), ranking member on the House Intelligence Committee, said on CNN’s The Lead (10/30), “I think the Manafort and Gates indictments are significant. This is not a peripheral player here. We’re talking about the campaign manager. ... He’s reaching out to the Russians at the same time that the Russians are reaching out to him and other campaign people at that Trump Tower meeting. So if he decides to cooperate down the road, we could learn a lot about these interactions.”

Nicholas Kristof writes in his New York Times (10/30) column, “The first thing to acknowledge is that the indictment of Paul Manafort doesn’t prove collusion by President Trump with Russia to undermine American democracy. But the second thing to say is: It may get us closer. ... If Manafort pursues his self-interest, my bet is that he’ll sing. That then can become a cascade: He testifies against others, who in turn are pressured to testify against still others. And all this makes it more difficult to protect the man at the center if indeed he has violated the law.” Doyle McManus writes in his Los Angeles Times (10/30) column, “In addition to criminal charges, the federal government can move to seize their assets. That’s a strong incentive to cooperate with the prosecutor.”

Media Analyses: Papadopoulos Plea May Be More Significant Than Indictments. Several reports and analyses indicate that the Papadopoulos plea deal may be far more significant than the Manafort and Gates indictments. Politico (10/30, Nussbaum, Samuelsohn, Gerstein) reports, “The more revealing details came in a 14-page document” showing that Papadopoulos “cut a secret plea deal earlier this month for lying to the FBI about the campaign’s outreach to Russia-related officials.” Reuters (10/30, Lynch, Freifeld) reports that the Papadopoulos revelation “was a sharp escalation” of Mueller’s investigation.

The Washington Post (10/30, Helderman, Leonnig) reports that Papadopoulos became an adviser to the Trump campaign in March 2016, and met with “an unnamed overseas professor” that month. In April 2016, “the professor told him the Russian government had ‘dirt’” on Clinton. The New York Times (10/30, Apuzzo, Schmidt) reports that Papadopoulos “was quietly arrested at Washington Dulles Airport on July 27 and has since been cooperating” with Mueller. Documents released on Monday “said that several senior campaign officials knew about some of Mr. Papadopoulos’s interactions with the Russians. The documents do not say whether he mentioned the Clinton emails to anyone.”

The New York Times (10/30, Savage) reports, “The filing says Mr. Papadopoulos falsely played down the significance of those conversations and falsely said he had not yet joined the campaign when they reached out to him.” Lying to federal investigators “is a felony that can carry a sentence of up to five years in prison, giving Mr. Papadopoulos an incentive to cooperate in exchange for leniency.”

Politico (10/30, Dawsey) reports that “while the White House had been girding for a Manafort indictment, senior officials were caught off guard” by the “unsettling” Papadopoulos news. And “more problems are likely to come. At the plea hearing for Papadopoulos earlier this month, Mueller’s team said his plea was only a small part in a ‘large-scale’ investigation.”

The New York Times (10/30, Shane) reports that the Papadopoulos plea “shifted the narrative,” revealed “that Russian officials alerted the [Trump] campaign, through an intermediary in April 2016, that they possessed thousands of Democratic emails and other ‘dirt’” on Clinton, “two months before the Russian hacking of the Democratic National Committee was publicly revealed and the stolen emails began to appear online.” The Times calls it “the first clear evidence that Trump campaign aides had early knowledge that Russia had stolen confidential documents” on Clinton and the DNC. Politico (10/30, Griffiths) reports that former Trump campaign foreign policy adviser Carter Page told MSNBC that he “might have exchanged emails about Russia” with Papadopoulos.

CNN (10/30, Raju, Herb) reports on its website that neither the Senate Intelligence Committee nor the House Intelligence Committee has interviewed Papadopoulos. Senate Intelligence Chairman Richard Burr “told CNN he didn’t think that the guilty plea from Papadopoulos or the 12-count indictment” of Manafort and Rick Gates “would change the course of his committee’s probe.” Burr said, “We certainly know a lot about Papadopoulos’ role in the campaign, as we do Manafort and Gates.”

Sen. Edward Markey, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said on CNN’s Situation Room (10/30) that the new information on Papadopoulos “is evidence that collusion was being attempted.”

Chris Cillizza writes on the CNN (10/30) website, “So, Papadopoulos copped to lying to the FBI about the timing of his contacts with Russians. In his initial interview in January 2017, Papadopoulos was insistent that he had reached out to his foreign contact ‘The Professor’ (amazing!) before he had formally joined the Trump presidential campaign. ... Most importantly the ‘Professor’ only showed interest in Papadopoulos after it became known that he was employed by the Trump campaign.”

In an editorial headlined “Is The White House Scared Yet?” the New York Times (10/30) writes that Papadopoulos’ “guilty plea is the most direct evidence connecting the campaign to the Russian efforts to help elect Mr. Trump.” His arrest indicates “a carrot-and-stick strategy that Mr.

Mueller is most likely to keep using to try to turn other Trump associates.”

John Dickerson said on the CBS Evening News (10/30, story 7, 1:25, Mason), “The Papadopolous source was offering negative material on Hillary Clinton, which matches that different meeting that took place with a person claiming to represent the Russian government, who met with the President’s son, son-in-law, and campaign chairman Manafort. It’s important to remember there was a time when the President’s team said there had been no contact with the Russians at all by the campaign.”

Legal analyst Dan Abrams said on ABC World News Tonight (10/30, story 4, 1:05, Muir), “I don’t think there’s any way to look at that plea agreement with Papadopoulos and think this is going to end soon. The reason why they made that deal, when you read through the agreement, it is clear they cut that deal so they could investigate others. So this could be part of a broader investigation.”

Jeffrey Toobin said on CNN’s Situation Room (10/30) that court papers suggest that “Papadopoulos between July and October was wearing a wire. ... If he was wearing a wire, this summer and fall, think about that, just weeks ago, that is a whole new chapter of possibilities in this investigation and potentially a very, very big deal.” However, Brit Hume said on Fox News Special Report (10/30), “It does appear from what’s in the charges and what else has been reported about Papadopoulos and his attempts to establish communications between the Trump campaign and rational officials is that they didn’t really go anywhere.”

Hill Republicans Mostly Quiet. The Washington Post (10/30, Demirjian, Sullivan) reports that “the Republican leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate and House intelligence committees were silent Monday about the significance of major developments in Mueller’s probe.” On the CBS Evening News (10/30, story 5, 2:10, Mason), Nancy Cordes reported, “Republicans gave the special council a wide berth today.” Bloomberg News (10/30, Litvan) reports that Sen. Susan Collins, an Intelligence Committee member, said the panel’s probe into possible collusion “is all but certain to push into the 2018 election year.”

Michael Gerson writes in his Washington Post (10/30) column, “To what circle of hell are Republican officials about to consign themselves? It would be useful for members of Congress to declare that they will never enter the fourth circle – the demolition of the integrity and independence of the FBI – if only to deter Trump from forcing a constitutional crisis. ... But it is hard to imagine such courage written broadly in today’s GOP – and even harder to imagine such courage exhibited preemptively. ... Do Republicans and conservatives really want to be remembered as a bodyguard of enablers” for Trump?

Rep. Trent Franks (R-AZ) writes in USA Today (10/30), “When Manafort’s ties with a Russia-friendly Ukrainian politician became clear in August 2016, Trump immediately fired him. Then, the FBI raided Manafort’s house over the summer and warned him then that he had a pending indictment.” The indictment “does not even mention the Trump campaign.”

Podesta Steps Down From His Lobbying Firm. ABC World News Tonight (10/30, story 5, 0:20, Muir) reported in a brief item that “powerful Democratic lobbyist” Tony Podesta is “stepping down from his own lobbying group.” The Washington Post (10/30, Hamburger, Leonnig) reports that though the Podesta Group “is not named in the newly released indictments...the company is one of two indirectly referenced in the charges. Podesta and another lobbying firm, Mercury Public Affairs, were working with” Manafort and Gates “from 2012-2014 in lobbying to improve the image of the Ukrainian government.” Politico (10/30, Palmer) also reports on Podesta’s exit.

Fox News Focused Morning Coverage On Clinton And Unrelated Stories. While CNN and MSNBC covered the indictments in detail, several outlets report that Fox News largely avoided it or focused on Trump’s charges against Clinton. The Huffington Post (10/30, Strachan) reports that Fox News “dedicated substantial time to asking why Hillary Clinton wasn’t being investigated instead,” and aired features on Halloween costumes and Google’s new cheeseburger emoji. CNN (10/30, Kludt) reports on its website that Fox’s morning anchors “dutifully shared a variety of other headlines unrelated to the investigation into the Trump campaign’s ties to Russia.” The Week (10/30, Weber) has some contrasting screen shots of the three cable news networks at various points in the day.

Facebook Says Russian-Backed Content Reached 126 Million Americans. NBC Nightly News (10/30, story 3, 1:30, Holt) reported on “new revelations about how the Russians used Facebook at the height of the presidential election, reaching 126 million Americans, an eye-popping number.” NBC’s Jo Ling Kent reported that Facebook is “revealing that 80,000 posts from Russian-backed Facebook accounts reached potentially a third of all Americans between 2015 and 2017. Facebook saying that approximately 126 million people may have been served one of their stories at some point during the two-year period.”

The New York Times (10/30, Isaac, Wakabayashi) reports, "Russian agents disseminated inflammatory posts that reached 126 million users on Facebook while uploading more than 1,000 videos to Google's YouTube service. ... The new information goes far beyond what Facebook and Google have revealed in the past and illustrate how Facebook, in particular, was used by agents linked to Russia."

The CBS Evening News (10/30, story 6, 0:20, Mason) and Washington Post (10/30, Timberg, Dvoskin) also report on the numbers, while the Wall Street Journal (10/30, Seetharaman) reports that those behind Russian-linked Facebook accounts helped to organize or finance events before and after the 2016 election on both sides of controversial issues.

Suzanne Spaulding of the Center for Strategic and International Studies writes in the Washington Post (10/30), "We are reminded almost daily of Russia's broad use of social media to foment discord in our country. But such campaigns have significant potential to fuel a lack of confidence in the legal system as well." False stories and leaks "could be exploited" to heighten "polarization over issues in the courts."

Trump, Abe Agree To Work Together On North Korea.

Reuters (10/30) reports President Trump and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe agreed Monday to "work together on steps to counter North Korea's nuclear and missile development," ahead of the President's visit to Asia later this week, the Japanese government said. During a 20-minute phone call, Trump and Abe discussed the schedule of the president's coming visit and agreed to remain in close contact over North Korea, Deputy Chief Cabinet Secretary Yasutoshi Nishimura told reporters.

Kelly: US Hopes North Korea Will Denuclearize. White House Chief of Staff Kelly said on Fox News' The Ingraham Angle (10/30), "What we really hope, or what I should say what the President really hopes...is that the leadership, such as it is in North Korea, comes to their senses and, with the help of countries like China, decide to denuclearize, give up their atomic weapons. There is no reason for them. They serve no purpose for that country." Kelly added, "I don't think we can have a country like North Korea have a ICBM that can deliver a thermonuclear device on the mainland of the United States. They already have the capability to at least reach with missiles to the great American citizens that live in Guam."

Seoul Warns Of Radioactive Fallout From North Korea Nuclear Tests. The New York Times (10/30, Choe) reports the head of South Korea's weather agency warned Monday that "another powerful blast at North Korea's underground nuclear test site could destabilize the area and send radioactive material into the atmosphere." The Times says "fears that the repeated nuclear explosions might be destabilizing the mountain have spread since the North's latest and most powerful nuclear test on Sept. 3." In fact, a day after the Sept. 3 test, the South China Morning Post "quoted a senior Chinese nuclear scientist who warned that a future test could blow the top off Mount Mantop, causing radioactive contamination of the atmosphere."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Is The White House Scared Yet?" In an editorial, the New York Times (10/30) says Trump campaign adviser George Papadopoulos' guilty plea "is the most direct evidence connecting the campaign to the Russian efforts to help elect Mr. Trump." The Times also says Trump's former campaign manager Paul Manafort "embodies the sort of amoral, self-dealing denizen of the swamp that Mr. Trump pledged to drain when he got to Washington."

Washington Post.

"These Republicans Used To Pretend To Care About Debt. Not Anymore." A Washington Post (10/30) editorial says the Republican tax plan is "premised on the fanciful idea that slashing taxes by $1.5 trillion over 10 years will somehow leave the federal budget better off." Citing a report from the Tax Policy Center which "found that the plan would wallop the federal budget, even when effects on economic growth are considered," the Post argues that the "warning should...shake Republicans who claimed to be deficit hawks when Barack Obama was president. Tax reform could be worthwhile, but only if it is paid for."

"Uzbekistan's New President Tiptoes Toward Liberalization." A Washington Post (10/30) editorial says "it is encouraging to hear" Uzbekistan's President Shavkat Mirziyoyev, who took office last year, "may be changing direction" from the "iron-fisted 27-year-rule" of his predecessor, Islam Karimov. The Post says Mirziyoyev “quietly and gingerly began a modest liberalization” that some have even called “an Uzbek spring, or thaw.” The Post stresses that “Mirziyoyev clearly needs foreign investment and may well want to put behind him the awful legacy of his predecessor,” but ultimately what matters is his “intended destination for Uzbekistan.” The Post cautions, “He might be eyeing China or Russia as a model – personal authoritarianism welded onto state capitalism – in which case the latest opening should be greeted with caution.”

“What A Presidential President Would Have Said About Mueller’s Indictments.” A Washington Post (10/30) editorial highlights President Trump’s tweeted reaction to news that “special counsel Robert S. Mueller III has brought charges against Mr. Trump’s former campaign chairman Paul Manafort, Mr. Manafort’s deputy and a foreign policy aide on Mr. Trump’s campaign,” and presents a statement that “a presidential president might have” issued.

Wall Street Journal.

“The Manafort Indictment.” A Wall Street Journal (10/30) editorial says the charges against President Trump’s former campaign manager Paul Manafort do not involve the 2016 and campaign and the main charge against Trump is his poor judgment for hiring Manafort.

“Europe Beats America.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/30) cites tax reform efforts in France and the Netherlands to argue that unless the US enacts its own reforms, Europe’s economy could prove more appealing to investors.

“About That ObamaCare ‘Sabotage.’” A Wall Street Journal (10/30) editorial argues that while Democrats argue that by cutting off subsidies to insurers, Administration is sabotaging the ACA, Obama-appointed federal judge Vince Chhabria last week rejected an effort by 18 states to keep the White House from stopping the payments. The Journal says cutting off the payments is unlikely to cause immediate or severe harm to consumers and Republicans negotiating with Democrats over the payments should push for a deal that includes easing the employer and individual mandates and expanding health-savings accounts.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Mueller Probe Kicks Into Next Gear
Mueller’s Moves Signal Broad Scope
Google’s Dominance In Washington Faces A Reckoning
SoftBank To Drop Effort To Merge Sprint, T-Mobile

New York Times:

Former Trump Aides Charged As Prosecutors Reveal New Campaign Ties With Russia
Mueller’s First Indictments Send A Message To Trump
Trump Campaign Got Early Word Russia Had Democrats’ Emails
Judge Blocks Trump’s Ban On Transgender Troops In Military
Trump Is Expected To Name Jerome Powell As Next Fed Chairman
France, Land Of Croissants, Finds Butter Vanishing From Shelves

Washington Post:

3 Trump Campaign Officials Charged
Reach Of Russian Content Far Wider Than First Reported
Federal Judge Blocks Part Of Transgender Ban In Military
In Front Of TV, President Fumes With Frustration
Both Sides Of The Aisle Brace For The Next Jolt
The Message To Other Targets: We Are Not Playing

Financial Times:

Three Former Trump Aides Charged In Russia Probe
Chinese Universities Race To Embrace Xi Jinping’s Theories
Madrid Moves To Reassert Its Control Over Catalonia

Washington Times:

Mueller's Bombshells: Manafort, Gates Indictments, Papadopoulos Guilty Plea
White House: Nothing To See Here; Go Find Clinton
Vicious Attack Ads Mark Final Days Of Virginia Governor's Race
U.S. Ramps Up Air War Against Islamic State In Yemen As Fight Subsides In Iraq And Syria
High Stakes For Federal Prosecutors As Bundy Trial Starts In Nevada
Skyrocketing Benchmark Premiums, Slim Choices Await Obamacare Customers

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation-First Indictments; Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump Adviser; Russia Meddling Investigation-WH Response; Russia Meddling Investigation-Expert Comment; Russia Meddling Investigation-Democratic Lobbyist; Severe Weather; Kevin Spacey Sexual Harassment Scandal; Puerto Rico Recovery-Controversy; Former NFL Player Dies; AI-Cancer Detection; World Series.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation-Trump Adviser; Russia Meddling Investigation-First Indictments; Russia Meddling Investigation-WH Response; Russia Meddling Investigation-Forecast; Russia Meddling Investigation-Congress; Russia Meddling Investigation-Social Media; Russia Meddling Investigation-Expert Comment; Benghazi Suspect Captured; Navy SEALs Murder Investigation; Kevin Spacey Sexual Harassment Scandal; Bergdahl Trial; World Series.

NBC: Russia Meddling Investigation-First Indictments; Russia Meddling Investigation-WH Response; Russia Meddling Investigation-Social Media; Military Transgender Ban-Legal Challenge; Kevin Spacey Sexual Harassment Scandal; Bergdahl Trial; Navy SEALs Murder Investigation; Severe Weather; Puerto Rico Recovery-Controversy; Soy Milk Benefits; Selena Gomez Kidney Transplant; World Series; Halloween Business.

Network TV At A Glance:

Russia Meddling Investigation – 33 minutes, 10 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Russia Meddling Investigation; NFL News; Utah-University Shooting.

CBS: Russia Meddling Investigation; Kevin Spacey Sexual Harassment Scandal; Bergdahl Trial; NFL News.

FOX: Russia Meddling Investigation; Russia Meddling Investigation-Democratic Lobbyist; Niger US Casualty Investigation.

NPR: Russia Meddling Investigation; Congress-WH Military Authorization; Climate Change.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in a tax reform industry meeting; participates in a legislative foreign policy lunch; meets with House Speaker oRyan.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public schedule announced.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Nominations hearing considers John Demers to be Assistant Attorney General for the National Security Division Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 106, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

10:00 AM Senate Armed Services CLOSED hearing on Navy Collisions at Sea – CLOSED: Recent United States Navy Collisions at Sea. Witnesses: Admiral John M. Richardson, USN, Chief of Naval Operations; Admiral Philip S. Davidson, USN, Commander, United States Fleet Forces Command. <https://www.armed-services.senate.gov/hearings/17-10-31-recent-united-states-navy-collisions-at-sea> Location: Room SVC-217 <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM FEMA chief testifies to Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on federal response to the 2017 hurricane season – Hearing on '2017 Hurricane Season: Oversight of the Federal Response', with testimony from Federal Emergency Management Agency Administrator Brock Long; U.S. Northern Command Commander Gen. Lori Robinson; Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Homeland Defense Integration and Defense Support of Civil Authorities Robert Salesses; U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Deputy Commanding General for Civil and Emergency Operations Maj. Gen. Donald Jackson; and Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Preparedness and Response Robert Kadlec Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 342, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

10:00 AM National Academies discussion on Manufacturing USA – 'Securing Advanced

Manufacturing in the United States: The Role of Manufacturing USA' National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine discussion, on the highlights of a workshop held in May. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Chris Coons, Massachusetts Institute of Technology's William Bonvillian, NIST Office of Advanced Manufacturing's Michael Molnar, and GLOBALFOUNDRIES' Mike Russo Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC 209-208, Washington, DC www.nas.edu/ <https://twitter.com/NASciences>

10:00 AM Senate Energy Committee hearing on building management and control systems – 'Hearing to Examine Opportunities for Efficiency in Building Management and Control Systems', with testimony from Department of Energy Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy's Daniel Simmons; Pacific Northwest National Laboratory Associate Director for Energy and Environment Dr Jud Virden; Cold Climate Housing Research Center Chief Programs Officer Bruno Grunau; Southern Company Services Director of End-use, Power Delivery and Fleet R&D Tracy Hawkins West; and Emerson Commercial and Residential Solutions Innovation Director John Wallace Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC www.energy.senate.gov

10:00 AM Senate Transportation Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Leon Westmoreland to be an Amtrak Director; Diana Furchtgott-Roth to be Assistant Secretary of Transportation for Research and Technology; Bruce Landsberg to be a National Transportation Safety Board member; and Raymond Martinez to be Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration Administrator Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

2:30 PM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on Native American subsistence rights and international treaties – Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard Subcommittee hearing on 'Exploring Native American Subsistence Rights and International Treaties', with testimony from North Slope Borough, AK, Mayor Harry Brower, and Senior Wildlife Biologist Dr Robert Suydam; Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission Chairman John Hopson Jr.; and Keweenaw Bay Indian Community President Chris Swartz Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

2:30 PM Senate HELP Committee hearing on 21st Century Cures Act implementation – Hearing on 'Implementation of the 21st Century Cures Act: Achieving the Promise of Health Information Technology', with testimony from Deputy National Coordinator for Health Information Technology Jon White; Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services Center for Clinical Standards and Quality Director Kate Goodrich; and Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General Senior Counselor for Health Information Technology James Cannatti III Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

2:30 PM Commerce Secretary Ross testifies to Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on the 2020 Census – Hearing on '2020 Census: Examining Cost Overruns, Information Security, and Accuracy', with testimony from Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross; U.S. Census Bureau Acting Director Dr Ron Jarmin; and U.S. Comptroller General Eugene Dodaro Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 342, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing on tech solutions to extremist content and Russian disinformation online – Crime and Terrorism Subcommittee hearing on 'Extremist Content and Russian Disinformation Online: Working with Tech to Find Solutions', with testimony from Facebook General Counsel Colin Stretch; Twitter Acting General Counsel Sean Edgett; Google Director of Law Enforcement and Information Security Richard Salgado; Foreign Policy Research Institute Fellow Clint Watts; and terrorism analyst Michael Smith II Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

US House: 11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

2:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including consideration of 'H.R. 2921 – National Forest System Vegetation Management Pilot Program Act of 2017', 'H.R. 2941 – Kisatchie National Forest Land Conveyance Act', 'H.R. 3567 – To authorize the purchase of a small parcel of Natural Resources Conservation Service property in Riverside, CA, by the Riverside Corona Resource Conservation District, and for other purposes', 'H.R. 2521 – South Carolina Peanut Parity Act of 2017' under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

5:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 2936, the Resilient Federal Forests Act of 2017' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 9:00 AM U.S. Chamber of Commerce hosts discussion on the future of NAFTA – U.S. Chamber of Commerce hosts discussion on the future of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the stakes for U.S. agriculture and business, featuring Republican Sens. Ted Cruz and Pat Roberts, and USCC President and CEO Thomas Donohue Location: U.S. Chamber of Commerce, 1615 H St NW, Washington, DC www.uschamber.com
<https://twitter.com/USChamber>

12:00 PM 'Report of the Working Group on the Himalayan Region' released at Hudson Institute – 'An Integrated Approach to the Himalayas: Report of the Working Group on the Himalayan Region' launch event at the Hudson Institute, laying out a plan for the U.S. to pursue an integrated approach with friendly states and peoples in the Himalayas to address strategic and population security issues, regional connectivity, water usage and climate change, and cultural preservation, including the protection of women and minorities. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, Hudson Institute Senior Fellow Eric Brown, Wilson Center Asia Program Deputy Director Michael Kugelman, German Marshall Fund Asia program Senior Transatlantic Fellow Andrew Small, Heritage Foundation South Asia Research Fellow Jeff Smith, Hudson Institute Senior Fellow Husain Haqqani, and Hudson Institute Initiative on the Future of India and South Asia Research Fellow Aparna Pande Location: Hudson Institute, 1201 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, Washington, DC <http://www.hudson.org> <https://twitter.com/HudsonInstitute>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Stephen Colbert: "I know it's almost Halloween, but it really feels more like Christmas. Paul Manafort, Paul Manafort, you're just the first of many."

Stephen Colbert: "Remember how the Trump campaign swore over and over they never knew of any attempt to coordinate with Russia? Well, how do I put this? Fake news."

James Corden: "Now there's talk that Manafort didn't really get it when the FBI showed up at his door. He handed out candy and was like, 'And who are you supposed to be?'"

James Corden: [Referring to President Trump's tweet against Hillary Clinton] "You can't get investigators off your case by simply telling them to investigate someone else. That would be like if I got arrested for murder, and my entire defense was, 'Hey, you know who else you should look at? OJ Simpson.'"

James Corden: "It was recently announced that former President Barack Obama has been summoned for jury duty next month in Illinois, and he plans to serve. Yeah. So it looks like two Presidents will be spending some time in a courtroom real soon."

Trevor Noah: "Because Trump's Halloween weekend wasn't all fun and harassing children. He also probably spent the weekend stressed, eating a lot of that candy. Because on Friday night, Trump received the spookiest news of all: Special Counsel Robert Mueller was going to drop his first indictments."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort, was charged today with 12 counts, including acting as an unregistered agent of a foreign principle, money laundering, and conspiracy against the United States. Now, I wouldn't want to judge a book by its cover, but if the book is called 'This Book Is Full of Crime,' I don't need to open it."

Seth Meyers: "The Trump Administration is turning into a game of 'Clue,' but since it's Trump, 'Clueless.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Big story – today, President Trump's former campaign manager, Paul Manafort, was charged with conspiracy against the United States. Yeah, apparently his conspiracy against the United States was suggesting to Donald Trump that he run for President."

radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, September 5, 2017
Date: Tuesday, September 05, 2017 7:21:20 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Wall Street Journal: Zinke Met With Locals Before Drafting Monument Recommendations.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Alaska Files Motion To Join Trump In Lawsuit Over Arctic Drilling.
- Washington Post: Blog: Interior Spokeswoman's Comment On Robert E. Lee Statue Justified.
- Los Alamos (NM) Daily Post: Zinke Appoints Members To Royalty Policy Committee.
- Washington Post: EPA Now Requires Political Aide's Sign-off For Agency Awards, Grant Applications.
- NPR: Legal Scholars Support Reassigned Climate Scientist: NPR.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Counties Bet On Zinke For Millions.
- Independent (UK): World's Largest General Science Organisation Slams Trump's Lack Of 'Scientific Thinking.

- Think Progress: Men Of Sleet: The Snowflakes Behind Trump's Macho-man Act.
- Charleston (WV) Gazette-Mail: Mountaintop Removal Mining Study Singled Out For Interior Cease-work Order.
- WSMV-TV Nashville (TN): Hundreds Suing Federal Government For Gatlinburg Wildfires.
- Fox News: Interior Secretary Zinke Gets It. He Knows That America's Hunters And Anglers Are The Backbone Of Successful Fish And Wildlife Management.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: BLM Considering Oil, Gas Lease Sale Locations.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Gulf Oil Production Down 5.5 Percent.
- BSEE Expects Gulf To Resume Full Production Mid-Next Week.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Post: Kaine To Seek Funding For Eroding Tangier Island.
- Associated Press: After Generations, Salmon Back In Lake Champlain Tributaries.
- Wyoming Tribune Eagle: Drake: Can Energy Industry Survive Zinke's Help?
- Associated Press: River Herring, Hurt By Dams And Climate, Might Be Endangered.
- Associated Press: Denver Airport In Talks To Allow Bison To Roam On 200 Acres.
- Columbus (OH) Dispatch: Scientists Still Scratching Their Heads Over Big Darby Mussel Die Off.
- NPR: NPR Interviews "Bumblebee Hunter" Robbin Thorp.
- San Francisco Chronicle: Sea Otters May Be Victims Of Toxin That Crippled Crab Industry.

National Park Service

- Reuters: California, Washington State Governors Declare States Of Emergency As Wildfires Spread.
- Associated Press: National Parks In Michigan See Increase In Tourism.
- Associated Press: Statue Of Liberty Tour Boat Crew Members Help Rescue Swimmer.
- High Country (CO) News: Slow Progress On Park Service Harassment (National Park Service Staffers Confront Harassment).
- Military: Army Couple Visits Every National Park In Under 5 Years.
- Fredericksburg (VA) Free Lance-Star: Rappahannock Regional Library, Park Service Team Up For Lecture Series On Reconstruction.
- WRVO-FM Oswego (NY): Gillibrand, Katko Pledge To Continue National Park Push For Safe Haven Museum, Fort Ontario.
- Fairbanks (AK) News-Miner: Denali Park Road Plan Allows Deterioration Of Final Miles.
- New York Times: Goodbye, Yosemite.
- Associated Press: Odd Inheritance: 1889 Landmark Courthouse With Clock Tower.
- Los Angeles Times: 2 Bodies, Believed To Be Missing Thai Students, Recovered From Kings River Rapids.
- Associated Press: Campfires Banned In Northwestern Washington Starting Friday.
- Bloomberg News: When Your $10.4 Million Mansion Comes With An Iconic Lighthouse.
- Associated Press: Man Dies While Rappelling Near Zion National Park In Utah.
- Huffington Post: Exploring America's Newest National Park: Pinnacles In Central California.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: OIA Awards CNMI More Than $1M TAP And MAP Grants.
- Marianas Variety: Saipan Middle School Completes Renovation.
- Center For Immigration Studies: North: Three Grim Items At The Intersection Of Immigration And Education.
- Virgin Islands Daily News: Schneider Official: Hospital Services In Jeopardy.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): USVI And U.S. Dept Of Veterans Affairs To Collaborate On Veterans' Health Issues.
- Marianas Variety: B-1 Bombers From Guam Join Display Of Airpower.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Trump Nominates Zatezalo To Oversee MSHA.

US Geological Survey

- Reuters: Magnitude 5.3 Earthquake Hits Southeastern Idaho: USGS.

Top National News

- CBS: Haley: North Korean Leader "Begging For War."
- Reuters: Gas Prices Come Down On Monday.
- CBS: Hurricane Irma Expected To Strengthen As It Heads Toward Caribbean.
- Associated Press: Tainted Water Well Leads PA Resident To Seek Buyout From Cabot.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Nicole Malliotakis, A Gutsy G.O.P. Challenger."
- Washington Post.
 - "Congress's Most Important Assignment After Summer Vacation."
 - "The Last Big Piece Of Unfinished Business From The Great Recession."
 - "In Azerbaijan, Some Journalists Get Free Apartments. Others Get Jail Cells."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Options For Removing Kim Jong Un."
 - "Trump's Korean Trade Folly."
 - "The Free Speech Battles Of Berkeley."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Zinke Met With Locals Before Drafting Monument Recommendations.

The Wall Street Journal (9/4, Carlton) reports on Interior Secretary Zinke's campaign to meet with ranchers and others affected by federal monument designations. Zinke spent much of the summer traveling and holding such meetings before presenting his recommendations on whether to reduce some monuments to President Trump late last month. Zinke told the Journal, "The President directed me to give America a voice [and] a lot of the anger has been that they haven't had a voice."

New Mexico Wildlife Federation Director of Community Relations & Education Andrew Black, New Mexico Wildlife Federation Executive Director Garrett Vene Klasen, JACO Outfitters owner John Olivas, and Southwest Consolidated Sportsmen Co-Chairman Jim Bates argued in an op-ed for The Hill (9/1, Black, Klasen, Olivas, Bates), "As local sportsmen who have spent generations hunting and fishing we find it necessary to set the record straight" about recent arguments that "rolling back public lands might be good for the sportsmen community and wildlife." The writers added, "The proclamation specifically reaffirms the state's right to manage fish and wildlife," and, in fact, will enhance hunting opportunities.

In a guest editorial for the South Florida Sun Sentinel (8/30), the Florida Times-Union Editorial Board wrote, "President Donald Trump may eliminate protections previously granted to some of the nation's monuments." The article states that the Washington Post "reported that...Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante monuments in Utah, and the Cascade-Siskiyou monument in Northern California and Oregon" will be targets in the downsizing efforts. The editorial states, "We should be concerned because this land represents not only the future for Americans, it illuminates remarkable portraits of the past."

NativesOutdoors owner Len Necefer and Sierra Club organizing representative Kimberley Pope argued in an op-ed for the Boulder \(CO\) Daily Camera (9/1) that Zinke's "less-than-two-page report" carries a clear message: "when your only concern is the short-term profits of the fossil fuel industry, you'll mortgage the opportunities of your grandchildren provided by public lands. The story not told in this report is the impact that it will have on rural communities, indigenous peoples and public lands that support a sustainable economy.”

Mark Austin of Escalante, Utah calls in a letter to the editors of the Deseret \(UT\) News (9/4, Austin) for Zinke to ensure a “scientific review of the monuments [is] conducted from within the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) or by objective and credible outside sources.”

Commentary is available also from sources including The Charleston \(SC\) Post and Courier (9/3), KAJO-AM Grants Pass \(OR\) Grants Pass, OR (9/3, Ray), The Wichita Falls \(TX\) Times Record News (9/1), The West Salem \(WI\) Coulee News (9/2, Skoloda), The Ventura County \(CA\) Star (9/2, Capps), The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (9/2, Hamblen), The Taos \(NM\) News (9/1, Hooks), The High Country \(CO\) News (9/1, Thompson), The Kitsap \(WA\) Sun (9/4, Blair), The Cleveland Plain Dealer (9/3, Meyer), The Summit \(CO\) Daily (9/1, Calvert), The Baltimore Sun (8/31), The Traverse City \(MI\) Record-Eagle (9/3), The Joplin \(MO\) Globe (9/1), Keys Weekly \(FL\) (9/1), Workers World (9/1, Mezgar), The Detroit Free Press (9/3), Ashland \(OR\) Jefferson Public Radio (9/4, Profita), The Huffington Post (9/4, Peterman, Contributor), and The Durango \(CO\) Herald (9/2).

Former Interior Secretary Babbitt Blasts Asarco For Land Request. The AP (9/3) reports Former Interior Secretary and Arizona Governor Bruce Babbitt blasted copper mining company Asarco for “its effort to push the government to reduce the size of the Ironwood Forest National Monument near Tucson as it plans an expansion in the area.” Babbitt claims the company is attempting to, in the AP’s words, “take advantage of a favorable political climate during President Donald Trump’s administration” by “framing its request to make a case for its elimination, though its formal request was to modify the monument’s boundaries.”

Alaska Files Motion To Join Trump In Lawsuit Over Arctic Drilling.

Alaska Dispatch News (9/1, DeMarban) reported the state of Alaska filed a motion in federal court Thursday “to intervene alongside President Donald Trump in a lawsuit brought by conservation groups seeking to prevent drilling in the U.S. Arctic Ocean.” Governor Bill Walker said, “In filing this motion, our objective is to make sure that the state of Alaska has future development opportunities in the Arctic (federal waters).”

Natural Gas Intelligence (9/1, Passut) reported the motion seeks “to intervene in support of an executive order (EO) Trump signed last April,” which “directed the Department of Interior (DOI) to consider allowing oil and gas leasing in several Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) areas, including the Atlantic and Arctic oceans, the Beaufort and Chukchi seas, Alaska’s Cook Inlet and the Gulf of Mexico (GOM).”

Blog: Interior Spokeswoman’s Comment On Robert E. Lee Statue Justified.

Erik Wemple wrote in a blog for Washington Post (9/1, Wemple) that “Interior Department spokeswoman Heather Swift had a point when she was quoted in a Post article this week” saying, “Absolutely ridiculous.” President Trump recently “announced the donation of his first-quarter presidential salary to the National Park Service, which would decide on its own how to spend the money,” which NPS later said it would use to restore the “historic Newcomer House on the Antietam battlefield, as well as “underwrite” replacement of rail fencing along Hagerstown Turnpike.” A piece by Justin Wm. Moyer headlined, “Trump donation will help restore historic home near Confederate statue,” attempted to connect Trump’s donation to the Charlottesville violence, alleging the donation would “benefit” a statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee. Wemple added that Swift “said funds used to benefit the historic home adjacent to the statue should not be interpreted as a provocation of those who criticize Confederate imagery, calling any attempt to connect them ‘absolutely ridiculous.’”

Zinke Appoints Members To Royalty Policy Committee.

The Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (9/4, Clark) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “announced the appointment of 20 primary and 18 alternate members to the Department of the Interior’s Royalty Policy Committee,” which is scheduled to hold its first meeting on October 4. “Working closely with the Committee, we will come up with solutions for modernizing the management of public and American Indian assets, while building greater trust and transparency in how we value our nation’s public mineral resources. It’s important that the taxpayers and tribes get the full and fair value of traditional and renewable energy produced on public lands and offshore areas,” Zinke said.

The Hill (9/1, Henry) reported the Interior Department has announced “officials for ConocoPhillips Co., Anadarko Petroleum Corp. and Cloud Peak Energy” as well as “three academics, and representatives from four tribes and six states” will serve on a new committee

“designed to assess federal royalty policies for energy development on public land.” In a statement, Interior Secretary Zinke said, “Working closely with the committee, we will come up with solutions for modernizing the management of public and American Indian assets, while building greater trust and transparency in how we value our nation’s public mineral resources.” Zinke added, “It’s important that the taxpayers and tribes get the full and fair value of traditional and renewable energy produced on public lands and offshore areas.”

Additional coverage is available from OILMAN Magazine (9/4, Ciarlone), Natural Gas Intelligence (9/1), and The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/4, Richards).

EPA Now Requires Political Aide’s Sign-off For Agency Awards, Grant Applications.

The Washington Post (9/4, A1, Eilperin) reports on its front page that the EPA “has taken the unusual step” of putting “political operative” John Konkus “in charge of vetting the hundreds of millions of dollars in grants the EPA distributes annually.” Konkus, “who officially works in the EPA’s public affairs office,” is a “former Trump campaign aide with little environmental policy experience.” He has so far “canceled close to $2 million competitively awarded to universities and nonprofit organizations” – many of them affecting Alaska, whose Sen. Lisa Murkowski irritated President Trump with her vote against the Senate GOP healthcare bill. The Post reports that EPA veterans from the Bush and Obama administrations say no one from Konkus’ office had such authority then. The Post mentions that the Interior Department, “which is conducting a review of its grants, last month canceled a $100,000 National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine study aimed at evaluating the impact of surface mining on nearby communities.”

Legal Scholars Support Reassigned Climate Scientist: NPR.

NPR (9/4, Johnson) offers a transcript of an interview with climate change scientist Joel Clement, “who says he was reassigned in retaliation for his views.” According to NPR, “Clement used to work on policy analysis at the Interior Department. Now he reports to an office that handles accounting issues.” NPR reports Clement is among “about 50 senior executives reassigned by the Interior Department this year,” noting that a spokesperson for the department “says the moves will help taxpayers and streamline department operations.” However, Clement said, “I don’t think they were hiding their cards any when they moved the climate adaptation guy to the fossil fuel royalty collection office.”

Counties Bet On Zinke For Millions.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/2, Harmon) reported local government officials, who are “gambling that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke might find a way to direct money to northwest Colorado counties from oil shale research,” have asked Federal lawmakers “legislators to keep the matter out of a must-pass defense measure.” According to the piece, the Associated Governments of Northwest Colorado asked Sen. Michael Bennet (D-CO) “to refrain from seeking an amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act that would direct the money from an Interior Department account to Colorado. The money, possibly as much as $76 million, has been an issue for years dating back to before the completion of work cleaning up the Anvil Points oil shale research facility west of Rifle.”

World’s Largest General Science Organisation Slams Trump’s Lack Of ‘Scientific Thinking.’

The Independent \(UK\) (9/2, Johnston) reported American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) chief executive Dr Rush Holt “has accused the Trump administration of paying ‘scant attention’ to research and lacking understanding of scientific thinking.” Holt, “speaking amid controversy over the US Department of Interior’s decision to halt a $1m study into the effects of ‘mountain-top’ coal mining on the health of people living nearby,” cited Trump’s “‘great slowness’ in appointing people with a scientific background to senior positions.”

Men Of Sleet: The Snowflakes Behind Trump’s Macho-man Act.

Alan Pyke commented for Think Progress (9/1) that President Trump’s rise has been powered by “many ingredients, but they are all funneled through the same engine: TV and internet chatter.” He alleged that “the web-shouting creche that nurtured Trump’s white-grievance politics into a wave strong enough to sweep him to 300 Electoral College votes last November has a few signature traits,” including a tendency to label one’s opponents as “oversensitive little babies.” Pyke also alleged “Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke may be a Navy SEAL, but he’s packed on some snowflake pounds since leaving the service.” Pyke commented, “If Zinke popping his top at a taxpayer asking him a straightforward question doesn't move you, consider instead his team's reported intervention in the Senate debate over Trumpcare. With the Republican party's long-suffering war against the Affordable Care Act just a few votes shy of triumph in July, the administration knew who it had to convince. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) wasn't ready to go along with leadership's plan. Rather than engage her disagreements and persuade her on the merits, Zinke – whose agency doesn't run health care policy but does wield huge power over gigantic wilderness-heavy states like Alaska – jumped in with threats. Vote with Trump, the secretary's office warned, or Zinke would close the federal faucet."

Mountaintop Removal Mining Study Singled Out For Interior Cease-work Order.

The Charleston \(WV\) Gazette-Mail (9/2, Ward) reported that, although "researchers from around the country are continuing to use Interior Department funding to examine the effects and efficiency of chemical dispersants in cleaning up oil spills" and various other projects, "a panel that is trying to understand why dozens of studies show mountaintop removal mining appears to be making coalfield residents sick has gotten orders from the Trump administration to 'cease' its work." Although "Interior Department officials have downplayed the move" as "part of a review of all Interior grants and partnerships that exceed $100,000," the Gazette-Mail pointed out that the "mountaintop removal study is the only one of eight current Interior-funded National Academies projects that has been put on even a temporary hold." The article linked the move with President Trump's promise to "bring back coal jobs."

Hundreds Suing Federal Government For Gatlinburg Wildfires.

WSMV-TV Nashville, TN (9/2, Burch) reported Knoxville attorney Sidney Gilreath claims to be representing about "200 people who plan to file lawsuits against the U.S. Department of the Interior in connection to the November 2016 Sevier County wildfires." The people, who are seeking "compensation for losing their property" or loved ones, "feel like that the federal government is responsible for letting the fire get out of hand and not managing it properly," said Gilreath. He alleged, "They knew, and we can prove this, that there were extreme drought conditions at the time. They knew that they were short on personnel and equipment because they put in a funding request in for extra personnel in November before this fire."

Also covering the proposed lawsuit were WBIR-TV Knoxville \(TN\) Knoxville, TN (9/1) and WATE-TV Knoxville \(TN\) Knoxville, TN (9/1), while The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (9/3), The Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (9/1, Lakin, Ahillen), and The Asheville \(NC\) Citizen-Times (8/31) offered continuing coverage of the NPS report outlining the causes of the Gatlinburg fire.

Interior Secretary Zinke Gets It. He Knows That America's Hunters And Anglers Are The Backbone Of Successful Fish And Wildlife Management.

NRA Institute for Legislative Action executive director Chris W. Cox argued for Fox News (9/1, Cox) that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's appointment "was celebrated by America's hunting community and those who care about our wildlife resources" because he's "cut from the Roosevelt mold." According to Cox, "A lifelong advocate of hunting and fishing, Zinke's public service career has been focused on protecting our natural resources while recognizing that hunting and fishing are critical to our ongoing success. He clearly understands that without sportsmen at the center of the equation, fish and wildlife are at risk. That's why he prioritized hunting and fishing access from day one at the Interior Department and his comprehensive review of national monument designations was so critically important to America's sportsmen."

Bureau Of Land Management

BLM Considering Oil, Gas Lease Sale Locations.

The AP (9/1) reported, "The Bureau of Land Management announced plans to offer drilling rights on about 145 square miles (380 square kilometers) in a December online auction," citing President Trump's goal of increasing energy production in the US. The AP states the locations include publicly owned "oil and gas near Dinosaur National Monument in northeastern Utah." Officials indicated in a press released that steps will be taken to protect the air and water. Utah Republican Gov. Gary Herbert spokeswoman Kirsten Rapple said, "It appears the BLM did a thorough job in balancing out the feedback that the governor shared."

The Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (9/1) also ran the Associated Press story.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/1, Ramseth) reported that "Federal land managers are moving forward with a proposed sale of controversial oil and gas leases in Utah's San Rafael Swell and on the doorstep of Dinosaur National Monument, the agency announced Friday." Uintah County and officials from the National Park Service fear that the leases will draw away from the Dinosaur's scenic charisma. Utah Governor Gary Herbert has asked the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) to "re-evaluate" three leases, which are adjacent to Utah's half the Dinosaur monument. In response, BLM is deferring two of the leases while the third is set for auction on Dec. 11.

BLM Considers Theodore Roosevelt National Park For Oil, Gas Lease Sale. The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (9/1, Dalrymple) reported that The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) "is considering including a parcel bordering Theodore Roosevelt National Park in a federal oil and gas lease sale." Conservationists have urged the agency to protect a 120-acre plot of land bordering the park's North Unit by not including the parcel in the lease. Former Theodore Roosevelt National Park superintendent and current National Parks Conservation Association consultant Valerie Naylor said, "This small parcel is not going to make or break the lease sale, but it could make or break the park as it relates to the visitor experience."

US Allows Oil, Gas Drilling On Utah Monument Land. The AP (9/1) reported that "federal land managers said Friday they will allow drilling for publicly owned oil and gas near Dinosaur National Monument in northeastern Utah." The article stated that "the Bureau of Land Management announced plans to offer drilling rights on about 145 square miles (380 square kilometers) in a December online auction." While the plan addresses "President Donald Trump's goal of increasing domestic energy production," some officials, including Utah Gov. Gary Herbert (R), are concerned about disruption to the park. The AP added that Bureau of Land Management officials "said energy companies would be required to take steps to protect air and water quality."

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Gulf Oil Production Down 5.5 Percent.

Reuters (9/3) reported about 5.5 percent of the Gulf's oil production, about 96,000 bpd, remained shut on Sunday. Total lost oil production from the Gulf since offshore platforms started shutting is equal to about 2.97 million barrels. The BSEE said, "Since the storm has passed, operators have begun inspecting facilities and resuming production. To date, no damage reports have been received." The Houston Chronicle (9/2, Blunt) reported oil and gas operators started reboarding platforms and drilling rigs to assess the damage from Harvey. The BSEE said personnel have returned to all five rigs evacuated during the storm. Companies have also started reopening shut in wells.

BSEE Expects Gulf To Resume Full Production Mid-Next Week.

The Houston Chronicle (9/1, Osborne) reported Lars Herbst, regional director for the BSEE, said offshore production in the Gulf of Mexico should be back and running close to full capacity by the middle of next week. He said, "There's been no substantial damage reported so far. ... By the middle part of next week we anticipate substantially all of the production to be back online." Regulators also have no reported offshore oil spills because of Harvey. Platts (9/1) reported offshore production has resumed quicker than onshore output in the Eagle Ford shale. Williams spokesman Christopher Stockton said, "We are starting to see some offshore production starting to come back online. ... We expect to see that number continue to improve this weekend." Raymond James analyst Marshall Adkins said soggy conditions will continue to hamper onshore production, as fracking crews are expected to struggle through muddy conditions to return to drilling sites.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Kaine To Seek Funding For Eroding Tangier Island.

The Washington Post (9/2, Portnoy) reported Sen. Tim Kaine this month will push for federal funding to protect Tangier Island from the effects of climate change. The island "has lost two-thirds of its land since the first accurate map was made in 1850," and "could be uninhabitable in 25 to 50 years." However, residents "blame the land loss on waves and storms...not climate change brought on by man-made activities." Still, Kaine hopes that the town will win "a spot in an infrastructure bill that the Trump administration is planning." The Post mentioned that Kaine "was also encouraged to hear officials from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had planned to visit.”

After Generations, Salmon Back In Lake Champlain Tributaries.

The AP (9/3, Ring) reported landlocked Atlantic salmon have been spotted in some Lake Champlain tributaries in Vermont and New York, where they spawn, “for the first time in about 150 years.” According to senior Fish and Wildlife Service fish biologist Bill Ardren, “Salmon are a great indicator species for looking at how well we are doing. So when you start to see salmon reproducing naturally, and the juveniles surviving, that is starting to show that we are making progress in restoring that aquatic ecosystem.”

Drake: Can Energy Industry Survive Zinke’s Help?

Kerry Drake argued for the Wyoming Tribune Eagle (9/1, Drake) that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “new wrecking crew” has been working fast, slamming “the brakes on a plan to protect the greater sage grouse that was years in the making.” Drake argued, “Is the public supposed to be happy that Interior spent a whole 60 days reviewing nearly 100 federal land-use plans in 10 states, behind closed doors, before they hurried to the unfounded conclusion that Zinke knows best? The new plan could allow more drilling in sage grouse habitat, reduce protections in high-priority focal areas for sage grouse and abolish the requirement for Interior to act if catastrophic losses of sage grouse numbers or habitat occurs. ‘Inferior’ would be a better name for this department since the Trump administration took over.”

Retired management consultant Earl DeGroot argued similarly for the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/3) that recent changes to United States Fish and Wildlife Service protections for the sage grouse should be alarming to sportsmen and Wyoming residents alike.

River Herring, Hurt By Dams And Climate, Might Be Endangered.

The AP (9/4, Whittle) reports the National Marine Fisheries Service is “reviewing the status of a pair of river herring species to see if the little fish should be listed under the Endangered Species Act because of factors including dams and climate change.” The agency is considering “the health of the alewife and blueback herring populations,” which “live in rivers from Maine to Florida,” because “conservationists have long made the case that their declining populations pose a major problem for the health of ecosystems along the East Coast.”

Denver Airport In Talks To Allow Bison To Roam On 200 Acres.

The AP (9/3) reported authorities are considering a plan “to allow bison from the Rocky Mountain Arsenal National Wildlife Refuge to roam on 200 acres belonging to the Denver International Airport, airport officials said.” The AP added, “Word of the potential deal comes after federal wildlife officials doubled the fenced space for the refuge’s herd, which now numbers 122 bison after 18 calves were born this year.”

Scientists Still Scratching Their Heads Over Big Darby Mussel Die Off.

The Columbus \(OH\) Dispatch (9/4, Renault) reports scientists are still confused about “the massive die-off that stretched along almost 60 miles of Big Darby” last year. The Dispatch mentions that US Fish and Wildlife Service biologist and contaminants specialist Deborah Millsap said “officials have ‘pretty much exhausted all potential pathways’” in their search for the cause of the die-off.

NPR Interviews “Bumblebee Hunter” Robbin Thorp.

NPR (9/3, Burns) interviewed “octogenarian entomologist” Robbin Thorp about his work with the Franklin bumblebee, briefly mentioning that Jeff Dillon with the US Fish and Wildlife Service organized the search for the elusive species this year.

Sea Otters May Be Victims Of Toxin That Crippled Crab Industry.

The San Francisco Chronicle (9/1, Fimrite) reports two California sea otters undergoing treatment at Marine Mammal Center in the Marin Headlands are suffering “brain lesions apparently caused by the same neurotoxin that closed down the Dungeness crab fishery two years ago and killed hundreds of other sea creatures, officials said.” The Chronicle cites statistics from the US Fish and Wildlife Service stating that California sea otters “also known as southern sea otters, haven’t been spotted in the bay since the early 1800s, and there have been fewer than 20 confirmed sightings in the Bay Area since 1979, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.”

National Park Service

California, Washington State Governors Declare States Of Emergency As Wildfires Spread.

Reuters (9/2, Coffman) reported California Gov. Jerry Brown declared a state of emergency as the Ponderosa Fire spread across northern Butte County, prompting evacuations of around 500 homes and burning 3,715 acres. Meanwhile, a second wildfire, the La Tuna fire, broke out Friday near Los Angeles.

Meanwhile, the AP (9/2) reported that Washington Gov. Jay Inslee has declared a state of emergency for all of Washington State as firefighters battle “multiple fires east of the Cascades, including the Jolly Mountain Fire in Kittitas County.”

ABC World News Tonight (9/4, story 7, 0:30, Muir) reported, “Firefighters still fighting the largest fire in the history of Los Angeles. Officials say rain and cooler temperatures are now helping firefighters battle the La Tuna Fire, now 30 percent contained after destroying four homes and forcing a state of emergency. In Oregon tonight, more than 150 hikers stranded by this fire, now rescued, and the evacuations are mounting. Authorities believe that blaze was caused by illegal fireworks. More than 75 large wildfires now burning in the West.”

According to NBC Nightly News (9/4, story 5, 1:50, Alexander), “Nearly 60 major fires are raging across the region, forcing thousands to evacuate and destroying dozens of homes so far. Record-setting Labor Day weekend heat only helping fuel those flames, We get more now on that from NBC’s Steve Patterson.” NBC (Patterson) added, “In Los Angeles, state of emergency. The so-called La Tuna Canyon Fire scorching 7,000 acres and forcing 1,400 people to evacuate, destroying four homes. Today, a break in the weather. Firefighters getting the upper hand. Evacuation orders lifted, but the homecoming heartbreaking.” According to NBC, one “Southern California blaze is one of 58 un-contained wildfires sweeping across the West, from Nevada to Washington state. In Northern California, 32 homes destroyed by a fire nearly six square miles, more than 1,600 firefighters on the front lines. In Montana, multiple wildfires scorching bone-dry land. Hot shot fire crews taking on the massive Low Peak Fire. In Oregon, close call. More than 150 hikers stranded Saturday, trapped between two out of control wildfires. The National Guard rescued them, airlifting some to safety. There was relief, hugs and smiles when they reunited. A happy ending this Labor Day weekend, but with more hot weather in the forecast, fire season is just reaching its peak.”

Sources offering coverage of various wildfires across the US include The AP (9/4, Volz, Thanawala), The Missoula Current \(MT\) (9/4), The AP (9/1, Volz), The AP (9/3), The AP (9/1), The AP (9/1), The Telegraph \(UK\) (9/2, Millward), and The Independent \(UK\) (9/3, Weber, Angeles).

National Parks In Michigan See Increase In Tourism.

The AP (9/3) reports data from the National Park Service shows “tourism is up more than 5 percent” at Michigan’s national parks through July. National Park Service Midwest Region special assistant Lauren Blacik explained, “[Michigan has] even more visitors at this point in 2017 than we had in 2016, and 2016 was a record-breaking year.” Blacik added, “Nationally, we saw a huge increase in enthusiasm and support for our national parks around the National Park Service centennial last year in 2016, and that seems to have just continued this year in 2017 with more people wanting to explore their national parks, discovering those parks they might not even have known are in their backyards and planning vacations to national parks.”

Statue Of Liberty Tour Boat Crew Members Help Rescue Swimmer.

The AP (9/2) reported National Park Service police officers and Statue of Liberty tour boat crew members “rescued a man who jumped into the water at the southern tip of Manhattan” over the weekend. According to the AP, “a Park Police officer swam out to the man, grabbed him and swam to shore with him. Fellow officers and statue cruise personnel helped pull both men out of the water.”

Slow Progress On Park Service Harassment (National Park Service Staffers Confront Harassment).

The High Country \(CO\) News: (9/4, Gilpin) Lyndsey Gilpin reports Yellowstone National Park Superintendent Dan Wenk, who “spent the last year investigating allegations of sexual harassment and gender discrimination in his park,” is now “carrying out up to 12 ‘disciplinary actions’ – which could range from letters of reprimand to firings – and is working to improve training and reporting processes for Yellowstone employees." Gilpin argues that, "although Wenk's response is a step in the right direction for Yellowstone, the agency as a whole still hasn't delivered on many of its promises."

Army Couple Visits Every National Park In Under 5 Years.

Military (9/2, Bushatz) reports married Army Capts. Kendall and John Gomber planned to "check off their 59th and final national park this Labor Day weekend with a visit to Acadia National Park in Maine." The couple began exploring the National Parks with "a quiet weekend trip to Arches National Park, Utah, in early 2012."

Rappahannock Regional Library, Park Service Team Up For Lecture Series On Reconstruction.

The Fredericksburg \(VA\) Free Lance-Star (9/4, Freehling) reports the National Park Service and the Central Rappahannock Regional Library are offering "a series of programs focused on the complex and difficult years that followed the Civil War in the Fredericksburg region."

Gillibrand, Katko Pledge To Continue National Park Push For Safe Haven Museum, Fort Ontario.

WRVO-FM Oswego, NY (9/4, Horning) reports Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY) and central New York Rep. John Katko (R-Camillus) recently "toured the Safe Haven Holocaust Refugee Museum in Oswego" in an effort to "renew interest and support for making the historic site part of the National Park Service (NPS)."

Denali Park Road Plan Allows Deterioration Of Final Miles.

The Fairbanks \(AK\) News-Miner (9/3, Friedman) reported the National Park Service intends to "focus repair money on the first miles of the Denali Park Road while allowing some deterioration at the end of the road in the face of anticipated funding shortages."

Goodbye, Yosemite.

In an op-ed for the New York Times (9/2, Duane), author Daniel Duane argued a recent contract dispute forcing the renaming of several hotels in California offers "an opportunity for the National Park Service to dump dozens of place names that are the linguistic equivalents of Confederate statues."

Odd Inheritance: 1889 Landmark Courthouse With Clock Tower.

The AP (9/3, Collins) reported the state of Connecticut has abandoned use of a 19th-century courthouse and returned the property to George Beckwith, whose ancestors allowed the state to lease the property with the stipulation that it be returned to their decedents if no longer in use. The AP stated that the "courthouse is the most prominent landmark in the Litchfield Historic District, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places."

2 Bodies, Believed To Be Missing Thai Students, Recovered From Kings River Rapids.

The Los Angeles Times (9/1, Panzar, Hamilton) reported authorities on Friday pulled two bodies – "believed to be those of students from Thailand who went missing" – from a vehicle that had remained "trapped for weeks in the middle of a treacherous Kings River gorge in Central California." The pair – believed to be University of South Florida exchange students Pakapol Chairatnathrongporn, 28, and Thiwadee Saengsuriyarit, 24 – was "visiting Kings Canyon National Park when the manager of the motel they were staying in reported them missing."

Campfires Banned In Northwestern Washington Starting Friday.

The AP (9/1) reported the Washington State Department of Natural Resources initiated a "burn ban" beginning last Friday "for northwest Washington because of continued hot, dry weather and extreme fire danger." The ban reportedly "applies to all outdoor burning including recreation fires on state forests, state parks and forestlands under DNR fire protection within Whatcom, Skagit, Snohomish, Island and San Juan counties" and "includes all National Park Service lands and campgrounds along State Route 20 as well as Hozomeen and the entire Stehekin Valley."

When Your $10.4 Million Mansion Comes With An Iconic Lighthouse.

Bloomberg News (9/1, Gross) reported the Saybrook Breakwater Lighthouse – "a Connecticut icon" – is now owned by construction magnate Frank Sciamè. The article detailed the complicated process by which “the National Park Service began trying to transfer control of 12 ‘excess’ lighthouses away from the federal government and, ideally, to nonprofit, educational, or cultural agencies. For various reasons – logistical, bureaucratic, political – this didn’t happen,” according to Bloomberg. But “by 2015, Sciame had the chance to acquire it through a General Services Administration auction.”

Man Dies While Rappelling Near Zion National Park In Utah.

The AP (9/4) reports an unnamed New Hampshire man, 38, was killed “while rappelling near Zion National Park in southern Utah.” He was reportedly “hiking with four siblings east of the national park when the incident occurred Sunday,” and the group says “they were rappelling down about 300 feet for an unknown reason the deceased fell the final 80 feet into a rocky canyon.”

Exploring America’s Newest National Park: Pinnacles In Central California.

Huffington Post (9/1, Payne, Contributor) Contributor Stefanie Payne shared her experiences at “Pinnacles in California – America’s newest national park.” She said the park closed out her 52 week road trip with Jonathan Irish to every US national park in celebration of “the centennial anniversary year of the Park Service.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

OIA Awards CNMI More Than $1M TAP And MAP Grants.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (9/1) carries a press release announcing the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands was awarded upwards of “$1 million in funding through the Office of Insular Affairs’ Technical Assistance Program and the Maintenance Assistance Program for key community projects and public services.”

Saipan Middle School Completes Renovation.

Marianas Variety (9/5) reports Hopwood Middle School has finished its renovation, “with the help of Insular ABC and the Public School System through the Capital Improvement Project office.” According to Marianas Variety, “The Assessment of Buildings and Classrooms or ABCs is a partnership between the U.S. Department of the Interior’s Office of Insular Affairs and the CNMI.”

North: Three Grim Items At The Intersection Of Immigration And Education.

David North, formerly of the Interior Department’s Office of Insular Affairs, argued for The Center For Immigration Studies (8/31, North) that “three bits of information – all unrelated to each other and all grim in nature – popped up this week in the arena where education and immigration mingle” – “A Chinese college student was deported for hiring someone else to take her pre-admission English test; a Midwest school is offering F-1 visas and work opportunities to alien graduate students who need to be on the campus only two out of 56 days; and one of the U.S. territories, finding that the H-1B program for teachers does not allow sufficient exploitation of its foreign teachers, is moving toward a different and more employer-friendly foreign worker program, the J-1.”

Schneider Official: Hospital Services In Jeopardy.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (8/31, Blackburn) reported Schneider Regional Medical Center officials “pleaded with senators for more money for Fiscal Year 2018” but lawmakers “pushed back, pointing out that the entire government needs cash and the hospital may need to operate more efficiently.”

USVI And U.S. Dept Of Veterans Affairs To Collaborate On Veterans’ Health Issues.

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (8/31) reported “Governor Kenneth Mapp and officials of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs agreed to collaborate more closely to expand and to improve services to veterans in the territory, Government House has announced.”

B-1 Bombers From Guam Join Display Of Airpower.

Marianas Variety (9/5) reports the US displayed its “newest and most advanced fighter jet, the Marine Corps’ F-35B Lightning II,” in a “show of force meant as a signal to North Korea.” The jets “joined Air Force B-1B Lancers from Guam for the first time in a sequenced mission with Japan and South Korea, Wednesday.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Trump Nominates Zatezalo To Oversee MSHA.

The Hill (9/2, Thomsen) reports President Trump on Friday nominated David Zatezalo, the former chairman of Rhino Resources, a company that "clashed with federal officials over mining safety rules under President Obama," as an assistant secretary of Labor overseeing the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA).

US Geological Survey

Magnitude 5.3 Earthquake Hits Southeastern Idaho: USGS.

Reuters (9/2, Dunham, Coffman) reports Idaho experienced a magnitude 5.3 earthquake "on Saturday about 63 miles (101 km) from the city of Pocatello, the U.S. Geological Survey reported."

Top National News

Haley: North Korean Leader "Begging For War."

Monday's emergency session at the UN Security Council is garnering heavy media coverage, with remarks by Ambassador Haley widely reported. All three networks reported Monday night on Monday's meeting. In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (9/4, lead story, 2:25, Quijano) said Haley "warned there are limits to America's patience" and "pressed the Security Council for more sanctions against the rogue nation."

The Los Angeles Times (9/4, Demick) reports Haley said North Korean leader Kim Jong Un is "begging for war," and "called for members to exhaust all possible diplomatic measures and impose urgent economic sanctions to prevent it." From the US to Japan, the Times says ambassadors "spoke in increasingly shrill tones, expressing fear and anger" after Sunday's test of a nuclear bomb. Said Haley, "His abusive use of missiles and his nuclear threats shows that he is begging for war."

In the lead story for CNN's Situation Room (9/4), Sara Murray said the Administration is "now...making clear its patience is running thin," and in the lead story for Fox News' Special Report (9/4), Kevin Corke reported that Haley issued a "scathing rebuke of Pyongyang's latest nuclear test." Haley was shown stating: "To the members of the Security Council, I must say enough is enough." The CBS Evening News (9/4, story 2, 2:50, Quijano) showed Haley saying, "The time for half measures in the Security Council is over. The time has come to exhaust all of our diplomatic means before it is too late."

The New York Times (9/4, Chan, Ramzy, Choe) reports Haley "did not threaten unilateral military action by Washington or repeat President Trump's statement on Twitter" Sunday that South Korea's call for more diplomacy was a form of "appeasement." Instead, Haley said "the time has come for us to exhaust all of our diplomatic means before it's too late." Bloomberg News (9/4, Kang, Kim, Wasson) too says Haley "reinforced Trump's threat on Twitter to cut off trade with nations that trade with North Korea," saying the US "will look at every country that does business with North Korea as a country that gives aid to their reckless intentions."

Haley, the AP (9/4, Peltz, Sanminiatielli) reports, "said the US would look at countries doing business with the North and planned to circulate a resolution this week with the goal of getting it approved Sept. 11." But the AP says the US resolution "faces an uncertain future. Russia and China have both proposed a two-pronged approach: North Korea would suspend its nuclear and missile development, and the United States and South Korea would suspend their joint military exercises."

The Washington Examiner (9/4, Siegel) reports Haley "criticized proposals for both North Korea and South Korea to each stop military activities," calling suggestions that the US end its activities in the region "insulting." Townhall (9/4, O'Brien) reports Haley also criticized the Security Council, which she said has often been "too slow and too weak" to respond to North Korea's missile tests.

At the White House on Monday, Reuters (9/4, Kim) reports President Trump "held calls with foreign leaders, including South Korean President Moon Jae-in and German Chancellor Angela Merkel," and the White House declared that "all options to address the North Korean threat are on the table." Politico (9/4, Lacy) reports that according to a White House statement, Trump and Moon discussed North Korea's latest nuclear test and pledged to "strengthen military capabilities" – including "initial approval for South Korea to beef up its missile payload capabilities and 'conceptual approval' for the purchase of billions of dollars worth of weapons and equipment from the US." The CBS Evening News (9/4, story 3, 1:50, Quijano) said South Korea is now allowing the US to install four more THAAD rocket launchers.

The AP (9/4) reports both leaders also agreed that the latest test was "unprecedented." The Washington Times (9/4, Boyer) also reports similarly on Trump's call with Moon. A New York Times (9/4, Choe) analysis writes that for the last seven decades, the US and South Korea "have been the closest of allies," but Trump "issued a blast of antagonistic comments in the last few days that have made South Koreans doubt that they can take the alliance for granted any longer." The tone of Trump's statements "stunned" South Korean officials and "underscored what unlikely partners he and Mr. Moon are."

A Wall Street Journal (9/4, Board) editorial says Trump's threats Sunday to withdraw from the US-South Korea trade pact has caused unease in South Korea. The Journal argues that if the US were to withdraw from the pact, Kim Jong Un would benefit.

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (9/4, Nations, Cheng, Davidson) reports that also on Monday, South Korea warned that North Korea appears to be preparing to test another intercontinental ballistic missile. Maj. Gen. Jang Kyung-soo, acting deputy minister for national defense policy, didn't say what signs of activity were detected, nor did he give a time frame for a possible launch.

South Korea Defense Minister Song Young-moo, the Washington Post (9/4, Fifield) reports, on Monday "said it was worth reviewing the redeployment of American tactical nuclear weapons to the Korean Peninsula to guard against the North, a step that analysts warn would sharply increase the risk of an accidental conflict." Song said he asked Defense Secretary Mattis during talks at the Pentagon last week "for strategic assets like US aircraft carriers, nuclear submarines and B-52 bombers to be sent to South Korea more regularly."

An AP (9/4, Lederman) analysis says the Administration's options "are going from bad to worse as Kim Jong Un's military marches ever closer to being able to strike the US mainland with nuclear weapons." The AP says that as President Trump "seeks to show global resolve after the North's most powerful nuclear test, his leverage is limited even further by new tensions he's stoked with South Korea, plus continued opposition from China and Russia."

The Wall Street Journal (9/4) editorializes that the US and allies have never utilized all of their options to prevent North Korea from becoming a nuclear power, and warns that time is running out to prevent Kim Jong Un from becoming a nuclear menace.

The CBS Evening News (9/4, lead story, 2:25, Quijano) said that while the North will need more tests to know if its warhead can survive reentering the atmosphere after an intercontinental flight, "it seems like only matter of time." Stephen Ganyard similarly said on ABC World News Tonight (9/4, story 4, 1:10, Muir), "Theoretically, [Kim Jong Un] has the ability to hit most of the United States with a thermonuclear weapon, but more concerning is no matter what the US seems to do, he doesn't slow down. In short, Kim is winning, and the rest of the world is losing."

Richard Engel reported on NBC Nightly News (9/4, story 2, 3:20, Alexander), "Multiple US officials tell NBC News, North Korea crossed a big line on Sunday, detonating what it claimed was a thermonuclear bomb." However, Engel added: "I'm hearing that at least the military members of Trump's Administration don't want this to become a military conflict. They want a diplomatic solution through China, but they say the window for diplomacy, if it doesn't work, is somewhat limited, and it is closing because at some stage, North Korea will have enough missiles, enough nuclear weapons to pose an irreversible threat to the United States."

The New York Post (9/4, Fredericks) reports Switzerland on Monday "offered to act as a mediator to help resolve the North Korea nuclear crisis, offering to host negotiations to avoid a military confrontation." Swiss President Doris Leuthard said her nation is "ready to offer our role for good services as a mediator." She added, "I think that's our role to look at what kind of possibilities we find. Because, well, Twitter won't be an adequate instrument. This must be very discreet."

Sen. Ed Markey said on CNN's Situation Room (9/4) that there "is no military solution to this problem," because it would result in the North retaliating against South Korea, creating what "would be the most catastrophic event on this planet since WWII." He said the agenda must be getting the Chinese, the Russians, and others to "impose crippling sanctions" on Pyongyang, "and then we try to negotiate quickly."

Sen. Ben Cardin likewise said on CNN's Situation Room (9/4) that a military option "could be catastrophic" in terms of "loss of life" and it therefore "has to be a last resort."

Rep. Mike McCarthy said on Fox News' Special Report (9/4) that President Trump "has been strong," but "we need to speak with one voice. ... We have to bring more allies together. I think pressuring China to do more is the responsible thing to do."

Wall Street Journal (9/4) columnist Gerald F. Seib writes that the most urgent need is for the international community to negotiate an end to North Korea's missile and weapons tests.

Mara Liasson said on Fox News' Special Report (9/4), "There have been a lot of mixed messages. The President has been on a lot of different sides of this. At some point, he has talked about talking to North Korea. At other times he has tweeted that the time for talking is over."

Tom Rogan of the Washington Examiner said on Fox News' Special Report (9/4), "Ultimately, the Administration would be willing to accept North Korea now as a nuclear weapons power. What they would not be willing to accept...is the idea that North Korea could put those weapons onto intercontinental ballistic missiles. That's something that alters the game."

China: Trump's Trade Threat Over North Korea "Unacceptable." ABC World News Tonight (9/4, story 3, 2:50, Muir) reported that after President Trump declared on Twitter that "he is considering launching an economic attack, 'stopping all trade with any country doing business with North Korea.'" That would presumably include China. The Chinese Foreign Ministry is "firing back." The AP (9/4) reports China on Monday criticized Trump's threat Sunday to "cut off US trade with countries that deal with North Korea and rejected pressure to do more to halt the North's nuclear development." Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Geng Shuang said, "What is definitely unacceptable to us is that on the one hand we work so hard to peacefully resolve this issue and on the other hand our interests are subject to sanctions and jeopardized. This is unfair."

A New York Times (9/4, Mozur) analysis writes that Trump's threat to stop all trade with countries doing business in North Korea "would mean economic disaster for the United States as well." The North's biggest partner by far is China, which is also the largest trading partner of the United States, and "that makes cutting off all United States trade with China a nonstarter, experts say." Breitbart (9/4, Carney) reports former Bush Administration Treasury spokesman Taylor Griffin warned that if the US cuts off trade with China, the consequences would be "apocalyptic."

Japan Planning For Possible Evacuation Of Its Citizens In South Korea. Nikkei Asian Review (9/5) reports that as tensions with North Korea "reach new heights," Japan is planning for "a possible mass evacuation of the nearly 60,000 Japanese citizens currently living in or visiting South Korea." Prime Minister Shinzo Abe said Monday, "There is a possibility of further provocations. We need to remain extremely vigilant and do everything we can to ensure the safety of our people."

Hudson Institute fellow Walter Russell Mead writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/4, Mead) that North Korea's nuclear buildup is pushing Japan towards developing its own nuclear weapons. In the event Japan decides to pursue nuclear weapons, Mead says it is likely that South Korea and Taiwan would soon follow.

US Officials Monitoring Ties Between North Korea, Iran. The Washington Free Beacon (9/4, Kredon) reports US officials are "closely monitoring an ongoing meeting between senior North Korean and Iranian officials that comes on the heels of a nuclear test by Pyongyang, according to senior Trump administration officials and other sources who expressed concern that North Korea is helping to put the Islamic Republic back on the pathway to a functional nuclear weapon." Sources told the Free Beacon that Pyongyang "continues to stockpile illicit nuclear material on Iran's behalf in order to help the Islamic Republic skirt restrictions implemented under the landmark nuclear deal."

Gas Prices Come Down On Monday.

Reuters (9/4, George) reports US gasoline prices fell on Monday as port operations, pipelines and refineries bring services back online. AAA said benchmark US gasoline futures dropped by 3 percent, while retail prices only climbed one cent on Monday. Reuters (9/3, George) reported that prices continued to be boosted by the limitations of refineries and pipelines as they begin to restart. Texas ports also have restricted operations that limits the ability to load large vessels. The Financial Times (9/4, Raval) reports GasBuddy analyst Patrick DeHaan said all 50 states had higher average prices in the last week. However, any respite may be short-lived as attention shifts to Hurricane Irma.

Gasoline Spiked During Weekend. Reuters (9/1, Seba, Kumar) reported that retail gasoline prices “surged to two-year highs on Friday and global shipping routes were scrambled, even as some of the nation’s oil refineries began restarting in the wake of Hurricane Harvey.” The national retail average rose “to $2.519 a gallon, the highest since August 2015.” Bloomberg News (9/1, Grant) reported prices saw “the largest one-day gasoline price jump in more than a decade on Thursday.” In total, “gasoline prices have risen by 17 cents a gallon since...Harvey first made landfall,” and prices are expected to continue their increase. According to AP (9/1, Lauer, Martin), “prices rose at least 15 cents in 24 hours in several metropolitan areas,” and “at least .10 cents in eight states since Thursday: South Carolina, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia and Texas.” The Financial Times (9/2, Crooks) reported in continuing coverage that gas prices reached $2.59 per gallon on Saturday, hitting a two-year high.

The Richmond \(VA\) Times-Dispatch (9/1) reported Virginia gas prices jumped 11 cents a gallon after the hurricane, and the Knoxville \(TN\) News Sentinel (9/1, Ohm) reported “Tennessee is among states that have seen the largest gas price increases since one week ago,” with jump of 22 cents per gallon. The Atlanta \(GA\) Journal-Constitution (9/2, Kempner) reported Atlanta gas prices “increased another 2 cents on average Saturday morning,” after a “sharp spike” of 12 cents on Friday. Similarly, the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (9/1, Chanen) reported Minnesota gas prices are expected to climb another 10 cents per gallon this weekend, and the AP (9/2) reported New Jersey prices are up “up 18 cents from last week.”

Also reporting are Bloomberg News (8/31, Sharples), The Washington Post (9/1, David Koenig |, Ap), The New York Post (9/1, Musumeci), Reuters (9/1, Flitter, Parraga) and Barron's (9/1, Stone)

The Wall Street Journal (9/1, Yang) reported gas prices eased slightly on Friday, as some refineries announced plans to resume operating over the next few days. Bloomberg News (9/1, Katakey) reported Friday’s drop was the first “in almost two weeks.” The Pittsburgh \(PA\) Business Times (9/1, Lott) added that Bevi Powell, Senior Vice President, AAA East Central, believes prices may increase over the next week, but said that “high inventory levels have the potential to offset gas price surges similar to what we have seen with past hurricanes.”

Abbott: Texas Has Enough Gasoline To Meet Demand. Reuters (9/1, Scheyder) reported Texas Gov. Greg Abbott at a news conference “said on Friday that the state will not run out of gasoline after Tropical Storm Harvey flooded much of the Gulf Coast and shut down a quarter of U.S. refining capacity.” Abbott asserted, “There’s plenty of gasoline in the state of Texas. ... Don’t worry. We will not run out.” The San Antonio Express-News (9/1, Brezosky) reported Texas Department of Agriculture Commissioner Sid Miller said the state-wide gas panic was “short term” as the start started to reverse the flow of pipelines from Gulf Coast refineries, bring in fuel by barge, and shut down pumps spilling gas contaminated by the storm. Miller said, “We have plenty of fuel. ... We have a pipeline that goes from our refineries up to Oklahoma and we’ve reversed that pipeline. Now we have fuel coming back into Texas instead of leaving.” Chris Tomlinson wrote in his column for the Houston Chronicle (9/1, Tomlinson) that Texas’ gas panic is self-induced, and not a result of Hurricane Harvey. Tomlinson said that when consumers started hearing that prices of gasoline would increase because 25 percent of the nation’s refining capacity was shut in, they went “nuts” to fill their tanks at a good price. Railroad commissioner Ryan Sitton said, “It’s just like a run on a bank, it’s a run on gas stations. ... Right now almost every Texan is refueling their car, and not only are they fueling up their car, they are filling up gas cans.” Texas consumers typically use 1 million bpd, but the panic buying caused demand to surge to 3 million bpd on Wednesday.

Gas Prices Threaten Trump’s Economy. The Hill (9/4, Henry) reports the higher gas prices threaten the bright economic picture that President Trump has lauded during his time in office. Even a short-term surge in gas prices has the potential to have a lingering impact on the American economy, particularly when combined with the other economic damage from Harvey. Heritage Foundation fellow Stephen Moore said, “The negative effect will be not pretty. We’re talking about maybe knocking half a percent, or one percent, off GDP for a quarter or two, higher gas prices for sure, because Houston is the energy capital of the country. ... So all those things are negative.” USA Today (9/1, Davidson) reported Barclays expects the economic growth for the third quarter to be between 1-1.5 percent, down from its initial estimate of 2.5 percent, according to chief US economist Michael Gapen. He said the impact is a result of “the high value-added nature of the energy sector to the U.S. economy. It’s a significant disruption to oil, natural gas and chemical production.” Moody’s expects Harvey to take an overall economic toll between $86-108 billion, with up to $11 billion in lost economic output.

Hurricane Irma Expected To Strengthen As It Heads Toward Caribbean.

The CBS Evening News (9/4, story 4, 0:25, Quijano) reported the category four Hurricane Irma is expected to grow stronger by Tuesday night “as it approaches the eastern Caribbean, including Antigua and St. Maarten.” ABC World News Tonight (9/4, lead story, 2:20, Muir) reported Irma is “sweeping toward the Caribbean” at 130 mph and is “expected to strengthen even more.” The hurricane is expected to move north of Haiti and Cuba, with South Florida in its track. NBC Nightly News (9/4, lead story, 1:50, Alexander) reported Irma “has the potential to not only devastate the Caribbean but also the eastern seaboard.” Florida Gov. Rick Scott has already announced a state of emergency.

The Tallahassee \(FL\) Democrat (9/4, Attelbury) reports that Scott “issued the executive order” for all 67 Florida counties “to give local governments time, resources and flexibility to prepare for Irma.” The Miami Herald (9/4, Dixon, Neal, Wooldridge) reports that “most forecasts call for the storm, which was traveling at 13 mph, to turn to the west-northwest by the end of the day Tuesday — putting Florida in its path,” and “many South Floridians took advantage of the Labor Day holiday to hit grocery and hardware stores.”

Linzie Janis reported on ABC World News Tonight (9/4, story 2, 2:15, Muir) that with the storm expected to hit Puerto Rico Wednesday, “the National Guard has been activated, schools have been closed, and workers ordered to cut their day short tomorrow, so they can get ready.” FEMA has “400 people on stand-by. Giant crates of supplies delivered to the US Virgin Islands, where Irma could hit as early as tomorrow night.”

The Washington Post (9/4, Lamothe, Achenbach, Contrera, Larimer) reports that the Coast Guard has begun “moving a number of helicopters out of Texas and into Puerto Rico, Florida and Georgia, in anticipation” of Irma’s landfall. With many model forecasts showing storm “striking the US East Coast as early as Saturday or Sunday, with tropical storm winds arriving in Florida as soon as Friday,” FEMA “is also deploying its resources eastward in advance of Irma, FEMA Administrator William ‘Brock’ Long said Sunday on CBS News’ ‘Face the Nation.’” USA Today (9/4, Graham) says forecasters are warning East and Gulf Coast residents to “start preparing now.” According to weather officials, Irma “is currently a Category 4 storm — Harvey level,” and “is currently moving at a speed of about 14 mph, according to the Weather Channel.”

Tainted Water Well Leads PA Resident To Seek Buyout From Cabot.

The AP (9/2, Rubinkam) reported that Ken Morcom and Kim Grosso want Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. to purchase their home since they “doubt they could sell a house with tainted water.” The AP states that, “state regulators found that Cabot...had contaminated 18 residential wells with methane,” which led to an ongoing controversy. Morcom and Grosso’s home sits in the Dimock County, PA in an area roughly 150 miles north of Philadelphia. The AP added that Cabot has taken the position that the water wells were contained with methane prior to the company’s drilling activities, however, 2012 Environmental Protection Agency testing showed that “well water” for 64 homes “didn’t pose a health hazard.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Nicole Malliotakis, A Gutsy G.O.P. Challenger.” A New York Times (9/5, Board) editorial profiles Nicole Malliotakis, “the daughter of a father from Crete (and of a Cuban-born mother)” and “young Republican member of the State Assembly from Staten Island’s eastern shore whose district extends into southern Brooklyn.” Malliotakis is the latest Republican mayoral candidate, and the Times says “she has guts” to campaign against incumbent Bill de Blasio. Malliotakis believes “Blasio has presided over a deteriorated quality of life, a mass transit system in shambles and an unacceptable municipal policy that protects undocumented immigrants convicted of serious crimes.” Regardless of whether Malliotakis “will raise enough money to qualify for city matching funds and for a place in a debate,” the Times encourages de Blasio “to debate her anyway. The city would be the better for it.”

Washington Post.

“Congress’s Most Important Assignment After Summer Vacation.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/4) says Treasury Secretary Mnuchin’s call to include the debt ceiling increase in the hurricane relief bill “could be a risky maneuver, given the inevitable resistance from the GOP right; it’s also somewhat illogical, since the government would not be borrowing to enable new spending, but to pay for that which Congress has already approved.” The Post points out that President Trump, House Speaker Ryan, and Senate Majority Leader McConnell “have repeatedly insisted that they intend to raise the debt limit,” and argues that they “should make a ‘clean’ bill Job One,” as “preserving the United States’ basic financial credibility must take precedence.”

“The Last Big Piece Of Unfinished Business From The Great Recession.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/4) writes that the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp – Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac – should begin transitioning the current federal holdings of roughly half of all US residential mortgages to a new system in which the private sector “takes the lead” in mortgage finance and under which government, at most, provides “a guarantee against a catastrophic meltdown.”

“In Azerbaijan, Some Journalists Get Free Apartments. Others Get Jail Cells.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/4) writes that despite Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev’s recent award of hundreds of apartments to journalists while proclaiming the importance of freedom of speech, his presidency has waged “a sustained and punishing campaign...against dissenting scholars, human rights defenders and journalists.” The Post calls for the release of imprisoned journalists in Azerbaijan, and concludes that no one “should be fooled by the president’s fancy words about a free press nor by his corrosive practice of buying off journalists.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Options For Removing Kim Jong Un.” The Wall Street Journal (9/4) editorializes that the US and allies have never utilized all of their options to prevent North Korea from becoming a nuclear power, and warns that time is running out to prevent Kim Jong Un from becoming a nuclear menace.

“Trump’s Korean Trade Folly.” A Wall Street Journal (9/4, Board) editorial says President Trump’s threats Sunday to withdraw from the US-South Korea trade pact has caused unease in South Korea. The Journal argues that if the US were to withdraw from the pact, Kim Jong Un would benefit.

“The Free Speech Battles Of Berkeley.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/4) writes that despite University of California, Berkeley chancellor Carol T. Christ’s efforts to ensure that events featuring conservative speakers continue on campus, Berkeley Mayor Jesse Arreguin has asked the university to cancel upcoming controversial speakers. The Journal argues that Ms. Christ correctly understands the importance of the First Amendment and that despite the security difficulty of hosting controversial speakers, the mayor has a responsibility to ensure public safety.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Returning Lawmakers Face A Tough Agenda With Little Margin For Error
US Urges Strong Response As North Korea Prepares New Launch
United Technologies To Buy Rockwell Collins For \$23 Billion
P&G Proxy Fight Pits Former Finance Chief Against Longtime Protégé
Battle Shapes Up In Congress Over Fate Of Immigration Program

New York Times:

US Urges Fuel Cutoff For North Korea, Saying It’s ‘Begging For War’
On DACA, President Trump Has No Easy Path
Trump Faces Deal-Making Challenges As Congress Returns
Traces Of Crime: How New York’s DNA Techniques Became Tainted
In Texas, Distrust Of Washington Collides With Need For Federal Aid
‘Brexit’ Threatens Subsidies For UK’s Landed Gentry, And Queen

Washington Post:

Cold Political Truth Emerges In Arctic
Hill Is Facing DACA Battle
Pastors Try An Appeal To Trump’s Heart
Return Of US Arms Discussed In Seoul
‘If They Deport All Of Us, Who Will Rebuild?’

Political Aide Now Vets EPA's Grants

Financial Times:

North Korea Is 'Begging For War' Says US Ambassador To UN

Reddit Caught Between User Highs And 'Edgier' Lows

Hollywood Licks Its Wounds After Dismal Summer

Washington Times:

Iran Fears No International Intervention Into Alarming Treatment Of Imprisoned Dissidents

How Sarah Huckabee Sanders Remains Calm Amid White House Press Storms

Patriot Prayer Urges Supporters To Let The Antifa Beat Them Up In Oregon

Menendez Corruption Case Puts Other Democrats At Legal Risk, Sidelines Senator For Trial

Armed With New Data, Committees Ready To Ratchet Up Investigations Into Trump's Ties With Russia

Terrorist Attacks In Spain Reveal EU Security Weaknesses, Radical Islamic Strengths

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Hurricane Irma-Forecast; Hurricane Irma-Preparation; North Korea Nuclear Test; North Korea Nuclear Test-Bomb Strength; White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Hurricane Harvey-Tolls; West Coast-Wildfires; Utah-Hospital Police Violence; Philadelphia-Car Break Failure; Temple University Student Murdered; British Royal Family-Pregnancy; Hurricane Harvey-Neighbors.

CBS: North Korea Nuclear Test; North Korea Nuclear Test-White House; North Korea Nuclear Test-South Korean Response; Hurricane Irma; Hurricane Harvey-Environmental Impact; Hurricane Harvey-Health Risk; White House-DACA Repeal Plan; West Coast-Wildfires; Gasoline Price Hike; British Royal Family-Pregnancy; Hurricane Harvey-Drone Operators.

NBC: Hurricane Irma-Forecast; North Korea Nuclear Test; White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Hurricane Harvey-Recovery Effort; West Coast-Wildfires; Utah-Hospital Police Violence; British Royal Family-Pregnancy; College Football Season; Hurricane Harvey-Katrina Survivors Help.

Network TV At A Glance:

North Korea Nuclear Test – 14 minutes, 25 seconds

Hurricane Harvey – 13 minutes, 35 seconds

White House-DACA Repeal Plan – 7 minutes, 50 seconds

Hurricane Irma – 6 minutes, 50 seconds

West Coast-Wildfires – 4 minutes

British Royal Family-Pregnancy – 2 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Hurricane Irma; North Korea Nuclear Test.

CBS: North Korea Nuclear Test; Hurricane Irma; Hurricane Harvey; White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Utah-Hospital Police Violence.

FOX: White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Hurricane Irma; Hurricane Harvey.

NPR: White House-DACA Repeal Plan; Hurricane Harvey; North Korea Nuclear Test; Chicago Newspapers Merger.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with the National Economic Council; meets with key members of Congress and his Administration regarding tax reform; speaks with Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull of Australia by telephone.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a swearing-in ceremony for President and Chief Executive Officer of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) Ray Washburne; participates in a swearing-in ceremony for US Surgeon General Dr. Jerome Adams.

US Senate: 1:15 PM Dem Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto participates in press call on DACA – Democratic Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto participates in a press conference call to discuss the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program and 'call on President Donald Trump to protect DACA'. Sen. Cortez Masto is joined by DACA-recipient Astrid Silva Location: TBD
<https://www.cortezmastosenate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenCortezMasto>

3:00 PM Senate votes on U.S. District Judge for the District of Columbia nominee – Senate convenes and proceeds to executive session to consider the nomination of Timothy Kelly to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Columbia, followed by a vote on the nomination Location: Washington, DC <http://www.senate.gov/>

US House: 2:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including consideration of 'H.R. 1843 – Clyde-Hirsch-Sowers RESPECT Act', 'H.R. 3110 – Financial Stability Oversight Council Insurance Member Continuity Act', 'H.R. 2864 – Improving Access to Capital Act', as amended, and 'S. 1616 – Bob Dole Congressional Gold Medal Act' under suspension of the rules Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

4:00 PM House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 3354' – the legislative vehicle for the remaining appropriations bills Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 11:00 AM U.S. ambassador to the U.N. Nikki Haley in conversation at AEI – American Enterprise Institute hosts conversation with U.S. Permanent Representative to the United Nations Amb. Nikki Haley Location: American Enterprise Institute, 1789 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.aei.org/> <https://twitter.com/AEI>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

The late night shows did not air or were re-runs.

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, September 12, 2017
Date: Tuesday, September 12, 2017 7:03:13 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Associated Press: Pence: Flight 93 Passengers Might Have Saved My Life On 9/11.
- The Hill: Zinke On Irma: 'Leave No Neighborhood Behind'.
- Webster County (MO) Citizen: Wonders Of Wildlife Announces Grand Opening Events Schedule Celebrating Conservation.
- Elko (NV) Daily Free Press: Convention Highlights Mining Success Stories.
- Wired: The Science Of Fighting Wildfires Gets A Satellite Boost.
- Natural Gas Intelligence: Additional Coverage: House GOP Tacks Amendments Targeting Obama-Era Rules To Appropriations Bill.

- Forbes: Land Of Many Uses Or No Uses?
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Logging Is Necessary For Katahdin Woods And Waters' Future Sustainability.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Judge Orders Cayuga Nation Properties In Seneca Falls To Be Vacated.
- MGM Won't Get Rehearing In Challenge Of 3rd-casino Law Enacted In 2015.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Environmental Groups' Lawsuit Challenges Sale Of Oil And Gas Leases.
- Casper (WY) Star-Tribune: Cheney Votes Against Ban On Wild Horse Slaughter As Wyoming Herds Grow.
- Carlsbad (NM) Current-Argus: BLM Gets $34 Million In Revenue From Eddy County Lease Sales.
- Horse: BLM Releases Decision For Red Desert Wild Horse Gather.
- St. George (UT) News: Wild Horse Adoption Event To Feature Utah's Own Cedar Mountain And Sulphur Horses.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Control Of Fugitive Methane Essential To Health.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Cooper Confirms State's Opposition To Coastal Drilling.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- US Officials Celebrate Desalination Plant In New Mexico.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Vermont Public Radio: Old Tensions Simmer Anew As Feds Plan Expansion Of Silvio O. Conte Wildlife Refuge.
- U.S. News & World Report: Some New Mexico Lawmakers Concerned With Wolf Recovery Plan.
- Reuters: Endangered Florida Deer Spotted After Irma Raised Fears For Species.
- Kenosha (WI) News: Prairie Restoration Begins At KD Park.
- St. George & Southern Utah Independent: The Mexican Wolf Recovery Plan Is A Sham.
- Arizona Daily Star: Phoebe Drew Moore: We Must Protect The Arctic Refuge.

National Park Service

- Tri-City Herald (WA): National Park Manager For Hanford Manhattan Project Park Unit Named.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Trump Administration Halts Pollution Controls At Utah Plants.
- U.S. News & World Report: Wanted: Volunteer Shooters To Thin Grand Canyon Bison Herd.
- Courthouse News: Court Weighs Annual Review For Elk Hunting In Grand Teton.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Fox News: Secretary Ryan Zinke Talks Hurricane Irma, 9/11.
- ABC: US Military Evacuating Americans, Delivering Relief Supplies In Caribbean.
- Fox News: UN Security Council Approves New Sanctions Against North Korea.
- Marianas Variety: US, Marshall Islands Hold Annual Compact Funding Meeting.
- Washington Post: Guam Delegate May Have Violated Emoluments Clause With Lease, Ethics Office Says.
- Marianas Variety: HANMI Occupancy 97% In August.
- Marianas Variety: NMI Customs Aims For International Standards.

US Geological Survey

- Arizona Public Media: USGS: Wildfire-Caused Erosion Endangers Western Watersheds.
- Water Deeply: Study: Rivers Recover Faster Than Expected After Dam Removal.
- East Idaho News: USGS Says 260 Earthquakes Have Struck Eastern Idaho Since Sept. 2.
- San Francisco Chronicle: Additional Coverage: Nevada's Jeff Davis Peak Might Be Renamed For Escaped Slave.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- Washington Post: Trump On 9/11: US Committed To "Destroying The Enemies Of All Civilized People."
- The Hill: White House: Trump May Ask Congress For More Disaster Funding.

- Politico: Courting Democrats, Trump To Hold Dinner On Tax Reform.
- Washington Examiner: National Debt Passes $20 Trillion For First Time.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Want To Make A Deal, Mr. Trump?"
 - "Democratic Primary Choices."
- Washington Post.
 - "It Was Best To Prepare For The Worst."
 - "How Politics Should Be."
 - "An Authoritarian In The White House."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Ninth Circuit 'Resistance.'"
 - "Trump, Taxes And The Democrats."
 - "The Better IRS Reform."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Pence: Flight 93 Passengers Might Have Saved My Life On 9/11.

The AP (9/11, Mandak) reports that Vice President Pence addressed relatives and friends of the victims of United Flight 93 at Shanksville, Pennsylvania's Flight 93 National Memorial in a memorial service Monday morning. In a solemn and at times emotional speech before about 1,000 spectators, Pence praised the Flight 93 passengers' heroism and said that their actions "might well have saved his life." Pence "said he was in Washington as a member of Congress on 9/11, and learned that the Capitol was a possible target of the hijacked plane, which was only 12 minutes away." "It was the longest 12 minutes of my life," Pence said.

USA Today (9/11, Groppe) reports that Pence continued, saying, "But it turned to 13 minutes, then 14, and then we were informed that the plane had gone down in a field in Pennsylvania." He "called the efforts by the 40 crew members and passengers who revolted against the terrorist hijackers 'a debt I don't think I'll ever be able to repay.'" WJAC-TV Johnstown, PA (9/11, Stanish, Hartmann) reports online that Pence "ended his speech by saying the memory of the loved ones on Flight 93 will never die."

Additionally, the Johnstown \(PA\) Tribune-Democrat (9/11, Pesto) reports that earlier in the ceremony, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "echoed several of the same themes as he introduced Pence to the crowd, saying: 'The heroism and courage of the 40 passengers and crew is special because it was their actions that protected our nation.'" Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolfe also spoke, describing the bravery of regular people on Flight 93 "who did not know that they would become a powerful symbol of what patriotism truly means." Also attending were Reps. Bill Shuster and Keith Rothfus, and acting National Park Service Director Mike Reynolds.

Additional coverage is provided by Business Insider (9/11, Smith), the Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (9/11, Wardle), the Westmoreland \(PA\) (9/11), the Westmoreland \(PA\) (9/11, Huba), the State College \(PA\) Centre Daily Times (9/11, Pesto), and WTAJ-TV Johnstown, PA (9/11, Valentine).

Fox News Host Asks Ryan Zinke If 9/11 Memorials Will Be Taken Down Next. The Washington Examiner (9/11, Yilek) reports that "Fox & Friends" host Brian Kilmeade asked Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Monday "whether 9/11 memorials would be taken down some day, after cities have started removing Confederate monuments in response to the violence in Charlottesville, Va., last month." Kilmeade asked Zinke "if he was concerned about the Flight 93 National Monument in Pennsylvania being taken down in the future." Kilmeade asked Zinke, "Do you worry 100 years from now someone is going to try to take that memorial down like they're trying to remake our memorials today?"

The Washington Times (9/11, Persons) reports that Zinke "said Monday that monuments should be learning opportunities and should not be destroyed." Zinke said, "I'm one that believes that we should learn from history, and I think our monuments are part of our country's history. We can learn from history. Since we don't put up statutes of Jesus, everyone is going to fall morally short. I think reflecting on our history, both good and bad, is a powerful statement and part of our DNA."

Also reporting are CNN (9/11, Kludt), the Washington Post (9/11, Phillips), the New York Daily News (9/11, Brennan), the Harrisburg \(PA\) Patriot-News (9/11, Vendel), the San Francisco Chronicle (9/11, Boucher), the Independent \(UK\) (9/11, Dc), The Week (9/11, Stanek), the Daily Caller (9/11, Pearce), the Huffington Post (9/11, Wanshel), the Daily Beast (9/11, Kirell), Talking Points Memo (9/11, Lafond), GQ (9/11, Willis), and The Blaze (9/11, Taylor).

Zinke On Irma: 'Leave No Neighborhood Behind'

The Hill (9/11, Savransky) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Monday "said it's important no neighborhood is forgotten in the aftermath of Hurricane Irma." On Fox News, Zinke discussed the "devastation" in the territories, highlighting the damage in the Virgin Islands. Zinke said, "But certainly, the president's focus is leave no neighborhood behind."

Additional coverage was provided by Newsmax (9/11, Fitzgerald).

Trump Has 22,000 Non-FEMA Employees Helping With Irma Response. The Washington Examiner (9/11, Giaritelli) reports, "Federal agencies have deployed nearly 22,000 employees to Florida and surrounding states to help with the response efforts following Hurricane Irma, the Federal Emergency Management Agency announced Monday afternoon." The Bureau of Indian Affairs "deployed some personnel to work with the Miccosukee and Seminole tribes, both of whom have lost power." The U.S. Geological Survey "continues to carry out field measurements and planting storm-tide sensors on the coasts of Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina."

Irma Batters Florida With Massive Flooding, Electric Outages. Politico Morning Energy (9/11, Adragna) reports that Hurricane Irma "prompted House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy to scrap votes scheduled for today, but lawmakers will vote on lingering EPA and Interior amendments to an eight-title spending package H.R. 3354 (115) this week."

Wonders Of Wildlife Announces Grand Opening Events Schedule Celebrating Conservation.

The Webster County \(MO\) Citizen (9/11) reports that Wonders of Wildlife National Museum & Aquarium on Monday "announced details for its grand opening celebrations including a historic event welcoming the most significant gathering of prominent North American conservation leaders and influencers ever assembled in our nation's history." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke will be among the "featured guests" at the grand opening celebrations which kick off Wednesday, September 20.

Also reporting are KOLR-TV Springfield \(MO\) Springfield, MO (9/11, Wheeler), KYTV-TV Springfield \(MO\) Springfield, MO (9/11), and KTTS-AM Springfield \(MO\) Springfield, MO (9/11, Snider).

Convention Highlights Mining Success Stories.

The Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (9/11, Featherston) reports that "telling the success stories of the mining industry became a theme of the 2017 Nevada Mining Association Convention's last day Saturday, Sept. 9, at Harrah's Lake Tahoe in Stateline." According to the article, "mining companies' economic impact, community support, environmental reclamation and concern for safety were among the positive stories speakers had to share during the event, held Sept. 6-9." Katharine MacGregor, acting assistant secretary for lands and minerals management at Interior Department, "said the federal government under the presidential administration recognizes the state's contributions to the national economy and wants to foster the development of mineral resources."

The Science Of Fighting Wildfires Gets A Satellite Boost.

Wired (9/11, Molteni) reports that "last month, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke traveled to his home state of Montana for an on-site briefing on the Lolo Peak fire, burning just south of Missoula and turning the valley's air into toxic nublulae." Joined by Agricultural Secretary Sonny Perdue and members of Montana's Republican delegation, Zinke "pointed the finger not at drought or climate change, but on mismanagement resulting from lawsuits by 'environmental extremists'"

According to the article, "Zinke's comments are reigniting some old debates about the best way for people to manage forests that have been turned into tinderboxes by decades of overgrazing, fire suppression, and extended droughts."

Additional Coverage: House GOP Tacks Amendments Targeting Obama-Era Rules To Appropriations Bill.

Additional coverage of the amendments to the Interior-Environment spending bill was provided by Natural Gas Intelligence (9/11, Passut) and Roll Call (9/11).

Land Of Many Uses Or No Uses?

In a piece for Forbes (9/11, Flows), Terry Anderson, a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution and at the Property and Environment Research Center in Bozeman, MT, writes that "instead of letting professionals manage our lands and our wildlife, environmental groups want to create de facto wilderness areas where backpackers displace loggers, ranchers, and miners." Anderson urges Congress to "go to work reforming legislation in ways that return land management to federal and state professionals." He suggests that "a starting point would be to require approval by state congressional delegations of any national monument designated in their state."

Logging Is Necessary For Katahdin Woods And Waters' Future Sustainability.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (9/11, Doran), Dana Doran, executive director of the Professional Logging Contractors of Maine, writes that "as debate continues over the future of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, the myth that active timber harvesting within its boundaries would be a bad thing is being repeated too often for professionals in the logging industry to ignore." Doran asserts that "logging is not only necessary for the monument, but is just what it requires to achieve long-term sustainability." Doran argues that "a forest that is not managed with responsible timber harvesting eventually becomes overgrown and ultimately succumbs to insects, disease and quite often fire."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Judge Orders Cayuga Nation Properties In Seneca Falls To Be Vacated.

The Auburn \(NY\) Citizen (9/11, Craig) reports that "a state Supreme Court justice has ordered members of the Cayuga Nation to vacate five properties in Seneca Falls, including the gas station and convenience store, so they can be turned over to Clint Halftown and his new federally recognized Cayuga Nation Council." The Bureau of Indian Affairs "formally recognized Halftown, Tim Twoguns and others as the new leaders of the nation earlier this year, despite an objection by an opposing group formerly known as the Unity Council." With the BIA ruling, state Supreme Court Justice Dennis F. Bender held "Friday that he did have the authority to make a decision in this case and grant an injunction in favor of Halftown."

Additional coverage was provided by the Syracuse \(NY\) Post-Standard (9/11, Dowty).

MGM Won't Get Rehearing In Challenge Of 3rd-casino Law Enacted In 2015.

The New London \(CT\) Day (9/11, Hallenbeck) reports that "a federal appeals court has denied MGM Resorts International's bid for a rehearing in its attempt to overturn the 2015 state law that enabled the Mashantucket Pequot and Mohegan tribes to solicit casino site proposals." According to the article, "in an order filed late last week in Manhattan, the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals denied a petition MGM Resorts filed in July and amended last month."

Bureau Of Land Management

Environmental Groups' Lawsuit Challenges Sale Of Oil And Gas Leases.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/11, Whaley) reports that "two environmental groups on Monday filed a lawsuit challenging the Bureau of Land Management's June sale of oil and gas leases in Northern Nevada." On June 14, the BLM "offered nearly 200,000 acres of public lands in Nevada's Battle Mountain district for fossil fuel development, including hydraulic fracturing." The lawsuit filed by the Center for Biological Diversity and the Sierra Club "argues the BLM failed to consider the potential consequences of oil drilling in the area, from contamination of critical desert water sources to emission of climate-altering greenhouse gases."

Cheney Votes Against Ban On Wild Horse Slaughter As Wyoming Herds Grow.

The Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (9/11, Rosenfeld) reports that Rep. Liz Cheney is “backing the Trump administration’s request to allow the slaughtering of wild horses for meat in order to control growing herds.” Cheney “voted against a measure last week that would have barred the Bureau of Land Management from killing healthy horses or selling them to be slaughtered.” Cheney said in a statement, “The BLM has failed for many years to effectively manage these horses. Their population has exploded causing extension ecological damage to Wyoming land and resources, threatening our livestock and resulting in unsustainable conditions for the horses.”

BLM Gets $34 Million In Revenue From Eddy County Lease Sales.

The Carlsbad \(NM\) Current-Argus (9/11) reports that “more than 4,000 acres of federal land in Eddy County were leased in a quarterly sale that netted the Bureau of Land Management over $34 million.” In all, “over 15,000 acres — or 62 parcels — in six New Mexico counties were leased in the Sept. 7 sale.” The sale “brought in a total of $130 million, that federal and state officials said is further proof of the promise of the Permian Basin.”

BLM Releases Decision For Red Desert Wild Horse Gather.

The Horse (9/11) reports that the Bureau of Land Management has “issued its decision on a proposed wild horse gather in Wyoming’s Red Desert Wild Horse Herd Management Area Complex.” The BLM Rawlins and Lander field offices will “gather and remove wild horses at a future date that has yet to be determined.”

Wild Horse Adoption Event To Feature Utah’s Own Cedar Mountain And Sulphur Horses.

The St. George \(UT\) News (9/11) reports that “the Bureau of Land Management and the Delta Wild Horse and Burro Facility will host an open house adoption Sept. 23 featuring wild horses gathered from the Cedar Mountain and Sulphur herd management areas in western Utah.” According to the article, “approximately 180 horses, featuring Cedar Mountain weanlings and Sulphur yearling horses, will be available for adoption from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.”

Control Of Fugitive Methane Essential To Health.

In an op-ed for the Santa Fe New Mexican (9/11, McNall), Shirley McNall writes that “it is hard to understand how the Environmental Protection Agency and the Bureau of Land Management can justify staying their methane rules.” McNall writes that “exposure to these leaking pollutants endangers the health and welfare of the people who must ‘exist’ near an oil or gas facility.” She asserts that “our health is too precious to sacrifice for energy production.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Cooper Confirms State’s Opposition To Coastal Drilling.

The Palmetto \(SC\) Business Daily (9/11) reports North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper has confirmed the state’s opposition to offshore drilling. In August, Cooper and the Department of Environmental Quality sent a letter to the US BOEM saying, “Because offshore drilling threatens North Carolina’s critical coastal industries and unique coastal environment with limited benefits for our citizens, it is a bad deal for North Carolina. Accordingly, I ask that you respect the wishes of our state and maintain in the new OCS Leasing Plan the current prohibition of oil and gas drilling off North Carolina’s coast.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

US Officials Celebrate Desalination Plant In New Mexico.

The AP (9/12) reports that “federal water managers are in New Mexico this week to celebrate the 10th anniversary of a research center dedicated to pursuing technology that can turn brackish groundwater into usable water.” Bureau of Reclamation officials “will be in Alamogordo on Tuesday and Wednesday to mark the anniversary of the national desalination research facility.” The center is “the only major research facility in the United States dedicated solely to the desalination of brackish and impaired groundwater.”

Fish And Wildlife Service

Old Tensions Simmer Anew As Feds Plan Expansion Of Silvio O. Conte Wildlife Refuge.

Vermont Public Radio (9/11, Hirschfeld) reports that "a proposal to expand a U.S. Fish and Wildlife refuge in northeast Vermont has stirred up long-running tensions between conservationists and the Vermont timber industry." Andrew French, "the project leader for the national Silvio O. Conte Fish and Wildlife Refuge, concedes that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has a different objective, when it comes to land management practices, than people who make a living off timber harvests." As the FWS "revises and refines its management plans for the refuge, French says there will be numerous chances for all constituencies to register their concerns." He says, "There's so much common ground ... What we try to do is through this document, we try to provide a forum and foundation for communication between the different stakeholders."

Meanwhile, Seven Days Vermont (9/11, Hallenbeck) reports that "supporters of an expansion to the Silvio O. Conte National Fish & Wildlife Refuge were surprised and disappointed to learn Gov. Phil Scott has concerns about the long-planned project." In a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "dated September 1, Scott said he was 'very apprehensive' about the federal government's plan." However, Heather Furman, director of the Nature Conservancy's Vermont chapter, said "she thought the state's concerns had been addressed, especially after a January decision by the federal government to go ahead with the expansion."

Some New Mexico Lawmakers Concerned With Wolf Recovery Plan.

The AP (9/12) reports that "some state lawmakers in New Mexico say a plan for recovering endangered Mexican gray wolves in the American Southwest is flawed and politically driven." Twenty-one Democrats "outlined their concerns in a letter sent recently to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service." The lawmakers "say federal officials should specify a target for wolf releases as well as a benchmark for genetic diversity among the population in New Mexico and Arizona."

Endangered Florida Deer Spotted After Irma Raised Fears For Species.

Reuters (9/11, Cherelus) reports that "several endangered deer found only in the lower Florida keys were sighted on Monday, easing fears about the fate of the tiny species after Hurricane Irma swamped their vulnerable archipelago ecosystem." According to experts, "it was too early to tell how the overall population of up to one thousand Key deer had fared." However, "those who were anxious about their survival rejoiced on social media when a short video was posted on Twitter showing several cavorting by a roadside on Big Pine Key."

Prairie Restoration Begins At KD Park.

The Kenosha \(WI\) News (9/11) reports that "an $8,000 grant award from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will help launch the first phase of a prairie restoration plan at KD Park. Kenosha County Executive Jim Kreuser announced Monday." The project "began late last week, with the spraying of herbicides to eradicate non-native grasses within the restoration area." The next part of "the park's master plan calls for the restoration of a 27-acre mesic prairie in the eastern section of the park, with the project to be split into two phases."

The Mexican Wolf Recovery Plan Is A Sham.

In an op-ed for the St. George & Southern Utah Independent (9/11, Robinson), Kirk Robinson, executive director of the Western Wildlife Conservancy, writes that "with its recent Draft Mexican Gray Wolf Recovery Plan, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service seeks to devolve its statutory authority and responsibility for recovery of a highly endangered species onto the states of Arizona and New Mexico." He claims that "this will not only undermine the prospect for recovery of this and other endangered species, but will undermine the Endangered Species Act itself." Robinson concludes that "the Draft Mexican Gray Wolf Recovery Plan is a shameful sham and should be rejected."

Phoebe Drew Moore: We Must Protect The Arctic Refuge.

In an op-ed for the Arizona Daily Star (9/12, Moore), Phoebe Drew Moore, an 8th-grader at The Gregory School and a member of Tucson Audubon Society, calls for protection of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Moore is concerned that "President Trump wants to let oil and gas companies drill on the delicate coastal plain of the refuge where millions of birds raise their young, where giant herds of caribou migrate for the critical summer calving season and where polar bears make dens to raise their cubs." She urges senators and representatives "to stand up for the Arctic refuge, its wildlife and the birds that travel to Arizona and every other state."

National Park Service

National Park Manager For Hanford Manhattan Project Park Unit Named.

The Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (9/11, Cary) reports, "The Hanford portion of the Manhattan Project National Historical Park should have its first park service manager on site this fall." Becky Burghart has been "named site manager for the Hanford portion of the park and could be in the Tri-Cities as soon as Sept. 24." Burghart has some familiarity with Hanford as the current chief of interpretation at White Sands National Monument in New Mexico. Burghart said the new position provides her "with a unique opportunity to draw on my interpretive background and community collaboration experience in the early development of one of the newest units of the National Park Service." Kris Kirby, superintendent of the Manhattan Project National Historical Park, said. "Becky comes to the (project) with a breadth of experience facilitating complicated dialogue and interpreting complex histories."

Trump Administration Halts Pollution Controls At Utah Plants.

The AP (9/7, McCOMBS) reports that "an appeals court granted a request Monday from President Donald Trump's administration to halt a plan for new pollution controls at Utah's oldest coal-fired power plants aimed at reducing haze near national parks." The 10th Circuit Court of Appeals "approved EPA administrator Scott Pruitt's request to halt that lawsuit while his agency revises a plan that called for new equipment to reduce nitrogen oxide emissions at two coal plants in Emery County." According to the article, "environmental and clean air groups expressed dismay over the decision Monday that they say rejects EPA's own research that showed the plan would have cut down haze near eastern Utah's Arches and Canyonlands national parks, in addition to other conservation and wilderness areas."

Wanted: Volunteer Shooters To Thin Grand Canyon Bison Herd.

The AP (9/11, Fonseca) reports that the National Park Service "plans to thin a herd of bison in the Grand Canyon through roundups and by seeking volunteers who are physically fit and proficient with a gun to kill the animals that increasingly are damaging park resources." According to the article, "about 600 of the animals now live in the region, and biologists say the bison numbers could hit 1,500 within 10 years if left uncontrolled." The NPS "gave final approval to the bison reduction plan this month."

Court Weighs Annual Review For Elk Hunting In Grand Teton.

Courthouse News (9/11, Eakin) reports that "the D.C. Circuit heard oral arguments Monday about whether a new environmental review must be conducted each year when elk hunting in Wyoming's Grand Teton National Park is reauthorized." Wildlife photographers Timothy Mayo and Kent Nelson "originally sued the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Parks Service in 2014." On Monday during oral arguments in the D.C. Circuit, they "repeated their stance that a 2007 bison and elk management plan – which calls for a reduction in the Jackson elk herd in Grand Teton National Park – requires the agencies to submit annual discretionary decisions about whether to authorize elk hunting, and under what conditions, for review under the National Environmental Policy Act, or NEPA."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Secretary Ryan Zinke Talks Hurricane Irma, 9/11.

On Fox News (9/11), Interior Secretary joined 'Fox & Friends' from Shanksville, Pennsylvania to talk about rebuilding efforts following Hurricane Irma. Zinke also discussed 9/11 and the Flight 93 memorial.

Also reporting are the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/11), the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/11), the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/11), the St. Thomas Source (9/10, Roberts), the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/10), the Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (9/10), WCBS-TV New York New York (9/10), the St. Croix Source (9/9), the St. Thomas Source (9/11), and the St. Thomas Source (9/10).

US Military Evacuating Americans, Delivering Relief Supplies In Caribbean.

ABC World News Tonight (9/11, story 8, 1:30, Muir) reported that the US military is “scrambling to get stranded American tourists out of storm-ravaged St. Martin, as teams move into the US Virgin Islands to help keep law and order.” On the “devastated islands” there is “no power, few supplies, and many are growing increasingly desperate.” The US Coast Guard is delivering supplies to St. Thomas, “bringing everything from generators to food, water, clothing and law enforcement personnel to help with the security situation.” Royal Caribbean is also “sending ships loaded with supplies to evacuate more people over the next week.” NBC Nightly News (9/11, story 4, 2:00, Holt) also reported that cruise ships are arriving to take home stranded tourists, while San Juan, Puerto Rico is “playing a key role tonight in the recovery efforts in the Virgin Islands. ... Supplies are being flown in, then ferried on a daily basis by the US Coast Guard and others.”

The New York Times (9/11, Ferré-Sadurní) reports that “to most Americans nervously watching the path of Hurricane Irma,” the US Virgin Islands were “little more than marks on a map as the storm churned its way to the mainland. But on Monday...it became clear that the country had a humanitarian crisis on its hands in one of its tropical paradises.” Residents on St. John, “estimated that 80 percent of its structures had been extensively damaged.” White House Homeland Security Adviser Bossert told reporters on Monday that the US military deployed an aircraft carrier off St. Croix to deliver aid to nearby islands.

The AP (9/11, Rodriguez, Boylan) reports the US government “said it was sending a flight Monday to evacuate its citizens from St. Martin, one of the hardest-hit islands,” and a Royal Caribbean Cruise Line ship was “expected to dock near St. Martin to help.”

Stranded Passengers On Cruise Ship Describe “Awful” Conditions. The New York Post (9/11, Li, Fears) reports that “about 4,000 people were stuck aboard a Miami-based cruise ship off the coast of Mexico on Monday.” The ship, which is operated by Norwegian Cruise Line, returned to Miami ahead of the storm, “two days early, to unload. But many people couldn’t find hotel rooms or flights out of Florida, so when offered a chance to stay aboard for free, they took it.” The ship was scheduled to head back toward Miami on Monday night in the hopes that Port Miami would be open on Tuesday.

UN Security Council Approves New Sanctions Against North Korea.

Fox News’ Special Report (9/11) reported the UN Security Council on Monday unanimously approved new sanctions to be imposed against North Korea unless it halts its nuclear program. The new sanctions block the export of all textiles and restrict the amount of oil and crude that UN member states can sell to North Korea. Fox News notes that prior to the vote, North Korea’s Foreign Ministry lashed “out at the US for sponsoring the latest resolution,” warning it will “make absolutely sure that the US pays a due price.”

The Washington Post (9/11, Lee, Rauhala) says the sanctions “are potentially far-reaching in their ability to shave as much as $1.3 billion from North Korea’s revenue.” Additionally, textiles accounted for $726 million last year, “representing more than a quarter of North Korea’s export income.” The New York Times (9/11, Sengupta) reports Ambassador Haley “cast the resolution as a victory in her Security Council remarks,” crediting “what she called President Trump’s relationship with his Chinese counterpart, Xi Jinping, in achieving the toughened sanctions – the second raft of United Nations penalties against North Korea since August.” Following the vote, Haley told the council, “We don’t take pleasure in further strengthening sanctions today. We are not looking for war,” according to Reuters (9/11, Nichols). “The North Korean regime has not yet passed the point of no return,” Haley continued. She added, “If it agrees to stop its nuclear program, it can reclaim its future ... if North Korea continues its dangerous path, we will continue with further pressure.”

“The resolution is a watered-down version of what the US initially proposed,” USA Today (9/11, Hjelmgaard) reports, and “a compromise resolution apparently was worked out in negotiations with Russia and China, which favor a political solution and have said that additional sanctions would have a limited impact.” Specifically, the agreed-upon resolution “did not include an oil import ban favored by the United States.” The Wall Street Journal (9/11, Cheng) reports that ahead of the council’s decision, South Korean Foreign Minister Kang Kyung-wha reiterated the importance of targeting North Korea’s oil imports to ensure the resolution “is adopted by consensus hopefully will have significant consequences in terms of greater economic pressure on North Korea.” Both China and Russia opposed the ban, however, and after “late-night negotiations Sunday with China,” the US ultimately “backed down, agreeing to gradually reduce, instead of ban, oil exports to Pyongyang,” reports the Los Angeles Times (9/11, Wilkinson). A proposed freeze of North Korean leader Kim Jong-un's "assets abroad was dropped altogether." A US official explained that it was unlikely Kim has assets hidden overseas vulnerable to seizure. The Times says the "broadly weakened" resolution signals "the continued division among major world powers as they grapple with a government that has repeatedly defied U.N. resolutions."

Pompeo Discusses North Korean Threat. CIA Director Pompeo said on Fox News' Special Report (9/11) that North Korea has a history of "sharing their knowledge, technology, capacities around the world. As they continue to improve its ability to do longer-range missiles and put nuclear weapons on those missiles, it's very unlikely that if they get the capability they wouldn't share it with lots of folks, and Iran would be someone willing to pay them."

When Fox News' Special Report (9/11) asked Pompeo if he has a "good window into the capabilities and intent of North Korea," Pompeo confirmed that he does, adding, "We think Kim Jong-un wants these weapons for protecting his regime and ultimately the reunification of the peninsula." Pompeo said China has been doing more to rein in the North, but "I believe the Chinese know they can do more and I hope they will come alongside us."

Russian Exports To North Korea Reportedly On The Rise. "Official documents and interviews point to a rise in tanker traffic this spring between North Korean ports and Vladivostok, the far-eastern Russian city near the small land border shared by" North Korea and Russia, reports the Washington Post (9/11, Warrick), adding that the "spike in Russian exports is occurring as China – by far North Korea's biggest trading partner – is beginning to dramatically ratchet up the economic pressure on its troublesome neighbor in the face of provocative behavior such as last week's test of a powerful nuclear bomb." As UN sanctions increasingly constrain international trade with North Korea, "Russian entrepreneurs are seizing opportunities to make a quick profit, setting up a maze of front companies to conceal transactions and launder payments, according to US law enforcement officials who monitor sanction-busting activity." That trade, the Post says, "could provide a lifeline to North Korea" as it grows increasingly isolated politically and economically.

US, Marshall Islands Hold Annual Compact Funding Meeting.

Marianas Variety (9/12) reports that "the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the United States bilateral Joint Economic Management and Financial Accountability Committee or JEMFAC annual meeting took place Tuesday, Aug. 29, 2016, in Honolulu, Hawaii." The committee members "jointly approved $28 million in the sectors of health, education, environment, and public infrastructure as identified under the Compact of Free Association, as amended, for the benefit of the people of the RMI." JEMFAC Chairman and acting Interior Assistant Secretary Nik Pula said, "I am encouraged by the JEMFAC meetings and discussions we held regarding the Marshall Islands. The Marshall Islands continues to make progress on all fronts with respect to Compact funding."

Guam Delegate May Have Violated Emoluments Clause With Lease, Ethics Office Says.

The Washington Post (9/11, Viebeck) reports that "an independent ethics monitor" has found "substantial reason to believe Guam's delegate to Congress broke federal law by leasing a four-bedroom home to the government of Japan, a possible violation of the emoluments clause of the US Constitution." Del. Madeleine Z. Bordallo (D), who is the subject of the investigation by the Office of Congressional Ethics, "also likely violated House rules when she allegedly accepted more than 600 nights of free lodging at a beachfront hotel in Guam and paid for a handful of stays by apparently transferring her bill to congressional aides to settle with official funds." The House Ethics Committee released the OCE's findings late Monday, saying "it would review the allegations." Through a spokesman, Bordallo "denied wrongdoing and said she would cooperate with the Ethics Committee's review."

HANMI Occupancy 97% In August.

Marianas Variety (9/12) reports that "the Hotel Association of the Northern Mariana Islands posted another record breaking month in August, reporting a 97.35 percent average occupancy rate among 11 member hotels for the month." The number "reflects a 4 percent increase compared to August 2016 and breaks the August 2013 record of 94.01 percent average occupancy."

NMI Customs Aims For International Standards.

Marianas Variety (9/12, Todiño) reports that "CNMI Customs will modernize its operations and adhere to international standards, division director Jose Mafnas said at the start of a five-day workshop on the Trade Facilitation Agreement and the Revised Kyoto Convention." According to Mafnas, "the workshop was attended by 32 participants including Customs personnel and supervisors from Saipan, Tinian and Rota, as well as enforcement officers from the Division of Revenue and Taxation."

US Geological Survey

USGS: Wildfire-Caused Erosion Endangers Western Watersheds.

Arizona Public Media (9/11, Ziegler) reports that "U.S. Geological Survey research found that 82 percent of watersheds in western America will see significant sediment increase by 2050." According to researchers, "the increase in sediment is due to the growth in acres burned by wildfire in the west each year."

Additional coverage was provided by KBSC-FM Boise, ID (9/11, Dawson).

Study: Rivers Recover Faster Than Expected After Dam Removal.

Water Deeply (9/11, Weiser) reports that "a new study by the U.S. Geological Survey looks at more than 200 dam removals and finds that fish species and habitat can change rapidly, although examples from very large dams are rare." According to the article, "in a new study overseen by the U.S. Geological Survey John Wesley Powell Center for Analysis and Synthesis in Fort Collins, Colorado, a team of 22 scientists reviewed more than 200 studies on dam removals around the country." Their findings "show that changes can occur much faster after dam removal than anticipated."

USGS Says 260 Earthquakes Have Struck Eastern Idaho Since Sept. 2.

East Idaho News (9/11) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey says "the earthquake swarm that's been shaking southeast Idaho since Sept. 2 is measuring above previously reported numbers." As of Sunday evening, the agency was "reporting that there had been 260 quakes during the swarm, including 37 on Sunday."

Also reporting are KBSC-FM Boise \(ID\) Boise, ID (9/11, Guilhem), and KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/11).

Additional Coverage: Nevada's Jeff Davis Peak Might Be Renamed For Escaped Slave.

Additional coverage that a proposal to change the name of Jeff Davis Peak in Great Basin National Park is under consideration by the U.S. Geological Survey's Board on Geographic Names was provided by the San Francisco Chronicle (9/11, Moffitt).

Additional Reading.

- How To Really Help Disaster Victims. Idaho Statesman (9/11, Peter).
- Trump Should Eliminate Fake Science. Daily Caller (9/11, Lewis).
- Earthquake Conference Held In The Coachella Valley. KESQ-TV. Palm Springs, CA (9/11, Moreno)
- NASA Shares 9/11 Images Taken From Space On Attack Anniversary. International Business Times. (9/11, Goenka)

Top National News

Trump On 9/11: US Committed To "Destroying The Enemies Of All Civilized People."

Media coverage of the 9/11 commemorations yesterday highlighted the somber nature of yesterday's ceremonies and largely eschewed broader political debates. Along those same lines, reports indicate the President and other senior officials issued calls for national unity and avoided the use of the term "radical Islamic terrorism," an omission that generated some media attention. The Washington Post (9/11, Gearan) reports "military and diplomatic leaders, among others, have discouraged such language as inflammatory and unhelpful," and notes that Breitbart "took the president to task" for not using it. As the Post indicates, a piece on Breitbart bemoaned the fact that "instead of naming the enemy, Trump seemingly went out of his way to use other descriptors in his speech, including 'terrorists who attacked us,' 'barbaric forces of evil and destruction,' 'horrible, horrible enemies,' 'enemies of all civilized people,' and 'enemies like we've never seen before.'" Another Washington Post (9/11, Gearan) story indicates Trump "also did not mention his proposed temporary ban on immigration from several Muslim-majority nations, which he has said is needed to keep the United States safe from terrorism."

All three network newscasts covered the 9/11 anniversary. ABC World News Tonight (9/11, story 11, 0:50, Muir) said the country paused "to remember," and noted that the President and First Lady were "at the Pentagon." The CBS Evening News (9/11, story 9, 1:50, Mason) also mentioned that the First Couple participated in the Pentagon ceremony, and NBC Nightly News (9/11, story 6, 1:35, Gosk) showed Trump saying of the 9/11 attacks, "The living, breathing soul of America wept with grief for every life taken on that day."

To the Washington Post (9/11, Gearan), whereas as a candidate "Trump ventured far beyond the norms of political behavior when it came to 9/11 terrorist attacks," yesterday he "struck relatively traditional notes of resolve and patriotism." USA Today (9/11, Jackson) similarly reports that "Trump has injected politics into previous ceremonial occasions – such as a Boy Scouts Jamboree in July in which the president eschewed tradition to jab the media and political opponents," but "he kept a somber tone to commemorate the anniversary of 9/11."

The AP (9/11, Superville, Lemire) says Trump "used the anniversary to warn terrorists that 'America cannot be intimidated,'" telling his Pentagon audience that "those who try are destined to join 'the long list of vanquished enemies who dared to test our mettle.'" In fact, notes the Washington Free Beacon (9/11, Rutz), "Trump said the sorrow felt over the lives lost that day had been turned into 'an unstoppable resolve to achieve justice in their name.'"

The Washington Times (9/11, Miller) reports the President "vowed that the US would never relent in its fight against the radical Islamic ideology behind the attacks" – though Trump did not actually use the phrase – and the Washington Examiner (9/11, Morrongiello) that he "combined his solemn remarks with a promise to protect Americans from future domestic terror attacks." The New York Times (9/11, Thrush) notes Trump "said the country was committed to 'destroying the enemies of all civilized people,'" and remarked, "We are making plain to these savage killers that there is no dark corner beyond our reach, no sanctuary beyond our grasp, and nowhere to hide anywhere on this very large earth." The Hill (9/11, Fabian) referred to "a stern warning" by Trump "to extremist groups threatening the US," and the Los Angeles Times (9/11, Bierman, Hennigan) quotes him as saying, "Terrorists tried to break our resolve. ... It's not going to happen. But where they left a mark in rubble, Americans bravely raised the stars and stripes."

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (9/11, Dupree) indicates, however, that "the focus of the President's remarks were looking back 16 years ago, to the horrible morning of carnage, which set in motion years of US military actions in what was labeled, the 'War on Terror.'" Said the President, "America does not bend, we do not waver." US News & World Report (9/11, Levy) reported that Trump "recalled the way the nation came together in the wake of the attacks," saying, "In that hour of darkness, we also came together with renewed purpose. ... Our differences never looked so small, our common bonds never felt so strong." Breitbart (9/11, Spiering) also noted that "Trump recalled that Americans came together on September 11, despite their differences, to send a message to the world," and the Daily Caller (9/11, Pfeiffer) that he "spoke about the sacrifice first responders made on 9/11 and the sacrifice of Americans who enlisted to fight following the attacks."

Townhall (9/11, Pavlich) quoted him as remembering "Pentagon Police Officer Isaac Ho'opi'i and, a special person" who "was one of many heroes whose love for his fellow Americans knew no bounds. He was a mile away when he got the call over his radio that a plane had crashed into the Pentagon. He sped to the scene and raced into smoke and fire. Few people would have done it. He ducked under live electrical wires and trudged through puddles of jet fuel only steps away from sparks and from vicious flame. ... One by one, he carried people out of the burning rubble" and "saved as many as 20 people who had followed his voice; he carried eight himself."

Unsurprisingly, more negative toward Trump was the report on the Huffington Post (9/11, Fang), which said that "his measured remarks on Monday notwithstanding, Trump has a history of making insensitive and false comments about the Sept. 11 tragedy," and that the attacks "were the subject of one of Trump's most egregious lies during his presidential campaign." The HuffPost added that "in November 2015, he claimed, without evidence, that 'thousands and thousands' of Muslims in New Jersey had celebrated the news of the attacks." Along similar lines, Vanity Fair (9/10, Harwood) said "the day's ceremonies appeared to be controversy free, with the president sticking to his script" in what "may be the first instance of him publicly speaking about 9/11 without raising eyebrows."

Fox News (9/11, Singman) reported that also present at the Pentagon were Defense Secretary Mattis and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Joseph Dunford. Mattis said in his remarks, "We never asked for this fight but we are steadfastly committed to seeing it through. ...

We Americans are not made of cotton candy. We're not seaweed drifting in the current. We are not intimidated by our enemies. ... Mr. President, your military does not scare." The Washington Examiner (9/11, Quinn) runs a similar story highlighting Mattis' comments, as does Breitbart (9/11, Wong) – which notes Mattis called the attackers “maniacs disguised in false religious garb.”

Before heading to the Pentagon, the AP (9/11, Superville, Lemire) reports, “Trump and first lady Melania Trump observed a moment of silence at the White House...at the exact moment that a hijacked airplane was slammed into the World Trade Center.” The Trumps “bowed their heads and placed their hands over their hearts as ‘Taps’ rang out across the South Lawn.” Politico (9/11, Nelson) says the Trumps “were joined by his daughter Ivanka Trump and her husband, Jared Kushner, both of whom serve as advisers to the president,” as well as by “chief of staff John Kelly, press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, counselor to the president Kellyanne Conway, national security adviser H.R. McMaster, economic adviser Gary Cohn, White House counsel Don McGahn, deputy national security adviser Dina Powell, communications director Hope Hicks and Nick Ayers, chief of staff to Vice President Mike Pence.”

The Wall Street Journal (9/11, Macmillan, Kanno-Youngs), meanwhile, reports on the Twin Towers site remembrance of the attacks, organized by the National September 11 Memorial and Museum. Among those present were Senate Minority Leader Schumer, Rep. Peter King, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio and New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo.

Pence Says US In Midst Of “War Between Good And Evil.” The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (9/11, Huba) reports that “on the 16th anniversary of 9/11,” the Vice President Pence “credited the ‘heroes’ of Flight 93 with saving lives, possibly even his own, and sparking a national ‘rededication to our most sacred ideal of freedom.’” Pence “used Monday’s keynote address at the Flight 93 National Memorial near Shanksville, Somerset County, to take stock of the ‘global war on terror’ and to reminisce on where he was on 9/11.” Said Pence, “We are in the midst of a war between good and evil. The first battle in that war took place in the skies above us and ended in this grassy meadow.”

USA Today (9/11, Groppe) recounts that “as the vice president on Monday addressed those who lost loved ones on the 9/11 plane that crashed into rural Pennsylvania instead of hitting its intended target in Washington, DC, he got choked up.” Said Pence, “I will always believe that I, and many others in our nation’s capital, were able to go home that day to hug our families because of the courage and selflessness of the heroes of Flight 93.” The AP (9/11, Mandak, Peltz, Matthews) also reports Pence’s remarks.

Pompeo: Al Qaeda Weaker, But Terror Threat Remains. In an exclusive interview with Fox News’ Special Report (9/11), CIA Director Pompeo said the threat from al Qaeda is “weaker” today than it was on 9/11, but “whether it’s ISIS or any of the other couple dozen groups out to do harm, the threat remains, and we must remain ever vigilant so something like what happened 16 years ago today can never happen again.”

Obama: “No Act Of Terror Will Ever Change Who We Are.” The Hill (9/11, Thomsen) reported that former President Obama yesterday took to Twitter to remember 9/11, writing, “We remember everyone we lost on 9/11 and honor all who defend our country and our ideals. No act of terror will ever change who we are.”

White House: Trump May Ask Congress For More Disaster Funding.

The Hill (9/11, Fabian) reports that the White House is “prepared to ask Congress for more money to fund disaster relief efforts” in response to Hurricane Irma. Homeland Security Adviser Bossert told reporters Monday that President Trump might seek more funding, but added “right now, we have plenty of resources to get through this.” Bossert added, “The president and [OMB Director] Mulvaney and others have started the process of a bipartisan discussion on this point. We’ll ask for a third, perhaps fourth supplemental for the purpose of rebuilding. We will do it smartly.” Bossert, however, “declined to say how much money the administration may ask for, saying it will depend on the eventual amount of damage.”

When asked about the amount of aid the Congress may allocate for hurricane relief, Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/11), “right now we’re not talking about money. We’re talking about lives. We’re worried about people, in other words.”

Interior Secretary Zinke said on Fox News’ Fox & Friends (9/11) that in the wake of Hurricane Irma “the President’s focus is leave no neighborhood behind.” He mentioned that the “Virgin Islands got especially hit” and “let’s not forget about the forest fires out West.”

Florida Sen. Bill Nelson said on MSNBC’s Morning Joe (9/11), “Fortunately, we got the $15 billion past, but that's only going to last a few weeks and then we're going to have to do another emergency supplemental appropriations. And that's only going to last so long. So this kind of costly cleanup and tending to the storm in the aftermath, that's going to go on for months."

Rep. Michael McCaul, chairman of the House Homeland Committee, said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/11) that the aid for the two storms is "an enormous financial strain. As you know, we appropriated $15.5 billion for the disaster relief fund. Just to keep it solvent." He added, "We will have another supplemental. That was just a down payment to keep the disaster relief fund afloat. And these community development block grants we will help rebuild."

Florida Rep. Charlie Crist said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (9/11), "Needless to say there's a lot of recovery for all of Florida as a result of this." He added, "It has occurred to me that it's probably not a bad idea, especially after what happened in Texas, maybe the Florida and the Texas delegations maybe get together and see how we can talk about appropriations going forward, to make sure that all of the great people of our state and of Texas, get what they need, going forward. After two just horrendous hurricanes."

Florida Rep. Al Lawson said on CNN's Situation Room (9/11), "I hear from the colleagues across the country, you know, they are ready to get back in and vote for the emergency assistance."

WPost Analysis: NFIP Reauthorization A Bigger Issue After Storms. The Washington Post (9/11), meanwhile, reports that in the wake of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma, many homeowners will be relying on the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP), which "runs on five-year authorizations from Congress; the current one expires September 30."

Lawmakers Consider Loosening 401(k) Rules For Storm Victims. USA Today (9/11, Yu) reports that lawmakers are considering a proposal to allow victims of Irma and Harvey to withdraw money from their retirement accounts "to rebuild their homes and lives without incurring penalties." Rep. Kevin Brady (R-TX) is "one of several lawmakers reportedly considering introducing a bill that would tweak the current tax code to aid victims."

USA Today Criticizes Proposed Budget Cuts To Weather Agency. A USA Today (9/11, Board) editorial says the US fared better than nations in the Caribbean in large part because of better weather forecasting. The two major models, known as the American and the European, "adequately forecast Irma's right turn toward Florida. But, as was the case with Superstorm Sandy and other high-profile events, the European model — backed by superior computer power, resources and resolution — performed better overall." While "upgrades to the American model have been in the works," but President Trump's budget calls for "a 17% cut to the nation's top weather and climate agency. If you want to make America great again, you might try making the US forecast model better than the one based in England."

Hannity: In Wake Of Storms, Congress Should Cut Corporate Taxes, Build Border Wall, Repeal ACA. Sean Hannity said on Fox News' Hannity (9/11), "As Americans come to terms with the hurricane damage, we're reminded of the 16th anniversary of 9/11, 2001" in that "we see the very best in the midst of that and sometimes the very worst this people in this country." In the wake of the hurricanes, "government, state, local, federal officials are actually on their game" and Americans are helping their fellows, but some are looting or price gouging. Calling on the memories of 9/11, Hannity calls on Congress to "start doing your job" by providing the federal assistance needed to rebuild and "start passing the agenda you all promised the American people when you ran for office," including cutting corporate tax rates and allowing repatriation of foreign profits, building a border wall, and repealing the ACA.

Courting Democrats, Trump To Hold Dinner On Tax Reform.

Politico (9/11, Everett) reports President Trump, continuing to court Democrats, "will host a dinner on Tuesday with moderate Democrats and Republican senators focused on tax reform." Sens. Joe Manchin of West Virginia, Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota, and Joe Donnelly of Indiana, "moderate Democrats ... up for reelection next year in states Trump won handily in 2016," are expected to attend. The Washington Post (9/11, Parker, O'Keefe) also covers this story.

Mnuchin, Cohn To Meet With McConnell, GOP Senators On Budget, Tax Reform. Politico (9/11, Everett, White) reports that, "demonstrat[ing] how quickly Republicans are hoping to pivot to tax reform" following the failed attempt to repeal the ACA and the President's deal with Democrats on the debt ceiling and spending issues, Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and Trump economic adviser Gary Cohn will meet with Senate Majority Leader McConnell and members of the Senate Budget Committee. According to two people familiar with the meeting, they will discuss passing a budget "through committee and the narrowly divided Senate," which needs to occur "to use reconciliation for tax reform.”

WSJournal: Trump Needs GOP Votes To Pass Tax Reform. In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/11) writes that despite President Trump’s recent deal with Democrats, he will have difficulty getting a Republican Congress to pass anything from a Democratic agenda. The Journal suggests Trump bargained poorly with Democrats and that they will not compromise on issues Trump seeks to advance, especially tax reform. The Journal argues Democrats will only support Trump’s tax reform to eliminate it as a campaign issue, which means the President will need to show he has the Republican votes to pass it in the Senate.

National Debt Passes $20 Trillion For First Time.

The Washington Examiner (9/11, Kasperowicz) reports the national debt reached $20.162 trillion as of Friday, exceeding $20 trillion for the first time. Jennifer Harper, in a column in the Washington Times (9/11), wrote that a year ago the national debt was $19,484,660,626,765, ten years ago it was $9,011,447,836,964, and 20 years ago it was $5,415,082,668,733.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Want To Make A Deal, Mr. Trump?” The New York Times (9/12, Board) editorializes that the legislation President Trump signed into law “on Friday provides $15 billion for hurricane and flooding victims and includes measures to keep the government funded until Dec. 8, instead of Sept. 30, and to extend the nation’s borrowing authority.” The Times says Trump secured the “bargain under the disapproving noses of his party’s own leaders,” House Speaker Paul Ryan and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, in a “meeting with his new pals ‘Chuck and Nancy’: the Senate minority leader, Chuck Schumer, and the House minority leader, Nancy Pelosi.” The Times says “we have no real reason to expect his bipartisan impulse to harden into practice,” but “it’s tempting nevertheless to imagine what Mr. Trump might achieve if he could see beyond momentary, tactical wins.”

“Democratic Primary Choices.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/12, Board) sets forth its “recommendations in some of Tuesday’s Democratic primary races in New York City.” Among its recommendations are incumbent New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, who the Times says “has effectively governed a difficult city, with crime continuing its remarkable decline, municipal finances remaining sound and innovations like universal prekindergarten put in place.” The Times also endorses Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzales for standing “out in a strong field, having ably pursued criminal justice reforms since being suddenly put in charge of an office that can be a model for prosecutorial practices nationwide.”

Washington Post.

“It Was Best To Prepare For The Worst.” While the storm was not as bad as initially feared, the Washington Post (9/11) editorializes that “it is already clear that things would have been worse if not” for Florida’s “careful preparation.” The Post argues that “any criticism of Florida officials for taking the storm seriously and planning for all contingencies is misplaced.”

“How Politics Should Be.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/11) applauds “the civility of” Gillespie and Northam, saying, “So far, at least, in pinch-me-I-may-be-dreaming contrast to so many recent state and congressional campaigns around the country, the race, featuring a pair of understated moderates, has been partisan but not personal, and determinedly non-incendiary. The violence last month in Charlottesville was a litmus test of sorts, which both candidates passed,” with Gillespie and Northam denouncing “the racists and neo-Nazis who had paraded through the streets.”

“An Authoritarian In The White House.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/11) writes that President Trump set “a new low” in his “habit of embracing authoritarian rulers he regards as friendly, without regard for their subversion of democratic norms or gross human rights violations” by meeting at the White House with Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak, who “is a subject of the largest foreign kleptocracy investigation ever launched by the U.S. Justice Department.” Trump gave Najib “with what the regime will portray as a tacit pre-election endorsement,” with US apparently not receiving anything in return “for that huge political favor,” despite Najib’s regime being “a relative friend to North Korea.” The Post warns that “Najib’s corruption and disregard for democratic norms mean” he always will prefer Beijing’s “values-free patronage” and argues that supporting those in Malaysia who support liberal democratic values is

“the best way for the United States to build a stronger alliance with” the country and increased its independence from China.

Wall Street Journal.

“The Ninth Circuit ‘Resistance.’” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/11) casts Kennedy’s order as chastising the Ninth Circuit and federal judges in general for defying President Trump. The Journal argues that if the Court had intended for its bona fide relationship standard to include refugees, it would have specified it.

“Trump, Taxes And The Democrats.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/11) writes that despite President Trump’s recent deal with Democrats, he will have difficulty getting a Republican Congress to pass anything from a Democratic agenda. The Journal suggests Trump bargained poorly with Democrats and that they will not compromise on issues Trump seeks to advance, especially tax reform. The Journal argues Democrats will only support Trump’s tax reform to eliminate it as a campaign issue, which means the President will need to show he has the Republican votes to pass it in the Senate.

“The Better IRS Reform.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/11) writes that House Republicans, in response to the Justice Department’s stance on the Lois Lerner case, should offer a reform that forces the IRS out of the political arena by limiting its role to the most basic administrative job of providing initial approval to nonprofits. Under this reform, the FEC would decide whether a nonprofit is abiding by existing rules governing political spending.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Bitcoin Exchanges Shut Down By Chinese Authorities
Florida Turns To Recovery After Irma
Some Trump Lawyers Wanted Kushner Out
Google Plots To Conquer Self-Driving Cars—By Making Peace With Detroit

New York Time:

Damp, Dark And Disarrayed, Florida Starts Coping With Irma’s Aftermath
In Florida, A Storm’s Fright Gives Way To A Blackout’s Troubles
Florida Keys Battered But Still Standing After Irma’s Rampage
After US Compromise, Security Council Strengthens North Korea Sanctions
Decades After Alcohol Ban, Iran Admits It Has A Problem
Chief Executive Of Social Finance, An Online Lending Start-Up, To Step Down
Trump Commemorates Sept. 11 Attacks With Vow To Conquer ‘Evil’

Washington Post:

In Irma’s Wake, Pain And Relief
Russian Smuggling Helps Keep Kim Afloat
Israel Courts Syrians With Humanitarian Aid On Border
Something’s Missing At Federal Offices
Unexpected Joy, Misery As Storm Changed Course

Financial Times:

Relief Rally For Insurance Stocks As Worst Irma Fears Avoided
Saudi Arabia To Launch Global PR Offensive To Counter Negative Press
Renminbi Slides After China Relaxes Currency Controls

Washington Times:

As He Remembers Victims Of 9/11, Trump Takes More Aggressive Tone For War On Terror
Detailed Stories Of Fraud And Weaknesses In Election System Are Sent To Voter Integrity Commission
Judge Orders Maryland Bar To Investigate Lawyers Who Helped Clinton Delete Emails
Calls To Punish Skeptics Rise With Links To Climate Change, Hurricanes
Not Sitting Pretty: Study Links Workers’ Prolonged Chair Time To Early Death

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Hurricane Irma-Jacksonville; Hurricane Irma-Florida Keys; Hurricane Irma-Naples, Florida; Hurricane Irma-Marco Island; Hurricane Irma-Forecast; Hurricane Irma-Power Outages; Hurricane Irma-Travel Interruptions; Hurricane Irma-Caribbean; Texas-Mass Shooting; Indiana-Home Explosion; 9/11 Memorial; Hurricane Irma-Memorable Moments.

CBS: Hurricane Irma-Florida Keys; Hurricane Irma-Jacksonville; Hurricane Irma-Naples, Florida; Hurricane Irma-Miami; Hurricane Irma-Orlando Area; Hurricane Irma-Aerial View; Steve Bannon Interview-Comey Firing, Cohn; Steve Bannon Interview-GOP Establishment; 9/11 Memorial; Hurricane Irma-Key West.

NBC: Hurricane Irma-Jacksonville; Hurricane Irma-Florida Keys; Hurricane Irma-Travel Interruptions; Hurricane Irma-Caribbean; Steve Bannon Interview; 9/11 Memorial; Equifax-Cyber Security Breach; Hurricane Irma-Less Damaged Locations; Hurricane Irma-Safe Homeowners.

Network TV At A Glance:

Hurricane Irma – 33 minutes, 20 seconds

Steve Bannon Interview – 5 minutes, 35 seconds

9/11 Memorial – 4 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Hurricane Irma; UN-North Korea Sanctions; Equifax-Cyber Security Breach; Kentucky-Child Murder.

CBS: Hurricane Irma; UN-North Korea Sanctions; Travel Restriction-Legal Challenge; Wall Street News.

FOX: Hurricane Irma; UN-North Korea Sanctions; Navy-Bribery Scandal.

NPR: Hurricane Irma; Mexico-Dreamer Support; Equifax-Cyber Security Breach.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Participates in an expanded bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Najib Abdul Razak of Malaysia; has dinner with bipartisan Senators.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Joins the President to participate in an expanded bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Najib Abdul Razak of Malaysia; participates in a meeting with U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer; joins the President for a bipartisan Senators dinner.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Eric Ueland to be Under Secretary of State for Management; John Bass to be U.S. Ambassador to Afghanistan; Justin Hicks Siberell to be U.S. Ambassador to Bahrain; and J. Steven Dowd to be African Development Bank U.S. Director Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 419, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Banking Committee hearing on fintech – Hearing on 'Examining the Fintech Landscape', with testimony from Government Accountability Office Director of Financial Markets Lawrence Evans; S&P Global Market Intelligence Research Analyst Eric Turner; and University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law Professor Frank Pasquale Location: Rm 538, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee hearing on the individual health insurance market for 2018 – Hearing on 'Stabilizing Premiums and Helping Individuals in the Individual Insurance Market for 2018: State Flexibility', with testimony from former Secretary of Health and Human Services Michael Leavitt; MNSure CEO Allison Leigh O'Toole; Foundation for Government Accountability CEO Tarren Bragdon; Kaiser Foundation Hospitals and Health Plan President and CEO Bernard Tyson; and Oliver Wyman Actuarial Consulting Senior Principal and Consulting Actuary Tammy Tomczyk Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Finance Committee hearing on health care cost and coverage – Hearing on 'Health Care: Issues Impacting Cost and Coverage', with testimony from Foundation for Research on Equal Opportunity co-founder and President Avik Roy; Heritage Foundation Senior Research Fellow Edmund Haislmaier; former Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Acting Administrator Andrew Slavitt; and Center on Budget and Policy Priorities Senior Fellow and Senior Counselor Aviva Aron-Dine Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://finance.senate.gov>

10:00 AM Joint Economic Committee hearing on free digital trade – Hearing on ‘The Dynamic Gains from Free Digital Trade for the U.S. Economy’, with testimony from Mercatus Center at George Mason University Program on the American Economy and Globalization Co-Director Daniel Griswold; U.S. Chamber of Commerce Center for Global Regulatory Cooperation Vice President Sean Heather; Ecommerce Division of Relay Networks General Manager Nick Quade; and former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and U.S. Coordinator for Communications and Information Policy Daniel Alejandro Sepulveda Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1100, Washington, DC www.jec.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/JointEconCmte>

10:15 AM Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Daniel Kaniewski to be Federal Emergency Management Agency Deputy Administrator for Protection and National Preparedness; and Jonathan Pittman to be Superior Court of the District of Columbia Associate Judge Location: Rm 342, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://hsgac.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenateHSGAC>

12:00 PM CAPAC and Asian-American DREAMers urge passage of the DREAM Act – Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus members – including Chair Democratic Rep. Judy Chu, Immigration Task Force Chair Democratic Rep. Pramila Jayapal, and Democratic Sen. Mazie Hirono – urge the passage of the bipartisan, bicameral DREAM Act (which would allow certain immigrant youth, including tens of thousands of Asian American and Pacific Islander DREAMers, to gain lawful permanent residence and U.S. citizenship), via press conference with Asian-American DREAMers Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC <http://capac-chu.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/CAPAC>

2:30 PM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on Magnuson-Stevens Act reauthorization – Oceans, Atmosphere, Fisheries, and Coast Guard Subcommittee hearing on ‘Reauthorization of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act: Oversight of Fisheries Management Successes and Challenges’, with testimony from Nautic Star Boats President Phil Faulkner; Recreational Fishing Alliance Executive Director Jim Donofrio; Congressional Sportsmen’s Foundation Senior Director Chris Horton; West Coast Seafood Processors Association Executive Director Lori Steele; National Association of Charterboat Operators President Robert Zales II; and Garden State Seafood Association Executive Director Greg DiDomenico Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Energy subcommittee oversight hearing on innovation and the National Labs – Energy Subcommittee oversight hearing on ‘Fostering Innovation: Contributions of the Department of Energy’s National Laboratories’, with testimony from West Virginia University Energy Institute Director Dr Brian Anderson; Argonne National Laboratory Interim Director Dr Paul Kearns; Duke Energy Director of Emerging Technology Strategy Anuja Ratnayake; and National Renewable Energy Laboratory Associate Director of Materials and Chemical Science and Technology Dr Bill Tumas Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

US House: 10:00 AM POSTPONED: DHS Secretary Duke and FBI Director Wray testify to House Homeland Security Committee hearing on worldwide threats – POSTPONED: Hearing on ‘World Wide Threats: Keeping America Secure in the New Age of Terror’, with testimony from Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Elaine Duke; FBI Director Christopher Wray; National Counterterrorism Center Director Nicholas Rasmussen; Anti-Defamation League Center on Extremism Director Oren Segal; Knoxville, TN, Chief of Police David Rausch (on behalf of International Association of Chiefs of Police); and Southern Poverty Law Center President Richard Cohen * Committee Chairman Michael McCaul announced the hearing in response to a letter from Committee Ranking Member Bennie Thompson calling for a hearing on domestic terrorism in the wake of last month’s incident in Charlottesville, VA, in which a car plowed into a group of counterprotesters opposing a white nationalist rally, killing one and injuring 19 more. However, Rep. Thompson has said the hearing is held annually and was scheduled before the events in Charlottesville Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

10:00 AM POSTPONED – House Infrastructure subcommittee hearing on USCG stakeholders’ perspectives – Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Subcommittee hearing on ‘Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Coast Guard Stakeholders’ Perspectives’, with testimony from U.S. Coast Guard Assistant Commandant for Human Resources Rear Adm. William Kelly, and Assistant Commandant for Engineering and Logistics Rear Adm. Melvin Bouboulis Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://transportation.house.gov/>

<https://twitter.com/Transport>

10:00 AM POSTPONED: House Technology Committee hearing on electric grid resiliency – POSTPONED: Hearing on ‘Resiliency: The Electric Grid’s Only Hope’, with testimony from University of Illinois Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering head Dr William Sanders; Pacific Northwest National Laboratory Electricity Market Sector manager Carl Imhoff; Houston Advanced Research Center Clean Energy Policy Program director Dr Gavin Dillingham; and Texas Public Power Association executive director Walt Baum Location: Rm 2318, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://science.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseScience>

10:00 AM POSTPONED: House Financial Services subcommittee hearing on the housing market – POSTPONED: Housing and Insurance Subcommittee hearing on ‘An Overview of the Housing Market: The Role of Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the Federal Home Loan Banks’ Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

10:00 AM CANCELED – House Energy subcommittee hearing on ‘Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry’ – Energy Subcommittee hearing on ‘Powering America: Defining Reliability in a Transforming Electricity Industry’, with testimony from American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity President and CEO Paul Bailey; North American Electric Reliability Corporation President and CEO Gerry Cauley; Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Chairman Neil Chatterjee; Enel Green Power North America Regulatory Affairs Manager Kyle Davis (on behalf of Solar Energy Industries Association); American Petroleum Institute Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer Marty Durbin; Acting Under Secretary of Energy for Science Patricia Hoffman; American Wind Energy Association CEO Tom Kiernan; Nuclear Energy Institute President and CEO Maria Korsnick; Energy Storage Association CEO Kelly Speakes-Backman; Analysis Group Senior Advisor Dr Susan Tierney; and Chelan Public Utility District General Manager Steve Wright (on behalf of National Hydropower Association) Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on North Korea – Hearing on ‘Sanctions, Diplomacy, and Information: Pressuring North Korea’, with testimony from Acting Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Susan Thornton; and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence Marshall Billingslea * Over the last two months, North Korea has conducted its latest nuclear weapons test and a series of intercontinental ballistic missile tests (sending one over mainland Japan into the Pacific Ocean), and has also threatened to fire missiles towards the U.S. Pacific territory of Guam Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HFACrepublicans>

10:00 AM House Natural Resources subcommittee legislative hearing – Federal Lands Subcommittee legislative hearing on ‘H.R. 3668, Sportsmen’s Heritage and Recreational Enhancement Act’ (or ‘SHARE Act’), with testimony from Americans for Responsible Solutions Senior Policy Advisor David Chipman; attorney Dr Stephen Halbrook; Safari Club International Director of Government Affairs Anna Seidman; and Hope for the Warriors COO Christopher Sharon Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM Joint Economic Committee hearing on free digital trade – Hearing on ‘The Dynamic Gains from Free Digital Trade for the U.S. Economy’, with testimony from Mercatus Center at George Mason University Program on the American Economy and Globalization Co-Director Daniel Griswold; U.S. Chamber of Commerce Center for Global Regulatory Cooperation Vice President Sean Heather; Ecommerce Division of Relay Networks General Manager Nick Quade; and former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and U.S. Coordinator for Communications and Information Policy Daniel Alejandro Sepulveda Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1100, Washington, DC www.jec.senate.gov <https://twitter.com/JointEconCmte>

10:00 AM House Government Reform Committee hearing on Commission on Evidence-Based Policymaking recommendations – Hearing on ‘Recommendations of the Commission on Evidence-Based Policymaking’, with testimony from Commission Chair Dr Katharine Abraham, Co-Chair Dr Ron Haskins, and Commissioners Robert Shea and Dr Latanya Sweeney * Commission released its’ final report – ‘The Promise of Evidence-Based Policymaking’ – last week, focused on how to increase the availability and use of data in order to build evidence about govt programs while protecting privacy and confidentiality Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2157, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

10:15 AM CANCELED – House Commerce subcommittee hearing on ‘21st Century Trade Barriers’ – Digital Commerce and Consumer Protection Subcommittee hearing on ‘21st Century

Trade Barriers: Protectionist Cross Border Data Flow Policies Impact on U.S. Jobs', with testimony from American University Washington College of Law Associate Professor Jennifer Daskal; BSA – The Software Alliance President and CEO Victoria Espinel; Information Technology Industry Council President and CEO Dean Garfield; and ACT – The App Association President Morgan Reed Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2322, Washington, DC
<http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:30 AM POSTPONED: Dem Rep. Adriano Espaillat holds domestic violence awareness press conference in Washington, DC – POSTPONED: Democratic Rep. Adriano Espaillat holds press conference to raise awareness of domestic violence and address initiatives to help support victims of domestic violence in communities around the nation. New York Latinas Against Domestic Violence participate in the event as part of their annual 'Brides' vigil in honor of Gladys Ricart, a victim of domestic violence who was killed on her wedding day Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC espaillat.house.gov <https://twitter.com/espaillatny>

10:30 AM Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on 'VA Mail Management: The Case of the $11,257 Package' Location: Rm 334, Cannon House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM CAPAC and Asian-American DREAMers urge passage of the DREAM Act – Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus members – including Chair Democratic Rep. Judy Chu, Immigration Task Force Chair Democratic Rep. Pramila Jayapal, and Democratic Sen. Mazie Hirono – urge the passage of the bipartisan, bicameral DREAM Act (which would allow certain immigrant youth, including tens of thousands of Asian American and Pacific Islander DREAMers, to gain lawful permanent residence and U.S. citizenship), via press conference with Asian-American DREAMers Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC <http://capac-chu.house.gov/>
<https://twitter.com/CAPAC>

12:00 PM House meets for legislative business – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda for the week including completion of consideration of 'H.R. 3354 – Make America Secure and Prosperous Appropriations Act, 2018', and consideration of 'H.R. 3697 – Criminal Alien Gang Member Removal Act' * Administration has said it supports passage of 'H.R. 3354' and that President Donald Trump would sign it if it reached his desk * Last week, Congress passed a short-term continuing resolution to extend govt funding through early December Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

2:00 PM CANCELED – House Armed Services subcommittee hearing on 'securing the peace' after the fall of the Islamic State group – Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing on 'Securing the Peace After the Fall of ISIL', with testimony from Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs Kathryn Wheelbarger; D-ISIS Task Force Director Christopher Maier; Joint Staff (J-5) Middle East Division Director Brig. Gen. James Bierman; former U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Ryan Crocker; American Enterprise Institute Resident Scholar Dr Kenneth Pollack; and George Washington University Professor of Political Science Dr Marc Lynch Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2212, Washington, DC
www.armedservices.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HASCRpublicans>

2:00 PM House Financial Services subcommittees joint hearing on regulation and monetary policy at the Fed – Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit Subcommittee and Monetary Policy and Trade Subcommittee joint hearing on 'Examining the Relationship Between Prudential Regulation and Monetary Policy at the Federal Reserve', with testimony from Columbia University Business School Professor of Financial Institutions Dr Charles Calomiris; Brandeis University International Business School Chair in International Finance Dr Stephen Cecchetti; and Barnett Sivon & Natter partner Jim Sivon (on behalf of Financial Services Roundtable) Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2128, Washington, DC <http://financialservices.house.gov>
<https://twitter.com/FinancialCmte>

2:30 PM POSTPONED – House Infrastructure subcommittee hearing on rail stakeholders' perspectives – Railroads, Pipelines, and Hazardous Materials Subcommittee hearing on 'Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Rail Stakeholders' Perspectives', with testimony from Association of American Railroads President and CEO Edward Hamberger; American Short Line and Regional Railroad Association President Linda Darr; Amtrak Executive Vice President for Planning, Technology, and Public Affairs Stephen Gardner; Loram Maintenance of Way Senior Advisor of Industry Relations Tom DeJoseph; and AFL-CIO Transportation Trades Department President Larry Willis Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC
<http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>

3:00 PM TIME CHANGE – House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on occupational licensing –

Regulatory Reform, Commercial and Antitrust Law Subcommittee hearing on 'Occupational Licensing: Regulation and Competition', with testimony from Federal Trade Commission Acting Chairman Maureen Ohlhausen; Institute for Justice attorney Robert Johnson; Virginia Senior Assistant Attorney General Sarah Allen; and Vanderbilt Law School Professor Rebecca Allensworth. Time changed from 2p to 3p. Location: Rm 2141, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseJudiciary>

4:00 PM House Natural Resources Committee markup hearing begins – Markup hearing begins on 'H.R. 210, Native American Energy Act', 'H.R. 424, Gray Wolf State Management Act of 2017', 'H.R. 717, Listing Reform Act', 'H.R. 1274, State, Tribal and Local Species Transparency and Recovery Act', 'H.R. 2603, Saving America's Endangered Species Act' ('SAVES Act'), 'H.R. 3131, Endangered Species Litigation Reasonableness Act', and 'H.R. 3668, Sportsmen's Heritage and Recreational Enhancement Act' ('SHARE Act') * Concludes tomorrow Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

5:00 PM TIME CHANGE – House Rules Committee hearing – Hearing on 'H.R. 3697 – Criminal Alien Gang Member Removal Act' Location: U.S. Capitol, H-313, Washington, DC <http://www.rules.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/RulesReps>

Other: 8:00 AM Bipartisan Reps. Suzan DelBene and Patrick Meehan speak at The Hill event on 'Turning Genes into Medicine' – The Hill hosts 'Turning Genes into Medicine: Reimagining Our Health Care System', to discuss recent scientific advances in the field of gene therapy that have raised the prospect of a new approach to treating rare, chronic and inherited diseases, and the impact of medical breakthroughs on the American health ecosystem and patients. Headline speakers are Democratic Rep. Suzan DelBene and Republican Rep. Patrick Meehan, with other speakers including Hemophilia patient advocate Paul Brayshaw, Duke-Margolis Center for Health Policy Deputy Director Gregory Daniel, Biotechnology Innovation Organization Advocacy, Law & Public Policy Division President Tom DiLenge, Spark Therapeutics CEO Jeff Marrazzo and Express Scripts Senior Vice President and Chief Medical Officer Steve Miller Location: Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, Washington, DC thehill.com #Genes4Medicine

8:20 AM CNBC TO BROADCAST INTERVIEW WITH TREASURY SECRETARY STEVEN MNUCHIN – In a CNBC EXCLUSIVE, "Squawk Box" Co-Anchors Joe Kernan, Becky Quick and Andrew Ross Sorkin will interview Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin live from the CNBC Institutional Investor Delivering Alpha conference in New York City on Tuesday, September 12th at 8:20AM ET. Jennifer Dauble CNBC. Contact: 201.735.4721; 201.615.2787; jennifer.dauble@nbcuni.com Location: TBD www.cnbc.com <https://twitter.com/CNBC>

8:30 AM Commerce Secretary Ross at U.S.-India Business Council Global Entrepreneurship Conclave – U.S.-India Business Council Global Entrepreneurship Conclave, serving as the kick-off to the 'Road to Global Entrepreneurship Summit Series', discussing fostering innovation in sectors including digital economy, financial technology, energy, infrastructure, media & entertainment, and life sciences. Participants include Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross, India Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Navtej Sarna, Israel Ambassador to the U.S. Amb. Ron Dermer, Acting Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asia Affairs Amb. Alice Wells, and Democratic Rep. Raja Krishnamoorthi Location: U.S. Chamber of Commerce, 1615 H St NW, Washington, DC www.uschamber.com <https://twitter.com/USChamber>

9:00 AM GOP Sen. Rob Portman speaks on NAFTA renegotiation at CSIS – 'NAFTA Renegotiation: Strengthening North American Prosperity and Competitiveness' Center for Strategic and International Studies and George W. Bush Presidential Center discussion, on the future of the North American Free Trade Agreement. Speakers include Republican Sen. Rob Portman, Business Council of Canada Vice President Andrea van Vugt, IQOM Director General Sergio Gomez Lora, and George W. Bush Presidential Center Economic Growth Director Matthew Rooney Location: Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1616 Rhode Island Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.csis.org> <https://twitter.com/CSIS>

10:00 AM Senate Caucus on International Narcotics Control hearing on U.S. counternarcotics efforts in Colombia – Senate Caucus on International Narcotics Control hearing on 'Adapting U.S. Counternarcotics Efforts in Colombia' – focusing on efforts including interdiction and eradication, given the increased availability of cocaine in the U.S. following years of decline – with panelists Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs Amb. William Brownfield, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations/Low-Intensity Conflict Principal Director for Counternarcotics and Global Threats Brig. Gen. (Ret.) Joseph McMenamin, U.S. Coast Guard Deputy Commandant for Operations Vice Adm. Charles Ray, Drug Enforcement Administration Assistant Administrator Anthony Williams, National Defense University Center for Complex Operations Senior Visiting Fellow Douglas Farah, and American Enterprise Institute Visiting Fellow Roger Noriega Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 226, Washington, DC <http://drugcaucus.senate.gov>

10:30 AM Dem Reps. Ro Khanna and Jamie Raskin on press call on single-payer health care – Lawmakers, health experts, and ‘others who need and want single-payer health care’ participate in press call on the merits of single-payer health care, held ahead of Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders’ introduction of ‘Medicare-for-All’ legislation. Participants – including Democratic Reps. Ro Khanna and Jamie Raskin, Health Care for the Homeless’ Dan Hendricks, National Health Care for the Homeless Council’s Barbara DiPietro, American Sustainable Business Council’s David Levine, Badger Balm’s Rebecca Hamilton, Cambridge Health Alliance’s Dr Adam Gaffney, National Nurses United’s Michael Lighty, and Public Citizen’s Robert Weissman – outline ‘what a guaranteed universal coverage system could accomplish, how it would impact the health care industry, and how it would reach people at all levels of need’ Location: TBD www.citizen.org https://twitter.com/public_citizen

3:00 PM OMB Director Mulvaney at ‘Building a Comprehensive Growth Plan for the U.S.’ discussion – ‘Building a Comprehensive Growth Plan for the U.S.’ special roundtable discussion hosted by the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, with panelists including Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney, former OMB Director Leon Panetta, and economic experts and policymakers Location: Hyatt Regency, 400 New Jersey Ave NW, Washington, DC crfb.org <https://twitter.com/BudgetHawks>

5:30 PM Dem Reps. Judy Chu, Ted Lieu, and Maxine Waters attend #CounterACTHate rally as part of CAPACD Convention – National Coalition for Asian Pacific American Community Development (CAPACD) and South Asians Americans Leading Together hold #CounterACTHate rally, as part of the National CAPACD Annual Convention, to ‘stand together against racism, Islamophobia, and hate, and call for a safe America for all of us’. Attendees include Democratic Reps. Judy Chu, Ted Lieu, and Maxine Waters Location: U.S. Capitol, steps, Washington, DC <http://nationalcapacd.org/> #CounterACTHate

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: “In other words, if you shoot at a hurricane, it will shoot you back. Always try to negotiate with a hurricane first.”

James Corden: “During the interview, [Steve] Bannon said that he thought Donald Trump’s firing of former FBI Director James Comey was the biggest mistake in modern political history, but that’s not true. Everybody knows electing Donald Trump was the biggest mistake in modern political history.”

Trevor Noah: “The big story this week, Hurricane Irma left damage in the Caribbean and 60 percent of the state of Florida without power. Luckily, most people evacuated except for Marco Rubio, who stayed and said, ‘Water! Finally, water! So thirsty!’”

Trevor Noah: “Man, that’s loyalty. Even after Trump fired Bannon, he’s still going to fight for him from outside the White House. If Donald Trump ever killed someone, Bannon will be the guy driving the white supremacist Bronco.”

Jimmy Fallon: “Meanwhile, Education Secretary Betsy DeVos is going on a back-to-school tour this week and will visit Wyoming, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, and Indiana. Betsy says she’s excited because she’s never been out of the country before.”

Jimmy Fallon: “Steve Bannon was on ‘60 Minutes,’ and he said that Trump firing James Comey was the biggest mistake in modern political history, except maybe electing the host of ‘The Apprentice’ the President of the United States.”

Seth Meyers: “After President Trump struck a deal with Democrats to increase the debt ceiling, he tweeted on Friday, quote, ‘Republican sorry, but I have been hearing about repeal and replace for seven years, didn’t happen.’ Wow, that’s shocking. Donald Trump said sorry.”

Seth Meyers: "Thousands of students in Houston returned to school today after a two-week delay caused by Hurricane Harvey. But don't worry, kids, no matter how much school you miss, you can still be Secretary of Education some day."

Seth Meyers: "People leave the White House so often they are reusing the same good-bye cake."

Seth Meyers: "The evidence shows that the effects of climate change, including warmer waters and sea level rise, are making these kinds of extreme weather events worse. And yet, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, Scott Pruitt, says now is not the time to talk about it. ... That's like crashing your car into a telephone pole and telling the cops, 'This is not the time to talk about my drinking problem.'"

Conan O'Brien: "When asked about Hurricane Irma, President Trump said, 'This is some big monster.' In other words, Trump's plan to combat Hurricane Irma is fat-shaming it."

Conan O'Brien: "Pope Francis in Latin America over the weekend and he called it a moral responsibility for everyone to fight climate change. Pretty cool. That's what he said. Or, as Fox News reported it, 'Hispanic guy in dress wants to take away your SUV.'"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, September 19, 2017
Date: Tuesday, September 19, 2017 7:13:27 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Los Angeles Times: Trump May Strip Protections From 10 National Monuments.
- Wall Street Journal: Trump's Western Firefighters.
- Washington Times: Salary Suspicions.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Relationship Between Trump Admin, Some Montana Tribes Not Yet Defined.
- Appeals Court Reverses Judge's Decision Allowing Wind Developers To Dig On Osage Land.
- MGM Pitches Bridgeport Casino As Feds Delay Tribes' Expansion.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- At Havasupai School In Grand Canyon, A Teacher Finds A Failing School.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Associated Press: Lawsuit Aims To Block Oil Drilling On US Land In Nevada.
- U.S. News & World Report: 18 Wild Horses, Burro Tamed At Wyoming Honor Farm Adopted.
- Provo (UT) Daily Herald: Officials Examine Boundaries, Public Road Access In American Fork Canyon.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Stop Seismic Testing Off NC Coast.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Will The Southland Wind Up Holding Much Of The $17-billion Bill For The Delta Water Tunnels?
- Outreach Planned For Upper Deschutes Basin Study.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- U.S. News & World Report: Upper Deschutes River Flooding Continues To Be A Problem.
- U.S. News & World Report: County In Illinois To Use Grant To Aid Endangered Bumblebee.
- Victoria (TX) Advocate: Flock Of Endangered Birds Grows Again.
- Alaska Public Radio Network: Additional Coverage: Seismic Work In ANWR: Can They Do That?
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Protection For Endangered Species Is Under Attack In Congress.

National Park Service

- San Francisco Chronicle: Rep. Speier's Amendment Takes Bite At GGNRA Dog-walking Rules.
- U.S. News & World Report: New Apartments Cater To Bryce Canyon National Park Workforce.
- East Idaho News: Grizzly Bear Research Trapping Begins Tomorrow In Grand Teton Park.
- Carlsbad (NM) Current-Argus: Students Volunteers Help Maintain Carlsbad Cavern Trails.
- U.S. News & World Report: Utah Baby Dies From Head Injury In Arizona Boating Accident.
- Hagerstown (MD) Herald-Mail Media: Additional Coverage: Legislation Introduced To Remove Robert E. Lee Statue From Antietam National Battlefield.
- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Additional Coverage: Magnificent Many Glacier.
- Cody (WY) Enterprise: Additional Coverage: Aggressive Bear Euthanized In YNP.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Domenech Confirmed As Assistant Secretary For Insular Areas.
- Virgin Islands Daily News: Irma Recovery Suspended As Maria Menaces Territory.
- ABC: Hurricane Maria Forecast To Strike Puerto Rico Wednesday.
- Washington Times: White House: Trump, Xi Agree To Step Up Pressure On North Korea.

US Geological Survey

- Prairie Public News (ND): USGS May Look At The Entire Williston Basin For A New Oil Estimate.
- Additoinal Reading.

Top National News

- CBS: Trump Pledges To Support UN, But Calls For Reforms.
- Politico: Media Analyses: As Graham-Cassidy Gains Momentum, Democrats Look To Run Out The Clock.
- Associated Press: Republicans Eye Mortgage Interest, State And Local Tax Deductions To Pay For Tax Cuts.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "The Republican Health Care Zombie Is Back."
 - "A Solution To New York City's Gridlock."
 - "The Lingering Damage Of Ferguson's Racism."
- Washington Post.
 - "Twenty-Three Children Are Shot Everyday In America."
 - "The Night One Russian Military Officer May Have Saved The World."
 - "Trump's Immigration Crackdown Hits A Speed Bump."
- Wall Street Journal.

- "The Fed's Long March To Normal."
- "Pelosi Faces Her Constituents."
- "Trump's Western Firefighters."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Trump May Strip Protections From 10 National Monuments.

The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Halper) reports that the Trump Administration's plan to reduce "protections at America's national monuments appears far more expansive than previously reported, targeting 10 of the nation's most ecologically sensitive landscapes and marine preserves for diminished protection." The plan submitted last month by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "would shrink the borders at half a dozen monuments and ocean preserves and open four others up for uses such as commercial fishing, logging and coal mining, according to a copy of the blueprint obtained by the Wall Street Journal and Washington Post." The Times says the plan, if enacted, would have a "dramatic" impact on the West.

The New York Times (9/18, Turkewitz, Popovich, McCann) lists the 10 monuments "designated for changes under Mr. Zinke's proposal." They are: Bears Ears, Utah; Gold Butte, Nevada; Grand Staircase-Escalante, Utah; Cascade-Siskiyou, Oregon and California; Pacific Remote Islands, Pacific Ocean; Rose Atoll, Pacific Ocean; Katahdin Woods and Waters, Maine; Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks, New Mexico; Rio Grande del Norte, New Mexico; and Northeast Canyons and Seamounts, Atlantic Ocean.

David Muir said on ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 11, 0:20) that President Trump has suggested "that former presidents wrongly seized the property." USA Today (9/18, Sullivan) writes that the draft report quotes Zinke saying adherence to the 1906 Antiquities Act definitions "were either arbitrary or likely politically motivated or boundaries could not be supported by science or reasons of practical resource management."

Reuters (9/18, Harvey, Volcovici, Gardner) reports that "Zinke also called for relaxing current restrictions within some of the monuments' boundaries for activities such as grazing, logging, coal mining and commercial fishing." The AP (9/18, Daly) says that the draft report recommendations "cap an unprecedented four-month review based on Trump's claim that 1906 Antiquities Act has been misused by recent presidents to create oversized monuments that hinder energy development, grazing and other uses."

BBC News \(UK\) (9/18) reports that Zinke also "suggests exploring the possibility of recognising three new national monuments: Kentucky's Camp Nelson, an 1863 Union Army outpost where African American regiments trained; the Mississippi home of murdered civil rights leader Medgar Evers; and the Badger-Two Medicine area in Montana, which is sacred ground for the Blackfeet Nation."

The Washington Post (9/18, Eilperin) reports that "environmental and outdoor recreation groups threatened Monday to sue if President Trump adopts Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's leaked proposal to alter nearly a dozen national monuments, while grazing, fishing and other groups welcomed the recommendations." Meanwhile, "former Interior secretary Sally Jewell, who oversaw several of the monument designations Zinke is proposing to alter, said in an interview Monday that 'the protections that are written into the proclamations are in many cases what he's trying to undo, in his recommendations to President Trump.'" She added, "It's a monument in name only if all the activities that are identified by Secretary Zinke are allowed to occur."

The Deseret \(UT\) News (9/18, O'Donoghue) reports that Rep. Rob Bishop, chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources, "criticized the monument leak." Bishop said in a statement, "The fact this was leaked is troubling and merits an immediate and thorough investigation. The president should have the time to evaluate the secretary's review and develop actions without the encumbrance of incomplete information being leaked to the press."

Also reporting are the Los Angeles Times (9/18, Halper), the Monterey County \(CA\) Herald

(9/18, Rogers), the Riverside \(CA\) Press Enterprise (9/18), the Ventura County \(CA\) Star (9/18, Roth), the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (9/18, DeMille), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (9/18), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (9/18, Coleman), the Daily Intelligencer \(NY\) (9/18, Hart), Newsweek (9/18, Paton), TIME (9/18), The Guardian \(UK\) (9/18, Milman), The Guardian \(UK\) (9/18, Milman), BBC News \(UK\) (9/18), The Week (9/18, Weber), The Verge (9/18, Becker), KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (9/18), KFVE-TV Honolulu Honolulu (9/18), and KTLA-TV Los Angeles Los Angeles (9/18).

4 US Monuments To Be Scaled Back Hold Artifacts, Key Habitat. The AP (9/18, McCOMBS) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's "recommendation to shrink four sprawling national monuments in the U.S. West jeopardizes protections for ancient cliff dwellings, scenic canyons and habitat for endangered fish and threatened Mojave desert tortoises." The affected monuments include Utah's Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante, along with Nevada's Gold Butte and Oregon's Cascade-Siskiyou.

Leaked Memo: Zinke Wants Smaller Monuments, But How Small? The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/19, Maffly) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "clearly has his sights on trimming national monuments in southern Utah, but his official report to President Donald Trump is so short on specifics it remains unclear where any 'revised' boundaries to Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante would fall." Zinke's "call for a smaller Bears Ears is not sitting well with the Navajo Nation, one of five tribes that proposed the monument." According to Navajo Nation Attorney General Ethel Branch, "that recommendation – along with Zinke's request that Congress make other conservation designations – contradict all the input provided by the tribe."

Also reporting are KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/18, O'Donoghue), KSTU-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/18, Edwards), and KTVX-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (9/18).

Applause, Criticism Greet Leak Of Zinke's Monument Recommendations. The Las Vegas Review-Journal (9/18, Martin, Brea) reports that the Gold Butte recommendation was "applauded by Republicans and denounced by Democrats." Sen. Dean Heller, said the designation is "an example of extreme overreach and the failed Washington-knows-best mentality." Rep. Dina Titus said: "Secretary Zinke leaked a memo in the middle of the night because he knows his plan to hack away at monuments like Gold Butte is an overreach opposed by the majority of Americans."

The AP (9/18, Ritter) reports that the leaked memo brought "a measured cheer from the head of a southern Nevada water district with springs in the area." Kevin Brown, general manager of the Virgin Valley Water District, "said Monday that the boundary change his agency sought from Zinke covers about 25 square miles (65 square kilometers) in the Virgin Mountains."

Also reporting are the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (9/18, Thomas), KSNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (9/18, Rosch), and KTNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (9/18).

Zinke Recommendation To Cut Cascade-Siskiyou Questioned. The AP (9/18, Selsky) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's proposal "recommending downsizing the Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument has several errors, one of the people who was behind the creation of the monument said Monday." A memo "justifying his recommendation that the boundaries of the monument, which lies mostly in Oregon and crosses over into California, be 'revised' says motor vehicles aren't allowed in it." Dave Willis, the chairman of the Soda Mountain Wilderness Council, asked, "There are hundreds of roads inside this monument. I live on private land inside the monument. Do we walk or ride horses?"

Also reporting are the Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (9/18, Theen), the Redding \(CA\) Record-Searchlight (9/18, Daly), and KGW-TV Portland \(OR\) Portland, OR (9/18, Roth).

No Boundary Changes For New Mexico's 2 National Monuments. The AP (9/18, Bryan) reports that the recommendations for the Rio Grande del Norte monument and the Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks monument "would remain unchanged under recommendations made by U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, providing some relief to the groups that had come out in support of the designations." The recommendations "do call for making public access a priority as well as the pursuit of congressional authority to enable Native American tribes to help manage cultural areas within the boundaries."

The Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (9/18, Soular) reports that the memo was "met Monday with wide-ranging reactions from Doña Ana County residents and New Mexico's federal lawmakers."

Also reporting are Santa Fe New Mexican (9/18, Oxford), the Silver City \(NM\) Sun-News (9/17, Peerman), the Silver City \(NM\) Sun-News (9/18, Soular), the Las Cruces \(NM\) Sun-News (9/18), the Santa Fe \(NM\) Reporter (9/18, Grubs), and Albuquerque \(NM\) Business First (9/18, Ortiz).

Zinke Would Allow Trees To Be Cut At Katahdin Woods & Waters. The AP (9/18, Sharp) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “wants to allow trees to be cut on parts of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument and to ensure that ‘traditional uses’ like snowmobiling and hunting are taken into account in a management plan that’s being drawn up.” According to the article, “it was unclear what Zinke meant when he recommended ‘active timber management’ to promote a healthy forest on the 87,500-acre (35,410-hectare) property.” However, “an environmental group said commercial logging would ‘almost certainly’ trigger a lawsuit.” Lisa Pohlmann of the Natural Resources Council of Maine said, “Commercial logging could cause substantial harm to the natural resources protected by the monument and to the economic and recreation benefits already emerging at Katahdin Woods and Waters.”

In an editorial, the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (9/19) says “that uncertainty is the biggest danger of the destructive and unnecessary process that has been unleashed on the region by the Trump administration and its allies here in Maine.” According to the paper, “even people who initially opposed the idea of a federally managed park in the Maine woods were ready to give it a try.” However, “with constant political interference, it won’t have much of a chance.”

Also reporting are the Boston Globe (9/19, Abel), the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (9/18, Miller), and the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (9/18, Sambides).

Zinke: Open Up First Atlantic Monument To Commercial Fishing. The AP (9/18, Whittle) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke recommended opening up the Northeast Canyons and Seamounts Marine National Monument to commercial fishing. Zinke’s memo “states that instead of prohibiting commercial fishing, the government should allow it in the area under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, which is the primary law governing the U.S.’s marine fisheries and meant to prevent overfishing and guarantee a safe source of seafood.” His memo says “that the monument was established ‘to protect geologic features, natural resources, and species,’ but regulators have charged that it disrupts their ability ‘to manage species to balance protection with commercial fishing.’”

Tribune Editorial: Zinke’s Report Leaves A Monumental Mess. In an editorial, the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/19) criticizes the draft report for making the “future of those monuments, especially Utah’s Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante...even more muddled than it was before.” According to the paper, “Zinke’s report is so maddeningly vague that it provides the White House with little guidance on just what it should do, and what legal rationale it should offer for doing it.” The paper expects that “the path forward now is more confusion, more litigation, more bad blood among neighbors, between Native American Nations and county governments, less time devoted to working up a specific management plan for Bears Ears that might, if everyone approached it in good faith, work out a lot better for everyone than some of us think.”

Mormons Are Among The Few Who Want Less Federally Protected Land. Their History Explains Why. In a piece for the Washington Post (9/18, Colbert), Christine Colbert examines why Mormons are some of the those who are most “opposed to government control of Western lands.” According to Colbert, it boils down to “distrust of the federal government” and “distrust of the outside world.” She concludes that “until Mormon leaders declare their support for such stewardship and call for the preservation of our nation’s greatest treasures, Utah politicians will continue to bend Trump’s ear toward privatization and resource development, reflecting their culture’s historical distrust and proprietary notions regarding the very lands that really belong to all of us, not just a few.”

Trump’s Western Firefighters.

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/18) applauds Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke for issuing a memorandum last week instructing land managers and park superintendents to exercise the “full authority” of their bureaus to clear dying trees and brush in federal lands in order to “proactively work to prevent forest fires.” The Journal adds that Congress can help the Administration’s efforts to promote better forest management with legislation that reduces litigation against such efforts against fire damage.

Salary Suspicions.

In an op-ed for the Washington Times (9/18, Feulner), Ed Feulner, president of The Heritage Foundation, praises President Trump for his donation of his salary to National Park Service that will go toward preserving Antietam National Battlefield. Feulner goes on to criticize those who are cynical about Trump’s generosity. Feulner concludes: “Instead of huffing that the president is breaking with precedent, how about we pause the partisan rancor for five minutes and thank him for setting a good example?”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Relationship Between Trump Admin, Some Montana Tribes Not Yet Defined.

KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (9/18, Luetzen) reports that more than 200 days after Ryan Zinke was sworn as Secretary of the Department of Interior, "the relationship between some Native Americans and the new administration is not quite yet defined." Monte Mills, Co-director of Margery Hunter Brown Indian Law Clinic "said the major concerns are the federal trust responsibilities, engagement with tribes across the country, social justice concerns and natural resource issues." Also, "the transfer of management of the National Bison Range to Bureau of Indian Affairs and the protection of Badger Two Medicine for the Blackfeet tribe are just two important issues for local tribes."

Appeals Court Reverses Judge's Decision Allowing Wind Developers To Dig On Osage Land.

The Tulsa \(OK\) World (9/18, Hinchey) reports that "a U.S. appellate court sided with the Osage Nation in a years-long dispute regarding whether the development of a wind farm on tribal land violated federal mineral regulations." The 10th District Court of Appeals "issued an order Monday reversing a 2015 court ruling that protected the Osage Wind project, which includes 84 turbines spread across about 8,400 acres in Osage County." The Osage Nation has "long opposed the development, arguing that wind farming spoils the prairie's natural beauty and could destroy historic burial sites." The Interior Department "administers the tribe's mineral estate and filed a lawsuit in 2014 to halt extraction work, arguing the act of digging large pits for turbine foundations is considering mining."

MGM Pitches Bridgeport Casino As Feds Delay Tribes' Expansion.

The Connecticut Mirror (9/18, Pazniokas) reports that MGM Resorts International "launched a glitzy new campaign Monday to expand into Connecticut, an effort that curiously coincides with the Trump administration, at least temporarily, halting the state's two federally recognized tribes' from building a casino in East Windsor to compete with a new MGM resort in Springfield, Mass." MGM, "after telling legislators for two years they would be foolish to approve the tribes' plan without an open competition, now is seeking legislation in special session granting it exclusive rights to build a waterfront casino resort in Bridgeport, a gateway to the lucrative New York City gambling market."

Bureau Of Indian Education

At Havasupai School In Grand Canyon, A Teacher Finds A Failing School.

The Arizona Republic (9/18) reports on the problems at Havasupai Elementary School that led "nine Havasupai students and their parents to sue the federal government: A school that has failed generations of Havasupai students has resisted reform, refused to offer services for special education or mental health and punished employees who push for change." The federal government has "twice asked a judge to dismiss parts of that lawsuit." U.S. District Judge Steven P. Logan will hear oral arguments in Phoenix on October 24.

Bureau Of Land Management

Lawsuit Aims To Block Oil Drilling On US Land In Nevada.

The AP (9/18, Sonner) reports environmentalists have sued the BLM "to try to stop it from allowing oil and gas drilling on a vast stretch of federal land in Nevada, where the government is reversing protections put in place nine months ago under the Obama administration." The Sierra Club and Center for Biological Diversity say the BLM "illegally failed to consider potential consequences of hydraulic fracturing, known as fracking, ranging from harm to the greater sage grouse to contamination of fragile desert water sources and emission of climate-altering greenhouse gases."

18 Wild Horses, Burro Tamed At Wyoming Honor Farm Adopted.

The AP (9/18) reports that "seventeen wild horses and one wild burro have found new homes after being gentled by inmate trainers at the Wyoming Honor Farm in Riverton." The adoption "continues the effort by the Bureau of Land Management and Honor Farm to place excess wild horses and burros into private care in order to maintain healthy animals on healthy public rangelands."

Officials Examine Boundaries, Public Road Access In American Fork Canyon.

The Provo \(UT\) Daily Herald (9/18, England) reports that "maps of American Fork Canyon from differing agencies including the U.S. Forest Service, Utah County and the Bureau of Land Management have some accuracy issues" that Mark Allen, founder of Protect and Preserve American Fork Canyon, "would like addressed." Allen was "instrumental in gathering multiple officials from all of those entities on Monday to take a four-wheeling field trip into American Fork Canyon to discuss the boundary concerns, and how government entities can work together to address them."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Stop Seismic Testing Off NC Coast.

In an editorial, the Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (9/18) opposes seismic testing in the Atlantic Ocean. It raises concerns that "the testing, and the drilling should exploration proceed, could put coastal marine life in danger." It also points out that "the truly ludicrous thing about the argument for exploration" is that "oil prices are depressed (excluding the post-hurricane situation) and there are plenty of reserves."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Will The Southland Wind Up Holding Much Of The $17-billion Bill For The Delta Water Tunnels?

The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Boxall) reports that some of California's "biggest water districts" are "expected to decide if they want to sign on to California WaterFix — a long-planned proposal to construct two massive tunnels that would change the way water supplies move through the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta." Supporters have "long have operated under the assumption that the cost, now estimated at nearly $17 billion, would be split among customers of the big government water projects according to the size of their contracts for delta supplies." According to the article, "under that scenario, the largely urban agencies supplied by the State Water Project would pick up 55% of the tunnel tab, and the largely agricultural districts supplied by the federal Central Valley Project would pay for 45%." However, "as the votes approach, there are growing doubts that agriculture will agree to pay that much."

The Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (9/18, Kasler, Sabalow) reports that "some Sacramento-area water agencies would end up paying for a small share of the Delta tunnels under a last-minute alternative funding plan pitched by one of the state's largest farming groups." Westlands Water District, "whose board of directors is scheduled to vote Tuesday on whether to help pay for the tunnels, says it needs to spread the costs among a greater number of water districts, both north and south of the Delta, to make the project affordable to the Fresno and Kings county farmers who get water from Westlands."

Outreach Planned For Upper Deschutes Basin Study.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (9/18, Perkowski) reports that "federal authorities will soon be sharing preliminary findings of a water study of Oregon's Upper Deschutes Basin with landowners and other affected parties." The U.S. Bureau of Reclamation and "regional partners will use the input to complete their analysis of water management in the basin, whose water supply demands are eventually expected to exceed supplies by 230,000 acre-feet a year."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Upper Deschutes River Flooding Continues To Be A Problem.

The AP (9/18) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and "other groups are working with the irrigation districts to develop plans that will help them stay in business while still finding a way to address the Upper Deschutes River's flooding issues." The FWS' habitat conversation plan "should be finalized by 2019, said Bridget Moran, the head of department's Bend field office."

County In Illinois To Use Grant To Aid Endangered Bumblebee.

The AP (9/18) reports that "a northern Illinois county will use a $5,500 grant from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to restore a habitat for an endangered bumble bee." The rusty patched bumblebee is "one of 10 bumblebee species found in Winnebago County." The Forest Preserves of Winnebago County will "use the grant to create an ideal habitat for the bumblebee by restoring 15 acres of Kieselburg Forest Preserve in Machesney Park with prairie grass and wildflowers."

Flock Of Endangered Birds Grows Again.

The Victoria \(TX\) Advocate (9/18, Priest) reports that "an estimated 431 endangered whooping cranes spent last winter on the Texas coast." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologists "released the much anticipated total on Monday after analyzing aerial surveys done over about 153,950 acres." The article notes that "this is the fifth year in a row that the only naturally occurring flock of whooping cranes has increased in size."

Additional Coverage: Seismic Work In ANWR: Can They Do That?

Additional coverage that the Interior Department is "trying to let industry into the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, to conduct seismic exploration on the coastal plain" was provided by the Alaska Public Radio Network (9/18, Ruskin) and the Washington Post (9/18).

Protection For Endangered Species Is Under Attack In Congress.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (9/18, Thompson), Sam Thompson, who formerly worked on nuclear arms control and nuclear power issues at the Energy and State Departments, warns that the Endangered Species Act, "our nation's most important and successful wildlife conservation law," is "under attack in Congress." Thompson says that "the beauty" of the act, "in addition to being based on science, is that it creates strong partnerships between the states and federal government." He adds that "it would be a huge mistake to weaken the Endangered Species Act, especially at a time when its importance is actually increasing because of the growing threat from climate change."

National Park Service

Rep. Speier's Amendment Takes Bite At GGNRA Dog-walking Rules.

The San Francisco Chronicle (9/18, Johnson) reports that "nine months after the Golden Gate National Recreation Area approved final rules restricting off-leash dog walking on much of its turf, the policy has been thrown for another loop." An amendment proposed by Rep. Jackie Speier would prevent the National Park Service "from restricting canine access to its parklands by prohibiting some funding from being used to 'finalize, implement, administer or enforce' the dog management plan." It passed the House last week with bipartisan support.

New Apartments Cater To Bryce Canyon National Park Workforce.

The AP (9/18) reports that "a new employee housing building for workers in the Bryce Canyon National Park area has opened after years of struggling to find a place to stay during their seasonal jobs." The new Bryce Rim Apartments were constructed by Ruby's Inn, "a historic hotel near the national park that employs 600 workers during the peak season." According to the article, "the apartment offers 24 single employee dorms rooms and two- and three-bedroom units for families."

Grizzly Bear Research Trapping Begins Tomorrow In Grand Teton Park.

East Idaho News (9/18) reports that "biologists with the Interagency Grizzly Bear Study Team will conduct grizzly bear research and trapping operations within Grand Teton National Park Tuesday, September 19 through November 15." The research is "part of on-going efforts required under the 2016 Conservation Strategy for the Grizzly Bear in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem to monitor the population of grizzly bears."

Students Volunteers Help Maintain Carlsbad Cavern Trails.

The Carlsbad \(NM\) Current-Argus (9/18) reports that Carlsbad Caverns National Park will "host a group of five college students who are volunteering their time with the Student Conservation Association (SCA)." The students will "help to improve several park trails over the next three months." The group will "work on Yucca and Juniper Ridge trails as well as park trails in Rattlesnake and Slaughter Canyons."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (9/19).

Utah Baby Dies From Head Injury In Arizona Boating Accident.

The AP (9/18) reports that "authorities say a Utah child has died from a head injury after a boating accident near Navajo Canyon." Glen Canyon National Recreation Area officials "say the accident occurred Sunday evening when a houseboat was trying to dock on a beach about 12 miles from Antelope Point Marina."

Additional Coverage: Legislation Introduced To Remove Robert E. Lee Statue From Antietam National Battlefield.

Additional coverage that legislation has been introduced "to have a statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee removed from Antietam National Battlefield" was provided by the Hagerstown \(MD\) Herald-Mail Media (9/18, Dearth) and Stars And Stripes (9/17, REID).

Additional Coverage: Magnificent Many Glacier.

Additional coverage that Glacier National Park has completed the renovation of historic Many Glacier Hotel was provided by the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (9/18, Franz).

Additional Coverage: Aggressive Bear Euthanized In YNP.

Additional coverage that National Park Service officials "captured and killed a nuisance bear recently in Yellowstone National Park because of its continuing bad habits of intruding on and threatening to interfere with people" was provided by the Cody \(WY\) Enterprise (9/18, Freedman).

Office Of Insular Affairs

Domenech Confirmed As Assistant Secretary For Insular Areas.

The Saipan \(MNP\) Tribune (9/18) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "applauded the Senate's confirmation of Interior Department veteran Douglas William Domenech as assistant secretary of the Interior for Insular Areas." Domenech was confirmed by the Senate last Friday. Zinke said, "Doug's confirmation could not come soon enough for the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico who are rebuilding in the wake of Hurricane Irma. I'm excited to put him to work for them and all our brothers and sisters across the insular areas."

Irma Recovery Suspended As Maria Menaces Territory.

The Virgin Islands Daily News (9/18, O'CONNOR) reports that Gov. Kenneth Mapp has "suspended Hurricane Irma recovery efforts with the grim expectation that Hurricane Maria could strike the V.I. on Tuesday." In a radio address from St. Croix Government House on Sunday, Mapp said, "The government has ceased recover operations and we are in hunker down and take shelter mode."

Hurricane Maria Forecast To Strike Puerto Rico Wednesday.

In its lead story, ABC World News Tonight (9/18, lead story, 2:15, Muir) reported Hurricane Maria strengthened to a Category 4 on Monday as it "bear[s] down on some of the [Caribbean] islands, just now recovering from Irma." In its lead story, NBC Nightly News (9/18, lead story, 2:45, Holt) reported Maria is "making a beeline towards some of the same Caribbean islands decimated less than two weeks ago by Irma, lashing the Caribbean island of Martinique, [and] barreling towards Puerto Rico."

The Naples \(FL\) Daily News (9/18, Mangrum) says that according to an advisory from the National Hurricane Center, "additional strengthening is forecast during the next 24 to 36 hours, and Maria is expected to be an extremely dangerous major hurricane during the next couple of days." The New York Times (9/18, Ahmed, Semple) says the National Hurricane Center called Maria "a potentially catastrophic Category 5 hurricane." Some islands in the storm's path, "still reeling from the impact of Hurricane Irma were bracing late Monday for Round 2, closing schools, stores and just about everything else before the storm made landfall."

Al Roker said on NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 2, 1:05, Holt) that Maria will “come through Antilles, then the Virgin Islands” before it hits Puerto Rico and “continu[es] on into the Turks and Caicos with more strong storms, Category 4, 130-mile-per-hour winds, a devastating storm surge.” In its lead story, the CBS Evening News (9/18, lead story, 1:45, Mason) reported that “preparations should be under way for a very destructive storm in Puerto Rico, as well as parts of the Virgin Islands. After that, we track it through the Bahamas and off the eastern seaboard by Sunday.” ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 3, 2:00, Muir) reported residents in the Caribbean are in a “desperate race to prepare” by clearing the debris “left behind by Irma.”

McClatchy (9/18, Whitefield, Charles) says the current forecast track takes Maria “into the Leeward Islands Monday, over the extreme northeastern Caribbean Tuesday,” and Bloomberg News (9/18, Sullivan) reports that on its current track, Maria will “strike Puerto Rico’s southern coast Wednesday with winds as high as 150 mph and a storm surge that could reach nine feet.” David Begnaud reported on the CBS Evening News (9/18, story 2, 1:50, Mason) if Maria “makes a direct hit” on Puerto Rico, “it could cut power to this island for weeks. Already tonight, officials have ordered food rationing of basic items like water, milk, baby formula, even flashlights and batteries.” The Miami Herald (9/18, Charles, Staletovich) says it is currently unclear “what threat Maria poses to Florida or the US coast, although a landfall looks unlikely.”

White House: Trump, Xi Agree To Step Up Pressure On North Korea.

The Washington Times (9/18, Miller) reports the White House said President Trump spoke with Chinese President Xi Jinping in a phone call on Monday. In a statement, the White House said Trump and Xi “committed to maximizing pressure on North Korea through vigorous enforcement of United Nations Security Council resolutions.” China’s Xinhua News Agency reported the two leaders also discussed Trump’s upcoming visit to the nation, which Reuters (9/18) says will likely take place in November, when Trump travels to the Philippines for the ASEAN summit and Vietnam for the APEC summit. Xinhua added, “Xi said China and the United States share extensive common interests and have seen sound momentum of exchanges and cooperation in various areas at present,” and that Xi “said he is happy to maintain communications with the U.S. leader on a regular basis over topics of mutual concern.”

Mattis Discusses Possible Responses To North Korean Nuclear Threat. The Washington Post (9/18, Lamothe) reports Defense Secretary Mattis told reporters at the Pentagon on Monday that he and South Korean Defense Minister Song Young-moo “discussed the option” of reintroducing tactical nuclear weapons in South Korea. Mattis did not indicate whether he will support the proposal, but Song has backed the move as an “alternative worth a full review.” The Post says that if the US and South Korea move forward with the option, it “could take tensions with North Korea to a new high.”

The AP (9/18, Burns) reports Mattis also told reporters that the US does not believe that North Korean missiles that are test-fired in Japan’s direction need to be shot down. Mattis explained that Pyongyang is “intentionally doing provocations that seem to press against the envelope for just how far can they push without going over some kind of a line, in their minds, that would make them vulnerable,” so they are aiming “for the middle of the Pacific Ocean.” Mattis stressed, however, that if the missiles were deemed a threat to either the US or Japan, then they “would elicit a different response from us.”

The New York Times (9/18, Cooper) reports Mattis “also said he believed that the United States had found military options to handle the nuclear crisis on the Korean Peninsula that would not put the South Korean capital, Seoul, at grave risk, though he refused to elaborate on what those might be.” Military experts suggested that potential options against North Korea “that might not prompt immediate retaliation against Seoul could include cyberwarfare or even an assassination attempt on Mr. Kim – though such an attempt would have to be successful.” The Times adds that signs of possible US military action in North Korea, such as the “repositioning of military assets or an evacuation of American citizens in the region,” have thus far “not appeared.”

US, South Korean Militaries Conduct Joint Exercises In “Show Of Force” To North Korea. The Washington Post (9/18, Lamothe) reports that on Sunday, the Pentagon dispatched “a formation of 14 bombers and fighters over the Korean Peninsula on Sunday that also included South Korean and Japanese aircraft, the latest show of force in response to North Korea’s missile launches and nuclear tests.” The Post says that the show of military force “came as President Trump prepared to deliver remarks for the first time this week at the United Nations General Assembly” amid escalating tensions over the North Korean crisis. In a Sunday appearance on CNN, Ambassador Haley told CNN, “If North Korea keeps on with this reckless behavior, if the United States has to defend itself or defend its allies in any way, North Korea will be destroyed,” although “none of us want that.”

In response to Haley’s remarks, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Lu Kang stressed that all parties must enforce the latest round of UN resolutions on North Korea instead of “deliberately complicating the issue,” Reuters (9/18, Blanchard, Shin) reports. Lu added that military threats are “not beneficial to a final resolution to the peninsula nuclear issue.” On Monday, North Korea’s foreign ministry called the latest UN resolution “the most vicious, unethical and inhumane act of hostility to physically exterminate” its citizens, government, and system. It warned that the “increased moves” by the US and its allies “to impose sanctions and pressure... will only increase our pace toward the ultimate completion of the state nuclear force.” Reuters notes that as the US and its allies conducted staged bombing drills, China and Russia launched naval military exercises off Russia’s far eastern port of Vladivostok, located near the Russia-North Korea border.

Spain Orders Expulsion Of North Korean Ambassador. The Washington Post (9/18, Fifield) reports the Spanish Foreign Ministry announced that it has ordered North Korea’s ambassador to Madrid, Kim Hyok Chol, to leave the country by the end of the month. Mexico, Peru, and Kuwait have ordered similar expulsions. The Post says that Spain’s expulsion of Kim “will please Trump administration officials, who have been asking countries with diplomatic relations with North Korea to scale them back as a way to further isolate Kim Jong Un’s regime.”

US Geological Survey

USGS May Look At The Entire Williston Basin For A New Oil Estimate.

The Prairie Public News \(ND\) (9/18, Thompson) reports that Sen. John Hoeven and others recently asked US Geological Survey for an updated assessment of the oil in the Bakken and Three Forks formations. State mineral resources director Lynn Helms “said USGS is now talking about a full Williston Basin-wide assessment in a few years.” But “there’s been no official word from USGS.”

Additoinal Reading.

- Conservatives And Conservationists Find Common Ground On Chesapeake Shores. Christian Science Monitor (9/18, Hinckley).
- A 50-year Effort To Raise Endangered Whooping Cranes Comes To An End. Washington Post (9/18, Brulliard).
- U.S. And Canadian Tribes Gather In Yellowstone To Advocate Name Changes. Montana Public Radio (9/18, Hegyi).
- Tribes Want Some Name Changes In Yellowstone National Park. KRTV-TV Great Falls, MT (9/18, Davies).

Top National News

Trump Pledges To Support UN, But Calls For Reforms.

Reports on President Trump’s call for reforms at the UN on Monday highlight his history of criticism of the world body. Media outlets, however, say his tone Monday was more restrained than his rhetoric on the campaign trail. Several reports also make note that his remarks lasted just four minutes. All three networks covered the President’s address, dedicating a total of just under six minutes of combined airtime. In the briefest of the three reports, the CBS Evening News (9/18, story 4, 0:30, Mason) called Monday’s speech “something of a warm-up” to his address before the General Assembly on Tuesday. On ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 4, 2:45, Muir), Jonathan Karl said Trump “made his UN debut today, declaring he wants to make the United Nations great,” but “not long ago, he was one of the UN’s harshest critics.”

John Roberts reported on Fox News’ Special Report (9/18) that Trump was “less strident in his language, but no less forceful in his call to change the culture at the UN.” Jeff Zeleny too said on CNN’s The Lead (9/18) that Trump’s “words today [were] far more measured than the campaign trail,” and the Los Angeles Times (9/18, Wilkinson, Bierman) says he was “acting more the statesman than the flamethrower.”

Mara Liasson said on Fox News’ Special Report (9/18), “This was a real contrast. Remember during the campaign he said the United Nations was an enemy of freedom and an enemy of democracy? Now he’s saying more or less what a lot of American presidents have said is that it is a good thing to reform the bureaucracy there and talking about not having the US pay a disproportionate share, which is something that other presidents have said. This was a pretty typical first day for an American president so far."

Mollie Hemingway of The Federalist said on Fox News' Special Report (9/18), "The tone is markedly different from how it was during the campaign. It kind of actually a disappointing change in rhetoric. He said today that the UN does a good job feeding the hungry and taking care of disaster. That's actually not true. It's a bloated organization."

However, in his opening monologue on Fox News' Hannity (9/18), Sean Hannity said Trump "wasted little time in calling out the organization's many, many failures." Hannity added that it was "really refreshing for an American President to call out the UN because for years, we've seen the organization repeatedly attack Israel and push their radical leftist, globalist agenda that does not respect the sovereignty of individual countries, including the US."

The AP (9/18, Lemire, Superville) says Trump "used his United Nations debut on Monday to prod the international organization to cut its bloated bureaucracy and sharpen its ill-defined mission." At the same time, Trump also "pledged US support for the world body he had excoriated as a candidate, and his criticisms were more restrained than in years past." The AP says that even as Trump "chastised" the UN, he pledged that the US would be "be partners in your work" to make the organization more effective. The New York Daily News (9/18, Silverstein) likewise says the President "gave no indication that he will weaken the US support" for the world body.

USA Today (9/18, Jackson) reports that a Monday's special forum, Trump, "a long-time critic of the UN," said the body has not reached its full potential "because of bureaucracy and mismanagement." USA Today says that "as he did on the campaign trail," Trump stressed that "no member state shoulders a disproportionate share of the burden."

The New York Times (9/18, Baker, Sengupta) says Trump opened his visit to the UN "with a polite but firm call" for the world body "to overhaul itself, as world leaders waited to see how he would reconcile his 'America first' vision with an institution devoted to collective action and global goals." The Times notes that his address "lasted only four minutes and included none of the bombast he had directed at foreign institutions in the past."

NBC Nightly News (9/18, story 3, 2:30, Holt) said the President put "a new twist on his old campaign slogan." Trump was shown saying: "I think the main message is make the United Nations great. Not again. Make the United Nations great." The Washington Post (9/18, Nakamura) similarly says that Trump, "speaking briefly with reporters...riffed off of his campaign slogan, Make America Great Again." The Washington Times (9/18, Boyer) quotes the President as saying in his address, "The United Nations was founded on truly noble goals. Yet in recent years the United Nations has not reached its full potential because of bureaucracy and mismanagement."

The Washington Free Beacon (9/18, Heretik) reports Trump "praised many of the organization's goals and past actions, but said institutional change is needed," and CNN (9/18, Diamond) reports on its website that he called for the UN to take steps to "protect whistleblowers," despite his "frequent heavy-handed criticism of the leaks that have beset his administration."

Newsday (9/18, Dowdy) says the President "delivered a short speech," and Reuters (9/18, Holland) reports that "in a building where long statements are commonplace, Trump spoke for just four minutes" to the forum, which "more than 120 countries were invited to attend" after signing on to "a US-drafted 10-point political declaration" backing UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres' reform efforts.

Politico (9/18, Toosi) says the issue of UN reform is "likely to please his domestic political base," and while Trump is "hardly the first US president to call for shaking up" the UN, he is "fortunate in that the still-new" Guterres has made reform "a top priority, raising the odds that some genuine changes are on the way."

Newsweek (9/18, Lanktree) examines Trump's remarks in the past criticizing the world body, writing that "from 2011 onward, he started making the creed that has become his most frequent: calling for the organization to have its funding cut."

ABC World News Tonight (9/18, story 4, 2:45, Muir) reported that "amid a flurry of meetings" on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly on Monday, the President "no public mention...of the biggest issue on the agenda this week: North Korea." However, ABC said there is "no doubt" North Korea will come up in Trump's speech on Tuesday. ABC's Jonathan Karl said, "You are going to hear a very tough line from the President on North Korea."

Greg Palkot reported on Fox News' Special Report (9/18) that the need to reign in the North will be at the top of Trump's agenda this week. Trump, South Korean President Moon Jae-In, and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe will meet Thursday.

Media Analyses: "National Sovereignty" To Be Theme Of Trump's UNGA Address. The Wall Street Journal (9/18, Fassihi, Stokols) reports that during his address to the General Assembly Tuesday, President Trump will lay out a foreign policy rooted in his view of national sovereignty and anchored by "America First" principles, according to a senior Administration official. "It will be a foreign policy that is driven by outcomes, not by ideologies," the senior Administration official told reporters. "What the president is doing is explaining how the principle of America First is not only consistent with the goal of international cooperation, but a rational basis for every country to engage in cooperation."

The Washington Post (9/18, Nakamura, Gearan) says the President's "nationalist agenda has led to widespread anxiety among the US allies and partners who have gathered" at the UN this week. Amid "mounting global challenges, foreign leaders are carefully watching Trump's moment on the world stage for signals about his willingness to maintain the United States' traditional leadership role."

Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway, asked on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/18) what the President's message will be, said, "President Trump will be promoting peace. He'll be promoting prosperity and sovereignty and accountability."

A Washington Examiner (9/18) editorial writes that "national sovereignty" is "not a popular notion among those American and European elites who hang out at the United Nations," but "will be a theme of President Trump's address to the UN General Assembly on Tuesday." The Examiner says that "by emphasizing sovereignty in a setting where it is more commonly eroded, Trump is doing what he does best; bluntly repudiating the most fashionable idea of the people around him," and he "is right to do so."

Trump Also Expected To Emphasize North Korean Threat. A "senior White House official" told the Washington Times (9/18, Boyer, Miller) that Trump, in "his first address to the United Nations General Assembly" on Tuesday, "will turn up the heat on North Korea and call out countries that coddle the rogue regime." On condition of anonymity, the official said the President "will speak in extremely tough terms about the North Korean menace, and the threat it poses to our security and the security of all the nations in that room." He will also "talk about as well the enablement of the North Korean regime and what that means, too." The Times says that Trump's "remarks will be aimed directly at China and Russia, the biggest sponsors and protectors of Kim Jong-un's hermit kingdom, although those two nations won't have representatives at the gathering in New York."

Citing a White House aide, USA Today (9/19, Jackson) reports Trump is also expected to "argue nations can find opportunities to work together on shared threats, in particular, those from North Korea" as well as Iran. Nonetheless, Trump is also expected to "promote the idea that each country should respond to its own needs – and the needs of its citizens – above all others," a position dubbed "principled realism." The aide added that Trump favors fostering global stability over nation-building or spreading democracy, which the aide said is "accomplished through countries that are more secure, countries that are more prosperous, and countries that are more sovereign."

Gerald F. Seib, in his column for the Wall Street Journal (9/18, Seib), examines potential diplomatic strategies that the international community can employ to dissuade North Korea from pursuing its goal of nuclear weapons and missile programs, and says the success of these approaches may hinge on what Kim Jong-un ultimately wants to achieve. Seib adds that a long-term strategy of containment remains an option if diplomatic approaches fail to reverse North Korea's nuclear program; while expensive and frightening, he says, such an approach is still preferable to the threat of war on the Korean Peninsula.

Media Analyses: As Graham-Cassidy Gains Momentum, Democrats Look To Run Out The Clock.

Reports say that Affordable Care Act repeal-and-replace legislation proposed by Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy gained momentum on Monday as Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey said he backs the bill – an important endorsement, since Sen. John McCain, who cast the deciding vote against the last GOP attempt at ACA repeal, has said that Ducey's position would be important in his determining how he would vote. But in order for the measure to advance with 51 votes (or 50 and a tie-breaker by Vice President Pence) under the reconciliation process, the bill must pass by September 30, so as Politico (9/18, Caygle) reports, Democratic leaders are pressing for a full Congressional Budget Office analysis of the bill, which would take time. USA Today (9/18, Collins) reports that a spokesman for Senate Majority Leader McConnell said that the CBO has been asked "to produce an expedited analysis" of the bill – though The Hill (9/18, Carney) reports that Democrats have other "delaying tactics at their disposal."

The New York Times (9/18, A1, Pear) reports that "a last-ditch push to obliterate" the ACA "could be nearing a showdown vote in the Senate, and a handful of Republicans insist they are closing in on the votes." Graham and Cassidy "say their drive is gaining momentum." The Times says the bill is "still a long shot," though most other sources disagree. Politico (9/18, Everett, Haberkorn) reports under the headline "Momentum Builds For Obamacare Repeal" that the "last-gasp Obamacare repeal effort is gaining steam," and Perry Bacon Jr. of FiveThirtyEight (9/18) writes that 41 senators are "almost certain to vote yes," and five more are "likely" to back the legislation. Bacon says the bill could pass, since McCain is an "extremely close friend" of Graham's. Bacon writes, "I have some doubt that McCain would vote down a bill that Graham has advocated so strongly for." And Ducey's backing "could also move the Arizona senator towards supporting it."

The Hill (9/18, Sullivan) calls Ducey's support "a crucial boost for [the bill's] chances." Ducey said Monday, "Congress has 12 days to say 'yes' to Graham-Cassidy. It's time for them to get the job done." McCain "has said that Ducey's position would be an important factor in how he votes." The Washington Times (9/18, Howell) reports that Graham "took Mr. Ducey's support and ran with it," saying, "With Gov. Ducey's support, we are gaining the momentum we need to repeal and replace Obamacare. Gov. Ducey rightly believes he can do a better job delivering healthcare to Arizonans than some nameless, faceless bureaucrat in Washington." In response to Ducey's announcement, Graham tweeted, "Great day for federalism, bad day for Obamacare."

The Washington Post (9/18, Cunningham) says that the "political prospects for the bill...seemed to be improving by the hour Monday." In addition to Ducey's backing, "some moderate senators whose votes are crucial have either signed onto the bill or at least haven't ruled it out yet." However, McClatchy (9/18, Dumain) reports that Gov. Henry McMaster of Graham's home state of South Carolina has yet to sign on.

The Los Angeles Times (9/18, Levey) says the "last-ditch Republican push...appeared to pick up momentum" with Ducey's support. Graham-Cassidy "would go far beyond repealing key parts of President Obama's signature healthcare law. It would fundamentally change how states and the federal government divide the cost of providing healthcare." It would "give states broad new authority to completely overhaul their healthcare systems," and "redistribute tens of billions in federal aid." The New York Times (9/18) says the bill "would also make permanent, structural changes to the Medicaid program for beneficiaries who qualified before the expansion, converting it from an open-ended federal health care program to one that caps federal spending on each beneficiary."

Johnson Says Homeland Security And Governmental Affairs Committee Will Hold Hearing. The Washington Post (9/18, Weigel) reports that though the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee would be the most likely venue for a hearing on the bill, Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Chairman Ron Johnson plans to hold a hearing in his committee. The Post writes that though "it's not unusual for this committee to hold hearings on government spending and best practices," it is "not, nor has it ever been, one of the committees that health insurance legislation has had to move through." The hearing "strikes opponents of the legislation as an attempt to check a box and say the bill has been vetted," and McCain has said that the Senate HELP Committee should be the venue. The Washington Times (9/18, Howell) says Johnson's move is "viewed as a table-setter for a potential vote on the last-gasp Obamacare repeal bill."

Meadows Says House Would Pass Bill; Tea Party Patriots Lends Support. Politico (9/18, Bade) reports that Rep. Mark Meadows (R-NC), who leads the House Freedom Caucus, "predicted Monday that the House would pass a last-ditch effort to repeal Obamacare if it clears the Senate, with conservatives getting on board." Breitbart (9/18, Moran) reports, "The Tea Party Patriots joined the Family Research Council and the Susan B. Anthony List to endorse" the measure, but said that once passed, the House could improve the measure by repealing "regulations such as community ratings and essential benefits."

Conway Says Trump Would Sign "Meaningful Repeal And Replace Legislation." Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (9/18) that another healthcare vote "could happen" before the end of September. Conway added that "the Graham-Cassidy bill is gaining in support and steam. Many of the governors like it. I'm told we're close to 50 votes or so in the Senate. ... [President Trump] is ready. You put meaningful repeal and replace legislation on his desk and he will sign it." Politico (9/18, Nelson) reports on Conway's remarks.

Paul Says He Will Oppose "Fake Repeal" Graham-Cassidy. Sen. Rand Paul writes on the Fox

News (9/18, Paul) website, "I must add to the list of ObamaCare Lite plans to oppose the new Graham/Cassidy bill that was introduced last week in the Senate. ... In no way is it repeal the way we promised. I will oppose this bill as I did the other fake repeal bills, and I urge those who want repeal to do so, as well."

House Democrats Tweet Opposition. As was the case when previous Senate GOP repeal-and-replace bills were under consideration, many House Democrats took to Twitter to express their opposition, while their GOP colleagues did not weigh in. Rep. Nanette Barragán (D-CA) tweeted, "#GrahamCassidy is just another terrible #TrumpCare bill that deprives Americans of healthcare." Rep. Brendan Boyle (D-PA) tweeted, "We can't let up and must defeat #GrahamCassidy or millions will suffer." Rep. Joe Crowley (D-NY) tweeted, "Democrats aren't going to stand by as Republicans attempt to sabotage America's health care system." Rep. Diana DeGette (D-CO) tweeted, "Don't be fooled – #GrahamCassidy is not a kinder, gentler repeal of #ACA. It will still rip coverage from at least 15 million Americans." Rep. Raul Grijalva (D-AZ) tweeted, "Don't let @SenateGOP fool you... #GrahamCassidy is every bit as ruthless as previous versions of #TrumpCare." Rep. Joe Kennedy III (D-MA) tweeted, "Old enough to remember when @SenateGOP promised they wouldn't take health care away from a sick child."

Rep. Ruben Kihuen (D-NV) tweeted, "Nevadans desperately need common-sense solutions that will expand access, keep healthcare costs low & stabilize markets. NOT #GrahamCassidy." Rep. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY) tweeted, "#GrahamCassidy bill is just the latest version of #Trumpcare. Still just as bad & endangers care. We must still fight to #ProtectOurCare." Rep. Frank Pallone (D-NJ) tweeted, "#GrahamCassidy= #Trumpcare. Will cost NJ more $ & leave more uninsured." Rep. Kathleen Rice (D-NY) tweeted, "Tired of 'repeal & replace?' GOP is back at it again. Speak up & help defeat it – again." Rep. Tim Walz (D-MN) tweeted, "I implore @SenateMajLdr & @SenateGOP to heed calls from within their own party for regular order and bipartisanship. Abandon #GrahamCassidy." Rep. Nydia Velazquez (D-NY) tweeted, "The GOP can't seem to get the message. New #TrumpCare called #GrahamCassidy is another heartless attempt to take away care from millions."

Obama-Era CMS Chief: GOP "Putting All Eggs In Graham Cassidy." Former Acting Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Andy Slavitt tweeted, "Republican leadership now putting all eggs in Graham Cassidy. Word is no bipartisan deal and no waivers. Strong arm calls tonight."

Blumstein: Clarification Legislation Could Lead SCOTUS To Kill ACA. James Blumstein of the Vanderbilt University Health Policy Center writes in the Wall Street Journal (9/18) that Republicans could kill the ACA by passing legislation stating that Congress did not intend to use its taxation power to enforce the individual mandate. Since Chief Justice Roberts' deciding vote in upholding the ACA in 2012 was based on congressional taxation authority, Blumstein asserts, such a clarification could lead the Supreme Court to rule the ACA unconstitutional.

Republicans Eye Mortgage Interest, State And Local Tax Deductions To Pay For Tax Cuts.

The AP (9/18, Gordon) reports that as Republicans search for "about $1 trillion to finance sweeping tax cuts," they are focusing on "two popular deductions that are woven into the nation's fiscal fabric – the mortgage interest deduction that millions of homeowners prize and the deduction for state and local taxes popular in Democratic strongholds." According to "congressional aides and strong hints from some lawmakers," those deductions "are in the cross-hairs as Republicans look to slash the corporate and individual tax rates."

WPost Gives Ryan's Tax Reform Claims "Two Pinocchios." An analysis in the Washington Post's (9/18, Lewis) "Fact Checker" column reports that as he tries to build support "for a major overhaul of what he calls the United States' 'terrible tax system," House Speaker Ryan "sat down with the Associated Press to discuss his agenda." Ryan, the Post adds, "is very adept at citing what appear to be authoritative facts and figures." However, "Ryan's facts sometimes require careful scrutiny." The Post goes on to analyze Ryan's arguments and gives his claims "Two Pinocchios."

Cato Analysts Call For Elimination Of Low Income Housing Tax Credit. In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (9/18), Chris Edwards, director of tax policy studies at the Cato Institute, and Vanessa Brown Calder, a housing policy analyst at Cato, make a case for the elimination of the Low Income Housing Tax Credit, arguing that while it purports to be an antipoverty program, developers, investors, and the financial industry are its main beneficiaries.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“The Republican Health Care Zombie Is Back.” A New York Times (9/19, Board) editorial outlines ways that Republican lawmakers’ proposed Graham-Cassidy healthcare bill “would in many ways be worse than bills that came before.” The Times urges the Senate to “show a little patience,” as Sens. Lamar Alexander and Patty Murray are working on “a better, more humane option.”

“A Solution To New York City’s Gridlock.” The New York Times (9/19, Board) editorializes that the severe traffic generated by the United Nations General Assembly in New York City serves as a reminder “of the need to reduce traffic in the business heart of the city through a redesigned system of tolls known as congestion pricing.” While Gov. Andrew Cuomo “has yet to flesh out details of what his plan would look like,” the Times says he “correctly sees it as a way to raise gobs of cash for the city’s ailing mass-transit network.” More importantly, “the true goal of this pricing mechanism is embodied in its name: decongesting streets for the benefit of drivers and pedestrians – and their lungs.” The Times concludes in stating that “there’s nothing regressive about plowing toll revenue into improvements for mass transit, which is how most low- and middle-income New Yorkers get around.”

“The Lingering Damage Of Ferguson’s Racism.” In an editorial, the New York Times (9/19, Board) says Ferguson, Missouri “agreed to a consent decree requiring it to root out the racist and unconstitutional practices that Justice officials documented in a hair-raising report two years ago” following the fatal shooting of “an African-American teenager named Michael Brown” by a white police officer. The Times stresses that Ferguson now “has a further obligation: a moral duty to compensate victims of abusive policing.” The Times points to the case of “Fred Watson, an African-American father of two who lost his home, career and peace of mind after he was unjustly arrested five years ago, with the city prosecutor pursuing the charges until dropping them last week.” The Times reiterates that Ferguson must not only financially compensate the Watson “family and apologize for this tragedy,” but also “consider whether it could truly be complying with the consent order if it continued to hound Mr. Watson for five years.”

Washington Post.

“Twenty-Three Children Are Shot Everyday In America.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/18) writes that 23 children were shot each day in the United States in 2015, according to a Post analysis of data from the CDC and the US Consumer Product Safety Commission – a number that “represents a crisis, a serious public-health problem that demands attention.” The Post argues that Congress must act to prevent to prevent such violence and reject the national gun lobby.

“The Night One Russian Military Officer May Have Saved The World.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/18) says, “On the night of Sept. 26, 1983, in a period of Cold War tension, Stanislav Petrov, a lieutenant colonel on duty at a missile attack early-warning center south of Moscow, was jolted by an alarm of a U.S. intercontinental ballistic missile attack on the Soviet Union,” and he responded by telling “his superiors...that it was a false alarm.” The Post says that by doing so, Petrov effectively “prevented a chain of reactions by higher-level officials that could have led to catastrophe,” a move that gained him the reputation as “the man who saved the world.” The Post posits that Petrov’s story “may sound like ancient history,” but is worth remembering today because “nuclear-armed missiles in the United States and Russia are still on launch-ready alert.” The Post cautions that today’s “world, led by the United States and Russia, should find a way to back away from this danger.”

“Trump’s Immigration Crackdown Hits A Speed Bump.” The Washington Post (9/18) editorializes against San Francisco’s opposition to “handing over undocumented immigrants convicted of...violent and serious crimes.” The Post attacks liberal localities for turning a “blind eye to undocumented residents who have committed major crimes, imperil public safety and should be removed.” However, the Post says the California Values Act signed by Gov. Brown that declares California a sanctuary state “reflects the challenge[s]” that police “face in cultivating strong relations with immigrant communities, without which neither victims nor witnesses will cooperate with them,” and the Post urges the Trump Administration to “take note” of this.

Wall Street Journal.

“The Fed’s Long March To Normal.” The Wall Street Journal (9/18) editorializes in favor of the Fed’s unwinding of its bond portfolio, saying it could boost the Fed’s credibility to return to a modest view of central banking. The Journal praises Fed Chair Janet Yellen for avoiding roiling the markets with anticipation of the move. The editorial highlights concern that as the Fed unloads long-term bonds, investors may sell riskier assets, adversely impacting some asset classes. However, the Journal also emphasizes market uncertainty over the impact of the wind-down.

“Pelosi Faces Her Constituents.” The Wall Street Journal (9/18) editorializes that House Minority Leader Pelosi should be commended by immigrants’ rights supporters for her role in garnering President Trump’s support for Congressional action on DACA. The Journal decries the young protesters for lacking an understanding of US legislative processes.

“Trump’s Western Firefighters.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (9/18) applauds Interior Secretary Zinke for issuing a memorandum last week instructing land managers and park superintendents to exercise the “full authority” of their bureaus to clear dying trees and brush in federal lands in order to “proactively work to prevent forest fires.” The Journal adds that Congress can help the Administration’s efforts to promote better forest management with legislation that reduces litigation against such efforts against fire damage.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Trump To Push Nationalist Policy At UN

The Fed, A Decade After The Crisis, Is About To Embark On The Great Unwinding

Northrop Grumman Move To Acquire Rocket Maker Reflects Military Space Race

Equifax Work For Government Shows Company’s Broad Reach

New York Times:

With A Picked Lock And A Threatened Indictment, Mueller’s Inquiry Sets A Tone

Obamacare Repeal, Thought Dead In July, May Be Revived In Senate

Trump Soft-Soaps The UN. Of Course, It Was Only Day 1

Despite Rising Seas And Bigger Storms, Florida’s Land Rush Endures

Washington Post:

ACA Repeal Effort Is Revived

Facebook’s Openness Questioned On The Hill

Trump Plans Pragmatic UN Speech

London Mayor Eyes Tax On Swanky ‘Zombie Flats’

New Head Winds For Texas Students Post-Harvey

Financial Times:

Vladimir Putin Takes A Close Look At War Games

Theresa May Moves To Tighten Grip On Brexit Process

Portuguese Bonds In Biggest Post-crisis Rally After S&P Upgrade

Washington Times:

Trump To Rail Against North Korea At U.N., Seek United Front Against Nuclear And Missile Programs

Religious Extremists In Russia Try To Shut Down Movie About Romance Of Czar Nicholas II

Graham-Cassidy Block-Grant Bill Sets Off Clashes In Senate As Obamacare Repeal Clock Ticks

Debate Will Offer Northam, Gillespie A Chance For Breakout In Tight Virginia Governor’s Race

Crown Prince’s Quick Rise Seen In Purge Of Saudi Clerics

Story Lineup From Last Night’s Network News:

ABC: Hurricane Tracking; Hurricane Jose-East Coast; Hurricanes-Caribbean; White House-Trump UN Address; St. Louis Protest; Louisiana-Racial Murders; London Terror Attack-Investigation; New York-Tour Bus Crash; Baltimore-Chemical Scare; France-American Students Attacked; National Monuments-Protected Area Reduction; Sean Spicer-Emmy Appearance; Disabled Hiker.

CBS: Hurricane Tracking; Hurricanes-Caribbean; London Terror Attack-Investigation; White House-Trump UN Address; Russia Military Training; Russia Meddling Investigation-Sputnik; San Francisco-Pelosi Protest; Los Angeles-Lead Soil Contamination; Georgia Tech Student Shooting; Tattoo-Possible Risks; Cold War-Averted Nuclear War.

NBC: Hurricanes-Caribbean; Hurricane Tracking; White House-Trump UN Address; Crippled State Department; San Francisco-Pelosi Protest; St. Louis Protest; France-American Students Attacked; London Terror Attack-Investigation; Louisiana State University-Fraternity Hazing Death; New York-Tour Bus Crash; Toys R Us Bankruptcy; Emmy Awards; Boston Marathon Bombing Survivor.

Network TV At A Glance:

Hurricanes – 13 minutes, 10 seconds

White House-Trump UN Address – 5 minutes, 45 seconds

London Terror Attack-Investigation – 3 minutes, 55 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Georgia Tech Student Shooting; Hurricane Tracking; Wisconsin-Foxconn Incentives; Wall Street News.

CBS: Hurricane Tracking; Russia Meddling Investigation-Manafort; White House-Trump UN Address; St. Louis Protest; Georgia Tech Student Shooting.

FOX: Hurricane Tracking; Georgia Tech Student Shooting; St. Louis Protest; White House-Trump UN Address.

NPR: White House-Trump UN Address; US Military Spending Increase; National Monuments-Protected Area Reduction; Wall Street News.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Gives an address to the 72nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly; participates in an expanded meeting with the Amir of Qatar; participates in a photo opportunity with leaders of the United Nations Member State; gives remarks at a diplomatic reception.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a meeting with High Representative of the European Union Federica Mogherini; participates in a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Shahid Khaqan Abbasi of Pakistan; participates in a diplomatic reception hosted by the President.

US Senate: 9:30 AM Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Business Meeting, hearing on vegetation and electricity assets – Business Meeting, with agenda including nominations of Joseph Balash to be Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Land and Minerals Management; Richard Glick and Kevin McIntyre to be Federal Energy Regulatory Commission members; David Jonas to be Department of Energy General Counsel; and Ryan Nelson to be Department of the Interior Solicitor * Immediately followed by hearing to examine the vegetation management requirements for electricity assets located on federal lands, Section 2310 of 'S. 1460, the Energy and Natural Resources Act of 2017', and 'H.R. 1873, the Electricity Reliability and Forest Protection Act', with testimony from National Forest System Associate Deputy Chief Glenn Casamassa; Bureau of Land Management Acting Deputy Director of Operations John Ruhs; Missoula Electric Cooperative General Manager Mark Hayden; The Wilderness Society Senior Regional Director – Southwest Region Scott Miller; and Arizona Public Service Forestry and Special Programs Manager Andrew Rable Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

9:30 AM Senate Agriculture Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Stephen Censky to be Deputy Secretary of Agriculture; and Ted McKinney to be Under Secretary of Agriculture for Trade and Foreign Agricultural Affairs Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://agriculture.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Finance Committee hearing on business tax reform – Hearing on 'Business Tax Reform', with testimony from Tax Foundation President Scott Hodge; Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center Fellow Dr Donald Marron; former American Institute of CPAs Tax Executive Committee Chair Troy Lewis; and The Real Estate Roundtable President and CEO Jeffrey DeBoer Location: Rm 215, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://finance.senate.gov>

10:00 AM Senate HELP Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Carlos Muniz to be Department of Education General Counsel; and Janet Dhillon and Dr Daniel Gade to be Equal Employment Opportunity Commission members (with Dhillon to be chair, upon confirmation) Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee Business Meeting – Business Meeting, with agenda including legislation including 'H.R. 390, Iraq and Syria Genocide Emergency Relief and Accountability Act of 2017', with an amendment; and 'S. XXXX, Trafficking Victims Protection

Reauthorization Act of 2017'; and the nominations of Barbara Lee and Christopher Smith to be U.S. Representatives to the United Nations General Assembly Seventy-second Session; Steven Mnuchin to be U.S. Governor of the International Monetary Fund, of the African Development Bank, of the Inter-American Development Bank, of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, of the African Development Fund, and of the Asian Development Bank; Doug Manchester to be U.S. Ambassador to the Bahamas; Kathleen Troia McFarland to be U.S. Ambassador to Singapore; and Stephen King to be U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic * Immediately followed by nominations hearing Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 419, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Jon Huntsman to be U.S. Ambassador to Russia; and A. Wess Mitchell to be Assistant Secretary of State for European And Eurasian Affairs * Immediately follows Business Meeting Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on recent U.S. Navy incidents at sea (Time Change) – Hearing on 'Recent United States Navy Incidents at Sea', with testimony from Secretary of the Navy Richard Spencer; Chief of Naval Operations Adm. John Richardson; and Government Accountability Office Director of Defense Force Structure and Readiness Issues John Pendleton * USS Fitzgerald collided with a container ship near Japan in June, killing seven of its sailors, while the USS John S. McCain hit an oil tanker near Singapore last month, leaving 10 of its sailors dead. Time changed from 9:30a to 10 a. Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm G50, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:30 AM Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders speaks at Good Jobs Nation 'Midwest Pick Up' Tour closing event – Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders calls on President Donald Trump to keep his campaign promise to 'stop the offshoring of good jobs', on the final stop of Good Jobs Nation's 2017 Midwest Pick Tour. Sen. Sanders is joined by Communications Workers of America President Chris Shelton, UE President Peter Knowlton, retired Steelworkers Local 1999 President Chuck Jones, Good Jobs Nation Director Joseph Geevarghese, and Our Revolution * Sen. Sanders attended the 21 Aug tour kick off rally in Indiana Location: 608 Dirksen. (NEW LOCATION) goodjobsnation.org https://twitter.com/GoodJobsNation

10:30 AM Senate Commerce Committee legislative hearing – Legislative hearing on 'S.1693, The Stop Enabling Sex Traffickers Act of 2017', with testimony from California Attorney General Xavier Becerra; Santa Clara University School of Law Professor Eric Goldman; Internet Association General Counsel Abigail Slater; and National Center for Missing & Exploited Children Senior Vice President and General Counsel Yiota Souras Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

3:00 PM Senate Dems hold hearing on ways to protect and strengthen the right to vote – Democratic Policy and Communications Committee holds hearing on 'Voting Rights Under Fire: Democratic Ideas to Protect and Strengthen Americans' Constitutional Right to Vote', chaired by DPCC Chair Debbie Stabenow and fellow Democratic Sen. Amy Klobuchar. Witnesses include NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund President and Director-Counsel Sherrilyn Ifill, Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights President Vanita Gupta, NAACP Detroit Branch President Rev. Dr Wendell Anthony, Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund President and General Counsel Thomas Saenz, and Brennan Center Voting Rights and Election Project Manager of State Advocacy (and former West Virginia Secretary of State) Natalie Tennant Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, SVC 212-210, Washington, DC dpcc.senate.gov

3:00 PM 'Addressing America's Opioid Problem: The Need for Evidence-Based Strategies' PCORI / Anthem briefing – 'Addressing America's Opioid Problem: The Need for Evidence-Based Strategies' briefing co-hosted by Patient-Centered Outcomes Research Institute and Anthem, on 'the importance and need for comparative effectiveness research to support evidence-based practices to address the opioid epidemic'. Speakers include Republican Sen. Shelley Moore Capito, Department of Veterans Affairs Health Services Research and Development Service Center for the Study of Healthcare Innovation, Implementation & Policy Associate Director Dr Stephanie Taylor, Women Veterans Comprehensive Health Center Medical Director Erin Krebs, Chronic Pain Research Alliance Director and co-founder Christin Veasley, PCORI Executive Director Joe Selby, and Anthem Vice President of Behavioral Health and Clinical Programs Sherry Dubester Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 430, Washington, DC www.pcori.org <https://twitter.com/PCORI>

US House: On recess until 25 September.

Other: 1:00 PM Romanian defense minister lays wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier – Romanian Defense Minister Mihai Fifor lays a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery, as part of his official visit to the U.S., with ceremony hosted by Joint Force Headquarters-National Capital Region and the U.S. Army Military District of Washington Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael Howard Location: Arlington National Cemetery, Arlington, VA <http://mdwhome.mdw.army.mil/> https://twitter.com/MDW_USARMY

4:00 PM Transport Secretary Chao participates in jobs discussion with Joe Biden – ‘Choosing a Future of Quality Jobs’ University of Delaware Biden Institute holds roundtable discussion hosted by former Vice President Joseph Biden, addressing the opportunities and challenges posed by transformations in the U.S. economy and how quality jobs can be created to support a growing middle class. Panelists include Secretary of Transportation Elaine Chao, former Secretary of Commerce Penny Pritzker, U.S. Chamber of Commerce Senior Executive Vice President Suzanne Clark, Service Employees International Union President Mary Kay Henry, MGM Resorts International Chairman and CEO Jim Murren, and Opportunity@Work President and co-founder Byron Auguste Location: Mitchell Hall, Newark, DE www.udel.edu <https://twitter.com/UDelaware>

7:45 PM Atlantic Council Global Citizen Awards Dinner – Atlantic Council Global Citizen Awards Dinner, honoring Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, South Korean President Moon Jae-in, and pianist and philanthropist Lang Lang for their ‘unique contributions toward improving the state of the world’. PM Trudeau’s award is presented by Queen Rania Al Abdullah of Jordan Location: New York, NY New York City <http://www.atlanticcouncil.org> #ACAwards

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

James Corden: “In a speech to the United Nations General Assembly this morning, Donald Trump told world leaders that the UN needs to reform itself because it’s ineffective due to bureaucracy and mismanagement. And for the first time, every nation on Earth had a reason to come together to roll their eyes at Donald Trump.”

James Corden: “President Trump told the United Nations to reform itself, citing mismanagement. Then the United Nations told President Trump to reform himself, citing mismanagement.”

James Corden: “Now he’s calling Kim Jung-Un ‘Rocket Man.’ President Trump, you’ve already ruined enough, don’t ruin Elton John lyrics for us.”

James Corden: “Last night here in Los Angeles was the prime-time Emmy Awards. ...[Former White House Press Secretary Sean] Spicer won best actor in a comedy for his role in Donald Trump’s Administration.”

Trevor Noah: “It’s United Nations week, which means New York is going to be full of people from hundreds of different nations who can’t get convicted of crimes.”

Trevor Noah: “Every year, the leaders from around the world meet in New York at the UN to discuss major global issues, basically Comic-Con for diplomats.”

Trevor Noah: “Meet Steve Mnuchin, a man who got into politics the same way Trump did – by knowing nothing about politics.”

Jimmy Fallon: “The UN General Assembly kicked off today, and I read that 193 countries will be attending. They’re all committed to one goal, making New York City traffic a total nightmare.”

Jimmy Fallon: “One expert said that because of all the quick meetings, the General Assembly is like speed dating from hell.”

Jimmy Fallon: “After meeting with officials at the UN today, President Trump says there’s a good chance of peace in the Middle East. Then he was like, ‘The bad news is, I accidentally started a war with Greenland.’”

Conan O'Brien: "A lot of people are angry about Sean Spicer's cameo on last night's Emmys. People are mad about that. They're also not thrilled to hear that Attorney General Jeff Sessions will be hosting the Latin Grammys. Not happy about that."

Conan O'Brien: "Today in New York, President Trump spoke before the United Nations General Assembly. There was an awkward moment when Trump looked into the audience and said, 'How the hell did you people get into this country?'"

Conan O'Brien: "California Governor Jerry Brown is working on a plan to build two tunnels to bring water to southern California. Now, it's California, so one tunnel's for flat water. The other is sparkling with lime."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Tuesday, September 26, 2017
Date: Tuesday, September 26, 2017 7:03:49 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- U.S. News & World Report: Zinke: One-Third Of Interior Employees Not Loyal To Trump.
- Washington Examiner: Industry Rolls Out Clean Energy Week.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Interior Boss Blasts Fired Utah BLM Law Enforcement Agent.
- WLWT-TV Cincinnati: The U.S. Department Of The Interior Promises It Really Does Feel Like Fall.
- Washington Examiner: Rambo Would Like This D.C. Office – Interior Secretary Zinke's.
- National Review: Federal Wildlife Regulations – Greater Sage Grouse Is Not Helped By Them.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Representatives Urging Action On Beloit Casino.
- BIA Takes Over Jail On Fort Belknap Reservation.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Feds Move Ahead With Oil And Gas Leases On Southern Utah Lands Rich In Ancient Puebloan Ruins.
- Deseret (UT) News: Groups Riled Over Proposed Oil And Gas Leases.
- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: County To BLM: Get Rid Of Obama's Fracking Regs.
- Wichita Falls (TX) Times Record News: County Approves Red River Land Dispute Settlement.
- Bend (OR) Bulletin: BLM Conceals Information About Home On BLM Land.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- U.S., Mexico On Verge Of New Colorado River Water Pact.
- Unique Fish Tunnel Closer To Reality At Lake Cle Elum.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Daily Caller: Enviro Fight Environmental Protections.
- Arizona Daily Star: Tucson Lawsuit Seeks To Protect Jaguars From Rosemont Mine.
- KWMU-FM St. Louis: Mississippi River Islands Added To Great Rivers National Wildlife Refuge.
- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Concerns Surface At Water Bottling Hearing.
- Texas Tribune: Report: Sand Miners Disturbing West Texas Lizard's Habitat.
- San Francisco Chronicle: Minnesota Wolf Population Appears To Rise 25 Percent.

National Park Service

- The Hill: Park Service Report: Obama Water Bottle Sales Ban Had 'Significant' Benefits.
- Rolling Stone: What Happens When A Superstorm Hits D.C.?
- KBZK-TV Butte (MT): Photographer Captures Last Photos Of Sperry Chalet Still Standing.
- Raleigh (NC) News & Observer: OBX Beachgoers Discover 2 Unexploded Ordnance Along NC Coastline Monday.
- Ventura County (CA) Star: The National Park Service Allows Boats To Land At Santa Barbara Island.
- Red Bank-Shrewsbury (NJ) Patch: Sandy Hook Lighthouse Closes For Restoration Work.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Reuters: North Korea Says Trump "Declared War," Warns It Could Shoot Down US Bombers.
- Associated Press: Trump Says Puerto Rico "In Deep Trouble" As Administration Officials Assess Hurricane Damage.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Judge Orders Agency To Inspect Mine.

US Geological Survey

- NBC News: Earthquake Early-Warning System Is Coming To The West Coast.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- ABC: Media Analyses: Graham-Cassidy Appears To Be Dead As Collins Announces Opposition.
- NBC: Supreme Court Cancels Travel Ban Oral Arguments, Seeking New Briefs From Both Sides.
- Associated Press: White House, GOP Plan To Slash Corporate Tax Rate.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "A Trump Travel Ban We've Seen Before."
 - "The Wreckage Of Anthony Weiner."
- Washington Post.
 - "Trump's New Travel Ban Still Has No Justification."
 - "The Kremlin Creeps Into Germany."
 - "Hogan Shoves Transportation To The Top Of The Regional Agenda."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Michigan Comeback Story."

- "Cuba's Sonic Attacks."
- "Japan's Snap Elections."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Zinke: One-Third Of Interior Employees Not Loyal To Trump.

The AP (9/25, Daly) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said Monday in a speech to the National Petroleum Council "that nearly one-third of employees at his department are not loyal to him and President Donald Trump, adding that he is working to change the department's regulatory culture to be more business friendly." To address this, Zinke "said he is pursuing a major reorganization that would push much of the agency's decision-making outside Washington and move several agencies, including the Bureau of Reclamation and Bureau of Land Management, to undetermined Western states." In addition to "moving employees, Zinke said he wants to speed up permits for oil drilling, logging and other energy development that now can take years."

The Washington Examiner (9/25, Siciliano) reports that Zinke "also said the Endangered Species Act has been 'abused' by environmental groups and bureaucrats alike, which has stalled development." Zinke said that "the designation of animal species granted protections under the law must be less arbitrary."

The Washington Examiner (9/25, Siciliano) reports that in his remarks, Zinke "referred to the oil drilling method known as hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, as proof of divine love, as well as humor." He said, "Fracking is proof that God's got a good sense of humor and he loves us." However, the article says that "the statement had no context and it was unclear what Zinke was trying to say exactly."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Washington Post (9/25, Matthew Daly |, Ap), the Washington Post (9/25, Matthew Daly |, Ap), the Missoulian \(MT\) (9/25, Daly), ABC News (9/25, Daly), the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (9/25, Daly), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (9/24, Daly), Philly \(PA\) (9/25, Daly), the Washington Times (9/25, Daly), WFMZ-TV Allentown \(PA\) Allentown, PA (9/25, Daly), and WRC-TV Washington Washington (9/25, Daly).

Industry Rolls Out Clean Energy Week.

The Washington Examiner (9/25, Siciliano, Seigel) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Energy Secretary Rick Perry will address a gathering on Capitol Hill today to open up Clean Energy Week "on the administration and congressional side at an all-day event." The "steering committee" for the week includes: "American Wind Energy Association, Nuclear Energy Institute, American Gas Association, National Hydropower Association, Center for Liquefied Natural Gas, the Solar Energy Industries Association, and others."

Interior Boss Blasts Fired Utah BLM Law Enforcement Agent.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/25, Maffly) reports that Deputy Secretary of the Interior David Bernhardt has "singled out the recent firing of a controversial Bureau of Land Management agent over Utah to illustrate a renewed commitment to hold accountable senior employees who misuse their official positions and to protect those who report such abuse." In a memo circulated Friday, Bernhardt "also mentioned another supervisory lawman recently fired in the wake of another OIG probe:" Edwin Correa, who "engaged in sexual harassment while serving as chief ranger at Canaveral National Seashore." Bernhardt wrote, "We will hold people accountable when we are informed that they have failed in their duties and obligations. Although the law in large part prevents dissemination of the details of actions taken, I am sharing these examples because you need to know that the Department has taken concrete disciplinary action in cases of serious misconduct, including those involving senior officials."

The U.S. Department Of The Interior Promises It Really Does Feel Like Fall.

WLWT-TV Cincinnati (9/25, Lucarelli) reports that on Sunday, the Interior Department “shared a few photos of Denali National Park and Preserve in Alaska, which is currently bathed in beautiful gold, orange and red leaves.” According to the article, “the Facebook post shared some additional information about how quickly fall’s colors come and go, and even mentioned that snow is already taking over the landscape.”

Rambo Would Like This D.C. Office – Interior Secretary Zinke’s.

In his column for the Washington Examiner (9/25, Bedard), Paul Bedard writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s office evokes the “Hollywood set” of a “Rambo” movie. The office contains “a scary grizzly bear and Montana bobcat picked” by Zinke “to show off the state he represented in Congress and some tools of his trade while a Navy SEAL for 23 years.” In a drawer, Zinke “keeps his SEAL knife collection showing that over two decades of design changes, the final knife he received was practically a copy of his first, proof of bureaucratic bungling.”

Federal Wildlife Regulations – Greater Sage Grouse Is Not Helped By Them.

In an op-ed for the National Review (9/26, Seasholes, Gaziano), Brian Seasholes of the Property and Environment Research Center and Todd Gaziano of the Pacific Legal Foundation write that “even with the best of intentions, federal, one-size-fits-all regulation that interferes with more-effective state and private wildlife conservation efforts can cause real harm.” They claim that “federal sage-grouse plans issued in 2015 both hurt the sage grouse and threaten thousands of productive jobs tied to almost 73 million acres of federal land in the West.” The authors assert that “killing those federal rules will help the grouse.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Representatives Urging Action On Beloit Casino.

The Beloit \(WI\) Daily News (9/25, Montgomery) reports that group of Wisconsin congressional representatives sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urging action on the Ho-Chunk Nation Beloit casino plan. Sen. Tammy Baldwin and Reps. Mark Pocan, Ron Kind, and Gwen Moore wrote, “We write today to urge full, fair and prompt consideration of the Ho-Chunk Nation’s application to acquire land for gaming purposes in Beloit, Wisconsin. The Beloit community and the Ho-Chunk Nation have eagerly awaited progress for years at the federal level on the casino plan. This proposed gaming facility will provide significant economic benefits for the City of Beloit and Rock County, the State of Wisconsin and the Ho-Chunk Nation. The project will support additional business development and infrastructure improvements in the region. It will allow the tribe to expand educational, housing and health care services for its members.”

BIA Takes Over Jail On Fort Belknap Reservation.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (9/25, Larson) reports that “after 20 years, the Bureau of Indian Affairs last week reassumed control over the jail on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation at the request of tribal officials.” Fort Belknap Tribal President Mark Azure “said tribal officials decided last week to return control of the detention facility to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.” The cost of operating the facility was cited for the decision.

Bureau Of Land Management

Feds Move Ahead With Oil And Gas Leases On Southern Utah Lands Rich In Ancient Puebloan Ruins.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (9/25, Maffly) reports that the Bureau of Land Management is planning to continue with a proposed oil and gas lease of 43 parcels in the Ancestral Puebloan habitation area of southeastern Utah. Wilderness Society Senior Counsel said, “BLM is rushing to give Utah’s wild public lands to the oil and gas industry, over the objections of the American public who value these lands for recreation and our shared history.” The public can submit comments on the environmental assessment until Oct. 23.

Groups Riled Over Proposed Oil And Gas Leases.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (9/25, O’Donoghue) reports that “industry-nominated federal land for potential oil and gas development in southeastern Utah is stoking a roar of criticism among environmental groups that say the acreage should be off-limits." The Bureau of Land Management is "proposing a March lease sale of minerals on 51,400 acres, including land near the San Juan River, Hovenweep National Monument and areas that include more than 1,000 documented archaeological resources." Michael Saul, with the Center for Biological Diversity, also "said the proposal risks natural and cultural treasures in the area near the newly created Bears Ears National Monument."

County To BLM: Get Rid Of Obama's Fracking Regs.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (9/26, Harmon) reports that on Monday, the Mesa County Commission voted to send a letter to the Bureau of Land Management urging it to drop its Obama-era rule regulating hydraulic fracturing on federal lands. The commission wrote that the rule "unnecessarily burdens industry with compliance costs and information requirements that are duplicative of regulatory programs of many states and some tribes" and that the state rules are "sufficient to deal with the development of oil and gas" on federal lands.

County Approves Red River Land Dispute Settlement.

The Wichita Falls \(TX\) Times Record News (9/25, Kowalick) reports that Wichita County Commissioners "approved a draft of a settlement Monday concerning the Red River land dispute." The commissioners "said the settlement had to be approved by all the parties involved and they were not sure when the agreement would be finalized."

BLM Conceals Information About Home On BLM Land.

The Bend \(OR\) Bulletin (9/25) editorializes that the Bureau of Land Management in Prineville has "shown contempt for the public's right to know what's going on regarding a private home built on BLM land outside of Prineville." The paper accuses of the BLM of "redaction and refusal" as a way to "hide what it's doing." The paper asserts that "the public is entitled to know how well or how poorly public land is being managed to keep government accountable." However, it concludes that "the BLM has gone out of its way to block understanding of this home and the property on which it sits."

Bureau Of Reclamation

U.S., Mexico On Verge Of New Colorado River Water Pact.

Bloomberg BNA (9/25, Baltz) reports that "an agreement amending the longstanding treaty between the U.S. and Mexico on management of the Colorado River will continue the practice of water shortage sharing, but also fund new conservation and environmental programs, and aim to reduce the risk of ruinous drought." The two countries are "tentatively scheduled to execute the agreement—Minute 323, an amendment to a 1944 water treaty—on Sept. 26 in Mexico's Ciudad Juarez." Minute 323 will "govern water flows in the Colorado River and other water management issues by extending an existing binational agreement, Minute 319, which was set to expire at the end of 2017."

Unique Fish Tunnel Closer To Reality At Lake Cle Elum.

The Yakima \(WA\) Herald-Republic (9/23, Regimbal) reports that "if all goes well over the next three years, thousands of fish will be able to leave Lake Cle Elum to head to the sea for the first time in eight decades." According to the article, "plans for the construction of a first-of-its kind tunnel allowing the fish to escape have made a huge step forward with the awarding of a $15.2 million contract." Richard Visser, a project manager with the federal Bureau of Reclamation's Yakima field office, said, "If we're able to reintroduce those fish, we'll see recreational benefits and a lot of ecological benefits to the system as well."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Enviros Fight Environmental Protections.

The Daily Caller (9/24, Pearce) reports that "environmentalists are suing the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) for suspending environmental regulations in order to construct a border wall along the U.S. boundary with Mexico, despite evidence of 'significant' environmental damage caused by illegal immigration." The Center for Biological Diversity Rep. Raúl Grijalva, "who sits on CBD's advisory board, are calling the DHS waivers 'unconstitutional' acts that represent 'dangerous disregard for our environment.'" A May CBD report on the border wall states: "Trump's border wall will be a deathblow to already endangered animals on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border. A wall will block movement of many wildlife species, precluding genetic exchange, population rescue and movement of species in response to climate change."

Also reporting on the wall is the High Country \(CO\) News (9/25, Kapoor).

Tucson Lawsuit Seeks To Protect Jaguars From Rosemont Mine.

The Arizona Daily Star (9/25, Prendergast) reports that "a Tucson environmental group sued two federal agencies Monday in an effort to protect the habitat of jaguars in Southern Arizona from the proposed Rosemont Mine." The Center for Biological Diversity "asked a federal judge to rule the U.S. Forest Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service violated federal law in their analysis of the environmental impacts of the proposed copper mine in the Santa Rita Mountains." The group claims the FWS "violated the Endangered Species Act and the Administrative Procedure Act by issuing new regulations defining damage to habitat and by revising the critical habitat designation for the jaguar, according to the lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Tucson."

Also reporting are the Tucson \(AZ\) Sentinel (9/25, Ingram) and Law360 (9/25, Rodriguez).

Mississippi River Islands Added To Great Rivers National Wildlife Refuge.

KWMU-FM St. Louis (9/25, Chen) reports that the Great Rivers National Wildlife Refuge is "acquiring two islands on the Mississippi River to protect wildlife and provide more areas for outdoor recreation." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "given $677,500 to the refuge in northeast Missouri, a portion of $21.9 million the U.S. Department of the Interior dedicated to conserving public lands in 16 states." According to the article, "a family near the river used to farm on the 702-acre property, called Slim and Haps Islands, but stopped as flooding increased along the Mississippi River."

Concerns Surface At Water Bottling Hearing.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (9/25, Scott) reports that "a divisive plan to build a water bottling plant near the Flathead River has drawn intense scrutiny since an initial permitting application revealed the full scope of the proposal in January 2016, and emotions have run high ever since." According to the article, "last week, dozens of neighbors continued their efforts to halt the proposed development in an administrative setting, during a hearing before the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation, one of the state agencies charged with approving or denying plans by the Montana Artesian Water Company." Over "the course of the three-day hearing in Kalispell, attorneys representing around 40 objectors laid out their case against the plant, arguing that the state erred when it issued a preliminary water rights permit after determining it would cause 'no adverse impacts' to other water rights owners in the area."

Report: Sand Miners Disturbing West Texas Lizard's Habitat.

The Texas Tribune (9/25, Najmabadi) reports that "sand mining operations in oil-rich West Texas have disturbed at least 292 acres of a threatened lizard's habitat this year — and could impact up to 23,000 acres, according to an advocacy group's analysis published Monday." Defenders of Wildlife has "identified nine sand-mining operations that broke ground earlier this year and disturbed almost 300 acres" of the dunes sagebrush lizard's habitat and "surrounding buffer areas between February and August." The group also "used the nine sand mines' lease information to predict that over 23,000 acres, or 9.5 percent, of the lizard's habitat and buffer zones could eventually be disturbed or destroyed."

Also reporting are and the Texas Observer (9/25, Sadasivam).

Minnesota Wolf Population Appears To Rise 25 Percent.

The AP (9/25, Karnowski) reports that "Minnesota's gray wolf population appears to have grown by 25 percent thanks to more deer, the Department of Natural Resources said Monday." The article notes that "Minnesota's wolf population remains well above both the state's minimum goal of at least 1,600 and the federal minimum goal range of 1,251 to 1,400." The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "long contended that wolves in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan are no longer threatened, so hunting and trapping can be allowed under state control."

National Park Service

Park Service Report: Obama Water Bottle Sales Ban Had ‘Significant’ Benefits.

The Hill (9/25, Cama) reports that “an internal National Park Service (NPS) staff report concluded that an Obama administration effort to ban sales of bottled water at some parks had ‘significant environmental benefits.’” The report was “released publicly in response to a Freedom of Information Act request, more than a month after the NPS rescinded the policy, which had been opposed by the bottled water industry and some Republicans.” In the report prepared in May, park service “staff estimated that on an annual basis, at least 1.32 million disposable plastic water bottles, and up to 2.01 million, were not purchased due to the 2011 policy. That saved up to 111,743 pounds of plastic, 141 million tons of carbon dioxide-equivalent greenhouse gases and 3.4 billion British thermal units of energy, the NPS report estimated, based on the 23 Park Service units that submitted data.” The results demonstrate “the program has significant positive environmental benefits that encompass the entire life cycle” of disposable bottles, and that officials at the parks themselves support the program, the report said.

The Sierra \(CA\) Sun Times (9/25) reports that Rep. Mike Quigley cited the report to call for the NPS to reinstate the water bottle ban. Quigley said, “The Trump Administration’s rationale for reversing the ban on water bottle sales in National Parks is nonsensical and nonexistent, especially given the fact they actively ignored the Park Service’s own findings on the issue. This newly released report makes it clear as day that the Trump Administration will continue to deny science, research, and facts in its efforts to prioritize big corporations at the expense of our wildlife and environment. We know that this is an issue where a simple and reasonable solution would have a profound impact as we work to preserve our pristine natural places. I will continue fighting for the end of water bottle sales in National Parks, and I hope this eye-opening report will push others in the same direction.”

What Happens When A Superstorm Hits D.C.?

Rolling Stone (9/21, Nobel) reports that Washington, D.C.’s “defense” against hurricanes “begins with a little-known levee system,” called the Potomac Park Levee System, which is operated by the National Park Service. One of the NPS’ responsibilities is deploying a “removable flood wall.” However, the workers of the agency’s Division of Facility Management have “practiced setting up the barrier on just three occasions, though never at night, in the rain, or in the face of an actual hurricane or flood.” Disaster experts say “the list of things that could go wrong is long.”

Photographer Captures Last Photos Of Sperry Chalet Still Standing.

KBZK-TV Butte, MT (9/25, Miller) reports that a Flathead Valley photographer “may have taken the last pictures of the Sperry Chalet standing.” Landscape photographer Brett Bouda has “been capturing Glacier National Park since 2004, but this year he says the rich amount of blooming Beargrass is what captured him.” Bouda “spent hours shooting the rustic lodge from every angle enshrouded in Beargrass – not knowing that just weeks later the historical treasure would burn in the Sprague Fire.”

Additional coverage was provided by KRTV-TV Great Falls \(MT\) Great Falls, MT (9/25, Miller).

OBX Beachgoers Discover 2 Unexploded Ordnance Along NC Coastline Monday.

The Raleigh \(NC\) News & Observer (9/25, Petiford) reports that “two possible mines were discovered in separate areas along the North Carolina coast on Monday.” One was discovered on Whale Head Beach in Corolla, and “a second washed up on a beach near Cape Hatteras National Seashore.” According to the article, “explosive ordnance disposal units are investigating both devices.” Also reporting is WXII-TV Winston-Salem \(NC\) Winston-Salem, NC (9/25).

The National Park Service Allows Boats To Land At Santa Barbara Island.

The Ventura County \(CA\) Star (9/25, Carlson) reports that “a small remote island that is part of the Channel Islands National Park has reopened to the public.” However, “its dock, damaged in last winter’s storms, will stay closed.” The National Park Service will “allow public access to those landing at a rocky ledge adjacent to the dock.”

Sandy Hook Lighthouse Closes For Restoration Work.

The Red Bank-Shrewsbury \(NJ\) Patch (9/25, Wall) reports that “the historic Sandy Hook Lighthouse, the oldest lighthouse in the nation, is closing to tours for repairs and restoration work, the National Park Service announced.” The NPS “announced the closure on the Sandy Hook Gateway National Park website late last week." According to the NPS, "the closure began Monday and is expected to last until May 2018."

Office Of Insular Affairs

North Korea Says Trump "Declared War," Warns It Could Shoot Down US Bombers.

All three networks Monday night reported on remarks by North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho that President Trump's tweet that Kim Jong-un "won't be around much longer" constituted "a declaration of war" against his country – a claim the Administration quickly rejected.

Reuters (9/25, Nichols, Kim) reports speaking to reporters at New York, Ri said, "The whole world should clearly remember it was the US who first declared war on our country. Since the United States declared war on our country, we will have every right to make countermeasures, including the right to shoot down United States strategic bombers even when they are not inside the airspace border of our country."

On ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 6, 1:20, Muir), Martha Raddatz said North Korea is "calling the escalating public threats from President Trump a 'declaration of war.'" While US bombers are "pushing...the farthest north they've been in nearly two decades, North Korea [is] now threatening to shoot those bombers down." Richard Engel said on NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 5, 2:20, Guthrie), "On the same day North Korea said the US has declared war, it released a computer simulation showing how it would destroy American aircraft and set a carrier ablaze. Its propaganda, but experts say there is now a real risk of an exchange of fire with nuclear-armed North Korea or worse."

David Martin said on the CBS Evening News (9/25, story 3, 2:25, Mason) that North Korea "has intercepted American aircraft before. In 2003, this North Korean MIG surprised a US reconnaissance plane conducting a patrol off the coast. But its planes are a decade older now and its air force has been allowed to languish while Kim Jong-un pours all his country's resources into ballistic missiles and nuclear weapons."

The AP (9/25, Lederer) notes that Ri's remarks do not mark "the first time North Korea has spoken about a declaration of war between the two countries." In July 2016, Pyongyang said US sanctions imposed on Kim were "a declaration of war."

The New York Times (9/25, Gladstone, Sanger) reports that "within hours, the Trump administration pushed back on Mr. Ri's assertions," with White House press secretary Sarah Sanders telling reporters: "We have not declared war on North Korea." Reuters (9/25) reports Sanders called the notion "absurd."

The Los Angeles Times (9/25, Demick) reports that the White House "quickly scoffed at the comments," and National Security Adviser McMaster said it would be "a suicide mission" if North Korea decided to attack the US. The Washington Times (9/25, Muñoz) reports McMaster "laid bare the dire situation the Trump administration has now found itself in regarding the threat posed by North Korea," saying, "What we hope to do is avoid war, but we cannot completely discount that possibility." Bloomberg News (9/25, Talev) reports he also said the North "must accept inspections of its nuclear facilities and declare it's willing to give up its atomic weapons before the US will negotiate with its government."

The Washington Post (9/25, Morello) reports that the State Department also "rejected Ri's characterization that the two countries are in a state of open war." Spokeswoman Katina Adams said, "The United States has not 'declared war' on North Korea. We continue to seek a peaceful denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. No nation has the right to fire on other nations' aircraft or ships in international airspace or waters."

USA Today (9/25, Onyanga-Omara, Bacon) reports Pentagon spokesman Col. Robert Manning "quickly responded" that "If North Korea does not stop their provocative actions, you know, we will make sure that we provide options to the president to deal with North Korea." The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Fassihi) quotes Manning as saying, "We are prepared to defend ourselves and our allies from an attack and are prepared to use the full range of capabilities at our disposal against the threat from North Korea."

The AP (9/25, Pennington) reports that while the Administration "said Monday it's not seeking to overthrow North Korea's government," the "fiery rhetoric carrying over from a week of threatening exchanges at the UN General Assembly only further fueled fears the adversaries might stumble back into open military conflict."

Yonhap: North Korea Moving Airplanes, Boosting Defenses. Reuters (9/25, Kim) reports North Korea "has been moving airplanes and boosting defenses on its east coast after the United States dispatched B-1B bombers to the Korean peninsula over the weekend, South Korea's Yonhap News Agency reported on Tuesday, citing the country's spy agency." South Korea's National Intelligence Service "was unable to confirm the report."

Trump Says Puerto Rico "In Deep Trouble" As Administration Officials Assess Hurricane Damage.

President Trump wrote in a tweet Monday evening, "Texas & Florida are doing great but Puerto Rico, which was already suffering from broken infrastructure & massive debt, is in deep trouble." In a subsequent pair of tweets, Trump wrote, "It's old electrical grid, which was in terrible shape, was devastated. Much of the Island was destroyed, with billions of dollars...owed to Wall Street and the banks which, sadly, must be dealt with. Food, water and medical are top priorities – and doing well. #FEMA." The tweets came as the Administration is seeking to "blunt criticism that its response to Hurricane Maria has fallen short of its efforts in Texas and Florida after the recent hurricanes there," the AP (9/26, Biesecker, Taylor) reports.

The Washington Post (9/25, Achenbach, Lamothe, Horton) reports in a front-page story that the Administration "is under pressure to speed up recovery efforts." While the Administration said Monday "that its response has been robust," officials "leading the response and recovery admit they're facing serious logistical challenges, starting with damage to the ports and airports." A separate story in the Washington Post (9/25, Wagner) says Trump is "facing mounting questions about his commitment to Puerto Rico's recovery."

Also Monday, FEMA Director Long and Homeland Security Adviser Bossert traveled to the island "to assess the widespread damage caused by Hurricane Maria," The Hill (9/25, Fabian) reports. The trip is part of what White House press secretary Sarah Sanders called an "'unprecedented movement' planned by the administration to respond to the hurricane, which left much of the island without electricity and water." It comes as Gov. Ricardo Rosselló and others "say federal aid has not come fast enough." David Begnaud said on the CBS Evening News (9/25, story 4, Mason) that Rosselló "says he has pleaded for more money from FEMA. So far $1 billion has been earmarked for recovery, but it's not apparent here yet."

The New York Times (9/25, Robles, Alvarez, Fandos) reports that Rosselló "said the island was on the brink of a 'humanitarian crisis' and it was up to Congress to prevent a deepening disaster." Rosselló "did not mince words about the potential impact on the mainland, where Puerto Ricans are expected to arrive in droves to escape the post-Maria hardships they will face on the island, including a shortage of already hard-to-find jobs."

Eva Pilgrim said on ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 4, 2:25, Muir) that "many days removed from Hurricane Maria making landfall...there are still several neighborhoods that are flooded." Gabe Gutierrez said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (9/25, lead story, 2:55, Holt) that while "the massive cleanup effort is under way," there is "still a desperate need to communicate. No power and no end in sight." In a separate story, NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 2, 2:25, Holt) reported on Air National Guard operation being run out of Savannah International Airport in Georgia to provide humanitarian aid to the island.

The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Friedman) reports that the catastrophe modeling firm AIR Worldwide said Monday that Maria caused $40 billion to $80 billion in insured losses, 85 percent of which is in Puerto Rico. The Miami Herald (9/25, Daugherty) reports that while a FEMA spokesperson said the agency "has just over $5 billion in uncommitted disaster relief money as of Monday morning," those funds "won't last long," and Congress "will likely need to pass additional funding bills to manage long-term recovery efforts in Texas, Florida and Puerto Rico before the end of the year." The Herald sites "a Republican staffer with knowledge of the appropriations process," who said that "federal funding for hurricane relief will be 'fine until mid-October' and that Congress will likely vote on an additional funding bill in the next three weeks."

Lawmakers Criticize Administration Response. Sen. Chris Murphy said on CNN's Situation Room (9/25), "The Administration's response to the crisis in Puerto Rico has been wholly insufficient and inadequate. ... This is a country right now that is in massive humanitarian crisis and the President instead of focusing on saving lives in Puerto Rico has been tweeting about NFL football players. I want a president who is going to be in the business of saving lives. Right now that means spending as much time as necessary to try to rescue Puerto Ricans from this nightmare that they are living through. And right now we clearly have an administration that is very much distracted."

Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-NY) was asked on CNN's Situation Room (9/25, 5:17 p.m. EST, Blitzer) about the Administration response to Hurricane Maria. Jeffries said, "The only question is whether the Trump White House and the federal government should get a F for disaster or an F for failure. It has been woefully inadequate. It's not clear to me and to many others throughout this nation whether the President and the White House realize that the individuals who are suffering down in Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands are American citizens."

Pelosi: Trump Should Deploy Military To Puerto Rico. House Minority Leader Pelosi on Monday called on the President to deploy the military to aid with the humanitarian crisis, the AP (9/25, Taylor) reports. Pelosi "says Pentagon resources are needed for search-and-rescue operations, maintaining order, and help with transportation." She "said that the people of Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands 'deserve to know that their government will be there for them, without question or hesitation.'"

Most Of Puerto Rico Remains Without Power. The AP (9/25, Koenig, Choe) reports that most of the island "has been without lights or air conditioning for five nights and is looking at many, many more." The Hill (9/25, Beavers) says some "3.4 million residents in the American territory are living without electricity after the storm knocked out the power on Wednesday, with officials warning that it could be months before the lights flicker back on."

San Juan Airport Struggles The Washington Post (9/25, Lazo) says hundreds of people remained stranded Monday at Luis Muñoz Marín International, which is "struggling to return to normal" after Maria. On Monday, "only 20 commercial flights were scheduled...in San Juan, twice as many as there were Sunday." Speaking during an afternoon news conference, Long said that "significant damage to the air traffic control system is complicating resources getting in." Long also "said the hurricane also left significant damage to much of the infrastructure, from communications to the fuel systems."

The Miami Herald (9/25, Garvin) quotes an FAA spokesman as saying, "We are bringing in additional equipment on a daily basis, and our people are working like crazy. ... But we still have a radar system down, and we need more ability to communicate. Everything is being hampered by the lack of power – we're working with electricity supplied by emergency generators, not regular commercial power lines." The Herald adds that even with infrastructure improvements, "commercial airliners would still be operating on a much-reduced schedule," as FEMA "has reserved the vast majority of the airport's greatly curtailed service for military and civilian relief flights."

Rosselló Says Many Living Near Crumbling Dam Have Evacuated. Reuters (9/25, Graham, Repsaut) reports that Rosselló said Monday that many people living near the crumbling Guajataca Dam have evacuated. Cracks were seen in the dam on Friday, and Rosselló "said he was working on the assumption that the 120-foot (35-meter) dam would collapse."

East Coast Of US Under Tropical Storm Warnings. ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 5, 0:50, Muir) reported that as Maria moves north, "tropical storm warnings are up along parts of the East Coast of the US tonight" and there are "mandatory evacuations for parts of North Carolina." Chief meteorologist Ginger Zee added that "the rip currents and the high surf could be possible from Florida to Massachusetts." NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 3, 0:25, Holt) reported that while the storm is "not a threat to make landfall in the US, tropical storm force winds are expected on the outer banks of North Carolina."

Office Of Surface Mining

Judge Orders Agency To Inspect Mine.

The Coalfield \(VA\) Progress (9/26, Lester) reports that "a federal judge has ruled that the federal Department of the Interior improperly denied a citizens' request for inspection of a local strip mine." James Jones, "judge for Virginia's Western District federal court, ruled last Wednesday that the Interior Department's denial of an inspection of selenium levels at Red River Coal Co.'s Greater Wise No. 1 mine was arbitrary and capricious."

US Geological Survey

Earthquake Early-Warning System Is Coming To The West Coast.

NBC News (9/25, Lant) reports that "early-warning systems for earthquakes like the one that saved lives recently in Mexico City are highly effective, but the USGS ShakeAlert program is in jeopardy thanks to disputes over funding." According to the article, "the ShakeAlert system and everyone relying on it are at risk, as the USGS has been targeted for funding reductions by the current administration." the article says that "the proposed $137.8 million reduction would have ended the program.” But “for now, the USGS budget was set at $1 billion for 2018 by Congress, a cut of only $46 million, which will keep ShakeAlert alive for at least another year.”

Additional Reading.

- The Big One At San Andreas Fault: A Huge Earthquake Will Hit California—It’s Just A Matter Of When. Newsweek (9/25, Lowe).
- Audio: More Wildfires Mean More Dirt Flowing Into Your Drinking Water Supply. Southern California Public Radio (9/25, Guerin).
- Bird Nesting Boxes Installed At Myers Park. Racine \(WI\) Journal Times (9/25, Burke).
- Carp, Clams And Crested Floating-hearts: Louisiana On Alert For Invasive Species. New Orleans Times-Picayune (9/25, Sneath).
- Civic Tech Strengthens Cities On National Day Of Civic Hacking. Huffington Post (9/25, Ardalan, Contributor).
- Puerto Rico’s Hilly Terrain Worsened Hurricane Maria’s Damage. LiveScience (9/25, Thompson).
- Sea Otter Researchers Hoping To See Positive Population Trends Continue. KSBW-TV Monterey, CA (9/25, Conrad).
- Magnitude 6.0 Earthquake Strikes Off Papua New Guinea: USGS. Reuters (9/25).

Top National News

Media Analyses: Graham-Cassidy Appears To Be Dead As Collins Announces Opposition.

Various sources say that the revised legislation from Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act is essentially dead after Sen. Susan Collins became the third Republican senator to announce her opposition. Collins’ announcement late Monday eclipsed coverage of a raucous Senate hearing on the bill earlier in the day, during which many protesters were forcibly removed. For his part, President Trump was expressing pessimism Monday even before Collins’ announcement.

ABC World News Tonight (9/25, story 3, 2:50, Muir) reported, “Republicans could only afford to lose one more vote, and tonight, it appears they’ve lost it.” ABC’s Mary Bruce: “With protests mounting tonight, the Republican healthcare bill appears doomed to fail.” Collins “says she is a no, making her the third senator to come out against the bill. ... The dramatic move comes after opposition to the Republican healthcare bill came roaring through the halls of Capitol Hill, [with] anger and frustration boiling over” as “protester after protester [was] hauled off and arrested, many in wheelchairs.” NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 4, 2:25, Guthrie) similarly reported that Collins made her announcement “hours after protests erupted inside the Capitol, [with] some demonstrators in wheelchairs dragged from the hearing.”

The AP (9/25, Fram) reports, “The last-gasp Republican drive to tear down” the ACA “essentially died Monday” as Collins “joined a small but decisive cluster of GOP senators in opposing the push.” Collins “said the legislation is ‘deeply flawed,’ despite several changes its sponsors have made in an effort to round up support.” The New York Times (9/25, A1, Kaplan) reports under the headline “Health Bill Appears Dead As Pivotal G.O.P. Senator Declares Opposition” that in addition to Collins, Sens. John McCain and Rand Paul had also come out in opposition, and Sen. Ted Cruz “said on Sunday that he had not yet been won over.” The Washington Post (9/25, A1, Sullivan, Cunningham, Phillip) reports that the “latest Republican effort to unwind [the ACA] collapsed” due to Collins’ opposition. The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Armour, Peterson) also reports that Graham-Cassidy appeared to be dead.

USA Today (9/25, Collins) reports that Collins’ announcement “came just after the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office released a limited analysis estimating ‘the number of people with comprehensive health insurance that covers high-cost medical events would be reduced by millions’ under the legislation over the next decade.” Collins said in a statement, “The CBO’s analysis on the earlier version of the bill, incomplete though it is due to time constraints, confirms that this bill will have a substantially negative impact on the number of people covered by insurance.”

Politico (9/25, Everett) reports, “Republicans in the Senate and White House are now resigned to defeat in their final bid to repeal Obamacare this week. ... Trump seemed far more pessimistic on Monday morning than he had been last week, telling the ‘Rick & Bubba’ radio show that he expected crippling opposition, calling it ‘disgusting’ that party leaders can’t pass a bill to repeal and replace the 2010 health law.” The Los Angeles Times (9/25, Mascaró, Levey) reports that "even before Collins' announcement," Trump "sounded increasingly doubtful about the bill's chances," saying on the Rick and Bubba Show, broadcast on several Alabama stations, "We're going to lose two or three votes, and that's the end of that."

The CBS Evening News (9/25, story 5, Mason) reported, "In our new CBS News poll, only 29 percent of Americans approve of President Trump's handling of healthcare," and CBS' Nancy Cordes reported that Trump "vented about his party's healthcare woes on an Alabama radio show." Trump: "It's disgusting. ... They pander and they grandstand. You look at McCain, what McCain has done, is a tremendous slap in the face of the Republican Party." Cordes: "But a new CBS News poll finds most Americans share McCain's view: Only 20 percent approve of Graham-Cassidy."

Sen. Chris Murphy said on CNN's Situation Room (9/25), "Of course Susan Collins is voting no on this legislation. Any rational human being would vote against this monstrosity. It's got a 20 percent approval rating in the American public because it essentially is the equivalent of healthcare arson." Ryan Grim of The Intercept tweeted, "Collins says that while she's the third public no there were many other Republicans against or leaving strongly against."

Roll Call (9/25, Lesniewski) reports that Collins "delivered the likely final blow to the GOP's latest effort to repeal and replace" the ACA. Reuters (9/25, Cornwell, Cowan) reports that the "last ditch Republican effort...appeared doomed." Bloomberg News (9/25, Tracer, Litvan, Edney), the Washington Times (9/25, Howell), the Washington Examiner (9/25, King), and the Huffington Post (9/25, Cohn) also report on Collins' decision.

Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (9/25) column, "Now this sorry process is heading to a sorry end. Obamacare repeal failed in the Senate. Then 'skinny repeal' failed. And now, 'last-ditch' Cassidy-Graham is foundering." Catherine Rampell writes in her Washington Post (9/25) column, "Trump may be a toddler, we keep telling ourselves, but at least some (comparative) grown-ups on Capitol Hill are thinking things through." Milbank calls Cassidy-Graham a "flaming turd," adding, "What's been threatening the health-care coverage of tens of millions of Americans isn't Trump. It's the entire Republican Party."

Trump Faults McCain For Bill's Demise. The Washington Post (9/25, Wagner) reports that Trump "focused his ire Monday night" on McCain, "distributing a video that showed the Arizona Republican on board with the mission in the past." Trump tweeted, "A few of the many clips of John McCain talking about Repealing & Replacing O'Care. My oh my has he changed-complete turn from years of talk!" Politico (9/25, McCaskill) reports that Trump had earlier told the Rick & Bubba radio show, "That's the only reason we don't have it, because of John McCain." However, The Hill (9/25) reports that during a CNN debate on the bill, "Graham said McCain has earned the right to 'do whatever the damn hell he wants to.'"

Graham And Cassidy Debate Sanders And Klobuchar. Graham said during the CNN debate, "I want to provide high-quality healthcare for every American, including my family and yours, but we've got to find way to make it so without bankrupting the country. ... I'm here tonight because Obamacare is failing." Cassidy said during the CNN debate, "It's a decision about you versus the federal government. We side with you."

Sen. Bernie Sanders, opposing the bill, said during the CNN debate, "Every major health organization in this country, whether it is the American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, the American Cancer Society, the Alzheimer's Society, every single major medical organization in this country thinks that their proposal is a disaster." Sen. Amy Klobuchar, also in opposition, said on CNN, "I believe politics is about making people's lives better, but this bill, it doesn't do that."

The New York Times (9/25, Pear) reports that Graham has defended his healthcare legislation by comparing the block-grant model to the 1996 welfare overhaul, saying "we block granted money for welfare reform, and it worked like a charm." However, the Times says, after the welfare law passed, the number of welfare recipients dropped more than 50 percent in five years and states adjusted to less and less federal money over time. The Times concludes, "An equivalent drop in the number of people with health insurance or insurance subsidies would probably not be viewed as a great success."

USA Today Argues Against Sanders' Medicare For All Proposal. In an editorial, USA Today (9/25, Board) writes, "The Senate might vote this week on the Graham-Cassidy plan, the Republicans' latest cruel and cynical repeal-and-replace effort to deny tens of millions of Americans...their health insurance. ... Might we suggest that saving the ACA (also known as Obamacare), and pursuing bipartisan fixes, should be a much higher priority at this moment than pursuing political pipe dreams about Medicare for all?" While "there is something to be said for the single-payer approach employed in Sanders' plan...whatever good that would come from the new pricing power in Sanders' proposal would be offset by the soak-the-rich, make-health-care-free philosophy that underpins it."

Sanders writes in response in USA Today (9/25, Sanders), "My Medicare for All Act of 2017, with 16 co-sponsors, improves and expands Medicare and, over a four-year transition period, provides health care to every man, woman and child in our country. In doing that, the US will finally join the ranks of every other major country on Earth in recognizing that health care is a right, not a privilege."

Supreme Court Cancels Travel Ban Oral Arguments, Seeking New Briefs From Both Sides.

On the NBC Nightly News (9/25, story 7, 1:15, Guthrie), Hallie Jackson briefly reported that President Trump's "original travel ban, long in legal limbo, is catching a break from the Supreme Court. The justices, set to hear arguments in two weeks, are instead postponing that, a sign the court thinks the legal battle over the old ban is moot because of the new version just unveiled." The AP (9/25, Sherman) reports that the court "canceled the scheduled Oct. 10 argument in the case and asked both sides to explain whether the matter has been overtaken by events, or in legal parlance, is moot."

USA Today (9/25, Wolf) reports, "In the wake of Trump's unveiling of Travel Ban 3.0 Sunday is that the current Supreme Court case has been altered, perhaps fatally. What's left is for the justices to get new briefs from both sides by Oct. 5 before deciding its ultimate fate." The New York Times (9/25, Liptak) reports, "By canceling the arguments for now, the court signaled that it may never decide the case."

Reuters (9/25, Chung, Rosenberg), Bloomberg News (9/25, Stohr), and the Wall Street Journal (9/25, Meckler, Kendall) also report on the court's order, while other sources consider the revised list of eight countries. Philip Bump of the Washington Post (9/25) writes that Chad, North Korea, and Venezuela, just added to the list, have not "seen much terrorism recently," even though "Trump has regularly asserted that the prohibitions were necessary to protect Americans from terrorist attacks." Non-listed nations including Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, and Turkey have a higher rate of terrorism.

Reuters (9/25, Ellsworth) reports that Venezuela accused Trump "of conducting 'political terrorism.'" Bloomberg News (9/25, Rosati, Rodrigues) reports that Venezuelan Foreign Minister Jorge Arreaza told the UN General Assembly that the US is "the world's 'major human rights violator'" and said that Trump "acted 'as if he were the world's emperor.'" The New York Times (9/25) reports that the addition of Chad to the list "took the Chadian government by surprise and bewildered analysts of Central Africa," while the Washington Post (9/25, Rauhala) reports experts said the inclusion of North Korea "is mostly symbolic and will have little to no effect on Kim Jong Un's regime," since very few North Koreans travel to the US.

In an editorial, the New York Times (9/25) calls it "A Trump Travel Ban We've Seen Before," writing, "The central question to ask about President Trump's latest travel ban, which he issued on Sunday, is: Will it make Americans safer? The answer, as best as anyone can tell based on publicly available information, is no." The Times adds, "When the president has freely spouted his own longstanding animus toward adherents of the world's major religions, his actions...must be evaluated against that backdrop."

The Washington Post (9/25) says in an editorial that Trump's latest order "may be the result of a more considered process than were the first two versions. But the end product is still lacking in sense. Travel to the United States from North Korea is practically nonexistent – so why ban it? Likewise, the order indicates that Venezuelan officials will be barred as a punitive measure given their failure to cooperate – but what does this have to do with national security, the ban's ostensible purpose?" The Post concludes, "We have little reason to presume the addition of Venezuela and North Korea to be anything more than a fig leaf to disguise a would-be 'Muslim ban.'"

White House, GOP Plan To Slash Corporate Tax Rate.

The AP (9/25, Gordon, Thomas) reports that congressional Republicans and the White House are finalizing a tax plan that would slash the corporate tax rate from 35 percent to "around 20 percent" and cut the income tax rate "for the wealthiest Americans" from 39.6 percent to 35 percent, according to people familiar with the plan. The plan, set to be unveiled Wednesday, "also is expected to eliminate or reduce some tax breaks and deductions."

Bloomberg News: Trump Plan Reduces Taxes For The Rich, Hits "Democratic-Leaning States."

Bloomberg News (9/25, Kapur) reported that President Trump and GOP "leaders inched closer to releasing their tax framework this week, as details leaked to lobbyists suggested it would dramatically cut taxes for corporations and the wealthy," offer some "middle-class tax relief and punish some households in Democratic-leaning states like New York and New Jersey. The White House said Trump will travel to Indiana Wednesday for a late-afternoon speech that will focus on the tax-overhaul effort." Bloomberg News added that Trump on Monday morning "tweeted that he has "important meetings taking place today. Big tax cuts & reform.'" Bloomberg News added that details of the plan that are "circulating among Washington lobbyists breaks from the president's recent rhetoric against tax cuts for the rich," setting "the stage for a battle with Democrats."

WSJournal A1 Analysis: Washington Newcomer Mnuchin Takes On The Tax Code. In a front-page analysis, the Wall Street Journal (9/25, A1, Rubin, Davidson) reports that Treasury Secretary Mnuchin for months has sought to working with Congress and the White House to craft a tax reform plan – a task Mnuchin takes on as someone with less political experience than any other recent treasury secretary. The Journal highlights Mnuchin's role during the tax negotiations as a number cruncher and White House liaison as he has worked to help create a plan that answers the Republican Party's promise of a simpler tax code with lower rates.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"A Trump Travel Ban We've Seen Before." The New York Times (9/25) says in an editorial, "The central question to ask about President Trump's latest travel ban, which he issued on Sunday, is: Will it make Americans safer? The answer, as best as anyone can tell based on publicly available information, is no." The Times adds, "When the president has freely spouted his own longstanding animus toward adherents of the world's major religions, his actions...must be evaluated against that backdrop."

"The Wreckage Of Anthony Weiner." In an editorial, the New York Times (9/25) savages ex-Rep. Anthony Weiner, saying, "His narcissism was profound and undisguised," and he "proved to be a pathetic jerk. But few jerks do as much damage as he did in his recklessness." Citing then-FBI Director James Comey's probe of Hillary Clinton's emails, the Times says Weiner "may even be responsible for Donald Trump being president."

Washington Post.

"Trump's New Travel Ban Still Has No Justification." The Washington Post (9/25) says in an editorial that President Trump's latest order "may be the result of a more considered process than were the first two versions. But the end product is still lacking in sense. Travel to the United States from North Korea is practically nonexistent – so why ban it? Likewise, the order indicates that Venezuelan officials will be barred as a punitive measure given their failure to cooperate – but what does this have to do with national security, the ban's ostensible purpose?" The Post concludes, "We have little reason to presume the addition of Venezuela and North Korea to be anything more than a fig leaf to disguise a would-be 'Muslim ban.'"

"The Kremlin Creeps Into Germany." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/25) says that while Russia did not blatantly interfere in Germany's national election, "it did its best to support the" far-right Alternative for Germany, or AfD, party. As a result, Chancellor Angela Merkel will be forced "to negotiate with two smaller parties to form a governing coalition, effectively narrowing her political options," a "weakened position" that the Post says "reflects a fragmenting political environment in Europe, providing an opening for the AfD and other illiberal parties." Meanwhile, Vladimir Putin "has wasted no time exploiting this," but still President Trump has not led "a discussion in the West about how to combat Russian interference in Western democracies." The Post warns that now is the time "to raise the alarm now that gravediggers are coming for democracy, before they begin to sink their shovels into the earth."

"Hogan Shoves Transportation To The Top Of The Regional Agenda." In an editorial, the Washington Post (9/25) writes that Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan's decision to push "big-ticket" suburban transportation proposals to the top of the regional agenda is a "good starting point" to addressing problems in the region's transportation system, which, without help, "will remain stuck in its current state of alarming inadequacy."

Wall Street Journal.

"The Michigan Comeback Story." The Wall Street Journal (9/25) in an editorial on tax reform holds up Michigan as an example of how tax reform can boost the economy. It praises Gov. Rick Snyder for having adopted pro-growth tax reforms leading to Michigan having the strongest economic growth in the Great Lakes region. It argues that while some blamed Michigan's previously sluggish economy on competition from China and free-trade agreements, tax and regulatory policy played a bigger role.

"Cuba's Sonic Attacks." The Wall Street Journal (9/25, Board) in an editorial suggests the US should expel an equal number of Cubans from the Cuban embassy in Washington to the personnel at the US embassy in Havana, explaining that the diplomats could return to the US as soon as Cuba explains the harms done to the US personnel in Havana. The State Department has identified the harms as "mild traumatic brain injury and permanent hearing loss," as well as "loss of balance, severe headaches, cognitive disruption and brain swelling." It has suggested that sonic causes are behind the harms. The Journal says the US must respond in a way likely to be effective.

"Japan's Snap Elections." A Wall Street Journal (9/25) editorial likens Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's call for snap elections to British Prime Minister Theresa May's failed attempt in June, and says the outcome of May's effort to consolidate power shows how that strategy can backfire. For Abe, the Journal says, the move signals not the premier's strength, but rather his weakness, and Japanese voters have no clear reason to support him.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Sen. Collins Opposes Health Bill, Dealing Blow To ACA Repeal
SEC Chairman Says Agency Didn't Do Enough To Size Up 2016 Hack
Steven Mnuchin, A Washington Newcomer, Tilts At Its Hardest Target: The Tax Code
Target To Boost Minimum Wages In Battle For Workers

New York Times:

Health Bill Appears Dead As Pivotal GOP, Senator Declares Opposition
North Korea Says It Has the Right To Shoot Down US Warplanes
At Least 6 White House Advisers Used Private Email Accounts
Syrian War Drags On, But Assad's Future Looks As Secure As Ever
Was It A One-Day Revolt In The NFL, Or Something More?
Anthony Weiner Gets 21 Months In Prison For Sexting With Teenager
In Battered Puerto Rico, Governor Warns Of A Humanitarian Crisis

Washington Post:

Trump's Instinct To Provoke May Now Be Tripping Him Up
N. Korea Suggests Downing US Jets
Russians Exploited Social Wedges
Merkel's Shaky Election Sends Tremors Through EU
White House Feels The Heat Over Maria Response
GOP Faces Another Health-Care Defeat

Financial Times:

Merkel Admits She Has "Polarised" Germany As Grip On Power Weakens
Shinzo Abe Calls Snap Japan General Election
Lyft Looks Toward London As Uber Reels From Ban

Washington Times:

North Korean Hackers Suspected Of Using Bitcoin To Undermine U.S. Sanctions
Collins' Rejection Dooms Latest Republican Attempt To Repeal Obamacare
Democrat-Appointed Judges Uphold Texas Law Against Sanctuary Cities
White House Says Respect For Nation, Not Racism, Motivated Trump To Criticize Athlete Protesters
Determined Kurds Elated To Hold Independence Vote, But International Community Wary
Smithsonian Gives Clarence Thomas A Spot In Year-Old African American History Museum

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: White House-NFL Anthem Protests; NFL Protests-Pro Sports Response; Congress-

Healthcare Reform; Hurricane-Puerto Rico; Hurricane Tracking; North Korea Threats; Tennessee-Church Shooting; New Mexico-Deadly Police Crash; Airlines Flight-Smoke In Cabin; Aspirin-Heart Disease; Marines-First Female Infantry Officer.

CBS: White House-NFL Protests; NFL Protests-Reaction; North Korea Threats; Hurricane-Puerto Rico; Congress-Healthcare Reform; Equifax-Identify Theft Victims; Tennessee-Church Shooting; Anthony Weiner-Prison Sentence; Civil Rights-Little Rock School Desegregation Anniversary.

NBC: Hurricane-Puerto Rico; Puerto Rico-Relief Operation; Hurricane Tracking; Congress-Healthcare Reform; North Korea Threats; White House-NFL Protests; Supreme Court-Travel Ban; Kushner-Private Email Use; Anthony Weiner-Prison Sentence; Tennessee-Church Shooting; Mexico-Earthquake.

Network TV At A Glance:

NFL Anthem Protests – 15 minutes, 52 seconds

Hurricane-Puerto Rico – 9 minutes, 39 seconds

Congress-Healthcare Reform – 7 minutes, 31 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Congress-Healthcare Reform; North Korea Threats; NFL Anthem Protests; Wall Street Stocks; United Nations-Drone Incident.

CBS: Congress-Healthcare Reform; North Korea Threats; Israel-West Bank Attack; North Carolina-Hurricane Maria; Anthony Weiner-Prison Sentence; NFL Anthem Protests.

FOX: Congress-Healthcare Reform; Hurricane-Puerto Rico; Congress-SEC Hack; NFL Anthem Protests; North Korea Threats; Texas-Sanctuary City Laws; Supreme Court-Travel Ban.

NPR: Hurricane-Puerto Rico; NFL Anthem Protests; Ivanka Trump-Private Email Use; Congress-Healthcare Reform Plan; Fishing Magnate-Prison Sentence; Newspaper Merger.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets Spanish PM Rajoy at the White House – President Donald Trump welcomes Spanish Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy to the White House, with agenda including a press conference.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public events scheduled.

US Senate: 10:00 AM Senate Energy Committee nominations hearing – Nominations hearing considers Bruce Walker to be Assistant Secretary of Energy for Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability, and Steven Winberg to be Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy. Location: Rm 366, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://energy.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on 'Special Counsels and the Separation of Powers' – Hearing on 'Special Counsels and the Separation of Powers' * Hearing includes discussion of legislation which would allow judicial review if a special counsel is removed, and is held amid concerns that President Donald Trump may fire Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is investigating 'any links and/or coordination between the Russian Govt and individuals associated with the campaign of President Trump.' Location: Senate Swamp, Washington, DC <http://casey.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on 'Special Counsels and the Separation of Powers' – Hearing on 'Special Counsels and the Separation of Powers' * Hearing includes discussion of legislation which would allow judicial review if a special counsel is removed, and is held amid concerns that President Donald Trump may fire Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is investigating 'any links and/or coordination between the Russian Govt and individuals associated with the campaign of President Trump.' Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 226, Washington, DC <http://judiciary.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Hearing on 'Oversight of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission', with testimony from SEC Chairman Jay Clayton. Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 538, Washington, DC <http://banking.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Armed Services Committee considers reappointment of Joint Chiefs Chairman Dunford – Nominations hearing considers Gen. Joseph Dunford for reappointment to the grade of general and reappointment to be Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman. Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://armed-services.senate.gov/>

10:30 AM Senate Foreign Relations Committee Business Meeting, hearing on 'managing security assistance to support foreign policy' – Senate Committee on Foreign Relations Business Meeting * Immediately followed by hearing on 'Managing Security Assistance to Support Foreign Policy', with testimony from Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs Tina Kaidanow; Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense for Strategy, Plans, and Capabilities Thomas Harvey III; and Defense Security Cooperation Agency Director Lt. Gen. Charles Hooper. Location: Rm 419, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

11:30 AM Senate Democrats call for Republicans to reject 'Graham-Cassidy bill' – Democratic Sens. Bob Casey, Ron Wyden, Debbie Stabenow, Cory Booker, Chris Van Hollen, Tammy Duckworth, and Maggie Hassan call on Republicans to reverse course and reject the 'Graham-Cassidy bill' – Senate Republicans' latest measure to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act, spearheaded by Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham and Bill Cassidy – via press conference with disability advocates and those affected. Location: Senate Swamp, Washington, DC <http://casey.senate.gov/> <https://twitter.com/SenBobCasey>

2:00 PM Helsinki Commission briefing on cyber diplomacy – Helsinki Commission briefing on 'Building Cyber Confidence Between Adversaries: Can the OSCE Help Establish Rules of the Road?', with experts – Carnegie Endowment for International Peace Cyber Policy Initiative Co-Director Tim Maurer, National Defense University Center for Strategic Research Senior Research Fellow Alex Crowther, and Council on Foreign Relations Senior Fellow (and former National Security Council director for cybersecurity policy) Robert Knake – describing the state-based cyber threats that OSCE discussions seek to address, evaluating the development of these confidence-building measures, and assessing the present value and future potential of these diplomatic discussions. Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 385, Washington, DC <http://www.csce.gov> <https://twitter.com/HelsinkiComm>

2:30 PM Closed Briefing: Intelligence Matters. Location: Rm 219, Hart Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://intelligence.senate.gov>

2:30 PM Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on 'FTC stakeholder perspectives' – Consumer Protection, Product Safety, Insurance, and Data Security Subcommittee hearing on 'FTC Stakeholder Perspectives: Reform Proposals to Improve Fairness, Innovation, and Consumer Welfare', with testimony from Kelley Drye partner William MacLeod; Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati partner Lydia Parnes; Consumers Union Vice President for Policy and Modernization Jessica Rich; and TechFreedom President Berin Szoka. Location: Russell Senate Office Building, Rm 253, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

US House: 10:00 AM Democratic Reps. Pocan and Bonamici release results of 'critical conversations' with education stakeholders – Democratic Reps. Mark Pocan and Suzanne Bonamici and NAACP and American Federation of Teachers leaders join the #WeChoose Campaign to release results of 'critical conversations' – held in dozens of cities nationwide to 'give those most directly affected (students, parents, teachers, and community members) a voice in education policy' – via news conference. #WeChoose organizers also preview their ongoing assessments of school curriculums nationally. Speakers include Reps. Pocan and Bonamici, NAACP Interim President and CEO Derrick Johnson, AFT President Randi Weingarten, Advancement Project Staff Attorney Sabrina Khan, Camden Students Union student Isaiah Rivera, and Journey for Justice Alliance National Director Jitu Brown. Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC www.jrjalliance.com/wechoose #WECHOOSE

10:00 AM House Government Reform Committee hearing on Commission on Evidence-Based Policymaking recommendations – Hearing on 'Recommendations of the Commission on Evidence-Based Policymaking', with testimony from Commission Chair Dr Katharine Abraham, Co-Chair Dr Ron Haskins, and Commissioners Robert Shea and Dr Latanya Sweeney * Commission released its' final report – 'The Promise of Evidence-Based Policymaking' – earlier this month, focused on how to increase the availability and use of data in order to build evidence about gov't programs while protecting privacy and confidentiality * Rescheduled from 12 Sep. Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2157, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

10:00 AM VA Secretary Shulkin testifies to House subcommittee legislative hearing – Health Subcommittee legislative hearing, on legislation including 'a draft bill to make certain improvements in VA's Health Professionals Educational Assistance Program', with testimony from Secretary of Veterans Affairs David Shulkin; bipartisan Reps. Debbie Dingell, Beto O'Rourke, Derek Kilmer, Steve King, Lloyd Smucker, Mike Coffman, Steve Stivers, Ron DeSantis, and John Rutherford; a The American Legion representative; a Vietnam Veterans of America representative; and an AMVETS representative + written testimony from Blinded Veterans of America; Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States; Disabled American Veterans; Paralyzed Veterans of America; and Justice For Vets. Location: Cannon House Office Building, Rm 334,

Washington, DC <http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

10:00 AM House Natural Resources subcommittee legislative hearing – Water, Power and Oceans Subcommittee legislative hearing on ‘H.R. 200, To amend the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act to provide flexibility for fishery managers and stability for fishermen, and for other purposes’, ‘H.R. 2023, Modernizing Recreational Fisheries Management Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 3588, RED SNAPPER Act’, and a discussion draft of ‘H.R. XXXX, To amend and reauthorize the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, and for other purposes’, with testimony from New Bedford, MA, Mayor Jonathan Mitchell; Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership Center for Marine Fisheries Director Chris Macaluso; Reel Surprise Charter Fishing co-owner Susan Boggs; Maine Coast Fisherman’s Association Executive Director Ben Martens; Southeastern Fisheries Association’s Mike Merrifield; and Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources Commissioner Chris Blankenship * Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross was invited to testify, but is traveling. Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

10:00 AM House Energy subcommittee hearing on ‘Powering America: Technology’s Role in Empowering Consumers’ – Energy Subcommittee hearing on ‘Powering America: Technology’s Role in Empowering Consumers’, with testimony from Stem Chief Commercial Officer Karen Butterfield; Advanced Energy Economy Vice President for Federal Policy Arvin Ganesan; Holy Cross Energy President and CEO Dr Bryan Hannegan; ComEd Senior Vice President for Customer Operations Val Jensen; LO3 Energy Director of Regulated Markets Monica Lamb; and Direct Energy Senior Vice President for North America Distributed Energy and Power Todd Sandford. Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2123, Washington, DC <http://energycommerce.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseCommerce>

10:00 AM House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on the State Department redesign – Hearing on ‘The Department of State Redesign’, with testimony from Deputy Secretary of State John Sullivan * President Donald Trump’s ‘Executive Order on a Comprehensive Plan for Reorganizing the Executive Branch’ was issued in March and called for the entire branch to propose plans to reorganize governmental functions and eliminate unnecessary agencies, components of agencies, and agency programs. Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2172, Washington, DC <http://www.hcfa.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/HouseForeign>

10:00 AM House Infrastructure subcommittee hearing on water stakeholders’ perspectives – Water Resources and Environment Subcommittee hearing on ‘Building a 21st Century Infrastructure for America: Water Stakeholders’ Perspectives’, with testimony from Hallandale Beach, FL, Mayor Joy Cooper (on behalf of U.S. Conference of Mayors); McWane Senior Vice President and General Counsel James Proctor II; Las Virgenes Municipal Water District General Manager David Pedersen (on behalf of Association of California Water Agencies, and California Association of Sanitation Agencies); Metropolitan Water Reclamation District of Greater Chicago Executive Director David St. Pierre (on behalf of National Association of Clean Water Agencies); El Paso Water Utilities Government Affairs Manager Hector Gonzalez (on behalf of Association of Regional Water Organizations); Aqua America President and CEO Christopher Franklin (on behalf of National Association of Water Companies); and Natural Resources Defense Council Senior Attorney Lawrence Levine. Location: Rm 2167, Rayburn House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://transportation.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/Transport>.

10:00 AM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on DHS efforts to improve aviation security – Transportation and Protective Security Subcommittee hearing on ‘Raising the Standard: DHS’s Efforts to Improve Aviation Security Around the Globe’, with testimony from Transportation Security Administration Office of Global Strategies Director of Global Compliance Craig Lynes; Customs and Border Protection Office of Field Operations Executive Assistant Commissioner Todd Owen; and Government Accountability Office Director of Homeland Security and Justice Jennifer Grover. Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

10:15 AM House Administration Committee latest hearing on the Government Publishing Office – Hearing on ‘Transforming GPO for the 21st Century and Beyond: Part 3 – Federal Depository Library Program’, with testimony from Government Publishing Office Acting Superintendent of Documents Laurie Hall; HathiTrust Digital Library Executive Director Mike Furlough; University of Maryland Government Documents & Criminology Librarian Celina McDonald; Stanford Law School Library Director Beth Williams; and Mississippi State Librarian Stephen Parks. Location: Rm 1310, Longworth House Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://cha.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseAdmnGOP>

11:00 AM House Minority Whip Steny Hoyer regular pen-and-pad briefing Location: H-144, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC www.democraticwhip.gov/ <https://twitter.com/WhipHoyer>

12:00 PM House debates Increasing Opportunity and Success for Children and Parents through Evidence-Based Home Visiting Act – House of Representatives meets for legislative business, with agenda including ‘H.R. 2824 – Increasing Opportunity and Success for Children and Parents through Evidence-Based Home Visiting Act’ Location: Washington, DC <http://www.house.gov/>

Sep. 26 12:30 PM GOP Reps. Mark Walker and Kevin Brady ‘call on Republicans to keep our promises to the American people’ – Republican Study Committee Chairman Rep. Mark Walker, Steering Committee members, and other members, plus House Committee on Ways and Means Chairman Kevin Brady, ‘call on Republicans to keep our promises to the American people’, via press conference. Location: House Triangle, Washington, DC rsc-walker.house.gov <https://twitter.com/RepublicanStudy>

2:00 PM House Oversight subcommittee hearing on nuclear waste management and storage – Interior, Energy, and Environment Subcommittee hearing on ‘Examining America’s Nuclear Waste Management and Storage’, with testimony from Maryland Public Service Commission Commissioner Anthony O’Donnell; Aiken County, SC, Councilmember Chuck Smith (on behalf of Energy Communities Alliance); UC-San Diego School of Global Policy & Strategy Professor David Victor; and Heritage Foundation Institute for Economic Freedom Policy Analyst Katie Tubb. Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2154, Washington, DC <http://oversight.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/GOPoversight>

2:00 PM House Natural Resources subcommittee legislative hearing – Indian, Insular and Alaska Native Affairs Subcommittee legislative hearing on ‘H.R. 3535, Ruffey Rancheria Restoration Act of 2017’, ‘H.R. 3650, Lumbee Recognition Act’, and ‘H.R. 3744, Tribal Recognition Act of 2017’, with testimony from Republican Rep. Robert Pittenger; Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs John Tahsuda; Ruffey Rancheria of California Chairman Tahj Gomes; and Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina Chairman Harvey Godwin. Location: Longworth House Office Building, Rm 1334, Washington, DC <http://naturalresources.house.gov> <https://twitter.com/NatResources>

2:00 PM House Homeland Security subcommittee hearing on modernization of DHS financial systems – Oversight and Management Efficiency Subcommittee hearing on ‘DHS Financial Systems: Will Modernization Ever Be Achieved’, with testimony from Deputy Under Secretary of Homeland Security for Management Chip Fulghum; Department of the Interior Business Center Director Michele Singer; General Services Administration Office of Government-wide Policy Unified Shared Services Management Executive Director Elizabeth Angerman; and Government Accountability Office Director of Financial Management and Assurance Asif Khan. Location: U.S. Capitol Visitor Center, HVC-210, Washington, DC homeland.house.gov <https://twitter.com/HouseHomeland>

Other: 7:30 AM Washington Ideas Forum commences – Washington Ideas Forum, hosted by The Atlantic in partnership with the Aspen Institute, commences. ‘Leaders from politics and govt to business and culture’ convene to ‘tackle the issues confronting the country and the world, including politics and policy, economics and trade, race and justice, education, global affairs, technology, and beyond’. Speakers today include Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin, VotoLatino President Maria Teresa Kumar, Millennial Week Founder Natalie Moss, Vital Voices Global Partnership President and CEO Alyse Nelson, Running Start Founder Susannah Wellford, LinkedIn Head of U.S. Public Policy Nicole Isaac, and Pace University President Marvin Krislov

8:00 AM POLITICO Live discussion on the doctor-patient-govt relationship – ‘The Doctor-Patient (and Government) Relationship’ POLITICO Live discussion, on how doctors, patients, caregivers, and advocates can navigate complex decision-making, and addressing what policy changes can help make sure that doctors and their patients can decide the best course and get access to innovative and cost-effective therapies. Speakers include Republican Sen. Bill Cassidy, Democrats Sen. Jeanne Shaheen and Rep. Ami Bera, National Quality Forum President and CEO Shantanu Agrawai, National Patient Advocate Foundation CEO Alan Balch, American Medical Association President David Barbe, Advance Care Planning Decisions co-founder and Executive Director Aretha Davis, and Georgetown University School of Medicine Evidence Based Medicine Co-director Yalda Jabbarpour. Location: Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC www.politico.com #POLITICOHealth

8:15 AM Dem Rep. Ted Deutch hosts Washington Summit for South Florida business and community leaders – Democratic Rep. Ted Deutch hosts Washington Summit for South Florida business and community leaders, to cover issues including boating safety regulations, customs and border protection, immigration policy, tax reform, Pell Grants, Port Everglades improvement projects, climate change resiliency plans, and other local and national topics. Day one speakers include FBI Deputy Assistant Director James Burrell. Location: National Press Club, 529 14th

Street NW, Washington, DC teddeutch.house.gov <https://twitter.com/repteddeutch>

8:30 AM Brookings co-hosts conference on 'The Medicare Physician Fee Schedule and Alternative Payment Models' – 'The Medicare Physician Fee Schedule and Alternative Payment Models' Urban Institute, USC-Brookings Schaeffer Initiative for Health Policy, and Actuarial Research Corporation conference on 'the evolution and state of the PFS, and the movement to new payment models'. Speakers include Commonwealth Fund Policy and Research Senior Vice President Eric Schneider, Federation of American Hospitals President and CEO Chip Kahn, American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists Health Policy and Advocacy Vice President Barbara Levy, and Medicare Payment Advisory Committee Executive Director Mark Miller. Location: The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC <http://www.brookings.edu> <https://twitter.com/BrookingsInst> #MedicarePayments

9:00 AM National Academies committee workshop on the health and performance of DHS law enforcement – National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine ad hoc committee organizes 'Strategies, Interventions and Policies for Health Promotion, High Risk Behavior Prevention and Increased Performance of the DHS Law Enforcement Workforce: A Workshop', exploring the impact of operational stressors on the health and performance of the Department of Homeland Security law enforcement workforce and opportunities for the DHS Office of Health Affairs Workforce Health and Medical Support Division, Office of Chief of Human Capital Officer, Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, and other component agencies and operational units to identify and incorporate best practices, strategies, interventions, and policies from other similarly-situated organizations. Location: House of Sweden, 2900 K St NW, Washington, DC www.nas.edu/ <https://twitter.com/NASciences> #RealWorldEvidence

11:15 AM Mexico Embassy Vigil for Earthquake victims and the disappeared student teachers – The American Federation of Teachers and other social justice groups will hold a vigil at the Mexican Embassy in Washington, D.C. to show support for the victims of the recent massive earthquakes and to mark the third anniversary of the still-unresolved "disappearance" of 43 Mexican student-teachers. Contact: Janet Bass, 202-879-4554, jbass@aft.org, www.aft.org Location: Embassy of Mexico, 1911 Pennsylvania Ave. N.W.

12:00 PM AG Sessions delivers remarks on free speech on college campuses – Attorney General Jeff Sessions delivers remarks at the Georgetown Center for the Constitution at Georgetown Law on free speech on college campuses, then participates in a conversation with Center Director Randy Barnett * Comes just days after President Donald Trump said NFL team owners should fire any players who kneel or otherwise protest during the national anthem, despite critics pointing out that the First Amendment gives them the freedom of speech to do so. Location: Georgetown University Law Center, 600 New Jersey Ave NW, Washington, DC www.justice.gov <https://twitter.com/TheJusticeDept>

1:00 PM Bipartisan Reps. Marcy Kaptur and Walter Jones speak Our Revolution 'Glass-Steagall' webinar – Our Revolution discuss 'the pressing need for Glass-Steagall reinstatement' and to add more sponsors to 'The Modern Say Glass-Steagall Act' and 'The Prudent Banking Act of 2017', via national webinar with introductory remarks from Democratic Rep. Marcy Kaptur and Republican Rep. Walter Jones, and panel discussion with Marcus Stanley (Americans for Financial Reform), Heather Corzo (AFL-CIO), and financial author Nomi Prins. Location: TBD www.ourrevolution.com <https://twitter.com/ourrevolution>

3:00 PM The Atlantic 'Future of Work Forum' with Dem Sen. Joe Manchin – The Atlantic 'Future of Work Forum', held to 'debate the biggest factors driving the transformation of work' and 'discuss what it means to continue to lean toward automation, what's needed to thrive in the new work economy, and which industries and careers will come out on top in the decades to come'. Speakers include Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin, former Carrier employee Kipp Glenn, Square co-founder and Director Jim McKelvey, LinkedIn Head of U.S. Public Policy Nicole Isaac, Snagajob COO Jocelyn Mangan, Pipeline Fellowship founder and CEO Natalia Oberti Noguera, National League of Cities Senior Executive Director Brooks Rainwater, and WeWork Global Head of Public Affairs Jennifer Skyler. Location: WeWork Wonder Bread Factory, Washington, DC <http://www.theatlantic.com/> <https://twitter.com/TheAtlantic>

7:00 PM 'Press vs. Politicians' Spelling Bee at the National Press Club – National Press Club 'Press vs. Politicians' Spelling Bee, with participants including Republican Rep. Virginia Foxx and Democratic Reps. Don Beyer, Scott Peters, Suzanne Bonamici, Ted Deutch, and Jamie Raskin (Politicians Team), and Art Swift (Gallup), Alexandra Petri (The Washington Post), Molly Ball (The Atlantic), Ben Jacobs (The Guardian) and Seung Min Kim (POLITICO) representing the press. Location: National Press Club, 529 14th Street NW, Washington, DC www.press.org/spelling-bee <https://twitter.com/PressClubDC>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "The truth is John McCain probably saved the Republican party by doing this. Because if you think Graham/Cassidy is unpopular now, wait until people have to live with it, or not live with it. Then who gets blamed? The Republican party. This is one of the rare moments when we actually needed Congress to do nothing. Which is what they're really good at, by the way."

Jimmy Kimmel: "Thank you, Senator Collins. Maine needs affordable health care more than almost any other state. The sewers up there are filled with child-eating clowns."

Stephen Colbert: "For the last year, some players have been kneeling during the national anthem to protest institutional racism. It started with then-49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick. It was a controversial protest. After all, the singing of the national anthem is a sacred time when red-blooded Americans stand up, and run to the bathroom because that's when the line is shortest."

Stephen Colbert: "And today, Donald Trump was still tweeting. 'The issue of kneeling has nothing to do with race.' Wrong. Kneeling during the national anthem has everything to do with race. Just like your presidency."

Stephen Colbert: "Those players are protesting racial injustice. They're not protesting the American flag. Saying that kneeling is a protest against the flag is like saying Gandhi's hunger strikes were a protest against midday snacks."

Stephen Colbert: "It's official. Donald Trump is now going to get fewer visits from basketball players than Kim Jong-Un."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, we had a bunch of big football matchups yesterday. You had the Eagles against the Giants, you had the Patriots against the Texans, and you had the President against everyone."

Jimmy Fallon: "Yesterday, Trump tweeted that players standing with locked arms for the national anthem is okay. Incidentally, people standing with locked arms is also the plan for his border wall. Red rover, red rover, don't let anyone come over."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump yesterday called for a boycott of the NFL as players refused to stand for the national anthem. Dude, you're going after the NFL? That's the most conservative league in sports. The owners – their owners donated millions to your campaign. That'd be like trying to fire your attorney general, even though he's the most conservative guy in the world, who was your first supporter in the Senate – and oh, my God, you did that too."

James Corden: "The American territory of Puerto Rico is in dire need of humanitarian aid. Tensions with North Korea have never been higher. So of course, President Trump spent this weekend tackling the biggest issue of all: football players."

James Corden: "Trump feels that the taking a knee during the national anthem shows disrespect to the American flag. Trump thinks people should treat the flag with more respect, you know, like on his official website where you can spend $8 on a Trump American flag beer cozy. "

James Corden: "Trump also criticized the league for making efforts to prevent concussions, saying they are ruining the game. Right. I don't think Trump realizes how dangerous the symptoms of these concussions are – headache, emotional instability, impulsive behavior. Basically, they turn you into Donald Trump."

James Corden: "Trump's withdrawn his invitation to the Golden State Warriors, making this the first time in history Donald Trump has ever shown a dislike for anything golden."

Trevor Noah: "Jared Kushner admitted he was using a private email account to communicate with other White House officials. Ahhh! Private email? Kushner says what he did is nothing like what Hillary Clinton did and he'll explain the whole thing in his new book 'What Took Place.'"

Trevor Noah: "And also, who is Donald Trump to say that football is too soft? Really? You play golf, a sport where the biggest danger is when you aren't even playing."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, August 2, 2017
Date: Wednesday, August 02, 2017 7:11:58 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 2, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Denver Post: David Bernhardt Is Sworn Into Post As Deputy Interior Secretary.
- Law360: Trump Names Ex-DOJ, Sidley Austin Attorney As DOI Solicitor.
- Austin (TX) American Statesman: Is Susan Combs' Path To Washington Delayed By Politics?
- Missouri Valley (IA) Times: Missouri Valley Native Receives Valor Award.
- Southwest Colorado Journal: Dolores BLM Staffers Recognized For Lifesaving Actions.
- Daily Caller: Trump's Interior Secretary May Be The Key To Opening Yucca Mountain.
- High Country (CO) News: Amid Monument Review, A Pro-energy Interior Emerges.
- Washington Times: The Antiquities Act Of 1906: No President Is Licensed To Revoke National Monuments.

- Washington Examiner: Obama Wasn't King, And His Laws Aren't Set In Stone.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- DOI Narrows Scope Of Tribal Land Buyback Program.
- DOI Fights Damages After Navajo's Judiciary Funding Win.
- Retired Oil Lease Funds Donated To Environmental, Health Causes.

Bureau Of Land Management

- U.S. News & World Report: Burning Man Receives Permit, Flooded Venue Dries Up.
- Alaska Public Radio Network: Feds Look To Relinquish Mineral Rich Interior Lands To The State.
- KTVZ-TV Bend (OR): BLM, Rancher, County Work Out Teaters Road Access Hours.
- The Hill: Why Won't Congress Fight Against Slaughtering Wild Horses?
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: U.S .Rep. Tom Emmer: Why I'm Pushing To Preserve Mining In Northern Minnesota.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Fishing Event Serves Special Needs Kids.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Washington Post: Gray Wolves Just Won Another Battle To Stay On The Endangered Species List.
- New York Times: Homeland Security To Bypass Environmental Laws In Border Wall Work.
- Daily Caller: Ranchers Sue Feds After 1.8M Acre Grab.

National Park Service

- Newport News (VA) Daily Press: Opening National Park In Gloucester Will Take Years.
- Bluffton (SC) Today: Residents Share Ideas For Reconstruction Monument.
- Westerly (RI) Sun: Sabino, A National Historic Landmark Vessel, Is Ready To Steam Down Mystic River Again.
- Cape Cod (MA) News: Cape Symphony To Return To Cape Cod National Seashore.
- Daily Astorian (OR): A Plant-friendly Flyover.
- NPR: Hikers Missing In Joshua Tree Park Amid Soaring Temperatures.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Honolulu Civil Beat (HI): Feds Offer An Additional $3 Million To Help Ease Impact Of Micronesian Migration.

US Geological Survey

- Reuters: Scientists Turn To Big Data In Hunt For Minerals, Oil And Gas.

Top National Ne Ws

- White House Defends Trump's Role In Crafting Son's Statement On Meeting With Russian Lawyer.
- Senate Confirms Wray As FBI Director In 92-5 Vote.
- WPost A1: Congress May Not Be Able To Act On Trump Tax Cuts This Year.
- McConnell Says GOP Will Use Reconciliation For Tax Code Overhaul.
- Mnuchin's Debt Ceiling Talks With McConnell And Schumer Make No Progress.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Whose Message To Believe On Russia?"
 - "Cubs Fan Gets A Ring, And Forgiveness."
- Washington Post.
 - "Time For The Trump Administration To Speak With One voice On The Debt Limit."
 - "How America Can Honor A Chinese Dissident – And Help Protect His Widow."
 - "Sobering News For $15 Minimum-Wage Boosters."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "ObamaCare For Congress."
 - "A Trump Card In Ukraine."
 - "The Body Count At The Border."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

David Bernhardt Is Sworn Into Post As Deputy Interior Secretary.

The Denver Post (8/1, Paul) reports that David Bernhardt was "sworn in to office Tuesday morning as deputy secretary of the Interior Department following his contentious nomination to the position." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke tweeted in a picture showing Bernhardt being sworn in: "Exciting day! Dave is a seasoned Interior veteran and will be a huge asset."

Additional coverage was provided by Politico Morning Energy (8/1, GUILLÉN).

Trump Names Ex-DOJ, Sidley Austin Attorney As DOI Solicitor.

Law360 (8/1, Phillis) reports that President Trump "said on Monday he intended to nominate a former associate at Sidley Austin LLP with experience working in all three branches of government who currently serves as general counsel to a major wellness shopping company to be solicitor at the Department of the Interior." Ryan Douglas Nelson, "who is based in Idaho Falls, Idaho, currently serves as general counsel for Melaleuca Inc., where he oversees the company's consumer and policy departments managing compliance and litigation issues, among other tasks."

The East Idaho News (8/1) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, "Ryan Nelson is coming to the Department of the Interior with a strong background in natural resources policy and law, stretching many years in both the public and private sector. Having a seasoned legal expert like Ryan, who is also a son of the West, will benefit the entire Department. I look forward to his speedy confirmation by the Senate."

Additional coverage was provided by the Twin Falls \(ID\) Times-News (8/1, Brown), the Idaho Statesman (8/1, Brown), and Federal News Radio \(DC\) (8/1, White).

Is Susan Combs' Path To Washington Delayed By Politics?

The Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (8/1, Recio) reports that former Texas Comptroller Susan Combs, "nominated to be an assistant secretary at the Interior Department, was up for a vote by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee last Thursday when the meeting was abruptly canceled less than 24 hours before it was to be held." The postponement occurred in the midst of "a high-stakes battle over health care." Sen. Lisa Murkowski "denied that the postponement was payback and told CNN that there was a 'blip' in the nominations and that it would be cleared up." However, "a Republican staffer familiar with Murkowski told the Statesman that the hearing cancellation was a power move in response to threats against her state." Also, a Democratic staffer said, "It seems pretty clear that the interior secretary threatening the chairman did not end well for him."

Missouri Valley Native Receives Valor Award.

The Missouri Valley \(IA\) Times (8/1) reports that "Kane Seitz, Supervisory Law Enforcement Park Ranger at Chickasaw National Recreation Area in Sulphur, Okla., received the Valor Award on July 4 in a ceremony at the Interior Building in Washington DC." On June 18, 2015, during a flooding event at Chickasaw National Recreation Area, National Park Service Chief Ranger Aaron W. Shandor, "along with Supervisory Park Ranger Kane I. Seitz, put the safety of others ahead of their own and voluntarily put themselves in danger by deploying a rescue operation that successfully rescued a local family from certain peril." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke presented awards to Seitz and Shando for their actions.

Dolores BLM Staffers Recognized For Lifesaving Actions.

The Southwest Colorado Journal (8/1, Mimiaga) reports that "three staff members of the Bureau of Land Management's Tres Rios office in Dolores received a Valor Award for their efforts to save a co-workers' life last year." In August 2016, BLM geologist Jamie Blair "collapsed at his desk and went into cardiac arrest." David Sanders, Derrick Baldwin, and Robert Garrigues "quickly administered lifesaving actions to revive Blair, who has since made a full recovery and is back at work." The Valor Award was "presented to the staff members by Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke at a July 4 ceremony in Washington, D.C."

Trump's Interior Secretary May Be The Key To Opening Yucca Mountain.

The Daily Caller (8/1, Follett) reports that a decision by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to shrink two Nevada national monuments could remove a significant hurdle to storing nuclear waste at Yucca Mountain, experts say." Some nuclear energy experts believe "one reason former President Barack Obama designated" the Basin and Range National Monument "in 2015 was to block any chance of Yucca Mountain being used to store spent nuclear fuel."

Amid Monument Review, A Pro-energy Interior Emerges.

The High Country \(CO\) News (8/1, Wiles) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's review of national monuments "comes as he continues to fill his department with pro-industry officials and amid a broader push at the Interior Department for increased energy development on public lands—something monument designations can work against." According to the article, "a new report released Tuesday describes an Interior Department now mainly led by employees from extractive-industry backgrounds, marking clear priorities for Zinke that do not bode well for greater public land protections." The report, issued by the Western Values Project, "a progressive organization, shows close ties between high-ranking staffers and industry."

The Antiquities Act Of 1906: No President Is Licensed To Revoke National Monuments.

In his column for the Washington Times (8/1, Fein), Bruce Fein writes that "the text, spirit, and 111-year history of the Antiquities Act of 1906 militate against presidential power to revoke a national monument proclamation made by a predecessor president." For a president to unilaterally revoke by a proclamation would "require new revocation legislation passed by Congress and signed by the new president," Fein argues. He also asserts that "interpreting the Antiquities Act according to its plain language to prohibit presidential revocations of national monument designations of predecessors raises no separation of powers concerns."

Obama Wasn't King, And His Laws Aren't Set In Stone.

In an op-ed for the Washington Examiner (8/1, Pendley), William Perry Pendley, president of the Mountain States Legal Foundation, writes that "although no president has ever revoked a national monument designation, the power to diminish or even revoke a national monument is inherent in the powers granted by the Antiquities Act; in fact, many presidents have diminished the size of national monuments established by their predecessors." He argues that "each branch of the federal government can undo its earlier decisions; the executive branch is no different." Pendley says that "just as no Congress can bind a future Congress, so can no president bind the nation in perpetuity."

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

DOI Narrows Scope Of Tribal Land Buyback Program.

Law360 (8/1, Westney) reports that the Interior Department "plans to target a smaller number of tribes to take part in a massive land buyback program as the department looks to spend the $540 million remaining for the program under the landmark Cobell settlement, according to a DOI statement Monday." The Los Alamos \(NM\) Daily Post (8/1) reports that Associate Deputy Secretary James Cason said, "The revised strategy announced today maximizes the remaining dollars left for the implementation of the Buy-Back Program and seeks to achieve the greatest reduction of fractional interests, the largest number possible of landowners able to participate, and the most effective use of the Department's resources. However, while the Department is doing what it can to improve the Program, it is clear Congress has a role as well. We continue to look to congressional leaders for long-term solutions to address the problem of fractionated lands."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (8/1).

DOI Fights Damages After Navajo's Judiciary Funding Win.

Law360 (8/1, Powell) reports that the Interior Department “conceded defeat Monday after the D.C. Circuit held that the Navajo Nation’s judiciary funding request had to be approved because the agency missed a deadline to respond to it, but argued against awarding the tribe “unreasonable” damages.” In a memorandum, the Interior Department “said the Navajo Nation should be granted summary judgment in light of a recent D.C. Circuit ruling that the tribe’s funding proposal for the operation of the Navajo Nation Judicial Branch for 2014 was automatically approved.”

Retired Oil Lease Funds Donated To Environmental, Health Causes.

The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (8/1, Puckett) reports that Devon Energy is “using refunds it received from the government for cancelling oil and gas leases in the Badger-Two Medicine area of Montana to support land conservation and tribal efforts in Oklahoma.” The energy company signed the agreement with the Interior Department “Interior last year to cancel 15 undeveloped leases covering 130,000 acres.” On Monday, the firm “announced it donated $100,000 of the rebates for retiring the leases to The Nature Conservancy, $40,000 to the Oklahoma City Indian Clinic and $25,000 to the American Indian College Fund.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Burning Man Receives Permit, Flooded Venue Dries Up.

The AP (8/1) reports that “the annual Burning Man event is still on for 2017 despite concern about its traditional homeland being flooded.” The Bureau of Land Management “issued Burning Man its permit to operate on Sunday.” According to the article, “the desert playa where the event takes place was partially underwater due to flooding from this winter’s heavy precipitation, but has dried out in recent weeks.”

Feds Look To Relinquish Mineral Rich Interior Lands To The State.

The Alaska Public Radio Network (8/1, Bross) reports that “a tract of potentially mineral rich land northeast of Fairbanks is recommended for transfer from federal to state hands.” According to the article, “the 709-acre parcel near Fox and the Ft. Knox Gold Mine is being relinquished by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, near where the agency operates a satellite downlink facility.” The Bureau of Land Management “recently completed an environmental assessment of impacts of relinquishing the property.” The BLM’s Valerie Baxter said, “We have found no potential for significant impacts from the relinquishment and transfer to the state.”

BLM, Rancher, County Work Out Teaters Road Access Hours.

KTVZ-TV Bend, OR (8/1) reports that “saying they wish to be ‘a good neighbor in the communities we serve,’ the Prineville District Bureau of Land Management said Tuesday it has responded to a request from Waibel Ranches, LLC and Crook County to modify the existing agreement that would have opened Teaters Road to public travel on Tuesday.” BLM officials “said the change was based on public safety due to construction vehicles on the road, and the need for an emergency access route to the Ochoco National Forest during the period around the solar eclipse.” Starting Tuesday, Teaters Road “will be open Mondays through Thursdays, from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. to allow evening and early morning public access during road construction.”

Why Won’t Congress Fight Against Slaughtering Wild Horses?

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (8/1, Roy, Contributor), Suzanne Roy, executive director of the American Wild Horse Campaign, questions why the government “keep pursuing efforts to eradicate” wild horses in face of widespread public support for the protection of wild horses. Roy writes that “the latest death threat against these icons of the American West came earlier this year from the U.S. Department of the Interior, which has proposed budget language that would undo a ban on killing wild horses or shipping them to foreign slaughterhouses — all in the name of providing federal wildlife managers ‘more flexibility’ in managing horse numbers on the range.” Roy argues that “rather than implement a one-size-kills-all solution,” the Interior Department “should scientifically study how many wild horses and burros should roam the range, firmly keeping in mind that the American public wants them on public lands.” She also urges Congress to “call on the department and bureau to make increased use of fertility control to manage horses humanely on the range.”

U.S .Rep. Tom Emmer: Why I'm Pushing To Preserve Mining In Northern Minnesota.

In an op-ed for the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/1, Emmer), Rep. Tom Emmer, writes that "last December, after the election and before the new administration took office, the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management unexpectedly refused to renew Minnesota's mineral leases and started the process of withdrawing more than 400,000 acres from resource exploration." But "thankfully," Emmer writes, "my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives and the Trump administration are committed to reversing this haphazard, overly expansive ban on development." Emmer asserts that his "actions on this issue will not only protect the potential of thousands of jobs as well as the local economies of many small towns on the Iron Range, but also will leave intact an extensive environmental process that will protect and preserve our beloved Boundary Waters."

Bureau Of Reclamation

Fishing Event Serves Special Needs Kids.

The Wenatchee \(WA\) World (8/1, Francis) reports that "the Bureau of Reclamation's Ephrata Field Office will host its annual C.A.S.T. for Kids event from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at Potholes Reservoir." The article adds that "the morning fishing event will be followed by a picnic lunch."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Gray Wolves Just Won Another Battle To Stay On The Endangered Species List.

The Washington Post (8/1, Fears) reports that the US Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit on Tuesday ruled against the Interior Department's decision "to strip protections" from regional populations of gray wolves and to "allow states to openly hunt them," instead upholding a lower court's decision that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has the authority to group Great Lakes region gray wolves but not to remove them from the endangered species list "without considering the move's impact on the entire species of gray wolves in their range."

The AP (8/1, Flesher) reports that the court "upheld a district judge's 2014 ruling that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had acted prematurely by removing federal protections from wolves in Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin." The court "said the government hadn't reasonably considered factors including loss of the wolf's historical range."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/1, Flesher), the Milwaukee \(WI\) Journal Sentinel (8/1), the Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (8/1, Flesher), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/1, Flesher), the Washington \(DC\) Times (8/1, Flesher), Business Insider (8/1, Flesher), the Chicago \(IL\) Tribune (8/1, Flesher), the Daily Mail (8/1, Flesher), Philly \(PA\) (8/1, Flesher), the Washington \(DC\) Post (8/1, Flesher), the Wisconsin State Journal (8/1, Flesher), WWJ-TV Detroit \(MI\) Detroit (8/1, Flesher), and WXYZ-TV Detroit \(MI\) Detroit (8/1).

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (8/1, Henry), the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (8/1, Siciliano), the Huffington Post (8/1, D'angelo), NBC News (8/1, Rainey), CBS News (8/1), NPR (8/1, Held), the Brainerd \(MN\) Daily Dispatch (8/1, Myers), the Duluth \(MN\) News Tribune (8/1, Myers), UPI (8/1, Pestano), Wisconsin Public Radio (8/1, Kaeding), OutdoorHub (8/1), and WDAY-TV Fargo \(ND\) Fargo, ND (8/1, Myers).

Homeland Security To Bypass Environmental Laws In Border Wall Work.

The New York Times (8/1, Nixon) reports that DHS said Tuesday "that it would use its authority to exempt the agency from having to comply with environmental and other laws in its efforts to build border walls and access roads in the San Diego area." DHS spokesman David Lapan "said the waiver would also apply to replacement fencing and roads the agency plans to build in the San Diego area." Breitbart (8/1, Price) reports that DHS said it "has the authority to waive these requirements under laws passed by Congress to enable securing the border with Mexico." The Washington Times (8/1, Dinan) reports that the Bush Administration "repeatedly used the waivers during the last major round of fence-building from 2005 to 2008."

CNN (8/1, Kopan, Marsh, Wallace) reports DHS's decision "clears an important hurdle to construction of the wall, and signals an approach the administration could take in the future when it seeks to build additional sections of wall or fence." CNN adds that the "15-mile stretch identified in the waiver also includes 14 miles of replacement secondary fencing, for which Customs and Border Protection has requested funding from Congress." Despite issues a waiver to some environmental laws and regulations, DHS said it “remains committed to environmental stewardship with respect to these projects.” Similar coverage is provided by NPR (8/1), Fox News (8/1, Pappas), the Wall Street Journal (8/1, Carlton), The Hill (8/1, Cama), and the Daily Caller (8/1).

In a column for the Daily Beast (8/2, Navarrette), Ruben Navarrette Jr. argues DHS “exempt[ing] itself from having to comply with environmental and other laws” is “par for the course for this administration.” Navarrette opines that the wall construction will “almost surely be reduced to a mixture of fencing and ‘virtual wall’ electronic sensors.” He concludes that it is “time to call the Trump Wall what it is, and always has been: the president’s top domestic policy distraction.”

Ranchers Sue Feds After 1.8M Acre Grab.

The Daily Caller (8/1, Pearce) reports that “three state agriculture associations filed a lawsuit Monday against the federal government for not considering how listing almost two million acres in California as ‘critical habitat’ could affect small business, agriculture, and local government, according to a Pacific Legal Foundation (PLF) press release.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service “declared 1.8 million acres in central and northern California as ‘critical habitat’ in 2016 to protect two species of frog and one species of toad listed under the Endangered Species Act.”

National Park Service

Opening National Park In Gloucester Will Take Years.

The Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (8/1) reports that “it will take years before the planned park at the historic Werowocomoco site will open for visitors, according to the National Park Service.” In a presentations to the Gloucester Board of Supervisors on Tuesday night, Chuck Hunt, park service superintendent, said, “It takes a while for parks to come online. We need more knowledge about the site so we know what we can and cannot do there.” Hunt, “along with Bob Campbell, chief of planning and development, and Gloucester Parks and Recreation Director Carol Steele, presented a progress report on the master planning for the park.”

Residents Share Ideas For Reconstruction Monument.

The Bluffton \(SC\) Today (8/1, Murdaugh) reports that “to ensure they have a solid foundation document for the planned Reconstruction Era National Monument in Beaufort County, National Park Service officials received feedback from the public last week.” The park service held three public meetings last week in northern Beaufort County. The agency’s Ben West “said the park service will put together a foundation document over the next 12 months.”

Sabino, A National Historic Landmark Vessel, Is Ready To Steam Down Mystic River Again.

The Westerly \(RI\) Sun (8/1, Hewitt) reports that “the historic steamboat Sabino is back on the water and ready for public cruises on the Mystic River” Tuesday. The boat has “been under restoration for more than two years in Mystic Seaport’s Henry B. duPont Preservation Shipyard.” The article notes that “financial support for the project was provided by a combination of private philanthropy and public grants, including $172,125 from the Connecticut State Historic Preservation Office, $149,318 from the Institute of Museum and Library Services, and a National Maritime Heritage Grant of $199,806 administered by the National Park Service in partnership with the U.S. Maritime Administration.”

Cape Symphony To Return To Cape Cod National Seashore.

The Cape Cod \(MA\) News (8/1) reports that “the Cape Symphony will perform for the second straight summer at the Cape Cod National Seashore.” According to the article, “a free multimedia performance will feature the Symphony’s principal musicians and a community choral group, along with special guests.” The concert will “celebrate the nature, history and sense of community of the Outer Cape on August 25 at the Salt Pond Visitor Center Amphitheater in Eastham at 6:30 p.m.”

A Plant-friendly Flyover.

The Daily Astorian \(OR\) (8/1, Heffernan) reports that “researchers with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration spent much of last week operating two drones in an effort to map out plant species” at Lewis and Clark National Historical Park’s Colewort Creek. The drones were "mounted with a hyperspectral scanner, which uses the electromagnetic spectrum to identify plant species," which "helped researchers monitor the progress of an area that has undergone numerous restoration projects since 2007." Natural Resources Program Manager Carla Cole said, "Our extensive plant community and elevational data from our ongoing monitoring efforts will assist the NOAA researchers in ground-truthing their data for this study. We expect the results of this study to have useful and immediate management implications and to also be transferable to our partners throughout the Lower Columbia estuary."

Hikers Missing In Joshua Tree Park Amid Soaring Temperatures.

NPR (8/1, Held) reports that rescuers are searching for two hikers reported missing Friday in Joshua Tree National Park. According to Joshua Tree National Park Public Information Officer George Land, "Rachel Nguyen, 20, of Westminster, Calif., and Joseph Orbeso, 21, of Lakewood, Calif., set out for a hike on Thursday." The article says that "two airplanes, two helicopters, six canine tracking teams and up to 100 ground searchers are all being used to try to locate the couple."

Office Of Insular Affairs

Feds Offer An Additional $3 Million To Help Ease Impact Of Micronesian Migration.

Honolulu Civil Beat \(HI\) (8/1, Blair) reports that the Interior Department "announced Tuesday that it will provide more money to places like Hawaii that have growing Micronesian populations, on top of the $30 million already allotted annually." However, "the additional $3 million in what's known as "compact impact" aid is a fraction of the funding the state and other islands say they need to provide educational, health care and social service support to the recent arrivals." Acting Interior Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula said, "The governors of the affected jurisdictions have reported that the federal government is not providing sufficient funds to cover the costs they bear for the impact of migrants from the freely associated states on social services. Both Guam and Hawaii have each reported costs exceeding $100 million a year."

US Geological Survey

Scientists Turn To Big Data In Hunt For Minerals, Oil And Gas.

Reuters (8/1, Doyle) reports that "scientists searching for everything from oil and gas to copper and gold are adopting techniques used by companies such as Netflix or Amazon to sift through vast amounts of data, a study showed on Tuesday." In the journal American Mineralogist, they wrote that "the method has already helped to discover 10 carbon-bearing minerals and could be widely applied to exploration." Gilpin Robinson, of the U.S. Geological Survey, "who was not involved in the study, said the USGS had started to collaborate with the big data project." He said, "The use of large data sets and analytical tools is very important in our studies of mineral and energy resources."

Top National Ne Ws

White House Defends Trump's Role In Crafting Son's Statement On Meeting With Russian Lawyer.

In the wake of a Washington Post report that said President Trump "dictated" his son's statement regarding his meeting with a Russian lawyer during the 2016 campaign, the White House is described in media reports as defending the President's role in crafting the statement. The tone of the coverage, which includes seven-and-a-half minutes of reporting on Tuesday's network news broadcasts – two of which led with the story – is generally negative, indicating that White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders' claim that the President "weighed in" on the statement contradicts Trump attorney Jay Sekulow's denial that Trump was involved at all. Reports also described her claim that Donald Trump's Jr.'s statement included "no inaccuracy" as misleading.

Bloomberg News (8/1, Pettypiece), for example, reports that Sanders provided "an account that conflicts with assertions made by the president's own lawyer two weeks ago." Asked about a report that Trump "dictated" the statement, Sanders said that Trump "weighed in, as any father would, based on the limited information that he had. ... He certainly didn't dictate. But, you know, he – like I said, he weighed in, offered a suggestion.” Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway made a similar argument on Fox News’ Special Report (8/1), saying, “The President said he weighed in the way any father would on the statement. He wasn’t part of the email chain. He wasn’t part of the meeting, certainly.”

However, the Washington Post (8/1, Phillip) reports that Sanders’ comments “seem to confirm that Trump participated in the drafting of the statement on Air Force One and contradict past statements from Trump’s attorneys denying that he had any involvement.” Sekulow told NBC’s Meet the Press (7/16) on July 16, “The president was not — did not — draft the response. ... The response came from Donald Trump Jr. and — I’m sure — in consultation with his lawyer.” The Los Angeles Times (8/1, Bierman) says Sanders’ “acknowledgment” appeared to “confirm the gist” of the Washington Post story, and “in effect refuted” Sekulow’s comments.

Hallie Jackson said in the lead story for NBC Nightly News (8/1, lead story, 2:40, Holt) that there are “new questions of credibility and contradictions” as Sekulow “sounded definitive” three weeks ago but the White House said Tuesday that Trump “actually was involved.” Jackson added that “the conflicting comments are raising questions about why the President got involved at all, what the special counsel will make of this, and whether the President’s push to control the message is hurting him with his party.” Cecilia Vega said on the lead story for ABC World News Tonight (8/1, lead story, 2:40, Muir) that Trump’s “legal team went on the offensive, saying he had nothing to do with Don Jr.’s original statement,” but Tuesday “we learn[ed] that’s not true” and Trump is “now facing tough questions about whether he intentionally misled the American public.”

USA Today (8/1, Jackson, Johnson) says that although Trump Jr. “released email correspondence showing that he arranged the meeting in the hopes of obtaining potentially damaging information about Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton – even after he was told it would be provided by the Russian government,” Sanders “said ‘the statement that Don Jr. issued is true, there’s no inaccuracy in the statement’ – even though it omitted those facts.”

Reacting to Sanders’ claim that Trump Jr.’s statement was true and contained no inaccuracy, Jake Tapper said on CNN’s The Lead (8/1), “As a citizen, you should expect a much higher standard of truth than the one that the White House press secretary just enunciated. If a meeting takes place so campaign officials can get dirt on a political rival from the Russian government, describing that meeting as being about adoption and not mentioning the purpose of the meeting, it’s not true. It’s inaccurate. It’s so misleading as to be a lie.” Anderson Cooper said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (8/1), “To say Donald Trump, Jr.’s statement was true is just not true. If I said ‘Jaws’ is a movie about going to the beach on the Fourth of July weekend – I guess that is in the movie somewhere, but is that an accurate statement of what ‘Jaws’ is actually about? It has a big gaping hole where the main point is supposed to be. It doesn’t tell the whole story.”

CNN political director David Chalian said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (8/1), “Team Trump took a credibility hit today in the face of Jay Sekulow, and it came from the White House podium. Sarah Huckabee Sanders went out today and basically conceded that the Trump team and his lawyer didn’t have the truth in the initial telling of this.” Gloria Borger said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (8/1), “I think the President has a problem here. I think the statement was misleading at the very best. ... I think there are questions now that will be raised about whether what the President knew and when he knew it to use an old phrase. And did the President lie to his lawyer?”

The Washington Times (8/1, Noble) cites analysts who point to the report that Trump dictated the statement as evidence of his “inclination to take matters into his own hands...causing him unnecessary legal headaches.” The Times says “legal experts” who said that while Trump’s actions, “if true, wouldn’t constitute a crime, they add fuel to the fire of the ongoing special counsel investigation...and give him room to interview additional White House officials about possible coordination between the Trump campaign and Russian efforts to interfere in the presidential election.” Abby Phillip of the Washington Post said on CNN’s The Lead (8/1), “I would suggest that Trump was the person who wanted to pull back from full transparency. You know, our reporting basically states that there were other lawyers and advisers involved who knew that more information would come out that would make a less than fulsome statement seem invasive and like an effort to cover something up. So they wanted to put it out there. The President was the one who overruled them.”

Jonah Goldberg of National Review said on Fox News’ Special Report (8/1) that although “it is not against the law to lie to the press,” it “undermines the credibility of the Administration and it probably wets the whistle of the [special counsel Robert] Mueller investigation in new and interesting ways in part because it shows or it may show a certain state of mind of the President at that time."

Jeff Pegues said on the CBS Evening News (8/1, story 3, 2:15, Mason) that former federal prosecutor Bill Mateja "says the President's involvement in crafting the statement may raise a red flag" for Mueller. Likewise, CNN Justice correspondent Pamela Brown said on CNN's Situation Room (8/1), "It certainly could be problematic," for Trump "because as we previously reported," Mueller "is looking at the obstruction of justice angle of this. Of course, if the President was involved in potentially crafting a misleading statement, what Robert Mueller would want to find out is, was this a cover-up? Was this an obstruction of justice aspect of the investigation?"

Politico (8/1, Dawsey, Gold) publishes the full transcript of President Trump's July 26 Oval Office interview with the Wall Street Journal, during which he "engag[ed] in a familiar back and forth" with editor-in-chief Gerard Baker, who "according to the transcript, asked many of the questions" and who "took the lead byline on the main piece about the interview as well, an unusual step for the editor in chief of a paper with a large White House reporting staff."

Both, the Washington Post (8/1, Phillip) and the New York Post (8/1, Moore) say the White House "defended" Trump, while the AP (8/1, Thomas) describes the White House as "pushing back" on the Washington Post report that the President "dictated" the statement. Reuters (8/1), meanwhile, says the White House said Trump "had a role" in crafting the statement.

Sanders: Media Should Examine Clintons' Ties To Russia. The Washington Times (8/1, Boyer) says Sanders "also blasted the media for being 'obsessed' with the Russia story while ignoring the Clintons' connections to Russia." Breitbart (8/1, Moons) says Sanders "slammed media questions aimed at showing that there were any 'misleading' actions by the Trump campaign or Trump Administration with regards to Russia," saying, "The thing I see misleading is a year's worth of stories that have been fueling a false narrative about this Russia collusion. And a phony scandal based on anonymous sources." She argued, "Look no further than the Clintons," for a ties to Russia, and cited "the $500,000 former President Bill Clinton accepted to give a speech to a Russian bank," as well as "the one-fifth of United States' uranium that then Secretary of State Hillary Clinton allowed to be sold to a Russian firm," whose "investors included Clinton Foundation donors."

Graham, Flake Express Concern About Trump's Role In Crafting Statement. Asked on NBC's Today Show (8/1) about Trump's reported role in crafting the statement, Sen. Lindsey Graham said, "It bothers me a lot. He put his son in jeopardy. Now, we have to wonder about what Don Jr.'s team will tell you about what he actually did. If he didn't know about the e-mail, the statement may have fooled you. If you know about the e-mail with Don Jr. it's a misleading statement." Asked if it appears that "the President himself tried to cover up the truth about that meeting," Graham said, "If that's true, that was a bad decision by the President that will make us ask more questions. If you get caught in a lie, in one thing, it makes it hard to let other stuff go." Sen. Jeff Flake said on CNN's The Lead (8/1), "I would agree with Lindsey in that regard. It's tough to tell people not to look elsewhere if they don't believe that you're giving the full story. But we'll leave it to the committees of jurisdiction."

Correspondent Ryan Nobles said on CNN's Situation Room (8/1) that Senate Intelligence Committee ranking Democrat Mark Warner told him that "if the President played any role in crafting a statement that turned out to be purposely misleading, it is a serious problem." Sen. Chris Murphy said on CNN's Situation Room (8/1) that it is "hard to keep track of this ever-widening web of lies," adding that the White House "for a very long time" has gone to "great lengths to try to cover...up" contacts between "the highest levels of the [Trump] campaign and the Russian government."

Sen. Jim Risch was more reserved in his comments, repeatedly saying on CNN's Situation Room (8/1) that he wants to let the investigations play out before he makes any judgment.

Kushner: Trump Campaign Too Dysfunctional, Disorganized To Collude With Russia. The AP (8/1, Lardner) reports that in remarks to a group of congressional interns Monday, Jared Kushner said that "the Trump campaign couldn't have colluded with Russia because the team was too dysfunctional and disorganized to coordinate with a foreign government." According to ForeignPolicy.com, in response to a question about the Mueller investigation, Kushner said, "They thought we colluded, but we couldn't even collude with our local offices."

Conway also argued (8/1) that "if she needed harmful information about...Clinton, she would turn to Clinton rather than Russia," The Hill (8/1, Shelbourne) reports. Conway said, "Look, I was the campaign manager for the winning part of the campaign and if I needed negative information about Hillary Clinton, I look no further than Hillary Clinton. ... You certainly didn't need to go to Moscow. You could just see what she was saying everyday. No optimistic economic message for America.”

Citing Friendship With Comey, Franks Says Mueller Must Resign. Rep. Trent Franks, a member of the House Judiciary Committee, called Tuesday for Mueller to resign, citing his friendship with former FBI Director Comey, the Washington Times (7/31, Noble) reports. Franks argued that the friendship should make Mueller ineligible to lead the investigation, saying in a statement, “Those who worked under them have attested he and Jim Comey possess a close friendship, and they have delivered on-the-record statements effusing praise of one another.” The Daily Caller (8/1) reports that Franks’ statement said that Mueller is “in ‘clear violation’ of federal law prohibiting a special counsel from having a conflict of interest.” Franks said, “No one knows Mr. Mueller’s true intentions, but neither can anyone dispute that he now clearly appears to be a partisan arbiter of justice. Accordingly, the law is also explicitly clear: he must step down based on this conflict of interest.”

The Washington Post (8/1, Demirjian) says Franks’ comments follow a similar call from freshman Rep. Andy Biggs. The Post adds that the lawmakers’ arguments are “largely an echo of complaints Trump himself has made about Mueller as he also downplays the seriousness or merit of the Russia probe.”

Congressional Probe Of Wasserman Schultz Aides Advancing. The Washington Free Beacon (8/1, Kredo) reports that a congressional investigation “into a growing scandal surrounding IT staffers working for Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D., Fla.), who are accused of stealing sensitive computer equipment from House lawmakers’ offices,” is moving forward, “according to senior congressional sources who told the Washington Free Beacon the Democratic leader’s refusal to answer questions could ‘merit resignation.’” Congressional leaders have “requested a formal briefing by Capitol Police into its investigation of several Pakistani House IT staffers,” one of whom, Imran Awan, “was arrested this week when trying to travel to Pakistan and charged with bank fraud after a months-long investigation that found he wired nearly $300,000 to that country.” The Free Beacon cites “multiple sources” who said the “leading members of Congress are growing frustrated with the pace of the criminal investigation and have moved to conduct their own independent probe into the scandal.”

Citing the Free Beacon story, the Daily Caller (8/1, Hasson) reports that Rep. Ron Desantis called the “growing IT scandal” one of “the all-time congressional scandals in the last 30 years.” Desantis, who chairs the national security subcommittee of the House Oversight Committee, said, “I’m pushing very hard to get a full briefing from Capitol Police as soon as possible. ... There’s clearly criminal elements to this and I think there will be more going on. There’s probably going to be ethics issues on why these [taxpayer] funds were spent that [Wasserman Schultz] and others will have to deal with.”

Lawsuit Claims White House Role In Fox News Story On Murdered DNC Aide. ABC World News Tonight (8/1, story 7, 3:35, Muir) reported that a new lawsuit makes a “bombshell accusation” that “the White House worked with Fox News to spread a false story about a Democratic staffer who was murdered.” The AP (8/1, Bauder, Colvin) says that the lawsuit filed Tuesday by investigator Rod Wheeler, “lays out an explosive tale of Trump allies, the White House and Fox News Channel conspiring to push a false story about Democratic leaks and an unsolved killing in order to distract attention from the Russia investigation that has been swirling around the president.” Wheeler, “who had been looking into the killing of Seth Rich, a former Democratic National Committee staff member killed in 2016 in what police say was a botched robbery,” alleges in the suit that “Fox quoted him as saying things he never said and was willing to show President Donald Trump its story before it was posted online.”

The Washington Post (8/1, Bump) cites an NPR report which said that Wheeler’s suit “makes a remarkable claim: The Trump White House — or President Trump personally — may have been aware of or involved” in the now-discredited Fox News story. The CBS Evening News (8/1, story 4, 2:25, Mason) reports that the lawsuit says Trump’s goal “was to help lift the cloud of the Russia investigation.” The New York Times (8/1, Steel) reports that according to Wheeler’s suit, “the network fabricated quotations from him in an article about Mr. Rich on FoxNews.com.” He “states that the network was aware that he had not said the statements yet it published them ‘with reckless disregard for their truth.’” Wheeler “asserts that he was a pawn in a broader plan by the White House, a Trump supporter named Ed Butowsky and Fox News to ‘shift the blame from Russia and help put to bed speculation that President Trump colluded with Russia in an attempt to influence the outcome of the presidential election.’”

Politico (8/1, Conway) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders denied the allegations, telling reporters, “The president had no knowledge of the story, and it’s completely untrue that he or the White House [had] involvement in the story. ... Beyond that, this is ongoing litigation, and I would refer you to the actual parties involved, which aren't the White House." USA Today (8/1, Snider) reports that Fox News president Jay Wallace said in a statement, "The accusation that FoxNews.com published Malia Zimmerman's story to help detract from coverage of the Russia collusion issue is completely erroneous. The retraction of this story is still being investigated internally and we have no evidence that Rod Wheeler was misquoted by Zimmerman."

Margaret Sullivan writes in her Washington Post (8/1) column that due to "Wheeler's mutating role throughout this ugly saga, he cannot be considered a reliable narrator," and "you can't believe everything his suit says." But "some of it is now undeniable: An outrageously bogus news story was known about, and apparently not discouraged, within the West Wing well before it was published. And once it was published, it become endless fodder for the president's staunchest defenders." Sullivan argues that the White House may have "cheered on" one of "the ugliest falsehoods of the current political era," and "at the very least" it gave "tacit approval. And that's bad enough."

North Korean Hackers Sought To Breach Hillary Clinton's Campaign. CyberScoop (8/1) reports that North Korean hackers, as part of a cyber-espionage campaign against Hillary Clinton's campaign, "compromised email accounts belonging to individuals involved with an East Asia-focused foreign policy advisory group." According to "multiple people familiar with the incident told CyberScoop," the North Koreans were seeking "policy documents and other relevant information that may have affected the regime if Clinton were to become president." They "were able to break into the email accounts of employees of at least one prominent D.C.-based think tank." Some of these individuals were sometimes in communication with the Hillary for America campaign, and the hackers "used their access to apparently draft convincing spearphishing emails that were then sent to other associates of the campaign." CyberScoop adds that no internal Clinton campaign email accounts "were breached as part of this specific North Korean phishing activity, according to multiple people familiar with the matter."

Senate Confirms Wray As FBI Director In 92-5 Vote.

The Senate voted 92-5 Tuesday to confirm Christopher Wray as FBI Director. Coverage of Wray's confirmation is generally similar across media outlets, describing the vote as overwhelming, and highlighting that Wray said during his confirmation that he does not regard special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation as a "witch hunt" and that he would resign if the President were to ask him to do anything unethical or illegal.

Lester Holt said on NBC Nightly News (8/1, story 4, 0:25) that Wray "takes over the bureau following President Trump's abrupt firing of James Comey, who was leading the investigation into possible connections between the Trump campaign and Russia during the 2016 election." Similarly, Anthony Mason said in a brief report on the CBS Evening News (8/1, story 2, 0:15) that Wray succeeds Comey, "who was fired by President Trump because of the Russia investigation."

The New York Times (8/1, Goldman), Politico (8/1, Kim), and the AP (8/1, Cassata) say the Senate "overwhelmingly" confirmed Wray, while the Los Angeles Times (8/1, Mascaro) calls the vote "a reflection of the Senate's confidence in Wray's credentials as a Yale-educated former Justice Department official and as a top cop who vowed to maintain the bureau's independence, resisting interference even from the president."

USA Today (8/1, Kelly) reports that senators from both sides of the aisle "said they were impressed that Wray testified that he did not consider Mueller's investigation to be 'a witch hunt,' as Trump has described it." Cecilia Vega reported on ABC World News Tonight (8/1, story 2, 0:35, Muir) that during his confirmation hearing, Wray testified that "he would resign if he was ever asked by President Trump to do any unethical or illegal." Reuters (8/1, Ainsley), the Washington Times (8/1, Noble), the New York Post (8/1, Fredericks), the Washington Post (8/1, Demirjian), The Hill (8/1, Carney), the Washington Examiner (8/1, Cohen), and the Wall Street Journal (8/1, Viswanatha, Wilber) also report on Wray's confirmation.

WPost A1: Congress May Not Be Able To Act On Trump Tax Cuts This Year.

The Washington Post (8/1, A1, Paletta, Snell) reports on its front page, "The White House's push to quickly pass a major package of tax cuts through Congress is facing a fall calendar full of legislative land mines, potentially delaying a key part of President Trump's agenda into at least 2018." The President touted the proposal Tuesday, but congressional GOP leaders face deadlines on the budget and debt ceiling that must take precedence.

Trump Seeks Corporate Tax Cut, Touts Corporate Profits. Reuters (8/1, Morgan) reports that President Trump in Tuesday issued “a Twitter message bragging about corporate America’s high profits under his presidency,” leading “critics to say he was undercutting Republican arguments in favor of a tax cut for corporations.” Trump is quoted as tweeting, “Corporations have NEVER made as much money as they are making now.” Reuters adds that Trump’s “tweet ‘takes the edge of urgency off the plea to reduce the burden on corporations,’ said William Galston, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution think tank.” And in response to Trump’s tweet, Sen. Brian Schatz (D-HI) said on Twitter, “This is a weird way to launch their proposal to cut corporate taxes.”

McConnell Says GOP Will Use Reconciliation For Tax Code Overhaul.

Politico (8/1, Schor) reports, “Senate Republicans are sticking to their plans to pass a tax bill with 50 Republican votes, despite Democratic pleas not to be sidelined as they were” on healthcare reform. On Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader McConnell “reaffirmed the GOP’s long-standing intention to shield any tax overhaul from a likely Democratic filibuster” by using the reconciliation process.

The Washington Times (8/1, Sherfinski) reports that McConnell told reporters, “We will need to use reconciliation, because we have been informed by a majority of the Democrats in a letter I just received today that most of the principles that would get the country growing again – they’re not interested in addressing. So I don’t think this is going to be 1986, when you had a bipartisan effort to scrub the code.”

Democrats Seek Bipartisan Talks. The Washington Post (8/1, Snell, Paletta) reports that 45 of the 48 members of the Democratic caucus signed a letter calling for bipartisan talks “amid growing pressure from the White House for Republicans to implement aggressive tax cuts before year’s end.” The three who did not sign – Sens. Joe Donnelly, Heidi Heitkamp, and Joe Manchin – are centrists facing “difficult reelection prospects” in states that President Trump won by large margins.

The New York Times (8/1, Rappeport) says bipartisanship “will not come easy.” Democrats “are insisting that changes to tax laws not increase the tax burden on the middle class and that the wealthiest 1 percent of taxpayers not see their tax bills shrink,” and also insist that the GOP return to regular order and not use reconciliation.

“Conservative And Business-Aligned” Groups To Press For Tax Reform. Politico (8/1, Cook) reports that “conservative and business-aligned advocacy groups” including the American Action Network, Americans For Prosperity, and the Business Roundtable “plan to spend millions of dollars boosting tax reform in August, part of a coordinated effort with the White House and lawmakers to avoid the mistakes made during the bruising attempt to repeal” the Affordable Care Act. Advertising “will focus on how tax reform will hit consumers’ pocketbooks, boost American jobs and help economic growth broadly, not on the benefits for the big businesses helping to fund the campaign.”

Mnuchin’s Debt Ceiling Talks With McConnell And Schumer Make No Progress.

The Washington Post (8/1, Paletta) reports that debt ceiling talks between Treasury Secretary Mnuchin, Senate Majority Leader McConnell, and Senate Minority Leader Schumer “broke up Tuesday with no progress.” USA Today (8/1, Kelly) reports that Mnuchin “has warned congressional leaders that the government will run out of money to pay its bills by Sept. 29 unless lawmakers vote to raise the debt limit.” The House and Senate are scheduled for just 12 working days between now and then. Reuters (8/1) reports that McConnell said senators “‘are looking for a way forward’ to pass a debt limit increase sometime in the next month or so.”

Politico (8/1, Bresnahan, Kim) reports that Mnuchin is seeking a clean debt ceiling increase, but “conservative Republicans frequently tried to use the debt ceiling increase during the Obama era to push for other spending cuts,” and “a number of House Democrats are uneasy on voting to increase the debt ceiling at the same time that Republicans will be trying to push through a tax cut package.”

The Washington Post (8/1) says in an editorial that while Mnuchin has been “sensible” about the debt ceiling, he “is getting no help” from OMB Director Mulvaney, “who hails from the wing of the GOP that believes in playing political games with this issue.” The Post calls on Chief of Staff Kelly to bring “everyone in the administration into line, starting with the man at the top, behind Mr. Mnuchin’s position.”

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Whose Message To Believe On Russia?" The New York Times (8/2, Board) says in an editorial that Vice President Pence "has been delivering a remarkably consistent message on a trip to Eastern Europe this week," but his sentiments have not been "eagerly embraced and celebrated by" President Trump. The Times says Pence's "blunt analysis of the problem and robust alliance commitments reflect fairly traditional American thinking on Russia," and most Administration security officials similarly "view Russia as a leading adversary." For the US "to have any real hope of managing this complex and delicate relationship" with Russia, the Times concludes, the President "will have to put together a firm, consistent and credible approach that can persuade Mr. Putin, the allies and Americans that he knows what he is doing and that his team is on the same page."

"Cubs Fan Gets A Ring, And Forgiveness." A New York Times (8/1, Board) editorial discusses the "reconciliation between the Chicago Cubs and Steve Bartman," a fan who may have prevented the team from breaking its World Series losing streak when he "reached for a foul ball at Wrigley Field and thus possibly prevented his team's left fielder from catching it for a crucial out."

Washington Post.

"Time For The Trump Administration To Speak With One voice On The Debt Limit." The Washington Post (8/1) says in an editorial that while Treasury Secretary Mnuchin has been "sensible" about the debt ceiling, he "is getting no help" from OMS Director Mulvaney, "who hails from the wing of the GOP that believes in playing political games with this issue." The Post calls on Chief of Staff Kelly to bring "everyone in the administration into line, starting with the man at the top, behind Mr. Mnuchin's position."

"How America Can Honor A Chinese Dissident – And Help Protect His Widow." A Washington Post (8/1) editorial commends Sen. Ted Cruz for introducing "a bill to rename the street in front of the Chinese Embassy 'Liu Xiaobo Plaza'" in honor of the late dissident. The Post argues that the move "would not only be a tribute to his life and achievements but also tell Beijing that its crackdown on human rights has not gone unnoticed," specifically in the case of Liu Xia, Liu's widow, who "has been kept under house arrest by the Chinese government though she has never been charged with a crime."

"Sobering News For $15 Minimum-Wage Boosters." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/1) writes that the results of Montgomery County Executive Isiah Leggett's request for an objective economic study to be conducted on the consequences of raising the county's minimum wage to $15 show the importance of evidence-based policymaking, as opposed to legislation based upon popular approval. The Post argues that the study, which showed that the minimum wage hike would cost 47,000 jobs, should give minimum wage supporters pause, and concludes that "$15-an-hour advocates owe the new report...a respectful response."

Wall Street Journal.

"ObamaCare For Congress." The Wall Street Journal (8/1) says in an editorial that getting rid of the ACA's dispensation for members of Congress and congressional staff would force legislators to live under the same law as everyone else, which might make them more willing to fix it.

"A Trump Card In Ukraine." A Wall Street Journal (8/1) editorial urges the President to approve a plan from the Pentagon and State Department to supply Ukraine with arms, arguing that it would send a message to Russian President Vladimir Putin that he wants to negotiate from a position of strength. The Journal argues that it could also help the US position in Syria, where Russia is seeking to gain a foothold.

"The Body Count At The Border." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/1) highlights the rising death rate along the US-Mexico border even as the number of apprehensions of attempted illegal crossers declines. The number of deaths rose by about 80 percent between 1999 and 2012, while apprehensions were down by more than 75 percent during the same period. The Journal says this will continue until the US reforms its immigration system.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Some Insurers Seek ACA Premium Increases Of 30% And Higher
Inside Goldman's Struggle To Climb Out Of Last Place In Trading
VW's CEO Knows The Future Is Electric—His Company Isn't So Sure
Apple Sales Rise On Revived iPad, Mac Sales

New York Times:

Justice Dept. To Take On Affirmative Action In College Admissions
Trump Loyalist Mixes Businesses And Access At 'Advisory' Firm
Republicans In Congress Bypass Trump To Shore Up Health Law
Jailings Raise Fears Of Dictatorship In Venezuela
Decades Of Questions Get Chilling Answer: He Was John Wayne Gacy's Victim

Washington Post:

In Libya, Fear That The Worst Is Yet To Come
GOP Tax Package May Be Delayed
Opposition Leaders Seized In Venezuela
Low Supplies, Price Spikes Limit Cost Savings Of Generic Drugs
In Minn., A Different Police Shooting
Senate GOP's Frustrations With Trump Bubbling Up

Washington Times:

Trump Seeks Credit As Stock Market Soars, Economy Strengthens
As Homeland Security Secretary, Kelly Waived Dozens Of Laws To Allow For Trump's Border Wall
Retired Generals, Admirals Thank Trump For Announcing Ban On Transgender Troops
Republican Incumbents In Swing Districts Try To Find Right Distance From Trump
Atheists In Muslim World: Silent, Resentful And Growing In Number

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Trump-Don Jr Russia Meeting; New FBI Director; California-Officers Shot; Baltimore-Police Bodycam; North Korea-Missile Test; New Russia Sanctions; WH-False Democratic Staffer Story; Princess Diana-Personal Video; Wall Street-New High; Maryland-Mystery Vacationer Death; Lightning Struck Man; Severe Weather; Joshua Tree National Park-Missing Couple; Sleep-Health; Teacher's Wedding.

CBS: Wall Street-New High; New FBI Director; Trump-Don Jr Russia Meeting; WH-False Democratic Staffer Story; Missouri-Jim Crow Bill; North Korea-Missile Test; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Teen Drivers-Risks; Cyber Bullying; Severe Weather; Shark Week; Apollo Mission Control Preservation.

NBC: Trump-Don Jr Russia Meeting; New Russia Sanctions; Trump-Police Violence Comment; New FBI Director; Tillerson-State Dept Briefing; Hot Car-Child Deaths; Cyber Bullying; Venezuela-Political Turmoil; Wall Street-New High; Implanted Employee ID; Sleep-Health; Police-Community Outreach; Board Game Sales Increase; Airplane Passenger Kindness.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Don Jr Russia Meeting – 7 minutes, 35 seconds
WH-False Democratic Staffer Story – 6 minutes
Wall Street-New High – 3 minutes
North Korea-Missile Test – 2 minutes, 20 seconds
Venezuela-Political Turmoil – 2 minutes, 15 seconds
Severe Weather – 1 minute, 55 seconds
New FBI Director – 1 minutes, 15 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: New Russia Sanctions; Trump-Don Jr Russia Meeting; California Bus Crash Trial; Aircraft Passenger Jumps Out; Wall Street News.

CBS: Tax Reform Plan; New FBI Director; Wall Street-New High; North Carolina Islands Outages; Severe Weather.

FOX: New FBI Director; Congressman-Special Counsel Resign Call; Sessions-Gov Leaks; Tax Reform Plan.

NPR: New FBI Director; Gov Housing Program-Accountability; WH-False Democratic Staffer Story; New Russia Sanctions.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Makes an announcement with Senator Tom Cotton and Senator David Perdue; meets with Senator Rob Portman.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a meeting with Prime Minister Duško Markovic of Montenegro; delivers remarks at the Adriatic Charter Summit; participates in formal greetings with leaders from across the Western Balkans at the Adriatic Charter Summit.

US Senate: 10:00 AM Senate Public Works Committee on FBI HQ consolidation project – Hearing on 'FBI Headquarters Consolidation Project – What Happened and What's Next', with testimony from General Services Administration Public Buildings Service Acting Commissioner Michael Gelber; FBI Finance Division Assistant Director/CFO Richard Haley II; and Government Accountability Office Physical Infrastructure Team Director David Wise * GSA was originally looking to exchange the J. Edgar Hoover Building in Washington, DC, for a new facility that could accommodate FBI headquarters operations and allow it to consolidate into one location. However, last month, the GSA and FBI canceled the procurement, citing 'an $882 million funding gap' while saying the cancelation 'does not lessen the need for a new FBI headquarters' and that they would 'continue to work together to address the space requirements of the FBI' Location: Rm 406, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg, Washington, DC <http://epw.senate.gov/public/>

10:00 AM Senate Commerce, Science, & Transportation Committee Executive Session – Executive Session, to consider legislation including 'S. 374, Concrete Masonry Products Research, Education, and Promotion Act of 2017', 'S. 1322, American Fisheries Advisory Committee Act', 'S. 1536, Combating Human Trafficking in Commercial Vehicles Act', and nominations of Ajit Varadaraj Pai (reappointment), Jessica Rosenworcel (reappointment), and Brendan Carr to be Federal Communications Commission members, David Redl to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Communications and Information, Peter Davidson to be Department of Commerce General Counsel, Karen Dunn Kelley to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Economic Affairs, Elizabeth Erin Walsh to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce and U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service Director General, Steven Gill Bradbury to be Department of Transportation General Counsel, Mark Buzby to be Maritime Administration Administrator, Ronald Batory to be Federal Railroad Administration Administrator, and Robert Sumwalt III to be National Transportation Safety Board Chairman Location: Hart Senate Office Building, Rm 216, Washington, DC <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>

10:00 AM Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on U.S.-Colombia relations, nominations hearing – Western Hemisphere, Transnational Crime, Civilian Security, Democracy, Human Rights, and Global Women's Issues Subcommittee hearing on 'Assessing the Colombia Peace Process: The Way Forward in U.S.-Colombia Relations', with testimony from Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs William Brownfield, and Acting Assistant Secretary for Western Hemisphere Affairs Francisco Palmieri; former USAID Acting Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean Jose Cardenas; and The Cohen Group Associate Vice President Juan Gonzalez * Immediately followed by nominations hearing, considering Doug Manchester to be U.S. Ambassador to the Bahamas Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 419, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

10:00 AM Senate Natural Resources subcommittee hearing on water security and drought preparedness – Water and Power Subcommittee hearing on increasing water security and drought preparedness through infrastructure, management, and innovation, with testimony from Arizona Department of Water Resources Director Tom Buschatzke; GE Power – Water & Process Technologies President and CEO Heiner Markhoff; Poseidon Water President and CEO Carlos Riva; University of Southern Maine New England Environmental Finance Center Director Martha Sheils; and Sonoma County Water Agency Chairwoman of the Board Shirlee Zane Location: Dirksen Senate Office Building, Rm 366, Washington, DC www.energy.senate.gov

2:00 PM Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis brief Senate Foreign Relations Committee on AUMF – Closed / Top Secret briefing on 'The Authorizations for the Use of Military Force: Administration Perspective', given by Secretary of State Rex Tillerson; and Secretary of Defense James Mattis Location: U.S. Capitol, SVC-217, Washington, DC <http://foreign.senate.gov/>

Senate Small Business and Entrepreneurship Committee Business Meeting – Business Meeting, to consider 'S. 154, Small Business Relief from Disease Induced Economic Hardship Act', 'S. 650, Support Small Business R&D Act of 2017', 'S. 690, HUBZone Investment Protection Act', 'S. 929, Invest in Rural Small Business Act of 2017', 'S. 1038, A bill to require the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to submit to Congress a report on the utilization of small businesses with respect to certain Federal contracts', and 'S. 1428, Small Business Cyber Training Act of 2017' Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://sbc.senate.gov/>

Senate HELP Committee Executive Session – Executive Session, to consider nominations of Dr Jerome Adams to be Surgeon General; Dr Brett Giroir to be Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Health; Dr Robert Kadlec to be Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Preparedness and Response; Dr Elinore McCance-Katz to be Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Mental Health and Substance Use; Lance Robertson to be Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Aging; Patrick Pizzella to be Deputy Secretary of Labor; and Heather MacDougall and James Sullivan to be OSHRC members Location: U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC <http://help.senate.gov/>

US House: On recess until 5 September.

Other: 8:30 AM Department of the Treasury quarterly refunding announcement – Department of the Treasury makes quarterly refunding announcement, outlining its funding needs for the next two quarters, including which securities will be offered and the dates of their announcement, auction, and settlement Location: TBD <http://www.treasury.gov/resource-center/data-chart-center/quarterly-refunding/Pages/default.aspx> <https://twitter.com/USTreasury>

10:00 AM Democratic Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton hosts annual Job Fair Location: Walter E. Washington Convention Center, 801 Mount Vernon PI NW, Washington, DC www.norton.house.gov <https://twitter.com/EleanorNorton>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "We have the Olympics in 2028. Only 11 more years, and then volleyball. I feel like between climate change and Kim Jong-Un, it's optimistic to think we'll still have a Los Angeles in 2028. But if we do, game's on."

Stephen Colbert: "For Donald Trump, it's been a rough couple of, his entire presidency."

Stephen Colbert: "Last night, we found out that President Trump dictated his son's misleading statement. He dictated it. It's official, Donald Trump is a dictator."

Trevor Noah: "Fun fact for you, the last time the Olympics were held in LA was in 1984. That was at the height of the Cold War, and Russia boycotted those games. Good news, it may happen again."

Trevor Noah: "Not only did the sanctions pass the Senate by 98 to 2, in the House the vote was 419 to 3. That is insane. Everyone in Congress went up against Russia like it was Ted Cruz."

Jimmy Fallon: "Well, yesterday was White House Chief of Staff John Kelly's first day on the job. It got awkward when he showed up and said, 'Why are you writing my name on the door in dry erase marker?'"

Jimmy Fallon: "As of today, 12 top government or White House officials have been fired or resigned since Trump took office. And Trump was like, 'Just five more eliminations until I announce the winner.'"

Seth Meyers: "After President Trump removed White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci yesterday, he tweeted, 'Great day at the White House.' Coincidentally, a great day at the White House is the average length of employment there."

Seth Meyers: "Former White House Communications Director Anthony Scaramucci was reportedly seen yesterday, eating dinner at the Trump Hotel after being removed from his position. And apparently he was very rude to the waiter."

Seth Meyers: "According to Foreign Policy Magazine, President Trump's son-in-law and adviser Jared Kushner told a group of congressional interns that Trump's campaign was too disorganized to collude with Russia. Said the interns, 'We're a tour group.'"

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, August 9, 2017
Date: Wednesday, August 09, 2017 7:32:28 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- St. George (UT) Spectrum: Uncertainty As National Monument Review Deadline Nears.
- U.S. News & World Report: Sage Grouse Conservation Changes Praised, Provoke Alarm.
- CBS: Scientist Claims Administration Punishing Him For Speaking Out About Climate Change.
- Skagit Valley (WA) Herald: County Opposes Bringing Grizzlies Into North Cascades.
- Montana Public Radio: Additional Coverage: Trump Administration Repeals Obama-Era Coal Royalty Reform.
- Williamson (WV) Daily News: Additional Coverage: Officials Applaud Mine Proposal To Create Jobs In WV.

- Washington Times: Don't Do It, Donald Trump.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribes Want Dakota Pipeline Shut, But Offer Fallback Plan.
- BIA And Oconaluftee Job Corps Strengthen Partnership.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Commentary: Slaughtering Wild Horses Would Be Simplistic And Cruel.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- North Carolina Residents Can Let The Government Know How They Feel About Drilling In The Atlantic Ocean.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Miami Herald: Fed Probe Of Shark-dragging Suspect Closed Last Year.
- Niagara (NY) Gazette: Pipeline Won't Impact Animals.
- Staunton (VA) News Leader: Meeting On South River Projects From DuPont Deal Scheduled In Verona.
- Washington Post: Environmentalists Are Urging The USDA To Reject This Genetically Engineered Eucalyptus Tree.
- Chicago Tribune: A Smart Reprieve For Great Lakes Wolves.
- Santa Maria (CA) Times: Our View: An Old Debate Rekindled.

National Park Service

- KPTV-TV Portland (OR): Free Entry To National Parks For Fourth Graders Kicks Off In September.
- Chattanooga (TN): Chickamauga And Chattanooga National Military Park Receives Centennial Challenge Funds From Friends Of Moccasin Bend.
- Roanoke (VA) Times: Parkway Receives $750K For Deferred Maintenance Projects.
- Florida Times-Union: Cumberland Island To Get America The Beautiful Quarter In August 2018.
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Acadia National Park To Create Road Checkpoints To Reduce Impaired Driving.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Reuters: After Trump Warning Of "Fire And Fury," North Korea Threatens Strike On Guam.
- Pacific (GUM) Daily News: Interior Grants Funds To Micronesian Resource Center.
- The Hill: Trump Visits FEMA For Briefing On Hurricane Preparations.
- Guam Daily Post: Governor: Guam Not Falling Off Financial Cliff.

Top National News

- NBC: Media Analyses: Trump Offers No Specifics On Tackling Opioid Addiction Crisis.
- ABC: White House Blasts NYTimes For Publishing Leaked Climate Change Report.
- Bloomberg News: US Job Openings Reached Record Level In June.
- Reuters: Cole, Walker Voice Opposition To "Clean" Debt Ceiling Increase.
- Wall Street Journal: Tax Overhaul Debate Focused On Who Bears Greatest Burden From Corporate Taxes.
- Washington Times: Study: Trump's Regulation Reductions Have Saved Businesses Billions.
- USA Today: EPA Report: Environmental Regulations Do Not Stifle Economic Growth.
- New York Times: Government Spending On Transportation, Infrastructure "In Decline."

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Needed: Proposals To Fix New York's Crumbling Subways."
 - "Frustration Over A War And Its Crimes."
- Washington Post.
 - "This Is How Bad Things Could Get If Trump Denies The Reality Of Climate Change."
 - "Trump's 'Fire And Fury' Threat Is A Rhetorical Grenade."
 - "Maryland Is Mired In A Medical Marijuana Morass."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Google's Diversity Problems."
 - "McMaster And The Commander."

- "Would You Like A Job?"

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Uncertainty As National Monument Review Deadline Nears.

The St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (8/8, DeMille) reports that "two weeks ahead of a Trump administration deadline to complete a review of 27 national monuments, including Utah's Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante, the status remains uncertain for most of them." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has "already issued a preliminary recommendation to shrink the Bears Ears monument, and over the course of the past several weeks he has said that five others should remain monuments and go untouched." However, "the details behind what might happen at Bears Ears and the fate of the 21 other monuments remain a question mark."

Public-Lands Group Targets Zinke With $1.4M Ad Buy Urging Monument Protection. KXLH-TV Helena, MT (8/8, Dennison) reports that "p public lands group has launched a $1.4 million ad campaign in Montana, targeting U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, urging him to recommend no changes in two dozen national monuments." According to the article, "the sizable TV, radio and online ad campaign from Missoula-based Backcountry Hunters and Anglers, launched last week, is solely in Montana – home to the Interior secretary and former Montana congressman." The group's conservation director, John Gale, said, "We felt it was pretty important to put a bunch of resources specifically into this campaign, in order to try to influence a beneficial outcome for national monuments. It's our hope that this ad campaign ... yields having these wonderful wild places left alone, as they are."

Additional coverage was provided by KPAX-TV Missoula, MT (8/8, Dennison) and KTVH-TV Helena, MT (8/8, Dennison).

Businesses Plan Discussions On National Monuments. The Great Falls \(MT\) Tribune (8/8) reports that "business owners from California, Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah and Montana will host discussions in Great Falls and Helena on Wednesday on the Interior Department review of national monuments." The discussions to be "held in Helena and Great Falls will feature an overview of the Western outdoor economy and a panel discussion from regional business leaders." The purpose is "to highlight impacts western businesses say they would face if national monument protections are changed, said Business for Montana's Outdoors and the Colorado Outdoor Business Alliance, which are hosting the talks."

Mesquite Water Official Airs Concern Over Gold Butte Springs. The AP (8/8) reports that "a water official in the Nevada community of Mesquite says he expressed concerns to U.S. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke about municipal springs now within the boundaries of Gold Butte National Monument." Virgin Valley Water District Kevin Brown said "he expressed the concern during a 10-minute meeting with Zinke on July 30."

San Bernardino Rep Asks Trump To Shrink San Gabriel Mountains National Monument, Citing Ski Resort And Mining. The San Gabriel Valley \(CA\) Tribune (8/8, Scauzillo) reports that Rep. Paul Cook is calling on the Trump Administration "to shrink the boundaries of the San Gabriel Mountains National Monument, causing anxiety among some of the monument's ardent supporters." Cook wants "to remove 4,873-acre portion jutting into the San Bernardino National Forest." In a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on June 8, Cook wrote, "The inclusion of 4,873 acres of non-wilderness Forest Service land was widely opposed by local residents due to its encroachment on local communities and economic activity."

Sage Grouse Conservation Changes Praised, Provoke Alarm.

The AP (8/8, Gruver, Brown) reports that the Trump Administration has "opened the door to industry-friendly changes to a sweeping plan imposed by his predecessor to protect a ground-dwelling bird across vast areas of the West." Representatives of the ranching and energy industries lauded "the policy shift as needed to give states flexibility." However, wildlife advocates are concerned “that the proposed changes would undercut a hard-won struggle to protect the greater sage grouse.”

In an editorial, the Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/9) notes that the “objections” from environmental groups “seem more focused on resource development than the actual fate of the sage grouse.” According to the paper, “that’s because the chicken-like bird is in fact a proxy through which green extremists hope to advance their quest to fence off vast swaths of the West’s public lands.” The editorial praises Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s announcement for “providing a modicum of regulatory relief while giving Nevada and other states a bit more flexibility to develop their own approaches to sage grouse management.”

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by USA Today (8/8, Ap), the San Francisco \(CA\) Chronicle (8/8, GRUVER, BROWN), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/9, Gruver, Brown), the Boston \(MA\) Herald (8/8), the Denver \(CO\) Post (8/8, Gruver, Brown), Fox Business (8/8, Gruver, Brown), the Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/8, Gruver, Brown), the Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (8/8, Gruver, Brown), the Belleville \(IL\) News-Democrat (8/8, Gruver, Brown), the Scottsbluff \(NE\) Star-Herald (8/8, Gruver, Brown), KTAR-FM Glendale \(AZ\) Glendale, AZ (8/8), and KTVH-TV Helena \(MT\) Helena, MT (8/8, Gruver, Brown).

Additional coverage was provided by the Daily Caller (8/8, Pearce), the Christian Science Monitor (8/8, Gruver, Brown), the Portland \(OR\) Business Journal (8/8, Danko), CBS News (8/9), Fox Business (8/8, Daly), My Central Oregon (8/8), Yahoo! News (8/8), KHOU-TV Houston \(TX\) Houston (8/8), and KKOH-AM Reno \(NV\) Reno, NV (8/8).

Scientist Claims Administration Punishing Him For Speaking Out About Climate Change.

Chip Reid of the CBS Evening News (8/8, story 5, 2:30, Mason) reported on an interview with US Interior Department scientist Joel Clement about “what happens to a government scientist who speaks up about” climate change. For the past seven years, Clement has been working in Alaskan villages that “are literally melting into the Arctic Ocean.” Clement addressed the issue last month at the UN, and six days later, “he was one of about 50 department employees who were assigned to new jobs.” Clement has filed a whistleblower complaint, saying, “I believe that the Trump Administration is retaliating against me for disclosing these risks to these Alaskan native villages.”

Additional coverage was provided by CBS News (8/8).

County Opposes Bringing Grizzlies Into North Cascades.

The Skagit Valley \(WA\) Herald (8/8, Stone) reports that the Board of Skagit County Commissioners “agreed Monday to recommend against reintroducing grizzly bears into the North Cascades, citing public safety concerns.” A letter, sent jointly by Chelan, Okanogan and Skagit counties to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, “reiterates concerns that bringing 200 bears into the 6-million-acre region would harm the safety and welfare of residents.” However, “many of the commenters at Monday’s crowded public meeting disagreed, saying their experience with nature doesn’t mesh with the way the bears have been portrayed by the county and the American Stewards of Liberty.”

Additional Coverage: Trump Administration Repeals Obama-Era Coal Royalty Reform.

Additional coverage that the Trump Administration is “repealing an Obama-era rule that forced energy companies to pay more royalties on fossil fuels” was provided by Montana Public Radio (8/8, Hegyi), the Alaska Native News (8/8), the Casper \(WY\) Star-Tribune (8/8, Richards), and KAML-FM Gillette \(WY\) Gillette, WY (8/8).

Additional Coverage: Officials Applaud Mine Proposal To Create Jobs In WV.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “last week applauded the initial construction of the Berwind Mine located on the border of West Virginia and Virginia” was provided by the Williamson \(WV\) Daily News (8/9).

Don’t Do It, Donald Trump.

In her column for the Washington Times (8/8, Simmons), Deborah Simmons opposes giving “the D.C. government control of RFK Stadium land and the D.C. Armory land,” as well as the adjacent park land. She argues that “federal park land shouldn’t simply be plopped into the hands of the D.C. government.” Simmons urges the Trump Administration to “not view the proposed land swaps and transfers through lenses that block the periphery.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribes Want Dakota Pipeline Shut, But Offer Fallback Plan.

The AP (8/8, Nicholson) reports that tribes looking to shut down the Dakota Access oil pipeline “presented a fallback plan should the judge disagree.” The fallback plan “includes increased public reporting of pipeline issues such as repairs, and implementation of a spill response plan – including equipment staging – at the Lake Oahe reservoir on the Missouri River, from which the tribe draws its water.” The article mentions that the judge’s ruling is not expected until September.

Additional coverage was provided by The Hill (8/8, Cama).

BIA And Oconaluftee Job Corps Strengthen Partnership.

The Cherokee \(NC\) One Feather (8/8) reports that “the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Oconaluftee Job Corps Civilian Conservation Center (JCCCC) signed an agreement to increase fire and non-fire training and work-based learning opportunities for students on Tuesday, Aug. 1.” The partnership “provides additional avenues for JCCCC students to gain employability skills and experience as they assist the U.S. Forest Service in sustaining our nation’s forests and grasslands and delivering needed benefits to the public.” JCCCC Director Jimmy Copeland said, “We are elated to formalize this partnership with BIA to not only support natural resource training and development, but to also create pipelines and platforms of Eastern Band of Cherokee youth to achieve career enhancement opportunities. This agreement signifies a relevant partnership with BIA focused on youth training to include supporting Eastern Band of Cherokee Indian needs on tribal lands which also may provide avenues for timber, fire and fuels support.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Commentary: Slaughtering Wild Horses Would Be Simplistic And Cruel.

In an op-ed for the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (8/9, Hammer), Rob Hammer, the proprietor of Wild Horse Tourist, opposes an amendment to the Interior Department’s 2018 spending bill introduced by Rep. Chris Stewart “that would send thousands of America’s wild horses to slaughterhouses.” Hammer argues that the “proposal to simply slaughter these cherished symbols of our national heritage amounts to greed-driven cruelty and should be stripped from the Appropriations Bill before final Congressional approval.” Instead, Hammer supports “comprehensive approaches that generally include some combination of administering long-acting birth control, retiring grazing leases, increasing lease fees, reapportioning AUM allotments, protecting large predators, returning herd areas to their original acreage and repopulating zeroed areas.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

North Carolina Residents Can Let The Government Know How They Feel About Drilling In The Atlantic Ocean.

McClatchy (8/8, Murphy) reports that “about 175 people attended and 45 people spoke at a N.C. Department of Environmental Quality public event in Wilmington on Monday night” about Atlantic offshore drilling, according to Bridget Munger with the state’s DEQ. The DEQ will host a second hearing Wednesday in Morehead City and a final one Thursday in Manteo. DEQ is accepting public comments through Aug. 15.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Fed Probe Of Shark-dragging Suspect Closed Last Year.

The Miami Herald (8/8, Staletovich) reports that “federal wildlife agents who last year investigated a group of Gulf coast anglers linked to a brutal shark-dragging video were foiled by uncooperative witnesses and an inability to confirm when the illegal acts occurred.” The federal investigation, “which focused on possible violations to the Migratory Bird Act, ultimately ended without charges after investigators were unable to determine when the pictures were taken.” According to the article, “when asked Tuesday why the case was transferred or why agents didn’t follow up with attorneys, U.S. Fish and Wildlife law enforcement officials declined to comment, saying the case is closed."

Pipeline Won't Impact Animals.

The Niagara \(NY\) Gazette (8/8) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has "issued a report expressing the agency's contentment that National Fuel's Northern Access Pipeline project will not adversely affect the animal population along the work zone." National Fuel is "currently challenging a DEC ruling issued in April that denied water quality certificates needed for the project which would have resulted in the construction of a 97-mile pipeline capable of carrying natural gas from Pennsylvania through Western New York." In a letter to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, dated Aug. 7, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service stated, "No further coordination or consultation under the ESA is required with the service at this time."

Meeting On South River Projects From DuPont Deal Scheduled In Verona.

The Staunton \(VA\) News Leader (8/8, Cavallaro) reports that "a preliminary meeting on how to submit South River project proposals for funds from the DuPont settlement has been scheduled in Verona, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced Tuesday." The meeting will be held "on Aug. 25 at 1 p.m. at the Augusta County Government Center in the south boardroom." The goal is "to review the restoration goals for the South River and go over the process for submitting project proposals."

Environmentalists Are Urging The USDA To Reject This Genetically Engineered Eucalyptus Tree.

The Washington Post (8/8, Harvey) reports that "a genetically engineered, freeze-tolerant eucalyptus tree is moving closer to receiving approval from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, amid concerns about the tree's possible negative effects on the environment." The USDA has "proposed lifting restrictions on commercial production of the trees, based on a draft environmental impact statement that concluded the trees pose few significant environmental risks." The USDA is "considering public comments and it still needs to confer with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on the tree's potential impact on wildlife."

A Smart Reprieve For Great Lakes Wolves.

In an editorial, the Chicago Tribune (8/8, Board) supports the August 1 ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit keeping protections for gray wolves on the endangered list. The editorial believes "that most people in the Upper Midwest, as well as the rest of the country, think America would be a better place if wolves were able to expand their numbers and territory." Now, after the court's ruling, "the wolves will have that chance."

Our View: An Old Debate Rekindled.

In an editorial, the Santa Maria \(CA\) Times (8/8) says that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "seeks public comment on an environmental analysis of further local oil and gas operations." The federal agency is seeking input "to help formulate rules to guide the oil industry's development plans, while at the same time offering protection to two animal and one plant species named on the federal endangered species list." The paper says that "the feds' objective is noble — to protect plants and animals on the endangered species list — but past experience tell us there is no viable compromise when it comes to dealing with the Endangered Species Act, which was signed into law by former President Nixon in 1973, an era in which there seemed to be more of a consensus about the need to protect the planet and its living things." Although the Trump Administration "seems less interested in species' survival, and more focused on pumping new life into America's relatively sluggish economy," the paper hopes it will be possible "to find a middle ground, if both sides are willing to give some, or at least listen to what the other side is saying, which has not happened in the past."

The piece also appears at the Lompoc \(CA\) Record (8/8).

National Park Service

Free Entry To National Parks For Fourth Graders Kicks Off In September.

KPTV-TV Portland, OR (8/8) reports that "starting Sept. 1 each year, kids in the fourth grade have access to their own 'Every Kid in a Park' pass." The article notes that "with the pass, all children under 16 and up to three adults can be admitted into a park for free.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Atlanta \(GA\) Journal-Constitution (8/8, Chambers) and KIRO-TV Seattle \(WA\) Seattle (8/8, Chambers).

Chickamauga And Chattanooga National Military Park Receives Centennial Challenge Funds From Friends Of Moccasin Bend.

The Chattanooga \(TN\) (8/8) reports that on July 22, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “announced that the National Park Service is teaming up with partners across the nation to distribute more than $50 million in high priority maintenance and infrastructure projects at 42 parks in 29 states, including $143,733 at Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park to construct an orientation plaza and park trails at Moccasin Bend National Archeological District.” The money for Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park will be “matched with $287,546 from the Friends of Moccasin Bend.”

Parkway Receives $750K For Deferred Maintenance Projects.

The Roanoke \(VA\) Times (8/8, Berrier) reports that the Blue Ridge Parkway is receiving “about $750,000 in federal money and matching private grants to complete maintenance work at several locations along the scenic road.” The funds come from the Centennial Challenge. The parkway will “get $366,012 in federal money, plus an additional $384,940 in matching grants from the National Park Service, the Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation and the National Park Foundation.”

Cumberland Island To Get America The Beautiful Quarter In August 2018.

The Florida Times-Union (8/8, Dickson) reports that Cumberland Island National Seashore will be “recognized on a 25-cent piece next year in the U.S. Mint’s America the Beautiful Quarters Program.” The mint will issue “the coin Aug. 27, 2018, as the 44th overall in the initiative to honor 56 National Park Service sites in each state, Washington D.C., and five U.S. territories, the park service said in a written statement.” Gary Ingram, superintendent of Cumberland Island and Fort Frederica National Monument, said, “This coin recognizes Cumberland as the treasure it is, and commemorates the efforts of those who worked to preserve it for future generations.”

Acadia National Park To Create Road Checkpoints To Reduce Impaired Driving.

The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/8, Sarnacki) reports that “in an effort to crack down on drivers under the influence of alcohol, drugs and marijuana, Acadia National Park rangers plan to enhance traffic enforcement and establish safety checkpoints on park roads beginning on Aug. 10 and continuing through the fall,” according to a press release issued by the National Park Service. This shift in “park management is in cooperation with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration as part of a national traffic safety campaign to reduce impaired driving on roads.” Superintendent Kevin Schneider stated in the press release, “The National Park Service is working to ensure that visitors to Acadia National Park have a safe and enjoyable trip. We appreciate the patience and cooperation of those visitors who may encounter a safety checkpoint in the park.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

After Trump Warning Of “Fire And Fury,” North Korea Threatens Strike On Guam.

President Trump’s warning to North Korea, which was followed by Pyongyang threat to strike Guam, are garnering heavy media attention, including the lead reports on all three networks newscasts. Reuters (8/8, Oliphant, Blanchard) reports, warned North Korea it would be met with “fire and fury like the world has never seen.” Stephen Ganyard said on ABC World News Tonight (8/8, story 2, 1:15, Muir) that “to hear this language out of a US president, it’s something we have never heard before, and it certainly puts the world on notice.” Media reports cast the developments as presenting Trump with his greatest challenge yet of his presidency, with analysts and commentators taking a decidedly dim view of his rhetoric. The Los Angeles Times (8/8, Hennigan, Cloud, Bierman), for example, reports that the President’s “dramatic threat of annihilation raised fresh fears of a confrontation with North Korea,” and “in many ways mirrors his North Korean counterpart’s,” the New York Times (8/8, Baker, Sang-Hun) refers to “chilling language that evoked the horror of a nuclear exchange,” and a Washington Post (8/8) editorial criticizes the President’s “unsettling threat,” which it calls “reckless and unnecessary. In its bombast, it resembled nothing so much as Kim Jong Un’s regular denunciations of the United States, frantic and hyperbolic.” Dealing with the threat posed by the North, the Post argues, “will require patient pressure and skilled diplomacy, perhaps for years. Instead, Mr. Trump has strut into the arena with a jarring rhetorical grenade."

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (8/8, lead story, 2:45) reporting that "Trump drew a line today for North Korean dictator Kim Jong-Un and warned what would happen if he crosses it," and NBC Nightly News (8/8, lead story, 3:05, Holt) said opened its broadcast saying the crisis with North Korea reached "an unsettling new level" as Trump issued his "most provocative statement yet." Former deputy director of the CIA's counterterrorism center Phil Mudd said on CNN's Situation Room (8/8) that Trump is "making one of the most fundamental mistakes in foreign policy. ... The hotter it gets in the kitchen, the cooler the cook has to be. And the President is getting hotter."

At any rate, "just hours" after Trump issued his warning, Reuters (8/8, Oliphant, Blanchard) reports, North Korea said it is considering plans for a missile strike on Guam. A Korean People's Army spokesman said in a statement carried by state-run KCNA news agency that Pyongyang is "carefully examining" a plan to strike Guam, and "would be put into practice at any moment once leader Kim Jong Un makes a decision."

Sean Hannity argued in his opening monologue on Fox News' Hannity (8/8) that "the world needs to take a stand tonight. We must confront this evil in our time before it's too late," but the AP (8/8, Klug, Pennington) reports that "despite regular North Korean threats against Guam...it is extremely unlikely that Pyongyang would risk the assured annihilation of its revered leadership with a pre-emptive attack on US citizens." Still, the "competing threats and Trump's use of North Korea-style rhetoric...raise the already high animosity and heighten worries that a miscalculation might spark conflict." Nevertheless, the Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (8/8) reports Guam residents "expressed concern Wednesday." The offices of Guam Homeland Security and Civil Defense issued a statement Wednesday saying they were working with military officials to "continue to monitor the recent events surrounding North Korean and their threatening actions." The Washington Examiner (8/8, Chaitin) reports the US representative from Guam, Madeleine Bordallo said "top figures in the Pentagon have 'recently' assured her that the US military will keep Guam safe."

Politico (8/8, Dove) reports that in a pre-taped interview released Tuesday, Alaska Gov. Bill Walker said he was "concerned" about a North Korean missile hitting his state, which he said is "in the trajectory zone from North Korea."

Peter Alexander said on NBC Nightly News (8/8, story 2, 2:15, Holt) that Trump is "locked in an escalating standoff with a rogue regime and its erratic dictator," and on ABC World News Tonight (8/8, lead story, 3:20, Muir), Martha Raddatz called the President's remarks "the most fiery, overtly military threat" he "has ever launched at North Korea." She added that North Korea is "without question, the greatest challenge President Trump now faces." The Hill (8/8, Fabian, Kheel) similarly says North Korea is "posing an increasingly serious problem" for Trump.

The Washington Post (8/8, Wagner) says Trump's warning "further raises the stakes for the US president and other world leaders, who face limited options in dealing with North Korea's aggression," and Politico (8/8, Bender, Klimas) says they "sparked new fears that the standoff...could devolve into a shooting war."

A New York Times (8/8, Davis) analysis says Trump's warning "was a remarkable escalation of military rhetoric with little precedent in the modern era, historians and analysts said." While Trump's "menacing remarks echoed the tone and cadence" of President Harry Truman – who, in a 1945 address announcing that the US had dropped a nuclear bomb on Hiroshima, urged the Japanese to surrender, warning that if they did not, "they may expect a rain of ruin from the air, the like of which has never been seen on this earth" – the Times says it is "not clear whether Mr. Trump intended the historical parallel." But the AP (8/8, Pennington, Lucey) says his remarks "appeared scripted, with Trump glancing at a paper in front of him."

Bloomberg News (8/8, Sink, Syeed, Foroohar) says the statement came as Secretary of State Tillerson "continues visiting allies in Southeast Asia, rallying support for tougher measures against Pyongyang and holding out an olive branch to the reclusive regime as well." But Major Garrett said on the CBS Evening News (8/8, story 2, 2:15, Mason) that "the President's words contrasted sharply with...Tillerson's declaration just last week that the US was open to negotiations."

In a front-page story, the Wall Street Journal (8/8, A1, Sonne, Harris, Cheng) says Trump's comments reflect deep concern in the Administration about the progress North Korea has made in recent months on its nuclear-weapons program.

Also reporting on the President's remarks are the New York Post (8/8, Moore), Washington Examiner (8/8, Morrongiello), and Townhall (8/8, Pavlich). NBC Nightly News (8/8, lead story,

3:05, Holt) said "some lawmakers are slamming the President's comments: Dianne Feinstein calling them bombastic and recommending diplomacy. Republican John McCain said he can't think of any other President who would have used that kind of rhetoric." Major Garrett also reported their responses on the CBS Evening News (8/8, story 2, 2:15, Mason), and The Hill (8/8, Bowden) likewise says McCain "took exception" to Trump's remarks, and the Washington Examiner (8/8, Siegel) reports Feinstein said Trump's "bombastic" threats are not "helping" to defuse the situation. Rep. Eliot Engel also criticized Trump, charging that the President has drawn an "absurd red line."

The Washington Examiner (8/8, Mayfield) reports White House counselor Kellyanne Conway "jumped to the president's defense," saying, "I think the president's comments were very strong and obvious, and all of you covered them live."

Poll: Americans "Uneasy" About North Korea. Politico (8/8, Siu) reports that a CBS News poll out Tuesdays shows Americans are "uneasy" about a possible conflict with North Korea, while "many Democrats are also not confident" in Donald Trump's capacity to handle a nuclear crisis. Responses, however, "were largely split along party lines — 76 percent of Republican respondents said they are confident in Trump's ability to handle the North Korea nuclear situation, while only 10 percent of Democrats and 31 percent of independents said they are." Regardless of party alignment, "72 percent of the 1,111 people surveyed reported unease about a possible conflict, and only 26 percent" said they are "confident things will be resolved."

DIA Report: North Korea Has Miniaturized Nuclear Warhead. The Washington Post (8/8, Warrick, Nakashima, Fifield) reports North Korea has successfully produced a miniaturized nuclear warhead that can fit inside its missiles, "crossing a key threshold on the path to becoming a full-fledged nuclear power," according to a new analysis completed last month by the Defense Intelligence Agency. It is not known, however, whether it has "successfully tested the smaller design, although North Korea officially last year claimed to have done so." The DIA's findings, the Post says, "are likely to deepen concerns about an evolving North Korean military threat that appears to be advancing far more rapidly than many experts had predicted." The DIA and ODNI "declined to comment."

Drawing from the Post's report, USA Today (8/8, Bacon) says the DIA "completed the confidential analysis in July, shortly after another intelligence assessment that sharply raises the official estimate for the total number" of nuclear weapons in the country's arsenal to 60. The DIA "did not immediately respond" to a request for comment on the report. NBC Nightly News (8/8, lead story, 3:05, Holt) called the development "a major line crossed," while the Washington Times (8/8, Miller) says the Post's report "was based on anonymous sources and has not been independently verified."

Rep. Darrell Issa said on CNN's The Lead (8/8) that if it is true that North Korea has miniaturized a nuclear warhead, "it represents the greatest crisis...undoubtedly since the Cuban missile crisis." A Chicago Tribune (8/8) editorial says that the "new information about the North's weaponry, and this week's bellicose exchange, should alarm China, Russia and other governments. We hope that leads to the talks that reverse these escalating tensions."

Trump Touts UN Sanctions; Tillerson Presses Asian Allies For Action. Earlier in the day, the AP (8/8) reports, Trump said the latest UN sanctions against North Korea are necessary to try to curb the reclusive nation's nuclear program. Trump tweeted, "After many years of failure, countries are coming together to finally address the dangers posed by North Korea. We must be tough & decisive!" However, Ambassador Haley said during on NBC's Today Show that "she isn't sure whether the sanctions will work."

Reuters (8/8, Lefevre) reports Secretary of State Tillerson on Tuesday pressed Thai leaders for more action on North Korea during a visit to Bangkok. Tillerson's "top priority," Reuters says, "has been urging Southeast Asian countries to do more to cut funding streams for North Korea." Before meeting Tillerson, Prime Minister Prayuth Chan-ocha said Thailand would "support a UN resolution on new sanctions on Pyongyang," but "made no mention of specific action." Thai Foreign Minister Don Pramudwinai, the AP (8/8, Ng, Kaewjinda) reports, "indicated to reporters that he and Tillerson had discussed Washington's efforts to ensure that pressure was maintained on North Korea to drop its nuclear weapons program." He said Thailand, as a UN member, "adhered to its sanctions on Pyongyang, which resulted in a 94 percent decline in trade with North Korea from January to June this year compared to the same period last year."

The Wall Street Journal (8/8, Watts, Otto) reports Acting Assistant Secretary of State Susan Thornton said Tillerson wanted to persuade Thailand's ruling military junta to take the lead in Southeast Asia on isolating North Korea. A US official said that North Korea would also be on the agenda for Tillerson's talks with Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak during his next stop in Kuala Lumpur. Experts say cooperation from Asian countries, especially in Southeast Asia, is essential to the success of new UN sanctions.

Trump Advocated Negotiations In 1999 Interview. The New York Post (8/8, Perez) reports President Trump once said that he would “negotiate like crazy” with North Korea — rather than go to war — should it develop a nuclear weapon that could fit on a missile. “First, I’d negotiate,” Trump said during a 1999 interview on NBC’s “Meet the Press.” He added, “I would negotiate like crazy and I’d make sure that we tried to get the best deal possible. If a man walks up to you in the street...and puts a gun to your head and says, ‘Give me your money,’ wouldn’t you rather know where he’s coming from before he had the gun in his hand?”

NYTimes Analysis: North Korean Advances Could Lead To Regional Arms Race. The New York Times (8/8, Soble, Choe) reports that North Korea’s rapidly advancing nuclear program “has prompted politicians in Japan and South Korea to push for the deployment of more powerful weapons, in what could lead to a regional arms race.” According to the Times, “some of the new capabilities under consideration in Tokyo and Seoul...are politically contentious,” and adopting them “would break with decades of precedent.”

Ignatius: North Korea Threat A “Hinge” Moment For US, China. Washington Post (8/8) columnist David Ignatius writes that the North Korean nuclear threat is a “hinge” moment for the US and China. If Washington and Beijing “manage to stay together in dealing with Pyongyang,” he says, the “door opens on a new era in which China will play a larger and more responsible role in global affairs, commensurate with its economic power. If the great powers can’t cooperate, the door will slam shut — possibly triggering a catastrophic military conflict on the Korean Peninsula.”

Interior Grants Funds To Micronesian Resource Center.

The Pacific \(GUM\) Daily News (8/8, Raymundo) reports that “a set of Department of Interior grants worth more than $280,000 have been directed to organizations and programs on Guam that work to provide resources and job training for regional migrants from the Freely Associated States.” Acting Interior Assistant Secretary Nikolao Pula “provided $217,095 to Big Brothers Big Sisters of Guam to continue running the Micronesian Resource Center One Stop Shop, the U.S. Department of Interior announced this past weekend.” The federal agency will “also provide $250,000 to Hawaii’s Partners in Development Foundation so it can continue mentorship of the We Are Oceania Halau Ola One Stop Center.”

Trump Visits FEMA For Briefing On Hurricane Preparations.

The Hill (8/4, Fabian) reports President Trump traveled to FEMA headquarters on Friday for a briefing on the government’s hurricane preparation efforts. Trump, who toured FEMA’s National Response Coordination Center, said “we’re very strong in respect to FEMA.” He added, “We’ve already taken care of many of the situations that really needed emergency funds. We do it quickly, we do it effectively, we have an amazing team.”

The Virgin Islands Consortium \(VIR\) (8/6) reports the Virgin Islands’ Kenneth Mapp “was among governors who participated” in a FEMA-related teleconference event on Friday. Mapp stated, “FEMA has done a lot to help the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico to prepare for a hurricane.”

Governor: Guam Not Falling Off Financial Cliff.

The Guam Daily Post (8/8, Roberto) reports that Gov. Eddie Calvo “said Guam can afford to borrow money, and isn’t in the same financial situation as financially distressed Puerto Rico or the U.S. Virgin Islands.” Calvo told members of the Rotary Club of Tumon Bay, “We’re not falling off the cliff like places such as Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands or Illinois.” Calvo also “talked to Rotarians about the $125 million proposed borrowing for Guam Memorial Hospital’s equipment and facilities upgrade.”

Top National News

Media Analyses: Trump Offers No Specifics On Tackling Opioid Addiction Crisis.

Coverage of President Trump’s Tuesday briefing on the opioid addiction crisis is limited and fairly critical, with most reports saying that the President neither fully embraced the recommendations of his own commission on the matter nor offered solutions of his own. NBC Nightly News (8/8, story 3, 2:05, Holt) reported that the President vowed “to win the battle against the deadly opioid epidemic in this country, though he stopped short of taking his commission’s recommendation to declare a national emergency over it." The AP (8/8, Lucey) reports that the President held a briefing on the issue at his Bedminster golf course. He "did not announce any new policy, but vowed to work with health professionals and law enforcement on the crisis. He said federal drug prosecutions have dropped but promised he would 'be bringing them up rapidly.'"

The New York Times (8/8, Baker, Shear) reports that the President "promised again on Tuesday to tackle the growing epidemic of opioid abuse...after blaming his predecessor for not doing more to stem the surge of drug overdoses. But he offered no specific ideas for how he would do so." The Washington Post (8/8, Johnson, Wagner) reports that the President "said the 'best way to prevent drug addiction and overdose is to prevent people from abusing drugs in the first place.' ... More than 200 days into his presidency, activists say the president has done little to help."

USA Today (8/8, Korte) reports that HHS Secretary Price, who was on hand for the briefing along with Kellyanne Conway and Jared Kushner, said, "The President certainly believes we should treat it as an emergency, and it is an emergency. Look, when you have the capacity of Yankee Stadium or Dodger Stadium dying every single year in this nation, that's a crisis that had to be given incredible attention, and the president is giving it that attention." But Price said the powers granted by a "formal declaration of a public health emergency...are intended more for shorter-term, more localized public health crises." The New York Post (8/8, Brown) reports that Conway "stressed the fix would take time." Conway said, "We didn't get here overnight, so we can't deal with this overnight."

The Wall Street Journal (8/8, Radnofsky, Campo-Flores) reports that a White House commission on the opioid crisis led by Gov. Chris Christie recommended last week that the President declare a national emergency. CBS News (8/8, Tillett) reports on its website that Christie did not attend the briefing.

White House correspondent Tamara Keith said on NPR's All Things Considered (8/8, Shapiro), "What's interesting here is that in his remarks – and these were sort of off-the-cuff remarks before the briefing – [the President] really put an emphasis on enforcement, on prosecutions. This is different from the tone that he struck during the campaign and earlier in his administration when he talked more about treatment and reducing stigma."

The Los Angeles Times (8/8, Bierman, Levey) says the President met with Price to discuss the opioid crisis since he is "eager to convey a sense that he is working during his two-week stay at his golf club in New Jersey." Bloomberg News (8/8, Edney) headlines its report "Trump Calls Opioids 'No Good,' Urges People Not To Abuse Them." Reuters (8/8, Oliphant), Politico (8/8, Ehley), and The Hill (8/8, Rouben) also have reports.

First Lady Joins President For Meeting With Price. The New York Daily News (8/8, Scotti) reports, "The First Lady said she would make cyberbullying her pet cause – but it looks like she's already moved on to the opioid epidemic." She joined the President for his meeting with Price, and tweeted, "Opioids are destroying our youth/people. Mtg w @Potus & @SecPriceMD today to give my support to #STOPDRUGADDICTION". The Daily News writes, "It's unclear why the First Lady has pivoted away from cyberbullying – though she had done nothing on that cause in public, private or even on social media since the inauguration in January."

Overdose Deaths Surged Last Year. The Washington Post (8/8, A1, Bernstein) reports on its front page that drug overdose deaths "rose sharply in the first nine months of 2016," according to the National Center for Health Statistics, confirming "the widely held belief that the opioid epidemic worsened last year despite stepped-up efforts by public health authorities." Overdose deaths "reached a record 19.9 per 100,000 population in the third quarter, a big increase over the 16.7 recorded for the same three months in 2015. Similarly, the first two quarters of last year showed death rates of 18.9 and 19.3, far greater than the corresponding periods for 2015."

New Hampshire Files Lawsuit Against Purdue Pharma Over OxyContin Marketing. The AP (8/8, Ramer) reports that New Hampshire has filed a lawsuit against Purdue Pharma, claiming the company "has continued its deceptive marketing of OxyContin" in the state. The lawsuit claims the company misrepresented the drug's effectiveness and the risk of addiction. Reuters (8/8, Raymond) reports the lawsuit claims that the company's marketing practices "opened the floodgates" to opioids being abused in the state.

White House Blasts NYTimes For Publishing Leaked Climate Change Report.

ABC World News Tonight (8/8, story 6, 0:40, Muir) reported the New York Times has published a late draft report on climate science that was leaked by scientists out of "fear that the Administration will suppress its findings." The draft report, written by scientists from 13 US agencies, finds "that human activity is the primary driver of recent global temperature rise." The report also “links extreme weather to climate change.” NBC Nightly News (8/8, story 4, 2:00, Holt) reported the draft “blames man-made greenhouse gases. ‘There are no alternative explanations,’ the scientists write, ‘and no natural cycles that can explain the changes in the climate.’”

The AP (8/8, Biesecker, Borenstein) describes the report as “directly contradicting” the President, who has “expressed public doubts that the warming is being primarily driven by man-made carbon pollution and will have serious consequences for Americans.” The Washington Times (8/8, Wolfgang) says “environmental resistance inside the Trump administration hit new heights” as the scientists “push[ed] the study out into the bloodstream before their superiors had the chance to alter or approve it.”

The Washington Examiner (8/8, Siegel) reports that while the White House on Tuesday “attacked the New York Times” for publishing the report. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said in a statement, “It’s very disappointing, yet entirely predictable to learn the New York Times would write off a draft report without first verifying its contents with the White House or any of the federal agencies directly involved with climate and environmental policy. ... As others have pointed out – and the New York Times should have noticed – drafts of this report have been published and made widely available online months ago during the public comment period. The White House will withhold comment on any draft report before its scheduled release date.”

The New York Times (8/8, Shear, Plumer) says the report will force Trump “to choose between accepting the conclusions of his administration’s scientists and the demands of his conservative supporters, who remain deeply unconvinced that humans are the cause of the planet’s warming.” Politico (8/8, Holden) cites “several sources involved in producing” the report who “say they have seen no indication that the White House might suppress the scientific research that offers the clearest indication yet that human activity is altering the planet’s temperature.” These sources “said they don’t expect the Trump administration to stall a scheduled late-November deadline or try to make revisions.”

A Washington Post (8/8) editorial says the Administration “must decide whether to approve or suppress” the report. While “scientists have signed off on its findings,” Trump and EPA Administrator Pruitt “have indicated they simply do not believe the experts.” Noting that “the latest research suggests it is neither unrealistic nor pointless to aim for the low end of the range of possible climate outcomes, even over 2 degrees, to at least limit the damage to the planet’s habitability,” the Post argues that this approach “requires leaders to admit there is a problem.”

Scientist Claims Administration Punishing Him For Speaking Out About Climate Change. Chip Reid of the CBS Evening News (8/8, story 5, 2:30, Mason) reported on an interview with US Interior Department scientist Joel Clement about “what happens to a government scientist who speaks up about” climate change. For the past seven years, Clement has been working in Alaskan villages that “are literally melting into the Arctic Ocean.” Clement addressed the issue last month at the UN, and six days later, “he was one of about 50 department employees who were assigned to new jobs.” Clement has filed a whistleblower complaint, saying, “I believe that the Trump Administration is retaliating against me for disclosing these risks to these Alaskan native villages.”

Court Rejects Trump Administration Defense Of Obama-Era Climate Rule. Bloomberg News (8/8, Natter) reports that the US Court of Appeals in Washington on Tuesday rejected the Trump Administration’s “attempt to defend one aspect of Barack Obama’s climate agenda failed,” ruling in a 2-1 decision that the EPA “overstepped its authority in prohibiting the use of certain refrigerants that are potent greenhouse gases.” Judge Brett Kavanaugh wrote that the EPA’s 2015 regulation “relied on a statute that regulated use of ozone-depleting substances, but the refrigerants – called hydrofluorocarbons – don’t damage the ozone layer.”

Professor Warns Of Dogs, Cats’ Contribution To Global Warming. The Washington Times (8/8, Richardson) reports that UCLA professor Gregory S. Okin, “who recommended replacing dogs and cats with more climate-friendly pets in the name of global warming,” is receiving “a lukewarm reception even from some environmentalists who also happen to love dogs.” Okin “found that meat-eating dogs and cats create the equivalent of 64 million tons of carbon dioxide per year based on the energy consumption required to produce their food, or the same impact as driving 13.6 million cars.”

US Job Openings Reached Record Level In June.

Bloomberg News (8/8, Chandra) reports that according to the Labor Department’s “JOLTS report,” a “June surge in US job openings to a record indicates demand for workers remained strong at the end of the second quarter.” Bloomberg says the increase in openings highlights “the need for workers in an economy that’s continuing to expand.” Meanwhile, “the pool of qualified Americans is shrinking and making some positions tougher to fill, one reason economists expect the monthly pace of hiring will eventually cool.” Breitbart (8/8, Rodriguez) says the increase in open positions “can be attributed to an expanding economy as competition for open positions is decreasing, making some positions harder to fill because there are less qualified applicants vying for the same position.”

A Wall Street Journal (8/8) editorial says the report is additional evidence of a tightening labor market, which usually means wages will increase. However, the Journal adds that the tighter labor market could be a harbinger of slower economic growth. Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal (8/8, Hannon) reports that leading indicators released Tuesday by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development show that the US is poised for steady economic growth. The leading US indicator remained at 99.7 for the third consecutive month, suggesting a steady growth outlook.

WSJournal Analysis: Gig-Economy Firms Having Trouble Attracting, Keeping Workers. A Wall Street Journal (8/8, Gee) analysis reports on the impact the job market is having on gig-economy companies like Uber, saying such firms are having difficulty attracting and retaining workers and have begun offering better perks and benefits in an effort to enlist and keep workers..

Walker “Willing To Share” Credit For Wisconsin’s Economy With Trump. Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker was asked on CNBC’s Closing Bell (8/8) how much of his state’s economic recovery is due to his policies versus “DC and what’s happening in Congress.” Walker said, “A lot of it started obviously before any of the changes. Certainly we appreciate the changes that the President’s Administration has made in terms of regulations. The last six months the Cabinet has been outstanding, but we started this years ago.” Asked if the White House is taking credit, Walker said, “Ronald Reagan once said it’s amazing what you can get done if you don’t care who gets credit for it. We are willing to share it.”

WPost A1: Let Down By Trump, Struggling Florida City Seeks To Boost Its Economy. In a front-page story headlined “The Help Trump Promised Hasn’t Come. So This ‘Dying City’ Is Determined To Save Itself,” the Washington Post (8/8, A1, Samuels) reports on the plight of Palatka, Florida, “a city of 10,400 swaddled by potato farms and a paper mill that employs a small fraction of the workers it once did” and “is desperate for an economy to call its own.” The Post says the city’s leaders are hoping to draw tourists and businesses by touting the environmental attractions of the nearby St. Johns River. The Post adds, “Abandoned by retailers that have moved out of their city, and disappointed that President Trump hasn’t yet delivered on his promise to restore economic opportunity to small communities,” Palatka residents “say they don’t have much choice.”

Cole, Walker Voice Opposition To “Clean” Debt Ceiling Increase.

Reuters (8/8) reports that Rep. Tom Cole, who sits on the House Appropriations and Budget Committees, told MSNBC’s Morning Joe (8/8) Tuesday that the House is “unlikely to raise the country’s debt ceiling without conditions to rein in spending.” The Trump Administration has asked Congress to pass a “clean” debt ceiling bill with no other provisions. Asked if the House would do so, Cole said, “probably not clean,” and added, “Most Republicans want to do something to lower the trajectory of the debt.”

House Republican Study Committee Chairman Rep. Mark Walker also argued against a clean debt ceiling increase, “saying it would be a betrayal of piled-up promises to voters to finally get a handle on the federal budget,” the Washington Times (8/8, Dinan) reports. In an op-ed in the Washington Examiner, Walker “said the GOP must flex its muscle from controlling both chambers of Congress and the White House and insist that any debt hike be coupled with some new controls to convince voters the problem is being taken seriously,” and he “warned GOP leaders against turning to Democrats to pass a debt increase by loading it up ‘with even more increased spending.’”

Tax Overhaul Debate Focused On Who Bears Greatest Burden From Corporate Taxes.

The Wall Street Journal (8/8, Rubin) reports that a debate over whether the burden of corporate taxes falls more on workers or investors is underscoring tax overhaul efforts. If investors bear the greater burden, high-income households would benefit most from corporate tax cuts, but if workers carry the greater load, cutting corporate taxes could be a way of increasing middle-class incomes through higher wages and job opportunities.

Deloitte Survey: Only 5.3 Percent Anticipate 15 Percent Corporate Tax Rate. Reuters (8/8)

reports that a Deloitte Tax survey released Tuesday shows that “only a small number of U.S. tax, finance and business professionals expect President Donald Trump’s 15-percent corporate tax rate to become reality as part of tax reform.” Just under half of the 3,100 people surveyed “viewed a lower corporate rate as being the main economic driver of tax reform, but nearly 40 percent predicted the rate would end up at 25 percent, due to the political and budgetary challenges facing tax reform.” Thirty-one percent “expected a corporate tax rate of 20 percent,” and “5.3 percent believed Trump’s 15 percent rate would become law.” Moreover, “about 74 percent of those surveyed were doubtful or not at all confident that a comprehensive tax reform bill would be enacted in 2017.”

Study: Trump’s Regulation Reductions Have Saved Businesses Billions.

A new study from the conservative group American Action Forum, says President Trump’s efforts to cut regulations “has saved businesses nearly $4 billion per year compared with President Barack Obama’s pace of imposing regulations,” the Washington Times (8/8, Boyer) reports. According to the study, “final rule costs during Mr. Trump’s first six months in office will cost US businesses about $378 million per year, compared with $4.2 billion for the same period” during the Obama Administration. The study found that compared to the Obama Administration, Trump “has imposed 5 percent of the lifetime costs on businesses, 9 percent of the annual costs and 12.5 percent of the employee hours required for paperwork.”

EPA Report: Environmental Regulations Do Not Stifle Economic Growth.

USA Today (8/8, King) reports that a new report from the EPA “undercut[s]” the Trump Administration argument that environmental regulations “are stifling US economic growth.” According to the report, “since Congress passed the Clean Air Act in 1970, the economy has more than tripled and the number of vehicle miles traveled every year has nearly doubled — all while the nation’s population and annual energy consumption has surged.” Meanwhile, “the levels of six key air pollutants...have declined dramatically,” and the “number of unhealthy air quality days annually in 35 of America’s largest cities has fallen significantly while the visibility at national parks across the country once shrouded in haze has improved substantially.” Environmentalists cite the report “as evidence that efforts by President Donald Trump and EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt to roll back a slew of Obama-era rules designed to protect air, water and public health are grounded in flawed logic and should stop.”

Government Spending On Transportation, Infrastructure “In Decline.”

The New York Times (8/8, Appelbaum) reports that government spending on transportation and infrastructure is “in decline,” equaling 1.4 percent of US economic output in the second quarter of this year, “the lowest level on record, according to Census Bureau data.” The article notes that President Trump has encouraged a large infrastructure plan, both as part of his campaign and during his first year in office. Moreover, “the deterioration of the nation’s infrastructure has raised widespread concerns about safety, quality of life and the impact on economic growth,” and “politicians in both parties have declared the issue a priority.” In the meantime, however, “in 34 states, spending on government construction projects was lower last year than in 2007, adjusting for inflation,” and “public construction spending in June was 9.5 percent lower than during the same month last year.” The Times summarizes the state of Republican and Democratic efforts on the issue.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Needed: Proposals To Fix New York’s Crumbling Subways.” The New York Times (8/9, Board) says in an editorial that New York “Gov. Andrew Cuomo, Mayor Bill de Blasio and Albany lawmakers are at last talking about how to pay for vital improvements to the city’s crumbling subways.” State and city officials discussed “various half-measures” at a meeting Monday, including “de Blasio’s millionaire’s tax,” which state lawmakers will likely resist. Nonetheless, the Times says, “The mayor has made an opening bid, flawed as it is,” and now Cuomo, state Senate Majority Leader John Flanagan, “and others need to step up.”

“Frustration Over A War And Its Crimes.” A New York Times (8/9, Board) editorial acknowledges the frustration expressed by Carla del Ponte, who quit “the United Nations panel investigating atrocities in Syria in disgust.” Yet, the Times says, “the Security Council’s inaction has not been for lack of trying," but rather "because Russia, often joined by China, has obstinately propped up President Bashar al-Assad of Syria, using its veto eight times in the Council so far to block measures against him." While "deeply frustrating for victims of atrocities and for investigators," the Times argues, "international organizations and international justice are inherently dependent on the political will of those involved, and the Syrian conflict is an infernal tangle of political goals, ideologies and actors." Ultimately, the Times concludes, only a diplomatic solution can end "the carnage" and hold responsible parties, including Assad, accountable.

Washington Post.

"This Is How Bad Things Could Get If Trump Denies The Reality Of Climate Change." A Washington Post (8/8) editorial says the Administration "must decide whether to approve or suppress a major federal climate change report." While "scientists have signed off on its findings," Trump and EPA Administrator Pruitt "have indicated they simply do not believe the experts." Noting that "the latest research suggests it is neither unrealistic nor pointless to aim for the low end of the range of possible climate outcomes, even over 2 degrees, to at least limit the damage to the planet's habitability," the Post argues that this approach "requires leaders to admit there is a problem."

"Trump's 'Fire And Fury' Threat Is A Rhetorical Grenade." A Washington Post (8/8) editorial says President Trump's "unsettling threat" to North Korea was "reckless and unnecessary. In its bombast, it resembled nothing so much as Kim Jong Un's regular denunciations of the United States, frantic and hyperbolic." Dealing with the threat posed by the North, the Post argues, "will require patient pressure and skilled diplomacy, perhaps for years. Instead, Mr. Trump has strut into the arena with a jarring rhetorical grenade."

"Maryland Is Mired In A Medical Marijuana Morass." The Washington Post (8/8), in an editorial, says that Maryland has been "so sluggish" in developing its "medical marijuana program" that it appears to be being "conducted under the influence." The Post adds that in addition to "the listless pace" at which the state has been working, there have been "signs of self-dealing and shady connections" giving it all "a scent of mismanagement and corruption." It cites recent reporting in the Post in alleging that "some bidders for potentially lucrative cannabis licenses" were connected to "the evaluators who were hired to assess their applications." In one case, an evaluator's husband applied for a license. The Post concludes by hoping that Gov. Larry Hogan's (R) move "to clean house at the state Cannabis Commission," by naming 10 new members will resolve the matter.

Wall Street Journal.

"Google's Diversity Problems." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/8) writes that Google's dismissal of James Damore raises questions about the environment of ideological conformity in the corporate world. The Journal argues that Google CEO Sundar Pichai's statement regarding the firing sounds like legal cover and incorrectly views Damore's obligations as an employee as if he were in a union, and the Journal concludes that the dismissal underscores what many critics fear is a monolithic progressive political culture that censors free speech in corporate America.

"McMaster And The Commander." In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/8) decries the alt-right media for its attacks on National Security Adviser McMaster, who, it notes, is a policy opponent of White House aide Steve Bannon. The Journal attributes much of the dysfunction inside the White House to Bannon.

"Would You Like A Job?" A Wall Street Journal (8/8) editorial says the Labor Department's JOLTS report's finding of 461,000 additional openings in June is additional evidence of a tightening labor market, which usually means wages will increase. However, the Journal adds that the tighter labor market could be a harbinger of slower economic growth.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

North Korea Threat Comes After Trump Vows 'Fire And Fury'
Disney Unveils New Streaming Services
Memo Sparks Firestorm At Google

Bill Ford Thinks His Company Lacks Vision—And That He Can Fix It

New York Times:

Trump Threatens 'Fire And Fury' Against North Korea If It Endangers US As Investigations Intensify, Israel Imagines Life After Netanyahu
As Maduro's Venezuela Rips Apart, So Does His Military
The Culture Wars Have Come To Silicon Valley
At Walmart Academy, Training Better Managers. But With A Better Future?
Glen Campbell, Whose Hit Songs Bridged Country And Pop, Dies At 81

Washington Post:

US: North Korea Has Missile-ready Nuclear Weapon
In Switch, Justice Dept. Backs Ohio Voter Purge
97-Year-Old's Slaying A Sign Of Baltimore's Deep Distress
Feeling Snubbed But Pushing Forward
Data Shows An Unabated Opioid Crisis

Financial Times:

Kenyatta Takes Lead As Results Emerge In Kenya Election
US Blue-Chips' Double-Digit Earnings Set To Continue
Japan Upgrades North Korea Threat Level
Google Engineer Sacked Over Controversial Gender Memo

Washington Times:

Trump Threatens To Rain 'Fire And Fury Like The World Has Never Seen' On North Korea
Federal Scientists Leak Sweeping Climate Change Draft In Clash With Trump Administration
Illegal Immigration Statistics Show Trump's Resolve To Keep Campaign Promise
Straying Too Far? Professor Says Dogs And Cats Harm Climate, Advises Hamsters Instead
Refugee Integration Makes Slow Progress, But German Political Divisions Stand Firm
'Polar Row' Exploration Team Smashes World Records In Icy North

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: North Korea Threats; North Korea Threats-Expert Comment; Missouri-Officer Shot; Severe Weather; Weather Forecast; Federal Climate Change Report; Car Heat-Child Death; Glen Campbell Dies; California-Threatening Police; Boston-Innocent Prisoner Freed; London-Jogger Pushes Woman; Cancer Rate-Young People; Lottery Drawing; Young Climber.

CBS: North Korea Threats; WH-North Korea threats; Severe Weather; Europe-Heat Wave; Federal Climate Change Report; Sleep Disorder-Traffic Accidents; Ford Explorer-Carbon Monoxide Leaks; Google Controversial Memo; David Letterman Comeback; Glen Campbell Dies.

NBC: North Korea Threats; WH-North Korea Threats; Opioid Epidemic; Federal Climate Change Report; Severe Weather; Philippines-ISIS Front; Cancer Rate-Young People; Barbara Cook Dies; San Francisco-Street Sold; First Day Of School Picture; Glen Campbell Dies.

Network TV At A Glance:

North Korea Threats – 14 minutes, 55 seconds
Federal Climate Change Report – 5 minutes, 10 seconds
Weather – 4 minutes, 20 seconds
Cancer Rate-Young People – 2 minutes, 25 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: North Korea Threats; Russia Meddling Investigation; Missouri-Officer Shot; Glen Campbell Dies.

CBS: North Korea Threats; Glen Campbell Dies; Barbara Cook Dies; Google Controversial Memo; China-Sichuan Earthquake; Wall Street News.

FOX: Missouri-Officer Shot; North Korea Threats; Wall Street News.

NPR: North Korea Threats; China-Sichuan Earthquake; Kenya-Presidential Election.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — No public events scheduled.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — No public events scheduled.

US Senate: On recess until 5 September.

US House: On recess until 5 September.

Other: 12:00 PM Democratic Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton continues her Senior Legislative Tour – Democratic Rep. Eleanor Holmes Norton continues her Senior Legislative Tour, to discuss 'how the proposed Republican bill to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act would harm seniors' Location: Bernice Elizabeth Fontenau Senior Wellness Center, 3531 Georgia Ave, Washington, DC www.norton.house.gov <https://twitter.com/EleanorNorton>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Fire and fury and, listen. We're sorry we made fun of you. Go back to golfing before you kill all of us."

Jimmy Kimmel: "US intelligence, by the way, assessed that North Korea has successfully produced a miniaturized nuclear warhead that could potentially reach California, Oregon, and Washington – three states that didn't vote for guess-who, by the way."

Stephen Colbert: "You know Kim Jong-Un's crazy, right? He's a loose cannon like Mel Gibson in 'Lethal Weapon.' Also, that one time he got pulled over."

James Corden: "This morning, Donald Trump re-tweeted a Fox News story about the North Korean military. And get this, the story contained leaked, highly classified information. This is unbelievable. Not only is this the first time a sitting President has declassified information through Twitter, it's the first time Donald Trump has ever tweeted something that was true."

James Corden: "If we really want Donald Trump to stop leaking classified information, then we should stop calling it 'classified information' and start calling it 'tax returns.'"

James Corden: "What is it with Trump? Nuclear missiles, the FBI director, the cast of 'the Apprentice,' this guy's always got to be firing something."

James Corden: "The agencies told Trump that rising tides could invade our coastal cities. He said, 'That's fine as long as the tides speak English and aren't from any Muslim countries.'"

Jimmy Fallon: "I read that the West Wing is currently undergoing $3.4 million in renovations. It sounds like a lot, but you got to remember, they're child-proofing the whole house."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump this afternoon addressed the North Korean missile program and said if they continue to threaten the United States, quote, 'they will be met with a fire and fury like the world has never seen.' Yeah, that ought to cool things down. God forbid Trump's ever put in charge of a hostage situation. 'Kill a hostage, you don't have the balls.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Today, President Trump warned that if North Korea does not stop escalating its nuclear program, they'll be met with 'fire and fury like the world has never seen.' Then Melania said, 'Don't worry, he says that to me every night and nothing ever happens.'"

Conan O'Brien: "This week, President Trump plans to travel to New York. He's going to go to New York. Plans to eat some pizza, then deport the Statue of Liberty."

Conan O'Brien: "There's a new online quiz that tells you if you would be allowed to enter the US under President Trump's immigration policies. Consists of a single question: Are you a swimsuit model?"

Conan O'Brien: "McDonald's plans to nearly double its restaurants in China. In other words, China is getting rid of its one-child policy and its one-chin policy."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, August 16, 2017
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:02:21 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 16, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- St. Cloud (MN) Times: Mille Lacs Band Gets Federal Grant To Study Walleye Habitat.
- Washington Times: With Wildlife And Scenic Views, Interior Department Attracts Large Social Media Following.
- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Public Lands Group Launches Ad Campaign Targeting Zinke.
- Missouri.net: Missouri Congressman Clay: We Must Protect Historic Sites Connected To The Civil Rights Movement.
- U.S. News & World Report: More Closed-Door Meetings For Planned Regional Water System.
- The Hill: Trump, Don't Take Our National Parks Away From Veterans.

- High Country (CO) News: Under New Interior Department Plan, Sage Grouse Will Suffer.
- Bangor (ME) Daily News: Zinke Has Only One Legal Option For Katahdin Woods And Waters: Retain Its Monument Status.
- The Hill: Congress, Keep The West Wild — Or At Least What's Left Of It.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- North Dakota Awarded $10 Million From Feds For DAPL Protest Costs.
- Tribes Grapple With Contaminated Water, Federal Bureaucracy.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Investing In Native Youth And Their Communities.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Reuters: Jurors Begin Deliberating In Trial Of Four Bundy Supporters In Nevada.
- Houston Chronicle: Large West Texas Wastewater Spill In Delaware River Diluted By Rain, BLM Says.
- Law360: Lawson Exploration Gets OK To Drill During Tribal Row.
- Medford (OR) Mail Tribune: Grizzly Peak Trail System Open Again.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Editorial: Oppose Oil Drilling Off Florida Coast.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- US: 'Zero' Chance Of Colorado River Water Shortage In 2018.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Chicago Sun-Times: Projected Duck Numbers: What They Mean, Ducks Unlimited Gives Context.
- White Mountain (AZ) Independent: Progress Seen In Mexican Gray Wold Recovery Efforts.

National Park Service

- The Hill: Lincoln Memorial Vandalized With Spray Paint.
- Los Angeles Times: Fearing Violence, California Lawmakers Ask National Park Service To Rescind Permit For San Francisco 'Alt-right' Rally.
- USA Today: Gettysburg Park Officials: Confederate Monuments Here To Stay.
- DCist: Mayor, D.C. Councilmembers Want Statue Of Confederate General On Federal Land Removed.
- San Francisco Chronicle: Traffic Jams Choking Yosemite.
- Los Angeles Times: Wildfire In Yosemite National Park Swells To 1,600 Acres Near Wawona, Historic Hotel.
- Flathead (MT) Beacon: Glacier Park Fire Grows As More Hot, Dry Weather Arrives.
- U.S. News & World Report: Public Comment Period Extended For Zion National Park Plans.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- ABC: US Opens Door To Diplomacy As North Korea Backs Down From Guam Threat.
- Marianas Variety: Palau President Confident US Can Protect Pacific Region.
- Newburgh (IL) Gazette: CNMI Governor Backs Trump's Stance On North Korea.
- YouTube: President Trump To Governor Calvo On North Korea Threats: "We Are With You 1000%".
- YouTube: A Special Message to the People of Guam from Governor Calvo.
- National Geographic: Yap Islands Seek Sustainable Tourism Development While Balancing China, U.S. Influence.
- Marianas Variety: Guam Hopes For Real Pause In North Korea Threats.
- Marianas Variety: Nothing On The Table Yet For Tinian Divert Facility, Officials Say.
- Marianas Variety: Kilili: Choice Providers Triple For Marianas Vets.
- Marianas Variety: NMI Remits Annual $30M Settlement Fund Obligation In Full.
- Marianas Variety: CW Bill 'Will Not Have Significant Impact'.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Judge Blocks 176 Million Ton Coal Mine Expansion In Montana.

US Geological Survey

- U.S. News & World Report: Feds Award Money To Boost Warnings For West Coast Quakes.

Top National News

- New York Times: Trump Receives Near-Universal Criticism For Latest Remarks On Charlottesville.
- Reuters: Trump Signs Executive Order Streamlining Approval Process For Infrastructure Projects.
- Fox News: Trump, Nunes: Obama Administration Ignored Warnings On Russia.
- Reuters: Trump To Roll Back Obama-Era Flood Risk Building Standards.
- Associated Press: Pruitt Plans To Rewrite Obama-Era Limits On Coal Wastewater Pollution.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Mr. Trump Makes A Spectacle Of Himself."
 - "Let Prisoners Learn While They Serve."
- Washington Post.
 - "Trump Asked China To Rein In Its Unreasonable Trade Practices. It Should."
 - "Maryland Needs To Go On A Prison Guard Hiring Spree."
 - "The Nation Can Only Weep."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump And The CEOs."
 - "The Wage Paradox Explained."
 - "Medicaid's Opioid Fix."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Mille Lacs Band Gets Federal Grant To Study Walleye Habitat.

The St. Cloud \(MN\) Times (8/15) reports that the Interior Department "announced Tuesday that it allocated $993,310 to Minnesota state wildlife agencies" through the Tribal Wildlife Grant and State Wildlife Grants programs. It is among $48 million being distributed the Interior Department announced Tuesday. Among the grants is a Tribal Wildlife Grant of $199,07 to "help the Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe identify walleye habitat in Mille Lacs Lake."

WLUC-TV Marquette, MI (8/15) reports that the Interior Department announced "$196,321 in funding to Michigan Native tribes and more than $1.3 million to Michigan state wildlife agencies through the Tribal Wildlife Grant (TWG) program and the State Wildlife Grants (SWG) program." In announcing the funding, Interior Deputy Secretary David Bernhardt said, "The work of Michigan Native American tribes and state wildlife agencies is absolutely critical to wildlife conservation in the United States. We're thrilled to be able to collaborate with them, their local communities, and other partners to ensure important fish, wildlife, habitat and cultural needs are met. Tribal and state wildlife grants are foundational to protecting our nation's wildlife legacy, including game and non-game species."

The Hartford \(CT\) Courant (8/15, Hladky) reports that "Connecticut is getting $500,727 in federal grants to support wildlife conservation projects designed to preserve "imperiled species and habitats," U.S. Department of the Interior officials announced Tuesday." Bernhardt said that, "The Trump Administration is working hard with states and local communities to find solutions that are driven at the local level, rather than in Washington, D.C."

With Wildlife And Scenic Views, Interior Department Attracts Large Social Media Following.

The Washington Times (8/15, Wolfgang) report that the Interior Department's "massive online following" has "remained constant...driven primarily by daily posts featuring wildlife, scenic landscapes and breathtaking views of the nation's national parks." The Department's "following on Twitter, Instagram, Tumblr and other platforms is rivaled only by NASA, the Pentagon and President Trump." The Times adds that Interior "views its accounts in a fundamentally different way. A key aspect is offering Americans an easy way to see gorgeous sites from across the country that they never have viewed in person and, in some cases, may have never even heard of." According to the Times, the Interior Department has 3.95 million Twitter followers, compared with the Energy Department's 753,000 and the Justice Department's 1.45 million.

Public Lands Group Launches Ad Campaign Targeting Zinke.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/15, Scott) reports that "with less than 10 days remaining before Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's deadline to determine whether some national monuments should be scaled back, a local conservation group has launched a high-ticket ad campaign calling on the Whitefish native to protect public lands." In addition to the $500,000 ad purchase, the Western Values Project "released a new poll claiming support is slipping for Zinke in his home state of Montana." According to the poll, "Zinke's job approval fell after voters heard about efforts to privatize public lands and dropped further after voters heard about potential plans to privatize public campgrounds." Interior Spokesperson Heather Swift said, "It is based in fiction and intentionally misleads respondents. The pollster falsely states there is a proposal to privatize and decrease public lands. This could not be farther from the truth. No such proposals exist because the Secretary is ardently against such proposals."

Missouri Congressman Clay: We Must Protect Historic Sites Connected To The Civil Rights Movement.

The Missourinet (8/15, Hauswirth) reports that the House has approved Rep. William Lacy Clay's "bipartisan bill to authorize the National Park Service to establish a program to protect places that were significant in the 20th century civil rights struggle." Clay's bill "directs Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to identify and create a national network of historic sites, stories and educational programs connected to the modern civil rights movement." The legislation is called the African American Civil Rights Network Act of 2017.

More Closed-Door Meetings For Planned Regional Water System.

The AP (8/15) reports that "Santa Fe County, four pueblos and the U.S. Department of the Interior have scheduled more closed-door meetings this week about roadway disputes that threaten to impede funding for a planned regional water system in the Pojoaque Basin." The Bureau of Indian Affairs "says some county roads trespass on tribal land." According to the article, "the meetings suggest an intensified emphasis on reaching a resolution to the disputes as the Bureau of Reclamation prepares to begin construction on the water system next summer."

Trump, Don't Take Our National Parks Away From Veterans.

For the "Pundits" blog of The Hill (8/15, Eaton, Contributor), Major General Paul D. Eaton, US Army (Ret.), managing director of Vet Voice Foundation, writes that veterans "value our nation's public lands – places that we as service members fought to protect, and that we seek out for healing and renewal after coming home from war." For this reason, Eaton feels veterans "must speak out about the Trump administration's troubling approach to public lands stewardship." He claims that "although they have only been in office for a short time, the president and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke have already threatened the great strides on conservation and responsible energy development that have taken place under the last few presidential administrations." Eaton concludes that "if President Trump and his administration really care about veterans, they would do well to remember how critical our national parks and public lands are to us, and to all Americans, and stop taking steps to diminish them by doing favors for their friends in the fossil fuel industry."

Under New Interior Department Plan, Sage Grouse Will Suffer.

In a piece for the High Country \(CO\) News (8/15, Lyons), James Lyons, a senior fellow at the Center for American Progress and lecturer and research scholar at the Yale School of Forestry and Environmental Studies, wants Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "to recognize that the greatest threat to economic development in sage grouse territory is not the existing sage grouse conservation plans, but the threat of losing the 'regulatory certainty' that they provide." He warns, "lose the predictability necessary to encourage investment in the sagebrush landscape, and its communities are likely to become endangered along with the Greater sage grouse." According to Lyons, "the Zinke directive, announced in conjunction with the sage grouse review, risks snatching defeat from the jaws of victory, particularly as it emphasizes that sage grouse conservation must not impede President Donald Trump's efforts to achieve American energy dominance."

Additional commentary appeared in the Powell \(WY\) Tribune (8/15, Olson).

Zinke Has Only One Legal Option For Katahdin Woods And Waters: Retain Its Monument Status.

In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/15, Moffa, Schindler), Anthony Moffa, a visiting professor of law, and Sarah Schindler, a professor of law and Glassman Faculty Research Scholar at the University of Maine School of Law in Portland, argue that the only recommendation that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke can make regarding the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument that is “legally and equitably permissible” is that “the monument status must be retained.” The authors argue that the other options of revocation and diminishment would “overstep the president’s authority.” According to the authors only the option of retaining the designation “complies with the Antiquities Act, upholds the agreement between the former landowners and the government, and respects the investment that people of this state have already made in and around the monument.”

Congress, Keep The West Wild — Or At Least What’s Left Of It.

For the “Pundits” blog of The Hill (8/15, Super, Contributor), David A. Super, a professor of law at Georgetown Law, urges Congress to reject the proposed Historic Routes Preservation Act, S. 468 and H.R. 3270. According to Super, “far from ‘preserving’ anything, this legislation would likely ruin what little we still have of the wild West, from open landscapes to rugged communities to truly wild animals.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

North Dakota Awarded $10 Million From Feds For DAPL Protest Costs.

The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (8/15, Hageman) reports that the Justice Department “awarded North Dakota $10 million to help cover the costs associated with the Dakota Access Pipeline protests, the state’s senators said Tuesday.” According to the Tribune, “the $10 million represents only a portion of the $38 million the state and Morton County have incurred from the monthslong protests, during which some 1,400 law enforcement officers assisted. “Sen. John Hoeven (R-ND) “previously said the state shouldn’t expect the federal government to cover the entire bill, and Gov. Doug Burgum’s request to President Donald Trump for a major disaster declaration was denied earlier this year.” The Tribune adds that “the state applied for almost $14 million through the DOJ’s Emergency Federal Law Enforcement Assistance program in late June.”

The Washington Times (8/15, Richardson) reports that “North Dakota has wrangled with federal authorities over the $38 million bill since the last holdouts were cleared from the Army Corps of Engineers-managed floodplain in February as part of the $1.1 million cleanup effort.” The Times adds that “the Obama administration had resisted calls for federal law-enforcement assistance during the protest, which kicked into high gear in August 2016 as activists tried to block construction on the final piece of the 1,172-mile, four-state project.” According to the Times, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) “rejected a request for a major disaster declaration in May, which was seen as a long shot, given that the incident was human-caused.” KXMC-TV Minot, ND (8/15, Kelly) and FYR-TV Bismarck, ND (8/15, Evans) also report on their websites.

Tribes Grapple With Contaminated Water, Federal Bureaucracy.

The Oregonian (8/15, Kaljur, Beheler) reports on the “numerous forces” working “against tribes and their quest to provide safe water to their members.” According to the article, “tribal members must cope with extensive mining and farming activities on or near their land, whether approved by the tribe or not.” Also, “the federal government carved reservations in remote and confined pockets of land, making it difficult to provide reliable infrastructure” and “they often lack the money to improve their water systems themselves, which means they have to navigate a complicated puzzle of government agencies to shore up funding.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Investing In Native Youth And Their Communities.

In a piece for the Huffington Post (8/15, Villanueva, Contributor), Edgar Villanueva, Vice President of Programs and Advocacy at the Schott Foundation for Public Education, writes that “due to historical trauma, chronically underfunded programs, and broken promises on the part of the U.S. government, youth from Native American communities experience many educational, health, and economic disparities compared with their peers in the general population.” He says that “to raise awareness and challenge the philanthropic community to better resource movements to support healthy living and learning for Native children and youth, the Schott Foundation and Nike’s N7 Fund, in partnership with Native Americans in Philanthropy, convened a group of Native education, health care, and human services experts along with several foundations in Washington, DC, in late June.” Native American offices from the Bureau of Indian Education were among the presenters.

Bureau Of Land Management

Jurors Begin Deliberating In Trial Of Four Bundy Supporters In Nevada.

Reuters (8/16, Smith) reports that “jurors at a federal court in Nevada began deliberations on Tuesday in the retrial of four men accused of numerous charges for acting as gunmen in the 2014 standoff led by renegade rancher Cliven Bundy against federal authorities.” Assistant U.S. Attorney Nadia Ahmed “said in closing arguments that the defendants acted in concert with other militia members to threaten and intimidate U.S. Bureau of Land Management and National Park Service officers.” According to the article, “if convicted, the defendants face a minimum of 57 years in prison.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (8/15, Ferrara) and the Arizona Republic (8/15, Anglen).

Large West Texas Wastewater Spill In Delaware River Diluted By Rain, BLM Says.

The Houston Chronicle (8/15, Eaton) reports that “heavy rain may have softened the environmental blow of a large wastewater spill in the Delaware River near West Texas oil fields earlier this month, officials say.” The wastewater spill was “several times larger than the typical 200-to-300 barrel spills in the region.” However, “a rain storm lifted water levels in the Delaware 3 feet higher than normal, diluting the effect of the wastewater spill.” The Bureau of Land Management and “other agencies including the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department will continue to monitor the impact to hundreds of river-dwelling species, including threatened species such as the Texas hornshell mussel.” James Amos, a supervisory petroleum engineering tech at the BLM’s field office in Carlsbad, New Mexico, said, “It didn’t do as much damage as it could have. Chances are very good the dilution may have saved the species.”

Lawson Exploration Gets OK To Drill During Tribal Row.

Law360 (8/15, Powell) reports that “a federal judge gave Slawson Exploration Co. Inc. the green light Tuesday to continue drilling operations in North Dakota while the Interior Board of Land Appeals hears a challenge by the Mandan, Hidatsa & Arikara Nation.” U.S. District Judge Daniel L. Hovland “granted Slawson’s motion for a temporary restraining order setting aside an IBLA decision that stayed eight drilling permits the Bureau of Land Management gave to the company.”

Grizzly Peak Trail System Open Again.

The Medford \(OR\) Mail Tribune (8/15, Pfeil) reports that the Bureau of Land Management “reopened the Grizzly Peak Trail system Tuesday afternoon, saying that the five fires that closed the trails last week have been fully contained.” The trail was “closed Aug. 11 following a series of lightning-sparked fires in the area, according to BLM and previous reports.”

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Editorial: Oppose Oil Drilling Off Florida Coast.

In an editorial, the Sarasota \(FL\) Herald-Tribune (8/15) urges “Floridians who want to oppose expanded oil drilling off the Florida coasts” to “express their views — by Thursday,” the deadline for the public comment period “on an initial but important phase of the Trump administration’s ‘full consideration’ of a new plan to significantly increase offshore drilling.” The paper says that “the mere consideration of dramatic expansion into the eastern Gulf — as a new plan might allow — is bad for several basic reasons.” It argues that “the oil trapped in those reserves is not necessary to fuel the American economy," and also points to environmental and national security reasons.

Bureau Of Reclamation

US: 'Zero' Chance Of Colorado River Water Shortage In 2018.

The AP (8/15, RITTER, ELLIOTT) reports that "U.S. water managers said Tuesday there will be no water cutbacks in 2018 for millions of residents and farmers served by the Lake Mead reservoir on the Colorado River that lies behind the Hoover Dam." Rose Davis, spokeswoman for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, said, "The projection indicates there is no chance of shortage in 2018. Zero." According to a 24-month projection by the BOR, "January water levels are expected to be 8 feet (2.5 meters) above the point that triggers a drought-shortage declaration on the lake."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by the Wichita \(KS\) Eagle (8/15, RITTER, ELLIOTT), the Chicago Tribune (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Daily Mail (8/15), the Elko \(NV\) Daily Free Press (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the New York Daily News (8/15), the Olean \(NY\) Times Herald (8/15, Ritter), Philly \(PA\) (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Sacramento \(CA\) Bee (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Sayre \(PA\) Morning Times (8/15, Ritter), the Washington Times (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), the Boston Herald (8/15), the Washington Post (8/15, Ritter Dan Elliott |, Ap), WDEF-TV Chattanooga \(TN\) Chattanooga, TN (8/15), KSL-TV Salt Lake City Salt Lake City (8/15, Ritter, Elliott), and KTNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (8/15).

Additional coverage was provided by the Las Vegas \(NV\) Review-Journal (8/15, Brean) and the Arizona Republic (8/15, Loomis).

Fish And Wildlife Service

Projected Duck Numbers: What They Mean, Ducks Unlimited Gives Context.

The Chicago Sun-Times (8/15, Bowman) reports that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Tuesday "released its report on 2017 Trends in Duck Breeding Populations, based on surveys conducted in May and early June by FWS and the Canadian Wildlife Service." According to the article, "total populations were estimated at 47.3 million breeding ducks in the traditional survey area, which is similar to last year's estimate of 48.4 million and is 34 percent above the 1955-2016 long-term average."

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (8/15, Masson) reports that Tom Moorman, Ducks Unlimited's chief scientist, "said the report is mostly positive for duck hunters." Moorman said, "The survey indicates that wetland conditions and populations of most frequently harvested ducks remain above the long-term average, and for most species, populations were at or above those from last year," he said. "This is great news for waterfowlers who can now turn their attention to preparing habitat, tuning up dogs and relentlessly watching the weather forecasts for the onset of fall and winter weather that will push the birds on their annual southward migration."

Progress Seen In Mexican Gray Wolf Recovery Efforts.

In an op-ed for the White Mountain \(AZ\) Independent (8/15, Ammons), Jim Ammons, chairman of the Arizona Game and Fish Department, sees "great progress" in the "long hard struggle to recover the Mexican wolf in Arizona." Ammons points to the recent release of a draft wolf recovery plan revision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service recently issued "that the Arizona Game and Fish Commission has been requesting for years." In the piece, Ammons refutes "the false information from certain organizations that object to elements of the plan without recognizing that recovery actions are based on new scientific information."

Additional coverage of the plans was provided by the Santa Fe \(NM\) Reporter (8/16, Miller).

National Park Service

Lincoln Memorial Vandalized With Spray Paint.

In its "Blog Briefing Room" blog The Hill (8/15, Beavers) reports "the Lincoln Memorial in Washington was vandalized with red spray paint." According to the National Park Service, "the graffiti found on a pillar at the monument appeared to say 'f--- law.'" The NPS said that "a preservation crew is already working to remove the graffiti, which was discovered early Tuesday morning.”

Also reporting are Reuters (8/15, Simpson), U.S. News & World Report (8/15, Trimble), Fox News (8/15), CNN International (8/15, Green), the Washington Post (8/15, Moyer), the Washington Times (8/15, Ernst), ABC News (8/15, Talwar, Shankar), TIME (8/15, Segarra), the New York Post (8/15, Lapin), the Atlanta Journal-Constitution (8/15, Nortunen), BBC News \(UK\) (8/15), the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (8/16), ABC Radio Australia (8/16), Sputnik News (8/15), The Wrap (8/15, Boucher), WIMS-AM South Shore \(IN\) South Shore, IN (8/15), WUSA-TV Washington Washington (8/15), WRC-TV Washington Washington (8/15), WTTG-TV Washington Washington (8/15), and WTVR-TV Richmond \(VA\) Richmond, VA (8/15).

Fearing Violence, California Lawmakers Ask National Park Service To Rescind Permit For San Francisco ‘Alt-right’ Rally.

The Los Angeles Times (8/15, McGreevy) reports that “citing concern over violent clashes at a Charlottesville rally of white nationalists last weekend, a group of California lawmakers called Tuesday for the National Park Service to rescind a permit issued for a pro-Trump rally scheduled for Aug. 26 in San Francisco.” The conservative Patriot Prayer, organized by blogger Joey Gibson, is “scheduled at Crissy Field, a park popular with families and tourists, wrote three San Francisco Democrats, state Sen. Scott Wiener and Assemblymen Phil Ting, and David Chiu in a letter to the service.” The three wrote, “Allowing a likely violent rally of White Supremacists so close to all of this is of deep concern to us. While we believe in the right to free speech and free assembly, we believe the National Park Service does not have the capacity to safely control this situation and therefore should not be issuing a permit for this rally at Crissy Field.”

The AP (8/15, GECKER, ELIAS) reports that the National Park Service “gave the organization permission last week to hold a three-hour rally in a federal park along the bay within San Francisco.”

Also reporting are Politico (8/15, Cheney, Bade), the San Francisco Chronicle (8/15, Matier, Ross), and Fox News (8/15).

Gettysburg Park Officials: Confederate Monuments Here To Stay.

USA Today (8/15, Levy) reports that “despite national discourse on the appropriateness of Confederate monuments, the ones in Gettysburg are not going anywhere, according to park officials.” The Gettysburg National Military Park, “which memorializes soldiers who fought and died during the Battle of Gettysburg, including men who served in the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia, has not received any complaints or requests related to the monuments, said Katie Lawhon, park spokeswoman.” Lawhon said, “These memorials, erected predominantly in the early and mid-20th century, are an important part of the cultural landscape.”

Additional coverage was provided by WGAL-TV Lancaster, PA (8/15, Weinstock) and WUSA-TV Washington (8/15, Levy).

Mayor, D.C. Councilmembers Want Statue Of Confederate General On Federal Land Removed.

DCist (8/15, Sadon) reports that “the mayor, more than half of the D.C. Council, and the D.C. attorney general have joined activists in calling for the removal of a statue of a Confederate general from federal land in Judiciary Square.” In letter to the acting director of the National Park Service calling for a statue of Pike to be taken down, At-large Councilmember David Grosso, said, “Albert Pike was a strong proponent of slavery and fought to try to preserve that in this country. Regardless of what he did in other parts of his life, it’s inappropriate to honor him.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Huffington Post (8/15, Subberwal).

Traffic Jams Choking Yosemite.

The San Francisco Chronicle (8/15, Sahagun) reports that “despite promises of a ‘far less cluttered and confused Yosemite’ made in a 2013 management plan — an effort to address the congestion without limiting the number of tourists — more vehicles than ever, up to 8,200 on a summer day, are clogging the valley known for its granite cliffs and waterfalls.” Chip Jenkins, acting superintendent of Yosemite National Park, said, “Very significant traffic congestion is a truly hard dilemma we’re faced with. Getting stuck in a line of cars for two to three hours after entering the gate is not the kind of quality experience we want people to have.” Yosemite is “one of a growing number of national parks experimenting with transportation strategies to reduce crowding.”

Wildfire In Yosemite National Park Swells To 1,600 Acres Near Wawona, Historic Hotel.

The Los Angeles Times (8/15, Rocha) reports that “a wildfire in Yosemite National Park continued to grow Tuesday near the community of Wawona, home of the historic Big Trees Lodge, the park said.” As the blaze “inched closer to homes, the National Park Service asked to residents to be prepared to evacuate.” According to park spokesman Scott Gediman, “the hotel, formerly known as the Wawona Hotel, was not under immediate threat.”

Glacier Park Fire Grows As More Hot, Dry Weather Arrives.

The Flathead \(MT\) Beacon (8/15, Franz) reports that “a fire burning in the mountains east of Lake McDonald in Glacier National Park has grown to 100 acres and National Park Service officials say it is possible the nearby Sperry Chalet may not reopen this year.” According to the article, “the lightning-caused Sprague Fire is burning above Crystal Ford on the Gunsight Pass Trail, the primary route from the Lake McDonald Lodge to Sperry Chalet.” Spokesperson Lauren Alley “said the fire is not immediately threatening the historic chalet – built by the Great Northern Railway in 1913 – but firefighters are preparing to implement structural protection measures if necessary.”

Public Comment Period Extended For Zion National Park Plans.

The AP (8/15) reports that Zion National Park officials “announced they will extend the public comment period on a plan to require reservations to get into Zion National Park.” The National Park Service has “extended the deadline from Monday to Friday because the website for submissions was down for maintenance this past weekend.” The NPS is “considering a year-round online reservation system for access to Zion and its most popular trails and attractions in response to a massive surge in visitation at the park.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

US Opens Door To Diplomacy As North Korea Backs Down From Guam Threat.

ABC World News Tonight (8/15, story 4, 1:15, Muir) reported that after trading threats with President Trump, there is a “new message” from North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, who said his nation “will watch stupid American behavior a bit longer and warning against extremely dangerous reckless actions on the Korean Peninsula.” ABC’s Martha Raddatz added, “It does appear Kim Jong-Un blinked and backed away in what could have resulted in a major military conflict, but this does not in any way end the threat from this volatile dictator.”

Reuters (8/15, Kim, Torbati) reports asked by reporters on Tuesday about the North Korean delay, Secretary of State Tillerson said, “We continue to be interested in finding a way to get to dialogue but that’s up to him.” State Department spokeswoman Heather Nauert also said North Korea’s decision to hold off on plans to attack Guam was not enough and Pyongyang would have to show it was “intent on denuclearizing the Korean peninsula.” The New York Post (8/15, Fredericks) reports that when asked about Kim’s decision to put a planned launch of missiles toward Guam on hold, Tillerson replied, “I have no response to his decisions at all at this time.”

The AP (8/15, Klug, Tong-Hyung) reports both Koreas and the US on Tuesday also “signaled their willingness to avert a deepening crisis, with each suggesting a path toward negotiations.” The “tentative interest” in diplomacy follows “unusually combative threats” between President Trump and North Korea. The AP also cautions that next week’s start of US-South Korean military exercises “that enrage the North each year could make diplomacy even more difficult.”

The Washington Post (8/15, Lamothe) says that with next week’s drills, the US “faces a dangerous balancing act: How do you reassure allies in the region that you are ready for a war with North Korea without provoking an actual conflict in the process?” North Korea denounced the exercise on Monday, but it has also “drawn scrutiny” from Russia and China, which have “suggested cancelling the operation to alleviate tensions.”

On ABC World News Tonight (8/15, story 4, 1:15, Muir), Martha Raddatz said Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Joseph Dunford “told me military options must remain on the table.” The Wall Street Journal (8/15, Cheng, Page), meanwhile, reports North Korea’s reversal on Guam was typical rhetoric from Pyongyang. The Journal also says that China most likely sent back-channel messages to the North Koreans in recent days warning them against firing missiles toward Guam.

Asked on Fox News: Fox & Friends (8/15) about North Korea’s decision not to fire missiles at Guam, former Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski said, “I’m not surprised by this at all. What we have seen from previous administrations for 30 years is trying to coddle North Korea, trying to work with them. What this President said was, ‘You don’t want to mess with me.’”

He is a man of business. He and Gen. Mattis, the Secretary of Defense was very clear. If North Korea launches a missile at us, Gen. Mattis said it will be a declaration of war. And we are the world's greatest super power. The President of the United States was very clear that if North Korea tries to do something against the United States, he will react swiftly decisively and it will be complete annihilation and I don't think they are ready for that."

David E. Sanger writes in the New York Times (8/15, Sanger) that "during his rise to power, President Trump proved he has a finely honed sense of what threats, intimidation and bluster can accomplish." But in recent days, he has "received reminders...that geopolitics operates with a different set of rules than real estate or political campaigns." South Korean President Moon Jae-in, for example, was so alarmed by Trump's threat to bring "fire and fury" to the North "that he warned on national television on Tuesday that he would never tolerate a unilateral strike against Pyongyang's nuclear and missile sites because he fears the price his country would pay in lives and property." Sanger writes that the US is "always an outsize player abroad," and its statements "often carrying more effect in foreign lands than at home. But Mr. Trump's use of bald threats and warnings of military intervention have accelerated the laws of unintended consequences."

Mark Helprin, a senior fellow of the Claremont Institute, writes in the Wall Street Journal (8/15) that the North Korean crisis can be defused peacefully and to the US' advantage if it decides to carry a bigger stick and speak more softly.

Ellison: Kim Jong-un More Responsible Than Trump. Townhall (8/15, Pavlich) reports Rep. Keith Ellison over the weekend "made the argument that President Donald Trump is worse than North Korea's Kim Jong Un." Ellison is quoted as saying, "You have this guy making bellicose threats against somebody else who has very little to lose over there. Kim Jong Un, the world always thought he was not a responsible leader. Well he is acting more responsibly than this guy is."

Palau President Confident US Can Protect Pacific Region.

Marianas Variety (8/14) reports that Palau President Tommy Remengesau "said he had faith that the United States 'will do all it can to protect everyone in the region with the same commitment they have for the mainland U.S.'" Remengesau said Palau stands "with the people of Guam and the region in our concern for the well-being of everyone."

CNMI Governor Backs Trump's Stance On North Korea.

The Newburgh \(IL\) Gazette (8/11, Boyd) reports that "nuclear-armed North Korea mocked President Donald Trump as 'bereft of reason' on Thursday, raising the stakes in their standoff with an unusually detailed plan to send a salvo of missiles towards the U.S. territory of Guam." Homeland Security spokeswoman Jenna Gaminde has "previously told the media that Guam residents would be immediately alarmed by sirens from the All-Hazards Alert Warning System located across the small Pacific island in case North Korea delivers its promise to strike Guam 'within two weeks'."

President Trump To Governor Calvo On North Korea Threats: "We Are With You 1000%".

YouTube (8/11) hosted a video of a conversation between President Trump and Gov. Eddie Calvo.

A Special Message to the People of Guam from Governor Calvo.

YouTube (8/11) hosted a video of a message from Gov. Eddie Calvo regarding North Korea threats, to the people of Guam.

Yap Islands Seek Sustainable Tourism Development While Balancing China, U.S. Influence.

The National Geographic (8/15, Lin) reports that the Yap Islands are involved in a power play between the US and China.

Guam Hopes For Real Pause In North Korea Threats.

Marianas Variety (8/16, Cagurangan, Villahermosa, Todiño) reports that "while Guam was bracing for the much-ballyhooed Aug. 15 crack of doom, government officials heaved a sigh of relief when North Korea's state-run newspaper reported that the 'Supreme Leader' had delayed a decision on firing missiles toward the island." Lt. Gov. Ray Tenorio said at a press conference in Adelup, "Guam has been receiving information that the rhetoric has calmed down, especially from the leader of North Korea, and we are happy that he has taken a look at their plans and will be holding off on — or at least it appears — the imminent threat to Guam at this point," Tenorio said "there doesn't appear to be any indication that, based on what we are hearing, there will be any missiles fired at us in the near future or in the distant future.”

Additional coverage was provided by Marianas Variety (8/16).

Nothing On The Table Yet For Tinian Divert Facility, Officials Say.

Marianas Variety (8/16, Villahermosa) reports that “there is still nothing to discuss with respect to the lease of property that is to be used for the construction of a divert airfield on Tinian, according to CNMI officials interviewed by this reporter.” The U.S. Air Force “needs to lease some 200 acres of land at West Field on Tinian for the construction of a divert-airfield facility.”

However, “in a phone interview on Tuesday, Commonwealth Ports Authority board member Pete P. Reyes said nothing has been discussed yet about the matter.”

Killili: Choice Providers Triple For Marianas Vets.

Marianas Variety (8/16) reports that “after wrapping up a series of workshops on the Veterans Choice Program for veterans and dozens of local health-care providers on Rota, Tinian, and Saipan last week, U.S. Congressman Gregorio Kili Camacho Sablan announced that the number of community-care providers available to island veterans is now three times what it was a month ago.” Sablan said, “As of this week, we have nearly 70 health-care providers in the Marianas who are enrolled in the Choice network and are ready and able to serve our veterans — up from a little over 20 just a few weeks ago.”

NMI Remits Annual $30M Settlement Fund Obligation In Full.

Marianas Variety (8/16) reports that “the CNMI government, through the Department of Finance, continues to meet its obligation to the retirees of the CNMI, as it has remitted the full $30 million to the Settlement Fund as part of its annual obligation.” According to Finance Secretary Larrisa Larson, “as of fiscal year 2017, the Department of Finance has met its obligation by remitting a total of $33 million in the 3rd Quarter and paid the amount required by the Settlement Agreement and Budget Laws for FY 2017.” Larson said, “In the previous year, we fulfilled our obligation on time. This year, that goal has not changed as we continue to meet our obligations to the retirees. We want to ensure that our retirees receive their pensions in a timely manner.”

CW Bill ‘Will Not Have Significant Impact’.

Marianas Variety (8/16, Villahermosa) reports that Rep. Angel Demapan, vice chair of the House Committee on Federal, Foreign Affairs, “and who took part in the 902 talks with the U.S., said although H.R. 339 is now with the president and is likely to become law, it is still an extremely short-term fix that will not have a significant impact on the commonwealth.” Demapan said, “We are within 45 days of the end of fiscal year 2017. Legislation to give the hospital only a fraction of the CW slots needed to have adequate nurses on duty does nothing but short-change our people and our healthcare capacity. 350 additional slots do nothing more than show us that the U.S. Congress clearly does not recognize that a labor shortage exists here.”

Office Of Surface Mining

Judge Blocks 176 Million Ton Coal Mine Expansion In Montana.

The AP (8/15, Brown) reports that “a judge has blocked a proposed 176 million-ton (159 million-metric ton) expansion of an underground coal mine in central Montana because federal officials did not consider its climate change impacts.” The article adds that “U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy said that officials inflated the economic benefits of the 11-square mile (28-square kilometer) expansion of Signal Peak Energy’s Bull Mountain coal mine while ignoring its environmental impacts.” The AP also writes that the judge’s order bans the company in question, Signal Peak, from pursuing the expansion “pending further studies.”

Also reporting are the Washington Times (8/15, Brown), ABC News (8/15, Brown), Fox Business (8/15, Brown), the New Haven \(CT\) Register (8/15, Brown), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal, the Daily Mail (8/15, Brown), the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/15, Brown), Philly \(PA\) (8/15, Brown), and the Washington Post (8/15, Matthew Brown |, Ap).

US Geological Survey

Feds Award Money To Boost Warnings For West Coast Quakes.

The AP (8/15) reports that the U.S. Geological Survey has “awarded $4.9 million to six universities and a nonprofit to help advance an early warning system for earthquakes along the West Coast.” The USGS “says the ShakeAlert system could give people seconds or up to a minute of warning before strong shaking begins.” Congress allocated “$10.2 million in money to the USGS earthquake hazards program earlier this year.”

Additional coverage was provided by the Puget Sound \(WA\) Business Journal (8/15, Lamm).

Top National News

Trump Receives Near-Universal Criticism For Latest Remarks On Charlottesville.

President Trump’s news conference at Trump Tower on Tuesday, in which the President returned to his Saturday assertion that both white supremacists and counter-protesters were responsible for the weekend’s violence in Charlottesville, dominates all media. CBS spent the entirety of its Tuesday evening newscast on related stories, while ABC and NBC each spent between 18 and 19 minutes on Trump’s words and on Charlottesville. Many Capitol Hill Republicans were quick to distance themselves from the remarks, though rarely mentioning Trump by name, while Democrats crowded Twitter with tweets calling Trump’s words “sick,” and calling the President a “racist” and unfit for office.

Coverage is harshly critical of the President, with even commentators on Fox News expressing displeasure. As the New York Times (8/15, Grynbaum) reports, “For a few visceral minutes on Tuesday, television’s partisan lines dissolved as dumbfounded anchors reacted on-air... to Mr. Trump’s fiery remarks.” A “visibly stunned” Chuck Todd said on MSNBC, “What I just saw gave me the wrong kind of chills.” On Fox News, Kat Timpf, “unable to disguise her disgust,” said, “I have too much eye makeup on to start crying right now.” On that network, “normally a redoubt of Trump support, the 5 p.m. co-hosts of ‘The Specialists’ shook their heads.” CNN’s Jake Tapper said in closing his show, “To anybody out there watching today who is confused and thinks, ‘I thought that the Klan and neo-Nazis and white supremacists, I thought there was no debate about this thing among civilized people’ – there isn’t a debate about it.”

Anthony Mason opened the CBS Evening News (8/15, lead story, 7:20) by saying, “There was no script this time, no prepared statement. President Trump said today what he really believes happened in Charlottesville. Flashing anger at times, the President said both sides, the white supremacists and the counter-protesters, are to blame for the violence that left one person dead and 35 injured. We have never seen a presidential news conference quite like this one at Trump Tower this afternoon.” CBS’ Margaret Brennan said Trump “doubled down on his assertion from Saturday that both sides were to blame for the violence.”

Lester Holt said in opening NBC Nightly News (8/15, lead story, 4:40), “If President Trump’s words yesterday of unity and his condemnation of hate groups helped cool the embers of outrage following the Charlottesville, Virginia tragedy, this afternoon it took only minutes for him to reignite them with a verbal flamethrower.” NBC’s Hallie Jackson: “Tonight, a defining moment in Donald Trump’s presidency.” Trump: “You look at both sides, I think there’s blame on both sides. And I have no doubt it, and you don’t have any doubt about it either.” Jackson: “The President unfiltered and defiant.”

David Muir said in the lead story on ABC World News Tonight (8/15, lead story, 6:35) that the President is “facing outrage after taking 48 hours to condemn racism and to call out groups by name – much of that from leaders of his own party.” ABC’s Mary Bruce: “President Trump today defiant and doubling down, defending his decision to wait 48 hours after the hate-fueled violence in Charlottesville, to call out the white supremacists by name. ... Three days after white supremacists marched in the streets, the President is now back to square one, again blaming all sides. The President now labeling the counter-protesters the ‘alt-left’ and saying they deserve blame too.”

Chuck Todd said on NBC Nightly News (8/15, story 4, 1:20, Holt), “What his performance today made everything that happened yesterday, there was suspicion that it was a forced denouncement that he put out yesterday. But I think everybody was hoping that the President needs to speak for all of America, and he spoke for all of America yesterday. And then he didn’t. ... He’s lost the moral authority, as far as speaking for the country, and now he’s probably lost the moral authority for the Republican Party. Watch out for this. This is so bad that I think John Kelly tonight, the chief of staff, is going to have more than one phone call, trying to talk staffers or Administration officials from resigning.”

John Dickerson said on the CBS Evening News (8/15, story 3, 1:55, Mason), “He seemed more interested in assigning blame in his remarks to those on the left and ensuring that there was this equivalent understanding of what took place than he was interested in showing moral disgust that a president should show towards neo-Nazi protesters who represent beliefs that are entirely at odds with the United States, the country that he is the leader of."

On CNN's Situation Room (8/15), Wolf Blitzer described "a stunning display" in which the President "fanned the flames of the Charlottesville violence." Anderson Cooper said on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 (8/15) that with his comments, Trump "revealed so clearly who and what he really is." Charles Krauthammer said on Fox News Special Report (8/15), "What Trump did today was a moral disgrace."

The AP (8/15, Lemire, Pace) reports that the President "declared anew Tuesday 'there is blame on both sides' for the deadly violence...appearing to once again equate the actions of white supremacist groups and those protesting them." His remarks "were welcomed by former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke, who tweeted: 'Thank you President Trump for your honesty & courage to tell the truth.'" USA Today (8/15, Jackson) reports, "While Trump has been especially quick to denounce previous terrorist attacks, he was notably reticent to pinpoint the blame for one on Saturday that involved white supremacists." The New York Times (8/15, Shear, Haberman) reports that Trump "insisted that he did nothing wrong on Saturday when he declined to specifically condemn Nazi and white supremacist groups."

The Wall Street Journal (8/15, Nicholas) reports that Trump said, "You had a group on one side that was bad and you had a group on the other side that was also very violent and nobody wants to say that but I'll say it right now. You had a group on the other side that came charging in without a permit. They were very violent." The Washington Post (8/15, Nakamura) reports that Trump said counter-protesters "acted violently and should share the blame for the mayhem that left a woman dead and many injured." He called the driver of the car that killed Heather Heyer "and injured 19 a 'disgrace to himself, his family and the country,' but he stopped short of declaring the action a case of 'domestic terrorism.'" The Los Angeles Times (8/15, Bierman) says Trump "all but erased any credit he got on Monday for condemning white supremacists."

The New York Post (8/15, Fredericks) says a "defiant" Trump "angrily condemned 'the alt left' for what he said was their role in the weekend unrest." The Washington Examiner (8/15, Chaitin) reports that Trump said, "What about the alt-left that came charging at, as you say, at the alt-right? Do they have any assemblage of guilt?" The Washington Times (8/15, Boyer) reports that while Trump "has been roundly criticized for failing to blame white nationalists on Saturday," he "suggested he was right the first time." Trump said, "When I make a statement, I like to be correct. This event just happened. Before I make a statement, I like to know the facts. I don't want to rush into a statement."

Breitbart (8/15, Spiering) reports that Trump "grew combative after a throng of reporters started shouting questions about why he 'waited' to specifically condemn neo-Nazis and white nationalists." Townhall (8/15, Pavlich) reports that he "was heavily criticized over the weekend for failing to initially and specifically call out white supremacy as responsible for Saturday's violence." Bloomberg News (8/15, Olorunnipa, Epstein, Sink), Reuters (8/15, Malone, Mason), McClatchy (8/15, Welsh), Politico (8/15, McCaskill), The Hill (8/15, Easley), Roll Call (8/15, Bennett), and the Daily Caller (8/15) also report on the President's remarks.

Gregory Korte of USA Today (8/15) writes, "Combative, loud and defensive," Trump "delivered a stunning defense of right-wing white nationalists." The New York Times (8/15, Thrush, Haberman) writes that Trump "buoyed the white nationalist movement on Tuesday as no president has done in generations – equating activists protesting racism with the neo-Nazis and white supremacists. ... Never has he gone as far in defending their actions as he did during a wild, street-corner shouting-match of a news conference in the gilded lobby of Trump Tower."

Marc Fisher of the Washington Post (8/15) writes, "Trump said Tuesday that Saturday's confrontation 'was a horrible day'...but then the president turned to one of his favorite rhetorical tools, using casual language to strip away any definite blame, any clear moral stand, and instead send the message that nothing is certain, that everything is negotiable, that ethics are always situational."

The CBS Evening News (8/15, story 2, 1:50, Mason) reported, "The President said there was blame and violence on both sides. We wanted to get a fact check on what happened in Charlottesville." CBS' Paula Reid: "Pretty much every white supremacist demonstrator that I saw had some sort of weapon, either a helmet, a shield, a firearm, a baton. As for the counter-protesters, I would say most of them were unarmed. Many of them were members of the clergy, or they were students." NBC Nightly News (8/15, story 2, 2:45, Holt) had a similar report, while the New York Times (8/15, Qiu) examined the counter-protesters, writing that they

"certainly used clubs and dyed liquids against the white supremacists...but there is one stark difference between the violence on the two sides: The police said that James Alex Fields Jr. of Ohio drove his car into a crowd" and killed Heyer.

The Washington Post (8/15) editorializes, "Tuesday was a great day for David Duke and racists everywhere. The president of the United States all but declared that he has their backs. ... The nation can only weep." Dana Milbank writes in his Washington Post (8/15) column, "It looks more and more like the White Nationalist House. Trump, who this week retweeted an 'alt-right' conspiracy theorist and ally of white supremacists, continues to employ in his White House not just [Steve] Bannon and Stephen Miller, two darlings of the alt-right, but also Sebastian Gorka, who uses the platform to defend the embattled white man."

Washington Post (8/15, Rubin) conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin writes, "Trump apologists have run out of excuses and credibility. He was at the time plainly the more objectionable of the two main party candidates; in refusing to recognize that they did the country great harm. They can make amends by denouncing him and withdrawing all support. In short, Trump's embrace and verbal defense of neo-Nazis and white nationalists should be disqualifying from public service. All true patriots must do their utmost to get him out of the Oval Office as fast as possible."

The Chicago Sun-Times (8/15) editorializes, "Fellow Americans, do you share our sense of shame? ... If we had any doubt where Trump's true sentiments lie, he was right back at it. ... The haters who marched in Charlottesville carried photos of Trump. A better president – a better man – would have cried at the sight. This is how Donald Trump will go down in American history, as our bigot in chief."

Former Guantanamo chief prosecutor Col. Morris Davis tweeted, "Sad day in America when the president calls domestic terrorists who believe in racism and nazism 'very fine people.'"

Mitt Romney tweeted, "No, not the same. One side is racist, bigoted, Nazi. The other opposes racism and bigotry. Morally different universes." George W. Bush Administration ethics lawyer Richard Painter tweeted, "Until Bannon and all other Alt Right are fired, consumers should boycott companies whose CEO's won't quit Trump's manufacturing council." Ana Navarro tweeted, "I'm so disgusted and appalled by Trump, I've run out of words to describe him. I repeat, UNFIT to be President of the US. UNFIT to be human." Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Brandon McCarthy tweeted, "On one hand you had the Nazis who were violent & on the other the allied soldiers were very violent. So it's a draw. Many sides you see."

Wall Street Journal (8/15) columnist Jason Riley compares Trump's remarks to those of President Obama when five police officers were slain in Dallas last year.

Trump Blasts "Grandstanding" Of CEOs Who Have Quit Manufacturing Council. The CBS Evening News (8/15, story 6, 2:05, Mason) reported, "Six executives have now resigned in protest from the President's 28-member manufacturing council. The President lashed out at them." CBS' Julianna Goldman: "It was the third attack since the weekend on CEOs the President had handpicked as outside economic advisers like Intel CEO Brian Krzanich, who stood next to President Trump in February and praised his tax policies. After the President's response to the violence in Charlottesville, Krzanich and the leaders of Under Armour, Merck, and the Alliance for American Manufacturing stepped down. Mr. Trump lashed out in a tweet, 'For every CEO that drops out of the manufacturing council, I have many to take their place. Grandstanders should not have gone on.'" The New York Times (8/15, Gelles, Kelly) reports that Trump "suggested they had stepped down from his manufacturing advisory council because they were making products overseas." Trump said, "They're leaving out of embarrassment, because they make their products outside."

USA Today (8/15, Korte) reports that "a fourth member of the manufacturing council announced he would step down" on Tuesday. Alliance for American Manufacturing President Scott Paul said, "I'm resigning from the Manufacturing Jobs Initiative because it's the right thing for me to do." The Wall Street Journal (8/15, Ma) reports that US Steel's Mario Longhi also announced that he was resigning, but had no further comment. The Washington Post (8/15, Paquette) reports that AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka also resigned, "saying he refused to accept any tolerance of 'bigotry and domestic terrorism.'" Trumka said, "President Trump's remarks today repudiate his forced remarks yesterday about the KKK and neo-Nazis. We must resign on behalf of America's working people, who reject all notions of legitimacy of these bigoted groups."

The Wall Street Journal (8/15) says in an editorial that the exits show that corporate leaders are under pressure to distance themselves from Trump, and if he loses the support of the business community, his agenda will be imperiled. Politico (8/15, McCaskill) also reports.

Some Democrats Call Trump "Racist," Others Call For His Impeachment. McClatchy (8/15, Roarty) reports, "Democratic leaders say Donald Trump's inflammatory press conference Tuesday makes the choice clear: The president either sympathizes with Nazis, or he views them as part of his political base." Senate Minority Leader Schumer tweeted, "By saying he is not taking sides, Donald Trump clearly is. When David Duke and white supremacists cheer, you're doing it very, very wrong." The Huffington Post (8/15, Bobic) reports that Sen. Brian Schatz, "a frequent critic" of Trump, offered a "rebuke of the president that was strong even for him." Schatz tweeted, "As a Jew, as an American, as a human, words cannot express my disgust and disappointment. This is not my President."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal said on CNN's Situation Room (8/15), "What it revealed to me...is stunning abdication of moral leadership by the President of the United States." Sen. Mark Warner said on CNN's The Lead (8/15), "I'm shocked. I'm disappointed. I tried to give the President the benefit of the doubt on Monday. ... For him to come out today – it just seems like he can't help himself – and reopen this, and then equate and somehow moral equivalency on both sides... I guess at this point, I shouldn't be surprised anymore by the actions of this president, but he continues to surprise and, frankly, shock me."

Sen. Tammy Duckworth tweeted, "The terrorists who struck fear in the hearts of patriots around this country over the weekend are not 'fine people.'" Sen. Patrick Leahy tweeted, "Mr. President – Heather Heyer was not murdered by 'both sides.'" Sen. Al Franken tweeted, "When someone shows you who they are, you believe them. Trump is again letting white supremacists off the hook for #Charlottesville violence."

Rep. Lou Correa (D-CA) tweeted, "@POTUS shows that he fails to comprehend the #danger posed by #WhiteNationalist domestic #terrorism. #Nazis aren't good people." Rep. Debbie Dingell (D-MI) tweeted, "'Both sides' did not carry Nazi flags, drive a vehicle into innocent people or bring hatred to the streets of VA. There is no 'both sides.'" Rep. Ted Lieu (D-CA) tweeted, "I know some 'very fine' white supremacists said no one ever. Wait. Did the President say that? @realDonaldTrump is unfit to be President."

Rep. Kathleen Rice (D-NY) tweeted, "President Trump is a racist. Period. He's gone out of his way to make that clear, so let's not tip-toe around it. He's a racist." Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) tweeted, "In a statement only the KKK could (and did) applaud, @POTUS again defends white supremacists. I would ask why but afraid the answer is clear." Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) tweeted, "Without a teleprompter Trump just showed us his true colors – we should believe him."

The Washington Examiner (8/15, Siegel) reported, "Some House Democrats renewed calls for Congress to impeach...Trump on Tuesday after he resorted to blaming 'both sides' for" the violence in Charlottesville. The Examiner quoted Rep. Jackie Speier (D-CA) as tweeting, "POTUS is showing signs of erratic behavior and mental instability that place the country in grave danger. Time to invoke the 25th Amendment." And Rep. Gwen Moore (D-WI) "also called on Republicans to initiate impeachment proceedings against Trump." The Examiner added that Rep. Brad Sherman (D-CA) "earlier this summer introduced an article of impeachment accusing Trump of obstruction of justice and alleging he interfered with the ongoing federal investigation into Russia's meddling in the 2016 election."

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (8/15, Glauber) reports, "In a press release that Moore tweeted out, she said: 'My Republican friends, I implore you to work with us within our capacity as elected officials to remove this man as our commander-in-chief and help us move forward from this dark period in our nation's history.'"

Rep. Betty McCollum (D-MN) tweeted, "@realDonaldTrump's defense of the KKK & neo-Nazis is disgusting. I reject this vile comment & all Americans should." Rep. Jim McGovern (D-MA) tweeted, "This is sick. @realDonaldTrump is defending neo-Nazis and white supremacists – again. Let that sink in."

ABC's Vega: "Complete Sense Of Surprise" Inside White House. On ABC World News Tonight (8/15, story 2, 1:50) Muir asked correspondent Cecilia Vega, "Did the White House know this was coming today? The White House Chief of Staff John Kelly was off to the side during the news conference in Trump Tower, photographed by the New York Times. ... Were they ready for this today?" Vega: "Not at all. The people I'm talking to, among them, there's a complete sense of surprise inside this White House. Surprise that the President even took questions today. That wasn't supposed to happen." Mark Berman of the Washington Post tweeted, "Trump's astonishing presser today stunned staffers because he publicly expressed opinions he'd long shared privately."

The New York Times (8/15) editorializes, "Trump's behavior has become distressingly unsurprising. His default position is retaliation; when threatened, he succumbs to bombast. Washington politicians had hoped" that Kelly's appointment "would instill some discipline in his chaotic administration. With similar hopes, others are trying to get Mr. Trump to fire his resident provocateur, Stephen Bannon. But the root of the problem is not the personnel; it is the man at the top."

RNC Backs Trump, But GOP Lawmakers Quick To Criticize His Remarks. NBC Nightly News (8/15, story 3, 2:10, Holt) reported, "The President's remarks today triggered an instant backlash, not only among his critics, but within the very Republican party that he leads." NBC's Kasie Hunt: "Even before his stunning press conference ended, the fiery reaction beginning – swift condemnation from so many corners of American life, including members of the President's own party. Republicans upset he doubled down, blaming both sides again for the violence." The Hill (8/15, Easley) reports, "Frustrated Republicans lashed out" at Trump. Rep. Will Hurd (R-TX) said on CNN's Situation Room (8/15), "I don't think anybody should be looking at getting props from a grand dragon of the KKK as any kind of sign of success."

House Speaker Ryan tweeted, "We must be clear. White supremacy is repulsive. This bigotry is counter to all this country stands for. There can be no moral ambiguity." Republican commentator Rick Wilson tweeted in response, "Say his name, Mr. Speaker. History will remember." House Majority Whip Scalise tweeted, "I was clear about this bigotry & violence over the weekend and I'll repeat it today: We must defeat white supremacy and all forms of hatred."

Sen. Susan Collins tweeted, "The violence in Charlottesville was caused by racists & hate groups. We must unite against them." Sen. Dean Heller tweeted, "There is no defense or justification for evil in the form of white supremacists and Nazis. None." Sen. James Lankford tweeted, "Our words must not create confusion. The supremacy of any race is abhorrent, unAmerican & should be condemned by everyone. Full stop." Sen. John McCain tweeted, "There's no moral equivalency between racists & Americans standing up to defy hate & bigotry. The President of the United States should say so."

Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) tweeted, "@POTUS just doesn't get it. There is no moral equivalence between manifestations for or against #whitesupremacy. He's got to stop." Rep. Charlie Dent (R-PA) tweeted, "@POTUS must stop the moral equivalency! AGAIN, white supremacists were to blame for the violence in #Charlottesville." Rep. Leonard Lance (R-NJ) tweeted, "Mr. President, there is only one side: AGAINST white supremacists, neo-Nazis, anti-Semites & the KKK. They have no place in America or GOP."

Rep. Steve Stivers (R-OH) tweeted, "I don't understand what's so hard about this. White supremacists and Neo-Nazis are evil and shouldn't be defended." Rep. Ed Royce (R-CA) tweeted, "The President needs to clearly and categorically reject white supremacists. No excuses. No ambiguity." Rep. Pat Tiberi (R-OH) tweeted, "POTUS deflected from the fact that a young woman was killed & others were injured by a bigoted follower of the white supremacist movement."

However, McClatchy (8/14, Glueck, Clark) reports that "the Republican base is fiercely defending" Trump's response, and The Hill (8/15, Greenwood) reports that Republican National Committee spokeswoman Kayleigh McEnany "wrote in a tweet that the party supports what she called the president's 'message of love and inclusiveness,' insisting Trump's remarks on Tuesday marked a strong rebuke of hate."

Trump Administration Canceled Grant To Group Combating White Supremacism. The New York Times (8/15, Nixon, Sullivan) reports, "Days before leaving office in January, the Obama administration announced that it had awarded $400,000" to Life After Hate, "a Chicago-based organization dedicated to combating right-wing domestic extremists." But the new Trump Administration canceled the grant. Christian Piccolini, "a former skinhead who founded the group," said, "We never got an explanation for why our grant was rescinded." The Times reports, "Organizations that received funding from the Trump administration...work almost exclusively on programs to deal with terrorist threats from Islamic extremists, even as research shows that white supremacist groups have been linked to most domestic terrorist attacks in recent years." The CBS Evening News (8/15, story 5, 2:10, Mason) spoke with Piccolini about his organization.

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (8/15, Atran), Scott Atran, co-founder of Artis International, argues that "ethno-nationalist violent extremism" is "the dark side of globalization." Radicalization occurs, Atran writes, when individuals seek "identity in an increasingly flattened world. We have replaced vertical lines of communication between generations with horizontal peer-to-peer attachments that can span the globe, but paradoxically within ever-narrower channels for information." Atran calls for "a strategy to redirect radicalized youth by engaging with their passions, rather than simply ignoring or fearing or satisfying ourselves by denouncing them."

Fox News, Daily Caller Remove Video Of "Cars Plowing Through Protesters." CNN Money (8/15, Kludt) reports on its website that the Fox News website and the Daily Caller have removed a video posted in January that “carried an unsubtle headline: ‘Here’s A Reel Of Cars Plowing Through Protesters Trying To Block The Road.’ Embedded in the article was a minute-and-a-half long video showing one vehicle after another driving through demonstrations.”

Davidson: US Government Should Remove Confederate Symbols. Joe Davidson, in his column for the Washington Post (8/15), highlights what he says is “Uncle Sam’s curious comforting of treasonous Confederates.” Although some cities and states “have taken action against proslavery and Confederate statues, 10 US military bases continue to honor the rebels by carrying names of their leaders.” Davidson also decries the “state flags that include Confederate symbols” which “decorate congressional hallways,” and the “shameful...statues of confederates that disgrace the Capitol complex.”

Lee Memorial In Brooklyn To Be Removed. The New York Post (8/15, Perez) reports that the Episcopal Diocese of Long Island announced Tuesday that a plaque honoring Robert E. Lee, which has been affixed to a maple tree outside St. John’s Episcopal Church in Brooklyn for more than 100 years, will be removed. Bishop Lawrence Provenzano said, “I think it is the responsible thing for us to do. ... People for whom the Civil War is such a critical moment – and particularly the descendants of former slaves – shouldn’t walk past what they believe is a church building and see a monument to a Confederate general.” The church “has been closed since 2014 – but the maple tree has remained.” The Diocese “owns the sanctuary and is reportedly selling it.”

In an op-ed for the Washington Post (8/15), former MSNBC host Karen Finney, who was a senior spokesperson for Hillary Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign, writes that she is a biracial descendant of Robert E. Lee, “and as far as I’m concerned, his statues can’t come down soon enough.” Finney argues that “to move forward as Americans, we have to have an honest dialogue about our shared history. A first step is acknowledging that Robert E. Lee, and his legacy, don’t deserve to be honored or defended.”

Black Conservative Student Says He Was Assaulted By Antifa At Vigil For Charlottesville Victims. The Washington Times (8/15, Richardson) reports that Ithaca College Republicans President Caleb Slater, an African American, “says he was assaulted over the weekend at a vigil for the victims of the Charlottesville protests because of his conservative beliefs.” The Times says Slater “was wearing a Young America’s Foundation hat at a Sunday evening vigil for Heather Heyer...who was killed when a suspected white nationalist drove his car into a crowd of protesters in Charlottesville.” Sunday’s “vigil was organized by the Syracuse, New York, chapter of Black Lives Matter. When masked members of the militant-left group Antifa saw Mr. Slater, they approached him, asked him about his hat, told him to leave and attacked him.” The Times adds that Slater “said he wore the YAF hat to the memorial ‘to show that conservatives and progressives can both agree that the alt-right pose a threat to the Western world.’”

The Washington Free Beacon (8/15, Frommer) reported that Slater, “who is the half-Dominican, half-black grandson of a civil rights activist, said, ‘I came to this event in peace, I came to this event to stand beside my fellow Americans to disavow bigotry and instead I became the victim of bigotry, an intellectual bigotry. I was not attacked for my words, nor my actions. I was attacked for being a conservative.’ Vigil organizers apologized,” according to Slater, “but they also made ‘an excuse for the attackers and claimed that I should not be wearing apparel from an organization that many ‘interpret to be radical.’”

Breitbart Highlights Yahoo News Reporter’s “Gushing Paean” To Antifa. Writing for Breitbart (8/15), Ian Mason said, “Yahoo! News followed up the weekend’s violent clashes in Charlottesville, Virginia, with an uncritical portrayal of one of the groups most deeply involved: violent left-wing ‘anti-fascist’ street gangs, collectively known as Antifa. Yahoo! reporter Caitlin Dickson penned a gushing paean Monday for the ‘secretive movement of combative leftists’ who ‘seek to destroy’ ‘authoritarian movements’ with ‘direct action.’ The piece even included a photo of a large group of smiling happy warriors, unarmed and fists raised in righteous indignation at the ‘white supremacists’ they would confront.”

CNN’s Sidner “Defends Antifa Violence.” Under the headline “CNN Correspondent Defends Antifa Violence,” the Daily Caller (8/15, Athey) reported that CNN correspondent Sara Sidner on Tuesday “defended the violence of Antifa groups in Charlottesville, VA, arguing that they ‘wouldn’t have been there’ if it hadn’t been for the white supremacists.” Sidner’s remarks came after “Jake Tapper pointed out on CNN Tuesday that some of the violence from the weekend protests, did, in fact, come from members of Antifa, as...Trump claimed during his Tuesday press conference.” The Daily Caller quoted Sidner as “angrily” saying, “There’s a group of anti-fascist called the black bloc, which do tend to get violent. Their idea is, ‘look, non-violence hasn’t worked, we are going to try to stop this.’ But, they wouldn’t have been there, they wouldn’t have been anywhere near there had it not been for the fact that white supremacists and neo-Nazis were out there scaring the living daylight out of most of the people in that town.”

Daily Caller Highlights NYTimes Story On Professor Being Misidentified At Charlottesville Rally.

Drawing from a New York Times story that was covered in yesterday's edition of the White House News Summary, the Daily Caller (8/15, Krayden) said that University of Arkansas professor Kyle Quinn "was over 1,000 miles away in Bentonville, Arkansas Friday night...but left-wing zealots claimed he marched with a white supremacist in Charlottesville at the time. On Saturday, Quinn woke up to discover that internet activists were naming him as one of the neo-Nazis at the Charlottesville riot. They had incorrectly identified his picture from video footage and posted it all over social media with his name."

David French: Media Exaggerates Right As Domestic Terror Threat, Downplays Jihadists.

Writing for National Review (8/15), David French said, "When there's an act of Islamic terror, some in the media will take great pains to minimize the threat. When there's an act of white-supremacist terror, many of the same folks will overhype the threat from the right, often making it out to be greater than the threat of jihadist terror. In either case, all too few will look past the political spin to recognize the truth: Violence is a problem at both extremes of the political spectrum, and jihadists are the most dangerous extremists of all."

Holder Tweet On Charlottesville Draws Responses About Fort Hood "Workplace Violence." The Washington Times (8/14, Ernst) reports that ex-US Attorney General Eric Holder's "foray into a debate on Saturday's violence in Charlottesville, Va., quickly elicited reminders of his early stance on convicted Fort Hood shooter Nidal Hasan." The Times says that in the wake of James Alex Fields allegedly driving into a crowd of protesters on Saturday, Holder tweeted, "If ISIS rammed a car into a crowd this would be labeled quickly & logically. Charlottesville – call it what it is, domestic terrorism." The Times adds, "Jay Caruso of The Dallas Morning News, among many others, rhetorically fired back," tweeting, "Seriously. It's not like some guy shot up a military base and people tried to call it 'workplace violence.' Oh, wait.' ... 'Kind of like you calling the Ft. Hood shooting 'work place violence'? Take a seat, you're dismissed,' added another."

Vandals Deface Lincoln Memorial. The New York Post (8/15, Lapin) reports, "Vandals defaced the Lincoln Memorial on Tuesday – scrawling 'F-k law' in red paint on a pillar at the monument, according to the National Park Service. ... A preservation crew is working to remove the graffiti without damaging the stone on the historic memorial, officials said."

European Far Right Struggles To Respond To Charlottesville Violence. The Washington Post (8/15, Stanley-Becker, McAuley, Noack) reports that the European far right "struggled to respond to a show of force by white nationalists over the weekend that descended into deadly chaos." Far-right parties in Europe "were mostly silent about the spectacle of racial fury in Charlottesville," as "far-right leaders, while in many countries divided, have worked to distance themselves from the Nazi ideology."

Singletary: Racism Has Robbed Generations Of Economic Mobility. Michelle Singletary writes in the Washington Post (8/15) that one of the costs of racism to American society "has been the lost economic mobility of generations of minorities." Singletary recounts that she "nearly did not go to college because my grandmother was afraid" to complete the financial aid forms to obtain a Pell grant for fear of losing the assets she had accumulated. Singletary adds that "the ugliness on the streets of Charlottesville...was as real for me as it is for so many minorities. We have to fight against the psychological effects of decades of degradation and racist economic suppression."

Trump Signs Executive Order Streamlining Approval Process For Infrastructure Projects.

President Trump on Tuesday signed an executive order aimed at streamlining the process for constructing roads, bridges and other infrastructure projects. Coverage of the signing, largely overshadowed by media coverage of Trump's comments on last weekend's violence in Charlottesville, is light and somewhat negative, as it casts the order as an effort to draw attention to Trump's $1 trillion infrastructure proposal – which is described as "languishing."

Reuters (8/15, Mason) reports that the order is "part of his proposal to spend $1 trillion to fix aging US infrastructure." According to Bloomberg News (8/15, Niquette, Flavelle), it establishes "'one federal decision' for major projects and set[s] an average two-year goal for permitting." The order "will rescind a previous decree signed by former President Barack Obama that required federal agencies to account for flood risk and climate change when paying for roads, bridges or other structures." In addition it allows OMB "to establish goals for environmental reviews and permitting of infrastructure projects and then track their progress – with automatic elevation to senior agency officials when deadlines are missed or extended, according to the order." The Washington Post (8/15, Fears, Mufson) says Trump's order eliminates "a planning step related to climate change and flood dangers."

Politico (8/15, Gardner) calls the order "the latest in a string of efforts to call attention to his languishing proposal for a $1 trillion initiative to rebuild the nation's roads, tunnels and bridges," and adds that the announcement "did little to flesh out exactly how his administration plans to boost public and private investment in those projects." The Wall Street Journal (8/15, Mann) notes that the move is one of a limited number of non-legislative means Trump has at his disposal to advance his infrastructure agenda.

USA Today (8/15, Jackson, Jackson) reports that "advocates said repealing an Obama-era rule – which required spending on public works to take into account the flood risk from climate change – would end up wasting public dollars by rebuilding schools, hospitals and roads that would be damaged in the future." Steve Ellis, vice president of Taxpayers for Common Sense, said repealing the rule is "fiscal mismanagement and wasteful," adding, "Taxpayers cannot afford to subsidize high-risk construction and then be asked to rebuild that same development when the inevitable disaster strikes."

At Press Conference, Reporter "Badgered" Chao About "Nazi Support" For Trump. The Daily Caller (8/15, Hasson, Picket) reports that during a press conference Tuesday about infrastructure, "a male reporter" whose name is not known, "repeatedly badgered Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao" about "her skin color, which the reporter tried to tie to this past weekend's violence between far-left Antifa activists and far-right alt-right members." The reporter first asked, "Secretary Chao, as a woman of color...what do you think about the Nazi support for President Trump?" He then "kept pressing on whether it bothered Chao 'to see Nazis supporting this administration.'"

Trump, Nunes: Obama Administration Ignored Warnings On Russia.

On Monday, a Politico report said the Obama Administration was warned as early as 2014 about Russian plans to disrupt US elections. Catherine Herridge reported on Fox News' Special Report (8/15) that on Tuesday, President Trump tweeted, "According to report just out, President Obama knew about Russian interference 3 years ago but he didn't want to anger Russia!" House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes on Tuesday told Fox he stands by a statement he made in March, in which he said committee members' "repeated and forceful pleas for stronger action against Russian belligerents," were "routinely ignored" because the Obama Administration "was committed to the notion against all evidence that we could reset relations with Putin." Herridge said Ned Price, an NSC spokesman under Obama, countered by saying the Obama Administration "was nothing but proactive. ... The measures we spoke to publicly did not constitute the sum total of our retaliation in the face of Moscow's multi-pronged aggression." Herridge noted it's "not clear how widely the intelligence about Russia was shared in 2014 and whether it reached a policy level."

Judge Rejects Trump Dossier Author's Effort To Avoid Deposition. Politico (8/15, Gerstein) reports in its "Under The Radar" blog that US District Court Judge Ursula Ungaro has rejected former British spy Christopher Steele's "attempt to avoid being questioned under oath about his role in producing a dossier of often salacious and unverified intelligence reports about President Donald Trump's activities in Russia." Russian businessman Aleksey Gubarev wants to force Steele to testify in his libel suit against BuzzFeed "over its publication of the dossier, which suggests Gubarev has corrupt ties to Russian President Vladimir Putin."

Meanwhile, the Washington Times (8/15, Boylan) says congressional investigators' efforts to contact Steele "appear to be bearing fruit with the news that two House intelligence committee staffers recently traveled to England to try and meet with Mr. Steele at his office in London." The Times says the investigators' trip "reflects a battle for control of the Russian meddling probe that has long divided the House intelligence committee," and notes that Rep. Adam Schiff, the committee's ranking Democrat, "expressed frustration over what some claimed was an independent effort to broker a deal for Mr. Steele's testimony."

Trump To Roll Back Obama-Era Flood Risk Building Standards.

Reuters (8/15, Volcovici, Mason) reports President Donald Trump signed an executive order Tuesday rolling "back rules regarding environmental reviews and restrictions on government-funded building projects in flood-prone areas" as part of his $1 trillion infrastructure plan, which "would speed approvals of permits for highways, bridges, pipelines and other major building efforts." The plan also calls for revoking "an Obama-era executive order aimed at reducing exposure to flooding, sea level rise and other consequences of climate change." Trump said, "It's going to be quick. It's going to be a very streamlined process. And by the way, if it doesn't meet environmental safeguards, we're not going to approve it – very simple." Reuters reports business groups "praised the streamlining of regulations," but "environmental groups and others criticized the order" for potentially leading to "riskier projects," wasting tax dollars, and resulting in a possible "climate catastrophe." The American Petroleum Institute "said in a statement that the order reflects recommendations the oil industry lobby group submitted to the Commerce Department in March," but "environmental group Oil Change International said the order would silence local communities that have safety and environmental concerns about major projects like pipelines." The Hill (8/15, Henry) says a White House official said the order was part of the Administration's efforts to streamline permitting processes for infrastructure projects. According to the Hill, the official called the move "a 'small part' of Trump's order, which will not block states from expanding their own building standards for infrastructure projects."

The New York Times (8/15, Friedman) characterizes the move as "the latest effort by the Trump administration to unravel former President Barack Obama's climate change agenda" after "building trade groups and Republican lawmakers...criticized the Federal Flood Risk Management Standard" as too "costly and overly burdensome." However, the Times says "environmental activists, floodplain managers and some conservatives" previously "urged the Trump administration to preserve the rule," which they argued "protected critical infrastructure and taxpayer dollars by ensuring new projects in areas prone to flooding were safeguarded." The Times explains that the rule allowed "federal agencies three options to flood-proof new infrastructure projects" – using "the best available climate change science," requiring "that standard projects like roads and railways be built two feet above the national 100-year flood elevation standard and critical buildings like hospitals be built three feet higher," or requiring that "infrastructure be built to at least the 500-year floodplain" – but did not apply to private development. When the Obama Administration announced the rules, it "cited a National Climate Assessment finding that more than $1 trillion worth of property and structures in the United States are at risk of inundation if sea levels rise two feet above current levels, something that scientists believe could happen by 2050."

According to the Washington Post (8/15, Fears, Mufson), Trump said the approval process "was 'badly broken' and that the nation's infrastructure was a 'massive self-inflicted wound on our country,'" adding that there will "no longer" be "one job-killing delay after another" for new projects. However, the Post says Trump failed to "provide any proposal on how his much-promised infrastructure program would be financed or what it would include," though he did promise "'one Federal decision' for major infrastructure projects and setting a two-year goal for completion of permitting processes." The order comes as Congress prepares to "reauthorize the National Flood Insurance Program that pays insurance claims" – a "beleaguered program" facing "nearly $25 billion in debt" – in September.

The AP (8/15, Lowy, Biesecker) and the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (8/15, Siciliano) offer similar coverage.

Pruitt Plans To Rewrite Obama-Era Limits On Coal Wastewater Pollution.

The AP (8/15, Biesecker) reports the Environmental Protection Agency is planning to "scrap an Obama-era measure limiting water pollution from coal-fired power plants," according to a letter from EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt "released Monday as part of a legal appeal." Pruitt allegedly "moved in April to delay implementation" of new "guidelines mandating increased treatment for wastewater from steam electric power-generating plants" at "the behest of electric utilities who opposed the stricter standards." According to the AP, wastewater from coal-fired plants containing "traces of highly toxic heavy metals such as...lead, arsenic, mercury and selenium" is flushed into waterways. Pruitt's letter was filed with the 5th US Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans on Monday as part of legal challenges to the wastewater rule – though "with Mr. Pruitt now moving to rewrite the standards, EPA has asked to court to freeze the legal fight."

The Hill (8/15, Henry) offers similar coverage, reporting the EPA "estimates the rule would reduce toxic metals and other discharged pollutants by 1.4 billion pounds. If implemented, the rule would cost about $480 million per year and its potential benefits are worth $451 million to $566 million, the agency says."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Mr. Trump Makes A Spectacle Of Himself." The New York Times (8/15) editorializes, "Trump's behavior has become distressingly unsurprising. His default position is retaliation; when threatened, he succumbs to bombast. Washington politicians had hoped" that Kelly's appointment "would instill some discipline in his chaotic administration. With similar hopes, others are trying to get Mr. Trump to fire his resident provocateur, Stephen Bannon. But the root of the problem is not the personnel; it is the man at the top.”

“Let Prisoners Learn While They Serve.” A New York Times (8/16, Board) editorial cites studies suggesting “prisons with education programs have fewer violent incidents, making it easier for officials to keep order, and that the children of people who complete college are more likely to do so themselves, disrupting the typical pattern of poverty and incarceration.” Nonetheless, the Times says, New York state Republican legislators “have steadfastly resisted Gov. Andrew Cuomo’s common-sense proposal for making a modest investment in prison education programs that have already proved highly successful on a small scale in New York’s prisons.” The Times says “these programs have more than proved their value,” and “New York lawmakers who continue to block funding for them are putting ideology ahead of the public interest.”

Washington Post.

“Trump Asked China To Rein In Its Unreasonable Trade Practices. It Should.” A Washington Post (8/15) editorial says that “for all his talk during the 2016 campaign about taking on China for ‘stealing’ American jobs, President Trump has hardly launched the trade war against Beijing that many feared.” Rather than trade, Trump’s “approach to China has emphasized enlisting President Xi Jinping’s help in defusing the crisis over North Korea’s nuclear weapons.” Given that, the Post says Trump’s announcement Monday — that he is ordering his special trade representative to investigate Chinese trade practices — “strikes us as a variation on a theme, not necessarily a portent of dangerous new trade tensions.” The Post says Trump’s order gives China “plenty of time to head off” any penalties by meeting the US’ “reasonable concerns in negotiations,” and argues that “it would be in China’s best interest to do so.”

“Maryland Needs To Go On A Prison Guard Hiring Spree.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/15) writes that the Maryland state corrections system – which after a 2015 reform requiring all guards to undergo polygraphs now has a shortage of 600 unfilled positions among roughly 1,000 vacancies – must work with the union representing corrections officers and raise salaries. The Post concludes that “safety at Maryland prisons is impaired” by the failure to address the shortage, and that Maryland Gov. Hogan “will need to step up.”

“The Nation Can Only Weep.” The Washington Post (8/15) editorializes, “Tuesday was a great day for David Duke and racists everywhere. The president of the United States all but declared that he has their backs. ... The nation can only weep.”

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump And The CEOs.” The Wall Street Journal (8/15) says in an editorial that the exits from President Trump’s manufacturing advisory council show that corporate leaders are under pressure to distance themselves from Trump, and if he loses the support of the business community, his agenda will be imperiled.

“The Wage Paradox Explained.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/15) writes that a new analysis from the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco shows that the so-called wage paradox – that wage growth remains slow despite the current tightened job market – is partly explained by the fact that wages have been growing at a faster rate but that many new full-time workers who are typically paid less than the retirees they are replacing are lowering the average wage. The Journal concludes that the report indicates that workers will continue to see wage growth if expansion continues, bolstered by tax reform that encourages more capital investment and increasing productivity.

“Medicaid’s Opioid Fix.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/15) writes that a recent Department of Health and Human Services analysis requested by Sen. Ron Johnson found that opioid overdose deaths per million residents rose twice as quickly in the 29 states that underwent Medicaid expansion under the Affordable Care Act – something Sen. Johnson says suggests the expansion created a perverse incentive for people to use more opioids. The Journal concludes that as policymakers consider how to address the nation’s opioid epidemic, a key priority of any reform must also address abuse within the Medicaid system.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Trump Says 'Both Sides' To Blame In Charlottesville Violence
CEOs Rethink Ties With White House
Consumer Spending Gives Some Retailers A Lift, But Risks Abound
The New Innovator's Dilemma: When Customers Won't Pay For Better

New York Times:

Trump Defends Initial Remarks On Charlottesville: Again Blames 'Both Sides'
Walmart Chief Joins CEO Protests
Trump Gives White Supremacists An Unequivocal Boost
Trump Threat To Obamacare Would Send Premiums And Deficits Higher
One Us Factory Goes Global, While Trump Shrinks The World
Squeezed By An India-China Standoff, Bhutan Holds Its Breath

Washington Post:

Trump Again Blames 'Both Sides'
'It's Manufactured Death'
Rhetorical Pivot Reveals A President Unleashed
Fleeting United In A State Of Darkness
Factory Workers Quitting In Droves

Financial Times:

India's Partition Holds A Lesson For Today's Leaders
Central Banks Holding A Fifth Of Their Governments' Debt
Vacuums That Pick Up Data As Well As Dirt Renew Privacy Concerns
IMF Warns China Over 'Dangerous' Levels Of Debt

Washington Times:

Trump Says 'Alt-Left' Also To Blame For Charlottesville Violence, Warns Against Eradicating Statues
Black Activists Want Confederate Statues Preserved To Serve As Reminders Of Dark History With Wildlife And Scenic Views, Interior Department Attracts Large Social Media Following
Health Care Premiums Will Jump 20% Next Year If Trump Cuts Obamacare Reimbursements, CBO Predicts
McCain, Taliban, Blackwater Offer Own Afghanistan War Plans While Waiting For Trump
Ousted President's Legal Fate Looms Large For Thailand's Future

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; WH-White Nationalism Clash; White Nationalism Clash; North Korea Threats; New Jersey-Carbon Monoxide Poisoning; Central Park-Tree Collapse; Hurricane Gert Tracking; South Carolina-Police Violence; Hollywood Stuntwoman Death; Nebraska-Home Explosion; Costco-Diamond Branding Lawsuit; Baseball Pitcher-Cancer Fight.
CBS: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; White Nationalism Clash; White Nationalism Clash-Expert Comment 1; White Nationalism Clash-Expert Comment 2; White Nationalism Clash-Hate Groups; White Nationalism Clash-Corporate Responses; White Nationalism Clash-US Cities; African American Art-Confederate Flag.
NBC: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; White Nationalism Clash; White Nationalism Clash-Congress; White Nationalism Clash-Expert Comment; White Nationalism-Confederate Monuments; Hurricane Gert Tracking; School Violence-Autistic Student; Antidepressant Use; Costco-Diamond Branding Lawsuit; iTunes Music Chart; WW2 Veteran Returns Japanese Flag.

Network TV At A Glance:

White Nationalism Clash – 24 minutes, 30 seconds
Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment – 18 minutes, 35 seconds
Hurricane Gert Tracking – 1 minute, 5 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; North Korea Threats; Obamacare Insurance Premium; Wall Street News.
CBS: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; White Nationalism Clash-Corporate Responses; Obamacare-Insurance Premium.
FOX: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; White Nationalism Clash; Elvis Presley-40th Anniversary; Alabama-Senate Special Election Primary.

NPR: Trump-White Nationalism Clash Comment; White Nationalism Clash; White Nationalism-Confederate Monuments; North Korea Threats.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Signs HR 3218, The Harry W. Colmery Veterans Educational Assistance Act of 2017

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Participates in a bilateral meeting with President Michelle Bachelet of Chile; meet with US Embassy staff and their families in Chile; delivers keynote remarks at a dinner on Advancing Prosperity & Economic Growth Throughout the Western Hemisphere honoring AACCLA's 50th Anniversary & AmCham Chile's 100th Anniversary.

US Senate: On recess until 5 September.

US House: On recess until 5 September.

Other: 2:30 PM Japanese defense and foreign ministers lay wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier – Japanese Foreign Minister Taro Kono and Defense Minister Isunori Onodera lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery, as part of their official visit to the U.S. Special Assistant to the Director of the Army staff Maj. Gen. Scott Berrier hosts the ceremony Location: Arlington National Cemetery, Arlington, VA <http://mdwhome.mdw.army.mil/> https://twitter.com/MDW_USARMY

NAFTA renegotiations begin – Formal talks on renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement begin in Washington, DC, between the U.S., Canada, and Mexico, with the Trump administration 'seeking a much better agreement that reduces the U.S. trade deficit and is fair for all Americans by improving market access in Canada and Mexico for U.S. manufacturing, agriculture, and services' Location: Washington, DC www.ustr.gov <https://twitter.com/USTradeRep>

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "It was supposed to be a press conference about infrastructure, and it ended with our President making an angry and passionate defense of white supremacists. It was like if your book club meeting turned into a cock fight."

Jimmy Kimmel: "I think we might need an alt-President right now."

Stephen Colbert: "Even though many criticized how long it took, the President knew the right thing was to make the statement Monday, be clear about who was to blame, and then move on to the people's business. I'm just kidding. He held a press conference today in, I believe, the seventh circle of hell."

Stephen Colbert: "'Okay, I need the facts, okay. Just ask the millions of illegal voters who refused to look for Obama's birth certificate, during my record-breaking inauguration. Okay? It's all on the Obama wiretaps. It's all there.'"

James Corden: "Trump's the guy that walks out of Star Wars thinking they didn't have to blow up the Death Star. There was blame on both sides. "

James Corden: "Apparently, Trump went off script and improvised all of these remarks during a press conference about infrastructure, which is terrible because I'm pretty sure the first rule of infrastructure is whatever you do, don't burn bridges."

Jimmy Fallon: "Today, the CEO of Walmart wrote a strongly worded letter criticizing Trump. CEO of Target wrote one too, and people thought it was just a little bit classier."

Seth Meyers: "President Trump last night made his first visit to Manhattan since his inauguration."

Meanwhile, Hillary Clinton visited three Manhattans and a Bud Light.”

Conan O'Brien: “In an impromptu press conference just a couple of hours ago, President Trump said the hate and the division must stop. That’s what he said. It’s a good statement. For a minute, the crowd got excited because they thought Trump was resigning.”

Conan O'Brien: “In the press conference, President Trump said that Steve Bannon was a good friend and not a racist. Then he said, ‘Oops, a meant to say a good racist and not a friend.’”

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform’s terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva’s terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, August 23, 2017
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 7:01:09 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Washington Post: Zinke To Complete Review Of National Monuments This Week.
- Huffington Post: Trump Administration's Reported Threats To Alaska Senators Investigated.
- Courthouse News: Judge Delays Ruling On Trump's Fossil-Fuel Favors, Fearing Mootness.
- Public News Service: Watchdog Group Calls Foul On Leaked Oil And Gas Memo On Sage Grouse.
- KWYB-TV Butte (MT): Outdoor Recreation Creates Economic Infrastructure For Montana.
- Washington Post: Military Leaders Consolidate Power In Trump Administration.
- Politico Morning Energy: Electric Grid Weathers Total Eclipse Of The Sun.
- Washington Post: Is Trump Making The Political Environment For Top Civil Servants Worse?

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- DOI Hit With Suit Over Tribal Leadership Dispute.

Bureau Of Indian Education

- Keep The Federal Government Out Of School Choice.

Bureau Of Land Management

- ABC News: Jury Refuses To Convict 4 In Nevada Ranch Standoff Retrial.
- U.S. News & World Report: Critics Maintain Utah Mustang Meeting A 'Slaughter Summit'.
- KTNV-TV Las Vegas: Red Rock Canyon Could Raise Entry Fees To $15 Next Year.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Walter Mondale: We Can't Afford To Get The Mining-vs.-land-protection Equation Wrong.
- Alaska Dispatch News: Current Petroleum Reserve Plan Is Solid; Don't Fall For Land-Rush Mentality.

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

- Delaware Governor Opposes Offshore Drilling.
- International Association Of Drilling Contractors Requests Expanded Access To Outer Continental Shelf.
- Offshore Drilling Committee Weighs In On Oil, Beaches.
- Continuing Coverage: Draft EIS Released For Liberty Offshore Project.
- Additional Coverage: More Oil And Gas Leases Sold In The Gulf.
- Oil Drilling In The Atlantic Threatens Our Economy.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Oregon Public Broadcasting: Guilty Defendants In Oregon Standoff Agree To Pay Back $78,000.
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Arctic Researchers To Study Wind Effects On Marine Life.
- My Eastern Shore MD: Officials Tour Blackwater Marsh Restoration Project.
- South Florida Sun Sentinel: Feds Shouldn't Change Florida Panther Protections.
- Kingman (AZ) Daily Miner: Fish And Wildlife Service Offers Reasonable Changes.
- Denver Post: America's Beloved Grizzly Bears Are In Trouble, And So Is The Nation's Moral Compass.
- Columbia (MO) Missourian: KEN MIDKIFF: Ozark Hellbender's Fate Doesn't Bode Well For Water Quality.

National Park Service

- Minneapolis Star Tribune: Celeb Ambassadors Help National Parks Mark 101st Birthday.
- Columbus News Team (NE): Homestead National Monument Of America, Estimates 30,000 Attended Eclipse Events.
- Daily Caller: Conservatives: Nix Group Altering Statues.
- Fox News: Agency Blames Hackers Over 'F--- Trump' Road Sign In DC Park.
- Ste. Genevieve (MO) Herald: Blunt Staffer Tours Historic Areas, Expresses Optimism For Legislation.
- U.S. News & World Report: Vermont To Recognize Historic LGBTQ Sites.
- Curbed Washington: Historic 1830s Potomac Lockhouse To Undergo Rehabilitation.
- Hot Springs (AR) Sentinel-Record: McCabes, NPS To Sign Hale Lease On Friday.
- MLive (MI): 'Every Kid In A Park' Coming To Cascades Falls Park For 435 Kids.
- U.S. News & World Report: Missouri Man Fatally Shot By Arkansas National Park Ranger.
- U.S. News & World Report: Teen Missing For 11 Days Found OK In Tennessee National Park.
- Fox News: Additional Coverage: Trump Ends Obama's 'Water Bottle Ban'.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Los Angeles Times: Tillerson Notes Signs Of 'Restraint' In North Korea And Hints At Dialogue.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Additional Coverage: Interior Dept.

US Geological Survey

- Rigzone: A Second Wind For The North Slope?

Top National News

- CNN: President Attacks Media, Strongly Hints At Arpaio Pardon In Phoenix Speech.
- Washington Times: Brady: Revenues From Tax Reform Should Not Necessarily Go To Infrastructure.

- Bloomberg News: GOP Considers Tax Proposal Allowing $450 Billion Of Cuts Without Offsets.
- Wall Street Journal: Businesses Lobbying For Corporate Tax Cut.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Trump On Afghanistan: More Of The Same; No End In Sight."
 - "Mr. Trump Sides With Wall Street; You Lose."
- Washington Post.
 - "Trump's Welcome Self-Correction."
 - "The Hard Work Of School Reform Is Paying Off In The District."
 - "On Gun Violence Research, California Sets An Example For The Nation."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "Trump's Afghan Commitment."
 - "Right-To-Work Sore Losers."
 - "New York Attacks Success."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Zinke To Complete Review Of National Monuments This Week.

The Washington Post (8/22, Eilperin, Levine) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke this week will conclude his review of 27 national monuments as directed by an executive order signed by President Trump this spring targeting "designations of at least 100,000 acres that were made by former presidents Bill Clinton, George W. Bush and Barack Obama under the 1906 Antiquities Act." Zinke has announced that "he would recommend no changes for six of the monuments on the list." Fifteen of the remaining sites "are considered the most vulnerable to revision, reduction or even reversal."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (8/23), the Spokane \(WA\) Spokesman-Review (8/22, Landers), the Bakersfield \(CA\) Californian (8/22, Mayer), and the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (8/22, DeMille).

Groups Make Last-Minute Push To Save National Monument Areas. The AP (8/23, McCOMBS) reports that "conservation groups are airing TV ads, planning rallies and creating parody websites in a last-minute blitz to stop Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke from downsizing or eliminating national monument areas that cover large swaths of land and water from Maine to California." Meanwhile, "groups that want to see the areas reduced have been less vociferous, pleading their cases on social media and working behind the scenes to lobby federal officials."

Coverage by the AP was also picked up by Philly \(PA\) (8/22, McCOMBS), the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (8/22, McCOMBS), the Washington Post (8/23, McCombs), ABC News (8/23, McCOMBS), the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal, the Bristol \(VA\) Herald Courier (8/23, McCOMBS), and the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/22, McCOMBS).

Trump Wants To Turn National Monuments Into 'Industry Playthings'. The Washington Examiner (8/22, Siciliano) reports Raul Grijalva, the ranking Democrat on the House Natural Resources Committee, released a report saying the Trump Administration's review of 27 national monuments is being guided by the energy industry, rather than the public interest. The executive summary of the report said, "This report demonstrates that the justification provided for the review – a desire for robust public input – is a diversion meant to obscure the review's true aim: the development by private companies of fossil fuel resources currently off-limits due to monument designations."

100 Supporters, Four Local Members Of Congress Blast Trump's Review Of National Monuments. The Pasadena \(CA\) Star-News (8/22, Scauzillo) reports that "four local members of Congress blasted" the President Trump's order to review national monuments, "calling the president's action a nod to corporate greed.” Democratic Reps. Judy Chu, Jimmy Gomez, Brad Sherman, and Adam Schiff “condemned the White House review, saying the process was part of secret dealings between the administration and oil, gas and mining firms seeking permission to recover additional natural resources from federal lands marked for preservation by previous presidents.” Addressing “a friendly crowd of about 100 supporters at the Los Angeles Historic Park near Chinatown, the local representatives spoke in blunt terms, even threatening to block an attempt at monument trimming with legal action.”

Also reporting are the Inland Valley \(CA\) Daily Bulletin (8/22, Scauzillo), the Pasadena \(CA\) Star-News (8/22, Scauzillo), Redlands \(CA\) Daily Facts (8/22, Scauzillo), the San Gabriel Valley \(CA\) Tribune (8/22, Scauzillo), the Whittier \(CA\) Daily News (8/22, Scauzillo) and KABC-TV Los Angeles Los Angeles (8/22, Cota-Robles).

Support Rally For Giant Sequoia National Monument Today. KERO-TV Bakersfield, CA (8/22) reports that the Giant Sequoia National Monument Coalition was scheduled to host a rally Tuesday in support of the monument. Also reporting are KITV-TV Honolulu Honolulu (8/22), and WENY-TV Elmira \(NY\) Elmira, NY (8/22).

National Monuments, Sanctuaries At Risk, Huffman Hosts Ocean Forum In Sausalito. The Mill Valley \(CA\) Patch (8/22, McGuire) reports that on Wednesday, Rep. Jared Huffman will “host a forum on protecting national marine sanctuaries and monuments.” The forum will “highlight the benefits of these federal designations for ocean health and coastal economies, including fishing, outdoor recreation, and tourism, and examine the threat of President Trump’s Executive Order 13795, which reviews all designations and expansions of National Marine Sanctuaries and Marine National Monuments since 2007.”

Roosevelt IV: Interior Secretary Must Defend Public Lands. In an op-ed for the Houston Chronicle (8/22, IV) [8/22, Check Author], Theodore Roosevelt IV, the great-grandson of the 26th U.S. president, writes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has “both administrative power and a bully pulpit to encourage sound policy for a huge portion of our nation’s public lands.” Roosevelt notes that Zinke “often professes his commitment to public land conservation, and he frequently evokes the legacy of TR.” However, he argues that Zinke’s “conservation actions have failed to match his rhetoric, so far.” Roosevelt concludes: “To be a faithful steward of our public lands during the Trump administration will require courage and discipline, attributes that Secretary Zinke values. If he aspires to live up to the Roosevelt legacy, he will need to stand up to special interests and protect America’s public lands.”

Why Donald Trump Is Going After Our Parks. In a piece for the Huffington Post (8/22, Pope, Contributor), Carl Pope, Principal Advisor at Inside Straight Strategies, writes “the nature” of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke’s “process may best be illustrated by the fact that during a six month review process, he visited only 8 of 27 monuments – and while the process has been very opaque, the most important consideration being mentioned is whether local Republican politicians favored retaining or stripping protection from the area – the American people, who have filed millions of comments opposing this process, simply don’t seem to be a factor in the deliberations.” Pope says that Zinke is “acting in spite of the fact that a new major player – native American tribes – are weighing in strongly against opening these lands to mining and abuse because many of the areas at risk, like Bears Ears, were created to protect parts of their heritage, culture and religion.” Pope asserts that “it’s one of Trump’s more revealing policy misadventures.”

North Face President: Never Stop Fighting For Our Public Lands. In an op-ed for USA Today (8/22, Arens), The North Face president Arne Arens writes that “there is a profound value to America’s national parks, forests, monuments and other public lands.” As Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke completes his review, “we might soon be left with fewer protected places and an uncertain future for our shared lands.” Arens adds that his company “has joined with over 350 outdoor companies in a letter to request that Secretary Zinke recognize the benefits that these national monuments provide to sustain jobs and support healthy communities.” Arens concludes, “There is a lot on the line: our common ground, the strength of a sustainable economy, and the opportunity to leave a legacy greater than what we are today. Without a doubt, this is worth protecting.”

National Monuments In Grave Danger From Trump. In an op-ed for the San Jose \(CA\) Mercury News (8/22, Pfund), Nancy Pfund, a co-chair of the Conservation for Economic Growth Coalition, argues that new policies from President Trump and Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke are “putting our nation’s parks, public lands and national monuments at risk, and our economy along with them.” According to Pfund, “rescinding or modifying California National Monuments on the basis of a single 120-day review ending Thursday, and without public hearings and transparent public debate, would create precisely the kind of uncertainty that our businesses abhor." Pfund asserts that "it also would not follow the law regarding national monuments." She says that "the only way for Secretary Zinke to change a monument is to make recommendations for Congress to act, not the President." Pfund argues that "any proposed recommendations should get the proper procedural and public scrutiny that they deserve, with bills drafted, studied, heard before the appropriate committees, and voted on by those committees and both houses of Congress."

It's Only Been A Year, But The Monument Is Already Benefiting The Katahdin Region. In an op-ed for the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/22, Schmidt), Richard Schmidt III, celebrates the anniversary of the designation of Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument by noting "all the benefits the monument is already bringing to Maine and its people, even those few but vocal people who opposed the monument during the years of public discussion prior to its establishment." he says that "traffic is up, both foot and car, on main streets throughout the Katahdin region" and "local businesses are investing, expanding and making improvements to their storefronts and infrastructure to accommodate new visitors and their interests." Schmidt says that "the most compelling indicator of success is the real estate market." Schmidt concludes that "as Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke prepares his recommendations for Katahdin Woods and Waters, we need leaders like Sens. Susan Collins and Angus King, who see and understand the distinct and obvious benefits, to send a clear message to Zinke and the White House."

Community Voices: Sequoia Monument A Treasure Worth Protecting. In an op-ed for the Bakersfield \(CA\) Californian (8/22, Sheehey), Alison Sheehey, programs director of Sequoia ForestKeeper, argues that Giant Sequoia National Monument is "not large enough to protect many of the unique biological, geological, and historical resources that exist within its parent government land Sequoia National Forest." According to Sheehey, Giant Sequoia National Monument "protects giant sequoias not just at the boundary of the canopies of sequoias, but throughout their expansive root system which includes the aquifer that supports these most massive living things on earth." For this reason, Sheehey argues, "the Monument should be expanded, not shrunk."

Additional Commentary. Additional commentary appeared in the Pasadena \(CA\) Star-News (8/22, Wilson) and the Santa Fe New Mexican (8/22, Salazar).

Trump Administration's Reported Threats To Alaska Senators Investigated.

The Huffington Post (8/23, Shapiro) reports that the Interior Department "confirmed it launched a preliminary investigation into reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke attempted to pressure Republican Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan of Alaska following their votes on health care last month." In a letter to Rep. Frank Pallone Jr. and Rep. Raul Grijalva, sent Deputy Inspector General Mary L. Kendall "wrote that her office was undertaking a preliminary investigation into Zinke's phone calls to the Alaska senators in which the secretary reportedly said Murkowski's votes opposing the GOP's proposed health care plans had put some of Alaska's state-specific projects in jeopardy, particularly those pertaining to energy."

Judge Delays Ruling On Trump's Fossil-Fuel Favors, Fearing Mootness.

Courthouse News (8/22, Iovino) reports that "a federal judge said Tuesday that the Trump administration improperly delayed a rule to boost state royalties for oil, gas and coal extracted on public lands, but she declined to issue a ruling because an impending repeal might moot the case." California and New Mexico sued the Interior Department "this past April, arguing it unlawfully postponed the new royalties rule on Feb. 22 – six days before the first payments were due and after the rule was set to take effect on Jan. 1." The Interior Department "published a proposed rule to roll back the increased royalty valuations on April 4, with a public comment period ending May 4," and "it's set to take effect on Sept. 6."

Watchdog Group Calls Foul On Leaked Oil And Gas Memo On Sage Grouse.

Public News Service (8/23) reports that "a document obtained by a watchdog group suggests that the U.S. Department of the Interior could be taking orders from the oil and gas industry." Jayson O'Neill, deputy director of the Western Values Project, "said his group has filed a Freedom of Information Act request for correspondence between energy-industry representatives and staff who worked on Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's sage-grouse review." According to O'Neill, "a memo from the Western Energy Alliance bears a striking resemblance to the federal agency's plan of action." O'Neill said, "Secretary Zinke and the review team took the recommendations of the oil and gas industry, pretty much universally, over other users – which include the hunting community, ranching community, our agricultural communities,."

Outdoor Recreation Creates Economic Infrastructure For Montana.

KWYB-TV Butte, MT (8/22, Siu) reports that Sen. John Tester on Tuesday announced the creation of the Outdoor Economy Act. The legislation would create a committee at the Interior Department “to advise the presidential administration on ways to increase public access to public lands.” Tester said, “Montana hunters, anglers, business owners and outdoor enthusiasts know how important our public lands are. By bringing these folks to the table in Washington, we can ensure that future generations will be able to access the treasured places that are driving our economy and creating jobs.”

Military Leaders Consolidate Power In Trump Administration.

The Washington Post (8/22, A1, Costa, Rucker) reports on its front page that “high-ranking military officials” are “repeatedly winning arguments inside the West Wing, publicly contradicting the president and even balking at implementing one of his most controversial policies.” The “military leaders are rapidly consolidating power...as they counsel a volatile president,” in “a striking departure for a country that for generations has positioned civilian leaders above and apart from the military.” The article notes that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is among the “military figures serving at high levels in the Trump administration.”

Electric Grid Weathers Total Eclipse Of The Sun.

Politico Morning Energy (8/22, Adragna) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke tweeted he had a “pretty cool view” of the solar eclipse “from his agency’s rooftop.”

Is Trump Making The Political Environment For Top Civil Servants Worse?

In his Washington Post (8/22, Davidson) column, Joe Davidson writes that a recent Office of Personnel Management survey shows that “work environment issues are ‘the highest contributing factors’ in the decision of federal senior executives to leave government” and suggests that the political environment in the workplace – which tops workplace environment issues – “has become particularly toxic since President Trump took office.” Davidson argues that the Administration has especially placed pressure on agencies dealing with the environment, pointing to statements by federal agency scientists and others claiming that Administration direction and the President’s rhetoric have “damaged the political environment for senior executives and federal employees generally.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

DOI Hit With Suit Over Tribal Leadership Dispute.

Law360 (8/22, Lidgett) reports that “the Alturas Indian Rancheria hit the U.S. Department of the Interior with a lawsuit on Monday accusing it of improperly recognizing Philip Del Rosa as the chairman of the tribe even though the tribe’s General Council barred him from holding office.”

Bureau Of Indian Education

Keep The Federal Government Out Of School Choice.

In a Washington Post (8/22, Burke) op-ed, Heritage education policy director Lindsey Burke, Cato education policy director Neal McCluskey, and Independent Institute research fellow Vicki Alger write that although school choice offers many benefits – granting families more academic freedom, increasing educator accountability, improving academic outcomes – the federal government should not create a nationwide school choice program because “federal control could ultimately impose the same regulations on once-independent schools that have stifled public institutions.” They also suggest that the Trump Administration could “propose expanding choice to military families and children attending Bureau of Indian Education schools – the latter deemed the worst-performing schools in the United States.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Jury Refuses To Convict 4 In Nevada Ranch Standoff Retrial.

The AP (8/22, Ritter) reports that on Tuesday, a federal jury in Las Vegas “refused...to convict four defendants who were retried on accusations that they threatened and assaulted federal agents by wielding assault weapons in a 2014 confrontation to stop a cattle roundup near the Nevada ranch of states' rights figure Cliven Bundy." The AP calls the verdict "a stunning setback to federal prosecutors planning to try the Bundy family patriarch and two adult sons later this year." The jury "acquitted Ricky Lovelien and Steven Stewart of all 10 charges, and delivered not-guilty findings on most charges against Scott Drexler and Eric Parker." The AP notes that "a first trial earlier this year lasted two months and ended in April with a different jury finding two defendants – Gregory Burleson of Phoenix and Todd Engel of Idaho – guilty of some charges but failing to reach verdicts against Drexler, Parker, Lovelien and Stewart."

According to the New York Daily News (8/22, Brennan), "It was not immediately clear if prosecutors will push for a third trial against Drexler and Parker. Cliven, Ammon and Ryan Bundy and two other defendants are expected to face their own trials in the Nevada standoff later this year."

Also reporting are the New York Times (8/22, Turkewitz), USA Today (8/22, Anglen), the Wall Street Journal (8/22, Carlton), Reuters (8/22), and the Los Angeles Times (8/22, Etehad, Montero).

Critics Maintain Utah Mustang Meeting A 'Slaughter Summit'.

The AP (8/23, PRICE, SONNER) reports that "federal scientists and mostly rural interests are gathering at a wild horse conference in Utah that mustang-protection advocates maintain is a thinly veiled effort to promote increased roundups and eventual slaughter of tens of thousands of animals from California to Colorado without public input." The National Horse and Burro Summit kicks off Wednesday in Salt Lake City, "a week after congressional auditors identified countless hurdles but no solutions to the growing number of U.S.-protected wild horses roaming 10 western states." Critics claim "the invitation-only gathering hosted by Utah State University amounts to a 'slaughter summit.'"

Red Rock Canyon Could Raise Entry Fees To $15 Next Year.

KTNV-TV Las Vegas (8/22, Jarvis) reports that "a proposed fee increase could raise entry to Red Rock National Conservation Area to $15 by next year and $20 by 2023." The Bureau of Land Management is seeking public comments on the proposed increase.

Walter Mondale: We Can't Afford To Get The Mining-vs.-land-protection Equation Wrong.

In an op-ed for the Minneapolis Star Tribune (8/22, Mondale), Walter F. Mondale, a former vice president of the United States and former U.S. senator from Minnesota, writes about the importance of protecting the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness from mining. He lauds the Trump administration for "wisely" choosing "to let our professional land managers perform their job and continue the study." According to Mondale, "this is crucial to the well-being of the Boundary Waters and to the sustainable economy of wilderness-edge communities."

Current Petroleum Reserve Plan Is Solid; Don't Fall For Land-Rush Mentality.

In an op-ed for the Alaska Dispatch News (8/22, Pourchot), Pat Pourchot, who has "served as a senator and representative in the Alaska State Legislature, commissioner of the Alaska State Department of Natural Resources and special assistant to the secretary of the interior for Alaska affairs," writes that the current land use plan for the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska was "only just completed in 2013 and has allowed significant on-going oil and gas leasing and development." Pourchot asserts that "the base information and the formulation of the current plan are scientifically sound, in accord with law, and strike a fair and reasonable balance in the treatment of the natural resources owned by all the citizens of this country." He argues that "any changes to the plan should take the deliberative time and effort that went into its original construction."

Bureau Of Ocean Energy Management

Delaware Governor Opposes Offshore Drilling.

The AP (8/22) reports that "Gov. John Carney (D) says he's opposed to drilling for oil and gas in federal waters off the coast of Delaware, or elsewhere along the Atlantic coast." Carney sent a letter last week to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke in which he defended the "economic importance of Delaware's coastal areas and coastal activities." The AP adds that "Carney says more than 60,000 jobs support the fishing, tourism and recreation industries in Delaware, and that coast-related activities contribute almost $7 billion in economic production to the state." The article also points out that "Carney's letter was in response to a request for comments regarding the Trump administration's proposal for a new five-year national offshore oil and gas leasing program."

Also reporting are the Dover \(DE\) Post (8/22) and the Wilmington \(DE\) News Journal (8/22, Goss).

International Association Of Drilling Contractors Requests Expanded Access To Outer Continental Shelf.

DailyEnergyInsider (8/22) reports that "the International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC) recently submitted comments in response to the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management's (BOEM) request for information and comments on the 2019-2024 Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program." The IADC "noted that the U.S. oil and natural gas industry supported more than 10.3 million U.S. jobs and accounted for over 7.5 percent of gross domestic product in 2015." IADC President Jason McFarland said, "It is with these numbers in mind that IADC, along with our industry association counterparts, supports the expansion of available drilling areas in the 5-year leasing plan. We urge Interior Secretary [Ryan] Zinke to expand access to available resources of the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) in order to further solidify energy security for the U.S. and future job creation and revenue generation."

Offshore Drilling Committee Weighs In On Oil, Beaches.

The Columbia \(SC\) State (8/22, Fretwell) reports that "the politically sensitive question of whether to support oil drilling off the South Carolina coast sparked plenty of talk Tuesday as lawmakers wrestled with an issue that has divided the state." According to the article, "legislators serving on a special study committee steered clear of endorsing drilling, despite testimony from a university professor and an industry advocate that lucrative oil and gas deposits might lie off the state's coast." Some legislators "openly questioned the need for offshore drilling."

Continuing Coverage: Draft EIS Released For Liberty Offshore Project.

The Alaska Journal of Commerce (8/22, Brehmer) reports in continuing coverage that the BOEM released the draft EIS for Hilcorp's proposed Liberty Offshore project. Hilcorp, along with its partners BP and Arctic Slope Regional Corp, are planning to build a gravel island in the Beaufort Sea, allowing the companies access to up to 330 million barrels of light crude in place.

Additional Coverage: More Oil And Gas Leases Sold In The Gulf.

Additional coverage that the Interior Department "leased 90 oil and gas tracts covering more than 508,000 acres in federal waters in the central and western Gulf of Mexico last week" was provided by WGCU-FM Fort Myers, FL (8/22).

Oil Drilling In The Atlantic Threatens Our Economy.

In an op-ed for the Myrtle Beach \(SC\) Online (8/22, Knapp), Frank Knapp Jr., president and CEO of the South Carolina Small Business Chamber of Commerce, warns that offshore oil drilling threatens the commercial fishing and coastal recreation industries of South Carolina. Knapp writes that "the bottom line is that allowing offshore drilling in the Atlantic equals oil washing ashore and fowling our pristine beaches and coastlines." Knapp warns that "the Atlantic Ocean, its marine animals and our coastal economies will never be the same if drilling is ever allowed."

Fish And Wildlife Service

Guilty Defendants In Oregon Standoff Agree To Pay Back $78,000.

Oregon Public Broadcasting (8/22, Wilson) reports that "defendants guilty of occupying the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge have agreed to pay a total of $78,000 in restitution, according to a motion filed in federal court Monday." The deal is "between the U.S. Department of Justice and 13 defendants who were either found guilty or pleaded guilty to conspiracy to impede federal officers who worked at the refuge from doing their jobs — a felony." U.S. District Court Judge Anna Brown "must sign off on restitution agreement before it's official. She has wide latitude to make changes to the proposal."

Arctic Researchers To Study Wind Effects On Marine Life.

The AP (8/22, Joling) reports that “a federal research vessel will launch on a cruise this week to study how Beaufort Sea wind affects plant and animal life in a changing Arctic Ocean.” The Sikuliaq, “owned by the National Science Foundation and operated by the University of Alaska Fairbanks, will depart Friday from Nome for the trip through the Bering Strait to waters on and off the continental shelf in the Beaufort.” The article notes that “researchers from the University of Washington, the University of Rhode Island and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will be on board.”

Officials Tour Blackwater Marsh Restoration Project.

My Eastern Shore MD (8/22, Holt) reports that “federal and state officials visited Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge in Dorchester County Sunday, Aug. 20, to tour the Chesapeake Marshlands project.” According to the article, “the $2.1 million project, though the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, The Conservation Fund and the National Audubon Society, began in 2016 by spreading more than 26,000 cubic feet of sediment taken from the Blackwater River over 40 acres to elevate the marsh surface near Maple Dam Road.” U.S. Fish and Wildlife Chesapeake Marshlands Complex Project Leader Marcia Pradines “said the restoration efforts will benefit the wetland ecology by allowing oxygen to reach plants’ roots and improving the health and resilience of marsh.” Pradines said, “If we lose these marshes, we lose the unique wildlife that call the salt marsh home, thousands of acres of nursery habitat for juvenile fish and a buffer for local communities against storm surges during hurricanes.”

Feds Shouldn’t Change Florida Panther Protections.

In an editorial, the South Florida Sun Sentinel (8/22) “opposes potentially weakening protections for the Florida panther.” The paper argues that “instead of making things easier for big land owners, state and federal officials should boost efforts to protect open spaces and save Florida’s big cats.” The paper concludes that is “more important than ever to bolster, not diminish, protections for Florida’s remaining panthers.”

Fish And Wildlife Service Offers Reasonable Changes.

The Kingman \(AZ\) Daily Miner (8/22) editorializes that that “last year, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USF&WS) proposed a lot of major changes on the management of the Colorado River, including the Topock Marsh, which is within the boundaries of the Havasu National Wildlife Refuge.” Now, “with a new refuge manager at the helm, the USF&WS is once more soliciting comments from the general public on some management changes they want to make regarding the Colorado River and Topock Marsh.” According to the paper, “this time it looks like the changes are way more reasonable and the call for heads to roll within that agency like it did last time may not happen.”

America’s Beloved Grizzly Bears Are In Trouble, And So Is The Nation’s Moral Compass.

In an op-ed for the Denver Post (8/22, Mattson), David Mattson, a senior visiting scientist at the Yale School of Forestry & Environmental Studies, criticizes “the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s final ruling to remove Endangered Species Act protections for Yellowstone’s 600 to 700 grizzly bears.” He notes that “the last three years have seen record-breaking bear mortality, far exceeding any we might expect from numbers of bears in the population.” Mattson laments that Fish and Wildlife has “shown remarkable disregard for this and other concerns.”

KEN MIDKIFF: Ozark Hellbender’s Fate Doesn’t Bode Well For Water Quality.

In an op-ed for the Columbia \(MO\) Missourian (8/22, Midkiff), Ken Midkiff, a member of the city’s Environment and Energy Commission and serves on the board of directors of the Great Rivers Environmental Law Center, writes that “like most endangered species, the Ozark hellbender is not a victim of rampant hunting, rather it is a victim of loss of hospitable habitat.” However, “for reasons that apparently have to do with preferred foods, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service refuses to designate the streams a ‘critical habitat,’ which imposes special protections around the areas where endangered species are found.” According to Midkiff, the salamander is important because “it is the ‘canary in the coal mine’ when it comes to water quality.”

National Park Service

Celeb Ambassadors Help National Parks Mark 101st Birthday.

The AP (8/22, HARPAZ) reports that the National Park Service “marks its 101st birthday Friday amid a ‘Parks 101’ campaign enlisting celebrities as ambassadors for the park system’s hidden gems.” According to the article, “this year’s effort highlights lesser known treasures that even locals might not know about.” Also, “Parks 101 activities and digital content will offer introductions to topics like kayaking 101, battlefields 101 and shipwrecks 101.”

In addition, the Newport News \(VA\) Daily Press (8/22, Reyes) reports that “to celebrate its birthday Friday, the National Park Service is offering free admission to its parks across the country.”

Homestead National Monument Of America, Estimates 30,000 Attended Eclipse Events.

The Columbus News Team \(NE\) (8/22, Kennedy) reports that Homestead National Monument of America officials have “announced attendance figures for the full solar eclipse.” According to Superintendent Mark Engler, “an estimated 13,000 to 15,000 people attended the eclipse events, on Monday.”

Solar Celebration: Hundreds Gather To Watch Historic Eclipse. The Salem \(MA\) News (8/21, MacNeill) reports that about 300 people gathered at the Salem Maritime National Historic Site on Monday afternoon for the solar eclipse. The park handed out “250 pairs of viewing glasses — 50 for Junior Rangers and another 200 for the public.”

Conservatives: Nix Group Altering Statues.

The Daily Caller (8/22, Pearce) reports that a conservative group is calling for the Interior Department “to cut ties with a non-profit organization currently raising funds for a National Park Service (NPS) overhaul of the Jefferson Memorial.” The Trust for the National Mall “raises private funds for NPS projects on the National Mall, which gives the nonprofit some influence over how the monuments are managed.” The conservative group Americans for Limited Government “took issue with some of the most recent renovations scheduled for the memorial — particularly updates to an exhibit on Jefferson’s history.”

Agency Blames Hackers Over ‘F--- Trump’ Road Sign In DC Park.

Fox News (8/22) reports that “authorities are looking into the apparent hack of a road sign in Washington’s scenic Rock Creek Park that was emblazoned with a profane message Monday morning about President Trump.” According to the article, “the electronic sign was supposed to inform drivers that a local road was closed for sewer work,” but “instead, all it said was: ‘F--- Trump.’” According to Chief of External Affairs at D.C. Water John Lisle, “the U.S. Park Police may be investigating, as the sign was inside Rock Creek Park – the sprawling 1,754-acre park overseen by the National Park Service.”

Blunt Staffer Tours Historic Areas, Expresses Optimism For Legislation.

The Ste. Genevieve \(MO\) Herald (8/22) reports that “Ste. Genevieve tourism leaders pulled out all stops in showing two of U.S. Senator Roy Blunt’s top staffers the town’s full array of heritage tourism options on August 15.” Trey McKenzie, “Blunt’s legislative assistant in Washington, D.C., has moved into position to be involved with the bill to create a National Park Service (NPS) unit in Ste. Genevieve.” McKenzie was “joined by Darren Lingle, manager of Blunt’s Cape Girardeau office, as they were taken on a tour on the Ste. Genevieve Trolley, visiting the Bauvais-Amoureux House, the Green Tree Tavern and the Bequette-Ribault House on St. Mary’s Road, all of which would be within the boundaries of the proposed park.”

Vermont To Recognize Historic LGBTQ Sites.

The AP (8/23) reports that “Vermont officials are working to recognize historic LGBTQ sites within the state through a National Park Service grant program.” Vermont was “invited to participate in the National Park Service’s grant program for underrepresented communities on the National Register of Historic Places.” State officials will “focus on highlighting significant LGBTQ sites involved in the equal rights movement.”

Historic 1830s Potomac Lockhouse To Undergo Rehabilitation.

Curbed Washington (8/22, Goldchain) reports that over the past few years, Maryland’s Swains Lockhouse, “otherwise known as Lockhouse 21, has fallen into disrepair and suffered from run-ins with vandals, according to the C&O Canal Trust.” The National Park Service Centennial Challenge Program has “provided a $100,000 grant to support the rehabilitation of the property.” The grant is “also matched by $108,160, which was raised by the C&O Canal Trust, the Friends of Historic Great Falls Tavern, and the C&O Canal Association and also supported by Maryland Senators Ben Cardin and Chris Van Hollen. $75,000 of those funds were raised by individual donors and a grant from the France-Merrick Foundation.”

McCabes, NPS To Sign Hale Lease On Friday.

The Hot Springs \(AR\) Sentinel-Record (8/22) reports that “after more than three years of lease negotiations, Hot Springs Mayor Pat McCabe and his wife, Ellen, will sign a lease with the National Park Service on Friday to reopen the Hale Bath House as the first, and only, boutique hotel in Hot Springs National Park.” The NPS “said in a news release it will sign the lease with Zest Enterprise LLC at 2 p.m. Friday.” According to the NPS, “a public open house of the building will follow the signing event to provide the public with an opportunity to see the building prior to its transformation.”

‘Every Kid In A Park’ Coming To Cascades Falls Park For 435 Kids.

MLive \(MI\) (8/22, Weidmayer) reports that “Cascades Falls Park and the Jackson Civil War Muster will host 435 fourth-graders from Jackson Public Schools as part of an ‘Every Kid in a Park’ event.’ The event on Friday, Aug. 25, is “designed to encourage children to visit and support parks, according to a press release.”

Missouri Man Fatally Shot By Arkansas National Park Ranger.

The AP (8/22) reports that the National Park Service “says a Missouri man was fatally shot by a park ranger in northern Arkansas when he refused to drop a weapon he was carrying.” The NPS “says in a news release that 46-year-old Jonathan Bolger of Branson was killed in the shooting early Sunday at Buffalo River National Park.” According to the release, “Bolger was carrying a handgun when he was encountered by rangers and that he was shot when he refused to comply with orders to drop the gun.”

Teen Missing For 11 Days Found OK In Tennessee National Park.

The AP (8/22) reports that “a teenager who had not been seen for 11 days has emerged on his own from Tennessee’s Great Smoky Mountains National Park.” Austin Bohanan, 18, “walked out of a remote area in Blount County, about 40 miles south of Knoxville.” National Park Service spokeswoman Jamie Sanders “says Bohanan was walking and alert and appeared to be in good condition.”

Additional Coverage: Trump Ends Obama’s ‘Water Bottle Ban’.

Additional coverage that the Trump Administration is “ending a policy implemented by former president Barack Obama that attempted to ban water bottles at national parks” was provided by Fox News (8/22, Harrington) and the Daily Meal (8/22, Rock).

Office Of Insular Affairs

Tillerson Notes Signs Of ‘Restraint’ In North Korea And Hints At Dialogue.

The Los Angeles Times (8/22, Wilkinson) reports Secretary of State Tillerson “on Tuesday voiced a rare note of optimism in the North Korea nuclear crisis, saying ruler Kim Jong Un may be showing signs of restraint that could lead to dialogue.” In a State Department press briefing, Tillerson “noted that North Korea had not launched a ballistic missile nor done other ‘provocative acts’ since the United Nations Security Council voted unanimously on Aug. 5 to impose blistering economic sanctions on Pyongyang.” Said Tillerson, “I’m pleased to see that the regime in Pyongyang has certainly demonstrated some level of restraint that we’ve not seen in the past.” Tillerson also “expressed hope that such restraint was ‘the beginning of this signal that we’ve been looking for,’” and added, “Perhaps we are seeing our pathway to some time in the near future to having some dialogue.” Reuters (8/22, Brunnstrom, Torbati) reports Tillerson also said, “We need to see more on their part, but I want to acknowledge the steps they’ve taken thus far.” To NBC Nightly News (8/22, story 2, 1:45, Holt), meanwhile, Tillerson “offer[ed] an olive branch to Kim Jong-un.”

The Washington Post (8/22, Fifield) reports, however, reports that “on the second day of the Ulchi Freedom Guardian drills” in South Korea, “which mainly involve computer simulations, North Korea’s state media issued another sharp warning to the United States,” saying, “The US will be wholly held accountable for the catastrophic consequences to be entailed by such reckless aggressive war maneuvers." Moreover, Townhall (8/22, Barkoukis) reported that "North Korea may have called off its plan to attack Guam for now, but it's not backing down from its threatening rhetoric about the US territory." Townhall added that a "recent propaganda video released by the rogue regime shows...Trump looking out over a field of crosses in a graveyard in Guam," and "pictures Vice President Mike Pence engulfed in flames."

Politico (8/22, Conway) says Tillerson "played a major role in trying to cool tensions earlier this month, after President Donald Trump lashed out after provocations from North Korea, warning that the country would experience 'fire and fury' if it didn't back down." But "despite his efforts, Trump continued making aggressive statements toward Pyongyang."

Office Of Surface Mining

Additional Coverage: Interior Dept.

Halts Study Into Appalachian Mining Technique's Likely Health Hazards. Additional coverage that the Trump Administration has halted a study of the health effects of mountaintop removal mining was provided by CNN (8/22, Wallace, Marsh, Lamotte), MSNBC (8/22, Benen), the Daily Mail (8/22, Kekatos), and the Sierra \(CA\) Sun Times (8/22).

US Geological Survey

A Second Wind For The North Slope?

Rigzone (8/22) reports that "following an executive order from U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke, the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) is in the process of generating updated assessments of the oil and gas resources on Alaska's North Slope in what could be the precursor to an exploration and development boom on federal lands that have mostly been off-limits to the industry." Zinke's executive order has "renewed a sense of hope for opening currently off-limit areas of the National Petroleum Reserve – Alaska (NPRA), and opening the 1002 Area of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), which has been tightly closed to the industry since the 1980s, to exploration." Meanwhile, "with a Republican-controlled House and Senate and a president whose no-holds-barred approach to the industry has unleashed a wave of optimism among operators, many believe that Alaska can brightly shine on the industry's maps once again."

Top National News

President Attacks Media, Strongly Hints At Arpaio Pardon In Phoenix Speech.

Immediate coverage of President Trump's Tuesday evening rally in Phoenix paints it as a typically free-wheeling affair, with the President spending about 20 minutes blasting the media, then strongly hinting at a coming pardon for ex-Maricopa County, Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio before a crowd of firm supporters. Media commentators generally took a dim view of the President's words, and some on CNN went so far as to question his mental health.

Don Lemon said on CNN Tonight (8/22), "What we have witnessed was a total eclipse of the facts. Someone who came out on stage and lied directly to the American people and left things out that he said in an attempt to rewrite history, especially when it comes to Charlottesville. He's unhinged. ... His speech was without thought. It was without reason. It was devoid of facts. It was devoid of wisdom."

CNN political director David Chalian, also on CNN Tonight (8/22), said, "That was a president totally unhinged. There's little doubt about that for anyone watching. ... This is the evidence that backs up Bob Corker questioning his stability for office. This is the evidence as to why Susan Collins...isn't so sure he may be around to run for re-election in 2020. This is evidence as to why the Republican leader in the United States Senate...is telling people and associates...that he's not sure this presidency is going to fill out the duration of the term."

Republican strategist Rick Wilson said on CNN Tonight (8/22), "This was a Castro-esque speech in length...by a man who obviously is mentally unstable. ... This is a man who is not well. This is a man who is not qualified or mentally or morally fit to be the President of the United States, and tonight was one more proof of it."

Political commentator Bakari Sellers said on CNN Tonight (8/22), "We're going to have discussions about the 25th Amendment, no doubt. I think the President is unfit. I think the President is unhinged. But many of us have known that for 18 months, 19 months, and we're still here now."

The AP (8/22, Bykowicz) reports that the President "is blaming the media for the widespread condemnation of his response to a Charlottesville, Virginia, protest organized by white supremacists that led to the killing of a counter-protester." He opened his rally in Phoenix "with a call for unity," but "quickly trained his ire on the media, shouting that he 'openly called for healing unity and love' in the immediate aftermath of Charlottesville and claiming the media had misrepresented him. He read from his three responses to the violence – getting more animated with each one."

KPNX-TV Phoenix (8/23, 10:12 p.m. MST) reported that Trump was "unplugged" as he delivered "a 25-minute tantrum against the media." Trump "spent one-third of his 75-minute speech ripping the 'crooked media' over its coverage of his three statements after the violence in Charlottesville two weeks ago." KNXV-TV Phoenix (8/23, 10:06 p.m. MST) reported that Trump "wast[ed] no time going after the protests happening outside." Trump "quickly moving on to what happened in Charlottesville."

The AP says Trump also "teased a pardon" for Arpaio, "asking the crowd what they thought of him." Trump then said, "So was Sheriff Joe convicted for doing his job? I'll make a prediction: I think he's going to be just fine." The Arizona Republic (8/22, Cassidy) reports that last week, Trump "whipped up speculation that he would pardon his political ally at Tuesday's rally." The Phoenix Business Journal (8/22, Sunnucks) reports that Trump "pretty much assured" Arpaio of a pardon, telling "the populist crowd Arpaio was convicted by a federal judge of contempt of court 'for doing his job.'"

The New York Times (8/22, Landler, Haberman) also says Trump "all but promised to pardon...the hard-line former sheriff of Maricopa County" who "became a national symbol of the campaign against undocumented immigrants, and whose round-'em-up raids have landed him in legal trouble." Breitbart (8/22, Mason) runs a brief report under the headline "Trump Hints At Pardon: 'Sheriff Joe Can Feel Good!'"

The Wall Street Journal (8/22, Ballhaus, Mann, Lovett) focuses its coverage of Trump's lengthy attack on the media, which he accused of "giving a platform to hate groups" and "fomenting divisions." The Washington Post (8/22, Wagner, Johnson, Paquette) reports that in his "extended diatribe," Trump "selectively recount[ed] the series of statements he made" after Charlottesville, claiming that the media, "whom he called 'sick people' – refused to report it properly."

The New York Post (8/23, Jaeger) reports, "Trump spent 20 minutes during [the] raucous rally...reframing his response to the violence in Charlottesville by attacking the media." He "never repeated his controversial 'many sides' remark," and "apologized to the crowd for dedicating such an outsize chunk of his nearly 80-minute speech to defending himself." David Nakamura of the Washington Post tweeted the crowd "seemed increasingly bored during Trump's media bashing." David Catanese of US News tweeted, "Moving over the hour mark now, lots of Trump folks are trickling out of the Phoenix Convention Center. Speech is too long for them." Catanese also tweeted a photo of a sparse crowd.

The Washington Times (8/22, Boyer, Miller) reports that Trump said, "It's time to expose the crooked media deceptions and to challenge the media for their role in fomenting division. And yes, by the way, they are trying to take away our history and our heritage. You see that." That line came in for some criticism on social media. Charles Blow of the New York Times tweeted, "There it is, the racist dog whistle: They're trying to take away our heritage and our history." Actor and activist George Takei, who has 2.6 million followers, tweeted, "Trump in Phoenix: 'They are trying to take away our history and our heritage.' We all know the code he's speaking. Disgraceful." Sahil Kapur of Bloomberg News tweeted, "Paul Ryan said Trump was wrong last Saturday, right on Monday, messed up Tuesday and great yesterday. How does he feel about today?"

McClatchy (8/22, Ordoñez) writes, "Trump found in Arizona what he is denied in Washington – an adoring crowd that encourages his bluster. And that's exactly what he wanted." McClatchy say the speech was "tailor-made for his voting base." The President "sent an overt political warning to a Republican Congress that has failed to deliver on almost all of the president's legislative goals: you owe the voters some progress." He said, "I have a message for Congress tonight. Your job is to represent American families, American people, American workers. That's your job."

The Washington Examiner (8/22, Westwood) says Trump "delivered a fiery performance to his base," while Politico (8/22, Nussbaum) says the President "was back in his natural element" and “seemed to be reveling in the crowd’s love from the moment he entered.” John Bresnahan of Politico tweeted, “These rallies are the only time Trump really looks like he’s enjoying being president.”

Immediate social media reaction was negative. Rep. Nanette Barragán (D-CA) tweeted, “#PhoenixRally takeaway: @realDonaldTrump would rather divide Americans than keep the government working.” Rep. Jamie Raskin (D-MD) tweeted, “Trump’s self-pitying, obsessional and delusional speech hits a new low in mendacity.” USA Today’s Eliza Collins tweeted, “Text from conservative [congressional] aide on feelings on Trump speech: ‘Strikingly uncomfortable, on a number of levels.’”

BuzzFeed senior national correspondent John Stanton tweeted, “The craziest part is that Donald Trump totally think he’s nailed it.” Washington Post conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin tweeted, “It would be nice if a couple of [Republicans] stepped forward to say this was horrifying, dishonest and raises issue of mental stability.”

Dan Rather wrote on Facebook, “Blame the press. Blame President Obama. Insist down is up and up is down. Create an alternate reality. Gaslight. Gaslight. Gaslight. Misquote yourself. Leave out the words that outraged a majority of a nation. ... This was Trump as candidate, uncaged, unscripted, unabashed, and frankly unhinged.” University of Tennessee historian Bob Hutton tweeted, “Kinda wondering if the 1933 Nuremberg rally was this rambling and tacky before Leni Riefenstahl edited it for mass consumption.”

The Hill (8/22, Greenwood) headlines its report “Trump Rips Media, Defends Charlottesville Statements At Campaign-Style Rally.” Reuters (8/22, Mason, Coffman) and the CNN (8/22, Bradner) website also have reports.

ABC and NBC both opened their Tuesday evening newscasts with previews of the rally. On ABC World News Tonight (8/22, lead story, 3:05, Muir), Tom Llamas reported, “In Phoenix, the red-hat-wearing faithful are lining up here to see President Trump, who ignored a plea from the city’s mayor to postpone tonight’s rally because emotions were still too raw after Charlottesville.” On NBC Nightly News (8/22, lead story, 2:50, Holt), Kristen Welker reported, “This is President Trump’s eighth campaign-style rally since taking office, and it comes as he’s been openly feuding with the state’s two Republican senators.”

Trump Criticizes McCain, But Not By Name. The Washington Times (8/22, Boyer, Miller) reports, “Trump taunted Sen. John McCain on his home turf Tuesday, repeatedly telling a boisterous rally that they were just one vote away from repealing Obamacare.” He did not mention McCain by name, “but the hometown crowd knew exactly who the president was talking about.” Trump said, “One vote. Speak to your senator. Please. speak to your senator.” KSAZ-TV (8/23, 10:11 p.m. MST) reported that Trump “criticized both Arizona senators without mentioning them by name.” Ben Jacobs of The Guardian tweeted, “Pretty sure Trump has been nicer to Kim Jong Un than John McCain tonight.”

Protests Outside Event Generally Peaceful. The AP (8/22, Billeaud, Silber) reports that “minor scuffles and shouting matches erupted” outside the event. The scene “was noisy, but largely peaceful as Phoenix police kept most members of the two opposing groups behind barricades and apart on separate sides of the street.” The New York Times (8/22, Romero) reports that “thousands of supporters and opponents...shouted at one another, chanted slogans, hoisted placards and complained about the 108-degree heat.” Politico’s Blake Hounshell tweeted, “Thankfully, Phoenix seems to have been peaceful. Many were expecting some spasm of violence.”

Breitbart (8/22, Spiering) reports that one protester tried to interrupt the President’s speech. After the individual was removed, the President said, “You know, they show up in the helmets and the black masks and they’ve got clubs, they’ve got everything. Antifa! ... All week they’re talking about the massive crowds that are going to be outside. Where are they? Where are they? Well, it’s hot out.”

Carson Appearance Did Not Violate Hatch Act. The Arizona Republic (8/22, Harris) reports that HUD Secretary Carson’s appearance at the rally “created buzz on social media among those questioning whether the Hatch Act was violated. The short answer: no.” While the Hatch Act “prohibits federal executive-branch employees from engaging in partisan political events – like Tuesday’s rally” – it “does not apply to the president, vice president or employees appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the US Senate.” Carson, Franklin Graham Jr., and Alveolar King were the main speakers before the President took the stage.

Photo Claiming To Show Huge Crowd Tweeted, Then Deleted. The Arizona Republic (8/22, Hwang, Mitchell) reports that a Twitter account that claims to be an “unofficial account for Republicans in Tennessee” tweeted a photo purporting to show a large crowd arriving for the rally. The photo was “actually an aerial shot from the 2016 Cleveland Cavaliers parade.” The tweet was deleted, but not before being retweeted “more than 800 times and liked more than 1,000 times.” The @TEN_GOP account “is not affiliated with the Tennessee Republican Party.”

Trump Also Made Stop At US-Mexico Border. The CBS Evening News (8/22, story 3, 1:55, Mason) reported that before the Phoenix event, “President Trump paid a visit to the border he vowed to secure.” CBS’ Chip Reid: “In Yuma, Arizona today, President Trump toured an operations center on the Mexican border, where immigration officials showed off state-of-the-art equipment, including a Predator drone. Building a wall on the border was the President’s top promise during the campaign. ... But so far, Mr. Trump has failed to convince the Republican Congress to pay for it.”

The Arizona Republic (8/22, Carranza) reports that the President “spent less than two hours near the US-Mexico border on Tuesday, but the intent of his brief visit was clear: Walls work, and it’s time to build one along the Southwest border.” Trump “never said those words, at least not publicly,” during the brief stop, “but his administration was eager to get the word out.” The Washington Times (8/22, Dinan, Boyer) reports that border security officials “said they still need more fencing to help funnel the illegal traffic, and promised to keep pressing enforcement inside the US to convince people they’re likely to be deported even if they do breach the border.”

The Yuma \(AZ\) Sun (8/22, Neyoy) reports that local officials “would have welcomed the chance to meet with President Trump...but they missed out on that opportunity.” San Luis City Councilman Matias Rosales said, “We weren’t invited. In fact, I found out about the visit on Facebook. But I would like to think that he at least flew over the border and saw what the ports of entry are like.”

Brady: Revenues From Tax Reform Should Not Necessarily Go To Infrastructure.

The Washington Times (8/22, Sherfinski) reports that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady said Tuesday he is examining the idea of using some of the $2.5 trillion in would-be revenues from corporate tax reform “to pay for lowering rates elsewhere,” rather than using the money for infrastructure investments. Brady “said he’s listening and working with the White House, and that the two subjects may intersect at some point.”

GOP Considers Tax Proposal Allowing $450 Billion Of Cuts Without Offsets.

Bloomberg News (8/22, Kapur) reports that a “growing” number of Republicans in Congress are considering a “controversial” proposal “that would allow for about $450 billion of tax cuts without offsets,” according to four congressional aides. Under the measure, Republicans “would not account for things like expiring tax breaks when gauging the budgetary impact of tax legislation – giving tax writers more room for cuts.”

Businesses Lobbying For Corporate Tax Cut.

The Wall Street Journal (8/22, Rubin) reports that large US companies are lobbying senior lawmakers to rally broader support for corporate tax cuts by inviting congressmen to their facilities and pressing employees to contact their representatives. Businesses and Republicans in Congress argue that the cuts would help workers by encouraging investments that lead to long-term wage growth, but unions and some companies say lower rates would be paid by workers in decreased services.

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

“Trump On Afghanistan: More Of The Same; No End In Sight.” The New York Times (8/22) editorializes, “If there is a compelling case to be made for deepening the United States military involvement in Afghanistan...Trump did not make it in his speech Monday night.” President Trump’s plan “amounted to a jumble of ideas that lacked detail and coherence and were often contradictory. Having spent years criticizing America’s involvement in Afghanistan, he now appears inclined toward an open-ended commitment, but with no real ways to measure success and no hint of a timetable for withdrawal.” The Times concludes that “Trump and his administration need to provide many more answers.”

“Mr. Trump Sides With Wall Street; You Lose.” A New York Times (8/23, Board) editorial accuses the Administration of persisting “in its efforts to derail the fiduciary rule” regardless of “how arbitrary, capricious and harmful that would be.” The Times calls this goal “obstruction, pure and simple,” and suggests the motivation “is fear on Wall Street that consumers and regulators might someday demand similar, customer-first standards for all financial advisers, not just those handling retirement accounts.” Regardless of the outcome, the Times concludes, “this much is clear: Mr. Trump has taken sides, and he has chosen Wall Street.”

Washington Post.

“Trump’s Welcome Self-Correction.” The Washington Post (8/22) editorializes that President Trump’s speech amounted to “a rare but welcome story of self-correction,” and that the President “deserves credit for changing his position in a way that is likely to displease some of his political supporters.” adds the Post, “The US mission in Afghanistan will continue – not because a quick victory is on the horizon; it’s not, as Mr. Trump seems to understand. It will continue, because as Mr. Trump also came to understand, the alternative – a quick defeat – would be so much worse.”

“The Hard Work Of School Reform Is Paying Off In The District.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/22) writes that a decade of investment in DC Public Schools have yielded encouraging results – “underscored with last week’s release of scores on the national Partnership for Assessment of Readiness for College and Careers” that showed significant gains “across almost all grades and subjects, with all groups of students showing improvements.” The Post acknowledges that a “significant achievement gap persists” for minority and low-income students, but applauds the scores overall, which show that the District “remains committed to reform of a public education system that has failed generations of Washingtonians.”

“On Gun Violence Research, California Sets An Example For The Nation.” In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/22) applauds California’s recent decision “to advance the science of gun-violence prevention with the establishment of the country’s first publicly funded research center.” The Firearm Violence Research Center “aims to find effective ways to prevent firearm violence through scientific investigation and understanding.” California’s decision “to be at the forefront of research on gun violence as a public-health issue stands in contrast to the dismal abdication of the federal government.” Legislation passed by Congress in 1996 “barring the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention from spending any funds ‘to advocate or promote gun control’ made the agency skittish about conducting research.” The Post argues that “scientific investigation has been key in devising lifesaving solutions to other public-health issues,” so “the dearth of research into firearms, a leading cause of death for Americans under the age of 65, is intolerable.”

California’s State-Funded Research Center To Scientifically Study Firearm Violence.

Wall Street Journal.

“Trump’s Afghan Commitment.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/22, Board) argues that opponents of President Trump’s new Afghanistan strategy lack an alternative – other than accepting a US defeat.

“Right-To-Work Sore Losers.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/22) writes that the AFL-CIO and its allies on Friday submitted 310,000 signatures to halt new right-to-work legislation in Missouri – despite already having spent more than $12 million on the previous gubernatorial election on a candidate opposed to right-to-work who lost. The Journal argues that unions in the state will continue to embrace political coercion to collect their dues.

“New York Attacks Success.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/22) writes that Joseph Belluck, the new chair of the committee that approves New York City’s charter schools, is hurting successful education in the city by indicating he would not approve new Success Academy schools as long as Daniel Loeb, who recently made what the Journal calls racially insensitive comments, remains on the committee. The Journal acknowledges Loeb’s controversial remarks but argues that Success Academy schools have vastly improved education for New York’s minorities and that Belluck and New York’s authorities have misplaced education priorities to care more about a controversial statement than improving the education of thousands.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Chevron CEO’s Exit Reflects A Changing Of The Guard For Big Oil

US Readies New Steps To Pressure Pakistan

Trains In Vain: Epic CSX Traffic Jam Snarls Deliveries, From Coal To Fries

Think Interest Rates Are Going Up? Banks Don't

New York Times:

McConnell, In Private, Doubts If Trump Can Save Presidency
What An Afghanistan Victory Looks Like Under The Trump Plan
At Rally, Trump Blames Media For Country's Deepening Divisions
For Help In America's Longest War, Trump Tilts Political Balance Toward India Over Pakistan
Commander Of Naval Fleet To Be Relieved Of Duty Following Collisions
It's A Diverse City, But Most Big Museum Boards Are Strikingly White

Washington Post:

US Sets New Sanctions Related To North Korea
Military Leaders Gain Influence In Executive Branch
'It's Like Everyone Forgot'
In NJ Suburbs, Football Is Facing An Uphill Struggle
Trump Implies Pardon Of Arpaio Is Coming

Financial Times:

Merkel Under Fire For Failing To Defy Trump
US Sanctions Raise Pressure On China And Russia Over N Korea
Impact On Farmers Prompts EU Probe Into Bayer's \$66bn Bid For Monsanto

Washington Times:

Trump Visits Arizona In Push For Wall Funding, More Border Agents
Gun Rights Groups Concerned Over Protestors Carrying Firearms At Rallies
Trump Hits Four Countries With Visa Sanctions
Adult Sex Toy Industry Sends Sale Proceeds To Planned Parenthood
Trump Eyes Taliban Talks, Puts Pakistan On Notice In Afghan War Plan

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Trump-Arizona Rally; Trump-Afghanistan Strategy; Severe Weather; Weather Forecast; USS John S. McCain-Collision, Search; Barcelona Attacks-New Details; Mnuchin, Linton-Instagram Controversy; Verizon-New Data Plans; Philadelphia-Train Crash; Oklahoma-Escaped Inmates.

CBS: Rob Joyce Interview-US Cybersecurity; Severe Weather; Trump-Arizona Rally; Border Patrol-Job Recruitment; USS John S. McCain-Collision, Search; Trump-Afghanistan Strategy; Afghanistan Strategy-Analysis; NFL-Kaepernick Controversy; Italian Island-Earthquake; Mnuchin, Linton-Instagram Controversy.

NBC: Trump-Arizona Rally; Trump-Afghanistan Strategy; USS John S. McCain-Collision, Search; Severe Weather; Health-Salmonella Outbreaks; Health-Sudden Cardiac Arrest; North Korea, China Sanctions-Analysis; Nautilus Submarine-Reporter Presumed Dead; Italian Island-Earthquake; Transportation-Airline Ticket Prices.

Network TV At A Glance:

Trump-Arizona Rally – 7 minutes, 50 seconds
USS John S. McCain-Collision, Search – 5 minutes, 35 seconds
Trump-Afghanistan Strategy – 5 minutes, 15 seconds
Severe Weather – 3 minutes, 35 seconds
Mnuchin, Linton-Instagram Controversy – 2 minutes, 35 seconds
Italian Island-Earthquake – 45 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Trump-Arizona Rally; US Navy-7th Fleet Commander Relieved; Tillerson-Pakistan Warnings.

CBS: Trump-Arizona Rally; US Navy-7th Fleet Commander Relieved; North Korea-New Rocket Engine Production Orders; Cosby Trial.

FOX: Trump-Arizona Rally; US Navy-7th Fleet Commander Relieved; ESPN Announcer Robert Lee-Reassigned Over UVA Statue Controversy; Louisiana-Kidnapping Incident; Wall Street; Highest Paid Actors 2017; Texas-Tropic Storm Harvey Remnants.

NPR: Trump-Arizona Rally; Senate Russia Investigation-Trump Dossier Firm; USS John S. McCain-Collision, Search; Barcelona Attacks-Suspects; British Columbia-Plateau Fire; Wall Street.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Departs Phoenix, Arizona en route to Reno, Nevada; gives remarks to the National Convention of the American Legion; signs the Veterans Appeals Improvement and Modernization Act; departs Reno, Nevada en route to Washington, DC; arrives at the White House.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Visits Doral, Florida, to meet members of the Venezuelan exile community, recent Venezuelan migrants, other local leaders, and officials to discuss 'the continuing devastation and unrest in Venezuela.'

US Senate: 1:00 PM Senate Commerce Committee field hearing on Magnuson-Stevens Act reauthorization – Field hearing on 'Reauthorization of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act: Oversight of Fisheries Management Successes and Challenges', with testimony from witnesses including North Pacific Fishery Management Council Chair Dan Hull; Alaska Department of Fish and Game Commissioner Sam Cotten; Alaska Board of Fisheries member Reed Morisky; Georgia Department of Natural Resources Coastal Resources Division Director Spud Woodward; Pacific Seafood Processors Association President Glenn Reed; Yamaha Marine Group President Ben Speciale; Halibut Coalition President Linda Behnken; Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Association Executive Director Ragnar Alstrom; Alaska Marine Conservation Council Deputy Director Shannon Carroll; Alaska Groundfish Data Bank Executive Director Julie Bonney; Marine Conservation Alliance Executive Director Lori Swanson; Gulf of Alaska Coastal Communities Coalition's Duncan Fields; and American Sportfishing Association Keep America Fishing Director Liz Ogilvie. Location: Kenai Peninsula College, 156 College Rd, Soldotna, AK <http://commerce.senate.gov> <https://twitter.com/SenateCommerce>. Contacts: Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, & Transportation press 1 202 224 4546.

US House: 11:00 AM Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission briefing on DR Congo – Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission briefing on 'Democratic Republic of the Congo: An Update', with a panel of US Institute of Peace Senior Program Officer for Middle East & Africa Steve Hege, Search for Common Ground Africa Programs Manager Mike Jobbins, Amnesty International Africa Advocacy Director Adotei Akwei, and Stimson Center Protecting Civilians in Conflict Program Director Aditi Gorur providing an update on the various dimensions of the crisis in DR Congo and offering options for Congress to pursue in response. Location: Rayburn House Office Building, Rm 2255, Washington, DC <http://tlhrc.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/TLHRCommission>. Contacts: Kimberly Stanton Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission Kimberly. Stanton@mail.house.gov 1 202 225 3599. This briefing is open to Members of Congress, congressional staff, the interested public, and the media.

Other: 8:30 AM NAPA forum on the GAO's 2017 High Risk List – National Academy of Public Administration forum on the Government Accounting Office 2017 High Risk List, and how federal agencies can successfully resolve GAO's concerns, with keynote from US Comptroller General Gene Dodaro, and panelists including Deputy Under Secretary of Veterans Affairs for Health for Organizational Excellence Dr Carolyn Clancy, Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Logistics and Material Readiness Kristen French, Office of Personnel Management Principal Deputy Associate Director. Location: George Washington University, 800 21st St. NW, Washington, DC <http://www.napawash.org/> <https://twitter.com/napawash>. Contacts: Betsy Holahan Great Point Strategies bholahan@greatpointstrategies.com. registration begins at 8:00 a.m.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: [Referencing Trump's new Afghanistan strategy] "I know that he's been President for seven months, but seeing Donald Trump making military decisions is still weird for me. I mean, he must be the first human being in history who gets to command an army after starring in a Pizza Hut commercial."

Trevor Noah: [Referencing Trump's new Afghanistan strategy] "The only problem is, while we know Trump decided to send more troops to Afghanistan, that's pretty much all we know. His actual strategy is like his position on Nazis – unclear."

Trevor Noah: [Referencing Trump's new Afghanistan strategy] "Trump is a problem solver the same way Godzilla is a city planner. ... The only way Donald Trump could consider himself a problem solver is if he stops creating problems. 'You guys are so lucky, I was about to do something, but I stopped myself. Problem pre-solved.'"

Conan O'Brien: "In his speech on Afghanistan last night, President Trump said, 'Attack, we will.' Then Trump introduced his new military strategist, Gen. Mad Dog Yoda. 'Attack, we will. Destroy, we must.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Before announcing his decision on Afghanistan, President Trump was said to have made a rigorous review of the issue. Yes. Trump said, 'I must have read at least four tweets about it, then I was ready to go.'"

Conan O'Brien: "A lot of protesters at a rally today in Phoenix attended by President Trump and Vice President Pence. A lot of protesters there. Things got awkward when it turned out that the 'Impeach Trump' chants were being led by Mike Pence."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, August 30, 2017
Date: Wednesday, August 30, 2017 7:05:40 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 30, 2017 7:00 AM EDT

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Democrats, Environmental Groups Ready For Battle Over National Monuments.
- Washington Post: As Agencies Respond To Storm, Some Face Cuts Under Trump Budget Proposal.
- Sierra (CA) Sun Times: House Natural Resources Committee Ranking Member Urges Interior To Resume NAS Study On Mountaintop Removal Mining, Question False Budgetary Rationale.
- Palm Beach (FL) Post: Florida Panther Should Remain Endangered, Nelson Tells Zinke.
- New Mexico Political Report: Park Service Group To Feds: 'Pendulum Is Swinging Too Far To The Side Of Development.'

- Nation Sun News: Additional Coverage: Secretary Zinke Embraces View That Some Areas Are 'Too Precious' For Development.
- WyoFile: Can The Energy Industry Survive Zinke's Help?
- Wyoming Tribune Eagle: Ludington: Hunters Should Care About Sage Grouse, Zinke.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Tribe Looks To Resume Case Over Share Of $940M DOI Deal.
- DOI Didn't Follow Law In Allowing Tribal Casino, Group Says.
- Former BIA Officer Accused Of Coercing A Woman Into Having Sex And Then Lying About It.
- North Dakota Tribe Levies Higher Tax On Oil Drillers.
- Tribes Say Dakota Access Pipeline Overstates Shutdown Impact.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Grand Junction (CO) Daily Sentinel: Groups Question Oil, Gas Leases In BLM 'Solar Areas'.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Hydroelectric Project Awarded $965,000 Grant.
- Whistleblowers Hope Trump Will Revisit Klamath Water Officials Who Misspent $32 Million.
- Officials Taking Steps To Prevent Invasive Mussels Spread.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Crude Dips, Gasoline Spikes As Floods Knock Out One-fifth Of U.S. Refineries.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- Daily Caller: Family Faces $34M Regs To Protect A Frog.
- Santa Fe New Mexican: Thousands Weigh In On Wolf Recovery Plan.
- Columbus (NE) Telegram: Face-to-face Meeting 'A Positive Step' On Loup Canal Rules.
- Independent (UK): Brown Bears Choosing A Vegetarian Diet Over Salmon Due To Climate Change.
- Courthouse News: Additional Coverage: Ninth Circuit Offers No Help To Sonoran Bald Eagle.
- Wisconsin Gazette: The HSUS Goes To Federal Court On Behalf Of Yellowstone's Grizzly Bears.

National Park Service

- SFist: Mayor Ed Lee May 'Send A Bill' To Feds For Saturday Protests.
- Cherokee (NC) One Feather: Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation And National Park Service Announce New Centennial Challenge Projects.
- U.S. News & World Report: 2 New Cougar Kittens Found In Santa Monica Mountains.
- Deseret (UT) News: Jones Hole Creek In Dinosaur National Monument Reopened.
- Neosho (MO) Daily News: GWC National Monument Hosts B.A.R.K Program.
- Paris (AR) Express: Hale Bathhouse To Be Boutique Hotel.
- U.S. News & World Report: 2 Climbers Rescued By Grand Teton Rangers In Recent Days.
- Johnstown (PA) Tribune-Democrat: Additional Coverage: Park Service Restores Burial Site On Flight 93 Land.
- St. George (UT) Spectrum: Here's Your Chance To Shape Zion's Future.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Reuters: Trump Says 'All Options On The Table' After North Korea Fires Missile Over Japan.

US Geological Survey

- Oil Price: Alaskan Oil Returns With A Vengeance.

Top National News

- ABC: Media Analyses: Trump Brings Optimistic Message To Texas.
- Politico: Trump To Launch Push For Tax Reform With Missouri Speech.
- Politico: Trump Says Job Vacancies Part Of Effort To "Reduce Size Of Government."
- USA Today: Media Analyses Examine Possible Links Between Harvey And Climate Change.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Making Sure Your Help Gets To Hurricane Harvey's Victims."
 - "Last Hope For Peace At Brooklyn's Big Party."

- Washington Post.
 - "Houston Is Paying The Price For Public Officials' Ignorance."
 - "'Antifa' Groups Only Help The Hateful Forces They Claim To Oppose."
 - "Congress Must Block Trump's Ban On Transgender People In The Military."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "The Hurricane Learning Curve."
 - "Nixing The $520,000 'Footlong.'"
 - "Nuclear Missiles Over Tokyo."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

Democrats, Environmental Groups Ready For Battle Over National Monuments.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal (8/29, Review) reports that "Democrats are charging the Trump administration of using a politically driven process to undermine protections to public lands as environmental groups gird for a legal battle to stop the shrinking of national monuments under review – including two in Nevada." Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "submitted his report last Thursday, but the White House and Interior Department have not publicly released Zinke's recommendations, prompting frustration by Democrats and environmental groups that support the designations." Green groups are "waiting to see whether the president sends the recommendations to Congress, or whether Trump decides to alter existing national monument boundaries through an executive order."

St. Clair Hopeful About Maine's National Monument After Interior Secretary Briefing. The Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/29, Sambides) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "telephoned the leader of the effort to create Maine's national monument after recommending to President Donald Trump that the land remain under federal control." Speaking with Lucas St. Clair, "Zinke shared few details about the recommendations he gave Trump last week regarding Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument and 26 other national monuments." St. Clair said Tuesday that "Zinke did say that 'he is confident the outcome will be something I will be happy about.'" St. Clair added, "He mentioned that the White House will review it but that he is going to ensure that the conservational and recreational qualities of the monument will not be jeopardized. All and all I am really enthusiastic."

Monument Review Is Still Hidden From Public, But It Appears To Be Good News For Maine. In an editorial, the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (8/29) is hopeful that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke has concluded that the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument "should remain largely as it is." According to the paper, "this is a logical conclusion given the years of planning and changes based on local concerns that went into creating the 87,500-acre monument." The editorial wants "the full details" of Zinke's review to "be made public as soon as possible" because "the certainty will allow local businesses to make decisions about investments, allow monument staff to plan improvements, including directional highway signs that the Maine Department of Transportation now must install, and let visitors know they should plan a trip to the Katahdin region."

Op-ed: Trump Has A Historic Opportunity To Place A Check On The Trend Of Expansive National Monuments. In an op-ed for the Deseret \(UT\) News (8/29, Anderson), Matthew Anderson, the director of the Coalition for Self-Government in the West, argues that "large national monuments are inconsistent with the original intent of the Antiquities Act." He claims that. "the designation process – instead of focusing on protecting and preserving historic sites and scientific objects as outlined in the Antiquities Act – is driven by political gamesmanship, climate change, presidential legacies, corporate interests and outdoor recreation." Anderson calls on the Trump Administration "to place a check on the trend of expansive national monuments and to 'right-size' the egregious misuses of the Antiquities Act."

Op-ed: The Southern Utah Economy Should Not Be Dependent On Coastal Elites. The Deseret

\(UT\) News (8/29, Darby), Robert Darby, who worked for the U.S. Air Force for 28 years at Hill Air Force Base, criticizes an advertisement by Patagonia “promoting that public lands be kept in their pristine state for the benefit of generations to come.” According to Darby, “the argument is put forth that tourism is the perfect industry.” But he doesn’t see it as “too clever of a plan to have a community’s economic development depend on the vacation plans of the East and West Coast elites.”

PD Editorial: Preserve National Monuments And Marine Sanctuaries. In an editorial, the Santa Rosa \(CA\) Press Democrat (8/30) notes that “almost a week has passed since Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke presented the White House with his recommendations regarding the future of 27 national monuments.” However, “neither the president nor the secretary has shared the recommendations with the public – the people who own the land in question.” The paper says that “the refusal to share the report, coupled with news accounts saying that Zinke recommended scaling back at least four monuments, reinforces fears that the president already has decided to open millions of acres of protected public land predominantly in Western states to mining, grazing and fossil-fuel development.”

As Agencies Respond To Storm, Some Face Cuts Under Trump Budget Proposal.

The Washington Post (8/29, Rein) reports that although President Trump “effusively praised his administration’s Hurricane Harvey response,” his proposed budget includes “cuts to some of the federal government’s most consequential efforts to prepare states and local communities and help them recover” from such “catastrophic events,” including cuts to FEMA, HUD, the National Weather Service, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Joe Davidson writes in his Washington Post (8/29, Davidson) column that “government workers at all levels, including more than 8,600 federal employees as of Tuesday morning, are directly involved with the disaster. About two dozen federal offices have responded,” including the U.S. Geological Survey and the National Park Service.

House Natural Resources Committee Ranking Member Urges Interior To Resume NAS Study On Mountaintop Removal Mining, Question False Budgetary Rationale.

The Sierra \(CA\) Sun Times (8/29) reports that House Natural Resources Committee Ranking Member Raúl M. Grijalva and House Energy and Commerce Committee Ranking Member Frank Pallone, Jr. “have sent a letter with several colleagues to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke urging him to allow the National Academy of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine (NAS) to resume an ongoing study of the health impacts of mountaintop removal mining.” They “urge Zinke to reinstate the study immediately and state that its cancellation ‘shows that the administration values the public image of the coal mining industry more than the public health of the people of Appalachia.’”

Florida Panther Should Remain Endangered, Nelson Tells Zinke.

The Palm Beach \(FL\) Post (8/29, Webb) reports that “the Florida panther should remain classified as an endangered species under the Endangered Species Act,” Sen. Bill Nelson said in a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday. The letter “follows the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service’s announcement in late June that it is reviewing the status of the panther, along with 21 other endangered species and one threatened species in the Southeast.” Nelson “said in his letter to Zinke that changing the panther’s status as endangered could hinder the ‘good progress’ made since the species was federally classified as endangered in the 1960s.”

Additional coverage was provided by Florida Politics (8/29, Gancarski).

Park Service Group To Feds: ‘Pendulum Is Swinging Too Far To The Side Of Development.’

The New Mexico Political Report (8/29, Paskus) reports that retired National Park Service employees on Tuesday spoke out about “the impacts of oil and gas development on some national parks – particularly from adjacent lands overseen by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management (BLM).” The Coalition to Protect America’s Parks sent a letter to Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, “expressing concern over the ‘alarming’ number of oil and gas proposals near parks and what they see as overall efforts by the department to reduce protections for national parks in order to encourage oil and gas drilling.” The former NPS employees wrote, “As former land managers, we understand the need to balance competing priorities. But we fear the pendulum is swinging too far to the side of development.”

Additional Coverage: Secretary Zinke Embraces View That Some Areas Are ‘Too Precious’

For Development.

Additional coverage that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke supports “a withdrawal of future gold mining claims on federal land” in Paradise Valley near Yellowstone National Park was provided by the Nation Sun News (8/29).

Can The Energy Industry Survive Zinke’s Help?

In a piece for the WyoFile (8/29, Drake), Kerry Drake criticizes the Interior Department’s decision “to slam the brakes on a plan to protect the greater sage grouse that was years in the making.” Drake acknowledges that “the current plan isn’t perfect,” but as “a compromise,” it was “responsible for keeping the sage grouse from being listed as an endangered species, which was the overall goal.” Drake raises concerns that “the Trump administration’s rush to boost production and enrich energy company executives results in a listing that would decimate the industry.”

Ludington: Hunters Should Care About Sage Grouse, Zinke.

In an op-ed for the Wyoming Tribune Eagle (8/29, Ludington), Max Ludington, the board chairman of the Wyoming Hunters and Anglers Alliance, writes that “politicians in Washington, D.C., are making moves that threaten sage grouse habitat – and, by proxy, the habitat of Wyoming’s most important big game species.” According to Ludington, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is “trying to throw Gov. Mead’s work out the window and replace that original plan with one that focuses on breeding sage grouse in captivity to artificially inflate their numbers while removing protections for sage grouse habitat.” He claims that “in the process, Zinke’s plan would remove protections for mule deer, pronghorn and elk habitat in Wyoming that our herds critically need.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Tribe Looks To Resume Case Over Share Of $940M DOI Deal.

Law360 (8/29, Powell) reports that “the Cayuga Nation’s leadership asked a New Mexico federal court Monday to unpause a case concerning the distribution of funds designated to the tribe under a $940 million settlement of allegations that the U.S. Department of the Interior failed to pay administrative expenses to run federal programs.”

DOI Didn’t Follow Law In Allowing Tribal Casino, Group Says.

Law360 (8/29, Phillis) reports that “advocacy group Stand Up for California on Monday asked a California federal court for a quick win in its bid to stop a tribe’s off-reservation casino, saying that the U.S. Department of the Interior’s authorization for gambling didn’t follow the law.”

Former BIA Officer Accused Of Coercing A Woman Into Having Sex And Then Lying About It.

The Billings \(MT\) Gazette (8/29, Johnson) reports that “a former Bureau of Indian Affairs law enforcement officer is facing federal charges accusing him of coercing a woman into having sex and then lying about it to investigators.” During an arraignment on Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Billings, Dana Michael Bullcoming “pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging him with deprivation of rights and two counts of false statements to a federal officer.” Federal prosecutor Jeffrey Starnes “alleged in the indictment that on Oct. 31, 2015, at Lame Deer, Bullcoming, while acting under color of law, coerced a person identified as L.B. into sexual intercourse with him under threat of arrest if she refused.”

North Dakota Tribe Levies Higher Tax On Oil Drillers.

The AP (8/29, MacPherson) reports “an American Indian tribe whose reservation accounts for a fifth of North Dakota’s oil production has imposed a higher tax rate for drillers,” a move Gov. Doug Burgum “and the state tax commissioner believes is improper and industry officials fear may slash production.” This month, the Three Affiliated Tribes “notified the more than 30 companies drilling on the Fort Berthold Reservation that it is seeking the tax rate that tribal Chairman Mark Fox says it needs to pay for additional law enforcement, road repairs and other consequences of oil development on the reservation.” The land is “home to the Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara tribes.”

Tribes Say Dakota Access Pipeline Overstates Shutdown Impact.

The AP (8/29, Nicholson) reports American Indian tribes aiming “to persuade a federal judge to turn off the Dakota Access oil pipeline maintain in last-minute court filings that the project’s developer has overstated the potential impacts of a shutdown.” Attorneys for the Standing Rock Sioux and Cheyenne River Sioux “also argue that Texas-based Energy Transfer Partners brought potential problems on itself by forging ahead with construction despite the uncertainty of final federal approval.” The attorneys wrote ETP “made reckless choices, and it must accept the consequences.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Groups Question Oil, Gas Leases In BLM ‘Solar Areas’.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/30, Webb) reports that “some conservation groups fear proposed oil and gas leasing north of Mack could eclipse, as it were, the possibility for solar energy development in an area the Bureau of Land Management has identified as having good potential for the latter.” The Wilderness Society, Conservation Colorado and Western Colorado Congress “say oil and gas leasing there would preclude the ability of the area to be used for producing clean, renewable energy – a point disputed by the BLM and David Ludlam, executive director of the West Slope Colorado Oil and Gas Association.” The conservation groups “raised their solar-energy concern with the BLM in a letter submitted to the agency in June.” They wrote that “the proposed leases almost entirely cover the Solar Emphasis Area, meaning that BLM would be essentially unable to encourage or authorize solar energy development in this Solar Emphasis Area at all, completely contravening the management direction that BLM adopted for this area as recently as 2015.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Hydroelectric Project Awarded $965,000 Grant.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Daily Sentinel (8/30, Harmon) reports that the Bureau of Reclamation on Tuesday awarded a $965,000 grant to the Orchard Mesa Irrigation District and Grand Valley Water Users Association. The grant is “one of 43 WaterSmart grants made to agencies around the country and will help fund a $5.2 million project to replace and upgrade the turbines” at the hydroelectric plant on the Colorado River near Palisade. Acting Commissioner Alan Mikkelsen said in announcing the grants, “Conserving water through improving water and energy efficiency is important to help communities stretch limited water supplies. Through the projects announced today, Reclamation is helping local water managers with another tool in the toolkit to meet the ever-growing water demands.”

Whistleblowers Hope Trump Will Revisit Klamath Water Officials Who Misspent $32 Million.

The McClatchy (8/29, Leavenworth) reports that “investigators have confirmed that a federal water agency misspent $32 million in funds meant to protect fish and wildlife in the Klamath basin of California and Oregon, a finding that Obama-era officials attempted to sideline after whistleblowers first alerted them to it.” According to a report from the U.S. Office of Special Counsel, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation “for eight years effectively handed the money to a Klamath water project controlled by private irrigators, with few or no controls on how the funds were spent.” The bureau “shut down the water bank in 2016 after two whistleblowers alleged it was transferring money to irrigators that was intended for environmental purposes.” However, “agency leaders have continued to dispute any wrongdoing and have apparently taken no administrative action against those responsible.”

Officials Taking Steps To Prevent Invasive Mussels Spread.

The AP (8/29) reports that “Colorado Parks and Wildlife officials are implementing aggressive decontamination policies in response to recently discovered invasive quagga mussel larvae in the Green Mountain Reservoir in central Colorado.” Specialists from the Bureau of Reclamation “located the larvae earlier this month through a microscopic examinations and DNA testing.” Officials will “delist the reservoir if three years of biweekly tests of the reservoir show no presence of quagga mussel larvae.”

Also reporting are the Denver Post (8/29, Blevins), the Summit \(CO\) Daily (8/29, Fixler), and the Summit \(CO\) Daily (8/29, Blevins).

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Crude Dips, Gasoline Spikes As Floods Knock Out One-fifth Of U.S. Refineries.

Reuters (8/30, Gloystein) reports oil prices fell on Wednesday, but gasoline spiked to hits highest level since July 2015 because of flooding and storm damage shuttering 20 percent of US oil refineries. Jeffrey Halley, senior market analyst at OANDA, said, "With fully 20 percent of the U.S. refining capacity offline, attention has been focused on potential shortages in refined products, with gasoline futures rocketing another four percent higher overnight." Meanwhile, ANZ said, "Severe flooding due to tropical storm Harvey is affecting refinery capacity and therefore crude demand." The Houston Chronicle (8/29, Osborne) reports prices for gasoline on the NYME rose more than 2 percent Monday morning after reports that Port Arthur would be closing as the storm moves eastward. Sandy Fielden, director of oil and products research at Morningstar, said, "It's expected gas prices are going to go up around the country. I've heard anything from 10 cents a gallon here in Texas to 20-30 cents a gallon in other parts of the country. ... The longer the refineries are closed the bigger the impact will be." USA Today (8/29, Bomey) reports GasBuddy.com petroleum analyst Patrick DeHaan increased his estimate for the average increase of gasoline prices to 10-20 cents per gallon from 5-15 cents a gallon. DeHaan said at least two dozen Houston-area fuel stations do not have gasoline, and some of them are likely underwater or sustained damage. API energy editor Mark Green said, "The availability of supplies will depend on damage that may have occurred because of the storm. ... At the same time, the United States' natural gas and oil infrastructure is large, geographically diverse and integrated into the larger global market. While typical supply patterns may be disrupted, alternate paths may be available."

More Than 18 Percent Of U.S. Gulf Output Shut In By Harvey: BSEE. Reuters (8/29, Gaffen) reports that the BSEE said more than 18 percent of oil production in the Gulf of Mexico was still shut in on Tuesday because of Harvey. The amount shut in decreased to 319,523 bpd, down from 331,000 barrels on Monday. The agency said 19.1 percent of natural gas production in the region also remains shuttered. The AP (8/29) reports dozens of offshore platforms remain evacuated as Harvey continues to affect the region. The BSEE said in a statement Tuesday that workers were evacuated from 102 production platforms and 5 drilling rigs.

Fish And Wildlife Service

Family Faces $34M Regs To Protect A Frog.

The Daily Caller (8/29, Pearce) reports that "a Louisiana family is facing $34 million worth of regulations if they continue developing a plot of land after federal officials declared it 'critical habitat' for the dusky gopher frog." Federal regulators are "attempting to use the Endangered Species Act to stop commercial logging on the 1,650 acre piece of private land to create a sanctuary that might support the frog." However, the dusky gopher frog has "not been reported on the land or even in the wild areas of the state for 50 years."

Thousands Weigh In On Wolf Recovery Plan.

The Santa Fe New Mexican (8/30) reports that "just hours before the Tuesday night deadline approached for the public to weigh in on a proposed federal management plan for the endangered Mexican gray wolf, more than 9,000 comments had been posted online." Meanwhile, "thousands more had been submitted to U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service by mail – most opposing a wolf recovery plan that many criticized as too restrictive to allow the species to thrive." The article notes that "many comments submitted online, echoing comments made by dozens of wolf supporters at a July hearing in Albuquerque, urged the Fish and Wildlife Service not to give the states too much control over the program and pleaded with the agency to lift a cap on the number of wolves that can roam the wild and to expand the animal's range land."

Face-to-face Meeting 'A Positive Step' On Loup Canal Rules.

The Columbus \(NE\) Telegram (8/29, Lieffring) reports that "representatives from Loup Public Power District and the Wood River office of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had a face-to-face meeting Monday to discuss the district's hydroelectric license." According to the article, "of particular interest to the local utility is a provision in the updated license that requires the district to stop diverting water from the Loup River into the Loup Power Canal when the Platte River water temperature reaches 93 degrees at the Louisville gauge." Eliza Hines with the FWS "said her office received a lot of feedback from people who fish in the canal, as well as LPPD customers and farmers who use water from the canal to irrigate their fields."

Brown Bears Choosing A Vegetarian Diet Over Salmon Due To Climate Change.

The Independent \(UK\) (8/29, Correspondent) reports that "brown bears on Alaska's Kodiak Island are switching to a vegetarian diet of elderberries in preference to salmon because the warmer temperatures are ripening the fruit earlier in the year." The researchers, "from Oregon State University, Montana University, the US Fish and Wildlife Service and other institutions, said that climate change was 'altering the seasonal timing of life cycle events in organisms across the planet'."

Additional Coverage: Ninth Circuit Offers No Help To Sonoran Bald Eagle.

Additional coverage that "the Ninth Circuit backed a determination Monday that the Sonoran Desert bald eagle is not eligible for Endangered Species Act protection" was provided by Courthouse News (8/29, Christophi) and the Verde \(AZ\) Independent (8/29, Fischer).

The HSUS Goes To Federal Court On Behalf Of Yellowstone's Grizzly Bears.

In his blog at the Wisconsin Gazette (8/29, Pacelle), Wayne Pacelle, president and CEO of The Humane Society of the United States, writes that his group has filed a complaint in the federal court for the District of Montana in Missoula to contest the decision to "strip federal protections from grizzly bears in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem." Pacelle argues that "while the decision to strip protections for Yellowstone grizzly bears is rickety as a matter of law and science, it's also wrong on economics and the values of America's great majority of citizens."

National Park Service

Mayor Ed Lee May 'Send A Bill' To Feds For Saturday Protests.

The SFist (8/29, Barmann) reports that San Francisco Mayor Ed Lee is "saying he may look to the National Park Service to foot some of the bill for all the preparations and police overtime that went into dealing with the planned but canceled Patriot Prayer rally on Saturday, which the federal agency granted a permit for despite the protestations of local politicians." Lee said Monday "I'm prepared to send a bill to the National Park Service." According to the article, "that bill would cover overtime as well as the cost to put up fences, around Crissy Field, only to then have to take them down and put up different fences around Alamo Square when organizer Joey Gibson announced a last-minute 'news conference' there."

Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation And National Park Service Announce New Centennial Challenge Projects.

The Cherokee \(NC\) One Feather (8/29) reports that the Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation and National Park Service are joining together for the 2017 Centennial Challenge program "to address high priority needs at sites along the Blue Ridge Parkway: Humpback Rocks Farm (milepost 5.8), Sharp Top Shelter (milepost 86), Mabry Mill and Groundhog Mountain (mileposts 176 & 188), and Moses H. Cone Memorial Park (milepost 294)." The Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation is "raising $287,358 to be matched with Centennial Challenge Grants for a total impact of $747,000 toward critical projects."

2 New Cougar Kittens Found In Santa Monica Mountains.

The AP (8/29) reports that "two new mountain lion kittens have been discovered by researchers studying the wild cats living in the Santa Monica Mountains, where fragmentation of wilderness by the sprawl of metropolitan Los Angeles and its freeways threatens the species." The Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area said Tuesday "that the kittens, which are male and female siblings, were found earlier this month by biologists with the National Park Service and the California Department of Fish and Wildlife." The kittens "have been added to the ongoing study as P-59 and P-60." According to researchers, "they are the first litter for a lion known as P-53."

Also reporting are the Los Angeles Times (8/29, Serna) and the Los Angeles Daily News (8/29, Abram).

Jones Hole Creek In Dinosaur National Monument Reopened.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (8/29) reports that “recreational access at Jones Hole Creek within Dinosaur National Monument has reopened after officials found no noticeable contamination of the stream due to a septic line break at the Jones Hole Fish Hatchery.” According to a statement from the National Park Service, “water samples were taken in several locations along the creek downstream from the hatchery, which is managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and located just outside the monument.” The test results found “that E. coli level was extremely low and well within acceptable levels for recreational access such as swimming and fishing.”

GWC National Monument Hosts B.A.R.K Program.

The Neosho \(MO\) Daily News (8/29, Hively) reports that “about 15 dogs and their owners participated in the first-ever B.A.R.K. in the Park program held” Aug. 25 at the George Washington Carver Monument. According to the article, “the purpose of the program is to get dogs and their owners to visit the monument, to give both pets and their masters outdoor exercise in a safe environment, and to teach good dog-walking manners.”

Hale Bathhouse To Be Boutique Hotel.

The Paris \(AR\) Express (8/29) reports that the National Park Service “signed a lease with Zest Enterprise LLC last Friday.” The agreement will “allow the historic Hale Bathhouse building to be reopened as the first and only boutique hotel in Hot Springs National Park.” The article says that “a public open house of the building will follow the signing event to provide people an opportunity to see the building as it is before its transformation.” Park superintendent Josie Fernandez said, “We are thrilled that another one of these beautiful buildings will be re-opening to serve visitors and offer a new experience in the park.”

2 Climbers Rescued By Grand Teton Rangers In Recent Days.

The AP (8/29) reports that “National Park Service rangers have rescued two injured climbers in separate incidents in Grand Teton National Park in northwest Wyoming over a three-day period.”

Additional Coverage: Park Service Restores Burial Site On Flight 93 Land.

Additional coverage that the National Park Service restored a burial site on Flight 93 land was provided by the Johnstown \(PA\) Tribune-Democrat (8/29, Hurst) and the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review (8/29, Signorini).

Here’s Your Chance To Shape Zion’s Future.

In an op-ed for the St. George \(UT\) Spectrum (8/29, Last), Utah state legislator Brad Last urges the public to provide input on “a new visitor use management” proposal for Zion National Park. According to Last, Zion National Park has “evolved from being the secret playground of Utahns to a huge driver of tourism and economic development for Washington and Iron counties.” He believes that with public participation, “we can find new, balanced ways to manage Zion National Park so it isn’t over-run or over-managed.”

Office Of Insular Affairs

Trump Says ‘All Options On The Table’ After North Korea Fires Missile Over Japan.

Coverage of North Korea’s early Tuesday morning ballistic missile test that flew over the Japanese island of Hokkaido focused on the Administration’s condemnation, possible responses from the US and the international community, and the potential ramifications that Japan’s response may have on international efforts to address the North Korean threat.

Reuters (8/29, Mallard, Kim) reports President Trump said that the international community received Pyongyang’s message “loud and clear,” and that the “regime has signaled its contempt for its neighbors, for all members of the United Nations, and for minimum standards of acceptable international behavior.” He continued, “Threatening and destabilizing actions only increase the North Korean regime’s isolation in the region and among all nations of the world. All options are on the table.” The AP (8/29, Pennington) calls Trump’s “terse, written” response “surprisingly subdued” in that he pulled “back from his administration’s recent suggestions of a dialogue with the communist country” but simultaneously avoided “a repeat of his bombastic warnings earlier this month of a potential military confrontation.” A senior US official told the AP that “the restrained nature” was deliberate, “reflecting an effort by new White House chief of staff

John Kelly to prevent a repeat of the rhetorical escalation that occurred earlier this month." The "more cautious approach" also "reflects an effort to preserve modest signs of progress with North Korea that had led Trump and his top diplomat to hint at the possibility of direct talks, said the official."

Meanwhile, the CBS Evening News (8/29, story 8, 2:00, Mason) reported, North Korea's state media "just released a new statement" calling yesterday's launch "muscle flexing" in response to ongoing joint military exercises the US and South Korea are conducting on the Korean peninsula. Correspondent Ben Tracy noted that the North fired the latest missile near Pyongyang, "likely from a mobile launchpad. That complicates any potential preemptive strike by the US because it places North Korea's missiles in unpredictable and potentially highly populated areas."

On CNN's Situation Room (8/29), Will Ripley reported from Pyongyang, saying that North Korea "within the last hour" confirmed the missile they tested was the same one they "said they would use to launch toward the US territory of Guam." According to Ripley, North Korean officials in Pyongyang told CNN yesterday's launch "was essentially a prelude for future military options aimed at 'containing Guam,' in their words, and they also said they expect to conduct more launches of this particular kind of missile."

USA Today (8/29, Michaels, James) reports that on Wednesday, North Korean leader Kim Jong-un pledged to move forward with "more ballistic missile rocket launching drills," which he argued are "'necessary' to modernize his military's strategic capabilities." Kim added that Pyongyang will continue monitoring "US demeanors" before committing to any further actions. According to analysts, "Kim, who has continuously defied world opinion in pursuit of his country's nuclear weapons program, has managed to walk up to a red line without crossing it."

International condemnation was "swift," Benjamin Hall reported on Fox News' Special Report (8/29). South Korea released a video of its fighter jets conducting bombing drills, "a rehearsal for taking out the rogue state's artillery." Japan's military similarly carried out a drill of its own ballistic missile system. However, Hall said Kim "seems unafraid or unaffected" by the condemnation, and "his latest test, like the others, seems likely to go unpunished. Once again, the US and international community seem uncertain about how to respond. Sanctions just aren't working and short of military action, there are very few other options."

The New York Times (8/29, Sang-Hun) notes "Japan said it did not try to shoot the missile down because it did not detect a threat to its territory," but analysts cautioned "the test nevertheless underscored some uncomfortable questions about the possibility of defending against such missiles." For example, "analyst noted that Japan could have been caught off guard entirely had the destroyers been elsewhere – for example, if Japan had ordered them south in response to North Korea's threat to fire missiles into the waters around Guam." Furthermore, the launch came during the culmination of a joint US-Japanese "demonstration of the PAC-3 missile-defense system," but defense analyst Kim Dong-yub "noted that the missile flew too high for the PAC-3 to reach."

NBC Nightly News (8/29, story 5, 2:20, Holt) reported the North has released images of Kim "happily overseeing" the launch, a provocation that Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe reportedly called an "unprecedented threat," and which "prompt[ed] an emergency meeting of the UN Security Council." Said Ambassador Haley, "I think enough is enough." Kellyanne Conway, counselor to President Trump, was asked on Fox News' Special Report (8/29) what Haley meant when she said "enough is enough." Conway responded in part, "I think the President will do what he's always promised to do, which is consult with his larger security team and not broadcast ahead of time what he'll do."

ABC World News Tonight (8/29, story 6, 1:50, Llamas) broadcast Haley stating, "No country should have missiles flying over them like those 130 million people in Japan. So I think something serious has to happen." Trump has spoken to Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, and while they "agreed they need to increase pressure on North Korea," it's "unclear what kind of pressure, and impossible to predict what Kim will do." After correspondent Tom Llamas noted that Trump last week "said he believed the North Korean leader was starting to respect us," correspondent Martha Raddatz said, "That statement about respect was clearly premature." Barbara Starr reported on CNN's Situation Room (8/29) that it doesn't appear a US military response is any more likely today after the North's launch, adding that "the reaction by the State Department and the Pentagon are diplomatic options. That said, [diplomacy] doesn't seem to be moving the ball here."

CNN correspondent Will Ripley said on CNN's The Lead (8/29) that from where the missile was launched "is significant. It was launched from near the Pyongyang airport. ... By North Korea launching a missile from near their capital, they're really sending a message to the United States that they can launch a missile from anywhere, including highly populated areas, which would make a preemptive strike very difficult because of the grave humanitarian consequences."

Sen. Chris Murphy said on MSNBC's Morning Joe (8/29) that Trump is "a President who has zero diplomatic experience, who hired a Secretary of State who has zero diplomatic experience, who hired a Deputy Secretary of State who has no diplomatic experience. This is about as complicated a dance you get, trying to show toughness, making it clear to the North Koreans that if they do attack the US or our allies, there will be a disproportionate response that will wipe out the regime and put together a serious diplomatic effort that can unwind this crisis without military hostilities. The Trump Administration is excited about the tough talk but they don't have anybody in place at the state department or White House who can chart that second path."

Bloomberg View (8/29) says in the face of North Korea's missile test on Tuesday, Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe "needs to make the case for the fast development of" its missile defense system, "and be clear about the circumstances under which it would be used." Bloomberg explains Japan's pacifist constitution only "allows offensive action under certain circumstances," and the nation is "conflicted about such big changes to their constitution," so "Abe owes them an open debate in which all sides get a full hearing." According to Bloomberg, this "would also help ease opposition outside Japan, most notably in South Korea, which has long been sensitive to any suggestion that its former colonial overlord might rearm," and China, which may feel more compelled to pressure Pyongyang if threatened by a "more heavily armed Japan."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/29) says a treaty guarantee with the US has long served as Japan's ultimate security, but the logic of deterrence only works if the adversary is a rational actor, which North Korea may not be. If Japan no longer views the US as a reliable ally in a crisis, it may no longer resist building a nuclear arsenal of its own, which the Journal says could lead to nuclear proliferation throughout East Asia – underscoring the dangers of acquiescing to Pyongyang over its nuclear missiles.

U.S. Proposes U.N. Statement Condemning North Korea Missile Launch. The US on Tuesday proposed to the UN Security Council a draft statement, seen by Reuters (8/29, Nichols), that calls on the 15-member council to collectively condemn North Korea "for its outrageous actions and threats against another" member state, and demand that Pyongyang "immediately cease all such actions." The draft also demands that North Korea "abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programs in a complete, verifiable and irreversible manner"; refrain from "any further nuclear tests or any further provocation; and abandon any other existing weapons of mass destruction." Reuters notes the draft "does not, however, threaten new Security Council sanctions against North Korea." The AP (8/29) reports the Security Council ultimately "approved the statement after an emergency meeting Tuesday on the missile test, calling North Korea's actions 'outrageous.'"

Japan Wakes To A Text Message: Missile Approaching. The New York Times (8/29, Rich) reports Japanese residents "living beneath the missile's flight path received a beeping alert on their cellphones" just four minutes after the launch. At the same time, "the public broadcaster NHK cut into its early morning newscast with a black screen warning citizens that a missile was approaching and they should take cover." Tokyo Station alerted commuters on platform loudspeakers to the "dangerous" missile, and advised them to "seek cover inside a train or in a waiting room."

The Washington Post (8/29, Fifield) says the launch "enabled the North to send a strong political signal and to glean valuable technical data on its rapidly advancing missile program, without overtly crossing a 'red line' and spurring the United States into action, analysts said." It also appeared "designed to drive a wedge between North Korea's neighbors" – namely, Japan, South Korea, and China.

Noting that the launch was the first sent over a major population center in a foreign country, the Wall Street Journal (8/29, Cheng, Gale) outlines how Japan along with South Korea have started bolstering efforts to upgrade missile defenses. Those moves threaten to interfere with a coordinated international response to the North Korean threat because China and Russia, which both hold veto power on the United Nations Security Council, will likely oppose such efforts.

Because of the "sense of mild panic" that ensued in Japan, the launch may have helped Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's push "to remove pacifist constraints on the military" imposed by the constitution – an effort that has already showed signs of changing "the public's devotion to pacifism," says the New York Times (8/29, Rich). Nonetheless, "Most experts say that it would be politically difficult to change the Constitution, but that a debate needs to move from mainly political and academic circles to include the wider public," including liberals opposed to a military buildup and younger people, who some analysts say “don’t understand the dangerous stakes of tilting toward militarism.”

US Geological Survey

Alaskan Oil Returns With A Vengeance.

In a piece for Oil Price (8/29, Zaremba), Haley Zaremba writes that after an executive order from Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, the U.S. Geological Survey is “updating their assessments of oil and gas on Alaska’s North Slope.” The USGS is “looking into areas that have been protected from drilling since the 1980s, and reevaluating whether they should be opened anew for petroleum exploration.” She says that “for the first time in a long time, Alaska is now facing the very real potential of a major energy industry comeback.”

Top National News

Media Analyses: Trump Brings Optimistic Message To Texas.

Coverage of President Trump’s visit to Texas focused on the President’s upbeat demeanor and optimistic words, and on the enthusiastic reception he was given. Some analysts criticize Trump for creating a rally-like atmosphere, though others say the Administration took careful steps to avoid the mistakes of Hurricane Katrina and to not get in the way of responders.

ABC World News Tonight (8/29, story 3, 2:30, Llamas) reported, “President Trump traveling to Texas...saying he wants this natural disaster to be managed better than any other. He visited with officials in Corpus Christi and Austin, and took time to greet regular people who showed up to see him, waving the Texas flag.” ABC’s Cecilia Vega: “The catastrophe [is] still unfolding, but the President’s tone was upbeat.” Trump: “This is historic. It’s epic, what happened, but you know what? It happened in Texas, and Texas can handle anything.” Jeff Zeleny said on CNN’s The Lead (8/29) that “this is the biggest test yet for President Trump, certainly of a natural disaster of this making. He used a variety of adjectives today when he was in south Texas earlier this afternoon. He called it ‘epic.’ He called it ‘historic.’ He called the response ‘terrific.’” Zeleny said on CNN’s Anderson Cooper 360 (8/29), “I talked to people who spent the day with him...who said that he walked away feeling the impact from this and they believe that will be helpful as he moves into the real test of this recovery.”

The CBS Evening News (8/29, story 5, 1:55, O’Donnell) reported, “Even with evacuation shelters overcrowded and ill equipped, today President Trump defended federal and Texas emergency management officials during a visit to the storm zone.” CBS’ Jamie Yuccas said Trump “was optimistic about the response to Hurricane Harvey. ... The President pledged to work with Congress to send federal dollars.” Trump: “Probably there’s never been anything so expensive in our country’s history.” On NBC Nightly News (8/29, lead story, 4:10, Holt), Gabe Gutierrez reported, “Waving a Texas flag, President Trump toured Corpus Christi near where Harvey made a landfall on Friday.”

The AP (8/29, Thomas, Superville) reports, “With flag-waving optimism,” the President “answered Harvey’s wrath Tuesday by offering in-person assurances to those in the storm zone that his administration will work tirelessly to help the region recover from the massive flooding and storm-inflicted destruction.” However, “for all of his eagerness to get the federal disaster response right,” Trump “missed clear opportunities to strike a sympathetic note for multitudes who are suffering.” He “did not mention those who died in the storm or those forced from their homes by its floodwaters. And he basked in the attention of cheering supporters outside the fire station where officials briefed him on the recovery.”

KXAN-TV Austin, TX (8/29, 5:05 p.m. CDT) reported the Trump visited “the Lone Star state to meet with state and local officials about the damage left behind by Hurricane Harvey.” Trump “was briefed on the latest response plans. While some say it is good for President Trump to see the destruction, others say the trip is a distraction unless he can do something to help people affected here.” KIAH-TV Houston (8/29, 4:54 p.m. CDT) reported that Trump “called Texas a special state and thanked Gov. [Greg] Abbott and his team for the work they have done but refrained from saying congratulations until the job is complete.” KHOU-TV Houston (8/29, 4:58 p.m. CDT) showed video of Trump’s meeting at the state command center in Austin and reported that he applauded “everyone for their work, talking about what has yet to be done.”

The Corpus Christi \(TX\) Caller-Times (8/29, Ramirez) reports that the President, speaking at the Annville Volunteer Fire Department, "noted that his federal team had worked closely with state leaders to coordinate a response to Harvey." USA Today (8/29, Korte) reports, "Trump mounted the front bumper of a fire truck...waving a Texas flag and telling the gathered crowd, 'We love you. You are special. We are here to take care of you.'" The "windbreaker-wearing White House delegation" included the First Lady, HUD Secretary Carson, HHS Secretary Price, and Small Business Administrator McMahon. The Austin \(TX\) American Statesman (8/29, Tilove) reports that it was Trump's first visit to Texas since becoming president, and "he brought Cabinet members in tow as a token of his commitment to post-Harvey recovery and rebuilding."

The New Orleans Times-Picayune (8/29, Torres) reports that Trump "remarked on the size of the crowd as if he were at a rally," saying, "What a crowd, what a turnout." The Washington Times (8/29, Boyer) reports that the President "waved a Texas flag to cheering hurricane survivors Tuesday as he proclaimed 'Texas can handle anything!'" Breitbart (8/29, Spiering) reports, "American flags and a yellow Gadsden flag were spotted in the cheering crowd as well as signs from a couple of protesters."

The Texas Tribune (8/29, Svitek) reports that Trump "marveled at the storm's massive impact while bracing members of Congress for a costly response." He said of Harvey, "It sounds like such an innocent name. But it's not. It's not innocent." The Wall Street Journal (8/29, Bender) reports that Trump told FEMA Administrator Brock Long that he has become "very famous on television." The President said of FEMA, "You have been just outstanding. And I can tell you that my folks are telling me how great your representatives have been in working together. It's a real team."

The Los Angeles Times (8/29, Branson-Potts, Bierman) says that Trump "did not shy from raising expectations. After telling residents on Monday that he would bring swift financial help to the region, he promised on Tuesday that the long and expensive recovery would serve as a model." He said, "We want to do it better than ever before. We want to be looked at in five years, in 10 years from now as, this is the way to do it."

The Washington Post (8/29, Johnson) writes under the headline "Even In Visiting Hurricane-Ravaged Texas, Trump Keeps The Focus On Himself" that Trump "managed to turn attention on himself. ... He has talked favorably about the higher television ratings that come with hurricane coverage, predicted that he will soon be congratulating himself and used 16 exclamation points in 22 often breathless tweets about the storm. But as of late Tuesday afternoon, the president had yet to mention those killed, call on other Americans to help or directly encourage donations to relief organizations."

Kellyanne Conway said on Fox News Special Report (8/29), "The President was really struck today by two major things. One is just the sheer coordination, the efforts being put forth by our local, state, and federal governments. ... I think the second part is really just the best of the US in action. People helping other people and making sure folks are getting the information they need. We want to thank the media for connecting people with the information they need."

The Washington Examiner (8/29, Quinn) reports that Trump "offered praise to Texas Gov. Greg Abbott," but "stopped short of offering congratulations." Trump said, "We won't say congratulations. We don't want to do that. We'll congratulate each other when it's all finished. But you have been terrific and you've been my friend for a long time." Abbott said on Fox News' Fox & Friends (8/29), "I've been in daily contact with the President in the White House, and they are ensuring that we will have all the manpower that is needed. And so that is the difference between this and Katrina. We have the full force of the federal government on the ground already. And believe me, there will be no question about whether or not we have adequate manpower."

Abbott later said on Fox News Special Report (8/29), "The coordination between Texas and the federal government has been seamless. In fact, I've never seen it work as well." Abbott said on Fox News' Hannity (8/29), "The coordination at the federal, state, and local level has been as good as in any tragedy that we've ever seen in the United States. ... This has been done because the President took action swiftly, early, coordinated with the state of Texas in a way far superior than I have ever seen in a hurricane tragedy."

The Hill (8/29, Easley) reports that Senate Majority Whip Cornyn, Sen. Ted Cruz, and Rep. Blake Farenthold (R-TX) were on hand for the visit. McClatchy (8/29, Drusch) reports that prior to the visit, Cruz told CBS This Morning, "The state is hurting right now. We're still in an active crisis situation." The New York Post (8/29, Schultz) reports that both Cornyn and Cruz "have opposed disaster funding in the past for Hurricane Sandy over cost concerns."

The New York Times (8/29, Thrush) writes that aides say Trump "is eager to avoid the mistakes made" by President Bush in 2005, and though Vice President Pence and DHS officials “have taken the lead on negotiating many of the details of the response, Mr. Trump has taken pains to emphasize his personal involvement in the crisis.” Politico (8/29, McCaskill) reports that Trump “sidestepped a repeat of Bush’s gaffe in which he declared that then-FEMA administrator Michael Brown was doing a ‘heck of a job.’” Bush Administration HHS official Tevi Troy writes in the Wall Street Journal (8/29) that Trump has surrounded himself with leaders with experience in such situations, including Chief of Staff Kelly and homeland security adviser Tom Bossert.

The Washington Post (8/29, Blake) writes that Harvey provided Trump “a chance to be ‘presidential’ and to unite the country in a way he never has before (and hasn’t really even seemed to want to).” However, Glenn Thrush of the New York Times (8/29) writes, “Hurricane Harvey was the rarest of disasters to strike during the Trump presidency – a maelstrom not of Mr. Trump’s making, and one that offers him an opportunity to recapture some of the unifying power of his office he has squandered in recent weeks.” Thrush says the President “is behaving like a man whose future depends on getting this right.”

Kaitlin Collins said on CNN’s The Lead (8/29), “I think the Administration realizes this a big chance for them to get this right. They’ve really tried to be on top of this ever since when it was just barreling toward Texas on Thursday and Friday. We’ve seen that because these things can be career-defining for a presidency. Just as we saw 12 summers ago with George W. Bush and the way they handled Hurricane Katrina. I think the Trump Administration has realized that and that they’re going to be judged off the way they handle this recovery and the response to this hurricane.”

Bloomberg News (8/29, Olorunnipa, Epstein), Reuters (8/29, Scheyder, Henderson), and the Fort Worth \(TX\) Star-Telegram (8/29) also cover the presidential visit. The New York Post (8/29, Fredericks) and Townhall (8/29, Pavlich) also have brief reports.

First Lady’s Stiletto Heels Draw Criticism. Maria Puente of USA Today (8/29) writes, “No, first lady Melania Trump did not tour Hurricane Harvey-flooded south Texas in spike heels. Get real, Twitter.” The First Lady “left the White House earlier Tuesday wearing her usual shoe choice – pumps with sky-high heels – plus black cropped pants and a military-style green bomber jacket, with her hair loose and aviator sunglasses on her nose,” and “some on Twitter were incredulous and mocking, wrongly assuming this was her wardrobe choice for a flood zone.” By the time of arrival, “she had changed into white tennis shoes, a white shirt and a black cap with FLOTUS emblazoned on it, and her hair pulled up and off her face.”

Annie Karni of Politico (8/29) has a different take, writing that the First Lady “appeared to put the wrong foot forward when she boarded Marine One, en route to visit emergency responders in hurricane-ravaged Texas, wearing towering black snakeskin stilettos.” On board Air Force One, “as the picture of the delicate heels ricocheted across the Internet, Melania Trump changed into a pair of bright, white sneakers, which looked fresh out of the box.”

The New York Times (8/29, Friedman) writes, “When is a shoe not just a shoe? ... To dismiss all this as merely much ado about heels, or an example of the pettiness of our divided electorate, is to ignore the reality of the current conversation” around President Trump, to “pretend not to notice how sensitized everyone has become to his unpredictable reactions to major events, and to deny the power of the telling detail to invite applause, condemnation or misinterpretation.”

Breitbart (8/29, Starr) notes some of the critical online commentary, adding that Breitbart Senior Editor at Large Joel Pollak tweeted, “The First Lady is wearing sneakers. I hope the haters feel good about themselves.” Britt McHenry of The Federalist (8/29) writes, “Instead of focusing on our first lady choosing to accompany her husband to a state dealing with utter wreckage, cynics chose to fixate on her choice of fashion because ‘optics.’ ... If you align with a public perception that’s more concerned with a woman’s shoes instead of the hundreds of thousands who are forced to abandon their flooded homes, then you’re part of the problem.”

First Lady Issued Statement Following Visit. The Dallas Morning News (8/29, Benning) reports that the First Lady “spoke little” in Corpus Christi, “but in a statement from the White House, is now praising the people of Texas affected by the storm.” She said, “What I found to be the most profound during the visit was not only the strength and resilience of the people of Texas, but the compassion and sense of community that has taken over the state. I want to be able to offer my help and support in the most productive way possible, not through just words, but also action.”

Sanders: “Probably” Too Soon For Trump To Be In Texas. The Washington Times (8/29, Sherfinski) reports that Sen. Bernie Sanders said on Tuesday’s CBS This Morning that “it’s probably too early for President Trump to be visiting Texas in the wake of Hurricane Harvey, but said the main focus right now should be on recovery efforts.” Sanders said, “Too soon for the President to be there? Probably it is, but let’s not get into that. The focus right now has got to be on doing everything we can to address the terrible, terrible pain that is taking place in that city.”

HuffPost: Trump Has Worn Campaign Merchandise During Several Harvey-Related Events. The Huffington Post (8/29, Feldman) reports under the headline “Donald Trump Keeps Plugging His Own Merchandise During Hurricane Harvey” that the President “arrived in Corpus Christi wearing the white ‘45/USA’ hat that’s available for $40 on his own website,” marking “the third time in four days that the president has worn on-sale campaign merchandise during events related to Harvey.”

Sarah Sanders Wears “Make America Texas” Hat. The Washington Examiner (8/29, Chaitin) reports that White House press secretary Sarah Sanders “was spotted wearing a hat...with the words ‘Make America Texas’ emblazoned over an outline of Texas, as shown in a photo shared by Politico’s Josh Dawsey.”

Trump Campaign Committee Asks Supporters To Donate To Relief Efforts. The AP (8/29) reports that President Trump’s re-election campaign committee “is encouraging supporters to donate to disaster relief efforts for Hurricane Harvey. A note Tuesday to the more than 10 million email addresses the campaign has collected links to the Red Cross, Salvation Army, United Way and local animal rescue operations. The email encourages people to ‘help our fellow Americans in need.’”

Trump To Launch Push For Tax Reform With Missouri Speech.

Politico (8/29, White, Palmeri) reports that President Trump visit Missouri Wednesday to “launch a major push for a sweeping tax overhaul” with a speech “aimed at convincing his base – and the rest of the nation – that he has a fresh vision for ‘unrigging’ the American economy and isn’t just repackaging the trickle-down economics of past Republican presidents.” Trump’s speech “is expected to frame the issue around wiping out some deductions that benefit mostly higher-income taxpayers, making the US corporate system more globally competitive and simplifying the individual system.” While he “is expected to discuss lower rates for middle-income taxpayers as an instant pay raise for everyday Americans,” and argue that “lowering the corporate tax rate would make it easy for companies to expand – improving Americans’ quality of life,” he is not expected to provide “much detail about deductions and loopholes.”

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch (8/29, McDermott) reports that pro- and anti-Trump protesters will demonstrate outside the manufacturing facility where Trump will deliver his speech Wednesday. Both sides “are urging followers to refrain from violence.”

Trump Says Job Vacancies Part Of Effort To “Reduce Size Of Government.”

Politico (8/29, Nelson) reported that President Trump on Tuesday said “that the understaffing of the executive branch under his administration has been a conscious choice as part of a larger effort to shrink government, pushing back against conservative commentator Laura Ingraham, who told Fox News that the federal government is short on manpower.” Appearing on “Fox & Friends,” Ingraham said of hurricane-ravaged Texas, “We can all look at these horrific pictures, and we can conclude that a federal government does need staff. We see it acutely in need of staff in a situation like this” and in other areas of government. Politico added that Trump, “known to be a regular ‘Fox & Friends’ viewer, responded to Ingraham on Twitter, writing that ‘we are not looking to fill all of those positions. Don’t need many of them – reduce size of government.’”

Media Analyses Examine Possible Links Between Harvey And Climate Change.

USA Today (8/29, Rice) reports climate change “remains a polarizing issue in our already divided country. And whenever a huge weather event like Harvey occurs, a debate rages in the meteorological community about whether it is appropriate to discuss potential links between climate change and that specific event.” USA Today notes that a 2016 study “said there is no evidence that the number of tropical cyclones...have increased in recent decades as the planet has warmed,” but there has been “marginally significant increases in the frequency of category 4 and 5 storms.”

The Washington Times (8/29, Richardson) reports, meanwhile, that before Harvey, “it had been a record 12 years since a major hurricane made landfall in the United States, but that hasn’t stopped the climate change movement from blaming the Category 4 storm on global warming.”

The AP (8/29, Borenstein) reports that “in general,...climate scientists agree that future storms will dump much more rain than the same size storms did in the past.”

Vernon Loeb, managing editor of the Houston Chronicle, writes in the Washington Post (8/29, Loeb) that the planet “is getting warmer, ocean temperatures are rising, the polar ice caps are melting, and all of the incontrovertible science of climate change is that more extreme-weather events are an inevitable consequence. ... There's really no other way to make sense of what's happening in Houston." Loeb writes that while "it's clearly too late to stop the Category 4 hurricane that led to the millennial flooding in Houston," it "may not be too late to save the planet if we heed Harvey's hard lesson here in Texas." Meanwhile, Politico Magazine (8/28, Holthaus) says, "climate scientist Kevin Trenberth thinks that as much as 30 percent of the rainfall from Harvey is attributable to human-caused global warming."

The Hill (8/29, Cama) reports that the question of whether a particular weather event is caused by climate change as "taken on a new meaning in the wake of Hurricane Harvey, thanks in large part to President Trump's doubts about climate change science and his efforts to roll back nearly every Obama administration policy meant to combat climate change." Most recently, President Trump rescinding an Obama-era initiative "that called for federally funded infrastructure to be built to withstand the expected effects of climate change."

Editorial Wrap-Up

New York Times.

"Making Sure Your Help Gets To Hurricane Harvey's Victims." A New York Times (8/30, Board) editorial urges Americans who want to donate to victims of Hurricane Harvey "to be as discerning with their money as they are philanthropic, avoiding scams and asking for greater accountability from trusted charities like the American Red Cross." The Times outlines various instances in which the Red Cross failed to account for the donations it received, or diverted funds toward public relations expenditures. The Times concludes, "Groups like the Red Cross are stewards not only of enormous budgets, but of a more precious commodity: Americans' willingness to give."

"Last Hope For Peace At Brooklyn's Big Party." In an editorial, the New York Times (8/30, Board) says Monday's J'ouvert, "an annual celebration of Caribbean culture, a kaleidoscope of costumes and rhythm bands that draws a quarter-million people or more," has "been deadly in New York, more widely known for bullets than for ballyhoo in the last few years." This year, "Mayor Bill de Blasio and his police force will try a new tactic: no more pre-dawn J'ouvert with the cover of darkness for gun toters and knife wielders." Security measures will also be enhanced. The Times says it hopes de Blasio's "latest changes will end the bloodshed," but stresses that if "bullets fly again, the mayor and other officials will need to summon the courage to announce – however dolefully, given the festival's popularity – that J'ouvert costs too many lives and must be shut down."

Washington Post.

"Houston Is Paying The Price For Public Officials' Ignorance." A Washington Post (8/29) editorial says Houston "is an example of what happens when public officials ignore experts and refuse to take natural risks seriously. As the country's fourth-largest city expanded, replacing prairie with impermeable surfaces such as pavement and concrete, the land was rendered less and less capable of absorbing floodwater." A ProPublica and Texas Tribune investigation found last year "that those who have overseen Houston's flooding issues discounted scientists' warnings as 'anti-development.' In the coming months and years, the city may pay a high price for such shortsightedness."

"'Antifa' Groups Only Help The Hateful Forces They Claim To Oppose." In an editorial, the Washington Post (8/29) says that while Antifa is not to be equated with "the menace of violent, ultra-right white-supremacist groups, which are enjoying an ugly renaissance bred, in part, by the succor President Trump has given to racial and religious intolerance," its "true danger is twofold: First, its violence does obvious and unjustifiable harm, both to free speech and to people and property; second, it tends to discredit, through association, the far broader peaceful movement against racism and hate." While Trump's "equation of white supremacists in Charlottesville with those who rallied against them was false and repugnant," the actions of Antifa activists "hardly promote the moral clarity necessary to isolate right-wing hate groups."

"Congress Must Block Trump's Ban On Transgender People In The Military." The Washington Post (8/29) calls the President's ban on transgender people serving in the military, "discriminatory treatment of transgender people" that has "the potential to do great harm and must not be allowed to stand." The Post adds that the courts or Congress may be the best opportunity to end "this discriminatory policy," and calls on Republican lawmakers who spoke in opposition to the policy change when Trump first tweeted about it in July, including Sens. John McCain and Orrin Hatch, to “give meaning to their words and support” legislation being developed by Sens. Kirsten Gillibrand and Sen. Cory Booker to “block the ban.”

Wall Street Journal.

“The Hurricane Learning Curve.” A Wall Street Journal (8/29, Board) editorial says the federal government, local officials and charities are applying the lessons learned in the wake of Hurricane Katrina in Texas. FEMA, it notes, was on the ground in Texas nearly 48 hours before Hurricane Harvey made landfall, while Texas Gov. Greg Abbott quickly activated the entire Texas National Guard. Though the storm isn’t over yet, the Journal says there are already signs that officials have learned from previous failures.

“Nixing The $520,000 ‘Footlong.’” The Wall Street Journal (8/29) editorializes about a ruling by the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals that dismissed a class-action lawsuit settlement involving sandwich size on the grounds that the only beneficiaries were attorneys in the case. In 2013, an Australian teen posted a photo on Facebook of a Subway Footlong sandwich next to a tape-measure that showed the sandwich to be 11 inches long. Nine class-action suits were filed, which were later consolidated into one. In 2016 a lower court approved a settlement under which Subway promised to ensure more uniformity in its bread size, and attorneys in the case were to collect $520,000 in fees.

“Nuclear Missiles Over Tokyo.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (8/29) says a treaty guarantee with the US has long served as Japan’s ultimate security, but the logic of deterrence only works if the adversary is a rational actor, which North Korea may not be. If Japan no longer views the US as a reliable ally in a crisis, it may no longer resist building a nuclear arsenal of its own, which the Journal says could lead to nuclear proliferation throughout East Asia – underscoring the dangers of acquiescing to Pyongyang over its nuclear missiles.

Big Picture

Headlines From Today’s Front Pages.

Wall Street Journal:

Harvey Forces Thousands To Seek Shelter

Harvey’s Test: Businesses Struggle With Flawed Insurance As Floods Multiply

Investors Scoop Up Gold, Treasuries But Snub Dollar

As New Uber CEO Accepts The Job, Fresh Challenges Emerge

New York Times:

Stalled Over Gulf, Harvey Deepens Texans’ Soggy Misery

On Roads Turned Waterways, Volunteers Improve To Save The Trapped And Desperate

An Uneasy Time For Immigrants In Texas. Then The Rains Came.

A Pacifist Japan Starts To Embrace The Military

They Have A Say Over The Subways, From Hundreds Of Miles Away

Washington Post:

In Launch, N. Korea Rejects US Threat

Weed Killer Meant To Help Farmers Is Out Of Control

Houston Struggles To Determine Extent Of Harvey Flooding Devastation As Trump Visits Texas

How ‘wild West’ Growth May Have Contributed To Flood In Houston

Built For Safety, A Reservoir Spills Over Its Banks In A Historical Haven

Death Toll Rises To 22 As Officials Brace For More Bad News

Financial Times:

Texans Face Further Battering As Harvey Refuses To Let Up

United Technologies Nears \$30bn Deal For Rockwell Collins

Merkel Backs Macron’s Vision For Eurozone Reform

Washington Times:

Harvey Blamed On Climate Change Despite Drought From Hurricane Strikes

Harvey Breaks Rainfall Records, Spreads More Disaster

Conservative Candidates Across Nation Trumpet Trump In Campaign Strategies

North Korea Responds To Trump’s Bravado With Missile Test Over Japan

With Congress In Stalemate, States Take Lead In Planned Parenthood Defunding

Story Lineup From Last Night's Network News:

ABC: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Rescue Missions; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; Louisiana Storm Preparation; Hurricane Harvey-Forecast; North Korea-Missile Test; Hurricane Harvey-Church Under Criticism; Hurricane Harvey-Industry Damage; Hurricane Harvey-Family Recovery.

CBS: Hurricane Harvey-Evacuees; Hurricane Harvey-Houston City Government; Hurricane Harvey-Police Casualty; Hurricane Harvey-Reservoir Overflow; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; Hurricane Harvey-Forecast; Louisiana Storm Preparation; North Korea-Missile Test; Hurricane Harvey-Church Under Criticism; Hurricane Harvey-Animal Casualties.

NBC: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Evacuees; Hurricane Harvey-Casualties; Hurricane Harvey-Forecast; North Korea-Missile Test; Hurricane Harvey-Financial Cost; Hurricane Harvey-Rescue Missions; Hurricane Harvey-Animal Casualties.

Network TV At A Glance:

Hurricane Harvey – 44 minutes, 15 seconds

North Korea-Missile Test – 6 minutes, 10 seconds

Hurricane Harvey-Forecast – 4 minutes, 5 seconds

Story Lineup From This Morning's Radio News Broadcasts:

ABC: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; Wall Street News.

CBS: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; Armed Services-Transgender Ban; North Korea-Missile Test; US Home Sales; Wall Street News.

FOX: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; North Korea-Missile Test.

NPR: Hurricane Harvey; Hurricane Harvey-Trump Visit; Louisiana Storm Preparation; North Korea-Missile Test.

Washington Schedule

Today's Events In Washington.

White House:

PRESIDENT TRUMP — Meets with US Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer; participates in a tax reform kickoff event.

VICE PRESIDENT PENCE — Delivers keynote remarks to the 2017 Annual Meeting and Business Summit of the West Virginia Chamber of Commerce.

US Senate: On recess until 5 September.

US House: 8:30 AM Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee field hearing on 'VA Home Telehealth: Looking Behind the Numbers' Location: Garfield Charter Township, 3848 Veterans Dr, Traverse City, MI Traverse City <http://veterans.house.gov/> <https://twitter.com/HouseVetAffairs>

On recess until 5 September.

Other: No notable event scheduled.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Trevor Noah: "I know some people are like, 'Trevor, it's not about that. It's about sensitivity. You don't wear things like that to a disaster zone.' And I understand that, but in Melania's defense, she lives in a permanent disaster zone, and that's what she always wears."

Trevor Noah: "For our main story, we turn now to America's capital, Moscow."

Copyright 2017 by Bulletin Intelligence LLC Reproduction or redistribution without permission prohibited. Content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, radio broadcasts, social-media platforms and additional forms of open-source data. Sources for Bulletin Intelligence audience-size estimates include Scarborough, GfK MRI, comScore, Nielsen, and the Audit Bureau of Circulation. Data from and access to third party social media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and others, is subject to the respective platform's terms of use. Services that include Factiva content are governed by Factiva's terms of use. Services including embedded Tweets are also subject to Twitter for Website's information and privacy policies. The Department of the Interior News Briefing is published five days a week by Bulletin Intelligence, which creates custom briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinIntelligence.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

From: Bulletin Intelligence
To: Interior@BulletinIntelligence.com
Subject: U S. Department of the Interior News Briefing for Wednesday, December 6, 2017
Date: Wednesday, December 06, 2017 6:21:44 AM

Mobile version and searchable archives available here. Please click here to subscribe.

US Department of the Interior News Briefing

DATE: WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 2017 6:00 AM EST

Today's Table Of Contents

DOI In The News

- USA Today: After Bears Ears, Trump Administration Ponders More Changes To National Monuments.
- New York Times: Patagonia, REI And Other Outdoor Retailers Protest Trump's Decision To Shrink Utah Monuments.
- Deseret (UT) News: Utah Rep. Chris Stewart Proposes National Park In Grand Staircase-Escalante.
- The Hill: Navajo Nation Sues Trump Over Utah Monument Reduction.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Former President Bill Clinton Says Shrinking Utah National Monuments Is 'Wrong Economic Decision' And 'Wrong Environmental Decision'.
- Washington Post: Pilfered Artifacts, Three Suicides And The Struggle Over Federal Land In Utah.

- Reuters: While U.S. Senate Pushes Alaska Wildlife Refuge Drilling, Industry Looks Elsewhere.
- NBC: Wildfires Ravage Southern California.

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

- Incumbents Lead Nooksack Election Results Amid Allegations Of Fraud.
- Omaha Tribe Mismanaged $13.9 Million In Federal Flood-assistance Grants, Audit Finds.
- 9th Circ. Gives Navajo Partial Win In Waters Rights Suit.
- Wis. Tribe Seeks Quick Win In Gambling Compact Spat.

Bureau Of Land Management

- Houston Chronicle: Oil Companies Clamping Down On Methane Leaks.
- E&E Publishing: Trump Admin Takes BLM Methane Fight To Appeals Court.
- WyoFile: Budd-Falen: Provocateur Or Protector?
- Associated Press: Critics Sue Over Mine Exploration Near Alaska Eagle Preserve.
- Salem (OR) Capital Press: Grazing Slowly Returns To Land Scorched By 2015 Soda Fire.
- KRTV-TV Great Falls (MT): BLM Expands Brewery Flats Outdoor Lab For Junior-high School Students.

Bureau Of Reclamation

- Columbia River Wild Salmon Runs Face Regulatory Hurdles, Political Indifference.
- Idaho Ancient Bison Fossils Now Available In 3-D At ISU.

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

- Remembering The BP Oil Spill, A Disaster Of Historic Proportions.

Fish And Wildlife Service

- McClatchy: House Moderates Opposes Allowing Arctic Oil Drilling In Tax Bill.
- Associated Press: Wildlife Officials Say White-Tailed Prairie Dog In No Danger.
- Associated Press: 2018 Plan For Mexican Wolves Calls For Fostering Of Pups.
- Miami Herald: Federal Wildlife Managers Clear Way For Walmart In Vanishing South Florida Forest.

National Park Service

- USA Today: Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day 2017: What Happened On That Fateful Day 76 Years Ago?
- Ste. Genevieve (MO) Herald: NPS Predicts Annual Budget Around $1 Million For Ste. Genevieve Proposal.
- Associated Press: Work Begins At Carlsbad Caverns To Replace Elevators.
- Fountain Valley (CA) Patch: Ioniq Hybrids Donated To National Park Service, Hyundai Says.
- Next-Gen Transportation: Yosemite National Park To Deploy Proterra Electric Buses.
- Salt Lake (UT) Tribune: Arches National Park Celebrates End Of Massive Road Project With Free Entry This Weekend.
- MLive (MI): Plans To Rehab Old Negro League Baseball Park Taking Shape.
- MarketWatch: When 'Star Wars' Came To California: Documents Reveal History Behind Original Film.
- Bismarck (ND) Tribune: Public Comment Sought On Refinery Proposed Near Theodore Roosevelt National Park.

Office Of Insular Affairs

- Pacific News Center: Interior Releases $14.9 M In Guam Compact Aid.
- Marianas Variety: US Senator Plans Legislation To Limit Trust Fund Spending.
- Virgin Islands Consortium (VIR): Congressional Delegation Tours St. Croix To Assess Hurricane Damage.
- Marianas Variety: House Panel: Proposal To 'gGet Back' American Memorial Park Requires Legal Review.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: House OKs CW-1 Resolution.
- DAWN (PAK): UN Votes To Nullify Israeli Jurisdiction Over Jerusalem.
- Korea Herald: President Moon Calls For Enhanced Ties With Pacific Island Nations.
- Saipan (MNP) Tribune: Okeanos Marianas To Represent NMI At Yap Summit.
- Papua New Guinea Today: Air Niugini To Upgrade Services To Cairns, Chuuk And Pohnpei.
- Interpreter (AUS): Australia's Coal-fired Diplomacy Burns Pacific Friends.
- teleSUR (VEN): Additional Coverage: U.S. 'Dome' Of Nuclear Waste In Enewetak Atoll Wreaking Havoc On Indigenous People.

Office Of Surface Mining

- Interior Won't Say What It's Doing With Coal Health Study.

US Geological Survey

- Charleston (WV) Gazette-Mail: Agencies Working On Flood Warning Improvements In WV.
- Additional Reading.

Opinion Pieces

- The Right Move On Monuments.
- Time For Trump To Follow Through On Coal Promises In Arizona.
- Additional Reading.

Top National News

- New York Times: Trump To Recognize Jerusalem As Israel's Capital.
- Reuters: Trump Expects Tax Bill Out Of Conference "Pretty Quickly."
- Reuters: White House Says A Government Shutdown Is Still Possible.
- Reuters: House Republicans Debating Duration Of Continuing Resolution.
- Wall Street Journal: Trump Wants Republicans To Address Welfare Reform After Tax Bill.
- Reuters: UN Official's Visit To North Korea Sparks Hope Of Mediation.

Editorial Wrap-Up

- New York Times.
 - "Does President Trump Want To Negotiate Middle East Peace?"
 - "Going National With Concealed Guns."
- Washington Post.
 - "What A Presidential President Would Have Said About The FBI."
 - "Democrats Take A Hard Line On Harassment In Congress. Republicans, Not So Much."
 - "Two Troubling Elections Threaten The Health Of Latin American Democracies."
- Wall Street Journal.
 - "No Alternative, No Tax Problem."
 - "The Right Move On Monuments."
 - "Judging Roy Moore."

Big Picture

- Headlines From Today's Front Pages.

Washington Schedule

- Today's Events In Washington.

Last Laughs

- Late Night Political Humor.

DOI In The News

After Bears Ears, Trump Administration Ponders More Changes To National Monuments.

In the wake of President Trump's proclamations reducing the size of the Bears Ears and GrandStaircase-Escalante national monuments, USA Today (12/5, Korte) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is recommending he "scale back four more national monuments...and make modifications to at least four more, continuing an unprecedented blitz of presidential action to ease restriction on public lands." Zinke "is recommending that Trump reduce the size of Cascade-Siskiyou in Oregon and California, Gold Butte in Nevada," and "boundary changes to two marine national monuments: the Pacific Remote Islands and the Rose Atoll." Zinke also recommended modifications to Katahdin Woods and Waters in Maine, Northeast Canyons and Seamounts in Massachusetts, and Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks and Rio Grande Del Norte, both in New Mexico.

The Washington Post (12/5, Eilperin) reports that Zinke "said he was 'fairly confident' Trump would accept all of his recommendations, and he intends to brief him 'multiple times' in coming weeks to get his sign-off."

Also reporting are the New York Times (12/6, Nash), Reuters (12/5, Volcovici), the Washington Examiner (12/5, Siegel), the Los Angeles Times (12/5, Schneider), The Guardian \(UK\) (12/5, Staff, Agencies), the Huffington Post (12/5, D'Angelo), BuzzFeed (12/5, Dalrymple), and KXLY-TV Spokane \(WA\) Spokane, WA (12/5, Gardner).

Additional coverage was provided by the Palm Springs \(CA\) Desert Sun (12/5, Roth), KPVI-TV Idaho Falls \(ID\) Idaho Falls, ID (12/5), and KIFI-TV Idaho Falls \(ID\) Idaho Falls, ID (12/5).

Zinke Defends Monument Reductions, Supports Badger-Two Medicine. The Missoulian \(MT\) (12/5, Chaney) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke in a call with reporters on Tuesday "repeated an earlier proposal to create a new, 130,000-acre monument in Montana protecting the Badger-Two Medicine region surrounded by the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Glacier National Park and the Bob Marshall Wilderness Complex." Zinke said, "I think there's a really great opportunity for the Badger-Two Medicine as the number of crowds and visitors continue to break records in Glacier (National Park). Here's a virtually untapped area and a chance to do it right. There's the possibility of revenue from tourism and an untapped culture. I think it's deserving of monument status."

Also reporting are KRTV-TV Great Falls \(MT\) Great Falls, MT (12/5) and KTVH-TV Helena \(MT\) Helena, MT (12/5, Jochim).

Jessamine County Site At Camp Nelson Could Be Kentucky's First National Monument. The Lexington \(KY\) Herald-Leader (12/5, Kocher) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "formally recommended Tuesday that Camp Nelson Civil War Heritage Park should be one of three new national monuments in the country." Zinke said in a statement, "Camp Nelson is one of the places where our nation was made stronger and history was made. As a key depot, training center and hospital, Camp Nelson recruited and trained thousands of African-American war heroes who helped restore the Union." Rep. Andy Barr said in a statement that he "can think of no site more deserving of the distinction than the Camp Nelson Civil War Heritage Park where thousands of African American slaves found freedom. ...I strongly encourage President Trump to follow through" on Zinke's recommendation.

Additional coverage was provided by the Lane Report (12/5).

Zinke Questions Legality, Offers Few Specifics About Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument's Fate. The Oregonian (12/5, Theen) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "offered few additional details Tuesday about the administration's plans for Cascade-Siskiyou National Monument in Southern Oregon." Zinke said, "We have not set down in specifics on what an adjusted boundary would look like." The article notes that "Zinke's final recommendations included some of the same language from the September draft plan, saying the Oregon boundary should be revised to 'address impacts on private lands' and commercial timber harvest."

Also reporting are AP (12/5), the Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (12/5, Perkowski), the Redding \(CA\) Record-Searchlight (12/5, Arthur), the Salem \(OR\) Statesman Journal (12/5, Urness), KLCC-FM Eugene \(OR\) Eugene, OR (12/5, Burns), and KOB-TV Medford \(OR\) Medford, OR (12/5).

Zinke Recommends Shrinking Nevada Monument. The AP (12/5) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is recommending reducing the size of the Gold Butte National Monument. Zinke "said Tuesday he would focus changes on the site's water districts." He "declined to specify how much land he wants to remove from monument status in Nevada."

Also reporting are the Las Vegas Review-Journal (12/5, Saunders, Brean) and KSNV-TV Las Vegas Las Vegas (12/5, O'Neal).

New Mexico National Monuments To Remain Intact. The AP (12/5) reports that "the boundaries of New Mexico's two national monuments that were under review will remain intact, but Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke says modifications will be made to protect the long-standing culture of grazing and to ensure hunters and anglers don't lose access." Zinke on Tuesday said "his decision to keep Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks and the Rio Grande Del Norte national monuments the same size followed discussions with the governor, the state's congressional delegation, ranchers and conservationists." He "said the administration was comfortable with the New Mexico monuments and wanted to ensure they could be actively managed in perpetuity."

Also reporting are Albuquerque \(NM\) Business First (12/5, Ortiz), KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (12/5), and KRWG-FM Las Cruces \(NM\) Las Cruces, NM (12/5).

Interior Secretary Wants To Maintain Katahdin Woods Monument. The AP (12/5) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday "reiterated his support for a 'made in Maine' solution that keeps intact the boundaries of the Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument." Zinke "recommended that timbering should be permitted on the property and that infrastructure upgrades and public access for 'traditional uses' like snowmobiling and hunting should be prioritized in a management plan." Rep. Bruce Poliquin said Zinke's recommendation "strikes the right balance." He called Zinke's recommendation "a smart compromise that will help ensure traditional uses of the land and sustainable forest management are safeguarded, along with the jobs they support in the area."

Also reporting are the Portland \(ME\) Press Herald (12/5, Miller), the Bangor \(ME\) Daily News (12/5, Sambides), the Boston Globe (12/5), and WAGM-TV Presque Isle \(ME\) Presque Isle, ME (12/5).

Newhouse Praises Interior Decision To Maintain Hanford Reach National Monument. KNDU-TV Yakima, WA (12/5) reports that Rep. Dan Newhouse in a statement praised the decision to not change the Hanford Reach National Monument. Newhouse said, "In June, I shared my concerns with Secretary Zinke and the administration that no modifications should be made to the Hanford Reach National Monument. I am pleased that after today's report by the Interior Department, this national treasure will continue to be open to public access for future generations to enjoy."

Patagonia, REI And Other Outdoor Retailers Protest Trump's Decision To Shrink Utah Monuments.

Meanwhile, Patagonia and other outdoor clothing and equipment retailers are speaking out against Trump's plan to reduce the size of the Utah monuments, the New York Times (12/5, Hauser) reports. In a pop-up message on its website, Patagonia said, "The president stole your land. ... In an illegal move, the president just reduced the size of Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monuments. This is the largest elimination of protected land in American history." The company's general counsel, Hilary Dessouky, said through a spokeswoman Tuesday "that the company planned to file a lawsuit on Wednesday challenging the president's shrinking of the national monument." The Times also highlights criticism of the move from other outdoor retailers.

The AP (12/5, Daly) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Tuesday accused Patagonia "of lying when it said that President Donald Trump 'stole your land' by shrinking two national monuments in Utah by some 2 million acres." According to the article, "an angry Zinke called the claim – made in large type on the company's home page – 'nefarious, false and a lie.'" Zinke "told reporters the land targeted by Trump remains protected because it is still under federal control."

Additional coverage was provided by the AP (12/6, DALY, McCOMBS), The Hill (12/5, DeIk), Fox Business (12/5), Bloomberg News (12/5, Natter), the Missoula Current \(MT\) (12/5, Kidston), and Fortune (12/5, Abramson).

Also reporting are AP (12/6, DALY, McCOMBS), the U.S. News & World Report (12/5, Trimble), the Washington Post (12/5, Bhattarai), the New York Post (12/5, Steinbuch), Bloomberg News (12/5, Rupp), CBS News (12/5, Layne), Fox News (12/5, Bartiromo), the Independent \(UK\) (12/5, Oppenheim), the Independent \(UK\) (12/5, York), the Drum \(UK\) (12/5, O'Brien), KTUU-TV Anchorage \(AK\) Anchorage, AK (12/5, Polk), and KWYB-TV Butte \(MT\) Butte, MT (12/5).

Obama's Action On Public Land A 'Blatant Misuse Of Power'. Newsmax (12/5, Fitzgerald) reports that "the Obama administration's decision to lock away several million acres to protect them for environmental purposes was a 'blatant misuse of power,'" Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said Tuesday, "while explaining the decision to return large tracts to the people of Utah." On Fox News' "Fox & Friends" program, Zinke said, "We're giving a voice back to Utah, a voice back to the local communities that live and work there. It was a blatant misuse of power."

AP FACT CHECK: Trump's Curious Case For Shrinking Monuments. The AP (12/5, Woodward, McCombs) fact checks President Trump's statement on reducing the two Utah monuments. While Trump said the Antiquities Act "requires that only the smallest necessary area be set aside for special protection as national monuments," the AP says the law "doesn't demand that such land be kept to a minimum. Such protected land 'shall be confined to the smallest area compatible with proper care and management of the objects to be protected,' it says." Trump also claimed that "this tragic federal overreach prevents many Native Americans from having their rightful voice over the sacred land where they practice their most important ancestral and religious traditions" and that "we have seen harmful and unnecessary restrictions on hunting, ranching and responsible economic development." The AP says that "native rights are generally enshrined on national monument lands, not terminated. So are other public uses of the land," and "the notion that rural families can't enjoy the beauty of a national monument is unsupported."

Utah Rep. Chris Stewart Proposes National Park In Grand Staircase-Escalante.

The Deseret \(UT\) News (12/5, Romboy) reports that Rep. Chris Stewart “plans to introduce legislation to create a new national park in a piece of the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument.” The proposed Escalante Canyons National Park “comes on the heels of President Donald Trump dramatically downsizing the 1.9 million-acre monument.” Stewart said, “We feel that’s a win-win. You love tourism? So do I. People will come for a national park, but many of them won’t come for a monument.”

Also, the Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/5, Burr) reports that Rep. John Curtis “unveiled a measure to add law enforcement to the two remaining swaths of Bears Ears National Monument, forbid oil and gas drilling and mining in the region and give tribes a role in managing the lands.” However, state Sen. Jim Dabakis “said in a statement that Stewart’s plan to create a national park is just a ploy to distract from the fact he and other Utah GOP officials want to open up large chunks of land in southern Utah to mineral extraction.” In addition, “the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance said Stewart and Curtis’ efforts to create a park and turn Trump’s actions into congressionally approved law were just a way to distract from actions to destroy the monuments.”

Navajo Nation Sues Trump Over Utah Monument Reduction.

The Hill (12/5, Cama) reports that “the Navajo Nation and four other American Indian tribes said Tuesday they had sued President Trump to undo his action reducing the Bears Ears National Monument in southern Utah.” The lawsuit, “which the tribes had long promised, argues that Trump did not have the legal authority to remove more than 80 percent of the land protections that former President Barack Obama had established in 2016.” The tribes wrote in a statement, “Through the Antiquities Act, Congress delegated to the president the limited authority to designate national monuments and retained to itself the power to revoke or modify national monuments.” They continued, “The proclamation signed by President Trump today is so extreme that it revokes and replaces Bears Ears and thereby violates the Antiquities Act and seizes authority that the Constitution vests solely in Congress.”

Also reporting are the AP (12/5), USA Today (12/4), the Huffington Post (12/5, Visser), and the Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (12/5, Grover).

Former President Bill Clinton Says Shrinking Utah National Monuments Is ‘Wrong Economic Decision’ And ‘Wrong Environmental Decision’.

The Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (12/6, Harkins) reports that “former President Bill Clinton denounced President Donald Trump’s decision to shrink Utah’s Grand Staircase-Escalante and Bears Ears national monuments, saying it was a bad move in multiple ways.” According to the article, “Clinton prefaced his remarks by recalling his contentious choice to protect Grand Staircase-Escalante during his presidency – and the positive feedback he got for it five years after – and said he was “mystified and heartbroken” about the recent cuts.” Clinton said, “I think this is the wrong economic decision. I know it’s the wrong environmental decision. I think it’s the wrong cultural decision. I mean, this is supposed to be a time in which he honor the native-born over immigrants. The only true native-born Americans are the tribal people who live in the area protected, who all oppose this”

Pilfered Artifacts, Three Suicides And The Struggle Over Federal Land In Utah.

The Washington Post (12/5, Swenson) reports on a raid carried out on June 10, 2009 in Blanding, Utah that “would prove to be the match igniting long-simmering tensions across the region.” For Native American groups, Operation Cerberus was “the first step in a much-needed crackdown on looting in a unique archaeologically-rich region.” However, “for others the handling of the operation became yet another example of federal overreach – one that continues to impact the region today and now is reflected in the Trump Administration’s policies.”

While U.S. Senate Pushes Alaska Wildlife Refuge Drilling, Industry Looks Elsewhere.

Reuters (12/5, Rosen) reports that while the Senate moves to allow oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, the energy industry is more interested in the BLM’s auction for 10 million acres in the National Petroleum Reserve. Industry supporters say NPR-A development could yield barrels much more quickly than drilling in the Alaska’s remote frontiers. Executive director of the Alaska Oil and Gas Association Kara Moriarty said, “NPR-A has the potential to fulfill short-term oil and gas needs for the state. ... It’s right next to currently producing fields.” She said that even if the ANWR is opened to drilling, it would take 10-15 years before any oil is produced.

Wildfires Ravage Southern California.

NBC Nightly News (12/5, lead story, 2:45, Holt) reported that 30,000 residents have evacuated areas throughout Southern California as wildfires have rampaged through the region. Winds that have fed the flames “are expected to peak Thursday morning at some 70 miles an hour.” Hundreds of buildings are feared to have been destroyed.

ABC World News Tonight (12/5, lead story, 3:05, Muir) reported that the fires have destroyed over 45,000 acres. The largest fire is threatening Ventura County, home to 100,000 residents. Additionally, firefighters have “had to let some homes burn because they didn’t have enough water pressure in some of the hydrants.” ABC World News Tonight (12/5, story 3, 1:05, Muir) also reported that wind gusts of up to 40 miles per hour could hit Los Angeles and San Diego on Thursday morning, exacerbating the already dangerous conditions. Finally, ABC World News Tonight (12/5, story 2, 2:00, Muir) reported that three fires are currently burning simultaneously in Southern California: the Santa Ana fire, the Ventura County fire, and the Thomas Fire.

The CBS Evening News (12/5, lead story, 2:15, Glor) reported that the extreme conditions are projected to last “through at least Friday morning” in Ventura County. The CBS Evening News (12/5, story 2, 1:45, Evans) also reported that the Sylmar Fire in the Los Angeles area stretches 11,000 acres and is still growing. Winds on Tuesday night were expected to decrease to 20-30 miles per hour with up to 50 miles per hour gusts.

The Los Angeles Times (12/5, Vives, Nelson, Parvini, Hamilton, Kohli) reports that “at least 150 structures – including at least one large apartment complex and the Vista Del Mar Hospital, a psychiatric facility – were consumed by flames.” As of 5 p.m. Tuesday, the Thomas fire was moving west and was 0% contained. “The burn area is pretty much all the mountains between Ventura and Ojai and extending east to Santa Paula,” said Ventura County Sheriff’s Sgt. Kevin Donoghue of the Ventura fire. “It’s a challenge because of the enormity of it, and it’s a challenge because it’s pretty rugged terrain.”

The New York Times (12/5, A1, Medina, Stack, Bromwich) reports that the Thomas Fire spread to 10,000 acres between the time the sheriff’s office received initial reports at 6:24 p.m. on Monday and midnight. Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti “said the weather stoking the fire in Los Angeles County would probably continue for the next five days.” “We have lost structures; we have not lost lives,” said Garcetti. “Do not wait. Leave your homes.”

Bureau Of Indian Affairs

Incumbents Lead Nooksack Election Results Amid Allegations Of Fraud.

The Seattle Times (12/5, Shapiro) reports that “allegations of fraud and irregularities already cloud the outcome of a long-awaited Nooksack tribal-council election.” Preliminary results “show victory for four incumbents in favor of kicking out hundreds of members.” On Monday, Seattle attorney Gabriel Galanda, “who has long represented those facing disenrollment,” filed a challenge to the results with the tribal election board. Galanda “said he also plans to lodge a protest with the Bureau of Indian Affairs.”

Meanwhile, the Seattle Times (12/5, Shapiro) reports that “even before the feds sign off on election results for the Nooksack tribe, the chairman said he will move ahead with a renewed attempt to kick out some 300 people he says are not rightfully tribal members.” Nooksack tribal chairman Bob Kelly “said he plans to start a new round of disenrollment hearings this week.”

Omaha Tribe Mismanaged $13.9 Million In Federal Flood-assistance Grants, Audit Finds.

The Omaha \(NE\) World-Herald (12/5, Hammel) reports that “a recent audit slammed the Omaha Tribe for mismanaging $13.9 million in federal flood-assistance grants, and for ‘contracting with itself’ to generate ‘artificial profits’ that covered its required matching funds.” The Department of Homeland Security’s Office of Inspector General “said that the tribe’s accounting and record-keeping were so ‘unreliable and in such disarray’ that it should receive no further funds from the Federal Emergency Management Agency until it can show that repair work was done, and done at a reasonable price.” The inspector general’s report added that “the tribe’s poor record-keeping has been a long-running problem that resulted in sanctions by the Bureau of Indian Affairs from 2011 to 2013.”

9th Circ. Gives Navajo Partial Win In Waters Rights Suit.

Law360 (12/5, Lidgett) reports that “a Ninth Circuit panel on Monday gave the Navajo Nation a partial win in its water rights suit against the U.S. Department of the Interior, ruling that a district court’s dismissal of its breach of trust claim was not warranted, and sent the claim back to the lower court to consider it on its merits.”

Wis. Tribe Seeks Quick Win In Gambling Compact Spat.

Law360 (12/5, Posses) reports that “the Forest County Potawatomi Community on Monday asked a D.C. federal judge to vacate a Bureau of Indian Affairs decision rejecting an amendment to the tribe’s state gambling compact, arguing that the ruling was based largely on the incorrect conclusion that the proposal imposed payment obligations on a rival tribe.”

Bureau Of Land Management

Oil Companies Clamping Down On Methane Leaks.

The Houston Chronicle (12/5, Osborne) reports the American Petroleum Institute announced a voluntary program to reduce methane emissions “even as the Trump administration takes steps to roll back existing environmental regulations targeting those emissions.” Starting next year 26 companies will implement standards that include “employing advanced leak detection technology and replacing older equipment prone to leaks across their U.S. operations.” However, “the announcement did little to assuage criticism of the oil and gas industry for its longstanding fights against climate change regulation, which included fighting the Obama administration’s methane efforts.”

Reuters (12/5, Gardner) reports the API launched a voluntary program to cut methane emissions from oil and gas operations. Twenty-six companies agreed to the initiative, including Shell, XTO Energy and Pioneer Natural Resources. The firms will look to reduce emissions by plugging leaks, reducing venting at aging wells, and replacing or retrofitting pneumatic controllers. Bloomberg News (12/5, Dlouhy) reports program participants will provide information on their efforts to the API annually, and then the trade group will release a yearly report containing aggregated information.

Also reporting are The Hill (12/5, Henry), Axios (12/5, Harder), Breaking Energy (12/5, Ratner, Nelson), Reuters (12/5, Gardner), PennEnergy (12/5, Snow), and Natural Gas Intelligence (12/5, Bradley).

Trump Admin Takes BLM Methane Fight To Appeals Court.

E&E Publishing (12/5, Gilmer) reports that the Trump Administration is appealing a federal district court’s ruling in October regarding the Obama-era methane emissions oil and gas industry standards. The legal dispute will have large “implications for both wonky administrative law issues and oil and gas operations across the United States’ public and tribal lands.” The dispute centers around whether the Department of the Interior breached the scope of its authority in using a Administrative Procedure Act measure “to postpone parts of the Bureau of Land Management’s methane venting and flaring rule.”

The Hill (12/5, Cama) reports that Judge Laporte ruled that agencies can delay a regulation’s “effective date” but cannot delay its “compliance date.” The Department of Justice attorneys that are representing the Department of the Interior “filed a brief notice in the District Court for the Northern District of California late Monday, saying they are asking the Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit to review and overturn the ruling.”

Budd-Falen: Provocateur Or Protector?

The WyoFile (12/5, Thuermer) reports that “the prospect of Karen Budd-Falen’s appointment to lead the Bureau of Land Management elicits strong reactions across the political spectrum.” Conservationists and environmentalists are concerned that Budd-Falen “would bring a long career of anti-regulatory antagonism to the agency headquarters.” On the other hand, “the ranching community, rural western politicians and multiple-use advocates...view Budd-Falen as a fearless legal champion who’s spent a career fighting for the common man, struggling under the heel of a distant and oppressive federal government.” Meanwhile, “a third view holds that Budd-Falen, who specializes in western land-use conflicts, zealously represents her clients but is tarred with too broad a brush.”

Critics Sue Over Mine Exploration Near Alaska Eagle Preserve.

The AP (12/5, Joling) reports that “an Alaska Native tribe and three environmental groups sued the U.S. government, claiming an agency granted mineral exploration permits without considering how a mine could affect a major salmon river and bald eagle preserve.” According to the article, “the lawsuit filed Monday by the Chilkat Indian village of Klukwan calls for revocation of the permits granted to Constantine Metal Resources Ltd. upstream of the Chilkat River near the port of Haines in southeast Alaska.” The lawsuit claims the Bureau of Land Management “issued permits after considering the effects of exploration but not of a mine.”

Also reporting are KTOO-FM Juneau \(AK\) Juneau, AK (12/5, Collins) and Law360 (12/5, Posses).

Grazing Slowly Returns To Land Scorched By 2015 Soda Fire.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (12/5, Ellis) reports that “Idaho and Oregon ranchers have just recently started to resume grazing their cattle on some of the 279,000 acres of prime range land scorched two years ago by the Soda Fire.” The article notes that “as part of BLM’s post-fire restoration plan, ranchers were not allowed to graze their animals on those allotments for at least two growing seasons following the blaze.” According to Peter Torma, BLM’s Soda Fire project manager, “grazing has resumed this fall on 48 affected pastures and BLM officials expect to make decisions on the remaining 36 pastures by the end of December.”

BLM Expands Brewery Flats Outdoor Lab For Junior-high School Students.

KRTV-TV Great Falls, MT (12/5) reports that the Bureau of Land Management in partnership with Lewistown Junior High School has expanded the use Brewery Flats as an outdoor classroom. BLM Lewistown Field Manager Pete McFadden said, “By partnering with the BLM, the Lewistown Public Schools continue to expand the learning opportunities afforded their students, and the BLM continues to support the local community by helping educate the next generation of public land users and managers. Connecting kids to public lands connects them to America’s natural and cultural heritage.”

Bureau Of Reclamation

Columbia River Wild Salmon Runs Face Regulatory Hurdles, Political Indifference.

Forbes (12/6, Holden) reports that the Trump Administration is being urged to approve a management plan for Columbia River wild salmon. However, “it may be a tough sell at a time when the Trump administration seems intent on cutting back its support for public resources, from fish to National Parks.” The article notes that “the situation on the Columbia River is perilous: the salmon--which provided a steady diet for Native American tribes for centuries--have fallen victim to a string of mammoth hydroelectric dams.” Moreover, “The fate of the remaining Columbia River salmon is complicated by tensions between recreational fishermen, commercial gill-netters, and Native American tribes (whose treaty rights to half the fish was reaffirmed by a federal judge in 1974).”

Idaho Ancient Bison Fossils Now Available In 3-D At ISU.

The Idaho State Journal (12/5) reports that “the Bureau of Reclamation and the Idaho Museum of Natural History (IMNH), which is located on the Idaho State University campus in Pocatello, have partnered to make fossils more available to the public.” Beginning Tuesday, “the 3-D scan models of Bison latifrons specimens are available online to view, download, and print in 3-D.” Jenny Huang, an archaeologist with Reclamation’s Snake River Area Office, said, “The 3-D scanning of the objects is fantastic in and of itself, but by placing the 3-D scans onto an interactive website and making those scan files downloadable, we can get them out to the broader public. We are proud to be able to take our museum property management to the next level by making the collection available to everyone.”

Bureau Of Safety And Environmental Enforcement

Remembering The BP Oil Spill, A Disaster Of Historic Proportions.

